I am speaking about consultation with disabled people because Motion 12A, put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), talks about consultation with groups designated by the four target groups. A good example of the lack of consultation by the Conservative Party occurred yesterday when those Hon. Members would not listen to what the disabled people had to say.

Beryl Potter came here on March 26 with three or four disabled people and confronted the Prime Minister at the Conservative caucus. He told her through Geoff Norquay, his policy adviser, that they would be back to her before this Bill came back to the House for report stage last Thursday. But that was not done. That is why the disabled were angry. They were promised that the Government would get back to them before this Bill came back to the House and that promise was broken. That is not consultation. That is trying to take advantage of people. That is the way the Conservative Party is treating the disabled. That is why I am angry and that is why they are angry.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member can call it nonsense if he wants. He can call Mrs. Potter and her comments nonsense if he wants, but the Prime Minister promised to get back to them before the Bill came back to the House and he did not do it. A letter went out yesterday but yesterday, is not last Thursday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the motion moved by my hon. colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), namely, Motion No. 12A, to amend the proposed legislation by striking out line 30 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"ing agent, or with such persons as have been designated by the designated groups to act as their representatives, implement employment equity by".

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to this motion first of all, because I want to congratulate and thank the Government for having agreed to an amendment to Clause 4. I think that after the debate on second reading, we made the point that there was a need for consultation and for involving the people in the designated groups, the groups targeted by Bill C-62, and I am referring to women, the disabled, visible minorities and native people.

Mr. Speaker, if we take the trouble to identify these groups and are willing to help them find employment without being discriminated against, it stands to reason we should consult them.

The amendment by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce— Lachine East merely proposes to further specify certain aspects, so that, the legislation does not merely provide for consulting with the employees who are represented by the bargaining agents, but, when those employees are represented by a specific group, whether it is the physically disabled or another group, that these groups and the representatives, the leaders of these groups are also involved in the consultation process, to avoid overlooking the concerns of the people for whom the legislation was designed, and to ensure that these people, who are organized in associations and interest groups, are heard and are listened to, and that the employer, when he will have to implement this employment equity policy, will not only consult with the unions which are there to make the system a democratic one, but will make the system even more democratic by ensuring that the designated groups representing the four target groups I mentioned earlier are also involved in the process. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favour of this amendment which I think makes a useful contribution to the Bill and is also supported by the target groups we mentioned earlier.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to support the motions put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) Motions Nos. 12A and 14A.

By way of preamble I might say that I had not intended to speak on these particular motions. However, having sat in the House yesterday during Question Period, having met beforehand outside on the steps of this place with representatives of the disabled, and after seeing the response of Government members—their laughter, heckling and the contempt which they showed for these people in our galleries—I felt it was important that all of us who share the concern about that behaviour rise and make our voices heard on these amendments.

These representatives of the disabled were here seeking in a straightforward, honest and civilized manner to make their concerns known to a Government which has refused to listen to them thus far.

Mr. McDermid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. First, my point of order is that the remarks of the Hon. Member have nothing to do with the amendments we are discussing. Second, the statements of the Hon. Member are not factually correct. I think that he should be called to order. He is another person who is stooping so low so as to use these people as political pawns. It is unforgivable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Nystrom: It is not a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Just more smut!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Speaker certainly does not agree with everything which the Parliamentary Secretary has said. However, I think he has a legitimate point of order in terms of the subject matter. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion No. 12A is to ensure that there will be consultation—consultation with the groups which are affected by this toothless legislation. Because of the record of the Government which has refused to consult with representatives of the disabled—not only has it refused to consult but it has treated those representatives with utter contempt by making statements which are totally unfounded, with Members on the Government side looking up in the galleries and mocking the people who are there.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Robinson: We on this side of the House find that kind of behaviour totally unacceptable.

Mr. McDermid: That is just not true!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Hon. Members may have noticed a certain reaction to certain comments. I ask all Members on all sides of the House to constrain their remarks, if possible, to the amendments which are before the House in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, once again we are talking about consultation. One of the concerns raised by the groups which were on the Hill yesterday was with respect to the fact that they had asked to speak and to meet with representatives of all political Parties. I was there. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), was there. Many of my other colleagues were there. I know that some representatives of the Official Opposition were there.

Mr. Nystrom: But there were no Tories!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, there was not a single Tory Member of Parliament—not one—who had the courtesy to attend. Not one Member of that gang of 211 had the courtesy to go outside and listen to the concerns of these people. That is why we in this Party are supporting, indeed, insisting on the passage of this amendment which requires consultation. We have seen the Government bring forward legislation which reflects consultation all right, but consultation with whom? The only people with whom the Government has consulted, apparently, on its employment equity legislation have been the Gang of Five, the manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce and its buddies in the Business Council on National Issues. We in this Party believe that the groups which are targetted by this employment equity legislation, women, native people, visible minorities and the disabled, deserve better. That is why we believe it is so fundamental that this amendment which requires consultation be supported.

Motion No. 14A deals with a concern that the Government may be attempting to escape from the provisions of this legislation—weak as they are—by allowing other statutes to take precedence over the employment equity Bill. This amendment would ensure that the only statutory provisions which could override the employment equity legislation would be provisions which in fact are in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act. Surely, that is not an unreasonable suggestion.

Should Government members vote against this amendment what they would be suggesting, what they would be saying to the people of Canada, in particular those groups which are affected by this legislation, is that they are prepared to allow this Bill to be watered down by allowing other statutes to override it. It is weak enough already.

We talk about consultation. Had there been meaningful consultation this Bill, which has absolutely no teeth whatsoever, which requires only voluntary compliance, and from which the federal Government is exempt, would never have been brought forward. The Government embarked upon a process of consultation. I had the honour of serving as a member of the Special Committee on Equality Rights which considered employment equity legislation. Some Government members are not too happy with the recommendations of that committee; some of them even laugh at its recommendations. I would remind Hon. Members that the recommendations of that committee were unanimous. They were concurred in by all five Tory members of the committee. When they laugh at the recommendations which would put some teeth into employment equity legislation, they are laughing at their own colleagues. They are laughing at the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) who chaired the committee and who has been rather silent on this important legislation so far, despite the fact that the consultation process produced some very different suggestions.

The consultation process which we believe should be built into this legislation in fact resulted in the unanimous report which states that the Bill now before the House is fundamentally flawed because there is no enforcement mechanism whatsoever included in it. One of the recommendations of the committee was that representatives of the groups which are targetted by Bill C-62 be involved with management and labour in developing employment equity programs. Surely to goodness it is not unreasonable to suggest that the groups which are affected by this legislation have a hand in the enforcement of it. The committee unanimously stated that a principal shortcoming of Bill C-62 is the absence of enforcement mechanisms. It also stated that if successive reports show little or no progress toward equality of employment opportunities and benefits for the designated groups, then no sanctions are available.

Without an enforcement agency this proposal will simply not work. We will be right back here in three or five years with a stack of reports from employers clearly documenting their failure to make employment equity a reality. We will be shaking our heads and saying: "What do we do now?"

The Bill before us is a betrayal, a betrayal of the wishes and hopes of those Canadians who have been shut out for too long from employment. They have been denied a right to independent living. The door has been closed on those Canadians. The Government says that it is not prepared to put in the enforcement mechanisms which are necessary.

Rights that are not enforceable are not rights at all, as the committee has said. I hope that the Government will recognize that the committee which studied this question, heard representations and did the kind of consultation which the Government should have done, has seriously criticized this legislation. The committee has said that it falls short in a whole series of areas documented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr Nystrom). It falls short in the area of enforcement mechanisms, in the area of contract compliance and in the area of resources available to implement this legislation. I say that the Government has displayed contempt for the consultation process, and one does not have to look any further than the legislation to see that that is very clear.

Yesterday 150 disabled people appeared in Parliament, many of whom had to be literally carried to their seats. They sought in good faith answers to serious questions which they have been asking for many, many years. When Hon. Members on that side of the House treated their concerns and questions, hopes and criticisms of this legislation with contempt, with indifference and with laughter, we on this side of the House felt that that was totally unacceptable.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say something about the two amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I would like to consider particularly the matter of ensuring that the Bill not be made even weaker than it so clearly is in its truncated form which provides primarily for reporting on employment practices. I want to ensure that there are no clauses in the Bill that can be used in court challenges to undercut the effectiveness of the Government's intention to achieve employment equity or, as we suggested with the first motion put by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Government's intention to encourage and promote rather than achieve employment equity.

The two amendments before us relate to our concern for ensuring that the Bill is not flawed in one way or other. There has been comment on the matter of consultation between the Government and target groups, including the target group that was in Ottawa yesterday. We have all noted those criticisms.

I would like to suggest more particularly that, although there was a call for consultation with representatives of the workers, consultation with the union and, as this amendment before us now proposes, consultation with representatives of the target groups in the letter of the Bill, the consulting itself is a weak form which this amendment does little enough to advance.

If the Government was really serious about achieving employment equity, as it claims to be in the language of the Bill, there would be provisions for negotiation. Instead, there is the recognition of workers who are not organized. This amendment would recognize representation from the target groups. However, consultation is not going to be adequate. We want to ensure that employers actually negotiate with their workers in ways that will ensure that employment equity is achieved.

I would like to suggest that workers' organizations have in fact been recognizing the need for action. I think particularly in terms of my own responsibilities for ethno-cultural communities, and particularly those in the visible minorities whose plight was dramatized in Toronto during the past year with a couple of reports describing discrimination in Toronto. In that case we saw evidence of racism in the employment practices of the employers of the City of Toronto.

I would like to recognize and place on the record the work the Ontario Federation of Labour has been doing in ensuring that workers and their organizations can deal with these issues, that workers will recognize the kinds of attitudes and practices that constitute racism and that workers and their organizations, negotiating committees and excutives, will be equipped to take a leadership role in ensuring that employment equity is actually achieved in their workplaces. That action by the Ontario Federation of Labour is very important and indictes that workers are prepared to take their part in ensuring movement toward employment equity. The legislation is very weak, if all it talks about is consulting. There is need for genuine negotiation of these conditions.

I would like to note particularly the action which one provincial Government has taken to ensure genuine movement toward employment equity. The Manitoba Government negotiated with the representative of all of its employees and arrived at a plan through which, over a period of time, the public workforce of the Government of Manitoba will be recomposed in such a way that it will represent the population of the Province of Manitoba. It will take time, of course, to do that. Workers do have concerns about their own careers, seniority and so forth. I am sure it is in recognition of those needs that the negotiations between the New Democratic Government of Manitoba and the Union of Government Employees provides for a 20-year time line. The end result of that 20-year process of reconstituting the workforce of the Province of Manitoba is that it will truly reflect the population of the province through the inclusion in the workforce of women, native people, persons from visible minorities and the disabled.

That kind of determination on the part of a Government and its readiness and ability to negotiate with the representatives of its employees is, as far as I am concerned, exactly what is required if we are to have real progress toward employment equity. It is that kind of program for which this Bill does not really call by asking only for consultation and reporting. Because it does not commit the private sector, Government Departments and all employers to that kind of program, there are these weaknesses in this Bill which have concerned us so much since it was tabled in the House.

The second clause to which we are addressing ourselves is a clause which provides for the possibility that employment equity programs might be invalidated by other statutory provisions. Here there is an even clearer case for support of the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. If there is one thing that a Government can do to render a Bill weak and quite possibly useless for the purposes it is intended to achieve, it is the inclusion of that sort of a clause. Surely it is an open invitation to the lawyers of the country to hunt through the statute books to come up with provisions they can use in legal challenges to affirmative action or to employment equity proposals. For that reason it is important to follow the line which the Hon. Member put forward in this; to strike it out and replace it with the following: "except those in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act". It is particularly important because a clever lawyer can seek to argue that employment equity proposals and plans themselves involve us in discrimination.

Because the Canadian Human Rights Act deals explicitly with that, and ensures that such action plans do not involve discrimination, it becomes important to include this amendment in the Bill so there is not an expedition or hunt through the statute books to come up with ways of invalidating plans, and to ensure that genuine employment plans, supported by the principles of the Canadian Human Rights Act, will in fact be implemented. In both cases we have amendments of real value. I trust Government Members are listening and thinking carefully, and will in fact be prepared to give their support to both these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 12A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 14A. Mr. Allmand, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moves:

"except those in conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act, that results".

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. We will now proceed with Motion No. 16A.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 46 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"eligibility or geography according to whichever of these reference criteria provides the most opportunity to qualified members of the designated groups and from which".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to summarize Clause 4 of the Bill. It says that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting such positive policies and practices as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment with the employer that is at least proportionate to their representation in the workforce or in segments of the workforce.

This clause attempts to indicate that in putting in practice employment equity policies, we must try to achieve in different workplaces the representation which is generally found in the workforce for those designated groups. If there are so many women in a particular workforce, for example, a firm should have more or less that same percentage of women, and the same would apply for disabled persons. In other words, the clause to which I am referring sets up a mechanism to determine what is the best standard in judging whether employment equity is taking place or what is the standard of representation.

I point out very strongly that what is contained in the Bill is extremely defective. It indicates that we should look at the proportion of the representation in the workforce. The problem is that many of these people are unfortunately not in the workforce; they are unemployed. I forget the percentage of unemployment among disabled people but it is extremely high. If we look at the workforce and try to devise affirmative action programs, we will not see too many disabled persons. Therefore it would not be a very good standard by which to make improvements. Clause 4 goes on to indicate:

(ii) in those segments of the workforce that are identifiable by qualification, eligibility or geography—

If we look at the workforce in some parts of northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta, unfortunately we will not find too many Indians. To use that as a standard of judgment is almost ridiculous.

In determining unemployment figures, Statistics Canada has a very special definition of who is and who is not in the workforce. One either has to be working or looking for work, or one has had to attend a job interview in the last four weeks. Many of the people who have given up the hope of finding jobs— they are on welfare and so on—are not even counted in the workforce.

The purpose of my amendment is to correct that situation in a small way. It does not correct it altogether. I am limited by what I can do because of the terminology in the Bill. My amendment suggests that Clause 4(b)(ii) should be changed to read:

—according to whichever of these reference criteria provides the most opportunity to qualified members of the designated groups—

In other words, if we are to look at different situations in the workforce, we should at least oblige the employer in implementing employment equity or affirmative action to base it on that representation which would give the best deal to the designated group. I should like to refer to an example of this.

Let us look at the percentage of Indians and Métis in the entire Province of Alberta. I do not know what that percentage might be; perhaps it would be 15 per cent. However, if we were dealing with an affirmative action program of a particular firm in the constituency of Athabasca in northern Alberta, the percentage of native people would be much higher. I am suggesting that we should look at the geographic area of the plant or the province and make a judgment based upon a standard for affirmative action which gives the best deal to that designated group.

Let us look at the Province of British Columbia. There are many visible minorities in the Vancouver or lower mainland area, but the percentage would be much smaller if we took into account the total Province of British Columbia. If a firm were setting up business in the suburbs of Vancouver and took into account, for example, the percentage of Sikhs or people of East Indian origin in the entire province, it would get away with a much smaller standard in implementing affirmative action or employment equity. In those cases firms must be obliged to take the geographic area or the qualification area which gives the best deal to the target group. As the Bill is presently worded, the employer is not obliged to do that. He must look at the various regional and geographic possibilities, but he has no obligation to come down on the side of that geographic zone, or whatever, which gives the best possible deal to the designated group.

We moved this amendment in committee and it was rejected by the Conservative Party. Members said at that time that they might do this through regulations to the Bill. Some of these things are too important to do through regulations which can be changed by Ministers and officials in the darkness of the night without anyone's knowledge. We all know that. In recent years the Special Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments has examined these issues. We found that Orders in Council are changed, very often to the detriment of the Canadian population and we put that watchdog instrument in place.

I suggest that this kind of amendment should be in the Bill. This is a Bill dealing with employment equity and this is one way we can stiffen it and give it some teeth. In implementing employment equity we can oblige employers to use the segment of the workforce which is identifiable by qualification, eligibility, or geography according to whichever of these reference criteria provides the most opportunity to qualified members of the designated groups. In other words, they would be obliged to look at the area which gives the best deal to the designated group. I think that is fair and should be agreed to by the Government. We do not even have a firm commitment that the Government will deal with this by regulation, which would at least be a step forward. However, I think it should be dealt with in the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 16A:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 46 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"eligibility or geography according to whichever of these reference criteria provides the most opportunity to qualified members of the designated groups and from which".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 19B.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 2 at page 3 the following:

"(c) having full access to, for the purposes of subsections (a) and (b), consultative services concerning employment equity as provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment would add a further subclause to Clause 4. As I pointed out, Clause 4 is the key clause of this Bill. It says that employers shall implement employment equity by doing certain things. Unfortunately, if the employers do not do these certain things, there is no penalty. I will deal with that in a later amendment.

Clause 4 says that an employer shall implement employment equity by doing certain things which are listed in subclauses (a) and (b) and paragraphs (i) and (ii) of subclause (b). This would add subclause (c) to Clause 4 after line 2 on page 3. It says that the employer should implement employment equity by:

having full access to, for the purposes of subsections (a) and (b), consultative services concerning employment equity as provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration.

The Government and Parliament of Canada want private firms to introduce employment equity. Let us assume that the private firms, in good faith, want to do that. The Bill lays out certain obligations in subclauses (a) and (b). It says that they must eliminate obstacles to employment for the target groups and must institute positive policies and practices to achieve employment equity. Very often private firms do not know how to go about this. They should have access to the consultative services on employment equity within the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Government of Canada should go a long way toward assisting the private sector to achieve employment equity.

I am 100 per cent in favour of a strong Bill obliging affirmative action by the private sector, but I do not think we should leave the private sector all alone to do it. We must help it to do this. The purpose of this amendment is to ensure that the private sector has access to the services of the Government in setting up systems for affirmative action and employment equity. We must ensure that the Government has the personnel available to assist these firms in doing that. That is the purpose of this amendment.

We tried to amend the Bill in committee by having this policy accepted. It was rejected in committee. We are now trying again. In committee a representative of the Government said he agreed with the amendment in principle, but did not believe it should be in the Bill. I am afraid that if it is not in the Bill, when this law is passed private firms will say that they want help from the Government with the burden which has been laid upon them and the Government may say that it has other priorities. Therefore, employment equity will not take place because firms will not have the support of the Government which they require. I do not think it hurts one bit to put this in the Bill. It shows a greater commitment to employmet equity by the Government. I urge the Government to accept this amendment.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it was I who made the commitment when this amendment was moved before the legislative committee. I said that the Government is committed to providing those services and, therefore, we do not need an amendment. It is our intention to market the program. We have made it eminently clear how beneficial we feel employment equity is going to be for all Canadians, how productive it will make us as a nation, and how we require it to prosper and make full use of the entire potential of the community. We cannot continue to operate in the absence of the rich resource of 60 per cent of the population. It will certainly be in our interest to ensure that this program succeeds.

We have already stated, on numerous occasions, that we are ready to stake our futures on the social justice and social conscience of the Government. I assure my hon. friend that the Canada Employment Insurance Commission will provide those consultative services concerning employment equity to all employers who want to establish employment equity programs, including those covered by the legislation, those covered under the federal contractors program, and all others who want our advice.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary. I am not sure about the rhetoric with regard to social conscience and justice, but perhaps it will be there.

I support the motion before the House, but I do not make a big issue of it because I think it will be in place anyway. Unless they have holes in their heads, representatives in the Department of Employment and Immigration centres across the country will obviously be involved in the consultative process with regard to employment equity or any other employment program in the country. The employment centres act as consultants on all employment programs in the country. I know in my own riding the manager of the employment centre, Mr. Self, is always very open. His staff is there to be consulted and worked with. They are always very open and very co-operative so I assume that is the case right across the country.

I do not feel strongly one way or the other about this motion. I suppose what the Hon. Member wants to do is give the Bill more protection, more power. I do not oppose, that so I would support the motion without making a big issue of it.

I just wanted to say that I have found in my own riding that the employment centre has been very, very useful for a lot of groups over the last few years. I know the manager, Mr. Self, and his staff must be commended for the help they have given on a lot of programs. I am thinking of the Canada Works Program last year, Challenge '85, and the student programs. I think of the efforts we are now undertaking in my riding to set up a local advisory committee. I know the staff has always been at the disposal of people who come into the centre. I am sure they will be doing the same thing with this legislation once it goes through. It is very important that they do so because the unemployed are often really frustrated. They go down to the employment centre as a last resort. They often feel that their problem is not dealt with as quickly as possible. After all, they are unemployed and not making any money. The young Indian person in my riding is the person who does not have the skills but needs a summer job. So it is very important that the staff function as efficiently and quickly as possible. I hope they do the same thing in this case.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my colleague's amendment would enshrine in law the obligations and responsibilities not only of the employer but of the Department of Employment and Immigration. Clause 4 outlines the employers' duties. If the target groups are going to be able to access the jobs they want and we want them to have so that they enrich our society to the degree we know they can, then we need to put in law the obligations that we undertake as a Government to enable them to do so.

I agree with the Hon. Member who just spoke, that we have excellent staff in the employment centres. However, that does not mean they have the obligation to undertake additional responsibilities. In my own riding we have a very high unemployment rate among a specific target group, the visible minorities and the handicapped. The local employment officers have all the responsibility of helping these people locate jobs. We also have a very high unemployment rate among youth. I pointed out to the Parliamentary Secretary that in the black community over 60 per cent of young people under 25 are looking for jobs. If the staff of the employment centres are doing their job in that respect, then they do not have the same kind of time or energy to go out and work with the major industries in the area, let us say. They do not have the time to visit the banks or the supermarkets. They do not fall under this Bill, unfortunately, although through contract compliance they are supposed to. The banks, the post office, the CBC, and Cable TV companies should all reflect the multicultural dimension of Canada. If we do not assure through the amendments put forward by my colleague the staffing and budget necessary, how can we expect this help to be forthcoming?

I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary agrees with the approach in principle. Principles are lovely, but if you cannot put them into practise then they are of no value. I heard the lovely phrase that we have put our stake in the future on our social conscience and we intend to apply social justice, or something of that nature. If you really want to apply social justice, then you have to get your act together and put your energy where it is required. That means an enforcement provision in this Bill which will make it a reality.

If we look at the series of amendments put forward by my very conscientious colleague, I suggest that the wish of the Government to assure that employment equity becomes a reality in our society would be greatly improved if they are accepted. The targeted groups would not have to come here with a great deal of personal difficulty, as the handicapped had to do, and say: "Hey, do something, you are hurting me".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have talked about target groups, about the groups that are involved in this legislation, the groups that will be affected by this legislation, and the groups on which this legislation will have a negative social and economic impact because this legislation is just a lot of eloquent posturing and offers nothing in the way of concrete action. It is not compulsory. We do not have the option of Government support to help us help each other. Employers have a whole list of things they are supposed to do, a list that is not complete, but with all that, the legislation does not even provide for any action by the Government to help them help each other.

If we really want to put the onus on the employer and see this policy reflected on our television screens, on our aircraft, in our banks and in our post offices, we will have to have mechanisms that will make this possible, so that I, as a black person or I as a Sikh living, say, in Vancouver which has the largest Sikh population outside Eastern Asia—

Mr. Speaker, I believe that what I am saying is relevant. Our pious wishes must be implemented. They must be enshrined in legislation in some other way, and they must not be just pious wishes but concrete action arising from the very foundation of the principles of our legislation.

[English]

Therefore I strongly recommend adoption not only of this amendment but all the amendments put forward by my colleague.

I cannot understand how this Bill can be effective if we do not target it regionally. There are regional differences across this country. The reality of multiculturalism can only be reflected properly if we consider how to apply this Bill in a concrete way across the country. I pointed out that Parliament, as a matter of balance, accepted multiculturalism in law, and as an official Government policy in 1971. It guaranteed not only cultural freedom but equality for all Canadians. Multiculturalism was entrenched in 1982 in the Charter. Officially we decided that it should be entrenched in all Government documents and in all Government publications, and hopefully the fallout would show up in the catalogues of large companies such as Sears, Eatons and The Bay; hopefully we would see reflected on the the screens and in the publications of this country the kind of people that we targetted, the kind of people that make up Canada. We are not a white country; we are a multicultural and multiracial country, and we need that reflected.

Mr. McDermid: When was the last time you looked at one of those catalogues. I have noticed a change in the last year.

Mrs. Finestone: I have noticed that as well. There has been a slow, ineffective change taking place. We should not have to wait for that normal slow rate of change. I suggest you reread, understand and have a commitment to the equality and employment report of Judge Rosalie Abella, who statistically examined the impact of that slow, non-mandatory, non-enforcement principles under the Crown Corporations and what they did. Believe me, the snail's pace at which the Government made changes to the multiracial, multicultural, bilingual nature of this country is truly reflected in Crown Corporations across this land. You should be ashamed to have even mentioned that. I bring to your attention the report. Go back and read it and understand why beautiful words never brought about change. We need change in law, and you need to learn how to be a leader. Read Equality Now and see the changes. You had nothing to do with that report, we brought that report in here. We have applied many of the principles in that report, and there's still a long way to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order.

We have run out of time. Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I want to perhaps complete the remarks the Hon. Member's started. I am really surprised that Government Members are not supporting this amendment proposed by the Hon. Member. What the Government of Canada is doing is, on the one hand it is saying to employers you must do this, you must do that, you must do something else, but really not telling them how they are supposed to do it.

If we look at Clause 4 that we are discussing, it says:

An employer shall—

That's how it starts out. Clause 5 starts out:

An employer shall—

What does the Government of Canada do to assist the employer? You have this very hazy formula laid down as far as designated groups are concerned, and then you have this incredible Clause 12 in which it says:

—the Minister may—

Now, the employer shall do this, the employer shall do that. Then it says the Minister may issue guidelines to assist in the implementation of the requirements of Sections 4 and 6. Proposed section 6, which is under discussion, says:

—the Minister may issue guidelines—

The employer shall do this, the employer shall do that, and here is a hazy formula; perhaps he will meet the intended guidelines of this Bill and perhaps he will not.

This amendment, which the Hon. Member has proposed here today is simply to add the words:

> (c) having full access to, for the purposes of sub-sections (a) and (b), consultative services concerning employment equity as provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration.

The Hon. Member did not want to go as far as to say that the Minister of Employment shall provide these guidelines, shall assist the employer, must assist the employer. The Department of Employment and Immigration must assist the employer. The Hon. Member did not want to go that far because he figured the Government would not do that anyway. It would not want to impose something on the employees of the federal Government and the Cabinet Minister to assist the employers to meet the targets. It does not want to do that.

So the Hon. Member said, in a very nice way, to provide the assistance that would be available in the Department of Employment and Immigration. I cannot see why the Government would not approve that kind of an amendment, given the fact that it has already stated that the Minister has absolutely no responsibility whatsoever to the employers or the employees under this Bill. I am really shocked that Government Members would not support this amendment and at least go halfway and provide some source of information so the employers would not only have to follow it, but be held accountable to it.

I support the Hon. Member who introduced this amendment and the Hon. Member who just spoke, and I am sure that the Government Members, if they are really thinking about it, will fall over themselves to support this amendment to make it fair to the employers and the employees covered by this Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 19B. Mr. Allmand, seconded by Mr. Tardif, moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 4 by adding immediately after line 2 at page 3 the following:

"(c) having full access to, for the purposes of subsections (a) and (b), consultative services concerning employment equity as provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration."

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 14(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

The next question is on Motion No. 21A.

Mr. Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 12 to 16 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"section (1) shall be

(a) retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a brief period of at least three years after the last year in respect of which the plan is prepared;

(b) communicated to the employer's employees and any existing bargaining agent; and

(c) made avaible to the Human Rights Commission, on request."

[English]

He said: This amendment is one of the more important ones I have put forward. The others were important, some of them were technical, but this is a substantive amendment which I believe to be extremely important.

In the committee nearly all the witnesses criticized the Bill in that it did not provide for employers to have action plans with targets and timetables to achieve employment equity. Most witnesses criticized the Bill and criticized the Government for not requiring the employers to set out action plans with targets and timetables. Both myself and the representative of the NDP put forward amendments asking that that be done, and they were not acceptable. Finally, the Government came forward with an amendment, and I congratulate them for moving to that extent, which is now set out in Clause 5 of the Bill in which the Government said:

An employer shall, in respect of each year prepare a plan setting out

(a) the goals that the employer intends to achieve in implementing employment equity—

(b) the timetable for the implementation of those goals.

That was a step forward. In subclause 2 of that very same clause the Government says:

A copy of a plan prepared under Sub-section (1) shall be retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a period of at least three years . . .

What good is it for the employer to set out an action plan for employment equity with timetables and goals if only the employer gets to see it? It is not even given to the employees. It is not given to the Human Rights Commission, which they say will enforce the Act. There it sits in the employer's vault for at least three years, the action plan that they have been obliged to prepare. I cannot understand the logic of the Government. I suppose if one went to court and subpoenaed them they would have to produce the action plan and one could see it. If not, the only requirement is in Clause 5(1) which states that they must prepare a plan setting out goals and timetables. Clause 5(2) states that the plan shall be retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business.

For example, let us consider Canadian Pacific Railway with its head office in Montreal. If some of the employees in the designated groups, such as the women's groups or visible minorities, have a problem with employment equity in Vancouver or Calgary, and the officials did not want to send the action plan to them, I suppose they would have to go to Montreal to look at it. The same is true for Bell Telephone which has its head office in Montreal, and some of the big banks with their head offices in Toronto. While these companies must prepare an action plan with timetables and goals, they do not have to distribute them.

My amendment says that the employers must keep it at its principal place of business for three years but the action plan must also be: "(b) communicated to the employer's employees and any existing bargaining agent". Therefore, those companies with unions must provide the action plan to the union for it to see, and if there is no union it must be given to the employees. The amendment goes on that it must be: "(c) made available to the Human Rights Commission, on request".

This seems to be a logical suggestion. The Bill finally requires an action plan with timetables and goals. At the very least, that action plan should be distributed to the employees who are affected by it and to the Canadian Human Rights Commission that must enforce the action plan. That is all that this amendment asks. I cannot understand the reticence of the Government in turning this down. I suppose the only explanation is that it was trying to please the many target group witnesses who wanted more teeth in the Bill and finally admitted that there should be an action plan with targets and timetables, but it did not want to upset the employers and therefore did not require those action plans to be distributed.

This amendment states that those action plans must be made available and communicated to the employees so they will be in a position to judge whether or not the action plans effective. They will also have to be made available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission which has the right to enforce them under the Bill as amended by the Government. Unfortunately, there are not many sanctions in the Bill for the Canadian Human Rights Commission to use. However, if it is going to enforce it at all, it should have access to these action plans for examination and response. That is the purpose of the amendment. I do not see on what logical basis the Government can contest this amendment. I ask the Government, in the spirit of non-partisanship, to give consideration to this amendment and accept it.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to support this very reasonable amendment suggested by my hon. Liberal friend. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will accept it with much enthusiasm.

When this Bill was first introduced there was no reference whatsoever to the concept of action plans. After many hearings and many witnesses the Minister introduced an amendment to include an action plan. We made some progress because the Bill now provides for an action plan. However, that action plan will essentially remain secret because it cannot be seen by the employees, the employment centres or even by the Human Rights Commission.

Why bother having an action plan if it is going to sit in the vault of the employer and not be seen by anyone? This is particularly puzzling when we consider that the Conservatives campaigned on the importance of freedom of information and openness in Government.

For the benefit of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), let me read the clause of Bill C-62 which states that an action plan will be prepared by the employer but remains secretive under the Bill. Clause 5(2) of the Bill states:

> A copy of a plan prepared under subsection (1) shall be retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a period of at least three years after the last year in respect of which the plan is prepared.

I find it very strange, in a democratic state in the 20th Century, to have that plan absolutely secretive.

Many witnesses said that action plans are required and should be public. The witnesses were unanimous in that regard. Our Party also suggested in committee an amendment similar to what is now before the House. We said that a copy of the action plan should be filed with the Canada Employment Centres, the Canadian Human Rights Commission and that a copy of the action plan should be permanently posted in each of the employer's workplaces. I believe those are very reasonable requests. Perhaps this is one area where we can have an all-Party agreement at report stage in the House.

As further evidence, I want to refer to a speech made by a distinguished former Member of the House, Gordon Fairweather, who is now Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I have a copy of notes that he used in a speech made on February 4 at the international conference at the Weston Hotel.
He said:

> Returning to my example, we would use the investigation powers of the Canadian Human Rights Act to find out why women were under-represented and what was being done about it. We would conduct interviews and study the relevant documents, including a second kind of information contemplated in the Employment Equity Act—the action plans that employers are expected to develop for ensuring that the target groups are fairly represented in the workforce.
> Perhaps we would find that women were applying for these jobs—

Second, he says:

> In these and like cases, the complaint would prove to have been superfluous. So I would like to make a pitch here. There is no legal requirement on you under the Employment Equity Act to let us see your action plans. The legal requirement comes under the Canadian Human Rights Act after a complaint has been filed. But I believe it would be as useful to you as it would be to us if you made your plans available to us informally, on request, before the complaint stage. We would both be spared the trouble of some unnecessary complaints.

Mr. Fairweather, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, is saying that he would appreciate the possibility of having these action plans made public, or at least made available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

In another statement relevant to making the action plans public, Mr. Fairweather states:

> Since they are on the public record, reports filed under the Employment Equity Act would be an element in this judgment. This is the state at which an informal look at action plans would help us screen out unnecessary complaints.

He is reiterating the necessity for looking at the action plan.

I support this amendment because it would make those action plans public so that the Human Rights Commission could see them. The action plans should be public so that the employees in a particular industry would have a chance to see them, and they should be public so that the Canada Employment Centres across the country could see what is in those action plans.

S.O. 21

What good is an action plan if it is to be secret and kept at the premises of the employer for several years? One of the values of an action plan is that it be made available to the other parties involved in achieving the goal of employment equity. If it is available to everyone there is a greater chance that employment equity will be achieved. May I call it one o'clock?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

EVENTUAL RISE IN DRUG PRICES—CONSEQUENCES FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my concern about the legislation pertaining to drugs which the Government is expected to announce shortly.

It has referred to the possibility of creating new jobs, through negotiation, in the pharmaceutical industry by guaranteeing a monopoly to companies which manufacture trade mark drugs against an increase in the prices of drugs.

Before a decision is made, I want to indicate to the House just how concerned I am about a possible increase in the prices of drugs. Women will probably be very much affected by such a legislation. A large percentage of them are users of drugs, either for themselves or their children, and the older they are, the poorer they are.

When we know that single parent families headed by women live below the poverty line will suffer the most because of the social and economic policies of this Conservative Government, we cannot denounce too strongly any possible increase in the prices of drugs that the Government is said to be about to go ahead with and which would be bad news indeed for women.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LIBYA—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, concerned and thoughtful people everywhere condemn terrorism in all of its forms and seek viable solutions to end it. So, too, must we as responsible parliamentarians seek ways and means to stop the escalation of these hideous international terror tactics.

Today, however, our concern must lie with the welfare, security, and safety of the 1,300 Canadian citizens living and working in Libya whose lives have been placed in considerable peril. The Canadian Government and Parliament must give the utmost priority to all actions and initiatives which will reduce this risk to Canadian lives in Libya and nearby areas.

We call upon the Government, Parliament and, indeed, all Canadians to work together at this very tense and critical moment to accomplish whatever is necessary to bring about an expeditious end to these events of fear and bloodshed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask the Government for some action on behalf of my constituents. We in northern New Brunswick want to participate in the great recovery Canada is experiencing at present. In general the Progressive Conservative Government must be commended for its achievements in combating unemployment. We have only just begun and already the unemployment rate has dipped to its lowest point since March, 1982.

Unfortunately, Restigouche has not enjoyed the benefits of this national recovery and I am now asking for some relief before it is too late. The most recent statistics show northern New Brunswick with an unemployment rate of 25.6 per cent. This figure is tragic enough in itself but the real unemployment rate is much higher if one considers those who have just given up trying to find work. In reality it is probably closer to 40 per cent. We need help, and we need it immediately.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY POST OFFICE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, we all appreciate the necessity of Canada Post operating on a cost efficient basis, but consider, Mr. Speaker, a town of 10,000 persons being cut off from mail delivery service. In effect that is what happened when the only Canada Post operated post office along the St. Lawrence Seaway was closed, cutting off for many seamen the only contact they have with their families and business and commercial interests.

The Marine Post Office on the Welland Canal was the only address sailors on the Seaway knew. It was there to serve the ordinary postal needs of Canadians who worked the ships on the world's greatest inland waterway. There are many other ways for Canada Post to save money. The Seaway is not dead yet, so why does Canada Post act as though it were? Business improves with better service, not poorer service. Restore the Marine Post Office that has been serving the Seaway for over 20 years.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MODIFICATION OF BENEFITS—UNHAPPINESS OF EARLY RETIREES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Since January 1 of this year, Mr. Speaker, all those who took early retirement and receive a pension are no longer entitled to their full unemployment insurance benefits.

Last week in Oromocto, New Brunswick, I attended a meeting of early retirees who are opposed to the Government decision, rightfully denouncing this unfair treatment. First, they paid their unemployment insurance premiums throughout their active life. Second, they were not even consulted, let alone given sufficient notice of this change. Finally, the issue was not debated in the House of Commons.

These early retirees are so upset that they are prepared to travel all the way from New Brunswick to Ottawa to protest against this new measure, a clear indication that it is a bad and unfair decision!

THE LATE SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Following the death of the French writer, Simone de Beauvoir, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I would like to pay special tribute to the author of The Second Sex, Old Age, and many other famous works, and the extraordinatry contribution she made. It was Simone de Beauvoir who said that to leave one's mark in the world, one had to be of this world. We shall remember her, not only for the spirit of her feminist writings but especially as one of the greatest philosophers of our time, and, with her companion, Jean-Paul Sartre, as the greatest defender of the Left in France. She was fond of quoting these words by Dylan Thomas: "Do not go gentle into that goodnight. Rage, rage against the dying of the light". Her light will continue to shine for us all.

FORESTRY

EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, at the annual meeting of the Forest Industries Council, the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) announced an allocation of $6 million to maintain our support to the forestry education program. This program is comprised of four elements, as follows: subsidies to universities, $2 million; scholarships, $605,000; research and development contracts, $1.2 million, and student employment, $1.3 million.

Six Canadian universities with forestry departments will receive over $2 million to improve their training resources for forestry graduate studies. In addition, the Canadian Forestry Service has set up a scholarship program to help 50 second- and third-level students and has also allocated $1.3 million to job creation under the Summer Employment Program for 300 forestry students. This is good news for the forestry students of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup. The forest industry plays a major role in the economy of my constituency.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CUTS IN NETWORK PROGRAMMING CONDEMNED

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, CBC President, Pierre Juneau, announced that the CBC will have a $48 million shortfall in its annual budget, despite a $22 million increase in its grant from Parliament and an increase in advertising revenues.

In a period of fiscal restraint the last thing a private sector firm would do is cut its product line. Would Campell's cut out tomato soup? Yet Mr. Juneau has ordered the cutting of 122 hours of network TV programming, including Toronto's CBLT Morning.

Rather than slashing at its product line, the CBC should consider trimming some of the excess fat in senior management. If the CBC is serious about its commitment to expenditure reduction and long-term survival, then its quality programming should be the last thing to go.

Is nothing sacred? Barbara Frum, you could be next!

DECLINE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, unemployment is falling in Canada faster than almost anywhere else in the industrialized world. Our rate of decline in unemployment is faster than in Australia, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Only Belgium has been cutting its rate of unemployment faster than Canada. Britain, Italy, and Spain have actually had an increase in unemployment.

We still have a long way to go insofar as this blessing is distributed unevenly across the country. However, there are regions where unemployment is between 6 per cent and 7 per cent. The Government is coping effectively with the problem of unemployment, the greatest challenge it faced when it took office. We are doing it in the most effective way—the private enterprise way—by building a climate of confidence in which people can invest and make job opportunities.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

ALLEGED RACIAL SLUR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, actions speak louder than words. Last Saturday we saw the actions of the federal Government with respect to the conference on multiculturalism. However, we see that its actions in another matter show that it is really not concerned about the Canadian people as per the following letter which states:

Dear Prime Minister Mulroney:

We wish to add our voices to a matter of great concern to all Canadians of Italian heritage. The recent incident of a slanderous and bigoted remark directed by the Member for Nunatsiaq at the Member for Bourassa in the House of Commons has not been resolved to our satisfaction. The name-calling—only continues to perpetuate a mythical association of a large group of Canadian citizens with criminal activities. As lawyers and as Canadians we cannot tolerate such prejudicial assertions from our legislators.

The damage—has been done, not just to Mr. Rossi's reputation, but to the Canadian-Italian community—a full apology by Mr. Suluk specifically for the remarks—and your public condemnation of his remarks would be an acceptable means of communicating to all Canadians that statements tending to slander a community will not be tolerated in Canada. Further, a strong statement from your office, may dissuade public—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

EXTERNAL AID

GUATEMALA—CONTINUATION OF CANADIAN AID URGED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Guatemala's people have lived under a brutal dictatorship since the United States invasion of 1954. Four out of five Guatemalan children under age 5 suffer from malnutrition because the farmers, mostly Indian, have been driven out of the fertile plains by armed landlords' gangs.

The U.S. armed terror that kept the people from peaceful change or guerrilla war has cost over 100,000 dead and 38,000 have disappeared. GAM, a group of relatives of the disappeared, bravely demands searches for relatives. The newly elected Government of President Cerezo is trying to restore a just and workable economy and to defend human rights, but it does not yet control the army and political violence has not yet ceased.

Canada won high praise for helping 769 refugees to escape from Guatemala in 1985, and for aiding church-based groups helping the families of murdered farmers to re-establish their livelihoods. I commend the Canadian Government for its help to Guatemala and urge that this help be extended.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

RESTORATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the issue of pass cancellations for former employees of CP Rail has come to a very successful conclusion. The President of CP Rail has advised all former employees, in a letter dated April 9, 1986, that they will now have the choice of having their CP Rail passes reinstated or continuing on with the health plan which was substituted for the pass. The important thing is that the people directly affected now have a choice and can make this decision.

The old adage that each journey begins with a single step certainly holds true in this instance. I would like to acknowledge the efforts of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha), and particularly the Hon. Member for Timmins—Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) who arranged the meeting with the President of CP Rail. I would also like to commend the President of CP Rail for the role he played in this policy change.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, today I want to talk about that area in which the Conservative Government excels: jobs, jobs, jobs. Five hundred and seventy-four thousand jobs have been created since the election, including 437,000 in the past 12 months. The unemployment rate has declined to 9.6 per cent compared to the 11.7 per cent it was on election day. The number of unemployed has fallen by 227,000 since September, 1984.

Since the election, employment has increased in every Province of Canada. By George, Mr. Speaker, if we get any better at creating jobs we will never be able to find sufficient people to fill them all!

UNITED STATES-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister on the Libyan crisis. He said in a statement this morning to Canadians that his prime concern all along has been the safety of Canadians. What did he do between one o'clock yesterday afternoon when he first learned of the intended American action and seven o'clock last evening, our time, when the action was taken in concrete fashion, to assure the safety of Canadians in Libya?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to respond to my right hon. friend, but inasmuch as the Minister of National Defence and Deputy Prime Minister had specific responsibilities in that area, perhaps he might accept a response from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, our putting in place of contingency plans started happening a good deal before one o'clock yesterday afternoon at which time I met, in the absence of the Prime Minister, with the President's special envoy. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that those plans are in place and have been for some days.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT ADVISE CANADIAN WORKERS IN LIBYA TO RETURN TO CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Prime Minister. For perhaps three or four weeks now he has been telling Canadians working in Lybia that the decision was entirely up to them. Now, here is my question to the Prime Minister: In light of the present situation, why does he not advise Canadians working in Lybia to return to Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has been saying that for three or four weeks. Indeed, if my memory serves me right, I made a statement on January 10, 1986, saying that "according to our best information, Canadians in Lybia are not under threat for the time being, but the Government feels that those who work there would be well advised to assess their own situation in light of current events, with a view to determining whether they might justifiably fear for their security".

Since then we have had an opportunity to consider our position in that respect and to urge all Canadian citizens to take any means deemed appropriate. We were also fully aware of the question of security of Canadian citizens, and we have set up security measures to assist them.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the statement just quoted by the Prime Minister, Canadians in Lybia are quite free to make their own decision. I would suggest that perhaps the time has come to ask Canadians to return to Canada. In any event—

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC MEASURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My third question is directed to the Prime Minister. In his statement this morning he talked about a negotiated settlement to reduce tensions in the Middle East. Why does he not propose international economic measures which would act as a better substitute for future military action?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have done precisely that. If my right hon. friend will take the time to consult the statement of January 10, 1986, he will see that the Government of Canada set out a number of economic measures that it was taking as a way of conveying to Libya its disagreement with any kind of terrorist activity directly or indirectly associated with that state.

Canada as a civilized country sought to convey in a peaceful and, we hope, thoughtful way our deepening concern with actions taken by that state. We considered that these were, as my right hon. friend would agree, important conditions prior to any other avenues being explored. We took those measures because we believed they were an important but non-bellicose manner of conveying a very important message about the fact that there ought not to be any sanctuary for those who export terrorism against civilized people.

FORTHCOMING OECD MEETING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In two days' time the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be meeting with representatives of 24 other countries in Paris at the meeting of the OECD. Will the Government use this unique opportunity to put forth concrete proposals for co-ordinated action against international terrorism? Will it show leadership in this way to help prevent further escalation of the current crisis situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The very distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has just completed a successful tour and working visit throughout the Middle East, will be bringing his suggestions and his good influence to bear on this problem at upcoming meetings later today and tomorrow.

FORTHCOMING TOKYO SUMMIT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister share with the House the nature of these suggestions? Will he also undertake to use the opportunity provided in some three weeks' time by the Tokyo Summit of major nations to bring about and show leadership in respect of co-ordinated action against the rise of terrorism and the risk of escalation of world violence?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to our statement on January 10 I began a series of meetings—and I believe it was on January 12 or thereabouts—with Prime Minister Nakasone to develop and to set forward Canada's views and a program which might very well be considered by the Summit in Tokyo in the first week of May, in the event of that group being seized or being desirous of being seized of a program which the allies could implement. I have had occasion to discuss this with Prime Minister Nakasone, President Mitterand, and President Reagan.

We will bring forward our ideas and those of our colleagues, friends, and Members of this House. It is a burning and vital issue to be resolved on the side of sanity and civilized conduct.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL PARTICIPATE IN SPECIAL DEBATE ON SAFETY OF 1,300 CANADIANS WORKING IN LIBYA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Does he intend to participate directly in the discussions concerning the situation in Libya generally, but more specifically to take part in tonight's emergency debate on the safety of 1300 Canadians in that country?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take part in all Government decisions concerning this matter. I met last night with the Deputy Prime Minister. I met this morning my colleagues of the Cabinet. About 11 o'clock this morning, I met the Press Gallery. I am in the House today to answer questions. If possible, I will have the opportunity to participate in other debates, but I do not know whether I will be in the House this evening.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, given the gravity of the situation, I find that answer a little disappointing. Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, not only answered questions throughout Question Period today but will be participating in a thorough debate and discussion in the British House of Commons.

COMMUNICATIONS WITH LIBYAN AUTHORITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, has the Government of Canada been in contact with Libyan authorities in the last 12 to 15 hours to discuss, directly with them, the security of the Canadians, and to ensure that those Canadians who want to leave Libya will have no trouble doing so?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that there would have been communications between our envoys and the representatives of the Government of Libya, which I suppose took place, yes, there would have been communication. Our primary concern from the beginning has been the welfare of Canadians in Libya. The Government of Canada has taken, through diplomatic and other initiatives, every possible measure to ensure that it is being helpful. We have received good reports from our representatives on site, and we continue to be encouraged by the situation in which Canadians find themselves.

POSSIBLE DEPARTURE OF CANADIAN CITIZENS FROM LIBYA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister himself was not directly involved in discussions with the Libyan authorities. I would understand that. He did not answer my question directly, but perhaps he, or the Deputy Prime Minister, who has immediate responsibility for the situation, could tell the House if the Government, very specifically, has been in discussion with the Libyan Government about the possible exodus from Libya of Canadians who may want to leave. Has that question been raised with the Libyans? Have we received assurances that any Canadians who want to leave will be able to do so? Also, has the Canadian Government made transportation facilities available for Canadians to leave, if they so wish?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no reason to conclude other than that Canadians in Libya are safe. They are in no way existing under any threat, and it would not be useful to convey any message other than to repeat what the Prime Minister said in the House last Friday and in his press conference. With respect to the contingency plans which are in place, I am sure that the hon. gentleman would agree that it would not be in the best interest of security to discuss those in detail because they, themselves, might be jeopardized.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM UNITED REPUBLIC OF CAMEROON

AIR SAFETY

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT HAVE COMPLETE CONTROL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport who announced yesterday a number of steps to reinforce security.

Why did not the Minister take these steps immediately following the Air India tragedy, and especially why did he not announce yesterday immediate steps such as giving his Department full control over airport security and the hiring of all security personnel?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that a number of measures were implemented after the Air-India incident. Furthermore, assessments and audits of all of the major Canadian airports were conducted, deficiencies identified, and corrective measures were being taken. The point the Hon. Member refers to with respect to Transport Canada taking over the security screening, as I indicated earlier, is an option which can be considered. However, I do find it rather strange that the Hon. Member, as a supporter of the Government which put the existing system in place, now finds it convenient to be opposed to that system which he supported as little as 18 months ago.

[Translation]

DEGREE OF TRAVELLING PUBLIC'S SAFETY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to forget that there is now a level of international terrorism which did not exist at the time.

I ask the Minister, who promised on three occasions to the travelling public to reinforce the security, to assure today to the same travelling public that it is now completely safe to go to airports and that the 30 to 60 day delay which he is suggesting is not a way of telling them: "Until then, travel at your own risk".

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member cracked a smile when he made that statement. He knows full well he could not say what he said with a straight face. Is air travel safe in this country? I can only say that we are taking every step we possibly can in a collective manner, with the co-operation of the airlines, the RCMP, the unions and all concerned, to ensure the utmost safety to the travelling public.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister at what point the U.S. consulted with Canada about the proposed military action against Libya, and did the Canadian Government at that point suggest alternatives to military action? If so, what were they?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as was contained in the Prime Minister's press release yesterday, we have been in touch all along. The meeting yesterday at which I was briefed was the culmination of a long series of intense consultations which at one time or another have included the Prime Minister, President Reagan, Secretary Shultz, Secretary Weinberger, the President's National Security Adviser, Vice-Admiral Poindexter, as well as the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, indeed, the Minister of Finance and myself.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there was no cause for concern last Friday apparently. Therefore I am wondering if the Deputy Prime Minister can tell us if the Canadian Government in the interval presented alternatives to military action. If so, what were those alternatives?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I want to reiterate that, with respect to the safety of Canadians in Libya, there is still no evidence of any threat. To say otherwise would be to raise undue alarm. I think the moderate response of the Prime Minister last Friday is the proper message to be conveyed to Canadians in Libya. Of course there are always alternatives, and again the Prime Minister pointed that out in his statement of last January 10 as he did last Friday and also today.

FREEDOM OF CANADIANS TO LEAVE LIBYA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister has assured the House twice in the last few minutes that there is no reason to believe anything other than that Canadians are safe in Libya. We welcome that assurance. Why then is the Minister reluctant to assure the House that, indeed, Canadians are free to leave Libya at will and that, indeed, the Government of Canada has secured from the Libyans the ability for Canada to fly planes into that country and to take our people home?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman distorts what I said. I said that there is no evidence of any threat to Canadian citizens in Libya. That is not inconsistent at all with the statement of the Prime Minister on January 10 and again last Friday, urging Canadians in the circumstance to re-examine their own safety and act accordingly. Again, with respect to contingency plans, surely the hon. gentleman realizes that to discuss any details of any such plans would prejudice the very plans themselves.

POSSIBLE EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): There is an inherent inconsistency in the Deputy Prime Minister's answer. Given there is no reason to fear for the safety of Canadians according to the Deputy Prime Minister, and given that the Deputy Prime Minister says they can come home at will, has the Deputy Prime Minister assured himself, by discussing directly with representatives of the Government of Libya, that Canada is able, if Canada desires, to fly into that country with aircraft and to bring home those of our people who want to come home, directly and safely?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The answer to that, Sir, is at this moment there is no reason to anticipate that we would not be able to do that. If the hon. gentleman has difficulty in understanding what was said let me refresh his memory with a direct quote from the Prime Minister of last week:

> We would recommend those Canadians in Libya that they might want to reassess their position very carefully and determine whether they have grounds for additional anxieties about their security.

The ordinary methods of travel are still providing ingress and egress from the commercial airports in Libya, and Canadians can come to their own conclusions with respect to their own personal circumstances.

REPORTED STRIKE BY LIBYA AGAINST UNITED STATES COMMUNICATIONS BASE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister have any concrete information that there was a follow-on strike by Libya against U.S. installations somewhere in the Mediterranean, a communications base south of Sicily?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Government has had reports, Sir, as yet unconfirmed in a hard way, that a small island some 60 kilometres south of Malta, Lampedusa, and an American telecommunications establishment on that island, were attacked. The unconfirmed reports from the Italian Government are that there were no casualties and the attack was of a minor nature.

POSSIBILITY OF RETALIATION FOLLOWING UNITED STATES ACTION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Based on the Deputy Prime Minister's answer, would he not agree then that the use of force by the United States is possibly leading to retaliation, forceful military retaliation, which is the very thing that President Reagan wishes to avoid and wishes to bring to an end in that part of the world?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I do not make the assumption that the initial reports with respect to Lampedusa are confirmed, which the hon. gentleman may mistakenly have been doing. Let me say that the Government has made it clear many times in the past that terrorism, as the Prime Minister said in his statement today, is reprehensible and evil, an evil which all members of the international community must work to eliminate. The United States was seeking to do precisely that, and Canada supports that objective.

PATENT LAW AMENDMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the Government decided to delay tabling changes to the pharmaceutical patent Act because senior Ministers in the Mulroney Government have finally come to the conclusion that its approach to free trade negotiations with the United States on an item by item basis has seriously damaged Canada's bargain position?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I will merely repeat that the Government has always maintained its intentions of developing policies to promote job creation and investment in Canada. Those policies will also apply to the pharmaceutical industry. When we are ready, we will announce our decision to that effect.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would you not agree that by dismantling Canada's National Energy Program and by allowing the Prentis-Hall buy-out by Gulf Western, and now by tabling changes to the Patent Act affecting pharmaceutical industries, you are going to leave Canada with very few bargaining chips left on the table when you get into serious negotiations with the United States?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the record of this Government speaks by itself. The number of jobs created and the many investments made during the past 18 months rightly prove the efficiency of this Government in the statement of its various policies.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister know on Friday that the United States intended to launch an attack on Libya when he said in the House of Commons that "there is no immediate cause for undue concern for Canadians"?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that it was I, on behalf of the Prime Minister, who met with the special envoy in Ottawa in the absence of the Prime Minister. I have been involved throughout. It would not be helpful, to begin with, to respond to cross-examination as to when the Government knew what, and when it did not know something else. The fact is that we were fully and continuously consulted throughout. That is a refreshing, historical first, I would think.

PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF UNITED STATES INTENTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister, since the words that I quoted were his words given in the House on Friday, did the Prime Minister know on Friday, when he said that there was no immediate cause for undue concern for the safety of Canadians—did he know at that time that the United States intended to launch an attack on Libya?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I indicated what I did in the House I was aware of certain information beyond which I would not want to go, nor would I think my hon. friend would ask me in these circumstances to set out publicly. I can tell my hon. friend that we have conveyed on an ongoing basis our deep concerns about the safety of Canadians. We put forward political views as to certain options, and we remained in close touch and consultation with our American allies.

BOYCOTT OF COMMERCIAL FLIGHTS TO LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to comment upon that question from the Member for Hamilton Mountain. I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister. When that statement was made on Friday we did not have the current crisis. Now what the people in this country want to know is how can Canadians in Libya get out? There are no regular air flights into Libya any more; the International Federation of Air Line Pilots has boycotted it. How do we get them out? Do we have any undertaking from the Government of Libya that Canadian planes will be able to fly in and get our people out?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That is precisely the detail which would be prejudicial, I think, to discuss in public. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we have, on the ground in Libya, consular personnel in a well established system, which was in place when he was in Government, and they are in positive contact with Canadian citizens. If those Canadians express a wish to leave, the means are there to effect their departure.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN FARMERS—GOVERNMENT CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday in the House the Minister indicated that he recognized that Government action, including the stabilization payment, was inadequate to meet the farm crisis. He went on to say that the Government was quite prepared to do more. We thank the Government for that commitment.

Has the Minister or his colleague met with the wheat pools in the Prairies, the Wheat Growers' Association, the Farmers' Union and other farm organizations, to determine the best course of action the Government can take to deal with the crisis in grain growing?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, beginning in January and February I had meetings with all of the pool presidents, the presidents of the grain companies and other industry people in the west to discuss this very situation and try to make sure that everyone basically understood the situation as we saw it in the Government, and attempted to make sure everyone understood the serious situation that we faced internationally.

As we said yesterday in Winnipeg, I realized that it could be more, on an individual farmer basis. In fact we would like to make it more. However, when one considers that $580 million is going into circulation at the beginning of the planting season, it will be of significant benefit to western Canadians in putting their crop in the ground this spring.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS OPTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in his discussions with these organizations now and in the future, will the Minister make deficiency payments for low prices that we expect for grain one of the options for dealing with the crisis?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the amount of money that was announced yesterday under the Western Grain Stabilization Act is for the present crop year. We have yet to plant and harvest the crop for which initial prices were announced a week ago. I do not believe we want to get totally ahead of ourselves.

The amount of money that could potentially come from the Western Grain Stabilization Act next year could be substantial. Again we would like to point out that it was this Government— and we should give some credit to both opposition Parties—that amended the Act to allow for this kind of funding to be available when it is most needed by prairie farmers, that is, prior to spring seeding.

I might add that we hope to have those cheques in the mail as early as Friday, and by the end of next week at the very latest. It will be well before May 1.

MULTICULTURALISM

TORONTO CONFERENCE—PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. At the conference in Toronto last Saturday, concern was expressed by members of some ethno-cultural organizations that the new initiatives being taken in multiculturalism and business will draw resources away from some good programs existing in Multiculturalism Canada. Will the Minister tell the House whether these concerns are justified?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, indeed the conference was a smashing success. It resulted in many positive recommendations, new thrusts and new opportunities which came forward from the delegates who represented all parts and all regions of the country.

I can assure the Hon. Member that none of these new opportunities or new thrusts which we are in the process of discussing with the ethno-cultural community will take anything away from the very positive existing programs. Rather, they will complement our commitment to provide equality of opportunity to all Canadians in all areas of the economy and Canada as a whole.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

MINORITIES—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today, we received the Fifteenth Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, and there are a number of serious problems with official languages policies and programs, both with respect to the provision of services and the policies of this Government.

The situation of official language minority groups is a critical and disastrous one. Are you prepared to ask today for a Royal Commission of Inquiry that will examine this whole subject with a view to providing quick and effective solutions to the problems we are having at the provincial level?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I assume my hon. friend is referring to the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages. Of course. Last year, Mr. Speaker, upon receiving the report, I set up a committee of Senior Deputy Ministers to deal with this problem and to outline an action program that would promote the development and expansion of Canada's two official languages and their use on a daily basis. I am pleased to inform the Hon. Member that the committee has submitted a report. We are now at the ministerial level, and I think that in the near future, the Government will be in a position to make some important announcements with respect to this second facet, if you wish, of an action program to promote official languages.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' RIGHT TO WORK IN FRENCH OR ENGLISH—UPPER MANAGEMENT—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, considering the right of federal public servants to carry on their daily work either in French or in English, and considering that the Commissioner of Official Languages has criticized the Prime Minister's Office, levelling rather severe criticism at his senior Staff—the Commissioner says that ten out of eleven senior Staff members are Anglophones—what does the Prime Minister intend to do to take corrective action at the top and thus set an example for others, and show that employees can work in either English or French in federal offices?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not see the Commissioner's comments regarding this particular allegation. I think it is public knowledge that with Paul Tellier, whom I appointed Clerk of the Privy Council and Bernard Roy, who is my Chief of Staff, and with whom I work regularly, that as a result of this situation, in the course of a normal working day—aside from Cabinet meetings and my presence here in the House—about 70 per cent of my work in the course of the day is done in French. I think that is not only normal but desirable, and I am prepared to explain and defend my point of view at any time, before the Commissioner or anyone else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It was reported on CBC television news last night, and confirmed in Washington today, that the introduction of the Canadian Government's generic drugs Bill has been delayed until after the vote by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee on the proposal for free trade talks. Since this clear linkage between free trade and generic drugs was explicitly denied by the Minister for International Trade in the House yesterday, will the Prime Minister explain that statement and inform the House of other free trade preconditions demanded by the U.S. administration and Congress?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister for International Trade clearly spelled out the Government's position yesterday. If his position is inconsistent with the CBC, so be it.

POSSIBLE PATENT LAW AMENDMENTS—EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since it has already been disclosed that the generic drug Bill will contain no legal requirements that the multinational drug companies increase their Canadian investment in research, will he explain how these continuing concessions will do anything for the Canadian consumer who may be faced with paying an extra $100 for each new prescription for the next 10 years?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member wait until we make the announcement on this policy before making any comments on any rumours of that kind.

INTRODUCTION OF AGRI-BONDS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. When will the Minister release the decision on the 6 per cent agri-bonds which we promised during the election campaign?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question, I can assure you of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: Perhaps I should go back and remind my hon. friend and colleague that, consistent with our campaign commitment, we referred that and two other items to the appropriate standing committee. That committee reported on those three items and, with respect to the specific item raised by the Hon. Member, the agri-bond issue, it is currently being discussed, in the over-all context of the farm finance issues, between myself and my provincial colleagues.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning the Commissioner for Official Languages tabled his annual report in which he criticized the Government for its lack of commitment to language equality. He said: "Last year we called for renewal but so far no real action has been taken". When will the Prime Minister table his renewal program and his amendments to the Official Languages Act?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, unless I am mistaken, I think the critical remarks to which my hon. friend refers were addressed to past Governments, plural.

Mr. Allmand: Oh, no, last year.

Mr. Mulroney: I said I believed so. I will take another look at it and we will see.

I indicated publicly after the last report that I would designate a senior committee of senior Deputy Ministers, which I did, to prepare amendments to the Official Languages Act in order to ensure that vital piece of legislation was strengthened and enhanced and adapted to new conditions and requirements. That has been done.

The work is now at a senior ministerial level. It will go to Cabinet and will be introduced in the House at the appropriate time, and it will be of benefit to the country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner said there were some immediate problems to deal with, and I quote again: "Are we to suppose the Government can't walk and chew gum at the same time?" How and when is the Government going to deal with the Commissioner's criticism against CNR, Petro-Canada, Agriculture Canada, CMHC, the Prime Minister's Office, National Defence, Correctional Services of Canada—and I could go on and on? When is the Government going to deal with these criticisms in the report?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while we will work very, very effectively to protect and promote the interests of minorities, the English-speaking minorities in Quebec and the French-speaking minorities across the country, with enthusiasm and vigour, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have no apologies to make to anyone about my stand and the stand of this Government in regard to protecting linguistic rights.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

HANNA SHOE COMPANY IN SHAWINIGAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Last week I was in Shawinigan, in the constituency of Saint-Maurice, and I met workers from the Hanna Shoe Company which closed down temporarily on February 14.

My question is this: Since the company has already received federal grants, what steps does the Government intend to take now to find a solution and thereby prevent the permanent shutdown of that major industry in the constituency of Saint-Maurice?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the situation to which the Hon. Member refers is only one of such situations we are now living with in the footwear area. I can only assure the Hon. Member that we have the situation under review and, hopefully, we will be able to come up with a solution to keep the plant open.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET COMPANY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, there are 250 workers in that industry. Does the Minister intend to meet personally with the management of the Hanna shoe company in Shawinigan, in order to find a solution to that most important problem?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, if it would be helpful, of course, I have no objection to meeting with those who might want to meet with me, including representatives of the workers, although I want to caution the Hon. Member that some footwear companies are doing comparatively well at the present time, while others are in difficulty. I think our Department can perhaps be most helpful in ensuring that those which are not doing as well as others can at least be made aware of where the opportunities are in the footwear industry in Canada today.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY POST OFFICE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible in this House for Canada Post operations. Canada Post seems to continue to act as though service to the public is a secondary consideration. Is the Minister aware of the closing of the only post office which for 20 years has served the seamen and users of the St. Lawrence Seaway? What can be done to restore that service?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the closing of that post office. Unfortunately, we had to close it for different reasons, mainly because it was a seasonal office and had a very limited clientele. To achieve important savings we had to close that post office. However, I can assure my colleague that we are looking for a convenient alternative to accommodate the sailors.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TWO FRANCOPHONES' REQUEST FOR COURT TRIAL IN FRENCH IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government likes to claim credit for firsts, and in that connection I would like to ask the Minister of Justice why he authorized his officials to appear in a criminal proceeding in Newfoundland where two Francophone Canadians are seeking a trial in their official mother language and, for the first time since the Canadian official languages policy, argue on behalf of the federal Government that they should not be given their trial in their own official language of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is misinformed. The position taken with respect to the trial in Newfoundland is that under the Criminal Code, under the legislation introduced in this House in 1977 or 1978 by the previous administration, of which the hon. gentleman was a Member, it was provided that both official languages will be used in criminal trials by agreement with the provinces, and those provisions would be proclaimed as the provinces were ready to provide the facilities.

At the present time there are a number of provinces which are not yet in the position to provide the necessary facilities. At the meeting of Attorneys General held in Vancouver in February, I urged the provinces to proceed apace with their preparations. They have agreed to meet with my Department and each set up a timetable of when they are going to accomplish this.

It is our policy that trials in both official languages will be available in every area of Canada as soon as possible. We are doing all we can to urge the provinces to reach that timetable under the legislation proposed by the hon. gentleman's Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LANGUAGE BASE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is a Charter as well, and the argument which was made was partly based on the Charter. I ask the Minister again why the federal Government did not take the position of fairness in a case where a trial can be provided? The Minister knows that there is enough of a base in the province of Newfoundland to provide for a criminal trial to be conducted and adjudicated in the French language.

Why did the representatives of the Government which, the Prime Minister just tells us, stands up so strongly for official languages, not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kaplan: Why does the Government not take the other side—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: There should be a trial in French.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's question is too long.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is really being hypocritical because, during the years of his Government, no action was taken by it to make it possible for there to be trials in French or English in Newfoundland and certain other provinces across the country.

We are now urging the Province of Newfoundland where, by the way, less than 1 per cent of the population speaks French, there are no judges at the moment who are bilingual—

Mr. Gauthier: What does that matter, John?

Mr. Crosbie: —to proceed apace and to sit down with us and agree to a schedule where the province will be able to grant trials in both French and English.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION—CANADIANS IN LIBYA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that either the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) may have misled the House during Question Period today—

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down, Sheila!

Ms. Copps: —when they stated that no Canadians were at risk. There are reports from the press, which I think should be resolved, to the effect that there has been a Canadian diplomat picked up in Libya. I would like to get some more information—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is really raising a question for Question Period. It is not a point of order.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 21A (Mr. Allmand).

Mr. Speaker: When the House broke at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) had the floor. Resuming debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, what we are debating is an amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) which would make public the action plans of employers. When the Minister introduced the legislation she did not introduce any measures with respect to action plans at all. After a great many groups appeared before the committee the Minister introduced an amendment to the Bill to provide for action plans. However, these action plans are not to be made public. What is the purpose of having an action plan if it is not to be made public?

What we are calling on the Government to do is accept this particular amendment in order to make the action plan available to the workers in a plant or in industries which are affected by the Bill. We are also calling on the Government to make the action plans public to the Human Rights Commission. Gordon Fairweather, the Chairman of the Human Rights Commission, has said that he would like to have access to these particular action plans. Under this legislation they will not be made available. I call upon the House to listen to Mr. Fairweather. He is a distinguished Canadian, a distinguished former parliamentarian and a member of the Conservative Party. He is a very progressive member of that Party. I think we should accede to his wishes.

I wish to refer the House once again to the speech made by Gordon Fairweather in which he stated that the action plans of employees under this Bill should be made available to the Human Rights Commission. They should be made public. I agree with Mr. Fairweather's words. I agree with Motion No. 21A. I think it is a reasonable amendment to the Bill which has been introduced by a member of the Liberal Party. It is supported by ourselves. I think all reasonable members of the Conservative Party would have to support it as well. After all, the Conservative Party is the Party which campaigned for freedom of information. Why not support this motion to ensure these action plans are made public?

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the amendment to Clause 5 of the Act respecting employment equity. It concerns the plan of goals to be prepared by the companies involved and the implementation of such plans to achieve a more equitable situation for the designated groups, the minority groups in our society, and people whose future is not very promising unless we take concrete measures.

Here is the amendment, and I quote Clause 5:

5. (1) An employer shall, in respect of each year, prepare a plan setting out (a) the goals that he employer intends to achieve in implementing employment equity in the year or years to which the plan relates; and (b) the timetable for the implementation of those goals.

And second, the reference to the retention of the plan.

(2) A copy of a plan prepared under subsection (1) shall be retained by employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a period of at least three years after the last year in respect of which the plan is prepared.

Mr. Speaker, I find fascinating the suggestion that the plan be kept in a drawer or at the work place. But if we want real improvement, if we want the legislation to have more impact, if we expect more than pious wishes, if we do not want this to be a joke or the kind of academic exercise à la Harvard Business School, if instead we want it to become an open plan of action so that all people concerned will know what this is all about, then I think the amendments proposed by my colleague are very important. These amendments indicate what the employer must do. A copy of a plan prepared under subsection (1) shall be:

(b) communicated to the employer's employees and any existing bargaining agent; and

(c) made available to the Human Rights Commission, on request.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, at least that makes sense. Why go through that exercise if nobody is to know what it is all about? Why go through the motions if nothing comes out of it, if everything is done in great secrecy?

I simply fail to see why, at least during the three years after the last year of a plan, a plan should be prepared if nobody is going to see it. If it is to remain in a file or a safety vault, why waste the time of the major employers? In my judgment, it does not make sense at all.

[English]

The Bill, which did not originally promote action plans with targets and timetables, has been amended, at least in that sense. It is a substantive amendment. It is an amendment which only makes good sense. What on earth good is there in developing a plan to sit around a table in order to take a look at information from Statistics Canada and then file that information away in a drawer? No one will ever see it. For the life of me I cannot understand why the Government would not find this a logical follow-up on what seems to be the first of the two objectives under the plans in terms of goals to be prepared. It is the type of action which should follow on the heels of working on those plans.

Not only do plans need to be prepared, they must also be made available to the employees—the people involved in this whole process—and to the Human Rights Commission upon request. Unless employees and the target groups about which we are talking are aware of the new opportunities, then they are unlikely to apply. It is as if the Government has looked only at voluntary measures. If this law is not applied to the principle of submitting these plans for revision, then there is no point in having them. If the Human Rights Commission cannot access employers' plans then it will be unable to assess whether the measures planned by the employer are adequate and, indeed, whether the plans have been implemented.

The other part of the farce is that if the plans are not implemented, then nothing happens. All one has to say is that the plans have been drawn up. If they do not have a set of plans, they can be fined, but who knows what they have if the plans are filed away in drawers? At least the plans should have to be submitted somewhere so someone knows they exist. They should be sent to the Employment and Immigration offices so that it may be determined if they are really targeting the population and they need to be viewed in light of the statistics which are being undertaken at this point.

We had to fight hard enough to get StatsCanada to continue so that we will know where we are at and can take a good look at the composition of our society. What is the point of doing that if we are not going to apply the findings? I think this amendment is only an intelligent progression that would enable the law to be applied in its entirety.

I would like to suggest that not only should the plans be retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of residence in Canada for a period of three years, but as well that they be communicated to the employees and any existing bargaining agent, and further that they be made available to the Human Rights Commission on request. I would like very much to support my colleague's amendment in this regard.

There is no doubt that both the Advisory Council on the Status of Women and the Human Rights Commissioner, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, feel equally strongly that this amendment is a necessity if we want to measure progress in society in any way. I have said from the very beginning that the concept of this Bill could be very effective for the target groups, but there is no way that it will be effective if we continue with the farce of keeping secret the plans of action that one has undertaken.

I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he and the Minister have agreed to these amendments which make sound sense and would give the Bill some coherence and potential for action. I sincerely hope that they will take this into consideration and that the Government will support this amendment.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring one or two comments about this amendment to the Parliamentary Secretary and through him to the Minister. The game the Government intends to play is called: "I've got a secret". I must say that I am extremely disturbed over the Government's reluctance to allow any voluntary enforcement of goals and targets set by an employer, because these goals and targets will not in fact be communicated to employees except in the better workplaces where the employer tries to be open about this process. The exact areas where employment equity is most needed are those areas in which there will be the least amount of information made available.

Suppose there was a law in this country indicating that we would wipe out discrimination against a particular religious group, but this was going to be done in stages. We would tell employers that they have to set goals for eliminating discrimination against that particular religious group but they are not to communicate those goals to the people who are affected—why I do not know. When we put it that way it sounds pretty awful, and the reason it sounds pretty awful is that it is pretty awful.

I would have thought that the Parliamentary Secretary, being himself a member of a group which has suffered a great deal of discrimination in the past, would have been sensitive to this issue and would, if he has not been given the authority to do so by his Minister, say that he himself personally endorses the change even though the Government is not prepared to go along with it. That is the kind of courage we would like to see displayed by that Parliamentary Secretary. We do not want to see him go along with something which will make useless this particular provision in the Bill.

Clause 5 of the Bill, which was inserted in response to a great deal of pressure during the course of the hearings, requires that an employer shall prepare a plan each year to set out the goals the employer intends to achieve in implementing employment equity as well as a timetable for implementing those goals. That would be a step forward, except that both the amendment put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), and the amendment which we are debating, put by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), relate to the salient point that there has to be a way by which the people affected have cognizance of what those goals and targets for implementation actually are. That is not the case in the Bill as it now stands.

The proposed amendments would simply ensure that in one way or other the information be communicated to employees. If there is a bargaining agent, the information should go to the bargaining agent. It can go to the employees by means of a company memorandum or by being posted on bulletin boards throughout the workplace and copies could be made available to those employees who are interested in receiving copies. There are different ways of making information available, and the Parliamentary Secretary knows very well that there are well established ways of communicating this kind of information in the workplace.

I draw to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary the high-flying language of Clause 2, the purpose of the Bill, which indicates that the purpose is to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women and the other groups affected, by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way, but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences. How the devil do people know how that is seen by the employer if in fact the employer does not have to communicate just what it is he intends to do?

Clause 4 of the Bill indicates that the employer is required to implement employment equity in consultation with designated representatives of the employees, however those designated representatives happen to be chosen. If I consult with the Government, but then at the end of the day the Government says it is not going to tell me what the goals and targets are, then I will have no means of knowing what is going on and that is a pretty weak consultation. In fact, that takes the meat out of the process. That is not consultation.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission is a small body. It cannot monitor the actions of every employer who falls under federal regulation. There has to be a certain amount of voluntary enforcement. In fact, that is the system on which a great deal of federal law is based. Standards are set out and means are provided by which people can make complaints if they feel that the standards are not being respected. However, such a process is impossible if people are not allowed to know to what extent the employer's achievements, if any, reach the plan which the employer worked out, presumably in consultation with the employees. Only if the employer chooses to share that information will that be able to occur.

Under the Human Rights Act, the Human Rights Commission has the power to look at the implementation of employment equity, but there again the amendment would give the Human Rights Commission access on demand to the employer's plans and targets. However, because that is not as yet required, another obstacle is put before the Human Rights Commission. Conceivably it will have to go to the courts in order to get the information which in fact should be made freely available.

Canada Employment Centres are meant to ensure contract compliance in the case of larger employers who do business with the federal Government, but there again one of the ways of ensuring compliance is to see how targets and goals are being met. But that information is not going to be made available to employees. There is no requirement that it be made available to the Canada Employment Centres either. The information could simply be locked in a safe, and if anyone came to try to find out about the plans the employer need simply indicate that he has kept the information in a safe for three years where it has been safe from any form of public scrutiny.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the fact that Clause 5 of the Bill as drafted after committee consideration is so weak that it is practically useless.

It is useless because the employer must spell out in a plan each one of his goals with respect to employment equity, but this plan would not be unveiled to the employees, the unions representing the employees, the Canadian Human Rights Commission, or the manpower centres.

So nobody will know the goals of the employer because the Government refuses to give that right to the employees. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering just how they can have the kind of consultation referred to in the subclauses of the Bill when the people who will be consulted will have no idea whether the employer has accepted or rejected their suggestions. They might even be given contradictory information. The employer will tell them: Yes, I agree, it is a good idea, your suggestions are excellent. But the day after, the employer prepares a plan of goals which completely ignores the remarks and suggestions made by the employees. But ask the employer whether he considers suggestions made by his employees and the employer will answer: of course. I promised I would consider their suggestions. That is, he considers them and then ignores them, and his employees will never know whether he included a substantial portion of their suggestions in the action plan set up by the employer for a three-year period.

As I said earlier, I am amazed, especially since the Parliamentary Secretary belongs to a group that has suffered terrible discrimination in the past, that he should fail to see how important it is to shine the light of information on all this so there are no secrets and employers, employees and unions discuss the plans together. That is what they want, Mr. Speaker. But in our society, we often get no further than voluntary compliance with legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada. In this case, Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for people to try and influence the employer and make him meet the objectives set in his action plan, because his employees do not know what they are, except when the employer is a good employer who is serious about meeting his obligations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry but the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner).

[English]

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the very concerned remarks of my hon. colleague. Indeed he is correct when he states that I am a product of an environment which caused me to suffer a great deal in my lifetime. However, for me life has fulfilled much of my hopes. This has been an absolutely marvellous country to myself and to my antecedents. My father-in-law, who is still alive and very well, came to Canada without five cents and became one of the outstanding achievers in our community as a result of hard work and dedication. We are sending forth a message, and that message is one of hope.

Mr. Cassidy: Keep it secret, that is the message.

Mr. Weiner: We are not keeping anything secret.

Mr. Cassidy: That is exactly what you are doing, keeping it secret.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Weiner: We are not keeping anything secret. We are sending forth a message that all Canadians will be able to contribute to and participate in society. Canada is the most wonderful country in the world. Its immigration policy is the most open and accessible of any in the world, one that has gone out with heart—

Mr. Cassidy: Keep it secret, keep it secret.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Chair is very much under the impression that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) would like to make a comment—

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, if you would like me to, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No, I am not inviting the Hon. Member to make a comment. He has already spoken, and I draw his attention to that fact. Obviously the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the same right.

Mr. Weiner: All those things we feel give us the confidence to know that we will have the support, encouragement and co-operation of all Canadians in our goal.

We have run a series of advertisements which talk about the world next door. I invite all Hon. Members and all Canadians to visit my world next door. They should come with me to the streets of St. Laurent where they will see that 50 per cent of the population has come to this country, 25 per cent in the last 15 years. All of them are about to or have already taken a very viable place in the community. A lot more has to be done; much has already gone on. I would be the first to say that that is exactly what we are highlighting by saying loud and clear that they all deserve an equal chance. We will see to it that they get that chance. All Members of the House agree with that.

Mr. Nystrom: In secret.

Mr. Weiner: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said that all countries of the world post their plans.

Mr. Nystrom: I didn't say that.

Mr. Weiner: He will know that in the United States there is no posting of plans.

Mr. Cassidy: They bomb Libyans there too. We have to look at what we have to do in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Weiner: There is a purpose in listening. There is a purpose in communicating. There is a purpose in putting into effect a piece of legislation which will work. Philosophically we do not agree, but we on all sides of the House want to ensure that there is true equality. We want to ensure that we are not patronizing and that we have results.

Mr. McCurdy: What does that have to do with publishing a plan?

Mr. Nystrom: Why keep it secret?

Mr. Weiner: Employers are required to consult with their employees. There is no need to mention the word "brief" since the Bill already specifies that it will be three years. Employers will be encouraged in guidelines to make the plans available to employees.

Mr. Cassidy: But not required.

Mr. Weiner: The guidelines to employers will specify that a good employment strategy includes making the plans available to employees. The plans will not be available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission on request. However, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have access to the plans when investigating complaints.

Gordon Fairweather, Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, indicated during the committee hearings that the reported data would be sufficient to initiate complaints under the Canadian Human Rights Act. The Commission can initiate complaints, examine data and plans and, if necessary, appoint tribunals which have the authority to impose sanctions where findings of discrimination are made.

Mr. Cassidy: What about freedom of information? Didn't you used to stand for that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Weiner: Since Members are so wonderful in quoting Mr. Fairweather, a great Canadian, a very concerned man and one of the foremost leaders of human rights in the world, I too would like to have a moment to quote him.

Mr. McCurdy: You are talking about everybody but the target groups.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you give him a chance to speak, you nerd?

Mr. Nystrom: Is that a parliamentary word?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Weiner: I should like to refer to what Mr. Gordon Fairweather said at the fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce last September. He said: "I am convinced that the time for affirmative action is now, but let me make it very clear that I do not at this stage advocate mandatory affirmative action".

Mr. Cassidy: That is not what is being proposed here.

Mr. Weiner: That is what he stated, that he did not want mandatory affirmative action. Affirmative action does not have to be the same thing as quotas, if we get on with the job and start to show some real progress without them. We want to get on with the job. Let us pass the Bill, let us put employment equity into effect, and five years down the way when we review it together we will all praise the progress we have made.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Government—in this particular case the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Weiner)—is in fact repeating to the House, to the people of Canada and to those groups which want some kind of protection and equality the following old ditty:

"Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes my darling daughter,
Hang your clothes on the hickory bush,
But don't go near the water."

• (1530)

That is the kind of thinking the Government is asking us to follow. I do not know whether the appropriate word to describe such an approach would be "hypocrisy". However, it certainly is an attempt by the Government to act as if it were doing something, when it knows perfectly well that it is not. It is pretending really to care about a certain group, but it is not going to give them the protection it is pretending it will give them. That underlies the Government's response to this motion.

This motion relates to the need for action plans to be known. We heard the convoluted thinking of the last speaker. He said that the Canadian Human Rights Commission cannot have access to this information, but can request it when it wants to prosecute or act. How can the Canadian Human Rights Commission know whether it wants to act unless it can get the information? That is double-talk. To put it at its nicest, it is a catch-22.

The handicapped who came to the Hill yesterday to protest know this double-talk for what it is. They know that this Bill simply requires companies to make a report with some statistics which they can then hide in their drawers for three years. After kicking, screaming, and resisting, the Conservative Party finally agreed that there should be a plan, but no one can see the plan. It is tragic, or laughable. In any case, it is totally unacceptable to any reasonable, sincere person.

We are not talking only about human rights here. We are talking about human responsibilities. The Government does not seem able to accept human responsibilities. Through the way in which it has handled this equality Bill, it is obvious that the Government does not know what human rights are. It has no idea of how it is necessary for Parliament to be responsible for the protection of the interests of large numbers of citizens.

Women represent at least 51 per cent of our population. One in every eight Canadians, which amounts to millions of our citizens, is disabled. The native people represent a very large section of our community. Visible minority groups also form a very large percentage of our population. A responsible Government would provide legislation to act responsibly in the interests of those people. This Government is not doing so and is fighting, in a most hypocritical way, resolutions which give some meaning to this Bill which, at the present time, is nothing but a bunch of words.

The Government must take the responsibility of ensuring that corporations and companies are responsible to their employees, to the communities which they serve, and to the taxpayers which often support those corporations. We are asking that the taxpayers who fall within these groups be given the right of access to jobs. The Government is not showing responsibility, nor is it calling upon companies to be responsible with regard to the people of the country by making plans to ensure that proper and equal access is provided to all Canadians, and to ensure that their plans are made known so their records can be measured against those plans. That is precisely what this motion is all about.

It is absolutely incredible that the Government is taking evasive tactics by requiring companies to provide action plans, but keeping those plans secret. I call upon the Parliamentary Secretary to re-examine his thinking on this matter and to explain the purpose of having such a plan if the plan is not to be made available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Why should a company go to the trouble of making a plan if it stays in the files? It is absurd to require such an exercise. We asked for an action plan because we wanted action. This is inaction.

One cannot conclude other than that the Government is not really sincere about employment equity. It has totally evaded Judge Abella's recommendation to ensure that the Bill has teeth. She said that the passage of a Bill without teeth would be to continue as we have before. We have really made no step forward other than jawboning. I have been speaking to a lot of human rights people. I have been talking to people in the churches concerned with human responsibility. They feel that in terms of this Bill the Government should go back to the drawing board and re-examine its purposes. If the Government passes this bill it will only hinder the cause. The Bill will have practically no effect in terms of bringing about immediate action for the people who have been waiting for the Government to fulfil its promises.

If the Canadian Human Rights Commission wants information, it will have to use sleuths. It will have to guess what companies are doing. It will not have ready access to reports on companies' plans. It can only guess what those plans are, and that means it can do nothing. It will have nothing more than figures with regard to the companies' intentions. We will throw an enormous task upon the back of the Canadian

Human Rights Commission which we know it cannot perform. We are handcuffing the commission.

This motion requests that this information be made available to the commission upon request. Why would the Government not be delighted to go along with that part of the resolution? It should not be necessary for the Canadian Human Rights Commission to scramble around to find information when it thinks something is wrong. The Government wants the Canadian Human Rights Commission to play a guessing game and look stupid and ineffective which will give the groups that are discriminated against a sense of frustration and a feeling that the commission is no good. People will say that the commission is incompetent and inept and it will be blamed for that which the Government should be blamed for.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to determine whether the rejection of this amendment was due to silliness, stupidity or unconscionable trickery. In response to a significant concern, I heard the Parliamentary Secretary telling us that he lived in a good neighbourhood where people worked hard. He told us that his father came here with a nickel. That was his explanation for the denial of this simple amendment. Let me tell him that the women, the disabled and native people of this country reject that. Let me tell him that people like my great, great grandfather who were brought or came to this country as former slaves with less than a nickel in their pockets will not accept that as an explanation.

The fact is that this Government did not in the first instance want to have goals. That is why we have this silly arrangement in this Bill which separates the process from the goals. Having conceded that there should be a definition of goals, year by year, how silly it is to reject having those goals revealed to those directly involved! It has to be a deliberate attempt to sabotage the intent of the clause which adopts the goals. There can be no answer except trickery. I cannot believe that the Government would be so stupid as not to realize that the one way to ensure that an employer will implement serious employment equity processes is by ensuring that every employee subject to those processes and benefiting from those goals knows what the goals are. Could it be possible that the Hon. Member does not know of incident after incident of complaints of discrimination against employers where the excuse has been that the employee responsible for hiring was unaware that the company had a non-discriminatory or affirmative action program?

What concerns me most of all is that this is another example of this Government's refusal to address the needs of those people who are supposed to be benefiting from this legislation. We know the scenario. It is to go slow and not to offend those who are responsible for what many people who are victims regard as a criminal act, that is, the rejection of these people for a job, the denial to them of economic opportunity, the denial of the opportunity to participate in this society in a way that would accord them independence. That is what is at issue here.

Does this Government not have the will to address the needs that exist? It is obvious that the Parliamentary Secretary does not care that this legislation not only fails to address the needs of minority groups, but he denies a proper hearing for this amendment. It cannot be denied now that this Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister he represents are so lacking in conscience that they will pass a shadow of a Bill, one with no substance, and one which will deny the needs of those whose needs this Bill is supposed to meet.

Let us give reconsideration to this denial. Let us examine what is being said. Let us consider the fact that you have at least accepted that there will be goals set year by year. Give us an explanation different from the history of your family, the neighbourhood in which you live, and different from this oft-repeated notion that those who are not visibly definable as minorities have sometimes achieved success in a way which leads them to believe others are not denied that success because of their colour, their sex, their disability, or because they are a member of the aboriginal peoples of this country. Reconsider this and put yourself in the shoes of those who cannot deny to which group they belong and therefore have no support in fighting the discrimination they have experienced in many ways all their lives without the recourse this Bill is supposed to provide, which in fact this Bill manipulates in so many ways so that recourse will not be there at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 21A. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) moves:

Motion No. 21A

April 7, 1986—That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 12 to 16 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"section (1) shall be

(a) retained by the employer at the employer's principal place of business in Canada for a brief period of at least three years after the last year in respect of which the plan is prepared;

(b) communicated to the employer's employees and any existing bargaining agent: and

(c) made available to the Human Rights Commission, on request."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

We will now debate Motions Nos. 24, 25A, 26A and 27A and vote on them separately.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 22 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"ance with the duties imposed on the employer under sections 4 and 5 and further in accordance with prescribed instructions indicating,".

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

Motion No. 25A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 39 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"moted, trained, transferred, demoted and terminated and the degree of".

Motion No. 26A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"(e) the number of individuals in designated groups who apply for specific openings."

Motion No. 27A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"(e) a list of those acts undertaken by the employer pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have presented three amendments here, all of which amend Clause 6 of the Bill, the reporting clause. This clause at present is the only clause which can be considered a sanction. It says that employers who must introduce employment equity must report certain information about their workforce. I presume that the purpose is, as it should be, that once you know what is going on in your workforce, you will be able to tell whether employment equity or affirmative action programs are necessary, whether there has been a lack of progress and so on. My amendments are meant to improve Clause 6, the reporting section. Since these amendments are all grouped together for purposes of debate I will go through them one by one. Amendment 25A is an amendment to sub-clause (d) of Clause 6. At the present time Sub-clause (d) says that the employer must report:

The number of employees hired, promoted and terminated and the degree of representation in those numbers of persons in designated groups.

Mr. Speaker, that is good as far as it goes. You have to report the numbers of native people, visible minorities, women and disabled people who have been hired, promoted and terminated. My amendment would add to these three categories of those who are hired, promoted and terminated. We would add those who are trained, transferred and demoted.

The reasoning is as follows. If you do not train the women at the bottom of the ladder in your labour force, or the visible minorities, they are not going to get into middle management, they are not going to get to the top. If you are aiming for a situation where you have good representation of these target groups, not only at the bottom of your labour force but in the middle and at the top, we should know who is being trained.

The next amendment concerns those who are transferred. Transfers are used by employers to punish or to reward employees. Those whom they want out of their hair they send to places like—now, I have to be careful here. If they want to reward them they certainly send them to Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East and Montreal, in general, and to the Province of Quebec, that is natural. If they want to punish them they will send them to some part of the country which is not too enjoyable.

Mr. de Corneille: Overseas.

Mr. Allmand: Well, I don't know. In any case we all know that employers do that, and it is a way of getting target groups out of their hair. It is a way, by the way, of sidetracking them from promotions and participation in the firm.

Finally, I ask that we add those who are demoted. If you ask that the employer reports on those who have been promoted we should also note who has been demoted. You can be promoted in one month and demoted six months later. Sometimes what appears to be a lateral transfer in the firm ends up, in fact, to be a demotion. I am asking that this information be added to the report, it being Motion No. 25A.

Motion No. 26A adds a Subclause (e) to Clause 6, the reporting section which would require the employer to report on:

(e) the number of individuals in designated groups who apply for specific openings.

If we simply get reports from these employers on what is happening in their static labour force and we do not know how many people from the designated groups are applying for employment, we do not know how many disabled people are sending in applications that are being turned down. We do not know how many visible minorities are sending in applications and being turned down, and so on. That is important in judging whether that firm is serious about improvement in its employment equity program. I am asking in Motion No. 26A that that sort of information be added to the report.

My Motion No. 27A is probably the key one of them all in this clause because it will act as an improvement on the sanctions in this Bill. This Bill needs sanctions. As we all know the only legal sanction in the Bill at the present time is a penalty if you do not report at all, or if you report incorrectly. There is no sanction if you do not meet your goals on employment equity or affirmative action.

Motion No. 27A says the following:

(e) a list of those acts undertaken by the employer pursuant to section 4 of this Act.

In the report the employer is going to have to set out what he has done as an employer to fulfil his obligations under Clause 4. Clause 4, which is the key section, says that an employer shall:

—implement employment equity by

(a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices, not otherwise authorized by a law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups;

They are going to have to say in their report what they have done to identify and eliminate each of the employer's practices that serve as barriers to people in the designated groups. Subclause (4b) reads that an employer shall implement employment equity by the following:

(b) instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodations as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment—

Under the amendment the employer will have to report what positive policies and practices have been put in place to ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation.

The purpose of Motion No. 27A, as I said earlier, is to oblige the employer, subject to this Bill, to list those acts undertaken by that employer pursuant to his obligations in Section 4 of this Act.

I must say that I find it very strange, and I have respect for the Parliamentary Secretary, that although the Government has claimed this to be a very important Bill, we have only seen the Minister at the beginning of each day. It is usual for the Minister to be here to pilot the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order! I will take the opportunity to remind the Hon. Member that it is not permitted to mention either the absence or presence of Members in the House.

Mr. Allmand: I accept the ruling by the Speaker without mentioning whether or not the Minister is present. I know she must be embarrassed by this Bill. Knowing the Minister, I know she would want a more effective Bill. I have known her and listened to her for years on these questions and have always found her to be a person committed to employment equity and to affirmative action. I guess the Bill is a bit embarrassing to her and she must be hiding somewhere.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government Members who are here, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), a man committed to justice, a fair-minded man who is listening to the debate, and behind him the Minister for Immigration, both progressive, fair-minded people, are listening to my comments. I am sure that before this debate is over they will telephone the Minister and tell her that further amendments should be made to this Bill to make it an effective Bill to help the native people of Canada, the visible minorities, the women of Canada and the disabled people, who are the groups that are to be assisted by this Bill but will not be assisted unless amendments are made to make the Bill more effective and to accept at least these amendments which have been put forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, with regard to these three motions, which have been submitted by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), all are amendments designed to improve the Bill to provide definitions. One would think that the Government Members would welcome these suggestions. Tragically, some of these have been proposed in committee. Although some of the committee members indicated there was value to some of these amendments, the committee was unwilling to give assent to these amendments at that time. The amendments we have suggested in the last three days and the amendments we are debating today are designed to improve the Bill. These three amendments can greatly improve the specifics of the Bill.

• (1600)

If government Members can boast that their strength is their inability to think for themselves, then surely the Tories can be called invincible. It is sad that no Government Members are prepared to stand up and explain why they oppose these amendments which are designed to improve the Bill. I might explain to those who might be listening that the reason the walls in this place is resounding is that there are so few Members here from the Government. In fact, saying there is a corporal's guard would be exaggerating. In any event, they vote the same way and are uninterested in examining the value of the amendments. There is no willingness to examine what is being offered.

The amendment would include not just those who are promoted but also those who are trained, transferred, demoted and terminated. This would obviously improve the Bill. However, it seems that the Government does not want to accept suggestions from anyone because it believes that it must stand by what it has written and that it must be accepted as perfect. To admit that there could be improvements may in some way minimize its omniscience. Everyone knows the Government is not omniscient and it need not pretend to be.

It is unfortunate that it is not prepared to listen and seriously consider these amendments. The Government claimed that it would be open to consultation and dialogue. However, there is no response to dialogue and there has been no consultation because most of these resolutions we have brought forward have been proffered by the groups that are affected. It does not matter that we have offered the opinions of COPOH, women's organizations and native people—the Government has made up its mind that it knows best. It is autocratic, it is paternalistic, and one might say that it is ruthless. It will not listen despite all of the highest claims that it would enter into a new era. There is a complete lack of response to the suggestions in these motions.

I want to use this occasion to say that these motions involve technical changes that would improve the Bill. Perhaps between now and the time we vote on these motions the Government might consider accepting some of them on the basis that it has had time for repentance and of its willingness to accede to the fact that these suggestions may improve and strengthen the Bill. I hope the Government will take some of the major clauses into account and attempt to rectify them. These motions involve technical improvements which, if not passed now, hopefully will appear in the guidelines. The Government is not impressing the handicapped, native people or anyone with its obturate and stubborn attitude.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, these amendments reflect need, logic, common sense and fairness. They have been suggested by the affected groups, and perhaps that explains why they will be rejected by the Government like the other constructive amendments which have been offered.

First, let us consider Motion No. 25A. It states:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 39 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"moted, trained, transferred, demoted and terminated and the degree of".

I received a letter from a group representing minority employees in the Public Service. They told us that because of the ineffectual affirmative action program in the Government of this country and the Public Service, members of visible minority groups were being demoted, transferred and terminated—all of those things which are mentioned in the motion. The remedies which this Act should provide should extend beyond mere hiring, promotion and termination. Therefore, this amendment should be accepted by the Government because of its logic, fairness, common sense and need.

Let us consider Motion No. 26A. It states:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"(e) the number of individuals in designated groups who apply for specific openings".

Let us assume that we have counted the number of minority groups in the employ of a particular employer and determined the distribution of the designated groups in the population but will only consider what happens to those already employed, of which there are likely to be few. What good is that exercise if we do not determine the hiring practices of the company?

Motion No. 27A addresses the fact that Clause 4 makes no specific provision for reporting the actions required of the employer to the Minister or to anyone else. It is curious that the amendment proffered by my colleague refers only to Clause 4. Let us turn back to Motion No. 24 moved by my Party colleague which begins with the words: "containing information in". It goes on to read:

"accordance with the duties imposed on the employer under sections 4 and 5 and further in accordance with prescribed instructions indicating,"

It goes on to say, "in the form and manner prescribed". This means that the company's plan with respect to process or goals would at least be reported to the Minister and at least be available through that means since the Government sneakily omitted reporting provisions from Sections 4 and 5.

The Parliamentary Secretary has the opportunity to reconsider his refusal to provide for reporting to employees by accepting Motion No. 24 and providing more details with respect to the treatment that might be accorded to the target groups by accepting these amendments. So I would ask him to reconsider and acknowledge these amendments as a useful contribution to strengthening this Bill. If he refuses to do so, that will be another concession by the Government that it is attempting to pull one grand joke on women, visible minorities, natives and the disabled.

My colleague mentioned earlier how few members of the Government were here to listen to this debate. Perhaps they ought to remember that half the population is made up of women and perhaps one person out of 20 in the population would benefit from employment equity provisions which apply to the disabled. They ought to know that the visible minority population of the country represents between 500,000 and 600,000 persons and that they are presently concentrated in certain areas.

If those Hon. Members think they are going to get away with this garbage with impunity, perhaps they had better re-examine their thinking. I believe there is a notion held by the Tories that women, the visible minorities, the disabled and native Canadians are not watching what is going on or are too stupid to understand. But they will not be fooled by this nonsense, this parade of fancy rhetoric, this voluntary employment equity program which offends every notion of how affirmative action programs ought to be designed. It is about time the Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister started to think about how to address the real needs of so many people in this country who are tired of having promises broken and equality delayed. Government Members delay equality and break promises when they sit here silent, listening to the debate but rejecting constructive changes, which these target groups to whom the Bill is supposed to be directed have asked for and, indeed, demanded.

In the end, two groups will suffer. Those Hon. Members opposite will suffer when those millions of individuals who should be benefiting from the Bill have lost hope. They will lose votes.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are a series of amendments here which are being proposed in order to improve the unimprovable. I think one has to ask oneself whether it is really worth the effort given the fact that only part of the Bill which has any effect at all is the reporting requirement. As the amendments make clear, the reporting requirement is weak and could and should be improved. However, as I stated earlier during discussion of different elements of the Bill, the Bill as a whole is so ineffective that it is a pity it is called an employment equity bill. It might be better called a Bill on employment inequity or a Bill on delay to employment equity.

I would like to say that I was perhaps a bit more passionate a few moments ago when I was speaking about the secretive nature of the planned objectives and targets for employment equity. These things will not be shared with employees. However, I think an important opportunity is being lost by the House of Commons in this employment equity Bill. I know the Minister is extremely sensitive about the criticism she has received from members of the New Democratic Party with respect to the weaknesses in this particular Bill. I have been in politics long enough to recognize that not everything we hope for in a Bill will be there. Politics does require compromises and, and to some extent, some balance between the views of different groups, individuals and institutions in our society. Those things I am prepared to recognize, but when it comes to the Bill, it seems to speak almost entirely to the fears of business that it will somehow be made to do something it does not want to do. The Bill, therefore, purports to give some progress towards employment equity in order to cool down the various groups representing women, native Canadians, the handicapped and visible minorities, while in fact doing next to nothing. It seems to me that such is the nature of the compact which has been made with the business community. I regret to say that we are going to have to pass this Bill and it will be five years before anyone knows whether or not it works. There will be some reporting but it will not be very onerous. In the meantime, business can go on as if nothing has changed.

I do note that in certain areas of activity in the United States that country has gone further in terms of affirmative action than anything even envisaged in this Bill. I am speaking now in sorrow as much as in anger. The Government is not even prepared to make the reporting requirements adequately detailed with respect to the size of the companies which will mainly be affected so that they are to receive the kind of information which might be helpful as a starting point in measuring progress towards employment equity.

The Parliamentary Secretary has had in the past the reputation of being a man with progressive views. It is a pity that he finds himself in such regressive and reactionary company as is to be found within the Conservative caucus.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was known in her day as a red Tory. The red seems to be rapidly blending into blue, but it may very well be that she herself disagrees in a very fundamental way with a lot of things she has had to do in order to get this pale shadow, this thin thing, into the House of Commons as a Bill which purports to deal with employment equity. Perhaps she privately wishes she could have done a lot more. My message to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the Minister of Employment and Immigration is that there comes a time when one has to speak with one's conscience rather than simply being loyal to one's Party for reasons which are perhaps hard to defend when one is forced to do things one cannot live with or stomach.

Is the Minister of Employment and Immigration so negative and angry with the New Democratic Party because we are speaking truths about this particular Bill? We are telling her about the things which should be in the Bill. Has she had to reject these things because of pressure from reactionaries within her caucus and within the Cabinet? Was the Parliamentary Secretary so acid in his comments to me the other day because he also recognizes the weaknesses of this particular Bill? There is still time. I recognize that it will be a dramatic moment, but if members of the Government feel, as I do and as my Party does, that we have a commitment—perhaps those Hon. Members opposite share that commitment—to genuine affirmative action and employment equity, if there are still a few Tories who have that commitment, let them speak up now and vote against their Party when the amendments before us right now come to the fore. If that does not occur, I want the Parliamentary Secretary to take a message, not just to his Minister but to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as well.

During the last election a lot of people were looking for change, including individuals in the different minority groups which are dealt with in this Bill, and they were prepared to change their political allegiance and support the Progressive Conservatives because they thought they were going to see a real change. I personally, and representatives of my Party, will go from coast to coast and will joke and mock the Progressive Conservatives over such things as the fact that the plans which were meant to be put forward for employment equity are so important that they are not going to be shared with the employees but are going to be kept secret. Any semblance of credibility developed by the Progessive Conservatives on this issue during their period of opposition is going to disappear utterly by the time we get to the next election. I speak the truth. That is the warning I want to give to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women who is here with us in the House. She is perhaps only one of two Ministers in the House.

The credibility which his Party might have had is going down the drain. When people examine this legislation and see how weak it is, when they see from experience how little has changed as a consequence of it, then when the Conservatives say to native people, women, visible minorities and the handicapped: "See what a great job we are doing for you", they will be laughed at. No one likes to be laughed at, least of all members of the Government who came to power so proudly after the Liberal dynasty. They felt that they had ended that dynasty which had been around for such a long time. It was good that the Liberal dynasty was ended. What is bad is that the present Government seems to be acting with exactly the same type of arrogance, insensitivity, inability to consult and understanding of the needs and aspirations of ordinary Canadians as the Government which it replaced. We saw how the electorate dealt with the previous Government as a result of the way it behaved toward ordinary Canadians. I tell the Parliamentary Secretary and the Ministers who are in the House now that the people of Canada will deal in exactly the same way with this Government as they did with the previous one if it continues to follow the same course.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, perhaps I may say that today, in the province of Quebec, although the New Democratic Party failed to get any candidates elected, the fact that we tell the truth as reflected in the amendments we are proposing to this Bill on employment equity, did not go unnoticed by Quebecers, so much so that 26 per cent of the population has indicated that if an election were held today, it would vote for the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, with 57 Conservative members, the Progressive Conservatives have only one per cent more than we do in terms of public support in Quebec for their party. And this is only eighteen months after the federal election of September 1984. The Conservatives in the province of Quebec will continue to lose public support and will lose support across Canada, if they keep up the kind of arrogance reflected in the Bill before the House today, despite the amendments proposed by our party and the other Opposition party.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to correct my colleague and tell him that the citizens of Quebec are represented by 58 Members, not 57 as he indicated. Each one of them works as hard as any of the Conservative Members here in the House. Canadians will eventually have an opportunity to pass judgment on the way we have done our work. For the time being I would say that our duty and right is to conduct public affairs, to administer soundly, and to do everything we can to guarantee equity in all employment sectors and for all citizens in the Province of Quebec. And it is in that field that we are working very hard to enact the kind of legislation which will provide employment equity for all residents of Canada, including those who came from other countries.

All I can say to my colleague is that in due time, like all other Canadians, he will have an opportunity to make up his mind and settle the matter.

[English]

I am delighted that employment equity will be one of the issues on which we will be judged.

I would now like to tell Hon. Members why we are objecting to the motions which have been presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). We certainly appreciate his suggestions, as we do those of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). We have listened to them. It must be understood that we had to weigh them in order to see whether or not they would be helpful and useful. We had to consider whether or not they would complicate matters. We asked whether or not they would make it more difficult to administer this legislation. Where they were not practical and did not add anything, and where they would perhaps cause more problems with the process, then achieving results would be affected.

We feel that Motion No. 24 is unnecessary. Employers are obligated to implement employment equity and to report on results.

Mr. McCurdy: No, they are not.

Mr. Weiner: I gave the Hon. Member a chance to speak. I would appreciate it if he would do the same for me.

Mr. Keeper: Only if you have something to say.

Mr. Weiner: Clauses 4 and 5 refer to process, while Clause 6 refers to results which are to be reported. The stated intent of the legislation is that employers are required to report on results, not actions or programs. Clause 5 of the Bill clarifies that employers must have goals and timetables; but employers will develop their own process activities to achieve desired results.

With respect to Motion No. 25A, I do not see how it can be helpful. It is complicated. It would be difficult to see what information with respect to transfers would show. How would training be defined? Data collected on employees who were trained, transferred and/or demoted is not considered essential in monitoring the results of an employment equity plan. Training and transfers may be part of a plan to develop and broaden employee skills, but it does not actually reflect results of employment equity, where employment equity means more proportionate representation of designated groups. Any major changes which occur because of training, transfers or demotions will show up in a year-by-year comparison of data reported.

Motion No. 26A deals with "the number of individuals in designated groups who apply for specific openings". It is difficult to collect designated group data at the applicant stage. Proportionate representation in hirings will not be measured against the status of applicants but according to availability data, which may include more people than those who apply for a position.

With respect to Motion No. 27A, flexibility with respect to process is a basic philosophy of this Bill. The Bill's focus is on results of such acts, not the fact that employers report such acts. The employer's executive summary can provide information about measures taken in support of employment equity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 24. Mr. Nystrom moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 22 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"ance with the duties imposed on the employer under sections 4 and 5 and further in accordance with prescribed instructions indicating,".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 25A. Mr. Allmand moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 39 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"moted, trained, transferred, demoted and terminated and the degree of".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 27A. Mr. Allmand moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"(e) a list of those acts undertaken by the employer pursuant to section 4 of this Act."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1630)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not hear you call Motion No. 26A. It is my recollection that you went from Motion No. 25A to Motion No. 27A.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is correct, so I will now call Motion No. 26A.

[Translation]

The question is on Motion No. 26A. Mr. Allmand, seconded by Mr. Berger, moves:

That Bill C-62 be amended in Clause 6 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 3 the following:

"(e) the number of individuals in designated groups who apply for specific openings."

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 114, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 31A and 32A will be grouped together for debate and voted on separately.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moved:

Motion No. 31A.

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 13 and 14 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. An employer who fails to comply is guilty of an offence and is liable on".

Motion No. 32A.

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 16 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"five hundred thousand dollars."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is my last opportunity to attempt to make some amendments to this Bill. I have not been too pleased with the results so far, but hope springs eternal in the human soul, so I will carry on.

The Bill as it now stands is no more than a piece of rhetoric. Clause 2, which contains the purpose of the Bill, sounds great. The purpose of the Bill is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities, etc. Clause 4, the operative clause of the Bill, says briefly that an employer shall implement employment equity by identifying and eliminating barriers to employment for designated groups and instituting positive policies to achieve a degree of representation in the various workplaces. However, when we come to the principal sanction clause of the Bill, Clause 7, we find that the only penalty provided is a penalty for not filing a report in accordance with Clause 3 in its present weakened form.

Let me read Clause 7 to the House. It reads:

An employer who fails to comply with section 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

Clause 6 simply requires employers to report on the composition of their workforces. As I said in committee, an employer could be in complete accordance with this Bill by reporting year after year the same composition of his workforce. For example, he may report in 1986 that he had 100 employees, five were women, one was a member of a visible minority and one was disabled. In 1987, he may report that he had 100 employees, five were women, one was a member of a visible minority and one was disabled, and he may report the same thing in 1988 and 1989. He would not be penalized because he is reporting, but no progress is being made as far as employment equity is concerned. There is no penalty for not proceeding with employment equity or for not complying with the great obligations that are set out in Clause 4.

Motion No. 31A indicates that an employer who fails to comply with the provisions of the Bill is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $50,000.

My next motion increases the limit from $50,000 to $500,000 because, for the large firms that are subject to federal jurisdiction like the railways and communications companies, $50,000 would be part of the cost of doing business. If they wanted to, they could simply ignore the requirement for filing reports. It would probably cost them more to prepare their reports than it would to pay the fines.

I suggest that the penalty clause apply to all the obligations under the Bill and that the penalty be increased to $500,000. If there is not a penalty in the Bill for not proceeding with the obligations listed in Clause 4, then the Bill is a complete and utter farce and means nothing. As I pointed out, an employer could continue to report no progress year after year but would still be in compliance with Clause 6 and would not be fined.

Some people believe that if an employer were to do that over and over again, the so-called court of public opinion would bring pressure to bear against him and would force him to improve his hiring practices. Some say that those voices would bring enough pressure to bear to have changes made. The Abella Commission which reported to us in 1984 indicated that voluntary affirmative action programs do not work and that we cannot rely on the court of public opinion to move employers who will not move ahead with employment equity.

Experience throughout the western world where it has been tried shows that voluntary employment action does not work. I will quote once again the statement made by a famous businessman from the United States. He said that if voluntary action worked, Moses would not have come down from the mountain with 10 commandments but with 10 directives and he would have hoped that they would have been voluntarily complied with.

Mr. Rodriguez: Ten Bill C-62s.

Mr. Allmand: That is right. He would have come back with something like Bill C-62, but he had more sense than that. He came down with 10 commandments, and we all know what the sanctions for not complying with those 10 commandments are.

• (1640)

In any case, how could the Government think it could get away with imposing certain obligations on employers in Clause 4 of the Bill but not imposing any penalty if those obligations were ignored? It is sheer folly. As my hon. colleague said a few minutes ago, they will become the laughing-stock of the country. They have gone to a great deal of trouble to draft a Bill setting out requirements and obligations, but there is no penalty whatsoever if they are not carried out. Perhaps the Minister will rise in the House and chastise those employers, but we all know what some of those big companies will do in response. They will laugh at her as well. She will be laughed at from both sides. As was pointed out by my colleague from Windsor, it is not a laughing matter for people who have suffered discrimination generation after generation. It is not a laughing matter for those disabled persons who came here yesterday. Those who came here in their wheelchairs, those who were blind, deaf and infirm, struggled to get here. They want jobs. Many of them are very competent and would be quite able to hold down jobs. However, the workplace is not designed for them, or they are discriminated against before they are given a fair hearing. They will not be happy. They will not be laughing at the Government over this. They are mad. We found that out yesterday when the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) directed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). When the Minister gave an answer which was not correct, we heard a cry from the gallery from a woman who has suffered discrimination because of her infirmity and was not too pleased with the answer. People will let the Government know what they think of the Bill.

At the beginning of the debate someone described the Bill as containing a list of pious platitudes with no means of putting them into force. There are no sanctions if the Bill is not obeyed. In my many years in the House of Commons I do not think I have ever seen a Bill with no sanctions, a Bill which lays out obligations but no sanctions if one does not comply.

I know the Parliamentary Secretary will rise and say that the Government agreed to an amendment in committee which is now Clause 8 and reads as follows:

> The Minister shall, on the receipt of a report filed under Section 6, send a copy thereof to the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Because the Minister will send a copy of the report under Section 6 to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the commission will be allowed to enforce the Bill. I say that is not so. Government Members have referred me to certain sections which I have read. I am a lawyer with a good deal of experience. As far as I am concerned, that is not correct. If the Canadian Human Rights Commission sees discrimination in particular workplaces, it can enforce sections of the Canadian Human Rights Act against those firms. However, the Bill deals with affirmative action. If the obligations to proceed with affirmative action are not complied with, as far as I can see there is nothing the Canadian Human Rights Commission can do. It is misleading to suggest that because there is a requirement in the Bill to send the report under Section 6 to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the commission can apply penalties to firms which thumb their noses at the obligations under Clause 4.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I continue to hope that the Government will see the light and accept the amendment.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), but his time has expired.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose an amendment, of which I am the mover. It has been laid upon the Table of the House, and its purpose is to clarify Motion No. 31A. I will read it in English.

[English]

Therefore I move:

> That Motion No. 31A be amended as follows by deleting the following words:
> "is guilty of an offence and liable on" and substituting the following therefor:
> "with Sections 4, 5 and 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on".

I understand that a copy of this amendment has been sent to the Table, and I believe it is acceptable and appropriate that I move it. If it requires a seconder, it is seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): The House has heard the terms of the amendment to Motion No. 31A.

[Translation]

The next question is on the sub-amendment.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: I was intending to comment upon my amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has been recognized on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: I just wanted to say that I think the amendment to my amendment is a great improvement. Despite the fact that it changes my amendment, I hope Your Honour will find it in order and that the Government will find it acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Cassidy: It was my intention to comment upon my amendment.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we heard the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) knows perfectly well he cannot take the floor on a motion for a sub-amendment.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, earlier the Parliamentary Secretary said that the Government had an obligation to do everything to ensure equality and opportunity. Presumably he was making specific reference to the designated groups to which the Bill would apply. He also said that the proposed legislation was directed to the achievement of goals and oriented toward the achievement of results. This has been reiterated over and over again.

The fact is, as was pointed out by my colleague, that we would have an equally effective Bill if it were proposed that at nine o'clock every day of the week employers would get up and say: "I will not practise discrimination. I will treat the disabled, women, visible minorities and native people well today". In effect that is all Bill C-62 promises. We have come to the nub of the issue, the point at which the Government must decide whether or not it is serious. It must decide whether it is on the side of those employers which surveys indicate would reject affirmative action. By and large they would reject it, as the record would indicate, because they now have licence to practise a three-to-one bias against visible minorities. Of course the record in respect of native people, women and the disabled is clear. They would have us believe that voluntary affirmative action and voluntary employment equity is the answer. As was indicated earlier, Judge Abella was specifically assigned terms of reference requiring her to make a choice between voluntary affirmative action and mandatory affirmative action. It is perfectly clear that the judge carefully considered the alternatives. She made her decision on the basis of evidence which is unambiguous. The evidence from the United States was certainly clear that only mandatory affirmative action is worthy of consideration if one is serious about achieving equality in the workplace for the designated group. That is irrefutable.

The evidence is equally clear in Canada. The good judge looked at the evidence with respect to the employment of women in the Public Service and found that the result of nearly a decade of voluntary affirmative action has not been affirmative at all. There has been no significant progress in most areas. Women are still relegated to the clerical and lower administrative niches of the Public Service. Little progress has been made in achieving status, in significant numbers, at the management level.

Voluntary affirmative action has been attempted with respect to the disabled, and that has been equally a failure. The federal Government has invoked voluntary affirmative action with respect to visible minorities, and I speak in particular of the program in Nova Scotia. The proportion of visible minorities employed in the federal Government during the period of voluntary affirmative action was 2.2 per cent of the workforce, whereas the percentage in the population was 4.4.

Mandatory affirmative action with specification of goals has worked undoubtedly, unquestionably, and unambiguously. One need only cite the non-voluntary affirmative action program with respect to the Francophone national linguistic group in the country. It was successful. I will assert here and now that if the French people of the country had been faced with a proposal for a voluntary equity program they would have rejected it, and their numbers would have caused their rejection to be taken seriously.

This proposed amendment would provide for penalties for the failure by an employer to proceed with the provisions of Clauses 4, 5 and 6. It presents the Government with an opportunity to ensure mandatory affirmative action. We do not want merely a reporting, on an annual basis, of the number of women, disabled, and visible minorities employed, but rather we want to have specified goals which must be achieved. That is mandatory affirmative action which was recommended by Judge Abella and which is unanimously demanded by all representatives of the designated groups.

The Government is now in a position to respond to those demands. It is at last in a position to be taken seriously because it will have manifestly taken a serious action in response to the cry for mandatory affirmative action which will respond to those in need rather than those who will be inconvenienced because they must correct the injustices of the past.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I would like to join the other Members of this House who have already established the importance of the amendment and the sub-amendment.

[English]

We are probably now considering the most crucial amendment of all those which have been proposed. There have been a couple of dozen of amendments proposed by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and members of the NDP. This particular amendment goes to the core of why those handicapped persons brought their grievances to the House of Commons and demonstrated on the Hill yesterday. We heard the chant: "Mulroney, baloney, your equity Bill is phoney". The reason for that chant is specifically the lack of enforcement which exists in the current proposed legislation. Clause 7 reads:

> An employer who fails to comply with section 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

That sounds fairly ominous to the lay people in the gallery. Fifty thousand dollars seems like a very substantial amount of money. However, the motion, without the amendment, does not refer to a $50,000 fine for non-compliance, but simply for failing to report. When employer ABC of the Hamilton East Widget Company sends his report to Ottawa advising that he hired one woman this year, one woman last year, and one woman the year before, for a total of three out of 3,000 employees, the report will be tabled and there will be no fine. The fact that there are only three women working in a company which employs 3,000 people is immaterial. It will continue to be irrelevant and immaterial unless and until the House accepts the amendment and the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Liberals and the New Democratic Party.

Clauses 4 and 5 deal with the issue of employment equity. Until we introduce a specific amendment, including Clauses 4 and 5, we will continue to have a toothless piece of legislation which is nothing more than a phoney and a sham, an attempt by the Government to pretend it is doing something with regard to employment equity when, in fact, it is doing nothing.

The first part of the amendment suggests that the fine be raised to $.5 million. A major corporation with thousands of employees may consider $50,000 to be the cost of doing business. Unless the Minister is given the power to bring forth a summary conviction and a fine for failure to implement a program of employment equity or affirmative action in a business, all of the Government Members who say that they believe in equality for women, for minorities and for the handicapped are fooling themselves, but are not fooling the Canadian people.

In the women's debate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised all the women of Canada that the moment he was elected he would immediately begin to reclassify tens of thousands of jobs in the Public Service to ensure that women get their fair share of promotions within the Public Service. Through this Bill the Government is failing to move on the issue of enforcement with respect to employment equity and is also determining that no government agency will be covered by this legislation.

[Translation]

If they really believe in the principle of equity, Mr. Speaker, all Members will at least have to agree with the amendment that has just been moved. I know that about two dozen amendments have been presented by Opposition Members , and I realize the Government cannot accept all these amendments. I know that. I know how Parliament works. But I think it should be said that with the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and the new amendment to the amendment, moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), we now at least have the principal that equity should apply and not just for reporting purposes. We are not sitting here in the House just to make the headlines and to report on the lack of progress in providing equity for the disabled, the blind, women and the neediest in our society.

If we really believe in equity, Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of this House to at least accept this small amendment that could enhance the equity principle so eagerly sought after by the Members of this House, or so they say.

Mr. Speaker, are you trying to tell me that my time has expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay) (Lotbinière): No.

Ms. Copps: Excuse me. I would like to go on for a while. Because the Speaker nodded, I thought my time had expired. I know the rules for playing basketball better than the rules of the House of Commons. I didn't see the "timeout".

• (1700)

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I realize we are all new to this business. If I have four minutes left, I have many, many important points.

Those points harken back to the demonstration we saw on the Hill yesterday. Unfortunately, the reality is that many disabled Canadians are frustrated. This is, on the one hand, because of the promises they get from the Government and directly from the Prime Minister, and, on the other hand, because of that same Prime Minister's failure to respond. We heard some promises made during the women's debate. We heard the mellifluous baritone telling the women of Canada that if they vote for the Conservative Party everything is going to be all right because Mr. Mulroney will look after things.

There was another promise made and it was exposed yesterday on the Hill for the sham and fraud it was. We saw a representative of the disabled community who had literally snagged the Prime Minister with her wheelchair a couple of weeks ago. I want to give her full credit for snagging the Prime Minister, which is no mean feat when he is racing away from a horde of media who were trying to get answers from him on a number of issues. She told him directly that they were not satisfied with this law. It has no teeth. It is a phoney Bill. They wanted him to have a look at it. He promised her that he would personally review the legislation and before it came back to the House he would personally ensure that enforcement mechanisms were applied and see that the Bill had some teeth. Unfortunately, as soon as he escaped from the clutches of this particular woman, who was prepared to confront him and force him to tell the truth, he not only refused to review the Bill or come before the committee, he not only refused to allow any amendments to be carried forward from the government side of the House, he totally ignored phone calls and other contacts from the woman who had originally approached him about this question. This woman was in the House yesterday. Only 10 persons in wheelchairs were allowed into the House, and she was one of them. She cried out from the seats on high: "What about the promise that was made by the Prime Minister?"

We know that if he were really sincere about his promise to review the legislation and ensure that this particular Bill had an enforcement mechanism and the kind of teeth that would at least begin to address the problems of employment equity among the handicapped, minority and women of this country, he would have allowed this amendment to pass. This amendment is not offensive. All it says is that an employer who fails to comply with Clauses 4, 5 and 6 is guilty of an offence. Clauses 4 and 5, as you know, deal with employment equity.

Hopefully I have explained the case to the House. I wish the Prime Minister were here to explain his position. I urge Government Members to support at least this amendment.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in participating in today's debate, although I do not do it with too much heart because I think the Bill is unworthy of this House. Obviously it is not considered unworthy of the Government side, and I suppose it is for that reason that the Minister responsible has not taken too much personal interest in seeing it go through the House. It must be a bit of an embarrassment because it really is a hollow Bill.

I want to refer Members back to the what the purpose of this Bill is and demonstrate why Clause 7, as it stands, is really of little value to those who are discriminated against in the workplace. The purpose is the following:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to correct the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

Let us start by looking at the special measure which the Minister and the Government have included in the Bill. As other Members have pointed out, Clause 7 simply says:

> An employer who fails to comply with section 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

I think we have to be practical. There are all kinds of corporations, from small to big, who will simply say there are lots of ways to get around this. It is not as complicated as you might think. Turn back to Clause 6 and all you have to do, as other Members have pointed out, is to take a single sheet of paper and write down:

> (a) the industrial sector in which employees of the employer are employed—persons in designated groups so employed;
> (b) the occupational groups—and the degree of representation—in designated groups in each occupational group;
> (c) the salary ranges of employees—
> (d) the number of employees hired, promoted and terminated and the degree of representation—of persons in designated groups.

It would take you a grand total of five minutes once a year to do that. We have to keep in mind what the courts would think. Obviously the judge is going to read that clause, flip to Clause 7 and say, "It is a maximum fine of $50,000. They did not get it in the first year, it is new, so we will not give them a fine, we will give them a conditional or absolute discharge". The Government might not even proceed with prosecution.

If Government Members have any integrity at all regarding putting teeth in this legislation, they will accept the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and the subamendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), to provide some kind of substantive usefulness to this Bill. Otherwise we are really spinning the wheels of the taxpayers of Canada. The Bill states that it has a purpose, but the rest of the Act has nothing in it. Employers are not really required to do anything. Obviously various employer groups have managed to get to Government Members, lobby them, and get this Bill watered down to where it is not just pretty thin soup, it is gruel. It is pretty tough stuff for anyone to stomach who has been discriminated against on the basis of anything in Canada.

I am going to be interested to hear what Government Members have to say as to why the penalty section is the way it is. I came to this House after having worked in the courts. I was a probation and parole officer. I can read the penalty section probably better than anyone else. I know that people who are looking for ways around things go straight to the penalty clause first as well. I would like to hear from Government Members why it should not apply to Clauses 4 and 5, because that is really where something could be done. It would be some way of giving some kind of realistic stimulation to employers to get on with the job of providing employment equity.

Let's take a look at the size of the fine. There is a maximum fine of $50,000, and only by summary conviction. Why does it not allow for an indictable section or, as is proposed, a fine that is reasonable, say $500,000, where it gives the courts some leeway when a large corporation with a couple of hundred or a couple of thousand employees simply is not living up to it? How is it reasonable to expect that a fine that is so small, one which is only the amount they would be paying a couple of employees per year or one management person per year, is a realistic penalty? This is not incentive legislation, this is disincentive legislation in that a business is punished, supposedly, if it does not live up to the intentions of the Bill.

We have to look carefully at the purpose section. Clearly that is what the Government and its Members are going to peddle to the public saying, "Here is the purpose and let us look back to the purpose section". Why are they bringing this in? We are intending to assist women who are being taken advantage of in many situations, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities, and people because of their race or colour or in a visible minority who are discriminated against in the workplace.

The understanding of it can be promulgated through all kinds of propaganda that can be put out by the Government.

There are very few people in the workplace who have the time, the interest or the opportunity to go through a Bill like this and ask themselves whether it is really worth the paper it is written on. Certainly in this situation it is clear, judging by the overwhelming majority of Members speaking on this Bill who are saying that there is nothing in this Bill, that it is unworthy of parliamentary time in the form that it is written in.

The penalty section is inadequate and totally inappropriate. Why bother to have a section in there providing a fine of up to $50,000 if someone does not fill out a form that is going to take them five minutes? The reporting section may be of interest bureaucratically, but it really does not strike at what the purpose section has outlined in terms of employment equity, which is the employer's duty. Clause 4, is very specific in that there must be an identification and elimination of employers' employment practices which set up barriers to those designated groups in terms of bringing in new policies and practices which will accommodate those groups. These things are seen as being an employer's duty. If the employer is not living up to these guidelines, then clearly there should be a penalty section. I stand to be corrected by anyone who studied any law who would not agree that that should be the purpose of the penalty section. You find that in almost every seasoned and reasonable piece of legislation that this House has ever passed, from the Fisheries Act on down those parts of an Act that are going to require some kind of stimulation by the courts, some kind of realistic and persuasive action by the House of Commons, are drafted in. The House should not pass Bills that are so totally inadequate that the penalty section applies only to reporting.

The other section in which this amendment would require the use of fines would be in relation to the plans of goals to be prepared, where an employer shall, in respect of each year, prepare the plan and the goals to achieve and implement employment and the timetable for it in relation to places of work and in relation to the groups that are identified in the purpose section of this Act. If the employment equity Bill is going to work and actually pick up some steam from British Columbia through to Newfoundland, then clearly the Government has a responsibility to accept the amendment and the subamendment that has just been proposed. The mover of the amendment has agreed that this is a wise subamendment.

I am very interested to hear from the Minister or from any Government Members, the Parliamentary Secretary or others, how it is possible to achieve what is laid out in the purpose section of this Act without bringing in some kind of enforcement and compliance section with a reasonable level of fines that can apply on a downward scale. I suggest that the maximum fine should be $500,000 down to $1, which would give the courts some leeway. If it is only from $1 to $50,000, a large corporation in this country might or might not file. Obviously it would want to comply bureaucratically, so it might not even get the fine.

If these amendments are not accepted, I would write the employment equity Bill C-62 off as a dead loss and no one should see it as anything other than that.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): I am addressing the matter of the subamendment to call upon the Government in this House to amend the present proposed employment equity Bill, as it is called, to include Clauses 4 and 5, as well as 6 to be subject to penalties. The Bill as it presently stands finally ends up being nothing more than an employment report, which, in fact, is incomplete in itself. It is nothing but a reporting mechanism.

One of the members of the committee said that she was an eternal optimist. She believed in the good will and the good faith of the Canadian people. She thought that by waving the flag and saying this it should make us all feel content and go back to sleep and count on the idea that all will be well if we leave things in the hands of the good will of the Canadian people. First of all, it is a non sequitur because we are not talking about the Canadian people in general, we are talking about people who are trying to run their organizations and who are interested in profit and who, perhaps, are interested in keeping the status quo. It is always easier to keep the status quo. I have to say that the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who was counting on the good will of Canadian people is perhaps so naive that she might as well write off the fact that we have worked our way out of the primeval ooze of human exploitation of fellow man, and realize that we have had to fight over centuries to bring about charters of human rights.

In fact, human rights are a relatively new idea, tragic as this may be. We cannot count on good will, so we must count on penalties. We must count on law. We must count on regulations and orders. That is why the House is here. The House is here to pass laws for this country. We are sent as parliamentarians to this House to represent the people and to make sure that their interests are protected and that law and order prevail, an order that is humane, civil and caring.

That is why we have penalties. We have, of course, the carrots with which to encourage, but we have penalties to discourage inhumane action by people. While we would prefer always to appeal to the best sides of people and to their better emotions and better instincts, we know we also have to provide penalties.

The penalties in this Bill are only $50,000 and apply only to whether or not somebody sent in a report. That is why the people across this country, the various groups that this purports to protect, are protesting that this is a sham, a phoney. It is not coming to grips with anything. The Government is trying to make it look as if it were doing something when, in reality, it is doing nothing for those people.

The reason for the amendment is to try to make this apply to something more than reporting. It is to try to make it apply to other aspects which make companies responsible citizens. Not only must we talk about rights, we must talk about responsibilities. We are not only concerned about human rights, we are concerned about the responsibility of being a good citizen, a good corporate citizen and a good employer in Canada.

The Government would have people believe that it has done something to bring about responsibility. I am afraid that there is a type of cynicism involved here. Perhaps Members opposite could understand what is at stake by imagining themselves in a situation that could happen to them at any time. They could have an accident and be in exactly the same situation as the handicapped who were on the Hill protesting on behalf of all people with disabilities.

According to Statistics Canada, one in every eight Canadians has a disability. Perhaps these Members could imagine themselves being handicapped and trying to find a job. If they had to wait from five to thirty years to get a job, feeling worthless, they would be concerned about providing penalties. They would be serious about this Bill instead of making it into a political mockery. It is grossly cynical.

The Government counts on making promises during elections. We saw its promises about patronage and about support for post-secondary education. In fact, the Government has broken hundreds of promises, but it wants to tell women, native people, the disabled, and the minority groups of this country that it passed a Bill to ensure that they would have employment equity, which has never been done before. What cynicism! Rather, the Government should be telling those groups what it is taking away from them. People may believe they are protected, but that is not the case. People are promised that they will be protected, but they will not be protected unless amendments such as this, which provide for penalties rather than simple reporting, are accepted. The Bill is a sham. It is phoney, as the handicapped people said yesterday.

My colleague from Hamilton said the Canadian people will not be taken in. I am afraid that sometimes they are taken in because they are not told the truth.

When the time comes for the Government to talk about its record, it will not talk about how it fought against the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for months and months, thereby tying up the House of Commons. It will say that it has accomplished a great deal because it brought about employment equity for the first time. It will not talk about the Abella Report which recommended what was necessary in order to provide a Bill that would have any effect at all. It ignored the reports of the commissions and it ignored the groups that are supposedly being protected. It simply carried on in this cynical fashion.

If the Government does not consider this kind of amendment seriously, it is throwing away its chance to make a truly meaningful contribution. If the Government accepted such an amendment it could truly take credit for passing a Bill that has achieved something. No one could take that away from the Government.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I find it necessary to speak against the Bill in the form of speaking for this subamendment. The Bill is bad.

Bill C-62, called the employment equity Bill, is so bad that without this subamendment and the amendment it is a sick joke. All that the Bill provides without the amendment is that an employer will send in a list of how many employees he has, how many women, how many visible minorities, how many native people and how many disabled people and send in a list of last year's promotions, firings, et cetera, and how many of each. He will do nothing more.

For this, the Government has wasted over half a year of the time of this Parliament and has raised the hopes of the target groups in the public and disappointed them.

If this amendment is to be adopted, then the Bill would have some effect. Right now, the Bill does nothing for employment equity. It does provide a little bit of employment for clerks or other minor officials in some Department of the Government who will receive some reports from some employers and file them. It may provide some work for a post-graduate student who is doing a thesis 10 years from now and wants to look at some records. Apart from that, it will not provide work for the disabled, native people, visible minorities or women to the extent that they are now being mistreated and discriminated against in employment. That is a fact.

This subamendment would extend the penalty provision two ways: increasing it to $500,000 so that the big corporations would not laugh at the penalty; extend the penalty so that it applies to Clauses 4 and 5 of the Bill.

Those are the only clauses that, by themselves, have any real meaning.

Clause 4 begins very boldly by saying:

> An employer shall, in consultation with such persons as have been designated by the employees to act as their representatives or, where a bargaining agent represents the employees, in consultation with the bargaining agent, implement employment equity by—

The way it is worded it says that the employer shall implement employment equity. It lays that on not just as good advice, not just as something that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) wishes they would do or her Parliamentary Secretary wishes they would do, it says with the force of Parliament that the employer shall implement. He shall identify and eliminate the employment practices that result in employment barriers. He shall institute positive policies, making reasonable accommodation and ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation that is at least proportionate to their representation in the workplace. The employer shall do these things.

Clause 5 goes on to say that the employer shall, in respect of each year, prepare a plan. He is going to make a plan that will set out the goals that the employer intends to achieve in implementing employment—what he is ordered to do in Clause 4—and the timetable.

With respect to the timetable, how many corrections is he going to make in his workforce next year and the year after so as to bring up a more just balance of the disadvantaged groups with which this Bill is supposedly concerned? That is fine as far as it goes but it does not go far enough. What it does not do is to provide any reason for an unwilling employer to do those things which the law says he shall do. The Minister has prated and preached about the court of public opinion. We know from experience in this country and in the United States that the court of public opinion cannot make most employers do those things the Minister claims this law makes them do. So the Minister's claim is not to be believed. Whether she can wake up in the morning and believe what she is saying is not the point. The point is that no one outside Parliament can believe it.

This is not only the opinion of members of the Opposition. This is the opinion which was expressed by the representatives of the very groups the Minister claims she wants to help. Last October there was a press release from a coalition of these groups. For example, Chaviva Hosek, the President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, said, and I quote:

> We are disturbed and disappointed by the Government's responses. We hope to be successful in persuading the Government to amend Bill C-62, which is presently before the House, to make it an effective tool for creating equality.

That is what she said back in October. She and other persons came and spoke to the committee and were ignored. The Parliamentary Secretary and other members of the Government majority ignored the witnesses and stonewalled every amendment made by opposition Members at the request of those witnesses. These feelings were not only expressed by the representative of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. Navin Parekh, President of the National Ethnocultural Council, said, and I quote:

> Mandatory affirmative action has been recommended in Canada by report after report from Parliamentary Committees, Commissions and Inquiries. Most recently, the Abella Commission squarely addressed the problem of inequality in employment experienced by all the groups represented here today and recommended that mandatory affirmative action with strong enforcement procedures be introduced now.

It was not only the women and the Ethnocultural Council but Mr. Jim Derksen of the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped who said, and I quote:

> If employers do not voluntarily undertake affirmative action programs, and if their yearly reports on their workforce show no progress towards equality, nothing happens. Bill C-62 only requires reports. Reports are not enough.

Joan Brown-Hicks, President of the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women, said, and I quote:

> Data collection and reporting are essential parts of mandatory affirmative action systems because they allow measurement of change. But the Government's Bill gives us no mandatory affirmative action system; it gives us only data. With no programs and no enforcement, this is form without substance.

Carol Tator of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, a group which went to some trouble to develop the scientific evidence that a white person has three times as many chances of getting a job as a black person with the very same qualifications, said about the Bill, and I quote:

> This is simply unacceptable. The point of affirmative action programs is to move away from the complaint system which places the onus for change on the victims of discrimination and instead place the onus where it properly belongs, on the employment systems themselves.

The Canadian Labour Congress, which represents the major part of the organized workforce in Canada, which this Bill pretends to respect by requiring the employer to consult, also condemned the Bill, as well as did the whole coalition of these groups.

Although we tried in committee to move the amendments asked for by these people, the Government stonewalled everyone. Clause 8 is only a sick joke because it states that the Human Rights Commission will have a report about which its statute does not enable it to do anything. That report is nowhere reflected in the duties given to the Human Rights Commission. Therefore, this law is a monumental fraud on the part of the Government as the Bill before us stands. Without the subamendment which would require enforcement of Sections 4 and 5, it would be better for this Government and the people of this country if this Bill were withdrawn now and buried. That would save the Government any further embarrassment.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, since as you may recall, I spoke previously at the second reading stage of Bill C-62. However, luck would have it that today I was on duty again, so in these last two days, I have listened to a lot of debate on the many amendments that were moved and that are supposed to improve this legislation.

A while ago, when I was sitting in your chair, Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) say that we are here to pass laws. Of course, that is what it says in our job description. No one will disagree. But if we take a closer look at this definition, this job description it is not something that happens automatically, it is not an obligation that means we absolutely have to pass laws, because if people, if society were to exercise its judgment the way we would like to see it exercised, the way a good citizen would do, in many cases we would not have to pass laws.

So we often pass legislation when a majority or a large part of the population is not progressing at the same rate as the average citizen.

I may also recall, Mr. Speaker, that I was a member of the Committee on Equality Rights and that I signed the report. During the last two days frequent references have been made to that report. I would say it is a fact that out of the 85 recommendations made by our committee, 61—not 59, not 60, but 61 have been accepted by our Government.

I said so on several occasions during committee proceedings, and I repeat today that if the citizens expect the legislator to find a solution to their problem, they are mistaken. The way of thinking has to change if the problem is to be resolved. Indeed, but how? The mentality has to be changed, and legislation is one way to do it.

As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, and I stand to be corrected if I am wrong, this is the first Government, yes, the first Government in a long time—

Mr. Lanthier: —in 22 years.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): —in 22 years I am told, and I stand to be corrected which will enact such legislation on the right to employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, I think this approach is insidious at best, considering these individuals — let us be honest and give credit where credit is due— gave their time and energy for years, to the Council on the Status of Women among others, in a sustained effort to convince the former Government to promote this cause through legislation which would have changed this mentality. They never ever did anything. The Liberal Government did not make a move when it was in office. So the least I can say is that it is indecent that we should now be lumped together with that Party.

It has been said that the Bill does not have enough teeth. Maybe so, but admittedly it does have some. To those who claim that it is not compulsory I say that indeed there is a clear and specific obligation, that the companies affected under this Bill will have to meet their responsibilities. They want more. They are already passing judgment on Canadian men and women affected by this Bill, claiming that they will automatically ignore it. They would prefer that not a single citizen, not a single company be given the opportunity to have free and ready access to what everybody with common sense would strive for, equity.

Mr. Speaker, again I say that this Bill is unprecedented, and I fail to understand why they speak so harshly against a measure introduced by a Government which, as I said, has been responsive by endorsing 61 of the 85 committee recommendations. This Bill may not be perfect, I agree, but then show me perfect legislation. Once again, the legislation will be there so that those who unfortunately would ignore common sense will be forced to toe the line.

We are dealing with a very special sector. It is a matter that affects us all. Access to equality. In the last two days, I heard no one speak out against that principle. Through our 282 ridings, we represent all Canadian men and women. Now, no one here in the House said they were against the principle. The Bill may not be perfect, but why should we waste our time saying it isn't perfect? Let us speed up the process and adopt the Bill, and we will see how it turns out in practice. We never had this kind of legislation. Let us start for heaven's sake! It will be very interesting to see how this evolves.

Mr. Speaker, once again I would urge all those taking part in this debate, and especially Opposition Members, to consider what, in the final instance, is reasonable. It is all very well to be highminded, but we still have to run the country. And running the country means making decisions, and I think we have made the right decision. And once again, let it be understood that we hope we never will have to amend this Bill. We hope that the companies in question will basically implement what the House of Commons is asking everyone to practise.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I say through you to my friend, the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay), with whom it was my pleasure to travel across the country with the Special Committee on Equality Rights, that I listened with a great deal of interest and some considerable concern to his remarks. I thought that the Hon. Member would have learned a great deal as a result of being a member of the committee. He certainly seemed to be very sensitive. We enjoyed his presence. However, I think that his learning stopped somewhere along the way.

Mr. Rodriguez: He's a Tory!

Mrs. Finestone: The penalty clause should not be restricted to the implementation clause r and the action plans clause 5. This is why I will support the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member for Lotbinière referred to the 22 years in which nothing had been done. If we lived in a perfect society, as he says, we would not need laws to effect change. Perhaps I am quoting him out of context. However, he seems to think that citizens should not wait for the Government to resolve their problems. He seems to think that it just takes a change of attitude, a change of mind and a change of heart.

[Translation]

A change of heart sounds lovely, except that the Government's role is to show leadership. And I am sorry, but with all the action that has been taken, the requisite changes have not taken place. I hope the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) is listening, so he will learn what we in the Liberal Party have done in the last 22 years, something about which he is unduly concerned, because I can assure you that we have accomplished a great deal. And that is why I believe these amendments are so important. In this respect . . .

[English]

Apart from environmental concerns, issues which directly affect women have risen to the forefront faster than any other concern in our society in the last 20 years. The Hon. Member spoke of 22 years in his remarks; I will give him two years. I will talk about 20 years of accomplishment.

I think that that issue is of equal concern to men as it is to women since we are looking to a partnership society. We are looking to a society based on merit for the job—just remove the barriers to getting those jobs. We are not saying: "Hire people for the sake of hiring them". We are saying: "Hire where they have the capacity to fulfil the task". If a few modifications need to be made, then make them, and put them into practice.

Mr. Cassidy: No Liberal Bill was ever brought in.

Mrs. Finestone: I would ask the Hon. Member to wait and listen. I will give him a few history lessons, too.

Over the past 15 years, female participation in the Canadian labour force has grown at a greater rate than in any other OECD country. I suggest that the Hon. Member cut my remarks out once they have been printed so that he can use them in his speeches. It grew from 41.9 per cent in 1973 to 51.6 per cent in 1982. That was when we were moving into the height of the recession.

I would now like to move on to the major steps which were taken which brought us to this point of evolution today. Hopefully, they would have brought us to a point of changed mentality so that we would not need to have a law of this nature, so that the actions we take would lead to the natural maturation of our society where equality between men and women would be a reality. They should have brought us to a point where we would have acceptance on merit, not blocking through systems which are rampant in our society.

In 1967 the Royal Commission on the Status of Women looked at the problems which were creating economic difficulties for women in our society. These are two of the questions which were asked at that time: What was making older women poor in our society? What was the problem with part-time work? For the first time the women sat down together and drew up a list of the problems which they faced in an evolving 20th century society.

Following the report of the commission in 1967 we saw many issues undertaken, most of them voluntary. I am sorry to say that those voluntary issues which my Party put into place were not sufficient. That is why the Bill before us is necessary. It is necessary as mandatory legislation with enforcement principles.

In 1969 we saw the first of the revisions to the divorce laws which came about as a result of a great deal of economic suffering for families, and therefore pressures on women were created. There was an unfortunate series of family breakdowns of which we were not even aware. That is when the issue of the single-parent family first came to the fore.

In 1971, Canada was the first country to appoint a woman to a cabinet Minister position specifically responsible for the status of women. That was the first appointment ever to be made that recognized the role of women. In 1972, we ratified the International Labour Organization's convention concerning remuneration to men and women workers for work of equal value, the first of the equal-pay legislation, which we cannot even find in this Bill. Hon. Members should be ashamed of that. If Hon. Members are using a principle of sensitizing and growing and of having society take those obligations upon itself in a voluntary way, then equal pay for work of equal value should be part of the mores of society, but it is not, and that is a key point.

In 1977, we had the Canadian Human Rights Act which forbids discrimination on the basis of sex and ensures equal pay for work of equal value. That provision is still not applied and is still going before the courts. Women still need financing so that they may get their right to equal pay. This is true as well for visible minorities, the handicapped and native peoples.

In 1978, we took a good look at the Canada Pension Plan and put in equal splitting of pensions between spouses on divorce or annulment of a marriage. In 1978, the Canada Labour Code was amended to eliminate pregnancy as a basis for lay-off or dismissal. Are Hon. Members telling me that we did not do things that were sensitive and in the interests of women? We did do those things because we heard from councils and groups that spoke about the concerns of women.

In 1979, we composed a five-year national plan of action for the status of women called Toward Equality for Women, and 114 legislative and administrative changes were made. I suggest that Hon. Members look at those 114 legislative changes that were made and tell me that we did not bring in good, substantive legislative change.

In 1982, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to which my hon. friend just referred, was brought in against screaming voices from the Party across the way, but we still brought it in with an equality section. In 1984, we developed a new plan of action, which I am sure will not see the light of day under the Conservative option.

We have had a child care task force. We have done something about divorce reform. We did something about the enforcement of maintenance orders. As I said, we reformed the pensions. Take a look at our views with respect to sexual stereotyping and affirmative action.

For many women, the first of the affirmative action programs were put into place by Treasury Board directive. Those Treasury Board directives still did not bring about the kind of change we want in a voluntary way, and that is why we say that this Bill should apply to public servants. If affirmative action objectives were being reached, that would be fine and dandy, but we should be using this Bill as a yardstick and move on from there.

Many Candian women saw affirmative action as the central issue in economic inequality. While 40 per cent of the workforce is composed of women, they still earn only about 64 per cent of men's wages. That is why we need equal pay for work of equal value entrenched in the Bill as well as affirmative action. As Hon. Members well know, 70 per cent of women work in job ghettos.

After the affirmative action plan was successfully implemented in five federal Departments and was carefully watched, it was then extended throughout the federal Government, but because it was not mandatory as it should be, it has not had the same degree of impact. Where are the handicapped and the visible minorities? Are they reflected here as they are in society? They are not and we should be ashamed of that. That is why affirmative action needs to be mandatory and monitored and why a simple payment of a fine for not filing is no action plan at all. The Harvard Business School would not give very good marks for that kind of action.

The Abella Commission studied every one of the kinds of concerns to which I am referring today and showed where affirmative action, when undertaken in a voluntary way by our Crown corporations, did not have the success rate that we want for society. Here we are committing the same error by not making it mandatory. In 1983, when that affirmative action plan came into force, we set up the Abella Commission because we knew the plan was a temporary step that would be in place only until the study was done. What did the Conservative Government do with the study when it came back? It turned it around ignored its advice and that is very unfortunate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to have to inform the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) that her time has expired.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise in support of the subamendment which was moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). In effect, that subamendment attaches a penalty to Clauses 4 and 5 of the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) said that never before have we had a Bill like this. I would like to remind the House that we have had Bills like this. I recall the competition policy Bills brought into the House by the Liberal Government. Even Bill C-91, which was brought before the House the other day to provide for competition and control mergers, was, as were previous competition Bills, designed to give the impression that something was being done when in fact we were not really serious about doing anything. This Bill is of the same genre.

Clause 4 of the Bill reads as follows:

> An employer shall, in consultation with such persons as have been designated by the employees to act as their representatives or, where a bargaining agent represents the employees, in consultation with the bargaining agent, implement employment equity by—

The clause goes on to indicate what they have to do. One must ask oneself, what if they do not do it? I have not been convinced that employers are really interested in creating a climate in the workplace which would eliminate the kinds of discriminatory practices which have existed. As a matter of fact, as reported by today's Toronto Star, Judge Rosalie Abella addressed the Canadian Club in Toronto.
The article reads in part as follows:

> More women are working in Canada than ever before—but most are still "ghettoized" in the occupations they have been confined to since 1901—

The article goes on to say:

> Sixty per cent of working women in Canada remain "occupationally segregated," receiving 60 per cent of men's wages, "an 11 per cent improvement over 70 years," Abella said.

The article goes on:

> It's clear, that expectations about the role of women are so deeply rooted "that without active and persistent intervention, the subtle barriers women experience will remain stalwartly erect."

Is the Tory Government a neophyte in this field? We realize it is inexperienced in governing. Perhaps Conservative Members are looking in the mirror and seeing their own reflections. As members of a business-oriented Party, they do not want to put some teeth in this Bill. We have enough legislation in Canada without any teeth. In this particular Bill, the only penalty provided is the filling out of forms as prescribed by Clause 6 of the Bill. If Hon. Members have not read it, I suggest they should, because Clause 6 creates more bureaucratic red tape for businesses and corporations. They have to fill out a form indicating how many employees they have and how many are working in certain sectors. If they do not file that form, they get a $50,000 fine.

The real meat of the Bill is employment equity, and that is where the penalty of $50,000 should apply. It should not apply for paper shuffling. All you guys are interested in is bureaucratic paper shuffling. That is what you are involved in. You are not involved in any meaningful changes. You are not interested in that at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have five minutes more, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has asked for unanimous consent to proceed. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt wants to call it six o'clock.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.-LYBIA CONFRONTATION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 29, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has obtained leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the attack of the United States against Libya

[English]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason we are having this emergency debate tonight in the Canadian House of Commons is that within the past 24 hours there has been an attack by United States forces on Libya in many locations, in response to what the United States Government has described as a Libyan-sponsored act of terrorism in a West German night-club not many days ago. According to President Reagan, the evidence for this specific Libyan link to what the whole world would describe as a deplorable act of terrorism is, to use President Reagan's words, "direct, precise and irrefutable". That is the contention of the President of the United States. If that turns out to be direct, precise and irrefutable, it is indeed a damning case made against the Government of Libya.

The Canadian interests in this tragic historic situation in the Middle East are twofold. First, there are upwards of 1,300 Canadians living in Libya and therefore we as a Parliament have a direct interest in and concern about the security of those Canadians. Second, like men and women in nations all over the world today, Canadians have to be assessing the implications of the response to the acts of terrorism which the United States has attributed to the Government of Libya; that is to say, we have to be concerned and we have to assess the response of one of the world's superpowers in this circumstance. I want to deal with both these questions, the Canadian situation specifically and the broader international implications of the situation in the Middle East today. First I make clear, and I am sure I speak for all Members of Parliament on this particular matter, that anyone living in a free and democratic society who believes in freedom and democracy has to abhor terrorist violence in all its forms. I take that as a given which all of us in Parliament share.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The use of violence against men, women and children to express a political will in a free society is completely and utterly abominal, and I am sure everyone in this Parliament agrees with that. The use of violence, I say immediately, in an unfree society, as the Catholic Church has recently noted, sometimes regrettably becomes a moral necessity. That is an entirely different circumstance. We are talking about violence against innocent people in free societies as a political weapon.

I have done some checking into the matter of violence in Europe over the past 12 months. Apart from the Middle East itself, almost all the violence in the past few years about which we have been concerned, to put it in those terms, has been violence that has taken place in European countries—Spain, Belgium, West Germany, Austria, Greece, Italy, Ireland and Sweden. All these countries in the past 12 months have had acts of violence within their borders. These are free, democratic, peace-loving societies. I could go outside these northern democratic nations and talk about violence elsewhere in the world, but I am restricting my comments and observations now to that part of the world alone to say that even in genuinely free societies where means are available to all citizens to bring about political change, this modern plague of terrorism has been demonstrating its evil force.

In a few moments I will come to the European reaction to the course of action taken by President Reagan in the present circumstances. However, before doing that, I want to pause and briefly consider the Canadian situation in this important matter. Unless the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who will be participating in the debate shortly has some different information to give us, the information which is most current in terms of news broadcasts is that no Canadians have been injured in any way. For that we as Canadians can be thankful, but there are some unanswered questions which have to be answered by the Government.

I want to say at the outset, and I do not say it lightly, that I think on a matter this serious, affecting Canadians as well as the international order and the principle of international law, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) ought to have been here to participate and to explain the Government's case. I regret that he is not participating in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that the mention of the presence or non-presence of another Member is out of order.

Mr. Broadbent: I am not talking about his presence. I am talking about what I regard as the obligation of a Leader of a Government in a free society in which his citizens are involved to talk on the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There are a number of questions which I think ought to be answered and have not yet been answered by the Government of Canada. I want to list some of them, and I hope the Deputy Prime Minister will deal with them.

For example, has the Government or has it not spoken directly in the past 12 hours to Libyan authorities to ascertain whether or not the Canadians who are still in Libya and want to leave that country are able to do so without any hindrance whatsoever? It seems to me that the Government ought to have answered that question today, and it did not. Has the Government provided aircraft and made it known to Canadians that they will facilitate their exit if they so desire?

I would like to know, as I asked yesterday and as the House Leader of the New Democratic Party specifically asked today, when the Prime Minister was informed of the specific nature of the plan of attack or approach that was to be taken by the United States. Did he know this before last Friday when he said in the House: "There is no immediate cause for undue concern for Canadians"? Again that question was not answered today in the House of Commons. We are not concerned here with quibbling about a small matter of history; it is a rather important matter. We now know, for example, that Margaret Thatcher knew about the middle of last week, and there is good reason to believe—and I will not put it any stronger than that—that the Prime Minister of Canada knew about the same time.? We attempted to obtain that information earlier today; we did not. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that he has an obligation tonight when he speaks to come totally clean with Members of Parliament and the people of Canada about the degree of knowledge the Canadian Government had and when it obtained that knowledge. We want that information.

These are not matters in a particular order of importance. They are all important to us and to the people of Canada, in what the Deputy Prime Minister has described the ongoing discussions with the United States in the past week or so. We want to know on this side of the House, and virtually every European Government would like to know I suspect, with the exception of Margaret Thatcher in England, what proposals were made by the Government of Canada to President Reagan as alternatives to the use of violence. Did we have something to suggest concretely, and if we did, will the Government now tell the people of Canada what we suggested to President Reagan?

Beyond these important Canadian questions to which we would like answers, there is the broader question on which I would like to spend some time, namely, whether under the present circumstances in the Middle East the United States ought to have used its power in a military attack on a number of targets in Libya.

Is the death of an American soldier in a dance hall or a club of some kind in West Berlin—as horrendous and as horrible as it was, and it was an action to be deplored by us all—a cause for response such as that taken by the United States? Is it appropriate to use military forces and attack another nation's capital and kill—we do not know the numbers yet—a number of innocent victims as retribution for an earlier abominable act, assuming for a moment that the evidence is very clear that the Libyan Government itself is responsible for the murder that took place, and that is what it is, in West Germany? Surely that is a fundamental question.

As well, Margaret Thatcher, who has always supported President Reagan quite clearly in the past, has said that when you deal with violence and acts of terrorism, the response has to be commensurate with the act itself. You have the violent death of a young American soldier on the one hand and you have this response. I am raising the question; whether that is appropriate. I want to raise some related questions about that.

As I mentioned a minute ago in listing the countries in western Europe, there has been great concern in the past 12 months among the peoples of western Europe with violence. They have lived with it much more than we have in this part of the world, not only in the past 12 months but in the past dozen years. They have had to live with a modern form of political terrorist violence in democratic society. One would have thought that under such circumstances the United States of America would have considered very seriously the views of their friends and allies in western Europe.

I have been on the phone today with people in West Germany and with people in Great Britain, Government and non-government sources, to get from them their response to what President Reagan has done in the present circumstances.

What do we know, Mr. Speaker? We know that one of the most respected foreign affairs ministers in the world—not simply in Europe, but the present foreign minister of West Germany, who does not belong to my Party, Hans Dietrich Genscher—was en route by air yesterday bringing a message, not simply from his Government but from the whole European Parliament. All the Governments in the European Parliament, with the exception of the Government of the United Kingdom, wanted to send a clear message to President Reagan late yesterday. That clear message was: "Don't use force. Don't take military action at this time". He was speaking at that time for his Government and, I repeat, for all the other governments in western Europe except that of the U.K.

We now know also that France and Spain not only opposed this action, but refused the granting of their airspace to the American aircraft en route to their attack in Libya. That is how strongly the Governments of Spain and France, which have had to deal with terrorism themselves, felt about this action by the United States. The Government of the Netherlands has publicly condemned the action; Prime Minister Craxi of Italy has publicly condemned the action by the United States. The West German Government, I was informed just before coming into the House tonight, described the American action as scarcely understandable.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider the response of all these countries which have had to live with terrorism and which are democratic societies, not namby-pamby or wishy-washy, but made up of serious men and women who want to maintain peace in their own society for their own members. They want to maintain international order and international law. They have said under these circumstances to the United States that a wise superpower knows when not to use its power. They have objected very clearly. Why have they objected very clearly? Why, Mr. Speaker?

One reason was given to me in a conversation with a former Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain. He said that in his understanding, and in that of most international law experts, the United States has violated international law. It is as simple and as clear as that, in his view. It is as important as that. It is a violation of international law; not according to some young person or some activist but, I repeat, according to a former Chancellor of the Exchequer of the U.K. who told me that that is a commonly held view in Europe. There is an objection to a democratic state like the United States, which ought to be upholding the principles of law, going against international law.

The second reason, for which they are opposed is that this kind of violence by the state—because that is what it is when you use military force—simply does not work. It has had a tendency, a history, of simply causing repetition, more violence.

I ask the Prime Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, to consider a man like Mr. Khadafy. We would like to see evidence in this case, but let us assume that the Libyans are guilty. We know they have been guilty before. It is quite possible they were. We know that Mr. Khadafy is quite an irrational man. We know that moderate states in the Middle East like Egypt have been wanting for a long time to put distance between themselves and Mr. Khadafy. We know that the Soviet Union for a long time has wanted to put distance between itself and Mr. Khadafy. When a superpower uses this kind of violence against a Government headed by this kind of man, how is he likely to respond? Is he likely to respond calmly, coolly and rationally? Is he likely to say "Oh, my goodness, I better not do any more violent things because they may hit us again"? Not at all. That is a profound misunderstanding in my view of modern terrorism. The more likely response from such a man is to accelerate his own violent propensities. If it does not happen this week, this month or a month from now, the likelihood is that we can see more acts of violence in the future by Mr. Khadafy, violence of the kind we have seen in the past. I suggest that this kind of response is not likely to be very effective at all. It is likely to produce just the opposite of what is intended.

The other concern I have relates to the Middle East, and I am going to come to the broader question with regard to the Middle East in a moment. Some years ago the courageous Egyptian Government worked out the Camp David Accord with the Israelis and the United States. The very courageous head of the Egyptian Government, Anwar Sadat, moved in a constructive way. Ever since then the Egyptian people have been under pressure in the Arab community to lend support, from time to time, to more violent regimes. The western world, including the United States, has caused all kinds of emotional tension and conflict among the Egyptian people, and others who will be emotionally drawn toward Mr. Khadafy. When one of their own is attacked, the immediate tendency is to move with their own, rather than against them.

Mr. Speaker: This seems to be an appropriate time to ask whether the House gives its unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

That is another reason for our being opposed to the means which the United States has decided to use to deal with the deplorable practice of modern terrorism.

I want to list some alternative approaches, and I do not want to pretend they would guarantee the disappearance of terrorism. However, I do not believe that the action which the United States has taken in the past 24 hours will cause it to go away either. Indeed, we have already heard about an attack, allegedly initiated by Libya in the early hours this morning in response to the attack made on that country. However, there is a stronger list, in terms of effectiveness of approaches which ought to have been pursued, and which our Government ought to be urging upon the Government of the United States.

When we ascertain with clearly understood evidence that a state is perpetuating state terrorism against innocent people or other states, the Government of Canada should willingly and eagerly participate in the following kinds of action. It should partake in tough economic sanctions. I remind Members of Parliament that in 1980 we passed an Act of Parliament with reference to the Iranian crisis. It was a measure that had teeth, a measure of economic sanctions. It had punitive provisions for violation. We set an example, because in that instance there was a clearly perceived act of terrorism under way in the form of a hostage taking.

There is a variety of sanctions which can be taken. By way of example, there is no real movement to get rid of the apartheid regime in South Africa. Our Government has stated that it is prepared to act in terms of economic sanctions. With regard to acts of terrorism instead of using the state power with equal acts of terrorism, we should be using law and economic sanctions. That is the kind of thing which makes sense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In dealing with a violent state which perpetuates terrorist acts against others we should, as a nation, totally isolate such a state diplomatically. Things can be done to bring that about.

I would suggest that efforts be made outside the framework of Interpol. Interpol is not an effective instrument to deal with political terrorism. It was set up to deal with conventional crime, if I can put it that way, rather than with political crime. The world knows that certain state members of Interpol have been involved in state terrorism, so that is not effective. I suggest that we, with other like-minded states, perhaps the Europeans and the Americans, make a determined effort to co-ordinate anti-terrorist police investigations among ourselves, creating a special council of Ministers representing our Governments which would have the responsibility of coping in a tough way with international violence, which Interpol has not been able to act upon. That is a practical proposal I would like to see tried.

I would like to conclude with the following observation. We as a nation must recognize the historical origin of terrorism in the Middle East—not to condone it. To recognize the human and sociological origin of crime is not to condone crime. However, if you do understand some of the background you can cope with it more adequately, and remove it in some cases. To understand modern political terrorism which comes out of the Middle East we must have other than a mad-dog view of human history. The truth is that most terrorist activities coming from Arab countries is directly related to the very sad post-war history of the Palestinians and their quest for a homeland. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his recent statement made in the Middle East showed that there is one member of the Government who has some understanding of what is required historically. Until Israel is left with secure borders, until the Palestinians are granted their homeland and, in short, until some solution is found to what is called the Middle East problem, there can be no real solution to the violence. In my view this is sad, but it is also true. In the meantime we need understanding, not slogans; we need firmness, not violence. Instead of undermining international law, we need to adhere to its fundamental principles.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not here. This is a matter affecting the peace of the world, and the Prime Minister should be here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was giving the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) an opportunity to respond to the case put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent).

An Hon. Member: He chickened out.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, he is not a chicken, but he is waiting to see what the Opposition has to say and will try to gather whatever argument the Government can muster in favour of a very obscure position. This is not the first time that the Prime Minister has not met a major national issue in the House of Commons. This is where the issues ought to be discussed. I do not care whether it is a television world or an immediate electronic world, the issues of the country are discussed here on the floor of the House of Commons, and the Prime Minister ought to be here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to have the opportunity to discuss a very important international issue involving all nations, including Canadians who do not yield in their thrust for peace to any other people on the face of the globe.

I want to second what the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has so eloquently said. I am sure that we prompt the unanimity of the Canadian community when we say that as far as we are concerned international terrorism is a cancer afflicting mankind. It is indiscriminate in wiping out innocent victims. The lives lost now are beyond count. People in civilized communities are now afraid to travel. I agree at this stage with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said we in this country must all work together to eliminate terrorism. It has become a new style of guerrilla warfare. It is a blight on civilization and we in Canada should do everything we can within the framework of international law and international comity, in conjunction with our friends and allies and other civilized nations, to meet it on a mutual basis. Libya has made no secret of its support for some of these terrorist groups. Its leader, Colonel Khadafy, has been, if nothing else, a cheer-leader in support of some of those attacks.

Before I get into the issues as we see them I want to summarize our position. We support the U.S. objective in its strike against the core of terrorism. We at this stage are obliged to accept the word of the President and that of his Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense. Our Government, whether or not it was in consultation with or informed by the U.S., has not given us, and Canadians through us, information upon which to make a firm judgment. We do not have the facts. We have not been told what the linkage is between terrorism in West Germany and other parts of the world, and Libya. We have not been told of the nature of the consultation between the American and Canadian Governments. We do not know whether the President personally informed the Prime Minister, or whether the consultation was only between an anonymous American official and the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada. What was the nature of those discussions? Was it a one-sided conversation? What questions were asked by the Deputy Prime Minister? Indeed, what questions were asked by the Prime Minister of the President of the United States before a position was taken this morning by the Canadian Government? Did we ask the U.S. and the U.S. President whether there was to be a limited military engagement against specific terrorist targets? Did we ask the President where the U.S. goes from here? Did we have any evaluation from the President as to the risks of escalation? We do not know, and today's Question Period did not enlighten us one whit.

The Liberal Party has a long tradition of seeking ways to end terrorism. Mr. Trudeau, Prime Minister of our country for 16 years, raised the issue many times. We in this corner of the House await with interest what the Deputy Prime Minister has to say, but we are disturbed that we do not have the information upon which to make a secure judgment. Whatever information the Government of Canada may or may not have obtained from the President or senior U.S. officials has not been communicated to us.

We note that the President personally briefed senior U.S. senators, as I believe he was properly obliged to do under current U.S. legislation, and certainly because of the responsibility for foreign poilcy which the U.S. Senate has. However, we in the Opposition have received no such briefing from the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister or any of their officials. We have this evening been placed in a position where we have to take on faith, if you will, the statements of the U.S. President. We have not been given any assurances from our Government or our Prime Minister as to the questions we put to the President or the problems the world faces on this issue.

Our immediate concern, and it was reflected of course in the statement of the Prime Minister this morning, is for the safety of 1,300 Canadians living and working in Libya. We say at the outset that the Government of Canada did not take strong and definitive action immediately it learned of the escalating tension. If it is true, as the Prime Minister suggested to the House this afternoon, that the Government has been kept continually informed of the American intentions and their estimate of the situation in the Middle East, particularly in Libya, as this tension escalated, then we feel it was the duty of the Government of Canada to indicate to Canadians living in Libya that the situation had changed from that statement of January 10. We believe it was the duty of our Government to advise Canadians to come home.

What has the position of the Government been with respect to our fellow citizens working in Libya? The Prime Minister stated that his Government "repeatedly exhorted them to look to their own security. Make up your own mind. It is your decision. Make your own judgment". Here we have a Government derelict in its duty, knowing that those people are working in a land which is engulfed in crisis, engulfed in terrorism, saying to its own citizens: "Make up your own mind. It is up to you. Your own decision." We do not believe that is nearly good enough. Surely, if the Canadian Government was brought in to the confidence of the U.S. administration, as the Prime Minister suggested to us this afternoon, and, to use his words, "fully consulted by the U.S. all along", we should have communicated immediately upon learning from American intelligence with our own citizens, and attempted to get them out. How are they going to travel, by regular airline? Who is flying into Tripoli these days? The International Federation of Airline Pilots Associations has recommended a unanimous boycott of Libya. Who is going to get them out? The Deputy Prime Minister may have some resources that he is going to explain to us. We would like to hear about that when he gets up.

The Government's immediate concurrence, ambiguous as it is, in the U.S. action raises serious questions. We note that the Prime Minister, while applauding the U.S. objective in this action, neither supports nor condemns the American method of attack. Of all the leaders that were apparently briefed by the President of the U.S., our Prime Minister is the only one who had all the information, and perhaps had it earlier than most—we do not know—yet he failed to take a stand on a military strike. Canadians deserve to know at least where the Government stands. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) took us through some of those positions.

Major allies were consulted by the U.S. on the specific action of a military strike. Every one of those countries has taken a stand. Britain supports the action. West Germany has given—well, the phrases are difficult to evaluate, but let us call it moderate support. France, Spain, The Netherlands and Italy are opposed. The Prime Minister has said that he supported the objective of stopping terrorism, but he has refused to say whether or not he supported this specific American military strike.

If the Prime Minister has been consulted as intimately as he claims to have been the question that hits my mind immediately is, was he continually informed—and if the President or senior members of the administration told him the crisis was worsening and the United States had intelligence indicating a link between terrorism and the Libyan Government and the United States intended to take action, why did our Prime Minister not suggest other avenues?

The United States has been frustrated because its European partners have not supported the economic sanctions. Why did our Prime Minister not suggest an alternative route? Why did he not say to the President: "Give us a day or two; give us an opportunity to see whether there are other ways we can go about it; see what we can do within NATO to bring a more coherent economic response"? The question that hits everybody in this country and I am sure in the House is, if we were informed and if the information was directly communicated by the President to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister was apprised of the growing situation, why did we not offer some alternative solutions or offer to intermediate with our European friends? This is a question that only the Prime Minister can answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) was told about the attack by an American official. But questions remain: Did the Prime Minister and the President of the United States discuss this question and this operation? Were they in complete agreement? Did our Prime Minister approve of the military strike? Did our Prime Minister suggest options, other alternatives to cope with this situation? Did American leaders ask for Canada's advice? Did Canada propose other solutions?

[English]

Was there a conversation or a one-way information ritual between the President, or whoever he delegated, and whomever that delegate spoke to, conveying information but did not asking for our views, our co-operation, or for other ways of solving the problem? The Government is putting the country in a terribly difficult position it they will not tell us what it knew, when it knew it, what alternatives it proposed and what basis there is for Canadian support of the American action.

[Translation]

What instructions did we give our ambassador to the United Nations?

Article 2.4 of the Charter of the United Nations prohibits the use of force. However, Article 51 allows the use of force as a temporary measure of self-defence. And that is why the arguments of our colleague from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) may be somewhat ambiguous, because that article is subject to interpretation. In any event, perhaps the forum ought to be the United Nations, sooner rather than later.

In this instance we fear that such an exceptional use of force might become the rule.

Was the Government convinced that all other avenues had been explored? Were other political, diplomatic or economic sanctions considered? We have no idea. Communication is not the forte of this Government, and especially of our Deputy Prime Minister. To him, silence is always golden, but we needed more specific information to pass judgment.

Is Canada committed to take any other measure? Does the Government have a plan to convince our allies in Europe, for example, that strict economic sanctions are required to prevent further military action?

[English]

We welcome the assurances of the Prime Minister that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be presenting a plan when he attends the OECD meetings in Paris this week. We look forward to a report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this House. We will also be interested in knowing what he and his officials have concluded will be the possible impact on Soviet-United States relations, given the fact that the Soviets have cited earlier today that this incident in Libya is the reason for cancelling the high level pre-summit meeting.

We believe the battle against terorism can only be won if we and our allies are willing to impose tough economic sanctions and reinforce our commitment to international anti-terrorism organizations, and also by renewing our commitment to the institutions of international law and order. We should also work through the United Nations, where our recent initiative to break the link between drug trafficking and some forms of terrorism is an example of the role that the United Nations can play. We also have the advantage of hosting the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal. A proper response in airports around the world, by way of an international treaty, is an element we can advance to meet this threat of terrorism. We have the avenues of the Commonwealth, and we have the avenues of NATO.

The United States is our closest friend and good neighbour. We share their frustration and their dismay when planes are bombed, airports are attacked, ships are hijacked, people are maimed, and lives are lost. We also share their deep and abiding respect for the rule of law, and the search for peaceful settlements and negotiations in areas of international tension. We have not heard the full story. If the Government does not know the story then we believe there is negligence. If the Government does know the story then we believe the Deputy Prime Minister owes it to us this evening to tell us and the country. We will give the President the benefit of the doubt, subject to receiving further facts. We would urge the Government of our country to caution our friends south of the border to pursue prudence and restraint in this exercise. The stakes are too high and the risks are too great. We would have preferred to enjoy an atmosphere in which our Government had been less of a passive partner in what has been happenng.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past 24 hours have directed our attention once again to the tension and conflict in the Middle East. In essence the United States, after vigorously pursuing a variety of diplomatic and economic options, was left with no alternative but to take military action against a country which posed an even greater threat to the citizens and interests of the United States and, indeed, to those of all democratic countries throughout the world. Libya has demonstrated a consistent lack of respect for international law and for the accepted norms of behaviour. We know that the American decision was not taken lightly. We remember that only last month United States' aircraft were fired upon by Libyans in international airspace over the Gulf of Sidra.

The House will recall that on January 10 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a series of economic measures against Libya following terrorist attacks in Rome and Vienna. On that occasion the Prime Minister reviewed existing policy. He said that we had already developed over the years a comprehensive series of measures to limit our bilateral relationship with Libya, including the prohibition of the export of all military or strategic equipment to Libya. We had refrained from opening an embassy in Tripoli, although it would have been to our commercial advantage to do so. There had also been restrictions on the number of Libyan students in Canada and on their areas of study.

On January 10 of this year this Government went further. New contracts for the export of oil drilling equipment containing unique western technology were stopped. Canadians and Canadian companies were advised against seeking to fill jobs which were vacated by Americans leaving Libya.

Most importantly, in recognition of the seriousness of the escalating tension and Libya's unwillingness to end its support of terrorism, Canadians were advised at that time to look to their own personal circumstances, to ascertain whether they had grounds for anxiety about their security. The Prime Minister reiterated this warning last Friday afternoon, both in the House of Commons and at his press conference, urging Canadians to reassess their position very carefully. He added that Canadians should refrain from travelling to Libya.

We are profoundly concerned by recent terrorist incidents, including the attack on a West Berlin discotheque on April 5 and the bombing of the TWA airliner near Athens on April 2. The Government has accepted the substantial body of evidence linking Libya directly to the Berlin attack and to plans for further operations in Europe and elsewhere. The Prime Minister and Ministers of this Government have repeated on many occasions that terrorism is reprehensible and an evil which all members of the international community must work to eliminate.

We continue to believe that all states have a responsibility to make concerted efforts to develop more effective measures to eradicate terrorism. Canada has been in the forefront of all of these efforts, and we were instrumental in the development of the 1978 Bonn Declaration on Terrorism at the Economic Summit meeting. While the effectiveness of the Declaration has not lived up to our expectations, we have to pursue a broadly based approach, since it is through collective international effort that the solution is most likely to be found.

We stand resolutely opposed to those individuals and Governments who turn to terrorism as a means to achieve their ends. Canada has long abided by the principle embodied in the United Nations Charter that only peaceful means should be used to resolve differences. While it is unfortunate that our neighbour and ally, the United States, found it necessary to take military action in order to combat Libyan state support for international terrorism, we have accepted the American explanation that their action was not based on reprisal or revenge, but rather on a need to demonstrate to those who continue to support terrorism that they will pay an extremely high price for their actions.

In order for the cycle of violence to end, Libya must end its support for extremists and its savage attacks against innocent and defenceless individuals thoughout the world. The American strike against Libyan terrorists and military targets was an extraordinary measure, taken in response to a particularly difficult set of international circumstances. Although the United States bent every effort to avoid civilian targets, we cannot but profoundly regret the loss of innocent life in their undertaking.

In advance of last evening's events, the Government had been in close and continuing consultation with senior United States officials. We are satisfied with the evidence available to us of Libyan complicity in recent terrorist actions. Over the past days and weeks, we had informed American authorities of the location of Canadians in Libya and stressed that they not be endangered directly or indirectly by any American military response to the support Col. Khadafy's regime continued to provide to international terrorists. They assured us that they were fully seized of the Government's overriding concern for the safety of Canadians in Libya and would take those concerns fully into account in their planning.

The safety of Canadians remains of paramount importance to us. The Canadian Consul in Tripoli has informed us that throughout last night and today he has been in close contact with the Canadian community throughout Libya. He has reported that no Canadians have been killed or injured as a result of last night's events.

There are approximately 1,300 Canadians working in Libya, mostly in the petroleum industry. Many of them work on a rotation system whereby for every four weeks they spend in Libya they are granted four weeks leave out of the country. It is therefore difficult to establish precisely the number of Canadians in Libya at any given time. We have therefore established a system of wardens which permits our consular officials to contact efficiently and positively the various Canadian communities. This system, which has been in place for some years, continues to work well. We have also maintained close contact with those Canadian companies with employees in Libya.

Since the beginning of the crisis, we have been in regular touch with our western allies; France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany—which themselves have large numbers of nationals in Libya—in order to co-ordinate any evacuation plans which may become necessary.

We have, of course, continued diplomatic contacts with the Libyan Government. Our concerns about the safety of our citizens have been made abundantly clear on several recent occasions. The Libyan authorities have assured us that Canadians are welcome in Libya and will be protected there. They also assured us that should conditions in Libya deteriorate to the point where it would be best for Canadians to leave, the Libyan Government would facilitate their departure. As the Prime Minister said in his press conference on April 11, the Government is reviewing and updating plans to deal with contingencies as the situation warrants.

Let me sum up the Government's position. As the Prime Minister reiterated again today, our overriding concern has been and remains the safety of Canadians, and this has been paramount throughout. Second, we recognize clearly that the American action was an extraordinary one, taken after careful consideration, in order to demonstrate that terrorism will incur an unacceptable cost to its supporters. Third, the cycle of violence must be broken and Libya must resume its place as a responsible member of the international community.

Finally, we will continue to look to concerted international action to achieve the eradication of the evil scourge of terrorism. We recognize clearly, however, that this approach must of necessity entail co-operative efforts to resolve the root political causes of tension, conflict and instability in the Middle East.

S.O. 29

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), says the cycle of terrorism and violence must be broken. The act of the United States, as has been pointed out by other speakers tonight, excluding the Deputy Prime Minister, will only exacerbate terrorism and violence just as other acts taken by the United States sorrowfully in the past have exacerbated terrorism and violence.

We who say tonight that we must eradicate international terrorism are, however, being told by the Government that this was an exceptional occasion, that the United States had to take this action against Libya, that it did not really want to have to do it, but Libya was such a mad dog that it had to do it. Only a year ago the United States was looking at Syria and Iran, countries which may indeed be a dangerous source of terrorism, for all we know. We have had a great deal of evidence provided that there were probably more centres of terrorism in other countries than, in fact, Libya. However, the United States has made up its mind that it would be in its best interests, not in the interests of eradicating terrorism, to have a military strike against this particular nation.

I believe we are never going to understand and attack the root problems of terrorism, as the Deputy Prime Minister said at the end of his speech we should be doing, unless we really try to understand the root causes of terrorism, particularly terrorism in the Middle East. I would suggest that all Hon. Members of the House read an excellent presentation made to the Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations less than a month ago by SFU Professor Allan Cunningham, who is an expert on the Middle East. He said, and I quote:

> Too often we talk about terrorism and treat it as a phenomenon whose causes we do not actually bother to investigate too carefully and we therefore give our attention to the immediate problem of counteraction to it.
> I think that terrorism should be seen as a measure of the prevalence of diplomatic failure on the part of many states.
> There is, of course, a mindless degree of terrorism and this is the sort of terrorism which tends to hit the headlines but is actually less often present than people are led to believe if they just read today's paper re the episode and do not inquire, as newspapers usually do not, about what lies behind the episode in question. In fact, more often than not, people who do try to get behind terrorism to explanations and causes find themselves dismissed to the extent that it is sometimes thought to be a disadvantage to know something about.
> William Casey, Director of the CIA, himself tells us there is no evidence that the Soviet Union orchestrates international terrorism, a theme which he seems to have not communicated to his President.

Professor Cunningham continues:

> The President of the United States presents the United States as a country on guard for civilization against barbarian challengers. The barbarian is usually an Arab or a Latin American, . . . But this is playing both sides of the street. One is on the one hand condemning terrorism and on the other practising it, often on a much larger dimension. For Canadians it is important to recognize the associated language, the language which is all symbols rather than substance, and this is all, I think, very dangerous and to be guarded against in our own country because the argument tends to run that if terrorism is generally in our interests then it ceases to be terrorism.
> But if it is against our interests, then of course it genuinely is terrorism.

That is the end of the quotation. That is what we should be discussing tonight in this debate. Unfortunately, that is not where the Government has helped to place the debate. Did the Government express any profound concerns about the causes of terrorism to the United States Government? Did it express what, in its view, if it had a view, were some of the causes of terrorism in the Middle East? Did it have any assessment of its own on the degree to which the evidence produced by the President was in fact reliable? Did it have any evidence about other sources of terrorism in the Middle East and did it communicate these to the President or to his advisers? Did the Canadian Government, as we asked earlier today, actually propose alternatives to this military strike which, unhappily, is going to lead only to more terrorism?

Did Canada, a nation which has supported the United Nations from the very beginning present international alternatives? Did the Canadian Government say: "We feel this matter should be brought before the Security Council of the United Nations before any military action is taken"? Did the Canadian Government even mention the United Nations in its discussions with the United States? I see it is not one of those nations which has now put the matter before the Security Council. The Deputy Prime Minister has not even mentioned the Security Council or the United Nations in the context of trying to resolve the conflict about which we are speaking tonight. Apparently we took no initiatives, or they surely would have been mentioned. Did the Prime Minister say to President Reagan before this act was perpetrated: "In light of the Soviet Union's equal concern regarding Khadafy, as has been evidenced over the past months, have you discussed with it what diplomatic initiatives you might take together to isolate Khadafy?". Was that ever done? Did the Government take that type of initiative when it was talking with the President of the United States?

Mr. Rodriguez: I don't think so.

Ms. Jewett: There were United Nations initiatives. There were diplomatic initiatives. We talk about wanting to see the development of crisis management. However, did the Canadian Government have any suggestion for crisis management in this particular instance? I am sure that if it had, we would have heard about it today or this evening.

Thus one is reluctantly led to the conclusion—and I do mean reluctantly because Canada has a good record on these types of initiatives at the UN and elsewhere—that Canada took no initiatives on this matter. It simply accepted the American decision to follow the military course of action. That country now says, well, it's too bad but this type of thing has to be done from time to time.

It appears that the Government will just follow suit and not take any initiatives when the next action is taken, and the one after that, and the one after that. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, and I think all of us in the House would agree, the cycle of terrorism will not stop. It will be exacerbated by this very act. I take it that we will not now take any diplomatic or political initiatives vis-à-vis the United States, or the Soviet Union, in terms of dealing with the problems of terrorism in the Middle East.

Not only do we not attempt to understand the causes of terrorism, we make no attempt to at least present some alternatives to military solutions. In this connection, one of the most frightening aspects of all is that there now appears to be an attempt to link the provision of aid to the Contras, who are terrorists in Central America—

Mr. Stevens: You are now getting ridiculous.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: — to some Libyan action taken in Nicaragua against the Contras. It was distressing to hear live today over television the President of the United States addressing a business luncheon bringing out what I am told is total misinformation with respect to $400 million having gone from Libya to Nicaragua, as well as an arsenal of weapons and advisors. There is no evidence whatsoever from any reliable source in Washington that this is the case. Even the Department of the Secretary of State in Washington says that there are only a small number of advisors and that there have been no weapons since a report in 1982. The report to which I refer proved to be erroneous since the planes in question were carrying non-military aid. This is an absolute nightmare coming to us once again. Is it only coincidence that this happened today when the vote is tomorrow or the next day and the attack on Libya took place yesterday?

It is somehow being suggested that Libya, which is not a democracy and in which there is no freely-elected Government, is pushing to develop a support system for Nicaragua which will in turn justify the Americans sending more aid to the terrorists in Central America. To all of us—and I hope it is to all of us—this is frightening as it makes one wonder if the timing of this particular raid on Khadafy was deliberate because of the coming vote this week in the United States Congress.

We are all terrified by the possibility of the use of force becoming a pattern in our lives, be it the force of the Libyans, the force of Khadafy, the force of the Americans, the force of the Contras, all the violence and the repression. As Canadians, surely it is incumbent upon us, and upon our Government, to try to persuade the Americans, the Soviets, whoever is exercising this pattern of violence, that to try to end violence with violence will not end it.

It is a great disappointment that the Canadian Government, rather than propose strong, valuable and constructive alternatives to the United States, simply said when it was informed of what it planned to do: "Ready, aye, ready". Surely we could have asked more, and must ask more, now, today and tomorrow, of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I came to this Chamber tonight with all other Members in the hope that it would be the first real opportunity for Members of Parliament to gather the information necessary to make an informed judgment, to draw conclusions and to comment intelligently on the events which have unfolded over the last number of weeks with respect to Libya and the United States Government.

We have heard some interesting speeches this evening. The most important speech, the one which Members waited for with bated breath, was that speech delivered by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). It was to be beyond the opportunity in Question Period today, which I do not believe elicited too much real information. It was to be the speech which would say to Members of Parliament, and through Parliament to Canadians, exactly what information the Government of Canada had in the days, weeks, perhaps even the months, preceding this military action. More than that, it would indicate to Canadians in a more tangible way than we have seen thus far what the position of the Government of Canada is with respect to the military action which occurred last night.

In my judgment, two things came out of the speech of the Deputy Prime Minister. First, he began his speech by saying that the United States had no alternative in this matter. That is a radical departure from the position which has been taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), even as late as this afternoon. This afternoon the Prime Minister said that Canada supported the objective of the United States Government in combating terrorism. However, under questioning by both the press and by Members in the House, he refused to take a position on the military action by which the United States tried to meet its objective last night. He refused to say whether he condemned it, condoned it, or what he felt with respect to it.

This evening, the Deputy Prime Minister, who, as the Prime Minister himself has said, has been charged with Canada's response in this matter, said that the United States had no alternative whatsoever other than the military action that took place last night. That is new information. For the first time, the Prime Minister, if he will not be contradicted or has not spoken out of turn, has indicated Canada's position on that military action. That is useful when one is trying to find a road map of the position of the Government of Canada on this very serious affair.

What the Deputy Prime Minister did not do is share with Members of this House, and through them the public, or with the leaders of the various Parties in private, any of the information that was communicated to the Deputy Prime Minister by the American administration official who came to Canada to provide the Government with a briefing and with the so-called unassailable information which indicated that Libya was involved in the terrorism of recent weeks and furthermore that Libya has planned for additional attacks. He did not share with us any of the unassailable logic that would lead one to the conclusion that there simply was no other way of dealing with the situation of international terrorism, and particularly Libyan-sponsored international terrorism, other than sending in the F-111s and dropping bombs on military targets as well as, as we learned today, civilian targets and populated areas. We have not heard that rationale from the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) has said that for the moment, we in this Party accept the word of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State of the United States with respect to the military attack which occurred last night because we have no other means of information; not even the most obvious source, that of our own Government. It seems to me to be an unhealthy and frightening precedent that a matter with which Canadians are deeply concerned, and on which the Government on behalf of Canadians should take a position, is something that is discussed only in the context of Question Period and its 45 minutes of gamesmanship and partisanship.

It seems to me to be almost unbelievable that the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister would not have called the Leader of the Liberal Party and the Leader of the New Democratic Party into a private conference, if necessary, to share the information upon which the Government of Canada has taken the decision it has taken. It is unbelievable that they would not have expected, given that kind of co-operation and sharing of information with parliamentary leaders, that that confidential information would be respected.

The Government has invited many Parliamentarians to stand in this Chamber to cast their minds around the subject, to seize upon suspicions about the extent to which we really have been briefed and to vocalize those suspicions because the Government has acted in a very strange manner. I have a personal view about this matter. I find it tragic that tonight we are discussing last night's military attack on Libya in a black-and-white context. We are discussing whether the strike was right or wrong. We are tempted by those who would like to see this matter in only black or white as being either for "Madman" Khadafy or for Uncle Sam. The issue is not that simple; it is far more complex.

We are cast in these roles because the western world has been unable to develop constructive, effective and real sanctions to deal with Libyan-sponsored terrorism until today. I believe there is another alternative other than direct military action. I believe there is another alternative other than terrorizing the terrorists and expanding the cycle of violence. The alternative would not put us in a position of voting either yea or nay to U.S. action when that country finally moves out of frustration. The alternative is to see the western world act in a co-ordinated manner to develop real sanctions that have teeth.

In reality, what have we seen happen? Every time there has been a bombing, every time an innocent life has been taken, every time the cameras have shown us the destruction and blood on the floors of terminal buildings, we have seen every western nation in chorus condemn Libyan-sponsored terrorism. We have seen every leader proud to put himself in the national spotlight of his respective country to condemn Colonel Khadafy. We have seen an inability to enforce effective sanctions because those same national leaders who have condemned Libyan-sponsored terrorism have continued to do business indirectly through their citizens with the terrorist leadership of that country. Those who condemn that country have continued to provide the means to fuel the machines that produce the dollars required to sponsor terrorism all around the world.

In that regard, it is my view that Canada is equally guilty. That is why we are debating a military alternative, rightly or wrongly, out of frustration or out of genuine belief. It is because we have not been able to get our act together. It is because we wanted on the one hand to be principled people who would oppose terrorism wherever it is found and on the other to share in the dollars being generated by an oil economy in Libya. We have not been able to walk away from the opportunity to compete for those dollars, and that is why there is a massive foreign workforce in Libya. That is why that workforce is composed of Americans, Canadians and citizens of those countries which are today condemning the U.S. action in Libya.

I believe there is another alternative. I do not believe that every other avenue has been tried. I do not believe that there have ever been real effective sanctions developed and applied to Libya in a co-ordinated fashion. I believe we have been talking collectively through our hats for too many years about the renegade and murderous leadership that exists in that country. We cannot have it both ways.

I say to the Government of Canada that if we are to develop alternatives that work, if we are to develop a way beyond sending F-111s in a long and arduous flight path around France to drop bombs, then Canada can play a key role in this. We can begin, not by asking people to make their own decisions, but by asking our citizens to come home. We can begin by saying that Canadians will no longer on the one hand condemn terrorism and state-paid-for and sponsored murder while on the other expect to fill their pockets with the money generated in Libyan oil fields.

We can no longer expect to have it both ways. In taking that kind of decisive action, perhaps we will set an example of the effective leadership which must occur throughout western Europe. The brutal reality is that it is foreign workers, be they Canadians, Americans, West Germans, French or Italians, and foreign technology and know-how which keep the engine running that generates the billions of dollars used to purchase, manage and sponsor the terrorist attacks that occur all over the world.

President Reagan said over television today that Libya had sent $400 million worth of arms to the Sandinistas. Representatives in the U.S. Congress today talked about the shiploads of Libyan purchased arms which have gone into that country. Let them remember as well that it is American technology, and in many cases American workers, that feed, fine tune and keep the engine running which produces the capital required to buy those weapons.

We cannot have it both ways any longer. If we are to find consensus in the world for real, meaningful sanctions, if we are to avoid having any country finding itself frustrated enough to say that it had no alternative, the job and challenge of the Government of Canada is to take a leadership role in putting an end to the international hypocrisy which has existed in respect of the state of affairs in Libya and in a number of other similar regimes around the world.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the emergency debate we have been asked to take part in this evening should be seen as an opportunity for the Members of this House and for all Canadian men and women to reflect on violence and its underlying causes.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are generally reputed to be a profoundly peace-loving people. Abroad, our country enjoys an enviable reputation. Whenever the opportunity arose, we have managed to be peacemakers instead of warmongers. Other countries have often turned to Canada for advice, and I saw an example of this last year in Central America, where we were asked to share our expertise in the area of control commissions and peacekeeping forces.

I think I should also mention our efforts, as a Government and as a country, to fight poverty and neglect and try and bring greater social justice wherever possible. We are trying to achieve social justice through a substantial co-operation program in over 100 countries on continents.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, we cannot but be deeply concerned about the rise of terrorism in the world. Terrorism is a thoroughly repugnant evil. It strikes down innocent victims. It paralyzes, through fear, the free movement of persons. It engenders suspicion, misunderstanding and hate.

Although up to now, its effects have been felt largely in Europe and the Middle East, the violence of terrorism has not spared Canadians. We need only recall the Air India disaster which claimed the lives of so many Canadians last year. I am also reminded of the highjacking of an EgyptAir jet to Malta, which led to the death of a Canadian woman and her young child. The highjacking of the Achille Lauro off the Egyptian coast also illustrates the increasing risk to innocent victims when travelling abroad.

The Canadian Government emphatically condemns all terrorist acts as unacceptable, irrespective of where they take place and what motivated them. I say it this evening in this House, and I will say it again in every international forum where I am given a chance to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in stating that this Government has set a very high priority on promoting various initiatives designed to counter international terrorism.

For the first time in its history, on December 9 last year the U.N. General Assembly condemned all terrorist acts as being criminal acts. Canada made every effort to get this resolution adopted. Similarly, at the International Civil Aviation Organization, we have spoken out most emphatically in favour of reinforcing aviation security. In two weeks, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will take part in the Tokyo Summit, and I know that he will be examining with his colleagues, the heads of State of the large industrialized countries, ways of further enhancing co-operation between our countries in fighting against this scourge.

Mr. Speaker, last night, the United States of America attacked in Libya a number of centres of terrorist activity and military targets. The Canadian Government had been informed of the imminence of this raid. As stated in an official press release, we accepted the statement by the President of the United States in which he said that Libya was involved in perpetrating terrorist attacks in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, we can always try to understand the psychology of the terrorist. A man who destroys, who wounds and kills is often a human being who has been deeply wounded himself. However, I cannot understand a country that agrees to train, help and officially support such people by encouraging them to commit such desperate and hopeless acts. We are seeing the birth of state-supported terrorism which can only be countered by a response at the same level. That is what we saw last night. The United States acted on a principle that is well known in law, the principle of self-defence.

Without applauding the American raid, we understand it was unavoidable in the circumstances.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government will continue to work on identifying political and thus peaceful solutions to the various international conflicts that have engendered terrorism. I am of course thinking first of all of the tensions existing in the Middle East.

Our policy in this region consists in encouraging as much as possible the use of negotiations to resolve this conflict. This concern for peace was reiterated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on his recent tour in the Middle East.

Canada has long since declared itself supportive of a fair, lasting and full settlement of the Israel-Arab conflict, on the basis of UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. These resolutions acknowledge the right of all countries of that region to exist within safe and accepted borders, and they ask for the withdrawal of Israel from the territories occupied in 1967.

We have given our support to initiate peace negotiations between Israel and Arab countries. With that in mind, we rejoiced at the moderation shown in this respect by many Arab nations. For instance, we greeted with satisfaction Egypt's decision to conclude a peace treaty with Israel, and the will shown since then by the Egyptian Government to abide by the treaty.

For its part, Jordania has long been seeking a formula of co-existence with Israel and has shown leadership in all endeavours to that end. During his recent visit to Jordania, our Secretary of state clearly expressed his appreciation concerning King Hussein's efforts to promote peace.

On several occasions Canada also expressed its concern about the civil war in Lebanon. We sincerely deplore the untold sufferings this conflict continues to inflict upon the Lebanese people, and did not spare any effort to lessen their plight by regularly providing emergency humanitarian assistance to Lebanon. Canada has often voiced support for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity, particularly before the UN General Assembly in the fall of 1984. We sincerely wish that a genuine and lasting national reconciliation will soon enable the Lebanese people to live in peace again.

The ongoing Irak-Iran war is also an issue which gives us great concern. Canada spoke in favour of a peaceful settlement of that conflict, to the extent that we readily endorsed all international efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement and made representations to both sides urging them to show moderation. We have placed an embargo on our arms shipments to both warring parties, who have been urged to avail themselves of the good offices of the U.N. Secretary General. We have also protested against the international human rights violations that continue to arise from this war.

Mr. Speaker, in making its positions clear on the conflicts that are raging in the Middle East, Canada's sole concern is to promote peace. We want an end to the suffering and misery caused by war and violence. We want a return to peace, a precondition for all economic and social development.

At this point, I would like to reiterate the feelings of friendship we, as Canadians, have for the Arab nations. The isolated actions of a single government will not be allowed to cloud our perception of the grandeur of their civilization, nor to diminish our desire for substantial and cordial relations with these countries.

Mr. Speaker, even in this hour of crisis, I remain confident that moderation and the brotherhood of man will prevail.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I do not particularly relish intervening in this kind of debate this evening. It has been a rather sad 24 hours, sad for the world in general in view of the fact that a major power, indeed a superpower, has seen fit for whatever reason to launch a pre-emptive military strike in a part of the world that is a tinder-box of political conflict and, in some areas, in political chaos. No one yet knows, and we will not know for a long time, all of the ramifications that can flow or possibly will flow from the action taken at Tripoli just about 24 hours ago.

It is late in the day to be entering into debate. We should face the fact that we are basically debating in the dark, both literally and figuratively, because we do not have all the facts at our disposal. What little we have comes largely from news reports, and most of these reports come from the United States.

We have the public statements of American officials, President Reagan, Secretary of State Shultz and Secretary of Defence Weinberger. We also have one short press release from the Prime Minister's office, and some rather circumspect answers from Question Period today; all in all very little hard information.

Certainly all Members of this House share my concern for the safety and security of Canadians presently resident in Libya and, indeed, all people resident from foreign countries in that state. We feel helpless that we can do so little at this hour to ensure their safety. If we feel helpless and ill informed, just think how Canadians in Libya feel this evening. They have even fewer sources of information at their disposal. What sorts of questions might they be asking themselves? They know, of course, there has been an armed attack by the United States.

When exactly did the Government of Canada learn the nature and details of the U.S. action in Libya? Were we consulted before the pre-emptive strike? Was Canada merely informed of the mission to be carried out? What was the Government's immediate reaction? Did our Government initially disagree with the information given it by the special envoy? Did we encourage or attempt to dissuade the United States? Did Canada present any other options for the U.S. to consider? Did the Government do anything to ensure the safety of its citizens in Libya before the air strike last evening?

I cannot help but recall the era in which I grew up in this country, the era of Pearsonian diplomacy when Canada made every effort to be an active peacemaker. We did not go in lock step every time a major power made a move. That established Canada in world fora as a cautious, reasonable country, concerned more about peace than scoring military brownie points or launching full scale vengeful type or pre-emptive type military strikes.

I am not blaming the United States entirely at this hour for what it did. I do not know what the evidence is. I do not think any Member sitting in this House knows the evidence that existed and on which the American military strike was based. We can only go by those reports and those statements on television last night and what little information has come to us today.

For example, I would like to know when the Prime Minister first learned the exact time of the attack. Only the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) have the anwers to these questions. The Prime Minister has suddenly become as tight-lipped as his friend across the aisle. We know that he issued a statement which offered a qualified endorsement of the American position, even if it stopped short of support for the military response. The Prime Minister has also told Canadians to "look to their own safety". Under the circumstances, that is hardly adequate. As we have already noted, they lack significant information to make a rational decision in this matter.

A few things are certain. The attack did take place. The Canadian Government's action was restrained. Therefore, it seems reasonable to assume that Canada at least acquiesced in the American military action. What were the results of these developments? Are Canadians more or less safe as a consequence of the U.S. attack? That should be the focal point of our debate. We should not be quick to condemn the United States, at this point at least, for we lack the information which President Reagan says justifies his ordering the attack. Can we say that the safety and interests of Canadians have been enhanced by the developments of the last two days? I think not.

There are Canadians in Libya, and Libya is under attack. As we have seen from television reports, civilians are not immune to military action. The notion of a surgical military strike is a myth. There is no way, no matter how sophisticated the weapons employed, that any armed force can guarantee that only military targets and personnel will be affected.

Last night there existed the real possiblity that Canadians might have been injured or killed in the violence in Libya, because innocent people have already died in that attack. Civilian areas of the city of Tripoli were hit, one in particular in downtown Tripoli. Some may say that Canadians were not near the targets hit by U.S. forces. That is not true this time. The danger of escalation exists. Libyan radio has called for reprisals against both the United States and its allies. Canadians are not immune to mob violence either.

Are Canadians elsewhere safe from terrorism as a result of this strike? I, personally, do not think so. If Libya chooses to make reprisals, it will not confine itself to Libyan or American territory. Remember that an innocent Turkish woman died in the same Berlin bomb blast which Presiden Reagan says he is avenging. Remember, too, that the Berlin bombing was said to be retaliation for Libya's embarrassment in the Gulf of Sidra. We saw that same sort of attack today on an American installation in the Mediterranean resulting from last night's pre-emptive strike.

In other words, we already see violence begetting violence. We see a pattern of escalating violence, not a pre-emptive strike which will eliminate terrorism. I fear that we can expect further reprisals from both sides. Sadly, it will not only be their own armies or citizens which will be affected. Already violence is begetting violence, the very thing this attack was supposed to diminish.

Their allies will be expected to take sides. Already we have seen Egypt line up behind more radical Arab states and condemn the U.S. raid. Does this further the cause of peace in which we all have a stake? Clearly, the answer is "no". We are all the poorer as a result of the degenerating situation in the Mediterranean and the Middle East in general.

We should be asking ourselves if other options would be better to serve our interests. There is diplomacy, as others have mentioned this evening. Some scoff at the notion of diplomatic pressure reducing terrorism. It may be that diplomacy cannot solve this problem by itself, but diplomacy has a place, and certainly has its uses.

It may strengthen the position of the United States to seek a United Nations condemnation of Libyan terrorism. It is unfortunate that the Reagan administration has spent so much time attacking the UN. It has effectively closed off that course of action by alienating the UN and its supporters. The UN's critics say that it is a useless institution anyway. They fail to realize that their own criticism undermines the political will to give international bodies the muscle to be more effective. If the UN enjoyed wider support, its members might, for example, consider economic sanctions against Libya. There is an oil glut now. Surely Libya would be vulnerable to concerted economic pressure.

I recall a speech presented to the political committee of the North Atlantic Assembly in mid-February in Brussels by Professor Wilkinson of Aberdeen University, an acknowledged international authority on terrorism. I remember his remarks of that Saturday morning very clearly. He said that military strikes and military action will not solve the problem of terrorism in the Middle East, in Europe, or anywhere else. He argued most strongly that the only effective weapon which will diminish terrorism in that part of the world is effective economic sanctions. If you begin to tear down the economies of the host countries which permit terrorist training and activity to take place, the pressure will build up and become so intense that even Colonel Moammar Khadafy would have to relent and stop allowing terrorists to be trained in his country. That is important.

We have other examples as well. A very pertinent example is Ireland where, for 300 years, the United Kingdom attempted to "solve the Irish problem" by force upon force upon force. Yet, as we all know, today there is more violence and terrorism in Northern Ireland than ever before in those 300 years of violence. Military intervention, pre-emptive strikes, and the use of missiles in the missile age will not bring to an end terrorism in the Middle East or in Europe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I want to suggest now, as has been mentioned by my Leader and the cabinet Minister who spoke just before me that, for perhaps the first time in 40 years, we must look at the disease. Let us stop looking at the symptoms. Let us, for the first time in a debate in this House, try to think about the cause of terrorism rather than simply treating the symptoms, as President Reagan did last night.

The cause of terrorism in the Middle East is the 40-year struggle of the Palestinians to regain a homeland. Bombing Tripoli will not eliminate that terrorism, but will exacerbate the problem. It will intensify the hatred, bitterness, and disillusionment. Young Palestinians would not be engaged in acts of terrorism if they were working in pharmacies, teaching school, acting in local politics, farming their lands, or had a flag flying over their homeland.

I am not suggesting for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that we embark upon the dismemberment of the state of Israel. There is room in the Middle East for both of those peoples to live in peace. It will not come overnight, but neither will it come as long as the President Reagans of the world continue to send pre-emptive military strikes against Tripoli, Damascus, Beirut, or wherever it happens to be. Peace will come about in the Middle East and there will be a diminution of terrorism if the major powers; the United States, the U.S.S.R., western Europe, and Canada, recognize the true cause of the terrorism, the disease which has caused this cancer that has killed so many innocent people on both sides in the Middle East and in Europe, and perhaps, as a result of last night's actions, in North America as well.

I call upon my colleagues to consider the real issue. Certainly part of the real issue of paramount importance is to bring terrorism to an end, to protect the lives of future innocent people, and to pay homage and respect to the innocents who have already died as a result of that conflict, that cancer, in the Middle East. We are not going to solve the problem, cure the disease, or actually perform a true political surgical operation, unless we recognize the cause. I sincerely hope that other nations will make an effort to bring the Palestinians and the Israelis together in order that they can solve and settle their problems so that they do not continue to spill over throughout the entire Middle East, Europe, and perhaps even North America.

There is a major problem, Mr. Speaker. That problem is simply that one of the two superpowers, the United States, has consistently chosen to give almost its total support to the one side. In doing so, it has lost almost the entire support of the other side. I do not know whether that damage is irreparable. I do not think it is. Muslims are anti-communists by nature. I see very little future for the Soviet Union anywhere in the Arab world if we begin to change our attitude toward the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. However, as long as the U.S. supports only one side, as it has consistently done, you can expect the others to look elsewhere for support. That, too, must be addressed.

I hope, in the spirit of Pearsonian diplomacy to which I made reference a moment ago, that Canada will return to the role of peace-maker and not say: "Yes, go ahead, bomb them", or: "We agree", or ring our hands and say there is nothing we can do. I congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for what he said in the Middle East a couple of days ago with respect to the Palestinian problem. I continue to hope that both he and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), and the Government Party, will bring pressure to bear on our American neighbours and friends to try to take a more balanced view of the Middle East, to try to bring peace to that troubled part of the world. In doing so I am convinced that there would be a very perceptible diminution of state sponsored terrorism and violence in that part of the world. Unless we are prepared to take the tough, moral road, that will not come about. If we simply continue, as the U.S. did last night, to exert violence against violence, the Middle East will continue to be the world's northern Ireland and we will all suffer the sadness that will come from that.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, like other Members of Parliament who have spoken in this debate I want to start by saying that we in Government, we in Parliament, must do everything possible and reasonable to combat and destroy terrorism. Surreptitious terrorism is the instrument of demented cowards. It is not acceptable that ordinary citizens from any part of the world, including the United States, the Soviet Union and the Arab world, should be unable to travel freely by air, to visit places of entertainment, or to go to public places at all, without fear of terrorist attack. That is not acceptable in 1986. As I said, we in Government, we in Parliament, must apply our intelligence and political will to provide creative solutions to this most important problem. It must be a priority. It must be a commitment. I do not believe that has been the case up until now.

While I say that we must combat terrorism with all our intelligence and might, I am not convinced at this point that the U.S. military action last night was the appropriate response at this time. I may very well be convinced with the proper evidence and information, with the intelligence which has been provided to certain groups around the world. However, I stand here with doubt in my mind. Certainly there was no justification for the bombing of civilian targets.

This makes me wonder about the alleged technology of our military equipment. We hear how we are so advanced that we can strike a target 3,000 miles away with a nuclear missile; we have aircraft that can go beyond the speed of sound; we can do all sorts of marvellous things. Yet here we have American aircraft attacking what the President said were military and terrorist targets and by mistake they hit civilians. That makes us wonder. If that is being done in a limited operation like that, what could happen with respect to our nuclear arsenals?

As I say, I have these doubts in my mind with respect to the attack which took place last night and much depends upon the intelligence and information which should be provided to us by the Government. I was sincerely disappointed in the speech of the Deputy Prime Minister tonight. As a matter of fact, it is my submission that he gave us a different version than was given to us this morning in the official release by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). At the beginning of his address this evening the Deputy Prime Minister said that the U.S. had no alternative. I thought he was then going to provide us with a good deal of information to substantiate that alarming statement because it is not contained in the statement released by the Prime Minister this morning. I ask again, as others have asked before me, what information did the President of the U.S. give the Prime Minister or Canadian officials? What information did they give to connect Libya with the recent terrorist attack in Germany? Was this a one-sided conversation? Did the Americans simply advise us of what they were going to do and not ask us as a good ally for our advice and suggestions? What attempt was made to explore alternatives, economic and political?

As was mentioned a few minutes ago, in the days of Pearsonian diplomacy, when Mike Pearson was the Foreign Minister of this country and the Prime Minister, we had a reputation of exploring peaceful solutions to very difficult and complex world problems. Perhaps my doubts with respect to the statements made by the President last night are based in part on what we have been told in recent months about what was happening in Central America. A few weeks ago the American Government told us, at the time a vote was taking place in the American Congress, that there was a massive incursion into Honduras by Nicaraguan troops. When journalists and others went down there to search out evidence of this attack, they found it was not at all what had been alleged. It appeared to be some kind of trumped-up story simply to justify the U.S. Congress authorizing funds for the Contras. One must also ask: Even if Libya can be connected to the most recent terrorism, will this sort of action by the U.S. stop a person— and I only go by his reputation—like Colonel Khadafy? We must remember in using this type of action that we could trigger an even worse situation.

The U.S. and the Soviet Union as well bear a very heavy responsibility when they use their military power. I say this as a friend of the U.S. We cannot forget that any small incident, and this is not small, can escalate into a much more serious war, one which brings with it the threat of nuclear terror. I remind the House that the United States and the Soviet Union now have between them 50,000 nuclear weapons that are more accurate, more concealable, more destructive than ever before. These weapons have one million times the destructive power of the bomb that fell on Hiroshima. It is alleged by experts that they could destroy 800 million lives in less than one day.

This is the concern of many Canadians. I spoke to a man this afternoon who told me that his 12-year-old son asked him this morning, "Daddy, are we going to have a war? Are we going to have a nuclear war?" That is the kind of concern that touches many Canadians when they see a superpower like the United States launch a military attack like this in a situation where all the facts are not known, where we do not know the basis for their attack, the justification and so on.

As was pointed out by other Hon. Members in this House, many of the United States allies in NATO have rejected this action: Spain, France, Italy and the Netherlands. I presume they know much more than we know here in the Opposition. The United Kingdom has given its approval, and West Germany has given a limited approval. This contributes to the doubt that many of us have. Many who have disagreed with the United States on this are their good friends. I am a good friend of the United States, and I expect much of the United States because they are my friend. Maybe I am more critical of them on occasions because I expect so much of them. I expect certainly more of them than I expect of Khadafy and Libya, and I expect more of them than I would expect of the Soviet bloc.

We must also consider what this action will do to the balance of power, to the realignment of forces in the Middle East and the world, and the shift of certain countries in that area more to the Soviet bloc and away from non-aligned positions. That is a possibility that is being discussed by the experts. There are other alternatives. I do not believe that we used the economic sanctions that were possible to the extent they could be used. I do not believe that we used international forums, the United Nations, the World Court, and other instruments of international action—political and legal action—to the extent they could be used.

In conclusion, and I repeat once again that certainly we cannot tolerate terrorism in any form, and we must attack and destroy terrorism. Military intervention must be the last resort in dealing with a problem like this, and never the first resort. We must always prefer the rule of law and non-military solutions. Those with great military power like the United States and the Soviet Union must use that power with great wisdom and discretion. I and some of my colleagues are still awaiting evidence, information that this was done in this case in this unfortunate incident.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this debate this evening. We Canadians are fortunate in the freedoms that we possess. Chief among them is freedom from fear. Terrorism is challenging that freedom. It has disrupted the lives of many Canadians, and for some has brought their lives to a tragic end. In looking at events in the Middle East we should recall that they represent no isolated incidents, no "bolt from the blue". Canada's own experience with terrorism extends back many decades. The tragedies have been many. According to figures published in 1984 by the Department of National Defence, between 1964 and 1983 there were 64 politically-motivated terrorist incidents involving Canada, all of which were violent, and some of which resulted in death. Here I recall the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when he spoke before an audience gathered in commemoration of the Air India flight 182:

> We are in real danger of allowing a new form of global conflict to dominate the international order and govern our lives. Death, as a result of international terrorism is as real and as shocking as any of the deaths in the last global conflict.

For Canada and Canadians the past 12 months have seen tragedy upon tragedy. In March of 1985 the Turkish Embassy was taken over and a Canadian died. Less than two weeks later the Toronto subway system was held to ransom. In June there were the double tragedies of the Air India flight 182 and the Canadian Pacific Air explosion at Narita Airport. In October Canadians were again confronted with terrorists aboard the Achille Lauro, and the following month witnessed the death of two Canadians at Valletta Airport in Malta.

We have yesterday witnessed yet another consequence of the global conflict to which the Minister referred. There are causes and effects not only in the Middle East but in all parts of the world. We recognize the tragedy of terrorism. First, there is an immediate tragedy visited upon innocent victims, their family and friends. Their lives have been sacrificed for causes which were not their own. In company with others we must seek to break the logic of terrorism which so often exploits the very freedoms we take for granted. We must improve our security preparedness and strengthen our laws against this crime. I note that certain steps have already been taken. The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty), for instance, announced on March 10 a comprehensive upgrading of our counter-terrorism program. He created a special emergency response team and substantially strengthened the protection of foreign missions and personnel. In addition, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), both within the context of the International Civil Aviation Organization and at international airports in Canada has come to grips with wide-ranging improvements in aviation security. I believe Canadians will support this initiatve.

Second, a terrorist act is carried out in the name of a cause often born in tragic circumstances. The tragedy of terrorism has political roots. We must seek, as indeed we have sought, to contribute to the search for peace and justice in the Middle East and elsewhere. This cannot be obtained by means of terror. Canada is second to none in its search for civilized solutions to world problems.

Third, there is the tragic potential that terrorism holds for disrupting orderly discourse among nations. The terrorist cause becomes identified with the terrorist consequence, and this complicates the conduct of international relations. Terrorism itself becomes the issue rather than the conditions which created it.

We must resist the terrorist goal, which is, of course, to force political change through violence. We support negotiations and we support the peaceful settlement of disputes. We will not be deviated from this principle by those who would seek their political ends by bringing suffering to innocent people.

In this regard, the words of the Prime Minister on April 9 are particularly apt. He referred to the concern about:

> The irresponsible and criminal misconduct of some agents of countries which appear to be giving succour to terrorism and terrorist activity which is reprehensible and completely unacceptable to Canada and every other civilized country.

Leaving aside the latest American action in Libya, we should remind ourselves that terrorism has suffered some defeats, although at great costs. Those responsible for the deaths of Valletta were brought to ground. Terrorists responsible for the Achille Lauro incident were also apprehended. For the first time in its history, on December 9 the General Assembly of the United Nations unanimously adopted a landmark resolution that condemned all acts of terrorism as criminal. This latest action by the international community was presaged by a ground swell of international public opinion against terrorism expressed in world institutions as diverse as the Association of South East Asian Nations and the Commonwealth. We should also recall that in the aftermath of the abhorrent attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports in December, Canada undertook a comprehensive series of measures to signal clearly that the Government will not condone the terrorist activity of Libya.

Speaking before the United Nations this fall, the Prime Minister said that no nation alone can combat terrorism; it demands concerted international action. We must exchange information. There must be nation-to-nation understanding and we must have international conventions.

Those who murder and maim innocent people, those who bring anarchy to civilized society can have no sanctuary, no comfort, and no indulgence. Canada has a commitment in joining with other countries around the world in the search for a determined and effective response against terrorism.

Canada has already taken a number of measures and is in the forefront of the struggle to make the world safe from terrorism. For example, at the ICAO, Canada, in company with others, is leading in efforts to make international air travel safer. Within the context of the economic summit, we and our partners are examining further co-operative means to come to grips with terrorism. Heads of Government of the economic summit countries—the leaders of the industrialized democracies—will meet in Tokyo in May. Preparations for this meeting are already well in hand. There is an opportunity for further international co-operation in this context and our goal should be to promote it and thus defeat this terrible scourge of terrorism once and for all.

I have no doubt that the war against international terrorism will be prolonged and that further tragedy lies ahead. But I also have no doubt that with resolution and determination we can move toward eliminating that evil.

The battle against terrorism can be won on the basis of the following principles and objectives: First, it is in the interest of all countries to oppose international terrorism. No nation is safe.

Second, no nation alone can combat terrorism. It demands concerted international action.

Third, Canada will seek international action against international terrorism in all available places.

Fourth, Canada will take, as it has taken, fitting action against states which support international terrorism.

Fifth, Canada will co-operate in developing consistent and effective measures to improve civilian aviation security and to ensure that there is effective international action in the resolution of crimes committed by terrorists.

These principles have already found their voice in the international economic community. I believe that this voice will grow in strength. I also believe that our country's great strengths derive from the resilience and tolerance of its peoples and from the freedoms we possess. We can build on these strengths in the conviction that we can achieve a safer and better world.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks in the debate this evening. I want to begin by quoting some words from the Prime Minister, as reported at page 9722 of Hansard on January 13, when he was introducing Prime Minister Nakasone from Japan.
He said:

> There is a new, insidious threat to stability in the world, the murderous scourge of terrorism, an international plague that knows and respects no boundaries, from which no person is safe, and to which democracies such as Canada and Japan, to name but two, are most vulnerable. Japan and Canada were linked in the horror of terrorism last year when a bomb exploded among the luggage of a Canadian commercial flight after its arrival in Tokyo. Our people have a right to expect their Governments to take forceful action to rid the world of these cowardly creatures who do not recognize the bounds of decency or the dictates of reason.
> As it happens, Prime Minister, we, as leaders, are not powerless to do something about this. We can encourage support for more effective enforcement of international law, as you have done on many occasions. Under your leadership at the summit the partners may yet contemplate effective, co-ordinated action against terrorists of every origin and terrorism in every form.

These were the comments of our Prime Minister when he was welcoming Prime Minister Nakasone. We are not powerless when it comes to dealing with international terrorism. We can work through international law.

Unfortunately, the American bombing of the cities of Tripoli and Benghazi in Libya last night has to be seen as a confession of powerlessness, a confession of weakness when the mightiest nation on the face of the earth had to resort to a kind of naked force to deal with a question of terrorism in a way that is not at all effective. It has been pointed out several times already this evening that this is a breach of international law. The Americans talked about a so-called surgical strike. How can we talk about a surgical strike when 100 civilians were killed, when innocent babies are killed? What kind of surgery is this? It is surgery with a meat axe.

The Deputy Secretary of State for the United States, John Whitehead, said that the United States planned to avoid casualties. He even made the bizarre suggestion that perhaps the casualties which took place were as a result of misdirected anti-aircraft fire. That kind of self excuse just does not make sense when we are faced with the enormity of what happened last night.

The Americans are pleading self-defence as the reason for this strike. I would like to suggest that instead of a plea of self-defence, perhaps a plea of temporary insanity might make more sense. What happened last night does not make sense to any sane or rational person who looks at our world.

I would like to suggest five reasons why I think we have to oppose what the Americans did last night. First, it increases world tension. We have already seen the results of that in the cancellation of the planning meeting which was to have led up to the United States-U.S.S.R. Summit. We have great hopes that somehow when the leaders of the superpowers sit down together they will be able to reach some kind of understanding with each other, some kind of resolution of world tensions. These summit meetings are very important. The fact that the planning meeting has been cancelled is something that has to be regretted very seriously.

In addition to that, the tension has been increased in the Arab world. In fact, the effect of last night's bombing has been to solidify the Arab world in support of the extremists. It has solidified the Arab world behind Colonel Khadafy and instead of rooting out terrorism, it has made a hero of him among his fellow countrymen and other Arab nations.

Second, we oppose this action because innocent civilians were killed. I know we feel very strongly when innocent civilians are killed by terrorist actions, for example the commercial air flight, the bombing of the discotheque and other terrorist actions which have taken place. However, two wrongs do not make a right. The bombing of civilian areas of Tripoli and the killing of upwards of 100 civilians is not something that can be condoned. Certainly we have to oppose this action because it is not at all effective in dealing with terrorism. As I have already pointed out, it has unified the Arab world in support of Khadafy and Libya. It has marginalized people who were moderates. People who wanted to speak up in the Arab world for a more moderate position have been pushed off to one side by the American action. This American action has been very counterproductive in terms of the long-term objectives which the Americans themselves should be seeking.

By the same token, if, as President Reagan says, Colonel Khadafy is a mad dog, we can be very sure that this kind of action is not going to have any effect on him at all. We do not try to solve the problems of a mad dog by giving it a kick. That in effect is not going to help the question of international terrorism. In fact, it will exacerbate it. Fourth, we have to be very concerned about this action because of the fact that some 1,300 Canadian lives are involved. We heard from the Government that it has no real plans on how to deal with the situation if a real crisis should erupt which involves those lives.

Finally, I think we have to recognize that the United States does not come to this situation with clean hands. The Americans do not have clean hands when it comes to international terrorism. In 1975, Senator Frank Church chaired a committee which studied U.S. intelligence activity around the world. That committee detailed CIA involvement in assassination attempts on such diverse world leaders as Fidel Castro of Cuba, Patrice Lumumba of Zaire, Rafael Trujillo of the Dominican Republic and Diem of South Vietnam. These were people on all sides of the political spectrum, just people who happened to be in the way of the CIA at that particular time. These particular attempts at assassination did not succeed. We still have Fidel Castro very much with us. But other attempts did succeed. Right now President Reagan is attempting to link the situation in Libya with the situation in Nicaragua and at the same time he is again coming before the House of Representatives for $100 million worth of support for the Contras, the people whom President Reagan calls freedom fighters.

I would like to give some details of those so-called freedom fighters. On February 16 a Swiss development worker in Nicaragua was driving a truck home when he saw a group of 16 women who asked for a ride. He picked them up, and as they drove along they hit a land mine. The truck was forced to stop, and as it stopped the Contras stepped out of a ditch and gunned down the development worker and four of the women. The Washington office on Latin America has sponsored a report on violations of the laws of war by both sides in Nicaragua. It was prepared by Mary Dutcher, a former Assistant Attorney General for the State of Missouri. I would like to read the following dominant conclusions of this report:

> The preponderance of the evidence indicates the continuation of a systematic pattern of gross violations committed by Contra forces ... The presence of Contra troops in a given locale seemed to give rise to a pattern of indiscriminate attacks against civilian targests, kidnappings, rapes, assassinations, mutilations and other forms of violence—
> On the other hand, the violations that were committed by members of the Nicaraguan armed forces appear to be relatively isolated cases of abuses of authority and breaches of military discipline. There was no evidence that violations were condoned by superiors.

The report also shows that in a number of cases Nicaraguan soldiers or militia who were guilty of abuses were punished with long jail terms. The preponderance of evidence indicates that the great majority of abuses in Nicaragua have been committed by the Contras, the very people for whose support President Reagan is asking for $100 million.

A few months ago it came to the attention of the American public that the CIA had published a manual, quite contrary to American legislation, on psychological operations in guerrilla warfare for the Contras operating in Nicaragua. This manual calls for a selective neutralizing, or assassination—that is what the word "neutralizing" means—of targets such as judges, police, security officers and local militia heads. It calls for that kind of selective assassination as a way of inducing terror among the Sandinista people, those people who would want to support their Government. These are the Contras for whom President Reagan wants to provide $100 million in support. Yesterday morning I heard a report on the CBC that I can scarcely credit. I would be interested in having this chased down because it seems to have disappeared from the news. However, I heard it twice yesterday on early morning news reports. They indicated that the Contras had considered a plan to assassinate the United States Ambassador in Costa Rica, with the idea that this assassination would later be blamed on the Sandinistas, giving a pretext for an invasion of Nicaragua. These were reports I heard on the CBC.

We are talking about Americans concerned about terrorism in Libya. I want to emphasize the fact that the Americans do not come to this situation with clean hands. We want to see an end to terrorism. We want to see an end to terrorism in the Middle East. We want to see an end to American-sponsored terrorism in Central America. I think the answer has to be a greater reliance on world law and world opinion. Unfortunately, the United States turned its back on world law by withdrawing from the jurisdiction of the World Court in its dispute with Nicaragua last year. Today, world law is needed more than ever. Today, reliance on the United Nations and the offices of the United Nations is needed more than ever.

In the face of the threat of international terrorism what we need is not hasty, ill-considered vigilante action. Rather, what we need is a degree of patience, self-control, a co-ordinated attempt to work with all nations to eradicate this evil. Terrorism will not be defeated by vigilante action. It has to be defeated by the rule of law, and the rule of law has to be based on justice. We have to make sure that we provide justice for the people of our world, otherwise we will continue to face the threat of terrorism.

There have been alternatives suggested. Unfortunately, those alternatives were not suggested by our Government when it was in touch with the United States. I think we should be pushing for tough economic sanctions when we have conclusive evidence that one country is harbouring terrorism. We should be pushing for an international anti-terrorist police force which can act effectively in this area. Given the historical origins of terrorism, we need more than a mad dog view of human history which feels that by hitting at someone such as Khadafy we will solve the problem.

In conclusion, I would like to quote again the words of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from Janaury 13 when he said:

> —we, as leaders, are not powerless to do something about this. We can encourage support for more effective enforcement of international law—

I only wish that our Prime Minister had done this during this past week when he was aware of the threat of the American invasion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that it is impossible to remain silent and indifferent in this debate. I admire the cool and the indifference of Tory back-benchers who so far have chosen not to participate in it. I look forward to hearing some voices of Members from across the way taking a stand on this very important resolution before us.

Mr. McDermid: What about the speech of the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard)? It was brilliant. Where were you?

Mr. Caccia: We will hear what comes next. I entered this debate with the intent to be concise since a great deal has been said on this issue which makes it difficult to be novel. However, there are a few things which, in my way of looking at parliamentary debate and politics, need to be said. I build my reasoning on this base; when a civilized nation decides to answer terrorism with an act of war, it seems to me that then it gives legitimacy to terrorism. It elevates terrorists to the level of those who attack them, or believe that they are attacking them, with sophisticated weapons. I do not think that I am alone in adopting this starting point in thought. I believe that tonight there are millions of Canadians and Americans who think that way. I believe they are asking themselves questions about what is happening to the reputation of that great nation in this world.

Acts of terrorism, as we all know and concur, are awful. This act of war, too, is awful. Last night on television we saw the destruction of homes and the killing and maiming of civilians. That is awful, too. Tonight, when the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) told us that in his view the United States had no alternative, I held my breath waiting for the evidence, since a statement like that requires some pretty heavy, and important, convincing evidence. When he finished his speech and sat down, and this is why I am surprised at the indifference of the Tory back-benchers, I asked myself: Does he really believe in what he said tonight and does this Government really believe in what it put forward?

If he condones the attack provided that Canadians are not hurt, as he put it to us implicitly in his speech, then let us suppose—and perish the thought—that Canadians were to get hurt. Would he still condone the attack? Would he still say that the United States had no alternative? Last night watching what happened we saw that the attack was not just on military bases. We saw that by condoning this act, or by accepting the inevitability of it, the Government of Canada took a big risk.

The question is also one that goes beyond our own individual interests as a nation concerned with 1,300 Canadians in Libya. We must also ask ourselves the question: Can terrorism be checked by moving a fleet near Libyan waters? What does this achieve? I really do not know. I do not think that it goes to the root of the question. Can Khadafy be isolated from the Arab world by an attack on him? I submit that if the attack which we have just witnessed succeeds in doing anything it is in consolidating Khadafy's status in the Arab world.

The next question is: Is the threat to Libya not a way of enhancing the shaky status of Khadafy in the Arab world? The most overriding and dominant question, in my mind at least, behind all this is: Does the Libya-U.S. confrontation in the Mediterranean not pose a threat to peace in the whole world? What does it do to East-West relations and, in particular, what does it do to the relations between the two superpowers? Does yesterday's U.S. attack represent a danger to Canadians who are in Libya? If it does, as I believe it does, how can we be ambivalent to the U.S. attack on that country? There is a contradiction here. The Government of Canada has to protect the interest of Canadians in Libya, but at the same time it takes an ambivalent stand on the attack. Therefore, the inevitable conclusion in this debate, as it strikes me at this late hour, is in the form of a question which asks: What are the alternatives to gunboat diplomacy? Many other speakers tonight have put forward a number of interesting approaches.

Against the background of violence begetting violence and violence leading eventually to escalation, we must ask what we are doing in terms of economic sanctions. What are we doing by way of taking the appropriate actions at the United Nations? Could we pursue counter-terrorist activities by way of an international police force?

The basic and fundamental questions which have also been asked is, what is at the root of all this, and if there is a solution to the situation in the Middle East, would that not perhaps remove the necessity of becoming engaged in counter-terrorist activities? We must ask if the Government of Canada has pressed these alternatives and if so how and to what degree of success. Is the Canadian public not entitled to know that at this stage?

I also ask myself some other questions, and I will conclude with them. I ask myself if the so-called Progressive Conservative Government of Canada understands the potential danger of this attack for world stability. Does the Government not realize that with this attack, the United States may have moved the world one step closer to midnight, the hour of World War III? Does the Government of Canada not realize that if Spain, France, Italy and Greece are opposed to the attack on Libya, and these are countries across the street from Libya, so to speak, there must be reason for this that we, comfortably sheltered by distance and the Atlantic Ocean, must understand and take into account in the formulation of our own foreign policy? I also ask myself if the Government of Canada does not realize that this attack is more than just a matter between the United States and Libya. It is an issue that could escalate into a world-wide conflagration.

My conclusion would be this: these are dangerous times. In part they are dangerous because the West is bereft of constructive leadership and resourceful initiatives. Considering how our country contributed to peacekeeping and peacemaking in the fifties, the sixties, the seventies and the early eighties, the inevitable question, almost in the form of a cry, is: "Where are you, Canada?"

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to add some thoughts of my own to tonight's debate and I would like to say quite genuinely that I have learned from every speech made tonight. This particular tragedy that is being lived right before us is the kind of tragedy that encourages Members of Parliament to think more deeply about foreign affairs and to think about the principles that define a country. That, of course, is flawed a bit by this feeling of tremendous distaste and concern for the violence that is sweeping the Middle East.

I would like to share with the House by way of introduction to my comments a preliminary conclusion I am drawing from the travels of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations as it deals with matters of this sort. I am finding that Canadians are perhaps more than ever before feeling vulnerable to international events. They are feeling more captive of what is happening outside of Canada than ever before. I am not speaking simply of commodity or oil prices or of trading arrangements but of international terrorism and arms control. This feeling of vulnerability is a strong one. I would like to speak to that tonight and explain how I feel that what the Government is doing is trying to come to terms with that.

The second major conclusion I believe anyone would gather after travelling the country and listening to Canadians talk about international relations is the paradox that Canadians seem to be rather ambitious about what Canada can do in the world; we feel vulnerable but there also seems to be an insistence that Canada should act and try to help in what seems to be intractable conflicts around the world. There is a feeling of vulnerability but also, curiously, a feeling that Canada can do something. I believe both feelilngs are responded to in what the Government is trying to do in this tragic situation.

First, dealing with vulnerability, we find ourselves, together with virtually all members of the world community, grappling with the increasingly alarming and seemingly intractable problem of international terrorism. This terrorism is arising from the tensions and conflicts of the Middle East. Canadians have not been unaffected by this cruel scourge of our time. We need only remember the hijacking of the Egyptian aircraft in Malta which led to the death of two innocent Canadians, a mother and her young son. We cannot deplore strongly enough such terrible events and the increasing threat to all international travellers. That is a vivid, sad reminder of our vulnerability. Nevertheless, it is clear that terrorism is not an irrational phenomenon. To analyse it as being simply the work of madmen is deceiving. No, in our view, it has its roots in deep political conflicts. It will not be eradicated until these conflicts are addressed and resolved.

Clearly, the Canadian Government is deeply committed to doing all it can to assist efforts to find political settlements which will reduce the tensions and frustrations which lead to desperate and cruel acts of terrorism and which will enable the countries and peoples of the Middle East to live together in peace. At the same time, even in our pursuit of these political settlements, we recognize the necessity for firm actions to deter those who would use terrorism to their own ends. I repeat, we recognize the necessity for firm action to deter those who will use terror as an instrument of state policy.

As a member of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations, I was privileged to preside over an extremely productive panel on international terrorism held in Fredericton last month. In that peaceful town, it seemed strange to be speaking about terrorism. However, we had a vivid and very useful discussion of that subject and I commend it to the House as reported in issue 46 of the committee proceedings. As I indicated then, it is my view that if we are going to be constructive internationally, we will have to become more tough minded. Canadians cannot simply retreat behind sentiments and vain hopes. We have to analyse toughly and be willing to take tough actions.

One of the conclusions of the panel discussion was that while most international terrorism is poltically motivated and sometimes the result of political grievances which we recognize to be genuine, nonetheless acts of terrorism try to force compliance with political demands through violence and murder.

Whatever the motivations, these acts must be unequivocably condemned. It was unanimous among the panelists and among members of the committee. Indeed it became clear in that discussion that terror is not an abstraction. It is a psychological strategy and a physical strategy. This being so, it must be responded to not only psychologically with words but with physical reply at times. In addition, we found that terrorist organizations, whatever their original political objectives, tend to become self-sustaining. This is the terrible irony of terrorism. Over time, some terrorist organizations become increasingly less concerned with the political solution which presumably led to their formation in the first place and start to jockey for prominence and try to intimidate more than other terrorist groups. While the resolution of tensions such as those in the Middle East may well help to reduce the level of terrorism, it remains essential for the international community to take firm and courageous stands against terrorist acts so that these organizations will not proliferate or start to develop a life of their own almost independent of chances for a political solution.

At the conclusion of that day's discussion, it seemed to be clear to all those who participated that it was state-inspired terrorism, terrorism which is encouraged and perpetrated by Governments, that is particularly offensive and really calls for the clearest response. In fact, it may be the form of terrorism with which one can come to terms because at least one can communicate with a Government.

Following that discussion and following our examination as a Government in the last two years, there have been clear actions. Canadians are ambitious about what Canada can do in the world. They are insistent that it do something to protect its own citizens. I would argue that the Government has done this. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a number of economic measures against Libya because of our deep concern that that Government was actively involved in supporting terrorist activities. That seems to have been acknowledged by all Members of the House tonight. These measures supplemented earlier steps which we took to limit our bilateral relations with Libya. The new measures about which we have heard tonight included a ban on the export of oil drilling equipment containing western technology. Canadians were advised not to take the jobs vacated by Americans leaving Libya. We cautioned Canadians in Libya then, and again last week, about the potential risks to their personal security. Other measures were mentioned by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen).

Following the recent terrorist attacks against the West Berlin discotheque, the only criticism of what I have heard tonight is that that terrorist bombing was not a surgical act either. It was an indiscriminate act. We have accepted President Reagan's assertion that there is substantial evidence linking Libya directly to terrorist acts and plans for further measures against American targets in Europe. How much do we have to let happen before we reply? There can be no doubt, as the Prime Minister said, that terrorism is reprehensible, an evil which all responsible members of the world community must strive to eliminate. All this is clear. Nonetheless, it is a matter for regret that the situation should have become so serious in that part of the world as to lead the United States to feel obliged to take military action. The Government and I hope that this reply will be sufficient and that restraint on both sides will be the future pattern.

The eradication of terrorism will require a concerted effort by us and what we do in the House and by the entire international community, which we consider must address not only the manifestations of terrorism but also its causes that lie in large part in tensions and instability in the Middle East, and which can only be resolved on a lasting basis by political solutions and negotiated settlements. We have heard a great deal about this in committee, in the House and in past parliamentary committees. Canada has long supported an approach of political solutions and negotiated settlements. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) reiterated that last week during his visit to that region.

Clearly the most serious and destabilizing conflict in the Middle East is the Arab-Israeli dispute. That was clearly outlined by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) earlier tonight. Canada's long-standing position has been in support of a just, lasting and global settlement of this dispute. We are clear that this settlement must be based on resolutions Nos. 242 and 338 of the Security Council.

The House also knows our support for the well-being of Israel as a secure and independent state. This is a fundamental principle of Canadian foreign policy. Israel must be secure and it must be an independent state. However, we also recognize—and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has recently reaffirmed this—that there can be no lasting peace in the Middle East which does not take into account the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. This includes their right to participate fully in negotiations concerning their future and their right, as was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs a few days ago, to a homeland within the territory of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Consistent with our belief in the necessity of a negotiated settlement, Canada welcomed the efforts of King Hussein to initiate such a process, seeking to find a common position with the PLO which could open the way to negotiations with Israel. Canada's commitment to promoting and encouraging peaceful solutions to the conflicts and tensions in the Middle East is also at the heart of our position on another seemingly impossible regional conflict. I refer here to the awful war between Iran and Iraq about which we do not hear much in the House. It is now well into its sixth year. It is a war which has caused hideous loss of life and human suffering and to which there is sadly no end in sight. Like other Middle Eastern conflicts, this war has its roots in old historic grievances aggravated by a more modern clash between two neighbours with radically opposed religious loyalties as well as by a conflict between political and cultural values. In this case it is Iraq's secularism versus Iran's commitment to the Islamic fundamentalism propounded by the Ayatollah Khomeini. Like other Middle Eastern conflicts, this war is particularly alarming to any civilized observer because of its potential to draw in against their will other moderate neighbours such as the countries of the Gulf.

Our priority as the Government of Canada in this instance, in conjunction with like-minded members of the international community, has been to support strongly all mediation efforts. I refer particularly to the efforts of the Secretary General of the United Nations who is trying to reach a political rather than a military solution to the Gulf conflict.

In keeping with established policy, Canada has banned the exports of armaments to both parties in that conflict. Likewise, consistent with our desire to promote and strengthen respect for international conventions, Canada has been an active player in efforts to proscribe the use of chemical weapons in this war. This was made clear in the Canadian delegation's statement last month to the UN Conference on Disarmament in Geneva. In addition, Canada has co-operated with other western states to prevent the export, to both belligerents, of chemicals used to manufacture such weapons.

Canada particularly welcomed the Security Council's resolution on the Iran-Iraq war, passed unanimously on February 24. This resolution called for an immediate ceasefire first, a return to internationally recognized boundaries second, and the initiation of negotiations toward a peaceful settlement. We have since conveyed Canada's position and support of these proposed measures to the Governments of Iran and Iraq, and we have urged them to comply.

While recognizing that the resolution of these political conflicts and tensions would not necessarily and of itself eradicate international terrorism, we believe that peaceful settlements could eliminate much of the political motivation behind such acts. Instances of terrorism would then be both much reduced and more amenable to prior detection and appropriate policing action by the international community as a whole.

In conclusion, let me mention a wider point that affects this debate tonight. Not long ago I sent to my colleagues in the House a book sent to me by a constituent entitled How Democracies Perish outlining the vulnerability of democracies to all sorts of forms, but primarily terrorism. We do not have many democracies in this world, and they are vulnerable. They are vulnerable to acts of terrorism. This the United States has had to recognize. This, I think, all civilized people will recognize. Peaceful political settlement, especially with the long term objective of democratization of more and more countries, is both the process and objective of our policy. It is our hope this will soon penetrate the Middle East. Let us not give up on this, Mr. Speaker. Let us remember that regional conflicts have been resolved in the past. Regional conflicts can seem intractable but nothing is intractable. Let us resolve again tonight to do what we can to stop the spiral of violence and help bring that region to a new and genuine security.

[Translation]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was referring a few minutes ago to an 11-year old boy who asked his father whether there was going to be a World War, when he heard the news about Libya. Mr. Speaker, I remember clearly that as a boy of nine, in 1961 I asked my mother and father the same question: Mom, Dad, is there going to be a World War? They answered: We don't know. We don't know.

[English]

It is with a sense of anger, shame and pain that I participate this evening in the debate on the events in Libya. I believe that all of us in this House should share the sense of shame that Canada's voice, which historically has spoken out for peace and against the use of violence to resolve international disputes, has been silenced. Not only has that voice which has been respected in international fora been silenced, but that voice has been joined in unison with the voice of the perpetrator of murder of innocent civilians.

I believe the response of the U.S. Government and of the President of the United States in this instance was fundamentally immoral. I say immoral because surely it cannot be right to suggest that by taking the lives of innocent Libyans, who had no dealings whatever with people in other countries, certainly no dealings with terrorism, that somehow we are reducing the risk of terrorism in other countries. It cannot be right to suggest that by paralyzing a 14 year-old Libyan boy for the rest of his life by breaking his spinal cord that we will in some way be reducing the likelihood that Colonel Khadafy may engage in acts of violence himself.

It cannot be seriously suggested that by murdering the 15 month-old adopted daughter of Colonel Khadafy that we will in any way reduce the possibility that that man, who has certainly been an instrument of hatred, of intolerance, of anti-Semitism and of violence will suddenly become a man of peace. No, Mr. Speaker, by adopting the approach that President Reagan has adopted, far from reducing the likelihood of violence, of the loss of life of innocent civilians, he is increasing the possibility of further death and further violence.

The message which he is giving to the people of this world is that we respond to terrorism with terrorism. I say terrorism, and I say state terrorism, because if we examine the definition of terrorism, I understand that to be the taking of innocent human life for political motives. Innocent human lives have been taken to send a political message by the President of the United States.

What is that message, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the message is clear: Violence is being met with violence, murder with murder and terrorism with terrorism.

[English]

An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, on an international scale. That cannot be right.

I am ashamed that my Government has sided with the instruments of violence and death in Libya. I am concerned that this decision, this strike by President Reagan is merely a foreshadowing of something else that he has wanted to do for some time. Remember, it was Ronald Reagan who proudly proclaimed "I am a Contra. I am a Contra".

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has very eloquently demonstrated the record of murder, violence and torture of the Contras in Nicaragua. "I am a Contra" the President said. Today he went on and suggested that Libya is involved in the funding of the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. He says that $400 million is going to the Government in Nicaragua.

There is a profound danger that "Rambo Reagan" as the new super cop of the globe will see his next mission to destroy the revolution of the people of Nicaragua using the pretext of a link with Libya.

• (2320)

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, that it was that same Government which mined the harbours in Managua, an act which surely could have resulted in loss of innocent human lives. Let us examine the rationale of the American Government. It has suggested, and the international community waits for the evidence, that the Libyans are responsible for the death of an American serviceman in West Germany. If that is true, the international community condemns that terrorism. The Americans say that they will respond to that death by bombing in Libya.

What if that logic had been applied by the Government of New Zealand? Would it really have been appropriate for the Government of New Zealand, in response to a murder on the Rainbow Warrier, to send the New Zealand bombers raining bombs on Paris, Marseilles, and Lyon? That kind of response to violence with violence inevitably leads to further deaths.

This act of state terrorism is in breach of international law. It is in breach of the fundamental rules of international ethics. As my colleagues have pointed out, there are other alternatives for responding to international terrorism. Tough economic sanctions are an important and effective means, when taken collectively, of responding to international terrorism.

I note as well that it is important for us to recognize the hypocrisy in the approach of the American President. Are the lives of black South African children worth any less than the lives of other innocent people who are victims of terrorism? Black South African children are dying at the hands of their government, yet we hear nothing from "Rambo Reagan" about sanctions or terrorism against the Government of South Africa. That hypocrisy and silence is shameful.

Finally, and most fundamentally, surely we must recognize that the roots and seeds of terrorism are found, in many cases, and particularly in the context of the Middle East, in desperation and a sense of total powerlessness and lashing out against conditions of economic servitude, poverty, and injustice. Two million Palestinians have been uprooted from their land. A generation has grown up as strangers without any sense of roots in their own land on the West Bank and elsewhere.

Until we come to grips with the reality that the treatment of the Palestinians has been profoundly unjust by the Israeli occupying authorities on the West Bank, that it has discriminated against them, and has resulted in a denial of justice, we will not fully come to grips with the realities of the Middle East. My colleagues have spoken about the fundamental importance of a homeland on the West Bank for the Palestinian people living in an independent state in peaceful coexistence and mutual respect with the State of Israel.

All Members of the House condemn, without equivocation, terrorist attacks against innocent civilians in other countries. However, let us not be deluded into believing that we will reduce the level of intensity of such violence by responding in kind. Indeed, as I pointed out earlier, the opposite will be the case. Ronald Reagan has argued that the Libyan attacks are state-sponsored terrorism. I say that a Government and a president which engages deliberately in bombing attacks on civilian targets is itself guilty of the terrorism which it proclaims to be attacking.

I expect my Government to speak out on that. I would have hoped that, during the consultations which we were told took place, my Government would have had the courage to tell President Reagan to stand back and examine the alternatives, as the European Community did. Instead of our Government taking that responsible approach, it was ready-aye-ready, full steam ahead. That is cause for sadness and shame today.

My colleagues have spoken of the importance of assuring the safety of the 1,300 Canadians in Libya. Indeed, that is a concern which all of us share. I hope that the Government has taken the steps necessary to ensure, if necessary, the evacuation of those Canadians who want to leave Libya.

In conclusion, I want to again emphasize my concern that Canada's voice has not spoken out against this act of international state terrorism. I sense that the support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government of this country will be seen in the future as one of the gravest and most profound black marks in the history of the country. I feel a sense of sadness, shame, and anger that we have allowed this act to go by and that, indeed, we have approved it.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, terrorism is a threat to all of us. Most visibly, terrorism has killed and maimed thousands of innocent civilians around the world. Because terrorism has blurred the distinction between ends and means and led many in the world to accept violence as a means of settling disputes, it threatens world stability.

I believe that the American attack on Libya was wrong. It is not the way to deal with terrorism. First, it is stupid. Chances are that this attack will trigger a wave of terrorist attacks which will go far beyond what we have seen to date. People who engage in terrorism will not be restrained by the American action of yesterday. Libya was a convenient target for the United States, given some of the outrageous statements of Colonel Khadafy. It was easy for the United States to attack Libya under these circumstances. Why not Syria? Why not Iran? Those countries could just as easily, and probably have, been behind some of the recent terrorist attacks which have occurred in the Middle East and Europe.

Second, I have it on good authority that the attack is a violation of international law. During this debate in the House this evening, no one has quoted from the United Nations Charter. I would like to do so, but without any sense of superior authority. I just had a good teacher a number of years ago. I would like to read from Article 2(4) of the UN Charter which was referred to in one or two interventions.

It states:

> All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

Yes, we have heard President Reagan state that the American action was in self-defence. However, I again quote from the UN Charter, this time from Article 51 which describes the right of self-defence:

> Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, ...

I am not aware of any armed attack against a member state of the UN which would lead to the American response. Therefore, quite clearly, the American response was a violation of international law and the UN Charter. It was not justified under Article 2 and it is not deemed to be an act of self-defence under Article 51.

I am astounded by the response of the Government of Canada as we have heard it in the House over the last few days and from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) earlier this evening. He stated that the U.S. had no alternative. This demonstrates a lack of understanding of international law and of the UN Charter, and the basic principles which should govern the conduct of nations.

As well, I believe the American action will add to anti-Americanism and diminish any influence the U.S. has in that part and other parts of the world. I believe the moral position of the U.S. would have been much stronger if it had made greater attempts to deal with terrorism within the bounds of international law. I am not aware of any resolution submitted at the UN in recent weeks as a response to the bombing in Berlin. I believe that, given the right circumstances, it would be possible to get the Soviet Union to agree to a tough proposal before the Security Council. Over the last few nights I saw Mr. Arbatov on television. He has special responsibilities in the Soviet Union for western relations. He took great pains to distance the Soviet Union from Libya. I saw no understanding of that in the response of the U.S. and its spokespersons in recent days.

This attack is a tragedy because we are seeing a breakdown of international order. It demonstrates the extent to which international legal systems and the UN have been unable to cope with terrorism. It demonstrates the extent to which a policy of appeasement of terrorists has undermined the trust and confidence between western democracies. Many countries have accommodated or accepted terrorism. They have not imposed sanctions or used the UN or other international agencies to deal with terrorism and its causes. I have to question whether the U.S. did all that is humanly possible within international law. I ask any Member in this House: Why is it that the U.S., with all its power, was not able to get the Europeans to agree to adequate sanctions? What does that tell us about American foreign policy? What does that tell us about our position and our ability to influence other countries in this world?

We have to develop methods of dealing with terrorism. I suggest that public opinion will play a vital role in dealing with terrorism. However, a vital element in mobilizing public opinion is evidence. You have to present people with evidence which will allow them to come to the necessary conclusions and adopt sanctions. Yesterday Mr. Reagan said that he had irrefutable evidence, but none of us have seen it. He has said he cannot produce it because that would damage the U.S. intelligence system. That is not the first time he has said that. I would like to quote an article from The New York Times of January 9, 1986, which dealt with this problem of evidence. It said:

> Claiming "irrefutable evidence" of Colonel Khadafy's role in the airport killings, Mr. Reagan was unwilling to produce it. He said the location of 15 terrorist training camps was known but wouldn't say where "because there are things that should not be revealed."
> Such diffidence leaves Mr. Reagan looking like a chronic blusterer. Where are the photographs of those camps? Why aren't they included in the State Department's white paper on Libya's offenses? If they cannot be published, why not at least circulate them among allied leaders, as President Kennedy did when he sent emissaries to document the presence of Soviet missiles in Cuba in 1962?

The New York Times conceded that the President's options were limited but said:

> The way to enlarge them is to share the evidence of Libya's complicity.

That was on January 9 and we have yet to see the evidence.

I also feel a sense of shame because the Government of Canada has been a party to an attack which destroys international order. It has been reported in the media that the United Kingdom and Canada are the only two countries in the world which approved this action. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in recent days has proudly said that he was consulted. He was made fully aware of American actions. What does that mean?

Did the Government approve the general idea of an attack? The Deputy Prime Minister said that the U.S. had no alternative. I must believe that the Government came to that conclusion too readily. Did the Government even attempt to convince the U.S. that alternatives were available? Did the Government say that we have imposed sanctions on Libya but we are prepared to upgrade those sanctions? We are prepared to take more increased sanctions. Let us try that before we resort to an armed attack. Was the Government given a list of targets? Did it approve such a list? Were they military targets? Did the Canadian Government tell the U.S. that civilian targets should not be hit? The Deputy Prime Minister earlier this evening said that Canada expressed concern for Canadians. Canada gave the U.S. a list of the locations where Canadians are located in Libya. What does that indicate? Does it indicate that we are only concerned about Canadian lives? Is that the sole responsibility of the Government of Canada?

In trying to come to grips with terrorism perhaps we, who are in Government, might take some advice from younger people. They seem to have more cogent, rational, reasonable answers than we in Government have sometimes. Recently a group of Jewish students lobbied Parliament Hill to encourage the Government to take action against terrorism. These students represented the group, North American Jewish Students Network Canada. They urged three things of the Government and of parliamentarians. They urged the establishment of a joint Senate parliamentary committee on terrorism. They urged the implementation of effective legislation to seek out, investigate, prosecute and punish terrorists and their supporters. They urged that known terrorists and representatives of terrorist organizations be barred from entry into Canada for any purpose. Did they suggest that we should strike at Libya? No. I would suggest again that young people perhaps provide wiser counsel than we get sometimes in the area of Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to quote a letter that appeared in Le Devoir on January 18 of this year, signed by a

Mario Lavoie, member of a Canadian delegation to the International Youth Conference held in Kingston, Jamaica from April 6 to April 9, 1985. This young man quoted a resolution adopted by young people representing some 50 countries. In their resolution, they said, and I quote:

> Violent attacks against individuals can never be justified in any way. Few priorities are more important than that of imposing severe sanctions on groups or governments that encourage such practices by training, equipping, sheltering and supporting the people concerned.

In concluding, this young Canadian said:

> The recommendation is clear. It is now up to the governments of the West. If the situation is not remedied as soon as possible, it may become uncontrollable.

Mr. Speaker, we know this letter failed to get the desired results, because the Governments of our western countries have failed to take joint action to impose sanctions on those who propagate terrorism. And although it has made some attempts in this direction, the Canadian Government has failed to do everything in its power to do so.

[English]

I am sure there is considerable public support in the United States for the action of its Government. I am sure that many Canadians probably support this action also. The gut feeling that anybody has is, finally, we did something about it. Ronald Reagan gave it to them. What we feel in our guts is not the way we are supposed to govern countries. It is not the kind of feeling which is supposed to govern the actions of nations in this world. It is our heads which count. I am dearly afraid that the wiser counsels, the wiser heads in the American Government and in the Government of Canada have not prevailed in recent days. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I want to begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by complimenting those who have entered the debate today. I would say that we do not all share the convictions of our colleagues opposite, but they have spoken with the courage of their conviction, and that is what this House and this debate is all about.

On the Government side we have tried to lay out in our comments, first with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), the extent to which the Government of Canada went to ensure the safety of Canadians in Libya. I think that the case was stated very clearly by the Deputy Prime Minister. He also made reference to our general over-all Government response to these very serious events in Libya. The Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) dealt with the Middle East and the very, very tragic situation of terrorism which reigns there. The Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) very capably put forward a response of the Government to terrorism and our deep conviction that terrorism is a problem which is stalking the entire free world and that we have to do something about it. My colleague from London West wrapped up, so to speak, and dealt with issues, particularly from his perspective as the chairman of a very important joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. I think we have had generally a high tone of debate. We have not had heckling, and I think I speak for all Members of the House when I say that that is because we realize that this is a very serious situation.

We have heard eloquent statements on the crisis in the Mediterranean and on terrorism in general. Some very vivid remarks were made about Ireland by my colleague from Brantford and about terrorism in general, then about the root political causes which bring us to this crisis. We all realize that these problems have to be resolved by responsible members of the international community acting together.

This Government and our Party have been very forthright in our comments on terrorism. I want to reiterate the Prime Minister's statement of January 10 when he said:

> We must look to concerted international action to achieve our objective. We must redouble our efforts, along with our friends and allies in the community of nations to establish the necessary security measures to protect effectively our citizens. We must strive for meaningful international co-operation to this end. We must make better use of the economic summit group and the International Civil Aviation Organization, as well as other forms to achieve these goals.

● (2350)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made special reference to the word "concerted". In the long run, no action against internatiional terrorism will be possible, effective or successful except through international co-operation.

As the United Nations has recognized, terrorism is a world-wide problem that must be tackled through the co-operative efforts of all nations.

We believe there are three areas which deserve intensified Canadian efforts. Within the context of the economic summit, we have already achieved certain success and co-operation on air piracy. We feel that we should look to expanding this co-operation and building on the arrangement which is already in place. Within the International Civil Aviation Organization we should seek, through the Canadian representative, further co-operation on air security measures. International confidence in what is really a remarkable world-wide air travel system that has been developed since World War II is fully justified. We must work at sustaining that effort. The adoption of vigorous methods through the ICAO is a vital element in achieving that goal.

We believe we must take practical steps to build upon the body of international law so as to fill in any gaps which may now exist which allow terrorists to attack aircraft. For example, I pose the question: Should we consider the possibility of a convention on international co-operation on airport security so that we could all share the experiences and methods that various countries use to catch the terrorist before that act of terrorism which we all deplore takes place? If we were to do so, perhaps we could eliminate the tragedies of Vienna and Rome so that they are never repeated and we never witness those shattering pictures of innocent people suffering from the attacks of terrorism.

Perhaps we should consider further agreements among nations to forestall incidents such as that of the Achille Lauro hijacking.

We are all fully conscious of the intractability and the bitterness which the tensions and conflicts of the Middle East have engendered. These threaten not only that region but the peace of the entire world. The risk is growing, as we all realize. That is why we are involved in this debate tonight. The risk is growing as problems of economic adjustment due to declining oil revenues pose an economic challenge to the moderates and peacemakers of that region. The unresolved Arab-Israeli dispute and the senseless and bitter fighting in the Iran-Iraq war provide a somber background to the issue which brings us to this debate tonight.

As the House will know, the Secretary of State for External Affairs recently concluded a very successful trip to the Middle East. I am sure all Members will agree that he spoke eloquently of the need to resolve the region's problems. He noted how countries outside the region—countries such as Canada—could help provide the conditions and encouragement that would assist in making that peace possible. He spoke of Israel's right to secure and recognize boundaries. He also spoke of the right of the Palestinians to a homeland within a clearly defined territory—the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. We are on record as saying to both sides that there must be a recognition of this problem and an understanding of each other's position.

If the international community could work to achieve peace in the Middle East and resolve those problems which have been with us for so long and have alienated and embittered a generation of young Palestinians and Israelis, it would remove one of the elements which contributes to the causes of the problems. Many people claim that if this alienation and anti-western feeling that it engenders continue to grow, it will feed the terrorism that we see today.

Canadians are among the most travelled people in the world and mention has been made of the number of Canadians working in Libya. I do not want to overstate the problem but the fact that we travel so much exposes our people to certain risks. The diversity and the ability of Canadians to work in certain fields make it impossible for us to turn into ourselves. We cannot avoid the risks and the problems of international contact and commerce because it is our life blood. Our national reality demands that we work with determination and vigour in conjunction with other members of the world community. For that reason, Canadians have a very real stake in a concerted attack on terrorism itself and its root political causes so that we can overcome this scourge.

It has been stated that we accept President Reagan's assertion that there is substantial evidence directly linking Libya to terrorist acts and plans for further measures against American targets in Europe. The Prime Minister has made it very clear that there is no doubt that terrorism is reprehensible and an evil which all responsible members of the world community must strive to eliminate. Nevertheless, it is a matter for regret that the situation should have become so serious as to lead the United States to feel obliged to take military action. We hope this will be sufficient and will lead to further restraint.

Let me say in closing, the eradication of terrorism will require a concerted effort by the international community which we believe must address not only the manifestations of terrorism but also its causes, which lie, in large part, in the tensions and instability in the Middle East. Terrorism can only be resolved on a lasting basis by political solutions and negotiated settlements. This is an approach which Canada under various Governments, including the previous Government and ourselves, has long supported. I am sure I speak for all Members of the House when I say that we all want a resolution by political means and a negotiated settlement of the root cause of those problems in the Middle East. This is a position that we all support and which the Secretary of State for External Affairs reiterated during his recent visit. I see that you are indicating that it is twelve o'clock, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all Members, I want to thank you for being with us during this debate.

Mr. Speaker: It being twelve o'clock midnight, pursuant to Standing Order 29(13) I declare the motion carried.

This House stands adjourned until later this day at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 12.01 a.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

REVENUE CANADA

PREPARATION OF INCOME TAX RETURNS BY SPECIALIST COMPANIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, The Gazette published the results of a survey showing that seven out of seven firms which offer their services to complete tax returns for Canadians were unable to prepare correctly the tax return submitted by the newspaper.

Not long before the Toronto Star had revealed that 43 per cent of income tax inquiries directed to Revenue Canada had been erroneously answered.

The Minister of National Revenue is dumbfonded by these facts but has no solution or guarantee for Canadians now facing various problems. The Conservatives made all kinds of promises during the election campaign, but they are not very good at coping with present difficulties.

SHIPBUILDING

LACK OF POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this morning I returned from meetings with groups and concerned individuals in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Among the important issues raised was the lack of clear Government policies regarding the shipbuilding industry. The present Government and previous Governments have failed to provide this clear direction. We do not have a policy on shipbuilding and this has resulted in the closing of shipyards and the laying-off of many workers.

Some Government financed contracts and Crown corporations have gone offshore. Some cabinet Ministers have promoted this process. Some Government work is designated for certain yards while other work is placed for open competition. Yet there are no clear guidelines for taking these diverse courses of action.

Our shipbuilding industry is in shambles. We cannot expect private industry to build ships in Canada, to fly Canadian flags, and to have repair work and renovations done in our own yards if the Government itself fails to provide the necessary leadership.

ENERGY

GASOLINE TAXES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, further to an article that appeared in one of the major Montreal newspapers last Saturday, under the headline: "Ottawa to put 3-cent tax on gas", I want to reassure the many Quebecers who are worried about this rumour which has no basis in fact.

Quebecers have hardly had time to enjoy the recent 10-cent drop in the price per litre when someone tries to spoil it. I hardly think there will be a 3-cent increase per litre, and personally I am confident there will be further price reductions, especially in Quebec. As you all know, we have a 6-cent surtax per litre which has been around for too long.

Furthermore, although our Government realizes that the oil crisis is a matter of national importance and has created a very critical situation, it has not yet made a decision.

But I know that whatever the Government's decision will be, it will be in the best interests of all workers and consumers.

NATIVE PEOPLES

APPOINTMENTS TO CREE-NASKAPI COMMISSION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to inform the House that on February 6, 1986, Justice Réjan Paul, Mr. Robert Kanatewat from Abitibi and Mr. Richard Saunders were appointed members of the Cree-Naskapi Commission. The appointments were made by the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. David Crombie, and the Cree and Naskapi themselves.

The Commission was established under the Cree and Naskapi of Quebec Act, the first piece of legislation passed by Parliament that native people can call their own. The Commission's terms of reference include receiving and considering grievances from all parties concerned with respect to implementation of the Act; second, making recommendations with respect to implementation of the legislation, and third, submitting to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a report on the Act's implementation, every two years. This Commission is one more step in the Government's plan to support the development of native people's autonomous government.

THE LATE SIMONE DE BEAUVOIR

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to pay tribute to a great feminist and humanist who died the day before yesterday, Simone de Beauvoir.

In addition to having been one of the foremost intellectual figures of the 20th century and an avant-garde militant for every radical cause, she is without a doubt a major figure of contemporary feminism.

Many passages from her brilliant essay, "The Second Sex", have kept their extraordinary resonance today, thirty-seven years later.

With great intelligence and sensitivity, Simone de Beauvoir delivered her response to Aristotle and Freud and others who saw women's inferiority as a result of human nature.

She demonstrated that one is not born a woman, one becomes one. The Western feminist movement is deeply indebted to her.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ROLE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Official Languages expressed his disappointment yesterday about the Government's lack of action on official languages.

There has been little action in the key areas of service to people in their chosen official language in ensuring equity in public service participation by the official language minorities, and in the use of French as the language of work.

The Government's lack of action has affected the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages. Last spring the committee was contemplating holding hearings in the regions, but this resolve collapsed in the fall. This failure to carry the flag into the provinces reflected the Government's lack of energy on such vital federal-provincial matters as education in the minority official language. Deficit reduction conflicts with the national interest in these areas. Statements of good intention become empty protests when Governments do not find the means to demonstrate their resolve.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IMPROVEMENT OF PENSIONS AND OTHER BENEFITS

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, ever since he was sworn in as Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), our colleague has established a new policy based on fast service, generosity and courtesy.

Pension applications have been processed twice as fast since we came into office and the number of favourable responses has doubled.

Veterans now get higher benefits. Under a Pension Act amendment in force since January 1, 1986, the guiding principle is that pensions should increase at the same rate as a mixed salary.

Other improvements include higher deductions for casual earnings, longer disability allowances, extension of Aging Veterans Program benefits, and a number of other measures to help these people who served their country.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the many veterans in my riding of Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle fully appreciate these improvements which attest to our Government's gratefulness to them.

TERRORISM

SUPPORT FOR UNITED STATES ACTIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Americans are not warmongers. All over the world there is evidence of their concern for the poor and the needy. I saw the hospitals and the roads they built in Central America. Wherever tragedy strikes, they are there to provide help. They stand four-square against terrorism, hijacking, and the murdering of innocent travellers.

• (1410)

Terrorism has been succoured, encouraged, and promoted by Khadafy and his terrorist friends. In answer to the pleadings to cease killing innocent people, he answered with more bombings and threats. Well, enough is enough. The U.S.A. called his bluff. Now he knows and his people know, and the world knows, that terrorism will not be tolerated. If he ceases his terrorism all will be well, if he continues to live by the sword he will surely die by the sword.

I thank God for the U.S.A. and its President, Ronald Reagan.

ENERGY

FALLING OIL PRICES—CALL FOR WORLD-WIDE PRODUCTION CUTS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the Petroleum Services Association of Canada, in an employment survey accompanied by projections from engineering and oil companies, indicates that more than 20,000 Albertans will lose their jobs in the next few months as a result of the plunge in world oil prices.

While eastern consuming provinces are benefiting from lower prices and are in a position to take advantage of greater opportunities for exports to the United States, it is Alberta that will experience most of the losses in exploration, development, production, and construction in the energy field.

I believe today is the day that OPEC meets again. There must be some agreement on production cuts world-wide. This is vital to the future of the City of Calgary, the Province of Alberta, and indeed for energy security in our country.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INSULTING WORDS TO FRANCOPHONES USED BY ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): In his fifteenth annual report tabled yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Official Languages gives a depressing account of the equal status of French and English as working languages in the Public Service. I quote the Commissioner:

> Perhaps it is impossible to do better under the existing policy—unfortunately the Federal Establishment did not get the message: generally speaking, senior management gives a pitiful example.

To confirm the Commissioner's statements, I should like to read to the House a memo sent by a Fisheries and Oceans Deputy Minister to one of his employees whom he was asking to have someone check the French version of an invitation to the Neptune awards presentation. Here is what the Deputy Minister wrote:

> Have this checked again by an half decent frog.

The memo is signed L.T.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a pitiful denigrating example given to the employees by some senior Public Service officials. Whether he wanted to denigrate employees or their work, or whether, for example, he wanted to display his morbid sense of humour, the Assistant Deputy Minister has no choice but to apologize to all Francophones in Canada for this insult to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, 60 seconds. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

CREATION OF JOBS FOR STUDENTS—ACTIVE PARTICIPATION OF PRIVATE SECTOR IN TÉMISCAMINGUE REGION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this year again, Témiscamingue is going to meet the challenge, Challenge '86. Thanks to a favourable response from the private sector, nearly 500 jobs for students will be created in my riding as part of the summer employment program for students, Challenge '86.

We owe this remarkable performance mainly to active participation by the private sector, which has received 31 per cent of the program's budget and will provide 200 jobs. As a result of this very substantial involvement of the private sector, it will be possible to create as many summer jobs for students in '86 as we did in the summer of '85, despite the fact that we have a smaller budget this year.

Mr. Speaker, this is just another example of how you can do more with less money.

I would like to take this opportunity to offer my sincere thanks to the 107 businesses, industries and companies in Témiscamingue that were willing to invest in the talents and know-how of our young people.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF VOLUNTARY ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I was disturbed to learn this morning that the Govenment has not come through with funding that it promised to the environmental groups Pollution Probe and Friends of the Earth in order to facilitate their continued participation in the hearings being held by the alachlor review board.

I call on the Government to live up to its commitment to those groups to provide funding. They have had to cease their participation in those hearings.

Resignation

It is very important for voluntary groups like Friends of the Earth and Pollution Probe to be able to participate in the environmental hearing process. I hope the Government will soon make it clear to them that it will live up to that commitment and that the review board that has the responsibility for administering the money will be forthcoming with the funding.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRESIDENT'S AND VICE-PRESIDENTS' TRIP TO CHINA

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I spoke about the alleged cuts being claimed by CBC President, Pierre Juneau. The same week that he announced the elimination of 350 jobs, 122 hours of original Canadian programming, and 1,000 hours of regional television, he embarked on a 10-day trip to Communist China. He must be lonely, though, because he has taken not one, not two, but three senior vice-presidents with him. He claims it is to explore the potential for an export market for Canadian programming.

• (1415)

I agree we should attempt to sell Canadian programming abroad, but I question the wisdom of sending four of the Corporation's top officials abroad at a cost of $5,200 each for return air fare, while at the same time giving 350 CBC employees the golden handshake.

This effort to sell Canadian programming abroad is hardly consistent with the latest cut-backs in Canadian programming he announced before he left. The Canadian taxpayers deserve better treatment than this.

VACANCY

PEMBINA—PETER ELZINGA, BY RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I have received a communication advising me of the following vacancy which has occurred in the representation, namely, Peter Elzinga, Esq., Member for the electoral district of Pembina, by resignation. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister left him to meet with the American envoy with respect to Libya. We received from the Prime Minister a totally vague statement on the Libyan crisis and the Canadian reaction to it. He refused to answer questions from reporters after making that statement. He was vague yesterday in Question Period. Despite the potential effect on the peace of the world, he did not show up last night to participate in the debate. He is not here again today when we have persistent questions—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Coward.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Was the Deputy Prime Minister speaking last night on behalf of the Prime Minister and the Government when he said that it was his view that the Americans had no alternative but to launch the strike against Libya? If that is so, and he was speaking on behalf of the Government, why did the Prime Minister not say so earlier in the day?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Well now, let us look at the other side of that, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister on behalf of the Government issued a statement late Monday evening. The Prime Minister issued a statement again yesterday morning. The Prime Minister was in the House open to a broad range of questions yesterday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You took the questions.

Mr. Gauthier: He didn't take the questions.

Mr. Nielsen: And he again saw the media as recently as this morning. There is no inconsistency, indeed there is utter consistency, in what he has been saying as Prime Minister of the country and what I have been saying on behalf of the Government.

[Translation]

LIBYA—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister were here, we would be asking the following questions and I will therefore put them to the Deputy Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister speak directly to the President of the United States on the subject of Libya? Did he ask for evidence to justify the action taken by the U.S.? What kind of answer did he get? Did he suggest any alternatives for other options? Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what he said and tell us what kind of questions he put to the President of the United States?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman obviously has not read both statements to which I referred which were issued by the Prime Minister on behalf of the Government Monday evening and yesterday morning. He obviously was not listening yesterday, nor was he listening to me, or he would have heard that we have been in touch with the United States Government all along.

I do not know where the right hon. gentleman finds inconsistency in what we have been saying repeatedly, which is the same thing.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that press statements are no substitute for facing the people of Canada through their representatives in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a question?

CANADIAN WORKERS IN LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Would he not consider it hypocritical on the part of the Canadian Government to condemn terrorism at one of its sources in Libya, yet allow Canadians to work in that country as technical experts to help the economy which funds that terrorism? Is that not a hypocritical position?

• (1420)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times this has to be repeated before it sinks in. On January 10 the Prime Minister started with a full, complete, and detailed statement at that time with respect to Canadians in Libya. Our primary concern throughout has been the safety of Canadians. As recently as a few minutes before walking into the House, the situation is that there are no Canadians who have been injured, killed or affected, nor has their safety been affected in Libya.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quatra): They've been told to stay indoors now.

Mr. Nielsen: However, they have to look to their own assessment of the circumstances, as they were urged to do on January 10, and again last Friday because of the changing circumstances.

ROLE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. How can the Deputy Prime Minister leave it to Canadians working in Libya to assess their own situation when it is supposed to be the position of the Government that it does not condone Libyan terrorism? Obviously the economic system there finances that terrorism. How can it tell Canadians it is up to them to stay there and, potentially at least, support that terrorist activity?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Sir, one might put this question to the hon. gentleman: would the Hon. Member evacuate all Canadians from Libya, even against their will, notwithstanding the fact that we have the assurance of the Government of Libya that they will be protected, and notwithstanding the fact that there is no indication of any threat against any Canadian in that country?

SANCTIONS AGAINST LIBYA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minsiter. Does he realize that there is another issue here other than the safety of Canadians? Is the Government serious about effective action against Libya by way of sanctions? If it is, how can it condone and allow Canadians to keep the Libyan oil industry going, the revenues from which support Mr. Khadafy's actions?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That is simply not correct, Sir. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the statement of January 10 he will see that there were sanctions imposed. Indeed, among our allies Canada has been in the vanguard in leading us toward a solution to the vicious cycle of terrorism. Certainly what is in issue is getting at the root causes of terrorism and finding a cure. But paramount to all considerations here, surely must be the well-being and safety of Canadians in that country at this moment.

INQUIRY IF PRIME MINISTER MADE FIRM SUGGESTIONS BEFORE UNITED STATES DECIDED ON USE OF MILITARY FORCE AGAINST LIBYA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said outside the House:

[English]

We urge—a renewal of efforts by all concerned to reach negotiated settlements to the tensions that have long plagued the Middle East.

[Translation]

In other words, he suggested an approach that did not include military force. Did the Prime Minister actually make such suggestions before the Americans decided to send a military force against Libya?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the Leader of the New Democratic Party last night when, toward the end of his remarks, he brought forward some useful and constructive suggestions with respect to getting at the root causes of terrorism and finding a solution. He can be sure that those considerations have been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is having discussions this week, at the official level, with those who are planning for the Tokyo Summit where the matter will be raised.

If the hon. gentleman has any further suggestions along the line of those he was making last night, I would be very happy if he would forward them to the Prime Minister so that they can be added to the agenda.

REQUEST THAT CANADA INTERVENE ON ISSUE WITH SUPERPOWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question pertains to action that I hoped had been taken before the American Government decided to use force to deal with the situation. I heard the Deputy Prime Minister say that the suggestions I made are going to be considered. I have another concrete suggestion to which I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to give a serious response right now, if he would.

The Soviet Union and the United States have only two strong points upon which they can agree regarding the Middle East and they are important ones. First, they both have opposed state-sanctioned terrorism by the Khadafy regime in Libya. Second, they both have had terribly lamentable hostage experiences in the region. Considering this, will the Government of Canada urge the two superpowers to use their influence, given their strong agreement in the Middle East, to deal with the root problems of tension in that area?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, of course all along that has been the objective of the Canadian Government. Indeed, before we took office, as far back as the Bonn Summit, Canada led the way in urging upon other nations a solution which would end the cycle of violence. It is that ongoing work that will be addressed once again in Tokyo, hopefully—and I think we all feel this way— with even more positive results than we have seen in the past.

CANADIAN APPROACH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the past the Government of Canada has had a good reputation for constructive involvement in the Middle East. Considering that the Soviets put considerable distance between themselves and Mr. Khadafy through a statement made by Mr. Arbatov in the last 72 hours, and considering that the Americans are obviously concerned with terrorism, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government, rather than waiting for the summit, will diplomatically, correctly, and concretely approach both the Soviet Union and the United States and ask them to begin to work constructively together now to deal with the root causes of terrorism in the Middle East.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again I remind the hon. gentleman that there are discussions at the official level this very week in preparation for addressing this matter at the Tokyo Summit which is only two weeks away. Certainly the suggestion the Hon. Member makes is a useful one and I am sure it will be considered very carefully by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when that agenda reaches its final stages of preparation and talks begin.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister did not answer the question put to him by the Leader of the Opposition regarding the contradiction between his statement and the statement of the Prime Minister. Last night the Deputy Prime Minister said that the United States had no alternative but to take the action it took the day before, whereas the Prime Minister, in a statement he made yesterday morning, urged negotiated settlements. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us which is the official position of the Canadian Government, what he said last night or what the Prime Minister said yesterday morning?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no difference between what the Prime Minister has been saying and what I have been saying. We have been saying all along that terrorism is reprehensible and evil, something which all members of the international community must work to eliminate. We accept the evidence of Libyan complicity in the Berlin nightclub attack. The United States Government, as President Reagan said on television on Monday night, vigorously pursued a variety of diplomatic and economic options but found it was left with no alternative but to attack military installations in Libya—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Order.

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO TERRORISM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees that terrorism is reprehensible. That is not the question. The question is how we deal with terrorism. The Deputy Prime Minister said last night that the only alternative to this terrorism from Libya or elsewhere was the military attack launched on Libya by the United States, while the Prime Minister said we must have negotiated settlements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, he is not answering the question. Once again I ask him what is the Government's response to that situation of terrorism, the answer he gave last night or the answer the Prime Minister gave yesterday morning? The two reponses are different. What is the official position?

• (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no difference, as hard as the hon. gentleman works to manufacture a difference. I reread into the record what I said last night and what the Prime Minister said in his statement. They are entirely consistent, and try as he might to distort that consistency, I am afraid it is there for all to see as plain as the nose on my face.

CANADIAN ALTERNATIVES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in order to help clear up this inconsistency for all of us—

Mr. Crosbie: There is no inconsistency.

Ms. Jewett: —would the Deputy Prime Minister, and I give him this opportunity now—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Oh, thank you.

Ms. Jewett: —tell the House what specific alternatives the Canadian Government presented to the United States in response to the crisis in the Middle East over the past year?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to stay within the last year. We can go all the way back to Bonn when economic sanctions were first proposed. When the United States imposed sanctions, we were the first to support that route. Diplomacy has not worked. Efforts have been made there. Economic sanctions have not worked. Efforts have been made there. The alternative was left to act as the United States did with the objective of eliminating an evil which we all recognize as evil and reprehensible. That does not mean to say that the matter is cured and stops there. Of course not. Ongoing efforts have to be made, as suggested by the Hon. Member's own Leader. We will take all those suggestions into account in the discussions in Tokyo in two weeks' time.

FORCING DOWN OF EGYPTIAN AIRLINER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, let me be absolutely specific. Did the Government, at the time of the forcing down of the Egyptian airliner, propose specific alternatives to future military action to the United States?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, specifically, efforts have been made, not only by Canada which has led the way, but by other nations ever since Bonn to find a solution to the terrorist problem. Those efforts will have to go on in good faith and in co-operation with other like-minded nations to find that solution. It certainly does not help to try to manufacture discrepancies that do not even exist in respect to our policy, that is, Canada's policy in this regard, which has displayed a good record over the past many years, even before this Government came into office.

NOTIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER OF PROPOSED U.S. ACTION AGAINST LIBYA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister learn in advance about the American military action from the President directly in any conversation and, if so, was he given evidence by the President justifying such action?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows, or should know, that a detailed response to a question of that nature is certainly not helpful to the discussion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: It is certainly not helpful to the safety and well-being of our own citizens in Libya. It is not my intention to respond in that kind of detailed fashion, and the right hon. gentleman should know better than to expect me to, having been a member of a Government and privy to the very reasons which compel me to answer as I do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that advice for one moment. Every time the Prime Minister sees or telephones the President of the United States, he loves to boast about it. This time we do not know the answer. If he did not receive a private communication from the President of the United States, how else was the matter dealt with and how else do we have the direct proof of a justification for the American action?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have given the answer to that question. However, I could ask the right hon. gentleman to cast his memory backward, in respect of domestic security for a moment, to when I was asking the same kind of question of him and he was on this side of the House as Minister of Justice. He had very good reasons then for not responding in the detail that I wanted, and I have very good reasons now for copying his example of those days.

CANADIAN ATTENDANCE AT OECD MEETING

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will be aware that the escalating agricultural trade and pricing dispute between the United States and the European Community is a major topic at the OECD meeting which is taking place in Paris this week. Could he explain why Canada, which is already suffering great losses in its agricultural industry, has no one from the federal Government with a background in agriculture to speak for its agricultural interests or to represent Canadian producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's observation, but I think the record will clearly demonstrate that we have always been in full and complete support of the agricultural industry. One can always find ways and means in this modern world, particularly with the friends we have throughout the world primarily as a result of the election of this Government, to represent this industry.

PRICE OF CANADIAN WHEAT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the next move of the OECD talks is to Tokyo where Japanese farmers will be getting $20 Canadian per bushel of wheat, while the Europeans will be getting 30 per cent more than the Americans, who next year will be getting in excess of $6 Canadian per bushel, how does the Minister expect Canadian farmers to stay competitive in the world with their pittance of just over $3 Canadian?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the people representing Canada outside our borders are well aware of the agricultural situation and are well able to speak on our behalf. One of the things we have done since assuming office is to ensure that there are representatives of the various industries when we negotiate. It is a healthy development, when we look at what the past Government did.

We have a Prime Minister who has said that there is more we have to do for western agriculture and that we would do it within the constraints imposed upon us by the economic situation. That is a healthy sign. Not only western farmers but all Canadian farmers realize it, as opposed to one of the previous Governments which left a phrase ringing in farmers' ears in the West when its Prime Minister said: "Why should I sell your wheat?" We are very happy to have a Prime Minister who cares.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In a speech in Toronto yesterday, Canada's free trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, said: "I made it clear here that I am proceeding on the assumption of a clear launch with everything on the table". How can the Government square the position taken by the trade negotiator with that taken by the Prime Minister and his Government who have repeatedly told Canadians that the Auto Pact was exempt, that cultural industries were exempt, and that unemployment insurance programs were exempt? Who speaks for Canada?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I guess Nielsen speaks for Canada on almost everything.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Prime Minister and his Government, Sir.

• (1440)

NEGOTIATION AGENDA

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister and his Government at least get their act together and inform the trade negotiator what is for negotiation and what is not? The Government simply can not confuse Canadians any longer with contradictory positions between itself and Simon Reisman.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, any time I can assist the Hon. Member, or indeed any other Hon. Member in his Party, in curing their confusion, I will be very happy to do so.

AIRPORTS

FIREFIGHTERS' LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will know that 1,400 airport firefighters have been without a contract for almost two years now. On April 3 a majority conciliation report was handed down and reluctantly accepted by the employees. Would the Minister explain why that settlement was rejected by the Government, and would he now indicate that he is prepared to reverse that decision?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that that is a matter between the firefighters and the President of the Treasury Board who may wish to respond to it.

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, who is responsible for the operation of the airports. Press reports indicate there is a possibility of using fire chiefs from across Canada to take over airports in case of a strike. Could the Minister tell us how he is going to get the fire chiefs into airports like Ottawa or Thunder Bay if the employees go out on strike? Will he fly them in without any airport fire protection?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, naturally if there is a strike Transport Canada will have to make the necessary contingency plans. I can assure the Hon. Member that that will be done in an orderly fashion.

INTEREST ACT

PURPOSE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Several months ago the Minister responsible for CMHC indicated that there would be changes brought forward to the Interest Act. Would the Minister of State for Finance tell us what the Government has in mind, especially as it pertains to the interest of consumers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note that the Government has done a great deal for homeowners. We have seen average mortgage rates come down 2.75 per cent since the Government took office.

Ms. Copps: Answer the question.

Mrs. McDougall: The purpose of this Government is to promote further housing measures and to lower interest rates further, which are of benefit to the consumer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which memo are you reading now?

Mrs. McDougall: I have discussed the Interest Act with the housing industry, with my cabinet colleague, and with my provincial colleagues. We will be doing more for housing, including the Interest Act.

FINANCE

MIDDLE-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Since over 40,000 taxpayers felt strongly enough to write to a Toronto newspaper to protest the burden placed on middle-income Canadians by the Government's recent Budget, will the Minister tell the House why neither the Minister of the Finance nor any Minister of the Crown was willing to meet with representatives of this group today?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): First, let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance is representing this country with great honour at the OECD meetings in Paris.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about you?

Mrs. McDougall: Let me also point out that the great burden on the Canadian taxpayer is the average debt of $38,000 per family brought about by the Party which the Hon. Member represents. Third, let me point out that when the Leader of that Party was the Minister of Finance, you could buy a house for half that amount.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government is depending for its deficit reduction program on the taxes of those people whom the Minister is not willing to see. Surely it is worth while to see them and to hear their views on alternatives?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the latest Budget that was brought out by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, reduced expenditures by $3 for every $1 increase in taxes.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why don't you see these people?

Mrs. McDougall: What we have to do for this country is to get rid of that deficit which the Hon. Member's Party brought about.

EXPO 86

EXPENDITURE OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the Minister explain to this House why all the federal moneys available for Expo 86 have been spent in Vancouver? Can he tell us why the federal Government has not provided any support in the other areas of British Columbia so that other British Columbians and communities can benefit from the Expo situation?

Could the Minister explain to this House why all federal moneys were in fact spent in Vancouver and no other support facilities were put into other areas of the province?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a number of initiatives were undertaken in conjuction with Expo 86, support for the ALRT and a very beautiful Canadian pavillion, Canada Harbour Place Corporation, in Vancouver.

An Hon. Member: Vancouver.

Mr. Mazankowski: Vancouver is part of British Columbia. It will be something which all Canadians and all British Columbians will enjoy.

My understanding as well is that much of the infrastructure that will be removed after Expo 86 is over will be distributed among the various communities throughout the province. I think the Hon. Member should welcome that.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS THROUGHOUT BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Would the Minister explain to this House why the federal Government, in a sense of fairness, has not allocated funds for a structure in other areas of the province so that local communities could benefit from the tourist initiatives that Expo 86 will draw into Canada and British Columbia?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously from the two questions put by the Hon. Member he is unaware of the federal activity, not just in Vancouver but in B.C. generally. The Hon. Member must know of the hundreds of millions of dollars we have committed to an agreement under ERDA, including tourist and forestry activity throughout British Columbia. He must be aware of the fact that we have one of the most extensive programs through the Federal Business Development Bank in British Columbia which has put, on a per capita basis, perhaps more in that province than in any other part of Canada, the hinterland of British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PAYMENTS TO FARMERS WHO LOST CROPS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since the Minister has arranged so expeditiously for an early pay-out, will farmers, who have paid into the Western Grain Stabilization Fund for a number of years but during the last couple of years, because of drought, grasshoppers, cutworms, et cetera have made no payment into the fund because they had no crop to deliver to the elevators, be denied a payment this spring?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, a simple answer to the question is no, they will not be denied. The Hon. Member should know that the calculations used to determine the interim payment were based on contributions from the beginning of January, 1983, to July, 1985. The Hon. Member should also know that that includes the crop grown in 1982. If the Hon. Member wants to go back, that would also include final payments from the crop grown in 1981. The Hon. Member should also know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Send a memo.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

ENERGY

HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister of Finance in his budget forecast predicts that the price of oil will be $22.50 U.S. a barrel for 1986, which is more than enough to justify the loan guarantees for the Husky upgrader. Why won't the Government guarantee these loans for this project, or doesn't it believe its own budget forecasts?

Mr. Crosbie: That's a dirty one.

Ms. Copps: Get your act together.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't fight ladies.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question is clearly budget related. It should be directed to the Minister of Finance.

Ms. Copps: They don't know what they are doing.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is likewise to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Maybe she will be able to answer this one.

Ms. Copps: I doubt it.

Mr. MacLellan: The very least the Government could do would be to show some confidence in the industry and guarantee these loans. How many jobs have to be lost before the Government stops talking and takes some action?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken action in the past which has generated more jobs in the oil patch than existed under the policies followed by the Party opposite when it was in government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY LAY-OFFS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. Is the Minister aware that in the Kootenay region of British Columbia, where unemployment has been 21 per cent, the B.C. Telephone Company will add to this tragedy by eliminating 70 jobs for telecommunication workers? Will the Minister approve the request of the Telecommunication Workers Union for a grant to study the impact of technological change, which is causing the women workers to be laid off in large numbers with no employment alternative in this area of very high unemployment?

• (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the question from the Hon. Member. As she and other Members of the House know, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has a number of programs which allow us the flexibility to look at projects put forward. A great many projects in the Province of British Columbia have been funded. I am sure if she encourages various groups to submit projects in the future they will be considered.

IMPACT OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE ON WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about 70 women working for a telephone company who are being phased out of their jobs because of technological change. Will the Minister work with the Minister of Communications and ask the CRTC to hold special hearings in Cranbrook, B.C., into this emergency? Will she also respond to the community request for a one-year moratorium on these lay-offs? She is interested in technological change and women, and here is her chance to do something about it.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in her first question the Hon. Member asked whether or not a project to address this issue could be considered. I said if a project were put forward it would be considered. I am not quite sure what the Hon. Member expects me to do other than that. I welcome such projects.

REGULATIONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TASK FORCE CREATED TO STUDY CERTAIN ASPECTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council, Government House Leader and Minister responsible for regulations.

The Government of Quebec has set up a task force to analyze regulatory aspects.

Has the Minister responsible taken steps to be in touch with the Government of Quebec, in order to avoid duplication and encourage satisfactory co-ordination of these efforts?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have asked my senior officials at the Secretariat to work in close co-operation with other provincial Governments.

In the case of Quebec, we have had two meetings with Mr. Reed Scowen, Chairman of the task force on regulations.

Mr. Speaker, there is every indication that our efforts will be successful, for the greater benefit of Quebec and the country as a whole.

AGRICULTURE

MARITIME FARMERS' COUNCIL—LONG-TERM FUNDING REQUEST

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the meetings he conducted yesterday with the Maritime Farmers' Council. He will know that the Council of Maritime Premiers supports their cause for long-term funding for grain price assurance programs, livestock feed development certificate programs, and infrastructure assistance. Will he recommend to his cabinet colleagues full funding of that request? Will he also provide in the first year $23.5 million in order to make that a viable plan to meet a very, very serious problem?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's representations. However, I must remind him and the House that the representations I get on that subject are far more numerous and frequent from Members on this side of the House. I did have an excellent meeting yesterday as part of the two and a half hour meeting I had with the CFA, and the project is moving along quite well.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I say this to the Minister sincerely. In view of the urgency and demonstrated need for this funding, in view of the fact that all Members of Parliament on both sides support this project, will he not undertake to assure this House that funding will be provided to the tune of $23.5 million for the first fiscal year, and order that farmers in the Maritime region receive their just due?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the Hon. Member's representations on behalf of that specific project. One has to recognize we made a number of commitments, 16 in all. Indeed we take a back seat to no one in the fulfilment of those commitments. We feel very strongly about this one as well.

The Hon. Member knows that a project of that kind must clear all necessary legislative challenges and requirements before any Minister can stand in this House and make an announcement one way or the other.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TAKEOVER BID FOR HIRAM WALKER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs explain why, with hundreds of jobs threatened by the potential takeover of Hiram Walker, he has failed even to respond to a letter from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor and myself asking him to intervene to help save those jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Under the Combines Investigation Act, Mr. Speaker, the director enjoys full discretion to review the deals as they occur. He acts as an impartial examiner in each case, as he will do in this one as well.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAINTAIN SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister promise to maintain a close watch to ensure that he is in a position to exercise the powers accorded to him under the Competition Act in any takeover attempt which would result specifically in job loss in the Windsor area?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, that is always the preoccupation that the Director has in mind and that is what he does.

CANADIAN ARSENALS

PRIVATIZATION—EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): On behalf of the 800 Montreal employees of Canadian Arsenals, Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board.

The Minister will know that the result of privatizing Canadian Arsenals will be a considerable reduction in employee pension benefits, to such a degree that some of them stand to lose $17,000 a year.

What does the Minister intend to do to help these employees? Or does he plan to stick to the usual Conservative justice standards and do nothing at all?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): This morning, Mr. Speaker, I met with Public Service Alliance spokesmen before holding discussions with representatives of the Canadian Arsenals union concerning a problem we have been talking about for a number of months, namely pensions.

I can assure my colleague that in the case of the 600 Canadian Arsenals employees the provisions of Bill C-87 contain a prospective solution which they should all find fair and equitable.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that losing $17,000 a year in pensions is, in his words, just and equitable? Is this Tory justice being administered to those public servants, our employees?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, what this Minister is saying is that the Hon. Member opposite does not know what he is talking about and does not have the right numbers.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

TAKEOVERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance if there is any truth in the recent statements of the President of Canada

Trust when he said that the Government's position on take-overs of financial institutions is "a political decision ... swayed by the views of influential party backers and fund raisers rather than by sheer logic" and "common sense" since "several of the trust company owners fall into the category of influential Conservative Party backers and fund raisers."

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows better than to ask a question like that.

Mr. Riis: Perhaps I will ask another question then. Is there any truth to the recent report that Imasco and Genstar contributed $55,830 to the Conservative Party in 1984?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is clearly out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENT BY GOVERNMENT HOUSE LEADER

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): When you are reflecting on this matter over the evening, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you might recall the farce conducted by the House Leader which consumed a good many minutes of Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows full well that neither the contents of the questions nor the answers are the Chair's responsibility—neither the questions nor the answers. Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition takes some offence at me trying to speak French, I take exception to that. He should know better. That is a divisive and racist kind of statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), and Hon. Members over here. Order, please. Can we go on? Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wishes to raise a question of privilege?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the House Leader imputed absolutely false motives to what I suggested about the farce. The farce was that there was a prearranged question and a prearranged answer, either in French or English, that took up the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The right hon. gentleman will resume his seat. Order, order. The Hon. Member will resume his seat. Hon. Members over here will come to order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The worst Speaker we ever had.

Mr. Speaker: I must require that to be withdrawn immediately by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques. The Hon. Member knows why I must require it.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I will withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not heard a question of privilege nor have I heard a point of order. I am therefore going to proceed to statements by Ministers. I have not heard a question of privileges. I have not even heard the beginning of a question of privilege. I will hear the right hon. gentleman on the citation immediately on which he bases his question of privilege.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I in no way challenge the Hon. Member's right to use French and I compliment him on it. I wonder, if we are in the spirit of withdrawal, whether the Hon. Member will withdraw that reflection he made on my remark.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question or privilege. Order. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) will resume his seat. The Hon. Members over here are also out of order, and that includes the Minister. The Hon. Member for Bourassa will resume his seat and come to order or he will be required to go.

I have not heard a point of order or a question of privilege. Order, please. This is clearly a difficult moment. Order. Statements by Ministers? What is the Member from Hamilton East's point of order?

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the guidance of the Chair with respect to a Standing Order which states that Members are not allowed to read questions or answers. There is a specific Standing Order which states you are not allowed to read from pieces of paper into the record, which is exactly what the Hon. House Leader of the Government Party did during Question Period and for which he was not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, order. There is, indeed, a Standing Order to that effect. The Chair has seen many Members on both sides holding pieces of paper during Question Period, which the Chair has always assumed represent notes for the purpose of the questioner or for the purpose of the answerer. Order, please. The Hon. Member is asking the Chair to find that no Member may hold a piece of paper in his or her hand during Question Period. The Member is asking the Chair to make a determination on the spot whether something is being used as a note or is read. That is a very difficult thing to do during Question Period. On a point of order?

Mr. de Corneille: Is the Speaker going to allow the Hon. Member to accuse the Leader of the Opposition of being a racist? Is he going to permit that?

Mr. Speaker: Please, I listened carefully, I did not hear the accusation made personally. I would assure the Hon. Member if I had I would have ordered it to be withdrawn.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The question that was posed to me was a serious question of which I had notice. I have no apology to make with respect to the response that I gave. I am not totally fluent in the French language and it may offend some people that I am not able to speak clearly in that language. If there is any suggestion that my comments have offended the House with respect to an allegation made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition then I, of course, unequivocally withdraw that allegation. I simply want to say that I try my best in the French language.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope this is the end of it. The Hon. Member for Bourassa has a separate point of order?

Mr. Rossi: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I move that the first report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, presented to the House on Tuesday, April 8, 1986, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask the Chair to enlighten me and advise the House concerning the acceptability of this procedure. In support I would refer to the Standing Orders, as follows:

"A standing committee of the House does not have the mandate to report on a measure still under second reading consideration", Bill C-103 in this case.

And on page 1946 of Votes and Proceedings of the House: "The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs presented the First Report of the Committee (provisions of Bill C-103, An Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act in respect of certain regulatory matters)." Mr. Speaker, it is because I would not want any misunderstanding about our roles in the House as set forth in the new Standing Orders. I want to be very clear, namely that if a committee is empowered to report on a Bill before the House, a standing committee of the House in this case, I would like to know the full extent of such power.

Referring to Standing Order 96 which empowers standing committees to make certain reports, these reports have a limited scope indeed, and I would remind the House that Standing Order 96(2) clearly defines these powers:

96.(2)—in addition to the powers granted to them pursuant to section (1) of this Standing Order and pursuant to Standing Order 82—

I am reading Standing Order 96.(2):

—the standing committees, except those set out in sections (3) and (4) of this Standing Order shall be empowered to study and report on all matters relating to the mandate, management and operation of the department or departments of Government which are assigned to them from time to time by the House. In general, the committees shall be severally empowered to review and report on—

And this is the point.

(a) the statute law—

—meaning legislation adopted by this Parliament—

relating to the department assigned to them;

(b) the program and policy objectives of the department—

—not those of the Government——and its effectiveness in the implementation of same;

(c) the immediate, medium and long term expenditure plans—

—and so on. The point I want to raise is that, in my opinion, a standing committee cannot report on a legislative measure still at second reading in the House because, as I see it, the Bill has not been adopted on second reading. Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand how a standing committee could have such power under the Standing Orders. That is why I rose to avoid a series of committee comments or reports on any question before the House, and so that we will not find ourselves in somewhat difficult situations. So I am asking the Chair for a clear and specific explanation, namely: Can a standing committee report to the House on a legislative measure still before the House at second reading, for instance, or even later, just so my interpretation will be wider ranging? Is that allowed? Can we do that under the new Standing Orders?

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's request is very interesting. However, the very provision that he refers to, Standing Order 96(2)(e), states:

In general, the committees shall be severally empowered to review and report on:

(e) other matters, relating to the mandate, management, organization or operation of the department, as the committee deems fit.

The intention of the new Standing Orders, as I see it, was to permit committees of the House of Commons to engage in reviews, as they saw fit, of all matters relating to or falling within the jurisdiction of the Department for which they are responsible. It was done in that way for the reason that, until the change was made in the Standing Orders, committees did require a reference from the House in order to engage in review.

I submit that the committee report is entirely in order inasmuch as it does not require any action to be taken with regard to the law. But rather it is suggesting that the appropriate provisions of a Bill be used to ensure that major financial institutions such as Canada Trustco not be placed under the control of major non-financial institutions such as Imasco.

I contend that it is in fact within the ambit of responsibility of the Department to determine for itself whether to accept the recommendation of the committee that those provisions which are appropriate be used for that purpose. It is not determining for one moment whether or not the Bill in its entirety is valuable. Neither is it passing judgment on the value of the Bill itself. Rather it is suggesting that the Minister, acting on behalf of the department, take into consideration the recommendation that there are provisions in that Bill which, if used judiciously, could be used in such a way as to ensure that what it has requested be done.

I would suggest that it is entirely appropriate for a committee to look at anything which does fall within the jurisdiction of a department, and to look at it in such a way as to offer recommendations on how that might be best used, and to suggest that the department can, if it deems it to be appropriate, take certain actions which it is empowered to take.

In fact, what this committee has done is entirely appropriate. The committee is not restricted in any way in terms of the areas into which it can investigate as long as those areas are deemed to fall within the responsibility of the department. Clearly, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act, and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, are all acts which fall within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Finance to which the committee is responsible.

I would suggest, therefore, that it would be imposing a rather restricted interpretation on the powers of committee at this early stage in the new committee structure if we were to deny a committee the opportunity to make a recommendation to a department on the application of certain sections of Acts already in place, or propose changes as they would affect the ongoing operations of both the department and the institutions to which they make reference.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to perhaps add something to this very interesting point of order that has been raised. I would draw to the attention of the Chair that the legislation proposed by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) with respect to the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, was in fact tabled on April 7, 1986. It appears on the Order Paper as Item No. 103. The First Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs presented to the House on April 8, 1986 is the one to which the Hon. Member has moved concurrence. So what we really have here is legislation proposed by the Minister and the Government on April 7 and then the committee report being presented on April 8.

It seems to me that it prejudges legislation and offends the rule of anticipation, and I refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 342. The Government has the intention of proceeding with this legislation. It is on the Order Paper and would be called in due time. It would appear to me that the appropriate point for committee study of this legislation is after the Bill has cleared second reading and has gone to a Legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me try to deal with these points in order. First, obviously the appropriate time to raise a point of order as to the admissibility or orderliness of the report is now. It cannot be done when the report is made; it can only be done when a motion to concur is moved, in effect.

Second, as I read the report which is before the House, the Committee on Finance is not making a comment to the House on or about the legislation.

Mr. Deans: That is correct.

Mr. Speaker: As I read the report. I am going to try to be careful because I do not want to say what I might say in that situation, except to say there is nothing to say about that situation in this situation because it does not exist. I have gotten myself out of an obiter dictum, I hope.

What is before the House is a committee report making a recommendation of the committee in effect to the House or to whomever. I then advise Hon. Members that I have reviewed the rules and I find that the key paragraph appears to be Standing Order 96(2)(e) which reads in part: "In general the committee shall be severally empowered to review and report on . . . " statute law and so on. Subsection (e) reads:

> other matters relating to the mandate, management, organization or operation of the department, as the committee deems fit.

In that context I think I can only find that the report as drafted appears to the Chair to be in order and, therefore, a motion of concurrence is in order.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your ruling which gives me the opportunity to begin a discussion this afternoon of perhaps one of the most important issues facing Parliament in recent years. It is certainly one which will have immense consequences in the years and decades to come if it is not dealt with in accordance with the recommendation of the committee on finance to the Government, and especially to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

I want to say that we have moved today a motion of concurrence for two reasons. The first is to provide an opportunity for Hon. Members, and I suspect Hon. Members from all sides of the House, to speak out against a form of unprecedented corporate cannibalism which has been occurring in our country with large giant corporations gobbling up other smaller corporations in a rather spectacular, if not macabre, corporate type of feasting. There is hardly a newspaper on the newstands these days which does not have a headline on the front page, if not on the business page, heralding another major takeover, another merger, or a further corporate concentration. More and more power is getting into the hands of fewer and fewer Canadians and, in many cases, foreign owners.

This is an opportunity for Members of Parliament on the Government side and in the New Democratic Party to discuss this issue. I am not certain about those Hon. Members on the Liberal side. I was a bit astonished that an initiative was taken by the Liberal Party today to stop this debate. After all, I think this is a discussion which needs to be held, comments need to be made, and I cannot for the life of me understand why there was an effort by the Liberals to stop it unless once again they are wavering in their support for the motion of the committee on finance.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs recently provided us with data indicating that the amounts and numbers of takeovers are in fact accelerating. In the 1960s the average annual takeovers which occurred in Canada amounted to 253. In the 1970s there was an increase in corporate takeovers averaging out to 382 each year. In the 1980s so far the average has been in access of 500 corporate takeovers each year. Not only is the rate of takeovers increasing, but the number of foreign takeovers is increasing significantly. That means, of course, a country which now has more foreign control over its economy than any other western industrialized nation is now looking at even more foreign control. For example, in the 1960s, of all of the takeovers, 38 per cent were foreign. In the 1970s, that had increased to 42 per cent. Now in the 1980s it is averaging out? at 57 per cent. Some 57 per cent of the corporate takeovers involve foreign enterprises.

The Globe and Mail provided us the other day with a rather interesting insight. It indicated that seven families, the Thomson's, Bronfman's, the Desmarais', the Reichmann's, the Weston's, the Southern's and the Siemen's, now control nearly 50 per cent of the value of the shares in the Toronto stock exchange 300. Only seven families have an incredible amount of economic, financial and, by definition, political control. In the last 10 years 100 of Canada's largest corporations were involved in 150 takeovers which resulted in 25 per cent of their growth.

When one looks at corporate growth and business growth in our country, and when one considers that 25 per cent of the growth of the 100 largest corporations was accomplished as a result of takeovers, it begs asking the following question. What does this paper entrepreneurialship give us? Does the fact that we are merging and taking over, and the fact that corporate concentration is increasing result in more jobs for Canadians? Not necessarily. One can make a very compelling case that it normally results in the loss of jobs, as the efficiencies of scale are introduced into the corporate sector.

On April 2, The Gazette of Montreal, in an editorial, made the following interesting comment:

> What is going on in Canada's industrial circles would surely alarm even a self-respecting cannibal. Having one corporate giant swallow up another giant does not of itself create jobs.

This at a time when surely at the top of all our agendas is job creation through economic expansion. Corporate takeovers are not accomplishing that. Generally speaking, they are working against it.

A second reason for wanting to move concurrence today was to provide not only an opportunity to register our concern with respect to the level of corporate concentration which is occuring but, more important, to ask the Minister to reconsider what appears to be a decision to have the Government approve a takeover of a financial institution by a non-financial institution. Not often do members of the finance committee agree on issues. Yet as a result of nearly seven months of study, and after receiving 137 submissions and testimonies, after hearing from 79 individuals in business, industry and consumer groups, as well as from nine Government bodies, seven individuals from universities and six specialists in financial takeovers, and after holding hearings in all parts of Canada, the committee came to the unanimous conclusion that we ought to recommend to the Minister of State for Finance that no approval of any merger between Canada Trust and Canada Permanent Trust be made until an ownership policy for financial institutions has been developed and implemented.

After considerable thought and reflection, and after hearing from the most highly acclaimed experts in this area, time and time again the point was made that we should stop the takeover of financial institutions by non-financial institutions in the best interests of Canada. While the case can be made that there have been already a number of such takeovers, two wrongs do not make a right. The fact that we have erred in the past in terms of approving these type of takeovers ought not to mean that we must now continue into the future ad infinitum.

I wish to say that as a result of this inquiry by the Finance Committee it saw the whole matter coming. As a result, we went on at some length to draw to the attention of the Government some of the concerns which we held as a result of our extensive hearings. I would now like to quote from the report of the committee which indicates:

> The major costs regarding financial and non-financial ownership links is the impact of this on ownership concentration in the economy and the degree of economic and political power that would be concentrated within a few major ownership groups in Canadian society.

The submission of The Cadillac Fairview Corporation included in the report states:

> The concern for public policy is not simply that those with such power will earn excess profits. Rather the concern is that these large groups will have the ability to earn an acceptable level of profits . . . and be able to use their power to achieve objectives other than increasing the shareholders' wealth. This power may be used to alter the behaviour of other firms involuntarily, e.g.,
> -by advancing the interests of some customers or suppliers and/or by penalizing others;
> -by undermining the position of rivals in ways inconsistent with maximizing the wealth of one's own shareholders;
> -by providing excess rewards—to the top management coalition that effectively controls the corporation; or
> -by using economic power to influence public policy via the political process, i.e., expenditures on lobbying, advocacy advertising, public relations, campaign contributions and the ability to redirect corporate locational decisions.

As a result of The Cadillac Fairview Corporation's proposal I reminded the Minister today during Question Period that major political contributions have been made by the companies about which we are concerned today, to the governing Party. The Chief Executive Officer and President of Canada Trust, the trust company which brings us to this debate today, has indicated on a number of occasions over the last few months that if this particular move which the Government is now evaluating were to result in the takeover of a financial institution by a non-financial institution without broadly-held ownership it would be wrong. This would not be in the best interests of Canada. It would result and lead to self-dealing and conflict of interest. This is what has been said by the Chief Executive Officer and President of Canada Trust. He has made such points on a number of occasions.

The Cadillac Fairview Corporation went on to suggest the following for consideration by committee members:

> Suppose macro-concentration is allowed to increase and non-financial enterprises are allowed to gain control of very large groups of financial institutions, then in a decade there is sufficient evidence of harm to move Parliament to act. Will Parliament be willing to or be able to force the dismantling of these mega-groups? One can just imagine how much pressure will be brought to bear to leave things pretty much as they are—except perhaps for a symbolic gesture to reassure anxious public opinion. The trouble with "experimenting" with even higher levels of concentration is that it is not a reversible process.

We also heard from other thoughtful groups on this whole matter. I refer to the Canadian Bankers Association. It is a group which we have to recognize has some concerns about the financial health of our country and about the need for fair competition in the financial market-place. We also heard from the Consumers' Association of Canada, which presented a number of thoughtful presentations. We heard from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Organization of Small Business and many other groups which expressed serious reservations. They recommended an imposition of ownership limits on all financial institutions and a roll-back of non-financial ownership of financial institutions. The Cadillac Fairview Corporation expressed a concern about retroactive legislation and suggested that a grandfathering of existing ownership investment be made.

There also is a proposal as to what the Government can do. It can say that, yes, it has made mistakes in the past but that it will stop this concentration of power, particularly the takeovers of financial institutions. The Government can say that while it has erred in the past it will grandfather these decisions and from this point on this massing of power will not be seen.

We are concerned here—and I suspect that I say these words as others will on behalf of all Members of the House of Commons—that there is no benefit to Canada if the Minister of State for Finance allows this takeover to occur. My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the Chairman of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs said that Imasco is buying itself a bank. Those are his words. He is a thoughtful individual who knows the system. He understands what is involved here and he says that it is buying itself a bank.

When one examines just exactly what is occuring in terms of the Imasco takeover of Genstar, the reason we are concerned is that this is the first opportunity since the finance committee has studied in detail the implications of such a takeover that this type of takeover is occurring. I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, as a thoughtful individual who is knowledgeable about this concern, that Imasco is one of the major tobacco holders in Canada. It holds Imperial Tobacco. It operates over 2,000 fast food restaurants across the United States. It owns Shopper's Drug Mart with 415 stores across Canada. It owns and operates 800 People's Drug Stores in the United States. It owns and operates 460 tobacco, gift and news-stand outlets across Canada, as well as others. It will now be merging with Genstar Corporation if this takeover is allowed.

Genstar Corporation is involved in marine services including 50 tugboats and 250 barges off the West Coast. It is involved in a whole set of industrial services including 59 plants in Canada and the United States. It is involved in the aggregate concrete business including 100 different plants in the western United States and Canada. It is involved in real estate and land development programs and, of course, has a 10 per cent stake in Gordon Capital Corporation which is the most aggressive investment dealer on Bay Street. However, the real reason for the takeover is that the Genstar group also includes Canada Trust, the sixth largest financial institution in Canada. It is larger than many of the banks in Canada. Its asset base puts it in line with the five largest banks in Canada. Not long ago, we opened up our regional and daily newspapers to find two-page advertisements for Canada Trust saying that now it is one of the biggest financial institutions in Canada.

Let us call Canada Trust a bank, for that is what it really is. It is a large financial institution that provides essentially the same services as do banks. If this merger or takeover is allowed, this bank will be controlled by Imasco Corporation. We are concerned with what this means. This means that there will exist the possibility of self-dealing. We are not unfamiliar with self-dealing in this country.

Earlier today, I spoke to members of the Department of Insurance who told me about companies whose names cannot be used for obvious reasons. They cited an example of a trust company making a loan to another company. The parent of the trust company, however, used the inside financial information that had been given to the first trust subsidiary to determine that the borrower would be a good acquisition. It then went out and bought this company. However, thank goodness, the Department of Insurance was doing its job. It recognized this act of self-dealing and ordered the parent company to divest itself of the company it had recently purchased. That is an example of a Government Department doing its job. I simply use this example as one of many involving self-dealing.

I do not have to remind Members of the House about the Leonard Rosenberg case. Mr. Rosenberg's three companies, Greymac Credit, Greymac Trust and Greymac Mortgage traded real estate among each other for Mr. Rosenberg's own personal gain. That is a whole different story, but it is probably the best example of gross self-dealing that has taken place in times past.

To quote again the oft quoted Merv Lahn, Chief Executive Officer and President of Canada Trust, he has said:

> I don't want to get into all that crap about when one person owns a financial company and loots it but that's what happens.

He went on to talk about self-interest and conflict of interest and said:

> They say, hell, it won't happen with a major company. But have any of the owners had their back absolutely up against the wall in a very difficult period of time? ... Have they ever been tested? The answer is no.

Again, the implication which we heard time and time again in the finance committee was that during good times when everything is fine, self-interest is not necessarily a problem, but when times are tough and competition is fierce, people will use inside information.

I would like to tell Hon. Members what Trilon is doing these days. That was one of the mistakes that was made in the past when two financial corporations were working together in a marriage. Trilon has a program entitled "Share With the Leaders" which essentially rewards its employees with Trilon shares if they buy the products of a related company. For example, if an employee opens a Royal Trust chequing account he receives $20-worth of shares. If he sells a $100,000 home through Royal-Lepage Limited, it is worth $375 in shares. There is now a new plan. The idea of it is to familiarize Trilon employees with Trilon products. This month, the share-bonus program is to be extended to employees who successfully refer clients to a sister company. In other words, if an employee refers clients to a family corporation he will be rewarded by receiving shares.

Mr. Orlikow: Maybe the customer would be better off if you referred him to a different company.

Mr. Riis: As my friend from Winnipeg has said, the best advice in some cases may be to refer a client to a different company. Again, there is this incestual dealing, this corporate concentration, and now the potential of financial and non-financial corporations working together. In a sense, we are looking at a 2lst century brand of feudalism here. Powerful groups will have tremendous, concentrated power in our economy through the economic, financial and political muscle that will accrue to them.

We are pleased to have an opportunity today—no thanks to our Liberal friends—to discuss the implications of this Imasco-Genstar takeover and to make the point that we in the New Democratic Party, the members of the finance committee, the Consumers' Association of Canada, and even the Superintendent of Insurance himself, Mr. Robert Hammond, have suggested that this kind of takeover is not in the best interests of Canada or Canadians.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate because I was a member of the finance committee and worked on the study of financial institutions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Just to make things clear, I understand that the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) is either asking a question or making a comment.

Mr. McCrossan: That is right, Mr. Speaker. Actually, I intend to do both.

As I was saying, I appreciate being able to question the Hon. Member because I was a member of the finance committee and I both helped produce the report and indeed voted for the particular resolution. I might begin by making a comment about the process.

On the day the takeover was announced, members of the free enterprise party were questioning this takeover in the House and three days later the representative of the Official Opposition, the mixed economy party, recognized that this was a potential threat and raised it in the House. However, it did take the Party of the Hon. Member who moved concurrence today two weeks to recognize that this was a serious threat and to raise it in the House.

I raise that point because of the process we are going through today. I value the opportunity to discuss today's motion but I would have valued much more the opportunity to discuss the Bill that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) had brought in some two weeks ago.

Mr. Orlikow: Let her bring it forward.

Mr. McCrossan: Exactly. I have three or four questions to ask the Hon. Member. Perhaps I could ask them all at once and he could respond to them all at once.

First, does the Hon. Member support the principle of Bill C-103 controlling membership, and if so, has he spoken to his House Leader about giving rapid approval in the House to that Bill so that we can get it into committee for study?

The second question I wish to raise is more a matter of record. Would the Hon. Member confirm that both he and the committee do not object to Imasco per se or favour Genstar, but indeed would object to any major non-financial corporation taking control of a major financial corporation, whether it be IBM, the Belzbergs or Dominion Stores?

Third, would the Hon. Member confirm that indeed, contrary to the allegations made in this week's Financial Times, the committee's recommendations do not imply a status quo for Genstar, but indeed the committee recommended that the first step was to stop future control and the second step was to move back the control which already exceeded the committee's limits and that the committee recommended that Genstar in particular would have five years to choose between divesting itself of its non-financial assets or reducing its concentration of its financial assets?

Fourth, would the Hon. Member confirm that the principal concern in his mind and in the minds of members of the committee has to do with non-arm's length dealings and in particular the concern that such dealings are taking place today as mentioned by the President of Canada Trust over the weekend? In a CBC interview Mr. Merv Lahn alleged that non-arms length transactions had indeed taken place between Genstar and its subsidiary trust company.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the thoughtful question of my colleague. Just for interest, since we are talking about Canada Trust, I should like to state on the record that according to its 1985 financial statement it made $63,430,000 before taxes. If we look to see what taxes it paid, we find that it did not pay any taxes in 1985; in fact it received a $3 million tax credit. Therefore its net profit for that year was $66,697,737.

This helps me to understand why Merv Lahn is still with the company, considering some of the things he was saying on Sunday morning this past weekend. He, in his position of chief executive officer and president of Canada Trust, said that it was in the best interest of depositors to have a widely held company. In a sense he was arguing against what was going on. However, he remained on as president and I understand why he was able to pull off that kind of situation.

First I should like to say to the Hon. Member that we have no intention of unduly holding up consideration of Bill C-103. It is what we have been calling for—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) may be a little confused, as may be the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). I interrupt at this time because the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is answering a question put by the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough with which the Chair has difficulty. I should like to take this opportunity to remind Hon. Members that we are discussing the first report. The question put by the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough referred to the Bill itself and to what would be the reaction of the Opposition to the Bill. Of course the Chair will be lenient, as it always is in such matters, but I remind Hon. Members that the subject matter is the report, not the Bill itself; that is not what is before the House today.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly certain what was your suggestion. However, in response, we plan to co-operate. We have been calling to get the Bill on the floor of the House as soon as possible. While we have some serious concerns about certain aspects of it, it will not encourage us to stall its consideration or in getting it into committee.

We are very concerned about the limits suggested in the report. We believe very strongly in the 10 per cent rule. We are very strongly on the side of a number of the recommendations before the committee indicating that the 10 per cent ownership rule should remain in place for all financial institutions. Of course that is what we recommended in our dissenting report.

In response to my hon. friend who sugggested that we did not speak some time in the past two weeks or three weeks about the Imasco takeover, my friend from Regina and I actually wrote a report which was tabled in the House. It clearly laid out our position on takeovers and of course concurred with that section of the report which wanted to stop the movement on Genstar. I think we are all on the same wavelength.

I should like to respond to his question concerning not only Imasco. Indeed, we are clearly talking about the principle. We are focusing our attention on this particular takeover bid because of its implications in light of the studies which we have done over the last seven months. Whether it were Imasco, x, y or z, we would be making the same case as strongly, if not more strongly than we already have.

In conclusion, the arms length situation is of utmost concern and is critical in this discussion. As a matter of fact, it is one of the ultimate motivations for moving concurrence and for doing whatever is possible to encourage the Minister of State for Finance not to proceed with approving this takeover bid.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the discussion on the important issue of financial institutions following presentation of the report of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The report tabled in the House represents a very important contribution towards solving a problem which is admittedly complex and which concerns financial institutions in Canada. I think that it should be pointed out right at the start that this report was prepared in an ongoing fashion and with objectivity by the members of the committee for the specific purpose of finding a practical solution to the problem posed by financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, we have spoken about the urgency of the situation, but I think that we could say that everything we do in this House is always urgent. We are here to legislate, to pass legislation, even if we do not always have a lot of help from the Opposition, and it is always urgent.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is somewhat similar to what you certainly found when you practiced law before the courts; there are always appeals for reasons of urgency. In Trois-Rivières, the cases were always urgent and I think that my colleague will confirm it.

However, Mr. Speaker, urgency is no justification for arbitrary decisions. Issues should always be considered with logic and intelligence. The problem before us goes much beyond the simple takeover of a financial institution. It is a problem of national significance. We should not take this problem of national significance and reduce it to the proportions of a simple takeover.

Without making too much reference to Bill C-103, I think that, we are working for the future. We cannot live in the past. Nothing has been done about financial institutions during the last twenty-five years. That is not our fault, but we have to live with it. There is now nothing in the law which could allow us to tell the Chairman of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, another Member of Parliament or the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall): "We are working on the Imasco or Genstar deal and we are for or against it". There is nothing in the statutes.

On the other hand, what have we done these last 18 months, Mr. Speaker? Six months only after we took office, yes within six months the Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, chaired by my colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), brought forth a green paper along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) dealing with the situation then prevailing in Canada, namely what we had in terms of legislation, what the problems were and what the solution were that we of the Conservative Party wanted to bring about.

Mr. Speaker, this shows an interest. It shows that when we talk about urgency it is realistic urgency. Within six months of coming to power we tabled a green paper on that issue. Not withstanding the fact that over the last 25 years almost nothing had been done in convection with financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, we will not deal with the report put forth by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs as the previous Liberal Government attempted to do with the Quebec Caisse de dépôt et de placement. I suggest that we must really do our homework and come up with a sensible solution, rather than rush jobs that run the risk of creating serious problems for Quebec's financial institutions, as you will remember, Mr. Speaker.

In November of 1985, we tabled Bill C-86, a piece of legislation that, further to a private committee report and also a report from this House, dealt with the Canada Insurance Deposit Corporation problem. As I said, Mr. Speaker, this came about because of the work done by the Members who sat on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Also in November 1985, Mr. Speaker, we tabled a piece of legislation dealing with regulatory authority, Bill C-103.

All this to say that there has been work done to this day, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, work done towards achieving something which in the long run will be important for our Canadian financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, without anticipating too much the debate on Bill C-103, we might perhaps take a quick look at its contents. One of the key provisions of Bill C-103 provides the regulator with the authority to issue instructions to cease or refrain, in order to put an end to doubtful practices. This is something that does not now exist, Mr. Speaker, and it is in Bill C-103.

Secondly, the Minister of Finance will have the authority to regulate people who attempt to control financial institutions. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance now has the authority to say to a loans or trust company that it cannot do business in Canada. Once it has the power to do business in Canada, the Minister of Finance has no way to check whether a transfer of shares is a good thing or not. At the present time, there is no legislation at this level. And that is the purpose of Bill C-103.

There is a third major element in Bill C-103. The superintendent of insurance will be able to carry out proper assessment of all assets held by our financial institutions. Again, Mr. Speaker, this does not exist. Therefore, the superintendent of insurance will be able to assess any real estate property thus held and submit a proper report concerning both the administration and transfer of assets or shares of a loan or trust company.

Mr. Speaker, the major consideration is definitely the public interest. Concerning public interest, I suggest it is necessary to consider the transfer of control of a loan or trust company, to examine who will acquire it. Does the company taking over the control have the necessary know how and expertise to properly administer a loan or trust company the control of which has been transferred? And especially, is this transfer of ownership made in the best interest of Canadian men and women? That is the main recommendation of the finance and economic affairs Committee. That is the main point.

Unfortunately, a moment ago, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) mentioned that a company had failed to pay any income tax in 1985. I suggest this is not a recommendation of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. The Committee was looking into the interest of Canadians. The Committee, whose report is here before us, wanted our financial institutions in Canada to be controlled reasonably and fairly.

As far as the Imasco-Genstar dossier is concerned, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) indicated in the House on several occasions that she will definitely look into the takeover, keeping in mind the criteria set in Bill C-103, for the purpose of ensuring that the interest of the public, of Canadian men and women is properly protected, as recommended by the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, both Bill C-86 and C-103 are a first step in a thorough reform of the financial sector: power of supervision, power dealing with the industry and the transfer of interests, all things which do not exist at the present time. We are being asked to take action, something the previous Government failed to do; so, we are taking the necessary action. Mr. Speaker, we must live with this situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the urgency of this debate, I think that the Government, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), the Committee on Finance and Financial Affairs should also do their job. The Committee on Finance and Financial Affairs has done its job. The Minister of State (Finance) and the Government still have theirs to do. Consultations have to be held. This Government does not reach decisions without consulting anyone and I think that in an 18-month period our record is there to prove it.

In the case under consideration, various consultations have still to be made and it is important to do so. If the Opposition does not agree with Bill C-103, it is unfortunate because it has been submitted to financial institutions which are in agreement. I am sure that there are minor things, that they do not totally agree with and it is normal but they approve of it generally and this is what is meant by consultation.

We have not yet received the report from the Estey Commission and it is an important document on which decisions about Canadian financial institutions will be based. I do not think we can obtain the Estey report overnight and make decisions without referring to it. It would be inconsistent. Inquiries should not be requested if their results are not to be taken into consideration, because we have to be consistent. It has not been stated often enough that this is entirely new, that people are not used to that procedure. For the past 18 months, the Government of Canada has been consulting with the Provinces and this had not been done before. As in every other sector, there were consultations with the provinces regarding financial institutions. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in Quebec we have our own financial institutions that come strictly under provincial jurisdiction. They also have a contribution to make when we are discussing legislation in this area, which is why it is important to reach agreement with the provinces. However, so our consultations with the provinces are not finished either.

As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, quite recently a meeting was held in Vancouver, which included the Minister of State (Finance) and her provincial counterparts. It was an excellent meeting which produced good results, but there is still work to be done, both on the federal and the provincial side. And this work must be done first, before we get into anything definitive, and this is something they do not always seem to understand on the other side of the House.

There is also the Senate, which also has a report to make on our financial institutions, and this report has not yet arrived. I assume that with the many excellent people we have in the Senate, the report should arrive very shortly, but, I repeat, we do not have it yet.

An Hon. Member: The fast is over!

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, if everybody has had a square meal I am sure we will get the report today.

So we will have to wait for this report as well, and if we start counting, this is the third report we are expecting. Time is now of the essence. We have done our share, and I think Hon. Members are to be congratulated, Mr. Speaker, because their report has already made it to the House. They did their work within an extraordinarily short time frame, considering the size of their task, but we still have to wait for the other reports.

Mr. Speaker, it is because of these considerations that we cannot just ask the Minister and the Canadian Government to make a final decision on a particular case, when we are talking about a problem of national significance and a matter of principle. We are not talking about a particular question, we are talking about the principles that have been examined. Just ask the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. They have been working on the subject for eighteen months, and they know it inside out. Just ask the Chairman of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and he will explain all the principles, and Mr. Speaker, you can talk to your colleague who is also on the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. When you work on legislation, you follow the committees and you participate, and that is how you get to know the subject. It is important to know the subject matter. Mr. Speaker, the Government's objective is to come with a solution that will get a consensus, from industry, from the members of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, from the Senate, and also from Commissioner Estey, in order to make our financial system a better one, and not just better for the benefit of Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, but better so that the public will have confidence as well. I think that is an important point. It is important for the public to have confidence in our financial system and our financial institutions.

At the same time, along with everything I have just mentioned, we must ensure healthy competition among financial institutions, seen against the background of the kind of situation and the kind of society we have now and will have in the years to come.

When we are dealing with financial legislation, we are not talking about short-term measures, we are talking about long-term measures. That is why we are quite justified to take all the time we need to make sure we are acting in the best interests of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the committee report is along the same lines as the green paper of the Minister of State (Finance)(Mrs. McDougall) on supervisory powers and the importance of federal-provincial agreements. As I said earlier, these are new words but they are no less important. And so once again I think we should commend the Members of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs for their report and hard work so that, in the future, we will have a policy which will promote the interests of all Canadian men and women, as well as those of financial institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that we reserve judgment and wait for the various reports before making any final decision.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Hamelin): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Hon. Member speak I was reminded of that saying which has been around I suppose for 1,000 years, Nero fiddled while Rome burned. The Member is saying the Government needs more time to study the question and work out its policy. Does the Hon. Member not realize that over the last ten years or so we have had probably 25 or more trust companies go bankrupt with great losses to their depositors? An Hon. Member says "six". I think I can provide a list much longer than six. Does he not remember the case of Leonard Rosenberg who got control of three trust companies and used the depostors' money to wheel and deal in the real estate business. That might have been good for him but it could only cause tremendous problems for the depositors. Does he not remember the case of that great Conservative, Peter Pocklington, who took control of a trust company in Alberta and used the money for his real estate transactions? Most of those turned out to be very bad and they cost the taxpayers of Canada a great deal of money.

We used the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs today to express our opposition to the takeover by Imasco of Genstar. That involves the takeover of a large trust company, but we are just as opposed to Power Corporation controlling financial institutions. We are just as opposed to Brascan or Brascade, whatever the official name is right now, taking over MacMillan Bloedel and Noranda. We are just as opposed to them controlling Trilon which has assets as large or larger than most Canadian banks.

What is the Government proposing? We do not have to have all the details of the Bill at this time but we want to know where the Government thinks it is going. Is the Minister only going to give consideration to and make a decision that Imasco will not be permitted to take over Genstar and therefore control Canada Trust? Is the Minister going to look at the control which Brascade has over Trilon? Is she going to look at the control which Power Corporation has over trust and insurance companies? Those are the questions we want answered. No single shareholder in a bank can own more than 10 per cent of the shares and so the banks have said that they are opposed to this kind of takeover.

Is the Government just going to oppose the Imasco takeover of Genstar or is it going to, having passed legislation, then call on all the corporations which own mining or forest companies or steel companies and tell them that they ought not to and they will not be permitted to control financial institutions. That leads inevitably to self-dealing and arrangements which may be good for the companies and shareholders' concerned but not so good for, in fact detrimental to the well-being and welfare of the people who deposit and invest their money in those trust companies. That is the question we want answered. It seems to me that the Conservative Member skated around that question, either inadvertently or very skillfully.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party says that there have been many bankruptcies of trust companies in the last ten years. If the NPD had not joined with the Liberals in 1979 to defeat the Conservative Party, there would perhaps have been fewer bankruptcies between 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Speaker, we have done more for the financial institutions in eighteen months than had been done during the twenty-five years before that.

Mr. Berger: You are a true historian. Tell us about it!

Mr. Vincent: There was the tabling of the green paper in June 1985, Bill C-86 in November 1985, and now Bill C-103. All this has occurred within one year, even less than eighteen months. Those on the other side who dare criticize today did not have too much to say between 1980 and 1984. There was no danger of that because there were not too many problems.

This is what we have done in eighteen months. What is important is to work on an issue to come up finally with a perfect solution. This is what we are doing. We do not use bandaid solutions. We do not dream up S-31's in the Conservative Party. We do our job, and we shall not use the special case of the Imasco-Genstar transaction to pass legislation which would not be beneficial for Canadians in the future.

We have to take the time to find perfect solutions, and this will be better for everyone. There now is the Imasco-Genstar transaction. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has already mentioned that, when we have a proper piece of legislation, and if the Members opposite agree that Bill C-103 should receive passage as quickly as possible, there will be no opposition on our side, we shall finally be able to examine everything to which the NDP objects. Indeed, all that I have heard is that the NDP objects! They should also have objected in 1979.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, just one last question. Is the Member seriously suggesting that if and when the Minister brings down Bill C-103—which she did not seem to want to do until there seemed to be a revolt on the part of her Conservative colleagues—it should get quick passage through all stages in Parliament? Should it be passed without hearing the representations from all of the groups that are interested, such as business groups, banks, credit unions, consumers' organizations and from many business people? It is not just in the financial services industry that we have got too many take-overs, but that most of the take-overs we have had in recent years among non-financial institutions have been useless in terms of providing any new jobs. Is the Member really suggesting that when the Minister finally brings down the Bill we should give it quick passage without the most careful and detailed consideration?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Hamelin): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) has one minute left.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am quite stunned. This is the first time I see a Member of the New Democratic Party ask that financial institutions and businessmen be heard. Frankly, I am quite pleased to be in the House this afternoon to have at least seen that.

Mr. Speaker, this is not what I suggested. I said that financial institutions and businessmen have examined Bill C-103 in its draft form and have stated that they agreed with it. The two parties opposite have known about it since it was tabled in November 1985. They have seen its contents so we should proceed in an orderly manner and perhaps waste less time as with other bills, so that Bill C-103 may be passed and implemented as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Hamelin): The period for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Mrs. Nicholson).

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to put before the House the concerns of the Official Opposition on the issue of financial institutions being owned by industrial conglomerates—the Imasco takeover, or proposed takeover of Genstar being the case in point. The Government has yet to come forward with a policy or statement of position on the matter, apart from Bill C-103 which had its first reading on April 7.

The finance committee of this House held extensive hearings on the Government Green Paper proposals for restructuring of the financial services industry in Canada. There was a very high degree of unanimity on the proposals. We, as the Official Opposition, did issue a minority report to spell out certain concerns we had, but Members of all Parties on that committee were concerned about the concentration of power in the industry, and the trend to increasing concentration, which was building up in the absence of a relevant and up-to-date ownership policy, even as the committee proceeded with its work.

In both the report of the finance committee and the minority report of my Party the concern about non-financial institutions controlling financial institutions was spelled out. I would like to quote those remarks. In the Liberal minority report in the Green Paper we said:

> We are concerned about more concentration of financial power. Moreover, we do not believe that financial activities and non-financial activities should be combined.

The finance committee report also included these words:

> The committee is concerned about the increasing trend towards non-financial ownership of financial institutions and feels that concentrated ownership, particularly that of large financial institutions, should be limited.

This was a view that was reflected in many of the briefs received by the committee. The Canadian Bankers' Association said:

> We believe that this co-mingling of non-financial and financial businesses is undesirable. It would try the confidence and trust that Canadians place in their financial system.

There was also one very specific recommendation in the committee report. In the course of the committee's work last fall the merger of Canada Trust and Canada Permanent Trust was in the works, and the committee specifically recommended that the Government not approve this merger until such time as there was an ownership policy in place. The Government chose not to act on that recommendation and the merger went ahead, directly contributing to the situation we have before us today. Genstar Corporation owned Canada Permanent Trust and it then acquired Canada Trust, against the finance committee's recommendation, which gave to Genstar Canada's biggest trust company. It has been described as the jewel among Genstar's holdings now, and is the main reason for Imasco's interest in taking over Genstar.

In the case of Genstar and Canada Trust the concern is that Genstar, with very extensive holdings in construction and development, would have, in effect, its own source of capital. Canada Trust is now the country's largest trust company, one which reportedly is Canada's largest mortgage lender and the fourth largest holder of personal savings accounts.

There was another concern that ran all through the hearings of the finance committee, and that was the concentration of power in fewer and fewer hands, which is a growing trend in Canada. At this point about 25 companies control between one-third and 40 per cent of our economy. The main concern I wish to address today is the potential for self-dealing, the potential for a financial institution making business loans and decisions that are not in the best interests of the shareholders or of the depositors when it is owned by a non-financial institution.

The member for the New Democratic Party who asked a question just a few minutes ago said that in his view it was inevitable that there should be self-dealing in certain situations. I would never regard it as inevitable. In any situation where you have people of good faith and good judgment you do not necessarily have self-dealing. But faced with the situation as we are seeing it now, which has changed very much in recent years, it is not enough to just rely on people's good faith and people's integrity. It is important there be clear legislative standards as well.

The Minister, according to the new legislation, does have power to block and, if necessary, require divesting or unwinding if a merger seems to be against the public interest. The review would be based on the prospective new owner's financial strength, soundness of business plans, business record and experience, and the best interests of the Canadian financial system. The Bill also proposes that these measures be applied to all transactions occurring after November 29, 1985, which is the date the Bill was issued in its draft form. This is the background to the recommendation approved unanimously by the Finance Committee and reported to the House on April 8. The Finance Committee motion recommended that the Government apply the provisions of Bill C-103 to ensure that major financial institutions such as Canada Trustco, owned by Genstar, not be placed under the control of major non-financial institutions such as Imasco.

To date, we have not had any clear indication of the Government's intention. It is important at this time that we see consistency in the Government's approach and that we see convincing evidence that the government is according some consideration to the institution of Parliament and to the unanimous reports which have come from the Finance Committee. Will the Minister heed the wishes of her own caucus colleagues and block Imasco's takeover of Genstar Corporations? If so, will she then deal with the fact that she did not accept the Finance Committee's Recommendation No. 58 concerning the merger of Canada Trust and Canada permanent Trust? Will the Minister permit the deal to go ahead and, if so, under what conditions?

The Minister was given advance notice of Imasco's intentions and apparently she and her officials have been reviewing the matter since before it became public on March 24. The Minister said in an interview with The Financial Post that she has no problem with financial institutions being owned by industrial groups and that this was happening in a number of other countries. At the present time, American laws explicitly forbid ownership or control of financial institutions by non-financial institutions, although we understand that there is pressure to change that law.

I support the motion before us because it is important that we in the House have some indication from the Government of how the Imasco matter will be decided. It is true that a Bill has been introduced, but we are not at all sure that we will have a chance to debate it before Imasco's takeover is finalized on April 25. Therefore, we do not want to be overtaken by events. We want to be able to put forward some of our concerns.

I was pleased to concur in the report of the Finance Committee on April 8. I hope the Government will take that recommendation seriously and make a considered and consistent decision.

The question of divestment or unwinding was addressed in the Finance Committee's report of last November where a five-year period was suggested for unwinding in certain cases. It has been suggested that that period may be too short. If so, it would be interesting to hear alternative proposals. However, it is important that a commitment be made not to let the present trend continue because it is a trend that has accelerated in recent years.

In the United States, a massive acceleration of corporate debt resulting from the "leveraged buy-out" boom in the past couple of years has left many people apprehensive about the underlying financial soundness of much of the American economy. On January 20, 1986, a well known American writer, Robert Kuttner, used very firm language in offering a serious warning about concentration. He said:

> If the legal rules that make possible an orderly corporate and financial marketplace suddenly provide that any firm with undervalued shares is up for grabs whenever a prospective raider can borrow enough money, then the entire real economy is turned into a speculative casino, in which rearranging assets yields greater rewards than building them.

These are some of the concerns of the committee and some of the reasons why we feel some urgency about the Government having a clear policy on ownership.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I serve on the Finance Committee, as do several Members who have spoken today. I believe that we are dealing with a matter that is extremely important not only to the business life but to the economic and social life of Canada. How do we envisage the future of Canada? What kind of business climate do we want in Canada? How large and how much power should some of these corporations have?

Although today's debate concerns this motion, I think we are also dealing with a grave situation in this country. A major cause of this grave situation is the ever-growing concentration of power in this country. We have five or six world banks that have a dominant position in Canada and do a great deal of foreign banking which accounts for some 40 per cent of their assets. We are very proud of the banking industry in this country. However, it is different in the United States which has almost 14,000 banks. There is no dominance in the banking industry there as there is in this country.

A number of other companies in this country have become very large as a result of their sound management and marketing practices.

We must be concerned about this concentration of power. For example, Imasco, a successful and respected company, is on the verge of taking over Genstar which is a corporation that owns Canada Trust. I might say that Canada Trust is one of the best run trust companies in Canada under the guidance of President and Chief Executive Officer, Mervin Lahn. One only needs to briefly examine its record to see that it has been well run for many years.

However, we are concerned about the issue of non-financial corporations controlling financial corporations. The unanimous report of our Finance Committee recognized some of the unique issues in the trust industry. For example, in many cases certain groups and investors had to take a great majority if not all of the share issue to get an organization going. During more difficult economic times, some of these groups have had to provide an infusion of more capital from time to time. They should be credited with keeping these organizations going.

In the report of the Finance Committee which was tabled last November, we recommended unanimously a structure of ownership on a scaled basis. For instance, for a company the size of Canada Trust with over $20 billion in assets, we recommended the maximum ownership to be 50 per cent. When a trust company's assets exceeded $30 billion, that ownership would have to be dropped to 25 per cent. When it went over $40 billion, it would have to be reduced to 10 per cent, similar to the Schedule A banks here in Canada. And I stress that this was a unanimous recommendation.

The problem of non-financial corporations is very much on the minds of a number of senior people in the United States. Mr. Volcker, who is head of the federal reserve, recently called a number of senior people together to express his concern, because even though the U.S. banks cannot be controlled by non-financial corporations, some of the other related financial institutions like Sears Roebuck are developing very large financial assets. So he indeed is concerned about that as well. So there are a number of issues to be looked at.

I would like to compliment the Government and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). The offer came on March 24. A day later there was discussion right in the House. The next day the House rose for a 10 day or 11 day period. The day we came back on April 7, the Minister presented Bill C-103 in the House which has provisions, as I understand it, to deal with this. We would urge the Government that we act with speed on this matter. With all due respect, it is hard to unscramble eggs and get toothpaste back into the tube. The train is moving. The offer on all shares put forward as of April 14 is now irrevokable. The deal is to be signed on April 25, a week from Friday, which is just nine days away. I think it is only fair to Imasco and other shareholders that a decision be made shortly and that we not be in the awkward position of having some type of roll-back.

I have worked with the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on a couple of different committees and I have the greatest respect for her. I must take issue with only one word she uttered and that was the word "revolt". We are going through parliamentary reform and we on the committee knew we had an important issue. May I just ask the Hon. Member what is going on in her Party? I cannot quote the dates but I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was against this particular proposal fairly recently. I have now heard that the finance critic for the Official Opposition is now for the deal. I wonder if the Hon. Member could just elaborate on the official position of the Liberal Party on this particular issue.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I used the word "revolt". I believe it was someone else. I did not use the word "revolt" because I do not see as a revolt at all the fact that members of the Government Party are pressing their Minister to take certain positions. I think that that is an exercise of the responsible role of a Member of Parliament. That is what we generally do in caucus, but under the new rules it is now being done more openly. I think the Hon. Member must have confused my speech with the speech of someone else.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) a question. If I heard her correctly, I think she expressed her opposition and, I presume, the opposition of the Liberal Party, to the takeovers or control of financial institutions by industrial corporations or non-financial institutions. I, of course, agree with that.

I would like the Hon. Member for Trinity to tell Hon. Members of the House when she and the Liberal Party came to that conclusion. I have a table here and I see that in 1981 Noranda Mines took over MacMillan Bloedel for $626 million. In the same year, Brascade Resources took over Noranda Mines. That meant it controlled Noranda Mines for $1.6 billion. So Brascade controlled Noranda Mines and MacMillan Bloedel—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I remind the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that we have about 30 seconds left in the time for questions and comments. If he wants an answer from the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), he will have to put a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Brascade also controls the Trilon financial corporation?which, in turn, controls trust companies, insurance companies, money market companies, leasing companies and real estate companies. When did the Liberal Party make this pretty important change in its approach to the business operations of large corporations in this country?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, first, concern about concentration of power in nothing new to Liberals. In fact, when our present Leader was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, he introduced one of the first competition Bills. However, it is quite true, indeed, as pointed out by the Hon. Member and as I said in my speech, that we do have a very high level of concentration in Canada and that we have financial institutions owned by non-financial institutions. I think all of us here, regardless of Party, have become more concerned in the last couple of years as we have seen the problem escalate. In fact, one of the most impressive briefs the Committee on Finance had was from Cadillac-Fairview where, I believe, precisely that point was made. We have been increasingly faced with more concentration, with more takeovers by non-financial interests in financial institutions, and we have now reached the point where it must go no further.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Once upon a time in 1980 there was a company called Genstar which owned some real estate development holdings on the West Coast and some transportation issues. About that time there was also a company called the Canada Permanent Trust Company which had a subsidiary called the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation. That corporation was an old, established and well respected trust institution in Toronto. There was also a company called the Canada Trust Company, another well respected institution with its head office in London, Ontario and branches throughout Ontario.

In 1981, the company called Genstar gobbled up the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation and the Canada Permanent Trust Company. In 1985, the company called Genstar then gobbled up the Canada Trust Company. Now it is 1986, and the largest tobacco dealer in the country, the largest drugstore owner in the country, one of the largest fast food owners in North America, intend to gobble up the Canada Trust Company, the Genstar Company, the Canada Permanent Trust Company and the whole ball of wax. The question is, when are we going to stop the gobble, gobble, gobble?

I suggest, Sir, and the committee suggests as well, that it is time that ownwership rules and requirements for financial companies be determined and established. The committee is suggesting to the Minister and to the House that now is the time to stop. Last fall the committee suggested the Minister should not permit the amalgamation of Canada Permanent Trust and Canada Trust. It was our view last fall that amalgamation should not have been permitted, but it was permitted. We think, Sir, that this further amalgamation, this further takeover, this further holding, should be stopped. We think now is the time to stop it. We as a committee do not approve the present holdings whereby a company which is in the non-financial business or partly in the non-financial business owns a financial institution, particularly a financial institution the size of the new Canada Trust, which is an amalgamation of Canada Permanent and Canada Trust, having intermediary action of at least $21 billion, together with its trust and trust-related activity of several billions of dollars more than that.

In order to understand the real justification and rationale behind our opposition we must understand what we are dealing with in terms of financial companies. At one time financial companies could be described as belonging to four separate pillars. This is commonly referred to as the four-pillar theory. One of those pillars was the insurance pillar, which broke down into property and casualty insurance companies and life insurance companies. Another pillar was the bank pillar, which included the chartered banks. They lent on commercial loans, which was their sole function, financing day-to-day commercial activities. Then there was the trust pillar which looked after estates and agencies, which transferred shares and kept share registers for people. It would look after one's mother's will, for example. Then there was the security dealer pillar, which traded in stocks and bonds in the market-place and made sure that new share issues were placed.

Time has gone by and there has been little, if any, leadership in the administration of financial intermediaries. The four pillars have become four hydrants. There is a merger of activities. All one has to do is to read the newspapers, listen to the radio or look at the television to be confronted with ads by one intermediary after another which state: "We will look after your mortgage". "Come in and get your car loan looked after". If one wishes to lease something, then they will look after it. Every one of these intermediaries will do the same thing, with very little restriction, except the type of restriction found in the Bank Act which prevents one's bank from leasing one an automobile. That does not prevent it from lending one the money to buy the automobile and then agreeing to buy it back when the term of the loan is over. That is another way around the Bank Act invented by the Royal Bank. However, they all do the same thing. They issue and sell debentures. They trade bonds in the market-place. They own, trade and invest in common stocks. They invest in preferred share issues and run T-bill accounts—every one of them. They will look after customer payments on Chargex, Visa or Mastercard. They allow one to apply and obtain an American Express Gold Card. They are all the same and they all do the same thing.

What we had better understand is that if they all do the same thing then the ownership rules governing them ought to be the same. Yet what have we got? We have an ownership rule for trust companies under which anyone can own a trust company. One can even be a drug store operator, apparently, and own a trust company. A mining company can own a trust company. What we have is a situation in which anyone can own a trust company and, presumably, a trust company can grow to any size under one owner.

We have a company called Canada Trust which is not able to use the word "bank" on its statements. Under normal parlance, it is a bank. It takes private placements. It places mortgages on commercial real estate. It owns real estate. It rents that real estate out. It runs T-bill accounts, according to the little advertisement on the top of the morning paper. It will help one with one's investment portfolio. It will perform all sorts of services for its customers. It will do exactly what a local chartered bank will do for one.

An advertisement which it placed in the paper the other day, a two-page spread, stated that it is the fourth largest taker of domestic deposits in the country. If we consider its intermediary action we will see that it is the fifth or sixth largest financial intermediary in the country. It is larger than the National Bank. It is larger than the Bank of British Columbia. It is larger than the Continental Bank by far. Indeed, if we were to place all its trust activities together— and I ask Hon. Member to remember that in its trust activities it directs and controls those trusts which it manages—it is as large as the Toronto-Dominion Bank. If we take a look at its domestic activity as opposed to the banks' domestic activities, we will see that it is probably larger than the Bank of Nova Scotia or the Toronto-Dominion Bank in terms of their domestic activities.

There is a situation in place by which banks can be owned only to the extent of 10 per cent per shareholder. Yet this company can be owned by one shareholder. Why should this "bank" be held by one shareholder and the Toronto-Dominion Bank be held by a multitude of shareholders with no shareholder holding more than 10 per cent? Why should the Bank of British Columbia be in that position? It is a relatively small institution. Yet Canada Trust and Royal Trust can be held in a closely-held fashion. This is the situation which we must come to grips with as a country. This is something we attempted to come to grips with in the report of the Finance Committee.

I wish to say that the Tory majority on the committee was much more liberal in terms of ownership. We were prepared to say: "You can have large one-owner companies". Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party who sat on the committee would not go that far. Yet the present ownership which seeks approval revolts us. It is against the principles of what we think is necessary in the interests of Canada.

In our report, we wanted to come up with an ownership policy which would apply across the board in our report. That ownership policy would have said that until a company gets up to as much as $10 billion—which is a great deal of money—the financial intermediary could be owned, closely-held, by one group of owners or by one owner. We feel that up until that $10 billion stage the company needs the strength and backing of one owner in order to get going. However, as soon as it crosses the $10 billion threshold, we feel it should cut back. When it crosses the $20 billion threshold, it should be cut back again so that it is less than 50 per cent owned by one shareholder.

The company with which we are dealing is far over the $20 billion mark, yet it is owned by one shareholder. When Imasco takes over it will be even harder to unravel. In the case of Genstar, at least, we have serious concerns about the way it has operated in the past. We have summoned officials of Genstar and the President of Canada Trust to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs next Monday in order to go over some of these conflict of interest matters. At least Genstar can divest itself and become merely a financial holding company. Today, the bulk of Genstar's business is in terms of the financial intermediary business. At this point in time it would not be that difficult for Genstar to divest itself and become a strictly financial intermediary holding company. Broadly held as this company is, or was until today or yesterday, it would come within the share rules originally prescribed by the committee. However, if this takeover is to take place, then it will not be possible without a great deal of difficulty to unravel the ownership so that there will be no massive concentration of ownership in one holder.

It is essential that there be wide ownership of financial intermediaries, and the reason is that financial intermediaries are different from our local boot and shoe companies. They are not commercial organizations. On the balance sheet of a commercial organization, the leverage might be one to one or two to one. Perhaps commercial organizations borrow some money, but by and large their balance sheets contain capital and capital is used in the businesses. However, financial intermediaries operate on leverage. That is how they make profits. They put up a buck and make 20 bucks. That gives them $21 to be invested. They operate by lending precious little of their own money and putting depositors' money at risk.

With a financial intermediary, the people who are really at risk are the depositors. Those who deposit their money in Canada Trust are the people who are taking the risk when Canada Trust makes loans, not the shareholders, except to the extent of perhaps 4 or 5 per cent. It is on that basis that boot and shoe companies, drug companies, tobacco companies and tugboat companies should not be able to own the bank. That is why the Finance Committee recommended these strict ownership requirements. We have to have strict requirements on who owns financial intermediaries, particularly as they get larger.

A great number of comments have been made with respect to the testimony given before the Finance Committee by Bernard Ghert of the Cadillac-Fairview Company. There is a strange situation. I do not know who owns Cadillac-Fairview now but perhaps there was a conflict of interest between him and one of his eventual employers. In any event, Mr. Ghert very clearly pointed out how as conglomerates get larger in the finance business, they control the source of the mortgage money, the source of the land development money and which tenants can go into shopping centres. They control development and the growth of the country. It is very important that that kind of control be broadly held by many shareholders so that no one shareholder has so much control over large financial conglomerates that he can use his economic leverage for his own good and not necessarily the good of the depositors.

When we analyse share values of the Schedule A banks in Canada, we find that those shares are being traded on the market for considerably less than their break-up or book value. In the case of Canada Trust, the offer that has been made is a payment of at least $2 for every $1 of real book value.

One might ask why one would pay so much for a trust company and so little for bank stock. The answer is pretty simple, is it not? It is power that is more important than ownership, power over the leverage of the money. Those who control this great pot of money can make deals the way they want them to be made, and that is why ownership controls are so essential. People do not buy trust companies these days for the profit they are likely to make on ordinary intermediary action; they buy them for the power that the control of that money provides.

We have to recall that we are talking about depositors' money, not shareholders' money. There is nothing wrong with having power over one's own money, but having power over one's depositors' money is another matter. There are still opportunities for self-dealing, despite the suggestion made by Canada Trust that it had passed board resolutions preventing self-dealing. This House ought to agree with the committee that there should be serious limitations on ownership and that an ownership policy should be determined before the Imasco deal is approved.

We cannot sit back and say that we have to study the matter further. It is important that the Government declare itself. I have nothing against the Genstar people. I think they are fine people and good corporate citizens. In fact, they are probably even better corporate citizens than the corporate citizens who own the group that is being purchased. The fact is that we are dealing with ownership requirements over the management of money that does not belong to shareholders but to depositors. That money has to be controlled in such a way that no one within a company of this size has the absolute power to say yes or no.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend explain why it was so important that the points raised in today's debate be heard and presumably followed by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). If the Minister decides not to stop this takeover of Genstar by Imasco as recommended by the Finance Committee, would the Hon. Member who is Chairman of the Finance Committee be able to think of any reason for this? Is there any compelling reason the Minister would use for not stopping this after all of the debate and all of the arguments have been put forward? Is there anything that would indicate to Canadians that her action in that case would be in the best interests of the country? Can the Hon. Member think of a single reason why she would not stop it?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, there are reasons. I do not necessarily agree with those reasons, but we must take a look at them. There is a suggestion that there are a great number of financial companies in Canada and that there is ample competition. The suggestion is then made that this takeover will not reduce competition that much, and indeed will not hurt competition at all. The suggestion has been made that Canada is a relatively small country and therefore needs large companies with masses of capital to finance large activities in which we have to engage with foreign countries.

I happen to believe that even with those concerns in mind, the takeover is wrong, largely because we are not dealing with a boot and shoe company but with depositors' money. We are dealing with the money of those who have savings. It is essential that those savings be treated in a fashion where there is no likelihood or probability for the savings to be used improperly to enrich the owners of the company at the expense of the savers.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have three supplementary questions for the Hon. Member. First, if this particular takeover proceeds, is it the Hon. Member's understanding that there would be some possibility that the deposits of depositors would be at some risk? I place emphasis upon the words "some possibility". Second, does the Hon. Member have any concern at all that Imasco is controlled 44 per cent by a British conglomerate? Third, rather than the 10 per cent rule, which he advocates makes a lot of sense with the big banks, if the rule were changed for Canada Trust not to 10 per cent but to 30 per cent or 40 per cent, would that satisfy him?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will answer the questions in reverse order. I am not all that concerned about foreign ownership. Over the last decade and a half Canadians have been buying up, with great abandon, foreign companies operating in Canada. Deak Perera, an international currency house operated out of New York, was bought up this week by one of my constituents. The company will now be called Deak International and will have its head office at 10 King Street in Toronto, rather than in New York. That is the kind of thing that is happening. I am not too concerned about foreigners having some business here because our intermediaries have a great deal of business in foreign countries.

Having said that, I think it is not proper to maintain the 10 per cent rule for the banks in the present fashion. Some of the smaller banks in Canada would be far better off if they were owned fairly closely. Close ownership is needed to give those banks the additional strength which is required, particularly at the present time. Perhaps the 10 per cent rule is only appropriate for the very largest institutions. I would be quite content to see Canada Trust at its present size owned 40 per cent by one shareholder or one shareholding group. As it grew, perhaps that one shareholding group would have to divest or allow in more people.

I am quite happy about the recommendations of the Finance Committee. They provide that there can be sole ownership only up to $10 billion in assets and 75 per cent ownership from $10 billion to $20 billion. At $20 billion they have to get down to 50 per cent ownership; at $30 billion, to 25 per cent ownership; and at $40 billion, to the 10 per cent rule. On that basis major banks would be at the 10 per cent rule. Perhaps there could be some narrowing of the ownership requirement for the National Bank. That suggestion in committee was well thought out. It leaves ample opportunity for development of our financial institutions and ensures that, as the institutions become larger, there is divestiture and an opening of investment opportunity.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very entertaining and interesting comments, and I should like to ask him a couple of questions. His general thrust was that we should be treating everyone in the same way, and he referred to the four pillars. If these rules were put in place, would we indeed be treating everyone in the same way? I understand that there are certain exceptions under provincial legislation. For example, the Laurentian Group is controlled ultimately by an insurance company. It is a holding company which I believe has interests in a savings bank and is becoming involved in many other areas. I understand that the provincial legislation in Quebec governing it is considerably looser. If rules of this nature were in place, would certain financial institutions in Canada controlled by holding companies escape these rules and therefore be at a competitive advantage in relation to other companies?

My second question relates to the self-dealing ban. Canada Trust has proposed a ban on any business dealings with any company or affiliate of a company owning more than 10 per cent of the trust firm. On the face of it that seems to be solid; it is quite a formidable ban. The Hon. Member indicated that he was not satisfied with that ban and that there was still a danger. Why does he feel that that is so?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The proposal by the Canada Trust board was a board resolution. Board resolutions can be altered the next day by other board resolutions. It is a nice resolution to have on the books. There are certain self-dealing bans already in the Loan Companies Act and the Trust Companies Act, and several further self-dealing bans will be proposed. Perhaps the Hon. Member might find it entertaining to attend the meeting of the Finance Committee next Monday. Perhaps he would find out how certain transactions were put together involving the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation to finance certain takeovers. Somehow those transactions managed to be treated as all right, even though they certainly do not smell all right at this point.

With regard to the Laurentian Group, the Hon. Member might find a breakdown of the financial intermediaries in the country on page 56 and page 57 of the English version of the report entitled Canadian Financial Institutions. In September the Laurentian Group was deemed to have, in total assets—that is the whole ball of wax—some $8 billion, so under our own criteria it could be a solely owned group.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in the debate on the motion presented by the Hon.

Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It is an important resolution because it asks the House to concur in the unanimous decision reached by the Finance Committee. It is not very often that a committee of the House consisting of Government Members and of Opposition Members is able to agree on a certain matter. It is important as well because we are beginning a new era of parliamentary reform in the House. I think it has been recognized by all Hon. Members that traditionally we are often caught and squeezed by the political imperative, particularly if one is a Government Member. There has been a desire on the part of all Hon. Members to break out of this static role and to be able to express our own opinions and feelings in a more active way. Of course the instrument which has been devised for this purpose is our committee system. It is hoped that in the committee system we are able to step a little further back from our political role and meet with fellow representatives, men and women, around a table to grapple with the social and economic problems of the country. We can achieve and reach a certain consensus and agreements for the betterment of Canada. Certainly the Finance Committee has done that.

I participated with many of my colleagues who have spoken today from the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party in the hearings last spring which went into our summer recess on the reform of financial institutions. Yes, there were some differences in that committee as we travelled across the country. Many of these differences occurred because of who we were, what our personal philosophies were and where we came from. But there were also some significant agreements, important agreements.

The motion today is a real litmus test, how committed the Government is to the work of committees, and how committed the Government is to parliamentary reform. If the people of Canada are to regain confidence in this institution, they have to be able to see Members of Parliament working and making common sense decisions together without being dictated to by the political process.

Canadian men and women desperately desire to see this institution reform itself to allow non-partisan ideas to be brought forward and to be acted upon. We have such an example before us today. We will all be watching to see how the Government will react to this concrete proposal. It is a very important proposal. It will deal with the economic well being and the social and cultural milieu for many years to come.

It is not just this particular item of the Genstar takeover by Imasco that is at stake, Mr. Speaker. If the Government allows the takeover, despite the unanimous recommendation of the Finance Committee, then we might as well forget the whole notion of committees of this House acting in an independent manner. At stake is not just a particular takeover by a non-financial institution of a financial institution. If this takeover is allowed, a signal will go out and the gates will be open to even more corporate takeovers and even greater concentrations of financial institutions. It will also destroy the hope that many Members of Parliament have in parliamentary reform. If the Government does not act on the unanimous decision of the Finance Committee, then surely it stands naked in front of Canadians as to what its real intention is as far as parliamentary reform is concerned. It will send out a signal that it is a farce, and we might as well all go home. We will be sitting here like robots, voting yes or no depending upon whether we are in opposition or in government.

I want to congratulate members of the Conservative Party on this committee. They are my true, real colleagues. We travelled across the country and heard submission after submission day after day. I congratulate them for playing an activist role in this House in their attempt to have the conclusion of the Finance Committee accepted by this House. I congratulate them in a genuine fashion. They are doing the job of what a Member of Parliament should be doing. We should all take them as an example. Perhaps the day will come when my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party might be in Government, or perhaps even some day the Liberals might be in Government, and all of us will have the courage which Conservative Members on the Finance Committee have shown today. They do credit to the Government and to their Party, Mr. Speaker. It is up to the Government, and we will all be watching whether the Government will hang them or respect them. We will all be watching that with great interest.

The question in debate today is whether the financial institution of Genstar should be taken over by Imasco. It is important, as I and other speakers in this House have mentioned, because it is a big takeover. It means that a big non-financial corporation acquires its own bank, in the words of the Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

What are the stakes here? Let us have some sense of the magnitude of what we are talking about. Who are the folks at Imasco? Imasco's total assets as of March 31, 1985 are $2.74 billion. Its revenue for the year ending March 31, 1985 was $4.35 billion, and it has a total of 18,300 employees. Imasco's holdings include Imperial Tobacco, which produces more than half of the cigarettes sold in Canada. It operates 2,540 fast food restaurants in the U.S. under the Handee's name. It owns Shoppers Drug Mart with 415 stores across Canada. It owns and operates 800 Peoples Drug Stores in the United States, and it owns and operates 460 tobacco gift and newstand outlets across Canada. Those are the folks at Imasco. That is the scale of its operation. It is pretty impressive and pretty big.

Who are the folks Imasco wants to take over, the people at Genstar? The total assets of Genstar as at December 31, 1985 were $25.4 billion. Its revenue for the year ending December 31, 1985 was $2.34 billion, and it has 18,000 employees. Genstar owns Canada Trustco Mortgage Company, Canada's largest trust company and the sixth largest financial institution in Canada with assets of $21.7 billion. It is also involved in building materials, industrial services, marine services, real estate and land development. In other words, the people who own fast food chains, drug stores and make cigaretts want to acquire this major trust company.

What is wrong, Mr. Speaker, with a non-financial institution taking control of a financial institution? The Chairman of the Finance Committee, I think, did a pretty good job in explaining to the House and to Canadians what is wrong with it.

Let me reiterate some of his points. It means that a non-financial institution has control over a financial institution and that financial institution gets its assets from depositors, not its own money but other people's money. It uses other people's money to acquire power and, the way the Chairman of the Finance Committee describes it, the leverage. It acquires this power not out of its investment and capital but from other people's deposits and the trust of other people. If you place your life savings as a depositor in a financial institution, you do it out of a sense of trust that that financial institution will manage the money properly. That money will be there on deposit when you want to withdraw it. It is a tremendous act of trust by the depositors.

The financial institution then uses that money. If that financial institution is owned by a non-financial institution, what is there to stop it from using those deposits for the interest of the non-financial part of the conglomerate as a source of cheap capital to expand or take over other companies? They can prevent loans to their competitiors. They can discriminate against their corporate enemies and favour their corporate friends. Self-dealing is one way of explaining the potential conflict of interest between the financial and non-financial side of a conglomerate. We in the NDP feel this is wrong. Today we have heard Members of the Liberal Party tell us they also consider this wrong. Of course, they had many years to do something about it but neglected to do so. During their tenure they allowed large conglomerates to be organized in this country. However, I am heartened to hear that members of the Liberal Party are finally saying enough is enough. I am doubly heartened to hear that Members of the Conservative Party are also saying enough is enough. We have to draw the line. We in the NDP have been saying that for quite a number of years but, as with many other things, the Conservative and Liberal Parties are finally catching up with us. I am glad to hear that today is the day those two old line Parties are finally beginning to realize that the rate of economic concentration which is occurring and has occurred in this country has now reached such a level that a line has been drawn.

The political and economic well-being of this country is now in danger. When you have such a concentration of economic power in fewer and fewer hands, not only are those fewer and fewer hands able to dictate the economic well-being of this country, but eventually your political freedom and political independence become endangered. Once you allow so much power to be amassed in so few hands, Governments bend to their will. If they do not like what Governments are doing or what the people decide in elections when they elect certain types of Government which the conglomerates and those who control them do not agree with politically, they will use their economic power to destroy those Governments.

We hear a lot about the inequities of labour unions going on strike, especially involving vital industries. However, we do not hear very much about capital going on strike. We generally believe in the freedom of capital, although we do not necessarily believe in the freedom of working people to withdraw their services. We pass legislation to send working people back to work but we do not pass legislation to prevent capital from going on strike and leaving certain jurisdictions. That has been done in the past in this country. When they do not like the political climate or the Government of a certain jurisdiction, they have gone on strike and removed their capital. They have closed some plants. They have not reinvested. They have created a milieu of labour unrest and high unemployment, which then forces the Government into political defeat or political subservience to the economic masters. There is a very real danger that if we allow these corporate takeovers to continue, our political and democratic freedom will begin to erode.

It is very difficult to unravel that power once it has been accumulated, very, very difficult. I think every member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was tremendously impressed by the Chief Executive Officer and President of Cadillac-Fairview Corporation. Not only was I impressed, I was astounded, to tell you the truth, when Mr. Bernard Ghert made his presentation to our committee. He warned us in a very dramatic and direct way of the political and economic dangers which occur when financial and non-financial institutions are married together. I believe he recently sent to every Member of Parliament a copy of his address to the Vancouver Board of Trade at the World Trade Centre in Vancouver, and I would like to quote from that. He said:

> Let me give you just a few examples of how economic power is exercised, even under present conditions.
> -It can be used to advance the interests of some customers or suppliers or penalize others who are out of favour.
> -It can undermine the position of rivals in ways inconsistent with maximizing the wealth of one's own shareholders.
> -It can provide excess rewards, pecuniary or otherwise, to the top management coalition that effectively controls the group.
> -Economic power can be used to influence public policy through the political process, that is, lobbying, advocacy advertising, public relations, campaign contributions and directing corporate locational decisions.
> These are not just theoretical situations. The public record provides examples of the use of corporate power in ways detrimental to the general good of the Canadian people.
> As an example of what is going on, I know of an instance where if the witnesses were required to testify under oath, they would tell about one financial institution which had instructions from senior executives of the parent non-financial company to refuse a loan to its competitors.

I will end my remarks with that quotation. It is a warning from surely one of the great captains of capitalism in this country, the President and Executive Director of Cadillac-

Fairview Corporation, one of the largest real estate developers in this country. He has stuck his neck out and warned Members of Parliament to stop the erosion of economic and political democracy and recommends against the close ownership of financial institutions by non-financial institutions. In fact, he advocates a roll-back. I hope this Government will heed the warnings not only of its own committee but of people like Mr. Bernard Ghert. I hope it will agree with the recommendations of the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment and then ask the Hon. Member about his reference to Mr. Ghert's statement. We are now down to our last speaker this afternoon. All Members of all Parties have had ample opportunity to speak today and so far I have not heard one single Member of Parliament from any Party speak in favour of the takeover of Canada Trust by Imasco. With respect to the comments of Mr. Ghert, he suggested that there were four dangers. I would like to deal with each of these separately.

• (1740)

The first danger, he suggested, was that the non-financial owner could advance the interest of some companies or suppliers by penalizing others. As we know, there is a direct ban on loans between parent and subsidiary companies. Would the Member agree that an example of such a danger might be if a parent company instructed its subsidiary financial company to lend money to a third company so that that third company could buy something from the parent company? That would be a perfect example. Similarly, he has referred explicitly to Mr. Ghert's letter in terms of the second danger, that of undermining the position of rivals. Would he agree that the instructions of a non-financial parent to refuse a loan represents something that should be prohibited by law?

The third danger that Mr. Ghert pointed out was providing excess rewards to the top management officers. It was reported in the Toronto Star this weekend that as a result of this proposed transaction, the Chairman and the President of Genstar are each in a position to earn some $40 million this year. Would he regard those as concrete examples of the dangers that Mr. Ghert was mentioning? In addition, would he regard the selling of real estate by the parent to a subsidiary trust company as another example of a danger that could occur as a result of concentration of ownership?

Finally, would he regard the paying of commissions or finders fees by a financial institution to its non-financial owner as a conflict of interest if the non-financial owner was directing the financial company to perform certain transactions?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I would say yes, yes, yes and yes. They are all excellent examples of some of the detrimental effects that Mr. Ghert brought forward in his presentation, and that my colleague and friend has fleshed out. You could put in regulations that could control all of that. Some of the proposals in the Green Paper that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) introduced suggested that, yes, we can put in a regulatory regime that would prevent self-dealing, discrimination, non-arm's length treatment, and so forth.

When we travelled across the country in the Finance Committee I think we all came to the conclusion that if you are going to control that through regulations, you are going to end up with such a bureaucracy that you will need people working in those companies checking over everybody's shoulder to make certain that it never occurs. I do not think there was one member of the Finance Committee who felt that that was a realistic way to go.

Once you open the door to allowing non-financial and financial institutions to be married and in bed together, you cannot really control their sex ethics by government regulation. It invites such a horrendous policing that it is unrealistic. The Finance Committee came to the conclusion, and I believe rightly so, that the best way not to have that illicit sex was to keep them out of the same bed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that as a member of the committee on parliamentary reform I have taken particular pleasure in what is happening today. I think this is one of the examples of emancipating the back-bencher and giving him a role that he has, hitherto, not really enjoyed in Canada. It is sending a signal across the country that while we have elected a Government to take the correct initiatives, it is not always right. The Government could be wrong, and human frailty being what it is, the Government is capable of making mistakes. The process we are going through now is one of the checks and balances that operate in the system.

It is with that introductory remark that I want to engage the Member who just spoke with respect to his introductory statements in which he was complimenting the system and the reform that has taken place. I was somewhat surprised, and I guess saddened, that he had to conclude that if the Government does not respond correctly to what the committee does then, in effect, the committee has been hung out to dry. I was saddened to hear that kind of imputation of motives behind everything that goes on here in the Chamber as a result of this new reform mood that we have.

Surely, the whole package of reform is designed, first of all, to give freedom to the back-bencher and not to impute motives. As soon as you impute motives you are bringing into the arena all the confrontation we are trying to dilute in the reform package. As we indicated on the night the reform package was accepted in the House, the purpose of all of this is to give meaning to the back-bencher. That is not simply to exercise power politics, as important as that may be sometimes, but to do away with a lot of the confrontation that goes on, the name calling and the power blocks.

I hope that the Member who spoke in the debate wlil recognize that the purpose of the reform is to do away with the confrontation that is going on constantly and to look for solutions rather than, by imputing motives, again stimulate controversy and get into the whole area of antipathies rather than reconciliation.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thought that in my introductory remarks I commented on the fact that the reform and the greater importance of the committee was an opportunity for us to move away from confrontational type politics by allowing men and women to represent their constituents equally by sitting down together around the table and arriving at more common-sense conclusions. I felt that that was important. In part what was at stake here in this debate as well was how the Government accepted that process and how real and viable it was to become.

Here in this House today, as has been pointed out, not one Member has stood in his place and suggested that this takeover should occur. We are here as ordinary Members of Parliament, not Government Members, not opposition Members, but just ordinary representatives of the folks back home. It appears to me that all of us who have spoken on this have come to the same conclusion and the same feeling. You would tend to think then that in a democratic parliamentary system it should be our will that should prevail. Every Member of this House who has spoken has come to that conclusion, that this is not a wise transaction to take place. I was expressing our hope that our will would prevail in this, and not the will of somebody who makes decisions in the back room or in the financial office towers of the bureaucracy. That, indeed, for us as ordinary Members of Parliament is very important. I certainly was not trying to drag this into a confrontational debate again. I was expressing a real, genuine, sincere hope.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Kamploops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). However, before making any specific comments on the subject, I want to say that I agree with the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) who said that when all was said and done, today was an historic one in Parliament. The fact that a Member can table a decision by a Standing Committee is the result of the spirit of openess our Government has shown with respect to the role of Members in the House.

Mr. Speaker, when we came to power in 1984, there were fifteen members on each Standing Committee. They were not terribly motivated to sit on a regular basis and give thorough consideration to every Bill and every question that came before the Committee.

As part of our review of the role of Members, we have made it possible for Members to do so, and today, the Standing Committees are far more lively. They now consist of seven members and they are interested in the subject, and this explains why today, a committee, on its own initiative, would raise a question for debate in the House of Commons.

So what it all boils down to is the upgrading of the role of the Member of Parliament under this Government. The only backbenchers left on Parliament Hill will be voluntary backbenchers, Mr. Speaker. The others are free to exercise on their legislative and administrative role for the benefit of this country.

To get back to the subject we are considering today, the Hon. Member recommends that the Government prevent the acquisition of Genstar by Imasco, by which the Directors of Imasco would control Genstar, because Genstar itself controls a major financial institution, namely, Canada Trust.

That is the question. If the previous Liberal Government, Mr. Speaker, had given us the appropriate legislative framework so that we could appreciate the relevance of this question and the Minister could make a decision or make recommendations, we could immediately proceed to analyze the question, but the Liberals never legislated the matter of quasi banks.

The Finance and Economic Affairs Committee spent several weeks listening to quite a number of witnesses. It has produced an excellent report, and at this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the members of this Standing Committee who meet at least four times a week, under their Chairman, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Their Chairman is known as a real workhorse!

I am therefore delighted to emphasize the role played by this Committee and the tremendous amount of work it does each week on Parliament Hill.

The recommendation made by the Hon. Member opposite asks us to look at today's question from a broader perspective. Mr. Speaker, our Government is not going to play the fireman's role in this case, which in fact is something it has never done. We must appreciate all sides of the question and all the problems related to this particular area.

Bearing this in mind, our Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) has already tabled her Green Paper on banks and financial institutions and the evolution of the legislative process. This is something that had never been done under the previous Liberal administration. At the time, the Liberals allowed approximately 70 near banks to be established without bringing in any kind of legislation to regulate the situation.

And we have seen one of the results. It cost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion, and all because of the neglect and improvidence of the previous Liberal Government.

The Minister of State (Finance) also introduced quite a specific piece of legislation as early as November 1985, Bill 103, an Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act in respect of certain regulatory matters. If that Act were to pass, the Minister would be empowered to step in whenever the take-over of a financial institution would not be in the public interest.

Briefly stated, the major principles that will guide our legislation, Mr. Speaker, are the following: to increase consumer protection; to avoid insider transactions between different companies, in other terms where the owners of small businesses take over those of the other company, and vice versa; to foster competition, innovation and efficiency, to increase opportunities and choices of access to financial markets, to widen available sources of credit for our business corporations, to foster—and this is important—the meshing in of federal and provincial policies.

The Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is in tune with many of the comments and recommendations in the green paper put forward by the Hon. McDougall. Because both the green paper and the committee report prohibit transactions between associated persons, they favour the immediate updating of the legislation concerning trust companies, finance companies and near banks.

Once enacted, Bill C-103 in cases where the takeover of companies would give the new owners control over near-banks, the Minister probably can suspend voting rights involved in the purchase, and direct that the shares will be placed in trust in order to be eventually redistributed to a wider base. Bill C-103 will make it possible for the Government to protect the interests of Canadians, while at the same time giving consideration to mergers that are useful and profitable in the long run, since this legislation takes account of the fact that we no longer live in a purely Canadian context. We live in a North American context where big business is the only way to ensure profitability and success. Furthermore, we are living in an increasingly western and, soon, a world context. That is why this Bill will have to protect the interests of consumers while striking a fair balance with the interests of business people and investors.

A few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) say that he was going to sit down and admire the courage of Conservative Members in relation to the question before the House today. If the Hon. Member for Regina East means what he says, I too will have an opportunity to admire his courage and determination, in his enthusiasm for helping along the legislative process with respect to Bill C-103 and the time he will help save the House by activating this legislative process. The same comment is directed today to the Liberals on the other side of the House. There will have to be a measure of continuity in their speeches today and they will have to work together to activate the legislative process with respect to Bill C-103.

So today, we have a wonderful example of co-operation among all parties of the House at the Standing Committee level. If the Members of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party were in good faith, let them prove it in the days to come, let them support us and help us get this Bill through the House as soon as possible, so that any charges of abuse they could level at people who are tempted to invest and merge with bigger companies can be quickly analyzed in detail by the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House that today, as Hon. Members are no doubt aware, we are celebrating the anniversary of the proclamation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which took place on April 17, 1982, and also of the coming into effect a year ago of the provisions guaranteeing equality for all members of our society.

[English]

It is a day on which Hon. Members will come together to commemorate a commitment to equality, social justice, tolerance and fairness for all Canadians in keeping with basic standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our Government has demonstrated its support for these important principles by taking steps to enforce the provisions of the Charter more vigourously. We took the initiative in assessing and amending current legislation and policies to ensure that they reflect a broad interpretation of the Charter. In doing so, we have tried to rise above the conventional political options and take a new and broader view.

[English]

At the same time we have been ever mindful of the fact that in order to make this a reality special measures are necessary for groups in our society, such as the disabled, women, visible minorities, natives, youth and elderly Canadians. For example, last December new initiatives and increased funding was announced to improve the status of disabled persons.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the role played by Canadians in carrying out this difficult task, which consists in defining the mechanisms for bringing about equality and social justice in Canada. When we asked for suggestions and comments in connection with major policy initiatives, the response we received was not only a very valid one, it was also representative of a large part of Canadian society.

[English]

We are committed to the continuation of this process of consultation because we believe Canadians have the right to participate in the development of policy that fundamentally affects their lives.

There is no doubt that the charter is affecting all of our lives. It requires courts and Governments to be ever aware of the need to balance individual and societal rights in a fashion which facilitates society's interest with the least amount of restriction upon individual rights. The charter is giving individuals a new opportunity to seek redress when their rights are infringed upon. It also imposes on all an obligation to be tolerant of the rights of others.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as we take further steps to promote equal opportunity, access to social benefits, respect for our official languages and other measures designed to give all Canadians a fair chance to succeed in our society, we will try to build a better society for all Canadians, a society founded on the basic principles enshrined in our Constitution.

I hope that all Hon. Members will continue to work towards achieving this collective goal.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for his words on this important day, the fourth anniversary of the proclamation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is also the first anniversary of the Charter being brought into force. We in Canada can be proud, in a world as we see it today, of the fact that we are a torch held aloft for freedom. Canada is a nation perceived throughout the world as a democracy, one that is tolerant, one that has signed the International Human Rights Covenants and given leadership in all aspects of human rights. We have also shown we are prepared to carry out those rights within our own homeland. We do not, as some countries do, merely talk. Our laws bring substance to the kind of society we wish to have, a society which respects people of all races, colours, religions, sex, and background. That is to our glory. We can be very proud and I want to join with all Members of this House in proclaiming this happy occasion.

We in the Liberal Party have some very special reasons to be proud of the role we have played over the years in this respect. Certainly everyone in my caucus is concerned about human rights. We can look back at some of the major events, not to mention the many minor events, which have occurred in the past in an effort to uphold human rights and equality. For example, the bringing into effect of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the Court Challenges Program for official languages, and The Charter of Rights and Freedoms itself. Then, of course, there are the guidelines which have been in existence in Treasury Board and so on to try and make sure that people have equality in the Public Service. However, we have a ways to go.

Those in my caucus who are policy critics in various areas should really be given some opportunity to speak, but they cannot since only one person can respond. Our Party Whip expresses his concerns as official languages critic, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), is our employment critic, our labour and housing critic is also on our committee for social policy, our critic for communications, as well as working on the status of women and youth, has given great leadership in this area, and I would also like to bring forward the name of the critic for the status of women, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin); all of those people deserve an opportunity to express their views so I am trying on their behalf to simply express the fact that they and the rest of our caucus are particularly interested in the struggle being carried on in our country to bring equality to all our people.

However, it is not enough to merely have guidelines and to speak in generalities. We must also have teeth in our law. We must have legislation and charters which will allow people to come before the courts with their concerns and grievances with some effect and justice.

Therefore, on behalf of this party I would like to say that we are not satisfied, despite the past, that we have done enough, particularly at this time when we are considering Bill C-62, to see that the handicapped, the native peoples and women of our country, the visible minorities, have legislation with teeth. On this occasion I call upon the Government to try to change its Bill so that it will recognize the urgent need to bring justice and freedom to our people.

[Translation]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party and join the other Members of this House in celebrating the anniversary of the proclamation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and especially the first anniversary of the proclamation of Section 15 of the Charter.

[English]

Certainly all of us in this House are very proud of the proclamation of the Charter of Rights. I know the history of my colleagues in the NDP, and our predecessors in the CCF, who fought long, hard and valiantly to ensure entrenched protection of human rights in Canada's Constitution. One year ago today we proclaimed the final section of the Charter of Rights, Section 15. At the same time all of us expressed the hope that it would not be necessary to rely upon court challenges to enforce and protect fundamental rights such as the right to equality, the right to protection against discrimination on the grounds set out in Section 15, indeed on grounds which were not set out specifically but which were implicitly included, such as political belief and sexual orientation. One year later we must examine with care the record of the Government. I believe that in examining that record against the bench-mark of equality, Section 15, we must say that much work remains to be done in order to ensure that equality is a reality for all Canadians.

We celebrate today the accomplishments of those Canadians who fought so hard for a strong, entrenched Charter of Rights. The ad hoc women's committee who, in a tremendous display of energy and dedication from right across this land, came together and insisted on the inclusion of Section 28 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The disabled, groups such as COPOH and others, who appeared day after day before the Constitution Committee and to this day have insisted upon real action towards equality.

I would note in that regard the concern expressed by groups representing the handicapped, in particular the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, with respect to the Government's response on human rights and fundamental freedoms. They suggest that if they were to give a grade to the Government's response, it would be a D minus. They criticize the paternalistic approach taken by the Government. I note in that regard that because of the absence of effective legislative response to equality provisions of the Charter, it will indeed be necessary to make major challenges in the courts of this land. In that regard I note with regret that the Government has still not accepted the recommendations of the Canadian Council on Social Development which over a month ago submitted recommendations for a panel for the Court Challenges Program. I take this opportunity to call upon the Secretary of State to approve that panel and let the CCSD get on with the business of funding these important court challenges.

Mr. Speaker, there are other questions as well in this area, and I might mention, for instance, the pressing need for an amendment to our equality rights legislation.

—the Canadian Human Rights Commission on reasonable accommodation to reverse the effect of the Binder decision in the Supreme Court of Canada.

As we stand here today celebrating the proclamation of Section 15 and the Charter, once again I urge the Government to recognize that equality still remains to be achieved by many in Canada, including women, in the field of the economy and child care, visible minorities, native people, gays and lesbians, and the disabled. Equality must be a reality.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON TEST RANGE, NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): I have a petition that I would like to present on behalf of a number of people from British Columbia who pray that the Government will not renew the agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to a test range in Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They want to bring to an end all weapons testing in the test range and convert the test range to peaceful purposes. I would like to file this petition on their behalf.

SMOKING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-287, An Act to control smoking in public buildings and facilities.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a brief word of explanation to my colleagues in the House that this Bill, An Act to control smoking in public buildings and facilities, is neither moralistic nor puritanically punitive. It is rather health legislation, aimed at what is clearly the number one health problem in our country, which has to do with the use and abuse of tobacco and the concern we have that people who inhale smoke directly or indirectly are encountering a very major health hazard.

In summary, I believe this Bill blends a reasonable accommodation of the needs of all Parties concerned in a realistic and practical way to deal with this health hazard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that summaries of Private Member's Bills are intended to be as brief as possible.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 15, consideration of Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 31A (Mr. Allmand) (p. 12262); and on Motion No. 32A (Mr. Allmand) (p.12262); and on the amendment (Mr. Cassidy) (p. 12263).

Mr. Speaker: Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, may I advise the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 13 minutes beginning at one o'clock today.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the other day when we were debating this particular subamendment presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), we pointed out that Clause 4 and Clause 5 do not contain any punitive action. Clause 4 states that an employer shall, in consultation with such persons as have been designated by the employees, identify and eliminate each of the employer's employment practices not otherwise authorized by a law, and so on. Those are clear instructions. But what if the employer does not do those things? There is no follow up action whatsoever. In fact, it sends a clear message, and this has been our point all along. Since there are no repercussions when an employer does not do what the law tells him he must do, the Government is not really serious about bringing about equity.

It seems to me from all of the evidence after one year of implementation of the equality section of the Charter, we have not made much progress. Judge Abella gave a speech at the Canadian Club the other day and pointed out that we have not made much progress with respect to equality for women in the workplace. The Government brings forward Bill C-62 and places certain responsibilities upon employers with respect to equity in the workplace, yet the teeth are missing from the Bill. I recall saying about a different Bill that the Bill was nothing but a "roaring rabbit". It is the same with this Bill. The message which clearly goes to employers is: "We have only put this in here for show. It is only window dressing". There was a demostration of disabled persons on the Hill a few days ago. They clearly pointed out that they are not hoodwinked by the Bill. I believe one of their comments was: "We are not stupid. We know this Bill is not going to help resolve the problem". We cannot masquerade this shell of a Bill as a Bill which is taking a step towards providing some equality in the workplace. That is why my colleague put forward his amendment.

The only penalty in the Bill is in Clause 6. Clause 6 states:

On or before June 1, 1988 and on or before June 1 of each year thereafter, every employer shall file with the Minister a report in respect of the immediately preceding calendar year—

That is with respect to how many employees and so on. The penalty for not filing that report is $500,000. It seems to me that that is not where we have to put the penalty. The penalty ought to be where employers are required to do certain things to actually bring about equality in the workplace. Very conveniently, the Government excludes the federal civil service from the provisions of the Bill. So the Government itself is not even prepared to accept the Bill as applying to itself as an employer.

We would urge the Government to accept the subamendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. I believe it would show the good faith of the Government. It would show that it really wants to do something about equality in the workplace. It would certainly send a message to the employers that the Government is serious about creating equity in the workplace.

I would not mind if the Government wanted to take the $500,000 penalty out of Clause 6. I would not personally be opposed to that. What is the big fuss about not filing a report? Members of the Government have said that we should not burden business with a lot of form-filling. Here they are putting in Clause 6 which requires a lot of form-filling. That information can be found out. After all, the employer has to file an income tax return. It seems to me that this is not where we ought to place the emphasis. Clauses 4 and 5 are the clauses which require employers to do specific things with respect to equity. Those are the particular clauses which need the teeth and not Clause 6.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments with respect to enforcement provisions in the Bill. This Bill was introduced in the House for first reading in June of 1985. That is almost one year ago. There was debate on the Bill at that time. There was debate on the Bill at second reading stage. There was debate on the Bill in committee. Here we are now back with it in the House of Commons. So it has had a great deal of debate. I know that the Hon. Member has been a party to that debate. I know that he realizes in his heart of hearts that there is an enforcement mechanism in the Bill. In fact, in part of his remarks he referred to the fact that there is such a mechanism. Quite clearly, as Hon. Members are aware, the Bill provides that there must first be a plan.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is the enforcement?

Mr. Redway: It provides that there must be a plan. Of course, that is set out in Clause 5. As the Hon. Member is also aware, the Bill provides that the Minister set out the requirements of the plan, which is set out in Clause 12. Under the provisions of that clause a Minister can issue regulations as to the guidelines for the plan.

Mr. Rodriguez: What if they don't?

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member knows quite well that under Clause 6 of the Bill there are provisions for the plan and the report. The subject matter of the plan has to be filed with the Minister and filed in the House. Then, as the Hon. Member is quite well aware, if the plan is not filed, under Clause 7 of the Bill it is an offence and subject to a fine of some $50,000. First, there is a clause for requiring compliance with the plan, as the Hon. Member well knows. Second, one of the problems with this area previously when it was considered by the Canadian Human Rights Commission has been that it has no information in front of it to deal with violations of the requirement to treat people fairly in employment. By passing this Bill and by requiring that the plan be filed, then the evidence will be available in order to provide the Human Rights Commission and—

Mr. Rodriguez: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect, I know that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) would not want to leave on the record information which could be misleading and which is misleading. In fact, there is no penalty for not filing the plan. There is no penalty?—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. That is not a point of order, it is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has the floor.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, just to respond to the Hon. Member's non-point of order, if I may. Clause 6 of the Bill requires the filing of the report and Clause 7 imposes a penalty for not filing it.

To go on, once the report is filed the information is then available, information which has been lacking in the past, for the Human Rights Commission to go ahead and deal with the matter. Quite clearly, the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members in the Opposition, know this. They know it in their heart of hearts. If they were coming clean with the House, as they always tell members of the Government to do, then they would be telling us that this is a great Bill. It is the first time that federal legislation of this sort has come forward. It certainly did not come forward when the previous Government was in office. It has an enforcement mechanism in it. It will do the job—the job it was intended to do.

Perhaps Hon. Members want to go one step further. Perhaps they would rather put people in jail. Perhaps they would rather not achieve employment equity. Perhaps they are not interested in making sure that all of the target groups, that is, women, native people, the disabled, and the visible minorities, have fair employment equity. Perhaps they are not interested in that. Certainly, I do not think members of the Party of the former Government were interested in that since they never designated visible minorities as a target group in the Public Service of Canada. In fact, it was not designated as a target group until our Government came to office in 1985.

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We love to hear the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) speak. But, for Heaven's sake, when he speaks he should speak the truth. That is an absolute falsehood and he knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. It is not a point of order. If the Hon. Member wishes to participate in debate she will have an opportunity. The Hon. Member for York East.

Mr. Redway: I certainly hope the Hon. Member will repeat that outside the House, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: With pleasure. Sue me and I will see you in court.

Mr. Redway: I will be looking forward to it in the same way I looked forward to her tabling some documents in another debate which she said she would table and never did.

Just to conclude—

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member understood the rules of the House he would recognize that ordinary Members do not have the right to table documents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I cannot believe that today, after the National Prayer Breakfast, and the fellowship which was expounded this morning, that on this beautiful Thursday we are now entering into this type of debate. I am surprised that we do not have compassion in the House. The Hon. Member for York East has the floor. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) wishes to participate in the debate then she will have that opportunity.

Mr. Waddell: We have now had the benediction, let's have the speech!

Mr. Redway: As I have indicated, there is an enforcement mechanism in the legislation. It is the intention to ensure that there is employment equity for those four target groups. However, it is not the intention of the Government to try to enforce this provision by putting people in jail. It is the intention of the Government to bring that enforcement about in an orderly and logical fashion. That is what this legislation is geared at.

There are many examples in the United States of legislation of this sort. I refer to legislation with respect to human rights and civil liberties, and legislation with respect to the desegregation of the school system in the United States where penalties such as jail terms have been imposed. Time and time again it has been proved that that does not work. In fact, I was present at a debate in a committee of the House of Representatives in Washington last fall when members of the committee were debating that very issue. At that time, the administration had been called on the carpet because the system which it had put in place did not work. The system being put in place by this Bill will work. If it does not work there will be other steps and other measures to come in the future.

The system which has been put in place by this Bill is the first step. It is the first step which has been taken by any Canadian Government. It will be an effective first step. Employers are already hurrying to ensure that they are in line by the time this piece of legislation passes into law.

At the same time, I think it is incumbent upon the Government to ensure that its measures with the Public Service are hand-in-hand. Although the visible minorities were not made a target group in the Public Service until last year, it is time the Government pressed on with those measures to ensure employment equity in the Public Service. I am sure the Government will be doing just that.

With that, I would urge the House to pass this legislation as quickly as possible, bearing in mind that it was introduced in the House almost one year ago. It is about time we put it into law. It may be that the rules do not provide for the tabling of documents by private Members but, nonetheless, when a private Member says he is going to do it one would think he would do it.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to speak to this subamendment but I am obliged to do so having heard the remarks of the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I might say that he has blatantly misled the House and the Canadian people on several points.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that is an unparliamentary remark and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It may be that the use of the word "blatant" is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Just a moment. Does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) have something to contribute to this?

Mr. Orlikow: A point of order, yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I entertain a point of order, could I see the Table officers?

I did hear some awfully strong language coming from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I do not think he really meant what he said. I would hope that he would withdraw at least that portion of the statement and carry on with debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what part of my remarks you disapprove of, but if it is the word "blatant" I will withdraw that word. However, it is my strong conviction that the Hon. Member has misled the House in the remarks he just made. I think that is parliamentary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will go along with that, but I feel that that is still very strong language according to statements that should be made in the House. I would hope that we could carry on with fellowship and compassion. Does the Hon. Member have another point of order?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, he repeated again a statement which I believe is unparliamentary and should be withdrawn. If it is your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that it was not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, it is my submission that the phrase used by the Hon. Member that the House was misled by me is an unparliamentary statement and should be—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member mind resuming his seat? The Hon. Member withdrew the word "blatant". It is not parliamentary to say "deliberately misleading the House" and I think that saying "blatantly misleading the House" comes awfully close to being unparliamentary. That is why I asked the Hon. Member to withdraw. He has done so and, therefore, I think he should carry on with debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want to substantiate some of the things I just said and describe how the public and the House could be misled by those remarks.

As I said earlier, Clause 2 of the Bill indicates that the purpose of this Bill is to achieve equality in the workplace. That is fine. That is great rhetoric of which we all approve. Clause 4 of the Bill says that an employer shall implement employment equity by identifying and eliminating barriers to employment for certain groups. That is fine too. It also says that an employer shall implement employment equity by instituting positive policies and practices to achieve a greater degree of representation for the target groups. That is fine too. Clause 5 says that employers have to prepare an action plan setting out goals and timetables. That is fine too, except for the fact that the action plans are kept in the vaults of the companies' head offices and are not communicated to anyone.

The Bill requires employers to do certain things but nowhere in the Bill is there a penalty attached if employers do not do those things. If employers do not live up to their obligations under Clause 4, there is no penalty for that. If employers do not live up to their obligations under Clause 5, there is no penalty for that. The only penalty in the Bill is described in Clause 7 which indicates that if an employer does not file the report required under Section 6, there will then be a penalty. Clause 6 simply requires the employer to file information regarding the composition of his workforce. As I pointed out the other day, he could keep on reporting year after year that the composition of his workforce has remained the same. He could have employed one woman in year one, one woman in year two and one woman in year three and he would not be subject to any penalty.

The subamendment to my amendment put forward by the NDP applies a penalty to Clauses 4, 5 and 6 of the Bill. The clause would then read that an employer who fails to comply with Sections 4, 5 and 6 is guilty of an offence. Right now the clause reads that the employer is guilty of an offence only if he does not comply with Section 6. For the Hon. Member to say that there are penalties in this Bill for not moving ahead on affirmative action and employment equity is false. If he can demonstrate to me that there is a penalty in this Bill for not living up to the obligations under Clauses 4 and 5, I will eat this Bill on the floor of the House of Commons. I am convinced that he cannot show me that. Not only that, not one of the target groups that appeared before the legislative committee saw that there was any penalty attached to those cluases in the Bill. Not one of them would agree with him. If he had attended the demonstration the other day and said what he said here in the House, he would have been tarred and feathered by those disabled people despite their disabilities.

There are no enforcement provisions in the Bill for Clauses 4 and 5 and that is why the amendment we are discussing right now is so important. In addition, the Hon. Member has not even read the amendments we put forward. No one is suggesting that employers be put into prison, as he was mentioning a few moments ago, for not living up to the obligations under this Bill. My further amendment which is now under discussion suggests that the fine should be increased from $50,000 to $500,000 but no one has put forward an amendment suggesting that we imprison employers if they do not live up to the obligations. That is a red herring that the Hon. Member has thrown on the floor before us.

Mr. de Corneille: Smells like a tuna.

Mr. Allmand: The Hon. Member also said that this is the first time a Government has put a Bill before Parliament to deal with discrimination against visible minorities. These people who were elected in 1984 do not know what happened before 1984. The Hon. Member is not even familiar with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which says that every individual is equal under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination, and in particular, without disrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability. For him to suggest that this is the first time any Bill has been put before the House dealing with discrimination on the basis of racial minorities is completely false. The Hon. Member is not even familiar with the Canadian Human Rights Act which was passed by the House in 1977 and also deals with discrimination against visible minorities.

As a result of the amendment to the Charter which came into effect in 1982, Subsection 2, there was put into the Constitution a provision that allowed for legislation on affirmative action. Therefore, it was after that was put into the Constitution that we could then proceed with a Bill on affirmative action, and that is what this Bill was supposed to be but is not. It has no teeth. Let us not hear Conservative blarney about this being the first time anyone has done anything about discrimination based on race, religion, ethnic origin and the like. They are not familiar with what took place. They are reading the press releases put out by the Minister, but they are not telling the truth, and everyone knows it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has left the Chamber. Even though he is not here, I should like to say that I do not remember when I have heard so many misstatements of fact and so much ignorance displayed in a 10-minute speech as I heard in his speech. He urges us to pass the Bill quickly despite the fact that he knows what was indicated by every group representing the people who would supposedly be helped by the Bill—the handicapped, natives, women and visible minorities, and perhaps I have missed some. Every group representing these people has registered very strong objections to the Bill and has said that it will not do the job.

What does the Bill indicate? In Clause 4 it indicates that an employer shall, in consultation with such persons as have been designated by the employees, implement plans. If there is no union, I do not know with whom the employees would consult, but I will ignore that point for the moment.

Clause 5 indicates that an employer shall prepare a plan, and Clause 6 indicates that the employer shall file with the Minister a report in respect to what is being done. It has already been pointed out that there is no penalty if an employer does not file a plan. However, I have a much more serious objection. What about employers who file plans which do not do what the Bill wants them to do? There is no penalty for that. An employer could file a plan every year in which he or she essentially says that nothing will be done, and there is no penalty for that.

Let me deal for a moment with the alleged analysis of the Hon. Member for York East about what happened in the United States. I do this because I spent about a dozen years working with the Canadian Labour Congress and other community organizations on the entire question of human rights. The Hon. Member is wrong. He either does not know the facts, or he does not want us to know the facts. I do not want to be called to order because I am using unparliamentary language, so I will try to be careful in what I say. He is just wrong.

People in the United States have not been put in jail, but the American law requires employers to perform. The American law calls upon employers to have objectives, not just theoretical objectives. It calls upon them to have numerical goals and to report on how they meet them. I know the Hon. Member for York East and the Government do not like that, and I know Canadian employers have expressed opposition to it. It has worked in the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers has said that it likes it. There is an ongoing debate in the United States which now has the most pro-business administration it has had in over 50 years. Because of their ideological approach to things, some of President Reagan's advisors want to get rid of the numerical goals. Canadians know Secretary of Labour Bill Brock because he was trade negotiator for a while. He is urging the President and the administration to keep the numerical goals. The National Association of Manufacturers, speaking on behalf of its members, told President Reagan that it liked the present system, the numerical goals in the Bill, and the manner in which the program operates. The association went on to indicate: "Tell us what you want us to do and we will do it. Then no one will be able to criticize us for not doing what the law says and no one will be able to take us to court".

I have a question for the Hon. Member for York East, for the Minister and for the Conservative Government which says that it wants to speak for all Canadians. Why will they not accept the arguments of the organizations representing the very people the Bill is supposed to help? They do not have to accept the arguments of Hon. Members of the opposition Parties; we only make our cases for blatant political and partisan reasons! Why will they not accept the arguments and the case put for making the Bill a workable one by these organizations which represent native people, visible minorities, non-Anglo-Saxons, non-protestants, older ethnics who have been discriminated against for many years, women and the handicapped, all those people who are under-represented in employment.

I say to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that I have not been enthused or impressed by the efforts of the former Government.

In conclusion, if one looks at American television programming, sometimes one sees a post office in New York, Chicago or Los Angeles. One cannot help but be struck by the large number of non-white people who are working in the post office. I just use that as an example. I venture to say that if one looked at a Canadian post office in Vancouver, Toronto or Winnipeg, one would see very few non-white people working there.

Our record in providing employment for members of minority groups is not a good one. We have a long way to go and a lot for which we should be apologetic.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members of the House share a common goal, employment equity. However, there are some philosophical differences and techniques. Some very useful discussion has taken place over the last eight or nine months, but that is what it is all about. That is what the democratic process is all about. That is what the House of Commons is for. We cannot agree on exactly how it will be put into effect, but we all want the same results. With concern being shown and with heart being put into the debate, we know that all Canadians will be well protected by the supervision, surveillance and guidance of all Members of the House of Commons.

In this particular motion we are being asked for prescribed goals and timetables. We had a feeling that that would mean more quotas, a new enforcement agency and more regulatory bodies. Those are the things we wanted to avoid. We did not want to worry about process. We wanted to worry about results, and it is results which we will all be monitoring.

I should like to clarify the following because it may need some clarification. Mr. Fairweather stated that reports submitted under Section 5 would give enough evidence of systemic discrimination. It is exactly what the commission wanted, and how it will deal with data was included in its testimony. If results are bad, the Canadian Human Rights Commission can conduct an investigation, including access to the action plans. If the investigation of the Canadian Human Rights Commission leads to evidence of systemic discrimination, the CHRC can impose penalties under Section 41 of the Canadian Human Rights Act. The Bill is mandatory in two ways—failure to report and the action of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Motion No. 32A would have the fine increased from $50,000 to $500,000. We feel that $50,000 is realistic. It is in accordance with other legislation, such as the Canadian Human Rights Act. For these reasons I am opposed to the two motions now being discussed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment. I heard my colleague say earlier that we all had the same objective in discussing this Bill because we supposedly all want to achieve equality. He added that all Canadians would be much happier with a Bill such as this one if it were to receive passage without any changes. As for me, I would be rather surprised if satisfactory results could be achieved before certain changes are made and certain penalties are included.

The Human Rights Commission is also being asked to act as guard dog to point out irregularities. If we refer to the hearings held by the Parliamentary Committee, we see that all the groups who appeared before the Committee denounced this piece of legislation. They all referred to the lack of seriousness and will shown by the Government because no penalty was provided and the Bill had no teeth. We have the impression that this Bill will be another smokescreen as often happens with the Bills aimed at women which this Government introduces. If we compare the Abella Report with this Bill, we have the impression that the measure as it now stands is a travesty of the report. We all know that, without penalties, it is impossible to have an acceptable piece of legislation.

All that is being asked of the employers is to submit a report in two years, in 1988, and we cannot even know their action plan. This Bill was denounced by all the groups representing women, the handicapped and the minorities, it includes no penalties and has no teeth, it provides only for voluntary action and it shows a lack of seriousness on the part of the Government. The Human Rights Chief Commissioner came twice before the Committee to make a submission and to say how important it was to include penalties in this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this shows condescension on the part of the Government, and as I have heard the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) say, it is the first time that such a Bill is introduced in Canada, but I would feel rather let down if I were a Member of this Government because I believe that, while this Bill is a first, it will also be a travesty instead of a serious piece of legislation. My Conservative colleagues might want to brag that this Government is doing something for women, but I would like them to be much more serious about it than they are now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is the following one. Mr. Allmand, moved:

Motion No. 31A

That Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be amended at Clause 7 by striking out lines 13 and 14 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. An employer who fails to comply is guilty of an offense and liable on".

The first question is on the amendment. Mr. Cassidy, moved:

That Motion No. 31A be amended as follows by deleting the following words:

"is guilty of an offence and liable on" and substituting the following therefore:

"with Sections 4, 5 and 6 is guilty of an offence and liable on".

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed subamendment stands deferred.

At the same time I must put Motion 32A.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the amendment to Motions Nos. 31A and 32A have been debated but not the motions themselves. The amendment to those motions has not been completed. I would like to speak to this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say to the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) that all three items were before the House when this debate was carried on. The grouping was Motions Nos. 31A and 32A and the amendment. I do not think I can allow the Hon. Member to speak with regard to the main amendment. The Member should have known what was taking place. I have to put the question on the main amendment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As you know, in the first place I moved Motions Nos. 31A and 32A together because that is how they were grouped by the Speaker. We started the debate on that. Then the New Democratic Party moved an amendment to my motion No. 31A. At that point Members were addressing the subamendment to my amendment. That subamendment has just been disposed of. Now we should be returning to the original debate on Motions Nos. 31A and 32A which were grouped for debate by the Speaker. The Speaker did not predict that there would be a subamendment to those two original motions. One could not address the original two motions while addressing the subamendment.

We had to dispose of the subamendment first before we addressed the principles embodied in the original amendment.

Mr. Gauthier: There is one question before the House.

Mr. Allmand: While the Speaker had grouped for debate Motions Nos. 31A and 32A, that was his right, but he did not group for debate a sub-amendment which we have just disposed of. In that situation I think Members who did not have an opportunity to speak on Motion No. 31A and Motion 32A should have an opportunity to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): After consulting with the Table, with unanimous consent we can allow the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) to say a few words on the amendment. Motions Nos. 31A and 32A were grouped along with the amendment. The vote was to take place. It is my understanding that there has been consultation with the Table. The Speaker has ruled on this previously. With the unanimous consent of the House, I will allow the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence to speak for 10 minutes on Motion No. 32A. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was waiting for my turn to speak to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I did not speak on the subamendment. My understanding of the procedure is that there can be only one question before of the House at any one time, and that that question was the motion amending the main motion moved by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East. I do not want to disagree with the Speaker, but perhaps he would like to hold that in abeyance and think about it. The Speaker's ruling grouped Motions Nos. 31A and 32A, but did not include the amendment, because it was moved after the decision of the Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is saying, and that is why I am inclined to allow the Member for Eglinton—Lawrence to speak. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier wish to speak on Motion No. 32A.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow it. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your decision on this matter. In his motion the Member suggests that the penalty should be increased from $50,000 to $500,000. Martin Luther King said that legislation, the law is a teacher. In other words, as well as punishing people, it teaches. We in this House must not think that companies should escape with impunity when they violate human rights. Many companies in the country would like to comply with human rights because they know it is good business to take advantage of the skills and abilities of the entire labour force. It is good business to have people of all sexes, colours, and creeds portrayed in advertising. Enlightened people know that that is good business. However, some people are not enlightened.

During the struggle for civil rights in the United States some companies hoped for legislation which would ensure that human rights were protected and impose penalties when they were not. They hoped for this because other companies were not complying and were able to escape with impunity for noncompliance with those rules. The enlightened people in the country thought it was good to have legislation which imposed penalties, and also that it was a teacher.

We should think not only of human rights, but also of human responsibilities. Through this legislation we are trying to make the employer responsible. It is important that this Bill makes employers understand their responsibility and that society will not tolerate such a lack of responsibility. Companies must conform to human rights. We are a tolerant country and know that the violation of human rights is ultimately our own loss, because it is a lack of use of our human resources, aside from the moral and compassionate grounds. Ultimately, it is wrong from every point of view. Therefore, we must not allow companies and organizations to defy the values for which the people of this country stand.

Today is the fourth anniversary of the signing and bringing into effect of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Secretay of State (Mr. Bouchard) is throwing a beautiful party for a thousand people to celebrate this occasion. It is hypocritical and cynical that on this very day we are debating in the House of Commons a Bill which has absolutely no teeth. There is a $50,000 penalty for not reporting, but for not reporting what? It is silly to pretend that this Bill has any compliance requirements or penalties at all. The rest of the Bill asks people to do certain things, but there is no punishment or censure for noncompliance.

On the fourth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms we demand that the Government put some teeth into this Bill so that it will not be a travesty of rights and freedoms. It is a travesty that the Government has not delivered to the people who are seeking justice amendments which will give them the assurance that the Government, in the name of the people of Canada, means business with regard to equality.

The amount of the penalty is one more thing which suggests that the Bill is toothless, weak, and lacking in sincerity to bring about a change for the organizations and companies which will continue, unchallenged, on their present course. In fact, in its present form, this Bill invites them to be hypocritical and to be part of a system which only pays lip-service.

If the Abella Commission had reported otherwise, Mr. Speaker, I would have no leg to stand on. If the affected groups were not outraged and disappointed, I would have no leg to stand on. However, despite the objections of all the groups which are supposed to be protected by this legislation, the Government ignores their advice and presses forward with an inadequate Bill. Let the Government, on this day, of all days, withdraw this legislation and study it, taking to heart the suggestions and objections of members of the Opposition Parties, those concerned about human rights in the country, the groups affected, and other groups which have allied themselves with them.

Let this not be a paper tiger. Let it not be said that something was done for the minorities. We do not want people to think that politicians talk through their hats, pretending to mean something when they do not. We do not want people to be further disillusioned with politics in a democratic system. Let their voices be heard. When the Government which wants consultation and then discovers all the people with whom they consult are saying, "Put some teeth in this Bill", walks away and does nothing about it, it cannot think the people of this country are going to believe it. Certainly it is placing, once again, further pressure on faith in the democratic processes, the political system, and on the nature of politicians and their ability to deliver on their promises. All these things are at stake.

Finally, and above all, what is at stake is justice for those people who have waited long enough. If the Member from Capilano can say that she is eternally optimistic, that is fine for her, but it is not for a handicapped person who has spent a whole life suffering from insufficient respect and an inability to have access to work. Those people are looking for justice now. It is not fair for them to have to wait with eternal optimism, as does the Member of Parliament on the other side. That is not good enough. We need it now and we need something that will give them assurance that their needs will be respected, and that they are going to be looked after now, at long last.

This is the day we celebrate the charter being in effect for a year. It was passed four years ago. Let this be the day the Government re-examines what it is saying in this Bill, and put the teeth into it that this motion is suggesting, and what the previous motion, which will be voted on later on, is suggesting, that Clauses 4, 5 and 6 be included under those areas of penalties and requirements.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I will be brief, Mr. Speaker, but still I want to make a few comments because this is a very special day: the anniversary of the proclamation of section 15 of our Canadian Constitution, section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Four years ago, as you may recall, the Government and Parliament, in their wisdom, passed subsection (2) of section 32 which reads as follows:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15—

This is from the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

—shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, today marks the first anniversary of the coming into force of section 15, so it is a special occasion for us, and it was quite fitting that it should have been highlighted at the opening of the sitting this morning when the Minister responsible made a statement to stress the significance of this kind of celebration to all Canadians.

To get back to the matter under consideration, Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by my colleague and friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the motion would increase to $500,000 the fine levied on an employer who failed to comply with the provisions of the law or contravened the law in one way or another. Amendment motions Nos. 31A and 32A are necessary because the Bill specifies a fine of $50,000, and we all know that such an amount would be small change for certain employers. For instance, representations have been made to provide special facilities such as handrails for people confined to wheelchairs or elevators designed to be readily accessible to the handicapped, the blind and others who experience difficulties getting around. When special facilities are required in the workplace, I do not think it is preposterous to suggest that a company with at least 100 employees would consider $50,000 the better of two evils and be prepared to pay the fine rather than spend $75,000, $100,000 or $200,000 to comply with the law. It would certainly be cheaper. This is not unheard of.

God knows some employers are not overly concerned about employment safety. Perhaps it is a sad commentary on the building industry, but it happens to be one of Canada's most hazardous trades, and 9 per cent of construction workers are killed accidentally or otherwise, and often the responsibility can be traced back to the employer who failed to take the necessary safety measures.

The same thing applies to the handicapped. If we want to spur private sector employers and urge them to improve their hiring practices, let us have the four designated groups in mind, and again I single them out: women, aboriginal peoples—including all Metis and Inuit people—the physically disabled and visible minorities or, as we put it in French, those who are the object of a certain discrimination because of their colour or features. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, this motion will give teeth to this Bill which we would describe as a toothless tiger, a tiger that does not threaten anybody, a cosmetic piece of legislation is the best way to label it, in my opinion.

It looks good, and it gives the impression that there is a desire to do something to remedy an unfair situation, but in fact, Mr. Speaker, this legislation, and we have said so over and over again, this legislation has no teeth, it is not forceful enough, and we believe it ought to include an important amendment, namely, that employers whose hiring practices are unsatisfactory will be fined $500,000.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on what was said by a Government Member, and I am referring to the Conservative Member for York East (Mr. Redway), who said that it was a first for an initiative of this kind. The Hon. Member should have done his homework on the matters now before the House, instead of causing Opposition Members to remind him that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was adopted by Parliament in 1982, and that since then a program was set up, and the Abella Commission and all the rest, and the result is Bill C-62.

But before that, Mr. Speaker, in the Federal Public Service, and that was since 1971, and I would like to send my hon. colleague from York East a copy of a list of steps that were taken by previous Liberal Governments to promote employment equity, for the disabled as well as for women, affirmative action programs for visible minorities and for the disabled, and as I said in the debate on previous amendments, today we can say, and we take great pride in this, that at the federal level, in all cases, our programs have had a remarkable effect on the hiring of these four target groups, and as I was saying last week, Mrs. Suzanne Azzi, whom you probably know, and who is known as the guardian angel of the Public Service where the physically disabled are concerned, Mrs. Azzi told me a few days ago that she had placed 400 physically disabled persons. Yes, 400! In Ottawa-Carleton this has been their practice for five or six, or maybe it was three years. These are people who would not have had a job if there had not been an employer who was able to meet their specific needs.

The federal Government has set an example, and now the Hon. Member for York East is trying to tell us here in the House that the Parliament of Canada had done nothing before Bill C-62 was tabled in the House.

Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous, and I don't think it is terribly constructive when we have politicians who can't get their facts straight and who expect us to swallow this kind of nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I simply want to say that we want to give this legislation teeth, and we therefore ask that the $50,000 fine, which may not be very significant to some employers, be increased so that it will be taken seriously, and that the fine now be set at $500,000.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 31A. Mr. Allmand moves:

Motion No. 31A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 13 and 14 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. An employer who fails to comply is guilty of an offence and liable on".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 32A. Mr. Allmand moves:

Motion No. 32A

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 16 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"five hundred thousand dollars."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Members will know that Motions Nos. 34 and 35 have been grouped for debate and will be voted on separately.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain, for Mr. Nystrom) moves:

Motion No. 34

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 9 by striking out line 23 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"year under section 6 and a consolidation of action plans received in that year under section 5, and shall, as soon as".

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out lines 29 and 30 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"10. Each action plan as required under section 5 and each report filed with the Minister as required under section 6, shall be available for public".

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to speak only briefly on the need for these two amendments. As presently written, the Bill would provide only that there be consultation and analysis of the snapshot of the character of the workforce. What is intended here is that the action plan would be included in the consolidated report and we would be provided with an analysis which would be tabled by the Minister, as well as the snapshot. It is a reasonable amendment and would provide for a report not only on the snapshot but on the employer's efforts at change. That is an obvious need and these are amendments which should certainly be concurred in by the Government.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we agree with both these motions, in particular Motion No. 35 which eliminates the fee that Canadians must pay for the report on employment equity tabled by the Minister. It is completely out of order that visible minority groups, women's groups, native groups and disabled groups should have to pay a fee to get the report on employment equity that the Minister produces. We think this amendment is a good one.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we disagree. Employers action plans are not included in the reporting requirements of the Bill. Therefore this motion cannot be enforced. The same rationale applies to Motion No. 35, so we would be opposed to both.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 34, in the name of Mr. Nystrom.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 35, in the name of Mr. Nystrom.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next Motion for debate is No. 37A.

Employment Equity

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 19 at page 5 in the French version and substituting the following therefor:

"Parlement un rapport concernant l'examen et exposant tous les chan-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is simply to correct the French version which does not say everything the English version says. In English it says they shall submit a report on the review to Parliament including a statement of any changes the committee would recommend. However, in French it leaves part of that out by simply saying:

● (1240)

—présente au Parlement un rapport exposant tous les changements qu'il peut désirer recommander.

[English]

My amendment would—

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we agree.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Great speech.

Mr. Weiner: This merely makes the French and English versions identical, as the Hon. Member indicated, so we should all vote for this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 37A in the name of Mr. Allmand.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 37A (Mr. Allmand) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next motion for debate is Motion No. 39.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain, for Mr. Nystrom) moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended by deleting the short title and substituting the following therefor:

"This Act may be cited as the Employers Human Resources Reporting Act."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 39A.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) moves:

That Bill C-62, be amended by deleting the short title and substituting the following therefor:

"This Act may be cited as the Employment Equity Reporting Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to change the name of this Bill to make it an honest Bill. If the Bill is not really going to enforce employment equity but simply require reporting, then let us call it what it is. That is the purpose of this amendment and the previous one. They are to make the Bill an honest Bill and not mislead the public.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that when we started on these amendments some days ago I said it made no sense to have the title of the Bill remain as it is unless it was a Bill which, indeed, had teeth. I want to endorse the comments of my friend, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) because I do not believe this Bill has any mandatory enforcement provisions. It has absolutely no provision for penalties for companies who do not comply. As far as I am concerned even the targets are secret to the companies. I would hope that the House would see fit to change the name of the Bill to reflect what it really is. It is not a Bill to encourage and promote employment equity. It is a Bill to help report on those matters.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am quite frankly encouraged by the respect for precision demonstrated moments ago by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary in revising the French version of the motion so that it now makes sense.

Surely this amendment would provide for equal precision with respect to the title of the Bill. It is a Bill which requires reporting. It is not a Bill which achieves, or even aims at achieving employment equity. I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will show good sense with respect to this amendment regarding the title of the Bill.

Mr. Weiner: No, Mr. Speaker, the Act is appropriately named.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to state for the record that I think it is a crying shame that on equality day we are bringing forth a piece of legislation which has been cited by every group and organization involved with equality as not leading to the very objective we are supposed to be seeking.

Mr. Fennell: The Liberals never brought in anything.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Members says the Liberals never brought in anything. The Hon. Member obviously does not know that the word "employment equity" was as a result of the Abella Report which commission was set up by the Liberal Government. It was the first Party to introduce in 1977 equal pay for work of equal value. The Hon. Member should get to know his facts.

The fact is that women, the minority groups and the handicapped, who were forced to come to the Hill in their wheelchairs this week, know what a sham this Bill is and what a sham is the Government's commitment to equality. The handicapped chanted quite clearly at the time, and it is the truth: "Mulroney, baloney, your equity bill is phoney". That is exactly what they mean. I think it is a crying shame that on equality day we are talking about a Bill which is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, obviously we are coming down to the close of debate on motions. This is the last motion and, appropriately, it is last because the question is about the title of the Bill. It is with regret, I think, that all Hon. Members in the House, at least those in the Opposition, see the last of this debate after our attempts to try to bring about motions and amendments which would improve this legislation and make it truly relevant to its title, that is, to actually bring about equity for rather large groups of Canadians. The women of our country are more than a majority; they are just barely more than a majority, representing 51 per cent of our population. There are many native people and minority groups all waiting for legislation which would give them strengthened support, to at last have equality. Unfortunately we have received no support from the Government for any of these motions. Therefore, obviously, this remains a reporting Bill, not a Bill which achieves anything other than verbiage. I regret, therefore, that we must support a motion which asks for change of the name of this legislation to the "Employment Equity Reporting Act" because it is nothing more than reporting. It is not an Act which brings about equity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 39.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We already in fact dealt with that amendment. We are now dealing with the amendment of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Thank you. The question is on Motion No. 39A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed with the recorded divisions deferred at the report stage of Bill C-62, An Act respecting employment equity.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

● (1300)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first question is on Motion No. 1. Mr. Nystrom moves:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-62, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 6 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"2. The purpose of this Act is to promote and encourage".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Nystrom), which was negatived on the following division:

Employment Equity

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. I take it there is an agreement.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are two brief matters which I want to raise. It is my understanding that we might agree to have the vote we have just taken count for all the outstanding votes. However, it has been brought to my attention that on Motion No. 31A the yeas and nays were not taken. If we could include that, then all the votes would be concluded.

Mr. Gagnon: Would you recognize my vote, please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, in opposition, and I take it the Hon. Member for Windsor West will be added in support.

Some Hon. Members: Now.

An Hon. Member: At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the absence of the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton), I should like it clearly recorded that he would have voted with the Government had he been here.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Ambition has no bounds. It being 1.15 p.m. I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.15 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

AID TO LITIGANTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Four years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government gave Canada the Canadian Constitution and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which express in legal terms the values we cherish, the values we want to protect and leave to our children and grandchildren.

[English]

Unfortunately, because the present Government does not have the political will to address discrimination forthrightly based on employment equity, reason of accommodation, equal opportunity, amongst other vital issues, ordinary Canadians will have to fight to equality in the courts and on the front pages of the newspapers.

We note that corporations have been the most successful users of the Charter in their own interests. They have the money to take the Government to court in lengthy, costly court challenges. While business can deduct the costs, individuals cannot. There are 55 cases waiting for financial help to start the process toward justice. The federal Government has set up a fund to help alleviate financial hardship for selected court challenges I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

CANADA-UNITED STATES EXTRADITION TREATY—CASE OF LEONARD PELTIER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago Leonard Peltier was extradited from Canada on the basis of information provided by the United States Government. The U.S. has now admitted that the information was false. This constitutes a treaty fraud between our nations, and should we sleep on this case we can surely expect a repetition in the future.

It is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to remedy this through his counterpart in the United States, and of the Secretary of States for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to do the same.

Leonard Peltier is an Ojibway Lakota Indian who sought political asylum in Canada. For 10 years he has been held in U.S. prisons serving two consecutive life sentences for crimes it now appears he did not commit.

The U.S. Congress has charged that evidence brought forward on the Peltier case clearly indicates "government abuse of the investigative process, suppression of evidence, and falsehood".

Religious leaders from around the world, four winners of the Nobel Peace Prize, 55 Members of Congress, and many others, have appealed for a new trial for Leonard Peltier. The least we can do as a House of Commons is call for a new and fair trial. As a nation we should also call for the return of Leonard Peltier. He was fraudulantly extradited—

ABORTION

PRACTICES OF APPROVAL COMMITTEES

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business is now considering my Private Members' Bill C-254, an Act to provide legal counsel for unborn children. This legislation has become even more relevant with revelations this week of more evidence about the functioning of therapeutic abortion committees. Questions have been raised about whether applications are considered in fact or whether they are just rubber-stamped.

This issue is a difficult one for many Canadians. There are millions who occupy one side of the debate or the other. It is for precisely this reason that it must be addressed. The abortion approval process is a matter that requires clarification. Mothers, doctors, and child protection agencies must know the requirements of Canada's Criminal Code on this issue. It is clear that practices have developed which are well outside the spirit of the Criminal Code. Many doctors may be unwittingly breaching the Criminal Code and are parties to criminal offences.

YOUTH

INTERNATIONAL PROMOTION OF "JUST SAY NO" ANTI-DRUG CAMPAIGN

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the House a significant event which concerns us all regardless of age, province or political Party.

A large group of young Canadians accompanied by the Polgar sisters of Hungary, the world chess champions, are working on the international promotion of the "Just say no" anti-drug campaign.

This initiative does me proud, for it shows once again that young Canadians are very dynamic and take constructive measures to ensure the kind of challenging future which will fulfil their aspirations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to offer them my full support because these young people are striving to restore peace in the world, an endeavour at which our elders have failed in many cases.

SHIPBUILDING

CITY OF VANCOUVER'S RESOLUTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in January the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association said the following:

The outlook for Canada's shipbuilding and allied industries during 1986 will remain dismal without immmediate government policy action.

The City of Vancouver has passed a resolution which reads as follows:

WHEREAS Canada's sovereignty over its Arctic territories has been challenged;

AND WHEREAS this challenge can only be met if Canada asserts its sovereignty through meaningful development of the Canadian North and the construction of appropriate ships with icebreaking capability;

AND WHEREAS the West Coast shipbuilding industry has developed a highly competitive ability to build such ships;

AND WHEREAS the continuation and well-being of the shipbuilding industry in North Vancouver is of enormous economic importance not only to North Vancouver but to the whole region;

AND WHEREAS the Conservative Government promised a meaningful job creation program in the West;

AND WHEREAS the North Vancouver shipbuilding industry now faces virtual extinction with disastrous economic consequence unless immediate action is taken—

ENERGY

EFFECT OF FALLING OIL PRICES ON SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Canada has a problem in Alberta. Alberta faces the bleak prospect of losing jobs, money, and people as a result of the dramatic fall in the price of crude oil. For example, as many as 15,000 jobs on drilling rigs may be lost by the end of this year.

David Hatter, a respected writer, said in The Financial Post:

Then "Americanization" of the Canadian oil industry is under way again, with major U.S. firms bidding for the remains of Canadian-owned companies that have been mortally wounded by collapsing world oil prices.

I would like to offer the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) the co-operation of the New Democratic Party. We will consider any legislation she wishes to introduce to help small Canadian oil companies, even that to get rid of the PGRT, although I do not think that is the answer. I think a floor price is a better answer. However, we have an open mind. If the Minister introduces legislation to give fair help to the Canadian oil industry, she will have the support of the New Democratic Party.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF STATIONS IN GASPÉ REGION

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Like my colleagues from the Gaspé Peninsula, Mr. Speaker, I would caution the management of Radio-Canada against laying too much emphasis on the ridiculous and altogether indecent suggestion to close down or transfer eastern station facilities in the more or less distant future. This suggestion constitutes a backward step, not to mention that it is an insult to the population involved. Incidentally, 10,000 Gaspé Peninsula residents have signed a petition to express their deep concern and determination concerning that issue.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this is a time for retraints and cut-backs, but it would be unacceptable and shameful if communities which are already quite underprivileged were to be the victims. Among others, Matane's station has been promoting regional interests for a number of years and the public has had nothing but praise for its commendable efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I should hope that the notions of justice, logic and human dignity will prevail—

LAW DAY

BAR ASSOCIATION'S ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, today, April 17, is an important day for Canadians. Not only was it one year ago that Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms became law, it is also Law Day. Law Day is co-ordinated by the Canadian Bar Association. This fourth annual Law Day is the biggest yet.

Today, across the country, hundreds of lawyers are speaking to high school students, community groups and the public about family law, consumer legislation, criminal prosecutions, and the courts. Mock trials, court room tours, and media interviews give the public a unique opportunity to find out more about Canadian law. Public legal education and information associations across the country also contribute to this important day as part of their ongoing effort to help Canadians become legally literate.

While we in this House bear the onerous responsibility of making the law, it is essential that Canadians understand their laws. It is appropriate that on Law Day we commend all who have made a commmitment to share freely their knowledge of the law with the public, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) for his continuing efforts—

PORNOGRAPHY

DECISION BY 7-ELEVEN STORES TO STOP SELLING PORNOGRAPHIC MAGAZINES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the management of the 7-Eleven convenience stores for their decision to stop selling pornographic magazines. Hardcore, violent pornography is having a cancerous effect on morals and quality of life in Canada. It is addictive. Erotica often leads to softcore pornography, which leads to hardcore, violent pornography.

• (1410)

With the benefit of the research of the Fraser and the Badgley Committees I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to bring forth tough legislation to stop the erosion of the quality of life here in Canada, the debasing of women, and the sexual exploitation of women. I urge the management of other convenience stores, such as Mac's Milk and Becker's, to follow the courageous lead of 7-Eleven.

THE FAMILY

ACCESS TO CHILD CARE SERVICES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, on this important day for equality, I would like to raise an issue which is of great concern for women, namely daycare services.

Since the middle of March, I have attended the hearings of the Parliamentary Committee on Daycare. I would like to call the attention of the House to the views of various witnesses. Many parents are asking that quality services be available and that they be organized by the Government.

Of course, we also hear about the great number of latchkey children. The parents are criticized for leaving their children without supervision, but when we look at the reason for this, we find that it is because daycare services are unavailable or simply too costly. It now costs as much to keep a child in a daycare centre as to buy two weeks of food for a large family or, to pay electricity bills for several months or the telephone for one year. This is certainly food for thought!

ORGAN BANKS

APPEAL FOR BEQUEST OF ORGANS FOLLOWING DEATHS

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for all the men and women who are willing to donate their organs. We have to applaud all these people who are aware of the need for livers, kidneys, eyes and hearts.

We have to encourage those who work at promoting organ banks. I take this opportunity to invite all Canadian men and women to contribute generously by donating their organs when they die. Thousands of people wait for an organ to give them some hope to improve or prolong their life.

This is the most precious posthumous gift that a human being can give to someone who is still living. The scientific obstacles have long disappeared, we now have the necessary knowledge in Canada and the hospitals have the required facilities. This is a priceless contribution.

TRUST COMPANIES

NON PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, for an example of the unfairness of our tax system one need only look at Canada's federally chartered trust companies. In 1985 their profits collectively went up by a whopping 44 per cent over 1984, yet their taxes paid actually fell by 4 per cent.

Specifically, the big winners in 1985 include Canada Trust Company which made a profit of $63,430,692 and paid no income tax at all. Montreal Trust Company of Canada made a profit of $14,642,890 and paid no income tax at all. Royal Trust Corporation of Canada made a profit of $52,545,427 and paid no income tax at all. Sterling Trust Company made a profit of $3,230,000 and paid no income tax at all. Eaton Trust Company made a profit of $709,980 and paid no income tax at all. THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN BANK OF CANADA RATE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Once again, Mr. Speaker, just seven minutes ago, the Bank of Canada announced a reduction of its bank rate from 9.33 per cent to 9.23 per cent.

Over the past few months, thanks to our budgetary and economic initiatives, interest rates have gone down by more than 3.5 per cent. On a $50,000 mortgage, this represents a saving of $1,750 per year, or $34 per week.

We have managed to help the economy recover without increasing inflation.

With our Government, Canadians' savings maintain their purchasing power, which was not the case under the Liberals inflationary policies.

We are proud of our achievements, Mr. Speaker. Business people have understood our message, corporations are hiring more and more Canadians, and our Government has put Canada back on the road to prosperity.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS ON BEHALF OF WOMEN

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, today marks the first anniversary of the implementation of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights guaranteeing every Canadian equality before and under the law. Canadian women fought vigorously for the inclusion of equality rights in our Constitution, yet women know that equality embraces much more than legal declarations.

Through a host of measures introduced during the past year and a half this Government has expressed the Charter's equality guarantees in practical ways, such as our Employment Equity Bill, the appointment of more women to the judiciary and to Government boards and commissions, legislation to equalize pension benefits for women and men, the repeal of the Indian Act's discriminatory sections, and our commitment to equal pay for work of equal value in the Public Service. These measures and others are evidence of the Government's commitment to equality for Canadian women.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WISH OF HUNDREDS OF CANADIANS TO LEAVE LIBYA—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

According to Michel Tessier, our vice-consul in Tripoli, there are now hundreds of Canadians who would like to leave Libya. What measures does the Canadian Government intend to take to provide for the immediate departure of these Canadians?

• (1415)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant touch with our consular officials in Libya. We are advised the situation there is stabilizing now. There is no immediate threat to Canadians. Therefore my responses yesterday, which no doubt the Hon. Member has seen, have not altered.

PROCEEDINGS AT OECD MEETING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue involving the safety of Canadians which must be followed up, and it will be. I ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian delegation at the OECD has received specific instructions to institute an emergency debate on economic sanctions which can be imposed to control Libyan terrorism, or does the delegation intend to remain silent as the Government has been for so many weeks?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): That matter has been discussed and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is at those meetings.

IMPOSITION OF ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what that is supposed to tell us. We have the Prime Minister in the House so let me try him again. Will he undertake immediately, today, to impose full economic sanctions against Libya and once again show the kind of leadership in the international arena for which Canada has been respected in the past?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a remarkable suggestion coming from a political Party which, until yesterday, had said absolutely nothing or very little to support this Government when we brought in, last January 10, the strongest economic sanctions against Libya taken by any Government of Canada, to the best of my knowledge. On January 10 we began building a strong set of economic sanctions against Libya because we took the view that terrorism was an unacceptable evil and had to be dealt with.

We believed at that time that supporting the U.S. in a series of economic sanctions would be the best way to proceed. It turned out that that did not find favour with a number of allies. However, Canada persisted in that view and supported the notion that this was an excellent first step to be taken along the diplomatic and economic route. That step having failed, other steps were taken by the U.S. Those have been discussed by myself and the Deputy Prime Minister.

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS IN LIBYA

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up with the Prime Minister on the topic of the safety of Canadians in Libya. Our consular representative has said that he has been inundated with phone calls from Canadians concerned about the critical situation, yet he knows of no plans to evacuate them. We understand there are three Hercules aircraft in Lahr, Germany, which could be used to evacuate Canadians from Libya. Can the Prime Minister confirm that is so and, if it is, has he taken steps to put those Hercules on alert, and are there any plans to use those aircraft to evacuate Canadians who want to leave that country?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first let me correct the hon. gentleman with respect to his statement that our consular officials in Libya are being inundated with telephone calls from Canadians expressing a desire to leave. That is simply not true. The Government has been in touch with our officials as recently as the last couple of hours and we have the direct assurance that there is no immediate threat to Canadians.

With respect to contingency plans, as I said yesterday and have been saying throughout, it is not helpful to the discussion and would jeopardize the very plans themselves to discuss them openly in public. The hon. gentleman, having been a member of a previous Government, should know that.

EVACUATION MEASURES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): That may be true, Mr. Speaker, but we can only go on the basis of information we have. The information we have from The Globe and Mail this morning says that Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: You have to get your information from somewhere if you cannot get it from the Government.

• (1420)

Our consul says they are becoming increasingly worried, and about a quarter of them want to get out—

Mr. Speaker: This is a supplementary question. Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Rompkey: If those Hercules are not going to be used in view of the situation, what are the Government's plans? Can the Government tell us what plans it has to evacuate Canadians in this serious situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the consular officials are not advising the Government in any way along the lines suggested by my hon. friend. Second, the airport is now either open or in the process of being opened for commercial travel.

Mr. Johnston: They will go by Wardair, I suppose.

Mr. Mulroney: The hon. gentleman from Westmount on a serious matter talks about Wardair. I can tell him that we do not do this frivolously.

Mr. Allmand: You didn't show up for two days.

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell him that we have contingency plans which involve the Government of Canada—

Mr. Gauthier: Tell us about it.

Mr. Mulroney: —to protect the security of Canadians, as opposed to these frivolous acts by the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXIT VISAS INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and it is on the same general topic. The Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister mentioned two days ago that contact had been made with the Government of Libya and that our Government had been assured that any Canadians wishing to exit would in fact be allowed to do so.

I wonder if I might ask if the Government has been informed that Canadians living in Libya now are unable to obtain exit visas because Government operations in Libya are not functioning and, even if there were ways of getting in there for normal aircraft, there would be no way for the Canadians actually to leave.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister indeed made reference to a communication we had received from a senior official of the Government of Libya. It is exactly as my hon. friend has reported it to be. However, we have no information that would cause us the kind of concern to which he refers. In fact the level of anxiety and concern among Canadian residents presently in Libya has declined substantially.

CASE OF CANADIAN FAMILY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister would be kind enough to investigate the case of Darlene Yarrow and her family who are now in Libya? Her husband is a teacher there. They want to leave Libya but they cannot obtain either an exit visa or a means of leaving the country. Would the Prime Minister determine whether that is an isolated case or whether in fact, as was reported in the press, she is just one of a number of people who have contacted our representative there in an effort to find a way to leave the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will be happy to do that, Mr. Speaker, and advise the Hon. Member just as quickly as I can.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in addition to that, I wonder if the Prime Minister would be prepared, either later today or tomorrow, to indicate to the House clearly exactly what Canadians living in Libya must now do in order to assure themselves of immediate passage out of the country if that is their desire.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have consular officials who are discussing this sur place with the Canadian nationals. We do not want to say anything which would exacerbate the difficult situation but I can give my hon. friend the assurance that we are in as close contact as is humanly possible with Canadian nationals and are working to ensure that any instruments they require to depart from Libya are made available to them.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM—COMPOSITION OF APPROVAL PANEL MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Secretary of State. Today is Equality Day and seven months have passed since the Court Challenges Program came into effect to enforce Section 15 of the Charter. Can the Minister explain why it is, still to this day, the names of the equality panel submitted to the Minister by the Canadian Council on Social Development have not been approved? There are 25 to 30 equality cases waiting in the hands of that council pending action by the Minister, and still not a dollar in the equality area has been put into the hands of those waiting for justice.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, since the Court Challenges Program was announced, we have been working basically on the Sub-Committee on Official Languages and the Charter's applications with respect to official languages. About twenty cases are being examined at this time. The Sub-Committee was formed some time ago, and it is operational.

As for the equality panel as such, there still are a few adjustments to be made, and the Hon. Member will understand that where such sensitive areas are concerned, it is important that members be chosen for their integrity and their objectivity in order to ensure high standards on the Committee. I think that the fact we are taking the time to do so guarantees the high standard of the decisions that will be made.

PROVISIONS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that nothing has been done on the equality panel. That is the short answer to the question.

Despite all the Tory election promises and the Abella Commission recommendations, all of which called for enforcement provisions, how can the Minister explain his support of an equality Bill which has been called toothless and phoney by the organizations, the people, and the groups which it is supposed to protect?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think I did answer the previous question. We are establishing procedures in areas where human rights are concerned, where every necessary precaution must be taken. We are quite aware of the problem and we share the impatience of certain groups, but we do not agree that accelerating the process will necessarily produce better results.

Once again, we believe that the procedures we have today are the right ones. We are working on very basic and fundamental matters, where our initial decisions will affect all subsequent decisions. I don't think we can be accused of—

CHILD CARE

PROVISION OF SERVICES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today we celebrate the anniversary of the Charter of Rights. Does the Minister agree with statements contained in two equality reports which state that "adequate, accessible, affordable child care is clearly essential if equality is to be achieved" and "the federal Government must move quickly to achieve this goal"?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the very recommendations to which the Hon. Member refers are in keeping with the promise made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign that this would be an important issue for a Government that he would lead.

In addition, through the Prime Minister's guidance and leadership this House has struck a task force on which the Hon. Member sits, to find out the best method by which Canada can address this question.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister will recall that the Prime Minister also promised funding.

In view of the child care crisis which is so evident in every province which the child care task force has visited, will the Minister initiate action within Cabinet to allocate emergency federal funding for child care during this year, 1986, as an incentive to joint action with the provinces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member sits on that very task force. She knows that there have to be additions, changes, and improvements to day care. We all recognize that. Week after week the task force has been asking for people's views. For her to say now that she already has a solution, regardless of the fact that the work has not been done, is unfair to those people appearing before the task force.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES-LIBYA CONFRONTATION—PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister tell the House specifically when and from whom he first learned of the American plans to attack Libya?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated that we were kept informed of developments, as an ally ought to be kept informed. We put forward views, particularly dealing with the safety and security of Canadian nationals in Libya, all of whom are still there. It would be singularly unhelpful to them to reveal any details in regard to that.

TIMING OF RECEIPT OF INFORMATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister two questions. I asked him when he was informed, and he did not answer that question. I asked him by whom he was informed, and he did not answer that question. Because I do not think that these are the type of questions he can avoid answering I will ask them again. Considering his good relationship with the President of the United States, will he tell us on what date, at what time, and by whom he was first informed? Specifically, what kind of advice did he give to the individual who told him?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not going fishing but is going to new heights of irresponsibility. He asked two questions and I have no intention of answering either because they could affect the security and safety of Canadians in Libya. That is an irresponsible suggestion the Hon. Member made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EQUALITY RIGHTS

MEMBERSHIP OF COURT CHALLENGES PANEL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, over a month ago the Canadian Council on Social Development submitted a proposed list of names for the Court Challenges equality rights Panel. I would ask the Minister of Justice why it is that the Government has refused so far to approve this important list with the result that very many important court challenges remain unfunded. Is the Minister in fact attempting to exert a degree of political interference in what should be an arm's length process?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman talks about political interference, and that is what he is attempting now. The position is that under the agreement entered into with the Canadian Council on Social Development, we have the right to approve the persons it has suggested should be appointed to the board which will have the very important task of deciding which challenges will be financed in this area. We have received a list and we are discussing with the council whether all of the names proposed are suitable or not and whether or not we think there should be other sugggestions considered as well, something which is within our rights. We are dealing with public funds and we have to be satisfied that the members of the board that is to be set up are perfectly satisfactory from all points of view.

PRINCIPLE OF REASONABLE ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important court challenges in recent months was the Bhinder decision in which the Supreme Court of Canada held that the Canadian Human Rights Act did not cover reasonable accommodation. I would like to ask the Minister for his assurance that he will move to bring in amendments specifically dealing with the important principle of reasonable accommodation without waiting for an over-all review of the Canadian Human Rights Act, because the Canadian Human Rights Commission has insisted that its work is seriously jeopardized by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any Government in the history of Canada that has ever moved so quickly to deal with matters of equality, including the matter raised by the hon. gentleman. In our response to the equality report which we tabled a few weeks ago, the Government has said that it accepts the concept of reasonable accommodation and is going to see that it goes into law. That will likely be done this year once legislation is introduced following our review of the Human Rights Act, but there is no necessity to bring hastily before the House an amendment on just one item when there are a number of items in the human rights legislation with which we need to deal.

WOMEN

LACK OF CHILD CARE CENTRES—EQUALITY IN LABOUR FORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her report on employment equality, Judge Rosalie Abella stated that the lack of daycare services is a major obstacle to employment equality for women. I would like to know whether the Government is prepared to support this view and acknowledge that the lack of daycare facilities is indeed a major obstacle to the equality of women on the labour market?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has very seriously and directly agreed that if women are to find equality in the workplace, not only in terms of opportunities but also in terms of working conditions, the issue of day care must be addressed. The Hon. Member knows, as she is a member of the task force, that those very points are being made by the task force according to reports I have received. It is for that reason that I look forward to its recommendations. We are looking at how best to do it. There have been other reports, like the Cooke report, about which there have been very serious questions concerning the figures, from some quarters. We are looking at how we can best deliver the service, keeping in mind the jurisdictional question as well, with the moneys available, and I think that that is—

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will not pre-empt the position of the recommendations that will be coming from the task force. The point the Hon. Member has made was made by the Cooke report and, as she will know if she will look at the responsibilities she has taken on as a member of the task force, the Cooke report is one of the things which the task force was supposed to assess and on which it was to give us a recommendation.

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—TRANSFER PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Premier of Quebec has just announced that Quebec will be receiving $66 million less in equalization payments for the 1985-86 financial year than had been expected. The federal Government has therefore failed to meet its commitment that it would maintain equalization payments at a minimum of 95 per cent of the amount Quebec received the year before. How does the federal Government intend to compensate Quebec for this loss of $66 million in equalization payments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last year, the Government of Canada took steps to clean up a problem with the equalization formula which had been pending for a number of years and which affected a number of provinces, including Quebec. Although it was under no legal obligation to do so, last year the Canadian Government took steps to provide relief for a number of provinces, including Manitoba and Quebec, by paying very substantial amounts, again notwithstanding the fact that it was under no legal or contractual obligation to do so. Last year, we acted fairly and honourably towards Quebec, and as far as I know, we have met and respected all our commitments to Quebec.

COMMITMENT TO QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the Prime Minister inform the House why the federal Government met its commitment to maintain the 95 per cent for Manitoba and Nova Scotia, while the supplementary equalization payment for Quebec is $66 million less, considering the 95 per cent which had been promised? Why did the federal Government forget its promise to meet this commitment to Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member is saying is utter nonsense. The fact is that last year, we unilaterally paid over $100 million to Quebec, which amount had been cancelled by the previous Liberal Government. It was our Government that gave more than $100 million to Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia, and so forth. This Government has rebuilt federal-provincial relations on a far more constructive and reasonable basis. We did not owe Quebec any money. We saw a problematic situation and remedied it last year in accordance with the objective criteria we shall continue to observe.

HEAD OFFICE CONTROL OVER NEWS STORIES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Last week in the House I questioned the Parliamentary Secretary on the spending practices of CBC Radio in northern Ontario, something which I thought was newsworthy. I have learned that a CBC regional supervisor in Ontario ordered regional stations not to run the story unless they first contacted the head office in Toronto. Would the Minister please ask the President of the CBC if every story has to be run through the head office, or just those that criticize the CBC.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm the existence of this CBC memo, directive or guideline. I was told about it this morning and I will wait until the President of the CBC comes back from China where he is now and ask for his advice, suggestions or ideas concerning this matter.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Given the fact that the majority of American Senators on the U.S. Finance Committee have written to the President requesting that he withdraw his request with regard to fast-track negotiations until certain outstanding resolutions have been made with regard to trade with Canada, can the Prime Minister indicate whether or not he has the intention of sacrificing any Canadian interests, such as softwood lumber exports and fish, and would he tell the House whether or not he has been lobbying the American administration in order to prevent these preconditions from being attached to any of these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of silly question one is loath to dignify with an answer. However, I would point out to my hon. friend that, to the extent that there may be an impasse generated by some Senators who represent timber-producing states, that may indeed have been brought about because of my reluctance and refusal to deal away the timber interests of Canada prior to engaging in any trade negotiations. I simply will not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Perhaps a silly question, Mr. Speaker, but a silly Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a short question, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Surely the Prime Minister and his Government have been canvassing U.S. Senators and Congressmen in the administration with regard to the preconditions they may be seeking. Will the Prime Minister explain to the House exactly what the preconditions are that are being sought by the American administration?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated the position of the Government of Canada is that we shall not accept any such preconditions. I think I have made that very clear. Moreover—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is so bad on the Liberal side today, Mr. Speaker, that we may have to ask for the return of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Why is he always absent when we are discussing important matters?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In a news release on February 27 the Minister stated that:

> The moratorium on FCC foreclosures will be lifted only when the commodity based loans and rural transition programs are up and running.

With no programs yet in place, will the Minister state more precisely the conditions under which he will now lift the moratorium? Will it now be after harvest? Is the Minister going to lift it now, or is he waiting for farmers to seed the crops so that the FCC can reap them?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the information contained in the Hon. Member's question, in which he made reference to a statement that I made in February, and which I made as far back as October or perhaps even September of last year, stands today.

PROPOSED COMMODITY BASED MORTGAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister still telling us, as the Budget said, that before farmers plant this crop they will have available to them a commodity based mortgage program? The people in FCC offices don't know the details. They can't assess whether a farmer is even eligible. They have to know their seeding time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is long.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not detect in the country or in my day-to-day communications with farm organizations any confusion at all. I indicated the moratorium on farm foreclosures would remain until such time as we have the commodity based loans program in place and running, as well as bankruptcy and insolvency legislation for farmers, and that is exactly where we are today.

Mr. Althouse: If they announce it in June, what happens?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment. The Niagara River is the source of drinking water for millions of Canadians and its pollution is everyone's concern. What progress has been made in negotiating a comprehensive clean-up package with the Americans, and how soon can we expect that package?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Government appreciates the Member's ongoing concern for the quality of water in the Niagara River. The clean-up plan requires the co-operation of the Governments of Canada, the United States, New York State and the Province of Ontario.

We have been engaged in long and difficult negotiations since October, 1985. While they have been long and difficult, progress has been made. We hope to be able to report a conclusion agreeable to all parties within the next several weeks.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DATE OF DECISION TO APPLY REGULATION WITH REGARD TO EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

While the people affected by the unemployment insurance and early retirement regulations are meeting in Trois-Rivières with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, can the Minister of Employment and Immigration confirm the date of the decision to apply regulations to applications filed before January 5, 1986?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised, as you know, a number of times in the House by different Members. I will tell the Hon. Member, as I have told others on numerous occasions, that this is a regulation which was introduced at the time of the economic statement in November, 1984. It was given a year's lead time before implementation. It came into effect in January of this year. The whole measure has also been referred to the Forget Commission for consideration, and I am awaiting the results of the commission's review.

INQUIRY HOW MINISTER CAN PRETEND TO HAVE INFORMED BENEFICIARIES IN ADVANCE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister claim that the beneficiaries were informed in advance when in her own letter of November 26, 1985 to the Member for Trois-Rivières, she indicated that the Government had not yet made a decision, and that she did not know what regulations would apply to applications filed before January 5?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will know that this issue has been raised time and again. What was taking place was conveyed to Members of the House of Commons. Letters were sent to all major employers across the country by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. People have been notified in company after company. Members have been notified. I will continue to ensure that Members are notified as they ask additional questions.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ACTION OF U.S. SENATORS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Prime Minister's ambush by the U.S. Senate and ask him to recognize the reality of the situation the Senators have requested, namely, that President Reagan withdraw his request for free trade talks until such time as a position has been worked out. Will the Prime Minister himself personally tell President Reagan that that kind of blackmail from the U.S. Senate is simply unacceptable to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the word ambush suggests some great untoward set of circumstances. I point out to my hon. friend with regard to that, that in an interview on Global Television on August 29 last I said:

> —my concern is that if we shilly-shally unduly that by the time we get there the Americans may say, well lookit we're not interested—

In my statement in the House of Commons on September 26 I said:

> Success is not a sure thing—

At a press conference on October 11 I said that I was far from certain that Canadians can take for granted that the Americans will sign an agreement or will want to.

I have been telling the House and the country this—contrary to the NDP which holds the unusual view that the Americans went down on bended knee just waiting for the innocent Canadians to come down and get their clocks cleaned. Now you find out, because you have been ambushed, that that is not the case all along, that it will be difficult because this kind of a deal will be a good deal for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. We could take the Prime Minister back to his words before he was elected, at which point he opposed free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Does the Prime Minister now recognize that he has been dead wrong in telling Canadians across the country that he could solve the trade disputes affecting our resource producers, and the thousands of jobs involved, by going for this free trade thrust? He has led us down a blind path.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that decency is a rare commodity when my hon. friend gets cornered as he is, up against the Detroit River.

I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to what the Hon. Member was saying that I didn't just say it to the House, I went to Chicago and on December 4 said:

> There is in Canada as in the United States some skepticism as to whether any such agreement could get by a Congress which seems to be growing more and more protectionist.

• (1450)

Contrary to what my hon. friend is saying, I was cautioning that this is not a sweetheart deal for Canada, that no one is down on bended knees in the United States, but that, properly developed, this kind of freer trade initiative—

Mr. Fulton: They don't even know your name down there, Muldoon.

Mr. Mulroney: —could result in new jobs, new wealth, and new prosperity for Canada. That is what we offered, as opposed to the old status quo—

Mr. Waddell: Play it again, Muldoon.

Mr. Mulroney: — which comes from the "apostles of reaction" approach by the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

MEAT INSPECTION—NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and is with regard to the third controversy in less than a year involving Canada's meat inspection system. Can the Minister of Agriculture confirm to this House, as reported in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, the existence of a memo through which an official of his Department in southwestern Ontario was asking meat inspectors to sign blank inspection forms and leave them with the management of various plants? Can he further confirm the report that tonnes of unfit pork and chicken were improperly approved for market?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that at the moment. That information was brought to my attention early this morning. Quite appropriately and properly, under the terms of the Meat Inspection Act, which does not extend ministerial authority to me, I made inquiry of the appropriate senior officials. The Member may take some satisfaction, as I did, from the fact that an investigation had already commenced before I called.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first it was tainted tuna, then it was TB buffalo, and now it is contaminated chicken.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Can the Minister of Agriculture assure this House that he would co-operate with a parliamentary committee to investigate Canada's meat inspection system and the position which it has been in over the last year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly confirm that this is not a matter of contamination. I do not know why the Member is so nervous, because I have every confidence in the meat inspection system of the country.

NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR CONCENTRATED APPROACH

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister is aware of my alarming statement, made the other day, that northern New Brunswick is now experiencing an unemployment rate of 25 per cent. I am also aware of the great success the Minister has been having in Cape Breton. Will the Minister now instruct his Department to make the same kind of concentrated effort to help Restigouche overcome its high unemployment?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is true that 15,000 more people have been employed in New Brunswick in the past year, an increase of 6.4 per cent. That is the best provincial record in Atlantic Canada but, unfortunately, it has not been equally experienced in every area of New Brunswick, including the Hon. Member's riding.

With this in mind, I particularly directed our departmental officials to look at his area and concentrate on it to ensure that the benefits of the Atlantic Enterprise Program, which will go into effect on May 1, will be felt to the fullest extent in his riding, as will the other programs which we have in place.

INDUSTRY

ALGOMA STEEL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is with regard to the announcement last evening by Algoma Steel of the lay-off of approximately 1,500 workers. Will the Prime Minister cause an investigation to be held, with public hearings, in order that Algoma Steel can come before a committee and justify the lay-off of 1,500 workers?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, Algoma Steel has been in touch with my Department. It has indicated the circumstances which now exist, which, unfortunately, are leading to the lay-offs to which the Hon. Member has referred. I assure the Hon. Member that the matter is in hand as far as the Government of Canada is concerned.

TAX INCENTIVE GRANTED COMPANY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. How does the Minister justify the $200 million federal tax incentive given to Algoma a year ago when, one year later, it is laying off 1,500 workers in a city which is experiencing a 20 per cent unemployment rate?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this involves two areas of considerable attention for us. One is the tax fairness which we brought to the corporation tax system. The other is employment opportunities throughout Canada, and particularly in areas like northern Ontario. We have always worked with companies—

Mr. Rodriguez: That's not an answer to the question.

Mrs. McDougall: —including companies like Algoma, to try to provide them with investment opportunities which create jobs.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DISTRIBUTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that on Equality Day his Government, through Canada Post, is assisting in the spread of pornographic material by delivering mass mailings of unsolicited pornography ads, including orders for films like The Good, the Bad and the Horny, Jail Bait, and Poonies?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the situation, of course. We have already begun an examination and we will have comments to make about this later on.

[English]

ROLE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible says that an examination has begun. I was told by Canada Post this morning that the material is all right because it is not pornography, but only an ad for pornography. What kind of signal does this send out when, on the one hand, the Minister of Justice is talking about stopping the spread of pornographic material and, on the other hand, Canada Post is aiding and abetting the spread of this kind of garbage?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has already brought this complaint to my attention.

Ms. Copps: Why has nothing been done?

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know how the Hon. Member got on this list as well. We are checking this with Canada Post. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we will be introducing suggested legislation to deal with the problem of pornography in general in the next few weeks.

ENERGY

EFFECT OF FALLING OIL PRICES ON SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. Would she agree with me that Canada is experiencing a real crisis in the decline of the Alberta economy due to the collapsing world prices? On behalf of my Party I want to offer the Minister our co-operation if she is prepared to bring forth legislation to help small Canadian oil companies. Is she prepared to consider helping small Canadian oil companies in Alberta in order to do something to help that economy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already assured the Hon. Member that our consultations in this area are going well. We are looking at all options which will provide some relief to an area of the country which is being badly devastated.

Mr. Waddell: I hope she will treat the matter with some urgency.

FINANCIAL POST ARTICLE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Does the Minister agree with the respected energy writer, David Hatter, who has written the following in this week's The Financial Post:

> The "Americanization" of the Canadian oil industry is under way again, with major U.S. firms bidding for the remains of Canadian-owned companies that have been mortally wounded by collapsing world oil prices.

Is the Minister aware of that problem? Is she prepared to protect small Canadian oil companies from being gobbled up by the big American companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member and this House that this Government has done more to increase Canadianization of the oil and gas industry than has any other Government.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LINGUISTIC PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Speaking on behalf of the Government last October 19, the Secretary of State said something about strong leadership and promised to maintain and reinforce the Government's linguistic programs. Then after an interview on March 10, 1986 the Secretary of State was heard to say: "It will take a lot of time to settle this matter." "We cannot take energetic action because the question is too controversial, too important, too dangerous."

Which of these positions is the Government's position? That of the person responsible for the linguistic policy, or that of a reluctant Conservative Government?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Between the month of November and the month of March,

Mr. Speaker, with the mandate of the Prime Minister, we made an assessment of official languages policies in three different departments. I am surprised that a Member with such experience, considering his situation, would suggest that a serious matter such as official languages might necessarily be resolved in just a few months.

I think there are very basic considerations in this issue. We are negotiating with ten provinces, each with different concerns with respect to bilingualism, and we must take that into account. The federal system itself is very complex. The co-operation of various interests is such that our propositions on the review of the official languages policy will take into consideration a number of factors which are much too important to run the risk of upsetting everything in two or three months. I think that my colleague . . .

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I would like to ask the Government House Leader for a statement on the business of the House for the coming week. I would also like to ask the Government House Leader if he is prepared to present an order to the House so petitions gathered before the new rules came into effect in February could be tabled formally with the Clerk and, as a result, formally recorded in the Votes and Proceedings of this House.

[Translation]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will consider the second reading stage of Bill C-45. Tomorrow, we will start consideration of the report stage of Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited. Subsequently, we will continue consideration of Bill C-45. Monday, we will start the third reading of Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity. Once that has been completed, we will get back to Bil C-45.

Mr. Speaker, I will monitor the situation very closely and make additional announcements if necessary.

[English]

With respect to the matter raised by the Hon. House Leader in terms of petitions that do not comply with the new Standing Orders, and ones which had been in the state of preparation prior to the implemention of the new rules, the House Leaders have had a very good discussion with respect to this matter and we have come to an understanding which I think would be agreeable to all Members of the House and will be accepted as an Order of the House. In any event it would be a direction to the Table. That understanding is that a Member can, by tabling his petition with the Clerk, indicate that it falls under the category of being a petition under the former provisions which had been initiated prior to the implementation of the new rules. The Clerk would receive and accept that petition by direct delivery, or with an accompanying letter. The fact of that petition being in the form which was acceptable prior to the implementation of the new rules would be examined in that context and the petition would appear, if acceptable, in the Votes and Proceedings for that day. That would be the extent of it. There would be no requirement for a response because of the fact it does not comply with the new Standing Orders. It would not be delivered or presented in the House, but it would be done directly with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the Chair requires that there be a motion to that effect. May I just be clear that the House wishes the Table to have the petitions that were in the correct form before and shall be regarded as though they were in the correct form? We will look at what the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has said. We may have to come back and ask for a House order. If so, I take it there is a willingness to do so.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. We understand that later on this afternoon, at 4.30, to be precise, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) will be making a statement in the House under Tabling of Documents. Is it the understanding at that time then that Members of the Opposition would have an equal opportunity to respond to her statement?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member did anticipate the next point that I was going to raise. This being equality day, we would not want to breach that principle and not allow the Opposition the opportunity of responding to what I know will be an excellent statement. I have a draft order which has been the subject of discussion and I have presented this order to the Opposition Parties. I think you would find a disposition to have this order received with unanimous consent and passed without debate. The order is as follows:

> Notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House at 4.30 o'clock p.m. this day, the House shall revert to "Tabling of Documents" for the purpose of permitting the Hon. the Minister of State (Finance) to lay a document upon the Table and immediately thereafter shall proceed to "Statements by Ministers" for the purpose of receiving a statement by the aforementioned Minister; and provided that Standing Order 19(6) shall be deemed to be in force for the purpose of this order.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the Government House Leader, given that normally the additional time required by Statements is added on to the lunch hour, can he give us his understanding of how this rule will apply? Will the time be added on to the day at six o'clock, and will some of us who have adjournment questions and debate at that time be allowed to have our debate after the time is added to the day's work?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my proposal is that all the normal proceedings would simply take place at the conclusion of the additional time added on. It will not be a long statement, but we will continue with the adjournment motions immediately following the extended time period today.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I was informed by our critic for the Ministry of State for Finance that she understood that she would be getting a copy of the statement to be given, one hour before, so that she could prepare her response. I would like to have the undertaking of the Government House Leader that this would be the case, so that even though there is this House order, which will preclude us from objecting to the statement being given, there will not be any temptation by anyone not to have the statement provided both to our critic and the NDP critic an hour before, as we were given to understand would be the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can we procedurally deal with the question? Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent necessary to introduce the motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The House Leader for the Official Opposition is asking a legitimate question. I want to respond, but my understanding is that if the documents in question are not now in the possession of the critic for both Parties, and I have an indication from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that is the case, then I will give my undertaking that that would be the case and there would be sufficient time, in any event, to allow at least an hour for preparation.

Mr. Riis: I was attempting to simply answer the question that was raised by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray). I have just been in receipt, as the finance critic for the NDP, of a note to the effect that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) will be issuing a copy of the statement to the critics immediately so as to enable us to respond at 4.30.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council have the unanimous consent necessary for the introduction of his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 4, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee, and the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 833)

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate with six minutes remaining.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): When I was so rudely interrupted it was November 4, 1985, and it has therefore been some 164 days since this Bill was last debated.

I want to just remind you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues as well, that at the time the Bill was initially debated in the House on November 1, 1985, the Government House Leader stated the ultimate effect of Bill C-45 would be to speed up the efforts of the employees concerned to form a union, by eliminating disputes before the courts. He indicated, in other words, that we would be saving time by this particular measure.

Prior to your leaving the chair perhaps I can just catch your attention for a minute. The fact that the Government has not been negotiating in good faith with the Canada Labour Code certification of these employees means that the House of Commons has essentially been taking the side of the Government in a partisan affair and has not been acting in a non-partisan manner. I am sorry to say that to my friend, the Speaker. I want to say to you, sir, now that you have replaced the Speaker, that I am very disturbed about this. The House of Commons should not be putting itself in this position. There happens to be a dispute between the parties and delay by the Government, because apparently it does not want Canada Labour Code coverage of House of Commons' employees. That is a partisan position. Since the Canada Labour Board recognized our employees some six or seven months ago, it is wrong for there not to have been meaningful negotiations. The mediator has made an attempt to get things going but nothing has happened. The employees continue to be frustrated.

I would remind my colleagues in the House that this is not something which has just begun. House of Commons employees, for good and proper reasons, have been trying to get collective bargaining rights for 20 years. The application before the Canada Labour Board was November, 1983, some two and a half years ago. We do not know what is going to happen now. The argument that the Canada Labour Board should delay because the Government was treating the matter as one of urgency is patently untrue. If the Government wanted to treat this as a matter of urgency it would have brought Bill C-45 back on November 6 or November 10, certainly well before Christmas. It would have gone to committee, come back for third reading and been disposed of. Whether or not Members of my party agreed with Bill C-45 as it was then, at least there would be a measure in being.

In fact, there is a measure in being. Just like employees of the Privy Council, the Governor General and a number of other federal government agencies, House of Commons employees are a recognized bargaining unit. They are certified as a union under the Canada Labour Code. Therefore this House, which should be acting as a model for labour relations, is working in exactly the contrary direction.

The motion before us right now requests a delay in passage of this Bill for a period of time. It was proposed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), and I continue to support it in the hope that at last the House of Commons will enter into some serious negotiations with its employees. I do not understand what is going on. I certainly cannot support, as I could not last November or last May when the Bill was originally proposed, a measure which falls far short of granting reasonable rights of unionization to an important group of employees who help keep the Parliament of Canada in operation.

I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of long standing in this House, that the concerns of those workers include such matters as classification of job categories and grievances. Under the Canada Labour Code they would have input and be able to negotiate regarding those issues. Under this Bill they will not. Therefore, those issues which have provoked employees to sign union cards and keep at it for such a long time are not being resolved with this Bill. They fear, with reason, that this Bill will prove to be even less effective than the Public Service Staff Relations Act. There is no staff relations board to which they can appeal on matters in dispute with their employer. This Bill could also be interpreted as a thinly disguised attempt at union bashing. The certification process these employees have gone through already before the Canada Labour board will have to be repeated for the third, fourth or fifth time. They will be asked to sign union cards again. They are not guaranteed that the staff relations board will recognize the same bargaining units recognized by the Canada Labour Board. There are further opportunities for delay given to the employer if it decides to act as it has been acting.

As one Member of Parliament to whom, theoretically, the Speaker is responsible, I would have thought that we would not be playing these games. This is not some sweatshop textile plant in Montreal or Toronto. This is not some Third World country, for God's sake. This is the Parliament of Canada, a country which, in its labour relations statutes, acknowledges the right of working people to form unions and bargain collectively. That is a right for which working people have fought in every country. It is traditionally one of the first rights to be taken away when dictators take away the rights of working people and attack democracy. Is the House of Commons to be an accomplice in undermining the democratic rights of the 1,200 workers who have won certification? That would appear to be the case. I am sorry to direct this to you, Mr. Speaker, as well as to the Government. However, Bill C-45 is a denial of democratic rights and I regret very much that the 210 Conservative Members of this House are in some surreptitious way influencing the House of Commons to act in a manner—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Lewis: I don't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, before I put a question to my colleague I want to preface it with a few remarks about something that took place about two years ago, just after the 1984 election. It was revealed in archives tapes that there were reports by a previous Speaker of sexual harassment of staff on this Hill. Women had to lay their bodies down to get and keep jobs here. Everyone went: "Tut tut". They said this is terrible, this is awful. It seems to me that any kind of collective bargaining process must include MP's staff and Your Honour's staff. I want to ask my colleague why he thinks the staff of Members of the House of Commons are not included in this Bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question. I suppose maybe somewhere in the dark recesses of the minds of certain members of Cabinet we could find an explanation for the exclusion of 1,200 people who work for Members of different Parties. As my hon. friend knows, we have in our caucus a staff association. It seeks to act like a union but it is extremely difficult because it does not and cannot get certification. The extension of bargaining rights to Members' employees does not automatically mean there is going to be a strike in every Conservative corridor. It is up to the employees whether or not they want to exercise their rights, as it is in the private sector. However, having access to those rights, even if you do not use them, is a powerful incentive for employers to treat their employees decently. They know that if they go too far they will provoke the employees into exercising their rights.

In response to the other point about sexual harassment, the number of specific incidents alleged by the union—and perhaps all of them are not true, but I believe they are—of favouritism, nepotism and what amounts to internal patronage in the House of Commons is shocking. There are, again and again, instances of employees working side by side, doing the same job, with salary differences amounting to thousands of dollars. Competitions are not held for certain positions. Those positions are filled on a temporary basis. After a few months, when the temporary person has acquired some experience, a competition is held, and you can guess who gets the job—the person who was brought in from outside rather than employees who have been waiting their turn to get a promotion for a number of years.

These irregularities must end, but I am afraid that Bill C-45 does not provide the assurance that those irregularities will end. If my hon. friend has other questions I will be happy to answer them.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, a kind of patriarchal tradition, as far as a woman working on the Hill, has been extremely apparent over the years, and I would like to ask my hon. colleague what steps can be taken to deal with this issue? The Hon. Member has mentioned some examples of this. It is very obvious that until we had a woman Speaker there were very traditional ghettos for men and women, which still exist to some degree and, certainly, the lower paid jobs, as in society, are the jobs which are usually held by women.

Some of us worked very hard to get a child care centre started on the Hill, yet it has still not adapted to the needs of workers, most of them women who are in the lower salary range. Would the Hon. Member tell us how collective bargaining rights might help in promoting greater equality on the Hill?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the problem when questions relating to trade unions and so on come up is that we seem to have to constantly reinvent the wheel in persuading people in Government, who should know better, about what the basic rights of collective bargaining are, and why they should be there. The answer to my hon. friend from Vancouver East is simply that if there is a union and bargaining rights, then workers can unite to bring pressure upon the employer or, in certain cases, through grievance or other action, take quasi-legal action, in order to defend their rights. But the employee acting on his or her own is defenceless, or almost so, against arbitrary acts by the supervisor or manager for whom he or she may happen to work. That is why people finally become so frustrated that they decide they want a union.

Employers wonder why they all cannot get along together. It is because they do not understand the kinds of frustration which can build up in a situation where, no matter how chummy things are, when it comes down to the crunch the employer or manager keeps the job and it is the employee who must leave.

I can give an example of sexual harrassment which was given to me by the union. In a support service in the House of Commons a female employee is the object of sexual harrassment. Her manager touches her, leans up behind her and rubs against her. When she protests, she is assigned to a heavier work-load, later given a poor performance rating and finally transferred to another position. If that occurs and there is an effective union, at least that woman has means of fighting back against that kind of mistreatment by her supervisor. That is why we want effective collective bargaining rights for the workforce in the House of Commons. That is why we want the labour board certification proceeded with. We certainly do not want a toothless Bill such as represented by Bill C-45.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague what his understanding is of the suggested reason for refusing the right to strike to all of these employees. The suggested reason is, of course, that the Government of Canada cannot be allowed to be caused to cease governing, that it must continuing governing no matter what. Therefore, there cannot be undertaken any risk that it might be stopped by a strike. I would like my colleague to comment on that reasoning.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is assuming that Parliament is an essential service.

Mr. Cassidy: My friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, says that is assuming that Parliament is an essential service. The workings of Parliament are extremely important, if not essential. I believe people would accept that. But is it essential that parliamentarians be fed in the cafeterias on Parliament Hill? Should there be provocation to the point that a strike occurs in that particular service, or in the messenger service or on the little green buses, would Parliament still continue? Of course, it would. Therefore, I think it is arguable that large areas of the work done for parliamentarians is not essential, even though the work of Parliament itself is essential.

Although it is likely that I would have a different view from others as to what is essential and what is not, this is a matter which could be discussed in a reasonable way. In the same way as there are certain powers who designate certain federal employees as essential under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, this is a matter which could be discussed and the Government could come forward with an effective, comprehensive and generous Bill which would have the effect of giving the employees of the House of Commons the same rights as they would have under the Canada Labour Code, and still recognize the possible need for certain variations because of the rather peculiar characteristic of their particular employer.

The other answer I would give to my hon. friend is, who better as an employer is in a position, should it in fact come to the crunch where the essential work of Parliament is affected, to do something about it than the Parliament of Canada? We, of course, have the power to legislate were it to be ultimately required. I would hope that that would never be needed. But it is ludicrous to say that Parliament cannot somehow function if some of its employees have a potential right to strike under the Canada Labour Code.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments regarding this Bill, and this will be the second time because I did so previously on November 1, 1985.

My colleague from Hamilton-East (Ms. Copps) has proposed that the Bill be read in a month's time and not be adopted today. I think we should ask ourselves why the motion was presented by my hon. colleague. Bill C-45 was an interesting concept, in that it proposed to deal with a fundamental problem, that of unilateral negotiations between an employer and his employees, and subsequently provide for a lateral system with a collective bargaining process as defined in the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to see the Government is not proceeding with greater celerity in this respect, because the Bill was tabled last April, we had the Bill in the House for second reading last November, and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said that it was one of their priorities. Since then, not a word about the Bill until the middle of April. This reminds me of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) and what he told me in the House today in referring to language programs: We must not go too fast. The Government's policy is rather problematic, and to quote the Secretary of State, this is a matter—he was talking about official languages, but we could say the same thing about unionizing—that cannot be settled quickly. We cannot proceed at a brisk pace because the question is too contentious, too important and in the final instance too perilous. Those were the words used by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House asks the Government to delay the passage of Bill C-45 for a month because the situation has changed.

[English]

Bill C-45 which provides employees of the House of Commons and the Senate with a framework of representation is a Bill which must be looked at in a new light and perspective. In its present form, the legislation has been rejected by the Public Service Alliance of Canada, as well by the National Association of Broadcasting Employees and Technicians. Their concern centres on the fact that the Bill enshrines in law an employer-employee relationship which does not meet with the employees' approval. With the new developments, which I will explain later, Bill C-45 must be the object of further consideration by the Government before it will be acceptable to its own employees.

• (1530)

I for one would go along with the process of further consultation. I would like to see the Government sit down with its employees in order to figure out a plan of action which would be acceptable to the Government and to the employees of Parliament. When I say "of Parliament" I mean the Senate, the House of Commons, and the Library of Parliament. I consider the workers on the Hill essential. Whether my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), does or does not, I do. I know for a fact that if the bus drivers, the security people, or for that matter any employee of the House of Commons goes on strike, my friend from Ottawa Centre will be the last one to cross a picket line. I know him to be very respectful of picket lines. We have to make up our minds in respect of this matter. We cannot have it both ways. One has to stand up and say: "Yes, we believe their services are essential because they serve Parliament and Parliament is a servant of the Canadian public". It is an essential service and it should be defined as such.

I have been waiting for the Clerk to bring me a definition of the word "essential" as defined in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I would like to use that definition in my participation here, and I do not have it with me. I see that a gentleman is bringing the book to me.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): An essential service.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, it is. Here is an example in vivo, as we say. It is an essential service to the Members of this House. Here is a gentleman who went, with the help of one of the Clerks, to obtain a book for me. In this book we will find the definition of "essential services".

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has stated to employee representatives that the Government is willing to give parliamentary employees the same rights as those enjoyed by public servants. However, the legislation presented in the House does not live up to that billing. It does not live up to my expectations of what should be forthcoming from the Treasury Board as the employer of public servants.

I say that it does not live up to my expectations because I went through this process before in 1976-77. At that time the House of Commons, in concert with the other place, formed a joint committee to look at possible amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We did this because there are in the Act matters which I find to be in great need of change. In my view, they should be modernized, if not updated, to take the wellbeing of our public servants into consideration, as well as to try to modernize the whole process of negotiation. There are matters such as classification standards to be considered. During the election campaign the governing Party promised that it would make classification standards negotiable. That Party has been in office for two years now and it has not even put forward a suggestion on the subject. I admit it is a complex issue. I also admit that it is a very technical one since classification standards determine where one sits in the organization, what kind of job one has waiting for one.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Rug-ranking.

Mr. Gauthier: I believe that is an image which one can use to decide where one sits dans l'organigramme de l'organisation.

I find it interesting that a challenge such as amending the Public Service Staff Relations Act has not been forthcoming and that the Government still hesitates. It hesitates on this matter as it does on many other matters. It hesitates to come forward with some reasonable and meaningful modifications to its own Public Service Staff Relations Act. Yet the Government would like us to buy Bill C-45 when, indeed, we know that the employees are not happy with the process.

Why are they not happy? I will explain why. Bill C-45 does not allow the employees of the House the right to strike. It is a right which they would enjoy under the Canada Labour Code. Recent Canada Labour Relations Board rulings have indicated that Hill employees are governed by the Canada Labour Code and that they can be represented by certified bargaining units. This is the reason employees on the Hill want to be covered under the Canada Labour Code. They think that the deal they will get through that arrangement is better than the deal they will get through the Public Service Staff Relations Act. If that is the position they hold, then one must say: "Fine. Let us sit down and find common ground".

The unions on the Hill have said that they will forgo their right to strike because they understand what are essential services. God knows they are devoted and that they have been good to us. However, they want the assurance, as do all public servants, that binding arbitration procedures will be changed and not maintained as they exist in their present form. That is the key to the whole issue. The employees have said: "We will not strike, but you must give us a deal. We will forfeit our right to strike in exchange for an agreement on arbitration procedures and matters which are not covered in the present legislation". I would add that they are not covered in the Public Service Staff Relations Act either.

NABET and PSAC object, in particular, to Clauses 5(3) and 55(2). Clause 5(3) states:

> Nothing in this Part shall be construed so as to affect the right or authority of an employer to determine the organization of the employer and to assign duties and classify positions of employment.

I will now read into the record Clause 55(2) since it is important. It states:

> No arbitral award shall deal with the standards, procedures or processes governing the appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, lay-off or release of employees, or with any term or condition of employment of employees that was not a subject of negotiation between the parties during the period before arbitration was requested in respect thereof.

In the name of all of us here in Parliament how can the Government proceed with a Bill that does not make classification standards a negotiable matter? Why do we not place that on the table? That is what the Government promised during the election campaign. It is something with which I am in accord. I do not think that members of the New Democratic Party would object to it. Why not give some of these matters serious thought?

I recall that the Treasury Board, in negotiating several contracts this year, tried to give its employees a reasonable approach in regard to lay-off. We are now into an era of compression of the human resources of the Government of Canada. Therefore, the Government must be very sensitive and try to answer those justifiable and deeply felt feelings of people who may be threatened in their jobs and in their careers. They want to be able to negotiate some form of job security. They want to be able to negotiate job classification because job classification means pay. That is the essential truth. Bill C-45 will not do the two most important things the Government promised to do, and that is, to offer a multilateral process of negotiation and to give the employees a better deal than they have had up until now by including certain things in law such as classification, layoff, promotion, demotion, transfer, release and other standards which affect the wellbeing of employees.

When the average person in my riding thinks of the House of Commons and its essential role, he or she does not understand why Parliament has taken so long to come to grips with the issue of employer-employee relations. Indeed, for some 20 years we have had a rather good employer-employee relations law for the Public Service, yet we fail as parliamentarians to look after the close to 3,000 employees of this place who are justifiably requesting that they be included in some form of employer-employee relations agreement.

I heard the Conservative Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) on the radio the other day, and I will paraphrase what he said. He said that Bill C-45 is landmark labour legislation which provides Hill workers with important rights including health and safety rights. That is a mistake if anything because, as workers covered by the Canada Labour Code, Hill employees already enjoy the health and safety rights and privileges which came into force under Bill C-24. To say that Bill C-45 is landmark labour legislation is, I think, to misinform Canadians and the Ottawa community. As a matter of fact, Hill employees are covered by Bill C-24 and we know that because we debated it.

The workers on the Hill have asked for a six-month delay. They have asked for meaningful negotiations. I believe they are in possession of a decision on the Canada Labour Code which makes them confident that they will now be able to come forward with an meaningful employer-employee relations formula.

I hope the House will understand that, in the interests of our own employees, we could vote for the motion of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and support a one-month hoist in order to have the Government understand that it must get on with the negotiations with employees and come forward with a compromise solution if needed, and that it must do it soon and do it in the interests of Canadians and the employees on the Hill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are questions or comments? If there are no questions or comments, is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Orlikow: No.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak against this Bill, which I consider to be a real disgrace to Members of Parliament and certainly to the Government. It does not deal with the real and urgent need for true collective bargaining rights for employees of Parliament, including employees of Members of Parliament. At this time, we are speaking to a motion that would delay this Bill, because we feel that this Bill should be delayed—in fact it should be withdrawn—because it restricts and does not enhance the collective bargaining rights of parliamentary employees.

I wish I had had a chance to say this a few moments ago when the hon. gentleman named Stanley Knowles was sitting at the Table because it is this gentleman who still sits as a conscience for many of us here in the House. Nineteen years ago, Stanley Knowles spoke of the obligation of Parliament to protect the rights of parliamentary employees. He advocated collective bargaining rights for all employees.

According to a recent report done by Mr. Jeff Parr who has studied this matter at some length, he has said the following:

> It is evident that while much is made of parliamentary privilege as an impediment to collective bargaining rights on Parliament Hill, it is evident that Parliament can most certainly, on its own authority, grant those rights to its employees.
> This Bill does not grant rights; indeed it restricts them.

Mr. Parr's report is entitled Preserving the Employee's Prerogative, and he also said the following:

> Tradition has served admirably in preserving the prerogative of employees on Parliament Hill; sheltering them from the interference of the Public Service Commission and the application of merit to staffing decisions, and from the interference of trade unions in managing the parliamentary workforce. But it has been much less successful in protecting employees of Parliament Hill from abuse by their employers.

Some of those employers sit right here in Parliament.

I would like to relate to the House my own personal feelings about this matter. I came to this House as an elected Member in 1979. At that time, and there has not been a great deal of change since, it was very apparent to me how unprotected workers were. I was concerned particularly about the working conditions of workers on the Hill. A number of employees of the Parliamentary Restaurant and others have spoken to me about their concerns, but they are afraid to talk openly because they feel very insecure. They are afraid of making complaints because they do not have any protection. There are no grievance procedures. We all know that there have been incidents of sexual harassment documented by unions, and it is an absolute disgrace that workers on Parliament Hill and in Members' offices are not protected from such offensive practices, not to mention favouritism in general.

I was struck, and I imagine most female Members of the House were struck, by the patriarchal atmosphere of Parliament Hill which still exists. The tradition of patronage in hiring is very offensive, and I am particularly offended when I hear Members of Parliament referring to their staff members as "the girls", as in: "I must have the girls do this". The kind of lack of respect that appears so often in this patriarchal atmosphere would not be tolerated if staff members had a union. It is undemocratic and it is offensive.

Until recently, women and men were locked in traditional job ghettos on the Hill. Women were the waitresses and men were the supervisors and members of the security staff with a higher rate of pay. I congratulate the former Speaker of the House, who is now the Governor General, for the kinds of changes she made. I am referring to changes which moved employees on the Hill one step toward greater equality and equal opportunities. I was also proud to be a part of her project in promoting the first day care facility on the Hill, although I am very concerned that it is not affordable care for many of the lower paid employees, most of whom are women. As well, I wish our staff were much better paid.

This demonstrates that there has been some change, but the slowness of the change has been quite appalling. Also it demonstrates the need for collective bargaining rights for employees who work for Parliament and for Members of Parliament. They should not have to wait for those of us who happen to be their employers to sort of pat them on the head and say: "Now, dear, you will get a little extra bonus or privilege of some kind this year". It should be a right. They should have a proper grievance procedure and all the conditions which go along with collective bargaining rights.

I should like to give two or three examples of the experiences documented by Hill employees. There is quite a long list, but I will mention the ones which pertain particularly to female employees. They are some of the types of problems which reinforce the need for collective bargaining rights as a means to resolve workplace issues. The first example is that of employees of the Library of Parliament who were denied maternity benefits for a full year after such benefits were finally extended to employees of the House of Commons. The administration of the Library states than an administrative error was made. This would not have been allowed to happen if those people had been in a union. Another is the Employee Assistance Program of the House of Commons which was established to give employees a safety-valve or a means of having personal problems dealt with in confidence by a qualified counsellor. Perhaps it was not a bad idea, but earlier this year the EAP counsellor was fired, the position abolished and the program responsibility turned over to the nurses. An appeal to the Speaker asking for the position to be re-established was denied. Two petitions signed by 1,500 Hill employees were ignored. This kind of attitude and denial of sensible employee rights would not take place if employees on the Hill had collective bargaining rights and a union of their choice.

I should like to refer to another example in the support services. A female employee is the object of sexual harassment. Her manager touches her, leans up behind her and rubs against her. When she protests she is assigned a heavier workload. She is later given a poor performance evaluation and finally transferred to another position. I am sure most employees who experience sexual harassment would be afraid to complain about it under the present situation. It should not be tolerated either by workers or by all of us on the Hill. The only way to deal with it in a professional and effective way is to have a union agreement and a proper grievance procedure.

I should like to refer to another example. In the cafeteria services an employee cuts his hand on the job. He is told to visit the nurse. The nurse tells him that it is not safe to work and that he should go home. The manager informs the employee that he should go back to work or face discipline. What kind of work situation is that? This is the kind of condition which should not be left to chance or whim. All of us, as well-meaning employers, are working under pressure and perhaps our own needs come before those of the employees.

Let us return to Bill C-45 which is before us. There are many problems with it, and that is why we do not support it. We support negotiated collective bargaining rights for employees. Government Members may not realize how ineffective Bill C-45 is. Many important concerns are not open for negotiation. They are not on the table at all. I should like to refer to some examples of this. Bill C-45 prevents any real negotiation of the classification of positions and assignment of duties.

Turning to the question of staffing, job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers and lay-offs are not negotiable, nor are grievance procedures. Limits are set on what grievances can go to third party arbitration. Union grievances are not allowed. What kind of collective bargaining are we talking about if union grievances are not allowed?

The staff of Members of Parliament are excluded from the right to collective bargaining, a great omission. Also the right to strike is prohibited. I heard my colleague speak about essential services. In any collective bargaining negotiation there is a definition of essential services as a part of the negotiations between employers and employees. It would be worked out as part of the collective bargaining procedure if it were a sound procedure, and the Bill does not offer it. Certification procedures require that all the union cards which have been signed on Parliament Hill be re-signed. This eliminates the kinds of negotiations and certifications under the Canada Labour Code which have already gone forward. We are very disappointed that they have not been implemented.

I should like to elaborate quickly and for the record on some of the negative points in the Bill. First, classification under the Bill would prevent any negotiation on problems related to job descriptions, assignment of pay level and evaluation of duties. The present situation as far as classifications are concerned has evolved over the years, taking into account special characteristics peculiar to the environment of Parliament Hill. I understand that it is the source of a great deal of employee dissatisfaction. As an employer I like to have a collective job classification system in my office, and the criteria set down by the House make it very difficult to have everyone at an equal level of pay. Many employees do not have job descriptions at all. Those employees who have them discover that they are out of date and frequently and arbitrarily changed in an environment which has seen extensive reorganization and technological change introduced. The result is that employees on the whole are frustrated and insecure, and there is a low level of morale.

Improper classification can also result in significant financial losses for employees. The lack of proper job descriptions hampers efficient operation of the workplace. Under the Canada Labour Code, classification can be negotiated and has been successfully negotiated in many workplaces. We should have the same situation on the Hill. There should be at least a minimum requirement for acceptable legislation, and it is not covered effectively by Bill C-45.

Staffing issues such as job appointments, job appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers, et cetera, are central to the drive by parliamentary employees to gain bargaining rights. We know that Parliament Hill has a history of staffing decisions which are coloured by political influence, favouritism, nepotism and even administrative incompetence. Parliamentary employees want to have a say in establishing a fair and equitable staffing system based upon merit, length of experience and service. If certified under the Canada Labour Code, employees would have the right to negotiate both staffing and classification. As it stands Bill C-45 is inferior to the Canada Labour Code and to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

The whole question of grievances is a very important right of employees, especially in this kind of situation and in view of our traditions on Parliament Hill. Bill C-45 does not allow workplace problems to be addressed by union grievances, grievances filed by a group of workers. For example, there are health and safety problems in the print-shop and cafeterias. I remember several years ago hearing complaints about this. Here it is coming up again, particularly about air quality and other environmental problems in the Wellington Building. These cannot be subject to a union grievance. What are workers supposed to do, Mr. Speaker? They have been putting up with bad air for years. Technological change also brings in very negative kinds of habits that are environmental situations, and these cannot be contested by filing a union grievance under this Bill. What use is the Bill if that is the case?

If an item cannot be brought to third party adjudication, the employer is under no requirements to take it seriously. It remains an in-house issue. For example, a poor performance appraisal, demotion or transfer cannot go to adjudication. A grievance cannot go to adjudication. Again, it shows the weakness of this Bill.

What about the right to strike? I know this is a very controversial issue in the minds of some Members of Parliament. Anyone who has studied the tradition of the labour movement, unions and collective bargaining and the results that have come about in improved working conditions, improved rates of pay for workers, knows that you must have the right to strike in any collective bargaining arrangement.

I know that parliamentary employees do not want to go on strike, few workers ever do. This is only a final resort used by workers when all else fails. Nevertheless, it is a fundamental union right that workers must be able to negotiate on an equitable basis with an employer by having the right to withdraw their services. Within this are certain essential services that are defined and agreed to by both employees and employers. Without the right to strike, the impetus for failing negotiated settlements is lost. If there were terrible working conditions that could not be negotiated by any other means, I would be proud of my employees if they went out on strike.

This brings me to the crossing of picket lines. I, for one, would not cross a picket line. In other unionized legislatures, such as Queen's Park, Quebec City, Westminster and Australia, the right to strike has not interfered with the workings of Parliament. I was interested to learn that those Parliaments have a collective bargaining right to strike.

Another concern about this Bill has to do with other staff. As we said earlier, this section of the Bill excludes the 1,200 employees of Members of Parliament, Leaders' staff and research staff from collective bargaining provisions. I cannot understand at all why this is necessary. I think most of us are very concerned about the inequities from one office to another that affect staffs of Members of Parliament. There are different working hours and hiring conditions. There are different rates of pay for the same jobs and so on. Low pay, unpaid overtime, lack of job security, arbitrary management and lack of any procedure of redress are missing when we exclude certain employees from this Bill and from collective bargaining. All workers on the Hill should have the same right to collective bargaining. They should choose to exercise it as other Canadian workers have these rights. It is argued that Bill C-45 will cover Members' staffs by certain parts of the Canada Labour Code. However, this coverage provides only very minimum standards. We have concerns about that.

I think you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that we in the New Democratic caucus have had a collective agreement with our own staffs since 1977. This agreement has been negotiated three times since then. Our contract sets standards for working conditions for employees who are hired by our caucus. However, we cannot negotiate wages with our staffs because employers, Members of Parliament, do not have control over their budgets. The House of Commons has control. Although we support this organization and negotiate officially and sign agreements with our organization which is called PASS, it is not the answer. It does provide grievance procedures which include appeals of difficult problems for third party arbitration. It also provides agreed procedures for staffing of vacant positions, technological change, respect for overtime hours and standards for vacations, education and travel. These are very important questions. Again, I do not want to say that we cannot have a real collective bargaining agreement with our staff until this is recognized under law and under the Canada Labour Code.

Bill C-45 will not help us in that regard. In fact, it will be a regressive step for our staff because our staff would not be included under this Bill. There are many other things I would like to raise, Mr. Speaker, but my time is up and I know my colleagues will be presenting other arguments.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I won't take up much of the time of the House because I know all Parties want this Bill to proceed. Since there was a draft Bill prepared with all Party support, including one or perhaps two members of the New Democratic Party, by the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services in April, 1984, and since this Bill goes well beyond what was proposed in that Bill, why is the Hon. Member against this Bill? Has she had an opportunity to discuss her concerns with the member or members of her Party who sat on that committee?

Ms. Mitchell: It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that members of our caucus never agreed that the Bill was satisfactory. I think I have already elaborated on the reasons. There are many more. The Bill is weak in many regards and there is no way our caucus would agree to it. I do not know the exact history to which the Hon. Member referred. Perhaps we can get one of our members to elaborate but I know we are unanimous in opposing this Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, rather than precipitate any further disagreement in the New Democratic Party I will not pursue that line of questioning any further.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since the Member did refer to essential services as defined in law, and since I had also referred to them, I have been looking at the Public Service Staff Relations Act and Bill C-45 to try to find an interpretation of what an essential service was. I must admit to the House that I could not find it. It is possibly what we do here.

I did find in Section 79 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act a designated employee as one:

—whose duties consist in the whole or in part of duties the performance of which at any particular time after any specified period of time is or will be necessary in the interest or safety or security of the public.

It may be that I have been forgetful or have not read the proper amended article, but I do recall a discussion in committee where we added security of certain federal institutions. I think it was related through certain experiments done in laboratories and in certain other instances where one would require the people who look after these labs or essential services to be designated.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) a question because it is important for me to understand where the Member stands. If indeed she understands designated employees as those who are in essential services, and if an essential service is defined as one which requires the maintenance, safety and security of the operations and of the public, how would she feel if certain employees of the House went on strike? I am thinking of the security guards, for example, or for that matter anybody related to the maintenance of this place. Would the Member cross a picket line if the front of this building were picketed? I would like to know what she would do in that instance.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer that question. I certainly would not cross a picket line. It is very important to recognize the rights of workers. With regard to strikes, it seems to me that in the past Members of Parliament have shown the right to strike. I am thinking of a number of occasions when this House has been closed down. I do not know that Canada suffered too much during those incidents.

In any collective bargaining agreement, part of the negotiations are to clarify essential services. Having participated in Public Service negotiations, and sometimes strikes, in Vancouver when I was working with the Public Welfare Department there, I know that it is quite possible to keep essential services operating. Unions are very understanding of what these essential services are and make arrangements for the workers to continue providing those services.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee and the amendment (Ms. Copps) (p. 8331).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate because I have watched, from a very close range, the recent successful efforts to organize by employees who work on Parliament Hill. When many of the employees decided it was time for them to try to get the law changed so that they would have the same right of collective bargaining as have all the other people who work in the country, my then research assistant volunteered to help them in their organizing efforts. He spent about two years working four or five evenings a week on the campaign. He then took a leave of absence without pay to work full time in the organizing effort. He worked out of my office, and I was very happy to permit and encourage him to do that because I believe, of course, that every worker in Canada should be entitled, by law, to belong to the union of their choice.

When people who work on the Hill heard that an effort was being made to form the union and to have the law changed to give them the right to collective bargaining, they joined in overwhelming numbers. Employees in the restaurant and cafeterias, the messenger and distributing services, maintenance employees, employees in the Library, in French and English indexing and in the printing service, and the security people and committee clerks all joined.

Bill C-45 was tabled in the House on April 30, 1985, just a few weeks after the Canada Labour Relations Board had completed hearings on the majority of the certification applications received from the House of Commons, Senate, and Library of Parliament employees. We believe that this Bill is aimed at restricting the collective bargaining rights of these employees, the rights which they would have had under he provisions of the Canada Labour Relations Code.

Let us look at the provisions of this Bill. Employees of Members of Parliament and the Leaders of the Parties, and research staffs of the Parties are excluded from some clauses of the Bill. These employees suffer from the same problems as other employees working on Parliament Hill. They have the same problems with arbitrary management, low pay, unpaid overtime, and a lack of job security. Another clause prevents any negotiation on classification issues. There would be no negotiations, under the provisions of this Bill, for questions of job description, assignment of pay levels, or change in duties. The present system of classification would be left unchanged. This system is totally unacceptable and is the cause of much employee dissatisfaction.

Under another clause no arbitral award can deal with appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers, lay-offs, and releases. This is similar to the Public Service Staff Relations Act, but other Public Service employees have rights under the Public Service Employment Act, which this Bill does not provide for employees on the Hill.

Another section restricts the right of grievance to the individual employee. Workplace problems cannot be addressed by union grievances, grievances filed on behalf of a group of workers.

There is one other important matter which is completely overlooked, and that is the whole question of technological change. Any Member of Parliament who has been here for any length of time knows how rapidly and fundamentally the operations of their offices have changed in recent years. Technological change is occurring on the Hill as it is everywhere else. Even employees with many years of experience fear they will be laid off. Rather than allay these fears, management has fueled them with major reorganizations and cutbacks in several areas. I do not want to criticize anyone presently or formerly in management, but I am sure that Members know that many of the decisions made in recent years had adverse effects on many of our employees.

I will take a few moments to give some examples of the type of things that have happened in recent years which, in my view, were completely unacceptable and would never have happened if employees on the Hill had the same rights as other employees in the public and private sectors, that is, the right to belong to an organization which could protect them by having their grievances dealt with through discussions between the union and the employer, and by following the usual steps in grievance procedures which are available to all other employees.

An older female employee with close to 20 years seniority in a position injured her back and was off on long-term disability for a couple of months. When she returned, she was assigned duties which included heavy lifting and carrying, although her old position still existed. She was told she should apply for early retirement if she was not satisfied. Her grievance under the present procedure was denied. That could never have happened if that employee had belonged to a union which had the right to real collective bargaining.

As a second example, a technician was hired for a position and was paid below the advertised salary level. It took the individual a year and a half to reach the salary level advertised in the competition. A year later another technician was hired with the same qualifications and started at the posted level immediately. I suppose the new employee was a friend of the supervisor. That would never happen if there was a real union. Here is another one; employees in a technical service are required to attend training courses on their days off and on weekends without pay. When these employees protested, they were told it was mandatory and they had no choice. In what other area would this be permitted? No area where there is a union. These are the reasons workers join unions.

In the cafeteria service, all job classifications have been revoked. This is at a time when the restaurant and cafeteria business has more supervisors and managers at higher salaries than we have ever had. The employees of the restaurant and cafeterias have to suffer because, supposedly, we have to save money. All employees have been informed they can be assigned any duties, although many have held specialized positions for a number of years. This is the kind of thing that is completely unreasonable and unacceptable. Two butchers have been assigned to drive food delivery trucks, and a pastry chef was assigned to washing and cutting vegetables. Is it surprising that the level of frustration in the cafeteria service is very high? I ask Members who have doubts that this is happening to talk to the people in the restaurant and cafeteria business whom they know.

In a support service a female employee was the object of sexual harassment. Her manager touched her, leaned up behind her and rubbed against her. When she protested, she was assigned to a heavier work load and later given a poor performance evaluation, and finally transferred to another position.

We have just been discussing and debating employer equity legislation. It is ludicrous to be discussing that kind of legislation and listening to all the wonderful speeches in theory, which we have heard from the Government side when this kind of thing happens.

In the cafeteria service an employee cut his hand on the job. He was told to visit the nurse. The nurse told him it was not safe to work and that he should go home. The manager informed the employee he should go back to work or face discipline.

In a technical service a senior position became vacant. Several employees inquired about a competition, but none was held. The husband of a manager in another department of the same service was brought in to fill the position on a temporary basis. Several months later a competition was announced. The now experienced husband was, of course, hired permanently as he now had the experience. The appeal of the employees in the service was denied. That reminds me of the kind of thing that went on in the packing plants in Winnipeg 40 years ago. Workers who wanted to work came down every day with the hope that they would get an hour or two of work, and if they were prepared to give the foreman a bottle of liquor that helped them get a job. That kind of thing has not happened in employment areas for many, many years where unions have had the right to bargain collectively for their workers. It is a disgrace that the kinds of illustrations I have put on the record today should continue in the Parliament of Canada in the year 1986.

This Bill is so deficient that it does not provide adequate means for the people who work on Parliament Hill to lodge grievances which can be dealt with equitably. When I say, "being dealt with equitably" I mean that they can be discussed openly, honestly and fairly between the employee and employer. I do not say that the employees are always right. We all know that employees are like any other human beings, sometimes subject to doing the wrong thing. When the employee has a grievance which cannot be settled, and when the decision made by the foreman or the supervisor is one which he or she cannot accept, the employee, given proper legislation and a union which has the right to grieve on the employee's behalf, given law which establishes the proper and fair system for handling grievance procedures, can rest assured that those grievances can be discussed between the employee, the union's representative and management. Usually they arrive at a settlement which is acceptable to both sides. If they do not, that dispute can go to an impartial arbitrator who would hear the case as presented by both sides and render a judgment. That is not provided for in this legislation.

The whole question of technological change and the adverse effects which it can have on employees, many of whom have worked on the Hill for many years is not dealt with. The situation is that we are cutting back on permanent employees and replacing them with temporary employees who are paid less money per hour and do not have the benefits of a pension plan, or sick leave. None of these benefits are provided for these temporary employees who are being found on the Hill and in Government Departments more and more.

All of these questions need to be dealt with in a fair and equitable way. The only way they can be dealt with in a fair and equitable way is if the legislation which we are now debating and while will eventually pass, gives the employees who want to join a union—I emphasize the point that the employees will join the union only if they want to—the same rights to have a union bargain collectively on their behalf as all other workers in this country who come under either federal or provincial jurisdiction. Because this Bill is so deficient in meeting the needs of workers who work on Parliament Hill, I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party intend to vote against this it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we are awaiting a document which will be tabled under the House order which was passed earlier this day, and I think if we could perhaps proceed to the next speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have questions and comments so we can carry on until questions and comments are terminated and then maybe at that time the documents will be in the House and we can hear the statement of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). Are there any questions or comments?

• (1630)

Mr. Boudria: I have a short question I would like to put to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He has been a Member of this Chamber for a very long time, as we all know. He has had the opportunity to meet with and speak to employees for many years. As a matter of fact, I remember quite well when I was an employee of the House of Commons in the 1960s going to his office, both as part of my duties and, along with others, whenever there was a grievance with which we were trying to get assistance. As history sometimes works, the tables have turned and I find today many employees coming to my office for the same reasons. The Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton (Mr. Dick), with his usual wisdom, has said: "Perhaps they are very hard up". They're not that hard up because they would have gone to see him. Then again, they probably would not because the service they would get would not be very good.

At some point in the past, even though there were no formal structures by way of job descriptions and so on which we now see on the Hill, there was an informal rule of appeal, at least where an employee could air his or her grievance with an individual Member of Parliament. Through that mechanism, and through the good offices of the Speaker and others, there was at least a form of redress. Now, with the administration of the House fully structured and the employees' rights being unstructured, if the Hon. Member follows my line of thought, there seems to be a tremendous imbalance. On the management side everything is formalized, but there is very little of this on the employee side. That has, in my view, and I would like the Hon. Member to comment, created a situation where the employee is totally frustrated when it comes time to try to grieve an injustice. Of course, the employee is equally frustrated in attempting to get redress for that kind of situation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking me whether the present system does not work very well, I agree with him. We have supposedly a very structured, trained and efficient management staff with great power, indeed too much power, to deal with the individual complaints of employees. If, on the other hand, he suggests that the situation was better years ago, I cannot agree with him. I can remember that when I first came here, outside the office door of one of the Liberal Members from Ottawa there could be found about 25 chairs sitting in the hall. I remember asking what the chairs were doing there. I was told that it was very simple, people who want employment with the Government come and see that Member and he is able to find them jobs. That was a very bad system of patronage which I think, fortunately, is long gone.

Mr. Dick: You are talking about Boudria.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, I am talking about those guys.

Mr. Dick: That is how he got hired.

Mr. Boudria: Put that on the record.

Mr. Orlikow: I say to the Hon. Member who has just interjected that if I had been here in the years 1957 to 1962, when we had a Conservative Government with a big majority, probably the same thing was happening with a Conservative Member of Parliament from Ottawa.

Mr. Dick: Probably? You do not know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will try to ignore the subsequent ignorant interruption of the Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton and go back—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, it is true.

Mr. Boudria: Well, it was!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I really do not care whether or not it was. The question should be directed to the Hon. Member who has just finished speaking. I hope the Hon. Member will direct his comments to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I hope that the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Dick: I did not say a thing until he—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member will not interject. We are waiting for a statement from the Hon. Minister and you are causing me a lot of grief.

Mr. Gauthier: You never say anything, Paul.

Mr. Dick: It is true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North is well versed in the situation involving employees of this House. In my first question I was not questioning the hiring practices. That is a totally different topic. I do not like the kind of system he has described either. However, what we are talking about is the employees' grievances. Over the years, and even today, in the absence of any formal structure, employees on many occasions present their grievances to Members of this House in an attempt to obtain redress. As the Hon. Member has appropriately described, there have been a large number of such injustices in the past, and he has described some of them. Later on in my remarks I intend to spend some time describing some of them as well.

I said earlier that I was an employee of the House of Commons for a little over 14 years, but I was really asking the Hon. Member about how the grievance procedure is working now. I see a deterioration in the morale of employees from what it was a year and a half ago when I came back to this building, compared to what it was during the 1960s and 1970s. Then there was at least a system, although informal and improperly structured and not the best, where employees could attempt to obtain redress. That is not the case now. That is really what I was questioning, not the hiring practices, because of course they are indefensible.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, let me just reply very briefly by saying to the Hon. Member that there will be problems as long as the system of grievances is informal and not based on a precise set of rules and regulations. If the person who has a grievance goes to a Member of Parliament or a superior in the Public Service, if that grievance is not settled to the satisfaction of the employee, and I am sure many times it is not, and I am sure there are times when it is not because the grievance was not justified, then there will be problems. If you do not have a system based on law and procedures which are clearly outlined in advance, there will be a great deal of dissatisfaction with the decisions made. That is another reason that it is important that we have a law which makes it clear what the employees are entitled to, what they can do if they are not satisfied, and everything else that real collective bargaining gives to employees.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table, in both official languages, copies of certain correspondence relating to the bid to take over Genstar by Imasco.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House will now proceed to Statements by Ministers.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

IMASCO BID TO TAKE OVER GENSTAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the proposed takeover of Genstar Corporation by Imasco Enterprises has received considerable attention from Members of this House and the media. The issues which have been raised are important and I commend Hon. Members for their concern. The Government's responsibility is to protect the public interest in the financial sector. I know that Hon. Members share that concern. That is why I proposed, and the Government is carrying forward, a comprehensive review of financial institution regulation. That is why public notice of impending legislation, which is now before this House as Bill C-103, was given last November 29.

• (1640)

The House is well aware that regulatory efforts to protect the public interest and preserve financial stability in the financial sector raise complex and challenging issues. These include self-dealing, increased concentration of ownership, links between non-financial and financial companies, reduction of competition and conflict of interest. I had already informed the House that I would review very carefully the Imasco-Genstar takeover under Bill C-103 with the public interest and stability of the financial system as very clear priorities. As part of this review, I asked Imasco for very specific undertakings.

I am pleased to inform the House that Imasco has met the Government's requirement for strong and clear undertakings to protect the public interest in the spirit of Bill C-103. These undertakings cover not only the period prior to passage of the regulatory Bill but a further period which should provide us all with sufficient time to discuss and resolve these very fundamental issues. At the same time, the Government and Parliament can move in an orderly and careful way to a decision on the policy which should apply to ownership and control of financial institutions in the context of over-all regulatory reform in this sector.

Specifically, the following undertakings have been received from Imasco; there will be no self-dealing between Canada Trustco and Imasco and its affiliates either through loans, trustee arrangements or other types of transactions. Canada Trustco's board of directors and management will be independent from Imasco and its affiliates and associates.

[Translation]

Imasco will not acquire control of any other financial service corporations.

Imasco fully accepts the powers which Bill C-103 as presently drafted will give to the Minister upon adoption, particularly the power to cancel the acquisition of Canada Trustco, in part or in whole.

Imasco accepts that Parliament may legislate on a financial institutions policy ownership which might require divestiture, and more rapidly still in the case of firms that have acquired financial institutions after November 29, 1985.

I therefore urge all present and future members of that sector to make a careful examination of Bill C-103 and the Imasco commitment.

[English]

The fundamental importance of our financial institutions to Canadians, and to the growth and stability of the economy, will always impose special obligations on those who participate in this industry. I recognize also the Government's obligation to put in place a new framework for regulation of the financial sector. We are doing just that. The report of the Estey Commission and the Senate Banking Committee's recommendations on the Green Paper proposals for financial institutions regulatory policy will all be part of that process. I am not prepared to force the process to a premature end. As other observers have noted, the issues are too fundamental, too complex and the financial sector too important to be decided in a matter of days over one specific case.

Before closing I want to deal briefly with the issue of corporate concentration which Hon. Members of the House have raised in relation to the Imasco-Genstar situation. Corporate concentration is a very broad issue which encompasses many sectors of the economy, not just the financial sector. The debate on this broad issue cannot be resolved in the context of the financial industry alone and certainly not on the basis of this one particular situation. The chief concern raised in this House about the ownership of financial institutions by non-financial corporations is self-dealing and the resulting risks not only for the depositors but for the economy as a whole.

With the assistance of Hon. Members and with the co-operation of Imasco, the specific situation which raised concerns in this House is under careful control and review. The public interest is being protected and will be in the critical areas I have noted. We will continue to move forward in close consultation with the provinces and with the best available advice from all sources to ensure that a new framework for the financial sector is put in place to support the solvency of financial institutions and to strengthen competition and efficiency in the financial sector.

I look forward to receiving in future, as I have in the past, the thoughtful assistance of Hon. Members in this important area of Government policy and regulatory reform.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for her courtesy in supplying a copy of her statement in advance. Most Hon. Members of this House are concerned that a takeover by a non-financial institution of a financial institution is not in the best interests of our country. That position was stated by the Leader of my Party in this House when he pointed out some of the reasons why people are generally concerned. He said at page 12051 of Hansard on April 9, and I quote:

> A financial institution so controlled can block or divert loans from competitors or to competitive allies. It can control cash flow. There is the temptation for self-dealing that was only too apparent during the crisis three years ago in Ontario involving Greymac and other trust companies.
> —the interests of the depositors are not necessarily going to be paramount where there is a conflict of interest in holding and where the shareholders in their correlated and blended interests will take precedence over the depositors.

In a recent article in McLean's magazine a prominent businessman in Canada said very succinctly: "When one entity is both creditor and owner of equity in a company, there is an obvious conflict of interest". These were some of the concerns which were addressed by the Committee on Finance when it was studying the Green Paper on regulation of financial institutions last fall. The report of the Committee on Finance included this sentence, and I quote:

> The committee is concerned about the increasing trend towards non-financial ownership of financial institutions and feels that concentrated ownership, particularly that of large financial institutions, should be limited.

● (1650)

The Canadian Bankers Association stated to the committee:

> —this co-mingling of non-financial and financial businesses is undesirable. It would try the confidence and trust that Canadians place in their financial system.

The Liberal members of the Finance Committee issued a separate report in which we stated: " . . . we do not believe that financial activities and non-financial activities should be combined".

In the course of the committee's work last fall, when the merger of Canada Trust and Canada Permanent Trust was in the works, the committee specifically recommended that the Government not approve this merger until such time as there is an ownership policy in place. However, the Government chose not to act on that recommendation. Of course, the decision to allow that merger contributed directly to the situation which we have before us today.

Genstar Corporation owned Canada Permanent Trust. It then acquired Canada Trust against the Finance Committee's recommendation, giving it Canada's biggest trust company. That is the main reason for Imasco's interest in this takeover.

The Minister properly says in her statement that the Government's responsibility is to protect the public interest in the financial sector. In effect, the Minister has now chosen to move to protect that interest by requiring certain commitments of Imasco rather than by blocking the merger. The Government really had no choice in this matter. Since the Genstar takeover was not blocked it would be illogical now to block the Imasco one.

The precautions against self-dealing required by the Minister, and on which she has reached agreement, are reasonable. There is to be no self-dealing and no interlocking boards. Imasco undertakes not to acquire control of any other financial service corporations. Since Imasco has a very good reputation, this type of agreement which used to be called a "gentleman's agreement" will probably work very well in this case. But we are still left with the fact that the Government has not yet produced an ownership policy.

Bill C-103, to which the Minister referred in her statement, leaves a tremendous amount of power to ministerial discretion. In the public interest, the Minister can block certain transactions or require divesting. But the conditions are not spelled out. Granted that the Minister is competent, and we would expect her to use good judgment, but a system which leaves so much to ministerial discretion is not a system which anyone would want to see in place.

Bill C-103 will have to be amended. There will have to be a great many amendments made to it in order to put some clear conditions in place. The end result is that Imasco has undertaken to acknowledge the powers of Bill C-103 without knowing what these powers will be and without knowing what type of divestiture may be required in future legislation.

The Minister says that she recognizes the Government's obligation to put in place a new framework for regulation of the financial sector. However, the Government has moved slowly in that respect. I would remind the House that prior to 1984 the previous Minister of State for Finance put in place a consultation system on which the present Minister poured scorn when she took office. Thus she decided to rediscover the wheel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired. Each Party had seven minutes in which to reply.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure Hon. Members would be prepared to grant to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) whatever time is necessary for her to complete her response.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the House. I will not abuse it. I will finish my remarks quickly.

While the Minister points out risks in forcing the process to a premature end, I do not think this is the risk we are facing. The risk is in not acting firmly enough since the rate of takeovers has been escalating in recent years. Indeed, as one of the Minister's own colleagues said, we are faced with a situation of trying to unscramble eggs or trying to get the toothpaste back into the tube. So while the Minister says it is important to move in a considered way and not to be too rushed in terms of further legislation, may I say that our concern is that the time for the new legislation is now. It is important to get Bill C-103 in place, with some amendments. It is also important to move on establishing a clear ownership policy, not only so that Imasco will know where it is at but so that all Canadians will know where they stand.

I particularly wish to emphasize that legislation which relies so much on ministerial discretion will need to be replaced by legislation with clear standards.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, over the last few weeks we have seen a major game being played in the country involving large conglomerates wanting the right to own their own bank. They want to own their own major financial institution, to buy the money power against the security of the depositors, and, really, the people of Canada. Today, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) has announced the winner of that contest. It is, of course, the large conglomerates which are now being given the go-ahead to purchase their own bank. They are being given the go-ahead to go out and purchase their own trust company.

When the Minister was forced to make a decision between the giant corporation, Imasco, and the security of the depositors of Canada Trust, she said she would give the benefit of the doubt to Imasco. It is a serious situation which occurred in the last few moments. It was the unanimous decision of the Finance Committee, not on one occasion but on two, after months of deliberation and thought, to recommend that the Minister not approve the go-ahead of this takeover. She has ignored that advice. She has disregarded it completely. She has shown no respect for the work, advice and thought which every single member of the Finance Committee put into making that recommendation. I am not only talking about members of the Finance Committee, I am speaking about some very thoughtful back-benchers who spent many weeks attempting to indicate to the Minister the wisdom in stopping this takeover and stopping this type of corporate concentration now involving financial and non-financial institutions.

Yesterday in the House of Commons the opportunity was provided to any Member to speak in favour of the action which the Minister has just taken. Not one single Member rose to speak in its favour. In other words, the best information we have is that every Member of Parliament feels that the decision which the Minister took today is wrong. In a sense what we are saying is that the people of Canada, through their duly elected Members, have indicated their concern about financial institutions being taken over by non-financial institutions. Through their elected representatives they have said that this is not in the best interests of Canada. In effect, they have said that this is not in the best interests of the Canadian economy. The Minister has chosen to ignore that advice. Presumably this has been done in the context of the new parliamentary reform. Back-benchers and committees were to be given more consideration. Presumably more attention was to be given to the House of Commons. The Minister of State for Finance has now indicated that she will ignore that advice, even when it is unanimous, time after time.

I suspect that the Chairman of the Finance Committee, who has gone on record very clearly along with the rest of his colleagues, will have virtually no choice but to resign as chairman of that committee.

There have been seven months of deliberations and literally dozens and dozens of experts have appeared before the committee. Every one of the experts has said the same thing, with the exception of a handful of people and that handful of people are those representatives of the big seven families that control more than 50 per cent of the Toronto Stock Exchange. They like this decision. There will be lots of champagne flowing in the households of the big seven tonight because this means that the Government has said that the gates are open and any industrial conglomerate can purchase its own bank.

What the Minister of State for Finance has said to justify her actions is unbelievable. She has said that Imasco promises that there will be no self-dealing. Well, big bloody deal. Imasco is saying that it will do what we expect every single corporation to do by law. Does Imasco promising to deal the way it always has bring us much comfort, knowing as we do that there are abuses after abuses and all kinds of self-dealings going on? On Monday night, the Finance Committee will be exposing a number of those actions that have not been exposed to date.

The Minister of State for Finance went on to say that Imasco will not acquire control of any other financial service corporation. When it has just acquired, with the approval of the Minister of State for Finance, the sixth largest financial institution in Canada, there is little wonder that it is not interested in now acquiring the Bank of Montreal. It now owns a financial institution that brags in full-page advertisements in Canada's major newspapers that it is larger than some of the big banks. Imasco promises that it will not buy another major trust company or financial institution. Big deal.

The Minister went on to say that Bill C-103 will include the power to roll back this takeover. It is a little late, is it not, Mr. Speaker? It is a little late considering the billions of dollars involved, the unbelievable chaos and the web of restrictions and dealings that will have to be undone if the Minister decides next month or next year or in another decade that the decision made today was inappropriate. Who believes that we are going to ask this company to change its mind after the takeover has occurred and the shares have been acquired, something which I understand was completed today?

This flies in the face of what Canadians believe to be the appropriate thing to do, and that is, to stop this move toward corporate concentration that places more and more economic power and now more and more financial and political power in the hands of a few powerful corporations and families. One could be cynical and say that the major political contributions Imasco made to the Conservative Party in 1984 have now paid off. One could say that Imasco is now seeing the fruits of those thousands and thousands of dollars of campaign contributions. That is not the way decision making should take place in Canada.

The Minister of State for Finance should have listened to the unanimous voice of the Finance Committee after its deliberations. She should have listened to the unanimous voice of the House of Commons after its deliberations. She should have listened to the people with financial expertise who came before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to tell us not to do this. She should have listened to the Superintendent of Insurance who said that he could not find any compelling reason to show that this takeover would be in the best interests of Canada.

To whom did the Minister listen? Where did she get her advice? I can only say now that members of the Finance Committee, and particularly those who belong to the Government Party, are going to have to do some soul searching. After all, they worked hard, and I will give them credit for this, to try to bring sanity into this decision-making process. The Minister has ignored them. She has slapped the face of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and has said that she does not care about the work, deliberations and studies of the Finance Committee, that she is going to ignore its advice. It is a very, very sad day for Canada and for Canadians.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGATION OF PATRONAGE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. I wish to inform you that if you judge, as I have, that a prima facie question of privilege has been made, I am prepared to move the necessary motion that the matter to which I will refer in a minute be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Earlier today in the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton (Mr. Dick) made allegations to the effect that I had been employed at the House of Commons through the patronage of an Ottawa-Carleton area Member of Parliament. Those motives that have been imputed are totally false, as you of course know, and as I am sure the Hon. Member knows deep down in his heart. I would ask that the statement be withdrawn and, in the absence of that, I would wish to move the necessary motion to which I referred a while ago.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) will be given his opportunity, but I just want to say something. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has just made reference to something which did not arise from the debate occurring at this particular time. If he does feel that he has a prima facie case of privilege, then he should give the proper notice and it should be dealt with tomorrow. I am afraid that I cannot accept it at this time and therefore we should go on to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on that same question of privilege, the House interrupted its normal business to go to a statement by a Minister by unanimous agreement. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) wanted to raise this point at that time. He did not do so for the sake of keeping our word with the Government that we would not interfere with the arrangements made for the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) for 4.30 p.m. I would hope that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that the Hon. Member will give notice in writing so that we can go ahead and deal with it accordingly.

Order, please. I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement and pursuant to order made earlier this day, this sitting will be extended by 25 minutes. Therefore, the adjournment proceedings will begin at 6.25 p.m. The House will now turn to Orders of the Day.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment (Ms. Copps)(p. 833).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—I am sorry, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). How could I forget that?

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, inadvertently you were quite correct. The Ottawa area is part of my riding. I represent the Counties of Glengarry, Prescott and Russell as well as that part of Ottawa-Carleton called the Township of Cumberland. Unbeknownst to you, Mr. Speaker, you were quite correct in calling me the Hon. Member for Ottawa, as I do represent at least a small part of the Ottawa-Carleton region.

Mr. Gauthier: We're very proud of you.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you. I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-45 this afternoon. We should look at some of the history of Bill C-45 and more particularly at the question that begs to be asked today, which is, why are we now dealing with this Bill when the case of the employees of the House of Commons has been before the Canada Labour Relations Board for a long time. The board decided in its wisdom that the employees of the House had collective rights under the Canada Labour Code. Of course that has been dragged through various steps of the court process. As far as I know, on every occasion the courts and the board dealt with this topic, adjudication has always been on the side of the employees. Negotiations are scheduled to proceed on Monday, April 21 or some four days from now. Why are we attempting to sneak through the legislation at this time? Why do we want to do it now? Why can we not wait until the process is finished and final judgments come down on the issue? Why would Hon. Members of the House want to pass this piece of legislation now? What is the need to pass it now? Are we collectively afraid of what eventually will come out of the court decision? If that is not the case, and since we have not had such legislation since 1867, why do we need to pass it before next Monday at which time the negotiations will get under way?

• (1710)

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) moved a very appropriate amendment to delay the Bill for six months. At that time we did not know some of the things we know now. However, she was right. We had to delay discussion on the Bill for six months in order to provide the time required for the process which I described just a few moments ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, why do the employees of the House want a union? Undoubtedly the first answer is that they want one, and they have the right to have one because it is the collective right of all employees in this country. Even if they do not exercise this right, the mechanism should be in place so they may do so whenever they wish. Right now they are not allowed to do that.

Yes, Bill C-45 would give them that power, Mr. Speaker, but a useless power, an incomplete power because, first of all, the employees would not have as many benefits as they would enjoy if they were accredited under the labour commission. Secondly, it is a useless power because it is incomplete in the sense that Bill C-45 does not give them the right to strike, nor other rights which Government employees normally have.

As I said in the House earlier today, I first joined the labour market on Octobre 25, 1966 as an employee of this House, as a servant of those who are elected to represent Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I would not pretend to be an expert in all cases because that would not be true. But I think that as an employee of this House for 14 years, I remember very well certain cases of employees of the House, and some of them are still open even today.

The employees of the House have been asking for their collective rights for a long time, Mr. Speaker, but the need to have these privileges, the need to have these rights if you wish, to form a union and enjoy other collective rights has become more pressing in recent years. And why? I discussed this earlier this afternoon in my comments on the excellent speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), when I asked him whether he agreed that although procedures were not clearly formalized a couple of years ago, there was nevertheless a certain balance between the rights and privileges of employees and the authority of supervisors.

Today, this balance no longer exists. Mr. Speaker, I agree it is a good thing and that it was a good policy to formalize the procedures with respect to managers and supervisors on the Hill. What I cannot accept, however, is that these rights and privileges and procedures were increased or improved for the managers, while nothing of the kind was done for House employees. And I think it is this imbalance which has created a situation where morale among House employees is extremely low. Parliamentary employees feel totally frustrated because they have no way of defending their individual and collective rights.

I listened carefully to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North, when he was describing the cases of certain parliamentary employees, with their grievances and their problems. In each case, I could recognize who the person was. I could even name them each and every one of them. In many cases, I could even give the names of family members, because I know nearly all of them.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we as parliamentarians and legislators should grant our employees the kind of rights that other establishments, both in the private and the public sector, would want to emulate. However, Mr. Speaker, I would not want any employer to emulate the procedures existing today on Parliament Hill.

[English]

I certainly would not want anyone to use our procedures as a model. The way we treat our employees should be an example to everyone else in the public and private sectors. However, it is not an example of which we can be proud.

Why is that so? It is so because principally we as Members collectively fear, whether or not we admit it, unions on Parliament Hill. Perhaps there is a fear that the day will come when one of us will have to cross a picket line in order to come to the Chamber and do his job on behalf of our constituents. Perhaps it is a morbid fear of the picket line which has stopped us from granting our employees collective rights. If that is so, is it a good enough reason to deny someone their rights? Potentially we could put ourselves in a situation which could be viewed or seen as embarrassing. If that is our reason for failing to give our employees their rights, it is a pretty poor reason indeed. It is not one we would permit anyone else to use. If we would not permit anyone else to use the same criteria, why are we using them ourselves?

I have said before in this House that if we as legislators cannot take proper care of and pay attention to the 3,000 employees who come under our jurisdiction, what makes us so fit to take care of the interests of the 25 million more people elsewhere in the country? I submit to you and to all Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, that it is a shame, and it is a dark shadow on every one of us, not to have been able to take care of the rights and privileges of Canadians who work on Parliament Hill. It is my hope that in a very few days we will see the final stages of that process in the courts that will give employees of this House the same rights and privileges as other Canadians have. Once and for all this issue can be out of the way and the employees of Parliament, if they wish to—it is very important to stress that because it has to be their collective right—can exercise their rights to unionize or in any other way collectively air their grievances and needs to us as their employers.

It is my hope with that process that no longer will we see an employee being terminated because he or she was ill and someone was hired while he or she was on leave only for that employer to come back to find out that the job was not there. I hope that no longer will we see such cases as that of the employee who was on long term disability for some time who subsequently received a medical certificate which eliminated the long term disability pension and made it possible for that employee to re-enter the workplace on Parliament Hill, only to come back to Parliament Hill to be told, "We do not care that the doctor's certificate says that you are in good enough condition to work because we do not think you are". That employee found herself—in this particular case it was a woman—no longer receiving the benefits she was getting when she was ill and she was not getting a salary either. She was falling between two chairs. She was well enough to be off sick pay, but not well enough to work.

I hope that very shortly we will see the day as well when an employee who is injured on the job as a result of using defective equipment is not told to go back to work injured, but can go home to recover the way everyone else would in the private or the public sector outside of the precincts of Parliament Hill.

Finally, I hope the day will come when we will have a system that can be used as an example, a system of which we can be proud. Let us hope we can go to private enterprise or even other public sectors, the provinces, and tell them about our way, that we look after the people who work for us. That does not mean you hire five people to do the job of two, Mr. Speaker. That does not mean you let everybody go home at noon. That is not what the employees are asking for. The employees who work here, and I am sure you know it, Mr. Speaker, because you have been here for a long time, are very good employees and, by and large, they are dedicated and have a strong allegiance to the people for whom they work. They become friends of all of us and they consider Members of this House who are collectively, and I suppose individually, their bosses and representatives. They have a special dedication.

How many times do we see employees on the Hill working well beyond the call of duty? I know what time they start. Many years ago I had the same working hours as some of them. I know they come way ahead of working hours and are here long after, in many cases without getting overtime or any other benefit. They are dedicated. They do a good job for each and every one of us, and they deserve to be treated properly by us all collectively and, needless to say, by all of us individually as well.

It is my hope that we will delay this Bill at least for a little while. There is no need to deal with it now. Let the process take care of itself. In my view, within a very few days it will be determined that the rights of these employees go far beyond what is in Bill C-45. I hope the process will determine that their rights are the same as those of all public servants and all other Canadians. I think that we as Members of Parliament will have fulfilled a much better job and we will have accomplished far more by waiting out that process than by acting hastily now, and in so doing we will be failing to give our people what they deserve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) praise the employees of the House of Commons, and of course I would use the same words to describe the human resources available to Hon. Members.

Still, I wonder. The economic situation experienced by the Hon. Member two, three, four or five years ago was more difficult than it is today, interest rates were very high, employers laid off their employees, in short conditions were quite unfavourable to the employees. At the time his Government did not even see fit to act upon the kind of recommendations and representations he is making today.

So why and how can he explain his about turn today when economic conditions have improved and are better for employment, why this reversal and these proposals which neither he nor his Government ever implemented?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand the meaning of the Hon. Member's question. He seems to be saying that his Government's Bill now under consideration which, as we all know or should know, is practically identical to the Bill introduced under the previous administration, that the Bill presented by the previous Government was somehow not as good as this one because he claims that economic conditions are better now, or something to that effect.

I do not quite follow the logic of what the Hon. Member is telling us. He should know that not very long ago the Canadian labour commission ruled on this case and that the matter is now before the courts. It was not the case a number of years ago, but it is now.

I would therefore urge him to reflect upon this aspect of the case and he will know why it is important today to wait for the end of the proceedings before going ahead with a Bill which, in my judgment, is incomplete, particularly since we hope that in a few days something better will come out of the courts proceedings.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member has had experience as an employee on the Hill. Would he comment on the progress which employees of the Hill made, during his sojourn in Toronto as an M.P.P., toward organizing into an association? As the Member said, they have applied to the Canada Labour Relations Board and seem to be making slow but positive progress in that direction. Could the Member comment on some of the advantages employees would have under the Canada Labour Code as opposed to those they would have under Bill C-45?

The Hon. Member and the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) gave examples of incidents involving people working on the Hill. Would it be possible for some of those situations to be dealt with under the provisions of Bill C-45, or would the powers of the organization to represent them be somewhat limited under this Bill?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, obviously the employees would have some collective rights under Bill C-45. It would be incorrect to deny that they would have those. They would not, however, have identical benefits, which is what I believe the Member wants me to point out. If anyone is making the case that this Bill offers many benefits similar to those offered by the Canada Labour Code, one must ask why we are bothering with the Bill at all. It is obvious that the purpose of the Bill is to offer something between full rights and those which they have now, which, it could be argued, are not much. I think I am being generous in using the words "not much". The process which now exists is more of a hit-and-miss one. Employees can either present a grievance through the administration, which is not known to have a very high rate of success, or go through their Member of Parliament and hope that he or she can raise a temper tantrum with the Speaker, when the Member feels that the employee's case merits their support, and attempt to get redress in that way.

In my view, House employees should be accorded the right to strike, although not in all cases. Obviously, some people must be designated "essential". Most of the people in the House at the present time would have to be so designated. However, I would argue that we do not need a full complement of busboys so designated. I can relate to that job very easily because I happen to have done it in 1966. The same applies to the messenger staff, the cleaning people, and so on. Only a small number of those employees would have to be designated as essential in order to maintain certain standards.

It may be necessary for a few messengers who carry official documents to be designated as essential for the purposes of transmitting messages between the Hansard offices and the Clerk's office, but it would be highly exaggerated to say that all of the messengers and the bus drivers were essential to the functioning of Parliament. They may be essential to achieving a certain level of comfort for the parliamentarians, but that is not the same as being essential for the functioning of Parliament.

I am sure you have recognized already, Mr. Speaker, that a large number of our employees should be given full bargaining rights. At this point we do not even know whether they want all of these rights, and that is for them to decide collectively. However, apart from those people who would necessarily be designated essential, the rest of them should be afforded the full rights which they would receive under the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Althouse: The Member has served for some time in the provincial Parliament at Queen's Park in Toronto where employees do have some bargaining rights. Did he experience any problems in carrying out his duties as a member of the provincial Parliament because employees at Queen's Park have more bargaining rights than they have here in Ottawa?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, not all of them do. It is pretty confusing to try to compare the two situations. The Legislative Assembly building at Queen's Park is partially under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the Assembly and partly under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Government Services. It would be rather difficult to draw a parallel between the two Legislatures. There are a large number of people in the building who are employees of other Government Departments or agencies, which adds to the confusion.

I know that the employees of the NDP caucus at Queen's Park have a method of airing their grievances. I am not sure whether that is a formal union, or only an association of employees. Not having been a member of that particular caucus, I did not take much time to inquire about how it operates. However, there are a large number of staff members in the Legislative Assembly building at Queen's Park who are unionized. As a matter of fact, there are a number of employees on the Hill in that situation as well. People working outside of the buildings, but within the precincts of Parliament Hill, are unionized. They have not turned the world upside down because of it, nor did they at Queen's Park.

In direct response to the Member's question, I never perceived that to be a problem while I was at Queen's Park. Since I have returned to the Hill, I have inquired whether there have been any disruptions or other undesirable effects due to having a certain number of the employees unionized, and I have not yet heard of any instance of that.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join the debate on Bill C-45. Our Party has been opposing the move by the Govenment to change the law as it applies to the collective bargaining rights of people who work on Parliament Hill. We are doing it for a very simple reason, and that is because we believe in equity, the right of individuals to form unions and alliances to protect their rights as employees. For that reason it is probably suitable that this particular debate occurs on equality day. It is a time when we are trying to extend rights of Canadian citizens equally to all.

Prior to coming to Parliament I was a representative of one group which was largely ignored when it comes to legislation permitting them to organize, and that is, the farming sector. I have always been quite interested in the application of these rights on an equitable basis to all sectors of our society. This Bill is unfortunate in that it comes at a time when many of the employees on the Hill had gotten quite a way ahead through the long process of organizing themselves. They had even succeeded several months ago in obtaining the right to begin certification procedures under the Canada Labour Code. There are five or six bargaining units here on the Hill who are well on the way to getting into the negotiating process and moving towards having the first collective bargaining agreement for those particular groups on the Hill.

This process is an ongoing one, and it is always a slow process. It takes several years to go through all the organizational and legal and negotiating procedures to get a first contract. Some first contracts take years and years and years, but they do eventually happen. It is extremely unfortunate that in the midst of these negotiations, which followed the organizational pursuit and the legal challenges that have gone on, the Government should put on the Order Paper before the House of Commons Bill C-45, which is a Bill that has the effect of starting the process all over again. It means that those people who have been trying to organize themselves on the Hill for the last three or four years, with some success—I realize there are many who have been trying to organize themselves for much longer than that—will be stopped dead in their tracks and forced to begin all over again. The rights and procedures they will follow under Bill C-45 are such that they will gain fewer rather than more rights than what they would have under the Canada Labour Code.

It being equality day—and I think every day in Canada should be equality day—we should, as a general principle, treat all of our citizens in the same manner. It should not matter under that edict whether a worker works on Parliament Hill in a restaurant or cafeteria, sweeps the floor, is part of the cleaning staff, or whether he or she works off the Hill, the rules and regulations that apply to their efforts to organize themselves as workers should be the same.

I find it very difficult to understand why, because they work on Parliament Hill, their rights and privileges should be somewhat less than if they worked across the street. I think a lot of Canadians have trouble with that concept, and that is why I think they would have trouble with Bill C-45 if they read it and understood it better. I think the Government has been having some trouble with Bill C-45 as well because it introduced it some time ago, the Bill was debated in this House in December of 1985, and it has just been brought back in again now. I would hope that that is some indication that the Government sees it as being not particularly necessary and it is only bringing it forward to interfere with the bargaining process that is now in place. I would hope that the only reason it was put before the House today was because it did not have any other pressing legislation. I would hope that that was the reason it was brought forward.

I realize that sometimes Governments do get to the point where their agenda is so clear they only bring in legislation that is peripheral to the needs of Canadians. I would assume that today, on a Thursday, is the kind of day that we happen to have hit.

There has been some feeling left in the country, and I think there is a fair bit of feeling which exists on the Government side of the House, that some of these jobs that are performed around Parliament Hill fall into the area of being designated as essential services. I am not sure that that is really a very good argument for offering Bill C-45 to us, because I do not think that we can look at the operations of the House objectively and say that all of the people who contribute to it are performing an absolutely essential service. It is an important service and the job they do is important. The job that any one of us does as MP is also relatively important, but it is not essential. We have had, since this Parliament began, two resignations from the House. The House functions just as well without those two, albeit both were extremely good and effective Members, but the House is still functioning since they have left. The mother of Parliament, Westminster in London, allows its employees to have bargaining rights, and to organize and have procedures whereby they can appeal the hiring practices and the practices putting people forward in particular branches to permit them to work their way up within the organization, and they function well. The Parliament in Australia has similar legislation and it has no problem with it. I fail to understand how the argument can be made that Canada could not function with this kind of labour legislation.

I was here when the bells rang in this Parliament for 14 or 15 days. It was not a disaster and the country still functioned. All of the Departments of Government still did their job. There was nothing that was held up and the people of Canada barely noticed the difference, unless they happened to come to Parliament Hill and heard the bells clanging through these tall stone corridors and reverberating in their ear drums. It did not precipitate a crisis, and we were out for 15 days.

I fail to see the validity of the argument that is sometimes made, or at least if not made directly often alluded to under cover, that this place provides an essential service and the various groups that have the potential to make up bargaining units on the Hill are performing essential services without which this country cannot operate. I find it even more difficult to understand when I look at some of the groups that are now permitted to have full bargaining rights, including the right to strike, which include the basic transport workers we have in this country who work for Air Canada, CN, CP. They include the people who work at the post office, and occasionally those workers do strike, and yet the country functions. The occasional strike that we have I think is accepted by the general public because they know that there are occasions when workers, in order to make their point about hiring practices or promotion practices are forced at the bargaining table to use the last trump card that they have, namely, the strike. If the strike weapon were available to Parliament Hill employees I think it would be used very seldom.

We just had the opportunity to hear from a former Hill employee recounting some of his experiences and some of the attitudes and opinions of people around the Hill. When you listen to Hill employees, it seems most of the problems and grievances that build up are due to the fact that there is no proper procedure for those employees to deal with their grievances. They have no place to go. That is why we have such instances as the following one. An older worker had hurt her back and was sent home. She was receiving benefits. Her doctor told her he thought her back was well enough for her to go back to work, which meant that her benefits would cease. When she arrived at work here on the Hill she was told that her employers did not think she was fit to work and they would not pay her. She is no longer eligible for benefits, no longer able to work, and she has no place else to go. There is no grievance procedure except for some Member of Parliament trying to catch the Speaker's attention and having him put some pressure on the people concerned. With an organization they will have a grievance procedure. They can use the combined weight of all employees to argue for a particular person.

We know from listening to employees that there are discrepancies in the hiring practices and, because there is no grievance procedure, those discrepancies continue. If and when the five or six units who have applied for certification under the Canada Labour Code finally obtain the right to negotiate, they will be in a position to make certain that hiring procedures are regulated in a way that everyone understands. We can then avoid the kind of things we have had brought to our attention, such as the case of a technician being hired for a position at below the advertised salary level. He worked for a year and a half to reach that salary level and finally did so. Another position opened up in his same unit, another employee with exactly the same qualifications as the first employee was hired, but he was hired at the same salary level that the first one fought for a year and a half to get. These kinds of discrepancies bother our employees. I think they bother all of us when we realize there is inequitable treatment with no visible reason for it.

It makes little sense for us to be imposing more legislation regarding hiring practices and organizational structure for employees of Parliament in the form of Bill C-45. We have seen the Canada Labour Code being applied, and much effort has gone into organizing over the last three or four years. There have been court appeals. The legislative route is being followed, slowly but it is still being followed. It seems extremely unjust for us, particularly on equality day, to be imposing this much reduced form of rights on our employees when they are attempting to organize under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Schellenberg): Questions or comments.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) mentioned that this was equality day for many groups in our society. It is interesting that the Government picked this particular day to move this legislation forward. It is also interesting that the Government had five months to move on this legislation and it would have done so earlier if it had believed it was serious legislation. That is rather ironic because we are now in a situation where the Government has not treated its own legislation seriously. Can you imagine introducing legislation in the late fall of last year, bringing it forward for one or two days' debate, and then postponing further debate for a full four months? Yet that is what has happened.

Neither has the Government been serious in its negotiations with its employees on the Hill. It has used the courts to delay negotiating. It waited until the Canada Labour Relations Board certified the workers on the Hill, appealed that decision, lost the appeal, and is now appealing it further. Yet the Government has not shown the credibility involved in sitting down with its own workers to find out what kind of legislation would be acceptable.

There is no question of the Government's right to introduce legislation which it thinks is necessary. There is no question that the Government has a right to introduce its own legislation, based on a court decision, to change a process. What I find ironic is that the Government has spent so much time in doing nothing that I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to communicate whether he feels the Government is really negotiating in bad faith with its employees.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, on the face of it, it does seem the Government is not serious about negotiating. The various court actions taken as employees began to organize under the auspices of the Canada Labour Code indicate that the Government intends to fight the effort to organize on the Hill as far as it can. This move to introduce Bill C-45 was a legislative effort to back up the legal efforts in the courts. For that reason it probably would go some way to explaining why this legislation comes forward in fits and starts. I think it is somehow being used as part of the varied arsenal of the Government in its fight against the application by five or six units to organize and get their first contract.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some attention to the Hon. Member's remarks. He, like his colleagues in the NDP, has a definition of a designated employee. I want to know exactly where he stands on the question of essential employees. As I said this afternoon, under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, designated employees are those whose duty consists in whole or in part of duties the performance of which at or after any specific period of time are or will be necessary in the interests of the safety or security of the public. We could change all that and say: "The safety or security of Parliament". Given that the NDP Members' position on this issue is, I take it, that they favour the right to strike as a condition of Bill C-45, I wonder whether the Hon. Member would cross a picket line set up outside here consisting of messengers, truck drivers, maintenance people or anyone else. Would he cross that picket line? I would like to know the answer to that from his Party.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have been involved in a few settlements of labour agreements.

An Hon. Member: On whose side?

Mr. Althouse: On the management side. Generally speaking, the definitions are drawn up quite clearly within the contract itself as to who is crucial and who is not. There are usually in scope and out of scope employees designated in the contract.

• (1800)

The question of whether or not I would cross a picket line would depend really on whether the legislation we are dealing with is of a very serious and necessary nature, and on the kind of picketing that is going on. A lot of the picketing on the Hill, I foresee, will not be of a particularly crucial nature to the functioning of this House and this Chamber. When it is a question of serving my constituents and there is no other way of doing that but by being in the House, then I suppose I would have no choice but to cross the picket line. I would attempt to explain my reason to the picketers. I am sure that once they understood the reason, they would agree that the parliamentary function is also necessary. I have had this happen on a number of occasions and usually such picketers are quite in accord with what you are doing once they understand why you are doing it.

Mr. Gauthier: I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments and point of view because I know how seriously he feels about the subject.

Picket lines, as I understand, were originally organized for information purposes. They were originally thought up to inform the public that there was a conflict between the employee and the employers, between the democratic process and sometimes the aristocratic owners of an enterprise. Since information was the original intent of the picket line—and we know that today strikes and picket lines receive coverage—I am rather pleased to hear the Hon. Member's position that he would indeed cross the picket line if he felt that the business of the House required his presence. That is a serious position and one which I respect, although one I do not necessarily share.

Is the Hon. Member telling us he would assess his position according to the legislation before the House, or would he, rather, assess his position as that of a servant of the Canadian public, an elected representative who has an obligation to sit in the House and represent the people of Humbolt—Lake Centre?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think I tried to make it fairly clear in my first answer that both would be at work. The legislation which is before the House rarely, but sometimes, does affect my constituents very clearly. On those occasions I would feel it would be my responsibility and, indeed, my duty to be in the House looking after them.

I will reiterate something I said in my speech. It is not very often that this House has that kind of crucial legislation before it. I refer again to the 15 days when we listened to the bells and nothing fell apart. However, there are occasions when the country may be on the verge of war or something like that and I think it would be necessary to explain why I had to cross the picket line, and I would do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-45, an Act to provide employees of the House of Commons and Senate with a framework of representation, is proving controversial in its present form. Both the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the National Association of Broadast Employees and Technicians are finding considerable difficulty with this proposal. We must consider that this Bill will enshrine in law an employee-employer relationship which does not meet with the employees' approval.

With the advances workers on the Hill have made using the Canada Labour Relations Board, many see Bill C-45 as at best redundant and at worst a step backward for their rights. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has stated to employee representatives that the Government is willing to give parliamentary employees the same rights enjoyed by federal public servants. However, the legislation before us does not include one particular right enjoyed by federal public servants, and that is, the right to strike. We might all consider that there are good reasons why employees on the Hill should not have the right to strike. But if that tool is removed from them, surely they must be compensated by having an extremely effective, strong and binding arbitration procedure in its place. That is not offered by Bill C-45.

I understand that there is a court decision pending. I really wonder about the advisability of proceeding with this Bill until that decision has been reached. I understand that the decision is likely to come down in a few days. The history is that on November 4, 1985, the Canada Labour Relations Board announced its decision to certify four bargaining units in the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament. I believe that since that time an additional unit has been certified. The fact that the Canada Labour Relations Board recognized those units has encouraged the workers on the Hill to feel they would prefer to be covered by the Canada Labour Code provisions rather than by the provisions of Bill C-45.

However, the House of Commons, Senate and Library of Parliament administration appealed the CLRB's decision to the Federal Court. The appeal was heard on January 20 and January 21, 1986, and a decision is expected within the next few days. In the interim, the request by the House of Commons for a stay allowing the employer to avoid participating in the negotiations process was rejected by the court.

I find it strange that we are proceeding with Bill C-45 at this time when we are hearing from the employees on the Hill, the people directly concerned, that they do not want this legislation and they would prefer to be under the Canada Labour Code. Their appeal concerning the Canada Labour Relations Board is still before the courts. Surely it would make more sense to have the court decision first and then look again at what kind of legislation is needed.

I certainly have a great deal of difficulty in understanding why we are proceeding with this legislation when the employees have said that it is not what they want. Surely, good employer-employee relations require making a much more serious effort to find out what it is the employees want and then proceed on that basis.

Two clauses in Bill C-45, Clause 5(3) and Clause 55(2), are being objected to. These two clauses would prohibit unions from referring to arbitration matters such as job classification, appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, lay-off and release of employees. These are matters which are really central to working conditions. I have great difficulty in understanding why they should be excluded from arbitration.

Federal public servants under the Public Service Staff Relations Board also face limitations as to what can and cannot be taken to arbitration. However, the Public Service Employment Act also gives federal public servants rights with regard to some of these issues, rights which are not contained in the Bill before us. Increasingly, what we are hearing from those who criticize the Bill is that it is almost word-for-word the Public Service Staff Relations Act minus the rights federal public servants enjoy by way of other legislation governing them.

A Conservative Member of Parliament from Ottawa stated in a radio interview recently that Bill C-45 is landmark legislation which provides Hill workers with important rights, including health and safety rights. That is not accurate. Under the Canada Labour Code, health and safety rights are already allowed. This is so as a result of Bill C-24, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), points out.

The workers on Parliament Hill have asked that Bill C-45 be delayed. They do not even want it to go to committee since that would bring it one step closer to enactment. The workers on the Hill know how our system operates. There have been many times in the House when Members on all sides have agreed to the principle of a Bill which has very large flaws and have wanted the Bill to go to committee, where amendments can be moved, so that it can be improved upon. The workers on the Hill are very familiar with this procedure. Yet what they are saying to us is: "We do not want it to go to committee. We want you to block it". This is really a serious situation.

Although negotiations with the union are being conducted by the administration of the House, every Member has a vested interest in this matter. While we are not empowered to negotiate, in a sense we are the employers of these peopie. If they are not happy with this Bill, then why on earth do we not just go back to the drawing-board and try to come up with something on which there can be agreement? I find it absolutely illogical and inconsistent with everything I stand for as a Member of Parliament to be involved in a discussion concerning a Bill which affects our own employees on the Hill and which they have told us they do not want. How did we ever get into this situation? Why on earth are the people concerned, the administration—and I still call them personnel people but I understand the term now is human resources—not talking with the employees, trying to obtain from them some sensible recommendation with respect to what should go into the legislation?

I am sure everyone would agree that the workers on the Hill are entitled to some type of staff association, a union, we can call it what we will. They are entitled to some type of arrangement by which they can bargain and which will allow them a say in the conditions of their work. Since everyone is agreed on that point, why on earth not take the next step and make more of an effort to ensure that what they are offered is what they want? After all, one of the points in having a union is so that there is an organized framework for the resolution of disputes and so that there can be fairer labour practices which benefit both worker and employer. If we start off with a situation in which workers say they do not want this, then surely we are starting off on the wrong foot.

Surely, there is no way of rescuing this legislation. I strongly suggest that the Government withdraw it and start some meaningful and time-limited negotiations with the employees in order to come up with something that is acceptable. After all, if people have something forced upon them, they will not use it productively. However, something which is agreed upon with good will between employer and employee is more likely to work and more likely to provide a sensible framework for the resolution of disputes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) what her impression is with respect to why this legislation, or similar legislation, was not brought forward by the Government of which she was a part prior to September of 1984. It is deeply regrettable that after so many years of knowing that the workers on the Hill wanted to join a union and wanted to have the right to negotiate that the previous Government did not act at all in that respect.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not correct in saying that the previous Government did not act at all in this respect. It was the Charter of Rights and Freedoms introduced by the previous Government which was the basis for broadening access to collective bargaining. In fact, we had draft legislation. Since it was not an area in which I was immediately involved, I cannot remember whether or not it was introduced in the House. However, there was certainly discussion with the workers on the Hill as a result of which I understand there was a fairly clear understanding that the way they wished to proceed was under the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to have listened to the remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). Knowing her background, especially in social work, and knowing of her commitment to good employee relations, I was very impressed with her approach to the subject matter before us. In the name of all of us who have a deep interest in employer-employee relations, I wish to thank her for her remarks.

I would like to ask her if she recognizes that the House of Commons is an essential service and that as such we should designate certain services as essential to the safety and security of the operation of Parliament. I believe she was in the House when I asked a question of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I asked him what he would do if the House of Commons in its wisdom, and the employees in theirs, accepted to include the right to strike, as is the case with public servants. In my speech, I think I made it clear that the employees themselves have said that they could forgo that right if meaningful negotiations were forthcoming on binding, third-party arbitration.

Perhaps what I am putting forward is hypothetical. I prefaced my remarks by saying that I know the Hon. Member's commitment to employer-employee relations, and I also understand how she has worked with people over the years. How would she feel if there was a strike and a picket line was set up on Parliament Hill? Would she adopt the position taken by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), for example, who has said publicly that, indeed, the work of the House of Commons is essential, and he has given warning that he would see fit to enter the House to do what he has to do as a Member of Parliament in order to represent his electorate?

I know the position of certain members of the NDP who spoke today. They said that they would never cross a picket line for whatever reason. However, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre said that in certain circumstances, he might cross a picket line if he judged that the matter at hand was of such importance to warrant his explaining to those who were picketing that he was crossing so that he could do his job as a Member of Parliament.

I wonder how the Hon. Member for Trinity feels about this. Perhaps this is unfair to her because I did not discuss this matter with her before. Perhaps I should ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister—

Mr. Murphy: They have to make a speech before you can do that.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, I may have to ask that question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) wishes to make a speech and to tell us how she would act. However, I am asking the question of the Hon. Member for Trinity who has made public her views on this Bill. We do not yet know the views of the Hon. Member for Gatineau, but we may find out about them some day.

What would the Hon. Member for Trinity do if faced with a picket line of bus drivers, messengers or security guards who were saying: "We do not believe that you should go to your workplace because we are openly protesting a conflict in employer-employee relations"? What would the Hon. Member say in response to the comments I have just made?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, first, I do think it is logical to regard Parliament as an essential service in which strikes would not be permitted. I think that way because of how important it is for citizens to be able to have access to their elected representatives to redress grievances. If Parliament was not able to operate, the Government and the executive level would operate without any checks and balances, and that would be most undesirable in a democracy. That kind of situation would be fraught with all kinds of possibilities for arbitrary decisions against citizens who would not have any means of redress. For those reasons, I think it is reasonable to withhold the right to strike from Hill employees. However, having said that, workers who are deprived of that particular right, which is a blunt and very powerful weapon, must be protected in other ways. They must have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that there is not enough time left today. When we resume the debate, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) will have the floor for another four minutes for questions and comments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—ASSISTANCE FOR OFFICIAL LANGUAGE MINORITY GROUPS (A) GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ACT.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on April 8, I put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard), which I actually wanted to direct to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and he refused to answer. I read some comments in the press that the Government was rather slow and hesitant about implementing official languages programs and policies. I read some headlines, such as: "La Fédération des francophones hors Québec and Alliance Québec say these petty reforms are unacceptable.". Another headline: "Exasperation a result of Ottawa's hesitations", and another headline in an English newspaper, I think it was the Gazette: "Ottawa has failed to consult us on reform: language minorities", and it goes on: "Alliance Québec and francophones outside Quebec blame Ottawa for inaction".

Mr. Speaker, I therefore put my question to the Prime Minister: When is this Government going to deal with the problems that concern official language minority groups and when can we expect, and I am reading at page 12187 of Hansard, April 14:

—when can we expect some solutions to the problems in Newfoundland regarding access to French in the courts; in Ontario, regarding French television; in Manitoba, regarding services in French, and throughout the province regarding education and Section 23?

Mr. Speaker, we know that the problem in Newfoundland is that two Francophones asked for a French trial, and up to now, they have not been able to get one, because our own Government, through its officials at the Department of Justice, is arguing that Bill C-42, which was passed by this House in 1977 or 1978, was not proclaimed in Newfoundland, and it is a particular section of this Bill that provides one is entitled to be heard by a judge who speaks the same language.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is that since that time, a Charter of Rights was adopted by Parliament which I believe recognizes the right of a person to express himself before the Courts in his own language. I asked the question, because if I had known the answer, Mr. Speaker, I would not have asked the Secretary of State for further details.

We know that the Court Challenges Program under which groups authorized to bring questions of national importance before the courts was expanded in September 1985. We know also that today is the anniversary of the proclamation of Clause 15, and all of this put together indicates that the Government, five or six months after the proclamation of Clause 15, has extended the court challenges program to allow target groups who feel their rights have been infringed on either under Clause 15 or Clause 27, to appeal to the courts and defend their interests.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, the whole process has been entrusted to a third party. The Social Planning Council has been instructed to set up a panel to rule on the eligibility of the various claims. So far, no claim has been accepted, as far as I know, because the said committee has not yet ruled on any of these claims. If the Minister's response tonight is that the said Committee has to deal with 20 cases, I will say: Yes, but where are the results?

Well, Mr. Speaker, there are people in Canada who feel that their rights have been infringed on, whether the right to an education, the right to be heard by the courts in their own language, or some other essential and basic right. Therefore, I ask the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me when we can expect results concerning the court challenges program issue, more specifically, the rights of the accused to be heard in courts in their own languages?

Mr. Speaker, my other question dealing with the financing of educational television in Ontario is one which I have close at heart—I put everything in my question—and I should like the Minister to tell me when Ontario can expect to receive the few million dollars which it is seeking, and which have been promised, to extend French television programming on the TVO Network. I have not received any reply to that, Mr. Speaker.

Concerning Clause 23, I have asked just how many cases we could expect would be heard or at least considered, and I have not received any reply there either, because actually, it is not the Government who answered my question, but the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who stated that the Government was carrying out a full review of the official languages programs, that the task force was supposed to submit its report shortly, and that we would be eventually advised—I do not know when, sometimes in the future—of the amendments which it would recommend.

Mr. Speaker, my question was not about the Official Languages Act. My question was more concerned with language programs and policies. Today again, I tried to make this Government understand that all this hesitating and shilly-shallying . . . we are sick and tired, Mr. Speaker, of being told: It is too complex. It is too contentious, as the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) said. I didn't say it, he did in a press conference or an interview with Canadian Press recently.

He said, and I quote, it may not be word for word, because I don't have the statement in front of me, but I remember clearly the gist of his announcement. He said: It is not wise to proceed too quickly, because this is so contentious and complex and dangerous that we must take a gradual approach.

You know, all this means is festina lente, Mr. Speaker. You understand Latin, so you know what festina lente means. It means: Make haste slowly.

Mr. Speaker, that is not what we need. We need leadership. We need a Government that has the courage of its convictions and can say: We are going to do something. We are going to start something new, We will provide the necessary leadership, and we will give that leadership to Canadians and we will show by our convictions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I am sorry but the Hon. Member's seven minutes are up.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr.Scott).

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who is asking when will the Government do something to help minority groups in the provinces, I think it is obvious that our Government has already done a lot for these groups. Support for minorities is an essential aspect of the over-all policy of the federal Government with respect to the official languages. At the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) happens to be reviewing the present policy with his colleagues from Justice and Treasury Board.

In addition, our Government has maintained the $20 million budget for the official languages communities program. We have renewed and expanded the Court Challenges Program and made sure that it will be administered by the Canadian Council on Social Development.

We are now examining new ways to support the development of minorities in co-operation with the provinces, the private sector and volunteer organizations.

[English]

The protocol on official languages in education has been renewed until 1988 with a 3 per cent increase for the first year. This means $432 million over two years. With regard to Francophones in Ontario receiving French language programming, our Government has made a significant contribution. For 1985-86 we have provided $1.6 million for French language programming. The Government has also made a commitment to finance half the costs of establishing the French network of TV Ontario. This amounts to $3 million a year for five years. With regard to services in French in Manitoba, the federal Government will be providing $400,000 this year to support Manitoba in translating its laws, further to the Supreme Court decision which requires laws to be in both official languages.

Let us look at the Hon. Member's concern regarding Section 23 of the Charter and the question of minority education rights. I want to point out that since the adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, some provinces have improved the availability of education in the minority language. The Province of Ontario has dropped the criterion "where numbers warrant" and is proposing the establishment of a minority language school board in Ottawa. The Province of Manitoba is reviewing minority school management.

We are all aware, of course, of the federal Government's support to the Northwest Territories in establishing French as an official language of the territories. Preliminary steps are now being taken to negotiate an agreement on official languages with the Yukon.

[Translation]

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the federal Government has been and still is very supportive of the minority official languages communities throughout Canada.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, today I want to raise a matter pursuant to a question raised in the House on March 12 during Oral Question Period, which was directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle).

The House knows my concern for the survival of the textile industry in Canada, and I am particularly worried about the ability of our industry to cope with international competition. That is why I would like to inform the Minister of my concerns about research in the textile industry.

The textile industry has introduced ultramodern technology which is accessible throughout the world and it has become increasing capital intensive. On the other hand, the clothing industry is more fragmented and more labour-intensive, and several distinctions must be made in the case of the textile industry, since in some sub-groups like hosiery and drapes and curtains, modern technology has not been introduced at the same rate.

We know that at the present time, Canada has no research centres that are really specialized in textiles. I am referring to research aimed at discovering new products and new manufacturing processes.

Of course there are a number of research centres that can help the industry with quality control testing, such as the Ontario Research Foundation and the Centre de recherche industrielle du Québec, the CRIQ, but these centres do not specialize in textile research. There is also our biggest reseach centre, the National Research Council of Canada, and I found out that textile manufacturers, or at least those in Quebec, do not make use of its services and are hardly aware it exists.

At the present time, when a textile manufacturer is looking for new ideas, he has to get them from the trade magazines or visit the textile fairs in Europe. The House will agree it is not very practical to have to travel so far to learn something. And it will also recognize that small businesses are always penalized more than others, because they lack the resources to be able to send regularly a person or persons around the world to look for new concepts. We are now seeing the introduction of new technology with the latest computerized equipment for primary manufacturing operations. The application of new technologies, such as robotics, microelectronics or laser technology could transform the industry into one that requires huge investments, which might help it to neutralize the advantages enjoyed by countries with low overhead and to win their share of the market.

In 1982, for instance, Japan earmarked over $60 million US to fund a new nine-year research and development project to produce a fully automated sewing process. At the same time, the United States launched a similar project to design an automatic machine to sew the sleeves of men's overcoats, one of the most complex and most difficult operations in that sector.

This research program is sponsored by a group of textile and garment manufacturers, the unions involved, and the American Department of Trade. In fact, it is a ten-year $69 million program being carried out in Boston, in the State of Massachussetts. The results are quite encouraging, and the prototype of a sewing system using mobile sewing machines remotely controlled by cameras and computers has been developed and tested in a plant.

Advanced research has been made to include other sewing operations and to lower the production cost of the prototype. This revolutionary sewing system should be on the market within three years.

In Western Europe, research and development work is being done at two levels, by the European Economic Community and by individual countries. The European Economic Community's research and development project has a budget of $17 million spread over four years, and will be up to 50 per cent financed by these countries.

In Canada, our main exports are furs and outer wear, which represent 49 per cent and 21 per cent, respectively, of the industry's exports. In the fur group, 42 per cent of our entire production is exported to the United States, our main export market since they purchase more than 82 per cent of our total clothing exports.

Actually, the countries of South-East Asia have recently penetrated the fur market. Are we going to let them have a free rein? When I think of textile research and development in my own province, I think of businesses that have succeeded in taking the initiative and creating an original product.

I am thinking, for instance, of NALPAC, in Montreal, which invented a revolutionary snow fence made of polyester.

I am thinking of TEXCEL in Beauce, which manufactures geotextiles that are immensely useful for road construction in marshy areas. I am thinking of Dominion Textiles, in Drummondville, which manufactures KEVLAR cloth for tires.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine what our inventive geniuses could do if they had technical support through a specialized textile research centre? The centre could do regular testing on manufactured products entering Canada to examine the actual composition of such products and find out whether they are up to import standards.

It could also be a place where we would have a bank of experts. I know several people who are retired and who would be delighted to serve as consultants.

Mr. Speaker, I hope these considerations will encourage the Minister to look at the feasibility of setting up a research centre that would be welcomed by many primary textile products and clothing manufacturers.

• (1840)

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his very fine and well researched presentation. It is well known in the House of Commons that the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) is very, very interested in ensuring that the textile industry progresses. He makes his presentations very well known to the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), as well as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens).

The Government took steps in the May, 1985 and February, 1986 Budgets to stimulate research and development, particularly by small and medium-sized companies, which comprise a significant part of many of our traditional industries, including textiles. The fully refundable R and D investment tax credit was specifically intended to assist such companies.

The Hon. Member for Drummond may be aware that the Minister signed a subsidiary agreement on scientific and technological development with the Government of Quebec on a great day, St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1986. It also happens to be my birthday, so it must be a great day. Under the agreement, the two Governments will spend $38 million over five years to promote research and technological innovation in Quebec firms.

There will be particular emphasis on manufacturing technologies, including computer assisted design and manufacture, new uses for traditional materials, and electronics and infometrics, all of which are of particular relevance to the textile industry. Firms may apply for the grants in order to conduct feasibility studies with regard to major new technologies or products, to acquire modern scientific equipment for research and development, and to undertake significant new R and D projects. While the initiatives must come from the firms, they are encouraged to collaborate closely with universities.

• (1845)

Research and textile fibre technology is supported at the University of Guelph and the University of Manitoba. The National Research Council maintains a team of 12 people who conduct research on textiles and textile fibres, the results of which are available to the industry. I know the Hon. Member mentioned that the textile industry may not be that interested in the NRC, but I am sure that the co-operation between the industry and NRC can improve and will do so. The field staff of NRC provides advice on research and the latest technology to the firms in the sector.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member should know that Quebec provides assistance to the Centre québécois de la productivité et du rendement, and that the federal Governmemt does not want to duplicate the work of that organization.

Finally, the federal Government does much to promote technical progress in that sector.

ENERGY—SUGGESTED DISCOUNTS FOR MOTORISTS PAYING CASH FOR GASOLINE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The adjournment debate is designed to give Members of Parliament an opportunity for further discussion when Members are not satisfied with answers they have received. I welcome this opportunity and thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his attendance.

My question on April 7 asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) if the Minister would contact Canadian oil companies and request them to consider giving discount prices to motorists who pay cash rather than use credit cards. This would be an appropriate sequel to the actions already taken by the Energy Minister, who has clearly shown that she is an advocate for consumers. It is right that a Minister be that kind of advocate. Lobbyists represent different interest groups within Canadian society on this Hill. Trade, business and labour associations all have their champions here. Who represents individual consumers except their Members of Parliament and the Government they elect?

Speaking out on behalf of consumers is especially appropriate for a Progressive Conservative Government, for ours is a people party that cares about people and their concerns. Time on this adjournment debate does not permit the review of the many occasions when the Conservative Party has acted on behalf of consumers. Robert Stanfield, for example, as Leader of the Opposition, was ready to go as far as price controls.

My question did not urge any action, extreme or moderate. In place of action, it suggested using moral suasion, for moral suasion has been proven to be an effective instrument in gaining fairness for the Canadian consumer. It is well known that over the years the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have frequently on behalf of the Canadian people and their well-being made use of moral suasion to influence banking policies. The Energy Minister has herself made use of moral suasion on behalf of motorists in this country. I quote from her remarks in the House on March 12:

> Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to tell the Hon. Member that politeness pays off. Today Esso and Petro-Canada have announced that they have dropped the price of gasoline by two cents a litre.
> You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I asked the industry to ensure that the price decreases were passed along to consumers so that everyone could take advantage of our deregulated oil and gas industry.

I have been encouraged by the effectiveness of her moral suasion. On March 13, for example, one gas station in Scarborough West charged 46.9 cents for regular gas and 49 cents for unleaded. Today the same station charges 38.1 cents for regular and 41.1 cents for unleaded, a drop of 8.8 cents a litre. In the past 36 days, the price of regular gas has dropped 18.8 per cent and the price of unleaded 17.6 per cent, demonstrating the effectiveness of moral suasion and the appropriateness of it when a Minister uses it in a private enterprise economy. "Politeness does pay off".

If the Energy Minister would ask Canadian oil companies to take another step on behalf of consumers and to at least consider giving discount prices to motorists who pay cash rather than use credit cards, it would be another opportunity for a Government to show it cares about consumers. A caring Government cares enough to help. As well, the discount for cash proposal is credible. Already one of Canada's major oil companies has informed me that it is "seriously studying" this proposal and its application in British Columbia.

At this very moment in various parts of the U.S., certain major oil companies such as Esso are presently giving discount prices to motorists who pay with cash rather than credit cards in particular regions. The proposal is thus credible and practical. In response to my request on April 7, I was told by the Parliamentary Secretary:

> No more would she suggest that a company do that than she would suggest that a haberdasher charge less for a suit when customers pay cash rather than use credit cards.

There was simply no parallel there. The Minister's actions show that retail gas prices are on her agenda and part of her concern. Rightly so. I had to be impressed and somewhat amused by the way the word "haberdasher" was used in a political sense. The late President Harry Truman was a haberdasher. At one point in his life he saw the value of his inventory reduced by over 800 per cent in one week through bank action. There was a haberdasher who would have appreciated some Government action.

It has been demonstrated time and time again that moral suasion by the Government produces results in private enterprise. I commend the Minister for what she has done on behalf of consumers. I hope she might yet take one further step. Moral suasion and politeness pay off.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reply to my hon. friend, who has always shown a great interest in the consumer. He has made an excellent suggestion to the oil companies. Obviously they have already received his message loud and clear. The Minister does not and will not interfere in the day-to-day operations of private sector companies. She has made that very, very clear. At one time, and I think rightfully so, she said that she expected the savings from falling oil prices would be passed on to the consumer. The companies are doing that. I would like to think that when the Minister sent that telegram to the various companies, it had some effect.

There are many marketing tools, and this is a marketing tool, which the companies use. The Hon. Member mentioned that some of the major oil companies use it in the U.S., but only in certain areas. Obviously it is a marketing tool within a certain area. I know that here in Canada many of our energy companies provide 5 per cent discounts to various organizations which have a special card and buy their gas at a certain station of a certain company. These are all marketing practices carried on by various companies.

The Minister does not want to get involved in day-to-day marketing operations of these companies. We deregulated the industry and as a Government, we are committed to deregulation. The Canadian electorate have said that we should let them operate their businesses and get off their backs. They will do the job, they will create employment and make things better for Canadians, but we should stop placing this burden of Government on them. This is happening and we have seen some very positive results.

That is not to minimize the importance of the suggestion by the Hon. Member. It is a good one. Obviously he has been in touch with one of the major oil companies, and he might want to encourage the others by making that suggestion to them. I thank him for bringing up this issue and for his concern. Yes, we are very, very pleased that the savings resulting from lower oil prices have been passed on to consumers right across this great country of ours.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED—EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): On December 2, 1985, Mr. Speaker, the Government announced its decision to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited in Montreal. Established in 1945, this corporation is one of the most profitable agencies of the Government of Canada, with 750 employees in Montreal and 50 more in Saint-Augustin near Quebec City.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian Arsenals employees were completely ignored when the Canadian Government made its decision, for they stand to lose most of their benefits once the corporation has been sold. For instance, Mr. Speaker, the pensions of these employees: a 29-year-old employee with 12 years' seniority will lose $17,213 a year under the new—

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

HIRING PRACTICES IN HUMBOLDT—LAKE CENTRE CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin the day with a small puzzle for Members of the House. It is a brain teaser concerning a real life situation. Since I do not know the answer, I will ask the House.

Young people in my constituency who are permanent employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration are regularly hired in the fall as permanent employees, and then receive unemployment insurance in the spring when their jobs are filled by two university students. When those students go back to school in the fall, the permanent employees become members of the Employment and Immigration staff again. The puzzle I have for Hon. Members is this. Has that created three jobs, two jobs, or one job? Those Hon. Members who get the answer have places reserved for them in the line-ups in front of their local Canada Employment Offices.

VANDALISM

DEFACING OF UKRAINIAN MONUMENT IN EDMONTON

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on the evening of April 6 the monument commemorating the memory of millions of Urkainians who died during the famine of 1932-1933 was defaced for the second time outside Edmonton City Hall. The words "Nazi lies" were painted on the monument.

The Ukrainian Canadian Committee and the Jewish Federation of Edmonton stated, and I quote:

> This act of vandalism undoubtedly reflects the views of an insignificant sector of our society, yet it serves as a reminder that there are still those who will not accept the reality that the man-made famine of 1932-33 took place.

As a Canadian of Ukrainian racial origin I am outraged at this act of vulgarity against the memory of over six million Ukrainians who were starved at the hands of communism. This monument reminds us of past evils and atrocities committed against Ukrainians. People may deface monuments, but they cannot erase the memory of a people or change the truth of history.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INDUSTRIAL POLLUTION CONTROL IN CONSTRUCTION OF NORANDA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment, the Hon. Tom McMillan, publicly stated this week that our Government is prepared to put up a sizeable part of the $150 million needed to build the Rouyn-Noranda industrial depollution plant which, between now and 1990, would recuperate 50 per cent of the 500,000 tons of sulphur dioxide released annually through Noranda smokestacks.

According to Government estimates, Mr. Speaker, this project will cost $110 million. The Minister said he thought the least that could be done would be to reach a tripartite shared-cost agreement, which means that the federal Government is prepared to invest a minimum of $36 million.

However, our Minister of Environment acknowledges that the Government of Quebec has to be the key promoter of such an endeavour. Therefore I would urge the Quebec Minister of Environment to expedite negotiations with Noranda so as to get the project under way as soon as possible, for it has long been a major topic of conversation in the region, and it would certainly contribute to improve the quality of life of local residents.

DIESEL FUEL PRICES IN UPPER OTTAWA VALLEY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the failure of the Arab led OPEC consortium to agree on production quotas has caused the price of oil to fall by 60 per cent in the last three months. Yet farmers in the Upper Ottawa Valley who will be on the land very soon are not paying lower prices.

As diesel fuel costs form a significant portion of a farmer's fixed costs, I find the present state of affairs grossly unfair and indicative of the Government's continuing insensitivity to the plight of the farmer. I call upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) to initiate, on an urgent basis, a full and complete inquiry into diesel fuel prices in the Upper Ottawa Valley.

The Minister's own Department of Energy has informed me that diesel fuel prices have dropped five cents per litre in the Kingston area and two cents per litre in Montreal. Yet in the Upper Ottawa Valley prices have not dropped at all. This is an injustice to the farm community and to the forest industry. It is a deplorable situation and needs immediate attention. The Minister says she will not interfere with private enterprise. This is proof that she is not interfering with her friends who have oil interests.

THE ECONOMY

POSITIVE EFFECTS FROM BANK RATE REDUCTION

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, Canadians, Quebecers and people in the Gaspé feel confident once again, since the good news that is coming in practically every day augurs well for the future.

Yesterday, the Bank of Canada announced a further reduction in the bank rate. Successive reductions within the last few weeks have had a positive impact on all sectors of our economy.

According to Statistics Canada, sales reached $11.2 billion in February 1986, an increase of 14.1 per cent over September 1984, and 9.7 per cent over February 1985.

In Quebec, the figures are almost identical: 14.2 per cent compared with September 1984, and 9.2 per cent compared with February 1985.

Mr. Speaker, this is thanks to the sound and effective policies of our Government.

YOUTH

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT FUNDING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government has turned its back on the unemployed and student youth. The total funding for Summer Employment Experience Development has been reduced from $163 million in 1985 to $127 million in 1986. Some of this money has already been siphoned off to be used only for Expo '86.

What is the result? In my riding of Churchill, despite the fact that youth unemployment remains high and the demand for youth employment programs remains the same, the federal Government has reduced its contribution to the SEED Program from over $700,000 to $409,000. This money is earmarked for municipal, public, and private sector job creation where wage subsidies are required. The Government must act now to provide funds for youth, at least meeting and matching last year's contribution, even if it is not willing to meet the real needs of unemployed youth.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPORTANCE TO SARNIA-LAMBTON

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government, in co-operation with the American Government, has until next Tuesday to convince the Senate Finance Committee in the U.S. to agree to the positiveness of bilateral trade negotiations. Enhanced trade with the U.S. is no longer an option for the Canadian economy but a necessity.

The choice is no longer between freer trade or maintaining the status quo, but between freer trade or closed borders.

My riding of Sarnia—Lambton, with its proximity to the U.S., is extremely interested in having our borders opened. The unemployment rate in my constituency is far above the national average, and the attraction of new businesses and industries is essential to our area.

Earlier this week I attended the opening of an American company which has chosen the Sarnia area as its first Canadian location. On many other occasions we have not been so fortunate. Recently another American firm was deterred from opening in our area because of the high tariffs and duties on goods entering the U.S.

We must make a determined effort to attract new businesses into our country. Opening our borders is very essential.

THE ECONOMY

CONFIDENCE IN GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the results of a recent economic survey of 200 Scarborough business people have now been printed in the March edition of the Scarborough Businessmen's Association Newsletter. The results clearly show confidence in the federal Government's economic and fiscal policies, as well as in the forthcoming trade negotiations with the United States.

For example, with respect to the question of unemployment 57 per cent of the respondents stated that their outlook for the eocnomy was positive; 60 per cent stated that interest rates would decrease; 51 per cent stated unemployment would decrease; 49 per cent stated that, as a whole, the impact of free trade will be positive; and 70 per cent said their company sales will increase—all positive responses clearly indicative of just what is happening with the Canadian economy under a Conservative Government.

PROSTITUTION

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION RESULTING FROM BILL C-49

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to discuss some of the consequences of the new legislation on soliciting for the purpose of engaging in prostitution.

In Vancouver, about two-thirds of the arrests made involved prostitutes and only one-third their clients. We had a glaring example the other day in Vancouver of the difference between the treatment given prostitutes and the treatment given their clients.

A prostitute and a client were both arrested for soliciting, and both cases were heard by the same judge.

The prostitute was fined $150 or five days in jail, and the client was acquitted and put on probation.

This evidence of discrimination proves that the many people who are opposed to this legislation are right. Mr. Speaker, once more I want to voice my objections against this unfair legislation which allows the police and judges to apply a double standard, depending on where their prejudice lies.

INDUSTRY

B.C. TELEPHONE COMPANY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, B. C. Telephone Company appears to be deliberately terminating jobs for operators, most of whom are women. After decimating jobs for women in Terrace, the company now plans to terminate some 70 jobs in Cranbrook. Since most women operators cannot leave their families to transfer elsewhere, this has resulted in a subtle tactic to reduce operators' jobs by the hundreds.

We do not agree with the Hon. Member for Kootenay East—Revelstoke (Mr. Graham) who has said that this is not a federal issue. We ask the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to ask the CRTC immediately to hold special hearings in Cranbrook, with a one-year moratorium on B.C. Tel job transfers, until service and community implications of this move are established.

We again ask the Minister of Employment and Immigation (Miss MacDonald) to approve the request of TWU for a job maintenance technological change study into B.C. Tel actions.

We ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) to investigate whether B.C. Tel is ignoring its responsibility under the Canada Labour Code—

AGRICULTURE

FREEZE PLACED ON GRAIN COMPANIES' STORAGE CHARGES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, with low commodity prices and increasingly high input costs, Canadian farmers are under an immense amount of financial pressure. Therefore I was very relieved to learn that the Canadian Grain Commission has frozen the amount that grain companies can charge farmers for storing, handling, and cleaning grain. This decision will mean a saving to Canadian grain producers of an estimated $20 million.

While officials with companies such as UGG and Cargill have agreed that the freeze is a necessary step, Otto Lang, the Vice-President of Pioneer Grain, contends that the freeze is bad economics and a giant step backward. Bearing in mind that the same Otto Lang is a former Liberal Wheat Board Minister, I would have expected him to be more knowledgeable about the severity of the financial crisis, and a bit more sympathetic to the plight of western Canadian grain producers. In light of Mr. Lang's previous prominence in Canadian public life, it would be most useful if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) would reassure this House that Mr. Lang is no longer an influential member of the Liberal Party.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMASCO TAKEOVER OF GENSTAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. By allowing the takeover yesterday by Imasco of Canada Trust, the Government has blatantly flouted the will of Parliament and two successive resolutions passed by the Finance Committee of the House of Commons which unanimously recommended against the takeover, and against the principle of takeover by a non-financial institution of a financial institution. Will the Government announce a policy prohibiting such takeovers and the continuing concentration of economic power in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, regarding the rights of Parliament, I might point out that the other place is very much a part of Parliament and it has not yet issued its report which will also deal with this issue. I will certainly respect the rights of Parliament in addressing ownership policy, as I indicated yesterday. We have made a lot of progress in this arrangement we have made with Imasco and Genstar in terms of the conditions we laid down for them.

GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my answer to that is that the conditions laid down by the Government are practically a farce and not stringent at all, and I repeat my question: Why doesn't the Government take an approach that reflects the almost unanimous will of this House to prevent such takeovers?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have recommendations from a House of Commons Committee and we are in the process of developing an ownership policy. We have made considerable strides. As I said yesterday in the House and outside the House, we are now in a new era in terms of financial institutions and the quality of our regulations, after years and years of neglect.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE BE RECONVENED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final question is directed to the House Leader in the absence of the Hon. Member who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance. Would the House Leader consult over the weekend with that Hon. Member to allow a reconvening of the committee so that Members of Parliament from all sides of the House who have expressed strong views about this issue can have their views reflected on the record, beginning on Monday?

[Translation]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a good idea, but it is up to the members of the Committee—

[English]

I think the Right Hon. Member will understand that members of the committee, particularly under the new reform rules, are able to make these determinations. Certainly the mere fact that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has made this suggestion will make its way to Westaskiwin where the Chairman of the committee is now speaking on behalf of one of our distinguished Hon. Members.

SELF-DEALING INQUIRY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance and also concerns the Imasco takeover. Since this process started last year when the Minister allowed Genstar to take over Canada Trust, can the Minister assure the House that there has been no self-dealing in that situation?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we received an undertaking from Genstar at the time of that takeover that there would be no self-dealing. We have much stronger undertakings from Imasco, and we also have undertakings on other things on which we did not have undertakings before.

RESPECT FOR UNDERTAKING GIVEN BY GENSTAR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that she received an undertaking from Genstar that it would not be involved in self-dealing, but can she confirm that that undertaking was respected?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to check with the Superintendent of Insurance, but no self-dealing incidents have been brought to my attention.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance and refers to the Superintendent of Insurance to whom the Minister just referred. When the Superintendent of Insurance, the Minister's chief adviser on trust companies, was asked whether he could provide any compelling evidence that the takeover by Imasco would in fact be in the best interest of the country, he said that he could not provide any compelling evidence that it would be in the best interest of Canada. If her chief adviser said that it was not in the best interest of the country, why did she go against that advice?

• (1120)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Superintendent of Insurance did not say that the status quo was necessarily in the best interest of the country either.

Let me explain to the Hon. Member that what we were able to accomplish in the arrangement of which the Government can be very proud was our underlying commitment to allow the market-place to function, provided policy purposes were met. It is fair to depositors. It is fair to the companies involved. It is fair to Hon. Members of the House who expressed concern about some of the matters on which we obtained undertakings. I think that is in the public interest.

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. The clear recommendation of the Finance Committee on two occasions was to stop the takeover. It was virtually the opinion of the House of Commons that the takeover should be stopped. The Minister did not do that; the Minister did not stop it. Can she identify any Member of the House, or anybody, who says that the decision to go ahead with the takeover is a good idea or a good decision in the interest of Canada and Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think there are Members of the House who think we did a good job on this deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-LIBYA RELATIONS—REQUEST FOR COMPREHENSIVE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On January 10 the Prime Minister announced a series of economic measures against Libya, but they were far from cutting off all significant economic relations with that country. Would the Government not agree that the situation has become far more serious than it was on January 10? Will the Government, therefore, immediately announce a truly comprehensive package of economic measures against Libya, covering both companies and workers, and thereby set an example for the world community and help encourage Libya to become a more responsible member of the world community?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Liberal House Leader has been over the last few days, because I have certainly been answering those questions. He will be happy to know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is taking advantage of the OECD meeting to meet with representatives from France, Japan, Australia, the United States, New Zealand, Denmark, the Netherlands, and the Federal Republic of Germany, and that he now detects a greater momentum for co-operation on terrorism, which is likely to be high on the agenda of the Tokyo Summit.

REPLACEMENT OF AMERICAN WORKERS IN LIBYA BY CANADIAN WORKERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Government does not realize that the situation has changed since January 10. In the January 10 statement the Government urged Canadian companies and workers not to fill gaps when Americans left Libya. Could the Government assure the House today that this has not happened and that Canadian companies and workers are not helping to prop up the Libyan regime and everything connected with it? Could the Government give us that assurance and tell us what steps it is taking, and has taken, to ensure that Canadian workers and companies are not filling gaps left when Americans withdrew from Libya?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have told the hon. gentleman what steps Canada has taken. The issue which he raises is certainly in the January 10 statement. Any further alternatives which are to be explored are currently being explored by the Government in preparation for discussion of the entire matter of the elimination of the reprehensible and evil scourge of terrorism throughout the world.

IMASCO TAKEOVER OF GENSTAR—ROLE OF CANADA TRUST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Will the Minister confirm that, as a result of her highly imaginative and highly misleading policy on the Imasco takeover, at the end of next year one Imasco subsidiary, Canada Trust, can make a loan to another Imasco subsidiary, namely, Imperial Tobacco?

• (1125)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the undertaking we have is that there will be no self-dealing whatever between Imasco, its associates and affiliates, and Canada Trust. That is in the schedule which was signed by the company.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN CORPORATE MERGERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the policy that was announced, that will hold for only one year. It will be interesting to see all that spelled out at some point in the near future.

Quite apart from the self-dealing aspect of this issue, which was of great concern to members of the House committee and members of my Party, we are also concerned about the alarming rate of mergers in the Canadian economy. Is the Minister aware that in the 1960s some 250 mergers took place each year, that in 1985 there were over 700, and the forecast rate of takeovers this year will exceed 900? Is the Minister aware of this trend and, if so, what does the Government plan to do about it if it really believes in competition?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that many of those mergers and takeovers are probably very positive for Canada. There will be some that will not be because of difficulties in one company or another. Any practical experience in the business field would tell the Hon. Member that sometimes these are very beneficial. Big-sized companies compete internationally and they compete better sometimes than small companies, not always, but sometimes.

COST TO TAXPAYERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would read some of her old speeches and some of the old speeches of the Prime Minister, she would pick up interesting observations about such mergers almost never providing more jobs and almost always reducing the amount of competition.

I have had a list prepared of 21 mergers that have taken place since 1979 which shows that these mergers have cost some $24 billion in the main, without producing more jobs. Also they were mainly financed in some part by tax breaks. If I send the Minister the list of these 21 mergers costing, I repeat, some $24 billion, will she provide us, not on a case-by-case basis but totalled together, the net cost to the Canadian taxpayer who has been financing these takeovers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has said in this House, our tax law with regard to the write-off of interest and takeovers and mergers is consistent with other countries'. The Hon. Member may recall an answer given by my colleague, which is inconsistent with what he is asking today, because foreign companies, which the Hon. Member has many times said he does not like, can write off the interest to take over Canadian companies.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He knows that Newfoundlanders have been waiting since last September for a decision on the fate of the Newfoundland Railway. Indeed the Minister in this House, and as recently as last night on CBC television in Newfoundland, confirmed that discussions were ongoing with the Newfoundland Government. Can the Minister indicate today when he expects those discussions and negotiations to draw to a conclusion, and a decision one way or the other on the future of the Newfoundland Railway will be announced?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would hope those discussions will conclude and a decision be reached very soon. I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern about this. I also recognize the concern of Newfoundlanders and the uncertainty that this matter has created. I apologize for that, but nonetheless we are using our very best efforts to try to put together the best kind of transportation package to meet the needs and services of Newfoundland.

PREMIER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that a large part of the reason for the uncertainty is that yesterday in Newfoundland a statement was made by the Minister confirming that negotiations are ongoing, and an absolute denial was made by the Premier of Newfoundland that negotiations actually exist? Can the Minister tell us why that very large contradiction exists between the statement of the Minister, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, and the denial by Premier of Newfoundland? Newfoundlanders have suffered long enough from an uncertainty caused, I suspect, by confederation-building in Newfoundland at this time.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps a matter of semantics. There have been discussions, and perhaps they could be referred to as negotiations, but I can confirm to the Hon. Member that there have been discussions. Those discussions will continue until such time as an agreement can be reached more or less in principle, after which time we will set out to consult with the people of Newfoundland, the communities, and particularly the workers involved.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

OWNERSHIP OF IMASCO

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Statistics Canada, for which he is responsible, carefully reviews company structures and shareholdings to determine which are foreign controlled. Will the Minister confirm that Statistics Canada, in the latest information under CALURA, which I have here, considers Imasco a foreign-controlled company under the effective control of the U.K. owned British American Tobacco Company?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have not read that particular report, but I would be happy to review it and reply to my hon. friend.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister might be a bit more on top of his Ministry.

APPROVAL OF GENSTAR TAKEOVER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister responsible for financial institutions. In view of the fact that Imasco is classified as foreign-controlled, has the Minister not in fact approved a back-door increase in foreign control of our financial institutions, something which the country considers quite unacceptable in the banking sector?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague to my right is very much on top of his Ministry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Imasco is classified as a Canadian company under FIRA and Investment Canada. BAT in Britain is a broadly-held company which does not have control of Imasco's board, even though it is a large shareholder. The board of directors is totally Canadian controlled, and will continue to be so.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the federal Minister of Transport is being publicly contradicted by the provincial Minister of Transport in Newfoundland, and the federal Minister of Justice, representing Newfoundland, is being publicly contradicted by the Premier of Newfoundland with regard to the future of the Newfoundland Railway. I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport. When are these Governments going to stop playing peek-a-boo with each other and the people of Newfoundland so that the people of Newfoundland will know what is being discussed?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's rhetoric is a bunch of nonsense, and my previous answer stands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLL RESULTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in an interview in Newfoundland last night the Minister of Transport said: "According to our polls, the Newfoundland people consider the highway as the most important mode of transportation", and that he was going to Cabinet with his proposal.

Is the Minister so naive as to believe that the people's belief that the highway is the most important mode will give justification for doing away with the railway? Through that reasoning the railway could be done away with right across the country. Is that what the Minister wants to do?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not one-tenth as naive as the Hon. Member who just spoke.

Oral Questions

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SOFTWOOD EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. We have known for over a year that the mood of protectionism has been on the rise in the U.S. Congress on everything from fish and hogs to steel and, particularly, wood.

Would the Minister explain why his Government continues to wander around in a daze on this issue when he knows that it is time for this House and the country to start talking tough and put some real lobbying money where our mouth is on the issue of softwood?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong in his assumption that the Canadian industry or the Government has been inactive on this particular issue. We welcomed the delaying of the vote in the U.S. Senate Finance Committee. We think that the President of the United States has given us an indication that the trade talks will start off with a clean launch, and that is what we are hoping for.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, to date the Muldoon belly crawl has brought us quotas and tariffs. Of all members of Cabinet, the Minister should have done something real through the 1986-87 Estimates. All he has brought forward is one-half a person year in order to deal with the very real trade threat from the United States Congress. Is he prepared to explain why he did not do more in the 1986-87 Estimates??

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member ask the industry and the provincial Governments whether this particular Minister has been co-operative with my colleague, the Minister responsible for Trade, on this particular issue.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

FUTURE TAKEOVERS—REQUEST FOR RESTRICTIONS ON SELF-DEALING

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Will the Minister guarantee the House that in any future proposed takeover of a financial institution by a non financial institution, or in any future attempt by non financial institutions which already control financial institutions to increase their ownership, she will impose the same or similar restrictions on self-dealing ownership and divestiture as those she imposed on Imasco yesterday?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think we crossed an important watershed with the agreement with Imasco. Certainly in any future reviews we would be considering the same kind of controls and undertakings, giving some thought to individual circumstances. We are very pleased that our review process worked very well. I do not want financial institutions in our country to be traded around like penny stocks.

INSURANCE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Self-insurance and group funding are becoming alternative programs for Canadian individuals or institutions which cannot get liability insurance or afford the unlimited increases. Can the Minister tell Canadians if she is encouraging such programs, and when she will table legislation to protect Canadians under this new system?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his continued interest in this important issue. Our officials are continuing to study the specific problems and are in the process of developing an approach which we think will be helpful. The industry itself has been helpful in coming up with solutions. I think the worst of our crisis is over. Legislation on property and casualty insurance will be forthcoming shortly.

CASUALTY SELF-INSURANCE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Minister that although on January 20, she informed the House that the legislation was practically ready, we have yet to receive it. Is she going to consult with her colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, so that Canadian consumers will be protected under this new casualty self-insurance system?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I consult regularly with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am very anxious to get this legislation into the House as rapidly as possible. Sometimes I am a little optimistic about timing.

GENSTAR TAKEOVER—REPORTED EARNINGS OF CHAIRMAN AND PRESIDENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and is with regard to the Imasco takeover of Genstar. Is the Minister aware that, according to The Toronto Star business section of last Sunday, Mr. Angus MacNaughton, Chairman of Genstar, and Mr. Ross Turner, President of Genstar, will each earn $40 million as a result of the Imasco takeover of Genstar? Was the Minister aware of that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have seen those reports in the press, but have not confirmed them with anyone.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister see any problem with the Chairman and President of Genstar personally standing to make so much money from the merger?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the arrangements between buyers and sellers are their own.

Mr. Rodriguez: It's a conflict.

Mrs. McDougall: What may seem extravagant to the Hon. Member, and perhaps even to myself, is not necessarily what is going to take place between consenting adults.

Mr. Murphy: We are paying for it, remember that.

STATUS OF WOMEN

NIELSEN REPORT—HALT TO CREATION OF UNIVERSITY CHAIRS OF WOMEN'S STUDIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women.

One of the recommendations of the Nielsen Report is to stop creating chairs of women's studies. We know that interdisciplinary research is essential to the progress being by women in every way.

I wish the Minister would let us know whether he intends to implement this recommendation in the Nielsen Report.

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the study teams have made a series of recommendations which are available to the standing committees for discussion. She will also know that study teams have in other places dealt with women's issues, such as the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. They have called for more research and enhanced appointment of women. All in all, some of the recommendations relating to women from the different study teams can be readily accepted, and others need to be discussed.

PROMOTION OF STUDIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about chairs for women's studies, which is quite different from the research that the Advisory Council or other women's organizations can do.

Therefore, I would like to hear from the Minister whether he intends to implement the Nielsen Report recommendation, which is not at all like the answer he just gave me. So, is he going to implement this recommendation, and if not, what kind of measures is he going to take to promote research? I think that what the Council does and what chairs for women's studies do are two entirely different things.

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for her representations. I share with her the importance of research into women's studies. As she knows, in the last year there was the completion of five regional chairs set up across the country. The Government has been looking at whether to increase them, and the recommendations are part of the ongoing discussions on how best to enhance research into women's issues.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SALE OF CN ROUTE—SITUATION OF WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He knows that CN Route is selling its assets to three Toronto investors. In the negotiations did the Government or the Minister take any steps to guarantee job security for the workers involved?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the CN management and board have agreed in principle to a proposal to sell CN Route. Within the context of that agreement there will be provision for certain job guarantees. Indeed, those details are being worked out at the present time. Of course. the Hon. Member should be aware that the final package will have to be approved by the Governor-in-Council and the CTC. Until such time as all of these details can be worked out with the unions and all other parties affected, we are not in a position to say just what the full package will look like.

RETIREMENT PACKAGES INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, is the Government, and CN through the negotiations, looking at offering retirement packages for those who do not already qualify for early retirement benefits?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the past CN has been very generous in its severance arrangements and early retirement packages. These kinds of arrangements are being negotiated with the unions within the context of the purchase agreement which has been put together.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF DELINQUENT TAXES—AMNESTY PROGRAM PROPOSAL

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. In a statement made in this House on March 26 I called to the attention of the House the very successful amnesty program in a number of U.S. States to collect delinquent income taxes. Since that time has the Department had an opportunity to look into the feasibility of this program as a means of allowing Canadians who would like to do so to come forward and pay delinquent income taxes?

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister, who is in Vancouver attending the opening of a Canadian Pacific Highway customs post in preparation for Expo 86, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question and interest. Currently in Canada there is a voluntary disclosure program which allows anyone who has failed to file a return, or who has filed an incorrect return, to make a voluntary disclosure subsequently without fear of prosecution. This matter is held in strictest confidence between the taxpayer and Revenue Canada. I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will take his concern as a representation to the Minister.

FISHERIES

RESOURCE SHORT PLANT PROGRAM

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as Acting Minister of Fisheries, which is one of the more important capacities he has. Hundreds of plant workers along the northeast coast of Newfoundland will not have jobs this year because plants like La Scie and Englee do not have an adequate supply of fish. The Government does have a Resource Short Plant Program but it is not working as it should. Is he prepared to review that program and make the necessary changes to ensure an adequate supply of fish to those plants and protect the jobs of those workers?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Resource short Plant Program it is my recollection that there are certain objective criteria in place and that a plant like La Scie has not met those criteria. If I understand the hon. gentleman correctly, he is asking the Government to review the program with a view to looking at those objective criteria once again. I do not know where the Minister might be in that review process, but I will certainly draw the hon. gentleman's representations to his attention as soon as he returns to the House.

NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT'S MIDDLE-DISTANCE FLEET LICENSING APPLICATION

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Newfoundland has applied for licences for a whole new middle-distance fleet which also will have an impact on fish supply. I want to know where those licences stand. Is the Government of Canada going to issue licences to the Government of Newfoundland for that new middle-distance fleet?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman would not expect me to have that kind of detail in the House today. I shall certainly bring that matter as well to the attention of the Minister as soon as he returns.

REFUSAL OF VISITORS' VISAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of British Columbia has invited the world to come to Expo 86. That is terrific. However, for the Government of Canada that apparently does not include the Third World. Is the Minister of Immigration aware that there are cases of Canadians in my riding with relatives in Chile, Hong Kong, the People's Republic of China, India, the Philippines and other countries who have been invited to Expo by Bill Bennett but the Canadian Government will not give them a visitor's visa to get into Canada?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Government is aware of the importance of visitors to Expo 86. We are also aware that where there are visitor visa provisions in place, the officers dealing with these cases should be particularly sensitive to the circumstances of Expo 86. I have in fact received representations from a number of Vancouver area Members as recently as yesterday on this matter, and have sent out a telex advising those officers granting visitor visas to be sensitive to the tourist implications, while honouring, obviously, the security needs of the country.

PROBLEMS OF QUEBEC POTATO PRODUCERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, to inform him of the serious financial problems facing potato producers in Quebec.

I would like to ask someone on the Government side to explain why potato producers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are to receive federal financial assistance totalling $9.8 million, when Quebec potato producers are in great financial difficulty and have received no assistance and no announcement from the federal Government.

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the potato producers of eastern Canada were very pleased with the type of assistance we were able to provide. As to the observation about the problems in Quebec, I would be pleased to present that particular position to the Minister who is absent on government duty.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister realizes there is a difficult situation in Quebec, but it seems to me the Government could do more.

Why is it helping only two of the potato producing provinces—not that I disapprove of helping Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick,— but only has words of sympathy for Quebec producers? We would like immediate assistance.

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the importance of the potatato producers in those two provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick is very significant. They had very real problems in putting in this year's crop. However, I will take the Hon. Member's representations to the Minister.

FORESTRY

INQUIRY IF NEW DEVELOPMENTS OCCURRED FOLLOWING CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT ON GENETICS OF SMALL PLANTS SOUGHT BY QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Forestry). On April 30, 1985, our Government signed the Canada-Quebec Agreement on Forestry. Quebec wanted 300 million small plants per year under this Agreement.

Have there been any significant developments in the genetics of small plants, in co-operation with the Quebec private sector, since the Agreement was signed?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that our own Laurentian Research Centre has been working with the Quebec Department of Energy and Resources to develop the new kinds of strains in species that will grow faster and be more productive. I believe that the first run of seeds from that particular strain will be available this year.

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE DEPARTMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question also is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. It must be his day today. Is he aware that his colleague, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry, has called for the creation of a complete Department of Forestry which would be a line Department? Will he tell us when this will come about?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows quite well that that is the kind of change that falls within the exclusive prerogative of the Prime Minister. If and when any changes in the machinery or structure of Government are made, it will be announced by the Prime Minister at the appropriate time and in the appropriate place.

INQUIRY OF MINISTER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Perhaps I could ask the Minister of State for Forestry, if the Deputy Prime Minister will allow me, whether he agrees with his colleague, the Chairman of the Committee on Environment and Forestry, that there should be a full line Department of Forestry?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again I can only reiterate my last answer. However, I am sure all Members of the House will agree when I tell the Hon. Member that we have a very able, excellent, talented, and gifted Minister of State for Forestry now.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

SMOKING IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS—GOVERNMENT APPEAL AGAINST BOARD DECISION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to brighten up his morning and inject some life into it. As the Minister knows, the staff relations board decision to confine tobacco smoke in federal buildings to separately ventilated areas for smokers is being appealed by the federal Government. Will he stop the appeal?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have had a wonderful morning and I have met very many interesting people. I hope my contribution to the Hon. Member's morning will finally give him some light as well. We are encouraging federal Departments to follow the lead that has been taken, not only in my Department but in a few other agencies and Departments of Government as well, and simply declare workplace areas "smoke free".

With regard to the specific case to which the Hon. Member refers, it is a different approach in which one could only do what was done in Health and Welfare if one also conforms to the physical requirements of that earlier judgment. That created some difficulties—not the principle that we would like to see smoke-free areas throughout the federal Government.

REASONS FOR APPEAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister means what he has said, particularly in many speeches in the House of Commons which are reproduced in Hansard, why is there an appeal? Why the appeal if he means what he says?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I mean exactly what I said. I just explained it. If the Hon. Member wants to attend at noon when I speak to another group, he will see that I will be saying the same thing.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT RENOVATIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is directed to the Government House Leader. As we know, the Ottawa International Airport is still undergoing considerable renovations and will be for some time, at great inconvenience to its users. When can we expect to see some use of the new facilities at the airport which have been under construction for a very long time?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as they say out at the Ottawa International Airport, Tempus fugit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am pleased to be able to report to the Hon. Member and the House that it is anticipated that the construction on the west wing of the airport will be completed in late April or early May, and that the opening of that great facility will take place then.

Some Hon. Members: What year?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In 1986, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

PHASING OUT OF PROGRAM—COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A communique put out by the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments criticizes the phasing out of the Canadian Home Insulation Program. They go so far as to say that the Committee believes the powers and action of the Minister:

> —were not authorized by the—legislation, amounted to an unusal use of the powers granted by Parliament, and infringed the rule of law and the principles of fairness and natural justice.

What will the Minister do about this unanimous report of the committee?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this report has been drawn to my attention. It is my view that it has been based on misleading and inaccurate analyses of the situation. It suggests that these measures were—

Mr. Gauthier: It is a unanimous report.

Miss Carney: You asked the question, maybe I could answer. It suggests that these measures were announced by press release without cabinet approval. These measures were not announced by me, they were announced by the Minister of Finance on November 8, on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board. They were tabled in the House in the Blue Book of that date.

The suggestion that any homeowner lost any benefit that was accruing to him or her is not correct because all applications were treated under the old rules until such time as the Order in Council affecting the announcement was passed. The suggestion that anyone lost a benefit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

IMASCO TAKEOVER OF GENSTAR—ROLE OF CANADA TRUST—SELF-DEALING INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am sure that she would not deliberately mislead the House. Earlier I asked her if it was the case that one subsidiary of Imasco—Canada Trust—could make a loan to another Imasco subsidiary, namely, Imperial Tobacco, at the end of next year. The Minister replied that it was not possible because there was an agreement by Imasco not to allow that. Will the Minister confirm that the agreement made by the company expires at the end of next year and therefore the kind of self-dealing measure that I alluded to could in fact take place at the end of next year?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member. There is a general clause in the agreement that takes effect at the end of December, 1987. As the House knows, our intent is to put in place laws of general application and, with my optimistic nature, hopefully it will be long before then and will apply in this case.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want the Minister to be perfectly clear about what is at stake here with this takeover. In terms of existing law, the concerns of committee members on both sides of the House are still going to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I have a question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: We are being asked to buy a pig in a poke. That is what the Government is doing.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is no pig and there is no poke. This company has made a real undertaking to conform to our public policy requirements. It did so at our request and we worked very hard to bring about this arrangement. Legislation is forthcoming that will apply to this and other companies as well.

IMMIGRATION

UNSCRUPULOUS IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. He has made it public that he is trying to rid the system of phoney refugees. Yet there is growing concern that much of the problem lies with unscrupulous immigration consultants who are scheming fraudulent schemes against innocent individuals. Is the Minister prepared also to rid the system of phony consultants? And is he prepared to ask his colleague, the Solicitor General, to persecute and charge such individuals—

• (1200)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have a persecution complex.

Mr. Marchi: prosecute—some of whom his Department knows about?

Mr. Hees: Liberals persecute.

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising an important question on a matter of concern to all Members of the House and one which I have been addressing seriously. The RCMP at the moment are investigating the matter. I would ask the Hon. Member and others, to provide information which may permit action to be taken.

I also want to say that I have been in touch particularly with the Portuguese community and others to inform them that this particular action is unacceptable and we are seeking whatever scheme is necessary. I might remind the Hon. Member that the previous Government had conducted a study of this matter and was unable to act and he might like to accouaint himself with the report which was tabled by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Mr. Marchi: A short question?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Marchi: Brief? To the point?

Mr. Speaker: Tomorrow.

An Hon. Member: Do you feel persecuted?

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to alert my fellow Parliamentarians and Canadians that National Organ Donor Awareness Week will begin on Sunday, April 20, and extend to Saturday, April 26.

Recipients of Family Allowance cheques will find with their cheques this month a leaflet on organ donation with a detachable organ donor card. Information kits have been distributed to the media and most Canadian hospitals alerting them to the importance of organ donation and transplantation and providing them with resource items to facilitate their involvement.

I shall officially launch the week at a news conference in Halifax on Monday. I look forward to joining Hon. Members of the House, representatives of the transplant community, transplant recipients and a donor family at a breakfast meeting sponsored by Transplant International (Canada) on Tuesday, April 22, in the West Block.

Today thousands of Canadians are awaiting a transplant which will improve the quality of their life. For many of these people a transplant offers them the only chance for survival. However, many will not receive that transplant because there are not enough organs and tissues available. I, therefore, urge all Hon. Members to make a personal commitment to organ donation and to do what they can to encourage organ donation in their constituencies. Please sign a donor card or the donor card portion of your driver's licence. Please inform your family and doctor about your wishes. Consider what you can do to make something good happen by giving the most generous gift of all, the gift of life.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted to hear the Minister promoting organ donations and also to hear his announcement that he will be taking part next week in an organ donation awareness campaign.

I think it is very important to publicize organ donations, because a substantial number of Canadian men and women depend on such donations in order to survive or to substantially improve their quality of life.

The example of Diane Hébert will help to convince people that an organ donation can be a real success. This young woman waited more than two years for a heart-lung transplant. Today, she is asking to have transplants made easier by giving people the option of indicating their desire to make organ donations on their health insurance cards. This month, family allowance cheque recipients will receive a leaflet urging them to make organ donations. I too want to urge them to make organ donations and I would also ask all my colleagues in our three political groups here in the House and everyone in the beautiful riding of Outremont to do likewise. An organ donation is truly a gift of life.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party in support of the initiative of the Minister. We congratulate him for the statement he has made in the House today urging all Canadians to participate in the donation of organs for this most valuable reason.

Indeed, it is a wonder of science that enables us to make this ultimate gesture, the giving of life itself. The Minister has identified next week as being National Donor Awareness Week. Perhaps as Members of Parliament we can pledge our own organs next week as a dedication to science and transplantation purposes. Again, we applaud the Minister for this initiative and we will encourage our constituents to follow suit.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) is obliged by the Standing Orders to table a comprehensive response to a report submitted by the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration 120 days ago. He has already violated that obligation once by refusing to submit a comprehensive response to a previous report. He promised then that he would do the two together at this time.

I received a letter from him in which he says he is not ready and will do it later. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you will refer this matter to what I believe is a new committee, the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure because this is not the first time that this Minister has breached this Standing Order.

I, therefore, ask that you, Mr. Speaker, refer this matter to the Committee so we can discuss the value of Standing Order 99(2), when a Minister can apparently simply ignore it by writing a polite little letter saying: "I'm not going to do it because I am not ready to do it". If you wish to reserve on this matter, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have your response.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to perhaps address the point of order raised by the Hon. Member, my understanding of the matter is that there has been a response within the time required in each instance referred to by the Hon. Member. He went on to make reference to the quality or content of that particular response. I do not believe that is an appropriate point of order.

The Hon. Member may not be satisfied with the response, but I believe from what the Hon. Member says that the Minister has been fullsome in his praise with respect to the work which has been done by the Committee, but has indicated that he requires to carry out further consultations and will be giving the detailed response which is required on this very important and complex matter.

The point of order, however, is out of order because there has been a compliance and response by the Minister on each of these two occasions. I do not think it is appropriate for us to comment on the quality of these responses.

Mr. Heap: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is already on one point of order. I presume he wants me to finish this one before he raises another.

Mr. Rodriguez: On the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the logical course of action is for the Chair to reserve, not having the facts before it on this matter, and to come back to the House after investigating the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: On a separate point of order?

Mr. Heap: No, on the same point of order. I did give you the facts as contained in the letter of the Minister, if a Page will bring it to you.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, of course, the Hon. Member may send me what he has.

Mr. Heap: The word "comprehensive" is a joke if this is a comprehensive answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST-HARVEST TREATMENT OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Question No. 523—Mr. Caccia:

1. Are fruits and vegetables, in Canada, subjected to post-harvest treatment whereby a waxy chemical coating is put on to preserve moisture and freshness and, if so, what are the names and chemical ingredients used?

2. Are the chemicals, licensed or otherwise regulated by the Government and, if so (a) which agencies regulate which chemicals and under what conditions (b) which chemicals are used but not regulated?

3. Are toxicity tests conducted on the chemicals in Canada or in the United States and, if so by (a) government (b) private laboratory?

4. Are the results of toxicity tests available to the public and, if so, how is the public informed of the contents and hazards of any of the chemicals used?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Fruits and vegetables offered for sale in Canada may be subjected to post-harvest treatment with a "waxy" coating to prevent moisture loss and thus extend the keeping quality. In addition, the "waxy" coating protects against the invasion of spoilage micro-organisms. The chemical substances known to be used for this purpose are the following: mineral oil, petrolatum, paraffin, beeswax, carnauba wax, candelilla wax, shellac, sucrose fatty acid esters, oxidized polyethylene, carboxymethyl chitosan.

2. (a) and (b) All of these substances fall within the purview of the Canadian Food and Drugs Act and regulations administered by Health and Welfare Canada (HWC).

Mineral oil, petrolatum and paraffin are regulated as food additives under the Food and Drug Regulations. Although the remaining substances are not listed in the Food Additive Tables in the Regulations, they are subject to Section 4(a) of the Food and Drugs Act which states: "No person shall sell an article of food that has in or upon it any poisonous or harmful substance".

In this connection, the Health Protection Branch (HPB) of HWC has evaluated information pertaining to the safety of these chemicals and has determined that the use of these substances according to label directions would not pose a hazard to consumers and thus would not violate Section 4(a) of the Act.

3. (a) and (b) Various types of toxicological tests have been conducted on all the substances mentioned in (1) above. As a general rule, HPB does not undertake toxicity studies to support the use of chemicals in food but rather evaluates all available data which may have been produced by a variety of sources. In the case of these coatings, toxicity data are available from private laboratories, universities, et cetera in various countries including the United States, Canada and Europe.

4. Many of the toxicity studies available on these substances are published in the scientific literature and thus are available to the public. In addition, HPB is prepared to offer additional comments on the safety aspects of any of these chemicals. Substances considered to pose a hazard to consumers would not be permitted for use under existing regulatory authority.

EMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN COAL PRODUCING AREAS OF B.C.

Question No. 525—Mr. Broadbent:

1. (a) Did the Government make any studies on employment levels in the coal producing areas of southeast British Columbia and, if so, what were they (b) what action did the Government take to reduce the current levels of unemployment in the area?

2. What actions and/or representations did the Government initiate to encourage the Japanese Government to review coal purchasing policies by Japanese steel companies in British Columbia?

3. Did the Government make any formal representations to the Prime Minister of Japan when he visited Ottawa in January, 1986, to ensure that the coal mining communities of the Kootenays will not be made to suffer as a result of government-subsidized development of the northeast coal fields in British Columbia?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Employment and Immigration as follows:

1. (a) Some analysis of employment levels in the coal producing areas of southeast B.C. was undertaken as part of the studies conducted by the Manpower and Human Resources subcommittee under terms of the 1977 Canada-British Columbia Subsidiary Agreement to evaluate northeast coal and related developments.

The following studies were published from work undertaken by this subcommittee: Coal Development in Northeastern British Columbia Construction Phase, Manpower Study, March, 1978. Day Care Services in the Proposed New Town, 1976, Development of Manpower Training Programs, 1978. Labour Turnover and Community Stability: Implications for Northeast Coal Development in British Columbia, February, 1978, Manpower Demand and Supply for the Northeast Coal Developments, 1981, Manpower Development and Promotion in the Coal Mining Industry, January, 1978, Migration, 1976, Northeast Coal Employment Survey, 1977 Report of the B.C. Manpower Subcommittee on Northeast Coal Development, November, 1976 Women in Mining - An Exploratory Study, October, 1976.

(b) Webstar Mining Ltd. responding significantly to reduced supply contracts (as much as 50 per cent) Westar was forced into making extensive staff reductions—from its July, 1985, level of 2,000 to approximately 1,500 at this time.

In July, 1985, an initial Industrial Adjustment Service (IAS) Agreement was signed. The joint committee is responsible to seek out employment opportunities for more than 80 senior staff members (managers, administrators, professionals, etc.). To date, over 50 employees have been placed with other companies in the area.

At the same time, a second IAS agreement was signed on behalf of approximately 300 workers, members of either the United Mine Workers or the Office and Technical Employees Union. Limited success has been achieved for this group; however, job opportunities continue to be sought (e.g. the expected reopening of the Faro mine).

Byron Creek Collieries this operation is somewhat stable and has enjoyed a limited work force expansion (a few Webstar workers have been hired by Byron Creek). A joint company/CEIC—IAS Human Resource Planning Agreement is in place to deal with future planning and adjustment developments.

Fording Coal Ltd. this operation has stabilized and continues with a work force of some 1,400. In 1983, however, the Commission, under a work sharing agreement, paid some $850,000 in UI benefits on behalf of 1,600 Fording workers.

Line Creek—Crows Nest Resources Ltd. an effective working relationship has been established between this operation and the B.C. region. A joint Memorandum of Understanding has been signed to deal with future planning and adjustment developments concerning the company's 700 employees.

2. The federal Government's policy with respect to coal, and for many other commodities, has been to leave the commercial and financial details of contracts to the private sector participants.

In 1985, meetings with Japanese steel industry representatives in Tokyo, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stressed Canada's interest in maintaining and expanding coal exports to Japan based on commercial considerations. In line with the above policy, the coal purchasing policies of the Japanese steel companies in B.C. were not discussed.

3. At the January, 1986 meeting between the Prime Ministers of Japan and Canada, several issues germane to the Canadian resource sector generally were raised. With respect to coal, it was noted that Canada as a whole is committed to remaining a reliable supplier of coal to Japan.

COAL EXPORTS TO JAPAN

Question No. 526—Mr. Broadbent:

What was the value and quantity of coal exported to Japan over the past three years from the (a) northeast coal fields (b) southeast coal fields in British Columbia?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources):

(a) Northeast B.C. coal fields

1983	– nil
1984	– 5.2 million tonnes valued at $472 million
Jan. 1985 – Nov. 1985*	– 6.5 million tonnes valued at $571 million

(b) Southeast B.C. coal fields

1983	– 6.6 million tonnes valued at $471 million
1984	– 7.5 million tonnes valued at $515 million
Jan. 1985 – Nov. 1985*	– 6.5 million tonnes valued at $450 million

* December data not yet available.

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remainning questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: First, I would like to advise the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by five minutes today after one o'clock.

There are five motions on this day's Order Paper relating to Bill C-87. I have had the opportunity to examine the said motions and find that they are all in order. They will be proceeded with as follows.

Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 will be grouped for debate. Since Motion No. 3 is consequential to Motion No. 1, a vote on Motion No. 1 will apply to Motion No. 3.

Mr. Gauthier: Could we get a copy of that?

Mr. Speaker: Has this not been distributed?

Mr. Gauthier: No. This is the second time.

Mr. Speaker: A vote on Motion No. 1 will dispose of Motion No. 2.

Motions Nos. 4 and 5 are identical. The Chair will select Motion No. 4 which will be debated and voted on separately.

I apologize for the notice not having been distributed in time to Hon. Members.

Canadian Arsenals Limited

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) moved:

(2) An election referred to in paragraph (1)(e) is irrevocable.

(3) The Governor in Council may, in relation to persons who make the election referred to in paragraph (1)(e), make regulations

(b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of purchase and sale between the government and the new employer."

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 35 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"12. Subsection 3(2) and section 9 to 12".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is quite unrelated to the matter before the House, but it is something which has been the subject of discussion and agreement between the Parties. It has to do with the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the President of the Privy Council seeks unanimous consent to revert to Motions. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee; and Motions Nos. 1 and 3 (Mr. McInnes), and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to speak to the amendments to Bill C-87. The pension situation of employees involved in the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited, both in terms of accrued pension benefits and future pension expectations, has been of significant concern to the Government. Throughout the negotiations leading to the legislation now before the House every effort has been made to ensure the fullest protection of accrued benefits and arrangements that will ensure future coverage is provided on a fair and reasonable basis. As a consequence, the Government has concluded that a further measure of protection should be added. Therefore, it has tabled a motion to amend Bill C-87 accordingly.

As I am sure Hon. Members will appreciate, the degree of control that the Government can exercise over the pension entitlements earned by CAL employees through future employment with SNC is limited. It would not be appropriate for Government to intervene unduly with the flexibility of management and employees to arrive at mutually-acceptable terms and conditions of employment over the long term. Nor would it be consistent with privatization to allow the employees to continue to be covered under the pension plan for federal public servants for service after the date of sale.

At the same time I want to assure the House that, as part of the conditions of sale of this corporation and others, the Government has required, and will continue to require, that the purchaser offer pension arrangements no less generous than those normally found in the industry in question. In addition, the purchaser is required to agree to enter into a reciprocal transfer agreement which will permit the portability of pension credits under the PSSA to the new pension plan at the individual employee's option.

In its briefing before the parliamentary committee, SNC clearly indicated that it will fulfil both of these requirements. In arriving at the terms of this reciprocal agreement, the Government will ensure that employees' accrued benefits are fully portable, subject to suitable guarantees that the amounts transferred will be used exclusively for the benefit of employees who elect to transfer to the new plan.

The transfer of portability option, which I have just described, will appeal to some CAL employees; but there are two other important options which will also be made available to every employee. The first of these would be the normal options available to employees on ceasing to be contributors under the PSSA. Employees will be able to choose to receive whatever benefit would be available to them under the terms of the PSSA as though they were ceasing to be employed on the date the corporation is sold. The choice available to the individual will, of course, depend upon his or her age and length of pensionable service.

The other option the Government is seeking to make available to CAL employees through the present motion to amend Bill C-87 is based on the concept of continuity of service for benefit eligibility. This provision is contained in Bill C-90 which is now before the House, and replaces the current Pension Benefits Standards Act and provides minimum standards for pension plans of employees under federal jurisdiction. Clause 30 of that Bill sets minimum requirements for pension plans on the sale of a business and would, among other things, ensure that if the pension plan is not taken over by the purchaser, the selling employer must permit the employee to remain on a plan and remain a plan member without accruing further pension rights. On ceasing to be employed with the purchasing employer, the employee would then opt for benefits under the selling employer's pension plan. While he or she would not have earned further pension under the old plan, the employee would use the second employment toward qualifying for benefits.

Perhaps I could give an example that might make this clearer. Say a CAL employee who is now age 50 with 25 years service under the PSSA becomes an employee of SNC and remains there for five years at which time he voluntarily retires. At that point, his five years of SNC service is added to his 25 years of service under the PSSA for qualification purposes, and he therefore qualifies for an unreduced PSSA benefit based on his 25 years of CAL service. In other words, the individual has been able to preserve his ability to meet the 50-30 threshold. Obviously this option may well appeal to some employees, depending upon their personal plans and expectations.

I would like to add one final comment on this particular option. As Hon. Members are aware, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is currently consulting his advisory committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act on broad questions of Public Service pension reform. The President of the Treasury Board has asked me to assure the House that employees who choose to leave their accrued pension credits in the PSSA under this continuity option will be treated in respect of those credits in the same way as all other employees remaining under the plan. Finally, I would like to stress that in all instances, employees will have one year from the point of sale to select the options they prefer.

The Government has endeavoured to protect employees and maximum flexibility is being provided to individuals to make pension choices that suit their particular situations, desires and long-term plans. Complex questions are involved and it is intended that each individual will be provided with the appropriate information and counselling to make the best possible personal decision.

Under the privatization arrangements proposed by the Government, CAL employees have a number of options with respect to pensions. The first option is to transfer accrued pension benefits to the new SNC pension plan under reciprocal transfer arrangements. This transfer would be done on an actuarial, ongoing basis and negotations are under way to guarantee that all amounts transferred will be for the sole and exclusive benefit of transferring employees.

Depending upon the age and service of employees, there are other options. The second is a return of contributions plus interest. The third is a deferred annuity at age 60. The fourth is an annual allowance at age 50 and the fifth, subject to acceptance of the House of the proposed amendment, is the further option of continuity of service for PSSA pension benefit eligibility upon retirement from CAL.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering if there might be unanimous consent to allow two or three questions to be asked of the Parliamentary Secretary on the particular provisions of the Government's amendment in view of the fact that there are both Government amendments and Opposition amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there is unanimous consent, I will allow it. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on report stage of this Bill. I have listened with great attention to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary who seemed to be telling us that it was through the good graces and foresight of the Government that we are now amending this Bill so that it will be what has been called more generous to the employees. I am not sure that the phrase "more generous" is an appropriate one under the circumstances. The best way to describe it would be to say that these amendments make it not quite as bad as it used to be.

I challenge the Hon. Member to say that had the Opposition not brought some of these issues to the attention of the committee we would not have seen very many amendments to this legislation. I must say that I am anxiously awaiting the remarks of the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) who represents almost all the people affected by this Bill. I am sure he will speak vividly and forcefully in this particular debate in order to ensure that his constituents get all the benefits they deserve. I must say that I am a little disappointed that we did not hear from him at committee, but perhaps there is still time for that today.

At issue today is not SNC. We are not here to discuss that corporate citizen. We are not here to discuss whether SNC is a good or a bad employer. I think it has made its reputation in the past and we know it to be what most people would consider a good employer. The bad employer is not SNC, it is the Government of Canada. The Government is letting down over 700 of its employees.

During the committee hearings, Members of the committee asked representatives of the Public Service Alliance what they were asking for their employees. These people do not work for the Public Service Alliance, they work for us. They work for the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: They are members.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Members across the way say quite correctly that they are members of that alliance but they are our employees. They are our constituents and it is our duty as Members of the House of Commons to take care of their concerns and to act toward them in the best way possible.

The Parliamentary Secretary used the example of an employee who had worked for the Public Service Alliance for 25 years. He described how the 50-30 threshold would be achieved under the amendment brought before us in Motion No. 1. That may be well and good. However, I remind the Parliamentary Secretary, and perhaps he can respond to this later, that even if the employee does have the option to retire under that formula, if the Government plan and the SNC plan are incompatible in terms of retirement age, the employee would want to retire on his pension under the federal plan but will not be able to do so because he will only receive half a pension. The other half that he will be accumulating under the SNC plan will not come to him when he is the same age and therefore he will either be contributing for the last number of years to the workforce and working for almost nothing or he will be withdrawing with much less in the way of a pension because of the fact that the conditions of the two plans are not the same.

There is really only one solution to this dilemma. I submit that that solution is Motion No. 2 which I have put before the House. Motion No. 2 asks for employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited to be given the same benefits that the Government has given to employees of other companies which have been divested in the past.

In particular, I want the same benefits which we as a Parliament gave when the Deer Lodge Hospital and several other institutions were transferred from the federal Government to other jurisdictions. It does not matter whether the other jurisdictions were provincial entities or the private sector. The point is still the same; our employees are being transferred elsewhere.

There are two ways in which this could be achieved. For example, the employees could continue to contribute toward the federal plan, even though they were no longer federal employees, with SNC contributing its share. The Government indicated that that would not be possible because it would create a precedent. I do not agree, but, nevertheless, the Government has taken that position.

The Public Service Alliance has indicated that it is prepared to go along with my Motion No. 2. I urge the Government to accept the motion because it would permit employees, who are soon to be former government employees, to continue to contribute to the Public Service superannuation system in the same manner as employees who are on leave without pay. All existing employees of Canadian Arsenals could then continue contributing until retirement. Of course any other employee or new employee of SNC would not be in the same situation. It would provide a means to accommodate those Government employees, those employees of a Crown corporation. There is a clear and easy way to accomplish that, and I have indicated it in Motion No. 2.

The Minister has indicated that he has some reluctance with the amendment because there would then be two classes of employees at SNC. In his view there would be those employees who had the Government pension plan and those who had a private one. That will be the case anyway. One group of employees will have two pension plans, one based on their number of years in the Public Service and the other based on their number of years with SNC. The other group would have just the SNC plan. We are not deciding whether there will be two levels of benefits. We know it already and we cannot change it. It will happen regardless of what we do. That is not the question before us today.

The question before us today is the approval of Motion No. 2 which would provide a means whereby our employees, those employees of Canadian Arsenals, would be able to continue to contribute both the employee's share and the employer's share to the Public Service Superannuation Plan. The employees have agreed to pay both shares, and they will attempt to recover some, if not all, of those funds from their new employer through the collective bargaining process. I believe it is a very reasonable compromise, and the Public Service Alliance has agreed to it. Certainly it is one with which the Government can live.

As I indicated previously, it is not precedent setting, because we went even further in the transfers of Deer Lodge Hospital and similar institutions of which the Government divested itself in the past.? The precedent is there. As a matter of fact, what we are trying to do in this case is less than what was done in the case of Deer Lodge Hospital. If we could live with it in the past, we could certainly live with it now. It is not a precedent setting issue at all. It involves fairness on the part of us collectively toward the treatment of those employees.

Yesterday I referred to fair treatment of employees of the House of Commons. Today I am talking about employees of the Government of Canada. In my view we can, if we have the desire and political will, achieve this result with little or no difficulty.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the report stage debate on Bill C-87 respecting the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Before dealing specifically with Motions Nos. 1 and 2 which are before us today, I should like to spend a moment providing some background on the Bill. Many months ago in British Columbia some erroneous correspondence was circulated saying that I was in great support of the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited. For that reason I will refer to some background information which will indicate why that was never the case and is not the case now.

Mr. Riis: It will never be the case.

Mr. Fulton: It will never be the case. Canadian Arsenals is a 100 per cent Crown-owned corporation, established in 1945 for the purpose of returning the armament industry in Canada from wartime to peacetime operations. As all Hon. Members know, currently there are two plants—one at St. Augustin near Quebec City and one at Ville Le Gardeur near Montreal—for manufacturing medium and large calibre ammunition. There are 750 employees at Le Gardeur and 50 at St. Augustin. The Public Service Alliance of Canada is the principal union with about 570 of the employees as members. The federal Government, through the Department of National Defence, is the company's largest customer, responsible for some 90 per cent of its sales. Some 10 per cent of its sales are exported. The following question has been legitimately and properly raised by the workers and many Members of the House: Why sell it?

Last year its profits totalled well in excess of $11 million. At that time it was ranked as No. 470 in The Financial Post top 500 in terms of sales. However, the interesting point is that the company was ranked as No. 3 in Canada for its five-year profit growth by The Financial Post. Again the question is raised: Why sell?

According to the projections of the Government, sales are expected to double over the next five years. The sale of Canadian Arsenals requires the approval of Parliament, unlike corporations under CDIC such as de Havilland. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced the sale of Canadian Arsenals at the beginning of last December to SNC of Montreal, an engineering, construction and manufacturing firm, for a reported $92.2 million. According to the press release there were eight bidders and SNC was the highest.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada was never notified of the Government's intention to privatize, and learned of it only through press reports. That is a matter which the House should ponder in some greater detail. Why did that take place, and what kind of Government attitude does it demonstrate? As we deal with Bill C-87, it is important to keep in mind that it is very precedent setting and may in fact be a precedent—at that a damn poor precedent—for the privatization of other Crown corporations should the Government continue on the road which seems to be supported by some of its more right-wing friends.

Key questions have been raised by the workers and their representatives with PSAC on the issues of job security, pensions and the Canada Labour Code. At this point I should like to deal with the two particular motions before us. As someone very active on the question of pensions and unions, having been a former member of the B.C. Government Employees' Union, I have some concerns about Motions Nos. 1 and 2. Paragraph (3) of Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes), reads in part as follows:

> The Governor in Council may, in relation to persons who make the election referred to in paragraph (1)(e), make regulations—

Further on it refers to very vague and non-specific regulatory producing powers. Under the previous Government of Mr. Trudeau, the previous Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), and the present Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), I have found that only too often these kinds of regulatory producing powers of the Governor in Council are designed and in fact used, if we look at history, to strip rights from workers who are falsely led to believe that they will come their way. The fight is no longer one where the workers of Canadian Arsenals would be forced to cash out their pension plans and live under whatever SNC decided. It also does not group the pension plans, Mr. Speaker. I think workers in other areas of Crown Corporations are looking to see what happens in this struggle in Parliament and how the Government and the House will respond to a very real dilemma.

Many of the workers, and yourself, Mr. Speaker, if not all workers in the country at some point in their lives have to plan how they will care for themselves and their families. They have to look at costs between the time they stop working and the time they pass on. It seems to me that the Minister and government Members who have spoken have not really taken into account the kind of bombshells they have been throwing at the munitions workers. They started off by saying: "You will have to divest out of the plan—cash out." Then the Government moved to this extremely vague proposal which allows for some options. By being so non-specific it means that we as Members of this House are not doing the job we should be doing, that of setting a blueprint.

Regardless of which Party we belong to, the Government has 211 Members and can vote through whatever it wants. It seems to me that in the interests of workers, their ability to plan to have a decent and liveable pension plan when they do decide to retire, we have done a very poor job as the House of Commons. The Government has done a terrible job in responding to the real concerns of the workers.

Let us now take a look at the proposal, which is somewhat better, Motion No. 2, brought forward by the Hon. Member who just spoke. It is something I do not like because it does not address the issue of pensions head on. I am not saying that Bill C-87 should necessarily be the panacea for pension plans for the portability and transfer of pensions from the private to the public sector or from the public to the private sector or private to private. Let me read Motion No. 2:

> An employee of the Corporation, as of the day prior to the date of transfer, will have the right, on transferring to the new employer, either to:
> (a) choose to remain and continue as a contributor to the federal superannuation plan—

That sounds very reasonable.

> —and the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contributions to the plan; or—

I want to come back to that part of the motion.

> (b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of purchase and sale between the government and the new employer

The new employer is SNC.

Let me come back to paragraph (a) of Motion No. 2, because I have some concerns about it. I am not as concerned as with the Government amendment, but it is one that I think could really benefit from some clarity and drafting in that this will force the workers to renegotiate with SNC as a result of paragraph (a).

It says the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contribution. "X" being the annual cost to the employee and historically to the employer means that there will have to be a great deal of pressure brought on SNC to live up to this. It does not provide what I see as being the most appropriate mechanism, which should have been drafted by now by the Government, in terms of the actual move of all of those years that have been earned by the employees under the public service, so they could carry on in a realistic way and pay in the same way they are paid now, rather than having to enter into a new process of negotiations.

I recognize there is a reason why this has been drafted in this way. There is, however, a better way to do this, not only for the workers of CAL, but for other workers who will be faced with the same dilemma. As was raised by the Hon. Member who just said down, the Government, even under the present administration, is not applying the same kind of criteria to situations that are similar. It all depends on how much pressure is brought on them, and what kinds of co-operation they are getting from the purchaser of an operation such as Canadian Arsenals Limited, and what kind of heat is created in the House of Commons itself.

There is a great deal more than could and should be done. It is something that Canadians will have to reflect on, whether or not this is truly the fairest way possible for this kind of privatization to take place. The Government has a majority. It is its choice, but I think the voices that have been heard in the House of Commons and from the Public Service Alliance of Canada is that what has been proposed so far is pretty tacky and pretty hard to take.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate on the report stage of Bill C-87 and the motions numbered 1, 2 and 3 for debate. I will try to focus my comments on the subject as a whole. The House will recall that the motion we are now considering is aimed at amending Bill C-87, specifically with respect to the matter of pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I may refer to comments I made here in the House on March 11 of this year, when I pointed out in debate that I was not happy with the provisions made by the Government in this Bill with respect to pensions.

The comments I made at the time may be found on page 11,422 of Hansard and perhaps I may recall what I said at the time, reading from Hansard of March 11, 1986:

> We do not have that guarantee. We do not have much information dealing with the pension arrangements. We will be looking forward in committee to getting from the Minister some of the answers to these questions.

Mr. Speaker, about the pensions... well, we saw what happened this week when employees from Canadian Arsenals demonstrated in front of the Parliament Buildings to protest against Bill C-87 because it totally ignores their rights, their vested rights with respect to pensions.

We know that the pension system we have for federal public servants is based on employee and employer contributions, and that there are certain formulas that have been established and negotiated and that are recognized as being both generous and fair in concept and application.

Mr. Speaker, employees and their representatives are asking to have the present pension plan, as regulated by the Pensions Act now in effect, transferred to the new employer so they can continue to contribute to their pension plan as they did before, and enjoy those benefits for which they have saved.

Mr. Speaker, in his December 2, 1985 statement on the sale of Canadian Arsenals, the President of the Treasury Board said this: It is a good deal for all parties involved, including the private sector and the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the sale is a good deal for the SNC group—and I know that people interested in this debate will refer to the remarks we made last March 11 when the Government was criticized for its amateurish and unplanned privatization procedure carried out with undue haste and without much thought given to the impact of privatization on the employees—but still we entertain serious misgivings about the so-called benefits accruing to the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Mr. Speaker, we were given assurances by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) and his Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Bradley), yet our misgivings have not been dispelled, particularly with respect to employee pensions. Although this amendment deals with that problem, I would simply remind the House that the proposition under study is short on specifics and smacks of amateurism.

Looking at Motion No. 1, I see that the person, namely the employee—I will read subsection 12(e):

> (e) the person elects, within one year after the coming into force of this section and in such form and manner as the Minister directs, to have the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and the regulations made under those Acts continue to apply to him to the extent provided by the regulations made under subsection (3).

Mr. Speaker, the words that bother me are "in such form and manner as the Minister directs". Had this read "in such form and manner as negotiated between the employer and the union", I would say it makes sense, at least the two parties will negotiate and reach an acceptable compromise. But no! The whole thing is to be decided by the Minister, unilaterally.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that, yesterday in this House, we discussed Bill C-45 in which the Government proposes to change the system where negotiations are authorized only on one side so as to allow a union to negotiate for the employees. In this case, I find the proposed changes very weak and narrow in their application since negotiation is unilateral.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee had the opportunity to examine the amendment moved by my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Motion No. 2 standing in his name attempts to make the following change to the bill:

> That Bill C-87, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 5 the following:
> "12. An employee of the Corporation, as of the day prior to the date of transfer, will have the right, on transferring to the new employer—
> —that is, SNC—
> —either to:
> (a) choose to remain and continue as a contributor to the federal superannuation plan, and the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contributions to the plan; or
> (b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of purchase and sale between the government and the new employer."

Mr. Speaker, this proposal was already made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in committee on behalf of the Public Service Alliance, and I think that it reflects the intention of the employees to continue to pay their own contributions, and even the share of the employer. As I said earlier, both employee and employer contribute 6 or 7 per cent to a pension fund which, at the time of retirement, after 35 years of service or under the magic number of 85, entitles the worker to a pension and the benefits from his investment.

If we look at Motion No. 2, we find that the employees are aware that the Government did not want to get involved with the private sector and continue to allow contributions to a public pension fund, as the Pension Act is very clear on this point. The employees therefore said: In that case, we shall continue to pay not only our own contributions, but also the share of the employer so that we may continue to benefit from the pension plan in which we already have substantial investments.

Mr. Speaker, that is truly taking the bull by the horns. If these employees cannot be authorized to keep their pension fund in which they already have vested interests and continue to contribute to this fund, I do not know how we could, in this House, authorize or endorse a solution which would be left completely at the discretion of the Minister as suggested in motion no. 1.

A different pension which, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, has been suggested by certain people, would also be a solution.

Mr. Speaker, the employees are asking, and I shall try to summarize since you are giving me a minute more, to be recognized as contributors to their present pension fund, which is the Canadian Public Service Superannuation Fund, and to contribute also the share of the employer if he refuses to recognize his obligation to keep up his own contributions.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with the amendments moved by the Minister, his Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on the pension rights of 800 Canadian Arsenals Limited employees affected by this privatization project. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Government is responsible for these problems because, before looking for a prospective buyer for this Crown Corporation, he had failed to determine its privatization policy.

• (1250)

[English]

I do not want to revert to the issue of whether or not this company should be privatized. A decision has been made by the majority of the House of Commons over our opposition. We must now talk about how this will be done, and whether it will be done fairly with regard to the workers.

I think it is significant that the Government's amendment has been proposed, because it acknowledges that the Government had not thought through what would happen to the pension rights of the employees in the event of privatization and, therefore, had made no legislative arrangements. Many of the affected employees may well have found themselves forced to cash out their pension contributions, and lose the employers' share, the indexation to which they would have been entitled under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and a lot of the interest. Yet, until the Government was forced to consider the matter, it did not consider that to be a problem.

While I believe that SNC has been acting in good faith in this particular matter, I must point out that neither it nor the Government sat down to discuss these problems seriously and work out solutions until the legislation went to the legislative committee, when finally some action began to be taken.

[Translation]

A Crown Corporation, as the epitome of responsibility, should provide a pattern for the way a corporation should deal with its employees in the 1980's. In this case, however, the privatization of the Canadian Arsenals Limited cannot be used as a model; in fact, it would be an improvement if the Government forced these amendments upon us, but it is a precedent that is in fact better than if nothing had been done.

Still, Mr. Speaker, the Government should have thought about this more seriously beforehand and, as we intend to support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, I suggest that the Government should consider whether the employees, some of them over 45 years of age, should not have the right to stay fully with the Federal Government's Pension Plan instead of being placed in the middle, in between the two plans, as proposed by the Government.

[English]

We have some specific concerns, Mr. Speaker. While the Government now recognizes that acquired pension rights, up until the date of the sale, can be preserved, there is no assurance that there will be adequate melding in order that additional pension rights acquired by employees who opt, within a year, to take what is in here and keep their rights in the Public Service Superannuation Fund, or to ensure that the additional pension credits which they earn from SNC will be translated into a pension.

Take as an example a worker aged 52 who intends to work until the age of 57 or 58 before retiring. It would probably be prudent for that worker to decide to keep his or her rights in the public service pension plan because of the indexation and other features. The employee may work for SNC but, having been there for only seven years there is no guarantee that those seven years would translate into additional pension on top of the reduced pension the employee would receive from the Public Service because the employee left at the age of 52.

I could give more examples like that, and I seriously regret the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary was not prepared to permit questioning on some of these points. He forces me to raise them in debate without any give and take. After I asked the House for unanimous consent I talked to the Parliamentary Secretary. I regret to say that he remained reluctant.

In addition, the Parliamentary Secretary must know that since the agreement of sale continues to be a secret document, and since the nuts and bolts of the proposal—

Mr. Daubney: Point of order.

Mr. Boudria: It has been made public.

Mr. Cassidy: It has been been made public? I apologize.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no point of order, then.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) is furthering the illusion that I am capable of being in all committees at once. I do my best, and I also trust my colleagues on these particular matters. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), did a very able job in this area, as I think the Parliamentary Secretary will agree.

The Parliamentary Secretary may have difficulty understanding this, but given the lack of consultation with the union, and the fact that this is a precedent for further privatizations which are a declared policy of the Government, the union is concerned over the wide degree of discretion left to Cabinet in the new Section 12. The Governor in Council is given the power to make regulations and specify which provisions of the Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act will apply, and to what extent. That means theoretically Cabinet could decide, despite the tenor and tone of the agreement, that no sections of those two Acts are going to apply despite the passage of Section 12. That is the legal position no matter what has been said by the Parliamentary Secretary. I have respect for him and I very much hope this Government, which has not kept all of its promises, honours the Parliamentary Secretary's word. I know he will do that personally, but his Government has perhaps a little more clouded reputation than he has as an individual.

The Government is allowed to make regulations to adapt provisions of the Superannuation Act for the purposes of this Section and then make regulations generally for the carrying out of this Section. As a legislative draft person I think I can understand why these things are there. However, given the climate of unease which these workers feel, it seems to me at the very least we could have had the regulations perused and approved in advance by the union in order to quiet their fears. Instead of that, we have effectively a blank cheque kind of situation. At least that is how it is perceived. Because of the contentiousness of the privatization issue, we have to look at perception as well as intention. The Government's intentions may well be 100 per cent honourable. It may say it has come up with the best solution it could. It is not the best solution, because I believe, as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) indicated in his amendment, that it should be possible to allow those employees who wish to stay in the Public Service plan to do so. The union says it will negotiate to get the employers' share paid to the employees so they can pay it into the two plans concerned. That should be possible and it is a better way. However, if the Government thinks this is the best way, it should understand that that is not the perception because of acts of omission and commission which have led to unease and disquiet on the part of the workers. That is why we can support the recommendations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Does the House want me to put the question now or shall we wait?

Mr. Cassidy: I believe there are other speakers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.05 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): That was a surprise, Mr. Speaker. Now I feel very uneasy.

While I do not plan to prolong the debate unduly, I want to make a few comments regarding Bill C-87, An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. Let me also point out that the decision to join Motion Nos. 1, 2 and 3 together requires one to comment on the need for this grouping in the first place.

The record should indicate clearly that the New Democratic Party opposes this Bill for many reasons, not the least of which is that the Government would want to cut itself off from Canadian Arsenals. Canadian Arsenals is a 100 per cent Crown corporation established in 1945 for the purpose of returning the armament industry in Canada from wartime to peacetime operations, as was required in those days. It has evolved into a corporation that produces munitions whose primary client is the Government of Canada. It is, by and large, an arm of the Government since some 90 per cent of its munitions are sold to the Government of Canada.

Last year, Canadian Arsenals had a profit in excess of $11 million on sales in excess of $100 million. That is quite impressive. That Crown corporation will not make $11 million next year as part of the Government's operation as a result of this Bill. We have some difficulty understanding the priorities of the Government, particularly of those Government Members who are concerned about the lack of Government revenue.

This Crown corporation is very profitable and well run, at least in terms of profitability. As a matter of fact, I believe it was ranked third in Canada for profitability. Yet steps are being taken to cut this particular Crown corporation adrift. It should be held up as ample proof of how a Crown corporation works extremely well in terms of profitability.

The major concern being expressed during the report stage of this Bill involves the pension arrangements for 800 employees of Canadian Arsenals. This concern arises because of the Government's negligence in thinking the process through carefully. Fortunately, in committee, thoughtful Members raised the point that not enough attention had been given to the pension arrangements of the hundreds of employees involved. Indeed, the Government agreed that this had been overlooked to a certain degree. Consequently, the first motion we are debating in this group was initiated by the Government in recognition of this oversight.

Bill C-87 is extremely important because of its precedent-setting measures. The approach used in this Bill will be used elsewhere as the Government attempts to privatize various aspects of Government operations. That is why we are particularly concerned about Clause 12. We are not simply dealing with the balance sheets or the facilities of Canadian Arsenals, we are concerned about what happens to the hundreds of employees in that operation.

Many employees of Canadian Arsenals have been contributing to pension plans for many years. Questions are now being asked about the transfer from this particular pension sphere into another and whether the employee will in fact be severely cut back in terms of the benefits that would accrue as a result of this change. Indeed, that is the case. That is the reason for Motion No. 2 in the name of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) which states:

> "12. An employee of the Corporation, as of the day prior to the date of transfer, will have the right, on transferring to the new employer, either to:
> (a) choose to remain and continue as a contributor to the federal superannuation plan, and the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contributions to the plan; or
> (b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of purchase and sale between the Government and the new employer."

I understand that is similar to the arrangement one can make when on leave from the federal Government. It is possible to make both contributions and continue the plan. Such a procedure makes imminent sense in this situation and that is why we support Motion No. 2 in the name of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I, and I know other Members were disappointed when Members on the Government side opposed the request by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a number of questions. This is essentially the last opportunity to clarify some important questions, yet those Members simply want the report stage debate to take place. While that debate may be appropriate, surely this is such a critical issue in terms of the precedent that we should be permitted an opportunity to direct some specific questions to the Parliamentary Secretary. I greatly regret that decision by Government Members.

The fact that there is no legislation ensuring the rights of Crown corporation employees, who have been contributing to pension plans and move to a private corporation, simply emphasizes the point that more consideration ought to be given to this group of motions.

• (1410)

In conclusion, let me simply say that there is much unease with respect to the employees involved. There are concerns which have been registered in committee and have now been raised in this report stage debate. There is a whole range of unanswered questions. Before this round of motions is completed, perhaps an Hon. Member on the Government side will rise and respond to some of the questions posed. If not, then we will have to say that the process being followed is incomplete and inappropriate on such a critical and important Bill.

Because of the questions which have been posed by my colleagues, I anticipate that after sitting down I will hear from some Hon. Members opposite in terms of explanation.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to rise at the report stage consideration of Bill C-87, an Act to privatize Canadian Arsenals. I believe what is happening is that the Government is moving forward with its ideological strightjacket without giving any real consideration to what will happen to the number of people who are presently working for Canadian Arsenals.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicated that this is not just an isolated concern. Yesterday morning we read that CN intends to sell off CN Route to three investors from Toronto. I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) earlier today in the House what the Government's policy is for the people working for a Crown corporation such as CN Route. What is going to happen to those people, their jobs, their pension benefits and their future after spending so many years working for the Government of Canada through one of its Crown corporations?

The Government's philosophy is to get rid of Crown corporations. As a political Party and as the Government, it has the right to its own philosophy. No one can quarrel with that. But it wo;uld be nice on occasions if it would admit what its policies are and even nicer if it would sometimes carry them out. In this case I do not happen to believe it is a good policy.

The Government has a policy to privatize despite the fact that it involves selling a Crown corporation which is making money, and that the major client of the Crown corporation is the Government of Canada. What we are doing is taking a Crown corporation which is selling its goods to the Government and putting it into the hands of a bunch of private individuals who wish to make a profit. But from whom will they be making a profit? It will not be from Procter and Gamble or other large companies, but from the very group which is selling the Crown corporation, the Government of Canada and through it the taxpayers of Canada.

Even if the Conservatives are right in their desire to sell off some Crown corporations, it does not make sense to sell this particular Crown corporation. There are Crown corporations which are in effect competing with private enterprise for a public market. They are competing for the purchase orders of other consumer groups and industries. But this is not the case with Canadian Arsenal. We know the Government is the major consumer, and in that case it is logical that the Government should be the producer of these types of goods.

We also know from the nature of the arms business that it is basically Governments throughout the world who buy the product. We also know that internationally it tends to be a heavily subsidized business. It is a business which quite often comes under Government regulations which are dictated by national policy. It is a very unusual business, not only because the consumer and the producer are so closely linked but because there is, for obvious reasons, Government regulation and control.

But let us look at the employees of that Crown corporation. The amendment before us this afternoon deals in the main with what is going to happen to the people who are working for a Canadian Crown corporation. We know that as a result of the sale these people will face the potential danger of losing their pension benefits, despite the amendment brought forward by the Government earlier today. That is one particular concern.

The Government really wants to sell off Crown corporation after Crown corporation and CN Route is now on the selling block. We know the workers there are going to be affected. There was an article in this morning's Globe and Mail that a number of CN's Route workers will lose their jobs. Considering this result, why does the Government not have a policy on how it will deal with the employees of these Crown corporations when they are sold? If those workers want to keep their jobs they will have to be transferred to the domain of the new owners. They quite often do not come under the same legislative protection.

That is the case here where we are going from federal law to the provincial law of the province of Quebec. Pension plans have been started and people have been paying into those pension plans for a number of years, yet there is really no process in place to guarantee that those people will be able to keep their pensions or continue their pension growth at a rate they would like.

My main reason for speaking in this debate at this time is to point out that although the Government has a right to its policies, if it wants to privatize, that is its right, although we will oppose it because it is not our policy. But if it is going to take the right wing idea to sell a Crown corporation just because it is called a "Crown corporation", and if it is going to ignore the fact that the Crown corporation we are selling is producing goods basically for the Government of Canada, it does so at its own peril.

The Government has an obligation to be concerned about what happens to the employees who are at the present time employees of the people of Canada. If this industry was the only industry the Government was going to privatize, it would be of major concern, because we are concerned about the workers of Canadian Arsenals. But it is even more of concern when we know that it is the Government's intention to continue this process, that it wishes to sell Crown corporation after Crown corporation for whatever ill-defined justification it may have. Yet the Government has not told us what its policy is for the workers. It has not even said what the policies are for the communities in which these industries are located. It has not told us what its responsibility is as it gets out of certain endeavours. If this Government had a soul or a heart, and if it had any real knowledge of where it wants to take the country, one of its Members or a Cabinet Minister would rise and explain exactly what its policy is towards the effected comunities.

If the Government is going to go hell-bent for leather and privatize agency after agency, Government Members should be able to rise in the House and tell the workers and the unions who are involved what the Government's policy is. That is my major concern. No one has done that.

• (1420)

Members of the Government get up and talk about a namby-pamby amendment which they have brought in at the dying stages of discussion on the legislation. The amendment deals with one set of workers in a particular way, but it does not explain where the Government wants to go in the long run. We have already heard from representatives of the workers to the effect that the amendment which is before us is not good enough. We know that to be the case. However, it is even more worrisome that the Government has not said where it will go in the future.

I realize that my time is about to expire. I hope that other Members will get up to see if we can force one of those reluctant Government back-benchers to stand up and say where the Government is taking the country as it goes off on its wild ride toward privatization.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate at the report stage debate of Bill C-87 which deals with the selling of Canadian Arsenals Limited. I say that I am pleased to participate in the debate since I had the opportunity, along with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), to participate in second reading debate on this piece of legislation.

At that time, as you will perhaps recall, Mr. Speaker, since I think you were presiding in the Chair, we had a number of grave concerns about the entire process and approach by which the Government was attempting to proceed with this Bill. At that time Hon. Members may recall that we were questioning why the Government was proceeding without giving Canadians the benefit of information. In effect, the Government was saying: "Yes, it is a good price for which we sold this particular company, but we will not tell Canadians what that price is. Just trust us". That was the philosophy which characterized the approach of the Conservative Government during the debate at second reading.

During the committee hearings I think the heat of the observations and representations, not only of members of the Official Opposition but of other representatives from across the country, made the Government come clean, to a certain extent, with respect to a number of questions. However, I regret that at report stage I need to stand in my place again and make a similar pitch on a different issue.

The issue we are debating this afternoon deals with Motion No. 2 which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. It states:

That Bill C-87, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 5 the following:

"12. An employee of the Corporation, as of the day prior to the date of transfer, will have the right, on transferring to the new employer, either to:

(a) choose to remain and continue as a contributor to the federal superannuation plan, and the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contributions to the plan; or

(b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of purchase and sale between the government and the new employer."

What the Hon. Member is attempting to do by putting forward this motion is have the Government come clean with the employees of this company. This would give them some sense of assurance, some sense of continuity and a sense of respect and dignity in terms of their future with this particular company. This is to what the amendment refers. The amendment speaks in defence of not only the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the particular union involved, but the 800 workers, some of whom have spent a great number of years in the employ of this company.

The average age of a worker at the company is 34 years. He has an average of six years of service and a salary of $22,680. That individual, that breadwinner, wants to know, not tomorrow or the month after but today how his pension contributions will be affected. He wants to know what kind of choices and opportunities he will have in terms of these pension contributions. This is to what the amendment speaks.

The Government has said in a holus-bolus way: "We will move a motion which will allow us to make an Order in Council sometime in the future which will dictate what kind of arrangement vis-à-vis pension contributions these 800 employees will have". That is not the right way to deal with individuals who have been contributing to the system for a number of years. That is not the way by which families can build their futures. That is not the way the Government should be conducting its business on behalf of Canadians. It does not speak very highly of the motives of the Government. If it wants to make a decision to sell this company which has been profitable, then that is the choice of the Government. Of course, that is what it is here for. We on this side of the House have pointed out options with respect to why it should not choose to exercise that alternative.

However, if it is to move in this direction, after having made a clear decision to take the privatization route, then for goodness' sake let us have an infrastructure in keeping with that decision. Why not think of the workers? Why should they be left out of the equation? Why should their pension contributions be left simply to hang for some future discretionary measure within the Minister responsible? That is not the way business should be conducted when it involves the livelihood of people. It is unfair to say: "We will give them the benefit of one year to make up their minds whether or not they want to pursue the pension plan programs which we will be designing and offering them".

It should also be noted that this window of 12 months will begin once the legislation is passed. By the time the legislation passes, and by the time the Government introduces its Order in Council, it may very well be that 6, 8, 10 or 11 months will have passed. Therefore, that window by which an individual employee can make an intelligent decision for his family will be shortened. The one year, which might sound very attractive now, will, in fact, be watered down.

The Parliamentary Secretary laughs. Perhaps that is part of the problem. I do not think Members opposite are taking the issue as painted by the Public Service Alliance and the company seriously enough, and they have been siding on the part of the workers. Individuals in Treasury Board have been quoted in various journals and newspapers as having said that the Government has proceeded in a very unorganized and haphazard way, as far as pension contributions are concerned.

We are not trying to be obstructionist. We are not putting forward opposite views on how the Government should be proceeding simply because we are in opposition. We are doing so because there needs to be someone to speak for the workers in terms of this particular issue in order that their concerns be brought in and articulated. They have been trying to make their concerns known to the Government. This is why we are asking Members of the House to consider seriously Motion No. 2 put forward by my colleague. It is a fair and responsible amendment. It is one which speaks to the investment workers have made over the years and the one they wish to continue to make in future years. What is so wrong with that?

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, having very carefully studied the provisions of this Bill and after having examined with great care the motion which is now before the House—in fact, I believe there are two motions—

Mr. Boudria: There are three.

Mr. Robinson: My colleague tells me that there are three motions before the House which have been grouped together for debate. These motions certainly deal with some very fundamental issues which, in the course of my—is it 40 minutes I have, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is 10 minutes.

Mr. Robinson: In the course of my 10-minute intervention on this fundamental question I wish to take the opportunity to address some of the concerns raised by these motions.

• (1430)

I had the opportunity of meeting with many of the workers of Canadian Arsenals who, as the House will know, were here on the Hill on Wednesday of this week. They expressed concerns with respect to the possibility that they might lose certain employee pension benefits. As we know, this is a fundamental issue of concern to these employees who have served Canadian Arsenals faithfully for many years.

The possible effect of the provisions of this Bill would be to seriously jeopardize the pension position of the employees of Canadian Arsenals. That is why we heard the chant on the steps of Parliament Hill: "On veut la compensation, on veut la compensation!" The compensation could amount to something in the order of $17,000 per year to the individuals who have been affected by this legislation.

In examining the provisions of this Bill, I note that the Government, in the dying gasp of this debate, has put forward a motion which moves some distance toward meeting the concerns of the employees of Canadian Arsenals. However, I would like to support Motion No. 2, the motion that would permit employees of the corporation, as of the day prior to the date of the transfer of the company, to make an election. They could choose to remain as contributors to the federal superannuation plan, in which case they would be required to pay both the employee's and the employer's share of the required contributions to the plan, or they could accept the alternative of becoming a contributor to the pension plan as described in the Agreement of Purchase and Sale between the Government and the new employer. The fundamental issue here is that this would give the employees in question a choice. Obviously that would permit them to continue to protect the pension rights which have accrued to them through many years of faithful, loyal, dedicated and hardworking service to Canadian Arsenals.

We must ask why it is that the Government seems to be obsessed with the notion that the private sector can do things better than the public sector. Privatization is the current buzzword of the Conservative Government. Why is it that the Government believes a company which is motivated by the pursuit of profit and the pursuit of maximizing its return on shares is better able to manage this company than the public sector? The Public Service Alliance of Canada, in its submission to the legislative committee on Bill C-87, pointed out that a full public parliamentary debate on the role of Crown corporations and public enterprise is long overdue.

I believe that the purpose of public policy is to serve the interests of Canadians, certainly not to serve the interests of a small group of elite corporate shareholders. It is particularly essential to note that when companies are taking major decisions with respect to investment, employment or plant location, the public interest ought to be the governing interest and not the maximization of global profits.

To the extent that there may have been problems in the public sector, we suggest that that was primarily as a result of the failure of the Government to recognize the creative and important role of the public sector and the importance of Crown corporations being models of corporate responsibility. They should be open, accountable and charged with a clear and definable mandate.

In fact, Canadian Arsenals has been a very profitable company. In 1985, it had a net income of $11.3 million on sales of $103.8 million. Its return on equity was an excellent 21.4 per cent in 1984-85. The profits of this company were being used to help reduce the deficit of the Government. The Government has been cutting back on family allowances and transfer payments for health care and post-secondary education. One would have thought that the Government would have welcomed a contribution of $11 million to the public purse to help reduce the deficit. Instead of cutting back on these important public services, the Government should be recognizing that Canadian Arsenals can help to provide a source of public revenue and at the same time ensure that the priorities established for Canadian Arsenals meet the interests and concerns of the Canadian people and are responsive to the workers of that company.

It is reasonable to assume that the approach which is being taken by the Government in Bill C-87 will very likely serve as a model for other Government privatization efforts. For that reason, as well as the reasons I have discussed previously and which my colleagues have so eloquently placed on the record, we want to make sure that we give Bill C-87 the best possible effort so that it may be a good model. If the Government is determined to plough ahead with its ideological blinkers on in the pursuit of privatization, we are determined to ensure that the interests of the working men and women of Canadian Arsenals are protected and not eroded as this Bill would in fact do. That is why we have urged the Government to recognize that while it has moved forward with an amendment, it does not go far enough to protect the pension contributions of the employees involved.

I would note as well that the jeopardization of the retirement pensions of Canadian Arsenals employees is but one of a number of concerns we have raised in the course of this debate. The Public Service Alliance made representations with respect to this Bill, and I would note here the role played by Vice President Jean Bergeron. The Public Service Alliance has spoken out very clearly with respect to the concern about long-standing contractual rights of employees and the concern that these contractual rights be protected during the transition from public to private enterprise.

The sale in question does require a jurisdictional change in the area of labour relations from the federal jurisdiction to the provincial jurisdiction of Quebec. Partly as a result of that, it would appear that there are no transitional provisions to protect the collective agreement, the benefit plans and the other acquired rights of the employees until certification is granted pursuant to the Quebec Labour Code. At this time the employees are covered under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. While SNC, the company which is buying Canadian Arsenals, has made commitments to honour all of the contractual obligations between Canadian Arsenals and its employees, it would be far preferable if those commitments were enshrined in the legislation.

As well, there is a problem in this legislation with respect to the grievance and arbitration of rights of the employees of Canadian Arsenals. The sale is adding to the degree of confusion and uncertainty that is involved.

Again, the fundamental question that must be addressed is why is it that the Government believes, in its ideological zeal to pursue the privatization agenda, that Canadian Arsenals will be better run by SNC than it is being run by a board of directors appointed by the Government of Canada? That is a question which no Member on that side of the House has yet addressed, and it is a question which we in this Party believe must be addressed. As I have indicated, it cannot be argued that there has been a failure in the corporate responsibility of this firm to its shareholders who are ultimately the people of Canada or to its employees. After all, it has a good record. I know that other speakers will be talking about the record of Canadian Arsenals in this regard.

• (1440)

I want to note another concern. By far the largest customer of Canadian Arsenals Limited is in fact the Department of National Defence. It has been most beneficial to have that close working relationship between Canadian Arsenals and the Department of National Defence. As it now stands, the privatization process could very well jeopardize that relationship. We have to ask ourselves more fundamental questions in terms of the rights of the employees and of the pension plan. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired; I would love to listen to him all day.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Motion No. 2 which reads as follows:

That Bill C-87, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 5 the following:

"12. An employee of the Corporation, as of the day prior to the date of transfer, will have the right, on transferring to the new employer, either to:

(a) choose to remain and continue as a contributor to the federal superannation plan, and the employee will pay both the employee's and the employer's shares of the required contributions to the plan; or

(b) become a contributor to the pension plan as described in the agreement of the purchase and sale between the government and the new employer."

Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that 50 per cent of the employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited are women. Closer scrutiny of the Bill reveals that if ever the Government were to prevent the employees from contributing or maintaining their pension plan, this will have a double impact on women. Since 50 per cent of the employees are women and that, as a rule, women do not have as much seniority as men do because they had to quit working for a while to raise their children, they will be taxed twice as much because they have been unable to accumulate the same number of years of pensionable service.

They will be taxed as well—most of those employees are under 35, or between 35 and 40, and if they are prevented from maintaining their pension plan, because we know that under public service regulations the wife and children are entitled to a pension when the husband dies, and that means that the wives or the female employees of 35, or between 35 and 40, will not be entitled to a pension in case of death. I might simply remind the House that most women are poor, and we have debated the pension issue long enough to know that a woman cannot get 50 per cent of her husband's pension benefits because there is no such provision in the private sector. Therefore, taxes would be imposed on 50 per cent of the wives of men who work for the corporation and they would not be eligible for pension benefits.

Then as employees women would be doubly taxed because they would also lose their retirement pension. That is why I think the Government has to change the procedure related to pensions, and Motion No. 2 must be accepted, otherwise women employees and the wives of male employees will be doubly taxed.

For quite some time now we have been debating Bill C-62 on employment equity. Since the Conservative Government is supposed to do everything right, I was wondering if, during negotiations, someone considered negotiating what is known as the contract compliance issue. Since Bill C-62 on employment equity will eventually become law, did the Government think about including in contract negotiations the question of employment equity with respect to people who will be hired by or who now work for the corporation?

Something else is also very interesting. I am now a member of the committee on daycare. We have had the Katie Cooke report on daycare which was tabled recently in this House. The Government is being asked to encourage companies to provide daycare space or to open daycares centres.

We have also been told that this will be a priority for the Government. In that case, this was the time to do something about it. If this is really a priority, did the Government consider the fact that 50 per cent of these employees are women and a large number of them have children? Did the Government discuss the fact that it would have been possible to create employment equity as well as provide spaces in daycare centres?

If not, this shows that we are dealing with mere amateurs approach, because the contract was prepared hastily and the Government has been remiss in its duty. We are told that all the matters we are now discussing in this House are the result of conservative amendments, but I would like to point out that all this is a result of what the Liberals suggested in committee. That is very important. These are the amendments now under discussion.

I ask the Government to act and not simply to put up a smoke screen. This is one of the first times that we see that this Bill deals with the privatization of a company. Was employment equity discussed as one of the conditions of purchase? Has there been some provision to protect the spouses of the workers? Also, as concerns women, will they be hit by double taxation on their pensions?

I would like the Government to show us that it is being serious for once instead of relying on rhetoric. If indeed it is serious, I must support Motion No. 2.

Mr. Speaker, I do not simply want to have a discussion with my Conservative colleague who says that the Liberal Government did not pass any legislation to achieve employment equity.

The Liberal Government passed some excellent laws on the status of women. Canada has been one of the most progressive countries in this regard.

You always tell us that you are doing a lot for women, for instance that when appointing new board of directors. Well! You appointed 16 men out of 17 members. On another board made up of ten members, you appointed ten men. You should start by practicing what you preach. This is the best proof we could have! You should put this principle in practice in the case of a privatization and show that you are able to protect the rights of women. If the Conservative Government can do so, I shall publicly recognize it, but for the moment, I think that you are making a mistake. Especially in view of what you are doing in Bill C-62, you would have had a chance to do better with this Bill, but the Government continues to use an amateurish approach, as it has been doing all along.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the question before us today is not one of privatization but one of human rights and employee rights. It is a people or personnel problem rather than a privatization problem. The employees want to maintain their present status under the Public Service Superannuation Act. They understand quite well that the Government does not want that link between a private company and the Public Service Superannuation Act. Their first request was for the Government to pay both shares. However, there was a counter offer by the Government, that it would make an offer through Order in Council sometime in the future. It was a fairly hollow gesture, one which we could not expect loyal employees who worked for a long time for this important corporation to accept.

We have not really dealt with the link between the Department of National Defence and Canadian Arsenals Limited or how Bill C-87 will affect that long standing relationship. The Government was asking the employees to give it a blank cheque. It said that sometime in the future it would do something for them. It did not know what that would be; it did not even hint at it. In any event, the Government told them that it would do something for them in the future and that they had a year in which to make up their minds on whether they would accept the offer. It was not really a fair way to treat loyal employees who had been working for Canadian Arsenals for a long time.

On the other hand, the people affected said that they would pay both shares if the Government would not do it. They made that offer to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). He was asked to respond to that most magnanimous offer by the employees, but he has not responded. So we are here today debating an amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), to do the very things the employees want to do. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to accept the offer. It is a fair and reasonable one and it is magnanimous on the part of the employees to make it.

There is a wider issue here, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to have a sound economy we have to have better employer-employee relations. There has to be a new relationship with labour. If the Government is serious about that it should lead the way by showing that kind of attitude toward its employees. The Government should set the tone in the country by example.

We have seen strikes across the country. We are presently, I hope, in the final stages of one in my own province on the very same issue. The public servants in Newfoundland have virtually brought the province to a standstill and have negotiated directly in public with the Premier. They have forced concessions from the Newfoundland Government. The matter is still not resolved, but it is a case in point. Governments have to set the tone for the new economic reality. There has to be a new relationship with labour. There has to be peace with labour and you cannot do it by confrontation or by walking all over people. You have to sit down and be reasonable with people, particularly those who have served the Government and the people of Canada faithfully for a long, long time.

I say to the Government and to this Parliament that it is incumbent upon us to support the amendment from my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. He has worked long and hard for many of the people, many of whom live in this area. Most of the people who are affected, as I understand it, are employees in Montreal and St. Augustin near Quebec City. The employees in question deserve fair treatment. They are making a reasonable proposal and I think it is incumbent upon the Government to accept it.

There is that wider issue, namely, the new relationship with the working people in the country. If the working people are going to be sent a signal, let them be sent a signal on this issue that the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada is offering the working people a deal, a fair and equitable place to earn a living, a deal that protects them in the long run. We are facing rapid change. People feel threatened and insecure. Neither politicians nor businessmen—in fact, no one is exempt from that insecurity brought about by the rapid changes in society. We have a chance to do something for these people. We are all in the same boat. It is more important to understand the reality in which we find ourselves. We should act today by supporting this amendment and showing the workers that we are keeping faith with them.

[Translation]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to Bill C-87. I oppose this measure as does my party because it will be harmful for the people of Canada as well as for the men and women who work for this corporation.

[English]

No good reason has been shown why this company should be sold, Mr. Speaker, no good reason at all. It is a company that has been making a profit. It is a company that stands and ranks well with other Canadian companies. It is a company that provides a vital service. Further, if the company is sold there will be great danger that its employees will lose many of the benefits which they have earned by their service to the Government and the people of Canada as employees of this Crown Corporation.

The sale ought to be delayed until at least the proper interests of the employees can be preserved. I would welcome any possible amendments to serve the interests of the employees of the company and the people before this Bill is passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Since Motion No. 3 is consequential to Motion No. 1, a vote on Motion No. 1 will apply as per the Speaker's ruling. A vote on Motion No. 1 will dispose of Motion No. 2.

Motions Nos. 4 and 5 are identical. The Chair will select one.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe you also have to take a vote on Motion No. 2 which has not been covered since it is not established whether or not the full House on Monday will support Motion No. 1. As I understand it, since this has not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We will do that when there is a deferred division. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) should realize that once we have gone through all the debates on Monday, or whenever we are finished with the debate, we will do that.

Mr. Cassidy: Motion No. 2 will be voted on, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Cassidy: May I rise to move—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

I have selected Motion No. 4.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 35 to 37 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"12. This Act shall come into force after December 31, 1987, on a date to be fixed by proclamation."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill as it stands right now calls for it to come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation. The Government is saying that there are no problems left with this particular act of privatization that deserve to be resolved. In particular, the Government is saying that despite the protests which have been expressed right up until today by the work force of Canadian Arsenals who unwillingly, find themselves being privatized by this Bill, the Government sees no problem or any problems yet to be resolved. The Parliamentary Secretary is paying some attention. Let me suggest to him that one might be critical and say that a hoist or a deferral until December, 1987 is not particularly fair to SNC, which is, after all, hoping to get going with this new acquisition. The Minister does not look like a real Tory because his suit is not blue.

• (1500)

The problems which exist here are not related to SNC. SNC, to some extent, is an unwilling and hapless victim of the Government's mismanagement of this act of privatization. The Minister and the Government must act differently if they intend to continue with the privatization and get co-operation. After this experience, when employees are affected, rather than looking for ways to co-operate with the Government's intention, which the Government does have the parliamentary majority to put into law, people will drag their heels. In this particular case that was not at issue because there was no effective consultation for the longest time with the workforce and the unions affected.

If anyone wants to complain about delay, as they have to me, they should look at the Government's record on this issue. The announcement of the intention to privatize Canadian Arsenals was made in the Budget on May 23. Bids were submitted and received on August 9. There followed a bidding war in which the Government tried to get the preferred bidders to up the ante, a process from which SNC eventually emerged with the Government's approval. It was not until early December that the Government announced that it intended to act and introduced the privatization Bill in the House of Commons.

I received anxious submissions from SNC last November and December asking what the NDP could do in order to expedite the Bill, as they really wanted to have it passed. I had to tell them that there was nothing I could do because the carriage of the Bill was in the hands of the Government. I suggested that the people from SNC should sit down immediately with the representatives of the workers involved to start to iron out the problems. I warned them that if they could resolve the concerns of the workforce, it would certainly help our Party to be a good deal more co-operative with regard to getting the Bill passed.

That, in fact, did not occur. SNC finally got around to talking with the union, but the Government tried its best to avoid having any meaningful discussions. We have, therefore, the spectacle of legislated amendments on an absolutely essential part of the process. The legislated protection for pension rights, which employees have worked for up to 30 years to gain, came only as an afterthought in an amendment dated April 11, 1986, almost one full year after the original announcement of the Government's intention to sell Canadian Arsenals to the private sector.

If there has been delay, the Government is responsible for it. The reason for the delay is that the Government did not know whether it intended to privatize, or how it intended to do it. Through press leaks we have learned that one group in Cabinet wanted to sell at any price, and another group of the bureaucracy wanted to go through the process and work out the ground rules before proceeding. Fundamental questions have yet to be addressed in the case of Teleglobe. The rates which Teleglobe Canada can charge are part of a regulated environment. If Teleglobe goes into the private sector, its income and, therefore, its profitability, will depend on how the Government intends to administer this regulated environment. If international tariffs for communications are deregulated, or sharply reduced, Teleglobe will no longer be very attractive. It is very difficult to sell it, given that uncertainty.

With regard to Canadian Arsenals, we wondered why we would sell it when it was anticipated that it was going to continue to be more and more profitable. It was one of the fastest growing companies in terms of profit growth in the last five years in the entire Financial Post index. We wondered why we would sell a winner, and the Government has never answered that question. The other question we had was with regard to dealing with the employees. This has not been done either.

That is why I have moved this amendment which calls for the Act to come into force after December 31, 1987, on a date to be fixd by proclamation. In the interim I hope it will be possible to resolve the problems which have been raised directly, and quite justly, on behalf of the employees when they came to Parliament Hill two days ago. These problems have also been raised by their unions repeatedly and consistently since the Bill was tabled in December.

If the Government asked whether I would agree to an amendment which would allow the Bill to come into force when all of the outstanding issues which have been raised by the union are resolved, rather than waiting for the entire year and a half, I would not be negatively disposed to that. However, successor rights have not been established, and cannot be established unless there is either legislative action or some more formal agreement between the federal Government and the Quebec Government as these employees are passed from federal jurisdiction into provincial jurisdition.

The employees have only verbal assurances from SNC that the grievance process and the administration of the collective agreement will continue on an informal basis until the employees form a union under Quebec law, either through the alliance or another union which they may choose to replace the alliance. If Motion No. 1 passes on Monday there will be a resolution of the pension issue, albeit not a very good resolution. The fact that there has not been a satisfctory resolution in that area raises questions in my mind.

Another issue is that ammunition produced by Canadian Arsenals has found its way to such places as Contra camps on the borders of Nicaragua. Yet, there has been no insistence with regard to controlling where SNC and its new subsidiary will be able to sell ammunition and other military products once it is no longer publicly owned. These issues ought to be resolved before a sale, rather than after. I very much regret that the Government did not see fit to resolve those problems before passing the Bill.

For those reasons I have moved that this matter be deferred and that the Bill not be proclaimed until after the end of December, 1987, which will allow ample time for the resolution of these problems. If in four months' time the Government says that it has solved these problems and asks for a one hour debate on a short Bill in order to advance the proclamation, I would strongly recommend to my colleagues that, if satisfactory resolution to the issues had been achieved, we pass such a Bill. However, for now I think it is necessary to pass this motion. This amendment should be made law in order to ensure that every Minister of the Government understands that if they insist on privatization, even when it is not warranted, they must follow a legitimate process which answers the concerns of the electorate in general, affected workers, and other people with interest in a particular sale. We will feel compelled to continue to make proposals for delay until these issues are better handled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? I will recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Presscott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we are almost ready for the question, but we do have a few other points which we must bring to your attention.

[Translation]

This House is anxious to hear from Quebec Members who have the honour and privilege of representing those employees here, and we feel it is indeed our duty to speak up in the absence of those Members who have not risen yet. But since they will be doing it shortly, we are making sure in the meantime, as Members, that their views are put forward, the views of those who have not yet done so.

I know, for instance, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) would like us to raise those issues on his behalf, being no doubt very busy, and this is why it is impossible right now to raise them himself. I am sure it is the same with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who represents a neighbouring constituency, that of Berthier—Maskinongé, and he has many constituants who are employees of—

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (M. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau.

Mrs. Mailly: I am questioning the relevancy of naming all those Members who are not now in this House, and pretending to speak on their behalf.

Mr. Boudria: I never said they were not present.

• (1510)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is Friday afternoon. I was paying attention to the Hon. Member's speech and he never mentioned who was or was not in the House. He has been here for close to two years now and I know he realizes that Hon. Members do not mention who is or who is not in the Chamber. We will just leave it at that.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, all Members are here. The ones who have not spoken yet are too busy doing constituency work. It is not because they are not here. I really resent the Hon. Member saying that her colleagues are not here. It is just not fair to them and the record should show that she is being unfair towards her colleagues by doing what she just did. Not that I would mention it myself, but now that she has brought it up I cannot really disagree with her. I will leave it at that.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has just said that this Bill was most important. I would therefore particularly like to hear his comments on that, rather than having him play his childish little games.

Mr. Boudria: I am not playing games, you are.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know the Hon. Member will now get back to the motion.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I was going to do before I was so rudely interrupted. I am glad to hear a contribution from the Hon. Member in this debate, albeit a brief contribution.

Mrs. Mailly: I spoke on it and you know it. We all spoke on it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to a profile of the employees of Canadian Arsenals. I know the Hon. Member is listening very attentively, as she usually does. The average age of employees of Canadian Arsenals is 33.87 years. The reason I bring this to your attention at this time is that a number of these employees are quite young and at the same time they have a fair level of seniority in the company. That means they have contributed significantly to the pension process, yet they are still at an age at which they will be gravely damaged by what the Government is proposing and by what the Government has refused. That is to say, it has refused the amendments I proposed earlier. The delay being proposed here will surely give time to the Government and everyone else to reflect upon what they want to do and hopefully propose something better for the employees.

Let me give you a few examples of just what damage we are talking about regarding loss of benefits for the employees. I know that the Vice-President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada has raised this issue with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). They met on Wednesday, April 16. There were two meetings, one early in the morning and one a little later in the day. The Minister made a solemn promise. You will recognize and recall, as do I, that a Tory promise is a pretty important thing. That Tory Minister promised he would get back to the Vice-President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada by yesterday at two o'clock. I know this is going to be hard to believe but that Tory cabinet Minister did not respond.

Mr. Bradley: It is in the mail.

Mr. Boudria: No, Mr. Speaker. He broke his promise, as unbelievable as that may sound. The Tories have not broken a promise today, of course, but they have practically every other day since they came into office.

This afternoon the Vice-President of the Public Service Alliance did get a call from the assistant to the Minister who said he was sorry that he did not call yesterday but he decided that he did not want to do anything more for the employees. That is what just happened a few moments ago, just behind the Chamber here. That is a very sad case. I know the Parliamentary Secretary, who is heckling, will take the opportunity to make a profound speech—

Mr. Bradley: Not heckling, just clarifying.

Mr. Boudria: — a little later this afternoon.

An employee aged 29 with 12 years of service with Canadian Arsenals will be losing $17,213.07 a year by the time he or she is pensioned. That is the difference between the two pension plans. The Parliamentary Secretary said earlier today that the SNC pension is comparable to other similar industries. That is a very interesting statement because how many other similar industries are there in Canada? One. Just one.

Mr. Bradley: Five.

Mr. Boudria: There is only one similar industry in Canada and it is known as IVI. Do you know who owns IVI? SNC, the same people buying this company. So what kind of sense does it make to make those kinds of comparisons? I submit that it is probably true that the pension plans are comparable. It is true that SNC is a good employer. That is not the point. It is not SNC that is a bad employer, it is the Government of Canada. It is this Tory Government which is a bad employer by letting down the people who work for it. That is what is wrong.

All the Tory Members in this House, all 211 of them, those who are here right now, every one of them, I am sure, deep down in their hearts agrees with me. If only their Whip or House Leader, or whoever is in charge, and sometimes we wonder if there is anyone in charge, would let them speak their mind in this House on behalf of their constituents. I am sure the Hon. Member who represents that riding would want to speak on behalf of his constituents. I am sure the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), who the employees of SNC have never been able to speak to on the phone over the last month, when he finishes that important constituency work that he is doing at his seat in the House, he will want to speak to those employees. Or he should. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), who also represents a large number of these people, would also seize this opportunity, or should, to speak on behalf of his constituents. However, they will not hold their breath because it just may be that the Tory Members I have just described will not seize this occasion to speak on behalf of the people they represent. I am sure all Members seated on this side of the House, all Members of the Liberal caucus seated here right now, if there were an incident in which seven or eight hundred of our constituents were to lose their pensions, they could not have locked the door to that committee room to stop any one of us from entering the place to defend their interests. Why is it we had a hard time getting even a response to a phone call from the employees? I cannot understand that. It is my hope that in the next few moments all Conservative Members of Parliament will seize this opportunity and tell the Government it is time to come to its senses and act in a proper way towards the employees of Canadian Arsenals.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak on the matter, because it is very important for employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited, especially in Quebec, where there are two plants. I remember when I was a boy . . .

Mrs. Mailly: That was a long time ago!

Mr. Waddell: Yes, a long time ago. I used to live in Toronto, in Port Credit, Ontario, in Etobicoke, near Lakeshore, west of Toronto, and we had a CAL plant there. That was after World War II, and I now realize that there were many CAL plants in Canada then because that was an excellent Crown corporation during the war. Many people, many workers worked for Canadian Arsenals Limited.

• (1520)

[English]

I understand that it has cut down considerably.

As I was saying in French, this was a great corporation which had many factories that produced a lot of munitions for Canadian soldiers and soldiers of other countries during the war. As a young boy, I remember seeing the plants in my area and talking to some of the older men who worked there. I am afraid that if the Government privatizes Canadian Arsenals it will destroy an excellent Crown corporation. While I am not saying it will happen, the owners could rationalize and we would not see any Canadian Aresenals Limited at all.

Motion No. 4 states:

That Bill C-87, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 35 to 37 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"12. This Act shall come into force after December 31, 1987, on a date to be fixed by proclamation."

This motion was moved by my seat-mate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). It postpones the coming into force of the Act. I prefer that Canadian Arsenals not be privatized at all. However, if it is to be sold, surely the Government owes some guarantees to the workers of Canadian Arsenals.

After listening to some government Members, I cannot help but say advisedly that the workers are lucky in a sense because at least we can debate this in Parliament.

My constituency office in Vancouver—Kingsway has an open house on the weekends. I have seen cases of constituents who work in private sector companies that have been bought up or merged with another company. My constituents have told me of the difficulties they have in adjusting to a takeover or sale of a company. Sometimes Members who are lawyers, doctors and businessmen and have many job options forget how tough it is on the workers. We must not forget that there are many workers in places like Canadian Arsenals who have worked for years and believe they have some job security. It is a scary world when one is faced with finding another job, yet this happens often with a lot of companies.

When workers tell me that their company has been taken over as a result of a merger or sale, I say that there are laws for successor rights in trade union legislation. A union can be succeeded by another union so that there is some protection. Occasionally, however, that protection does not exist, and this is a good example.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is a tireless worker for public servants. He has pointed out some of the problems, including job security, pension and the transition from a company that works under the Canadian Labour Code to a corporation which will be under the Quebec Labour Code. This causes insecurity and is an unsettling situation for these workers who are worried about losing their jobs. They cannot simply go hunting. I see the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) taking copious notes about my speech, preparing to reply when I am finished. I understand that he just returned from hunting in the Canadian Arctic. He knows that it is nice to get out and go hunting but we have to work too.

My point is that there must be job security for the workers. It is my understanding that the SNC group of Montreal has already manufactured munitions as part of its other investments. It could give Canadian Arsenals a low priority. This would affect the workers, and they want to know about it. They want to see a corporate plan, and such a plan should be filed with the House, outlining what SNC plans to do with this company. That is the least the Government owes to workers in a Crown corporation which it is privatizing.

One might ask why the New Democratic Party is challenging this legislation and moving these amendments. Quite frankly, this is perhaps the first of many privatization moves. What will happen when the Government privatizes Petro-Canada which is 100 times bigger than Canadian Arsenals? We want to ensure that there is a procedure that at the very minimum will benefit the workers. We want to know whether there will be a corporate plan. We would like to see successor trade union rights. We want to know what will happen to the pension plans.

The pension plan is a cause for concern in the private sector when there are mergers or takeovers. Problems arise with early retirement plans being carried over from one company to another.

Mr. Bradley: Read the motion.

Mr. Waddell: These matters have to be considered. The Member asks me to read things. I invite him to read the submission made by the Public Service Alliance of Canada to the legislative committee on this Bill.

Mr. Bradley: I was there. Where were you?

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Hon. Member will recall this. I invite him to look at Clause 27 concerning mobility rights and Clause 22 concerning the rights of employees. These are matters about which I am concerned.

Mr. Bradley: That is the reason for the amendment.

Mr. Waddell: That is why the Member for Ottawa Centre put forward this particular clause. The Public Service Alliance stated at page 8 of its brief that in Clause 2 in the general area of employee rights, confusion abounds. Bill C-87 is silent on the issue. Despite the fact that the sale requires a justification change for labour relations purposes from Canada to Quebec, there are no transitional provisions to protect the collective agreement. I invite the Hon. Member to speak about this.

Mr. Bradley: I already spoke.

Mr. Waddell: It is a new amendment. He can speak again. I regret that I was not here to have the benefit of his speech.

Mr. Crosbie: You are floundering, Ian.

Mr. Waddell: I know that he is a senior Member of the House.

Mr. Robinson: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) wants to speak.

Mr. Crosbie: You are floundering.

Mr. Waddell: I would not let the Minister of Justice speak. Not only would he privatize the corporation, he would move it to Newfoundland.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At this stage, I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps I could have unanimous consent of the House for more time.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): What is it the Hon. Member wanted?

Mr. Waddell: I asked for unanimous consent to extend my time, but I heard someone say no.

• (1530)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is one with which I fully agree, namely to postpone this measure until December, 1987. First, it seems to me that whenever we decide to privatize a publicly owned company, we should ask ourselves why we are doing so and whether it is in the best interests of the public and the employees of the company. In that sense I am not convinced that this Bill has been the subject of a thorough and thoughtful analysis. In the case of Canadian Arsenals, as I understand it, the competitive situation in the market-place would be reduced because Canadian Arsenals would be purchased by a similar company thereby reducing competition in the market-place. Second, I cannot understand why the Canadian Government cannot own a successful company where the returns go back to Canadian taxpayers.

Petro-Canada has done extremely well and is perhaps a good example of how companies owned by the public sector can be competitive with the private sector. It can do that very effectively. That view has been expressed by a lot of Liberals before me.

The suggestion to put off this decision until 1987 has merit from the point of view of the people affected. There is a fundamental principle at stake. We cannot decide to sell a public asset and in the process divest the employees of their hard-earned social security programs and, in this case, the pension benefits which the employees of Canadian Arsenals were planning to enjoy at retirement had the company not changed hands. It seems to me, therefore, that a clause needs to be inserted in the Bill which deals with the management and treatment of the social security enjoyed by employers of Canadian Arsenals until the point of sale. I would challenge any Tory back-bencher in this House to say that there should not be the continuation of the same benefits to employees of Canadian Arsenals once it changes ownership. I am sure they could not say it. That leads me to believe that this Bill was hastily drafted and certain considerations were not examined before it was introduced in this House. We should not do that to the employees of any company.

The element of protection of social security benefits which accrue to the employees of Canadian Arsenals is crucial for two reasons; first, because otherwise the employees would lose them and, second, because it sets a precedent. While we are all in favour of positive precedents, this one is negative. It would set a precedent for similar losses to be incurred by employees of other Crown-owned agencies or companies like Teleglobe, for example. I am sure Teleglobe has been mentioned by speakers before me. Should the time come, perish the thought, that the Government sells Teleglobe to the private sector, the employees of that company would have the same fate. The Government could say: "The precedent has been set. We did it with Canadian Arsenals' employees. Why can we not do it now? It was accepted at that time and we will roll along on the same route". It is important, therefore, to ensure that these considerations are made part of this Bill.

The social considerations which affect the employees' right now have been raised by the unions. They ask how this will affect employees of other Crown corporations which may come under the process of privatization. As I said earlier, I am not a great believer in this process at all. I think Canadians have been served well by Teleglobe, Canadian Arsenals and Petro-Canada in public ownwership. There is nothing wrong with these Crown corporations being owned by Canadians. There is actually much to be gained from that approach. It provides a balance in a particular sector between public and private ownership, which is very healthy and adds to the competitive spirit. What the Government is inadvertently doing, I suspect, is reducing the competitiveness in this particular field.

One can ask why the Hon. Member for Davenport would put forward such a notion without really basing it upon his own experience. But I am told that there are cases where privatization of a publicly owned institution has been accomplished in a thoughtful manner and not at the expense of the social security coverage and protection of its employees. First, it happened at Deer Lodge Hospital in Manitoba, a hospital in New Westminster, British Columbia and a hospital in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Bradley: They are different cases.

Mr. Caccia: Yes, I can see they are different cases in different provinces, but it tells me that there is the political will at the provincial level. I notice one case involved the Province of British Columbia which is not famous for being one of the most socialistic inclined Governments in this country, and if it was possible in British Columbia, surely an approach of this nature with the same considerations could be developed by the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada. It is only a question of political will. It is only a question of giving these considerations to the Bill at a time when it is to be introduced.

In conclusion, I must say that I support the motion to postpone this decision. The impression I have is that the Government did not think about the implications. It did not have, perhaps, the experience to include these types of clauses to protect the benefits of the existing employees. The Government still can do so, however, and ought to do so in consideration of the fact that it would set a precedent for other corporations which the Government, perish the thought, may intend to sell.

I see that you are indicating that my time is up, but I have only spoken for 10 minutes. I have been very sober in my intervention but I know that my colleague would like to speak at this point and I will give the floor to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I have to call the Hon. Member to order. I love to listen to him but he only has 10 minutes in this particular debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): It is always a challenge, of course, to follow the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), Mr. Speaker.

• (1540)

Mr. Robinson: I rise on a point of order. I seek clarification in terms of the speaking order. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), sought to speak at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since the Hon. Member did not rise, I recognized the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Heap: I was rising.

Mr. Marchi: If the Hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) wishes to participate in the debate, then I would yield the floor to him and speak after he has finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I did not see the Hon. Member for Spadina rise. If he wants to speak, then I will recognize him, if that is all right with the Hon. Member for York West. I do not think the practice of yielding the floor to another Member should be a practice to follow. However, we will do it today. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), on debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for yielding the floor to me.

The problem with the Bill, as I was mentioning a little while ago, and the problem which requires the putting of the motion to extend the proclamation time, is that the interests of this company and the interests of the workers in the company are not well served. There must be more time to give it proper consideration and, perhaps, even to come back for certain amendments which might be quickly dealt with once they have been properly discussed.

The respect in which the interests of the country are not well served is that there has been no clear reason shown why the company needs to be sold or why it should be sold. It is a healthy firm. It employs a total of about 800 people near Quebec City and at Ville Le Gardeur near Montreal. It has been successful. Their jobs are about as secure as any jobs can be in the country. To start changing ownership without giving a clear reason for it does not make very much sense, especially in this day and age when companies which acquire their competitors often shut down one or the other of their plants.

Even if these plants are not shut down, the company which is buying it might shut down its other plant. That is not in the interests of the country.

This company also sells a vital product to the country. If it is taken over by another company and that company decides to cut back production, for whatever reason, perhaps even to dismantle the plant, then if there is a desire to expand, the Government will be in a much less favourable situation than it is at the present time.

Furthermore, it has been pointed out that the likelihood of the sale of this company to its only sizeable competitor will result in a near monopoly for that company. There will be less control of its operations by our Government. There will be less opportunity and less practical readiness for the Government to exercise its control over the export of weapons to countries such as Central American countries, and to groups there such as the American-backed Contras who have already, by some means or other, been able to obtain ammunition from Canada. It is much easier for the Government to exercise its responsibility over control of a Crown corporation than it is to exercise that same control over a near monopoly, if the Government sells a Crown corporation to its competitor.

I am concerned about the fact that the rights of the employees are inadequately protected and poorly considered by this legislation. The pension arrangement has not been clarified. There has been some effort to do so, but it has not been clarified to the satisfaction of the workers in the plant or to that of the union which represents them. That can be done. There is precedent, in legislation, for providing the workers with a choice. Once they have made their choice of whether or not they will stay with the old system or enter a new one, then the matter will be resolved.

However, this is not the case now. The matter has been left in some confusion, which is simply not fair. The practice of dumping a union or a pension plan by changing ownership is a practice which is growing to be much too common in Canada. This morning we heard that the rate of mergers in Canada in the last few years has more than trebled. The effect of these mergers is very often not only to eliminate jobs but also very often to undermine or even to destroy the bargaining rights of the employees who, without proper legislative protection, have no recourse. In fact, they do have recourse in terms of a wildcat strike.

There are many other matters besides the pension matter which these workers have negotiated over the years. There have been many examples of what happens during a transitional period from federal labour jurisdiction, as in this case, to provincial labour jurisdiction, from one owner to another. There will be the question of whether the same union will have successor rights. There will be the question of the administration of grievances throughout a period which may be many months, or even a year or more, if there are legislative hang-ups. There will be the question of the whole administration of the labour contract. Even if the new company acts in good faith, which we are told it is doing, experience with many such companies raises the question, even if the Government of Quebec is acting in good faith—it is very new and we do not really know what it is like—of the procedural problems of transferring from a federal company, under federal law, to a private company, under provincial law, which may very well gum things up for the better part of a year.

I have had experience in a factory where I worked for 18 years as a union officer, as a grievance officer and as secretary of my local. I know how important it is that grievances be handled promptly. They should be taken up within a day or two of the time the matter arises, the time when it is grieved. The settlement of them has to move within certain time limits, according to the contract, in nearly all cases. This is a matter of general labour law. If it is delayed because it is not known who the official responsible is or under what labour law they are operating, then there can be an immense amount of hardship and bad feeling created. This is unnecessary. It could be avoided by the proper interim legislation. Having the verbal assurance of SNC that it will recognize successor rights, even if that intention is good, does not come anywhere close to providing a firm with the legal framework under the whole operation of these two plants in relation to their employer relations.

The hoist of a year and a half implies that the proclamation would be at the end of that time. That need not seriously hinder the transition, and it need not hinder the profitability of these two plants. It gives time to work out these pension arrangements for the employees. Perhaps it would even give time to ensure that certain safeguards be written into the agreement. This would ensure that the industry, which is a necessary industry to any country, remains effectively under Canadian control. It would ensure that neither will Canada lack its services when they are needed nor will its services be put to a use that is contrary to government policy. Therefore, I hope that Hon. Members will support this amendment unanimously.

• (1550)

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, once again I am pleased to participate in debate on report stage of this Bill and to address the amendment that would have the effect of delaying for up to a year and a half the legislation we are debating this afternoon and have been debating for some months, the Bill which provides for the privatization of Canadian Arsenals Limited. I believe the amendment speaks not necessarily to delay for the sake of delay. Rather, its purpose is to tell the Government that it needs to go back to the drawing-board and to be more precise.

If this legislation were delayed, it would be strengthened, and that is what we were elected to do. If we were elected to ratify holus-bolus whatever the Government intended to do in quick and short order, then we would not be fulfilling the major responsibility inherent in the position of a Member of Parliament, in particular a back-bench Member of Parliament. We were elected to ensure that the legislation that flows from this Chamber to the Senate is legislation that will protect the rights of Canadians from coast to coast.

That kind of protection should exist in this piece of legislation because the shareholders of Canadian Arsenals Limited are some 25 million Canadians: you and I, Mr. Speaker, and every other Canadian. By its very definition, a shareholder of a corporation dictates policy and should also have information at his or her fingertips. In this case, we in this Party, the workers and the Public Service Alliance are trying to explain to the Government that those Canadian shareholders are not completely satisfied with this legislation.

This afternoon, speakers from both opposition Parties have spoken to the essential concern of the union and the workers, which is that workers' pension contributions not be undermined. They are saying to the Government that if it has made the poltiical decision and has the political will to make this company private, then so be it, but they want the guarantee that what they have invested throughout the years will be safeguarded and that if they move to a private corporation owned by this engineering firm from Quebec, that pension package will be protected. If it is not protected, they want to be the ones who will choose the package. Let us give them that choice because they deserve it.

These individuals will be working for a new company. They will be doing the same jobs, probably for the same salaries. Is it not only logical then that the contibutions they have made over the years to the pension plan should also be brought with them with some degree of security so that those individuals will know that they and their families will not suffer for the change? It is logical and I would think that every Member of the House would agree with that principle. I think I can safely assume that that is so, because it is only just and fair, but we on this side of the House wonder why the Government would not clarify the situation for those 800 workers.

The Government cannot, simply because it is the Government, change the rules of the game after the game has already begun. It might be different if the Government were to describe the type of package that would be given to new workers. However, the Government simply cannot expect to treat employees, who have been working for this firm for years and years, in a very undignified manner. That is exactly the manner in which the Government is proceeding.

The Government has decided, through a Government amendment, that it will bring in the kind of pension plan that it thinks is right. It cannot do that. The Government is privatizing this company so it should do everything all at once. It should pay attention to each and every aspect of this deal.

What the Government is doing is wrong. There is the suggestion that the Government is interested in some aspects of the deal more than in others. We see that the Government is not concerned with the welfare of 800 families. The Government is not concerned with the investment made by 800 employees. To a certain degree, that is not surprising because we know what the Government thought of pensioners some months ago. The Government was prepared, despite the social contract signed by individuals across the country, to undermine and deindex their pensions to a partial degree. The Government was stopped in its effort by the pensioners in conjunction with the opposition Parties. Today the Government is not moving against the pensions of senior citizens but, rather, the pensions of individuals who are still in the prime of their lives. The Government is now attacking working families, and that is wrong. That is why members of my Party can see some merit in the proposal to delay this legislation.

I am not necessarily concerned with the length of time this legislation may be delayed. It could be one year, two years or a month. I am concerned that there be an opportunity for more consideration to be given to this Bill. We want there to be enough time given to this legislation to ensure that the workers and not the multinationals or large engineering firms be protected, because it is the workers who have made the firm attractive to the private sector. That leads me to another point.

The 25 million Canadian shareholders also wish to know the philosophy of the Conservative administration as it concerns Crown corporations. The people are receiving conflicting signals. Only a few short months ago during the de Havilland debate, many Hon. Members rose to say that we needed to sell that Crown corporation, and when they had to scramble for a reason for that because they could not find a very good one, they said that it was somehow losing money. It is not that I agree with that narrow view or that narrow thinking, but if that was their reason for selling de Havilland, a Crown corporation, to private interests, I would think that with some degree of consistency they would look through the same eyeglasses at other Crown corporations. Why is there this double standard?

• (1600)

Canadian Arsenals Limited has consistently shown profits from 1980 to 1985. In 1984-85 it showed profits of $11.3 million. It has assets of over $126.4 million and has a cumulative total of $36 million in profits over the last three years. It also has $200 million in backlogged orders. The Conservatives have a philosophy which says that they only sell companies that are losing money, as they preached with regard to de Havilland. They did not look at every other issue at which Canadians wanted them to look. They looked at Canadian Arsenals Limited and said that they wanted to sell it. It is a profitable organization and a proud Canadian entity, yet they saw fit to privatize it. The shareholders are basically saying: "Hold on, we want to know what the chief executive officer is thinking and how you will handle such deals in the future".

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that my time is up. I ask Hon. Members to extend my speaking time because I am really getting into the issue and enjoying it.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, once again I am pleased to have an opportunity so soon to participate in the very important debate on Bill C-87 which is before the House at report stage. The motion before us would require that the House give some time for contemplation, deliberation and reconsideration by the Government before the Act comes into effect.

I should like to seek some guidance from you, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the possibility of moving an amendment to the motion. Motion No. 4 reads:

This Act shall come into force after December 31, 1987, on a date to be fixed by proclamation.

I should like to amend the motion in such a manner as to ensure that when the NDP forms the federal Government, we will have an opportunity to review this carefully and to ensure that it will not be considered a fait accompli. Would it be in order to change 1987 to 1989? I would so move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), if that motion is in order. Would such a motion be in order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member would like to move that type of motion, I would be glad to receive it in writing. Would he like to do it today or would he like to do it on Monday?

Mr. Robinson: I am sorry. What did you say, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am talking about your motion. Did you want to present me with a motion at this time?

Mr. Robinson: I would be pleased to write out the motion and present it.

Mr. Gauthier: In both official languages, please.

Mr. Robinson: I move:

That the motion be amended to change "1987" to "1989".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will accept it. Debate.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise on this amendment which would change—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member cannot speak now that he has moved the motion. I am afraid he is not allowed to speak.

Mr. Robinson: Why is that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You just moved the motion, therefore you are not allowed to speak on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal briefly with the amendment which our colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has just moved.

In fact, several of our colleagues who rose before me claimed that the Government needed a period of reflection in order to rectify some of the Bill's shortcomings. The Hon. Member who suggested to give the Government until December 31, 1987 to think this thing over was certainly looking in the right direction.

However, according to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, it would seem that the Hon. Member would need two additional years to understand some of the problems—

Mr. Gauthier: They are slow on the uptake on the other side—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main problems that the Government is having a hard time to understand is that the Canadian State may, as it pleases, sell off a Crown corporation. However, it does not seem fair to me for it to sell off at the same time the employees of the said Crown corporation. Yet, in a sense, that is what is happening.

The workers presently employed by Canadian Arsenals Limited have agreed under this Bill to concessions that are almost incredible in the labour movement. They have agreed to work for Surveyer, Nenniger & Chênevert (SNC), a firm, I am pleased to say, which has its head office in my riding, without being allowed to take along with them the union privileges they enjoy now. That is already a lot, and I suggest it is a major concession.

However, it seems to me that the Government is going too far in asking them to surrender also their established rights for a pension plan to protect their future financially.

That is why my colleague has moved an amendment, which may seem ridiculous at first sight, to replace 1987 with 1989. I understand that my honourable colleagues are saying: They want to stretch the debate. Let us be honest: Surely we want to stretch the debate.

I will say outright that it is not right what the Government is doing. Let us say it: it is downright unfair! That is why we oppose this and we will stretch the debate as much as we possibly can this afternoon. I give notice that we are going to stretch it until 5 p.m. That is what is taking place. Let us stop this peek-a-boo game. The Government should not treat this way the human beings who are working there.

Because this Crown corporation is sold to the private sector, something I do not oppose in principle—the State is not there to manufacture ammunitions—these people will be at the mercy of a boss working in the private sector, without any union protection. That is already a dramatic change. For the Government to ask these people to surrender their pension plan, I think, is going too far.

One of the amendments we discussed earlier was introduced by my colleague for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). That was a reasonable amendment. However, it was not accepted, Mr. Speaker. We have trouble making the Government understand that, while we agree with the principle of privatization, there are certain things should be considered. We believe that certain aspects are unacceptable. I do not want to preach and pretend that all the Hon. Members will agree with me, but certain things are unacceptable.

The Government is saying: We do not want to be unfair with these people. We are going to improve their situation and accommodate them. However, we are going to do it by order in council. The public might not understand what this means, but I do as I have been a Member of this House for a long time. It means: Give us a free hand and trust us. To do something by order in council means: We shall see to it later; we shall refer this to Cabinet once the Bill is passed.

As for me, I want to know exactly how the Government would proceed, right now while this matter is before the House. Let us face the facts. If you want to take part in the debate, please do so because this will help us to keep going until 5 o'clock. There is no need to do that. Let us talk frankly. If you want to act by order in council, this is what I say: Bring your plan to the House this afternoon and we shall look at it. If we can have an explanation from a Minister, even if it is not a formal amendment, I would be willing to take the word of this Minister this afternoon and to give you a free hand to settle the issue of the pension fund by order in council.

However, we are still being told: You have to trust us; agree to this purchase and we shall take care of the employees. To be frank, I am still not convinced, especially as I know that SNC supports the amendement moved by my colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), which would give the employees the option—

Mr. Bernier: The people who watch you on television.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, I am happy that people can see me on television and I am also anxious for them to hear you, from the Beauce region. I want to see whether you will support the cause of organized workers as much as I do. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I should address my comments to you.

The amendment proposed by my colleague gave a choice to the employees. They would have been able either to continue contributing to their present pension plan with a few changes for transfers, or else to join the pension plan set up by SNC. This seems logical to me. What I do not want to do is to vote blindly. Do you understand?

An Hon. Member: For a change?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes. For a change. It would make a change for me because, usually, I look—

An Hon. Member: What do you mean by voting blindly?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): For heaven's sake! It is strange to hear a Government Member speak about voting blindly, Mr. Speaker.

• (1610)

[English]

Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker? I remember something being said in this House years ago that some of us were voting like trained seals. Now someone on the Government side is telling me that for a change we are looking at the content of a motion before voting. That is a precious admonition coming from Members on the Government side.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues opposite—because I said earlier, indeed, that we intended to have the debate go on until 5 o'clock. That is not really our intention. As far as I am concerned, I am ready to let it pass immediately.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Well, now I hear somebody say hear, hear! Very well, we are beginning to agree. If we can discuss a little, we are going to agree.

I simply want clarifications on how those employees will have their pension plan protected. If we could get that, the Bill would go through rapidly, the sale would take place. Not only are SNC employees concerned, but SNC itself is also getting impatient. The company is ready to reach an agreement with the Government, they want to buy the facilities, they want to operate them. We also have contacts with that company. They are getting somewhat impatient. They themselves made an offer to the employees, to the union members who will no longer be. But that does not work. The Government is not agreeing to that. The Government says: Let us proceed with the sale. After that, we will provide for a sensible pension plan. I am saying "Alright, but let us see it now. Let us look at it beforehand".

Because the employees know what they have now, a pension plan which provides for full indexation, and that is very, very unusual in the private sector. It would be amazing were they to retain that easily. Those people are aware of that fact. Moreover, this allows for benefits to their dependents, with respect to inheritance rights. This is not something that is always provided for in private pension plans either, and there is no assurance that they will get that if they are left unprotected, if they are simply delivered bound and gagged to private enterprise.

Will they be able to get a full pension at age 55 as they may do now? There is no assurance of that. Those are some of the assurances we want to have, rather than the vague promise that will be dealt with by way of an order in council. If we could agree to deal with that, the Bill would proceed quite rapidly.

To sum it up, I am asking the Government to be a little less of an amateur in that area—

Mrs. Mailly: That will be some change.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, I am quite serious. I see the Hon. Member over there who is doing that. I find this to be amateurish, but let me explain. In the first place, this is not the first privatization. There was de Havilland before, and it is not the last one indeed, because that is the Government's vowed intention. That is policy.

Let us therefore beware. Will that be a precedent? Are we going to find that every time there is a Crown corporation to be privatized, employees will be just about sold, I mean dropped just like that, without any union protection, without any assurance as to their pension plan. Those are the questions we are raising. We had no clarification on that. This is a serious matter. I think we are getting to understand each other.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt but the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Once again it is a pleasure to be recognized by you, Mr. Speaker, and to have the opportunity to participate in today's debate. This motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is in recognition of the fact that there will be an election probably in 1988 and that the Government will be replaced by the New Democratic Party as the governing Party of Canada. It is an appropriate motion. It provides us an opportunity ask some fundamental questions regarding the motivation behind the selling of a Crown Corporation.

Unlike my friend who has just spoken who is not against the principle involved in this Bill, the question is whether private enterprise is inherently more efficient than public enterprise. It is a fair question to ask, particularly with this Crown Corporation. I say that while recalling the collapse of two banks in Canada and the fact that business bankruptcies are up over last year in the 13 per cent to 14 per cent range and recognizing that thousands and thousands of businesses collapse each year for a variety of reasons.

In my estimation, in the Canadian context, the main reason for business collapses is inefficient or inappropriate management. The same can be said of many Government Departments. There are Departments inefficiently run because of an inefficient poorly trained management staff and peculiar practices in some cases. But in this instance we are talking about a Crown Corporation, Canadian Arsenals, that does very well for itself.

The company had profits in its last fiscal year of $11.3 million. It is not the largest company in Canada. As a matter of fact, it hardly ranks among the top 500 in Canada. It is actually in the 470 range, yet the company was ranked third in Canada for its five-year profit growth by The Financial Post. This is an incredible statement. It is an extremely profitable company which has shown considerable growth over the last five years. By all projections, the next five years would look to be equally lucrative. Projections are that profits will increase significantly in the next horizon as presented by firms that have evaluated the company's performance.

One must ask why we are selling one of the most profitable Crown corporations in Canada when the Government could certainly use the revenue. These days, $11.3 million in cold hard cash would go a long way toward assisting young people through job creation, assisting small businesses to expand, assisting hard-pressed farmers, providing day care facilities or social housing, or reducing the debt of the country. The Government could put this $11.3 million to whatever positive use it determines, but is, instead, throwing it away. The sales of Canadian Arsenals are expected to double in the next five years. I am not certain that that would translate into doubled profits in the next five years, but there would obviously be significant increases in the profit margin.

The Government has decided to sell Canadian Arsenals, which is a 100 per cent Crown-owned corporation, to the SNC group of Montreal. The SNC group of Montreal happens to own another munitions company called IVI. There are only two major munition companies in Canada, those being Canadian Arsenals Limited and IVI. The Government is creating a monopoly. The Canadian Armed Forces will now be required to purchase its munitions from a monopoly. The requirement for munitions will obviously increase in the future, and we will have to pay the price set by SNC and it will reap the profits. The present shareholders of Canadian Arsenals are the people of Canada and they have been doing very well by the profits of Canadian Arsenals Limited.

We must recognize that we are creating a virtual monopoly in the munitions business. We are selling a source of revenue for the federal Government and are adding to the creeping cancer in our society called corporate concentration. More and more power is being put into fewer and fewer hands. I am willing to bet that there is not another western industrialized nation which would stand idly by, as we are today, while more and more of its economy is controlled by fewer and fewer people. The other day I noticed a headline in the New York Times warning of the takeover wave in Canada. The Americans are observing what is happening north of the border in Canada and seeing a business trend, the usefulness of which they question with regard to Canada's future. As we discuss this Bill, the Government is contributing to further corporate concentration.

It is interesting to note the return on equity of Canadian Arsenals. That is the best way to evaluate a company. In 1984-85, Canadian Arsenals had a return on equity of 21.4 per cent. There are not many companies in the country today which had a 21.4 per cent return on equity in the past fiscal year This is one of the highest returns on equity to be found in the Canadian economy. Let us recognize that the champions of business are wilfully selling off a very lucrative business, the development and manufacturing of munitions for our Armed Forces.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the many unanswered questions still outstanding with regard to the treatment of employees of Canadian Arsenals Limited and their futures in terms of pensions, plus a variety of other unanswered questions with regard to the transfer of control from a Crown corporation to a private corporation, encourage us to speak in favour of this amendment which will postpone this transaction until some time in the future. That will give us an opportunity for some clear second thoughts about what we are doing. Hopefully, saner heads will prevail in the end.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment on the sub-amendment to Clause 12, which is aimed at giving the Government time to reflect and suggests that this Act come into force after December 31, 1989, on a date to be fixed by proclamation.

Mr. Speaker, this obviously gives the Government enough time to reconsider the Bill and add a measure of sensitivity to the needs of its employees. Mr. Speaker, I am not saying I don't trust this Government, but I can tell you that in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier, that trust is relatively limited, especially considering the reputation this government has among its public servants, and I am referring to the fact that it has cut 15,000 jobs and is talking about cutting 15,000 more very shortly. And we all know that as far as job security goes, this Government is unreliable, to say the least, and personally, I am defending the interests of Canadian Arsenals employees, and I say right now, in no uncertain terms, that we are going to expect this Government to clean up its act and treat its employees more generously in terms of pensions and the formula proposed in the sale contract. I could go on for hours, Mr. Speaker, reading the agreements concluded by the Government and SNC, on what basic formulas are to be used, age of retirement and conditions for pension eligibility, survival benefits, and pension fund contributions.

What it all boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is that we are dealing with the worst kind of amateurism.

We have a Government that has decided to privatize a company and other companies as well, but especially this one, a company that has shown a profit during the last five years, a company that was built up and made profitable again through the efforts of its employees and the support of its Board of Directors, and because it is making money, because it is a profitable business, the Government has decided to get rid of it, for reasons it tried to explain but failed at second reading and it has failed even more miserably at the report stage.

Mr. Speaker, we may recall that Canadian Arsenals manufactures medium and large calibre munitions. So they don't have a wide range of customers, aside from the Government or perhaps other governments, that could buy their products. There are 750 employees at Le Gardeur near Montreal and there is another plant at Saint-Augustin near Quebec City, with 50 employees. Ninety per cent of the company's production is sold to the Government, Mr. Speaker, and we know that the transaction involves making calls for tenders. We asked what the criteria were. We were told: the price only.

Mr. Speaker, it is later on that people realized all of a sudden that other considerations had to be reviewed seriously. For instance, the pension plan of the employees had to be taken into account, as well as the indexation of this pension plan, because it is important to have a pension plan which keeps its purchasing power. Just as is now the case for civil servants, they wanted, I suppose, to continue the benefits they had paid for and perhaps to maintain their pension entitlements in the future, by paying their share in the contract and the indexation which is standard among civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the background of this sale . . . And when I say amateurish, I really mean amateurish. The Government did not take the trouble of consulting the union. It could have learned something! It did this thing unilaterally, something it should never have done.

The union representatives question the logic of the Government's sale of a profit-making corporation—and they said so in committee. They do not think it is politically wise to treat employees as it is trying to do. That is why we introduced a series of amendments in an attempt—the Minister was here, but he is gone—I saw the Minister in the House and I thought that perhaps he would rise in the debate and give us the assurance that when using his discretionary power, because discretionary power is what he will get under Government amendment No. 1 which will probably be passed by the House today, he will maintain the pension benefits which the employees now have.

This is not a precedent. Hon. Members know it was done in the case of nearly 20,000 Canada Post employees. It was done, a company under Treasury Board jurisdiction was privatized, so to speak, and turned into a Crown corporation. Those people put in the position where they could continue paying their pension contributions and transfer. In other words, they were sure they could change jobs. It means that if a Canada Post employee was not satisfied after three years he had the option of going to the Public Service Commission and ask them to find him a new job. That was fair. But there is no such option in this contract, it is nontransferable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to some of the comments and get back to my theme of amateurism. I am not the only one who said that, a lot of people came to the same conclusion, particularly those who made offers and who, during the auction, asked the public service departments what the terms of the sale were. We heard interesting comments from these people. Even the senior department officials might have interesting remarks to make. I will simply read some of the comments made by Mr. O'Toole. As we know, Mr. O'Toole—

• (1630)

[English]

He is the head of the privatization secretariat of Treasury Board. He is also assisted by a Mr. Basil Beneteau who recently retired as Vice-Chairman of Northern Telecom after a career in telecommunications. I want to quote those gentlemen because they say some interesting things about the sale of Canadian Arsenals. One quote reads:

"It was a horse race to keep up with the transactions in progress and build a strategic framework," says O'Toole.

I am quoting from the Report On Business magazine of December 14, 1985. It goes on to say:

"I thought I was going to go nuts about August with the fifth round." For the potential buyers, every bid revision added to their costs, simply because the Government had not done its homework before putting Canadian Arsenals on the block. If the Tories had either adopted the approach recommended by their own task force or the one developed by the Treasury Board secretariat, such problems could have been easily avoided.

That is what I mean when I talk about amateurism. The Tories simply had not done their homework. They had not thought about the employees' benefits. They did not even give a thought to them. You would think that an employer, someone who cared for his employees, would at least think of the conditions into which he is going to be putting those employees if he sells the company. The Government did not do that. It is the same thing over and over with members of this Government. They do not do their homework. They state the facts in the House—they did that on takeovers and on privatization—but it is time they started to get their act together and get this thing going on the right track. Otherwise, the first thing they know they will be in opposition again. God bless them all, they are good at that and I wish them very well.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have a further opportunity to consider this Bill and speak on the motion of my hon. friend which would extend the proclamation date until 1989. That might seem excessive to a few people on the opposite side of the House who wish to comment on the need for better consideration. However, this Bill is likely to be a model or precedent to be followed if this Government is hell-bent on its plan for privatizing everything it can lay its hands on, everything the Canadian people have created through Government action over the past years. Therefore, it should be well considered. We should look at the issues underlying it.

There are broadly two issues. They cannot be handled in a hurry, without better public consideration than has been given. The most important issue has barely been addressed by this Government or this legislation. That issue is the question of who created the company. Who created the wealth of the company? Who made it a viable, profitable operation? Who made it worth selling or worth buying?

Mr. Bradley: NATO.

Mr. Heap: In my mind it was not NATO, as one of the clowns opposite has suggested. It was the working people in those factories who made that company viable. I worked in a factory for 19 years and I know that, in a pinch, the manager of the factory had to acknowledge that if production was to be brought up and kept up to a standard, it was a matter of the morale of the workers involved. Management could have all kinds of schemes and plans and spend all kinds of money, but efficient production depended on the workforce in the factory. Whether it is the immedate workforce currently producing, the equipment, material and power resources provided, or whether you take it back a step further to those who produced the plant, the power resources and the materials, it is the workers involved who made the company viable. Management did not get out there with a hammer and saw and build it. The owner did not get out there with his hammer and saw and build it. It was the workers who produced the plant and it is the workers who produce the products from that plant. This is a point which is commonly ignored. It is a point which is becoming more and more of concern to working people in Canada. They produce this wealth which is then traded and traded and traded in these high-level financial deals which make absolutely no sense of the work the workers are doing. Very often it even destroys their work. Certainly it very often destroys their opportunity to go on working. That is why there should be full consideration given to the people who in fact produced the wealth that made this plant worth talking about and worth buying or selling.

• (1640)

On the other side of the coin, the other consideration deals with the finagling that was done in the process of selling this plant. Some questions have been raised, but I do not think adequate answers have been given.

It may take time to dig out these answers to the questions that have been raised about the process that the Department of Supply and Services used in arranging the sale. I admit that the Department of Supply and Services is not as used to selling as it is to buying. Previous Members have said that the Department was probably an amateur at selling. That is the Government's problem. If it has decided to embark on a reverse process and disperse the wealth that has been built up by the Canadian people through the action of Canadian Governments, it should consider very well not only why it will do it, but how it will do it.

We are told, for example, that dozens of companies expressed an interest in buying Canadian Arsenals, but only six of them were asked to submit final money offers by a deadline of November 19. What we are not told is why all the others were dropped. We are told that those who did submit bids were pressured into submitting revised bids not once, twice but three times between July and November 19. The Department of Supply and Services kept dickering with them and changing the story.

That is not a normal bidding procedure. As part of the city council of Toronto, I obtained some familiarity with the normal tendering and bidding procedure and that is a very strange way for a public body to do business. I will come back to that point later.

We are also told that the Director General of Aerospace and Armaments, Stanley Kerr, who was a senior official of the Department of Supply and Services, left the Department of Supply and Services on November 1 to work for CFN Consultants, which was lobbying DSS on behalf of SNC, the company that is purchasing Canadian Arsenals. Mr. Kerr has signed an affidavit saying that he did not deal with any aspect of the CAL deal, but it still raises a question. It is the kind of question which Government Members would have screamed blue murder about when they were in opposition, screaming about conflict of interest.

I come to one interesting point, which relates to the rather strange bidding procedures that resulted in this one company being selected. We find in the Toronto Sun that SNC paid to a certain Member, who is the Minister responsible for regional development, a campaign fund donation directly, and that the company and the officers of the company have paid additional money to other Tory campaign funds, the central fund.

According to La Presse, they have paid $10,000 to the Tory campaign. Of course, ever politician seeks election donations, but when the election donations come to the people who have particular responsibility for a deal like this, from the people who turn out to be the beneficiaries of a deal like this, the public is entitled to ask some questions and get some answers. We want to know just who influenced the deal and who influenced this rather unusual procedure in the bidding. What was going on in the back rooms that influenced the way the value of money changed hands? The value of the work of the workers in that plant was being tossed around like a football.

As I said, it is the workers who created the value of that plant and the value of the products of that plant by their work. It is not the money wheelers and dealers who created that value but it is the money wheelers and dealers who want to scoop up the value. When some of them have made a point of providing election contributions to certain people who now have attained a high position in the Conservative Government, it is important to find out who, as a result of that, is scooping up the value that is created by people working in that plant. It may not be worth it to the Government, but it is well worth it to the people of Canada to take some time to look into these questions.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to elaborate again on some of the points that were made earlier by—

An Hon. Member: The same points you made last time.

Mr. Marchi: —myself and my colleagues. There are some Members opposite who, in the dying minutes of another parliamentary debate, do not like seeing members of the Opposition rising to make their points of view known. I have been sitting here since two o'clock carrying out my responsibilities and I believe I have earned my pay. I do not know what Members opposite have been doing other than reading The Toronto Star and seeing that the polls are showing them down once again.

This is the national forum for debate and where political careers are made and broken. This is where we find out who can articulate concerns on behalf of their constituents. I am learning that it is simply a case of Members of Parliament from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party who have any interest in or any sense of obligation and compassion for the representations we are receiving. Most important, those Members opposite are receiving the same representations, but the difference is that they are sitting on their representations while we are bringing them forth in the House of Commons, as is the intention of this forum.

My hon. friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), quoted from an April edition of Business Magazine.

Some Hon. Members: More.

Mr. Marchi: He quoted a number of interesting paragraphs from that magazine, and Hon. Members opposite are saying "more". The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier forgot to include in his quote that Mr. O'Toole from the privatization section of the Treasury Board said that the Government probably did not invest enough time in the entire stage.

When one considers that quote in conjunction with the subamendment, it gives credibility and life to that particular subamendment.

I will not stand here and suggest that I agree completely that we should delay this decision even though I disagree with the decision itself. If that decision has been made, I think we should inevitably come forth with it in the proper way. I am not prepared to suggest that it should be put off until 1989, because if we are serious about this issue and take into account why this particular firm is in business, we should have the responsibility of dealing with the situation in a responsible and forthright way.

That is why I would not support delaying this until 1989 simply for the sake of delay or waiting until the New Democratic Party is elected to Government, as suggested by the Member from the NDP. If that is the purpose, then it will not be 1989, but probably 3089.

Our purpose in rising is not to delay or procrastinate, but to allow the Government ample—I suggest that word wisely—opportunity to go back once again, as the magazine outlines, and do its homework correctly. The Government should do its homework on behalf of average Canadians, for a change. I say "a change" because it seems that this Conservative administration is concerned with everything else but the lot of the average Canadian.

• (1650)

It is fine for those Hon. Members to stand up and tell us that this is such a proud and profitable organization, but I do not know why they are saying those things at a time when the Government is selling the corporation. If the Government is prepared to admit that it is such a good corporation, then it should admit as well that it is partially its 800 workers who have made Canadian Arsenals a profitable, effective and proud Canadian entity which has triggered interest within the private sector. If the Government is prepared to admit that is so because of the diligence and responsibility of those 800 workers, it should feel at least a little obligated to give them what is rightfully theirs. When we are discussing the future of this corporation we should discuss the future of those 800 employees. They have invested their lives. They have their pension contributions locked up. But what the Government is prepared to say is: "Forget about that for a moment. We will bring forward a motion in future to deal with it. Right now just trust us". That is not good enough. It is not good business, good management, nor is it fair. It is not fair to the families of those workers who have a future with that particular company, whether it is under Government control or under the control of the private sector. They will continue to labour for that company and, therefore, it is incumbent upon the Government to allow them the opportunities which should be theirs. The Government should allow them to continue to place with the Government of Canada their pension contributions if they so desire. The choice should be theirs.

The union disagrees with the Government's policy, the workers disagree, the media disagrees, the two Opposition Parties disagree, and most fair-minded Canadians disagree. Their question and ours is, how can the Government proceed on this basis? We thought the Government learned a lesson a few short months ago when it was prepared to deindex senior citizens' pensions because it thought that they were unorganized, poorly financed and would not protest. But the Government was rightfully shocked to see the mobilization of senior citizens. The Government is thinking in the same narrow way with the same kind of "don't worry, we know what it is all about" attitude with respect to this pension issue facing the 800 employees of Canadian Arsenals. That is why we are asking for time. We are asking the Government to go back and look at itself in the mirror and ask itself if it is approaching the issue on behalf of Canadians as it ought to. As the Prime Minister said so often, this is supposed to be a Government for the people, by the people. We do not see that here and we have not seen it thus far on any other issue. The other question is on the Government's whole philosophy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, one would think that with a reception like that, those Hon. Members would agree unanimously to let me go on for the rest of the evening.

Some Hon. Members: Sure.

Mr. Baker: Please don't.

There are perhaps two reasons why the New Democratic Party moved this particular motion; first, it cannot comprehend the legislation, and I do not believe anyone in Canada could comprehend the position of the Government in relation to Crown corporations. It is a very confusing position. On the one hand, the Government wants to get rid of Crown corporations which are profitable and, on the other hand, we see the creation of Crown corporations to save money. For example, I refer to the creation just this year of the Crown corporation CN Marine. It is very difficult to really understand the policy of the Government. Only today, I understand, CN sold CN Route to a private firm, so I presume this House will be considering very shortly the fate of those employees and their pensions.

The Opposition is also concerned about the attitude of the Treasury Board towards employees. You might find this somewhat incredible, Mr. Speaker, but in the present negotiations going on with Treasury Board, for example, employees in the general labour and trades groups in Edmonton—with which city the Speaker is familiar—will, in certain categories, be making less than workers who work outside of Edmonton. The Government says that this only covers 18,000 or 19,000 employees. It is a bit confusing to have salary ranges differ according to whether one works in Ottawa or Toronto, but it is even more confusing when the unions are told the Government will pay different wages in Edmonton from those paid in areas outside of Edmonton.

With respect to crewmen on ships, there is a line called the 102nd parallel which goes up through Saskatchewan. If one is sailing a ship to the east of that line, one will make $200 a month less than if one were sailing a ship to the west of that line. Hon. Members opposite might be interested to check with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to find out what happens when a ship actually crosses the line. Is it any wonder that the New Democratic and the Liberal Parties are asking to have another look at this Bill? We want to examine Government policy. The Government obviously does not know what it is doing with Crown corporations. For sure, it does not know what the attitude of Treasury Board is towards its employees. There are about 3,000 or 4,000 employees in the negotiating group of ships crews—but I see my time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 5 o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.
