SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament, and to prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy, which is as follows :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In again meeting you at a period of the year most convenient for the despatch of business, it gives me great pleasure to be able to congratulate you on the remarkable expansion of the trade of Canada with other countries, the total trade of the past year far exceeding that of any of its predecessors. A gratifying result of this expansion was that the revenue of the last fiscal period of nine months was more than sufficient to meet expenses on Consolidated Fund, National Transcontinental Railway Capital and Special outlays, all expenses of the Dominion of every kind, and leave a balance of over three million dollars to be applied in reduction of the public debt.

The stream of immigrants coming to Canada continues to increase in volume, the year now drawing to a close showing a larger number than any preceding year, and it is gratifying to observe the many coming from the British Isles.

The Dominion has been blessed by a long series of prosperous years, and, though at the present moment its business is being restricted by the financial stringency which prevails throughout the world, I feel assured that this unfavourable condition will be temporary and that the illimitable resources of Canada and the world-wide recognition of them give us ample guarantee of continued material progress.

The conference held in London in the months of April and May last between the government of the United Kingdom and the governments of the British Dominions beyond the seas satisfactorily dealt with many subjects in which the empire at large is interested. A copy of the minutes of the proceedings will be laid before you.

Two of my ministers, duly authorized by His Majesty for the purpose, and acting in conjunction with His Majesty's ambassador at Paris, have recently negotiated a convention with the government of the French Republic respecting the commercial relations between France and Canada, subject, however, to the approval of the French Chambers and the Canadian Parliament. A copy of this convention will be submitted to you immediately and you will be asked to give it your sanction.

The government of Newfoundland having become involved in a controversy with the government of the United States as to the true meaning of article 1 of the convention respecting fisheries, concluded in the year 1818 between the United Kingdom and the United States, and Canada being also interested in the question at issue, my government has joined with the government of Newfoundland in an agreement to refer all matters of difference arising under said article 1 to the Hague Tribunal.

The difficulty of obtaining labour and materials at a time of great business activity has somewhat retarded the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway. Nevertheless great progress has been made both on the eastern division and on the prairie section of the western division. A section of the latter of about two hundred and fifty miles has been available for handling the traffic of the present season. Contracts for the portion of the prairie section west of Edmonton are about to be let, and immediate steps will be taken for the commencement of work at both the eastern and western ends of the mountain division. Thus, in a very short time, the whole work from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be under vigorous construction.

The unexpected influx of immigrants from oriental countries into British Columbia aroused a strong feeling of opposition. A member of my government has been deputed to proceed to Japan to confer with the Japanese government on this subject.

The sudden and unexpected collapse of the great cantilever bridge in course of construction across the St. Lawrence, in the vicinity of Quebec, may be regarded as a national calamity and the event has evoked much sorrow for the lives which were lost on that occasion. A commission has been appointed to inquire into the causes which led to the disaster. When received, the report of the commission will be laid before you. It will be necessary to devise means for the completion of the bridge within a reasonable time.

It is most gratifying to find that, notwithstanding the large reductions of postal rates, which have been made, the revenue of the Post Office Department has continued to increase rapidly. The large receipts of this branch of the government business will enable the department to make still more liberal provision for the extension of postal facilities throughout the Dominion.

The time has arrived when the public interest requires that telegraph and telephone companies holding federal charters should be placed under government control. A Bill will be introduced for that purpose.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The public accounts for the nine months ending March 31 last will be laid before you without delay.

The estimates for the coming fiscal year will be submitted for your approval at an early date.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

Among the measures to be submitted to you is a Bill for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba and of other provinces; also a Bill to provide for the issue of Government Annuities for old age; a Bill respecting Insurance; and Bills to amend the Election Act and the Dominion Lands Act.

I commend to your thoughtful consideration the several subjects to which I have referred and I trust that in your deliberations you may be guided by Divine light.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both Houses of Parliament of the Dominion of Canada be taken into consideration on Monday next.

Mr. L. R. BORDEN. I would ask the Prime Minister: when may we expect that the Treaty with France will be laid upon the table of the House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To-day.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That a special committee of seven members be appointed to prepare a report with all convenient speed, of a list of the members to compose the select standing committees of this House under rule No. 10; said committee to be composed of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. R. L. Borden, Mr. Paterson, Mr. Fielding, Mr. Calvert, Mr. Haggart and Mr. Taylor.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it be convenient to have that committee called together at a very early day. There is some work which it could undertake immediately, and which if done now might be of advantage in shortening the session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Early next week.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message, as follows:

GREY.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons an approved Minute of Council appointing the Honourable William Stevens Fielding, Minister of Finance; the Honourable Louis Philippe Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries; the Honourable William Paterson, Minister of Customs, and the Honourable William Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons, as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the 11th Chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, intituled: 'An Act respecting the House of Commons.'

Government House,
Ottawa, November 28, 1907.

THE DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That the order for the consideration of the motion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the Speech at the opening of the session be now called, and that the same have precedence over all other business except the introduction of Bills until disposed of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The questions on the Order Paper could not be very well answered to-day; but I presume that after to-day the debate on the address will be proceeded with immediately after questions. That has been the practice in the past.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No objection.

Motion amended as suggested, agreed to.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

On the order of the day being called:

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, with regard to the French Treaty, to simplify matters, and make it a little easier for the members of the House, and probably people outside of the House, to understand the real bearings of the different schedules, if he could have a statement prepared, showing the different items in the schedules, with the minimum tariff, the intermediate tariff and the preferential tariff set opposite to them; and showing also, with reference to the articles on which we are given favoured terms by France, the gross amount of imports into France during recent years. Otherwise it will be a great deal of trouble for each one to pick out all these matters for himself: indeed, it will be almost impossible.

Mr. FIELDING. The first part of my hon. friend's suggestion I can readily comply with, and perhaps the second part also. Although notice has been given of a motion for to-morrow, it may be considered that that will be dropped, and the motion left till the necessary information can be obtained, which may cause a delay of several days. We will endeavour to get as well as possible the information the hon. gentleman has asked for.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals a matter of very great importance to the members attending the House of Commons, particularly those living east of Toronto on the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is out of order. If this is a matter of urgent public importance——

Mr. TAYLOR. It is.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then the hon member will have to proceed under rule 37.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is perhaps a personal matter and a matter of privilege, because I myself——

Mr. SPEAKER. The House has passed the motion for the consideration of the address in reply to the speech from the Throne and that order is now before the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I will bring it up before the orders of the day.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency's speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. R. R. HALL (West Peterborough). Mr. Speaker, permit me at the outset to thank the Rt. hon. the Prime Minister in honouring me with the privilege of moving the motion which I am about to make. I take it as a compliment, not so much personal to myself as to the great constituency which I have the honour to represent. There are about twenty cities in Canada having each a larger population than the city of Peterborough, but I suppose the Premier, in coupling my name with this motion, must have had in mind the fact that there are only five cities in the Dominion showing a greater manufacturing output than that of the city of Peterborough. He must also have had in mind the fact that the farmers of the county of Peterborough produce the finest cheese and butter to be found on the British market.

Now, I would like to devote some little time and attention to the question of the development of our trade, especially during recent years. In order that we may take a comprehensive view of the growth and development of Canadian trade during the last few years, it is necessary to keep in view two very important years in the recent history of Canada. I take the year 1878 as being a year of marked importance in the history of Canada. It was then that the late Sir John Macdonald and his party succeeded in gaining the confidence of the country and in being elected to this House by a very large majority. And for upwards of eighteen years they held power continuously. I am quite ready to admit that during these eighteen years much valuable and progressive work was done for Canada, especially the construction of that great transcontinental railway the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not suppose that any one would be disposed to detract from the credit which the government of the late Sir John Macdonald deserved in that connection, although no doubt a great deal of difference of opinion exists regarding the cost to the people of that undertaking, and no doubt there is good ground for the contention that it cost the people enormously more than it should have. The next year that begins a still more important epoch in the history of Canada is the year 1896, when our present First Minister, the Right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and his party were elected to office and given control of the destinies of this country. Let me now compare the progress which Canada made in the eighteen years when the late government was in office with that which this country made since 1896 under Liberal regime. In 1878 the total trade of Canada amounted to $172,405,454. In 1896 it had grown to $239,025,360. Thus during the whole eighteen years of Conservative government the total increase of Canadian trade was $66,619,906. Then taking our trade for the year ending June 30, 1907, I find that it amounted to $617,964,952, or an increase in eleven years of $376,939,592. That is to say, comparing the last eleven years with the previous eighteen years the average increase in Canadian trade has been nine times as great in the latter period what it was in the former. I might add that the trade between Canada and Great Britain has also increased in a most remarkable extent in the last eleven years compared with the previous eighteen years. The increase from 1878 to 1896 amounted to $16,297,311, whereas the increase from 1896 to 1907 has amounted to $117,319,460. Therefore, the increase in the latter period has been eleven times as great as it was during the previous eighteen years. Our trade with the United States has increased twelve times as much during the last eleven years as it did during the previous eighteen years.

I might further point out that the trade of Canada still continues to develop. Take the four months previous to October 31, 1906, and we find that our trade amounted in the aggregate to $215,196,190. Compare that with the four months ending October 31, 1907, and you find that our trade in the latter period amounted to $246,592,497. Thus it is clear that during the four months ending October 31, 1907, compared with the corresponding four months of 1906, our trade has increased $31,396,307.

I might further point out that this enormous trade seems to be developing continuously and along every line. It must be very satisfactory to the people of Canada to feel that the impulsive flow of Canadian trade ne'er feels returning ebb, but holds on its course in a swelling tide. One may naturally ask what are the causes of this enormous growth. Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons is that we have rich and fertile lands which attract immigration from all parts of the world. The illimitable resources of Canada attract foreign capital from abroad. We have also sound banking institutions and sound financial institutions which still further tend to increase the financial strength and credit of our country. We also enjoy stability in government. But what are some of the other causes of this enormous growth? This growth is certainly due in a very marked degree to the wise and prudent administration of this government. To that administration must be largely attributed the successful development of our resources, the rapid peopling of our Northwest, the increasing of our transportation facilities, the improvements of our canals and harbours, the deepening of our waterways, the improvement of the St. Lawrence ship channel, the improvement in transportation of perishable goods, the improvement of our terminal facilities and our ocean steamship service, the establishment of a trade commissioners' service outside of Canada on a broad business-like basis. These are some of the causes set in motion by this government which have resulted in this great expansion of trade.

It must also be a cause of pride and satisfaction to our people to know that this wonderful advancement in our trade has been brought about without in any way increasing our national debt. In 1896 the national debt of Canada amounted to $258,497,432. Down to March 31, 1907, it amounted to $263,671,859, being an increase of but little over $5,000,000 since 1896. During the previous eighteen years our trade increased only some $66,000,000, but our national debt increased during that period $118,000,000. Just compare the two. During the last eleven years under the present government our increase in trade amounts to $378,000,000 and the increase in our national debt is but $5,000,000. Had the same proportion continued between the increase in trade and the increase in the national debt in the last eleven years as during the previous eighteen years, our national debt would have increased upwards of $600,000,000.

It is another matter of pride and satisfaction to know that our debt per head, which in 1896 was $50.71, is to-day only $40 per head. It is quite true that in the working out of this wonderful expansive policy our annual expenditure has increased, but it is satisfactory to know that our revenue has likewise increased. The money spent during the eighteen years of the late Conservative government produced indifferent results, but the money spent during the last eleven years has produced most excellent returns.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have embarked upon the construction of a national transcontinental railway and have spent large sums during the past nine months on capital account on the improvement of our public works and canals, even to the extent of over $14,000,000, our public accounts show a surplus, notwithstanding all this expenditure on capital account, of $3,300,000 to apply on the national debt. Therefore, so far as the financial position of Canada is concerned, I do not think any one can seriously find any fault with it. I have said that this great growth of Canada's trade has largely been brought about by the judicious expenditure of public money. Let me give an illustration to show how money can be judiciously expended and our annual expenditure increased with the result that Canada will reap considerable profit from the investment.

Take for instance, our trade with Mexico. In 1896 our total trade with Mexico was $37,876; and in 1907 it was $1,137,784. This great increase in our trade with Mexico has been brought about largely by the establishment, on July 21, 1905, of a steamship service on the Atlantic between Canada and Mexico. I notice that on May 1, 1907, a steamship service with Mexico was established on the Pacific also. In 1905, our total trade with Mexico was $174,593, and in 1907, as I have already stated, it was $1,137,784, or over six times as great as it was only two years ago. The establishment of steamship service is but one of many illustrations that might be given of how wise expenditures made by this government contributes toward the growth of Canada.

Another illustration that might be given of the remarkable growth of Canada is seen in the results of the excellent work done by the Department of Agriculture in improving our transportation facilities and in other ways. In 1906, we sent cheese to Great Britain to the amount of $14,000,000 but in 1907 our exports of cheese to Great Britain amounted to $25,000,000, an increase of almost 100 per cent. One fact that shows very clearly the proud position that Canada occupies in the British market is that our export of cheese to that market amounts to nearly three times as much as that of Holland and the United States combined. There is no doubt that the application of the principle of cold storage to our railways, our terminal facilities and our steamship lines has enabled Canada to send to Great Britain immense quantities of butter, fruit, and other kinds of perishable goods. The Department of Agriculture seems to have proceeded in its work upon the confident belief that if we preserve our perishable goods efficiently and transport them cheaply, increase in our trade will follow as naturally as day follows night.

One of the most remarkable features of Canada's advancement is the growth of our immigration. During the eighteen years before this government took office, it was a deplorable thing that so many of our farmer's sons and mechanics left Canada to go to the United States and other fields seeking more profitable employment and more rapid advancement in life than could be found at home. In 1896, the total immigration into Canada was only 21,716. It was a deplorable fact that, down to that time, the majority of people coming from across the Atlantic to Canada passed through Canada to find homes in the United States. In 1907, the total immigration to Canada amounted to upwards of 250,000. From March 31, 1907, until the end of October, a period of seven months, no fewer than 211,859 people have come to Canada, or 50,297 more than during the same period last year. I observe, by the returns, that the majority of these immigrants are from Great Britain and Ireland. We are always glad to see people from Great Britain and Ireland come to make their homes in Canada. We find also that many of these immigrants come from the continent of Europe. I am sure that every Canadian welcomes these immigrants from the continent of Europe, provided they come with sound bodies and sound minds. We heartily welcome any citizens who come from the good old land of France; not as many have come from France within the last few years as I would like to see.

Another feature this government has every reason to be proud of is its management of the Post Office Department. In 1896, there was a deficit of $700,000 in the administration of the Post Office Department. For the present year, there will be a surplus of $1,000,000, and this result has been brought about not by cutting down or starving the service in any way, but through judicious and able management. Since 1896 there have been great reductions in our postal rates, as well as great extensions in our system. The rapid development of the west has made enormous demands upon the government for the increase of new mail services and the establishment of new post offices. An increase of pay to the amount of ten per cent was granted to our postmasters by the former Postmaster General, and still further increases have been granted by the present head of the department. Better postal facilities have been established between Great Britain and Canada. Until a few years ago, the postal rate to Great Britain was 5 cents per ounce; then it was cut down to 2 cents per half-ounce, and now it is 2 cents per ounce. The establishment of mail delivery in our cities of over 10,000 population is also a marked improvement in the administration of our postal service. So that, I think, in looking at the management of the Post Office, we cannot but regard it as having been most efficiently and most economically carried on.

The growth and development of the Canadian transportation system, especially in regard to our railways is also a feature of our national life of which we have every reason to be proud. In 1896, we had 16,270 miles of railways; in 1906, our railway lines increased to 21,353 miles. We find that the freight carried in 1906 showed an increase over that carried in 1896 of no less than 33,000,000 tons, and there were 13,000,000 more passengers carried in 1906 than in 1896.

The freight carried on our canals was three million tons greater in 1906 than it was in 1896.

If there is one thing more than another of which the people of Canada can congratulate themselves it is the fact that the National Transcontinenal Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific are making such remarkable progress towards completion notwithstanding the many difficulties which confront them, both in securing the necessary labour to construct them and in carrying supplies to points on the construction route so remote from those touched by existing railway lines. West of Winnipeg upwards of 300 miles have been graded, and about completed and grain has been carried over a part of this road since October last. About 500 miles more are under contract between Winnipeg and Edmonton and will be completed in due time. On the mountain section, between Edmonton and the Pacific coast, surveys are going on rapidly and tenders will soon be called for. The construction of the National Transcontinental between Winnipeg and Moncton is making good progress; 861 miles are under contract, with 946 miles yet to be let. The progress made upon the construction of the line between Winnipeg and Moncton must necessarily be slow because of the fact that the line is being constructed through a new territory far from the base of supply. It is also satisfactory to know that the line between Winnipeg and Quebec will have a much better roadbed than was at first anticipated. The maximum grade adverse to east-bound traffic is but ·4, and the maximum grade adverse to west-bound traffic is ·6. The government could not have taken any better course in the interest of Canada, notwithstanding all the embarrassments that were thrown in their way, than the construction of the Transcontinental Railway. It has given employment to a large number of the people who are coming into this country as well as to those already in. It is also a fact that the port of New York is very much congested. The handling of traffic at that port, it is agreed upon all hands, is becoming exceedingly expensive. I noticed an interview with Mr. J. J. Hill, in to-day's Montreal 'Gazette.' The despatch I refer to is as follows :

New York, in the opinion of James J. Hill, head of the Great Northern system of railroads, has reached the climax of her commercial supremacy. In an interview to-day the railroad builder of the Northwest expressed this view, his reason being that this city cannot hope to maintain its commercial control when its chief claim is, as he states it, that it is the dearest place in which to do business. 'The cost of everything relating to trade and commerce,' said Mr. Hill, 'has increased here beyond the point of profit. Traffic will be forced to seek other outlets; business other locations.

'The tax imposed on business in New York is enormous. Your real estate, your dock, your means of communication, are all burdened with heavy charges. The price to live and do business in New York is growing beyond the ability of the people to stand it. They will be forced to go elsewhere, seeking places where the cost is more reasonable.

'Traffic cannot be dammed up. It will seek an outlet somewhere, by going around the edges or making for itself entirely new channels.

'There are two outlets for the west possible of development besides New York and the adjacent ports. One is through Canada, down the St. Lawrence, and the other down the Mississippi to New Orleans.

'The products of the west are bound to reach their markets. Therefore, if they are blocked and overtaxed on their way through New York, they will find new channels for themselves.'

Therefore, so far as Canada is concerned, it was with wisdom and foresight that the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, or the National Transcontinental Railway was undertaken. It will make certain that Canadian trade will be carried through Canadian ports. While Canada's trade has increased as it has done from all these causes, at the same time in comparing her with other great commercial countries of the world, it is important for us to realize where she stands. We find that Great Britain's trade between 1895 and 1896, increased 53 per cent, that of France increased 53½ per cent, that of Germany 87 per cent, that of the United States 100 per cent, and that of Canada 170 per cent. That is a proud and remarkable position for Canada to occupy among the great commercial countries of the world. She stands second place upon the list of all the commercial nations in the growth and expansion of her trade. There is but one other nation that occupies the unique position of having a greater trade expansion than Canada and that is Japan. It is only within recent years that Japan's ports have been thrown open, and that her trade has been afforded an opportunity for development ; therefore it is not at all surprising that, with this complete change of front, the trade of Japan should have increased as rapidly as it has done. It is also a satisfaction to know that although Japan stands at the head of the list in the growth and expansion of its trade, with a population of upwards of forty-four millions, yet Canada with a population of only six millions actually has a greater volume of trade by over fifty-four millions than that of Japan. It must further be remembered that the expansion of the trade of Canada has been wholly in the arts of peace, whereas a large part of Japan's trade has been in munitions of war.

It is also necessary for us to realize the fact that the development of our oriental trade is of great importance to the welfare of Canada. We are in a position to raise a vast amount of produce in the Northwest; the products of our forests and our mines in British Columbia must find a market, and there is no market so convenient for them as that of Japan and other oriental nations. It is for that reason that we can well wish God speed and success to the mission of the hon. the Postmaster General to Japan. It is important for us to cultivate that trade, because in a comparatively few years we will not only have Canadian Pacific steamship lines plying between British Columbia and the orient, but we will also have lines of steamers connecting the orient with the Grand Trunk Pacific as well.

Our trade relations with France have not been as satisfactory as we could have wished, nor our commerce with that country as great as we could have desired, when we consider the enormous trade of that country with the rest of the world. We find that France has a total trade of $2,100,000,000 per annum. Japan stands fourth upon the list of great commercial nations, exceeded only by Great Britain, the United States and Germany. Canada's trade with France was only $11,000,000 last year, whereas Canada's trade with Great Britain and the United States amounted to upwards of $500,000,000. It does seem strange that our trade with France has not increased more rapidly in the past. However, we can readily understand how high tariff impositions to a large extent prevent trade between the two countries which might otherwise take place. I must say that it is to the credit of the hon. the Finance Minister, and also to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that the barriers that have so long stood in the way between France and Canada are now to be removed, and that Canada will occupy a more favourable position in the future in her trade relations with France. All the articles which Canada is able to produce, namely, the products of the farm, the forest, the mine and the fisheries, will receive more favourable treatment in France than they have in the past. It is also a satisfaction for us to know that Canada has been honoured by Great Britain in appointing the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as plenipotentiaries to act for her on our behalf in framing this treaty with France, and we are glad to learn that their efforts have been so successful.

I will not dwell upon the imperial conference that lately took place in London, nor mention any of the great imperial questions that were brought under consideration. I will only say that no living imperial statesman has done more than the right hon. the leader of this House to bind the British possessions in all parts of the globe more closely to those golden islands in the Northern Sea. In conclusion, I desire to extend my hearty congratulations to the right hon. Premier on his just having passed his 66th birthday, in the full vigour of his mental and physical powers : for I know that such congratulations will awaken a sympathetic chord in every heart and hearthstone throughout this broad land. His advancing years but bring to him increasing honours, and more widely extended fame. His greatest service to Canada has been in securing unity and progress at home, and respect abroad. His country's welfare has ever been the guiding star of his every end and aim, and hence to him the road to fame and to honour has not been so difficult to travel. I beg to move, Sir, that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the Throne.

Mr. ADELARD LANCTOT (Richelieu), (Translation). Mr. Speaker, although I felt greatly honoured when requested to second the address in answer to the speech from the Throne, I did not lose sight of the ungratefulness and difficulties of the task. He who deals with a subject of his own choice, who himself settles on a plan for his speech, who draws from his own mind those arguments which are to convince his hearers, is really doing original work wherein his reasoning and imaginative powers have their full sway. But the seconder of an address in answer to the speech from the Throne is restricted to a few formal and precise statements, which he must be very discreet and prudent in commenting upon and concerning which he may at most attempt a few variations as evidence of his skill. It so happens, however, that I am not a skilled orator and that I feel utterly unequal to the task which has been assigned to me. Indeed, were it not customary, under such circumstances, to go over the statements contained in the speech from the Throne, I would, in seconding the motion of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall), be content with proclaiming myself a faithful follower of the party in power; a follower sufficiently well satisfied with the past record of the government to confidently endorse their future conduct.

But, Sir, you expect something more from me. You expect that I shall make some brief comment regarding the various matters which His Excellency has thought fit to bring forward. Some of these relate to measures which the government propose to introduce; others merely recall past deeds which we are requested to approve. Thus the speech from the Throne calls our attention to matters of yesterday as well as to matters of to-morrow.

What is the programme for to-morrow? It will be mainly an Act concerning insurance companies, an Act for extending the powers of the board of Railway Commissioners, an Act regarding parliamentary elections.

The legislation proposed in the speech from the Throne was demanded by public opinion, and the government should be congratulated for having introduced it. It is the part of true statesmanship to legislate in accordance with the just wishes of the people. Only headstrong reformers would think of enforcing on the people laws which do not answer a clearly expressed need. Never has the government been more worthy than it is to-day of being called liberal, the government of the people by the people, since it has undoubtedly voiced the general opinion when inviting us to vote such measures as are to take up our time at the opening of this session.

The Bill concerning insurance companies will have for its object to give policy-holders safeguards greater than those provided by the present Act. If there is one thing more than another which has a bearing on the security and well-being of families, it certainly is the insurance question. Indeed, insurance companies may be termed the provident citizen's permanent savings bank. There it is that the man who looks less to his personal comfort than to the future well-being of his family, deposits the most sacred part of his earnings or revenues. I say the most sacred part, because in most cases, it is the result of sacrifice of personal comfort on the part of the head of the family, for the benefit of others who will enjoy it only after his death.

Is there, Mr. Speaker, anything more worthy of admiration than the feeling which prompts the workingman to lay something aside for the benefit of his family, who will thus continue to enjoy his help, even when he is no longer there to work for them. The workingman, the mechanic, considers himself in duty bound to join some mutual benefit association, and he does so without the slightest suspicion. These associations, most of which originated in the neighbouring republic, have extended their philanthropic work into our country. Not only have these branch associations been tolerated, but they have enjoyed the protection of our laws. The Canadian citizen who trusts the government, trusts as well these institutions which the government protects. That confidence should be maintained and the savings of policy-holders given all necessary safeguards. As a matter of fact, such savings are no longer the property of the person who has effected them; they belong henceforth to the widow, who has no other means of living, and to the orphans whom death has deprived of their father. Should these savings, instead of reaching their destination, be thrown into speculative ventures, used in stock gambling, or invested in securities of doubtful value, the policy-holder may lose the benefit of his self-denial. So I contend it would be criminal on the part of the government to overlook such a threatening evil, and to neglect amending the present insurance law, defective as it is. Certain facts of a scandalous nature, recently brought to light, especially in the United States, have sufficed to summon action on the government's part; and though not familiar with all the details of the proposed legislation, I am happy to be in a position to state that it will tend to ensure to the policy-holder a greater measure of protection. As regards its scope, it will apply as well to the mutual benefit associations under the control of the Dominion government. Insurance concerns will also be benefited thereby; for what will become of our insurance system if policy-holders suspect that they are not absolutely safeguarded against trickery and machinations on the part of officers of our insurance companies and mutual benefit associations.

I shall now draw attention to the measure for extending the powers of the board of Railway Commissioners over telephone and telegraph lines, which are nowadays considered to be on a par with our modern system of railways. In our time, steam and electricity are utilized in all industries, and as their uses multiply, it is the more necessary that the public should be protected against the exactions of monopolists. Business men have not as a rule the generosity and disinterestedness of that illustrious Frenchman, Pasteur, who gave away his discoveries, the outcome of the labours of a lifetime. Business men have laid hands on all recent discoveries in electrical science. They strive to make money out of the genius of great inventors and market out the result of scientific research. Telephone and telegraph lines are public facilities of such import as to make it desirable to place them under the control of the present Board of Railway Commissioners, in order to end all difficulties between the producer and the consumer. The problem which the government had to solve when the Board of Railway Commissioners was instituted, comes up to-day in connection with the management of telegraph and telephone lines. There has been no serious criticism as regards the establishment of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Nay, it was conceded by all that such establishment was a decided step in advance on the former condition of things. In fact, by referring to the report of that board, dated March 31, 1906, one may ascertain all the good that board has accomplished, all the abuses it has corrected and the lawsuits it has prevented. The government in putting the telephone companies under the control of a board of commissioners, is entitled to equal praise as when they established the Board of Railway Commissioners.

As regards the proposed Act concerning elections, I shall only hope that it will be in all particulars worthy of the Liberal party in this country. It is the same party which, in 1874, with a view to putting a stop to all corrupt practices, instituted the secret ballot. That in itself would be sufficient to entitle Sir Aime Dorion to the gratitude of his fellow-citizens ; for he then secured to them a sure means of freely using the franchise, provided corruption and fraud do not interfere. Since the last session of parliament, the manner in which elections are carried on in this country has been discussed on many hustings. I do not propose recalling in detail the corrupt practices denounced by representative political men belonging to either party. The 'tu quoque' argument has been freely used on both sides. It is the most clear proof that purity in elections has not attained here its highest standard. If the leader of the opposition is in earnest when taunting his opponents on account of alleged electoral corruption, he should join hands with the government in their effort to bring about a better state of things in this respect. And as I am quite satisfied that the charges brought by the Liberals against the opposition are justified, I trust that the reference made in the speech from the Throne to the desirability of having a more perfect electoral law will be unanimously endorsed by this House.

So, much, Mr. Speaker, for that part of the speech from the Throne dealing with proposed legislation. That will be our task to-morrow. As regards that part of the speech from the Throne which refers to yesterday's accomplishments, it is summed up in a reference to the Colonial Conference of 1907, and in another to the treaty between Canada and France.

Governments cannot afford to be inactive between sessions. During recess ministerial responsibility is often put to severe tests. That is precisely what happened after prorogation, when the right hon. leader of the House, accompanied by two of his colleagues, proceeded to London, at the call of the Imperial government, to take part in the Colonial Conference. They were not then in a position to shield their own responsibility behind the authority of parliament, they were left to their own resources, to their own judgment, to their own private wisdom. Nevertheless, we were not apprehensive of any danger. What our Prime Minister had accomplished at previous conferences, towards the safeguarding of Canadian interests, was sufficient guarantee to us that nothing in the outcome of the conference of 1907 would in the least counteract the aspirations of our people. It will be recorded in history, and to our credit, that the foremost part in the work of that conference was taken by the Prime Minister of Canada.

If we have reason to rejoice in consequence, we should also rejoice because self-government has not thereby in any way been interfered with, and also because our representative at the conference has suggested a plan for the establishment of a line of steamers likely to provide more efficient means of transportation between England, Australia, New Zealand and our own country. Let us hope that this plan will be before long carried out.

Previous to the opening of that conference, people wondered whether England would continue as heretofore to be content with the help voluntarily tendered by her colonies in the wars waged for the defence of the Empire, or whether she would determine in advance and for ever the shares to be contributed by the colonies. Our Prime Minister has given the answer to that question in terms which are considered to-day as expressing the relations which should exist between the Empire and the self-governing states: 'British colonies, he said, enjoy self-government, thanks to England's liberality, and for no consideration whatever should we give up the smallest particle of that self-government.' Hereafter, then, the self-governing states shall remain free to contribute to the defence of the Empire in the measure which they think fit. Nothing has been changed in the state of things which existed before the conference and the danger apprehended by some has been conjured for ever, let us hope, through the farsightedness of the present Prime Minister.

The imperialist press on both sides of the ocean has pronounced the Canadian Prime Minister responsible for the failure of the scheme which they advocated; they have criticised him sharply on that account. It is only fair that the partisans of self-government should loudly proclaim what nobody can deny, that it is solely owing to his unique prestige, to his great experience that the autonomy of our country has been preserved in its entirety.

The government, through two of its most distinguished members, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), has just concluded with France a treaty, concerning which we have great cause to rejoice. We should rejoice, in the first place, because Canada has in the course of these negotiations taken the stand of an almost independent nation, since it has itself freely laid down all its terms and conditions. As for England, her part in the matter has taken the form of gracious acquiescence rather than that of an assertion of her sovereign will. We should also rejoice because that treaty opens up a new market for our trade and our industries. Of course, the task of developing agriculture and laying down rules for the utilization of the natural products of the country rests primarily with the provincial governments. But it is through the exportation of such products to foreign markets, where they bring the highest prices, that wealth will come to our country. Now, it is the duty of the Dominion government to find new channels for our trade; the more numerous these channels, the more will producers be in a position to reap such profits as may reasonably be expected, by selecting the most advantageous among the markets secured to them by the government.

Then again—and this will be my concluding remark—I rejoice over the conclusion of this treaty because it will tend to strengthen the entente cordiale, the friendly relations between the two nations. Since our great Sovereign has proclaimed in no uncertain terms that all nations are sisters and should love each other, it would seem that the bonds uniting the various peoples inhabiting our country have been drawn more closely together.

The royal utterances impressed more strongly on their minds the truth which they already perceived, that called as they are to live side by side in this land of Canada, and to build up by their united efforts one same country whose greatness they wish to ensure, they cannot hope to attain that object, otherwise than by leaving to all races the greatest measure of liberty, and by respecting the rights of each and every one of them. In that way do nationalities truly manifest love for one another. Of all the self-governing states which make up the British Empire, Canada is the only one which can claim as ancestors the two greatest nations in the world; England and France. England's supremacy in industry, commerce and navigation cannot be gainsaid. France's supremacy in literary, artistic and scientific pursuits cannot be denied. Let the attainments which distinguish both nations flourish in Canada, and there will spring up a nation without a superior in the world, since it will present, as it were the synthesis of the characeristics of both France and England.

I am not, as you perceive, in sympathy with those who wish to see, in the course of time, only one nationality survive in Canada, all the various races being blended together into one. Let us rather preserve our distinctive features. It would be unwise to obliterate them. Indeed, humanity has too varied and too complex a task to perform, for one people to accomplish it single-handed. Each race, with its peculiarities and attainments contributes something towards the furtherance of the world's progress. Let us then congratulate ourselves on having the opportunity in this land of Canada of doubling up as it were and contributing to that admirable work the capabilities of our twofold ancestry. Accordingly, I repeat it, I rejoice at the conclusion of the treaty with France, for it will strengthen the entente cordiale.

Let the French literature and French art develop more and more in this Dominion; we who speak the French language will contribute to the greatness of our country, those qualities which have made France great. And in the meantime, let those who speak another language continue to develop that spirit of enterprise, that energy and those talents which have made England powerful.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to second the motion of the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, I am sure that on this side of the House, we all join in the congratulations which the hon. member who moved this address (Mr. Hall) extended to the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon his recent attainment of an additional birthday. I am rapidly arriving at that stage of life when I am not specially fond of these congratulations, especially when they call attention to my advancing years. I do not know how it may be with the Prime Minister in this regard, but, at all events, it is needless to say that we join most sincerely and heartily in the congratulations which have been thus extended by the hon. member who moved this address. Let me also congratulate both the mover and seconder of the address upon the very excellent speeches which they have made—speeches moderate and reasonable in their character for the most part except in so far as they endeavoured to attribute the prosperity of this country in past years to this very benign and benevolent government. I notice that my hon. friend the member for Peterborough boasted very much of the surpluses which have been piled up in recent years. Apparently he did it in ignorance of some bygone expressions of opinion from the Minister of Finance to which I will take an opportunity of drawing attention later on. I was also constrained to observe that in the illustrations of judicious expenditure which were brought to the attention of the House by the honourable mover of this address he did not for a very good reason include the Moncton land deal, the North Atlantic Trading Company, the Arctic expedition, or payments to the Yukon rainmaker. He also spoke of the great work done by the Post Office Department of this country. If he had been traversing this country from east to west as I have been doing some recent weeks, he would have found that there is an almost continual complaint in all parts of the country of the inadequacy of the postal facilities, and attention is called on every hand to the fact that letters which ought to be delivered in one or two days often take a week or ten days before they reach the persons for whom they are designed. Under these circumstances it does not seem to me that there is very great cause of congratulation to the country that the Post Office Department, year after year, is piling up a surplus when the postal service throughout the country, out of the mouths of business men and others, is denounced in terms, which I would hardly care to repeat in this House to-day.

Now, we have not yet had from either the mover or seconder of the address—we could hardly expect it from them—or from the Prime Minister himself, or any member of this government, any explanation of the cabinet changes which have been made since the last session of parliament closed. Attention was called to the fact that Mr. Aylesworth, whose indisposition we all most sincerely regret, was called from outside of the parliamentary ranks of the Liberal party to take the position of Postmaster General of this country, and I think that the Prime Minister himself on that occasion, as well as on other occasions when there had been very great delay in filling vacancies in the government, laid the cause to the excess of good material which is to be found in the ranks of his followers behind him. Let me say that perhaps that excuse has become just a little stale and possibly to-day he may give some better reason for having passed over every one of the gentlemen who sit behind him, for having gone outside of this House and for having selected the two hon. gentlemen whom I see to-day occupying the positions of Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and of Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). Now, I do not know what the explanation of this somewhat extraordinary circumstance is. Was there no one among the one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and thirty gentlemen who sit on the government benches to-day whom the Prime Minister deemed worthy to sit beside him round the council board of the country? I do not know what the explanation may be. We have given to many hon. gentlemen who sit behind the Prime Minister the deserved credit for possessing a fair amount of capacity and business ability, for having a good reputation not only in this House but throughout the country as well. When we find the Prime Minister passing over all these gentlemen, going outside the House and selecting two gentlemen who, however, eminent they may be, are perhaps after all not so surpassingly superior to some gentlemen who may be found behind the Prime Minister and the cabinet, it is natural that the attention of the country and of parliament should be called to it and that the Prime Minister to-day should be asked to give some explanation, not so much to ourselves as to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House with whom, under the circumstances, we most profoundly and deeply sympathize. I do not suppose that in any country a greater slight or a greater indignity was ever offered to one hundred and thirty men sitting behind a government than that which has been offered by the Prime Minister and his colleagues on three separate occasions to these gentlemen who sit behind him. What is the object of the Prime Minister and the members of his government? Did they go and inspect every one of these gentlemen, did they take the lamp of Diogenes and look over him, look at his record, look at his capacity, give consideration to every quality that he might possess which ought reasonably to enable him to take a seat at the Council Board of this country, and after doing that, did they arrive at the conclusion that there was not one gentleman sitting behind them who measured up to the standard that the Prime Minister required in that regard? I do not know what answer the Prime Minister will make, but in default of any answer up to the present, I might express my own private opinion that the Prime Minister intended to give these gentlemen a lesson in philosophy. An old philosopher many years ago, declared that the beginnings of philosophy are a consciousness of your own weakness and inability in necessary things. It was this that the Prime Minister desired to impress upon the gentlemen sitting behind him, but after all, let them remember that, and that although they have not been held worthy to approach the Council Board of this country they will still enjoy from time to time in the future the inestimable privilege of voting for everything that the government orders whether they like it or not and in that way take the same part in the future as in the past in the public affairs of this country in this House of parliament.

> The rank is but the guinea stamp

Now, we have heard something of the appointment of secretaries of state. I was almost constrained to fear for my hon. friend the member for Peterborough after listening to the magnificent peroration in which he referred in such glowing terms to the Prime Minister. I do not know whether or not it is the intention of the government, as announced in some of their organs, to appoint secretaries of state; but it should be remembered that in days gone by they thought we had too many ministers of the Crown in this country. Conservative ministers have been criticised in the past in reference to this matter, yet when the Liberals came into power two secretaries of State, the controller of Customs and the controller of Inland Revenue, were raised to the position of ministers so that we have in Canada to-day two more ministers of the Crown than at the time when this government assumed power. Under these circumstances one would suppose if it is the intention of the government to appoint secretaries of state, that some diminution would be made in the number of ministers of the Crown, because, as was pointed out in the good old days of Liberal opposition from 1878 to 1896, if the government of the United States, a nation of 80,000,000 can be carried on with a cabinet of seven members, this country might very well get on with thirteen ministers of the Crown, without the addition of any secretaries of state.

It might also be well for us to inquire from the Prime Minister as to the reasons which have induced him to select the particular gentlemen who have been called upon to take the vacant portfolios. I do not propose at this time to make any criticism on those gentlemen; we intend to give them a fair trial in the departments which have been selected for them by the Prime Minister—that is only fair and reasonable. But it is also, I think, fair and reasonable to inquire as to the special and peculiar qualifications of these gentlemen who have induced the Prime Minister to pass over every member of his party who occupied a seat in this House to select these two gentlemen, neither of whom, at the time of his appointment, had the honour of being a member of this House.

One of these two gentlemen, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) has been good enough during the past five or six weeks to make some rather bold and, I think, rather rash statements with regard to campaign funds. I want to tell that hon. gentleman and to tell the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that if any investigation into campaign funds is desired, we are ready for it as soon as they choose to institute it. I shall not take time to-day to repeat the terms of the challenge which I made to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) but inasmuch as some statements have been made outside of this parliament in regard to what is known as the 'La Presse' deal, if that is a matter of any public interest to the people of Canada, we on this side of the House are as ready for an investigation of that deal as for an investigation of campaign funds at any time the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) desire to institute it and we shall endeavour when that investigation comes, if it does come, to find out whether there is any public interest connected with the present ownership and control of 'La Presse' newspaper. We think that perhaps it is as much in the public interest, to say the least, that the circumstances attending the present holding and control of that paper should be investigated, as that the circumstances to which attention has been called should be investigated, and we venture to think that if any investigation of that kind is desired, it should not stop short of the present deal under which 'La Presse' newspaper is held and controlled by certain political interests in this country, if I am not thoroughly mistaken.

Coming to the appointment of new senators, an interesting theory was propounded in days gone by that no man should be appointed from the ranks of this House to the Senate or to any office of emolument under the Crown, within two years of his ceasing to hold a seat in this House. Since the close of the last session we have had four gentlemen, the hon. member for Colchester, the hon. member for Centre York, the hon. senior member for the city of Ottawa and the hon. member for Brockville appointed to positions; the first named to the judicial bench of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and the last three to the Senate. I observe that these three gentlemen who have gone to the Senate resigned their seats in this House, and I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the resignation of each of these gentlemen was for the purpose of his appointment to the Senate? Would my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) favour me with a reply to that at this moment?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that these gentlemen have resigned; they were appointed to the Senate without any reference to their resignation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall refresh my recollection. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seems strangely unaware of what goes on in his government. I quote from 'Hansard':

Of Daniel Derbyshire, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Brockville, by resignation.

Of Frederick A. Laurence, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Colchester, by the acceptance of an office of emolument under the Crown, to wit: Judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

Of Honourable Napoléon Antoine Belcourt, member for the Electoral District of Ottawa, by resignation.

Of Archibald Campbell, Esq., member for the Electoral District of the Centre Riding of the County of York, Ontario, by resignation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that the gentlemen had not resigned. I said that their appointment had been made without any reference at all to their resignation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) I think knows as well as every other member of this House that that is not an answer to my question. He must have known perfectly well that these gentleman had resigned in order that they might be appointed to the Senate. Does any one suppose for one moment that the late member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) resigned his seat for Ottawa without thoroughly understanding that he was to be appointed to the Senate? Does any one suppose for one moment that the late hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) resigned his seat in this House without its being thoroughly understood that he was going to the Senate? And last, but not least, does any one suppose that the late hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) resigned his seat without a thorough understanding that he was to go to the Senate? I do not think there will be much doubt on that score—and this is the way in which my hon. friends on the other side of the House are carrying out that promise made, not only on every husting in the country, but laid down as one of the planks of their Ottawa platform, that their first duty after obtaining power would be to carry out that long promised and long delayed reform of the Senate of Canada.

I observe that my hon. friend who seconded the address (Mr. Lanctot) has called attention to a strange omission in the speech from the Throne, in that there is no mention of the celebrated all-red line between Canada and Great Britain and between Canada and Australia, which was heralded with so much acclaim by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on his return from the mother country. There is not one word in the speech from the Throne, so far as I have been able to gather, with regard to that project, and I think it is only due to us that the Prime Minister should inform the House and the country as to the present position of that grand scheme. Why, after having heralded it, as he did, in the city of Quebec, have we not a word in regard to it in the speech from the Throne?

But we have something in the speech from the Throne with regard to the treaty with France, and I join most heartily in what was so eloquently said by the hon. gentleman who seconded the address (Mr. Lanctot) with regard to the good relations between Great Britain and France, and in the hope that these good relations may always continue. I sincerely trust that the operation of this treaty, which at present we cannot very well understand without more investigation, may be such as to increase and develop the commercial relations between France and Canada. But there are one or two items in the proposed remission of duties to France which call for a little attention, and I would like to ask whether these have been inserted at the special instance of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The Liberal party had a prohibition plank in its platform in 1893, which was supposed to have been inserted on behalf of and at the instance of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, who was a great exponent of the principle embodied in that particular plank of the Liberal platform. I observe, in looking over this treaty, that the duties are very considerably reduced on the following articles when imported from France : gin of all kinds ; rum, whisky, and all spirituous or alcholic liquors; absinthe, brandy, including artificial brandy and imitations of brandy ; cordials and liqueurs of all kinds ; mescal, pulque, rum shrub, shiedam and other schnapps ; tafia, angostura and similar alcholic liquors or beverages ; and wines containing more than forty per cent of proof spirit.

Mr. FIELDING. What is the amount of the reduction ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That we will ascertain from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance later on. I have no doubt that it will be entirely satisfactory, so that the workingman with reduced wages, or possibly out of employment, will be able to lay in his store of champagne or angostura bitters at a very large reduction.

Mr. FIELDING. They will not get a reduction on brandies, spirits and the other articles which my hon. friend mentions, because there are no such reductions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then I do not know for what purpose they are referred to in the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman does not know, he should not say.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend knows, perhaps he will say.

Mr. FIELDING. I say that there is no reduction on most of the articles which the hon. gentleman has named.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, why are they inserted in the treaty ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is another question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there no reduction on champagne ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. There is a reduction on light wines. There is no reduction on champagnes at all. I think the hon. gentleman had better wait until we have the treaty before us in proper form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the present duty on champagnes ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is a specific and an ad valorem duty. Some years ago the specific duty was retained and the ad valorem duty abolished. We retain the same rates of duty, the ad valorem duty being abolished. I forget the precise figures.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you strike off the specific duty ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. There is no change in the rate on champagne.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I take the hon. gentleman's statement. I observe in schedule C that the French products enjoying the benefit of a special tariff includes 'Champagnes and all other sparkling wines in bottles.'

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend; but, as he has asked the question, I would say that these items are put there simply because they were in the treaty of 1893, and they are carried on in the same condition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say that on none of these articles to which I have alluded is there any reduction ?

Mr. FIELDING. Only on light wines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the workingman will have to content himself with laying in a supply of light wines instead of angostura bitters and champagne, and I have no doubt that will be a very important plank in the platform of the Minister of Finance, and especially the Minister of Agriculture, when they come to lay the policy of the Liberal party with regard to prohibition before the electors of this country at the next general election.

The speech from the Throne refers to the Quebec bridge. It is undoubtedly a most regrettable incident that the Quebec bridge should have fallen in the midst of its construction, and that so many lives should have been lost. It has always seemed a marvel to the members of parliament and the people of this country that the government of Canada, dealing with that bridge as a great national work, should have seen fit to commit its construction to a company which at the time of the passage of the Act of 1893 had put less than $66,000 of its own money into the enterprise. In 1903 the government of this country practically declared that the Quebec bridge should be a part of the great system of railways known as the National Transcontinental Railway. There was no doubt about it—both political parties were committed to the construction of that bridge ; and yet the government of Canada saw fit to commit its construction to this company, which was interested in it at that time to no greater extent than $66,000, so far as its own money was concerned ; the rest of the money was to come from the province of Quebec and from the city of Quebec, but principally from the Dominion of Canada, which had provided a subsidy of $1,000,000. By the Act of 1903 it was provided that the capital of the company should be brought up to $200,000, and that $184,000 of that sum should be devoted to wiping out the deficit in the sale of the company's bonds. It provided further that a bond issue to the extent of nearly $7,000,000 should be guaranteed by the government of this country; and it was provided especially in that Act, chapter 54 of 1903, that this work should be carried on subject to government supervision and government conrol. I observe that by that Act and by the agreement entered into between the government and the company, and ratified by that Act, it is provided as follows :

The plans and specifications for all the works of the undertaking shall be submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council before any work is constructed thereunder.

The continuation of the work of constructing the said undertaking shall be proceeded with so soon as the plans thereof are submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council, and the said undertaking shall be completed not later than the 1st day of December, 1906.

So that the responsibility for a thoroughly efficient method of construction was accepted by the government, and I presume that the government must have approved by order in council of the plan and method of construction ; so that the government became responsible not only for the mode of construction, but for something more, because the proceeds of the bonds to which I have alluded were to be paid to the company 'as the construction of the undertaking is proceeded with to the satisfaction of the government, and in such sums as the chief engineer of the government railways or such other officer as the government may appoint may certify are justified.' Under these circumstances it seems very clear that the responsibility for the method of construction and the carrying out of that method in an efficient manner rests on the government of this country, and although an investigation is now going on, I think it is time that we should ask of the government whether or not the plans have been approved by order in council, and whether or not the chief engineer of government railways, or any engineer on behalf of the government, has from time to time supervised the construction of that work, and upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility for this accident, which has resulted not only in the loss of human lives to the number of seventy or seventy-five, but also in the loss of an enormous amount of money from the public treasury of this country. I do not know how that matter stands between the government and the Phœnix Bridge Company and between the government and the Quebec Bridge Company, but we are entitled to have that information and also to be informed how the government proposes to carry out the work. In a recent number of a great American scientific journal, there appears a very strong criticism of the methods which were employed in the building of the bridge. The article is to be found in the Scientific American of November last. I shall not read the whole article, but just two selections. The writer says:

It is evident, however, from the statements of the consulting engineer, that the enterprise laboured under two serious drawbacks, namely, scarcity of funds, and the absence of any chief engineer of the bridge, present on the ground, and possessing the authority to act instantly in those cases of emergency which are certain to arise during the prosecution of a work of this magnitude.

If that be a just criticism, it was the fault of the government that such an engineer was not on the ground, because his presence would undoubtedly have resulted in the saving of the lives that were lost, although it might not have resulted in the saving of the other great loss which has fallen on the public. In concluding, the writer uses this language ?

The consulting engineer's detailed story of the discovery of the eccentricity in the bottom chord; the making light of it by the engineer in charge; and the tardy and roundabout measures taken to stop all further additions to the weight on the bridge, read more like the story of the building of some county bridge than the record of the erection of the greatest work of bridge engineering of the century.

Another subject mentioned in the speech from the Throne is that of Japanese immigration. I would like to point out to the right hon. the First Minister—lest he has forgotten it—and to the House, the position which the government has taken from 1900 to 1907 on this question. So far as Japanese immigration is concerned, I have already said from the public platform that at present I regard it as a purely economic question. It is a question between labouring men in British Columbia, accustomed to a certain condition of living, and immigrants from China and Japan who are accustomed to other conditions of life, and with whom the labouring men of British Columbia and some of the eastern provinces feel they cannot compete on even terms. I am not saying this to the discredit of the Chinese and Japanese. They have many qualities we might very well emulate, and I can quite understand that Japan. being the ally and friend of Great Britian, must be treated with the greatest possible respect. I, therefore, thoroughly support the government in any action they have taken or may take to offer proper reparation to the citizens of Japan peacefully residing in British Columbia under treaty rights and to whom violence has been offered. But we want no race question in this country, and this might develop into a race question in the most western province of Canada. Therefore it behooves us to find out where the government are with regard to this matter and what is the actual mission to-day of the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to the great empire of Japan. In 1900, when a member from the province of British Columbia brought this question to the attention of the House, the right hon. gentleman said :—

I made a great difference between China and Japan in that respect. In so far as Japan is concerned, I have to call the attention of the House, and the members from British Columbia especially, to the fact that Japan and its government have themselves taken the initiative in this respect and actually restricted emigration from Japan to Canada.

The 'Evening Post' of New York contains an article on this subject, which has been reproduced in the weekly edition of that paper the 'New York Nation,' and which I might read to the House as an evidence of what I am now saying.

The article in the 'Post' goes on to speak of the restriction by the Japanese government of immigration to the United States :

That is the actual order issued by the Japanese government restricting the number of emigrants to Canada to ten per month or one hundred and twenty per year. In the face of this condition of things, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) will find that it is not necessary to adopt an amendment which, if adopted, might lead to serious international difficulties, and which, if not adopted, will not affect the case, as the point is covered already by the action taken by the Japanese government.

And my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) spoke in this House on the same subject in 1903, after his return from Japan, where, I understand, he was invested with something akin to the functions of an ambassador. I asked him this question :—

Before the hon. gentleman sits down I would like to ask if he was able to make such observations of the social and economic conditions as would justify him in coming to a conclusion with respect to the effect that extensive emigration from Japan might have upon our conditions in Canada.

The hon. gentleman replied :

I am satisfied, in the first place, that there will be no such emigration from Japan. The Japanese are home-loving people and have abundant opportunity for progress and industry in their own country. The Japanese government itself forbids the emigration of anybody from the country without a permit, and for several years past they have refused to issue a permit to any Japanese to come from Japan to Canada, who is a labourer or of the ordinary labouring class. Permits are issued only to merchants, students and travellers.

Mr. CLANCY. Did that extend to emigration to any other country than Canada?

Mr. FISHER. The system extends to every country. No Japanese can leave his own country without a permit from his government. The government there, in accordance with negotiation with our government, issued orders, I think, about two years ago, that for the future no permit should be given to a Japanese, except the classes I have mentioned, to go to Canada, and that has been strictly maintained to the present time. I had the assurance of the government there, personally and in writing, that that policy would be maintained.

So that there was a definite assurance given to the Canadian ambassador, not only personally but in writing, that that policy of the Japanese government would be pursued in the future as it had been for some time in the past. Then the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) continued :

My hon friend spoke about the possibilities of industrial invasion. I consider that there is no prospect of that. The Japanese are a home-loving people, proud of their nation, proud of their empire, and a most devoted patriotism seems to inspire them, from top to bottom of every class, men, women and children.

Then my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when the Japanese treaty was passed last session, said this :—

At present the Japanese government do not allow emigration from their own provinces, with the exception of a very few from each province. I think not more than four or five from each province. That is all the Japanese permit to leave the Empire of Japan, and therefore practically there has been no emigration to British Columbia from that country.

Under these circumstances, with this information before the House, and in this light, the Japanese treaty was ratified by the parliament of Canada. Either the government was under some misapprehension or deceived parliament. Either the government deceived parliament when it said that such an assurance had been given by the Japanese government in that regard, or the government is in a position to call for the abrogation of that treaty on the ground that the Japanese have not carried out their assurances. Apparently the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has gone to Japan in view of some such situation, and we ought to have from the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a statement of the exact object of his mission and the position this matter occupies.

Now, the speech from the Throne refers us to another subject of considerable importance to the people of this country, and that is the financial stringency which prevails throughout Canada at the present time. I observe one peculiarity in the reference in the speech from the Throne to that stringency. In any reference to the prosperity of the country such as have often appeared in speeches from the Throne in bygone years there has never been much suggestion that that prosperity was world-wide. But I observe the remarkable care with which the world-wide character of this stringency is pointed out :—

The Dominion has been blessed by a long series of prosperous years, and, though at the present moment its business is being restricted by the financial stringency which prevails throughout the world, I feel assured that this unfavourable condition will be temporary and that the illimitable resources of Canada and the world-wide recognition of them give us ample guarantee of continued material progress.

I am sure that all of us in this House, whether we sit to your right or to your left, Mr. Speaker, join most sincerely in the hope here expressed, and that no man in the Conservative ranks will follow the course which was pursued by many hon. gentlemen on the other side in bygone days when depression to a greater or less extent affected the industries of this Dominion. The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) did not say much with regard to the financial stringency. He painted in glowing colours the virtues of this government. My attention was called, while he was speaking, to a forcible editorial contained in one of the great journals of this country, the Montreal 'Gazette,' a few sentences of which I will read. After dealing with the Quebec bridge, the management of the Intercolonial, the Moncton and Halifax land deals and other details of that character, this editorial proceeds as follows :—

And what is the rule with big things is also the rule with small where the government is concerned. Its buildings fall down. Its dredges sink. Its steamers run aground. Its calculations fail. It is effective only in taxing and spending, and it is breaking all the records in taxing and spending at a time when individuals, seeing the commercial conditions, are practising and enforcing economy as the readiest means of saving the situation.

The matter could not be put in fewer or more trenchant words. Let us look for a moment at some of the conditions which have prevailed in this country during recent years as to which the government seem absolutely oblivious. The Minister of Finance, over and over again, even as far back as 1898 and 1899, gave warning to the people of this country, but he has gone on deaf to his own warnings, and the result in Canada to-day, although the present stringency is world-wide, must be attributed, to some extent at any rate, to the lack of foresight and ordinary business prudence displayed by this government. Take, for instance, the taxation of this country by five year periods :

	Average total taxation.	Average taxation per capita.
For 5 years ending 1896..	$27,750,000	$ 5·66
For 5 years ending 1902..	36,500,000	6·93
For 5 years ending 1907..	57,000,000	9·47
For 9 months ending March 31, 1907, at the rate of.. ..	68,750,000	10·34

During every week of the year, under the taxation imposed by this government, the people of Canada have paid into the treasury of this country $1,322,000 or $800,000 per week more than they paid eleven years ago. Not only is the taxation per capita increased, but the amount actually paid in custom duties on a pound or yard of material coming into this country is increased, by reason of the greater price of these commodities and the ad valorem tariff. The cost of living in this country has increased very largely during the past ten or eleven years, and during recent years we have had a remarkable condition of affairs in connection with the balance of trade against Canada in its trade with the world. My hon. friend from Peterborough (Mr. Hall) referred to the great development of Canadian trade. Let me point out to the House and to the country the figures showing the state of our trade :

Adverse balance of trade.

For 5 years ending 1896..	$ 8,250,900
For 5 years ending 1902..	2,529,450
For 5 years ending 1907..	57,432,200

Total adverse balance of trade in the past five years ending June 30, 1907, $287,161,004.

And the adverse balance for the single year ending June 30, 1907, was no less than $120,000,000. I have obtained that figure by taking the completed returns to March 31, 1907, and adding the further returns to be found in publications of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Customs. These figures I am bound to believe to be authentic and correct. These figures are a strange commentary upon what we have heard from the hon. gentlemen who addressed the House to-day in their praises of the government. Do not these hon. gentlemen think that there is some food for reflection in these figures ? And does not the Minister of Finance, when he boasts of his surpluses, recall his own language of bygone days ? The hon. Minister of Finance boasts of his surpluses of the past eight or ten years, amounting to perhaps $90,000,000—I trust I am not doing injustice to his figures ; the total may be more. What did he say in 1882 or 1883, when he occupied the editorial chair of the Halifax ' Chronicle,' and when the Conservative government of that day announced a surplus ? He said :

If these surpluses were created by the government in some magic way there may be in them a cause for thankfulness to Sir John Macdonald and his followers, but when it is considered that every dollar of the surplus is taken out of the pockets of the people without the shadow of an excuse, money not required even by the reckless expenditure of the government, there is not much cause for rejoicing.

And the ' reckless expenditure ' of the government of that day was a good deal less than half—not much more than one-third—of the far more reckless expenditure in which the present Minister of Finance indulges. In the following year there was another surplus, and the hon. gentleman broke out again, and this is what he said during the following year :

That millions of dollars should be unnecessarily taken yearly from the consuming classes of the country, and this without being absolutely necessary, is a cardinal principle of the Finance Minister, to which even his best friends do not unreservedly assent. They see that a surplus of millions at the capital is just so much money withdrawn from the trade of the country. How long can the Dominion stand the drain? Certainly not many years longer.

I commend in the heartiest manner the words of Mr. Fielding, the editor of the Halifax 'Chronicle,' to the Hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance of Canada. The prophecy of the hon. gentleman has had its fulfilment in that financial stringency which he himself has been compelled to acknowledge in the speech from the Throne. No words more apt to describe the situation could be found than those words which he quoted to himself, and which I have taken the liberty to read to the House this afternoon.

Now just one or two words more. The speech from the Throne refers to telegraph and telephone companies, and declares that these are to be brought under government control. The meaning of that paragraph in the speech was not very clear to some hon. gentlemen in this House. It reads as follows :—

> The time has arrived when the public interest requires that telegraph and telephone companies holding federal charters should be placed under government control. A Bill will be introduced for that purpose.

The hon. member who seconded the address (Mr. Lanctot) referred to that as a proposal to bring under the control of the Railway Commission of Canada telephone and telegraph companies. It may be that the paragraph in the speech has that meaning, but the paragraph does not say so. I will be glad indeed if the Prime Minister, when he comes to speak, will be good enough to inform the House exactly what is intended by that paragraph in the speech of His Excellency.

Then we are told that very great progress has been made upon the National Transcontinental Railway, that 250 miles of the western division are open to traffic. Might I inquire from the government how many miles of the eastern division constructed under the management of this government, are open to traffic if any ? I understand no portion of the eastern division is open for traffic. I would like further to inquire from the Prime Minister when it is expected that any portion of the eastern division will be ready for traffic. I also wish to inquire when any portion of the western division was opened to traffic. I understood when recently in the west that it had not been formally opened for traffic, but that it was a matter of convenience to the people, the Grand Trunk Pacific was carrying grain and other commodities to Winnipeg for the benefit of the people, but that there had not been any formal opening. I would like especially to inquire as to the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, when that portion of it which extends from Winnipeg to the Port Arthur branch will be ready for traffic ; because we have already heard of certain possible claims of the Grand Trunk Pacific interfered with by default of the government in not having its portion of the road ready in time. It is well that we should know what we have to expect in that regard

There are other matters of legislation referred to in the speech from the Throne which, however, I do not propose to refer to at the present moment. These, as well as the French treaty, will come before the House in due course. But I would say that so far as a Bill for the purpose of reforming the electoral laws of this country is concerned, I will be prepared to give it my most hearty support. I brought up this subject in 1906, upon motion for a committee, when the present Chief Justice of Canada was Minister of Justice. I did not introduce it in a partisan way, I informed my hon. friend, Mr. Fitzpatrick, at that time, that I did not propose to make any attack on the government in connection with what I was suggesting, because I desired that both parties should join together to perfect if possible the electoral laws of this country. A committee was formed, which took the matter into consideration, but owing to the elevation of Mr. Fitzpatrick to the bench, no Bill was brought down. Legislation was promised last session but it was not passed, presumably because it was not intended that parliament should be dissolved before holding another session. I am prepared to join most heartily in any action of the government looking to a reform in our electoral laws. I think the government should see that our electoral laws are placed upon at least as high a basis in Canada as that which prevails in the British Islands. Notwithstanding certain illegal acts which from time to time come to light in the British islands, we know that the standard of electoral purity there is very much higher than, unfortunately, it has been in Canada during recent years. I believe that we should follow the example of some of the American states, and either prohibit corporate contributions altogether, or at least make it a penal offence for any corporation or any member of a corporation on its behalf to contribute to any campaign fund, unless it is made public and unless the people thoroughly understand the amount of the contribution and the purpose for which it was devoted. I think that all contributions to campaign funds should be made public. At the present time those of the candidates themselves are made public in this country. In Great Britain a very much stricter rule prevails. There the campaign fund under control of any political club, any political association or organization, must be disclosed under oath, and no contribution can be made without a violation of the law unless it is made public in that way, and the amount of it is verified upon oath. I think further that we should have an independent investigation provided for, when necessary, into any election where there is good reason to believe that corruption has taken place, either by one party or the other, or by both, and where neither one party or the other sees fit to take action. I think also that provision should be made for the disfranchisement of corrupt constituencies where corruption has widely prevailed, that as in Great Britain, so in Canada a constituency may for a time be disfranchised, and also visited with the costs of any investigation made for the purpose of exposing that corruption. These are only a few of the details in respect of which I think that the electoral law of this country should be amended. I will join most heartily, as I have said, in assisting the government in that regard, and I sincerely hope that when a measure is brought down it will be no half measure. I think hon. gentlemen opposite will join with us, as we are prepared to join with them, in bringing about better conditions in regard to holding elections in this country. We know the methods that were adopted in London in 1905; we know that from 1898 down to the present time not only has bribery been rampant, but there has also been a deliberate attempt to defeat the will of the people by means of the substitution of ballots, or what is commonly called ballot-switching. In London in 1904 and 1905 we know that bribery was practised on a very great scale, we know that has been exposed in the courts of this country, and we know that legal proceedings are now pending, and have had a certain issue in the city of Toronto, with regard to what took place in London in that year. I have every reason to believe that in the recent election in the county of Colchester the Conservative party, at least, ran an absolutely clean election, and that the victory of the Conservative party in that county was won without the aid of a single dollar.

Mr. FIELDING. How can the hon. gentleman know that when he was not there? I suppose he believes it but how can he know it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said in the first place that I believed it, and I went further, and I said I knew it; for this reason, that I know that Mr. Stanfield, in his manifesto to the electors and the Conservative organization in the county of Colchester, eighteen months ago, declared that the by-election, which was then thought to be impending, should be run by the association on absolutely clean lines and without the expenditure of one dollar for illegal purposes. I know Mr. Stanfield as a man against whom I think not one single word of reproach can be uttered. Knowing him as I do, knowing the pledge then made—a pledge which he later made to the electors of the county of Colchester—I am justified in saying that the election in the county of Colchester was carried on by the Conservative party without the expenditure of one dollar for illegal purposes. However, if those gentlemen who are inclined to doubt that——

Mr. TALBOT. What about——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. TALBOT. What about his personal money in the way of expenditure?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. TALBOT. What about his personal money in the way of expenditure?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What about it?

Mr. TALBOT. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, what about it?

Mr. TALBOT. That is what I want to know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman will put his question in intelligible shape, I will endeavour to answer it. I was about to say to some of these hon. gentlemen who are smiling and doubting that if they have any doubt on the subject they had better have an investigation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend will have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman pledges himself to that?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good. I am glad he has undertaken it. It is very useful to have a gentleman who will undertake matters of this kind. I congratulate him upon his public spirit, but let me inform him that if an investigation does take place I am sure it will be thorough and effectual, and probably will not be confined to one side.

Now, I apologize for having taken up, to such an extent, the time of this House in this connection, and I do sincerely trust, in conclusion, that the measure promised, almost in the concluding words of the speech from the Throne, in regard to our electoral laws, will be brought down, and will be brought down early. As I have said before, we on this side of the House will be prepared to most heartily and sincerely, and in no partisan spirit, to co-operate with the government in making the electoral laws of this country such as they ought to be and such as will minimize the evil which unfortunately has greatly increased in Canada in recent years.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, it is more than a usual pleasure to me to be able to offer also my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address now in your hands for the manner in which they have discharged an always important though rather trying duty. The House will agree with me that the addresses of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) and the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Lanctot) were of more than usual excellence. The observations of my hon. friend from Peterborough, while they were most acceptable from the first to the last sentence, were, in so far as I am concerned, altogether too kind. He spoke in terms altogether too flattering of the part which it was my privilege to take in the imperial conference which took place in the months of April and May of this year in London. I am bound to say that the sentiments which were expressed were not by any means unanimous, and that in a certain school it was rather a question whether the conference had done any good or whether it had accomplished anything. I have to confess, as a member of this conference, that in so far as its spectacular features were concerned, it did not come up to the expectations of the jingo or superficial observer, but I think I can claim that it has accomplished some lasting work which will mark a new era in the history of the British empire. The conferences which had taken place up to this year were irregular, without any status and without any definite object. These conferences have been arranged to take place under a well understood and well defined plan. Their period of meeting has been fixed, their composition has been determined, their object has been clearly defined and, more important still, it has been accepted, declared and adopted on all sides that there are to be conferences, not of individuals, not of superior and subordinate, but conferences of government and governments, conferences between the United Kingdom and the young daughter nations of the empire. Unless I am greatly mistaken, I think it can be said that this is a most important step in the history of the British Empire, and certainly something which is absolutely unprecedented in the annals of the world. When the conference opened on the 15th April, 1907, the main question before it, was what were to be the relations of the present state and the young daughter nations. The problem was what was the principle which was to regulate these nations. Was it to be a centralization, or was it to be autonomy? There were many who believed that these relations should be based upon the principle that the young daughter communities should be simply satellites revolving around the parent state, but others there were who held—and in my estimation rightly held—that the proper basis of the British Empire was that it was to be composed of a galaxy of nations under the British Crown.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to interrupt my right hon. friend, but is my hon. friend speaking now of the views held by the members of the conference itself?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am speaking of views held inside and outside the conference.

Mr. FOSTER. Then will my right hon. friend please mention the names of those who wished to make the daughter colonies subordinates or satellites?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I shall not gratify the curiosity of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my hon. friend can.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not want to be personal, but it seems to me that if my hon. friend wants to pursue this inquiry he can find for himself in the pages of the record of the conference that I speak within the mark.

Mr. FOSTER. I have read every page of it, and it cannot be found there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, sir, it is a question of appreciation. I have read every page of it, and moreover, I was there. With all due deference to my hon. friend, and without being hypercritical, I think my judgment is as good as his own. But it matters not whether I am right or whether I am wrong in this matter; this is nothing but a question of appreciation after all. But my hon. friend, I suppose, will not question that the solution which was come to was the right one on the question of the secretariat. As a result of the labours of the conference it is not improbable that when a new conference takes place four years hence it shall have sitting at its board another member representing another dominion, representing the South African confederation, in which the Cape, Natal, Orange, Transvaal and Rhodesia shall be united. The members of this House who sat in the parliament elected in 1896 perhaps have not forgotten some of the debates which took place during the session 1900, when our policy in regard to the sending of the contingents to South Africa came up for review. Some of these debates took place at the most critical and darkest period of the war, and the gloom of this uncertainty was still weighing heavily upon us. Who could have believed or could have supposed that in the space of seven short years only the country which at that time was engaged in mortal combat with the Britain would have become a loyal British colony, and that it would be represented at the Imperial Conference which took place this year by the very man who was the soul of the armed resistance against England, and who, at the conference, modestly, but firmly, declared that he was ready to fight for England as he had fought against her ?

Who would have supposed that in seven short years those disjointed and warring communities of South Africa would be united by the bond of a common tariff, by the bond of commercial union, and that it is now contemplated to have this bond of commercial union replaced by a political confederation, under which, on the pattern of the Canadian confederation, two races in South Africa, as in Canada, shall be working towards a common destiny ? Sir, I do not say that this consummation has been accomplished, but it is in a fair way of accomplishment, and since it is not improbable to see it realized in a very short time, it has the endorsement of such men as Dr. Jameson and General Botha, of the men of the raid and the men of the war. This consummation, I believe, is probable, but one thing is certain, that such a consummation would be possible nowhere except within the bonds of the British empire, under the ægis of those British institutions, so broad, so free, so just, so fair, and which alone are capable of such majestic development.

My hon. friend from Richelieu (Mr. Lanctot) has spoken eloquently and well of the completion of the treaty with France. This is another opening in the history of Canada. The Liberal party have long claimed for Canada the privilege of negotiating their own treaties and in making that claim we did not intend to reflect in any way upon British diplomacy, because everybody who is familiar with British history knows that the services of British diplomacy have been in their sphere as bright as the services of the army and the navy ; we claim that privilege simply on account of the old homely maxim that one's own business is better done by one's self. We thought that in negotiating any treaty that concerned Canada, Canada could do better for herself than could be done for her by any one else. Now, Sir, the privilege has been granted to us entirely; the treaty with France has been negotiated altogether by Canadian ministers, and all the credit of it is due to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). France is a wealthy country and we have reason to believe that this new treaty will develop a new era in the history of our trade relations with France and that increased trade will also bring an increased current of immigration from that gifted country. At all events one thing is certain, whatever may be the benefits of that treaty, and I think they will be considerable—although they are already questioned by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden)—it can be claimed for the treaty that it is not an unimportant step at this juncture. France and England have filled the world with the history of their quarrels, but a new era dawned in the civilization of the world when the entente cordiale took place between the two countries. Thanks, as has been said, to the efforts of His Majesty, a war between France and England would be almost as improbable, certainly almost as criminal as civil war would be, and it is perhaps not claiming too much for us to say that in negotiating this treaty we did our little share to contribute to that entente cordiale.

The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in his observations has been very inquisitive and has intended to be very charitable towards some members of this House. He has anticipated, I should say, the usual ministerial explanations that are given when any changes take place in the cabinet. As a rule these explanations are not given in the debate on the address, but I have no difficulty at all in satisfying the very fastidious curiosity of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden). He wanted to know why I had passed over so many members on this side of the House and selected gentlemen outside of the House to fill cabinet positions. I may say to my hon. friend that, if I have some reasons that I shall give later on, I was not, in adopting this course, taking a leaf out of his book—he has not yet been called upon to form a government —but I did take a leaf out of a lesson given him recently by an hon. gentleman sitting just behind him. In the speech which my hon. friend delivered at the Monument National, he stated in a moment of modesty that from among the gentlemen who surround him he could at once make up a cabinet three times the strength of the present cabinet. Immediately the hon member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who spoke after him told him that if he were called on to do that he would do well to call Mr. Tom. Chase Casgrain to his cabinet as Minister of Justice. I look about the House among the gentlemen who could make such a strong cabinet, I look in all directions and I fail to see the figure of my friend Mr. Tom Chase Casgrain. This is a lesson which my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), if he is ever called on, as he may some time—I do not know whether it will be perhaps as soon as he and his friends anticipate—— Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You will not see Mr. Casgrain on this side of the House after the next election ; you will see him over there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly ; I never prophesy. I have seen so many prophesies made on the other side that I do not indulge in them, but if we are to judge of the value of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) as an election prophet by the prophesies of his predecessor, I have no apprehension whatever as to the result of the next elections. But I want to say to my hon. friend that when he is called upon to form a cabinet perhaps he will do well to follow the rule which I may say in all modesty I have followed myself. When I was called upon in 1896 to form a cabinet, I went out of the representation to select the very best material that I could get. I went out to Nova Scotia and I asked my hon. friend near me, the Hon. Mr. Fielding, to join the administration. He was not in the representation at that time, he accepted and not a word of complaint was uttered and I have had nothing but satisfaction ever since for having invited him to join the government. I went to the province of Ontario and I selected that veteran, Sir Oliver Mowat—and I never had any cause to regret it. I went into the province of New Brunswick and I asked my friend the late hon. Mr. Blair. Now, I have had many differences with Mr. Blair, but I am glad to say, though he cannot hear me, that I never regretted having called him to the cabinet. He was an able man, a strong man—I knew later how strong a man he was, but I must say that in all my differences with Mr. Blair I never had with him a word which I can regret. I am glad to say that to the day of his death I remained his friend and he remained my friend. I went to the west and I took Mr. Sifton, and a more able man could not have been selected. There are able men in this House whom I could have called to the position, but every man in this House has had this much confidence in me, that no one ever questioned my judgment under such circumstances.

The hon. gentleman thinks that there are men on this side of the House who are very much mortified because they have been passed over. Let me say to my hon. friend that Liberals are not like Conservatives, and that if he judges the members on this side by the members on his own side, he need not waste any sympathy upon us. No one on this side of the House feels any anger or jealousy at what I have done in this matter. It may be that there is jealousy on the other side, but it is confined to that side. There is none on this side.

My hon. friend took some exception also to the fact that we had appointed members of parliament to the Senate and to the bench. We appointed Mr. Laurence, formerly member for Colchester, to be a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. Why did we appoint him to that position? We did so because we thought he was eminently fitted to discharge the duties of that important office. I do not myself know Mr. Laurence very well. I saw him in this House and formed a very high opinion of him, but I had on one occasion last session a certificate of character given of him, which I did not forget, by a prominent member of the bar of Nova Scotia, who was therefore in a position to know Mr. Laurence's qualifications, and he told us that out of a number of men named we might very well appoint Mr. Laurence; and that gentleman was the distinguished member for Carleton, the present leader of the opposition.

The hon. member stated that it has been a rule maintained by the Liberal party that no member of the House of Commons should be appointed to a high office unless he had been out of parliament for at least two years. May I ask my hon. friend when that was a rule of the Liberal party? He will not find it in any platform of the Liberal party that I know of. Perhaps it will not be bumptious on my part to say that after all I have something to do with the policy of the Liberal party, and I defy my hon. friend or any of his friends to find a word of mine in favour of such a policy. I know of one man only in the ranks of the Liberal party who at one time and at one time only held that opinion. That was my friend Sir William Mulock, who introduced a Bill——I forget in what session.

Mr. BERGERON. 1895.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps in 1895.

Mr. LENNOX. In two sessions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, only in one session, if I remember rightly. He introduced a Bill, but that Bill never went to its second reading, because the feeling on both sides of the House was overwhelmingly against it. Sir, it is not in accordance with the traditions of British parliamentary government that members of the House of Commons should not be appointed to office. On the contrary, it is one of the traditions of the British parliamentary system of government that certain important officials should go from the House of Commons to the bench. As a matter of fact, the Attorney General always goes up to the bench when there is a vacancy; so as a rule does the Solicitor General; and I do not know that there is anything wrong done by the government when we appoint to the bench men from the floor of the House of Commons. If we compare the records of the two parties on this point, I think they are about equal. If there is anything more wrong on one side than on the other, I am ready to take all the blame, if wrong there be; but I do not consider it to be wrong. As to the character of the gentlemen whom we have appointed to the Senate, I think they are all good men. My hon. friend asked if they had resigned before they were appointed. I stated very frankly that I did not know at what time their resignations came; but I did not make such appointments without having communication with my friends beforehand and ascertaining whether they would accept such a high office. My hon. friend may say that this was undue precaution. At all events, I met with no refusal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rumours we had were as to the precautions taken by one of the gentlemen.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the Quebec bridge. Upon this point I have only this to say, that I do not think the time is fitting or opportune to discuss the Quebec bridge to-day. We all deplore the disaster. The blame and the responsibility must rest on somebody. If the government is to blame, we shall have to take the responsibility. I am not prepared to say that we are; but at the present time this subject is being investigated, and so long as we have not the report of the investigation I do not think it is fair to lay the blame on this one or that one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I ventured to ask was whether or not the plans had been approved by order in council, as provided by the Act of 1903.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to that I cannot say, but I presume that the law has been observed. I have simply to say to my hon. friend that whether the plans which were approved by myself and my colleagues were faulty or not, it would be very difficult for anybody in the Council Chamber to pass upon a matter of that kind. We had to act on the report of the engineers, and we had always the advice of good and competent engineers. I have only one other remark to make on this point, and that is with reference to the article of the Scientific American, in which we are blamed for a lack of funds. With reference to that I have only to say that the article is based on the evidence of Mr. Cooper, and that evidence has since been contradicted by Mr. Cooper himself. However, the matter is under investigation, the report will be laid on the table at an early date, and then will be the time to discuss the whole subject and discuss it fully.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, in the course of his address, brought within the scope of his observations many topics which are not to be found inside the four corners of His Excellency's speech. Of this of course I make no complaint. The hon. gentleman was quite within his rights. He travelled very far afield indeed; but there is one subject of which he never spoke, and yet of which we have heard a good deal of late, both from himself and his supporters. The year 1907 has seen many important events. It has seen, for instance, the construction of the new platform for the new Conservative party. I have read that platform with some care. And I must say in all candour to my hon. friend that, in my humble judgment, it is a remarkable structure. It is not remarkable, however, for the quality which one would look for in such a document or in such a structure, but rather for the very reverse. It is remarkable, not for its solidity, but for its elasticity. It was built, not of oak, but of India rubber. Its planks are not the ordinary boards, but nameless, shapeless things, intended to contract or expand according to time, place and circumstances. Having read that platform with some care, I do not think I am at all unduly severe if I say that, in my humble judgment, almost every proposition advanced in it is coupled with a qualification—coupled with an 'if' or a 'but,' which makes it susceptible of a double interpretation. Every idea is combated by the succeeding one. Every step forward is followed by a step backward. And in the task of expounding it, of explaining what it means, my hon. friend reminded me very much of a caged squirrel, always in motion, but always revolving in a circle and accomplishing nothing.

Some surprise has been expressed because the party were not called together in convention to discuss the political situation, to exchange views, to give advice as to what should be the policy of the party from a Conservative standpoint. For weeks, nay for months, the press of the party was full of the suggestion, and that the suggestion was taken into consideration in the inner circle seems to be beyond doubt. We have heard the rumbling echoes of discord and thunder within the inner party circle. Of course we do not pretend to be in the secrets of the party, but there are some secrets which are as public as stage whispers, and one can easily understand that it would have been quite natural for the party to have wished to be allowed a voice in the framing of their policy. It cannot be expected that the party would be so lukewarm as to be indifferent to the attitude of its leader on public questions. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden)—who is in correspondence with his followers in every part of the Dominion, who received expressions of the opinions prevailing in the east, west and centre—knew very well that if he were to draw the party together in council, if he were to bring my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), and my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) together on a question of the ownership of public utilities, if he were to bring together my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and some of my hon. friends, whom I see opposite me, coming from the western provinces, on a question of protection, he would have anything but a harmonious deliberative assembly. He would have an assembly in which all the demons of discord would be let loose and which would become a veritable pandemonium. So my hon.

friend thought it better to frame a policy himself. And he framed it in such sibylline terms that everybody could find in it, as in the oracles of old, whatever suited his own convictions, passions and prejudices. And having thus delivered himself, my hon. friend started on a missionary tour. With that of course I find no fault—quite the contrary. He started to evangelize the country, setting his sails closely trimmed so as to catch every passing breeze. Now one would expect that in a platform of the Conservative party, the word 'protection' would be writ very large indeed. But in this platform the word 'protection' is writ very small, so small indeed that it is not visible to the naked eye. I do not pretend, however, that the idea is not there. It is there, but so hidden that it is impossible to find it without great effort. How far we are from the flamboyant rhetoric of the old national policy! The word 'protection' has always occupied such a prominent position in the councils and the policy of the party that one cannot conceive how in this document it could have been omitted otherwise than accidentally. On the other hand one cannot conceive that a document of this importance, which was to be the law and the gospel and the prophets of the party, which was supposed to contain a panacea for all our evils, any omission of the word 'protection' could have been otherwise than wilfully designed. What is the key of the mystery? The key is that my hon. friend was in a sore trouble. In these later days there are in the ranks of the Conservative party protectionists and protectionists, just as the French say there are fagots and fagots. We know that in the Island of Lilliput there were two rival factions—the Big-endians and the Small-endians. Between them there arose a fierce controversy as to how eggs to be eaten should be broken—whether broken at the big end or at the small end. And in the modern island of Liliput—I mean His Majesty's opposition—there are big Endians and small Endians; there are big protectionists and small protectionists. There are protectionists in the city of Toronto and in some other places who would have the tariff raised as high as Haman's gallows, and in the west they are protectionists who would have the tariff brought so low that protection would not be distinguishable from free trade. And between these two factions my hon. friend hesitated. If he brought them together, he knew there would be a terrible smashing of eggs before they could agree upon the end on which their eggs should be broken. But my hon. friend managed to give good hope to the one and to the other without committing himself to either. Some few years ago my hon. friend did give us his idea of what protection ought to be—that it ought to be 'adequate' protection. But it would appear that, in the course of time, and according to experience, 'adequate' protection became inadequate. Therefore under the work of commentators on the party platform adequate protection has given way to 'reasonable' protection. But what is reasonable protection and what is unreasonable protection no commentator has yet told us, and where the line is to be drawn between reasonable and unreasonable protection we are left to surmise. My hon. friend himself simply ignored the difficulty and told us not what his policy was, but what his policy would do. These are the words of my hon. friend.

> We therefore stand for a fiscal policy which will promote the production within Canada of all useful articles and commodities that can be advantageously manufactured or produced from or by means of our natural resources, having due regard to the interests of the consumer as well as to the just claims of our wage-earning population.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to favour me? Would he kindly read the plank of the Ottawa Liberal platform of 1893 on that subject?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I had it under my hand I would willingly do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, you've lost it entirely.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. I can say that there was in it an absolute denunciation of protection. Sir, my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has told us what his protection policy would do, but he has not told us what would be the legislative enactment that would perform this miracle. Indeed, this is a secret of the gods—and among these gods I do not include my hon. friend himself, because he does not himself know. He could not define his policy, but he has managed to give hope to him who hopes to see the tariff raised as high as Haman's gallows, and also to him who hopes that the tariff will be reduced to the lowest possible level; and both may live in the same delusion until they become victims of the same deception.

Next to the fiscal policy, the most important plank, if I may say so, which has been introduced into the platform by my hon. friend is that dealing with the government ownership of public utilities. I said introduced by my hon. friend, but I must withdraw the word, because it does not correctly apply to the situation. It is not my hon. friend who has introduced that plank into the platform. In this matter he is not the leader, but a follower—and a reluctant follower. The gentleman who has introduced that plank in the platform is not the leader of the party, but sits a little below the leader, and we see him (Mr. W. F. Maclean) smiling as I speak. I must give him his due. He is the leader of the party in this matter as in some others also. We were told last session that he was no longer admitted to the caucus of the party. Sir, this is a matter of no consequence, for whether within or without the precincts of the caucus he is the leader so far as this question and some others are concerned, and the party dances to his music. My hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is a stalwart. He has taken a bold plunge into the cold water of state socialism. But my hon. friend the leader of the party is not so advanced, if we may judge him by his utterances. He does not approve, yet he does not condemn and repudiate; and whilst my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is splashing about in midstream, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is on the bank, now and then thrusting a timid foot into the cold water, but promptly withdrawing it, and unable to make up his mind either to go in or stay out.

So far as the question of government ownership of railways is concerned, my hon. friend's utterances have been singularly inconclusive and elusive. He has said enough to give hope to the ardent, the enthusiast, the unthinking, but he has tried to avoid committing himself absolutely. And in order that I may not do an injustice to my hon. friend by giving my own version of his speeches let me quote the words of the Halifax speech, the one in which this platform was announced. I will quote from the report in the Halifax 'Herald':

> Whether or not state ownership and operation of railways can be made a success in Canada remains to be determined. State ownership is repeatedly challenged because of incompetent or corrupt administration, and there does not seem to be much argument against it. Let us not forget that all private enterprises afford instances of failure or incapacity. The denial of our capacity to operate successfully a great public railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific seems no less than the denial of our capacity for self-government. Shall all private enterprises be condemned because of business failure or corrupt methods? Are we to renounce our right of self-government because of repeated acts of maladministration, because of political graft, because of Saskatchewan valley land deals and grazing lease scandals? And last, but not least, are we to hand over our government railways to private corporations because their management has been very greatly discredited?
> Speaking for myself, I believe that state ownership is no more to be condemned for error of administration than is the general principle of self-government. The remedy is to amend the methods.

Now, Sir, if this language means anything it simply means that government ownership is a sound principle which ought to be adopted by the party and by the country, as it has already been adopted by the hon. member for South York. If this language carried any weight, if it carried conviction, then such was the conclusion of those who heard it; but such was not the conclusion of him who spoke. After he had given a plethora of arguments in favour of government ownership, after he had stated that 'the denial of our capacity to operate successfully a great public railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific seems no less than the denial of our capacity of self-government'; after he had stated that 'speaking for myself he believed that state ownership is no more to be condemned for errors of administration than is the general principle of self-government'—when he had reached that climax, when he had soared almost to the sun, suddenly his pinions gave way, suddenly his heart sank within him. And what was his conclusion? Was it government ownership? Not at all, but simply that the Intercolonial railway should be put under a commission. And for that I will quote the very language of my hon. friend. After having given these preliminary arguments, this is the conclusion of the Halifax platform:

> We stand for the operation and management of our railways by an independent commission, free from partisan control or interference.

Is this all that was expected by those hon. gentlemen supporting him and applauding him? Was that all the hon. gentleman was ready to commit himself to? Yes, that was as far as he intended to go. But in this instance, as in the other instance he wanted to please all parties; he made an argument for the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), and drew a conclusion for the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). But my hon. friend should not forget that he who sows the wind will reap the whirlwind, and he has already reaped the whirlwind,. It is vain for him to atttempt to confine himself to the conclusion of his own arguments. The stalwarts of the party, the hon. member for East York and his friends, simply brush aside his restrictions and claim that the policy of the party is that of government ownership. Well, Sir, whether my hon. friend is willing or not, that is the position in which he has placed himself. Let him examine the Toronto 'World,' and he will find that he is commended every day for a policy, not the policy which he advocated, but the policy which the member for South York advocates. And so, willingly or unwillingly, kicking and resisting my hon. friend to find himself carried forward in the strong arms of the hon. member for South York. We read of some savage tribes who force their leaders to the front, even when their mature judgment would prevent them from risking a battle and a defeat.

But this matter is too serious to allow of any equivocation. It is better that we should know where we stand on this question, and what is the policy of all parties with respect to it. Sir, there is a tendency in this country at the present time, a tendency which did not originate in this country but which came from the other side of the line where it originated in the Populist movement, to denounce all corporations as enemies of the public weal. Examine the newspapers of that school, and you will find in almost every issue that corporations are made the butts of their attacks and their sneers. The truth is that corporations, like all other human institutions, are a mixture of good and evil. The truth is that while they are important and render great service to the country, on the other hand they are not free of serious blemishes. The truth is also that corporations have been one of the most potent agencies of modern civilization in the creation and distribution of wealth amongst all classes of the community. It is undeniable, even the hon. member for South York who almost daily declares himself the enemy of corporations, and especially of railway corporations, cannot deny that corporate capital, corporate labour, corporate effort, will do more than could ever be accomplished by individual effort. What are corporations after all? Corporations are simply aggregations of individual forces, and it stands to reason that aggregations will always accomplish more than individual effort. It is also undeniable that whilst corporations have done a great deal of good in this way, railway corporations especially have become such enormous organizations as to constitute a possible menace to the state. It is equally undeniable that corporations cannot escape the reproach of having often been actuated by greed and of having disregarded the interests they were created to serve. If such be the situation, and I think I have correctly described it, it is clear that it is the duty of the legislator to interfere. But in what sense and to what extent is the problem. The hon. member for South York says, down with corporations, down with railway corporations, and let the state itself provide this kind of service for the public. The hon. leader of the opposition argues one way and concludes another way, and therefore abdicates into the hands of the hon. member for South York. But a person who looks at the question calmly and dispassionately must come to the conclusion that the interests which are served to-day by private enterprise are better served than they possibly could be by the state. The true remedy, I apprehend, is not to entrust railways to state management, but it is to leave them to corporations subject to the control of parliament, who will see that they properly discharge the duties they are called upon to discharge in the public interest. Sir, I do not hesitate to say for my part that if the policy of the hon. member for South York were adopted, it would be a calamity to this country.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it a calamity in Germany, in Russia, in France, in Australia?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Thank God we are not coming here to take our examples from Germany, or France or Russia.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Will the right hon. gentleman say what he thinks of New Zealand and Australia, daughter states of the great empire which he upheld this afternoon?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think Australia and New Zealand are young experimenting communities, and they have gone further in state socialism than I care to go. For my part I believe that our system is preferable to the system which has been adopted in Australia and New Zealand. I say to my hon. friend that if you remove the incentive of ambition and emulation from public enterprises, you suppress progress, you condemn the community to stagnation and immobility.

Sir, I will give my hon. friend a concrete example taken from our own history. I will not go to Germany, I will not go to Russia, I will not go to New Zealand or to Australia; right here in Canada we find a concrete example to which I call his attention. We have the Caandian Pacific Railway. It was at one time possible to build it as a government railway. Mr. Mackenzie had commenced to build it as a government railway, not from choice but from necessity, because private enterprise failed to come forward and offer to build it. When the government of Sir John A. Macdonald came to power he changed that policy, and determined to have a railway built by private enterprise; and so far as I remember I do not think that a single word has ever been said against that policy. There was dissent with the terms given to the company, but so far as it was a choice between government ownership and company ownership, I do not remember, speaking under correction, that a single word has ever been spoken against the policy of Sir John A. Macdonald. Now it has been built as a private enterprise, and will the hon. gentleman pretend that it would have served the country as well as a government enterprise? Why, Sir, consider what has been done by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It has in a great many instances, and in a multitude of manners, built up other enterprises as adjuncts to the railway which never would have existed if the railway had been built as a government enterprise. My hon. friend knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has covered their lines with hotels. There is a hotel in Quebec, a hotel in Montreal, a hotel in Winnipeg, a hotel in Vancouver, a hotel in the Rocky Mountains, and this system of hotels has brought thousands and hundreds of thousands of tourists who never would have come in but for these hotels. The company has erected smelters in the mining districts, it has opened collieries in the Rocky Mountains, it is putting in operation a system of irrigation which will make of Calgary another Grenada. It has covered the great lakes with lines of steamers, it has established lines of ocean steamers plying both from the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. And will the hon. gentleman pretend that if this railway had been built as a government enterprise all these subsidiary enterprises would have been attempted? Why, the thought is absurd. I know what the hon. gentleman's answer will be. He wil tell me that there has been complaints, especially in the new provinces against the tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; that the railway was not properly discharging the duties it owed to the public. I am aware of these complaints. I believe that some of tnem were well founded, but what is the remedy after all ? Suppress privatet enterprise—no, but subject the company to control through the government and through parliament. Therefore, on this question I have this to say to my friends on the other side of the House : We know where we are at tne present time ; they stand for national government operation of railways, and we stand for the control of railways by the government of parliament.

In regard to telephones and telegraphs the remarks of my hon. friend also have been just as inconclusive and just as elusive as his remarks about railway ownership. But, in order to do him no injustice I will quote what he said upon this part of his programme :

It has been demonstrated——

Said he——

—in Great Britain that telegraphs and telephones can be successfully operated in connection with the Post Office Department. I see no reason why a similar system should not be inaugurated and carried out successfully in Canada. Few people realize that at the present time Canada owns and operates 6,586 miles of telegraph lines. These lines have not been remunerative for the reason that they have been established in thinly settled portions of the country where private enterprise could find no adequate return. If we are prepared to invest national capital in thinly peopled and unremunerative localities, why should we hesitate in those portions of the country where operations can be carried on at a profit? I do not forget the necessity that our great railways must be equipped with telegraph and telephone lines, nor do I forget the principle of justice to invested capital which I have already invoked. Having regard to these considerations, our policy should include the establishment, after due investigation, of a great system of national telegraphs and telephones under conditions which shall be just to capital already invested in these enterprises.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir, the central argument which is found in this paragraph is simply this, that because at the present time we have some 6,000 miles of telegraph lines which are unproductive, which bring no return, therefore, we should have telegraph lines in those parts of the country where we can expect a return. Could anything be more fallacious ? It is quite true that we have 6,000 miles of telegraph lines and if we have it is not from choice, it is not because we favour that policy, but we have built these telegraph lines where no company would build them because there was no return to be had from them. We built them simply on account of the national ends to be attained. More than half of these telegraph lines are on the lower St. Lawrence and on the gulf shores intended as an aid to navigation, and with our present system of telegraph lines wireless telegraphy, telephones, buoys and lights, it is our intention to make the St. Lawrence route from Belle Isle to Montreal as safe for ships as the streets of a city are for pedestrians. Already, with our equipment, imperfect as it is, we have had a reduced number of casualties, and this past year we have been singularly free from them. Should a casualty take place the telegraph line enables notice to be sent to Quebec, and immediately help is rushed forward to save life and property. But, my hon. friend asks : If we do this in a part of the country where no returns are to be expected why should we not do it also in those parts of the country where there should be some return ? For the very obvious reason that those parts of the country are already served by telegraph lines. There is no necessity for having any other lines there. My hon. friend must recognize that because he says :

I do not forget the necessity that our great railways must be equipped with telegraph and telephone lines, nor do I forget the principle of justice to invested capital which I have invoked. Having regard to these considerations, our policy should include the establishment, after due investigation, of a system of national telegraphs and telephones under conditions which shall be just to capital already invested in those enterprises.

What does he mean by this ? Does he mean that we are going to expropriate existing telegraph lines ? As to this my hon. friend is silent. Does he mean that we are going to build rival telegraph lines ? As to this my hon. friend is equally silent ; in fact, to these conundrums silence is the best answer that he can give. However, in one statement he is perfectly clear. It is that before we commit ourselves to such a programme there should be due investigation. Indeed, it is well that this matter should be investigated because when the matter is investigated my hon. friend will find that the statement with which he opened his remarks on this question :

That it had been demonstrated in Great Britain——

——is not borne out by the facts. The last report of the Postmaster General of Great Britain, Mr. Buxton, has shown this very conclusively. I have the report in my hand. I will not quote it—it is very extensive—but I will quote an article from the Montreal 'Gazette,' a very able paper, as everybody knows, a paper not connected with the party to which I belong, but whose capacity every one must admit, and it has given this very suggestive comment upon this subject. The Montreal 'Gazette' says :

British telegraphs and telephones.

There appears to be prevalent in Canada an impression that the British Post Office reaps a handsome profit annually from the operation of the telegraph and telephone services. There is no foundation for a belief of this kind. Mr. Sidney Buxton, in his last annual report as Postmaster General of the United Kingdom, admits that the net deficit in working the telegraphs for the year was £652,055, and that if interest on the capital be added the total deficit amounts to £923,746, or $4,495,870. Mr. Buxton further reports that during the year the number of messages handled, including free and government messages, was 89,493,000. Dividing this into $4,495,870, it will be seen that there was an average loss of a trifle over five cents on each and every one of these messages. A service which produces results like these cannot be said to be on a paying basis. There is no guess work about the figures given. They are the Postmaster General's and taken, as he gives them, from his annual report.

Then, as regards the telephone system. Mr. Buxton says that 'the year's working of the whole telephone system shows a balance of £451,787, after payment of working expenses, while the whole amount required to provide for depreciation of plant and interest at three per cent on the capital expenditure of £7,255,000 is £432,726.' This shows an apparent profit of £19,061. Mr. Buxton is the first Postmaster General to take the public into his confidence respecting the financial results of the telephone business, the figures heretofore having been included with those of the telegraphs. In this year's report he shows that the total capital expenditure on telephones is £7,255,000. He divides the £432,726 allowed for interest and depreciation into £215,076 for depreciation and £217,650 for interest. The interest allowance works out exactly at 3 per cent, and the depreciation allowance at 2·96. Unfortunately, 2·96 per cent is a ridiculously small allowance for depreciation on a telephone plant. It contemplates a life for the plant of more than thirty years. On this continent experience has shown that a safe allowance for depreciation must exceed seven per cent of the gross capitalization. Increase Mr. Buxton's allowance to this figure and instead of a modest profit of £19,061 there remains an ugly deficit of £273,713. The total income of the telephone department last year was £908,246. To have brought it out on an even basis the receipts should have been twenty per cent greater and the expenditure no larger than it was.

A telegraph department which loses five cents on every message it handles and a telephone department doing business at twenty per cent less than cost can hardly be presented as successful examples of government ownership, however pleasant it may be to those who make large use of the service.

Upon this point, as upon the other, we on this side of the House have to say that the remedy for this situation—and a remedy is called for and we are prepared to introduce legislation upon this subject—is not government ownership as advocated by my hon. friend, but private ownership and government control. My hon. friend asked me to give him an explanation of this paragraph in the speech from the Throne. Our intention simply is that we shall introduce legislation to increase the power of the commission which exists at the present time, to increase its membership as well and to give it control over the telegraph and telephone as it already has over the railways.

I stated a moment ago that when my hon. friend opened his campaign he trimmed his sails in order to catch every breeze and, speaking in the city of Halifax, I charged my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) with having pandered to local prejudices on the question of Japanese immigration. Speaking recently in this city my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) expressed the view that I had been unfair to him and that I had no ground for speaking as I did. I shall tell my hon. friend what I meant. I shall tell him how and in what respect, in my humble judgment, his conduct and his language have been unworthy of him and unworthy of the high position which he occupies in this House and in this country. Before I do this allow me to quote from the speech delivered a few days ago in this city by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) on this question. I quote from the report of the Ottawa 'Evening Journal' :

I for one am prepared to maintain that the western provinces of Canada ought to be and must be dominated and inhabited by the same great colonizing races which have occupied and developed the eastern provinces of this great Dominion. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has uttered some words of reproach with respect to my attitude upon the Japanese question. He has accused me of appealing to passion and prejudice. I am at a loss to understand to what it is that he alludes. I have said that the views of the people of the west ought to be accepted with respect to a solution of this question. Was that an appeal to passion and to prejudice? If so, what has he to say to his own words in 1896, when he sent this telegram to the people of the west: 'Chinese immigration restriction not a question in the east. Views of Liberals in the west will prevail with me.'

Sir, it is true that in 1896 I sent this telegram to the west with regard to Chinese immigration, that it was not a question with us in the east, that it did not affect us. What was true in 1896 is true in 1907. No one in the east, so far as I know, cares whether we have in the western provinces of British Columbia a Chinese immigration or not. I repeat what I said in 1896 that Chinese immigration is not a question with us here in the east and upon that point I was quite willing to allow the views of my friends in the west to prevail and be my guide. But with regard to Japanese immigration I will insist that the conditions are altogether different from Chinese immigration, and this is what I reproach my hon. friend with, that he should not have made the distinction—and there is a wide distinction—between Chinese and Japanese immigration. He himself this afternoon has given the reason : Japan is no longer a nation that we can treat with contempt or indifference. Oriental nations have been long dormant but they are now wakening ; Japan indeed is fully awake, and Japan insists on being treated as one of the civilized countries of the world. That is not all : Japan is an ally of His Majesty the King. This alliance was completed some fifteen years ago after due deliberation, and if to-day, which God forbid, there was to be a war in the orient or in the Pacific ocean in which it would be the fortune of Britain to be engaged, the heroic Japanese fleet would be by the side of the British fleet. This is not all : we have a commercial treaty with Japan, that treaty was urged upon us from all sides, it was approved in this House without a word of dissent. To-day we are enjoying the advantages of this treaty, we are selling goods to the Japanese, we are selling flour, we are selling lumber, we are selling cattle ; and these goods do not come from British Columbia alone, they come from the province of Ontario, and all other provinces of the Dominion. At this moment Ontario is sending cattle to Japan. Under these circumstances I say that this question is not at all a question for British Columbia alone, it is a question which interests the whole people of Canada whether in the east, west or centre. It is a Canadian question, nay it is an imperial question. It is with this that I charge my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he ignored all these things and put the Japanese question on the same level as the Chinese question. Sir, I do nothing of the kind. I say we cannot ignore the situation which has arisen, we cannot to-day treat Japan as we might have done 25 years ago or even less. But whilst I recognize that we must treat Japan with all respect, whilst I recognize Japan as an ally of our country, whilst I recognize Japan as a friendly nation with whom we have friendly and commercial relations, at the same time I am well aware that race prejudices are slow to die and that there are race prejudices in the west against the Japanese population. I do not share them, I say to my friends from British Columbia—I say it openly—I do not share those prejudices. But I know they exist and we must take full account of them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

If we take no account of them, if we allow Japanese immigration to go unchecked, we are liable to have disorders as we unfortunately had some time ago, disorders which might create irritation between ourselves and Japan.

What then is our duty ? Our duty is to pursue the course that we adopted some six or seven years ago when we passed the last Chinese Immigration Exclusion Act, I think in 1900. By that Act we put a capitation tax on Chinese immigrants. We were urged by some of our friends to apply the same rule to Japanese immigrants and to impose a capitation tax on them also. We refused to do so, for the reasons I have just given, that Japan to-day is one of the civilized countries of the earth, that it is an ally of the King, that it is a country with which we could have large and increasing trade relations ; but at the same time we asked the Japanese authorities themselves to restrict their immigration to this country, so that we could avoid the clashing which might take place and, indeed, has taken place recently. This understanding was come to in 1900 and it has been preserved. I shall some day give, confidentially, communication of the correspondence on this subject to my hon. friend. This understanding has been kept up to this year ; I do not think it has been violated. Few immigrants have come from Japan to this country since 1900, perhaps 500 or 600 per year, but this year there has been a sudden influx of several thousand which unfortunately has caused a ripple, nay, a great deal of agitation in British Columbia. I do not believe the position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) was logical or was anything but an appeal to passion and prejudice. What did he say ? He repeated to-day the language he used in British Columbia. He said either the government deceived the House or they should ask the repeal of the treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Should be in a position to ask for it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In a position to ask for repeal—I say nothing of the kind. My hon. friend had no reason to suppose that we had deceived the House, and he should not have hinted that the treaty should have been withdrawn. Why, Sir, is that treaty of no use ? What is the position of British Columbia to-day? British Columbia has no neighbour except the orient. It has several growing cities—Vancouver, Victoria, Prince Rupert within a few years, all with magnificent harbours, all hoping to develop a large trade. With what country are they going to trade ? Where is their trade coming from to-day ? I venture to say that the greater part of that trade, the imports at all events, comes from the orient. This is a good reason why we should retain good relations with Japan, and the suggestion that we should repeal the treaty is a suggestion that is not conceived in the best spirit that should prevail on an important question like that. We took a different course. My hon. friend has asked us why we sent my colleague, Mr. Lemieux, to Japan. I will tell him frankly. We do not suppose that the government of Japan has gone back on the understanding which we had with Japan ; but our contention is that certain parties have eluded the understanding—that instead of sending their immigrants to British Columbia, which the Japanese authorities would have prevented, they sent them to another country, to Honolulu, whence they were passed over to British Columbia. Then we sent our commissioner to Tokio in order to have an understanding on this point and to have the understanding respected. This is the position we are in at the present moment, and I think it is a position that will commend itself to the judgment of the people of British Columbia when it is properly expounded to them. The people of British Columbia have certain views upon this question. I would not be honest with myself and with them were I to say that I share those views; but whilst I do not share them, I am bound to respect them. We are bound to see that the views of all people in a free country like this are given respect to. But when they know that it is our aim to have continued the condition of things which has prevailed in the last six or seven years and with which they found no fault, they must be satisfied with the position we have taken on this question.

But, Sir, I have another reproach to make against my hon. friend and a far more grievous one with regard to his conduct and language in British Columbia, and it is that the hon. gentleman, yielding to the importunities of Mr. McBride, the Prime Minister of British Columbia, has undertaken to reopen the question of the provincial subsidies which was closed here last year. My hon. friend alluding to that in his speech in Ottawa, said :

Mr. Fielding and some of his subsidized organs are distressed and disheartened because of my attitude in respect of the financial relations between British Columbia and the Dominion. From 1902 to 1904 I made a pretty careful study of this subject and in the latter year I made the following pledge to that province:

'Let me say that I have given much thought to the conditions in British Columbia, which, in your opinion, call for special attention in considering the financial relations between the Dominion and that province. You claim not only that these conditions are exceptional and peculiar to the situation and physical character of your province, but also that they are permanent in their nature. In my opinion they are such as to command immediate inquiry and investigation, to the end that any injustice clearly established may be immediately relieved.'

Nothing has since occurred which in my opinion takes away the binding character of that pledge and during my recent campaign I told the people of British Columbia that it still held good.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that since he spoke as he did in 1904 nothing has occurred which in his opinion takes away the binding character of that pledge. Why, Sir, everything has occurred to remove the binding character of that pledge. My hon. friend is aware, everybody is aware, that that question was considered in this House not later than last session, that a new arrangement was made with the provinces to which they were all parties, and not a word of dissent from it was heard on the floor of this House, and that the resolutions have since received the sanction of an imperial Act of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And which struck out the words 'final and unalterable.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Where?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the body of the Act, I understood.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not in the body of the Act ; but I will tell the hon. gentleman what took place. This question of provincial subsidies has been one of the most dangerous questions which this confederation has ever had to deal with. From the first the arrangement which was made was not satisfactory to any province. It was satisfactory to certain provinces that the provinces should be allowed to share in the revenues collected by the Dominion ; but the arrangement embodied in the Act of Confederation was that that portion of the revenues to be allotted by the Dominion to the provinces should be fixed and permanent according to the population of 1861. I say that this arrangement was one of the weakest points in the Act of Confederation. It brought confederation indeed, upon more than one occasion, perilously near to a dissolution. The ink of the Act of Confederation of 1867 was scarcely dry when the provision there enacted was violated in favour of Nova Scotia ; the year after it was violated in favour of New Brunswick ; and year after year new arrangements were made, now with one province, now with another province. Such a course must have been extremely mischievous. When special provision was made with one province, it created jealousy in another, and immediately that other province made a demand for similar treatment. This went on from year to year until the provinces themselves came to the point of protesting against it, and asked for a readjustment of the subsidies. In 1887 a conference of the provinces took place at the city of Quebec, and they asked for a new settlement. Another conference took place some years afterwards, and a third and a fourth ; and after we had been ten years in office we determined to have a last conference here in the city of Ottawa with the Dominion authorities with a view to obtaining a final and permanent settlement of that question. This conference took place here in the city of Ottawa in the month of October, 1906. At it all the provinces were represented, and it will not be out of place that I should give to the House the composition of that representation.

From the Province of Ontario: Mr. J. P. Whitney, Premier, Mr. J. J. Foy, Attorney General, and Mr. H. Mathewson, Provincial Treasurer.

From the Province of Quebec—Hon. Lomer Gouin, K.C., Premier and Attorney General; Hon. W. A. Weir, Minister of Public Works.

From the Province of New Brunswick—Hon. J. L. Tweedie, Premier and Provincial Secretary; Hon. Wm. Pugsley, K.C., Attorney General.

From the Province of Prince Edward Island —Hon. Arthur Peters, K.C., Premier and Attorney General; Hon. G. E. Hughes.

From the Province of Manitoba—Hon. R. P. Roblin, Premier, Minister of Railways and Minister of Agriculture; Hon. C. H. Campbell, K.C., Attorney General.

From the Province of British Columbia—Hon. Richard McBride, Premier and Minister of Mines.

From the Province of Saskatchewan—Hon. Walter Scott, Premier; Hon. J. A. Calder, Commissioner of Education.

From the Province of Alberta—Hon. A. C. Rutherford, Premier; Hon. C. W. Cross, K.C., Attorney General.

All the provinces were represented and ably represented. The province of British Columbia made a special claim, and I shall show presently how it was dealt with. But all the provinces agreed that there should be a new basis of calculation and a new arrangement. And they passed the following resolution:

This conference is of opinion that a basis for a final and unalterable settlement of the amounts to be yearly paid by the Dominion to the several provinces for their local purposes and the support of their governments and legislatures, may be found in the following proposal:

Instead of the amounts now paid, the sums hereafter payable yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures, to be according to population, and as follows:

(a) Where the population is under 150,000, $100,000.

(b) Where the population is 150,000 but does not exceed 200,000, $150,000.

(c) Where the population is 200,000 but does not exceed 400,000, $180,000.

(d) Where the population is 400,000 but does not exceed 800,000, $190,000.

(e) Where the population is 800,000 but does not exceed 1,500,000, $220,000.

(f) Where the population exceeds 1,500,000, $240,000.

B. Instead of an annual grant per head of population now allowed, the annual payment hereafter to be at the same rate of eighty cents per head, but on the population of each province, as ascertained from time to time by the last decennial census, until such population exceeds 2,500,000, and at the rate of sixty cents per head for so much of said population as may exceed 2,500,000.

These resolutions were passed unanimously by the representatives of the provinces there assembled and were assented to by the Dominion government. British Columbia had a special claim based upon its mountainous character, vast territory and sparse population, and all the members of the conference, both the provincial and the Dominion members agreed that it was just and equitable that British Columbia should have a special allowance apart from all the others. The only question at issue was what should be the amount of that allowance. British Columbia demanded in its memorial that the question should be determined by a commission or a committee of arbitration to be composed of three members—one to be appointed by the Domion government; one by British Columbia and the third by the imperial government. This question was considered by the conference and it passed this resolution:

That in the opinion of the conference it is unadvisable that the claim, in the way of subsidies, of any province be referred to arbitration.

What better arbitrators could British Columbia have than the men there assembled—the premiers and ministers from all the different provinces? Could a commission of arbitrators, appointed as suggested by British Columbia, be more competent to deal with this question than the members of that conference. What was the purpose of that conference which sat here in Ottawa? It was to settle this very question. They considered it thoroughly and resolved:

That in view of the large area, geographical position and very exceptional physical features of the province of British Columbia, it is the opinion of this conference that the said province should receive a reasonable additional allowance for the purposes of civil government, in excess of the provisions made in the Quebec Resolutions of 1902, and that such additional allowance should be to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars annually for ten years.

So that under the resolutions adopted, the province of British Columbia is to receive a large extra subsidy and in addition to the extra grant, which she receives on a par with all the other provinces, she is to receive a special grant of $100,000 a year for ten years. These resolutions came before this House for ratification. They were submitted to this parliament. They passed without a word of dissent from my hon. friend or anybody else. Still he tells us that from the year 1902, he has given a good deal of attention to this question. He tells us that from 1902 to 1904 he made in the city of Ottawa a pretty careful study of this subject. But if he had made for two years a deep study of this subject, when it came before this House for settlement was the time to give the country the benefit of this study. He said however not a word on this subject. It seemed to him, as it did to everybody else, that the arrangement was a fair one. But he went to British Columbia and there he came within the magnetic influence of Mr. McBride, and he swallowed the bait that Mr. McBride offered him. My hon. colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) called it a bribe. What else could it be called? My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) spoke of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) as having said that the Conservative party had had a large fund, and the only reply we heard from my hon. friend was that he was ready to show that we were just as bad as he and his party were.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I said nothing of the kind. The right hon. gentleman, I think, will remember that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly not. Of course he said nothing of the kind.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What then did I say?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend did not say: You are just as bad as we. But he said this: Give me a commission, and I will show that you have spent just as much as we have.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Neither did I say that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot quote the ipsissima verba, but if the hon. gentleman meant anything else, I would like to know what he meant.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I meant just what I said—that we were ready for any investigation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly, ready for any investigation, and that investigation shall be not only into what was charged by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) against the Conservative party, but into some other charges against the Liberal party also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the right hon. gentleman object?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not the question. But if the hon. gentleman's meaning was not that the Liberal party is no better than his, I do not know what he meant. This however is not the question. I agree rather with my hon. friend in his concluding remarks when he said that there has been too much money spent in elections and that it was advisable to restrict that expenditure as much as possible. But if it be the object of my hon. friend to have clean politics, is it clean politics to have this question of the British Columbia subsidy, which was settled by this conference, re-opened again? Does my hon. friend call that clean politics when he went to British Columbia and said to Mr. McBride: Just as soon as I am in office, I shall reopen this question and give you the increased subsidy you ask for. If that be clean politics, in the opinion of my hon. friend, I think we had better let the electors of this country judge between us.

I shall say no more on this occasion, though some of the questions I have discussed will bear further elucidation as the session progresses. This much, however, I will say to-day. We have been eleven years in office. I have no doubt—indeed I am quite sure—that we have made many mistakes and have committed many errors. But when the time comes at the end of this parliament, to go before our judges, for my part I shall submit with confidence our record with all its mistakes and errors against the wild schemes of the new, though still self-styled Conservative party.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman, in his agitation over our platform, has altogether forgotten his own. What about the All-Red Route?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have simply to say at this moment, I have no communication to make concerning the All-Red Route.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did not the right hon. gentleman make it before?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have already stated that it is our intention to do so, though I am not in a position to make any communication at this time. But I hope to do so later in the session.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto.) Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has cut out a great deal more material than I supposed he would. Therefore, I find a rather hard task placed upon me—especially considering that I am labouring under the difficulty of a tremendous cold. I fear my voice will scarcely carry me through a half-hour speech and that it will be difficult for me even to touch upon all the points which the right hon. gentleman has dealt. I hope the House will be lenient towards me, as it has always been. I shall try to make myself as well heard as I can. The right hon. gentleman has covered a great deal of ground, but one thing above everything else has struck me as being very peculiar in his speech. While, in his closing words, he has admitted that there was a great deal in the speech from the Throne which he would like to touch upon, and which he intends hereafter to touch upon, yet he travelled far from that speech. He failed to perform his duty by his own document, in his very great desire —for some reason or other—to take up and discuss the manifesto of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden.) It almost seemed that matters had been reversed and that the real speech from the Throne was the manifesto of the Liberal-Conservative leader. I have had a seat in this House for a good many years, but I have never seen such proceedings indulged in by a prime minister in the debate on the address. Leaving the points with which it was his clear duty to deal, and which he himself declared important, he devoted nearly the whole of his time and energy in attempting—in his own peculiar way—to cast ridicule upon the platform laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) beside me. The first fifteen minutes of his address upon that subject was very good opera bouffe, but it was not much else. It seemed to be sufficient to please hon. gentlemen behind him, and I hope they will long have a lively recollection of the comic way in which their leader treated this part of his subject. But what was the matter with my right hon. friend? He had been studying that manifesto; he had been swallowing that manifesto; he had been trying to digest that manifesto—and it had evidently proved a pretty hard process, so hard that he has been obliged to set at naught the rules of practice in the discussion of the King's speech from the Throne, and give his whole force to an endeavour to break the strength of the platform of the Liberal-Conservative party. While I call attention to this fact, I wish to have a word or two to say upon the right hon. gentleman's comment upon that document. He declared that this was not solid nor was it liquid; it was elastic and capable of expansion or contraction; that everything in it was qualified; that each clause had an 'if' or a 'but;' that there was no finality in it; that the hon. gentleman who proposed it argued one way and concluded another; his argument being good so far as it went. but his conclusion tending in one instance to the conclusion declared for by my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) who sits here to my left. Now, really, was that an accurate statement? An ounce of fact is worth many pounds of such highfalutin as we have heard from the right hon. gentleman here to-night. I have here the platform as it was laid down. I challenge the right hon. gentleman to read it clause by clause and to point out the 'ifs' and 'ands' and 'buts' in it. They are not there—they are only in my right hon. friend's imagination. That was a peculiarly apt summing up of my right hon. friend that was made by one of the members of the colonial conference in England. When they were discussing some question—I have forgotten exactly what it was—some one suggested that what was wanted was a name or a phrase that would strike the public imagination and win favour, and the answer came, quick as a flash, 'We must apply to Sir Wilfrid Laurier for that.' So these 'ifs' and 'ands' and 'buts' are in his imagination—though he had the document in his hand which contradicted the statement he made. These declarations of the platform are plain and definite. Let me read one :

Mr. FOSTER.

Honest appropriation and expenditure of public moneys in the public interest.

Are there any 'ifs' or 'ands' or 'buts' about that ? Is there a single redundant word? Is there a man who sits behind the right hon. gentleman who does not understand it, and he knows that the people of this country are beginning to understand it, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific they are calling out against men who do not honestly appropriate or honestly expend the public moneys in the public interest and are calling for men who will carry out this plank of the platform. And here is another:

Appointment of public officials upon considerations of capacity and personal character and not for party services alone.

Is that not direct and to the point? Does not that carry its meaning upon its face? Does not my right hon. friend understand it ? He understands it only too well, for he knows that if ever the leader of a ministry in this country has been guilty of bedevilling the public service that man sits opposite me in the person of my right hon. friend. He it is who has trafficked in offices, from judgeships down to the lowest. This commenced when he bought and sold judgeships and governorships to his friend Langelier almost before his feet had begun to tread the paths of office to which he had been called. It has been his strong point; it has been his invariable practice from that time to this, until there is no department of the public service, inside or outside, that does not show the deleterious and injurious effects of this policy and these methods that have been brought into our administration by the right hon. gentleman himself. There is no doubt about it. The hon. gentleman does not know it? The right hon. gentleman certainly knows that he has thieves and embezzlers in the public service to-day. When it was brought to his attention and he and his supporters were challenged on it, he stood up like a little man and voted that it was right and proper to keep these thieves and embezzlers in office. Every man in the civil service, outside and in, knows what all Canada knows about this. But how can you expect men to be filled with the pride, the emulation and the ambition which my right hon. friend spoke about to do their best in the service of the country, when that service is bedevilled in that way from one end of it to the other, outside and inside ? I think that is plain enough. There are no 'ifs' or 'ands' about that.

More effective provisions to punish bribery and fraud at elections, to ensure thorough publicity as to expenses by political organizations, to prevent the accumulation of campaign funds for corrupt purposes and to prohibit contributions thereto by corporations, contractors and promoters, to expedite the hearing of election petitions, and to prevent collusive arrangements for the withdrawal or compromise thereof, and to provide for a thorough investigation of corrupt practices, and if necessary to appoint an independent prosecuting officer charged with that duty, to simplify the procedure therefor and to enforce the laws so amended.

No 'ifs' or 'ands' or 'buts,' or beating about the bush in that platform. From the Atlantic to the Pacific all honest men in this country have subscribed to the sentiments which are embalmed in these words, in that clause of the platform of the Liberal Conservative party. The people of this country are sick at heart, they are disgusted, and the outcome and measure of that disgust is falling on these gentlemen in by-election after by-election, wherever the people can speak their minds with reference to it. What have you done since you came into office to make it harder for the political thief to do his work, and to make it easier for the honest elector to deposit his ballot and have it counted? You, sir, have stood up in this House against an investigation of these crimes, against an investigation of this corruption. You, sir, in the theatre down yonder, put your hand upon the shoulder of Geo. W. Ross and appealed to the people of Ontario for his re-election, saying, this is my right hand, I want you to make that right hand strong. The right hand shielded you, and shielded those who worked for you, who bought for you, who sold for you, who conspired for you, and you to this day have entered into the fruits of their labours, and not until that right arm was shattered were the processes of law able to catch the scoundrels and bring them to punishment. Where, Sir, in this House or out of it, has the right hon. gentleman stood up and made one simple strong, honest protest against those guilty of electoral corruption ? When and where ? Is it in the memory of any man within this chamber ? But every man who sits here knows that he has interposed his powerful influence time and again to prevent it, and has prevented it. Well, I think that is pretty plain. I think the people of this country will consider that it is pretty plain, and they intend to have an accounting therefor. I tell my right hon. friend that we are not afraid of the judgment day before the electors of this country. We are willing, whenever you choose to bring it on, whether it be now or later. It is straight cut sentences such as those I have read, showing forth the policy of the Liberal Conservative party, that are being taught in the households of this country and sinking into the hearts of the electors, and will make themselves felt when that judgment day comes, in favour of honest government, and of a fair chance at the ballot box for the electors of this country.

Such reforms in the mode of selecting future members of the Senate as will make that chamber a more useful and representative legislative body.

That is fairly explicit. Does the right hon. gentleman think that in enunciating a platform the leader of the opposition is bound to draw up a Bill such as he will introduce ? All he can do is to place before the people of the country the principles upon which he will act. But my right hon. friend says, I don't want any 'ifs' and 'ands' about it, I want to know just what you are going to do. Well, I might give the answer that my hon. friend himself gave once. Do you want to know how we will do it ? Well, then just let us over to that side of the House and we will show you. That is the reply I have heard the right hon. gentleman give before this. It is sufficient for us to show the principles upon which the party means to act.

What has my right hon. friend done with reference to reforming the Senate ? Has his recollection entirely gone from him ? Why, he could not find his platform if he were asked to do so. Here this evening he had it not by his side. Has he seen it within the last ten years ? Now that is a fair question. Has my right hon. friend preserved a copy of it ? Were the planks of that platform made of wood, or of cardboard, or of rubber? Were they elastic, could they contract, could they expand? Where is there a single plank in that multitudinous platform that my right hon. friend can say he is standing upon to-day ? Is there a single one ? Will the right hon. gentleman not inform the House, satisfy our curiosity—one single plank ? One plank of a great and powerful leader, that is all we ask for. Thirty or forty planks in the platform—one single one that has been preserved, and upon which they are standing to-day? And still we cannot have even that little measure of grace.

The management and development of the public domain (in which are to be included great national franchises) for the public benefit and under such conditions that a reasonable proportion of the increment of value arising therefrom shall inure to the people.

Is that plain enough ? My right hon. friend understands it quite too well ? In his heart to-night, as I am speaking here before you, the right hon. gentleman knows that although he was good enough to call his whole party together and pledge them and himself to the sacred principle that the lands were to be sold and used for the settler, and not for the speculator, he has nevertheless connived at, he has stood up for, he has placed his powerful approval upon, a more or less wholesale alienation of the lands to political favourites who today sit behind and beside, affluent in the result of these favours they have got from my right hon. friend and from the members of his cabinet.

The Finance Minister journeyed to Truro and he journeyed back. He told them several wonderful things down there, but one of the wonderful things that he did tell them was that during their regime lands, which, when they came in, were worth only $2 an acre, had gone up to $6—actually gone up to $6 an acre. But there were several things, Mr. Speaker, that he did not tell them. He did not tell them what had been done with these lands, which, in 1902 and 1903, were selling at a minimum of $5 and $6 an acre; he did not tell him that a colleague of his, the Minister of the Interior, that strong man that my right hon. friend, looking over this whole Dominion, searched out in the west and brought here to set up as one in his cabinet, had taken 250,000 acres of homestead lands along a stretch of 115 miles of built and running railway, and which had been reported upon by his own officials as lands of quality and capacity, and allowed them to be—sold?—no, simply looted in favour of a gentleman who supported him in the west and that gentleman's associates at $1 an acre, payable, half in scrip and that these gentlemen, before two years had passed, had sold these lands for $2,000,000 or more and had put a million and three quarters in their own pockets and the pockets of their associates. He did not tell the people of Colchester that, nor did he tell them how one Robbins floated in to the Northwest on a summer's day without capital, friends, or affluence, made an application to the obliging Minister of the Interior for 380,000 acres of land upon which he should not pay a penny until 1910, got the franchise within six weeks or so, handed it over to his dear friends and the dear friends of the Minister of the Interior, Messrs. Hitchcock and J. D. McGregor, who put it alongside 100,000 acres of an irrevocable grazing lease for which they had to pay two cents an acre, and who, with Robbins, in six months floated a company and made a profit of $800,000 in stock or money. He did not tell them that. My right hon. friend does not tell us that. He thinks that this platform is not plain enough. I think it is plain enough, I think that the people of this country think it is plain enough and the Liberal-Conservative party, let me tell my right hon. friend when they build a platform, build it not only to get in on, but to stand on after they get in. But, what is the use of going over more? These are samples from the platform and I think they indicate sufficiently plainly in common English and the way in which they are phrased what we propose and what I believe this country will stand by us in proposing and carrying out as a public policy.

My right hon. friend said: Oh, but this is only one man's policy. Why did he not call the party together? That is what he should have done. Well, that is a good deal as you look at it. There are two ways of doing a thing. One is to call your party together from east, west, north and south, have the faithful here, one thousand, two thousand, three thousand, on sweltering summer days, go in and move amongst them as their leaders, make them the solemn pledges of public men, matured, wise and experienced, place these pledges in a public platform of so many sections, declare by unanimous vote that that is the policy of your party, and pledge them by your word of honour that when you get in that is what you will carry out. Having done all that in the light of day, above board, dismiss that convention, send them to their homes and then refuse to carry out a single pledge that you have made to that convention after you called it together. That is one way. That is the way of my right hon. friend. Another way is to build up your platform out of your experience and the needs of the country, back it up by votes in parliament on which there is perfect unanimity amongst the Liberal-Conservatives—as more than half of these clauses in this platform have been backed up in this parliament—back it up in by-election after by-election and back it up by placing it before the people of the country from one end to the other with scarcely a dissenting voice. I ask my right hon. friend if he was perfectly fair in that. The leader of this party has gone through this country from one end to the other. The audiences to which he addressed himself, the newspapers that were friendly and those that were not friendly—even my hon. friend is one of the auditors and readers—and I suppose hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of people have read that platform and have studied it within the last six or eight months. What is the body of opposition that is shown up against it? My right hon. friend can only, in one single instance, bring the example that upon one point, the 'Gazette,' a very excellent paper in the province of Quebec in the city of Montreal, did not see eye to eye with my hon. friend on the railway policy. Well, my right hon. friend must be forgetful in regard to this matter. Does he see eye to eye with the members of his own cabinet on that point? Does he sees eye to eye with the new ambitious rising, and I hope also, successful Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham)? Does he? He should read his speeches. The speeches of a new minister always have to be scanned. Older ministers have a certain license. You expect them to make mistakes but you will not tolerate the mistake of a young man. I find that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals spoke a night or two ago in the province of Ontario and transportation was one of his themes. In his speech he declared that:

Mr. Borden had declared in favour of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the Pacific. The Grand Trunk Pacific and the Mackenzie and Mann railway would both be at the Pacific soon and these, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, would make three transcontinental lines.

These would make three. What are the three?—the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Mackenzie and Mann. Why does he say that these will make three transcontinental lines?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will pardon me. He has forgotten the Canadian Pacific Railway, the one already built, and I did not mean the Intercolonial Railway at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman did not? Very well.

The Grand Trunk Pacific and Mackenzie and Mann railway would both be at the Pacific soon——

Yes, my hon. friend is right.

—and these, with the Canadian Pacific Railway——

That is right..

—would make three transcontinental lines, and all would have as much traffic as they could handle. It might be necessary to go to the Pacific with the Intercolonial Railway, but the same Mr. Borden and his party who now cried for this new line to the Pacific opposed the Intercolonial Railway extension to Montreal.

Indeed he would like to ask if they thought it worth while to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the heart of Ontario.

My right hon. friend was asking a conclave of good supporters, supporters of himself, supporters of my right hon. friend. What was the answer?

'Oh no, the corporations are the best hands to handle railways, not government.'

Was that their answer?

The question is I would like to ask do you think it worth while to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the heart of Ontario? (Loud cries of assent.)

From the faithful.

I do not say it is settled as a policy,——

——said Mr. Graham,

—but I know that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's cabinet is prepared to meet every demand of trade for quick transportation and reasonable rates and it might be found that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Ontario would help to regulate the rates.

Mr. BERGERON. It might.

Mr. FOSTER. It might. Where is the ex-Minister of Railways?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend ought to read that whole speech.

Mr. FOSTER. I am going to read every speech my hon. friend makes; I am anxious to size him up, to know how well he speaks and what wisdom he has. But there is undoubtedly a squinting by my right hon. friend and the new Minister of Railways of this government (Mr. Graham) towards extending the Intercolonial up to Ontario and possibly still farther west. But my right hon. friend has not travelled west; I am afraid he has not read well the sentiments and feelings of his western constituency. What have the Liberals in Alberta done, his own children? They have passed a resolution in favour of having the Hudson Bay Railway constructed and owned by the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. That is the voice of Liberalism in the province of Alberta. Will my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) undertake to go up there and convert them from the error of their ways and towards the corporations for whom he has so strongly pleaded here to-night? The Liberals of Saskatchewan passed a resolution to have the road constructed and owned by the Dominion government. There is the voice of his followers in another of the great new provinces, and, if I mistake not, the present Minister of the Interior last year set apart or proposed to set apart a portion of the odd numbered sections of the land in order that the government might, with the proceeds of these lands, build the Hudson Bay Railway. I am not sure whether my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) proposed to apply this as subsidy or in the line of the construction of the road by the government. These same provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba have already, with the evident assent of their people of both lines of political feeling, gone into the business of building and owning and operating government telephones in those three provinces. Great progress has been made in Alberta and before very long a large proportion of that province will be covered with government owned telephones. So I advise my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to put his ear to the ground, figuratively speaking, and find out what the people behind him and to a certain extent beneath him are thinking upon this question. No man can more quickly change his opinions than my right hon. friend, and I do not despair, if he hears the voice calling sufficiently loudly, that he will make very short work of his arguments of to-night and replace them by what would seem to him very much better ones.

He wanted to know where protection came in in this platform which was laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden). He found it there but he said it was writ very small. There is one place where my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) can find that it is writ infinitely smaller, that is in the Liberal platform of 1893. We see one party, with its thousands of supporters, pledging itself in all the fervor of its multitude, assenting to a great and broad principle that there shall be no writing of protection at all in all the documents, and yet, after having so pledged themselves, they can go out into the next eleven years of administration and write protection over every bit of their policy and of their administration.

Mr. BERGERON. And write it large, too.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two ways of doing it, you take your choice, but I think I would rather have the manly way of stating what you propose to do and doing it than of stating the opposite and then introducing and keeping protection in the fiscal legislation and administration of this country, to an extent, more burdensome than it has ever before fallen on the people of this country. My hon. friend told an amusing story as to which end of an egg you were to bite off before you made an omlet. My hon. friend did not bite off either end, he swallowed the whole egg, there were no bits about it, it was protection through and through, the whole of it was put down, aye, and not bolted in an honest, open fashion; he went behind the screen to do it, protesting all the time by all that was good and great, that he was an enemy of protection and a friend of free trade.

My hon. friend made a laboured argument with reference to government ownership of railways as well as telephone lines. He seemed to pay special attention to my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), in fact he forgot that there was any other audience about him for a time and he directed his gaze and his argument entirely to my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) and a great compliment to my hon. friend from South York. What is there in the wind? Is there to be another vacancy in the cabinet? I saw a hint in some good Liberal paper whilst the selecting process was going on, before these two fortunate gentlemen could read their title clear to mansions in the skies, that it was supposed that Mr. Maclean would be a Cabinet Minister in the ministry of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and as I say, listening to the almost perfervid tones in which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) addressed himself to the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) and observing the smiling way in which my hon. friend from South York took it, I almost came to the conclusion that there was a deep, dark conspiracy somewhere which it would take more than Judge Winchester to hunt out. What was the whole argument of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with reference to railways? On the platform in the city of Toronto in 1904, he declared, when he found that the Intercolonial Railway had been a failure in certain respects, that it was not due to my hon. friend here who was once Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) or to the then Minister of Railways or to any Minister of Railways; it was due to the vicious system which prevailed. Now, the whole argument drawn to a logical conclusion urges my hon. friend, drives him inevitably in what direction with his Intercolonial Railway? His whole argument has been against government ownership, that it operates against efficiency, that it does not instill the emulating, ambitious spirit in its officials and workers to make the road a success as compared with what private men, a corporation would do; he condemned it by every argument. Does he propose to hand this over to a private corporation as well? Logically he cannot escape from his argument, if his argument is sound.

He twitted my hon. friend with arguing in one way and concluding in another. Then he proceeded to do the same thing himself. He argued against government ownership. Is he prepared to give up the government ownership of the Intercolonial Railway? His argument is worth nothing unless his actions will carry out the strength of the argument. It was refreshing to hear my right hon. friend praise in such dulcet tones and with such luminous language the Canadian Pacific Railway. In times gone by I have listened to my right hon. friend when he was not so complimentary to that corporation and that railway. I have listened to him when he denounced in every mood and tense the Canadian Pacific Railway—this giant monopoly, as he then called it. To-day he is coming nearer to the measure of justice, and he has absolutely declared that the Canadian Pacific Railway is the great beneficient machine which has done more for the development of this Canada of ours than perhaps any one agency in the whole country. I agree with him in that. Nobody proposes to fight corporations in so far as corporations do their proper work, in so far as corporations treat the people that they serve in a just and reasonable way. But it is an equally fair statement that there are regions and areas and directions in which government ownership in all these things may be put into proper execution. He finds fault with my hon. friend because he does not come out and say that he is going to confiscate every corporation and undo a system which has been accumulating for ages. No sane man would do that. The circumstances of the case must be taken into account. But, Sir, if we were commencing again in this country, with the knowledge we have now, there would be far more things owned and operated by government than are owned and operated to-day. In the illimitable development which Canada faces as the years pass, there is ground, outside and beyond that which to-day is pre-empted and well worked by the corporations, for the beneficent working of government ownership in a thousand different ways and with great advantage to the people of Canada.

Let me go on now with the Japanese and Chinese question. I do not think I ever heard quite such an argument as my right hon. friend put before the House and this country to-night. Mr. Speaker, what was that argument? Will you allow me to present it, just in plain English? You cannot, he says, treat the Japanese as you would treat and have treated the Chinese. Well, why not? What are his reasons why? One power is powerful and has a big stick, the other is weak and disunited. and therefore you must treat it justly, but you can be unjust to it. What an argument for the right hon. gentleman who heads the government of Canada. Another argument: the one has rich gain in her lap for you ; the other you have not much chance of getting trade gains from ; therefore treat them differently, because sordid, selfish gain would prompt you to do it. The argument is immoral, publicly immoral. If there is anything like right and truth and justice, the Chinese should have his measure of it just as much as the Japanese. It should not depend on might or power, pelf or gain, getting or giving. It should depend on the real rights of men to certain treatment in certain cases. I take issue with my right hon. friend as to the question: suppose you were going to put yourself into disfavour with either people, which would you put yourself into disfavour with ? It is not necessary to put yourself into disfavour with either. I make no disrespectful allusion to the great progress and the quick development of the Japanese when I tell you that that old civilization which lies on the other side of the water opposite to Japan, with its three or four hundred millions of patient, diligent, sober people, has in it possibilities which so far outshine and outsweep those that belong to Japan, with its smaller country and its confined areas, that to the sagacious statesman looking to the future there is no question at all, if you put it on that low ground, as to whose susceptibilities we should be careful of. Does my right hon. friend think the Chinese are altogether uncivilized ? Has he forgotten that for fifteen hundred years or more the germs of a great and mighty wisdom have settled into their hearts and minds and moulded their character, and that in these late years of inspiration and upheaval such a change has taken place in the mighty empire of China as has not taken place amongst any other people in modern times? But again, I come back to this, that you should treat the peoples of the earth from right and justice, and not from expediency of gain or from fear. Now my right hon. friend comes again with his private correspondence. It is the old North Atlantic Trading Company again. There he had something which he would show to the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition thanked him and said, what is good enough for me is good enough for my followers behind me, and it is fair that all should be treated alike. Now my right hon. friend comes and says, I have private correspondence which I may some time show the leader of the opposition which will exonerate me. For my own part, I am not disposed to press this question unfairly. I will state simply my own view of it. When I voted on that Japanese treaty ratification last session, I did it on the strength of the representations that were made by the Prime Minister as to the limitations of emigration from Japan and on my own knowledge of what I thought the commercial result might be to us. That I did understand ; the other I knew not. But when my right hon. friend made the statement, which of course he acknowledges to have made, and which he leaves us to infer he made in good faith—and I am not going to question it for a moment—then I say that responsibility for the ratification of that treaty fell off my shoulders and the shoulders of gentlemen on this side of the House and in this House generally. But there has been some miscarriage. My right hon. friend is not going to charge the Japanese government with failure and we do not wish him to do so, If the Prime Minister's version of it turns out to be true, there must be this simple explanation that in a moment of inadvertence and in the press of work after the great war the Japanese government forgot the limitations it had placed in the hands of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) ; and no doubt, as soon as its attention is brought to these limitations, that government will honourably carry out every pledge it gave. I am willing to let the matter rest until that is solved, and I let it rest in the hope and the belief that a just solution will be reached. I am not disposed to draw a colour line in this country. I am not disposed to put up a race line. I am not disposed to say that any man in the universe, because of a certain colour or race, no matter what may be his attainments and character or qualifications in other respects, shall be shut out from this country. But I am bound to maintain that we have the right to keep this a white man's country and not allow the interests, the institutions and the labour of this country to be dominated by any other element. And I have no doubt, if we are wise and patient, we shall have no trouble in preserving our integrity and preventing any such result as we would all deplore. British Columbia, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, has no neighbour but Japan. He has forgotten that, not so very long ago, he and his followers were shouting throughout the country, from one end to the other, that the United States was our natural market. My hon. friend has forgotten that great nation with its eighty millions of people, lying to the north and south of British Columbia, and apparently believes that the future of that province depends entirely upon her trade with Japan. I should be sorry for British Columbia, if she were limited to that trade. While I believe that there is a profitable trade to be developed between British Columbia and Canada in general and the great empire of Japan, I am still of the opinion that the possibilities for trade are infinitely greater with the 300,000,000 Chinese who lie equally near to us, whose resources are so great, whose wants are so many and who, when stirred by the life breath of a patriotic and reviving nationality and unity will develop an area for trade and commerce unequalled in any part of this world. The Japanese propose to manage as they have a perfect right to do their own industries; they propose to carry their own trade. They propose, if their government has to mortgage its last dollar, to do both these things with government aid. And taking the conditions of labour and wages, the outlook is not of the best for great expansion of trade between British Columbia and Japan. A good trade, I hope will be done; but I look for a better and more remunerative trade with the great population of China.

Now we come to the British Columbia subsidies. My right hon frined forgot a passage in his past life. He forgot his compact with the late Mr. Mercier. He forgot the hard and fast bargain which he made with Mr. Mercier before a general election, when he said to him: If you will give me a majority in the province of Quebec, I will grant you the better terms you want for your province. That episode is a matter of history. It is writ in history, and it is not writ small. It is writ large. My hon. friend can read it if he pleases. Yet he comes to my hon. friend beside me (Mr. R. L. Borden) and says that when my hon. friend made a promise in 1904 that he would see that justice was done British Columbia, if injustice were established — that he would right the matter in so far as he could, if he came into power—my hon. friend says that such a promise was bribery and corruption. Yet a wholesale contract to deliver up a province for an express subsidy—that has faded completely out of the mind of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That has gone where the planks of his 1893 platform have gone. It has gone into the oblivion of the past. The last provincial conference, the right hon. gentleman says, has been held, and the last settlement has been made. My right hon. friend is powerful and mighty in some matters but he cannot do what the Almighty alone can do. When he declares that the last conference has been held between the provinces and the Dominion and the last rearrangement of provincial subsidies made, he is making a declaration which it is absolutely out of his power to make effective. Neither he nor any parliament can do that. No parliament can bind its successors in these matters. That arrangement, which the right hon. gentleman says is the last, is one which was dissented from by one of the provinces represented at the conference. Consequently you cannot make it of binding force on that province. British Columbia could never have been brought into confederation if it had persisted in refusing to join. Neither can you make, by a vote of a majority of the premiers, a hard and fast settlement from which one of the provinces dissents and by which it will not consent to be bound.

I shall not weary the House much longer, but wish to refer just for a moment to the first part of my right hon. friend's speech. It is infinitely interesting to watch the growth of a legend. If I had the time to-night, I would like to analyse that growth. I would like to show where the first seed dropped, who watered it, how long it took to sprout, the length of time it took to throw up tender shoots and grow stronger, until it at last developed into a wide spreading tree covered with foliage. I shall not however describe the whole process to-night but simply analyse briefly the three legends which my hon. friend has built around himself, or which have been built up around him by his adoring followers. If the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) were here, I would be strongly tempted to give him a warning. Did he not know that only last year, the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) fairly exhausted his imagination and rhetoric in his effort to heap flattery on the right hon. the First Minister. He lauded the right hon. gentleman to the very skies, he lifted him up into the loftiest ether. But where is the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Campbell) to-day? He is to-day in what my right hon. friend and his supporters, a few years ago, were wont to describe as the old women's retreat. His flattery of the First Minister did not bring him the place he coveted. Let the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) beware lest he should receive the same treatment.

The right hon. gentleman was questioned regarding his cabinet changes. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked why he had passed over his followers who had served him so faithfully during the past fifteen or eighteen years. ? Strong men they were. Well did they fight his battles. They went out into every campaign and fought for him under whatever flag he unfurled. They stood by him in this House even when their better judgment and conscience told them they were not doing right. They fought for him in the committees even when they knew they were violating every canon of just and fair inquiry into the expenditures of the country. Yet when a choice has to be made of a cabinet minister, these men are counted out. What was the answer my right hon. friend gave? I had, he said, to go out and look for the best men. And the best men he could only find outside the ranks of those servile followers, who have followed him so faithfully from 1878 to the present day, and many of whom, I am bound to say, are of equal ability and experience to the two hon. gentlemen he has chosen. These old veterans have still to go on doing the mucking and such work, and when a foreman has to be called in, he is taken from the outside.

The Liberal of the old time, who has served him faithfully, comes to him and says: If yon have honours and rank to bestow, do you not think it would be well to give them to men who have never wavered in their Liberalism? Equal ability? Anything like equal ability? What does party service for eighteen or twenty years require that it should be regarded as unfitting men for the higher grades of office? My right hon. friend has a great penchant for looking after the flotsam and jetsam of the Liberal-Conservative party. When, under stress of weather, the old Liberal-Conservative ship was partly dismantled, my right hon. friend's heart was aroused to sympathy. Straightway he sends out his wreckers, takes up the wreckage, dries it off and lands it in the Senate, or in office. I thank my right hon. friend for having taken care of a great deal of that kind of material that was at one time part of the old Liberal-Conservative ship. And this is the last and most brilliant example. My hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) and myself are old acquaintances. We respect each other; yet we criticise each other; we have had a good deal to do with each other. And my hon. friend will not take it amiss if I recall to his memory—for fear it may slip like the lapsing memory of the Prime Minister—that, up to 1896, he was an ardent follower of Liberal-Conservative principles. He accepted the Liberal Conservative nomination in the county of Kings and he fought the battle, until it was found that he could not fight it successfully, when he was practically asked to retire for the sake of the party.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not so sure of that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is my version—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is perfectly good until a better one is shown.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has had some failures in New Brunswick himself.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) went down to the city of St. John, and, with great astuteness—I shall never deny him that quality—took his stand upon a platform which would make it delightfully easy to step off on one side or the other according as the signs showed in the political zodiac. These signs favouring the star of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a lesser star has taken its place in the firmament, and adds its rays to those of the overwhelmingly brilliant galaxy that to-day shines upon us from the front benches. It may be that, within the next two or three years, before an election comes, there will be other floatsam and jetsam to be picked up. I commend it to the merciful care and sympathetic handling of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

But he wanted to get the best. Did he ask Hon. Clifford Sifton to take a place in his cabinet? It is commonly stated that he did. I do not know whether any cabinet minister stated that or not, but it was so repeatedly reported that I think the right hon. gentleman ought to tell us whether he did really make an honest effort for the best man in the person of Mr. Sifton, and when he could not get him fell back on the next best man. If so, he does not always get the best. My right hon. friend has his chance and I hope he will explain to this House and to the country whether there was any truth in that statement, and, if so, what were the particular reasons why the gentleman to whom he first applied as the best man did not fall in with his proposals. But it may be satisfactory to all these ardent gentlemen who fight so strongly for their party and for the Prime Minister, that it is now plain that, so long as my right hon. friend is Prime Minister, whenever there is a vacancy in the cabinet he will go into the wider fields and search for the best man. While these hon. gentlemen behind him may be well enough, for what we may call the unskilled labour, when skill is required it must be sought outside.

Now, as to these three legends; what are they in brief? One is that at the colonial conference the right hon. gentleman played the part of the doughty hero on behalf of the threatened liberties of Canada and her sisters the daughter states of the empire. My right hon. friend surprised me this afternoon when he made the statement that he had to withstand the men who wished to make Canada and others of the daughter states mere satellites to revolve around Great Britain, occupying a position of humiliating dependence upon that power. I asked him the names of the men who took that position. But he had forgotten them—his memory failed him again. I ventured the assertion that he could not name them. And when he stated that it was a matter of appreciation, I said that, to my mind, it was a matter of fact, and I stated that I had read the records very carefully and failed to find a single man who tried to put Canada and the sister states in that position. Now, I do not grudge my right hon. friend the foremost position that, in one way, he took at that conference. It was Canadas right, and I was proud to see him stand for the premier colony. But there is no need for pretense and posing. From the time the conference opened until it closed, there was not a single aggression made upon the rights of the daughter states—such a thing cannot be pointed to in the record.

What was the discussion about? It revolved around the two questions of the name that should be given to what was known before as the Colonial Conference, and about the functions of the secretariat that was to make the doings and the work of that conference more effective and more consecutive. Now I challenge my right hon. friend. Will he take that record and point out from any statement or any member of that conference where any one of them took a position of that kind ? It cannot be done, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Deakin was there, Sir Joseph Ward was there, Dr. Jamieson was there, Mr. Moor was there, General Botha was there, and these were the chief men of that conference. Every one of them stood on exactly the same high plane as did my right hon. friend. They declared they were simply discussing a title, that they thought Imperial Council would be a better title for the old Colonial Conference, but they were unalterably opposed to any change at all in the functions of that council. Is not that true ? I think my right hon. friend will bear me out in that. But lest there should be some doubting Thomases, I propose to call his attention to the matter, where it is set out in the record when the discussion commenced on the second day of the conference. After some remarks from the chairman, Sir Wilfrid Laurier proposed that Mr. Deakin should give his views with reference to this change of name and change of function, if there was to be any. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :

> Canada has made no suggestions upon this point. I may say that in our country, as we have stated in our despatch, we do not view it with much favour——

That was the stand my right hon. friend took.

> —but we approach it with open mind. I would at this moment observe relative to the suggestion of Mr. Deakin that he should take up at once the first proposal of the Commonwealth of Australia. 'That it is desirable to establish an imperial council to consist of representatives of Great Britain and the self-governing colonies chosen ex-officio from their existing administrations,' and that the title should be the last thing to be determined.

My right hon. friend properly argued : first, let us know what you are going to have the functions, the constitution, the powers, and then let us put a name to that after we know what it is going to do. Here is what Mr. Deakin said about it :

> We found in the despatch from the previous imperial government a proposal to adopt the title 'Imperial Council.' This we understood was intended to be conferred upon the existing conferences without any substantial alteration in their powers, or in the principle of their constitution. We were prepared to mark our appreciation of the intention by the adoption of that title. It appeared to us a fitting cognomen for such a body, and if its constitution were elaborated to some slight degree, it might have been a judicious thing to accept it, even at this stage; but the intention of this general resolution of ours was to retain these conferences precisely as they have existed—this conference as it now exists—unaltered in personnel or in procedure, except so far as we might with advantage connect its several meetings during the intervals of the assembling, and provide for a more efficient means of keeping its members in touch with one another and with the government of Great Britain. Our idea was not to endow the new body under whatever title it was known, with any legislative or executive power.
> The body we had in view was a conference that was to have no such power as, according to the government of Canada, are associated in their minds and in the minds probably of those whom they represent, with the name 'Imperial Council,' which to us would not have meant more than 'Imperial Conference.' We are perfectly prepared to accept that title. I do not need at this stage to detain the conference further. Our object is to retain the conferences as they at present are, in respect to their authority, to their constitution and to their periodical meetings.

I could read statement after statement from Mr. Deakin in the same line. Now let us see what Sir Joseph Ward said, as I find it on page 30 :

> Whether the organization is termed a council or a conference, to my mind is not of very great importance, so long as the position and duties of the council are defined, and speaking for my colony, I lay it down as one of the cardinal principles of such an organization, that there should be no interference with the present rights and powers of the governments of those self-governing countries; and in that respect if we are safeguarded, as I am perfectly sure every one is desirous of doing, what we term the meeting of the Prime Ministers does not mattter. If it is covered by the term 'Conference,' in deference to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's wish, I have not the slightest objection, and I should be only too glad to fall into line with it. Why I preferred the word 'Council' is because it indicates a permanency, and it is with the object of having a permanent institution established that I think we ought, if we can, to arrive at some decision of a definite nature in dealing with this matter.

He went further, and asked that the Crown colonies should be disassociated from the self-governing dominions, so anxious was he that the status of the self-governing dominions should not be compromised or mixed up with the management of the Crown colonies. He and Mr. Deakin went further, and they argued for taking the presidency of that council or conference out of the hands of the Colonial Secretary, and vesting it in the Prime Minister, thinking to give it additional status and additional standing by removing it entirely from the imputation of being in any way under the Colonial Office, the old Colonial Office. Now let us see what Dr. Jamieson says, on page 33 :

> Nothing will be done unless we are all unanimous, and I was very glad to hear the extremely moderate and very lucid statement of Mr. Deakin on the question of conferences. I was glad to see from that lucid statement that he was able to remove from the mind of Sir Wilfrid Laurier the idea that he had any elaborate scheme to propose with regard to the constitution of this so-called imperial council, which I may say at once I would be glad to see changed in name to the Imperial Conference. We did not wish to initiate any new scheme whatever, as Mr. Deakin has explained; all that we desired was to make more efficient the work of the conference as the conference stands at present.

Mr. Moor, representative from Natal made almost exactly the same statement; and General Botha did not want to have things disturbed at all. In fact General Botha gave me the impression of being rather disinclined for any changes of any account at the present time, in any regard, largely I think from the idea that in a short time when his own and the other provinces should be united as Canada and Australia have been, they could speak with more power and occupy a more representative position. However, I think I have read enough to prove that there was no member of that conference who proposed to take a position derogatory to the outside dominions ; every one of them declared it to be his intention that the autonomy, rights and position of the outside dominions should be kept as good as they were, and enhanced as far as they could be. How has the legend then grown up that in some manner the right hon. gentleman stood as the champion of the autonomy of the outside dominions, and made a valiant and successful battle against those who would have demanded the colonies of that position, and put them into the position of humiliation ? So much on that point.

There is another point. I have heard it attributed to my right hon. friend by one of his ardent supporters that for the first time the conference came together as a consultation between government and government, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's hand was the guiding and powerful hand which brought that about. Sir, before my right hon. friend opened his mouth in this conference, the chairman of the meeting—no, the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, Sir Campbell Bannerman, made the pronouncement on behalf of the British government that this was no longer a conference between a British Minister and the outside Dominions, not a colonial conference, but that it was to be then and henceforth a conference between the government at home and the governments outside—governments outside—governments with governments which idea was hailed with de light by my right hon. friend and by every other member of the conference. Give every one his due, but why should enthusiastic supporters wish to place the right hon. gentleman in a position which is historically inaccurate ? We give him credit for standing for Canada, but we do not want to discredit the other sister colonies who stood equally for the status and position of all the Dominions with the right hon. gentleman.

Now, there is another legend. That is the legend of this French treaty which was placed on the table. The legend was given credence and currency by the right hon. gentleman himself who came down to the Manufacturers Association banquet in the city of Toronto and declared—I will not have time to read the whole of his utterances—that heretofore British diplomacy had ruled the affairs of Canada, that heretofore British diplomacy had been only a blundering diplomacy, that now, without any revolution, in the twinkling of an eye, all that had been changed and to-day Canada had the negotiation absolutely to herself of her own commercial treaties and that a treaty had just been signed in which two of his colleagues, without any help, without any intervention, without any mechanism at all from Great Britain or her Minister in Paris, had made a treaty, had signed the treaty and had finished and completed the whole business. Canada herself. And, Sir, where do we find the fruit ? Everywhere. The very first indication we saw of it was down in the city of Quebec where these gentlemen, who brought home the treaty, before they had divulged what it was, were banqueted, because they had made a treaty and where the address to the ministers declared in so many words : This is the first treaty that was ever negotiated and completed by Canada herself—honour to the braves who have wrought this great victory for us. And so it has gone from place to place, editorial to editorial, and has been given currency by the right hon. gentleman himself that this is the first. What is the use of trying to read history backwards ? If the right hon. gentleman wants the facts of the case here they are. The time is not so very long ago when Britain made the treaties and the colonies had no say one way or the other about them. That was followed by a better and more generous method when Canada and the other great colonies, but Canada especially, were invited to send their representatives who became representatives of the British government working along with the British representatives, with the British Minister at Washington, for instance, and working out the details of the treaty. That was the second step. The next step, concurrent almost with that, was that no treaty would be forced on any colony without the assent of that colony, and in 1893 the next step forward was made when Sir Charles Tupper was appointed plenipotentiary by Great Britain, and when he went to Paris and with Lord Dufferin, the British Minister to Paris, entered into negotiations with the gentlemen who conducted the matter for France, Sir Charles Tupper carrying out absolutely all the negotiations, the British minister simply introducing him, simply giving him all the resources at his command, and after Sir Charles Tupper and the French minister had arranged the treaty it was signed by Lord Dufferin, signed by Sir Charles Tupper and signed by the French minister, and it became a treaty. From beginning to end there was absolutely no constitutional or practical difference between the matter in 1893 and the matter in 1907. What is the use of reading history backwards and trying to make it appear that under this regime a great advance forward has been taken and a great right has been wrested from the British government ? The right hon. gentleman said that Canada knew her own business best and could do her own business best. So Canada can up to a certain point, but everyone of us with half an ounce of common sense in his head knows that there is one thing Canada cannot do. She cannot make a treaty and she cannot enforce a treaty. Just as long as the present constitutional circumstances and conditions stand Canada may have all the say in reference to her own business in the way of a treaty with another country, as to-day she has, but she has to say it in a constitutional way, and when the treaty is signed it is Great Britain's plentipotentiaries who sign it and when the treaty is completed it is the power of Britain that enforces that treaty.

We have the other legend and that is wholly made by the right hon. gentleman himself. That is the all-red route.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He forgot that.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman forgot it. He did not forget it when he came back to Quebec for this is what he said :

During the last five days of the conference I announced a new idea which has almost become historic—the all-red line.

Is it possible that the right hon. gentleman uttered these words ?

My proposition was the establishment at once of fast boats on the Atlantic and Pacific. I am thoroughly convinced that my ideas are in the interest of Canada and the empire, and although I have grown old and white in the service of the country I am prepared to work with all my energy to further the cause.

Mr. FOSTER.

That was the new idea. The all-red route. What was it ?—a fast line of steamship communication from Great Britain to Canada, fast railway communication across Canada, as fast as possible steamship communication with the Orient, Australia and New Zealand. That was the new idea, and I see it written in this book that when the matter came before the conference Sir Wm. Lynne, the Finance Minister of Australia, said that they had been advocating that for ten years in Australia, and that they called it there the all-red line. Ten years ago ! Five days ago ! Memory at fault ! Historical accuracy ! Who is responsible ? Sir Wm. Lynne or is it my right hon. friend ? But we need not pursue that further. My right hon. friend was here in 1888, he was here in 1889, he was here in 1900 ; he was here and he and his followers fought with tooth and nail the proposal of the Liberal-Conservatives of that day to put on the statute a subsidy for fast line steamers across the Pacific running to China and Japan, New Zealand and Australia, and for a fast line across the Atlantic, both lines contributed to by Great Britain and by Canada, by New Zealand and Australia as well and the whole argument was the all-red line, as swift communication as we possibly could have between London, Vancouver, Hong-Kong, Yokohama, Auckland, Melbourne and Sydney.

That was the slogan of the Liberal-Conservative party then and in spite of the efforts of these gentlemen the legislation was put on the statute book, the steamers were put upon the ocean, the subsidies were contributed and with reference to the Atlantic side, the contract was made and within two or three years we would have had the actuality resulting from the contract, but my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) thought it was no thing to conjure with, the all red line ; he tore up the contract and went into the bottle-necked steamer business and the Petersen and Tait business, until after dilly-dallying for years. prices rose so that in those days they were frightened at the amount of money that would have to be paid to get an all-red line. I must tell my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) candidly that I doubt if he added much to his own reputation and to the reputation of Canada by the course he pursued in that conference with reference to the all-red line. On the 14th day of the sessions of that conference, only one day before it rose, he put in a resolution demanding that there and then steps should be taken to put on a 24-knot service across the Atlantic and an 18-knot minimum service on the Pacific, and that Great Britain and Canada, Australia and New Zealand, should contribute to the same in equitable shares—and he occupied three minutes or less in putting that proposition before that conference. There sat the British government, represented by business men ; there sat the representatives of all the colonies, business men, and here was this right hon. gentleman who sprang the motion on nearly the last day of the conference and refused to listen to any change in that resolution which would satisfy the business-like inquiry as to what the cost was likely to be, whether the service was to be cargo or cargo and passenger or passenger alone. The representative of the British government told him to his face: It is unfair this treatment of us, you are trying to rush the question; do you mean to tell us that we must vote and become responsible for it, without your giving us a single item of information with reference to its cost or anything connected with it? The right hon. gentleman counted the distance and decided to his own satisfaction that it could be done in about three weeks with a 24-knot service on the Atlantic, more than 18 knots if possible on the Pacific and the Canadian Pacific Railway across this country and he fought, Sir, for an immediate assent to that resolution of his, fought for it until the end of the day, and at last, convinced of his lack of business, he gave way and allowed it to be amended by the insertion of a proviso: If it can be attained at reasonable cost. Sir, it reminds us of the great Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. There was a period when time would not wait and when, as one of his ministers said, Cox would not wait, and here before the empire the premier of Canada brought a proposition like that in an unbusiness-like manner before the empire and tried to push it and rush it through without an item of information as to its cost—but he took good care to declare in the name of the people of Canada that cost what it might, Canada was willing to share and shoulder a larger proportion of the cost than any other. That all-red line was what my right hon. friend fought for ten years, bungled for some two or three years and then, on the spur that was applied to him that he had done mighty little for Canada at that conference and that he had better bring home something for an election cry, he sprung his brand new, five-day old scheme of an all-red line and pushed it as far as he could but had to give way in the end. He has not given it up, his hair is gray, but he has buckled to for many another hard day's work and will not rest until we get the all-red line. I hope we will have it; I hoped for it twelve years ago and worked for it twelve years ago as did hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, to be rebuffed by this right hon. gentleman, but in spite of that the lines were started, the lines have been eminently successful, and the keel has been laid for that coming fleet of swifter vessels which in due process of time, by the co-operation of all these great portions of the empire, will carry our passengers and mails—our cargoes they will not carry—on swift wings from the east to the old east from the orient to the mother country in an ever-growing and ever-increasing channel of prosperity and development for all these countries.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, December 3, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved:

That the report of the special committee appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House under rule 10, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That the select standing committees of this House be given power to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon; with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. PERLEY. Will the right hon. gentleman tell us when we are likely to get the report of the Civil Service Commission?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I have difficulty in giving a definite answer, but a member of the commission assured me that before the Christmas vacation he expected to have the report ready.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 2) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said: The Bill is the same as that which was reported by the Select Committee last session but reported too late for the House to deal with it. The hon. the Minister or Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was in Europe when the report was brought down, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who was then leading the House, asked that the Bill should stand over until this session. The Bill requires masters and mates of vessels in inland waters to be British subjects. It was discussed during several sessions and was sent to a special committee last session which reported. I am introducing the Bill in exactly the same language as that which was reported last session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENTS.

Mr. LANCASTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 3) to amend the Railway Act. He said : This Bill requires protection to the people upon level crossings in cities, towns and villages. It was sent to the Senate twice and was rejected by the Senate last year. I shall ask the House to send the Bill back to that body for reconsideration. It was passed unanimously by this House, and the Bill I am now introducing is exactly the same as that which this House passed last session with the exception that it will come into operation a year later.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 4) to amend the Railway Act. He said : I wish to amend that clause of the Act which deals with the beginning and the completion of a railway. I wish to make that clause operative and have the effect the House intended it should have. At present there is a clause in each railway charter compelling the company to begin construction within two years and complete within five years. That clause enables the railway company to evade this obligation. What happens in many cases is this. Railway companies get charters here by the dozen covering hundreds and thousands of miles of territory. They are supposed to begin construction within two years and in some cases they do. But if a company is not ready to go on with its construction before the end of the second year, all it has to do is to grade a mile or two of track, and then it is not obliged to do anything more for the next three years, so that at the end of five years nothing whatever is done worth mentioning. Then at the end of five years the company comes back and gets a renewal of its charter. Thus we find many railway charters issued and nothing done. If that were the only bad effect, it perhaps would not be so serious, but another bad effect is that other railway companies are prevented from getting charters and constructing a railway over the ground covered by the first charter. Suppose a second company should get a charter covering the same route and should attempt to build its railway, the original charter holders would go right on with their road. In my part of the country there are two or three charters which have been in existence a number of years, and practically nothing has been done towards building the railways, and no other railway company can come in and build the road. The company holding the charter claim they cannot get the men or the material to build the branch line. But I notice that these companies seem to get plenty of men and material to build branch lines in those parts of the country where they hope to cut out the lines of other companies. What I propose in this amendment is this : Within two years of the granting of the charter, at least ten per cent of the mileage of the railway under charter shall be completed and put in operation ; and during the third year ten per cent additional and during the fourth year another ten per cent additional shall be completed, the whole to be finished, as now provided, within five years. I do not say that these are exactly the right percentages. In a short railway it would be too small, and in a long railway it might, perhaps, be a rather heavy demand for the first two years. But I would be quite willing to change the figures if good reason is shown for so doing. This matter has been discussed to a certain extent in the Railway Committee. It is a matter of very serious import. I trust the House will pass this Bill so that we may be able to compel the railways either to build the roads they are chartered to build, or drop their charters. That is the main object—if a company will not build the road let them drop their charter inside of five years and give some other railway company the opportunity to come in and do the business.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL AND CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 5) respecting Co-operation. He said : This Bill was presented last session, discussed in the House and referred to a special committee. That committee held many sittings and went fully into the merits of this legislation, examining employees from the Department of Agriculture and outside witnesses also. The result of the committee's consideration was that the Bill was fully endorsed and commended as one calculated to help the development of agriculture and fruit culture, and as a very useful credit and loan measure. The report of the committee is very extensive, covering over two hundred printed pages. It goes very fully into the merits of the measure. There is an appendix in which are given the laws of other countries that have adopted legislation on co-operation. In this report, which was unanimous and favourable to the measure, the committee recommended that the Bill be taken charge of by the government and passed as soon as possible. If I have taken the liberty of introducing the Bill now, it is chiefly because of the absence of the Minister of Labour (Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux) who was principally charged with the administration of this proposed law. Having no understanding with him as to what would be done with this measure I thought it better to introduce it in order that it should be brought to the notice of the House and that members of the House should be given occasion to study the report which was prepared and which gives very valuable information in regard to the working of co-operation. I need hardly say that if the government adopts the unanimous suggestion of the committee and takes up the measure I shall be very glad to relinquish it to any of the ministers who is prepared to take charge of it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill was introduced by me last session. It deals with the subject of demurrage, providing a kind of reciprocity in that matter. The Bill proposes to enact a penalty against the company in the interests of the shipper if the company fails to provide cars when required. It provides a penalty against the shipper and in the interest of the company if the shipper fails to load the cars provided. It provides a penalty in the interest of the consignee and against the company if the company does not put cars on the siding as requested, and a reciprocal penalty against the shipper and in favour of the company if he does not unload the cars when so placed. Provision is made expressly reserving the right of every shipper and every railway company in respect of any damages one may claim against the other in regard to any losses outside of demurrage.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Postmaster General for the year ending March 31, 1907.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Civil Service List of Canada, 1907.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, may I ask the Minister of Finance (W. S. Fielding) if copies of the French treaty are being printed for distribution?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I was under the impression that they were already printed for distribution.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean for distribution outside—copies in addition to the usual two copies given to members. There are inquiries for copies from boards of trade and men in business life, and there seems to be no way of meeting these inquiries.

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot answer as to the number printed, but I agree with the view that there should be a liberal supply.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION—INQUIRY FOR DOCUMENTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) I would like to ask the government whether they will lay upon the table of the House the documents alluded to by the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher) on his return from Japan in 1903? I refer to the statements in writing which he declared he had received from the government of Japan with regard to the limitation of immigration from that country to other countries.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). That will come up under notices of motion which are on the Order Paper.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in his opening remarks yesterday stated that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in his speech had gone into a good deal of new and unexpected matter. I should be glad to return the compliment to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), but I am afraid I cannot do so. I fear that we must recognize the fact that the speech he gave us yesterday, after all, contained very little that was new. It was a repetition of the old attacks, of the old sound and fury which we have heard so often in this House, attacks which have met their effective answer not only in this House, but from time to time in the verdict rendered upon them throughout the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Colchester, for instance.

Mr. FIELDING. We will have a word about Colchester before we close. I was reminded by the violence of my hon. friend's attack of a little incident in my own early modest political career. In the provincial legislature of which I was then a member, I had introduced a Bill which I regarded as of considerable importance, but it was one as to which several of my good friends seemed to entertain doubts. We were able to satisfy most of them that their doubts were not warranted and that the measure was a good one. So the day came that the measure had to be taken up. We had not a large majority at the time and a member or two more or less had to be carefully considered. There was one young man who was half Scotch and half Dutch; that is a combination which produces a large degree of determination, I might almost say, of obstinacy; and that good friend remained unconvinced. So we had to proceed with the debate with the possibility of his voting against us. Then an hon. gentleman on the other side rose and commenced an attack, as the hon. gentleman commenced yesterday and with almost equal violence. Before he had spent many minutes, my doubting friend came over to my side and he said, It's all right, Fielding, that fellow has fixed me. Now if there was a single doubting, hesitating member in the party which supports my right hon. friend in this House, the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) yesterday would undoubtedly have fixed him in his loyalty and devotion to the chief. That is the effect which I am sure it has had in the House, and I believe it will have outside.

The hon. gentleman, and the leader of the opposition also, devoted a considerable portion of time to the discussion, sometimes grave and sometimes humorous, of the circumstances under which two new ministers have been brought into the cabinet of my right hon. friend. Now one would have thought that this was not a most fruitful subject for discussion at this time. Some years ago an advertisement appeared in a London paper to this effect, that a man who had been very successful in business and was about to retire, offered for a small consideration to communicate to others the secret of his successful career. A small fee was asked, and a great many people applied; and to every one a slip of paper was sent with these words: 'My success is due to the fact that I have always tried to mind my own business and let other people do the same.' Now one might think that the selection of ministers for the cabinet was particularly the business of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, and that there was no particular reason why hon. gentlemen opposite should ask more than the usual formal ministerial explanations. But it appears they thought they should go more deeply into the matter, and should inquire into the motive that prompted the selection of this, that and the other man, and that they should pour out their sympathy upon various members of this House who had not been honoured with seats in the cabinet. Well, if my hon. friends opposite had not been restrained from that discussion by the motto of that successful business man, one might think they would be restrained by regard to the somewhat old proverb about certain people who live in glass houses not being the proper persons to throw stones.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have not had to do anything in the way of cabinet making for some considerable time, and there is small prospect that they will be called upon to engage in that honest enterprise and industry. Still they have had something to do in the way of promotion. It is not so long ago that they had occasion to select a gentleman who, to some extent, corresponds with the man who holds the rank and dignity of a minister of the Crown; and if it be right for them to inquire carefully into the circumstances under which a minister is brought into this House, and to sympathize with those who did not obtain places, we, not to be lacking in generous sympathy may devote a moment or two to inquiring how it was that the leader of the opposition came by the place which he now fills. Many hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that there are many men over here who had laboured faithfully in the ranks for ten or twelve years and yet they were ignored. Well, are there not many men over there who have laboured even longer than that and yet have been ignored by the Conservatives. Why, the hon. member for North Toronto asked, did not years of faithful labour count in this case? Did they count in the case of my hon. friend himself? He has laboured long, and I hope I may say, faithfully, in the vineyard; but when the time came, strange to say, though he had been in this House and laboured in and out in the cause of his party for many years, he was ignored, and the gentleman who sits beside him became a leader. I follow the methods of the discussion yesterday—Was it an insult to the hon. gentleman from North Toronto? Did he not measure up to the standard—again I am quoting the leader of the opposition—did he not measure up to the proper standard? Was he lacking in ability? Was he lacking in experience? Why was it that they passed over my distinguished friend, and selected as leader of the opposition a gentleman who came into this parliament many years later?

Mr. FOSTER. A conundrum?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a conundrum. Then there is my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who sits on the left of the member for North Toronto, and who had laboured in the vineyard much more than ten or twelve years. My hon. friend was in this House nearly a quarter of a century before the leader of the opposition came in. He had been a cabinet minister, he had been a close associate of Sir John A. Macdonald's. Why, Sir, I remember more than once, in my early days of public life, before I came into this House, when I tried to see Sir John A. Macdonald on public business, and it seemed to me that my hon. friend from Lanark was always going into see him, and I could not. He was a close friend of the great leader. He is an experienced public man. Did he not measure up to the standard ? Was he insulted by the fact that another gentleman was taken as leader of the opposition ? There is my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) sitting immediately behind the leader of the opposition, not many years the senior of the hon. gentleman in political record, but the senior in this respect, that he was chosen leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, and it might reasonably be supposed that when a leader was required for the party generally, the gentleman holding that position in the great province of Quebec would have been considered as fairly in the line of promotion. I do not know why my hon. friend was passed by. Would it be because he was leader of the province of Quebec, and was not acceptable in that respect ? I should be slow to think it. There is my genial and quiet and studious friend, the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) with a thousand qualifications the chief of which is his excellent good humour, on which I congratulate him. This hon. gentleman had also been labouring in the vineyard for a long time. He had been seventeen years in this House before the hon member for Carleton (Mr. R. L. Borden) came here at all. Did he fail to measure up to the proper standard ? Did he lack ability ? Did he lack integrity ? Did he lack qualification ? Why is it—observe, Sir, that I am merely following the example of yesterday—why is it that he was ignored ? One would suppose that his excellent qualities would have commended themselves to the members of the Conservative party when they assembled to select a leader. Was it again because, notwithstanding all these good qualities he came from the province of Quebec ? Well, we on this side, thank Heaven, do not care what province a man comes from, or to what race or creed he belongs. The Liberal party is big enough to take a man for the man's sake, regardless of his province, his race or his creed. Then there are others. There is one whom I have not the pleasure of seeing here to-day, but who was formerly very active in public affairs, I allude to the former member for the county of Pictou. Did he fail to measure up to the standard of ability, of integrity, of the other qualifications ? Certainly the hon. member for Pictou, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, was one of the great fighters of the Conservative party. Why is it then—again I am asking the question as they asked it yesterday—why is it that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was passed over in order that the hon. member for Carleton might become the leader of the Conservative party ?

Mr. FOSTER. He is coming.

Mr. FIELDING. He is coming? Well, I do not know whether he is coming or not. Whether he is coming as a leader or follower, the first point is that he shall come at all. I am not in the least depreciating the abilities of that gentleman, but I venture to say that if he is going to come back as the member for Pictou he has got to be a busier man in the matter of politics than he has been in the past few years. Then, there is my hon. friend the whip, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). I find that that hon. gentleman had been twelve years in this house before the hon. member for Carleton, Ontario, was called to come here at all. Nobody will question his fidelity; nobody will question his energy.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right; he leads the leader.

Mr. FIELDING. Just so. Nobody will question his industry, his energy, his fidelity to his party, and how is it that his twelve years of faithful labour in the vineyard were ignored and that this young and comparatively unknown man was taken to be the leader of the rising hosts of the Ontario Tories ? There are others. My hon. friend here mentions the name of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule). That hon. gentleman is not in his seat to-day. I am sorry he is not here. My hon. friend from Grey was nearly twenty years in this house before the hon. member for Carleton, Ontario appeared here at all. Why was he ignored ? Who will question his intelligence, who will question his knowledge of public affairs, who does not know that he is the head of a great organization which has done much for the Tory party of Ontario ? That hon. gentleman had a thousand claims to the position, but it appears that he did not measure up to the standard that was required. Was he insulted? Was it a gross offence to him that this comparatively new man was taken to be the leader of the party? But, there are others. There is my hon. friend the member for South York (Mr. Maclean). If there are those who think that that hon. gentleman has not the special capacity for the leadership he certainly is not among the number. That hon. gentleman surely has been a zealous member for his party. He has, in addition to the service he has rendered to the party in this House and on the platform, been a most zealous supporter of his party in the press. How is it that he was not recognized, how is it that he could not measure up to the standard which was necessary in this case? I see that we have with us, and I am glad he is here, the veteran member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) who has put in an appearance for the first time to-day. He has a record in this house of having been a faithful and energetic, and honourable man who is worthy of all respect, and I am glad to see him here with us, but I wonder whether it was an insult to him that he should be passed over because he failed to come up to the standard. I see in the corner there my respected old friend from Sunbury and Queens, (Mr. Wilmot). He has been a veteran in the fight, he was here for many years before the hon. member for Carleton, Ontario, and yet he has been ignored. In order that I may be just to the different sections of the Dominion I should mention the name of my hon. friend, the senior member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. Martin) who is an old veteran. Who will question the zeal of my hon. friend at all times whether the tunnel is up or not, and yet he seems to have been ignored and overlooked. It seems to me that for some extraordinary reason all these men—eminent men, able men, faithful men in the party—have failed to measure up to the standard required and they have had to be ignored.

Now, if some hon. gentleman will say that all this is not fair and generous criticism I will have to agree with him. But I say that it is just as fair, as sensible and as proper as the observations that were made by the hon. member for Carleton, Ontario and the hon. member for North Toronto as to the manner in which the Prime Minister exercised his right of selecting his own colleagues. The others, said the hon. member for North Toronto, were left to do the muck raking. To use the same illustration, these gentlemen, whom I have named are left to do the muck raking. This is the manner in which my hon. friends have referred to the hon. members who sit behind them.

Then, we had a discussion on the question of surpluses and in the course of that discussion it appears that the hon. leader of the opposition was induced to delve into some ancient history. He has been studying up the files of the Halifax newspapers of a quarter of a century ago and some of a later date. It is in some respects an interesting subject to study, but I wish to warn my hon. friend that there is dynamite in these files. I desire to warn him that there is danger and that if in his desire to establish some little inconsistency on the part of the Minister of Finance he should come across a report of a Liberal meeting at which he himself took part he may discover that the inconsistencies are not to be found all on one side of the house. Inconsistency is described by Ralph Waldo Emmerson as the bugaboo of little minds. If my hon. friend wishes to come within the classification of the philosopher I need not quarrel with him about it but I do not think we are much concerned with each other's consistency. We are not so much concerned with that which he or I did or said twenty or thirty years ago as we are concerned with what we say and do and are willing to do in our positions as public men in these early days of the new century.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend misunderstood me. I was citing it for the good sense it contained.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes—well, I was referring to a time when the hon. gentleman had good sense. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friends of the opposition have a strong dislike to any mention of surpluses. A surplus, when mentioned by a Liberal, seems to start them up at once to arms. Well, we must make allowance for the hon. gentlemen. They did not have very much to boast of in the way of surpluses in their own day, and it seems that they look with displeasure upon the record of their successors who, by whatever cause it may have been brought about, have been in the happy position of being able to present an excellent financial record to the country. I have here very briefly, because I do not wish to detain the house at any great length, a few summarized statements on the surplus question and I take two periods of eleven years. This government have been eleven years in power and I take eleven years of the period of our predecessors which is a fair comparison. I find that during the eleven years of Conservative government, prior to their retirement, they had total surpluses amounting to $9,594,000. But, then, they had deficits of over $12,339,000, so that they had an average deficit during the whole eleven years of $249,000. Now, I turn to the record of the last eleven years and I find that we have had, during these eleven years, making allowance for the one deficit which occurred at the beginning of our term, surpluses amounting to nearly $94,000,000. The total surplus is over $94,000,000 and after deducting $519,000 of deficit, we have a net surplus for that period of $93,626,000, an average of over $8,500,000 per annum.

The mere mention of these seems always to be unpleasant to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Reference has been made to the use to which surpluses might be put. We are very glad to invite the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to that also. The surplus in a country like Canada is understood to be the amount by which the revenue exceeds the charges on consolidated fund, which is the ordinary every day expenditure. But there are special expenditures; there are large expenditures on what is called capital account. Now we have taken these surpluses which have been very large and we have applied them to payments for what would otherwise have been an addition to the public debt. I find that for eleven years from 1886 to 1896, there were special expenditures outside of ordinary routine, amounting to a little over $80,000,000 above the ordinary charges. The Conservative government had to provide for these moneys, and how did they provide for them ? They provided for them by charging $62,000,000 of the $80,000,000 to the public debt account of the country and left that $62,000,000 to bear interest for future years. We have had in our eleven years of office larger charges of that character ; we have had to provide for capital and special expenditures amounting to $127,000,000 and of that $127,000,000 over and above the ordinary expenses of the country, we have provided out of our daily receipts every dollar, except $5,000,000. When the Conservative government with $80,000,000 of capital expenditure had to charge $62,000,000 to the public debt, and when you find that the present government with $127,000,000 capital expenditure have only added $5,000,000 to the public debt, I think that is a record to which our side may occasionally refer with pride, and we must make some allowance for hon. gentlemen opposite if the comparison is distasteful to them.

We are told that the taxation of the country has been enormously increased. The leader of the opposition and the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) described the amount of money collected in 1896 and the amount that is collectetd now, and they drew the inference that there was a tremendous burden resting upon the people. They did not tell the people, however, that whereas the percentage of duty and the total values of goods imported for the year—I have here the figures for 1882 in connection with some reference the hon. gentleman made yesterday to that year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What do you refer to ?

Mr. FIELDING. I was about to refer to the percentages of customs duties collected. Let it be sufficient to say that comparing the rate of customs taxation in 1896 and the rate of customs taxation last year there has been a substantial reduction in the rate of taxation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that referring to anything I said ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was the hon. member for North Toronto who spoke about the increased taxation, but I think the leader of the opposition also spoke about it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I said was that on a particular quantity of any article such as a yard of cotton which I took for illustration, owing to the increase of price the actual taxation paid to-day would be greater than it was years ago.

Mr. FIELDING. But if we took the total valuation of goods and the totals paid——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister understands.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I understand the point. If we take the total imports of goods, either including or excluding coin and bullion, you will find that there is a material reduction in the rate of taxation now as compared with 1896. The hon. gentleman conveyed the wrong impression that there had been an increase of taxation. True, there was some increase of taxation on a few articles of luxury, but upon the great mass of the common things used in the country there was a substantial reduction of the duties ; and indeed, that very reduction is one of the crimes laid at our door, because hon. gentlemen opposite used to take the ground that the tariff should be higher. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) took the total amount of taxation and he said that so much was collected in 1896 and so much more was collected last year, and therefore there is a great burden on the country. Well, let us get it down to the case of the individual man. John Jones is a labourer ; in 1896 he probably got $1 a day and the national policy did not make him rich; he was not likely to spend a great deal of money on extravagancies out of that wage, and he paid a very small amount of taxation at that time ; he could not afford to buy the goods and if he could not afford to buy the goods he did not have to pay the taxation. If he was forced to wear one coat when he ought to have two, he only paid the taxes on one coat ; if he had to use one barrel of flour where two were necessary for his family, and if flour were an imported article, he would only pay the tax on one barrel of flour in 1896. But times have changed. Now, John Jones probably gets $1.75 a day or $1.50 at least as a labourer; he can afford to wear two coats now; his family can have two barrels of flour, and so the customs returns show that the amount collected is larger. But ask John Jones which of these two years was the better for him and his family ; ask him if he wants to go back to 1896 when he paid less taxation because he could only afford the one coat and the one barrel of flour ; ask him whether he would not prefer the better days of 1906 when he paid more taxation into the customs and paid it voluntarily and cheerfully because it was an indication of his greater progress, of his steadier employment, of his higher wages, and of his advanced happiness in every way. Ask him and I think John Jones will answer that he prefers the existing conditions. If the government has been taxing the people enormously, if the fiscal policy of this country is imposing burdens on the people as the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Foster) would make out, one would naturally ask : Why does not the Conservative party try to change it. There was a time when they did seem to have a tariff policy of their own ; it was vague and indefinite but at all events there seemed to be a tariff issue between them and the government. Some years ago these gentlemen opposite were strong in empty and meaningless resolutions in favour of adequate protection. But, by and by, the agitation on the tarif question was crystallized, and this government after careful effort brought down a revised tariff. That was the moment to hear about adequate protection. Prior to that it was a mere abstract question, but now it has become concrete ; the government laid their tariff policy on the table of the House and hon. gentlemen were invited to criticise it. What happened ? These gentlemen opposite abandoned adequate protection and accepted the tariff policy of this government. Never was there a more complete surrender to the government in regard to the fiscal policy than that which took place when the last revised tariff was brought down. Hon. gentlemen opposite had no desire to continue the discussion ; they were ready to close the debate and go on with other business, and if there was a tariff debate at all it was because some hon. gentlemen on this side thought they would like to avail themselves of the opportunity to speak on the question. But it is not only in parliament that hon. gentlemen opposite have abandoned the tariff question ; it is not only here that they have flung adequate protection to the winds. The leader of the opposition, in the discharge of his duty—it was very proper that he should do so—recently made a tour of western Canada. When a party leader goes through the country to discuss public questions one would naturally expect that as there are greater questions and minor questions, he would give the more important questions priority. But, turn to the Toronto 'News,' to the letters of Mr. C. F. H., who cannot be regarded as a gentleman hostile to the leader of the opposition, who in fact is known to be in close sympathy with my hon. friend, and who always manages to say a good word for the leader of the opposition and his policy. In his summing up in the Toronto 'News' of the whole tour of the hon. gentleman in the west, 'C. F. H.'—though I have not the paper at hand, I think I can give the exact words—said : 'Two very delicate questions were for the most part skated over'—what were they ? 'the tariff and the Northwest school question.' Why, Sir, if any man in this House, any man on this side of the House at any rate, were asked to state what were the two biggest questions that have engaged the attention of this parliament since the general election, he would say that they were the tariff and the Northwest school question ; and yet the hon. gentleman, in the whole of that tour out west, of which his friends have said so much, confined his talk to all sorts of little questions. He talked of the Robbins Irrigation business a hundred or a thousand miles away from the scene of operations, but he did not talk of it at Medicine Hat where the facts were known.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that it was not discussed at that meeting?

Mr. FIELDING. No, but I said that the hon. gentleman did not discuss it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman knows that at some meetings I did not discuss the scandals at all, because that was done and done most effectivey by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron).

Mr. FIELDING. And to which member of my hon. friend's distinguished party did he commit the duty of talking of the tariff and the Northwest school question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I spoke of the tariff on several occasions.

Mr. FIELDING. For or against it?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For or against what? Why, I pointed out that this government had paid the Conservative administration of the past the most tremendous compliment that ever was paid to any party by denouncing for eighteen years the national policy and then coming into power and adopting it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend forgets that when the tariff policy of this government was brought down and laid on the table of this House the leader of the opposition of that day, the old genuine Tory leader Sir Charles Tupper, did not call it the National Policy, but said he could hear the wail coming up from the people in the manufacturing industries of the country to condemn this policy. He predicted ruin and destruction as the result of this policy, which was not the old national policy, but the wicked device of the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues. But, as the years rolled on and that policy was vindicated throughout the country as it has been, a different story was told.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask my hon. friend a question ? Did he or did he not, during the last session of parliament, when the tariff was under discussion repeatedly defend various items in it on the principle of protection?

Mr. FIELDING. The principle of protection has been in the tariff ever since I knew what a tariff was.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it there now?

Mr. FIELDING. It is there now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was or was not the principle denounced by the hon. gentleman's leader, and did his leader not promise absolutely to destroy protection?

Mr. FIELDING. He never did in my hearing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the hon. gentleman never seen that statement in any reports of his leader's speeches?

Mr. FIELDING. The policy of the Liberal party in tariff matters was proclaimed at the Liberal convention. That policy was to endeavour to reduce the tariff, but with due regard to existing industries, and that policy has been carried out. While the duties on some few articles of luxuries have been increased, those on the great common necessaries which the people consume have been subject to serious reductions. I will not weary the House with the details now; I brought down a list showing that in hundreds of items the tariff was reduced. It was reduced so much that the leader of the opposition of that day declared that it would ruin the industries of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you went to work to remodel it?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the tariff of to-day is not materially different from the tariff of 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. Which tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is perhaps thinking of the time when he brought in a second tariff in the same month and when he had not the courage to declare that it was the result of greater study and better knowledge on his part, but said that the changes were all corrections of clerical errors.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many items did you change?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know. If I got greater light and better information I would change every item in the tariff, and I would not blame it on the clerks either; I would take the responsibility myself. If the hon. gentleman goes back to the time when this tariff was introduced into the House and recalls the tale then told by his leader of that day, he will be ashamed any more to say that this government has continued the old National Policy.

Then my hon. friend had something to say about the French treaty, and I do not think he can be very greatly congratulated upon what he did say. He admitted, after he had made some progress in the discussion, that he did not know anything about it. Well, to an ordinary man it would seem that under such conditions it would have been the part of wisdom not to have said anything about it. But then my hon. friend is not an ordinary man; his mind is not an ordinary one. One who could compound the Halifax platitudes can hardly be described as an ordinary man.

Mr. FOSTER. Tell us that story you told down in Halifax.

Mr. FIELDING. So my hon. friend had to be permitted to blunder along and see what capital he could make out of the French treaty before he had any knowledge of its contents, and looking over at my respected friend the Minister of Agriculture he said: The Minister of Agriculture is a great temperance man; look at what he has done; he has reduced the duties on rum, the duties on gin, the duties on alcohol. When I ventured to say that that was a mistake, that there was no such reduction, even then my hon. friend was not content; at all events, he said, you have reduced the duties on champagne. He was not more successful there, for I was obliged to point out to him that the duties on champagne, as they appear in the French treaty, are the reduced duties as they were established by the old French treaty which was negotiated by Sir Charles Tupper, and which was brought down to this House, somewhat hesitatingly, I must say, by my excellent prohibitionist friend, the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who recommended it to the House. Now, the member for North Toronto was more cautious—I will do him the justice to say that. He discussed the general circumstances under which the old treaty was negotiated and the circumstances under which the present treaty has been negotiated, but he refrained, and properly refrained, from saying anything as to the merits of the treaty or its contents. I do not know whether this is a case where one can apply the old quotation as to a certain class of people rushing in where angels fear to tread. Perhaps it would not be proper for me to do so—first, because courtesy would not permit me to call the leader of the opposition a fool, and truth would not permit me to call the hon. member for North Toronto any angel.

Very much has been said from time to time regarding the Liberal platform. My hon. friends have made merry over it, but let me tell them this—and they cannot deny it—that we have a platform which has been carried out to a very much greater extent than political platforms are usually carried out. We have no difficulty in showing how the Liberal platform adopted in 1893 has been largely carried out. But apart from that, let me call attention to the fact that we have had to defend our action as to that platform throughout the country as well as in parliament. We have defended it in two general elections and are quite ready to defend it in a third. Hon. gentlemen opposite have stated again and again that this government has paid no attention to the Liberal platform. Well, we have had to render an account to the people on that point. We did render an account when we went before them in 1900. We then appealed to the people, and the popular verdict was that we had carried out our platform and policy to their entire satisfaction. We went again to the people in 1904; and despite the jeers of hon. gentlemen opposite, again the people said they were satisfied with the manner in which this government had carried out its pledges. And not only were Liberals satisfied, but old time Conservatives came and joined our ranks. There is one thing which

Liberals can say, and that is that they were not afraid of having a platform and did make a platform which met the approval of the mass of the people. We did not hesitate to call together the representatives of Liberal principles in order that we might prepare a platform which would suit the requirements of the country. But how is it with my hon. friends opposite? For some years we have had discussions among them as to how they might get a platform. Again and again we have had it announced that at some future time, the next summer or the next recess, some time in the early future, a great Conservative convention was to be held for the purpose of framing a platform. That convention, however, has never yet been held. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was reminded about his failure to call such a convention. Let me read to him an extract from one of the papers; and in order that I may not be charged with partisanship, I shall read from a Conservative paper. Here it is, in striking headlines:—

A Conservative convention is demanded by western men.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, 'demanded.' And demanded for what purpose? To draw up an advanced platform.

Winnipeg, September 18.

Yesterday Mr. R. L. Borden, leader of the Commons opposition, spent in Winnipeg, and was in conference most of the time with the leaders of the party in Winnipeg and Manitoba. A petition was presented to him demanding that he call a big Conservative convention to draw up a progressive and advanced platform.

They already had the Halifax platform, which had been published and scattered to the wide world. But that was not good enough. It was not liberal enough, broad enough and advanced enough. So these Conservatives met the hon. gentleman, and they met him—if not with a shot gun, with something very much like it. They wanted him, not to dictate the platform, but to get the party to make one. It was pointed out to my hon. friend that only by holding a big convention could proper enthusiasm be aroused and a platform, agreeable to both east and west, be formulated. But there was no platform, and I suppose that is the reason why there was not much enthusiasm.

The petition stated in plain terms that if the request were not granted the support of the party in Winnipeg and Manitoba and likely in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia would be withdrawn.

Mr. LALOR. Is that the 'Eye Opener'?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is the Ottawa 'Evening Journal,' edited by a gentleman who, jointly with the correspondent of the Toronto 'News,' may be described as the two closest political friends and apologists in journalism of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). At all events we have this condition of affairs. Th Liberals had sufficient faith in their leader and their principles and their ability to agree on questions of principle, to assemble together from ocean to ocean, in the city of Ottawa, under the shadow of parliament, and lay down the policy which they thought the country could adopt. And whatever hon. gentlemen opposite may say regarding that policy, this will stand to the credit of the Liberal party, that, according to the true principles of Liberalism they did not allow two or three men to get together in a dark chamber and devise something, and say that is to be the policy of our party. No, they gathered together the representatives of the mass of the people, the representatives of the democracy of Canada, and they made a platform which has been their guide from that day to this.

My hon. friend made some references to the Post Office Department, which calls for a passing notice. He said that he had just been out west, and had discovered that the postal service there, and he believed generally, was in a very inefficient condition. Well, if the service which is rendered to-day be inefficient, in Heaven's name what must have been the condition in 1896? There is no department of the government which has done more to improve the facilities and convenience of the Canadian people. I do not say that it has done all it should. In the speech from the Throne, we have the declaration that the surpluses which have been accumulating in that department, should and will be applied in securing more liberal accommodation for the people. But let us not omit to take notice of the tremendous progress which has been made. In 1893 or 1894, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will remember in one of his budget speeches he said that some portion of the Canadian people were clamouring for a two-cent instead of a three-cent rate, but that the country could not afford it. And so long as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) remained in power the country did not afford it. What was the condition of the Post Office Department at the close of the last year of Conservative administration? There was a deficit of about $650,000 on that year's operations, and there were accumulations of deficits of former years to an amount somewhat in excess of $650,000; and a vote had to be taken to clean up the old account and pay off the old deficits. But in 1896 these hon. gentlemen, who are supposed to possess in such an extraordinary degree the instinct of government, had to give place to other men—we are too modest to say better men. What then happened? I have already told you that there was an accumulated deficit in 1896 besides a deficit for the year. But what has been the result since? In 1907, instead of a deficit of $600,000 in the year and a three-cent rate, we have a two-cent rate in all Canada, we have reduced postage to the old country, we have reductions all around, and yet, at the close of the last year, the Post Office Department shows a surplus on the year of $1,440,000. That in itself is something to be proud of.

But that is not the whole record. Turn now to the question of accommodation. The hon. gentleman tells us that the accommodation provided for the people by the Post Office Department is entirely insufficient. Well, if it is insufficient, we will take good care that a more liberal policy is adopted in the future. But what are the facts? In 1896 there were 9,103 post offices in Canada; in 1907 there were 11,377 post offices in Canada. In 1896, the number of postal notes and money order offices was 1,310, and in 1907 the number was 9,091. In 1896 the post office savings banks numbered 755, and last year the number was 1,043. I will not detain the House with further figures though I could give similar comparisons with regard to the miles of travel, the number of letters carried, the number of articles carried and so on. But I think the figures I have given are enough for the purpose. If the hon. gentleman finds that the post office accommodation for the people in insufficient to-day, what must have been the condition of the country in 1896 in the light of the figures I have given ?

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has had something to say on the question of the provincial subsidies. In his speech at the Russell theatre the other night he said that I had had the audacity to speak of his action in British Columbia touching the subsidy to that province as an attempt to bribe the province. I said that, and I regret that I am obliged to adhere to the opinion I then expressed. There is no doubt in the world that the attitude of the hon. gentleman on that question was a most unfortunate, a most unhappy one, calculated to breed trouble amongst the several provinces of Canada. Let us glance at the history of these provincial subsidies. Twenty years ago an agitation began amongst the provinces for an increase of their allowances. The men engaged in Dominion affairs can easily imagine that it is not necessary to have a greater provincial revenue; but the men who had been engaged in the provincial legislatures —and there are many of them here—know how restricted those legislatures have been in their operations because of the lack of finances. I do not wish to discuss the merits of our system of provincial subsidies It is enough to say that all the provinces of the Dominion complained that the share which they received from the public treasury was insufficient to enable them to carry on their business and that they appealed to the Dominion government for a readjustment. When the Conservative government was in power. they declined to listen to that appeal. Years rolled on, and, even after the Liberal party came into power, there were difficulties in the way of meeting the wishes expressed by the provinces. But, after a time, this government said to the provincial premiers: If you are able to agree among yourselves as to the distribution of this money, perhaps we can meet your views. Now that was a very reasonable proposition. This subsidy question has been one of the most delicate with which public men have had to deal since the establishment of confederation. I remember very well that when what are called 'better terms' were granted in 1869, to Nova Scotia, there was a very strong feeling of hostility in Ontario. Ontario was too big a province to feel the small amount which was given to Nova Scotia, but it was strongly disposed to claim that the granting of the sum was a breach of faith,—that these subsidies were in the nature of a treaty and should not be disturbed except by common consent of the provinces. And, as years went on, and some grant was given—for good reasons or without good reasons—to one or other of the provinces, there was a feeling of jealousy, or rivalry; and no province has manifested that so strongly as the province of Ontario. Not that Ontario would care—as I have said—about the small sum involved. for Ontario is a great rich province, too big to think of that; but the men in Ontario took it as a matter of principle, that these subsidies were a treaty between the various provinces and should not be disturbed except by common consent. So, when we came to deal with this matter with the provincial government, we said: We do not want to make difficulties, to cause dissatisfaction and jealousy and rivalry. But if your provincial governments will come together and reach something like a unanimous agreement as to the distribution of this money, we will take the matter up and see what we can do for you. And to that end a provincial convention was held in this city about a year ago. As a result of that conference, a scale of payments was adopted for the several provinces. Now, I turn to the attitude of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in British Columbia. He goes to British Columbia and tries to disturb the arrangement made at that conference amongst the provincial premiers of the Dominion. I complain of the hon. gentleman in this, not only that what he did was a disturbance in itself, but that he conveyed the impression to the people of British Columbia that this was a quarrel between the British Columbia government and the Liberal party. He tried to lead the people of British Columbia to believe that they were being oppressed by the government of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and that when the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. R. L. Borden) and his friends came into power, they would grant relief from this thing that the Liberals were doing. That is the chief offence that I lay at his door. He knows he was not fair, he was not candid in so speaking. Who composed this convention? Who agreed to this scheme of distribution? Foremost among them was the Prime Minister of the Conservative province of Ontario. All the governments of the Dominion are not in harmony with the Dominion government of to-day; and I suppose that it is not at all likely that all the provincial governments will be in harmony with the Dominion government at any time. We had at this conference in Ottawa, Mr. Whitney, the Premier of Ontario; Mr. Foy, Attorney General; Mr. Matheson, Treasurer. We had Mr. Roblin, premier and Mr. Colin Campbell, Attorney General, representing the great Conservative province of Manitoba. We had also, representing the other provinces, their premiers and ministers whose names are well known. Mr. McBride was here to represent British Columbia, and he is the head of a Conservative government. He came forward with an apparent determination that nothing you could do for him would satisfy him. It is evident that he had not come to get an arrangement for British Columbia; he had come there to find a grievance. He did not want to agree to anything that the conference would agree upon. He said: I want a Royal Commission to look into the case of British Columbia. Now, there was no reason why we should grant a Royal Commission to one province and not to another. This was a matter, as I have said, which had been agitated for twenty years. The provinces needed the money. The time was ripe, not for commissions and further inquiry, but for action. If it was right that Mr. McBride should be given a commission for British Columbia, why should not Mr. Whitney say: I am not satisfied with this arrangement, and I want a Royal Commission to investigate for Ontario? And so with the Premier of Quebec, the Premier of Nova Scotia and the rest. To grant a commission meant a disturbance of the arrangement. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said yesterday that no commission was better qualified to deal with that question than were the men at that conference. They were men who had a general knowledge of the affairs of the Dominion. They were not prompted by an ungenerous spirit towards British Columbia. I can speak of that with the most perfect certainty. I have said elsewhere, and I repeat now, that I went to some of the members of the conference before it assembled, and asked them to consider British Columbia's claims as favourably as possible, to strain a point in her favour, and treat her generously. And I am glad to say that they were disposed to do that, and that a proposition was made to treat British Columbia generously.

Mr. FIELDING.

I do not want to pander to any particular section of the Dominion. British Columbia is a big, rich province. Her people are not a party of children, and I do not believe they need a Baby Act for their protection. They came into confederation of their own free will, and if they were asked to live up to their bargain they would have no right to complain. But when the whole condition was known, and the other provinces were disposed to treat them generously and liberally, the premier of British Columbia should have responded and accepted the consideration with which he was treated. He wanted a commission, and the matter was considered. The conference considered it, Mr. Whitney considered it. Again I say, the leader of the opposition has done his best to make the people of British Columbia believe that this was a quarrel between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the province of British Columbia. It was not. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister took no part in that transaction that was not heartily supported by the Hon. J. P. Whitney and all the other Conservatives present at that conference. And that conference, not a Liberal conference, but made up in the manner I have described, having heard Mr. McBride's argument, having heard what he could say, passed this resolution:

That in the opinion of the conference it is inadvisable that a claim in the way of subsidies of any province be referred to arbitration.

Why should the claim of one province be referred to arbitration? Why should we give arbitration to British Columbia when the province of New Brunswick might think it could present even stronger claims.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. New Brunswick did have an arbitration, so did Nova Scotia.

Mr. FIELDING. Not as respects subsidies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In respect of claims.

Mr. FIELDING. I am talking of subsidies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am talking of the entire subject.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has no right to interpose other questions in connection with subsidies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask what is the difference in principle?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the difference in principle. If the province of Nova Scotia had a claim, it was a claim for property, and was a proper subject for arbitration. A claim for property of any province in the Dominion may be claim for arbitration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was not a claim for property it was a claim for money.

Mr. FIELDING. It was a claim for property which the Dominion of Canada had taken over and insufficiently paid for.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it not a money claim ?

Mr. FIELDING. It was a money claim for property. But the claim of Mr. McBride was a money claim, not for property. Does my hon. friend see the difference ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I do not.

Mr. FIELDING. Then I am sorry for it. I think if the Dominion of Canada had a property transaction with any individual, that individual might claim the right to go to a court or an arbitration and see whether he could get justice, and if the arbitration or court awarded him $100,000, no province in the Dominion, as a province, would feel it had thereby any grievance. But if there was a treaty as to subsidies between the provinces, and then some scheme was divised whereby one province would get something and the other province would get nothing, that is quite a different transaction.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it depended on a treaty, how could you alter that treaty without the consent of British Columbia ?

Mr. FIELDING. I say you could not insist upon a large number of provinces coming to an absolute agreement, you could not expect it. We took nothing away from British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman does not understand my question. If the hon. gentleman puts the case as that of a treaty, how can you alter that treaty without the consent of British Columbia?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is proposing to do it absolutely without the consent of the other provinces. I say the attitude of the Dominion government in the matter was absolutely fair. We said to these provinces : Now, there may not be absolute harmony among you, although we wish there could be. But whatever you agree upon, try to be unanimous. If you can agree as to what is fair and reasonable we will take the responsibility of asking for the legislation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did the province of British Columbia, through its Prime Minister, agree that the question as to its right to arbitration should be determined by the Prime Ministers of the other provinces?

Mr. FIELDING. There was no question as to the right of British Columbia to arbitration. How can the hon. gentleman say there was any question of right ? He may give any body a privilege if he likes, but there was never any question of the right of British Columbia to arbitration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the minister to say that the question was left to the members of the conference composed of the prime ministers and their colleagues from all the provinces; that question was left to them to determine, and they decided adversely to the province of British Columbia. Now what I do not know, and what I am desirous of ascertaining is, whether the province of British Columbia, through its Prime Minister, consented that that question should be left to the adjudication of these gentlemen, and to be bound by their determination ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it did not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought not.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not said anything to the contrary. The position the government took was this : This is a delicate question as between the provinces. We remembered past differences, as to which I have already called the attention of the House. Now, we said, we are not going to get into a quarrel with you on this matter ; but if you can come to something like an understanding—we would like it to be unanimous—then we will take the responsibility of asking parliament to vote this large amount of money. We found in the end that the hon. gentleman who represented British Columbia apparently was not satisfied with anything except the appointment of a commission. Now I understand that there is no more right why that gentleman should ask for a commission than that the premier of Ontario should ask for a commission. They had equal rights. They both came into the union voluntarily ; and therefore I say that the hon. gentleman's idea that British Columbia had a right to get a commission is absolutely without foundation. This question had been dragging along for twenty years. The provinces represented to us that they needed the money, and there was almost an unanimous agreement. When Mr. McBride demanded a commission for British Columbia, if we had granted him that commission we would have been obliged in fairness to grant it to any other province in the Dominion who asked for it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did any other province ask for it ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, the other provinces said: We do not want commissions, we do not want delay, we have been delaying for twenty years, we want action, we want the money. That is what the other provinces said, not what we said.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have they got it yet ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and they are delighted. The gladest province of all is the province of Ontario, I am quite sure. I had a very polite acknowledgment from my friend, the premier of Ontario, who said he was very glad to receive the money ; no doubt they all were. It was no longer a time for delays for inquiries, the time had arrived for action. Mr. McBride's proposition was in effect to fling the whole matter to the winds and leave it where it had been for ten, fifteen or twenty years. And the government said, Mr. Whitney said, Mr. Foy said, Mr. Matheson said, Mr. Roblin said, Mr. Colin Campbell said, and all the others said: We will have no more delay, we will not consent to a commission taking up this matter, we will accept this scheme, we will waive these objections—and Mr. Whitney filed something like a protest to them—we will waive these objections, we want the thing settled. And that settlement which was made, not between my right hon. friend and British Columbia, that settlement which was made as much by Mr. Whitney and the other Conservative gentlemen as it was by me—that is the settlement that the hon. gentleman is trying to set aside. I say that the action of that hon. gentleman was a breach of faith with Ontario, a breach of faith with Quebec, a breach of faith with New Brunswick, a breach of faith with Prince Edward Island, a breach of faith with Manitoba, a breach of faith with Saskatchewan, a breach of faith with Alberta.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you forgetting Nova Scotia ?

Mr. FIELDING. I say the attitude of that gentleman was a breach of faith with all these provinces, and that as a public man he should have been willing to act in the interests of harmony instead of stirring up difficulty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? There was some reference made by me yesterday with regard to the Imperial Act, and I understood I was under some misapprehension, from an observation made by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister of Finance be good enough to explain whether any change was made in that Act in its actual drafting, and what the change was ? I may have been misled by inaccurate newspaper reports.

Mr. FIELDING. If I remember right, the hon. gentleman thought that the expression 'final settlement' had been put in the Act, and then stricken out. That was incorrect. That was never in the Act. It is in the address adopted by this House. Of course, no Act of parliament can be final or unalterable, least of all an Act of the imperial parliament which is the paramount parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is the same as other parliaments in that respect, I should say.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, within its proper functions, but this Act contains as a schedule the address of this House. The Act does not say in the enacting clause that it is 'final and unalterable,' but the schedule which is attached and which is a declaration of what this parliament wished and declared and upon which the Act was founded is exactly as it was sent from this House and it does include the expression 'final and unalterable.' The difference between the Bill as first introduced and the Bill as it was finally passed is that in the original Bill, owing to a circumstance which I am not called upon to enter into at this moment, the schedule was not included, but when the Bill was finally disposed of the schedule was put in in order that there should be attached to the Act the declaration which this parliament made that, at all events, as far as we were concerned, the settlement was 'final and unalterable.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I gathered from what was reported to have been said in the British House of Commons that the Bill as proposed by this government to the imperial government did contain in the body of it the phrase 'final and unalterable.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING. No, as a matter of fact we did not propose any Bill. We sent over the address of the parliament of Canada and it was left to the proper officials of the Colonial office and the parliamentary draughtsman to prepare the legislation. We did not prepare any Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did not the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies make some allusion to some change in that regard?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not quite catch the purport of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Winston Churchill, when he introduced the Bill or at the second reading made some allusion to that change.

Mr. FIELDING. No, we never proposed any Bill; we simply sent over the address which contained the words 'final and unalterable.' In the original Bill the schedule was not attached, but the Bill was amended in the end by the House of Lords by attaching the schedule; so that, while the words 'final and unalterable' are not to be found in the enacting clause they are to be found in the schedule which is attached and which says that in so far as the parliament of Canada is concerned it was designed to be final and unalterable.

In consequence of some references which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister made to this question yesterday the hon. member for North Toronto attacked him for what he called a compact with Mercier. The hon. member for North Toronto said that my right hon. friend had made a compact with the late Hon. Mr. Mercier to this effect that if the province of Quebec would give my right hon. friend a majority he would see that the province of Quebec got an increased subsidy. That is the statement the hon. gentleman made yesterday. Now, he has given us no evidence of any such compact, and I am bound to say that while I do not wish to discredit the hon. gentleman too much I would like to have some evidence of a compact because I have never seen it. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he is labouring under a delusion. As in the case of the hon. gentleman who sits beside him in dealing with the French treaty the hon gentleman (Mr. Foster) had not taken the trouble to get the facts, because if he had he would not have said that my right hon. friend had made a compact with Mercier. Anybody hearing the hon. member for North Toronto yesterday would assume that the question under consideration was that of an allowance to the province of Quebec; that it was a question between my right hon. friend and the province of Quebec. I want to tell my hon. friend that there never was such a question as that referred to by my hon. friend of granting a subsidy to the province of Quebec. The subject referred to was a proposal to grant subsidies to all the provinces of the Dominion. Therefore, that which he has described as a compact with Mercier in Quebec was as much a compact with Ontario and with the other provinces of the Dominion. But my hon. friend unfairly described it as a compact with Mercier for the special benefit of the province of Quebec. I think he spoke without a knowledge of the facts, and if he looks into it he will see that I am correct in saying that there was no compact with Mercier, and that any transaction, any communication, any discussion in that regard between my right hon. friend and the late Hon. Mr. Mercier had reference not to something for Quebec only, but to an equitable distribution among all the provinces in the Dominion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then there was a compact ?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend says so. I have asked him to produce the evidence. I do not know that there was.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the hon. gentleman said there was.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what my hon. friend may call a compact. I remember seeing it stated that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said that he approved of the resolutions which were adopted by the Quebec conference. If that makes a compact, then it was a compact with Mercier, with Mowat, with Felding and with all the provincial premiers of that day. If my hon. friend had said that the crime of my right hon. friend was that he was willing to add to the subsidies of all the provinces I would have no complaint to make. But his statement was that this was a compact with Mercier for the special benefit of the province of Quebec.

Now, I have been occupying the time of the House too long, I am afraid.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition had something to say about the Quebec bridge and he said it had always been a marvel to everybody that this government had made this arrangement with a company to build the Quebec bridge. A marvel to everybody ! Nobody could understand it ! It was not a marvel to the hon. gentleman on October 22, 1903, when the record of this parliament shows that on that day the project to which he refers was brought into this House and when the hon. gentleman allowed it to pass without a single word of complaint. It passed unanimously. It became an expression of the whole parliament of Canada and not of this government only. Then the hon. gentleman went down to Quebec and at a public banquet that was given to him there he took credit to himself for co-operating with this government in bringing about the construction of the Quebec bridge. Well, the bridge, of course, has gone down and we can all be wise after the event. My hon. friend has discovered that he marvelled much, but the record shows that he did not marvel when the Act passed. I want to warn my hon. friend against this weakness that he has of allowing things to pass without opposition—very often supporting them—going out and taking credit for them, and then, when something unexpected happens, turning around and condemning the government for the thing he supported. I think my hon. friend should guard against that.

There was one important question that the hon. gentleman discussed towards the close of his speech, and I must say that he did so in rather more temperate terms than usual. It was the question of corruption at elections. I want to say that when that hon. gentleman, or any other hon. gentleman in this House, claims that there should be some improvement in our election laws in order that we may avoid such things as have happened too often, as has been shown in the disclosures of our election trials, I am most heartily with him, and if my hon. friend had taken that ground, if he had recognized the situation frankly—if he had come to this parliament and gone to his supporters and said there has been looseness in this respect, men on both sides have committed faults, there has been a lack of careful reflection, many men have gone into elections in a way they should not have done, both sides have been guilty and we should unite in making the conditions better—that would have been a position which we could all commend. But, has he pursued that course? Has he not gone through the length and breadth of the land and endeavoured to convey the impression that the Liberal party was the party of corruption and the Conservative party the party of purity? That is the inference to be drawn from the attitude of the hon. gentleman. It was not a fair inference, it was not generous, it was not accurate. We need not fear comparison with the Conservative party in the matter of election trials. Unfortunately, too many men have allowed their zeal to outrun their judgment and have committed acts in connection with elections which do them no credit and which we should all regret. Did all these thing occur on the Liberal side? If the records be examined it will be found that of the men who have been unseated in this parliament of Canada from confederation down, the numbers stand about half Liberals and half Conservatives. One party or the other, I forget which, had two or three more than the other party, perhaps it was the Liberals. But, compare that statement with the inferences to be drawn from the hon. gentleman's speeches and from the attitude of the Conservative press. If time permitted I could give the record of all the men who have been unseated in the Tory party, but let me take a few of the more eminent. Sir John Abbott, a Prime Minister, was unseated, Sir Hector Langevin was unseated, Sir Charles Tupper was unseated, Sir John Macdonald was unseated twice, and in the case of the Kingston election the judges reported there was gross corruption throughout the whole election. If time permitted I might give a longer list, but all I desire to call attention to is that this inference that the corruption has been all on the Liberal side and that there has been none on the Conservative side is not fair, and is not calculated to advance the interests of reform. I think my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was unseated——

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. FIELDING. Then I take it back. But I can tell him that the gentleman who sits on his right (Mr. Foster) was unseated in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. TAYLOR. Another prominent man unseated was the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but he got back with three times the majority he had before.

Mr. TAYLOR. He used three times as much money.

Mr. FIELDING. I am going to have a word about that when we make comparisons. There is this to be said: that the Minister of Finance went into the fight; he challenged his opponents to do their best; he went through it to the end and the record of the case is before the country, and the judges recorded it as their opinion that not a single act of corruption direct or indirect applying to the Minister of Finance was proven. But I must not forget my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Who would have thought as you heard him denounce corruption last night, that he ever could have been unseated. It is a good many years ago I admit——

Mr. FOSTER. That was a very pure election.

Mr. FIELDING. Was it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, we wil see about that. The statement made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) obliges me to say something that I perhaps would not have said otherwise, for I do not like going into these old things. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was elected and the usual proceedings of an election trial took place. One witness testified as to a certain prominent gentleman who for convenience I shall call John Doe, but who my hon. friend knows by another name. Mr. John Doe's name was mentioned in the proceedings; a witness testified that he met John Doe on the train and that he suggested to John Doe that it would be a nice thing to have a little money in a certain parish, and John Doe asked the witness if he would handle it for him, and a day or two afterwards John Doe gave the witness $80 for that little parish and afterwards he gave another $20. But the witness did not tell more than that; the court adjourned and the following morning we had a fine illustration of the case of Davy Crocket and the coon. You know the old story is that Davy was such a good shot that the moment he pointed the gun the coon said: 'Don't shoot I'll come down.' And so the morning after the mention of John Doe's name the solicitors for the hon. member (Mr. Foster) came to the court and said: For Heaven's sake don't go any further, we will throw up the sponge.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend vouch for the literal accuracy of his words?

Mr. FIELDING. In all things except as to the name of John Doe. My hon. friend does not wish me to give the real name of John Doe because he knows him as well as I do. But the Minister of Finance acted differently. When it was shown that some man in over zeal had paid a fellow $4 or $5 for his vote, the Minister of Finance did not say: For God's sake stop the trial. The Minister of Finance said: Go right on, if there is anything wrong about this election let us see what it is, let us know all about. The member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who says he is not afraid of the judgment of the people seemed to be so much afraid of the judgment of that court that he would not go on with the trial.

Mr. LALOR. I suppose the Minister of Finance answered all questions that were asked him ?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not hear the hon. gentleman. My hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) adds so much to the wisdom of the House generally that I would like to know what he is saying.

Mr. LALOR. In his examination did the Minister of Finance answer all questions asked him ?

Mr. FIELDING. I answered every question in relation to my election certainly. I answered every question which the judges said was a proper question.

Mr. LALOR. And you added that your counsel would not permit you to answer others.

Mr. FIELDING. I say I answered every question which the judges ruled was a proper question. Is that right ? But I want to say a word more about John Doe. Now, what became of John Doe ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the question.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the question. Any one who heard the hon. member (Mr. Foster) denounce corruption yesterday ; any one who saw him point at my right hon. friend and declare that he kept corruptionists in the service and put corruptionsts in the service, would expect that John Doe must have been consigned to the penitentiary in the days when my hon. friend (Mr Foster) was in power. But John Doe did not go to the penitentiary. John Doe was appointed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to one of the most lucrative offices in the province of New Brunswick. Now, I do not refer to these things by way of recrimination. I say that every man who knows anything of the public life of our country knows that some men, and good men too, men who in the ordinary relations of life are good men, have allowed their zeal in politics to overthrow their judgment and they have done foolish and improper and corrupt things. And if we will fairly recognize the fact on both sides that such is the situation, and without trying to put the responsibility on others endeavour to bring about a better state of things, a better election law and purer elections, we will deserve and receive the commendation of the people. But, Sir, those who approach that question in a spirit of hypocrisy, those who pretend that it is all purity on the Conservative side and corruption on the Liberal side, they will not receive the commendation of the people of Canada.

A word or two about Colchester. I do not object to my hon. friends opposite having a measure of joy over their capture of the seat. As the game of politics is played they are entitled to that. But they had better not rejoice too much. Is it not something like the Dutch taking Holland ? With one or two exceptions Colchester has been Conservative for thirty years. This is the record : in 1874 Colchester was Conservative, was Conservative by 116. In 1878 Colchester was Conservative by 376, in 1882 Colchester was Conservative by 435, in 1887 Colchester was Conservative by 627, in 1891 Colchester was Conservative by 803, in 1896 Colchester was Conservative by 177, and in 1897 the Liberals squeezed in with a majority of 6, and in 1904 the late member was elected by a majority of 191. There is no county in Nova Scotia that I regarded as more doubtful than Colchester. It has been historically a Conservative county ; it was a miracle that we carried the whole eighteen counties in Nova Scotia in 1904 ; it might be too much to expect it could be done again. I am not surprised or disturbed by the result in Colchester ; I knew it was a very risky county and we were prepared to take the risk. My hon. friend spoke of changes in the public opinion of the country. When I was in Colchester I did not see so much indication of change, except that I found some people who were complaining about economies on the Intercolonial Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I found that the efforts in the direction of economy which were so vigorously employed by my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) and which are being followed by his successor, seemed to get upon the nerves of a good many people there, and that was the only indication of displeasure I found. I had intimations that if certain things could be done, that if we would not insist so much upon economy and efficiency, perhaps a section of the people would feel more kindly towards us. However, we could not agree to that, and they in the exercise of their rights voted against us. I found no manifestation of change in public opinion in Colchester other than that. So I do not think our hon. friends need imagine that they have a great deal to hope for in Nova Scotia. If my hon. friend cares to look into the political situation in Nova Scotia, say for the last three years and a few months, he will find this interesting fact, that the people of Nova Scotia have been called upon to elect either to parliament or the legislature within that period sixty-two members and that they have elected one who calls himself an Independent Liberal, six who were willing to call themselves Conservatives, and fifty-five Liberals. If my hon. friend has no better hope of that political change which he thinks is going to take place in the country than is to be found in Nova Scotia, then he deserves our sincere sympathy and pity.

Nor need he look for it throughout the Dominion at large. We have had since the general election thirty-eight by-elections in Canada, and of these twenty-nine have been carried by gentlemen who call themselves Liberals. There are one or two who may not see eye to eye with us; but of the whole number elected, I think I am correct in saying that there are only six or seven who are willing to call themselves Conservatives. In these figures I see very little indication of the coming change which our hon. friends opposite are so fond of talking about. Why should we regard seriously these boasts of theirs? Have we not heard our hon. friends proclaim in the past that they were going to sweep the country? I believe, Sir, that the people of this country can be trusted to deal fairly between this government and this opposition—a party which at one time was a constructive party, and which with all its faults did much for the building up of Canada, but which seems to have become a party of obstructionists. They obstructed the Grand Trunk Pacific for months, and are now tumbling over each other to say that they never opposed it at all; they obstructed the British preference for many years, and now wish to claim a share in it; they obstructed the tariff policy of this government for many years, and now find it to be so good that they hardly venture to assail it in parliament, and when they go to the west they skate over it as they do over the Northwest school question. The intelligent people of this conutry will weave into the hon. gentleman's Halifax platform the record of the Conservative administrations supported by the hon. gentlemen who sit with him, and will compare that with the record of eleven years of good Liberal government during which Canada has enjoyed as never before the blessings of peace, progress and prosperity.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. R. R. Hall) on his selection on this occasion to move the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. I am afraid that I cannot congratulate those hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who have followed him, on the subjects which they have introduced into the discussion. The well-merited rebuke which was administered to the First Minister last night by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) I fully re-echo, and the speech of the hon. Finance Minister. who has just taken his seat, has not been much different from that of his leader. I propose to confine myself largely to the matter in hand. I find quite sufficient in the speech from the Throne to occupy all the time at my disposal, and I trust that before I close I shall have an opportunity of pointing out to the Finance Minister what I conceive to be his duty on this occasion, which he has shamelessly avoided, and I think brought disrespect to the office he holds. The country, Sir, expected a different speech from the Finance Minister on such an occasion as this. He spent the first half hour of his address in suggesting who might be selected from the opposition to lead it. He told about the conversion in Nova Scotia of a man who was half Scotch and half Dutch. I should have judged, Mr. Speaker, that he was half Scotch and half soda, from the action he took on that occasion. I do not propose to pay much attention to the pleasantries with which the hon. gentleman has entertained that side of the House. These gentlemen are easily pleased, and they showed by their applause that they entered fully into the arguments of the Finance Minister when he was dealing what they supposed to be slashing blows at members of the Conservative party. If the hon. gentleman thinks he has reasonably and wisely discussed the speech from the Throne, I think that when he reads his speech to-morrow in cold type, he will be very much dissatisfied with the result. These times are not altogether suitable for levity, Mr. Speaker. When I heard the First Minister yesterday and the Finance Minister to-day speaking as they did, it seemed to me that they were very much in the position of Nero who fiddled while Rome was burning. These gentlemen made light of the situation; they did not see anything serious in it, and they thus made ridiculous what they endeavoured to bring before the country in the speech from the Throne.

Now, the first paragraph in the speech from the Throne sets out the great prosperity which this country enjoys. Mr. Speaker, there may be two sides to that statement. I for one do not see any great prosperity in the country at the present moment. What we expected to hear from the Finance Minister in regard to that was something quite different from what we did hear. We expected explanations from him on certain points which I shall have the privilege of calling his attention to before I take my seat. These explanations the country was looking for, but the country will search his speech in vain to find. I took the opportunity last evening of quietly reminding the Finance Minister that I would bring up one or two of what I consider important matters referred to in the speech from the Throne; but he has altogether avoided allusion to these matters. I do not, however, feel that I would be doing justice to my constituency, my province or my country, if on this occasion I did not mention the most pertinent items in that speech. With regard to the trade of the country, on which the hon. member for West Peterborough and the Minister of Finance have dilated so freely, if you read the figures, you will not, if you are a business man, come to the conclusion that they are very reassuring. On the contrary, you will find in them subject for grave doubt, misapprehension and distrust as to whither this country is going.

Let us take up for a moment or two the Trade Returns recently published. I have here the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce down to August, 1907. I shall not weary the House with many figures but simply with a few which constitute a portion of my text. Take the figures beginning at 1900. The total imports of Canada were :

1901	177,700,694
1902	196,480,190
1903	224,813,719
1904	243,590,019
1905	251,617,119
1906	283,282,204
1907	330,770,281

And for the twelve months ending August 1907, $361,283,095. Then look at the exports for that same length of time. The exports for 1900 were $186,433,212, showing a balance of trade to our credit of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. In the following year they were $196,000,000, still showing a large balance in trade in our favour. In 1902 they were $21,640,286. And so on down through the years I have read until you come to the concluding year I have mentioned when our exports were $269,225,019. What therefore do we find ? We find that under the financial policy of this government we have bought the enormous total of $121,467,844 more than we have sold. When a business man examines his yearly returns, he works out what he has sold and not what he has bought, on which to reckon his profits. It seems to me that the reckless policy which the hon. gentleman is persuing is going to bring disaster, if disaster has not already begun in this country. $121,000,000 more bought than sold. Did any merchant or manufacturer ever contemplate with satisfaction a condition in which he had bought half more than he sold ? Our profits are made on what we sell and not on what we buy. These hon. gentlemen speak glibly of our trade amounting to $644,000,000. But our trade is simply our exports of about $250,000,000 ; and after we have sent out all our beef, cheese, butter and other products, we have to put our hands into our pockets and pay out $120,000,000 in cash to meet the balance. Is that good business ? Does that look like serving the interests of the country ? I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he has submitted his statement recently to any good banker. If not, I should advise him to do so at the earliest possible moment. If he can get a banker of any good standing in the country to tell him that it is a good balance sheet, I should like to know it. I never saw a business statement from a business firm, which would be regarded with satisfaction, if it showed that the imports were $120,000,000 more than the exports. If the hon. gentleman finds any comfort in that and thinks it is going to satisfy the public, I think he is very much mistaken. We have listened in vain for either the First Minister or the Minister of Finance to touch upon the important subject of the financial stringency, mentioned in the speech from the Throne. I thought that the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), when he spoke for an hour and a half, would have found time to say something about it, but he did not. He spoke of all sorts of questions in and out of the House and indulged in considerable levity, but although the speech from the Throne adverts to the stringency which is upon the country to-day, our Minister of Finance has nothing to say about it, has no panacea to offer, no advice to give, but treats it as a matter beneath notice. But there are some people who will not be satisfied with that kind of treatment. Some explanation will be called for from the Finance Minister and from some of those around him on this question. I do not think that things are quite as rosy as he depicts them. True the government has had things pretty much its own way the past few years, thanks to the financial policy started by the late Sir John Macdonald in 1878. Thanks to that policy the industries of this country were solidly planted, and the present government has had the benefit of the development which that policy started and which had been in operation several years when this government took office. This government came in when things were ready for the up grade through the development of the west and of the factories in the east, and for several years they have been ascending the hill of prosperity. They are yet on the hill of prosperity but they are on a toboggan, and if they do not come down a good deal quicker than they went up, I am no judge of present indications. There is going to be a mighty fall. The collapse of the Quebec bridge is but emblematic of the financial crash which the Finance Minister will have about his ears within two years time. That is a serious statement to make, and I do not make it without a good deal of thought. I believe that I am repeating what is in the minds of many financial men in this country. When the Finance Minister flits to and fro, offering financial help to banks which they never asked and which they refuse to accept, he is drawing a red herring across the trail. The people have lost faith in the government and its financial policy and not without good reason. Never did any government in this country court financial ruin to the extent this government has done. Our expenditures have increased three-fold in the last few years. They have jumped from $45,000,000 in 1896, when they took office, to the amount of $136,000,000 last session. Turning up the Public Accounts, which has just been placed in our hands, I find on page 81 that within the next two years, or a little over, upwards of $100,000,000 of loans are falling due, which this government will have to meet. We have not heard a word from the minister as to how he proposes to raise the money. We are not aware that he has had the business foresight to look a little ahead. We have not been informed how he met the loan due last May or how he proposes to meet the loans falling due in the near future. Any business man would look ahead, but we have not heard from the Finance Minister that he has done so. It is just that lack of faith in him which has caused the stringency. The banks, some of them, took the precaution over a year ago to draw in and curtail and lay up reserves. Has this government done that? Not a bit of it. They have rushed head on, and now they are up against it. They are on the toboggan; and, if I am not mistaken, they are going to come down with such a crash as this country has never seen before. You say: Oh, you are in a pessimistic mood. I am in a pessimistic mood with regard to this government, but not with regard to our financial institutions which seem to be worrying the Minister of Finance. He told us of the immense prosperity of Canada, and quoted from the paper which I hold in my hand, but I wonder if he saw last night's 'News,' with this heading:

> Assistance for starving men sent by the House of Industry and many kind-hearted citizens.
> Bags of bread, sandwiches and cake were distributed Saturday evening. City to be asked to assist.
> The 'News' will insert situations wanted and help wanted advertisements free of charge.

Has the Minister of Finance heard of any thing of that kind yet? We are up against it in Ontario, and I want to tell him that, if it has not struck them in his province down by the sea, it is going to be there before long. We are up against it hard in this country now, and the minister's boasted prosperity has vanished. Take up any paper published in any town or city in Ontario that does an industrial business of any size, and see what it says of the conditions. Men are walking the streets. I had a man come into my office the day before I left home—an able bodied, hearty, healthy Englishman. He had canvassed every factory in Brantford for work. He had travelled to Toronto and Oshawa and had spent three weeks in an earnest endeavour to find a job, and he said to me: Mr. Cockshutt, what am I going to do? I can't find a piece of work in any of these places that I can do.' There are hundreds walking the streets of our cities to-day. The Minister of Finance ought to know, if he does not, that his vaunted prosperity has vanished. At the present time we are up against a financial problem in this country that is most serious.

Mr. COCKSHUTT.

And these hon. gentlemen opposite are like Nero, fiddling while the city burns—they leave untouched the pressing problems which the people have to face. Two sessions ago, they undertook to probe the insurance question. And what have they done? They have created distrust in the mind of every policy-holder in this country, and have created a disturbance with regard to the directorates of almost all these companies. They have left the insurance business paralyzed for upwards of twelve months, and to-day they have not a word to say about it. And these companies are tied up; their business practically annihilated, while these hon. gentlemen opposite make light of the situation, and tell us that there is nothing to cause alarm in the trade situation of this country. I do not know whether I have had a different bringing up in a business way from these hon. gentlemen opposite, but I know that to regard lightly these figures which the Minister of Finance presents in his report, I should certainly need to have been brought up in a different school from that in which I was trained. I think my school was the same as that of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). I do not think the minister will find very much to satisfy him in these figures which show a total balance of trade against Canada of over $120,000,000 in a single year. These figures are to me astounding, incredible. I never heard before of any government in any country—certainly not a government of a country so productive and with so many resources as Canada—that caused a change in five or six years from a favourable balance of trade of several millions to an adverse balance of over one hundred and twenty millions. If this is reassuring to the Minister of Finance, I cannot imagine why it should be so. It may be that he has his coffers full—they tell us that he has; but if what is told to me is correct, the government is one of the slowest paymasters in Canada. The Minister of Finance has told us that the subsidies have just been paid to the local governments. I think they have been looking for them for some time. And, if my information is correct, there are a good many bills past maturity and still unpaid. If the government want to help the financial situation, and if they have the surplus the Minister of Finance has told us about, I think it would be a kind thing on their part for them to pay the amounts they owe.

If the Minister of Finance has the surplus that is boasted, I think he is not justified in hoarding these sums in the bank. But I, for one, am very skeptical about this money in the bank. I would not be surprised if, in the near future, it should be found that the banks are able to give the Minister of Finance help that will be much more needed and much more useful than any he is able to give the banks. I may be wrong, but that is my impression. And judging from what I have heard from contractors and others having business with the government, this government pays very slowly, I believe that some to whom money is due have been told that there is no money to pay them with, and, in some instances, they have been put off for months. Of course, I am not inside the office as the Minister of Finance is. He can tell us if I am wrong—I only repeat what I have been told by men who do business with the government. The Minister of Finance can repudiate it if he pleases. But he smiles at it, and I suppose that that is an indication that he accepts what I say.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) must not expect me to repudiate his mistakes as he goes along. That would keep me too busy.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Yes, Mr. Finance Minister, I will keep you busy. I think I have laid out a few items that will have that effect. I think that these loans of over one hundred millions coming due in the near future, and the equalizing of this unfavourable balance of trade, will keep the Minister of Finance busy for some considerable time. And I fancy that his coffers are not going to be so full as they have been—excuse me for expressing the doubt. You have taxed this people to the limit. You have taken over $10 for every man, woman and child in Canada, against $5 that the Conservatives took. But you have about reached your limit—

Mr. TAYLOR. They are bled white.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. You cannot go much further in the direction of drawing these taxes into your coffers ; you are going to be up against it in the near future, unless all signs fail. I am not speaking now any words that I have not spoken for the past two years, and therefore the hon. gentleman need not accuse me of being scary with regard to the outlook. I took occasion, two years ago, when I first had the opportunity of discussing the budget, to point out to the Minister of Finance the excess of imports over exports and to urge that this adverse balance should be righted. I pointed out to him again last year that he had an adverse balance of trade of $63,000,000. But he kept on, and now he comes to us with an adverse balance of trade of over $120,000,000. I say these figures are astounding, incredible, in a country such as this. You tell us that we have vast resources ; you tell us that we are growing wheat, that we are producing butter and cheese, that we are cutting down our forests and selling our timber, that we are delving in the earth and exporting silver ; but after all that is done, after we have parted with every thing that we have made or produced, we find that every man, woman and child has bought $20 worth more than he has sold during the year. In other words, the average Canadian is buying more than he can pay for, and to-day we have to find hard cash to the amount of $120,000,000 to pay this adverse balance. Is it any wonder that the times are a little tighter than they were ? But the hon. gentleman will point us to the United States and say : How do you explain the fact that they have a stringency ? Well, wait a little. It is coming our way. We do not get into it quite as fast as do the people of the United States, but we are getting there just the same. We have not speculated in this country to the extent they have in the United States. This country is largely free from the speculation which takes place upon Wall Street, and that is the reason we have not felt the stringency so acute up to the present. But we are going to feel it.

I want to tell the Finance Minister to-day that if he had his tariff to do over again, while he was flooded with deputations last year, he would have a good many more this year. The hon. the Minister of Customs was in our city the other day—I call it our city because he lives there as well as myself—and he said there, if correctly reported, that this tariff of upwards of eleven hundred items passed this House in the course of one day. He said there could not have been much kick about it, otherwise it would not have passed so quickly. Well, my recollection is that though it did pass in one day, the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) took occasion to deliver himself at considerable length against it, and though it passed in one day, it had to be repassed on several other days. If I remember rightly over five hundred changes had to be made before it was finally passed. We had change after change, ' change and decay ' we saw all around, especially decay in the government and change in the tariff ; and day after day the Finance Minister came down with this much passed tariff and told us of further changes. This went on, not for a day, but speaking without the book, and from the best of my recollection, it was nearer four months than one day before that tariff went through this House. I say all these items that he speaks of as being passed in one day were changed again and again, in many instances, before they were settled, and they did not get them all quite right even then, and there will be further changes required. Miserable as it is to have to say it, we to-day are dependent upon this tariff that the hon. gentleman brought in for not being annihilated by American competition. Only yesterday, I see, there was a pronouncement made in Toronto on that question. I think the minister has been informed about it—that goods are being dumped in from all the United States at the present time owing to the extreme stringency that prevails over there.

Mr. PATERSON. If they are coming in here it must be because people have got the money to buy them.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That does not follow. Sometimes we get goods on credit, as this government has done, and has not paid for them all. I think not quite all the bills of the government are paid yet. Though you are pretty flush with your money, the time will come that your debts will have to be discharged. A good many people who are buying goods in this country are buying all they can afford. Reckless extravagance in this government has been a public example that has caused terrible distress in this country, and is going to cause a great deal more. This government has set a pace that cannot be maintained by Canada, with all its resources. Canada is a rich country, it is a prosperous country, it has got all the natural resources that Providence ever blessed any land with ; but it cannot stand the reckless handling these men have given it the last few years. We have come to the halting spot, and we are going to begin to come down. I say that you are on the toboggan, gentlemen, and that you are coming down with a crash. Now that is a prophecy. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance thinks that is worth anything or not, I give it to him as a business man, believing that it is true. Talk about the stringency of the times, but if you can look ahead one year you will see that not the half has been told. You talk about times being stringent now, they will be more so before they are better. That is a prophecy, but that is just about as sure to come true as that we sit in this House today. We have courted disaster. This government has run a most reckless course, extravagant to the last degree, spending three dollars where one would have done. That pace has been kept up. Take a farmer that has got his land cleared, and has put a mortgage on his farm. He spends his money by buying horses, carriages and so on, and he can have good times while the money lasts. But the bills will have to be met in the finish. That is exactly what these gentlemen have been doing, they have mortgaged our resources for five or ten years to come, and we are going to pay for it. The reckless pace this government has set is going to cause disaster. We have one of the most resourceful countries, and we have been able to prosper by careful economic methods for many years, and by a system of wise government, both under the late Sir John A. Macdonald and the late Alexander Mackenzie—because he was not a man of the stripe we have before us today. He had a man with a gun standing over the treasury. We have got men with their hands up, beckoning, 'come on and help yourselves, boys.' There is no man with a gun standing over the treasury today. The treasury has been open to all. Graft and greed, and get-something-for-nothing, has been the policy pursued. These gentlemen have handed the treasury over to their friends, to partisans, and have handed out to them money that was not earned, money for which this country got no value, but money which will have to be accounted for by the Finance Minister and those who surround him at the coming general election. Perhaps I have spoken enough in regard to this question. It is a question that I have had at heart for some years, and I have endeavoured to give the Finance Minister the benefit of my advice on previous occasions. I give it to him now, but it is too late. It is too late now. As I have told him, he is on the slide down. He may not think so, I do.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman tells me he is giving me this advice. I presume it is in relation to the tariff. I want to know, since he has repeated it half a dozen times, whether that advice was that we should raise the tariff as high as Haman' gallows, or reduce it as far as his friends in the west want it reduced.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman is very apt at turning a point.

Mr. FIELDING. No, I am anxious to see it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have pointed out to him on several occasions, and now to-day about three times over, that it is the excessive imports over exports, that is the danger. Now he, as a business man, ought to know how to stop that. I think I could do it if I were in his seat, and do it quickly, and I would have done it long ago had I the opportunities that he has. It is his excessive imports over exports. But there is something more in the imputation of the hon. gentleman than a simple question. I would like to know who Haman's gallows is for. Will the hon. gentleman tell me who Haman's gallows is for ?

Mr. FIELDING. You will have to seek the gentleman in Toronto who used the expression. I did not.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Oh, that is it. Well, I can soon enlighten the hon. gentleman. I can tell the hon. gentleman this, and I have said it in this House before, I am not now, nor ever have been, a member of the Manufacturers' Association. Notwithstanding that fact, Liberal papers from the Atlantic to the Pacific have dubbed me from day to day as being the president of the Manufacturers' Association, and held me up on Haman's gallows to the joy of the Grit crowd. But I am not the man, and I want to tell the minister that when he tacks his Haman's gallows to me he must look for his Haman somewhere else.

Mr. FIELDING. But I did not.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I do not propose to hang here. I am not a high tariff man, nor have I ever been. I stand for Canada for the Canadians. I say produce in our country all that you can produce whether it is the product of the mine, the mill, the forest or the field. Do not buy anything outside which we can produce at home, and arrange the tariff in such a way as to see that these ends are met. That has been my policy and I have not changed it for thirty years. But the hon. gentleman endeavours to hang me upon those gallows. I was with my friend the leader of the opposition in the west and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) said that he had no protectionists with him and still he hails me as a high protectionist. I had the honour and pleasure of being with my leader for about ten days in the west. Of course the presence of a man that they accused of being a Haman's gallows man produced a stampede; they tacked it to me just as the hon. the Finance Minister has tacked it to me just now.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understood the hon. gentleman had charged me with being the president of the Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. FIELDING. I knew that the hon. gentleman was not the president of the Manufacturers' Association and I had not the slightest idea of connecting him with it. I was referring to a phrase which had been used, but with reference to another man. It was common talk in the press. I knew that the hon. gentleman was not connected with it and I had no idea of suggesting that he was.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman makes the explanation that he did not intend to attach that phrase to me, but it has been attached to me by the Liberal press and by Liberal speakers. I certainly understood the hon. gentleman to attach that gallows to me, but if he says that he has not done so, and if I have done him an injustice in that respect, I regret it. As personal friends neither of us desires to attach to the other anything that is not right.

Mr. FIELDING. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I wish to come to another matter in the speech from the Throne and upon which I have put a resolution on the Order Paper, and that is on the subject of immigration. The speech from the Throne is no more reassuring to me in that respect than in others; in fact, I have never read a speech from the Throne that fills me with as much disquiet as that speech, and I do not wonder that the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Finance have spoken with great care in this house and have avoided almost every point in it. Here is what it says:

> The stream of immigrants coming to Canada continues to increase in volume, the year now drawing to a close showing a larger number than any preceding year.

Then it goes on to express gratification that they come from the British Isles. I do not see very much gratification in this increase at the present time in view of what I have read from the Toronto 'News' and in view of what I know of the conditions of this country. There are other obligations on the government than that of simply bringing people here. There is something else to be done besides bringing them here and paying bonuses. You have to find them work after they get here. I ask the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Finance: What are you going to do with your immigrants? They are not getting work. They are going to be on the hands of charity this winter by hundreds and thousands and still they come on with a rush. I see the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) there. Perhaps he will tell us that they should take to the land. Well, there is not very much land to be had after satisfying all his friends out there, but if there is any land many of these people are not capable of going to the land. The Liberal papers tell us that these men can all find work on the Grand Trunk Pacific. That sounds very well, but I am rather doubtful about that statement. I read in a paper within a week that 8,000 men on the Grand Trunk Pacific at Kenora had been discharged and that most of them, if not all, would have to return to the countries from whence they came. That is a public matter published in the press and I presume it is right. Are you going to send these thousands and tens of thousands that the speech from the Throne speaks of out to work on the Grand Trunk Pacific? These men have been accustomed in many instances to city life and are not accustomed to railway construction. The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), I notice is here. He has not had very much experience in running railways, but he has in running a press, and I believe that a press may be considered to be an engine in some respects, although it is not always an engine that draws in the right direction. He may tell us that they can find work on the railways. That, in his mind, may be a solution of the matter, but I am doubtful of it. I do not find anything reassuring in the statement in the speech from the Throne, that immigrants are coming in by thousands and tens of thousands when we cannot find work for those who are here. We are going to have soup kitchens before the winter is over just as sure as we are here.

An hon. MEMBER. We have had them before.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. We have had them before under Liberal rule and we are going to have them again before long. Just as sure as we are assembled here to-day we will have soup kitchens in this country before the winter is gone.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a Liberal industry.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That is an industry that thrived well under Mackenzie and it will thrive well under the right hon. Prime Minister. There is no doubt that we are going to have it in the near future, and many of those unfortunate immigrants that the speech from the Throne speaks of, when they arrive in Canada, will not be able to get work, will not be able to find a job where they can earn a fair day's wages for a fair day's work, and they will be confronted with the proposition that there is no work to be done and no money to pay them. That may be considered an exaggeration, as I have no doubt it will be by the hon. Minister of Finance and others, but I know that I am speaking by the book. I think I have a little knowledge of this question. I question if 25 per cent of the industries of Canada are running at full speed to-day. Some of them are closed and others are going to close. Some of them are running short time and some of them are cutting down wages. I do not suppose that the hon. Minister of Finance has heard anything of that kind yet, but he will hear of it in the near future and he will have to deal with it. Five hundred people are now being fed in the city of Toronto, I am told by a gentleman who sits here. That is only one place and the number does not sound to be very great, but it is going to be greater. It is going to be a time when men, to use a phrase which was well known among the pioneers of this country, will have to give more and spend less. Whoever has a pocket which is open to men in need is going to have his pocket taxed to the utmost this winter. I heard one gentleman saying that men have to be contented with two meals a day, but there will be others who will only be able to get one meal a day, and a very poor one at that. This is the boasted prosperity that the Minister of Finance has told us about. We are up against it now, but he has not found time to mention that phase of the situation. He tells us that things are just as glowing and just as good as they ever have been. In bringing down a statement of the $644,000,000 trade of this country, he omitted to point out the fact that $361,283,000 of this was represented by purchase and not sales. Is that the financial state of the country? If that is reassuring to the financial mind of the government I am sorry for him.

Surely they cannot be as pleased with the outlook as they would seem to make out. If the Minister of Finance has not yet begun his worries I can tell him that his policy has caused worry to many thousands of our people this year, and that if he remains in office his turn will surely come. I want to tell him that his misguided action with regard to the banks has caused more distrust than anything else that can be imagined. His efforts may have been well intended, but it stands to reason that if you circulate throughout the country that a man is wanting help when he does not want it, you do that man's credit great damage. It would be interesting for us to know from the Finance Minister, but he will not tell us what he did, what he offered, who accepted, who rejected, who asked and who needed. None of these things will be revealed to us and so all the banks in Canada will be left under the suspicion of having needed help and having been offered help. I tell the Finance Minister now as I have told him before, that in the near future he will be requiring more help from the banks than the banks require help from him. There are as able men at the head of our banking institutions to-day as the man who holds the portfolio of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that is true.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am glad to hear the minister acknowledge it; an open confession is good for the soul. I do not disparage the Minister of Finance, but I can tell him that at the head of our banking institutions there are able men who have withstood a tremendous strain during the past twelve or fifteen months, and it was only because of their great foresight that we have been able to weather the storm. They began to take in sail long ago; they were preparing for the stress which the financial world knew was coming. But it was not so with the government. The government has been running full blast to the last, spending money by the millions to the end, and at almost the close of this financial year we find them under a full head of sail with a gale at hand which they will find difficulty in weathering. There is no cutting down on the part of the government. They talk glibly of an all-red line that will cost millions, they talk about a Georgian Bay canal, a Hudson Bay railway, and other enormous projects which it will take one thousand million dollars to carry out. They talk of these things and they do not know how they are going to meet the immediate demands of the present hour. The Minister of Finance has not told us that any loans have been negotiated. Every business man knows that before he starts to manufacture or to purchase goods, he must go to his banker and ask him how much his credit is good for and whether he can buy this quantity or manufacture to that extent, so that the bank may finance him if he will require it. A business man does not buy his goods first and then beseech his banker to see him through. But that is what this government is doing. Millions of reckless expenditure has been showered throughout the country for the past ten years for which no value has been received. To-day we are confronted with a position which well nigh amounts to national bankruptcy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but let them wait until the next loans are floated and they will see. I commend the Minister of Finance for his shrewdness in keeping out of the money market for the past twelve months, but he will be forced to go there soon and the longer he waits the worse for him. Had he gone to the money markets twelve months ago as he was advised by some of our friends to do, he would be a great deal better off than he is to-day, and the longer he delays the worse for him. Times are stringent now, but I am much mistaken if in the next speech from the Throne you do not find a more distressing reference to the stringency which will prevail in the country. I venture that opinion based on my knowledge of the financial, commercial, and industrial conditions which prevail. The crops have been bad in the west and those of us who are doing a large business there have been uneasy. We have been worrying for the past year over the outlook, and the Minister of Finance will have his turn at worrying very soon. I think he will probably get some wise advice from his bankers ; I think they will advise him as I have advised him, that he had better bring his exports into line with his imports. Some make very light of that, but they will see more force in it as the days go by, and in that respect the Minister of Finance had better take a line out of the book of our neighbours to the south who have always managed to keep the balance of trade on the right side. It may be asked why there is a stringency in the United States, but that is the result of speculation, and no wise policy of business can guard against reckless speculation in stocks on margin. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will resume my remarks after six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight oclock.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the question of immigration. I may say that I do not intend to pursue that subject at any length at the present time, as I have on the Order Paper a proposed motion dealing with it. I only wish to say this much, that in my opinion it is necessary for the government to take immediate action with regard to the immigrants at present en route or likely to come during the remainder of this year. These people are coming to Canada on the representation that there is in the country ample money and ample work, and that they will be looked after on arrival. I want to point out to the Minister of the Interior particularly that it is very unfair to the immigrants and still more unfair to the cities, towns and even country districts to which they are being sent, if they are brought here without some provision being made for their reception and some chance of their getting work when they arrive. This is a very serious question demanding immediate attention. The rigours of a Canadian winter are upon us; many of these people are arriving without a dollar in their pocket, in some cases without enough for the first meal, and they are going to the cities to be placed on charity. That has occurred in the summer in many instances, and it is now the ordinary case. These people do not want to go to the farm or to railway work at this time of the year; they are going to the large centres, where they will be on charity during the winter unless the government is on hand at the port of arrival to take charge of them and to show them where they can get work. Unless this is done great cruelty and hardship will be inflicted on a number of innocent people during the present winter.

The next subject I wish to touch upon is the imperial conference. We have very little reason to expect that anything would be done by this government with reference to imperial trade or imperial defence, and we have not been disappointed—nothing has been done or arrived at, and the great question of imperial unity with reference to trade and defence is still in the same chaotic state that it was in when these gentlemen took power eleven years ago. We never did expect them to do anything along this line. Although the Minister of Finance boasts that they are the authors of the British preference, I wish to tell them that they stole the name, and it is only the jug handle part of the policy that they have given us. They have given a preference. but have received nothing in return. As a result of this misnomer, the true policy has had to change its name and is now known as the mutual preference as opposed to the jug-handle preference which the Minister of Finance and his friends put in force eleven years ago. I am as unalterably opposed to that policy now as I have always been. It has been of no value to this country and is not appreciated at home, because they do not pay anything for it. As I have said before in this House, the proper course would be to collect the same duties on British goods as on goods from any other country, and if necessary hand back a portion of the money so collected as our contribution to the defence of the empire. This great question of imperial unity these gentlemen have not dealt with; we never expected that they would. They have never shown any disposition to embark on any policy that would unify the empire.

But we have had sprung upon us lately a new theory; we are told that we are to have an All-Red line which is to compass the British empire and is to solve the transportation problem for the whole empire. It promises to be a thin red line rather than an All-Red line. Even the seconder of these resolutions, one of the government's own supporters, distinctly opposed it, so far as I was able to gather from his speech. So that when we upon this side are twitted with want of unity on the tariff question, I would suggest that hon. gentlemen opposite had better unify their own followers on this All-Red line question.

The much-heralded French treaty has been brought down. I regret that I have not yet had an opportunity to look very fully into that treaty; but, so far as I have been able to examine it, I am not hopeful of any great results from it for Canada. There have been some concessions on light wines, which will strike at some Canadian industries, because in Ontario there are several companies that manufacture large quantities of light wines, and I fancy they will not be advantaged by the concessions granted to France in that treaty. In this connection there is one point to which my attention has been called, that is, that unless these goods from France come directly through a Canadian port they are not to receive the full advantage. I would ask the Finance Minister if I am correct in that?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, they must come across the ocean to a Canadian port. They may start from a French port or a British port, Great Britain having the advantage of the minimum French tariff, but they must come across the ocean to a Canadian port.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Well, I think that is in advance of our time. It is unfair to the railways and to many merchants and importers. For instance, I understand that the Grand Trunk Railway will not be able to bring in these goods through Portland, and the lines in western Canada which depend on connections with New York or Philadelphia will be cut out of the carrying trade on these goods. I am opposed to that feature, and I think it is regrettable that the Finance Minister should have gone so far as to adopt a principle with regard to imports from France after refusing to apply the same principle to British goods, as was done last session on a resolution brought in by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan).

I wish to speak for a few moments on the question of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. That is a rather interesting question, and I do not know that the reference to it in the speech from the Throne is any more reassuring than the reference to other matters. It says, referring to the Transcontinental Railway——

Progress has been made both on the eastern and western divisions, but the difficulty of obtaining labour and material at a time of great business activity has somewhat retarded the construction of the Transcontinental Railway. Nevertheless some progress has been made.

It is to be regretted that the Grand Trunk Pacific is not in as forward a state as it might reasonably be expected to be. But whose fault is that ? I am rather doubtful that it is due to the lack of labour. We have had an influx of Japanese and Chinese and a large number of Hindoos and Coolies into British Columbia last winter, whose advent was opposed by the British Columbia representatives. I scarcely think that these representatives will re-echo the sentiments expressed by the First Minister and the Minister of Finance in this debate. I doubt whether they will feel satisfied with regard to the position taken on this question by these two gentlemen. But if the construction was hampered at the outset by lack of labour, that is not the case now, because I find that the other day the Grand Trunk Pacific dismissed 8,000 men, on one section at Kenora, most of whom have returned to their native land.

But what I want to call particular attention to is the cost of the road, and I regret that the right hon. the First Minister is not in his place to-night. I am told that he is busily occupied attending to the business of the country in the Russell theatre. Whether that be the case I do not know, but I do not see why I should be restrained by his absence from pointing out a statement made by him which certainly requires some explanation on his part. I have been twitted on many platforms by Liberal speakers and by many Liberal newspapers with not going by the book when I say that the First Minister was guilty of mis-representation when he introduced the Bill in parliament. Although I was not present in the House at the time, I understand that he stated in three different places in his speech on that occasion that this new transcontinental road would cost the country $13,000,000 and not one cent more. Is that correct ? The right hon. gentleman is not here to reply, but the Minister of Finance might reply for him.

Mr. FIELDING. So far as I know, the right hon. gentleman never made such a preposterous statement in any shape or form.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am very glad to be able now to give the hon. minister and the House exactly what the right hon. gentleman did say. In Vol. 4 of 'Hansard' for the session of 1903, will be found the introductory speech of the right hon. gentleman when he submitted the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill to the House. I take it that he was then speaking with the view of making the people believe that his was the right policy and that it was a policy which would be carried out as he explained it. Let me read his very words. They will be found on page 7691 of 'Hansard' of 1903, third volume :

The sum total of the money to be paid by the government for the construction of that line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 and not a cent more.

Further on he says :

What is $13,000,000? It is a bagatelle. It is about the surplus of our revenue over the expenditure. The surplus for this year will pay for the construction of the road.

There is the complete statement within itself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that a preposterous statement ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether those are or are not the words of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has read them out of their context. Everybody knows it would be ridiculous and preposterous for any body to say that the many hundreds of miles across the mountains and prairies could be built for $13,000,000. If he did, he would be a proper candidate for a lunatic asylum.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is pretty hard on the First Minister.

Mr. FIELDING. He never said anything so ridiculous. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have been delighted, could they have caught him saying it. If the hon. gentleman wishes to be candid, he would know that these figures had reference, not to the cost of the road, based on so much a mile, but to what would be the obligation on the people, which they would have to pay, when the accounts came to be adjusted in the end. For example the construction of the eastern division alone costs a number of millions of dollars, but the Grand Trunk Pacific was to rent that eastern division, and after a period pay interest upon its cost. When they pay the interest, the country is at no expense ; and the calculation of the First Minister had reference to what the road would cost the country when all these considerations were taken into account.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman read it again ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The Finance Minister has accused me of reading it out of the context. Well, I would like to read the whole speech but it is too long. I have read the speech through myself and I cannot find that the First Minister mentioned anywhere in it any other figures. His statement was very explicit. He said :

The surplus of this year will pay for the construction of this road.

Can any words in the English language more clearly and completely express that idea ? It is all very well for these hon. gentlemen to try and withdraw these figures now. That is the way they always proceed. They make fine promises but give no performance. The figures are there in 'Hansard,' in black and white, in four or five different places, and they are $12,000,000 to $13,000,000. My hon. friend and everybody knows that the road cannot be built for any such sum. And when the right hon. gentleman said it would, he was misrepresenting its cost, as I would be if I made a similar statement. I would like to ask the Finance Minister what amount has already been expended in the construction of the road and when we are going to get the balance expended over the $13,000,000 back. It was just such preposterous statements which caused Mr. Blair to leave the government. When the First Minister said the road would be built for $13,000,000, Mr. Blair replied that it would cost $120,000,000 and he thereupon threw down his party and came out like a man. He said to his leaders : You may be a party to misrepresenting the country but I will not. I do not wish to use any figures on the public platform which I am afraid to repeat in this House, and that is why I have quoted those figures and that statement from the speech of the right hon. gentleman. I only regret he is not here to-night, but I do not think that if he were, he could offer any better justification, than the Finance Minister has given for him. But I will say this that the Finance Minister endeavoured to disentangle the First Minister from that statement before he was through with his speech, but he was too late and the First Minister persisted in that mis-statement. What the First Minister said was that $13,000,000 would be the cost to the country. What is the use of playing on the word 'obligation' ? Let us have a straightforward, manly statement as to what the cost to the country will be. When is the balance of the cost over the $13,000,000 coming back to the country ? I understand that we have voted $41,000,000 for the road already. I may be mistaken but I understand that those are the figures that we have voted. It is preposterous to say that $13,000,000 will build the road when we have already voted $40,000,000 for its construction and have not a mile of it running yet. Then because we criticise the conduct of the government, we are told by the Finance Minister we are opposed to the road. Sir, we never opposed the building of another transcontinental road. The same party which built the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is the backbone of the country to-day and of which our people are so proud, is quite prepared to build another transcontinental road or two more if required.

We are not, and never have been, opposed to the building of another transcontinental road. We have always stood for an enlightened development in our transportation methods. It was not a question of having or not having one more road; it was a question whether a profligate bargain was being made or whether it was a wise undertaking on which the government were embarking. And I think the facts will prove, before we get through, that our side was right, and that the counter proposition of the hon. leader of the opposition was the correct policy and would have saved this country millions upon millions. It is well enough for these hon. gentlemen, to seek to evade responsibility for these figures now. But they deceived the people with these figures in the election of 1904. I used them on the platform in the presence of my opponent, Mr. Heyd, who did not deny that they were used in the House. I stated that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had given $13,000,000 as the amount, and I asked my opponent whether he would stand by the statement. He said he would not, but that it would cost as well as he could judge $81,000,000. He made a correct estimate according to his lights at that time, and I give him credit for that; but he never denied that these figures had been used, and that they were used to convince the people that the cost of this road to the country would be $13,000,000. Of course, Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not make the statement that the road was going to be built for that amount, but that was what he said would be the cost to the country. Now, I think I have made myself fairly clear to the Minister of Finance. I would not wish to use these figures on the platform if I were afraid to use them in this House. If I am misrepresenting the Finance Minister in this or any other matter, I hope I am man enough to take it back and apologize, and that is what I am ready to do if the figures are not as I have given them. I would like to know how much of this $13,000,000 has been spent in connection with that road so far. It would be more interesting to have that fact given us than the fact that it is not progressing as fast as was expected.

Then, we have a reference to the Quebec Bridge disaster. That goes to profit and loss account. I do not propose to lay the blame of that disaster upon any body, for we do not yet know who was responsible. The country deeply regrets the loss of life and destruction of property which resulted from this error of some body's making. I understand that the government of this country is on the bonds to the amount of $4,800,000 to pay for the loss on that bridge, and I have heard it rumoured and have seen it stated in the press that the government has been asked to pay up. Sooner or later, there is little doubt, the country will have to pay that bill. The speech from the Throne says that we shall have to devise means for the completion of the bridge. We thought we had already provided for the cost. About as much has been expended as this estimated cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the country, and now the structure has collapsed. And this collapse is but emblematic of the collapse which will take place with this government on many of its policies as well as the Quebec bridge.

The next matter mentioned is the Post Office. There is loud acclaim of the management of the Post Office and the revenue it has brought to this country. I stated last session in this House that I believed the Post Office was the most undermanned and underpaid service in the Dominion of Canada. I showed at that time that there were nearly 10,000 people working in the post office service at $25 per annum, and 11,000 at not more than $150 per annum, and they were furnishing bonds for good behaviour, providing a building in which to keep the post office as well as light, heat, &c. I stated that the service was a starved one throughout. Our leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) has told us of the breakdowns in the post office facilities in many parts of the west. And not only in the west, but in many parts of Ontario and the east the same want of facilities can be found. As to the boasted surplus of the Post Office Department, that might very well be expended in paying a living wage to those individuals who are carrying on the work and in improving the service, not only in the outlying parts of the Dominion, but in the towns and cities, for, even in the towns and cities, the service falls far short of what wise and economical administration would provide. I think that service should not show a surplus. If that surplus could not be spent otherwise, it could be devoted to establishing a system of rural mail delivery and in other improvements.

Now, I come to the proposed enlargement of the Railway Commission. This is taking a leaf out of the book of the leader of the opposition. I think it is a wise step, provided the appointments made are satisfactory, and that the matters adjudicated upon from time to time are settled and not carried over from one month to another and one season to another, as they have been in times past. I hail with delight the announcement that the Railway Commission, which, I think, on the whole a very useful body, is to be enlarged. I hope that the men appointed will be chosen for their fitness and not for their political services.

Now, we are promised an insurance measure. I pointed out to the Minister of Finance before dinner that, in my opinion, he had done an immense injustice to the insurance people of this country, an immense injustice to all concerned, including the policy-holders, of whom I happen to be one. I do not consider that my property in my insurance policies is as valuable as it was before the government made an attack upon the insurance companies. And, further, I believe that most of the discussion of the subject in this House was not calculated to reassure policy-holders or create that trust in the management of our insurance companies that ought to exist. I think it is to be regretted that a slur should be cast upon many of our old line companies, and that they should have been hampered in their business to the extent that they have been in the last eighteen months by this ill-advised commission with its ill-advised findings. The whole matter has been tied up, the country has been held up, and the insurance people to-day are not doing anything like the usual amount of business, because suspicion has been cast upon their methods and managements, and it has been stated that they are not going to be allowed to do this, that and the other in the future. All this is to be regretted. It goes to show that it is easier to pull a man down than to make him a success ; it is easier to cast a slur upon his work than to give him back his reputation after it has been taken from him by wrong means. The insurance business in this country should be rehabilitated and those with money invested should be given in it a fair chance to go on and do their work.

Now, I must hasten on. The last question I have to deal with is the statement that we are to have an improvement in our electoral methods. I am glad to know that the government is to take hold of that matter. I did not think it looked very promising when I saw the recent additions to the cabinet. So far as Ontario is concerned, I do not look for any great results from these additions. I may be mistaken ; I am not going to speak a disparaging word of our good friend from Brockville (Mr. Graham), but I want to remind this House and the country that that hon. gentleman came to the support of the Ross government in its dying days and made himself responsible for thirty-two years of corrupt work. He was in office in the Ross government just about three months, and I do not know that he is going to be in his present position much longer than that. It has been said that he came in as a pallbearer for the Ross government, and that he is now here to do the same work for the present administration.

But I say that I cannot hail with satisfaction nor delight the idea that we are going to have a change made in that line, because this gentleman has been selected for the very reason that I have stated. Sir, let it be understood that so far as Ontario is concerned we mean business. We have got a government there that are going to see that honest elections are conducted whether this government want them or not. We are already doing it in Ontario, and what is going on in respect to the London election is only a sample. We thank Providence that we have in Ontario at last a government that is going to make all these gentlemen do their duty in that respect. We have got a government in power there that is not going to shield the wrong-doer, the ballot switcher, the ballot stuffer, the man that purchases a vote, or miscounts a vote. That is the kind of government we have in Ontario to-day, and it is a warning to these gentlemen that whether the other provinces in the Dominion run a straight election the next time or not, we are going to have a straight election in Ontario. We are not afraid of a straight election, we are only afraid of rascality. The hon. gentleman has told us to-day that we are 'another,' that we do the same. Well, let him point the finger of scorn to a single act the Whitney government has done now in three years. Has there been any ballot burning, ballot switching, ballot stealing, ballot purchasing, in any of the by-elections that have been held ? Is there one instance ? Is there any under Roblin in Manitoba, or under McBride in British Columbia? Show us wherein we are all alike. We are not in the same swim and we would be sorry to take power by such means as have held these gentlemen in power during the past few years. I say to the Finance Minister we are not all alike.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend need hardly attack me on behalf of the Whitney government. All I said about the Whitney government was to defend them from the attack of the leader of the opposition in the subsidy matter.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. They scarcely need the defence of the hon. gentleman at the present time. He has quite enough of his own to defend just now. For our part, we commend to his attention some of those matters to which he did not find time to address himself in the speech from the Throne. I think he will find that he has not touched the cardinal situation, and he will get some criticism in quarters that will be able to judge of his levity in dealing with the speech from the Throne on this occasion.

Now I say that we invite good men of all parties to unite in seeing that we get honest and straightforward elections, a straight count, an honest ballot, no stealing, no switching, no purchasing. That is the kind of fight we want. I have already stated in my own convention, and I say that here to-day, that I do not want to win an election on any other lines. I would rather stay at home, and I believe there are many men on both sides of the House that will take the same stand. We have heard the stand that Mr. Watts has taken up in British Columbia, who has recently offered to do something in cleaning up election matters. He has offered to subscribe $5,000 towards punishing those who transgress the law. That is practical Christianity, and clean politics besides. I hope we can all be in accord on that. I hope this government is honest when they say they are going in for election purity. But I have not much confidence in the promise they have made in that connection. I hope I am wrong. But I remember distinctly that some very tricky ballot boxes were used in the eastern part of Ontario during the late election in 1904. They were not manufactured by the Conservatives, nor in their interest. We have been told to-day that we are all the same, but I think he will have to go back a long way to find where and when Conservatives have manufactured trick ballot boxes, with false bottoms in them, so that the ballot could be switched to one side, and another one be put in its place. Where did these boxes originate, and where are they likely to originate again? I think not in Ontario. We have got a law and a government there that will punish that kind of thing, and the revelations that are taking place in London are a warning to them that whether they run clean elections or not in other provinces of this Dominion, so far as Ontario is concerned, men who do wrong will be punished. If I do wrong in that way I am willing to suffer punishment for it, just as I would ask that another man should be punished for doing the same thing. Now let us unite in getting clean, honest, straightforward elections throughout the Dominion of Canada. Anything we can do to purify the election laws and to give us a good, clean, honest, able administration in this country, by men that are elected by the people and for the people, and to serve the people, we will endeavour to do, and will join our friends opposite for that purpose. I have very much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in concluding, to move the following amendment in reply to the speech from the Throne :

That the said motion be amended by adding to the proposed address to His Excellency the Governor General the following paragraph at the end thereof:

We desire to express our respectful regret that more adequate reference has not been made to matters of public interest alluded to in Your Excellency's gracious speech, and that other matters of grave public concern have altogether escaped mention therein.

We deeply regret the financial stringency which is alluded to in Your Excellency's gracious speech, and which has already occasioned great inconvenience and loss to the people of this country. We sincerely deplore the lack of ordinary business prudence and foresight on the part of Your Excellency's advisers, especially their reckless and wasteful extravagance and the immoderate taxation exacted from the people in recent years, all of which have materially contributed to this financial stringency. We humbly beg to call Your Excellency's attention to the fact that the Customs and Inland Revenue taxation for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, was at the rate of $68,754,120 for a period of twelve months, and that during the past five years the average taxation of the people has amounted to the sum of $57,105,177 annually; that the adverse balance of trade against Canada has enormously increased during recent years, and for the twelve months ending August 31, 1907, it amounted to no less than the sum of $121,467,844; that the expenditure for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, was at the rate of $87,000,000 per annum, and that the total expenditure during the past five years has thus reached the alarming figure of more than $383,000,000, and exceeds by $170,000,000 the expenditure during the corresponding period ending June 30, 1906.

We respectfully and humbly submit to Your Excellency that having regard to these considerations, the business of the country has not been carried on with that reasonable foresight, care and prudence which have characterized the management of successful business institutions throughout Canada, and which we are entitled to demand from Your Excellency's advisers.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that after the excellence of the speeches to which we have listened in this debate it would be a matter of considerable difficulty for me to say anything more that would be of added interest and I will not detain the House at any great length. Referring to the address of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) —and I regret that he is not here this evening—the first item to which he referred was in connection with the service afforded by the Post Office Department. He said in his speech:

Under these circumstances it does not seem to me that there is very great cause of congratulation to the country that the Post Office Department, year after year, is piling up a surplus when the postal service throughout the country, out of the mouths of business men and others, is denounced in terms which I would hardly care to repeat in this House to-day.

The hon. gentleman has lately made a tour of the west. In that country it would be strange to me if it were not possible for him to find some complaints regarding the post office service. We all know that in the Canadian Northwest, a very large country that has been peopled in recent years by the coming in of many hundred of thousands of immigrants, many men have selected their homesteads a long distance from the railway lines. They have sought these places because of the better soil that they have found there or for some other consideration, and they are patiently waiting the advent of the railway. It would be a matter—I was going to say—of impossibility to give all these men, isolated as they are, a mail service as frequently as they would desire to have. The figures given by the hon. Minister of Finance this afternoon have clearly proven that there is nothing in the complaint, yet I would point out that in our own province of Ontario the mail service in recent years has been very, very considerably improved and that we have, in many of the principal towns and smaller cities of Ontario, to-day a street delivery of mail that we have only had in recent years, while in the country in many places we have daily mails where tri-weekly mails were formerly the rule and tri-weekly mails where we had mails twice a week. Then we find that the government have not only improved our mail service, but they have given us a two cent postage rate, and that twice since this government have come into power the salaries of the country postmasters have been materially increased. I do not think that any one will criticise or censure the Postmaster General if the postmasters of the smaller country offices should receive an even further increase in their salaries.

The hon. leader of the opposition spoke of the financial stringency, but as the last speaker has spoken of that at greater length I shall refer to it later on. The hon. leader of the opposition made use of a paragraph from a Conservative paper, published, I think, in Halifax, and by a quotation from that paper endeavoured to attack the government. The quotation was in part as follows, referring to this government:

> Its buildings fall down. Its dredges sink. Its steamers run aground. Its calculations fail.

That is a rather dreary picture, but it is bright in comparison with the picture that might have been drawn at the time that this government came into power, succeeding the late Conservative administration. Then it might have been said with truth not that their buildings fell down after they had been erected by the government, but that business houses and enterprises everywhere were falling down. Business houses, banks and enterprises of a business character all over this country were running aground. It is said that the calculations of this government failed. Sir, in that day business men made no calculations save the calculation that to have any betterment in the conditions they would have to put out of power the Conservative government that then held the reins of power and put in their places men of greater business capacity. That determination the people of that day carried into effect and because of the change that was made by the voters in the general elections of 1896 we have had the comparatively prosperous times which have prevailed from that day to this.

The hon. gentleman spoke of the Quebec bridge and endeavoured to cast the blame upon the government because of it. Sir, because a little tower out here in the yard fell down, it must not be assumed that that this is a thing which never happened before. Public buildings have fallen down before because of faulty material or design, and since that day as well as before it structures erected by private individuals and companies have fallen. We remember that not long ago a great disaster occurred in Great Britain when the Tay bridge fell, a great many lives, not those of workmen, but passengers upon the bridge, were lost. We must not forget that the Quebec bridge had the longest span not only of any bridge that has ever been erected, but a longer span than any other bridge that is now under construction. The hon. leader of the opposition quoted from the 'Scientific American,' a very proper paper from which to quote, devoted as it is to scientific matters, and I will quote again from another number of the 'Scientific American' with reference to the Quebec bridge. that of the issue of September 14, 1907. That article is headed 'A portentous bridge disaster,' and it says:

> Quite apart from the lamentable loss of life which it involved, the fall of the great Quebec cantilever bridge is the most disastrous calamity that could possibly have overtaken the profession of bridge engineering in this country. If we were to select out of the many fields of activity which are covered by modern civil engineering some particular one in which the American engineer has displayed most signally his originality and freedom from tradition, we would choose that of bridge engineering; and if we had been called upon to name some one particular structure which stood as the highest exemplification of his skill in this particular branch of his profession, we would have selected the great cantilever bridge across the St. Lawrence river at Quebec.

Again, I find a paragraph in the same article and this particular paragraph is printed in italics:

> The tremendous significance of this disaster lies in the suspicion, which to-day is staring every engineer coldly in the face, that there is something wrong with our theories of bridge design, at least as applied to a structure of the size of the Quebec bridge.

Again I turn to the 'Scientific American' of date October 12 last and I read this paragraph:

> The conclusion at which practically every engineer who has examined the fallen bridge and made a careful study of the strain sheets, &c., has arrived is, that there was something radically wrong with the design of the large compression members, and particularly the bottom chords. In this opinion we entirely concur, and for the reasons which are given below.

An article that I had previously read published in the same paper said that it would be some relief to the bridge designers of the United States if they could attribute the accident to any fault in the material or any neglect on the part of its engineers, but that could not be done and they have concluded, as the men who have since inspected the work have concluded, that the accident was due to the fault of the original design of the bridge. Surely this is not a fault that could be attributed to or laid at the door of this government. I remember hearing the story of an old man whose property had been injured by an earthquake; when some one was consoling with him because of the loss he had sustained he said that the only consolation he had in the matter was that although he had been married for forty years this was the first time that any accident had happened that his wife had not blamed him for. It seems that there are members of this House who will blame this government even for loss caused by an earthquake.

Passing from the speech of the hon. leader of the opposition to that of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for North Toronto, speaking of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), said that he had given the whole force of his address to an endeavour to break the strength of the manifesto of the Liberal Conservative party. I did not notice that the Prime Minister devoted a moment of his time to breaking the strength of the manifesto of the Liberal Conservative party, but he did devote a few minutes to showing the House and the people of Canada that there was no strength in the manifesto of the Liberal Conservative party. The hon. member for North Toronto—I am sorry that he is not in his place to-night and if he were in his place I would speak more boldly perhaps than I will speak in his absence—went on and laboured strenuously to prove that there were some planks in the platform laid down by his leader that did not contain a loophole, or, as he put it, an 'if' or a 'but.' One of the planks in which he thought there was no loophole, was : Honest appropriation and expenditure of public money in the public interest. Well, Sir, any leader who places that plank in his platform pays the greatest possible compliment to the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Let me read it again : Honest appropriation and expenditure of public money in the public interest. That is the principle that has been acted upon for eleven years by the Laurier government and the Reform administration. I think it was the leader of the opposition who said that no reference had been made to the moneys that had been paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company, or to supplying the steamer 'Arctic' for her voyage to the northern seas. Well, I know of no reason why any speaker upon the Reform side should not mention the money spent on the North Atlantic Trading Company. If there is any one charge that the Conservatives of this House ought to be sick and tired of it is their charge with reference to the North Atlantic Trading Company, for they signally failed in proving the truth of their charges in connection with the government's transactions with the company.

Mr. AVERY. Who were they ?

Mr. MILLER. If your leader had taken the information that was twice or thrice offered him he would have known who they are. I say that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) ought to be ashamed of his record in this House with respect to the North Atlantic Trading Company and the gentlemen connected with that company.

Mr. AVERY. Do you know who they are to-day ?

Mr. MILLER. I do not care a button who they are so long as I know the work they have done and the terms upon which they have done it. The hon. member (Mr. Foster) when he knew an inquiry was to be proceeded with, and before he heard the evidence, rendered his verdict and he accused men who were not in this House and who had no opportunity of defending themselves, of rascality and dishonesty. I say, Sir, that when the evidence was given and when the witnesses proved that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) was wrong in the charges he had made, had he been the kind of man that ought to represent a constituency in this House he would have apologized for the charges he made and the words he used, but so far no apology has come. Men may honestly differ as to the wisdom of the contract made with the North Atlantic Trading Company, but there has not been one iota of proof that there was anything dishonest in the dealings between this government and the company. And as to the voyage of the steamship 'Arctic,' why should any Reformer be ashamed of anything in connection with that incident. We find that in the year 1904-5, the year in which great complaint was made as to the expenditures for the supplies for that steamer, $112,050 had been expended, but I point out that in the year 1905-6 the expenditure for the supplies for that steamer was only $12,813 and in the year 1906-7 the expenses were only $11,558. The supplies laid in 1904-5 have been largely sufficient for the steamer's use in subsequent years, and about $25,000 worth of supplies have been removed from the boat and placed in store at Quebec for future use. In addition about 12,000 pounds of provision, rope, tobacco, &c., were left in the Hudson Bay district, in caches for emergencies, in case vessels should be wrecked or require provisions. And those of us who are as well informed as we ought to be, know of the splendid work the Arctic' and her officers have done for Canada since that investigation took place. We know that the 'Arctic' has gone to the northern seas, has taken possession for Britain and for Canada of islands that might otherwise have remained disputed territory; we know that the Union Jack was planted on islands over which it never waved before ; we know that the Hudson bay has been marked without any uncertainty as a closed Canadian sea, a matter which will probably prevent very great friction between this country and the United States, and has secured for us undisputed rights in territory that will be of very great value. Another plank in the Conservative platform which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) mentioned with a great deal of gusto was this : Appointment of public officials upon consideration of capacity and personal character and not for party services alone.

Is there any loophole in that; do you not find a loophole in the last word,—appointment of public officials upon consideration of capacity and personal character and not for party service—it does not end there, but it continues: and not for party service alone. You see, that if a man had been a worker for the Reform party, these Conservatives would dub him a party heeler, but if he had been a worker for the Conservative party and they could call him a respectable man it would be perfectly fair, even under the wording of this manifesto, to appoint him for his political service. But, did the leader of the opposition in this House ever hear of a gentleman named Whitney in the province of Ontario? Has he ever heard of any man who has been the head of any government in any province in Canada, and who has adopted the American spoils system to the extent it has been adopted by the Hon. Mr. Whitney? Does the leader of the opposition know that a little while ago Mr. R. R. Gamey, one of the champions of the Conservative party in Ontario, announced that he had only one complaint against his party in Ontario and that complaint was that there were still some appointees of the Ross government left in office whose heads had not been cut off in the guillotine which Mr. Whitney has erected and has kept so well oiled. It may be said that the Conservative party in this House are not responsible for the work of the Conservative party in any of the provinces, but I tell them that the Conservative party in Ontario is a large factor in controlling the affairs of the Conservative party in this Dominion, and I say to the leader of the opposition that if he were in power and did not satisfy the hunger of his party throughout the country as Mr. Whitney has done, he would not long continue to be leader of the Conservative party in Canada. The member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) made a bold statement when he said; the right hon. gentleman knows that he has thieves and embezzlers in the public service to-day. That may strike the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) as a brave charge to make and a brave thing to say. It is a thing that might be said by any loafer in any bar room; it might be said by any fish-wife; it might be said by anybody, but it has little significance if there is no proof to back it up. Another plank to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) referred was as to clean elections; and I will not read the wording because it is too long. As has been said by speakers on both sides of the House, it is a very proper thing for anybody to desire but they make this a meaningless thing when they get up, with hypocrisy and cant, and endeavour to make the public of Canada believe that the only wrong doing in connection with elections has been on the side of one political party alone. The leader of the opposition has said that political corruption has been rampant since 1898. Sir, I claim that political corruption was more rampant before 1898 than it has ever been since, and I say that public men who make political speeches are doing an injustice to the Canadian people when they magnify the political corruption which exists in Canada at the present time. If there is any political corruption at all there is too much political corruption; if there were political corruption to-day in only one Canadian constituency it would be that much too much ; but I do say—and perhaps it is not due to the effort of one party more than another but probably on account of the change in public opinion—there is less political corruption in Canada to-day than there was ten years ago and there was less political corruption in Canada ten years ago than there was twenty years ago. There has been a constant improvement in this respect. It was as morally wrong fifteen years ago to hire a man's team to carry voters to the poll in order to obtain his vote and his political support as it is morally wrong to do it to-day; but it was not legally wrong then and it is legally wrong now, and because our law has been made stricter, while there may be less political corruption there may be perhaps more offences against the law. The hon. member for North Toronto and the hon. leader of the opposition may come into my own riding of South Grey and may talk about political corruption; and when they do, the minds of the voters in that riding will go back to a little incident which took place in 1891, seven years before the date mentioned by the leader of the opposition, when after an election in which the late Dr. Landerkin was the candidate on one side and a man named Blythe on the other, eight or nine ballot boxes were broken open and the ballots marked for the Reform candidate taken out and ballots marked for the Conservative candidate put in their place.

The hon. member for Carleton has referred to the election in Colchester. I think, to twist an old quotation, that my hon. friend protested too soon. When he was so ready to say to the House at this early day that at least the Conservative party in Colchester had fought a clean election, it seems to me that his action was very like that of a man who wanted to ward off an investigation for fear that dishonesty and corruption would be discovered.

The hon. member for North Toronto spoke of the record of this government in disposing of public lands. If there is any subject on which the action of this government will bear favourable comparison with the action of the government which preceded it, it is the disposal of public lands. Reference has been made to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and the Robbins Irrigation Company; but, as was well pointed out by the Minister of Agriculture in a recent speech, when the leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) were on their tour of the west, in the neighbourhood of the Saskatchewan valley lands and in southern Alberta where the Robbins Irrigation Company operated, not a word was said of the dishonesty or rascality of those enterprises. The hon. member for North Toronto spoke of 'a more or less wholesale alienation of the lands to political favourites who to-day sit behind and beside, affluent in the result of these favours they have got from my right hon. friend and from the members of his cabinet.' The hon. member for North Toronto is altogether too prone to make insinuations against people whom he does not name, and charges which he does not define. I challenge him to point to a man sitting beside or behind the Prime Minister who has received favours that he should not have received or that would not be extended to any other Canadian citizen. I challenge him to point to any man sitting on the Reform side of the House who has made himself affluent as a result of receiving grants of Canadian lands. I happened myself to own two quarter-sections of land in the province of Saskatchewan, both of which I purchased from men in my county who were ardent Conservatives. Looking over the title papers, I find that each of these quarter-sections was patented twenty years ago to a supporter of the Conservative government from whom I purchased it. Nothing of the kind has ever occurred under the Laurier administration.

The hon. member for North Toronto endeavoured to make capital against the Prime Minister on the Japanese and Chinese immigration question. He said that it was immoral and wrong to endeavour to keep out the Chinese because they were poor, while letting in the Japanese because they had a big stick or because we could make a profit by trading with them. Sir, this transaction was based on the maxim of 'quid pro quo.' As every negotiation between one nation and another, between one business house and another or between one business man and another, is based on the same principle of getting something for something, so is this arrangement between our government and the Japanese government, and so was the tax placed by this government on Chinese immigrants coming into Canada. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said: 'I look for a better and more remunerative trade with the great population of China.' The hon. member may be right in anticipating that after the lapse of a number of years Chinese trade may be worth more to this country than the trade of Japan. The Chinese people are making rapid progress and quickly adopting western civilization, a new energy is spreading over China, and her people are fast becoming a people with whom we may have considerable trade. When that time arrives, I have no doubt that this government, if still in power, as no doubt it will be, will make new regulations suitable to the new conditions and circumstances.

With regard to the criticism of the Prime Minister in the selection of his cabinet ministers, it has been well said that the hon. member for North Toronto was not chosen to fill the very important position which was for some time vacant in the Conservative party. The hon. member for North Toronto reflected on the newly appointed Minister of Public works, saying that he was of the flotsam and jetsam of the Conservative party—of the cargo that was got rid of in stress of bad weather. I would like to point out to the hon. member for North Toronto that according to present indications there is great danger that he will very shortly himself be of the flotsam and jetsam of the Conservative party. The leader of the opposition took a trip through the west during recent months, and whom did he take with him as his lieutenant? The eloquent, experienced, clever member for North Toronto? No, that hon. gentleman was left quietly at home, and he took the smiling genial jollier, the hon. member for Beauharnois, who is capable of making fun and amusing a crowd, and the hon. member for Brantford. The hon. member for North Toronto was not permitted to participate in the glories of the trip—why? Was it not that Conservative newspapers and Conservative friends advised the leader of the opposition that he had better leave the hon. member for North Toronto at home, if he desired to make any political capital or to create a good impression or to prevent his party suffering great harm? I point this out in the most friendly spirit to the hon. member for North Toronto, reminding him that the time may soon come when he will be glad to receive, if it be possible, kindly treatment from the shepherd of another fold.

I pass to the speech of the hon. member for Brantford to which we have just listened. He has told us to-night that he talks to-day as he did two years ago, and we can readily believe that his speech of to-night is a repetition of speeches he made in this House twenty-four months ago. We were treated to seventy-three or seventy-four dismal prophecies and seven toboggan slides, all in the imagination of the hon. gentleman. He spoke of soup kitchens. The hon. gentleman and his party have been closely associated with soup for many years, and it seemed for a short time to-night as if he were not able to talk of any thing but soup. He reminded me of a gentleman from the other side of the line partaking of a meal at a Canadian restaurant, who, after partaking of many courses of soup, was surprised to find that there were many other things on the bill of fare, and regretted having partaken of so much soup that he could not partake of anything else.

It may be true that in the city of Toronto there are to-day a number of men whom it is a charity to help in some degree and for a short period of time. It may be that there are to-day in Toronto some recent arrivals who have not yet succeeded in obtaining employment. These are probably men not well able to adapt themselves to the conditions they find in this country—men who are not capable of making a living on Canadian farms. If they were, they would soon find employment. If there are in Toronto and some other Canadian cities some men from the old land who are not able to do anything but the work of a labourer or artisan, they will find difficulty in obtaining employment. But if that be the case, the blame cannot be laid at the door of the government, because it has never been the policy of the government to assist immigration of that class or character. Its policy has been to assist men who can make their living upon Canadian soil, who are able to till and cultivate the rich lands we have in our country. But while the Canadian government since 1896 has never adopted the policy of helping any other class, it has been in recent years the policy at least of the manufacturers' association to assist just that class to come to Canada. We heard a great deal during the investigation of the North Atlantic Trading Company of Louis Leopold. We heard him denounced as a bad man, because having an unpronounceable name, he had anglified it, as many other foreigners do, and adopted a new name when he came to live in an English speaking country. Well, we find the Manufacturers' Association assisting the immigration of the labour they required and employing Leopold to send to this country men whom the manufacturers might utilize in carrying on their business, which, of course, they had a perfect right to do if they thought it necessary or wise.

A great deal of stress was laid by the last speaker (Mr. Cockshutt) on the fact that Canadian imports have vastly exceeded Canadian exports in recent years. That however is not due to any fault of the government nor is it any evidence that the country is going to the dogs or even that we are moving in a wrong direction. Let me point out that the balance of trade has been against Great Britain for many years. In, perhaps, no time in the memory of man has the balance of trade been in favour of Great Britain. Yet the United States, during their recent stringency, appealed to the British people for a supply of gold. That highly protected country of the United States, whose tariff wall is as high as Haman's gallows, was compelled to obtain its supply of gold from a country against which the balance of trade has existed for many years. We have had in this country a tremendous development during the past eleven or twelve years. Our manufacturers have been everywhere expanding their operations. Both our manufacturers and miners have had to purchase new machinery. Take one item, that of electrical machinery we find that it has been bought very largely in Sweden. No doubt it is because our manufacturers prefer at times the machinery manufactured in Sweden or possibly at other times they buy from Sweden because our own establishments are too busy to fill their orders.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Have they ever refused orders in Canada ?

Mr. MILLER. If not in that line, in many other lines.

Mr. J. D. REID. I was asking about that particular item.

Mr. MILLER. I do not know, but in many other lines they have. But if in our young and rapidly developing country, our manufacturers find themselves compelled to purchase machinery from other countries to build up their enterprises, those purchases will produce wealth in years to come and therefore no loss is caused to the country.

Much has been said of the financial stringency. Well, our people may congratulate themselves that the financial stringency in Canada is not greater than it is. I find that while Sir George Drummond, the president of the Bank of Montreal, has alluded to the great stringency in the United States to-day as a conflagration, he says that in Canada we have no such evidence of stringency as exists in the neighbouring republic. True some of our stocks have depreciated in value, but take, for instance, our loan companies, if the stocks in these companies have dropped in one or two cases in the Canadian stock markets a few points during the past six months, in other cases they are quoted higher to-day than they were two months ago. Our bank stocks have decreased a few points, but only a few points ; and it is a matter for congratulation and an evidence of the solidity of our institutions that American citizens, all along our border line, have been bringing their savings and hoardings across the line to deposit in Canadian banks, for the simple reason that they have much more confidence in our monetary institutions than in their own. I was reading to-night in the 'Candian Manufacturer and Industrial World,' a magazine published in the city of Toronto, in the interests of industrial enterprises, and I find in its issue of November 15, 1907, notices of some fifty new factories and manufacturing industries being established in Canada or enlarging their output by the erection of large additions. And in counting the number, I left out of the reckoning the large number of mining companies which have been installing mining machinery.

The Bank of Montreal held its annual meeting in Montreal yesterday, and I would like to read to the pessimistic gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt), who has favoured us with his views to-night, some of the statements made at that meeting. Mr. Clouston, the general manager and vice president of the Bank of Montreal, said :

The stringency is largely the result of universal prosperity, and as a natural consequence the world has been spending more and saving less. This state of affairs will cure itself by retrenchment. When it comes suddenly, as it usually does, it brings many hardships, but we will eventually reach a much better and sounder basis, though the process may be, in the meantime, somewhat unpleasant. Still, in Canada, where we have been exceptionally prosperous for several years, we can stand a temporary reverse without serious consequences, and I do not look for a reaction on anything like the scale which we experienced in previous epochs.

Again, at the same meeting, Mr. Clouston said :

Owing to the lateness of the crop in the Northwest, the approaching closing of lake navigation, and the fact that a considerable portion of the wheat was low grade, a fear was expressed in some quarters that sufficient funds would not be forthcoming to satisfy the abnormal pressure to move the crop promptly.

The hon. member for Brantford attached a good deal of blame to the Minister of Finance because he had offered to assist the banks in supplying money to carry on the business of the country, and particularly to move the grain. But Mr. Clouston does not make such criticism nor do we observe from his lips such censure. He says :

To meet this, the government asked the banks to co-operate with them in assisting the export of wheat as rapidly as possible. The joint action has had the desired effect; the crop is now being forwarded in a normal way, and there are buyers for all grades of wheat in the market. There is one factor in the condition of affairs in the Northwest which must not be lost sight of, and that is the large amount of low grade wheat in this year's crop, making it a much more risky one for exporters to handle.

So, while the hon. member for Brantford criticises the Minister of Finance for offering to assist the banks as he did, the manager of the greatest bank in Canada, and our largest monetary institution, gives praise where the hon. gentleman casts blame. And Sir George Drummond, president of the bank, says :

Here in Canada we have escaped most, if not all, of the troubles of our neighbours. The collapse in stocks has, no doubt, affected many investors, but beyond a certain tightening of the money market and advancing interest, I see no evidence of serious ill effects. The banks have been acting with caution and reserve, which is eminently proper with a conflagration raging next door; but, as the detailed review which follows will show, consumptive demand has been good, and the excellent business of the early part of the year has shown little abatement up to the present time.

And again, he says :

The general state of trade I believe to be sound, and if we have reached a period of pause, if the pendulum is to swing back somewhat, there is no reason to believe that the recoil will be severe or protracted. The large emigration we are now receiving, the opening of new territory by railway construction, give reasonable assurance of continued commercial progress, while our financial and banking methods are so sound and conservative as to mitigate, when they cannot altogether prevent, the severities of the natural law of reaction.

And Sir Wm. Van Horne, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, has recently stated, that, in his opinion, the present stringency was but a temporary thing, and would be of short duration. So, in the face of the gloomy outlook of the hon. member for Brantford, it is cheering to know that our monetary institutions, our financiers, our writers of financial articles and editors of financial papers, attach no blame whatever to the Canadian government because of the temporary stringency that exists. And it seems to me that a man can scarcely be deemed a patriot, a man can scarcely be said to be rendering good service to his country, in magnifying the financial stringency and making out that times are worse than others find them to be. It would almost appear—I do not make the accusation, but I do say that if the hon. member for Brantford is not more careful than he has been to-night, he will lead us to believe that he would hail with joy and delight an era of soup kitchens, a period of hard times and depression. The hon. gentleman made another statement to which I take exception and it is this : He says that Canada has not much land left. I see sitting opposite to me the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), and I am sure that that hon. gentleman could assure us, and could convince the hon. member for Brantford, that we have yet millions of acres of land, fertile and attractive land, which we can give as homesteads to good settlers from any part of the world. And again I say that a man is not a patriot, he is not a true friend of his country, he is doing bad advertising for Canada, when he tells the world, as the hon. member for Brantford has done, that we have but little land left with which to provide homes for the settlers who come from those countries from which we invite immigration.

The hon. member for Brantford has told us that he was with his leader (Mr. R.

L. Borden) in the west ; and he also told us that he is not a high protectionist. It is true, no doubt, that the hon. member was with his leader in the west ; it is equally true that we did not find him talking high protection or increase of duties when he was on that western tour. If the hon. member is not a high protectionist, I would like to know when he was converted, and under what influence that conversion was brought about. I remember that he took part in the debate on the Budget in the last session of parliament, and I made hasty, but correct, extracts from his speech on that occasion, and I will inflict them upon the House. He said :

I look upon a 20 per cent tariff as a very moderate tariff. I think that should have been increased on the bulk of agricultural implements and not diminished.

I would like to know whether the hon. member for Brantford on that western tour when he talked to the farmers of Saskatchewan and Alberta told them as he told this House last session that he though a 20 per cent tariff was a very moderate tariff and that it should have been increased on the bulk of agricultural implements and not diminished. Again he said :

Then why should we jeopardize the $500,000,000 of capital embarked in these manufacturing industries in order to give a very slight advantage to the agriculturist?

Did he tell the farmers of Alberta and Saskatchewan that it was a shame and a disgrace to jeopardize the $500,000,000 of capital embarked in the business of manufacturing, that the agriculturists might be benefited ? Who is this agriculturist whom he holds in such light esteem and for whom he has so little consideration ? The man who came into the forest of these older provinces, hewed down the trees, drained the swamps, gathered the stones from the fields, and tilled the soil and made the highways ; the farmer who went into the Northwest when that country was but a buffalo pasture and made for himself a home—this is the man for whom the hon. gentleman has so little sympathy that he thinks nothing should be done to give him even a slight advantage. And yet I will say for the hon. member for Brantford that he has been more honest in his speeches than some of his colleagues in this House. I remember when last session the duty on agricultural implements was reduced from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent some speakers on the Conservative side said tnere would be no resulting advantage to the farmer. But the hon. member for Brantford admitted that there would be a benefit for the farmer, even though he thought that benefit should not have been given. He said :

I doubt whether it will give him an advantage of more than $2.50 on a mower or a reaper, and for that you jeopardize an important Canadian industry. It is a retrograde step. This country has gone too far in the direction of adequate protection to home industries to take such a retrograde step towards free trade.

Nice language for a man who is not a high protectionist. And again, from the same speech :

I may say that I think most of the reductions are not well advised in a general way. I think that any reductions that have been made would have been better not made, and that in some instances there should have been an increase where the reduction has been made.

Again I ask, is that the speech with which the hon. member favoured his audiences in Alberta and Saskatchewan ? I point out that it has been said of the leader of the opposition that in framing his platform, every plank was left with a loop-hole, every declaration with a way of escape, that he was prepared to sail with any breeze that blew. And I say the same of the rank and file of the Conservative party that follow him in this House.

When the hon. gentleman who just preceded me, the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), spoke in this House last session on the budget debate, and when he stood up as a man in favour of a higher tariff, as a man who did not believe that any consideration ought to be given to the poor agriculturists that would jeopardize the Canadian manufacturer, every man behind him on the opposition benches applauded to the echo and cheered him loudly. A little while afterwards, in the same session, another member of the same party occupying the same benches, got up and moved that the duty upon agricultural implements be reduced ten per cent. Is that not hypocrisy? The same gentlemen who cheered the hon. member for Brantford who said that no reduction ought to be made but rather an increase, cheered with equal vigour members from agricultural constituencies in the western provinces who moved for a reduction of the duty to ten per cent. I have no doubt but that those Conservative members from the rural constituencies who moved for a reduction in the duty on agricultural implements will go into the next general election and tell their constituents how they moved for a reduction in the duty, but the wicked Grits helped to vote it down.

Again, I was amazed as well as surprised when I heard the hon. gentleman from Brantford speaking with a great deal of sympathy and consideration for the United States ports; he said there was a danger that the United States ports would suffer a loss of revenue because of the provisions of the French treaty, inasmuch as the Grand Trunk Railway, under that treaty, would not be able to bring the goods in by way of Portland and the American lines would not be able to bring in goods from France. And because American ports might lose something to Canadian ports, and the Canadian ports might be built up at the expense of American ports, this gentleman was full of sorrow and regret. I had thought he was a better Canadian than that; I had thought that it would be for him a subject of pride that Canadian ports should be built up, and I was astonished to see his sympathy go out to Portland and other ports in the United States.

But of all the dishonest utterances of the hon. member to-night, I refer to his attempted deception, let me say, to his foolish and silly attempt to deceive this House as to what the Prime Minister said about the cost of building the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. I am pleased and glad when hon. members of the opposition get up and make such absurd statements, and when they adduce such absurd arguments in an endeavour to convince the people of the truth of such foolish statements as the hon. gentleman was unwise enough to make to-night. He said, and he was applauded and cheered when he repeated, that the Prime Minister had stated emphatically and without any qualification that the whole cost of building the Grand Trunk Pacific would be $13,000,000. I was astonished when he made the statement, and I was astonished when the leader of the opposition and others on the Conservative side of the House applauded him as he made the statement; a statement which he and they knew to be not only absurd, but to be altogether aside from facts. The hon. gentleman was guilty to-night of separating from their context a few words of a speech in an endeavour to make us believe that he was quoting fairly from that speech. Surely it is not an honest thing; surely it is not a right thing; surely it is a think unworthy of any member of this House to garble an extract that he is reading from a speech. He was reading from the 'Hansard' and endeavouring to prove that the Prime Minister had said that the total cost of the construction of that road would be $13,000,000. I sent for the 'Hansard' and obtained it a few minutes later. I have not had an opportunity of reading the whole of the Prime Minister's speech, but turning to the page from which the hon. member from Brantford read, I find these words:

> Now what is the disposition for the prairie section? The disposition with regard to the prairie section is that the company shall pay interest from the issue of the bonds; the government will pay no interest at all upon the prairie section. Now, sir, what is the liability incurred by the government for the construction of this road from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean? Assuming that the road across the mountains——

That is the mountain section, and the Prime Minister said:

> Assuming that the road across the mountains is 600 miles long, the cost of construction will be $18,000,000.

That is the mountain section alone. And yet the member for Brantford endeavours to make us believe that the Prime Minister said that the cost of construction of the whole road would be $13,000,000. Again upon the same page, and in the very same paragraph from which the hon. gentleman made his quotation, I read these words:

> When completed, the company will lease the road and will pay to us a rental at the rate of three per cent per annum upon the cost of construction, whatever that may be.

Yet the hon. member makes this attempt to deceive the House. Further:

> The sum total of the money to be paid by the government——
>
> By the government.:
> —for the construction of that line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, and not a cent more.

A plain statement of the liability of this country. The cost to this government will be $12,000,000 or $13,000,000. After the Prime Minister had read the agreement and defined the bargain every person who listened to him knew that only for the interest upon certain sections of the road for a certain period of years would this country be liable. The Prime Minister said that this interest for this period of years would amount to $12.000,000 or $13,000,000. Sir, it is hard for us to conceive how any man with sufficient intelligence and honesty to represent a Canadian constituency should endeavour to deceive us to-night as the hon. member for Brantford endeavoured to do. I say that after that it will be difficult for the hon. member to influence the minds, the thoughts or the convictions of people in the House or out of it.

The hon. member went on to say: The party to which I belong never opposed the construction of that road. It would not have objected to build another line or two other lines; it was simply a difference in the method of construction. Aye, you can readily believe that there would have been a difference in the method of construction. When he uses these words and says there would have been a difference in the method of construction, our minds go back to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway upon which they pride themselves. The Prime Minister yesterday gave credit to the Conservative party for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but he was careful to say that if the Reform government had constructed the Canadian Pacific Railway they would have constructed it more economically than it was constructed by the people who built it. Yes, there would have been a difference in the method of construction, I should think so. We go back and we remember that while, as the Prime Minister said, the total cost to this country of the Grand Trunk Pacific would be $13,000,000, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, a Conservative government gave to that company $25,000,000 in cash, a completed part of the railway valued at $33,000,000, and 25,000,000 acres of land worth $75,000,000; and an iniquitous provision of the contract was that no part of the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be subject to taxation at any time while the world stands, and that they also permitted material for the construction and building of the Canadian Pacific Railway to come into this country free of duty.

In conclusion, we have before us the amendment of the hon. gentleman that he seeks to present to this House in connection with the speech from the Throne. He has spoken of the bad business practices, he has spoken of financial stringency and the management of many matters that had escaped the attention of the person by whom the speech from the Throne was constructed. In this whole debate it seems to me that all that any one being friendly to the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier could have desired would have been that the Canadian people could have been accommodated in these galleries, that they could have seen and beheld the difference in the character, talents and abilities of the leaders of the two parties and could have listened to-day to the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance. I trust that the time will never come when soup kitchens will prevail in Canada. I am not, unlike the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), going to undertake to prophesy, but there is one prophecy that I do feel like making and that is that unless we have more statesmanship and business ability than we have had displayed in this debate by our friends on the Conservative side of the House there will be a party in the soup after the next general election and it will not be the party following the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

On motion of Mr. Clements the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 9.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. How many miles of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway are under construction between Winnipeg and Edmonton, and west of Edmonton, respectively?

2. How many miles east of Winnipeg?

3. What is the estimated cost of grading, tracklaying and ballasting, including cost of ties and rails, on the portions let between Winnipeg and Edmonton, Edmonton and the coast, and Winnipeg and Moncton, respectively?

4. What is the ascertained mileage from Moncton to Winnipeg, Winnipeg to Edmonton, and Edmonton to the coast, respectively?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. 800 miles between Winnipeg and Edmonton. None west of Edmonton.

2. 860 miles.

3. $18,400,000 between Winnipeg and Edmonton, $60,700,000 between Edmonton and the coast, $41,946,258 between Winnipeg and Moncton (this amount includes engineering and contingencies).

4. 1807·4 miles from Moncton to Winnipeg, 800 miles from Winnipeg to Edmonton, 940 miles from Edmonton to the coast.

The mileage from Edmonton to the coast has not been submitted to the department by the Grand Trunk Pacific, so that the mileage on that section is approximate, being merely taken from the preliminary surveys.

RESIGNATION OF HON. CHARLES S. HYMAN.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. When did the Honourable Chas. Hyman leave active control of the Public Works Department?

2. What is the date of his first resignation of the office of Minister of Public Works?

3. To what period after his first resignation has he been paid as Minister of Public Works, and what amount has been paid him in salary and expenses, respectively?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. December 4, 1906.

2. 19th November, 1906.

3. The answer is as follows:—I informed the House last year that Hon. Chas. S. Hyman, on the 19th of November, had offered his resignation, but that I had declined to accept it, advising him to try to recuperate his health. Whilst I was in Europe, I received the following letter from Mr. Hyman forwarded from Ottawa:—

Oakland, Cal., May 22, 1907.

My dear Sir Wilfrid,—When at your kindly expressed request I wired a withdrawal of my resignation as Minister of Public Works, I had confident hope that the improvement in my health would have permitted an early return to the duties of my department. In the interval which has passed, though at times much improved, at no time has it been possible for me to take up any serious work, and in the past few weeks I regret to say complications resulting from my continued ill-health have become manifest and, though now incipient, threaten to become chronic, with most serious results, in an endeavour to prevent which I am compelled to immediately leave on an extended ocean voyage.

Under these circumstances, conscious of the disability under which my colleagues have laboured owing to my long absence from departmental work, the indefinite time of my possible return, and the necessity of permitting my successor to assume the duties of the department at an early date in preparation for the next session of parliament, deeply as I regret the decision, I must perforce again respectfully request your acceptance of my resignation of the portfolio of Public Works.

May I once more reiterate my great appreciation of your own and my colleagues' kindness during the time that I have been a member of your government, and again express my sincere good wishes for your personal and political welfare.

I remain, my dear Sir Wilfrid,
Faithfully yours,
(Sgd.) C. S. HYMAN.

The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa.

To this letter I replied as follows :—

Grand Hotel Royal, Milan, June 12, 1907.

My dear Hyman,—I am at this moment in receipt of your letter of May 22, tendering me again your resignation as Minister of Public Works.

I feel that under the circumstances detailed in your letter that there is nothing for me to do now but to comply with your request. The reasons which you set forth admit of no other course.

Immediately on my return to Ottawa, about July 20, I will see that the matter be made official.

With the sincere hope that you will be able, at no distant date, to recover your usual state of health, believe me as ever, my dear Hyman,
Yours very sincerely,
(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

The Honourable Chas. S. Hyman, Oakland, California, U.S.A.

When I returned to Ottawa on the 22nd of July, His Excellency the Governor General was in the maritime provinces. Immediately on his return I communicated to him the fact of Hon. On that date, Mr. Hyman's connection with the department ceased, and he was paid up to that date at the rate of $7,000 per annum ; no expenses.

4. On the order for 1906, 9,500 rifles are yet to be delivered. On the order for 1907, 10,000 rifles are yet to be delivered.

5. 'Advances' on certificate of chartered accountant approved by the minister in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Final payments on certificate of the inspector of small arms approved by the deputy minister.

6. No.

7. No.

*The progress estimate upon which the last advance was paid was on October 1, was supported by an inventory by the government accountant, giving in detail the quantities of each component part of the rifle, then in the company's factory and whether finished, partly finished or raw material. This inventory shows that practically all the parts required to complete the rifles remaining undelivered under the contract were on hand and the greater portion of them finished.

The progress estimate of the government accountant also shows the amounts paid for superintendence and labour, material and other expenses.

THE SUB-TARGET COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What orders have been given for machines to the Sub-target Company, what were the dates of the orders, what number of machines have been delivered, and what amounts paid therefor ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). A contract was made with the Sub-Target Gun Company on June 30, 1904, for two hundred sub-target guns, and on July 21, 1906, an order was given for 250 more.

The whole 450 have been delivered and the total amount paid therefor is $112,349.50.

GOVERNMENT AID FOR THE MOVING OF WHEAT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What arrangements, if any, were made by the Minister of Finance in conjunction with or through banks, to provide funds for the moving of wheat from the west?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The arrangements referred to are to a considerable degree confidential, and could not at present be made public. I am satisfied it would not be in the public interest that they should be disclosed at present, but at an early day full information will be furnished to the House.

CLASSIFICATION OF LIGHTHOUSES IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked (Translation) :

1. Is it the intention of the Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries: to have a classification made of the different lighthouses in the province of Quebec ?

2. To increase the salaries of the lighthouse keepers ?

3. To increase the allowances of the captains of the floating lighthouses?

4. If so, does he intend to have such classification and increases done this session, with retroactive effect for the season just closed?

L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). (Translation). The answer to the first question of the member is yes. As to questions 2, 3 and 4, I must say that they are actually under consideration.

INSPECTORS FOR MEATS AND CANNED GOODS.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. How many inspectors have been appointed up to the present time to carry out the regulations in connection with the Meats and Canned Goods Bill ?

2. What are the names of the inspectors and their respective salaries per annum ?

3. How many inspectors will be required to carry out the regulations when thoroughly established over the whole Dominion ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. 46 veterinary inspectors and 17 lay inspectors. In addition, 5 of our former veterinary employees and 5 new men have been appointed for special temporary service.

2. I will have to lay the information on the table, as I cannot read so long a return.

3. It is impossible to tell at the present time. Necessary appointments will be made as the work develops.

STEAMER STANLEY.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Is the steamer 'Stanley' ready for the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland?

2. Is it the intention of the government to place the steamer 'Stanley' on the western route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine? If so, are preparations being made for that purpose with the view of taking up that service immediately on withdrawal of summer boats?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. The steamer 'Stanley' has just arrived from Great Britain. It is necessary to empty and refill boilers and slightly overhaul her on account of rough passage from Scotland; the 'Stanley' will be ready in a few days.

2. Owing to the accumulation of farm products at Charlottetown it is not possible in the public interest to place the steamer 'Stanley' on the western route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR REMOVAL OF CROPS.

Mr. PRINGLE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Has the government arranged to assist the banks in financing for the removal of the crops in the west?
2. If so, what banks are receiving assistance and in what way?
3. Was this done at the request of the banks? If so, what banks?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would ask the House to accept the answer which I have already given to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in reply to question No. 11, as it covers precisely the same subject.

SALARY AND DUTIES OF MR. PERDUE, CHATHAM, ONTARIO.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

What salary was paid Dr. Perdue, veterinary, who is stationed at Chatham, Ontario, for the last twelve months, including all expenses, and what are his duties?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

M. B. Perdue, V.S., salary, 12 months to October 31, 1907	$1,400 00
Travelling Expenses	392 99
Total	$1,792 99

Dr. Perdue is an inspector under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and his duties are to carry out the provisions of that Act and the regulations made thereunder.

In addition he has recently been appointed an inspector under the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

PAYMENT OF INCREASED PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

Have the increased subsidies, or any part thereof, provided for by the Imperial Act passed during the present year, been paid to the provinces of Canada entitled thereto under the said Act or to any of them? If so, to which of them?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There is a question of the proper interpretation of the Act with respect to the province of Alberta and I am not quite sure at this moment—the matter has been engaging attention for the last day or two—what the conclusion is, but in respect to all the other provinces the subsidies have been paid. I anticipate that the matter with respect to Alberta, if it has not already been settled in the last few hours, will be without delay.

INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What steps, if any, has the government taken for the purpose of authorizing investments of trust funds in the United Kingdom under the Imperial Colonial Stock Act of 1900 in inscribed stock of the provinces of Canada?
2. Was any action in that regard taken by the government at the Colonial Conference, or otherwise during the present year?
3. Has there been any correspondence between the government of Canada and the imperial government on that subject during the present year, and will such correspondence be brought down?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In regard to the first and third questions I beg to say that there has been no recent correspondence on the subject. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that there was no resolution of the Colonial Conference on the subject. I may say, however, that while in England, regarding the matter as one of very considerable importance, I discussed it very fully with the proper officer of the Imperial Treasury and presented the reasons which I thought should be presented in favour of the inclusion of that class of stocks in those available for the investment of trustee funds, but I was not able to obtain any definite answer.

MARCONI SYSTEM OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN—by Mr. Lennox—asked:

1. Is the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy across the Atlantic doing a regular commercial business?
2. Since what date has any such service been working?

4. Has the government exercised any regulation of such rates?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

2. Who was the commissioner appointed?
3. Did the commissioner so appointed make a report?
4. Has any settlement been offered to those in arrears of water rents?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1 and 2. Yes ; Honourable Justice James Henry Madden, was appointed by order in council, May 15, 1907, to investigate and report upon the matter of arrears for rentals on certain leases at Dunnville—Welland canal.

SQUATTERS WITHIN RIDING MOUNTAIN TIMBER RESERVE.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. What action, if any, has been taken by the government in reference to the squatters within the Riding mountain timber reserve?
2. Have the half-breeds located at Clearwater lake, township 19, range 19, west meridian, been notified to vacate their present holdings? If so, what disposition is to be made of them?
3. When are the lands that were taken out of the Riding mountain timber reserve by the new Forestry Bill, to be thrown open for homesteading?
4. Have any of these lands been entered for already?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. On the 30th of April last the forest ranger in charge of the Riding mountain reserve was given instructions to serve notice on all persons located in the reserve that unless they could establish title to the lands upon which they were located they would be required to remove from the reserve. Those who held legal title to the lands, those who were located prior to the reserve having been first set apart on the 13th of July, 1895, and those whose occupation was given some recognition by their being granted the right to purchase or enter for land were to be negotiated with for removal, their rights being given full recognition. Persons who had squatted without any right or authority were to be removed but might be allowed homesteads elsewhere if they had been any length of time in residence. The report of the forest ranger has not yet been received, but is expected shortly.

2. Yes. It is proposed to remove them from the reserve, but to provide them with homesteads elsewhere.

3. They will not be opened for homestead entry until an investigation into the rights of squatters upon such lands has been completed.

4. Entries have been granted to persons who have established squatters' rights.

Mr. LALOR.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

IMPROVEMENTS AT PORT OF QUEBEC.

Mr. PAQUET—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

What sums have been expended by the government, since confederation, for improvements in the port of Quebec, such as elevators, dredgings, basins, wharfs, sheds, &c.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). My hon. friend will see that this inquiry involves an examination of the accounts of all the expenditure at the port of Quebec for forty years, and I would suggest as to whether it would not be better to put the matter in the shape of a motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

3. How many children under twelve years of age came into Canada during the said years?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

DRILL HALLS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. How many drill halls have been constructed or are under construction by the government since 1896?

2. In what localities have these buildings been constructed, and what is the cost of construction in each case?

3. What military organizations exist in the respective localities in which these drill halls have been erected, and what is the numerical strength of each such military organization?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Worthington) that this should be put in the shape of a motion for a return as well as it involves considerable work and the answer could not be ready within a day or two at all events.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

THE ROSS RIFLE COMPANY.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Are any negotiations now pending, or have any negotiations been under consideration, between the government or any member thereof, with the Vickers Maxim Company, or any representative thereof, or any other company or firm, regarding the sale, transfer, or other disposition of the contract of the Ross Rifle Company to the Vickers Maxim Company, or other company?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

2. The composition of the personnel of the Ross Rifle Company is not under the control of the Militia Department, and the department has never been notified that any changes have taken place.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. E. D. SMITH asked:

What is the maximum and what the minimum rate of duty on each of the articles admitted into France from Canada at the minimum rate under the proposed treaty?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It would be hardly convenient to give the information in the form of an answer to a question, but a paper is being prepared on the subject and will be brought down at an early day.

CANADIAN TOBACCO.

Mr. DUBEAU asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to amend the Inland Revenue Act, so as to still more encourage the use of Canadian tobacco in our manufacturing industry?

2. If so, when does it purpose introducing such amendments ?

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). This matter is at present under consideration.

TIMBER PERMITS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked :

1. What was the object of passing the order in council of the 16th May, 1906, permitting permits to be granted to sawmill owners for cutting timber?

2. When was this order in council rescinded in whole or in part, and why ?

3. How many permits were granted under this order in council, and to whom?

4. How much timber was cut under these permits?

5. How many applications were refused ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. It was intended to provide a supply of lumber where it was available and was immediately and locally required. Permits are not to be granted to holders of license berths and only to owners of small mills which are to be located in each case on the tract covered by the permit and must be in operation within three months of the date of the granting of the permit. The lumber must be sold to settlers and not put in general trade.

2. It was rescinded by order in council of February 19, 1907. but this order re-enacted it in practically the same terms. This order in council was passed in order to cover by a general order all permits granted in a similar way including those for mining timber, cordwood, &c., and provide similar procedure in dealing with the permits.

3. Under the orders in council of May 16, 1906, and February 19, 1907, thirty-two permits have issued as follows:

1. Has the Royal Grain Commission made any report? If not, when is it expected that the report will be made ?

2. When will said report be laid before parliament ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Only a portion of the report has as yet been received. It will be laid before the House as soon as received in complete form.

Mr. URIAH WILSON asked :

1. How many special immigration agents did the Dominion government send to Great Britain, also the Continent of Europe, for immigration purposes, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1907, and how long was each agent employed ?

2. What were their names and post office addresses ?

3. What were the salaries and expenses of each ?

4. Were reports received by the government from each of the aforesaid agents, and will the government lay these reports upon the table of the House?

5. How many immigrants have come to Canada at the instance of the aforesaid agents, and what were the respective numbers for each agent ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1, 2 and 3. Thirty-five as per list below.

4. Yes. Yes, if moved for.

5. In the large number of immigrants coming it is not possible to say how many come at one instance or another.

RURAL POSTMASTERS SALARIES.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

What increase in salaries has been given to the rural postmasters since last session ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister. There has been a change in the scale of payments under four headings, namely, salary, forward allowance, night allowance, rent, light and fuel.

Old scale.—Under the old scale, 40 per cent was allowed on the first $800 of revenue, 25 per cent on all over that amount up to $10,000, and 15 per cent on all over $10,000, with an additional 10 per cent increase. The minimum salary was $25.

New scale.—Under the new scale, 50 per cent is allowed on the first $1,000 of revenue, 30 per cent on all over $1,000 and up to $10,000, and 20 per cent on all over $10,000 of revenue, with a minimum salary of $35.

Forward Allowance.

Old scale.—Under the old scale, 10 per cent was allowed on the revenue of the offices for which direct forward duty was performed, and 5 per cent on the revenue of the offices for which indirect forward duty was performed, that is, where the forwarding was done through a second office, with an additional 10 per cent increase.

New scale.—Under the new scale, 12½ per cent is allowed on the revenue of the offices for which both direct and indirect forward duty is performed.

Night allowance.

Old scale.—When a postmaster was required to keep his office open after ten p.m. or before six a.m., he was granted an allowance under that head, according to the time employed and the amount of work done. The minimum allowance was $6, and the maximum, $60.

New scale.—Under the new scale, an allowance is paid for night duty when a postmaster is required to be on duty after nine p.m., or before seven a.m., the minimum allowance being $10 and the maximum, $100, according to the time employed and the work done.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Minister of Justice to penitentiaries for the nine months ended March 31, 1907.—Mr. Jacques Bureau (Solicitor General).

DESTITUTE IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior a question. The following telegram has been sent to me by the mayor of the city of Toronto :

Three hundred Bulgarian immigrants just arrived and stranded in Toronto. Good class of labouring men, but destitute. City now feeding and housing them pro tem. Have wired Minister of Interior for instructions what to do with them. Please see him and urge immediate action.

I would like to ask the minister if he has received such a telegram, and what action if any he has taken or contemplates taking in the mattetr ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I have received no notice of what my hon. friend has read : but if he will hand me the telegram I shall be very glad to take action immediately.

BROCKVILLE-OTTAWA RAILWAY SERVICE.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I rise to move that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance. It is the question of improving the railway connection at Brockville, so that both passengers and mails from the west can reach Ottawa without delay.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. member leave to make the motion ?

The requisite number of members having arisen, leave to make the motion was granted.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and the acting Postmaster General to the fact that to-day the mails arriving at Brockville by the day train leaving Toronto in the morning are pitched off on the platform and are allowed to remain there until the next morning, so that we cannot get any mail from any point east of Toronto on the same day that it leaves. Passengers can get through if the Grand Trunk Limited is on time. Last session we had first class railway connection at Brockville. The mail train leaving Toronto in the morning, on reaching Brockville, remained there until the Limited passed. It arrived at Brockville fifteen or twenty minutes before the time of the Canadian Pacific Railway leaving for Ottawa. Immediately after the session that araringement was broken up.

I wrote to the Railway Commission telling them that I thought it was their duty to see to it that proper railway connection was made at Brockville. I received a reply from the secretary, Mr. Cartwright, saying that the matter would be attended to. But I have heard nothing since, though it is some time since the complaint was filed. Shortly after the session closed I was on the platform at Brockville one day talking with the Ministetr of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), who I am sorry to say is not in the House at present. He had come in from Ottawa, intending to take the train going west. The Canadian Pacific Railway pulled out from Brockville a few minutes before the trains from the east and from the west came in. The Minister of Justice remarked to me: 'Is that not abominable?

That train leaves passengers and mails coming from both east and west and with no chance of getting them to Ottawa today. I asked him, when he returned to Ottawa, to call the attention of the Railway Commissioners to the matter. I had a conversation also with the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) at Brockville one day, and he told me that when he returned to Ottawa he would see Mr. Killam, the chairman of the Railway Commission, and have some arrangement made whereby passengers could make the connection at Brockville for Ottawa. The present Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) lives at Brockville and knows that what I am stating is a fact, and I hope that he or the government or the Railway Commission will see to it that proper connection is made. Lately, on the Tuesday before the opening of the present session, the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn), whom I do not see in his place at the moment, arrived in Brockville with his daughter by the train timed to reach Brockville at 2.30 p.m. The train was a few minutes late and as they came in they saw the train pulling out for Ottawa. The hon. gentleman and his daughter had to remain over night at Brockville. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and his wife came down the day before yesterday, reaching Brockville by the fast train. The train was a few moments late and the Canadian Pacific Railway train for Ottawa had left. The hon. gentleman and his wife went on, hoping to reach Ottawa by way of Cornwall or Coteau. When they got as far as Prescott station, they heard of an accident at Cardinal, so they had to take the bus to Prescott and remain there over night, coming to Ottawa in the morning. At present the Canadian Pacific Railway is timed to leave Brockville for Ottawa at 2.20 p.m. The Grand Trunk limited express from the west is timed to arrive at 2.30. The Canadian Pacific Railway, I understand, are willing to hold the train until 2.30 if there are passengers for Ottawa to arrive by the Grand Trunk, but if the limited is two or three minutes late—

Mr. HARTY. Yes, or one.

Mr. TAYLOR. —even one, perhaps—the Canadian Pacific Railway train pulls out. I do not blame the Canadian Pacific Railway, as they have to make their connection with their through train from Chicago. But the Grand Trunk might just as well bring the passengers and mails to Brockville before 2.20 in order to make the connection for Ottawa. I think it is the duty of the government to see to it that passengers and mails are transferred. I cannot get my mail from home by the day train, and others who come from other points east of Toronto are in the same position. It comes to Brockville and remains over until next morning, when the local train brings it here. It seems to me that it is the duty of the government, the Railway Commission, or somebody, to take the railways by the throat and compel them to make proper connections for the delivery of passengers and mails at Ottawa. The train leaving Toronto at 7.45 is a merely local train, but carries passengers, mail and express. It might as well arrive at Brockville in plenty of time to make the present connection. They put the train back. It comes to Kingston and lays there for forty or fifty minutes. It might as well run to Brockville and make the connection for Ottawa. It appears to be a mere matter of ugliness on the part of the Grand Trunk. If necessary to make the connection they might as well leave Toronto fifteen or twenty minutes earlier.

Mr. BRODER. How about the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is practically the same time as last year.

Mr. BRODER. It was 2.45.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Canadian Pacific Railway may have changed its time to make the connection for Montreal, that being a through train. But what I contend for is that it should be possible for letters from points east of Toronto to reach Ottawa on the day of mailing, and it should be possible for members of parliament and others coming to Ottawa from these points to reach here by way of Brockville, arriving at five o'clock instead of being compelled to go around by Coteau, arriving here at midnight, or to remain over and come on next day. We should have the train connection that we had last year.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). There is no man who knows the situation in this matter better than the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham). He lives in Brockville and he knows the complaints that are made there almost every day. The matter is in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway to rectify. They have a monopoly of the train service between the Grand Trunk line and Ottawa, whether you come by way of Prescott or via Brockville. The answer to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) will be that it is impossible for the Canadian Pacific Railway to leave Brockville at a later time and make connection with its through train at Smith's Falls. But there is a train leaving Prescott for Ottawa, and it is timed to pull out a little ahead of the train that comes east. That train does not make connection with any train, and only runs from Prescott to Ottawa. For many years that train did connect with the Grand Trunk and was run up to the station for that purpose. Now, there is no reason why that train should not leave Prescott station, run up to the Grand Trunk and remain there until the train comes from the west. If this were done, mails and passengers that failed to catch the train at Brockville could make the connection at Prescott, and, if necessary, the train for Prescott could be held for a few minutes for that purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM. May I ask the hon. gentleman at what time does the train leave Prescott?

Mr. REID. It is timed to leave at 2.10 and reaches Ottawa at four o'clock. It passes Kemptville junction at three o'clock, an hour and fifteen minutes before the train coming east. If they were to hold that train for a sufficient length of time at Prescott for passengers who happened to miss the Brockville connection, the public would be well served. I have tried to get the Canadian Pacific Railway to run their train up and make the connection there at Prescott, but I have found it impossible to get either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk to make any connection for the convenience of the public. I do not know which company is to blame. But here is a case where they have a monopoly of the train service east of Toronto, and as the hon. member for Leeds has just stated, passengers leaving points along the Grand Trunk and letters posted at those points have to wait over until next day in order to reach Ottawa. It would be no trouble for the Canadian Pacific to make that Prescott train a little later and bring in these passengers and mails; nor is there any reason why that train should not run up to the Grand Trunk and make the connection with the train from the west as it did for many years. The Minister of Railways and Canals I suppose will remember when the connection used to be made at Prescott junction, but this was before the Canadian Pacific got control of the railroad between Prescott and Ottawa, but the moment they got control of it they did away with the connection. I hope the minister will see to it that this connection is re-established and that, if necessary, the train is held for the convenience of the public and the mail service east of Toronto. It will not affect connections between Brockville and Smith's Falls, because the train now leaving Prescott is not supposed to leave there for the purpose of making any connections at Kemptville or any other place.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). I would like to lay a matter before the Minister of Railways which we have been complaining about for some time in relation to the connection between the Intercolonial and the Quebec Central. I will explain to the minister what the situation is. The train coming from Halifax to Lévis is due at Harlaka junction, four miles from Lévis, at the same time that the train on the Quebec Central is due there, namely, 12.55 p.m. If the train for Lévis is half an hour late then the train on the Quebec Central keeps right on to Lévis; but if the train for Lévis is on time, the train on the Quebec Central has to wait at Harlaka junction until the Halifax train passes by, and the Halifax train does not stop at Harlaka junction. The result is that on the Quebec Central train you go to Harlaka junction and wait there 15 or 20 minutes until the train from Halifax passes by, and then you cannot leave that junction until the Halifax train has left Lévis for Montreal. The result is that when you arrive at Lévis you have to wait there until 4.10 in the afternoon before you can go on. If the minister would allow the Halifax train to stop at Harlaka junction, then the difficulty would be avoided, and, by taking the 4.10 at Levis for Montreal, although it is quite a slow train, we arrive at Montreal at any time between 10 and 12 o'clock at night. If we could take the 12.45 at Harlaka we could reach Ottawa the same day.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). The question the hon. member has introduced will, I think, attract a good deal of attention throughout the country, particularly on the part of commercial travellers and others, whose calling necessitates their travelling a good deal. I do not profess to be conversant with all parts of the province of Ontario, but I know there are some cases where it is really an outrage for railway companies to act the way they do. Let me call the attention of the minister to one case, which I trust he will bring before the Railway Commission and before the two railways that are concerned. Assuming that a person wishes to leave the town of Southampton, or any intermediate station between there and Harriston, and go to Orangeville—and this matter particularly concerns the people of the counties of Bruce and Wellington—he will find to his disgust that on his arrival from the north coming down on the Grand Trunk to Harriston the Canadian Pacific Railway has passed by just a few minutes before. The stations almost adjoin each other, and were some regulations made by the department compelling the railways to act in a reasonable way, a person coming from Southampton would be able to get to Orangeville that evening. But now he has to remain all night at Harriston, or else go down by Toronto and go by a roundabout course back on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the morning. I assume that that state of things exists there to day, as it has existed to my knowledge for several years past, and if I am incorrect, the hon. gentlemen from North Bruce or North Wellington can correct me.

I desire to call the attention of the minister to another case. Assuming you leave the town of Midland, or any point on the Grand Trunk, or from North Bay, and you wish to go to the town of Perth, or any town to the east of Peterborough, what is the result? You go down on the Grand Trunk as far as Peterborough and there you find that the Canadian Pacific Railway has just pulled out, and all you see is the tail end of the smoke. What is the result? The passenger who is obliged probably by a business engagement to be in Perth that evening has to remain in the town of Peterborough until about 12 o'clock that night and be pitched off at Perth the next morning, I assume, about 5 o'clock. Now, why should this state of affairs be permitted to exist in this country? It is palpably in the selfish interest of the railway companies to do this, for the reason that the Grand Trunk has to carry the passenger who wishes to go to Perth by a circuitous route instead of giving him an opportunity to go direct by a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Peterborough; and they carry him on to Port Hope, and then he may go on to Kingston and take the Kingston and Pembroke road to arrive at his destination. I say that the travelling public, more particularly in parts of the province of Ontario, are incommoded, and it would look as if they were incommoded by an antagonistic custom that is fostered and cultivated by the railways, so that they may carry people to further points on the railways and obtain an advantage therefrom. There are many other instances that can be found throughout the province of Ontario. But these two, the non-connection at Harriston and the one at Peterborough, have struck my attention at the moment, and I hope the minister will bring these cases that concern the general public to the attention of the Railway Board, that this state of affairs may be ameliorated. I may say that the remarks that have been made here to-day, and the agitation which my hon. friend from Leeds has produced, will be appreciated by the travelling public, more particularly in the province of Ontario.

Mr. P. H. McKENZIE (South Bruce): I also desire to say to the Minister of Railways and Canals that we are complaining of similar conditions between the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway at Wingham, Ontario, and have been complaining for years. There is just a few minutes difference between the departure of the trains, and although representations have been made year after year, the railway companies have made no change. I hope that in taking up this matter the hon. minister will see that close connection is made at the town of Wingham.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). The question to which attention has been drawn by the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), if I remember right, has been brought to the attention of this House on several previous occasions. Personally, I did not take much interest in it in former years, because I had never felt the inconvenience, travelling, as I do, almost invariably on the Canadian Pacific Railway from Toronto. On the unfortunate occasion to which the hon. member for Leeds referred, the Chicago train for Toronto was upwards of an hour and three-quarters late, which left me in Toronto, and I preferred to go on by the Grand Trunk. We left twenty-five minutes late and made up twenty minutes between that and Brockville. There were about eight passengers for Ottawa, and the conductor of the Grand Trunk train was good enough to wire to Brockville to ask them to hold the train, at least he told me that he did so, although he said they were not bound to do it, and I presume he was correct. We reached Brockville, according to my watch, about five minutes late by schedule time, and on alighting we discovered the Canadian Pacific Railway had pulled out ten minutes previous to our arrival. Had they remained for ten minutes it would have been a convenience and an accommodation to the eight passengers who were travelling in that way to the city of Ottawa. Of course, I admit that railways have a perfect right to run their own roads so long as they do it in the public interest. But they are the creatures of parliament, and they should run their roads for the convenience of the people as well as for the benefit of the companies. I do think, in the instances to which reference has been made, that the public is ignored. It may be to the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway, although I fail to see where it is to their advantage. I do think that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will lose nothing if they make an effort to meet the wishes of the travelling public, and make an arrangement by which that train could be held back for ten or fifteen minutes, particularly when there are a number of passengers on board who are desirous of travelling over it. I heartily endorse a great deal of what the hon. gentleman has said as to the existing inconvenience, and the advantage that would accrue to the travelling public if some better arrangements were made. Perhaps there may be good reasons for the present arrangement, but there is certainly room for improvement.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM, (Minister of Railways and Canals). I sympathize fully with what hon. gentlemen have said in regard to this matter, and particularly as to the train connections at Brockville. I am told by my predecessor in office that about eighteen months ago he brought this matter to the attention of the Railway Commission, and I imagine, that the fact that nothing has been done is only one more proof that the Commission is greatly overworked, a condition which I hope will be remedied this session. Candidly speaking I am free to admit that when railway companies come to make connections between each other I think their chief thought is not the accommodation of the public. I may be wrong about that, but having travelled all over Ontario and through some of the other provinces I have come to the conclusion that they are not really anxious to make connections with each other, even to accommodate the travelling public. It must be remembered that while we complain about branch line connections, possibly the chief attention of the companies, and perhaps properly so, is paid to their through service on the main lines. The fast trains from Toronto must of necessity wait for the Chicago trains or otherwise the through passenger traffic of the Grand Trunk would be seriously injured, and so it is a rather difficult task to undertake to regulate the running time of through trains. However, it has struck me as very peculiar that the Grand Trunk mail train must of necessity arrive at Brockville just after the time set for the departure for the other train. The answer to that has been given me, that it makes the trains in the eastern portion of the province run too closely together, and that it does not give the passengers east of Kingston an opportunity of coming that far on the fast train and going east on the slower local trains. However I do not consider that a good reason. The fast train makes very few stops between Toronto and Montreal, and that is the reason they want to let the passengers off at Kingston who wish to take the slower train. The Canadian Pacific Railway train which leaves Brockville at 2.20 has more than sufficient time to make connections at Smith's Falls. Those of us who have travelled by that train know that it invariably stops at Smith's Falls quite a length of time waiting for the connections from the west ; and even if it did not, the Canadian Pacific Railway train from Brockville to Smith's Falls can make much better time than it does between these stations. Personally I can see no reason why that connection cannot be made without any loss to the company ; it certainly would be a great convenience to the travelling public. Then as to the mails, it is a fact that at the present time the mails for the district north of Brockville, which originate between Toronto and Brockville, have to lie over at Brockville all night. Of course the mails direct from Toronto come straight to Ottawa by the Canadian Pacific Railway, but the mails originating east of Toronto very often have to lie over all night at Brockville. The reason I have not taken this matter up sooner with the Railway Commission is that I have been endeavouring to get detailed information, as I want to make a strong case before the Commission myself, and I shall certainly take an early opportunity to bring this matter to their attention. I believe that possibly the complaint about Wingham is along the same line, and as to the connection at Harriston between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. I have been through there and have had personal experience of the difficulty to which the hon. gentleman has referred. If hon. gentlemen who have these complaints to make would kindly put them in writing I will gladly place the details before the Railway Commission. The same would apply to the hon. gentleman who has complained about the connections at Harlaka junction in the east. I will exercise my privilege, as indeed it is the privilege of any hon. gentleman, to place these matters before the Railway Commission. I trust something may be done to bring about a better state of affairs so that one great purpose for which railways are built, that of accommodating the public may be achieved:

Motion (Mr. Taylor) to adjourn, negatived.

DISTRIBUTION OF BLUE BOOKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to know what change has been made in the matter of distributing the public documents. I find they are not in the post office, and the post office officials refer me to some where else. Has a change been made ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot inform my hon. friend, but I will inquire.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session and the amendment of Mr. Cockshutt thereto.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Mr. Speaker, permit me to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address, and permit me also to congratulate the members of this house who have been spared to meet this session in friendly combat I hope, in the interest of this Dominion and in the interest of their various constituencies. I am sure the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) in moving the address realized that he had a most arduous task, and I congratulate him on making the best out of a bad case. I shall not attempt to follow the argument of the gentleman who last addressed the House (Mr. Miller). I have heard his rhyme so often that it is not necessary for me to deal with it. When the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Hall) pictured that flourishing town of Peterborough which every Canadian is proud of, and pictured the tall chimneys which adorn that thriving city, he was honest enough to give credit to Sir John Macdonald and the Conservative party who by adopting the national policy in 1878 made it possible for Peterborough to be to-day a thriving commercial centre. I regret that I cannot also congratulate the member for South Grey (Mr. Miller). He has always evinced in this House a spirit of intense partyism rather than a spirit of fairness. I have never taken enough interest in the hon. gentleman to know what his ordinary avocation in life is, but judging from his face I would take him for a local preacher out in some rural district who would be ready at all times to discard his religion or party politics. I want to say and I say it honestly, that I believe that if the devil himself were running as a Grit candidate and if he had a hundred votes to give him he would give them all to him. As far as that hon. member is concerned I believe, speaking for the welfare of this Dominion and in the interest of Canadians generally, that that type of public man who deals up these bitter attacks is a curse to Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, I think the hon. member (Mr. Clements) should withdraw that remark.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but what I have to say is that the hon. member for South Grey will stand up in this House and defend such deals as the North Atlantic Trading Company contract, the 'Arctic,' the 'Montcalm,' and other nefarious transactions which have been exposed in this House, which, I am sure, are well known to every individual in this country regardless of his politics, and I am convinced that the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would not attempt to defend these deals as the hon. member for South Grey has. That is all I have to say of that hon. gentleman. Personally I have nothing but utter contempt for such a man.

With respect to the appointments which have been recently made from this chamber to the Senate I want personally to congratulate my friend Mr. Campbell. I think he is deserving of some promotion. I do not desire to say anything prejudicial to the hon. gentleman who has been appointed to the position of Minister of Public Works in this country, but I believe the right hon. Prime Minister could have done worse than give Mr. Campbell that appointment which he was living in the hope of getting. Mr. Campbell has had the honour of representing the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and while he has been moved to the upper chamber, I am sure it would have been his pleasure to have received some other position in life. I have to say of Mr. Campbell that I wish him all prosperity. I have heard that gentleman upon the hustings in my riding in my young days denouncing the Senate and advocating free trade, and it cannot give very much pleasure to Mr. Campbell to be obliged to forsake his party allegiance and be shuffled off with the old gray haired chaps over in the Senate. I have just been reading a statement in the Montreal 'Herald' in the column headed 'Political Gossip.' If I understand the proper functions of a senator it is supposed that when he is removed from this chamber he enters upon a higher plane in so far as politics are concerned, but I see by this article that this is not going to be the last that will be heard from Mr. Campbell upon the hustings and at the political meetings of this country. I hope that Mr. Campbell will have more regard for the honour of the position to which he has been appointed, and I hope we will not find him as we found Senator McMullen stumping the country in the last by-elections. It is rather painful to see senators of our fair Dominion taking that stand, and I believe that there would be no more popular movement or one that the electors of this country would take up more keenly than a movement for real genuine reform in the Senate. If that sort of game is played by the senators who are appointed, and if they are going to display partisanship of that character I believe, personally speaking and not speaking for the Conservative party, that when these senators are elected by the voice of the people it will be to the advantage of this country.

Now, I want to congratulate many of the hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate so far, but I am bound to say that I believe the electors of this country expected something different. I listened intently to the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and when we realize that a great deal of the time was taken up with accusing the party on this side of being as bad as they were it seems to me that the time of this House could have been much better occupied in speaking of some other questions which have an important bearing upon the welfare of the Dominion at the present time. We have not heard so much of the growing times and prosperity as we have in the past. That wave seems to have been checked for a time. I will be the last one to attempt to cry blue ruin in this country. I am a Canadian, first, last and always, and I shall always have the interest of this glorious country of ours at heart. The Finance Minister saw fit to take up half an hour in pointing out how much cabinet material there was on this side of the House when we come into power, which I am sure, will be at a very early date. The right hon. Prime Minister took up a great deal of time in wondering how our esteemed leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) was chosen for that honourable position. I want to say with all due regard to the leader of the opposition that I believe the people of the country are prepared to accept Mr. Borden as the leader of this House, and I also believe they will do so very shortly.

Now, Sir, I see that nice little man, that 'pretonious' little fellow who has always reminded me of a feminine character rather than of a masculine character—I refer to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who paid a very memorable visit to the city of Chatham on the 23rd of November last. I congratulate that hon. minister upon his safe return from the city of Chatham where he was forced to meet the farmers who were up in arms against the legislation which he is solely and entirely responsible for and which has been placed upon the statute-books of this country. It seems to me that he was placed in rather a deplorable position when he had to go up there and defend his legislation. There is one thing, lest I should forget it, that I want to take occasion to censure the Minister of Agriculture for. I may be wrong, but it seemed to me that an attempt was made by the hon. gentleman to further party ends at that meeting. The hon. gentleman made the statement that he was not there for political purposes, that he was not there at all to assist Mr. Clements or Mr. McCoig, the Liberal candidate for the Commons, but he would undertake to tell that magnificent gathering of farmers who were there, 95 per cent of whom were protesting against the minister's action in bringing down the regulations which he attached to the Meat Inspection Bill, which he and his department were responsible for and which no member of this House was responsible, that Mr. Clements and every other member was present when that Bill and those regulations were passed. He did not say that in just those words, but I am sure that is the idea that the minister intended to convey.

When these regulations were made public the local candidate stated in different parts of the constituency that I sat silent in the House when the regulations went through and that I was to blame for them. I want to say that this Meat and Canned Goods Inspection Act which was assented to on the 27th day of April last, is on the face of it a very innocent looking measure, but I would point out that the Conservative members in this House took exception to it and interrogated the Minister of Agriculture as to why such legislation was required. As I remember, his reply was that the result of the exposures in connection with the meat packing concerns in Chicago would have such effect in the old country, that he felt it his duty to adopt in Canada such a law as he then proposed. We on this side of the House pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture that in Canada the conditions were different, that the meat packing business in Chicago was controlled by mammoth concerns, while in Canada the business was in the hands of individual enterprises with small capital and that the Canadian concerns depended on the good reputation of their product for their success in business. I assert without fear of contradiction that the Canadian packing concerns have been most careful in the selection and preparation of their meats and canned goods in the past, and I have no doubt that they would be just as careful in the future without any such legislation as this. I can see no reason for this legislation at all. Now, as to the regulations which the minister has made under that law, as soon as I saw them I came to the conclusion that they were the most ridiculous and iniquitous regulations that could be devised. I saw that they were detrimental to the pork raisers of the Dominion and especially to the farmers in that section of the country which I have the honour to represent. When I first had the honour to address this House, I discussed certain questions which I had advocated long before I entered public life, and I am independent enough to say that any legislation, along the lines I have advocated, whether it be introduced by one party or the other shall have my cordial support. But Sir, I objected strenuously to these regulations, and six or eight weeks ago when they were published I came to the city of Ottawa to protest. I did not see the Minister of Agriculture himself, but I saw Doctor Ward, an officer of his department for whom I have the greatest regard, and who I believe is a very capable official. I pointed out to Doctor Ward that these regulations were a great disadvantage to this country, and I felt that in doing so I was only doing my duty to my constituents. I continued the agitation against these regulations through the local press, and I openly stated that I was ready to meet the Minister of Agriculture at any public meeting that might be called either by him or by me to discuss these regulations and to leave it to the farmers to say if they were not detrimental to their interests. I repeat that challenge to the Minister of Agriculture. If these regulations are to be continued in force I am ready to meet him on one platform or ten platforms or twenty platforms in my constituency, and I am ready to take my chances that the farmers will pronounce that I am right. The Minister of Agriculture dare not meet me; I defy him to accept the challenge. At the meeting which was held in Kent some time ago, it was announced after the meeting was called that it was to be non-political and the Liberal press in the county spoke of the Minister of Agriculture as a well known farmer and they professed their belief that he would not sanction any regulations which would injure the agricultural industry. Well, Sir, in a very short time the Liberals in the constituency appeared in hundreds to denounce the Minister of Agriculture for these regulations, and to denounce the government candidate in the riding, and I have no doubt there were telegrams by the dozen asking him: For Heaven's sake come up and explain the regulations. When I first took up the fight against the regulations I was practically alone in the district. I have a very great regard for the gentlemen who represent the adjoining constituencies, but I had not heard from them. When the Prime Minister explained the other day the accession of his new colleagues to the cabinet, he declared that his followers had faith enough in him that no matter what he did they would follow him if necessary into the ditch. I hope that the representatives of the farming community in this House will not take that same view; I trust that if the Minister of Agriculture does not revise these regulations, that regardless of politics, the representatives of agricultural constituencies in this House will not be slow to show the Minister of Agriculture that his regulations are calculated to ruin one of the greatest industries in this country. Now, the Montreal 'Herald' is supposed to be the official organ of the Minister of Agriculture. I think that last year he announced he had no stock in this sheet, but I presume the stock is held by his brother or some of his associates. However, that may be, there was an article in the Montreal 'Herald' recently which looks very like the language of the Hon. Sydney Fisher, and in that editorial he flaunts the farmers of Essex and Kent, saying that they do not produce a hog suitable for bacon purposes, and that if they do not change their tactics the industry must go out of existence. I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture that in that district we grow the very best hog that is grown in Canada for the purposes of our trade. I can tell him that ninety-five per cent of the hogs grown in that district do not average over 200 pounds. The Montreal 'Herald' also says that professional politicians who are not farmers are endeavouring to make political capital out of these regulations which have been promulgated by the minister. If the minister refers to me as a politician and not a farmer, well, while I don't want to brag, I can tell him that I know more about farming in twenty-four hours than he will ever know in his life.

The farmers of my district know me as a farmer and know my family as a family of farmers, and I am prepared to be judged by them whenever the hon. member sees fit. When the hon. minister came to that meeting in the city of Chatham he was placed in that ridiculous position. If he takes up the 'Daily News' of that city, which is one of the most ardent supporters of the government—the editor of the paper, I am quite certain, is tinged with insanity—he will find there a report of that meeting which I am sure would not be very reassuring to himself. In the Toronto 'Globe' there was a very glowing report of that meeting. The minister on his way back to Ottawa must have stopped off at Toronto and fixed up the report with the editor of that paper. If he did not do that, then the ministerial editor of the 'Globe' was responsible for that report, and I can only put him in the same category with my hon. friend from South Grey. When a man does wrong and then rights himself as quickly as possible, he deserves some credit, and I hope the hon. minister will be able to secure for himself the credit of correcting the injustice he has done to the farmers of Canada in establishing these regulations. If he will do that, and do it immediately, I shall be the first to give him credit. Under these regulations, for which, as I say, the hon. minister was solely responsible, and no member of this House, there are four interested parties. The regulations protect the foreign consumer. They do not protect the Canadian consumer or the Canadian producer. They throw the whole trade into the hands of the packers, thereby creating one of the greatest combines that have ever existed in the Dominion of Canada, to the detriment of every pork producer, at any rate in the section which I have the honour to represent. They have the effect of putting the farmers of my district entirely out of the dressed pork trade. In the past we in that district have had the privilege of dressing our hogs and shipping them wherever we could get the best price for them. When in the past a farmer has had, say fifty hogs, perhaps twenty-five lean of from 160 to 170 pounds weight, and twenty-five fat hogs averaging 200 pounds each, it has always paid him to dress his fat hogs and sell them dressed instead of on foot. In addition to that, the farmer's wife was able to put up 100 or 200 pounds of lard, instead of being compelled, as she will be under these regulations, to go to the grocery store and buy lard at the packers' prices. At the same time, the poor mechanic or labouring man formerly was able to get his pork at first cost, whereas in the future he will be compelled to pay two prices for it. Therefore, I say that the hon. minister's regulations have resulted in forming one of the greatest combines that have ever existed in this country. I am sure that the hon. minister, after having listened to the suggestions which were made at that Chatham meeting on the 23rd of September, will not have the gall or audacity enough to argue that the dressed pork trade of the Dominion had been almost wiped out of existence. Fancy the Minister of Agriculture bringing in regulations compelling the farmer, when selling hogs to the shipper, to leave in heart, liver, lights and lung. The hon. minister at that meeting asked for suggestions. He was at a loss what to do. There were ex-wardens of counties, reeves of townships and other prominent men, most ardent supporters of this government, who said that they had followed this government through thick and thin, but that they would follow it no longer if these regulations were put in force. I ask the hon. minister if that statement was not made? When the hon. minister attempted to tell the farmers of West Kent, who know something about farming, that they should be able to grow pork at five cents a pound with grain at its present price, and that if they could not do that they did not know how to farm, the howl went up, not from one, but from dozens, that he was practically an ass to talk in that way.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must know that language of that kind is not permitted to be used.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to use the language which was used at that meeting, if I may be permitted.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot use language of that sort with reference to any member of the House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am not using it myself.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member will see that the language should be withdrawn.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will withdraw the statement. However, that was the remark that was made at that meeting. The hon. minister was placed in such a position that he had to humbly apologize to those farmers for making the statement that he did, and invited them to his farm in the province of Quebec where he would show them how to grow pork at five cents a pound. I think the sentiment of that meeting was expressed very well by a remark made by a worthy French Canadian, a pork raiser of that district, whom I know very well, when he practically shook his fist at the hon. minister and said: 'You are not there for the farmers; you are there for the money you get.' I thought that expressed the real sentiment of that meeting in regard to the hon. minister's remarks on the dressed hog trade. Now, I find that the minister said that seventy-three inspectors have been appointed under this Act. I should judge that the salaries and expenses of these inspectors would amount to $1,500 or $2,000 apiece; so that the cost of these regulations already is possibly $150,000 a year. When he gets his whole equipment, which means several hundred more of these inspectors, I venture to say that a million dollars will not pay the whole expense. When that Bill was before this House, we on this side accused the hon. minister of bringing it in for the purpose of providing political hacks with salaries and jobs at the expense of the farmers of the country; and, Sir, it seems to me that if that measure is carried out to the letter it is not to the advantage of this country to have it in force.

Personally I would not object to the proper inspection of any food products put up in this country at the seaport town, but there is no occasion for this inspection in the factory. The utmost precaution has always been taken in the factories of this country. We have no mammoth concerns here which go astray as did the mammoth concerns in Chicago, and there is no reason for this iniquitous legislation. What the farmers asked at that meeting, to which the hon. minister came to get suggestions, was to put the matter back to where it was. But if the government are determined to give these jobs to their political friends, then have the inspection in the farmer's yard and not 400 or 500 miles away from it. Fancy a buyer purchasing hogs from a farmer, who knows that they are of good quality and then having an inspector—and 75 per cent of your inspectors do not know a hog from a wheelbarrow—passing upon those hogs when they reach the factory. The minister has told us that there was a plague of hog cholera in the Chatham district. I venture to say that he cannot get a responsible veterinary surgeon in this country who will say there was one genuine case of hog cholera in that district. There was a hog plague, we admit, and there was a wholesale slaughter of hogs, which was just as detrimental to the farmers then as I believe this inspection will be now. The live hogs are shipped to the factories. Then an inspector, to show the government that he is on his job, feels bound to do some culling, and he culls out a number of them which the factory must not use. I am about to make a statement to show the operation of this law, and I want the minister to correct me if he thinks I am wrong. I put this case to Dr. Ward. Suppose, I, as a buyer, buy a carload from a farmer and ship to the factory, and suppose the inspector at the factory culls out twenty from the carload, will the government pay me for those hogs that were rejected ? He said no. The factory, he said, allows you one cent a pound. I asked him where I came in. He said that the inspector furnished a veterinary certificate, and I could collect my loss from the farmer. That is absolutely unfair to the farmer. If a buyer comes into my yard to buy hogs, he should know his business sufficiently to be a judge; and if he wants to cull out any, that is the time for him to do so. But after he has bought the hogs and paid the money, I ought not to be responsible for any further inspection, and any loss on account of that inspection should be settled between the buyer and the pork packer. The minister says that these very able inspectors have not been appointed for political purposes. Well, let us see whether they are doing their duty. I put these two cases before the minister, and if he wants to trace them up I shall be glad to give him every assistance. In the first case, the buyer, who was a very good supporter of the government, shipped a carload to London. He knew nothing about the new regulations. He shipped a carload and followed it up. When he went around for his cheque, the foreman of the factory told him that there was trouble. He told him that one of these government inspectors was around and had culled out thirty-two of the hogs. Why did he do that, asked the shipper ? The foreman said : Go around and see for yourself—I do not know. All I know is that the inspector has pronounced them unfit for food. There is a spot or pimple on their lungs or liver. Thus the hogs are culled out for some spot on their liver or lungs just as they were killed by the thousand in the west as being infected with hog cholera when such was not the case. When in Chatham, the minister said he was an expert farmer and an expert butcher. I have no doubt that he deserves the latter title because I believe he has butchered legislation more than it is possible for any other human being to do it. The shipper persisted that he should not be docked on those thirty-two hogs, which the inspector had culled out, and be only paid the one cent a pound the inspector would allow. He found that he was going to be held up and he would not stand it. He said: Before I will submit to the inspection of this government inspector, whoever he may be, I will appeal from it, and I think there are other veterinary surgeons who are just as capable of judging whether those hogs are diseased or not. I propose, he said, to call in if necessary a dozen inspectors. There was a short consultation then between the factory manager and the inspector and in fifteen minutes the shipper was called in and told that the thirty-two hogs had passed inspection. There was another shipment from the city of Chatham by a very reliable dealer there. This man shipped a carload of hogs to Hamilton and was careful in shipping them, and he had previously shipped hundreds of carloads from that district. On this occasion he got his first dose of this legislation. He was amazed the next day to receive a telegram telling him that twenty-three were culled out and that he had the privilege of having them shipped back to Chatham. He knew what he was up against. He was in Chatham and the hogs were in Hamilton. They were shipped back to Chatham. I want the minister to know what was wrong with those hogs. I will show why they were culled out. As is usual in a good many farm pens, there is vermin, and in this case the farmer who owned the hogs poured some kerosene oil upon their backs which smothered out the vermin but which resulted in causing a little bit of scab on the backs.

And they went down to the factory, and this very efficient inspector whom the minister has appointed evidently thought that these scabs indicated smallpox, and ordered them back to Chatham. The result was that the owner had these twenty-three hogs on his hands. He decided to try another factory. This he did, and the hogs have not been heard from since. I suppose that they are on their way to the British market duly labelled by this time. This is the kind of inspection we are getting, to the detriment of the farmer. If you must have inspection, I say have it at the farmer's door, so that he may not be compelled to take the results of an inspection made three or four hundred miles away. I have stated my opinion that this packing business was one of the greatest combines ever known in the Dominion. I warned the minister that this Bill would have the effect of giving them control of the pork situation, and enable them to buy pork at their own prices. I stated that if they had to take a loss of 25 per cent on the factory end, they would rob the farmer of 75 per cent at the other end; and I want to tell the minister that that is just what they are doing. Six weeks ago I sold hogs off my own farm at $6.75 and $7, and to-day the price offered for the same class of hogs is $4.50. The minister may think that he can grow pork at 5 cents per pound, but I want to tell him that at the present prices of grain he cannot grow pork for less than 6½ cents or, at the very least, 6 cents. The effect of these regulations is to rob the farmers of the counties I have the honour to represent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I believe it will run up to a million dollars. I inquired in the Department of Agriculture if any official notice has been given of a change in the regulations, but was told that it had not. But the minister, at the meeting in Chatham, told the farmers there that he would endeavour to rectify the wrong he had done. I say he will be only acting as a man if he does that, so as to restore this industry, of which our farmers are proud, and upon which the average farmer depended to pay his taxes and running expenses. If you annihilate that industry, as you certainly will do if these regulations are maintained, you are doing the Canadian farmer a grievous wrong. I hope the minister will give his earnest attention to this matter, and if there is an advantage to be given on one side or the other, let it be given to the farmers and not to the corporations. I have always felt, and have stated since I became a member of this House, that the manufacturers and corporations were fairly well looked after; but the farmers, the mechanics and the labourers, who form the bulk of the taxpayers, are the classes who need our attention. I have repeatedly called attention to the returns laid before this House showing the imports and exports of farm products as between Canada and the United States. Every member of this House must know the disadvantage under which the Canadian farmer labours by reason of the fiscal conditions existing. Every reasonable man must admit that the Canadian farmer is not receiving justice. This is proven by the broad fact that the American duties on farm products are about two and one-quarter times the duties which we charge upon Amercan farm products coming into Canada. If we are going to give protection, let us give the farmer equal protection with the manufacturer. That is not given at the present time. While I am not a free trader —far from it—I would be ready to favour reciprocity as between the United States and Canada on some natural products. On goods, the exchange of which would benefit both nations, I would give one hundred per cent for one hundred per cent, but I would not give one hundred per cent for forty per cent return, which is about what we have been given as Canadian farmers.

When he spoke in the city of Chatham a week ago, the hon. Minister of Agriculture told his hearers how the farmers had prospered lately through the pork industry. I want to tell the hon. minister that even before I entered public life I protested, as a farmer, against the bonding privilege given on pork entering this country from the United States. It was only after a great deal of persuasion that the minister saw fit to annul that bonding privilege, and so to give the Canadian farmer the Canadian market to himself, a market to which he is entitled and which he ought to have had years ago. I do not know that the minister deserves great credit for having taken so long a time to realize the benefit it would be to the farmers of this country to bring about that change. But now that he has seen how well it works in one case, I would like to tell him that it would work just as well in relation to all the other products of our Canadian farms. Give the Canadian farmer every dollar of the Canadian market —it belongs to him, just as the Canadian market for manufactured goods belongs to our manufacturers. And when we find hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of United States farm products dumped in this country, while we send so little in return, it is plain that an injustice is done to the Canadian farmer. Last session the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated, in reply to an hon. member who had pointed out the large imports of American butter into Canada, that the total would butter only three slices of bread for every individual in the Dominion. I have to say in reply that this means that a market for butter for eighteen million slices of bread has been given to foreigners which should have been kept for the Canadian farmer. And what I would say concerning butter would equally apply to every article produced on our Canadian farms. If we are given the home market to ourselves we shall be all the better able to hold our own in competitive markets abroad. I hope the government will give the Canadian farmer more consideration in the future than they have given him in the past. It would seem that the members of this government think that the farmers do not require any legislation.

I have listened to hon. members on the other side stating that the farmer was the best-off man in this Dominion. Now, I wish to make one statement as a farmer, and as one who knows farming. I make this statement with relation to the farming conditions of my own district, though I believe it could be applied also to farming in the west if you leave out of consideration the advantage the ordinary farmer in the west has in the increase of the value of his land and returns on other investments. I believe that in my district we have the best class of farmers to be found in this Dominion. My statement is this ; Let a farmer on an average hundred acre farm take an inventory of his farm and implements, just as a business man would do with his stock ; let him take account of his earnings ; let him allow himself a salary of $300, and there is not a farmer with a hundred acres of land within my district who makes more than three per cent on his investment. I say that is not a condition that the farmers of this country ought to be in. The pork packers of this country, as has been shown by statements of the Davis pork factory, make 30 per cent profit, and in one case 100 per cent. I say that if the merchants of this country make, as I believe they do in many cases, 10 to 25 per cent, it is only fair that the farmers should be placed in a position where they can make at least 10 per cent on their investment. But now they are driven off from their farms there is no encouragement to the farmer's son to remain upon the farm, they are driven hither and thither to better their position, either to the States or to foreign countries. I think more consideration should be given to the farmers in the future, and I hope that this government will give them more consideration. When the tariff came down last year I advanced arguments to show that the farmers should be placed in a better position, and I hoped from the remarks of the Finance Minister that he would do something for them. Unfortunately owing, I presume, to laxity on his part, he has failed so far to look after the farmers of this Dominion.

Now if we examine the whole tariff in the agricultural list as it came down, we find that only two changes were made in the interest of the farmers, I refer to beans and potatoes. I have the honour of representing a section which produces the bulk of the beans of this country, and I contend that the bean growers should have the Canadian market for their product, whether it is in British Columbia, the Northwest, or any other section. I said they were entitled to it, and I said they should be protected from American competition. The American duty against our beans was 45 cents a bushel against our duty of 15 cents a bushel. I pointed out the difference in the freight rate by the all-rail route, and I contended that in order to place the Canadian farmer in the same position in which the American farmer was placed, our duty, instead of being 15 cents per bushel as against their 45, should be 60 cents a bushel. That would compensate for the difference in freight by the all-rail route, when we had to ship to British Columbia and the Northwest. The Minister of Finance did partially acquiesce in my request and raised our tariff from 15 to 25 cents, thereby improving the condition of the Canadian farmer to the extent of 10 cents a bushel, when the minister should have raised the duty at least by 30 cents. Now in regard to potatoes. The American tariff was 25 cents against our potatoes, and our duty was raised from 15 to 25 cents. As I say, those are the only two items in the whole agricultural list where the farmer was given any advantage. Now the Finance Minister in order to please the farmer, when he brought down his tariff on agricultural implements, says he effected a saving of about $2.50 on his implements. In answer to a question which I asked him what the saving would be to the farmer on a binder, he said it ought to be $2.50. Now any one acquainted with agricultural implements knows that the life of a binder is about ten years; therefore the farmer saves about $2.50 in ten years, which I say is a ridiculous concession to make. They then turn round and give practically free iron and steel to the manufacturer, placing them in a much better position than they were before. I firmly believe the farmers are not going to stand that sort of legislation, I believe they will rise very shortly and protest against that sort of legislation. They will also protest against the nefarious deals which have been proven against the present government, and will resent the lavish expenditure of public money. I am sure that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will have no fear in appealing to the electorate of this Dominion at any time the government choose to make the appeal. This may be a familiar question to some members of this House, but coming as I do from the southern portion of western Ontario where we grow products which cannot be grown in many other sections of the Dominion, I have felt it my duty, both last session and this session to place the facts before the government. When the tariff arrangement was made in regard to the excise duties, we were promised that changes would be made in the interest of Canadian tobacco growers: but when the Prime Minister went to the Colonial Conference, it was announced to the House that there would be no time last session to make the change, but that it would be made same time later. I see the Minister of Inland Revenue in his seat, and I sincerely hope that he will take this question into his serious consideration. It is one that especially interests my district, because we grow a splendid quality of raw leaf tobacco. I ask the minister to give the Canadian farmer the home market in this article, instead of compelling the Canadian consumer to buy from the American farmer every year of the same class of tobacco, fifteen or twenty million pounds, thus paying him a million dollars or a million and a half a year, which money should go to the Canadian farmer. Now let me show you the position the Canadian farmer is in, at least in the riding I have the honour to represent. If he had the market of this country to himself, every farmer in the district I have the honour to represent could grow ten to twenty acres of tobacco each year, and could supply the home market, and avoid the necessity of bringing in millions of dollars worth of American raw leaf tobacco, excepting what would be required for cigar purposes, a quality which we do not produce. This is the position in which the farmers were placed this season. Now I want to read a circular which was mailed to every farmer in my district by the Empire Tobacco Company, with which my hon. friend the minister is doubtless well acquainted. That is a large concern which purchases practically the whole crop of tobacco in that section of the country, the circular is dated April 6, 1907.

Dear sir,—We feel that from our long and intimate business relations with you, it is our duty to remind you at the most opportune time that the past three crops have all been excessively large ones, and as usual we have bought a large proportion of each crop.

We think it advisable to impress upon you the fact that we have a large quantity of leaf tobacco on hand and, in our opinion, it will be necessary for you to reduce your acreage to the minimum this year, as the demand as far as we are concerned will naturally be limited.

We trust that you will give this matter the consideration which it deserves.

We beg to remain,
Most faithfully yours,
THE EMPIRE TOBACCO COMPANY,
Limited,
William T. Gregory, Leaf Dept. Manager.

That is the position in which the Canadian farmer is placed by the regulations enacted under the excise and tariff laws of this country which allow 15,000,000 pounds of American leaf tobacco to come in and usurp the market that belongs to the Canadian farmer. I do not care how you arrange it, but what I say is: keep the market solely for the Canadian farmer and you will be doing your duty as Minister of Inland Revenue. I am going to read a little short catechism on the tobacco question that I hope will apply to the case and that I hope will be of some benefit to the minister:

Q. Why is leaf tobacco higher in the States than in Ontario?—A. They keep their home market for home products and shut out foreign leaf by a prohibitive tariff.

Q. What is the duty on American leaf entering Canada?—A. Ten cents a pound.

Q. What is the duty on Canadian tobacco entering the United States?—A. From fifty cents to one and one-half dollars per pound.

Q. Under the present regulations how are tobaccos in Canada stamped?—A. Foreign tobacco manufactured in Canada; with a black stamp. Imported and Canadian mixed, with a pink stamp. Foreign shipped in already manufactured, with a blue stamp. All Canadian with a green stamp.

Q. How is tobacco stamped in the States?—A. There is a uniform stamp for home grown and imported tobaccos. People there must judge by the quality of the article and not by prejudice and colour of the stamp.

Q. How much is Ontario leaf taxed when manufactured?—A. Five cents per pound.

Q. How much on Quebec leaf?—A. Quebec leaf is stemmed, then twisted, pressed into boxes and sold without tax of any kind.

Q. Is there any country on earth that does not tax the retailing of leaf?—A. None except Canada.

Q. Is there any country or nation under the broad canopy of Heaven that places the stamp of inferiority on the product of the brain and brawn of their own citizens?

I would like to see other regulations adopted than those which are in force at the present time. I maintain that our Canadian tobacco should not be branded with the stamp of inferiority. Let the smokers or the chewers be the judge of their own tobacco and do not let them be prejudiced before buying it. I received yesterday a petition from some of my friends in the province of Quebec, and I will take the liberty of reading it:

At a meeting of the board of directors of Tobacco Growers' Association of the district of Joliette, held at St. Jacques on November 17, 1907.

It was proposed by Lucien Martin, Adhemar Leblanc and Denis Aumond, seconded by Damase Eugene Forest and Prosper Granger:

Whereas the growers have still on hand a large quantity of tobacco of the preceding years and the crop of this year is abundant and ready to be placed on the market and it is urgent that the changes to the Revenue Act, which have been promised to us, be made at the opening of next session and be put into effect immediately in order to create new openings which are absolutely necessary and which those changes alone can procure;

Whereas, if those changes were delayed any longer serious prejudice would result to all the growers of the country;

It is unanimously resolved that this association humbly prays the federal government to take this question into consideration and acquiesce to the unanimous wishes of the tobacco growers of this district by modifying the law as soon as possible so as to promote the use of Canadian tobacco in the industry.

J. BLAISE DUGAS,
President.
J. O. E. FOREST,
Secretary.

This is an important question. It is especially an important question in the district from which I come, and I am sure that my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) and the hon. the Speaker of this House (Mr. Sutherland) will endeavour to use their best efforts—and if they do they will be doing their duty—to persuade the department to adopt regulations which will build up that industry and make it one of the most important industries of this country, such an industry as every Canadian will be proud of. I am sure that the smokers of tobacco will not regret any change that may be made which will promote the use of Canadian tobacco in the tobacco industry.

I believe that other things can be done in the interest of the farmers. You know how the Minister of Agriculture was attached for so many years to his antiquated idea with respect to cold storage. You could not get him to adopt the idea of giving the country an up to date mechanical system of cold storage. He brought down, last session, a Bill setting aside a million dollars for building cold storage plants in the Dominion and he attached certain regulations to that measure. I have never yet had the privilege of asking the question, but I would like to hear from the minister to-day what advantage has been taken of that Bill which he brought down and of the regulations which were attached to it. In my humble opinion the regulation with respect to a contribution by the government of 30 per cent and prescribing the manner in which this payment was to be applied was so ridiculous on the face of it that no individual would put up the balance of 70 per cent and have his establishment under government control, as required by this regulation. Instead of spending money so extravagantly and, as has been proven in so many cases, of allowing middlemen to be so grasping in their efforts to obtain possession of the money which belongs to the people of this country, I believe that this government could well afford to adopt the principle of government ownership and provide an up to date system of mechanical cold storage in the different sections of the country where they are required. If they would do that they would only be doing their duty and I believe they would be doing something for the farmer which would be a benefit to this whole Dominion.

Now, I want to refer to rural mail delivery. I have been an advocate of the adoption of the system of rural mail delivery in the thickly settled portions of this Dominion and especially in the section which I have the honour to come from. From the slight knowledge I have of the question and because of the advantages which I see the American farmers obtaining from that system throughout the different states, I believe that rural mail delivery could be established in this Dominion at a very reasonable cost much to the advantage of the farmer. He deserves some of these advantages in return for the share of the taxation which he puts up and to compensate him for the disadvantages under which he labours by reason of the iniquitous regulations which our Minister of Agriculture imposes on him occasionally, and furthermore I believe that even if this were to be considered as something in the nature of a luxury the farmer should be placed in this respect in the same position as those who live in cities.

I believe that the question of the fisheries of the province of Ontario and of the other provinces of the Dominion is a question of the utmost importance. Our fisheries constitute an important asset to this Dominion, and I want to say to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that in so far as the province of Ontario is concerned he has neglected his duty with respect to the fisheries. When we remember that there was only about $13,000 spent in the province of Ontario in propagating fish for replenishing the fisheries of the great lakes as against about $80,000 for the province of British Columbia, the House will realize the small amount of attention which has been bestowed by the department upon the fisheries of Ontario. I am not objecting to that amount of money being spent in the province of British Columbia, but I am objecting to the small amount which has been spent for the benefit of the fishing industry of the province of Ontario. When you take into consideration that the fish from the great lakes of Ontario bring, in the New York market, from $40 to $50 a ton more than British Columbia fish, you must admit, with all due regard for the province of British Columbia and for the members who represent that province, that greater consideration should be given by the department to the fish industry of Ontario. I would advocate the establishment of fish hatcheries in suitable places, and the expenditure of more money in the propagation of fish in our great lakes so that the natural asset which the Dominion has in the fisheries should not be lost.

Let me say a word about the fiscal policy of the government and especially in relation to what is called the intermediate tariff. I believe that tariff will prove a curse to the Dominion. I believe it will prevent the investment of millions and millions of dollars of capital which otherwise would flow into this country. We talk about the Dominion being prosperous, but considering the great natural advantages which we have, Canada should be fifty times more prosperous than she is. Give us a true national policy ; cut out your bonuses and your intermediate tariffs, frame your fiscal policy in the interests of Canadians and Canada will become a country of which every Canadian, be he Liberal or Conservative, may be proud. A period of depression is upon us and the government is to blame for the hard times. They have been wilfully extravagant, and they have never looked forward to a rainy day. They have lavishly expended the money of the people and now they are forced to call a halt. Let me refer for a moment to the telegram in respect to immigration which was read to the House this afternoon by my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell), I have always contended that the immigration policy of this country is a wrong policy. I say that instead of paying thousands upon thousands of dollars for immigrants to come to Canada we should be deriving a revenue from these immigrants. What we want in our immigrants is quality and not quantity. I have myself seen, in the city of Chatham, at least 100 immigrants dumped off one Saturday night, mothers with babies in their arms, who had to remain at the station all day Sunday and until Monday night without a dollar in their pockets to purchase food, and depending on the charity of the citizens to provide for them. That sort of thing should not exist. Then as to the English immigrants whom I have seen and with whom I heartily sympathize, I blame the government for encouraging them to come here to suffer the great hardships which they have to experience. You may talk about soup kitchens, but I can tell the Department of the Interior that soup kitchens will be necessary if that class of immigration is to be encouraged. I had the pleasure of visiting the Northwest this past summer and as a public man I felt it my duty to pay some attention to the immigration question. I say that it is a curse to this country to bring in the class of immigrants that I saw there. I do not care what may be the nationality of the immigrants, but I do say that none should be encouraged to come here except such as are willing to abide by our laws, and my experience is that the Doukhobors in the vicinity of Yorkton are not willing to submit themselves to Canadian laws or to become British subjects. I hope the government will call a halt and reform their immigration policy at once. My object in rising, Sir, was to plead with the Minister of Agriculture to abolish or to amend the meat inspection regulations which are condemned by ninety-five per cent of the farmers of the district of West Kent. I ask the Minister of Agriculture to annul these regulations altogether because I can see no good reason for their existence. If the Minister of Agriculture persists in enforcing these regulations which will ruin the great pork industry of the country, I hope the Prime Minister will ask for his resignation ; that he will pension him off if necessary, and that he will allow him to pursue his first hobby of stuffing and cramming chickens, which probably he may develop into a science by the adopting of the compressed air process. An hon. gentleman asked me why the Minister of Agriculture does not get married. Well, if the hon. gentleman ventured on that step I believe his time would be more profitably occupied than in framing regulations which are a great detriment to the agricultural community. I might refer to the inspection of fruits, but I will leave that matter to be dealt with by gentlemen who are more conversant with the subject than I am, and in conclusion I thank the House for its attention to my remarks.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, and I would not probably have done so but for the kindly, chivalrous, personal allusions of the hon. member (Mr. Clements) who has just sat down. I am not able, Sir, in such personalities to compete with the hon. member; therefore I leave them all out. It is, however, perhaps as well that the misconceptions and misunderstandings with regard to what has been the chief subject matter of the hon. member's address should be removed, and that what has evidently occurred in the counties of Kent and Essex should be put right. It seemed to me, when I visited Chatham a little while ago, that a good deal of excitement had been aroused amongst the farmers of that neighbourhood in regard to the regulations under review, excitement which I do not think was at all necessary, the cause of which I am not going to inquire into, but the result of which I deplore, because it has prevented a number of those farmers from taking advantage of the opportunities that offered in their business. Had the necessary steps been taken earlier, probably my visit to Chatham would have been earlier, and the difficulties would have disappeared earlier. I found an entire misconception as to the scope of regulations. I found also a disposition to ask me to do certain things which I was quite prepared to do, in so far as the law allowed me to do them, and as I might be able to do them, consistently with the spirit and letter of the law passed by the parliament of Canada last session. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down says that he came to Ottawa for information. He did not see me, but saw some of my officers from whom he got some information. I do not know why he did not see me; possibly I was out of town at the moment; but it is a pity that he did not communicate with me and lay before me the difficulties his people were labouring under in such a way that I might have taken steps to remove those difficulties if it were possible to do so. Mr. McCoig, the representative of the county of Kent in the provincial legislature, communicated with me, representing certain things which I appreciated to be facts of a serious character, and invited me as soon as I possibly could to visit the county of Kent, so that I might find out for myself the exact condition of affairs, and if possible remove the difficulties that existed. Just as soon as I was able, after fulfilling certain engagements of a public character which had been made before I received that communication, I did go to the county of Kent at Mr. McCoigs' invitation. I found there a state of excitement of which I tried to ascertain the cause by examining the public press. I found in the press supporting the hon. gentleman opposite very exaggerated statements and very exciting paragraphs which created unrest and excitement in the meeting which I addressed. That meeting was a public meeting, called at my instance by Mr. McCoig, who had invited me to go to Chatham—called by public advertisement, and everybody was invited to come. I am glad to say that a large number of people came; I am sure that it was a representative gathering of the farmers of Kent and Essex. When I arrived at the meeting I found that a chairman had been chosen, and immediately afterwards the hon. member opposite (Mr. Clements) entered the room and was invited to the platform to take part in the discussion. He declined to do so.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Might I just correct the hon. minister? I was not invited to the platform to address the meeting. I was asked to the platform, but not to address the meeting; and when the hon. minister says that it was called as a public meeting, I may say that I have here a copy of the advertisement calling it, and if he will allow me the privilege of reading the names of those who were announced to address the meeting, I am sure he will not say that it was a farmers' meeting, but a purely Liberal meeting.

Mr. FISHER. Read it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The names of the gentlemen advertised to address that meeting were: the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Mr. Fisher; Dr. Rutherford, veterinary director general of the Dominion; D. A. Gordon, M.P. for East Kent; Geo. Stevens, ex-M.P. for West Kent; T. L. Pardo, ex-M.P. for West Kent; R. L. Goswell, Liberal candidate in East Kent; Fred. Stone, Liberal candidate in East Kent; Mr. A. B. McCoig, M.P.P. for West Kent; and others.

Mr. FISHER. And others; and the hon. member was asked by the chairman to the platform—

Mr. CLEMENTS. I was not asked to speak.

Mr. FISHER. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman was invited to the platform with the full intention and expectation that he would speak if he had any thing to say.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Let me say right here that when I was asked to the platform, I rose in my place in the building and said that that was the first invitation or intention I had to attend that meeting. As the hon. minister had come to back up his regulations and to refute the arguments which I had put up against them, I said I was there to listen to the explanations he had to make, that I would remain in the hall during the afternoon, and that I was there to back up the arguments that I had made against his regulations.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman took his own course, and he can abide by it; I have no objection at all. I say the hon. gentleman was invited to the platform with the intention and object of giving him an opportunity to speak. I now find the hon. gentleman saying that he has been arguing against my regulations. I can only conclude that the hon. gentleman is the cause of the excitement and difficulties that have arisen in the county of Kent. However that may be, I found a condition of excitement there and a misapprehension in regard to the regulations. The regulation which was complained of by the speakers at that meeting and by the people who spoke from the audience is a regulation with regard to the sending of dressed hogs to establishments or packing houses under the operation of the Meat Inspection Act. The farmers there seemed to think that all dressed hogs sent to market anywhere had to be inspected and submitted to the regulations. That first misconception was removed immediately that I had an opportunity to speak, by my pointing out that the paragraph in the regulations which was complained of only applied to dressed carcasses of hogs being sent to an establishment which was under the operation and inspection of this Act.

I have been informed since—I do not know whether my information is absolutely correct or not—that the number of the carcasses which would be sent to those establishments will not be over 60 per cent or 40 per cent of all the dressed hog trade of the counties of Kent and Essex. Some of my hon. friends have gone so far as to say that they find, on looking up the returns, that last year not even 20 per cent of the dressed hog carcass trade will come under the operation of this regulation. I went there for the express purpose of finding out the facts. I thought it better to ascertain the facts myself than take the wild statements of men who had not examined the condition of affairs and who did not know what they were talking about. I gave to the meeting the information, which I need not repeat here, because all the members know the reasons on which this Act was based. They know that last session on several occasions we discussed for hours the principles and the reason for passing this legislation, and those reasons were so convincing that the House adopted the Bill without division. The House adopted it without any formal protest of any kind and it became law by our unanimous decision. I quite understand that, as regards certain details of the measure, there was considerable discussion in this House. I do not remember whether the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) took part in that discussion or not. I do not know whether he helped to frame the legislation, but, seeing the great interest he now takes in the matter, he must have taken some part in the discussions last session on the principles and details of the Act. I would like him and his friends to look up 'Hansard' and find just how much part the hon. gentleman took in the framing of that legislation. I said then that I invited the co-operation of hon. gentlemen opposite just as much as the co-operation of hon. gentlemen on this side. Why? Because the question was in no sense a political or a party one. The legislation was a new departure. It was legislation required to meet a new condition of affairs, and I wanted the co-operation of members on both sides in order to make it as perfect as possible. I do not charge my memory with the part which the hon. gentleman took in the debate, if he took any, but judging from the interest he now shows in the matter he must have taken a very active and prominent part. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I forget what part I took in that debate, but I was in the House throughout the discussion on the Bill. If any of my friends made an argument which I wanted to adduce myself, I of course would not take up time by repeating it, but I watched the debate closely, and I repeat that I can see no reason for this legislation.

Mr. FISHER. Did my hon. friend say that? I pause for a reply. I would like to know, as I have not looked up 'Hansard.' He, however, does not seem to remember himself what he did last session, and I shall not undertake to press the question further. He says that the Bill is unnecessary. Well, it was a Bill which the House approved of and passed; and I was charged, as Minister of Agriculture, with the carrying out of the law. The Bill empowered me to make regulations, and I made regulations to carry out the purpose of the measure, namely, to have our meat products and canned goods above reproach. I confess that in making the regulations, I took advantage of those framed in the United States for a similar purpose, and which were formulated and prepared after the scandals in the Chicago packing houses had been made public. The regulation complained of has now been in force about three months. It applies to the whole of Canada as well as to the counties of Essex and Kent. And with the exception of one letter, I have not received any objection to that regulation from any other part of Canada. The only objection I have had is from the county where the hon. gentleman himself has been stirring up a commotion. I do not say that the regulation may not bear on some other people in Canada as it has borne on the farmers of Kent and Essex. But it is a regulation which applies to all Canada and which applies also, by reason of the American regulations, to the people of the United States who kill hogs and dress and ship them just as our farmers do. These are subject to the same regulations without any recourse or relaxation of any kind and they have been so subject for over a year. Our farmers in the other parts of the country have apparently acquiesced in these regulations. At any rate I have only received one letter to the contrary. How are we to account for that? No doubt in Essex and Kent there is this year, and perhaps there was in other years, a rather unusual condition of affairs. But the farmers of Canada generally have taken of late years to the shipments of live hogs to the packing houses, and let me remind you that it is only shipments of hogs to the packing houses to which these regulations refer in any shape or form. They have of late years taken to ship their hogs to the packing houses alive; and without having examined the question, I venture to say that over 90 per cent of all the hogs that come to the packing houses go there alive. In Essex and Kent, however, there is a trade in the dressed carcasses, and the conditions there are interfered with to a certain extent by this regulation. What is the object of the regulation? Its object is to protect the public against fraud, against disease, against diseased meat being put up in our packing houses. I need not say why that is necessary because that was all explained last session, and no one objected then to the principle of the measure. Veterinary surgeons tell me that they cannot tell whether the carcass of a hog is that of a diseased hog unless certain vital organs are left in the dressed carcass,

These organs, in general terms, are the gullet, the lungs, the liver and the heart. Veterinary surgeons inform me that without these organs attached it would be practically impossible to detect disease. Now, I am not a veterinary surgeon or a doctor, so I do not know whether that is correct or not, but I take the opinion and advice of my experts—and the opinion of my experts in this matter is the opinion of the experts of the United States government as well. I explained this to the meeting at Chatham, and I am glad to say that those present, almost unanimously, agreed that everything ought to be done that was necessary to protect our meat trade. I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Clements) himself will dispute that. I do not think he will say that we ought to run any risks of our meat trade in the foreign markets to which we send our goods. I know that farmers generally have suffered in the past because their interests in this respect have not been guarded, and I know that to-day our farmers are regretful that their live cattle are shut out of the British market, by the embargo, and that they would do anything to prevent their meat from being shut out of that market in the same way. Therefore, we must take the necessary precautions, and one of these precautions, the veterinaries tell me, is that these organs should be in the carcass when it is inspected. It comes, then, to a practical detail of administration. The regulations contemplated the inspection of these carcasses when they arrived at the packing house that being the easiest and cheapest way of doing it. It seems, however, that the conditions of the trade in Essex and Kent are such that this way of doing it was not satisfactory to the shippers there. Notwithstanding the jibes of the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) I venture to think I have been a little solicitous of the interest of the farmers, and that I have tried in the administration of my department to meet their convenience, to arrange the work of my officers so as to interfere just as little as possible with the work our farmers are carrying on. But I am not prepared to do away with necessary safeguards. I do not believe that the farmers of Canada want me to do away with those safeguards. I am certain that the people of Canada generally want those safeguards maintained. And I may say that I did not find that those present at the meeting in Chatham wanted any of these safeguards removed, but only wanted them to be so arranged that they could carry on their business without interruption or obstruction. That I was prepared to do, if possible, and I went to Chatham to find out by inquiry on the spot how best it could be done. Am I to be blamed or criticised for that?

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. By the hon. gentlemen opposite I am to be blamed for everything. But that was what I did.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is what I ask.

Mr. FISHER. Then I have done all the hon. gentleman asks, so let him be satisfied. At that meeting I asked for suggestions. I received a suggestion from a gentleman in the audience. I have forgotten his name, and I did not know—and did not care—whether he was a supporter of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) or not. I was there to consider a business proposition, and to find out how I could best carry on the affairs of my department and not to talk politics. When I go to Chatham to talk politics I will talk politics—as I did before. And I may say that on the last occasion when I talked politics in Chatham the Liberal candidate was elected. It is not impossible that I may go to Chatham and talk politics again. I know that there were some men in the audience who wanted to talk politics and act politics, but that did not interfere with me, I am accustomed to that kind of thing. I went there to hear business suggestions, and I got them. Two or three suggestions were made that were objected to by the members of the audience as unsatisfactory or insufficient. One gentleman suggested that inspection should take place at the station from which the hog carcasses are shipped to Toronto. Montreal and other markets. It seemed to me that I might be able to arrange that, and I told them that I would arrange it if I could. I said: I cannot tell you offhand that I will do it, because I must find out first how it will work out; I must consult my officers and see whether they can manage it. I consulted my officers, and we decided they could manage it. Notices to that effect were sent within three days of the time when I was in Chatham and, within eight days of the time I was there, the new arrangements went into operation. The hon. member (Mr. Clements) takes exception to the regulations. I have not changed the regulations, but I found that the way in which the regulations were carried out did not suit the trade of the people of Essex and Kent, so I set to work to carry them out in a slightly different way, and have done it. And, from what I hear, the people of the neighbourhod are satisfied. The hon. member for West Kent shakes his head. Of course, he will not be satisfied whatever I do, or whatever I leave undone. But I have been informed that a number of carloads of hog carcasses were to be shipped to-day and to-morrow and my inspectors are on the spot to make the necessary inspection. The shipping will be done with as little inconvenience as possible to the farmers of the district.

Now, the hon. member told us that the effect of these regulations would be to throw the whole business into the hands of the packers and that the farmers would be at the mercy of the packers. I cannot see how that can be when the farmers are selling dead carcasses any more than when they are selling live hogs. It is a business transaction between the man who buys and the man who sells. Of course, in a general way, under the business arrangements of this country, the man in the big establishment is apt to get a little the best of the bargain in dealing with the individual farmer. But I believe that it is no more the case in these transactions than in any other. The farmer can sell or not sell, as he likes. He can sell to one buyer or to another buyer. It may be that the buyers will make agreements among themselves as to the prices to be given, but if they enter into a combination or agreement in restraint of trade, there is a statute placed on the books by this government under which they are liable to prosecution—a new thing in Canada since this government came into power. It is true that generally the farmers of Canada are not organized and are at the mercy, to a considerable extent, of the businesses that are organized . I have been preaching, year in and year out, constantly and insistently, that the farmers should get together and organize for the protection of their own interest.

The hon. member said one or two things more. First, he said he knew there never had been any hog cholera in Essex and Kent. Well, he sets up his judgment, which one would suppose from that statement, was the judgment of one of the most experienced and renowned veterinary practitioners on the continent of America. I do not know that the hon. member is a veterinary practitioner. I do not know that he is a biologist. I do not know that he is a medical practitioner of any kind whatever, But the most eminent veterinary practitioners, the most eminent bacteriologists, not only of Canada, but of the United States, have declared that there was a large amount of hog cholera in Essex and Kent. I say advisedly that there was a large amount, because six, seven and eight, aye, nine or ten years ago, the people of Essex and Kent were losing, year in and year out, thousands and thousands of dollars by reason of the hog cholera with which these two counties were permeated. But to-day there is practically no hog cholera in Essex and Kent, and the reason is the administration of my veterinary department, who have stamped it out. The head of that department is a man who is acknowledged, not only in Canada, but in the old country, in Scotland, whence he came originally, in England, where he is well known, and in the United States, as one of the highest authorities upon veterinary subjects in the English-speaking world. I allude to Dr. Rutherford, who is known to members of this House who were here when he was a member, and whose professional attainments and reputation are known all over the English-speaking world. He said there was hog cholera in Kent and Essex; Dr. McEachran, his predecessor in that position, said there was hog cholera in Essex and Kent. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that because Dr. Rutherford was a Liberal he is not to be believed. But Dr. McEachran is a Conservative, and perhaps they will take his word for it. I know there are hide-bound partisans on that side of the House who do not think a Liberal can say anything that is right, and perhaps they will take the evidence of a Conservative.

Next, the hon. member made some allusions to certain events in London and in Hamilton. All I have to say is that if the hon. member will send me—he said he would not do it publicly—but if he will send me privately the names of those inspectors whom he accuses of having acted improperly in the performance of their duties I will investigate the matter, and if they are guilty they will be inspectors no longer.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I cannot give the names of the inspectors, but I can give the names of the shippers.

Mr. FISHER. That will not do. I must have the names of the inspectors. I am not going to accept the statement of shippers in a matter of that kind. But perhaps he can get from the shippers the names of the inspectors or, at all events, the name of the factory. If he will give me the names of the factories that will do; I will know who the inspector is.

The hon. member also spoke of the bonding law. Now, the hog industry is one in which I have taken a great deal of interest. I believe it is one of the most satisfactory branches of agriculture in Canada. I have always advised farmers to go into that industry, because I was satisfied they could make money in it. Three or four years ago the packers of Canada had an interview with me. The hon. member seems to think they are my particular pets, because he says that I wish to throw the whole of this trade into the hands of the packers. They wanted to import hogs from the United States and make them into Canadian bacon, and they asked me to rescind a regulation which prevented them from doing it. I did not, though I was subjected to the greatest pressure. Instead of dealing with the packers alone, I went to the farmers, and had a gathering of the farmers at Guelph on the occasion of the fat stock show there. I asked them what they thought of the business and what the condition of affairs was. I pointed out to the farmers, as I had done before to the packers, that in the interest of the health of our live stock in Canada, and of the hog industry especially, and in the interest of the packers themselves, it was absolutely necessary that no danger should be incurred by the introduction into Canada of live American hogs, which would be taken into our packing houses and thence distributed over Canada, as some of the animals would be sold alive and taken away from the yards. I showed that this would degrade the quality, the character and the reputation of our Canadian bacon in the motherland. I did not yield to the packers' request, I did not allow them to do what they insisted upon doing and said they must do in their own interest. I told them that I knew their business better, and that they would not be injured, and that they could not be injured, because they were then doing a business very profitable to themselves, and that they must be careful not to endanger that business nor to endanger the hog-raising industry in Canada. And so I prevented them from bringing American hogs into the Canadian market to be made up as Canadian bacon, and I protected the interests of the Canadian hog-raiser and feeder, and saw that he had a chance to raise animals which were to be made into Canadian bacon and that alone, and that nobody else should be allowed to raise animals which afterwards were going to be put into a product that was to be sold as Canadian bacon. That was a part of the bonding law that they wanted to be relaxed. The result was a stimulus to the Canadian hog-raising and an advantage to the farmers here, though the packers thought it was not in their interest. I think my action was in the interest of the packers, and told them so frankly. I told them that I thought they would ruin their own trade if they did what they wanted to do. But they insisted they did want it; I would not allow them to do it, and the result is that their trade was saved, and their purchases were saved to the Canadian farmers, and to the Canadian farmers alone.

The hon. gentleman referred to some other matters upon which I will touch lightly, though I would not have spoken at all in this debate had it not been for the personal allusions of the hon. member for Kent. He and one or two others have spoken about rural mail delivery and the extension of post office facilities in Canada. I want to say a word or two about that. In the first place, let me say that I think this question of rural mail delivery can only be properly considered and understood after a clear statement of the facts. The reason that some people in Canada are calling for rural mail delivery is because the United States have undertaken it. I know that in my own county, in the Eastern Townships, the farmers on our side of that invisible line of 45 think they ought to have the same postal facilities as the farmers in the neighbouring states of Vermont, New Hampshire and New York. Now, Sir, the United States introduced rural mail delivery in 1897. They then appropriated $40,000 for that purpose and only spent $14,000. They only began in places where it seemed most likely that the system would succeed. The next year they appropriated $50,000, and spent it all. The next year they appropriated $150,000 or three times as much, and they spent it. In 1900, the fourth year, they appropriated $450,000, or three times what they had in 1899, and they spent nearly all. Then came the jump. Up to that time the people of the United States generally, the farmers and dwellers in rural parts, had not understood or appreciated what was being done, but they began, to use a slang phrase, to catch on, and the result was that in 1901, the government, which, in 1900, had asked for $450,000 for this purpose, asked for $1,750,000 and spent it all. In 1902 the demand for extension of this convenience was so great that they had to ask for $4,000,000, and they spent it all. In 1903 they had to double again and ask for $8,580,000, and they spent it nearly all. In 1904 they had to increase again and they asked for $12,900,000, and spent it all. In 1905 they had to nearly double again and ask for $21,000,000, and spent nearly all. In 1906 they had to increase again by $6,000,000 ; they asked for $25,800,000 and spent $24,700,000. In 1907, the present year, they had to ask for $28,350,000. We do not know how much they will have spent but I am informed that they will not be able to do the work for that amount and the estimate which they have made for next year is no less a sum than $35,000,000 for rural mail delivery in the United States. Just glance over these figures and take them in in their proper relations. For the first three or four years they were doing it experimentally in a few places only, the amount was not very great but just as soon as the other people in the United States who had not the advantage of rural mail delivery began to understand what some of the people of the United States were getting the increase was enormous, and in eight years it went up from $1,750,000 to $35,000,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, I put these figures before the House for thought and consideration. The United States have an area no larger than our own. The United States have tried to begin by only doing it where it was likely to be feasible and they have not ended it yet, but they have got to a point where they have to do it nearly all over their Union at a cost of nearly $35,000,000.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. Is that cost in excess of the previous cost of mail delivery or is that the entire cost ?

Mr. FISHER. Practically it is the whole cost. It is true that by reason of the adoption of rural mail delivery they have been able to cut off a few country post offices. I am informed however that the amount thus saved is trifling in comparison with the amount spent. I have not the exact figures but my information leads me to believe that out of $35,000,000 which they have appropriated for next year for rural mail delivery the other expenditure, may be reduced in consequence of that, is less than $5,000,000 ; in other words the increase of the expenditure of the Post Office Department of the United States because of rural mail delivery next year will come to over $30,000,000.

I am not prepared to say that never, at no time, should Canada undertake this work. This is a matter which we have to consider. We have to count the cost, we have to look the facts in the face and we have to see what the advantages are to compensate for this cost, but I do venture to think that without any material increase in the cost of our post office administration, without, at all events, making to disappear the splendid surplus which our Post Office Department has shown for the last few years, we can practically accomplish as much for the rural population of Canada as the United States has accomplished by means of this vast expenditure for rural mail delivery. What we can do in that respect I will just outline, and I am not speaking after having consulted my colleagues but from my own knowledge of the affairs of the country parts of Canada and from what I believe can be done. I believe that we can increase the number of local post offices in the country parts. I believe we can increase the number of local mail routes and the number of mails per week that these rural post offices will have to such an extent and in such a manner that the rural population will be fairly and adequately supplied with the mail delivery and facility which they deserve, which they have a right to demand from the government of the country and which are a necessity in the isolation of country life. I am aware that during the last few years the department at Ottawa here has worked in this direction. I have a few figures, and I will only weary the House with a very few, but they are sufficient to indicate the truth of what I have said. I have understood—I do not remember exactly where or when, but I think it was my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) who said it—that the people of the Northwest were almost up in arms, I am not using his exact words, I know—because of the bad mail service they were getting. I made inquiry of the Post Office Department on this point and I have to say that in the last two years there has not been a complaint from the Northwest or from any part of Canada where there was a reasonable excuse for establishing a new post office or increasing the number of mail services that the complaint has not been met and the demand granted. I will just show what has been done in the Northwest. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), last night, gave the figures of the increase in the number of post offices. I will not go over that, but he did not show what I am now going to show, that in the Northwest there are four additional inspectorates and three additional railway mail service districts being organized, and that the letter carrier delivery system has been extended to all towns having a population of 12,000 people and a revenue of $20,000 per year. Now, what else has been done in the Northwest ? The number of post offices in operation in the Northwest on the 30th of June, 1906, was 1907. There was an increase during the year of 186, giving 1907 at the end of 1906. Since that time there were added to the number of post offices opened in the Northwest and British Columbia, 267, and there were in the whole of Canada 436 new post offices opened during the year, of which 267 were west of Lake Superior. In 1896, there were only 1,060 offices in British Columbia, Manitoba and the Northwest. Now, there are 2,174, or an increase of 1,114, or they have been considerably more than doubled in the course of the last ten years.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Will the minister tell us how many post offices have been closed during that time.

Mr. FISHER. The number of post offices closed was deducted before the figures I have given to the House were prepared. I feel strongly that the rural population of Canada deserves all possible consideration in postal service; I feel strongly that we should do our best to supply the postal needs of that population; I feel satisfied that by such work as I have alluded to—carried on if necessary until the whole surplus of the post office shall disappear, the needs of the people in the postal service will be supplied. I am satisfied that can be done in the way I have outlined without the adoption of a system of rural mail delivery. When I see the result of that system in the United States, and when we know that while our population is smaller and our revenue less, yet the area over which rural mail delivery would extend is not much smaller in Canada than in the United States, I confess that the United States statistics have staggered me and made me feel that we must not plunge lightly even into a discussion of the question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the difference between the cost of the rural free delivery as established in the States and a system of postal expansion such as he refers to?

Mr. FISHER. I have no doubt that the figures could be given approximately but I have not them at hand. The expansion which I have alluded to will take place gradually as the needs of the people in each locality will arise. I have no hesitation in saying that people who live in isolated districts have more need for such postal facilities than those who live in thickly populated parts of the country, because with the good roads in these settled localities the people go frequently to the local centres and they can call at the post office to get their mail with very little trouble.

There is another subject on which I wish to say a few words, and it is a subject which has been dwelt on by the leader of the opposition and the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). I refer to the old bugaboo of the balance of trade, and I use the word 'bugaboo' advisedly. Hon. gentlemen opposite are now trying to make out that because in Canada we have a larger value of imports than of exports the country is being ruined. Let me point out in a few words—for it is nearly six o'clock and I want to finish before adjournment—that the best political economists have for years and years declared emphatically that the theory that a country which imports more than it exports is doing a bad business, is not in consonance with the facts as shown in the history of Canada, of the United States, and of most European countries. I have here the figures of our trade for four five year periods, starting with 1905 and going back. Between 1901 and 1905 our excess of imports was very large and in these five years it amounted to $96,000,000, or an average of $19,000,000 a year of imports over exports. In the five years from 1896 to 1900 we had an excess of exports to the amount of $24,000,000, and that is the only one of these five years periods during which there was an excess of exports. Between 1891 and 1895 we had an excess of imports of $49,000,000, and between 1886 and 1890 we had an excess of imports amounting to $116,000,000. I point hon. gentlemen to the fact that from 1886 to 1890 when the national policy so called by them was in its full vigour; the national policy to which they still—no, they don't still pin their faith to it but they used to—when the national policy was in its full growth and force there was an excess of imports in these five years of $116,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the Minister of Agriculture read the speeches made by Sir Richard Cartwright, who declared then that that condition was the ruin of the country.

Mr. FISHER. I am making my own speech and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) can make his afterwards.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read Sir Richard's speech.

Mr. FISHER. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) make an original speech of his own and show us what he can do himself. From 1891 to 1895, when every one will admit that the national policy was in its decline, when these gentlemen opposite know that the country was not doing as well as it was during the five previous years, the excess of imports was $49,000,000, or a great deal less than one half what it was in the previous five years. There was change of government in 1896 and the full effect of that change was not felt in the country for some few years. It did not take five years of Liberal rule to make the country prosperous, but still during the first five years of our regime there was an excess of exports, because the development of production in Canada came quickly and effectively under our policy. During the first few years after we put our policy in force the farmers of Canada began to produce more; the farmers of Canada began to be better off, and the result was an excess of agricultural exports, and only during these five years out of the last twenty years in Canada was there an excess of exports over imports.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question——

Mr. FISHER. I have only a few minutes and I want to finish ; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) can make his speech afterwards whenever he likes. Then the full effect of our policy came into force; then the country began to feel the full tide of prosperity ; then began enormous railroad building in Canada to meet the demands of a prosperous people; then began the investment of United States capital, British capital, Belgian capital and French capital to take advantage of the prosperity which had arisen under our policy and administration. What was the result? That in the last five years there was an excess of imports of $96,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that is all wrong; that it is bad for the country, and that the country must be going to the dogs because of it. How was it under the glorious regime when Sir John Macdonald was at the head of the government of this country and the national policy was in full force? That in five years there was an excess of imports of $116,000,000. What is the meaning of these excesses of imports? I have not the exact figures, but everybody knows that the large balance of trade between Canada and the United States is against us, and that these imports are largely from the United States and they are largely the raw material of our manufacturing industries, which to-day, under an enlightened fiscal policy, are prospering in a way which they never did before under any protective policy with the hon. gentlemen opposite in power. The hon. gentlemen know that American capitalists have invested in Canada thousands and hundreds of thousands—ay, millions of dollars—why ? Not only to get the home market of Canada, but to export from Canada to the foreign markets of the world. What is the reason of the International Harvester Company establishing a factory in Hamilton? Are they going to manufacture only for Canada? No, but for the European, Australian and South African markets, and in the French market, especially, under the new treaty just negotiated, the Canadian implement manufacturers are going to have a decided advantage over the American manufacturers. Why has the Singer Sewing Machine Company come into Canada and established a factory at St. Johns in the province of Quebec, employing several hundred hands, and likely to employ a thousand hands in a few months? Not only to sell the Singer sewing machine in Canada, but, as the manager told me himself, to manufacture in Canada for the export trade. I asked him: 'Why don't you do that in your old factory in the United States?' His reply was: 'Because we can manufacture for the open markets of the world better and cheaper in Canada than we can in our own country.' The balance of trade is against us, as hon. gentlemen opposite say, because the people of Canada are wanting more good things than they can get at home and have to go abroad to get them. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: If that is the case, you do not give a high enough protective duty to get these things produced in Canada. The hon. gentlemen need only to turn to the census reports of manufacturers to find that our manufacturers in Canada have been producing more and more to an enormous extent, and yet the industrial development of Canada has not reached the point of meeting the consumptive demands of the people of Canada. What are the actual facts with regard to that? We took a census of manufacturers in 1905 and there was a general census in 1900, and what is the comparison? In 1900 the industrial productions of Canada, manufactured articles, amounted to $481,000,000; in 1905 they amounted to $706,000,000, an increase of $225,000,000 in those five years, an increase under the Liberal policy which was never dreamed of under the national policy. But notwithstanding that enormous increase, the consumptive demand of the prosperous people of Canada is more than the manufacturers can meet, and the result is that we have to import goods from abroad, and, besides, these same manufacturers have to obtain a large quantity of raw materials from abroad or they would not be able to make that magnificent showing.

I have a word or two to say in regard to another matter. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that we have to send out coin and bullion to pay for the difference in the balance of trade and that is a bad thing for the country. Now, I happen to have some figures here which tell a different tale. I have the figures of the exports and imports of Canada for forty years. In those forty years we exported $4,257,000,000, and of coin and bullion we exported $120,000,000. During the same period we imported $5,000,000,000, or about $750,000,000 more than we exported, and we imported $150,000,000 of coin and bullion, or $30,000,000 more than we exported. Did we send out that money to pay for the balance of trade against us? The hon. gentleman, if he knew the first thing about political economy, would know that we did nothing of the kind. He would know that the reason for the balance of trade is altogether something else, and it has nothing to do with our exports of coin and bullion. The United States has practically had the same experience as Canada in that respect. I find that the imports of the United States for 116 years amounted to $37,000,000,000, and the exports to $42,000,000,000, or $5,000,000,000 more than the imports, and that the exports of coin and bullion at the same time were $1,500,000,000 more than the imports. There are, however, two countries which at the present time are held up as high protective countries apart from the United States. Germany at the present moment is held up all through the English-speaking world as the great example of protection, the country which is driving free-trade Great Britain out of all the markets of the world. We would suppose then, according to this theory, that the balance of trade would be in Germany's favour. Not a bit of it. Germany introduced protection in 1879, and in 1880 she exported $18,000,000 marks more than she imported.

But having introduced protection, the balance of trade began to go against her. The next year she had a balance of trade of 19,000,000 marks against her. The following year it was 200,000,000 marks; the next year 200,000,000 marks; and last year the balance of trade against her amounted to 300,000,000 marks. And this is Germany which used to have, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, the balance of trade in her favour, but which to-day, having introduced protection, has had the balance turned the other way. France is a country renowned everywhere as being probably the most stable and having the largest amount of available capital always on hand. France would be expected, therefore, to have the balance of trade in her favour. Well, I have here the returns for five years ; and I find that with the one exception of 1905, she had a balance of trade against her. In 1902 she had a balance of trade against her of one hundred million of francs ; in 1903, 100,000,000 francs ; in 1904, 100,000,000 francs ; in 1905, 66,000,000 francs in her favour ; and in 1906, 200,000,000 francs against her. Both France and Germany are highly protected countries ; and Germany is held up to us as the successful rival of our free trade motherland, while France is known the world over as being in the soundest financial position. Let me now give an instance of a country in which the balance of trade is the other way. I shall only give the round figures. From 1892 to 1896 there was on an average a total export amounting to 571,000,000 roubles and a total import of 432,000,000 roubles. From 1897 to 1901, the average yearly export was 648,000,000 roubles against an import of 522,000,000 roubles. In 1902 the export was 860,000,000 roubles against 599,000,000 roubles imports. In 1903 the exports amounted to 1,000,000,000 roubles as against 681,000,000 roubles imports. In 1904 the exports amounted to 1,005,000,000 roubles and the exports to 654,000,000 roubles. In 1905, the last year I have, the exports were 1,047,000,000 roubles as against imports of 582,000,000 roubles. There you have a magnificent example of the advantages of the balance of trade being in favour of the country, or the exports being greater than the imports. That surely must be the most prosperous country in the world. Surely it must be a country whose example we all ought to copy. Well, what country do you think that is ? Is it Russia ? Does the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) go to Russia for his inspiration ? I remember one occasion when he read a lot of Russian names to a political meeting. Perhaps he has gone to Russia for his inspiration as well as for his names.

Let me read here the epitome of an opinion on this question by an extreme protectionist, a gentleman who lives in Germany, and who bases his opinion on the experience of Germany and his knowledge of what goes on in that country. I shall have to read it in French as I am quoting from a French publication, 'La Revue Economique Internationale' :—

Malgré tous les efforts tentés pour la refuter, on rencontre souvent cette opinion dans le public qu'en présence d'un écart considérable entre l'exportation et l'importation de deux pays, l'avantage est toujours du co té du pays qui exporte le plus. Ma tâche ne saurait être ici de combattre cette erreur. Je dois me contenter de rappeler que la science économique a appris depuis longtemps déjà à évaluer plus exactement les bilans commerciaux.

Mr. DANIEL. Translate.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly, I shall do my best to satisfy my hon. friend :—

Notwithstanding all the efforts made to refute it, we often meet this opinion in the public, that when there is a considerable difference between the exportation and the importation of two countries, the advantage is always on the side of the country which exports the most. My purpose here is not to combat this error. I must content myself with recalling the fact that economic science has learned, since a long time ago, to estimate more accurately commercial balance sheets.

I thought that on these two questions, the rural mail service and the balance of trade, it was well perhaps that I should put these few facts before the House, and I must apologize to the House for having taken up their time at this length.

On motion of Mr. Lancaster the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, December 5, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE LATE HENRY LOVELL, M.P.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have to inform the House that I have received the sad intelligence of the death of one of our colleagues in the person of Mr. Henry Lovell, member for the electoral division of Stanstead. Mr. Lovell was not a very widely known member of this House. He came in late, but was one of those public spirited and highly respectable citizens who command the highest measure of respect in the community in which they lived. In the community in which he lived, Mr. Lovell had the sympathy of all his fellow-citizens, not only of those who were associated with him politically, but of his opponents. His loss is a great one to the party to which he belonged, and I am sure it will also be felt by those to whom he was opposed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). On behalf of those who sit on this side of the House I desire to say that we associate ourselves with the Prime Minister in the words of sympathy which he has just uttered. I had not the privilege of a very intimate acquaintance with Mr. Lovell; but I always found him a very courteous gentleman, and one who, although he did not speak very often in the House, took a deep interest in the affairs of the country and in the performance of the duties which devolved upon him by reason of his membership in this House.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 7) to incorporate the Northern Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Adamson.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the Tobique Manufacturing Company, and to change its name to 'Fraser Lumber Company, Limited.'—Mr. Carvell.

Bill (No. 10) respecting irrigation.—Mr. Oliver.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 9) respecting surveys of public lands of the Dominion, and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Did not some Bill of this character come before the House last year, and did it pass, or was it withdrawn?

Mr. OLIVER. This Bill in an almost identical form came before the House last year. As it stands at present it is a part of the Dominion Lands Act. It was intended by the legislation of last session that the part of the Act relating to surveys should be passed separately from the remainder of the Act. The Bill was so drafted, and it was put through the House in that shape, but on account of the Act relating to Dominion lands, aside from surveys, not being put through, it was found that the Bill had not been drawn to meet that contingency. It was necessary therefore to withdraw it, and it is now introduced this session as an entirely separate Bill and repealing the provisions of the existing law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENTS.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 11) to amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said: In a word, this Bill proposes to apply the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission to sleeping car companies and telegraph companies, as I introduced it last session, and with the promise of legislation on both those points at that time. It also brings up again the amendment I proposed last session in regard to telephone companies. It also provides for a two-cent a mile transportation rate, and, finally, it will give Canadian railways an opportunity of giving the same rate of transportation to Canadian passengers that they give to passenger traffic on roads in the United States, namely, they are carrying any number of Americans through Canada at two cents a mile while they charge Canadians three. This provides for the same treatment for Canadians as for Americans.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

ROYAL MINT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. How much money has been expended to date on the Royal Mint, for construction and equipment, respectively?
2. What sums are required to complete on both accounts?
3. What officers and employees, and at what yearly salaries, are required to man the institution?
4. What is the face value of copper and silver and gold coinage obtained by the government per year for the last ten years, and what has it cost the government therefor?
5. What has been the total profit on coinage in the ten years?
6. What amount of coinage is it in contemplation to issue in 1908, and in what denominations?
7. Who is to make the purchases and fix the price of bullion necessary for the use of the mint?
8. Upon what system are officers and employees of the mint appointed, promoted and dismissed?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). This question, I find, covers a considerable amount of information, and I would prefer that the hon. gentleman should make a motion. In the meantime I will give instructions to have the information prepared and a return will be brought down at an early date.

Mr. FOSTER. All I am anxious for is to have it before the Budget speech.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, it will be within a few days. I would ask that the various questions regarding my department be passed over in the meantime, but I hope before the order is passed through that I will have the information which is on its way.

INSURANCE COMMISSION—TOTAL COST.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What is the total cost of the Royal Commission on Insurance to date?
2. Have all payments therefor been made?
3. What amount has been paid to Mr. Shepley?
4. How long were Mr. Shepley's services retained after the close of the inquiry, what was the nature of such services, and what did he receive therefor?
5. What sums have been paid, respectively, to each of the commissioners, to Mr. Tilley and to Mr. Dawson?

6. What was the total cost of printing, and by whom was it done?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. Total cost of commission to date (exclusive of cost of printing and paper for 5,000 copies of evidence, $9,500), $85,842.31.
2. Yes.
3. $25,000.
4. Mr. Shepley's services were not retained after the close of the inquiry. The last public session of the inquiry was held November 24, 1906, but the inquiry was not closed at that date. Mr. Shepley's retainer to conduct to an end the inquiry referred to did not terminate with the closing of the hearing of evidence by the Commission, but continued until the completion of the report of the Commission on or about February 21, 1907. During the time referred to Mr. Shepley was assisting in the preparation of the report and advising the Commission in regard thereto. No specific sum was received by Mr. Shepley for the particular services referred to.

TEMPORARY LOANS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What is the total amount of the temporary loans of the government at present?
2. What rate of interest do these loans bear?
3. What temporary loans have been entered into by the government since July 1, 1907?
4. From what banks or bankers have the temporary loans made by the government since July 1, 1907, been obtained, and what rate of interest do they bear?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the question to stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It seems to me that I am entitled to an answer to this question. The point of order which I mention is that I am entitled to an answer to this question. The government cannot withhold that answer; that is the point of order which I desire to bring to your observation. Of course, the right of members to put questions does not admit of any doubt. It was a long time in doubt, but there is no doubt whatever now. A question can be put by a member which the government is bound to answer. I understand that under certain circumstances delay may be aked by the government, but where it is simply a question of fact I do not think that the government have any right to delay or withhold the answer. In this instance the question is one, if you will take the trouble to look at it, Mr. Speaker, that was put on the opening day of the session. Surely it would not take the department of the hon. gentleman more than ten minutes or a quarter of an hour to fully answer this question.

Mr. FIELDING. Is this a question of order, Mr. Speaker ?

Mr. MONK. It is a question of order, which I submit to His Honour the Speaker. It would not take more than ten minutes to make up the answer to so simple a question. At the present moment we are discussing an amendment to the address——

Mr. FIELDING. I submit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is not discussing a point of order at all.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I am putting my point of order before you.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the point of order ?

Mr. MONK. The point of order I put before you, Mr. Speaker, is that the government have no right to withhold or delay the answer to this question. I am arguing my point of order and I think I am in order in doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think this is hardly a point of order. The right of the government to answer a question is plain, of course, under the rules.

Mr. MONK. I have stated my point of order, if you will allow me to put it before you, and I am quite prepared to abide by your ruling. I say that where a question is put by a member as a question of fact, unless there are some special circumstances, the question being in order, the government has no right to withhold or delay the answer to that question, and, in illustration of that argument, I said that at the present moment we are debating an amendment to the address involving a question of finance where an elightenment upon this question is necessary for an intelligent discussion of the amendment. If the government have the right, upon the putting of so simple a question of fact, to delay or withhold the answer, how long can they delay it? Here is a question which was put on the 28th of November involving what fact? What are our temporary loans at present?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is hardly a point of order that the hon. gentleman is raising. If he sees fit to censure the government for their course in delaying an answer I think there will be a way of doing that by motion or otherwise, but I can hardly see that a point of order can be founded upon delay in the government's reply to a question when they simply ask the question to stand until a later date to be answered.

Mr. MONK. Is not the decision of the request of the government either in my hands or theirs, Mr. Speaker? If the government ask for delay to answer a question, of course, as a rule, that delay is never refused, but here it is inopportune to grant delay.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not within the province of the Chair, I should think, to order the government to reply or not. If the government see fit to give a reply which is not satisfactory to an hon. member his recourse would be other than the raising of a point of order, which I do not think would be appropriate to the purpose.

Mr. MONK. Your decision is that my point is not a point of order at all.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would decide that. I think it would raise a discussion which would not be in order.

Mr. FIELDING. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to permit me to repeat what I said at an earlier stage that I expect this information will be before me before the order is disposed of. There is no desire to delay or withhold it, but I did not wish to discuss it. If the hon. gentleman wishes to stand on his rights I will stand on mine; he has no power to enforce his question.

TEMPORARY LOANS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What temporary loans have been made by the government since October 31, 1906, and at what rate of interest?
2. Which, if any, of said loans are still outstanding and unpaid?
3. What rate of interest has been paid, or payable, on each of said loans, since they were made, respectively?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would be obliged if the hon. gentleman would allow that question to stand. I believe the information is prepared but through some mistake it has not been sent over.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman told me yesterday that the answer was ready but that owing to the two o'clock rule it had not been available.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite correct. If the information comes over during the day as I expect, I will furnish it to my hon. friend and let it be answered publicly at a later date.

COLD STORAGE PLANTS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH asked:

1. How many cold storage plants were commenced during the past season, applications for assistance for which were made to the government, under the provisions of the Cold Storage Act of last session?
2. What is the proposed cost of each?
3. Where are they situated?
4. Who are the proprietors in each case?
5. How much of the government grant has been paid so far to each?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Three. The department has been and is in correspondence with divers other parties who are desirous of taking advantage of the Act, but their formal applications in accordance with the regulations have not been as yet filed.
2. $125,000, $63,289, and $75,000 respectively.
3. In the city of St. John, New Brunswick, the town of Morrisburg, Ontario, and the city of Edmonton, Alberta.
4. The New Brunswick Cold Storage Co., Ltd., St. John, N.B., Scott, Ashton & Co., Morrisburg, Ont., and the Edmonton Produce Co., Edmonton, Alta.
5. None. Under the provisions of the Act no part of the subsidy is yet due.

N.B.—The application from Edmonton is still pending owing to an irregularity which was found in its form and the department is not aware whether the construction of the plant has been commenced or not.

CAMPBELLFORD, LAKE ONTARIO AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. OWEN asked:

Has the government any, and if any, what information as to the exercise by the Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company, of any of the powers conferred upon that company by section 10 of 4 Edward VII., chapter 54, or as to whether such company have transferred or otherwise dealt with the charter granted them by the said Act?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). There appears to be no information in the department relative to the above matter.

DISTRIBUTION OF BLUE BOOKS.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) yesterday asked for some information as to the distribution of blue books this year. The information I am given is as follows : Owing to the crowded condition of the House of Commons post office it has been found impossible longer to distribute the larger and bulkier volumes of blue books at the post office. The smaller blue books will continue to be so distributed. Special arrangements are being made this session for the distribution of the larger books.

DESTITUTE IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he is ready to answer the question which I asked yesterday regarding the stranded immigrants at Toronto, as the matter is of extreme urgency and pressing importance.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). An officer of the Department of the Interior went to Toronto last night to meet these people, but found difficulty in communicating with them. He is now awaiting an interpreter, who will go to Toronto to-night, to see what the condition actually is.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the minister kindly give me the name of the officer who went to Toronto last night ?

Mr. OLIVER. Edward Blake Robertson.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session and the amendment of Mr. Cockshutt thereto.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, for the last four or five days the Heavyweights of parliament have been pounding each other across the floor of this House with political missiles, not always under the Marquis of Queensbury rules. If it were permissible for a stranger to be in the gallery and see this House opened with prayer, he might be reminded of the remark made by a celebrated after-dinner speaker at the Pilgrim Club in New York ; 'When the pilgrim fathers first landed on this, to them, foreign shore, they fell upon their knees, they then grabbed their battle-axes and fell upon the aborigines.' Mr. Speaker, in this wordy warfare, these heavyweights have gone long distances back and have had to use long guns ; but these long shots have, I am afraid, gone over the heads of the plain people whom I represent and of whom I am one ; and I ask you, Sir, to listen to me while I try to bring to your attention certain omissions from the speech from the Throne, of things which I think would tend to the comfort, morality, peace and happiness of the people of Canada. I am not like some hon. gentlemen who rise from their seats and say, 'had it not been for what some hon. gentleman said, I would not have taken part in this debate,' and then produce a bundle of papers and speak for hours. I have been diligent during the recess, Mr. Speaker. As an ordinary plain citizen, I do not think I am able to perform the duty which I have been asked to perform by my constituents unless I devote my whole time to it. Consequently, during the recess I have been busy. I have here thousands of quotations, extracts and interviews which I can produce if necessary; but if hon. gentlemen will take as correct what I say, I shall not quote in full of these documents.

Now, Sir, for fourteen years I have had the honour of acting for the Crown in one of the largest agricultural counties in Canada. I believe that there are certain amendments to the Criminal Code which, if the government of the day will introduce them, will tend greatly to the morality and the health and the peace of the people of Canada. They are matters which are talked of every day and to the importance of which the people are very much alive. I do not think it is the province of a member of the opposition to introduce Bills. I believe it is the duty of the government to introduce all legislation and all amendments to legislation, and I have no doubt the government will be only too willing to do so when convinced that the legislation called for is right and proper. The first amendment I would suggest would be an amendment to the Criminal Code regarding injuries to persons by the knife. A great many Italians are given to this form of attack. No one else seems to use the knife but the Italian. A large number of good citizens have been killed or injured, and occasionally we hear of one of our policemen done to death by some Italian with a knife. Montreal papers of yesterday speak of one case a day, and ask for sixty more police. In my opinion we should give the power to our immigration authorities to deport any Italian or person of other nationality who is found with a knife on his person. That would wipe out the evil to a certain extent.

I find that in the presentment of the Grand Jury in the city of Toronto last assizes, they referred to the evil resulting from the carrying of deadly weapons. They said :

> Cases of murder and manslaughter are occurring with alarming frequency. We are of opinion that many of these are the result of the carrying of deadly weapons. We submit that strong measures should be taken to prevent this dangerous practice. We respectfully urge upon the authorities the necessity of making it the duty of police officers and constables generally to search at any time such persons as might be suspected of carrying concealed weapons, and that the person upon whom such weapons are found shall be liable to imprisonment for a term of not less than three months without the option of a fine.

That is not sufficient in my opinion. Any one who follows the course of crime in any country will find that it is to a certain extent epidemic. Thus when one person uses a knife and the crime is described in the newspapers, that acts as a suggestion to others to do likewise.

Another amendment which I would ask the government to consider, has reference to offences committed on women and children and the penalties imposed therefor. The other day the Grand Jury in the city of Toronto made a presentment which dealt with this evil as follows :

> We regret that in view of the heavy docket at the present assizes, and from information received at the jail and Central prison, it would appear that crime, and especially offences of a grave nature, are on the increase rather than otherwise. It is to be deplored that brutal offences against females are of such frequent occurrence. We strongly recommend that the lash be not spared in the penlties imposed upon those convicted of such revolting crimes.

The Central prison covers all Ontario criminals as well as Toronto.

If you will take notice of the penalties imposed, you will see that I am speaking of a matter in which the public is very much concerned, and it is also a crime which is epidemic in its nature. Look at the city of Vancouver. A man there commits burglary and he gets fifteen years imprisonment and the lash. Another man in Montreal breaks into a railway car and gets five years. Another in Ontario sends indecent post cards through the mail, and his punishment is two years. But here, in a city within fifty miles of this, a man who was guilty of violating a child, not more than eight years old, was only given fifty days in gaol. The other day in the city of Port Arthur, a hunchback, a foreigner, who had a shack outside the city, and who was wont to entice little girls into it, from eight to twelve years old, and to outrage them, was given a punishment of three years penitentiary. In my opinion that crime should be a capital offence, and the punishment should not be left to the discretion and the kindness of a jury or a soft hearted judge. The punishment should be obligatory. Where such offences are absolutely proved, the criminal should be adequately punished. This crime should be stamped out. There are hundreds of other cases of this kind which I could mention.

There is another amendment needed. Just consider the number of valuable lives which are lost by negligence in shooting, who are accidentally shot in the woods. A poor habitant or native, living in the woods with his little family, who is in want of food, and who shoots a moose, which turns out to be a cow moose, is hunted out of the country. But what is done to the man who through criminal carelessness shoots another in the woods by mistake for a deer? You read of such mistakes every day in the paper. Here is one instance:

Freelton, Ont., November 14.

While hunting in Muskoka Henry Chambers of this place, was accidentally shot. Another member of his party mistaking him for a deer in the distance fired, shooting him through the bowels. A doctor was sent for, but Chambers died before his arrival. A coronor's jury exonerated from all blame the man who did the shooting.

Press reports say there were three hundred and seventy-five men killed last year in the Adirondacks. We are told that every immigrant is worth a thousand dollars to the country. If that be the case, every man who goes for his vacation for two weeks into the woods and has the money to pay his expenses, is worth $10,000. An amendment should be made to the Criminal Code providing that the man who shoots his fellow man by mistake, unless it is a pure accident, which was unavoidable, should be punished. Why should he not take all the precautions necessary? I am not a hunter myself and at one time I thought that the fault lay with the long distance rifle. I have conferred however with people who have knowledge, with men who have been in the woods this year, and they tell me that the long distance rifle should be a preventive. Because, instead of having to crawl up to the quarry and shoot quickly, as was the case when we had the short distance rifle, you can shoot at any distance when you have a rifle which carries two or three miles, and there is no necessity to shoot before you are absolutely certain what you are shooting at.

I would add that a few amendments to the Criminal Code regarding accidents on railways would benefit the people. I think that the members of the Railway Commission will bear me out. I was glad to see in the speech from the Throne that the Railway Commission is to be increased. They are doing good work. I believe that an impartial body like the Railway Commission is a great advantage both to the public and the railways. But instead of increasing the number here, there should be a commission for the western country, which is entirely different from the east, and a commission for the east so that the work could be handled properly.

As to preventing accidents on the railways, I do not see why we should not take a lesson from our own methods of preventing accidents on steamboats. The government will not allow a steamboat to go out until she has been fully examined. But there is no government inspection of locomotive steam boilers. Not long ago, an accident occurred on a railway train. The boiler burst, and the engineer and fireman were killed. It happened that the members of the Railway Commission were on that very train. Why should there not be an inspection of these locomotives, and also of the tracks of the railways? If the government had inspected that Caledon horse-shoe curve, they could have made regulations which would have made it impossible for an accident to occur there; or, if it happened, it would be through failure to obey laws for which somebody would be responsible. I speak in this matter as much for the men who are employed on the railways as for the travelling public. An engineer who, night after night and day after day, in the winter with the thermometer twenty below zero, or in summer with ninety degrees of heat, carries his passengers without losing or injuring any of them, is a man to be commended and admired. These railway employees are a fine body of men. When we lose an engineer, we lose a man who is of value to the state. And it is hardly creditable to us that 284 employees of the railways of Canada were killed last year and 390 injured. I ask that provision be made in the criminal law—and I have no doubt that in making that provision, we should have the concurrence of the managers of the railways—that roadbeds and equipment should be inspected, and trains run in a certain prescribed fashion at this or that point, as might be shown to be necessary by the inspection of the government officer. The Railway Commission is highly approved by the managers of the railways themselves. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy says he believes it is a good thing to have government control of rates. These railways are like all corporations—they have no soul. But that does not alter the fact that the railway managers feel these railway accidents more poignantly than any other persons except those directly interested. They earnestly wish that their roads could be without accidents; and, while they have to make money, and put money by, yet, if the government will say to them that they must do certain things, those things will be done. The railways may not make so much money, but it will be much easier for the managers to run their roads without accidents and the managers will be assisted in managing their roads with fewer accidents. Those men who took their financial lives in their hands and built the first railway across this continent on Canadian soil, have our admiration and I am glad to say have made millions, and I believe they are entitled to them. But to-day is different the railways are making millions. There is one railway corporation in this country that has a surplus of $30,000,000, and they added to that surplus last year $12,000,000. That company and every other company that runs a railway through a thickly-settled part of the country—as for instance that part of Ontario west of Toronto,—should be obliged to double-track their roads. The government inspectors should decide what roads are to be provided with double-tracks, and the surpluses might well be used for such purposes as these. Our roads to-day are like a carpenter trying to do work with tools of twenty years ago. The law ought to compel them to provide proper working tools, and one of these is a system of double-tracks in the thickly-peopled parts of the country.

Now, I am glad to be able to say that I cannot agree with the hon. member or any other hon. member who rises in this House and talks hard times. I am speaking for the section of the country in which I live, and I have talked with hon. members from different parts of the country on this point. I am sure that the hon. members for Ontario and Eastern Canada will agree with me that, while there is a little shortage of money and the banks are not loaning as much as they did, there are no hard times. Certainly there are no hard times where I come from. It is almost impossible to find a man needing employment. I am one who always stands up for the banks of Canada. The system which they carry out is a most commendable one. It was a grand spectacle that was presented to us the other day in the city of New York, when banks were tumbling and trust companies and corporations failing like trees before a hurricane, there stood the banks of Canada like the old British square, four square to every blast. But there is one respect in which our system could be improved. I think it quite proper that our banks should call in some of their capital, because, no matter how prosperous we in this country may be, there is nothing like prudence, yet our prosperity depends upon the farmers; and, while the farmers of Canada are as prosperous this year as they ever were—for, if they have not quite as much produce, they have better prices—we must recognize the fact that outside countries will not buy as much from us as formerly, and it is necessary that we should be prepared for that condition when it arises. It is a wise saying that warns us in times of peace to prepare for war—and it is a wise thing to prepare even though war may not come in the end. But while I quite agree that it is right that the banks should call in some of their capital, there is one little matter in which I cannot quite agree with the banks, and for which I believe a remedy can be found. Our banks hold themselves at liberty to notify their customers without even one day's grace; 'I am instructed from headquarters to notify you that your rate of interest on discounts hereafter will be 7 per cent instead of 6 per cent,' is the notice lately sent out. I speak with knowledge in that matter, because I got one of these notices myself—and I have it here if any hon. gentleman would like to look at it. Now, if a bank—I speak of a commercial bank—wants to increase its discount rate from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, it should be obliged to increase its rate of interest on deposits from 3 per cent to 4 per cent—it's a poor rule that won't work both ways. This would affect a good many people in my section of country. For instance, take the village of Exeter, with a population of about 2,000 and surrounded by Devonshire and German people. I will undertake to say that there is not less than $2,000,000 of hard cash deposited in the banks at Exeter drawing 3 per cent. That is the way they do things in Huron. If the banks are to charge more for loaning money, they should pay more for the money they have in charge. I am not a financier, but I have conferred with financiers on this matter, and I would like the government to consider one point. This is the only country in the world in which banks are commercial banks and savings banks together. And, so far as I know the law, there is no authority of law for our banks carrying on savings bank business in connection with the commercial banks. The savings banks receive the money of the people and pay them 3 per cent on it. But they tell their depositors: You cannot get this money back in three months. It loans that money out to the people in the neighbourhood. A man wants to build a little house, or go into some business, and he is not called upon to pay the money back at a day's notice. But the commercial banks are different. They do not pay interest on deposits. Their stability is undoubted, and, that it may be undoubted, they must have their assets in what is called liquid form. They discount commercial paper. The savings bank withdrawals are subject to notice. Commercial banks pay no interest on the money deposited in their banks. We have no Banking Act except for commercial banking. I merely draw this matter to the attention of the Finance Minister.

I have said that there are no very hard times in the section of country from which I come. There is a stringency of money. I notice that the banks, on the 31st of last July, had nearly $10,000,000 less loaned to the people of Canada than they had the year before; I presume that figure is a great deal higher just now. They are taking in sail; but I don't believe there is going to be any storm, I hope not. But there is one thing which I ask the government to take particular notice of. Factories are stopping for a day, and the men lay there under pay. Large institutions cannot get their orders out; merchants cannot get goods in; farmers cannot ship their apples and produce, and it spoils. Notwithstanding the shortage of grain in the Northwest, they cannot get their produce out, and business generally is to a certain extent in stagnation. Never before has there been so great a shortage of cars. One institution that I know of that wants from fifteen to twenty-seven cars a day, on the 13th 14th and 17th of November, did not get a car. Thirty-six new cars came across from Detroit, but before they got there they were all gobbled up but three. What is the reason ? I say that the government should instruct the Railway Commission to say to the railways, if you undertake to do business you must do it, you must haul the load or break the harness. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy said, I have $10,000,000 in that drawer which I will pay for motive power, for cars and equipment, but I cannot get it. An hon. gentleman in this House who is connected with some engine works says that he can give them all the engines they want. Where then is the trouble ? Why, Sir, two lines of railway to Fort William bring in more grain than seven lines from the lower end of lake Huron can carry away. What is the reason ? 12,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain going to Buffalo that should go through the port of Montreal. Why ? Because they cannot get cars to carry it away. There are seven lines from the lower end of Lake Huron to the Georgian Bay, there is Depot Harbour, Midland, Meaford, Collingwood, Owen Sound, Goderich, Sarnia and Tiffin, to say nothing of Kingston on Lake Ontario. I think it is a hindrance of trade on the part of the railways. One gentleman said it was because the railways were carrying Armour's beef to the sea. If you live at Napanee or Belleville you will see train after train going to the sea with Armour's beef. I think the railway managers should be more interested than I am in this matter. And I wish that some one would compel them to take that surplus and buy more equipment.

I will now mention another matter in which perhaps some hon. gentlemen will not agree with me. I took a little trip to the other side last year, and came across an American gentleman who had retired from business. He had been connected with one of the largest paper making establishments in the United States, from which they sent out every morning one or two carloads of paper made up ; and this gentleman said that he never could understand—we were discussing quietly one evening, not knowing that the matter had been brought up in Canada—why Canadians acted so foolishly—why they were killing the goose that laid the golden egg. The newspapers of this country are more concerned in this matter than anybody else ; they are now paying double price for their paper. I have looked into the facts. England took $28,000,000 worth last year of paper. Where does she get it ? 82 per cent of it from the United States. Sweden and Norway, the balance from Germany and Russia ; Canada is not mentioned. Where does the United States get their pulp wood ? From Canada. She pays $6 a cord for Canadian pulp wood, and she sells it for $30 a cord when it is made up. $7,000,000 are lost to the workingmen of Canada by the pulpwood being taken out of the country. Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Ohio, Illinois, Dakota, Minnesota, Michigan, are denuded of pulpwood ; there is a little left in Maine and Wyoming. We have the pulpwood supply of the world. Why, Sir, the United States do not even allow us to carry it in our own vessels. There is a line coming down from Chicago to Quebec with grain through our canals without paying anything for the use of them, and they take back pulpwood to the State of Wisconsin and the Fox river valley. Every evening, Sundays, included, you will see from three to five train loads—not carloads—of paper going out there to the markets of the world, made out of Canadian pulpwood. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy says, if the United States people wish to benefit from the raw material of Canada, let them come inside our tariff and manufacture it here. We have the water power, we have the pulp, we have the business in our own hands. I say that the government of Canada have been remiss in conserving the natural resources of the country, in that they do not put an export duty on pulpwood, or prohibit it altogether. On the 5th day of last October the International Paper Company of the United States bought 45 square miles of pulpwood forest in New Brunswick ; they have bought or leased 300 square miles of pulpwood forest in New Brunswick. They had watered their stock. Here is a little item I picked up yesterday.

The International Paper Company is producing less news print paper to-day than it turned out immediately after its organization.

They have raised the price over there.

The available funds at its command which should have been used for new paper machines, has gone towards the acquirement of 2,597 square miles of timber limits registered in one of the four land offices in the province of Quebec, Canada.

I have heard arguments against this proposition, but they have always come from interested parties, either from a corporation who wanted to get their material, or from somebody who is afraid of something else, but they are always interested. I would probably say the same thing if I were personally interested, but I am not. Human nature is human nature.

Now, there is another matter which I proposed to bring up last year in reference to mining companies of the country. I discussed the matter with an hon. gentleman, one of the leaders on this side of the House, and he informed me when I told him I thought of bringing it up, that people could not be prevented from making fools of themselves by Act of parliament, that if a man liked to go out and throw his gold into the sea, we could not prevent it. But, I think we can prevent them from being fraudulently deprived of their money. I did not take it up last session because an hon. member from Alberta—I may mention his name as I do not think he will object to it—told me that if I did it would probably injure a good many poor people who had invested their money in the mines. My point is this : Why should a man who has never been in the mining country send some one there, buy a quarter or a half an acre of land, get an Ontario government metallurgist or assayer to stamp a piece of rock taken from that land as ore, float a company for $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 or more, and then take that stock around and sell it for five or ten cents a share ? The allurement is in selling it for five or ten cents a share ; it looks cheap. Why, Sir, if a bank wants to circulate its bills it has to have money behind them. If a manufacturing company wants to take out papers of incorporation it has to show something tangible behind it. To illustrate the difference between mining and industrial companies I will give a few comparisons. Here is a list of three weekly sets of companies incorporated last year. There were thirteen mining companies whose capitalization was $14,000,000 and there were sixteen industrial companies with a capital stock of $900,000. There were two mining companies with a capital of $3,600,000 and ten commercial companies with a capital of $600,000. There were two mining companies with a capital of $1,500,000 and six industrial companies with a capitalization of $600,000. I think that the mines of Canada are going to be the richest mines in the world, they ought to be exploited and the man who goes out and devotes his time and money to the exploitation of these mines deserves to be successful. But, there are only ten producing companies to 150 which are not producing. What I wish to impress upon the government is that they should make some provision in the mining law, that all money which is put into mining, whether the stock is bought for five or ten cents on the dollar or not, should be invested properly for the purpose of exploiting the mines, for the purpose for which it is intended and not go into the pockets of fake shareholders. That would be a good Act. An English member of parliament, the other day, discussing this question in Toronto, said that most of the mines in one portion of our country consisted of holes in the ground and a number of deluded shareholders. It is all right to invest money in mines if it goes there, but if all the mining companies which have been incorporated within the last two years in Canada were to pay 6 per cent on the money invested in them they would have to take out 3,000 tons of silver every year, which is impossible. The trouble is that it is the poor person who puts up this money and that is where a good deal of the money stringency comes from now. Their money has gone into other hands. A poor person is allured by the idea of making 300, 400 or 500 per cent and he or she is urged to buy stock to-day upon the representation that it will increase in value 20 per cent in a short time. I was informed last year by one of our leaders that a reputable brokerage firm—and they must have been a reputable firm or they would not have done so—had shut their doors to women who were coming in to invest their money in stocks in Ottawa. Stock are a rich man's game, one who can afford to lose.

I wish to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to another matter. There seems to be something incongruous in the guardianship or control of the fisheries on the great lakes. On Lake Erie the Dominion government cruiser 'Petrel' is in charge. On Lake Huron, the other day, an Ontario government cruiser was wrecked at the breakwater off the Port of Goderich, which should have been fixed before. The point which I wish to bring to the attention of this House is this : The farmer has his farm worth $5,000, he pays taxes on it and he is generally well-to-do. There is no chance of that farm running away or being burnt up. But, the fisherman—and he is generally a poor man like myself—who risks his life and takes his boats and nets, costing as much as the farm, out into the deep, night after night and day after day, to make his living by garnering the harvest of the sea, is in a different position. What has he to do ? He pays taxes on his property at home, but he has to pay to the government—I do not know which government, whether it is this government or the government of Ontario as it applies to both administrations and there is no political capital to be made twenty miles away from there he has to pay another $100. If he has a machine at the back of his boat to help him take in the nets and save the cost of a man he has to pay $50 or some amount like that. Why should these men be obliged to pay these enormous sums and why should they be treated differently from the farmer or merchant or any person else especially when he takes into consideration the fact that the fisherman has to risk his life. I thoroughly understand that the fisherman should have a permit and that fishing should be controlled by the government in certain places because otherwise the fisheries would be done away with entirely, but for that permit he could pay $5. Why should he have to pay $100 or $200 and, if the fishery gets poor and he has to move his nets away, pay another $100 ? I bring this matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

In reference to immigration there has been some discussion as to a number of people walking the streets in certain cities without employment. I think that the manner in which immigration has been conducted for the last year or two is responsible for the condition which we find existing to-day. Two hundred and eleven thousand people were brought into this country in the last seven months and of these 104,000, or half, were English-speaking people. The trouble is that they are bringing in people from the slums of the cities and not the kind of people we want, not agricultural labourers, but people who will not go on the land, people who have been assisted at home before they came out here and they expect to be assisted here. There was in all the Toronto papers a story of a man who could not get work in Hamilton, who walked to Toronto, who said that he could not get work and who also stated that for three days he could not get anything to eat. I believe that is untrue and that the fact is the man would not work. Conductors on the railways west of Toronto tell me that they have these people on the trains every day. They think that the trains must carry them for nothing. They would not work at home and they will not work here. I propose to move—and I give notice now—that all assistance to immigration from this time out shall stop, except to agricultural labourers or domestic help. The men we want are men who will go on the land, or farm labourers. If they were no good at home they will be no good here, and they should have enough money to bring them here. I find that one trouble is that societies are bringing these people out. I am not referring to the Salvation Army—I am told they only bring out deserving people, or to those who bring out domestics, who are, I am informed, doing good work, but there are other societies who bring paupers from their own congregations and land them in this country. I think that if inquiry is made at the immigration office it will be found that what I state is the fact. Twenty six hundred people from the old country have been debarred from this country and nearly 900 have been deported. Showing that the immigration officials are carrying out the law as it now is. I wish to bring to the notice of the newspapers of this country the fact which people do not seem to know, that if in any town, village or other place there is an undesirable immigrant, a card sent to the Immigration Department will result in his immediate deportation. It is not so much that these people are no good to themselves, but worst of all, that they are a bad example to the community. For instance, we had a couple of immigrants from Whitechapel in our town which has a population of 5,000 inhabitants, all people of the highest morals, and we never saw a drunken woman on the street until one of these poor immigrants was picked up half a dozen times drunk, sometimes she was taken to jail and generally she was a discredit to her sex. I regret to say that her bad example was followed, although I may say that this particular woman to whom I refer was deported.

Now, Sir, I wish to state that at the earliest opportunity I propose moving a resolution in this House with respect to the Senate. In a recent speech which he delivered before the Canadian Club, Dr. Falconer said it was a wise thing to submit to the people the great questions of the day for their judgment. We are a democratic people in Canada; we should be governed by ourselves, and I think our laws should be made by the direct representatives of the people, who are directly responsible and can be punished if acting wrongly. The great question in the old country to-day is the abolition of the House of Lords, and one of the great questions which for a number of years has concerned the public mind in Canada is the construction of our Senate. I therefore purpose submitting a resolution to this House to the effect, that at the next general election a vote of the people of Canada shall be taken on two questions (1) on the question: Shall the Senate of Canada be abolished, (2) Shall the members of the Canadian Senate be elected by the provinces. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for the courtesy which you have extended to me.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex.) I must congratulate the last speaker (Mr. Lewis) on the very moderate tone of his address. With much that he has said I heartily concur; I believe that so far as this parliament can it should give effect to the provisions of the criminal law in the direction of protecting all members of the great Canadian family, and especially our youth, and the hon. gentleman is to be commended for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. I can assure him I will give him my support in any proposition he makes tending towards that desirable object. I rose more particularly, Sir, to offer some remarks on the important question of the Canadian hog trade, a topic which was dealt with in so characteristic a manner yesterday by the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements). As that hon. gentleman said, this question is of great importance to all Canada, and it is of special importance to the counties of Essex and Kent which probably ship more dressed hogs than any other counties in the Dominion. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) is not in his seat to-day, but I may say that I have endeavoured to ascertain from the speech just what his attitude on this question is. At one time he said that the meat inspection law was an innocent looking Bill, but I would gather that the conclusion from his speech is that he is entirely opposed to any inspection at all. Now, the farmers of his constituency are interested in the same way as the producers of my constituency, and our interests are to that extent the same. Further, it is a question into which politics should not enter; it is a question concerning the interests of all the farmers, Conservative and Liberal alike, and I therefore regret that I cannot see eye to eye with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) on the matter. Speaking of the Minister of Agriculture, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) said:

I congratulate that hon. minister upon his safe return from the city of Chatham where he was forced to meet the farmers who were up in arms against the legislation which he is solely and entirely responsible for, and which has been placed upon the statute-books of this country.

In another part of the speech he said:

I can see no reason for the legislation at all.

From this I conclude that the hon. member is absolutely and entirely against the Inspection Act which was passed after careful consideration by this House last session. That attitude of his is not complimentary to many members on his own side of the House who not only approved in strong terms of the principle of the Bill, but who would have gone further and would have extended the inspection to all meat consumed in the province of Ontario, not confining it, as the Bill does, to interprovincial and export trade.

Mr. BLAIN. In the absence of the hon. gentleman (Mr Clements) may I be permitted to say that I understood him to state that he had no objection to the Bill but that he dissented from the regulations passed by the minister.

Mr. CLARKE. I was anxious the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) should be here so that I might ascertain from him exactly just what he does mean. I was anxious that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) might be here to give the House and the people of the country the benefit of some of that great store of wisdom which according to his own estimate is concentrated in him. I would judge, however, from some remarks of his which I see in 'Hansard' that he is out flat-footed against the legislation. I can well understand why he should want to creep out of the position of being opposed to the legislation, because when we refer to what took place last session we find that this Bill was under discussion in this House from time to time for almost two months. It was introduced by a motion to go into committee on the 4th of December, 1906, and it did not receive its third reading until the 29th of January, 1907. First the resolution to introduce the Bill was discussed; then the Bill itself was discussed on three separate occasions in committee at very great length, and most of the prominent members on both sides of the House took an active and interested part in that discussion. On the 11th of December the discussion on the resolution preceding the introduction of the Bill occupies thirty-four pages of 'Hansard'; on the 11th of January the discussion covers twenty-nine pages; on the 17th of January the discussion takes up thirty pages and the discussion in the last meeting in committee ranges over fifty pages of 'Hansard.' And notwithstanding the furore now raised by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements), and notwithstanding all the wisdom which he professes to have not one word did we hear from him on this important question. If his opinion be now, as he professes, that this was an iniquitous measure, then he surely was recreant to his trust and negligent of his duty that not one word of protest was uttered by him either in this House or in the committee.

As I have said, this is an important question. I may say that last session the House was all but unanimous as to the wisdom of the adoption of this legislation. One or two members thought it was perhaps not necessary in that it would put an expense on the country which was scarcely warranted by the prevailing conditions. Well, I would be very glad if the conditions were such that no such legislation was required. All legislation of this sort creates more or less irritation; we have had the same difficulty with our Public Health Acts; the vaccination law created a great deal of controversy and disturbance, the hog cholera laws at first engendered irritation, but I venture to think that to-day in the counties of Essex and Kent no man who has regard for his opinion will deny that that legislation has protected the hog-raising industry, and that it was a boon to these counties. It would be unreasonable to expect that irritation would not be caused by this Meat Inspection Act. If a man finds his hog is diseased and he cannot sell it, there is bound to be disappointment. But the real question is: Is the legislation justified, and that question presents two aspects. In the first place, is there such danger from the use of infected pork as to call for these regulations which some have characterized as drastic. There are differences of opinion on that. I have discussed the question with farmers of both political parties and I must say that the strongest approval I have heard of this Act and of the regulations framed under it has come from Conservatives. I find a good many kickers as they say, among the members of my own party. But after all it is not a matter on which people should divide politically. What the farmers want to be convinced of is as to whether it is necessary that these restrictions should be made, and if they are necessary in the interests of the trade. I believe the farmers will be satisfied to put up with the inconvenience in order that good may result. Last session the Minister of Agriculture pointed out cases in which disease had been communicated. He instanced a case in Germany, where the disease had been traced to the human being directly from the use of pork. The minister has favoured me with a circular letter on this important question, dated the 6th of September, 1901, which was sent out from the Local Government Board in London to the councils of the metropolitan and other boroughs and rural districts. From this letter I make the following extracts:—

I am directed by the local government board to state that at the recent congress on tuberculosis, Professor Koch called in question the correctness of the opinion that tuberculosis can be transmitted from animals to man. The views expressed by Professor Koch on this subject have not received the general assent of scientific men; but, having regard to the great importance of the matter, His Majesty's government have thought it right to accede to a request made by the congress that there should be an inquiry with respect to it. A royal commission has accordingly been appointed to inquire and report whether tuberculosis in animals and man is one and the same disease; whether animals and man can be reciprocally infected with it; under what conditions, if at all, the transmission of the disease from animals to man takes place; and what are the circumstances favourable or unfavourable to such transmission.

In view of the greater tendency to generalization of tuberculosis in the pig, we consider that the presence of the tubercular deposit in any degree should involve seizure of the whole carcass and of the organs.

In respect of foreign dead meat, seizure shall ensue in every case where the pleura have been 'stripped.'

My information is that that inquiry was made before a royal commission, and the finding of the commission was that Professor Koch was wrong in stating that the disease was not transmissible from the hog to man, and that the opinion prevailed that the disease was thus transmissible. If this is so, it is a matter of very great seriousness, not only to the people of the old world, but also to the people of Canada. It is of very great consequence to us all that safeguards should be provided, so that the disease which is so common in the hog should not be transmitted to the human being. Then, in a letter of April 11, 1907, written to Mr. William L. Griffith, Esq., secretary of the Dominion government offices in London, by Mr. W. Collingridge, medical officer of health of the city of London—that is, since the introduction of the Bill into this House—I find the following:

I note that under section 18 of the Bill (No. 33, 1906-7) respecting the inspection of meats and canned goods introduced by Mr. Fisher in the House of Commons of Canada on December 8 last, the Governor in Council may make orders and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the Act.

In the interests of Canadian exporters it is desirable that any regulations that may be made with regard to meat inspection in the Dominion should conform to these in operation in the meat markets in the metropolis, all of which are under the administration of the corporation of London, otherwise meat consigned from Canada would be liable to seizure and condemnation as, although passed as fit for export, it might not be in accordance with the standard required in the London markets.

In these circumstances I inclose for your information a circular letter issued by our local government board containing the recommendations of the Royal Commission on tuberculosis with regard to the inspection of tuberculosis cattle and pigs, and which have been adopted by the corporation.

It may be useful for you to know that both the authorities in Denmark and Holland have adopted these recommendations as regulations in their respective countries, and an opportunity will be presented to the Canadian government when the Bill referred to is passed of also incorporating them in any regulations made under this Bill.

In view of the importance of the question, I strongly urge the adoption of this suggestion by the Canadian government, and trust that the High Commissioner will see his way to lend his kindly co-operation in the matter.

Now, the question is not altogether whether there is danger from the eating of the diseased meat; the greater question, as pointed out last session, is the probable effect on the market for our hogs. I read from a report of the medical officer of the city of London, for November, 1906, as follows:

A considerable proportion of the foreign and colonial meat passing through the city markets bears a label or stamp professing to indicate that the article so marked has undergone some kind of official inspection before export.

At the present time such meat comes into the market from the following countries:—Argentine Republic, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, New Zealand, United States of America.

It therefore appears desirable that the whole question of the inspection and marking of foreign and colonial meat intended for export to this country should be made the subject of a detailed investigation, inasmuch as it appears that English breeders are placed at a disadvantage in their own markets, in having to compete with imported pigs from both Belgium and the United States, from which countries pigs can be sent here showing evidence of disease at the time of slaughter which would compel their condemnation in this country.

This inquiry should, of course, embrace all those countries mentioned above as sending marked meats to the city markets, and in addition those which export unmarked meat to this country should be included.

That includes Canada. These references, and the references which were given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in the discussion last session, prove conclusively that the opinion prevails, at any rate in the mother country, that it is necessary to have the inspection, and unless that inspection is such as to meet the requirements of that market, the Canadian export trade to Great Britain will be very seriously damaged. If that is so, surely any member who represents a community of hog shippers is not doing his duty to his constituents if he does not promote whatever steps are necessary to maintain that very profitable market. Let me for a moment refer to the extent of the hog business of Canada. I find that in bacon, which is our principal item of export of the products of the hog, we have been steadily increasing our output to Great Britain. Going back to 1896, we find that in that year it amounted to $3,385,463. It has gone on increasing from year to year, with some fluctuations, until in 1895 it reached the magnificent proportions of $13,391,675.

That is the export of Canada to Great Britain, taken from the British figures, of bacon alone. We find that in hams there has also been a very profitable export. In 1896 it was $1,778,387. In 1906 it amounted to $3,282,415. So that steadily from year to year the market has been improved, and for some years back, in bacons and hams alone, the farmers of this country have been receiving between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000. How has it been in the United States, our trade competitors: With them the conditions have been the reverse since 1901. In 1896 they exported to Great Britain $19,791,312 of bacon. They increased that up to 1901 when they reached their top notch. In that year they exported to the extent of $45,045,142. Since then, however, their export has been declining at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, as the following figures show:

1903	35,871,850
1904	30,217,177
1905	28,364,841

Here comes the significant fact for Canada. Although the exports were diminishing in the United States during those years at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, they showed an increase in Canada. In 1906 the export from the United States increased to $33,380,704 as compared with $28,364,841 the previous year. It looks as if there were a reaction in the United States. There is an increase of practically $5,000,000 in one year. That is what Canadians have to compete against. We find that the United States has a stringent meat inspection law and stringent regulations. These regulations are required in their trade with England, and, therefore, it seems to me that the Canadian producer and packer would be guilty of trade suicide if they did not take care to place themselves in the same position as their competitors. I have, therefore, not the slightest hesitation in saying that I consider the meat inspection law in the interest of the public. Its intention is to maintain and promote the profitable trade we have. If we do not have proper inspection, our trade in this direction must inevitably fall off. Instead of censure, I think that the Minister of Agriculture deserves commendation. With the knowledge he obtained, it was his bounden duty to take some steps to protect this trade, and the measure he submitted to the House received our unanimous approval last session. I take it that the House is still of the same opinion. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) thinks not, let him introduce a Bill to repeal the Act and take the sense of the House once more. Some of the regulations, however, have caused considerable irritation in my constituency as well as in that of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clements). There was a good deal of apprehension that they were going to very materially affect the dressed hog trade. That was an apprehension which I myself shared. Perhaps the matter is one which is more important to those western counties, which deal more largely in dressed hogs, than to some other parts of the country. The objections made were these. The regulation which caused the principal uneasiness was No. 19c:

> 19. No carcasses or portions thereof other than those bearing the words 'Canada approved,' and which have been inspected and found fit for food, shall be allowed to enter any establishment at which inspection is maintained, except as hereinafter provided:
> (c) Dressed carcasses, with the head, heart, lungs and liver, held by their natural attachments, such carcasses to be inspected before entering the establishment, and if found fit for food to be marked with the crown and the words 'Canada approved.' If found to be diseased or otherwise unfit for food, to be dealt with as provided in the regulations.

That clause is the only one to which serious objection is made, and the only one which was objected to at the large meeting in Chatham which I had the privilege of attending. It was contended that it was impossible to ship with the organs in. The farmers said, and I think rightly, that owing to the temperature being warmer in the southwestern part of Ontario than in many other parts, there would be a heating, on account of these parts, which would extend to the entire animal, and by the time it got to the packing house the meat would be practically destroyed. The shippers announced that they would not take the risk of shipping the carcasses in that way, and it was considered that this regulation was a great blow to the dressed hog business. The farmers' wives also raised objections. They have been accustomed to getting the fat for lard, and it was a serious disappointment to them when they found they could not do this and the hogs would not be dressed as formerly. That is what caused the agitation. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) has taken credit for himself that he was the only one who brought this matter to the attention of the minister. He said:

When I first took up the fight against the regulations, I was practically alone in the district. I have a very great regard for the gentlemen who represent the adjoining constituencies, but I had not heard from them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, reputations travel slowly. I thought that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was the man to whom I ought to address myself. I did not know at that time that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) knew more in twenty-four hours than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) could possibly know, with all his practical experience and with all the information he had obtained. I may say that whenever any one speaks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) as a farmer in his part of the country, where he is best known, a broad smile illuminates the audidence. Hereafter, however, I shall pay more attention to him, having learned from himself that he has so much wisdom. I am sorry that he did not make use of it to suggest something valuable or some new regulations which would be more workable, but he sat down leaving us in entire ignorance as to what he would do if he were Minister of Agriculture, and we can only guess at what he would do. I think that the hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) should be commended for his desire to meet the wishes of the people. The regulations do not cover all the details. They do not expressly say that the hogs should be inspected at the packing house. There is nothing in the regulations which prevents their being inspected at the shipping point. The farmers, at the meeting I have mentioned, did discuss the Act pretty thoroughly. They were invited to do so by the Minister of Agriculture. I took two gentlemen down from the county of Essex, and they discussed the matter very freely. When they were asked their opinion as to what would make the system more workable, their suggestion was that the hogs should be inspected at the shipping station, which would enable the farmers to ship dressed hogs as they had been doing before. I think that all agreed that inspection is necessary and proper. The people did not object to the inspection, but objected to shipping the carcasses with the vital organs to be inspected four hundred miles away. I am glad the minister saw his way clear, even at some additional expense, to adopt the suggestion made. I do not think the members ought to begrudge the payment of some money in the interests of the farmer. The minister has consented to the inspection at the shipping station. I would impress upon him that the instructions for carrying out the regulations should be elastic enough to allow the inspectors to go to the farms where there is to be a large killing, so that all the entrails and organs may be removed at the same time. The minister has adopted the suggestion for inspection at the station, and, if there is any other sugestion which my hon. friend (Mr. Clements) would like to make, I think it was his duty to have made it at the meeting in Chatham, or in the course of his speech yesterday. I was in hopes he would assist us, because what we want is the best regulations possible, the regulations that will carry out the inspection with the least inconvenience to those interested. This is what the hon. gentleman said :

> My object in rising, sir, was to plead with the Minister of Agriculture to abolish or amend the meat inspection regulations.

He does not say what amendment he would make.

> I ask the Minister of Agriculture to annul these regulations altogether because I can see no good reason for their existence.

A more silly statement, I think, could not well be made, if we are to have the Act at all. If we are to have inspection, there must be regulations made under which that inspection is to be carried out. The hon. gentleman suggests that the regulations should be wiped out. If you wipe out the regulations, you nullify the Act, and make Canada a laughing stock in the eyes of the world. I do not say that we will not make complaint, if, in the working out of these regulations, unnecessary inconvenience is caused to the farmer. I hope that, under the instructions that have been given, there will be nothing of that kind. This is a new Act, and an experimental one, and I do not think that the minister will refuse to accede to any reasonable suggestion designed to facilitate the working out of the Act without inconvenience to the farmer.

The hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) referred to another question which is of importance to my riding—the question of the tobacco regulations. With his remarks upon that subject, I agree.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before going on with that, may I ask the hon. member (Mr. Clarke a question? His riding of South Essex is similar to my own in relation to the hog industry. Did he approve of the Bill and regulations as they came down, and as they are now in force ?

Mr. CLARKE. I did not approve of the regulations as I expected and feared that they were going to be carried out. I have already stated that. There was a great deal of apprehension of the result if the inspection was to take place at the packing house. It was thought that it would be a serious blow to the dressed-meat trade. I made representations to that effect to the Minister of Agriculture, and pointed out to him in a very forcible way the need of change. I am very glad to say that he has adopted the best suggestions that the people of the two counties could make to meet the wishes of the farmers in this matter.

I was about to speak of the tobacco question. I think that all the tobacco-growing counties are agreed that the present law, which has been in force for a good many years, requiring three separate manufactories, one for foreign leaf, one for Canadian leaf, and one for combination tobacco, with separate stamps for each, should be changed. I have been pressing upon the government for the last two or three years, the advisability of changing to a uniform stamp. I think that ought to be done. We were disappointed in this matter last session. The departure of the Prime Minister from the country prevented the carrying out of our wish. We are expecting that it will be done this year, and, in that respect, my hon. friend and I are entirely in accord.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, we have had a number of very interesting speeches in this debate. The last two speakers, I think, spoke in a fair spirit, and expressed themselves in good terms. I am not much dissatisfied with the speech of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke). It is impossible for me, as a medical man, to say that I am not in favour of the inspection of meat. We know that tapeworm is conveyed through the eating of pork as well as trichina spiralis and other diseases. The communication of tuberculosis in this way is in doubt according to the best medical men in the world, but it is better for us not to run any risk. We should have some way of indicating to the foreign buyer that our meat has been properly inspected, and is in a healthy condition and fit for food. But I should think it would be much better if the Act were so drawn and the regulations so made that our Canadian people would be protected also. It would appear that this is not provided for by the present regulations. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for South Essex say that when the interests of our farmers were being discussed, politics should be left out of the question. I think that is a proper stand to take. It would be well for the members on both sides if they would try and give a little more attention to our farming interests and not carry politics into these discussions so freely as they do.

However, I rise, not so much to talk on this question, as on another question that has attracted my attention. I wish to make a few remarks on the subject of the treaty which our government have been negotiating with the representatives of France. When I glanced at the terms of that treaty I was very much pleased. I thought it would benefit the farmers of this country to a very great extent. I was inclined, if possible, to give credit to the government, to commend them where I thought they were worthy of it, going on the principle of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down—that is, that we ought to leave politics out of consideration when the great farming interests of this country are under discussion. For almost the first time in the history of Canada, we were in a position to discuss a question of this kind properly in this House. Formerly, when treaties were made between Canada and foreign countries, we always had some British nobleman, or some great jurist or other prominent Britisher, as part of the commission. Now, we have had a treaty directly negotiated by two of our own ministers, two of our experienced ministers, and two men in whom I myself would have had considerable confidence. They must, I think, receive credit for all that is good in this treaty; but, for once, we have them in the position that they must take the blame for all the bad points in it. Formerly, when a treaty was negotiated the members of the government, whether Conservative or Liberal, have been able to put the blame for the faults of the treaty on the British member of the commission,—he was made scapegoat for any mistakes, while the government always took the credit for the good points in the treaty.

Now, in these matters the government must get the credit for all the good points of the treaty, and must for once take blame for all the bad points. When I began to examine the treaty, I saw that our horses, cows, cattle and wheat, and all those things would be introduced into France under the minimum tariff. I read schedule A, where horses were found, and I could not see that our farmers were going to be greatly benefited by this item. But on examining more closely the item of horses, I found out that the duty on horses under the French general tariff was 200 francs and under the minimum tariff 150 francs, that means that a duty of $30 has to be paid on a horse going into France even under the minimum tariff. I thought that would be of little use to our farmers. No farmer in Canada would ship horses to France and pay a duty of $30 each on them, when he could take them across the channel into England for nothing. I thought the duty might just as well have been $100 on each horse, because it is already prohibitory. Then I took the item of oxen, on which there is a duty of 30 francs per 100 kilogs under the minimum tariff, that would be about two cents a pound. You would have to pay $30 or $40 to get a good fat ox into France, and that is a prohibitory duty. It is no use to our farmers at all; and this, remember, is the minimum tariff. Then I took the items of steers, heifers, bullocks, and so on, and I saw that these would pay two cents a pound, which will amount to a prohibitory duty; it is of no use to us at all. Then I saw some words in italics, and turning back to the end of the book, I found that the articles in italics are those appearing only in the general tariff, on which the duties are identically the same in both tariffs. When they say that some of these Canadian products get the benefit of the minimum tariff, there is practically no such tariff. Then I found that on the item of fresh meat there is a duty of three cents a pound on mutton, of more than two cents per pound on pork; and the duty on beef, if it is under this minimum tariff, was still more than two cents a pound. Why, that is a prohibitory tariff, it is no use to the farmers of Canada. Then I found dead poultry in italics, which meant that there really was no minimum tariff on this also. Why was it put in there?

Well, I thought that if we could not make anything out of the cattle schedule, nothing out of dead meat, perhaps this wise government had been successful in getting our grain into France on better terms. I turned up to the item of wheat and I saw that it was in italics also, no minimum tariff on wheat, just the same as before the treaty was concluded, and still under the general tariff. The same on barley, on rye, on maize, on buckwheat—what advantage is this treaty to us in these articles? Then I noticed potatoes similarly situated, and I said to myself: If the farmers get no benefit out of these items I have mentioned, perhaps we are going to get some advantage on some other industries besides the farming industry. I saw that we were to have the privilege of taking our great iron products into France, and I began to think that we might get some benefit for the iron industry on the millions and millions of tons of iron that we might be able to send into France. But then I considered that it would after all only benefit our iron manufacturers on the sea board, because they had the benefit of ocean transportation. I thought perhaps that the Finance Minister, following out the old suggestion about some one being good to his own, had kept in mind the iron mines and furnaces of Sydney, and that he was trying to do something for them. I could see that these iron manufacturers at Sydney had the advantage of ocean transportation, not only so, but they had in the immediate neighbourhood of their works all the ingredients necessary for the manufacture of iron, millions of tons of iron ore, immense beds of coal lying beside the limestone necessary to be used as flux, and I thought they might be able to send a great deal of iron to France. Then I looked to the county of Huron to see if the farmers there would be benefited by the immense amount of money it would cost them to pay the bounties on that iron going to France. I saw that the manufacturers in Sydney would put the money they got from the farmers into their own pockets and pay it to France to get their iron into that country. Once more I was at a loss to see how we were going to be benefited in Huron and Ontario by this French treaty.

Then I turned to the other side of the treaty, to look at the products that were coming into Canada from France. I thought that perhaps we might get a certain amount of benefit from them. Schedule B gives the products coming into Canada which enjoy the benefit of our intermediate tariff. Here I read about what was coming into Canada, and that this treaty was to encourage the importation of certain things into this country under the intermediate tariff. I found spirits, wine, gin of all kinds, rum, whisky, spirits of alcohol, and finally I came to absinthe. Why, that poisonous, deadly drug that has been called the curse of France! In the treaty of 1893 it slipped in in some way, but you remember there was a good deal of talk about it being allowed to come in. Why, sir, the use of that absinthe has been totally prohibited in the French army. I was reading in the 'Lancet' the other day where an assembly of medical men in France had passed a resolution asking the government to prohibit the use of it entirely in France. Are we poor Canadians to be fed with this deadly intoxicating drug? Are the manufacturers of this poison looking for a new market in our country? It sends more lunatics to the asylum in France than alcohol, opium and the nicotine curses all combined, and now it is going to be introduced here. In France it produces so many evils and halucinations that it has been called the Lady in Green and the curse of France. Is that the advantage we are getting for being allowed to send our cattle into France for a duty of $30 and $40 each and our horses for $30 each? Then further down I saw brandy, and it is mentioned as artificial brandy, an imitation brandy, that is to be brought into this country. We have seen a great deal written not long ago about this very thing. In France you can buy a bottle of this imitation for one franc, while a bottle of real brandy costs 20 francs. It is one of the most poisonous of drugs, and should not be allowed into the country at all. Now, here was a grand chance for our Liberal friends who are so fond of posing as friends of the Conservative principle of protection. They had a grand chance to make a tariff against the introduction of this French absinthe, a chance to put up a prohibitory tariff against it. Why did they not do it? They could put the tariff up as high as Haman's gallows, and the people of Canada would have thanked them for it. But they did not see fit to do it. I hope, however, that even yet this item will be stricken out of the list of goods to be encouraged into our country under this new and much vaunted tariff treaty with France. It is not going to benefit our farmers, I do not think it will benefit our iron manufacturers a great deal, and I am sure it will not benefit the young people of Canada to become intoxicated with this stuff that they have such a dread of in France. I hope that even yet the government will see that this absinthe is prevented from coming into our country. I am sorry for having taken up so much of the time of the House, but I thought it was right that I should draw the attention of the House to this matter.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax.) Mr. Speaker, I rise at this period of the debate, as I am permitted to do, intending to give my vote and to also speak as forcibly as possible against the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). In the first place, I regret the amendment as being a gross impertinence to His Majesty the King who has given us a speech in which he has referred to these matters, and who has in the 'Gazette' from week to week and from month to month been printing, for the information of his faithful subjects, statements with reference to these very matters to which the hon. gentleman from Brantford referred in his speech and in his amendment as showing from time to time to his subjects the precise position of the imports and exports so that they might derive whatever benefit could be derived from that information. I think that my hon. friend from Brantford has been reading the letters of Junius to the Duke of Grafton, and I think I should refer him to letter No. 36 in which Junius used language something like this: When the whole of the country was expecting information on an interesting matter, instead of the decision and firmness of a King you have given to us the lament of a ruined grazier and to the whining piety of a Methodist. At the bottom of the letter or of the next we have a quotation of Horne Tooke's observation on the King's speech: 'Nero fiddled while Rome was burning.' I think that the attention of the hon. member for Brantford should be called to that fact, but, remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was Nero himself who set fire to Rome, that he went singing in the theatre and that afterwards he blamed the setting fire to the city upon the unfortunate Christians. So it was with my hon. friend. He had gone about the country dilating upon the unfortunate condition of business, speaking of the scarcity of money and making one of the most lamentable appeals which could have been presented. I have no doubt that on that expedition he told the people who listened to him about the necessities of the country, the starvation of the inhabitants and the distress prevailing in various portions of the Dominion. There is no doubt that if he took the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with him, or if he had with him the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) he could not use them as object lessons of distress, of the pinch of poverty, of cheeks attenuated by famine, but if he went and exhibited himself perhaps he might have been able to say that his appearance betokened distress, poverty and want of food in the community. You remember, Sir, that when Napoleon was addressing an audience in the Faubourg-St. Antoine, about the time of the revolution, when the people were really stricken with famine, he was speaking about the necessity of order, of government, of people observing the rules and regulations and of being quiet. In the crowd there was a great, big woman from that portion of the city of Paris, and she said: Look at these men, they are sleek and fat, and, look at us —poverty-stricken and thin by privation and famine. Napoleon said to the crowd: Now, just look at me—he was at that time as thin as a rat—and look at this woman. Here she was great, strong and fat. Napoleon said: Which of the two of us is the boasted aristocrat who is keeping down the people, and living on dainty fare while they starve? I am afraid that my hon. friend was like the raven, going about the country croaking, lamenting, doling out stories of dire famine, of want and privation after the deluge had passed. Now, Mr. Speaker, what was the cause of the lament of my hon. friend, what reasons did he give for the stringency of money and what reasons did he give for the dire and impending calamities? We know that Jeremiah, the prophet, after he had been liberated from prison, went up on the stairs and lamented the calamities that were coming upon his country. He was a true prophet, but I am afraid the hon. member for Brantford has all the frenzy of a prophet without one item of the prophet's inspiration. Dickens tells us in one of his stories—I forgot which one of them—that in one of the streets the boys used to look into the shop of an undertaker where every day he appeared arrayed in deep black. Now and then he arose, solemnly passed his handkerchief over his eyes and as the crowd looked in he shed tears of sympathy for the dead and dying. After all but one or two of the boys had gone away the undertaker put up his shutters, then reached up to one of the most elaborate coffins he had on his shelves, took out a bottle of the good old stuff, reached for a tumbler, mixed himself a 'stiff 'un,' and in this way forgot the vicissitudes of the day. I believe it was so with my hon. friend from Brantford. After the lamentations and the amendment which he put before the country which is the most serious part of the affair, I think he retired to No. 6 and was as jolly as the rest of them notwithstanding the calamities that had been impending over the country and are to impend in future according to his account. What was it which gave rise to the lugubrations of my hon friend? What was it that caused him to think that the country was going to the bow-wows? What was it that caused him to think that calamity impended? What made him think that the whole of the government expenditure was so much money wasted, that it was not producing good results, that the expenditure of the government was bringing on this poverty and want throughout the country generally. He told us that in Brantford an Englishman called at his office and told him he was looking for work and had not been able to find it. Well, I do not think that is sufficient evidence on which to base such a speech as my hon. friend delivered, or sufficient information to warrant him in moving his amendment. No doubt, we will meet Englishmen who come out to this country who have no special trade and no knowledge of farming and no capacity for work, and who think that in coming here their education and standing will entitle them to at once occupy some dignified position without much exertion on their part. Unfortunately, such people are to be found in a great many of our cities. I do not wonder that in a city like Toronto there should be a large number of people out of employment, but if my hon. friend would go to the city of London, England, he would find ten times as many unemployed as the 500 he spoke of in Toronto. There is no financial pressure in London, England, and the fact that he found idle people in Toronto does not prove that there is distress in all Canada. The fact is that in many of the inland cities of our country where trade and business is restricted in the winter months, there is not a demand for labour, whereas in other portions of the country there is a constant demand throughout the year. I do not know that any special circumstances exist in Toronto, but probably in the industry in which my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) engages, his manufacture is restricted in the winter. However, the sunshine will follow the rain, and when the genial spring comes industry will be revived and employment plentiful. There may be reasons why my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) should find 500 unemployed people in Toronto. Toronto is the head centre of financial operations, Toronto was the scene of frenzied finance; in Toronto joint stock company promotion thrived and flourished; the banks gathered up the money of the country there, and there was constant manipulation of stocks and speculation to enable people to get rich quicker than by the ordinary methods of business. When the pressure came in the United States no doubt its reflection would be found in a city like Toronto, a city cut off from the ocean without an incoming flood of business; and so Toronto felt the conditions in the United States more quickly than other centres of population. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) is not to be blamed for taking his impressions from the conditions he found in Toronto. But, because of the conditions of Toronto why should industry in other places be restricted; why should other portions of the country feel distress because of the financial convulsion peculiar to that city? My hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) has referred to the excess of imports over exports and he has told us that because of that condition in the balance of trade the government were impoverishing the people. In the excellent speech made by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday, he gave us the views of eminent economists in which they showed that the old theory that an excess of imports over exports was detrimental to a country, was long since exploded. That this is true, is proven by the experience of other countries which resemble Canada in their economic conditions. Although the United States, 100 years ago, might have resembled Canada, it no longer bears any analogy to us, and the same applies to England. The vast excess of exports over imports in England may be due to the rapid exhausting of natural resources, and it may be because England exports millions of tons of coal and other such commodities. But this young country bears no analogy to England in that respect. England has no overplus of land, England is almost completely settled; but in Canada settlement is moving apace, immense tracts of virgin soil are being brought under cultivation and we have great undeveloped resources to rely on in the future. And, Sir, this government would be wise and patriotic in looking to the future and so adjusting its expenditure as to bring about at the proper time, the utilization of these resources. It is quite true that the cause of the financial stringency is want of confidence in the resources of the government, and in the resources of the banks. It is true that if in the United States, the trust companies were able to continue their cash payments one day longer the corner would have been turned. If the trust companies had not all their funds invested in large enterprises; if a certain amount had been reserved to meet raids of that kind the financial difficulty would have been overcome. There is a great difference between the Canadian banking system and the United States banking system. The banks in the United States are of two kinds; one kind issues its own notes and its currency is not expansive; while the national banks have United States notes which they issue upon the bonds and other securities they deposit. In Canada the banks have to deposit an amount of money with the government as security for the circulation and they also deposit with the government and must hold a certain amount of notes for security and exchange for money. The government of Canada can come to the help of the banks when required. I see by the financial return for September that the banks of Canada have in specie $24,097,000 and in Dominion notes $48,000,000, and that the government holds as security against the issues of the banks $4,000,000 more. Therefore the government has available to meet any demand for money that shall occur in the country $97,000,000. In addition, the banks have assets in the United Kingdom and in other countries, amounting to about $50,000,000, which might be immediately available. So that there are ample resources to meet all the business demands of the country. This would double the present note circulation of all the banks $84,000,000.

Now, I am of opinion that this amendment of my hon. friend from Brantford is improper at the present moment, because it might cause distrust throughout the country lest the government and the banks should not have sufficient resources to meet the business requirements of the country. I do not imagine that this amendment will affect the people to any great degree. The financial stringency is passing away; the banks have sufficient money to meet all the requirements of the people. My hon. friend has declared in his amendment that the government has not acted in a wise and prudent manner in paying out such large sums as it has done, and that that has caused financial pressure and stringency. Now, what has been the course of some of the banks? They have been preparing for the stroke which has just passed over the United States, by strengthening their reserves. If they had all pursued the same course, in place of continuing discounts and supports to our manufacturing institutions and to the commercial community, there might have been severe stringency. But the safety of the community has been that the government has acted in the ordinary way; that it has continued to pay out the money that has flowed into the public treasury, with the result that money has continued to circulate in sufficient quantities to meet all the ordinary requirements of the people. If the government had not acted in that way, serious results might have followed. The hon. member for Brantford suggests that the government is to blame for the large expenditure of the people, for the large quantities of goods that they have imported, and for the balance of trade which has existed. I would like to ask that hon. gentleman what remedy he proposes for the existing evil? What does he suggest that the government should do? The people have made these large purchases of goods which they have imported; the change in the circumstances of large classes of people has given them the means of gratifying their desires in this way. What was the government to do? Was it to allow these goods to come into Canada without exacting the duty upon them? Would that have been a wise course to pursue? Was the duty too low, and would the hon. gentleman suggest that it should be increased? Did not my hon. friend on a previous occasion vote for adequate protection, for higher protection, which certainly would have increased the amount of money extracted from the people? We have not in this country sumptuary laws; we cannot regulate what the people shall eat or wear, or their scale of expenditure on these things. What would the hon. gentleman suggest? Would he suggest that we should prohibit the importation of the $60,000,000 worth of raw materials that are used in the manufactures of the country? He has placed before us one proposition of a logical syllogism; what are the second proposition and the conclusion? He has inveighed against the government and has attributed the stringency to the government exacting the amount of duty which this parliament has imposed by the tariff—a tariff which has been the subject of an investigation by a commission—and expending the moneys which had been voted by this parliament in detail. What would my hon. friend from Brantford suggest? Surely after the goods had been imported and after engagements had been made to pay for them, the government had no other function than to exact the prescribed duty and to trust that, if any change should take place in the circumstances of the people, the amounts which they had collected in revenue would be disbursed in the form of help to the financial institutions and through them percolate among the people of the country at large, so that any financial pressure that existed in any portion of the country might be relieved. If my hon. friend had reflected upon the possible injury which his amendment and his speech might do, I think he would never have moved that amendment or made that speech.

At this time it is necessary, regardless of party, to have confidence in our financial institutions, for without that confidence a single raid on the banks by depositors would create considerable embarrassment. Our resources are sound, our commerce has been moderate and adapted to our resources, and the last year is acknowledged on all hands, especially by those best qualified to know, to have been the most profitable of any year in our history. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has put before the King the statement that as our imports exceed our exports, that is a cause of great alarm and is a condition which should not exist. Without going into detailed figures, I would ask any one if that would be a prosperous country when the value of all that went out of it was not less than what came back. If what we export brings back no more than its cost price, where is the profit? But if there be $120,000,000 more imported into the country than went out, that is proof that our products exported sold for $120,000,000 more than they cost us, and the surplus profit came back in the shape of imports to be distributed throughout our various classes of consumers. I do not think that this is a condition to be deplored, but rather one upon which the people can congratulate themselves.

The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has placed before the King a contrast between the conduct of the banks and that of the government. With $84,000,000 in its treasury, our government could by Act of parliament issue $84,000,000 more of Dominion currency to meet all the business requirements of the country. Therefore there is no cause for alarm or for bringing up any contrast, as the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has charged the government with not having used ordinary business prudence and with having been the cause of financial embarrassment. How has he proved that ? Has he shown it in any way ? Some of the banks, it is true, when the alarm came on, reduced their discounts and did not aid the enterprises of the country to the same extent and thus caused some embarrassment. But on the other hand those banks, which are sagacious and have stood by the country well in this financial storm, have supported their customers by furnishing them with money to carry on their business. These banks have supported the manufacturing establishments, they have protected our commercial men and in that way saved the situation. The government have acted wisely, it seems to me, just as wisely as the most prudent and sagacious bank managers have done. It is not in a time of pressure that you should withdraw your assistance from the commercial community. In that time when enterprises are expanding, when resources pass rapidly from hand to hand, that is the time to be conservative and prudent ; but when the pressure comes is the time to be liberal, and the government aided materially the operations of commercial men throughout the community by allowing the revenue to be disbursed, while holding a sufficient sum in the treasury, so that if the pressure should come on too great for the ordinary resources of the banks, they could afford them that relief which would tide over all difficulties. Therefore I have no fear, and I only regret that an hon. gentleman of the experience of the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) should have let loose upon the country such a mischivious amendment as the one he has proposed, and support it by his speech in which he pictured blue ruin, dismay and calamity and destruction as bound to result from the expenditure of this government. That expenditure, I submit, has been wise and well adapted to the exigency in which we found the country. I am afraid the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) did not glance his eye over that amendment. Its inconsequence, its want of logical result, its lack of sequence, must surely have escaped the vigilant eye of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). If it had been submitted to him or those around him and they had given their calm judgment to it, they would not have consented to such an amendment being let loose in the community at a time when possibly the financial pressure from which we have just emerged may return. This is a time when we should cultivate mutual confidences and assist in the great work of supporting the institutions of the country, and allow the natural laws of supply and demand to work out freely. Let the demands in one direction and the supply in the other work out their beneficent results and we shall all rejoice in a continued prosperity. Instead of being censured, the govment should be commended for their conduct, and no doubt will receive the support of the people when the people are called upon to give a verdict.

I pass from the amendment to a cheering subject in the King's speech, one which is of great interest to the country at large, especially that portion lying east of Quebec, and that is the announcement that notwithstanding the fall of the Quebec bridge, the Transcontinental Railway is making substantial progress; that there was no intention on the part of the government to postpone that work; that the expenditures for survey and construction was going on, and substantial progress made in the construction; that everything pointed to the completion of the work at a time when it will be of advantage to the people of the country, so that the products of Canada will be carried from the place of production to market and the returns brought back and distributed in this country. As it is time for the House to rise, I merely say that I think the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has advanced no reason for the amendment which he has placed before the House. I think that his generalizations were imperfect, and not sufficient. I think that there is evidence throughout the country of prosperity existing at this time, and indications of prosperity for the future. Therefore, I should add my vote, as I have given my voice, in support of the address, and in condemnation, so far as it will go, of the hasty, imperfect and misleading amendment offered by the hon. member for Brantford.

House divided on amendment Mr. Cockshutt.

Amendment (Mr. Cockshutt) negatived.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin). In resuming the debate on the speech from the Throne, I must say that I am pleased at the tone of the debate so far; I think it has been conducted on a higher plane than on any other occasion since I have had the honour of a seat in this House. I am pleased the debate is going on, because I believe that the country is more interested in these debates than we imagine; and probably there never was a time in the history of our country that so much interest has been taken in the debate on the speech from the Throne as on the present occasion. I regret to see that the speech from the Throne was not framed so as to give us that information of the government's programme which we had a right to expect from them. When I had the honour of a seat in the Ontario legislature for many years, we were given the full bill of fare that the government intended to place before us, we knew what was coming, and we were prepared to deal with the measures when they were brought down. I regret that this government is departing from that very worthy custom; they have not brought down their bill of fare in a way that we can discuss it intelligently. We should be informed of the public measures which the government intend to place before parliament, so that the members on both sides may be prepared to discuss them when they are brought down.

Yesterday we heard the hog question discussed, a very important question indeed for the farmers, particularly in my section of the country. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture realizes the importance of that question. I may say here that while we have been taunted across the floor with not having done our duty in failing to oppose the provisions of his Inspection Bill, we on this side of the House agreed for the most part with the principles of the Bill. We believe that it is necessary to have an intelligent inspection, one which will do justice both to the buyer and the seller. The Minister of Agriculture has taken apparently some part along that line. We know that he went to England, but from the time he left our shores until he returned we do not know what he was doing, whether he was gathering information useful to the farmers, or what he was doing while he was there. We know that the First Minister went over there and took a prominent part in the conference that placed him high up in the temple of fame. The Minister of Finance and one of his colleagues went over to France and succeeded in obtaining a treaty, which probably we have no great reason to be pleased with. As to the Minister of Agriculture, we have not heard from him, either what he went over there for, or what he accomplished for the farmers while he was there. I think the farmers are desirous of knowing what he did for them. We may say of him, in the words of the poet, that after the Minister of Agriculture left this shore,

> Where he has gone and how he fares
> Nobody knows and nobody cares.

But the Minister of Agriculture made a journey up to the county of Kent, represented by my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Clements). I may say that I think the intelligent farmers of the county of Kent owe a debt of gratitude to my hon. friend the member for that county for the active part he has taken in connection with that question, which so excited the people up there, and I think justly excited them. Their friends became alarmed. One of their friends wrote to the Minister of Agriculture telling him that if he did not come up without delay and say something to appease the righteous wrath of an indignant people, they would not get a farmer's vote next election in the whole county of Kent. What was the result? I read the result of that meeting in a paper that was formerly favourable to the Minister of Agriculture, but I can assure you that it was not on this occasion very favourable to him, and I would be very much surprised if it were otherwise. When he got up there he found an intelligent body of farmers, a body of farmers who knew what was right and what was wrong, who knew what they wanted, and were determined to get it. Well, the hon. gentleman went on to speak to them for some time with his silvery tongue, but it didn't go down, and the result was that the farmers told him that they didn't want any white kid gloved men up there who parted their hair in the middle. They told him that they wanted solid facts. They wanted to know why he had brought in such a regulation. I am not surprised at it. Imagine if you can, and I venture to say you cannot, a regulation such as he brought in, a regulation that allowed the hog buyer to go to the farmer and purchase his hogs, pay him a cheque. and the farmer takes the cheque to the bank and gets his money and puts it in his pocket. What is the result? The hog buyer goes up to London or to any other place nearby, and probably in collusion with a veterinary there, he puts the deal through. I heard the particulars of a deal not very long ago from one who lives there, and it was this : The buyer went to the pork packing establishment and sold twenty-three hogs, and they were all condemned. He said: I won't stand that. He started out to take action, but they ran after him and said: Just come back and we will fix it up for you. When he found they would not go half and half with him, when he would not divide up with them, when they could not buy him up, they paid him to the last dollar. What is the result? I know that on many occasions the farmers in the province of Ontario have been swindled out of their just money by these men that go there; because there are spots on the hogs, or something that they can find, and there are very few hogs upon which you cannot find some little defect. What is the result? The hog buyer says, I paid my money and I don't want to lose it. The pork packer says, Oh, you are all right, you don't have to lose much. He says: We will give you a cent a pound, that will pay for your trouble, and you go back and demand it, and you can get your money back from the farmer. That has been done on several occasions.

What justice is there in that ; is it not another case of the mighty oppressing the weak, a case of the rich pork packer barons taking advantage of the farmers. The Minister of Agriculture played into the hands of the pork packers, but he learned a lesson when he went to Kent. The farmers told him they wanted justice, and they proceeded to teach him how to do his duty. He was like the missionary who went to convert a savage but the savage converted him. The Minister of Agriculture came back from Kent with more experience than when he went there. The Minister of Agriculture so arranged it that the farmers had to take just what the pork packers gave, and be thankful to get anything at all, but the farmers demanded fair play and in order not to lose votes and so that the Liberal candidates would not resign as they threatened to do, the Minister of Agriculture relented. The farmers took the law into their own hands and convinced the Minister of Agriculture that he was perpetrating an injustice upon them. My hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Clements) is to be congratulated on the interest he has taken in this question, and if we had more men of his stamp in this House it would be all the better for the farmers of Canada. I want to refer for a few moments to the French treaty, and I compliment my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Chisholm) on the manner in which he dealt with that question. When the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries returned to Canada it was heralded throughout the Dominion that the French treaty was going to give Canada a great advantage and that the battle cry next election would be the treaty with France and the All Red Line. We have the treaty with France, but the All Red Line stands where it did twenty years ago, and no progress has been made. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Chisholm) has told us what the result of that treaty will be. He has told us that it would allow the country to be flooded with absinthe, one of the most deadly poisons that has ever cursed the French nation ; a drug that has done more to drive men to the asylum than opium and morphine combined. That is the kind of stuff the French treaty will allow to be brought into Canada at reduced rates. I ask the temperance people of this fair Dominion of ours to remember the men who made such a treaty as that. Two days ago a deputation appeared before the Prime Minister and our genial friend from Brockville (Mr. Graham); and I asked the ladies who comprised that deputation what they think about the French treaty which will permit the importation at low rates of this horrid drug. The Prime Minister told these ladies that he could not prevent smoking because the Minister of Railways indulges in the weed, but he did not tell them that under the French treaty he had made provision that people could obtain at cheap rates, absinthe, adulterated brandies and wines and champagnes. If it were pure brandy and wine it would not be so bad, but they can bring in all kinds of spurious liquors. Not long ago when I was in France I saw an analysis made of these adulterated wines and they were composed of materials that would ruin the stomach of any man. You could buy a small bottle of the stuff for two pence and that is the kind of drink that the French treaty allows to be brought in to ruin our people. I say without fear of contradiction that while cigarettes are contributing to the ruin of our young men, the result of the French treaty in allowing these spurious liquors to be brought in will do a thousand fold more harm. I say that when the Minister of Finance renewed that treaty he did more to increase drunkenness in this country than anything else that can be thought of. I had occasion not long ago, in my practice, to tell a patient to get some good wine, and she brought in a bottle which she thought was all right because it was imported, but on examining it I found it was this adulterated stuff and had I not been there my patient would have partaken of it and would now be numbered with the great majority. I trust that those good ladies who were here the other day and who delivered themselves in such a brilliant manner before the Prime Minister, will take cognizance of the fact that the government has facilitated the importation of absinthe. That stuff will send to our asylums thousands and thousands of poor people who otherwise would be useful citizens. I hope it is not yet too late to amend that provision of the French treaty. No financial advantage to the country can be justitfied in the face of the moral and physical ruin of our people. We know that this absinthe is composed of the most deadly poisons, aconite chloral, hydrate of chloral, and drugs like that which will send men to the asylum or the grave if they partake of them for any length of time. Therefore I am glad that this discussion has taken place, and I hope it will have a good effect on the Minister of Finance, so that when he goes to the country, if he attempts to laud this much vaunted treaty with France, he will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Having dealt thus briefly with the speeches of those who have preceded me, I shall turn now to the great question under discussion, the speech from the Throne, and I want to say, as I said at the beginning, that it is the most meagre bill of fare we have ever had, small in quantity and worse in quality. What is there in it to discuss? Very little. Even of the measures promised there are only two or three. The First Minister and the Minister of Finance, the only two ministers who have attempted to discuss it intelligently, instead of doing so in a temperate and serious manner, tried to draw a red herring across the trail and treat it in a jocular way, throwing the people off the scent of the questions that ought to be discussed. I believe there has never been a time in the history of this Dominion when the people expected a more important bill of fare than they do at the present time. There is no use of acting like the bird that hides his head under his wing and thinks he is safe. There is no use of our attempting to conceal the fact that we are to-day face to face with one of the most serious financial crises that have ever struck this country, at least since the time of the government of Alexander Mackenzie in 1874. There are hundreds and thousands of men in every village and town throughout this Dominion standing on the streets and wharfs demanding work and bread. Those in charge of our charitable institutions are looking forward to one of the most severe winters we have ever had. At this early period of the year, almost before the winter has set in, we have hundreds and thousands of people, many of them brought in from foreign countries by our immigration laws and not understanding our ways, who will have to be largely supported by charity during this winter. What is the condition of the industries of the country to-day? A great majority of our factories are running at half time. The two factories in my own town have dismissed over half of their men, and they say that if there is not a better outlook for their products in the very near future they will be obliged to close up. Then we shall have all these people on our hands. How could we expect our factories to continue working as they have been doing? We have a banking system that we are proud of; one that has stood the storms of many years without many shipwrecks. We have a good banking law, but one which I think is more favourable to the bankers than to other classes of the community. Our usury laws give advantages to our bankers which they do not give to other people, and I know that they are taking advantage of them; in some cases they are charging higher rates of interests than individuals who are not bankers. That is not as it should be. Our banking laws and usury laws should treat all classes of our people alike. How can our merchants, manufacturers and farmers continue to do business as in the past if they cannot obtain the usual accommodation from the banks, and we all know that such is the case. They were notified a few months ago that they could only have half the usual accommodation, some less than that, and some none at all. And yet we find this government riding for a fall. They have been going on day after day devising wild schemes for spending the people's money; building wharfs where there were no water and railways where there was no traffic. The result is that they are not in a position to assist the banks and the people as they should. The government must come to their assistance in some way. If they do not, the result may be even worse than we anticipate. What have the government done to relieve the difficulties of the country? We saw it heralded through the papers a few weeks ago that the hon. Minister of Finance had made arrangements with the banks to provide money to move the grain in the great west. I do not know whether anything has come of that, but thus far we have seen no evidence of anything. We know that the railways are not carrying the amount of local traffic which they should; the grain buyers are not buying grain, and the farmers are very much in want of money. The grain buyers say, we cannot buy grain because we cannot get money, and we could not ship it if we had it because we cannot get the cars. The time has come when our means of transportation must be decidedly improved; if not, we shall have worse conditions than we have at the present time. In an investigation at Owen Sound a short time ago by the Railway Commission, it was proved beyond a doubt that the millers had flour and the grain buyers had grain to ship, but they could not get cars, while at the same time they saw through traffic from the United States rolling past their doors, both eastward and westward. Notwithstanding that we have subsidized these railroads heavily, many municipalities having paid them large bonuses, we find them to-day carrying through traffic at a much lower rate and just as required, because they have competition. The time has come when the government should step in and see that justice is done to that part of the country. The result of that inquiry by that commission was most alarming. There are the two reports—one the majority report, stating that there was no discrimination; the other, the minority report, showing that beyond doubt there was discrimination. Any man who takes a fair view of the matter must say that there was discrimination. That board, however, was composed of two lawyers and one layman, or, in other words, two lawyers and one man of common sense. If we had more common sense on that board and less legal quibbling, there would have been a unanimous report that there was discrimination and the railway companies would have been compelled to do justice to the farming community, the grain buyers and the millers. No action, however, was taken by the government, and the same condition of things still exists, and the burden of the people has not been lightened the smallest extent.

We are standing to-day on the brink of most dangerous conditions, yet what have the government done? The government must have seen the calamity that was coming on the country. They must have seen the financial clouds that were gathering around. But just as Nero fiddled while Rome was burning, the ministers wasted their time in the old country enjoying themselves and allowed this country to plunge into a financial condition from which it will take a long time to recover. In place of using up their reserves, as they did, they should have gone to the old country and floated a loan and have thus been in a position to leave their bank deposits undisturbed. Had they done this, the banks would have had much more money and this country would have been saved the panic it has experienced. What is the standing of the government at present? True they have in the banks in round numbers about $6,000,000, but they have guaranteed the bonds of the Quebec bridge Company to the extent of $5,896,000, which just balances their account in the banks. To-day therefore they have in reality not one dollar in the banks. What would the result have been had they floated a loan instead of disbursing the revenues as they came in? They would have relieved the disaster which came upon our people. There is another phase of the question. The government have some $60,000,000 in the savings banks. That money has been deposited by people of all classes but more especially by the day labourer and the mechanic. Ask of any of these men and they will tell you that they have money in the savings bank and that it is in a bank from which they can draw it out at any moment. Would not these men be greatly alarmed if they were to be told that the government had not in the banks $1 of that $60,000,000, that they had used it all on their ordinary expenditure. But suppose the government had that $60,000,000 in the banks to-day, what would the result be ? It would go a long way to bring about confidence and restore our financial standing. If that $60,000,000 were divided among our banks, it would enable them to extend loans to the merchants and manufacturers and the farming community ; and if the government had watched the signs of the times, as they should have done, we would have avoided the calamity which has come upon us. The United States saw the crisis coming and made arrangements to meet it. True they felt the depression as much as we did, but there is this difference between us. The United States have sunk their money to a large extent in buying stocks on margin, but that has been done only to a very small extent in this country. And if the government had floated a loan and kept a good balance in the banks, that would have relieved the situation very much.

I was very much surprised at the attitude taken by the First Minister and the Minister of Finance. In a time of serious depression, when the country was alarmed and anxious to have its financial position thoroughly explained, these two hon. gentlemen, particularly the Minister of Finance, disposed of the subject in a jocular manner and spent their time in explaining away the changes that have been brought about in connection with their business. It does seem to me, that whilst that is a question of importance, it is not of so great importance as the question of the finances of this country. I have no doubt that the people, whether Conservatives or Reformers, with a certain distrust, ask themselves why it was necessary for the government, having behind them such stalwarts as the former member for Centre York, to choose a man outside of the ranks of these men who have fought the battles of the party —not the battles of the country—for many years, and, looking at it from a party standpoint, have done it fairly well. The people naturally ask why it was necessary for this government to go to Toronto, and take from the provincial House the genial leader of their party there, a man so well adapted to fill the position that he lately occupied as leader of the opposition. I do not hesitate to say that he has peculiar fitness for that position, and had the First Minister not brought him into his cabinet, he would have filled the place of leader of the opposition for many years to come. The people ask why it was necessary to take a gentleman who had not won his spurs in the field of Dominion politics. Why was it necessary to pitchfork this hon. gentleman into a position to which many of the older members of this House could show a better title? We can hardly understand why it was necessary that the vacancy should be made. We know the peculiarities or the case. Only last session a member of this House made a charge against the government, naming no minister in particular. And what was the result? The First Minister rose and said: We will not accept a motion for a committee; we will not fight this question out; I have demanded from one of my ministers his resignation. We know that the Emperor Nero, when he found the people in a condition of rebellious unrest because of the burning of Rome, decided that he must find a victim. And he found his victims in the Christians. The Prime Minister, to meet the dissatisfaction in his own ranks, found a victim, and without making any charge against him, without benefit of judge or jury, he turned him out upon the world; and we find the present minister filling his position. But there is another view to take of the case. We can well believe that the Prime Minister saw how well the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Graham) filled the place of leader of the opposition. He remembered also that that hon. gentleman had been taken into the Ross government when that administration was doomed. He saw that this hon. gentleman had really acted as pall-bearer for the Ross government, that he had come in when the death rattle was in the throat of that government and its early demise a certainty. I have every hope—and have reason for my hope —that the time is not far distant when my hon. friend (Mr. Graham) will be free to go back to take in this parliament the place which he so ably filled in the Ontario House, that of leader of the opposition. We read the signs of the time and we know that everything indicates that, in the near future, at the next election, this government will be hurled from power, as the Ross government was. Before that comes to pass, we may expect—as seems to be the custom with hon. gentlemen opposite—that the First Minister will have taken his departure from this House for his rest in the Senate. And, knowing the fitness of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to lead the opposition, I have no doubt that he will be brought forward to lead the forlorn hope which will be all that will be left of that great party after the next election. Seeing the signs of the times, this government might consider with advantage the career of the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. The present government came into power under most favourable circumstances. Alexander Mackenzie also assumed office when everything was flourishing. His predecessors had made the contract for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But the Mackenzie government abrogated that contract, declaring that all the resources of the Dominion of Canada were not sufficient to accomplish the work of building that railway as a complete road. They said they would build it in sections, they would build it by piecemeal; they would use the water stretches between the pieces of road they would build. Hard times came. The country demanded something of the administration. They appealed to them to lift the country out of the slough of despond into which it had been led. But the answer of the Mackenzie government was that they could do nothing, that they were like flies on the wheel, and could neither help nor hinder its turning—that there was nothing to be done but trust to providence. Sir John Macdonald came forward with his national policy, a policy well thought out and clearly defined. The government of that day said it was impossible to carry it out. Ultimately the appeal was made to the country and the Canadian people, recognizing the ability of Sir John Macdonald and those by whom he was surrounded, returned him to power. The new government brought in the national policy, and the result was that every prophecy they had made was more than fulfilled. They had said that the time would soon come when tall chimneys would go up and manufacturing would flourish all over this country; when the balance of trade, instead of being against us—it was $121,000,000 against us last year—would be in our favour. Their expectations were more than realized. For seventeen years, the country went on flourishing as it had never flourished before. The contract for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway was let—not under as favourable conditions as the first contract, but still it was let. It was carried on and finished in less time than the contract required, and the result was that the farmer, the mechanic, the merchant and all classes of the community were benefited.

Now, this government came into power in 1896 under the most favourable circumstances. Everything was in their favour. They had the wealth accumulated by the former government, they had the tall chimneys, and the smoke was coming out of them. But what do we see to-day? We have the chimneys all over the country, but in a great many cases there is very little smoke coming out of them, nor is there likely to be for some months to come. Will any one tell me what this government has done for the country during the eleven years they have been in power? In the speech from the Throne they have promised us an election law. Well, we hope they will carry that out, and I can assure you that we are prepared to assist them to any extent we can that is for the good of the country. In Ontario we have a very stringent election law, and I want to say that so far as Ontario is concerned, and under the present local government, with the present Attorney General and county attorneys, the election law will be strictly observed at the next election. I believe the next election in Ontario will be pure as the drifted snow, otherwise those men will find themselves behind the bars. On two occasions before we defeated the Ross government, first in 1898 and again in 1902, we carried the province of Ontario by the popular vote, and if the votes had been honestly counted we would have had a fair working majority in the House. But such men as Preston, Jackson and others of that iniquitous band, stuffed the ballot boxes, switched the ballots, burnt the ballots, and the result was that the people were defrauded of their choice. There was a large body of civil servants in the employ of the local government who were scattered through the province, working for the Ross government. They went on with all these iniquities, and they usually succeeded in getting a small majority in the House. We put forth every effort to punish the guilty, but the Ross government succeeded in burking the inquiry, and the investigations came to nothing. It has been stated by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) that Mr. Whitney was cutting the heads off the Reform officials at such a rate that in the very near future none of them would be left. Now I speak of what I know, and I say that Mr. Whitney has not removed one official appointed by the late government except for cause.

When we were in opposition we endeavoured on several occasions to pass a law allowing the salaries of the local officials to be garnisheed for debt. In Toronto, as here in Ottawa, many of these men did not pay their honest debts. We insisted that they should be placed on the same footing as other men, and we took several votes, but were always voted down. Why? Because the government was in the hands of the officials, they were boss of the machine, and the government dared not remove them because they knew too much. The result was that they were allowed to go on. But when Mr. Whitney came into power he said: We will allow the salaries of all these officials to be garnisheed. We think they should be placed in the same position as other men. We think that their salaries should be sufficient with which to keep themselves and their families, but if they live extravagantly, beyond their means, they ought to be punished, and no official in my government will be allowed to get into debt and refuse to pay it; if he does, he will be dismissed. In the county of Dufferin two men have been dismissed, one for cause, and the other for not paying his honest debts, he did not pay his board, and squandered his salary. Conservative officials have been dismissed because they did not do their duty. I can assure you that Mr. Whitney is not the man to stand by and keep officials in the service who will not do their duty. If that law were applied in Ottawa it would be a good thing for the merchants, and it would be a good thing for the officials themselves. It would teach them that honesty is the best policy, and that they must do their duty like other men. In my riding we find that two men have been dismissed by the Ottawa government, one of them for the sole reason that was a Conservative. Therefore, I say that so far as the Conservative party is concerned, we will hail with delight any election law that will purify the political atmosphere and give us an honest election. We believe it would be very much to the interest of the country. Therefore, we hope that a Bill will be brought down at an early date and that it will receive consideration. It will have the support, I believe, of every member on this side of the House.

We have heard much in the past ten years in connection with immigration. I am sorry to say that in the past we have not been as careful in connection with immigration as we should have been, that we have not done our duty as citizens in permitting a class of immigration to come into this country that we would have been better without. I believe that this fair Dominion should be for the white race and that we should not allow people from China and Japan to come in and take the places of our workmen. It may be that just at the present time we require Italians, Japanese and Chinese, but I believe that in the near future, if not to-day, we have a large enough labouring class of our own to do all our work. I believe that in the stringent state of the market we will find ourselves taxed to our utmost to find work for our own people. We have Canada flooded with a class of immigration from almost every country that is undesirable. We have men from the older countries that we would be better without and the great injustice that I see in the present condition of affairs is that we are giving better terms to-day and have been for the past few years to these foreigners. We are looking after them, but if a citizen from Quebec or Ontario goes west to take up land —and we want to send our sons out there to take up land—he does not receive the same consideration that is accorded to foreigners. Our own people would not be looked after as the government has seen fit to look after these foreigners, and the result is that Canadians are placed at a disadvantage—a state of affairs which should not be permitted. While we have been very unjust during the past year to our own people we have brought in, to a great extent, the worst class of immigrants that could be brought to this country in consequence of which, during the present year, we will be compelled to open soup kitchens in order that we may keep from starvation these men whom we have paid to bring to Canada. We have heard of the good work that has been done by the North Atlantic Trading Company—a company that is as mythical as mythical can be, a company upon which we have spent a large amount of money while knowing nothing about the work that it has done. It has received pay for bringing immigrants to this country who would have come anyway. I believe the time has come when we should cease paying immigrants to come to our own land from the older countries. I believe we have one of the finest countries in the world, a country sufficiently great and powerful to attract immigration not only from the United States—and we know that the people that we get from the United States make the best citizens, and there are hundreds and thousands who are coming in from that country—but from all other countries. Whilst we assist immigration by the payment of money I submit we should be most careful to see that those who come to Canada are of the right class, and if they are not, we should not allow them to remain. We have the example of the United States. They are not paying any money for immigration. They have long ceased to do that, but they are spending large amounts to keep out undesirable immigration from finding a shelter and a home in their country. I believe the time has come when we must give most careful consideration to this question. We know that the jails and poorhouses of our country have been flooded very largely with these immigrants that are coming in, and we find that this is a class which is most undesirable. This government owes it to the House and the country to see that the immigrants coming into this country are of a class who will become good citizens, who will not only be prepared to make an honourable living in this country, but who will be prepared to fight the battles of the country when required.

In connection with the speech from the Throne, I must say there is very little to discuss, but there is one question of vast importance and one which has attracted the attention of the free and independent electors of this fair Dominion to a greater extent probably than any other. I refer to the clause in connection with telegraphs and telephones. It is a very short paragraph. I am sorry that it was not much more extensive, because it has attracted the attention of the people of Canada more than any other clause in the speech from the Throne. It is as follows:—

> The time has arrived when the public interest requires that telegraph and telephone companies holding federal charters should be placed under government control. A Bill will be introduced for that purpose.

That raised the hopes and expectations of many people throughout the country. We do know that this has become a very important question. We know that three sessions ago when it was brought up in the House the then Postmaster General, Sir Wm. Mulock, saw that it was of so much importance and the country was devoting so much attention to it, that he formed a committee which went into it very extensively, gathered a great deal of information from every province in the Dominion with the result that Sir William said that in the next session he would bring in a Bill for the purpose of regulating telephone and telegraph companies. One of its provisions would be that the government would have control of the long distance telephones. That would have gone a long way; it was not all that the country desired, but half a loaf is better than no bread, and the country would have been very much pleased if the proposed measure had gone to that length. That hon. gentleman was at that committee day after day. It went on for some weeks. It closed its sittings to meet again next session, but what was the result? The monopolists who rule the country and rule the government, said: This will never do; we must shut this off. They said to the government: You must find a place for the Postmaster General; he is moving too fast; we cannot allow him to interfere with our franchises; we are the barons and we demand that we have full possession and control of the long distance telephones, and you must find some place for Sir Wm. Mulock. Sir Wm. Mulock had to step down and out. He obtained a judgeship and we never heard that question discussed in this House by the friends of that hon. gentleman from that time up to the present. When I saw that paragraph I was much pleased, but I must say that my expectations were very much dampened when I heard the answer given to our distinguished leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), when he asked the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), what the Bill would be which he would bring down, and when the right hon. gentleman said that it would be one to give the railway commission greater power.

The right hon. gentleman spent a great deal of valuable time in attempting to prove that the government telegraphs and telephones in the United Kingdom did not pay. But he had to admit that the Rt. Hon. Mr. Buxton, Postmaster General of the United Kingdom, was able to show a net profit of £19,661 over all expenses in connection with the telephone service in England last year. What better showing would one expect than that, considering the very short time that the telephone system has been owned and operated by the British government. It may be a different thing in the case of telegraphs where expert labour is required at each end of the wire, but had the proposal of Sir William Mulock been carried out and had the government taken over the long-distance telephone system in connection with our postal service it would have proven of great advantage to the country and it would to-day be on a paying basis. The telephone is one of the greatest blessings of the present day; it has connected the rural sections of the country with the towns and villages and the large centres of population, and it has contributed a great deal to make the young men of the country content to live on the farm, for they feel that through its instrumentality they are brought into immediate communication with the outside world. It is needless to say that the telephone is of great advantage to medical practitioners and their patients. The Bell Telephone Company, that large corporation, has so handicapped the smaller telephone companies throughout the country by not giving them connection with the long distance system and refusing connection with railway stations, that the smaller companies have had to go out of business or amalgamate with the Bell Company. I believe the time has come when we should take drastic measures, if necessary, to compel the large corporations to give due consideration to the smaller companies. The remedy proposed by the Prime Minister is to increase the Board of Railway Commissioners from three members to five, and to give two of the commissioners the power to give a decision, allowing an appeal to the board. That is the very thing which the larger companies would want and it will be ruinous to the smaller corporations. In my own county I know that a great deal of difficulty has been experienced in getting permission to string telephone wires across the railway tracks. I thought at one time that the railways refused to give this permission out of pure cussedness, but I have discovered that the real reason is that they have been trying to extract money from the people all over the country. They failed in Dufferin county, but they have succeeded in other places. I myself made application to string wires across the Canadian Pacific Railway track and I found a great deal of difficulty in getting leave to do so. Mr. Cole had made application to the railway company for this purpose before I did, and they told him that if he paid $5 they would allow him to string the wires across. Mr. Cole referred the matter to me, and I wrote to Mr Murphy, superintendent of that section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a pretty sharp letter to which I received this reply:

> Your letter of September 17 in connection with Mr. Cole's application to string wires across our tracks at Shelburne duly reached me.
> I note that Mr. Cole has applied to the Railway Commission for permission to put his wires over our tracks. You of course understand that in connection with such crossings this company is put to considerable expense handling the application, preparing blue-prints, &c., which the amount of $5 really does not cover.

Mr. Cole, who owns a mill on one side of the track and a residence and a business block on the other side, desires to string a telephone wire from his house to his mill. He asked the council for permission, which was readily granted. Why should he be taxed by the railroad company to the extent of $5? The station master and the station hands could see that the wire was properly strung, according to the rules and regulations. I wrote back that the charge of $5 could not be permitted; and it took the Railway Commission one month to decide that question. I admit that it was during the holidays; but Mr. Cole was in the meantime put to the inconvenience of not having the telephone connection which he desired. I have many other letters of the same kind, but I will not trouble the House with them. But I want to ask the government if their policy is to allow the railroads to block the progress of the country in this way. The municipalities surely have some rights. The municipality of Shelburne owns that road jointly with the railroad company. There should be a general law giving power to corporations or individuals to string wires across railroad tracks under proper rules and regulations, and without being subjected to delay. A woman there also desired to string wires across the track in order to put the electric light and telephone into her house. She thought there might be delay if she applied to the local telephone company; therefore she applied to the Bell Telephone Company, which immediately strung a wire across the track and put in a 'phone. On the same day she applied to the Shelburne Electric Company to put in the electric light and to the council to put in a water main. The result was that the Bell Telephone Company put in the telephone without delay, but it was five weeks before she received notice from the Railway Commission that the electric light could be put into her house. The government should see that this state of things is remedied without delay. If the Railway Commission is forced to take up all these little cases, it will have no end of trouble; three or four more commissioners will be required to deal with them. What is the remedy? I do not believe that the extending of the scope of the commission to telegraphs and telephones will be of any advantage. In my opinion the remedy is this: we should have two boards—a board for the purpose of adjusting difficulties in connection with telegraph lines, telephone lines, electric light lines, water mains and probably express rates. The majority of this board, say three, should be business men. We should then have a second board composed largely of legal gentlemen to take up the great questions that are of interest to the whole country. Why should the Bell Telephone Company, because it represents a capital of $30,000,000, have an undue advantage over small telephone companies with a capital of a few thousand dollars? It is another case of oppressing the weak and giving advantages to the strong. There must be a remedy for this state of affairs. I submit, Sir, that the great remedy, the remedy that must come, is public ownership of our public utilities. That is the question which has seized the free and independent electors all over this great Dominion. Other countries, such as New Zealand and Australia, have tried that remedy. There was a time when the people of New Zealand were in a condition or industrial and financial distress; but at the present time, owing to their having control of their public utilities, owing to the fact that their taxes do not go to the corporations but to the treasury of the country, they are less taxed than any other country in the civilized world; and I venture to say that when the election comes on, as it must in the near future, it matters not whether it is a few months or many months hence, a mandate will go from a large majority of the ridings of this fair Dominion, demanding an active and progressive government, a government that will rule the country by the people, for the people, and with the people—a government that will not allow monopolies to rule this country; because we must either rule the corporations, or the corporations will own the country. I venture to say that public ownership of public utilities will be the battle cry at the coming election. Then the government will find a mandate coming from the constituencies demanding that they do justice to the electorate. They will find outside the House, in the people, a power that will not brook any interference with their rights but will hurl from office any administration which attempts to trample on those rights.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). I listened this afternoon with a good deal of attention to the speech of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Roche); because when that hon. gentleman rises to address the House we always expect to hear an able delivery, and I must compliment him on the one he gave this afternoon. But I was rather surprised at some of the language he used, especially when he charged the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) with having been impertinent in introducing the resolution he did. I do not think that that was proper parliamentary language to use towards a fellow member who has introduced a resolution, and especially a resolution that has met with the united support of one of the great parties in this House. He told us that the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) was going about crying blue ruin and croaking hard times. Well, that should have reminded the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) of those good old times, a few years ago, when Sir Richard Cartwright and the Liberal party were the croakers and travelled up and down throughout the country crying blue ruin, hard times, and predicting all sorts of calamities.

Another statement which rather surprised me was his disparaging reference to some of the banks of this country. In this debate I did not hear any such reference except from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche). He said that while some of the banking institutions were well managed and had taken care of their customers, others, some of the smaller banks, were not so well managed and did not look after their customers. I do not know of any bank in the country, large or small, that is not taking care of its customers and providing them with funds fully up to their credit. If there are any such banks in the province from which the hon. gentleman comes, there are none in the province of Ontario. While in Ontario the banks are not opening up new accounts, they are certainly taking care of their old customers and providing them with sufficient funds to carry on their business.

A short time ago we noticed throughout the press that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was coming to the aid of the banks by giving them sufficient assistance to enable them to move the grain crop from the west. If I were permitted to describe that statement as it deserves, I would call it a bluff. I am told that two leading politicians of the west came to Ottawa and interviewed the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) and advised him that it would be a splendid card to play in the west if he would only say to the farmers : I come to your rescue and furnish the funds to enable the banks to remove your crops. But the banks did not require any assistance from him, or at any rate not such assistance as he offered them, and every one of the banks refused to accept his offer. It remains to be seen whether that political exigency which the Finance Minister thought might assist him in securing the votes of the farmers of the west, will have any such effect. Unless I mistake the sentiment of that country, it will recoil on himself to his discredit and that of his government.

I listened with attention to the speech made by the mover of the address (Mr. Hall). I must say that the hon. gentleman delivered a very able speech, but I was rather surprised at some portions of it. One particularly must have been equally a surprise to the government supporters and especially to the right hon. the First Minister. That was the portion in which he congratulated the country on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and gave the credit for building that road to the late Sir John Macdonald and the Conservative party. Times have indeed changed. Only a few years ago, Sir Richard Cartwright was wont to tell us that the Canadian Pacific Railway would never earn enough to pay for the grease on its axles and wheels. Yet to-day we have a prominent supporter of the government, in moving the address in reply to the speech from the Throne congratulate the country on the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway and giving to that great statesman, Sir John Macdonald, all the credit for its inception and construction.

That reminds me that this government are likewise trying their hand at building a transcontinental road, the Grand Trunk Pacific. We have been told by the right hon. the First Minister that this road will only cost the country $13,000,000, and we have had that same statement reiterated by Liberal speakers all through the country. In the county from which I come, its former member said on the hustings that the cost of this road would not exceed $13,000,000. I do not blame that young gentleman because he is not a business man, and no doubt simply made the statement on the faith of his leader. But what an evidence have we not of the absurdity of that statement made by the head of this government, when we have already spent in the neighbourhood of $42,000,000 upon this road and when we have every indication that before it is completed it will cost the country $150,000,000 to $200,000,000.

I notice on the Order Paper a motion to be moved by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) calling for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the manufacturing centres and the great lakes, and we have had the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) making in Ontario a similar statement. Why, Mr. Speaker, that is the Conservative policy. The leader of the Conservative party (Mr. Borden) advocated that policy before the last general election, and hon. gentlemen opposite pooh poohed the idea, just as they now attempt to cast ridicule on the Halifax platform. And to-day we have the spectacle of this same government, the present Minister of Railways and the ex-Minister of Railways, taking credit to themselves for the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway to the great lakes—stealing that idea from the Conservative party, just as they have stolen the other items of their policy that have all been successful. When the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Hall) was speaking, and especially when he was complimenting the Minister of Finance upon his negotiations for better trade relations with France, which meant lower tariff between France and Canada, I wondered if he remembered how, when he was seeking election in the city and county of Peterborough, he visited every one of the manufacturers of that city and promised each one of them that he would advocate in this House adequate protection for the manufacturing industries of Canada. I am told that that is a fact and that it was upon that promise and upon the belief in his influence with the Minister of Finance and the government that the hon. gentleman was elected. But I fear that the hon. member is like a good many other hon. gentlemen on the other side who pretend to be protectionist Liberals, but who, when they come here, forget their promises and swallow the tariff of the present government.

I quite agree with the arguments of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and with the resolution that he has presented, and I agree with him when he states that he views with alarm the balance of trade against this country—an adverse balance of over $120,000,000. This adverse balance means simply this—that the people of Canada have bought $120,000,000 more than they have sold. I agree with the hon. member for Brantford that the merchant who buys more goods than he sells is facing financial trouble, and that the householder or citizen who buys more than he is able to pay for must look to a condition of finances that is not to his advantage. I think that the balance of trade being against us, as it is, is very much against the interest of Canada, for it simply means that we are sending $120,000,000 out of this country to the United States, to Germany, to France and other countries, to pay for goods. That money will help to carry these countries through the present financial stringency. If we had that $120,000,000 in this country to-day it would be to the advantage of our banking institutions and of our Canadian people generally.

When these hon. gentlemen assumed office they told us that they intended to decrease the expenditure and the taxation. But we find that whereas they objected to an expenditure of $37,000,000 and $38,000,000 in 1895 and 1896, during the last fiscal year we have passed items of expenditure in this House aggregating between $118,000,000 and $128,000,000. So they have enormously increased the expenditure of the country and have set an example of extravagance to the people, and so have assisted in bringing about the financial difficulties which seem to be making themselves felt in this Dominion. And, as to taxation, I find that whereas under Conservative rule, the taxation of this country was about $5 per head, after eleven years of Liberal rule it has increased to $11 per head. These figures give some idea of how these hon. gentleman carry out their promises. The Finance Minister in framing his tariff arranges the duties not in such a way to give ample protection to the manufacturing industries of this country, but in such a way as to extract from the pockets of the people every dollar that is possible, because he must have the money to meet the enormous expenditures that he has incurred. When the Minister of Finance addressed this House the other day he spoke with a great deal of levity. He was very jocular in his remarks. I do not think that the country at this time looked for levity from the Minister of Finance. They expected something different in a speech so important as that of the Minister of Finance on the address. They expected him to satisfy and assure the country as to financial conditions; they expected him to give something more solid and useful than the levity in which he indulged. He twitted others in this House of corruption in elections. He went into ancient history, going over events of twenty or twenty-five years ago to make a point against members on this side of the House. But when he was asked a simple question as to the election trial in which he himself was engaged, he answered only with sarcasm as to the wisdom of others. Well, Mr Speaker, I think we have a right to expect wisdom from a Minister of Finance, even though we do not often get it. And I think he has done as much towards the degradation of public life in this country, in the way of lowering political morality, as any other member of this House. When he was asked as to his replies to questions at his own election trial, he said that he had answered all the questions that the court had asked him. But I find, on looking over 'Hansard" that the hon. gentleman hid himself behind the advice of counsel and refused to answer questions that were put to him. Had he answered these questions as an honest man should have been willing to answer questions, I think we should have had some light on the way the contests were carried on in the last election and why a solid eighteen were returned from the province of Nova Scotia to support this government. I find that after he had shielded himself behind the advice of counsel with regard to many questions, his lordship the judge said he thought it would be perfectly legitimate for the hon. gentleman to answer these questions. But counsel, even after hearing the judge, advised the hon. gentleman to decline to answer, so that we find his answer again: 'On the advice of counsel I decline to answer.' The hon. gentleman told us here what he seemed to regard as an amusing fable. And the hon. gentlemen behind him applauded most uproariously. This story was about a certain John Doe—and he told us that John Doe was an imaginary person—who gave $80 at one time and at another time $20 towards the election fund of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Well, that was surely a very large sum to subscribe for an election, but if the hon. gentlemen opposite would tell about election subscriptions I am sure that they could give instances of much larger amounts being subscribed. I find that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) himself in his election trial was asked some very pertinent questions on this subject. He was asked about Mr. A. M. Farrell, who represents the riding of Queens and Shelburne in the Nova Scotia local assembly, and was the Speaker of that House. Here are some of the questions and answers with the hon. gentleman's answers:

Q. How much money did you get from him altogether?—A. I cannot tell exactly, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500, between five and six probably.

Q. Not any more than that?—A. Not any more than that, I don't think.

Q. When did you get it from Farrell?—A. Some time before the election, probably a week or so.

So the hon. gentleman was getting money from the local member in chunks of $500 or $600, and he thought it was a most dreadful thing that the hon. member for North Toronto, twenty or twenty-five years ago, had got subscriptions at one time of $80 and another time of $20 from a friend. The hon. gentleman told us that the County of Colchester in the province of Nova Scotia was a Conservative county, an old Tory county, he said, that always returned a Conservative. Well, the hon. gentleman was down in the town of Truro, and I doubt very much if he told them at that meeting that it was a Conservative county, and that it would return a Conservative. I think it likely he assured the electors that the county of Colchester was sure to return the Liberal candidate. At the last general election the county of Colchester did return a Liberal; and as I have already said, if we could find out the truth regarding the expenditure of money in Nova Scotia, we would probably have some light upon the election in Colchester in 1904.

The Minister of Finance himself has not always had smooth sailing in elections, either. It has not always been easy for the hon. gentleman to find a seat in this House, he has had his troubles as other men have. In 1896 the hon. gentleman travelled over this country preaching the doctrines of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party, and after the election the hon. gentleman found himself without a seat in this House. He wanted to find a seat, and so he went up and down Nova Scotia looking to see where there was one he could secure, in other words, trying to find some man that had the goods to sell. He wanted to get them if he possibly could. So he found in Nova Scotia a gentleman named Forbes. Mr. Forbes says, Well, I will resign my seat, but what am I going to get for it? A short time afterwards Mr. Forbes, who was an obscure young lawyer, I believe, was appointed to a judgeship at a very lucrative salary, and the hon. gentleman secured that seat. That was one of the cases where the judiciary was probably degraded by the appointment for political purposes of a man to represent this country upon the bench. While I do not want to advocate the American system of election of judges by the people, still I believe that just such circumstances as that tend to make people think that it would be better for the country if the judges were elected by the voice of the people instead of appointed by the politicians. There was a time in this country when the judiciary was respected, everybody looked up to it, the country was proud of it; it was composed of independent men who were appointed on account of their ability. All that has been changed since this government came into power, and men are appointed to the bench to-day for political reasons and for political pull.

I am glad to notice that we have in the House a new minister from the province of New Brunswick, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley). That gentleman has been doing a good deal of talking throughout this country of late. He has told us about political corruption, he has told us about funds that were raised for certain purposes down in the province of Nova Scotia. Now he seems to be most familiar with that matter. It is strange how he knows so much about it, he seems to have been on the inside where he could know all that was going on. He even seems to know just how much money went into a constituency, he told us the amount that went into the City of St. John. Now, from what I read of this intrigue, it was not a Conservative intrigue. The leader of the Conservative party has repudiated it, and says he knows nothing about it. He even goes so far as to challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to appoint a Royal Commission to investigate the election funds of both parties. But that is not acceptable to hon. gentlemen opposite, they do not want their own election funds investigated, they do not want any Royal Commission. The hon. gentleman shields himself by saying: Bring on a libel suit. Well, Sir, we have had lately a little light thrown upon these funds, we have had a little light thrown upon this intrigue. The hon. gentleman, at a meeting in the Opera House in Ottawa the other night, in addressing a Liberal convention, told them that when he was in the city of Woodstock, in the province of New Brunswick, a certain telegram was flashed before him, and that telegram said that Mr. Blair, an old Liberal, an ex-member of the Liberal government, was going out to denounce the government and to take the stump in opposition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government. The hon. gentleman then made a statement that reminded me very much of an occurrence that happened in the local legislature of the province of Ontario some years ago. There was a gentleman there whom many in Ontario will remember, and who was not loath to go from the Conservative side to the Liberal side. There came a certain time in connection with the business of the House when this gentleman was expected to speak, and a note was sent across the House to him on which was written, 'Speak now.' And the Minister of Public Works says that he got a telegram to speak now. He was actually going to assassinate his leader, his bosom friend, that had been helping him all his life, the man who had been associated with him, his intimate friend and adviser, the man who knew him better probably than any other man in this House, selected the Minister of Public Works to assassinate his leader, and wired him that now was the time for him to speak. Well, Sir, that throws all the light that is necessary upon that deal, it throws all the light that is necessary upon this great scandal that the hon. gentleman has been carrying around in his pocket for all this time. It shows that probably he knew himself what was going on in connection with the intriguers who were endeavouring to overthrow the Laurier government. This gentleman probably who sent him the telegram thought that the Minister of Public Works would like to return to his first love, because you know that hon. gentleman was a leading Conservative, I suppose, up to 1896. He was even a candidate in a county in the province of New Brunswick in the Conservative interest. But the Conservatives of the county were not satisfied with him as a candidate, and they requested him to withdraw. Then in 1896 the Liberal party came to power, and nobody could change his politics any quicker than the Minister of Public Works, he changed with the government. Then when it came to the assassination of the leader of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the effort to overthrow his government, his bosom friend of a lifetime wired him that it was time to speak.

We have another new minister in this House, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), a most estimable gentleman, I believe. I have not the honour of very much acquaintance with him, but he was selected from the province of Ontario, from the leadership of that forlorn little band of Liberals up in the province of Ontario, and brought down here to be Minister of Railways and Canals of this government. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the other day, in a most jocular way, went over one after another the Conservatives sitting on this side of the House and told why they were not selected as leaders of the party, but let me tell the Finance Minister that the leader of the Conservative party was selected by the party, from the members of the House of Commons and by the gentlemen whose names he mentioned. We did not have to go outside of the House to select a leader. We selected him from among ourselves, but hon. gentlemen opposite, when they wanted a minister either of Public Works or of Railways and Canals had to go outside and bring him in. Why? Because their chief felt that there was not among them a man who measured up to the standard. It is said that the former member for Centre York came down and interviewed the Prime Minister that the Prime Minister shook his head and said: Oh, no, you won't quite do—the former member for Centre York, while the Prime Minister was shaking his head, shook his fist and said: Well, I will either do or you will have to appoint me to some good position. The Finance Minister reminded us of the old fable of Davy Crockett and the Coon, but I do not know of a better illustration of the fable of Davy Crockett and the Coon than when the former member for Centre York made the coon come down and he was appointed to the position of senator in this country. Then, I think, perhaps, in looking over the aspirants for the position of Minister of Railways and Canals the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) pricked up his ears and I have not the slightest doubt but that he thought he had all the ability that was necessary to fill that position. No doubt even now that hon. gentleman is surprised to think that he was not selected for that most important position because he certainly had claims. I do not know of any member sitting on the Liberal benches who has more claims than the hon. member for South Grey. He has delivered more and longer speeches to empty benches in this House than perhaps any other member on the other side of the House. No doubt he reminded his chief of the strong claims which he possessed. But, unfortunately, the Prime Minister could not see it in that light and the great ability of the hon. member for South Grey was passed over. Then I suppose, the chief whip of the Liberal party aspired to the same position but he did not measure quite up to the standard. There is our good friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston). There is no doubt that he had claims. There is no doubt that he thought to himself: I have done the chores and errands of the party, I have done all the little things that I have been asked to do and surely I have some right to this office. But, unfortunately for him, the Prime Minister thought he would not quite do. In selecting a Minister of Railways and Canals there is no doubt the Prime Minister looked the whole field over to see whom he could get who would just fill the bill. He said, I want a man who has had some experience in election methods, some one who knows how to organize and carry on elections throughout the Dominion and so he selected the late organizer of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario and a member of that disgraced and discredited Ross government. Now, the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues can feel that they have the fragments of that right arm of the Ross government that the right hon. gentleman spoke of some months ago in the Opera House. The Hon. G. W. Ross is sleeping quietly over in the Senate, a tax upon the people of Canada during the rest of his lifetime to the extent of $2,500 a year and the right hon. gentleman has in his own government the organizer of the Liberal party in Ontario who knew so much about the men employed by the Ross government in their effort to remain in office. He knew something about election methods in the province of Ontario and if I remember correctly the trick ballot box came from somewhere near Brockville. If I remember correctly there was a certain telephone message reported about that time with which the hon. gentleman was connected. No doubt he looked up the other qualifications that the hon. gentleman has as well. I suppose that he said: Here is a gentleman versed in the mode that was employed by the organizers in carrying elections up there, switching ballots, and he even probably thought that he wanted to get a man who could weather the gale and sail the ship through the storm and so he selected the man who knew how to help him in elections. A seat had to be provided for the new Minister of Railways and Canals and there is no doubt he looked the province over to see where he could find it. He found a gentleman who had the goods for sale and a gentleman who would not give up his position without being well paid. I think, if we knew all there was about it, we would find that perhaps a bargain was made before he resigned. At least rumour has it that there was. It is actually said that there was a letter moving around in connection with the circumstance, but anyway, the hon. gentleman resigned and was placed over in the Senate where he too will be a tax upon the people of Canada for the rest of his natural life. This seems to have caused a great deal of dissatisfaction among members of the Liberal party. Members of this House seemed to be very much dissatisfied and I have very strong evidence that the arrangement was most unpopular, and that they were almost in open rebellion in connection with it. What happened? We have on the Order Paper notices from two hon. members sitting on the Liberal side of the House of motions to abolish the Senate. The hon. member for South Grey moves:

> That the disadvantages connected with and resulting from the maintaining of the Senate greatly outweigh the advantages and benefits derived therefrom, and that the Senate may with advantage and gain be abolished.

All on account of poor Derbyshire. Well, there is one good thing to be said about the Hon. Mr. Derbyshire, he has evidently brought about some little agitation in the party opposite that promised to reform the Senate which may result in carrying their promise into effect. The desk mate of the hon. member for South Grey, the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) also moved a resolution in which he says:

> And in making recommendations in regard to these and other changes calculated to place the Senate in a position of increased usefulness and of increased responsibility to the people.

And even our good old friend who was so long in this House, the Hon. Mr. McMullen, I understand he has a motion on the order paper to reform the Senate; so that even the Senate itself is in revolt because the former member for Brockville (Mr. Derbyshire) is associated with them; I do not know whether it is because of the deal or because they are dissatisfied with his company, and think that the standard has not been raised by his elevation to the upper House.

Now, speaking of the government of the province of Ontario, I say in all sincerity that thank God we have an honest government in that province now, a government that will not stand for anything in the way of electoral crookedness or electoral wrong. We could have no better example of that than the investigation which was carried into the courts in the London election case, and as a result of which four of these gentlemen, poor unfortunate fellows who were only the tools of the Ross government and the Liberal party have been convicted and are now awaiting sentence. The Dominion government has now a duty devolving upon them, and I hope they will face it manfully and provide some kind of lucrative jobs for these four gentlemen as they did for others of their class. We know there was one Luke Wagner in the Northwest who got into trouble and even while he was in jail his salary was raised by the government, so that we may expect the ministers to look after the interests of these four men in Toronto. And not only is there an honest government in Ontario, but also in British Columbia and in Manitoba as well. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to point to any act of corruption on the part of these governments since they have been returned to office, and I ask these gentlemen to contrast the governments of British Columbia, Ontario and Manitoba, with the Liberal governments in other provinces. In the province of Quebec we find one Liberal member of this House actually resigning his seat and going down there to try and purify, and uphold the standard of morality and honesty in Quebec.

Mr. TALBOT. What was his success?

Mr. LALOR. It remains to be seen whether he will be successful or not; it is to be hoped that he or some one else may succeed in reforming the provincial government of Quebec and the Dominion government as well. I may remind hon. gentlemen opposite that there was something of the same kind in Quebec in Mr. Mercier's time, but the people reformed that government. Look at the province of Saskatchewan where the Hon. Walter Scott is premier, and you will see that the late election in Prince Albert demonstrated how Liberal methods are carried on in every province where Liberals control. Wherever they happen to be in power there is election crookedness and dishonesty. Ontario got rid of them, British Columbia got rid of them, and thank God when the people of the Dominion get a chance they will get rid of this bunch. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat because I want to pay him some compliments. It is suggested by my hon. friend here that he has gone to a five o'clock tea, but it is too late for that function, although it probably may be a pink tea he is attending. The Minister of Agriculture is noted for inspection Acts, he has a weakness for putting on the statute-books inspection Acts which are a farce, but which surround him with an army of inspectors who turn out to be election workers when the time comes. We had a sample of that to-day, and the member for South Essex had to stand up and make excuses for the Minister of Agriculture and promise he would change his regulations. I particularly desire to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the Apple Inspection Act which he passed a few years ago and under which he made certain regulations. I give him the credit that it was a good Bill, and I believe it raised the standard of Canadian apples in the British market. The buyer knew that if he purchased No. 1 Canadian apples he was buying a good apple, and that if he purchased grade No. 2 he was buying a good second quality. But strange to say something has happened this year that has entirely changed the inspection of apples, and if to-day Canadian apples are a drug in the British market, I believe it is because the buyer in England has discovered that he cannot depend on the brand. I know a local shipper at my own station who was honestly grading his apples according to law, and there was another shipper from the same place who was doing very differently indeed; he was branding No. 2 as No. 1. The honest shipper went to the other and said: How do your apples pass inspection? and the answer was: Why this year they are not inspecting them very closely and almost anything goes. Well, I can tell why that change in the system of inspection was made. There was an election in East Northumberland which is an apple growing county, and the people there thought the law was too stringent, and in an endeavour to carry the election, among the many other promises made to the electors of East Northumberland was a promise that the apples would go through this year without very much inspection. The result of that is that the sale of Canadian applies is ruined on the British market.

I want to say a word in connection with our mail service. I am in favour of rural mail delivery. I believe it is not in the interest of the country that the government should come down this session and announce that there is a surplus of $1,000,000 in the postal department. I do not believe there should be any surplus in that department. I believe that every dollar of post office revenue should be used in giving better mail service to the people of Canada. I believe that every dollar of that surplus and more if necessary, should be used in trying the experiment of rural mail delivery. Where rural mail delivery is not possible, we should have at least good mail service. I have received, since I have come to the House, several letters from a township in my constituency, one of the richest and best townships in the province of Ontario, informing me that in several post offices in that township there are only two or three mails a week. I believe there should be a daily mail, not only in every part of the province of Ontario but in every part of every other province. There is no reason why the farmer should not receive proper mail service. He largely pays the bills of this country, and there is no reason why he should not have as good service according to the distance he lives from the railway as the man who lives in the city. I therefore sincerely think that our mail service should be so arranged as to provide a daily mail for every part of this country.

In conclusion, I just want to say, with regard to the Halifax platform, that I am entirely in accord with that platform, as is the united Liberal-Conservative party of this country; and I believe, from the great success which the leader of the Conservative party has had in his tour of the west, that the people of the west are in sympathy with that platform; and, from the result of the recent election in the county of Colchester, I believe that the people of the maritime provinces are also in sympathy with it.

Mr. PETER ELSON (East Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the hon. gentleman who spoke as the mover of the address. He certainly said a good many things which will be of use to the people of this country. He alluded in brilliant terms to the prosperity of this fine Dominion, and he endeavoured to show that the foundation of that prosperity was the good management of this government during the past ten or eleven years. Mr. Speaker, I differ with him in that regard. The hon. gentleman did not give sufficient credit or praise to a kind Providence for the bountiful harvests which this country has enjoyed during the last ten or eleven years. We must acknowledge that the foundation of the prosperity of a country, especially a country so largely agricultural as the Dominion of Canada, is its good crops. Now, Sir, I hold that no government has the power to produce such weather as will bring about good crops. No government has the power to cause the sun to shine for a single moment on the earth's surface and thereby cause the seed to germinate and grow. No government has the power to cause the copious rains to fall which, combined with the sunshine, are so necessary to produce crops to perfection until they yield perhaps thirty or forty fold. It is true, this government did some time ago grant a large sum of money to the Yukon Territory, and the officials there did use a certain part of that money to shake up the clouds and cause a disturbance in order to bring rain. However, that was a very great failure, proving again that too much credit has been given to the government for the prosperity of the country and not enough to a kind Providence.

There is one question which I desire to bring before the House and which I regard as a very great question, especially to the people who live in rural districts. They feel that the time has now arrived when the government of this country should establish a system of free rural mail delivery. The farmers of the country are anxious, we may say they are hungry, for a daily mail and a daily newspaper. The daily newsapper is the common educator of the people. Then, give the farmer the opportunity of obtaining this great boon without too much effort. It will enable him to see what the federal government is doing, what the legislatures of the different provinces are doing, and something of the doings of the governments of other countries. It will also inform him of any great calamity or great misfortune that happens in any part of the world. It will inform him as to the market value of the different products of his farm that he may have to sell, which will be of great benefit to him. The daily mail certainly does a great deal to make the country home more attractive. It enables men living on the farm to feel that they are living in an up-to-date portion of the world and goes far to content them with their situation. It would seem to give them greater energy to work on the land, resulting in the production of a great deal more of the golden grain which is so large an element in our country's wealth. It also tends to increase the production of those splendid horses, cattle and sheep, for which the farmers of this country have succeeded in taking the champion prizes at the great international show which is going on at the present time in the city of Chicago. Then, Sir, encourage the young men of the farm by giving them free rural mail delivery. It will make them feel more like keeping themselves to the front and pushing along. It is said that the homes build up the nation. I believe that is true ; I believe every hon. gentleman in this House believes that is true, and the greater portion of these homes are in the country districts. We are also informed and believe that the greatest possible asset that a country can have is the people who live in it, so long as they are a contented people. It has been said by some of the most able statesmen of the present day that the permanent and lasting greatness of any country depends more largely upon the character of its rural population than upon any other one thing. If that be the case, the government of the day should endeavour to encourage those people in every possible way they can, and I know of no legislation which the government could enact that would fill up the country more rapidly and permanently than a free rural mail delivery. It may be said that the cost would be very heavy, but what can the government obtain without a great deal of expenditure? Where have they obtained anything valuable without a very heavy outlay? We have been spending millions on other objects which do not give us anything for the money paid out adequate to the return which would result from the expenditure on a free rural mail delivery service. Look at the trouble a farmer is put to in order to obtain his daily mail. Suppose he lives a mile or two or three miles from the post office. Take the average distance as a mile and a half, and just see what inconvenience he is occasioned to-day. He has to travel a mile and a half to the post office and then make his return trip. Thus he has to cover three miles a day or eighteen miles a week, or in the fifty-two weeks of the year between nine hundred and a thousand miles in order to obtain his daily mail. Averaging that at five cents a mile, you will find that it costs $45 to $50 a year to the farmer to get his daily mail. Could not the government, with a wholesale system of rural mail delivery, deliver the mails at one-tenth of the cost which a farmer has now to pay? The hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) said last session in this House that as soon as this country has a population of 20,000,000 we may begin to talk a free rural mail delivery. Well, I think it will be a long time before we have that population; but following out that line of argument, we have now nine provinces beside the territories, and dividing these nine provinces into 20,000,000 we would have two and a quarter millions for each province. Ontario has that population already; Quebec is following very close. Why not then commence the system in the province of Ontario or Quebec, and then after it is in thorough working order gradually extend it over the whole Dominion? Millions of dollars are paid away by the government every year, of which we do not complain very much, for the purpose of subsidizing railways. Millions are also expended on bonuses to the manufacturers of iron, steel and lead, but where is the bonus to the farmers? It is too intangible, too vapoury, too mythical, to be perceived by the naked eye. Just give the farmer rural mail deivery and you will give him a boon which he will thoroughly appreciate. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has told us that this system has cost the United States some $30,000,000 this year, but that is really the very best argument in its favour because it shows that the people demand it and approve of it and the government have acceded to the wish of the people. I shall take the liberty of reading two or three extracts with regard to this system taken from papers which are certainly very reliable:

If any people are more curtailed to postal privilege than another, it is the farmers of Ontario. Free rural delivery would be an inexpressible boon to them, all the more so as labourers diminish in numbers, obliging them to work on the land for all they are worth. It would be a boon to have mail left at the door or in a box at the garden gate, instead of trudging miles to the post office.

Life on the farm would be vastly improved were a post carrier to pass daily to deliver and receive the letters and papers which are nowadays the appanage of nearly every rural as well as city household. While the city householder has his mail matter left at his door two or three times each day, the rural resident must trudge from one to three miles to get it for himself. How different were a box fixed at his gate into which mail could be left or collected by the official carrier.

As the rural classes pay the greatest share of the country's taxes, as it is upon these that the government depends for public revenue, they are entitled to every boon in the public service that is feasible and in accordance with modern life.

Here is another clipping describing the success of the American system:

Success of free delivery.

A careful investigation has been made by the Postal Department at Washington into the effect of rural free delivery in Carrol county, Maryland, the first county in which the complete mail service was established. The result is such as would be very gratifying to Sir William Mulock, were he still in the mail service of Canada.

The population of the county is thirty-three thousand, seventy-five per cent of which is agricultural. The number of letters delivered in the county the year following the establishment was sixteen per cent in excess of the number delivered the year before any rural routes, were established in the county. Postal cards showed an increase of twenty-one per cent, newspapers and periodicals, nine per cent; circulars, twenty-one per cent; packages, thirty-three per cent, and registered letters, twenty-four per cent.

The increase of revenue would go far to reimburse the government for all the outlay of initiating the rural free delivery service, if it did not leave a substantial balance to the good. As the investigation proceeds it is confidently predicted that similar results will be found to attend the system in other countries.

Think of the accommodation to the farming population by a development of the postal service which has brought to the country parts an increase of 100 per cent in paying mail matter.

Is not such an experiment worthy of trial in Canada? Would not the farmers of western Ontario hail it as a boon?

I fully endorse all that is stated in those clippings. Let me now give you a little conversation which I had not long ago with an American gentleman, who is a farmer on the other side of the line. He bragged about his own country as being the best in the world. I felt it my duty to stand up for my own native land. I held that Canada was second to no other country upon the face of the earth. 'Ah, but,' said he: 'We have something there that you have not; we have rural free mail delivery, which is a great boon to our people, which is building up our homes and building up our nation. The best thing you can do is to sell your farm in Canada and come and settle on a farm in the United States. If you do so, Uncle Sam will see to it that you get your mail delivered right at your garden gate; you will get your mail just easily, almost, as does the resident of the city.' My answer was: 'Of course, you have rural free mail delivery, which we have not in Canada. It is undoubtedly a great advantage that you enjoy. But I believe that the government will see the necessity of commencing that system in the older settled parts of our country, at least. And, if the present government will not do it, we have the assurance of the leader of the opposition, that as soon as he gets into power which no doubt will be very soon—he will commence the establishment of the system of rural free mail delivery in the older settled portions of the country, and will extend it as rapidly as circumstances will allow until it covers the whole Dominion.' It seems to me that, when we send letters to New Zealand, to Japan, to Hong Kong and other places far distant from Canada, for two cents, it is not reasonable that we, as farmers in Canada, should not receive our letters without having to travel eight or nine hundred miles in the course of a year to and from the post office to call for our mails.

There is another question on which I desire to say a few words. The constitution of the Senate. We hear a good deal about the Senate. Many people tell us that it should be abolished altogether. Others say that it should be reformed. We find that, back in the year 1893, the Liberals of this country held a convention here in Ottawa, and laid down the platform for their party. One plank in that platform was the abolition of the Senate. Sir Oliver Mowat, speaking on that occasion, said:

We are agreed as to the necessity of a fundamental reformation of the Senate—if, for any reason, a Senate must be or should be retained. The Senate as now constituted is the weakest point in our constitution.

And Sir Richard Cartwright said:

I think, Sir, we all agree that the constitution of the Senate as it at present exists is a blot upon popular government and free institutions.

While this was the opinion expressed by leading Liberals when they were in opposition, we find that, when they got into power they did not carry out their promises at all. The Senate still remains as it was. Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will pardon me, I desire to give my view with regard to the reform of the Senate. I am not like the Liberal leaders of those days, who believed that the Senate should be abolished. I am free to say, speaking for myself, that I believe that there should be an upper chamber. But I believe also that the Senate as it is to-day destroys its own usefulness by being so strongly partisan. It is for that reason that so many people believe that the Senate should be abolished as not being worth what it costs to the country. The question will naturally be asked: If you are going to retain the Senate, how will you prevent it from being partisan? My view is that senators should be chosen alternately from the two sides of politics. Of course, it would not do to commence that way now, because the Senate is one-sided, and to fill vacancies in the way I have suggested would leave it one sided still. My contention is that the Senate should be levelled up at the start. The weaker side, whether Liberal or Conservative, should be strengthened so as to level up the two sides, and then the system of alternate appointments should be inaugurated. I believe that if this rule were followed, the Senate would become a useful body as a part of our system of government.

There is another question which agitates the minds of many people at this time, and concerning which I wish to say a word or two. I had expected that the speech from the Throne would foreshadow some legislation on the subject concerning which I wish to say a few words—that manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes to the boys of our country. I hold that the government should take that matter in hand and remove this temptation from the path of the youth of this Dominion. If I remember correctly, when this question was discussed last session upon the motion of my old friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) to abolish the cigarette, some members of the cabinet said that if the matter were laid over to the present session, they would propose legislation to deal with this evil. I had a little experience only a few weeks ago. On my way home, I met, in the train, a youth of about thirteen years of age. He was on his way to Chicago. His wonderfully pale countenance and the far-off, dreamy look in his eyes attracted my attention. I thought he was nearly gone with tuberculosis. I drew him out in conversation in order to find out what was the matter with him. He told me that he was an inveterate smoker of cigarettes, and, apparently, not knowing the injury they were doing him, he actually bragged of the number he could smoke in twenty-four hours. That young man was going down hill as fast as he could, and it was the cigarette that was ruining him. Consider the fearful increase in the number of cigarettes smoked in the last ten years—ninety millions then and three hundred millions now. These are largely consumed by our boys. I have nothing to say against a cigar or a pipe, for I do not suppose they hurt any one. I must say I did hear of one person who was killed by smoking, but she died at eighty-five years of age, and had commenced smoking when quite young. But let me give a case, quoted from the 'Boston Post,' showing the effect of cigarette smoking:

> With his windpipe nearly closed from a contraction of the muscles, due, the doctors say, to his smoking too many cigarettes, John E. Wilson, eighteen, of 140 Castle street south end, was found in a semi-conscious and almost dying condition on the commons last night. That he did not strangle, the surgeons say, is due to the prompt action of the police, who, after finding him, made a record trip to the hospital with their charge.
> Yesterday, the doctors declare, Wilson admits having smoked cigarettes almost incessantly, with the result that the nicotine partially paralyzed the muscles of his throat. At the hospital the doctors applied restoratives, and later he was able to go to his home. Before he left, however, he was admonished to be more careful about the use of cigarettes if he wanted to continue to live.

Now that is one of the great evils we have to meet, and I think the government should try and cure it. I want now to say a word or two on another question which is still more serious, it is an evil that kills people right straight along without any warning, and that is the deadly level crossing on our railways. We learn from official information that forty-two persons were killed on our Canadian railways, and some twenty-four more were injured during nine months of last year. In my own neighbourhood there are two railways and five level crossings, and on every one of these crossings some person has been killed and under most melancholy circumstances. It seems to me most important that this government, or the Railway Commission, or both together should devise some plan to give better protection at these deadly level crossings. I believe the danger is greater on a country crossing than it is on a city crossing, because in cities the trains are slowing down a little, and there are people who see the trains coming and give warning to those passing over the road. But that is not so in the country, the trains rush through at a rapid rate, and there is no one to warn travellers of the approaching train. You will remember, perhaps, a sad case that happened a few months ago on a level crossing, where a young couple who had recently been married in Goderich were going to Hespeler. They were driving out on pleasure and happened to come up to a level crossing as a train was approaching. The train was coming rapidly, the horse became unmanageable and rushed ahead on to the level crossing, just in time for the train to strike the carriage and the young couple were killed. Here is what the jury said at the coroner's inquest:

Your jury finds from the evidence submitted that the late Frederick Reid, of Goderich, came to his death by being struck by a Grand Trunk train while crossing the Waterloo road on Friday, September 20, 1907. Also that on account of the great number of accidents at level crossings would recommend that the Railway Commission do consider the advisability of having them abolished.

This is certainly a very serious question, I do not know whether our new Minister of Railways and Canals will be able to solve it or not. At any rate, it is one that deserves the most earnest consideration on the part of the government and of the officials who have to do with the roads. My own view is that in the country perhaps an electric bell would save a great many lives, but not in all cases. In the case just mentioned where these two young people were killed, it would not have saved their lives, because the horse became unmanageable. It seems to me that the only remedy is either a subway or an overhead bridge. The state of Massachusetts is forcing the railways to provide either a subway or a bridge at every level crossing. It is too bad that people who are not employed on the railways at all, and who are travelling roads which they themselves perhaps have built, should be struck down and killed. I close, Mr. Speaker, by summarizing the points I have made. I hope that the government will take into consideration the establishment of free rural mail delivery; I hope they will level up the Senate and make things right there; I hope they will pass a measure to abolish the cigarette evil; and I hope they will take steps to make the level crossings safe upon our railways.

On motion of Mr. Crawford, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, December 6, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report, laid on the table last session, be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. ELSON.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a special motion last year, Mr. Speaker, that referred to the Public Accounts Committee the sub-target matter which was gone on with but was not concluded. Will this motion include that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This motion includes everything that was in the Public Accounts or the Auditor General's Report last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but there was a special reference of the papers that were brought down on the sub-target business, and a special resolution was passed by parliament referring them to the Public Accounts Committee. They went back further than last year's Public Accounts and last year's Auditor General's Report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say as to that. I will have to look into it. I made this motion in consequence of an understanding with the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have that included in this motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, I will have to look into it.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House has appointed Messieurs Aylesworth, Bergeron, Bristol, Brodeur, Calvert, Daniel, Foster, Grant, Knowles, Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lemieux, Monk, Pardee, Pugsley, Smith, (Nanaimo), a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the House of Commons are concerned as memon behalf of the House of Commons as members of a joint committee of both Houses on the Library.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament, and that the members of the Select Standing Committee on Printing, viz.: Messieurs Bergeron, Bristol, Cyr, Dyment, Gervais, Henderson, Hughes (Victoria), Johnston, Lavergne (Drummond & Arthabaska), Logan, Maclean (South York), Macpherson, McColl, Martin (Montreal, St.

Mary's), Oliver, Pardee, Parmelee, Roche (Marquette), Ross (Yale--Cariboo), Smith (Oxford), Smith (Wentworth), Taylor, Tisdale and Verville, will act as members on the part of this House on the said Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 12) to amend the Act respecting Shipping in Canada. He said : Mr. Speaker, I may say that the purpose of this amendment is, first, to increase the limits of what is defined as our coast trade and, secondly, to increase the tonnage of vessels on which certificated masters and mates are required in the home or coasting trade. The amendments proposed, I admit, are debatable and perhaps open to some specific objection. On the second reading of the Bill I will move that it be referred to a select committee unless in the meantime the motion of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) for the appointment of a select standing committee on fisheries is passed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

LOANS AND OVERDRAFTS, 1906-1907.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What disposition was made of the Dominion loan, $9,376,386, falling due May 1, 1907?
2. What amounts have been borrowed by the government since July 1, 1906, from what sources, and upon what terms?
3. What overdrafts, if any, have been current since July 1, 1906, at what banks and at what rates ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. Renewed at same rate of interest for four years to 1st May, 1911, with option until 30th April, 1910, of converting into Dominion government three per cent's due 1938 at the rate of £105 of three per cent for each £100 of four per cent.

2. £250,000 1st November, 1906, on security of treasury bills at four and five-eight per cent for six months through the Bank of Montreal, London. These bills were redeemed 1st May, 1907.

£500,000 17th August, 1907, on security of treasury Bills at four and a half per cent for one year through the Bank of Montreal, London.

3. There were no overdrafts in the banks in Canada. The Dominion government account with the Bank of Montreal, London, their financial agents, has been overdrawn on current account from time to time as has been usual, and such overdrafts have been covered in course by remittances from this side or by treasury bills where such have been issued. According to the last account received our overdraft in London is £301,619-5-1. The arrangement respecting such overdrafts is that they bear the current Bank of England rate, whatever it may be.

TEMPORARY LOANS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What is the total amount of the temporary loans of the government at present ?
2. What rate of interest do these loans bear ?
3. What temporary loans have been entered into by the government since July 1, 1907?

2. On the security of treasury bills for one year at 4½ per cent.
3. The above £500,000.
4. The loan has been obtained through the Bank of Montreal in London. On that portion which the bank itself holds the rate is as above stated. On that portion which is discounted outside of the Bank of Montreal the discount is at the same rate with the addition of ⅛ per cent to the Bank of Montreal in accordance with the agreement respecting the management of our financial business in London.

TEMPORARY LOANS SINCE OCTOBER, 1906.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

1. What temporary loans have been made by the government since October 31, 1906, and at what rate of interest?
2. Which, if any, of said loans are still outstanding and unpaid?
3. What rate of interest has been paid, or payable, on each of said loans, since they were made respectively?

2. The above £500,000 is outstanding and will not mature until August 17th, 1908.

3. No other temporary loan has been made.

DEBTS FALLING DUE SINCE OCTOBER, 1906.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

1. What portions of the debt of Canada have fallen due since October 31, 1906, and how has such maturing indebtedness been met?

1-2. Four per cent loan of 1876 due November 1st, 1906, for £2,500,000 against which Sinking Fund to the amount of £658,867-8-4 was held leaving a balance of £1,841,132-11-8 to be provided for. The whole was redeemed.

Three and a half per cent currency debentures for $500,000 originally issued on 1st December, 1891, matured 1st December, 1906. and were paid off on presentation.

Four per cent loan of 1874, extended to 1st May, 1907, for £1,926,654-15-11 was renewed through underwriting, as in the case of the previous extension, at the same rate of interest for a period of four years with the option until 30th April, 1910, of converting into Dominion government 3 per cent stock due 1938 at the rate of £105 of 3 per cent for each £100 of 4 per cent.

DEBT MATURING, 1908.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked :

2. The matter has been the subject of communication from time to time with our financial agents in London. In view of the unfavourable condition of the money market, it has not been deemed expedient to make any definite arrangement at present. The subject, however, is receiving every consideration.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

What amount is paid each province under the present agreement, and the amounts paid previously?

Mr. FIELDING.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. JOHN CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in being able to congratulate at least one member of the opposition for the manner in which he has addressed this House, and I therefore tender my congratulations to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Elson) who has preceded me in this debate. In his presentation of his case the hon. gentleman Mr. Elson) was calm and dignified, and I think it would add to the dignity of the House if some other gentlemen on his side followed his example. I also have much pleasure in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address who spoke with such eloquence and such ability. The hon. gentleman from East Middlesex (Mr. Elson) admits that we have prosperity in this country, but he would try to make us believe that the government of the day has nothing to do with the prosperity which surrounds us. The hon. gentleman thinks that Providence has had more to do with our success than any thing else, but in my experience I have found that Providence was of very little use to me or to the people I have had to deal with. Providence is of course all right in a way, but my experience is that where success and prosperity exists, it is to be found among the people who help themselves, and unless people help themselves and use energy and effort, Providence I think plays a very little part. Our Conservative friends were in control of the affairs of this country for eighteen years, during which time they had just as many favours from Providence as the Liberal party have had. They had as good conditions in respect of climate, soil and everything else that our Liberal friends have had since they came into power; but owing to their lack of energy, foresight and business ability, they failed to realize the result for which the party in power to-day deserves so much credit, that is, prosperity on every hand. Some of the speakers who have preceded me have taken exception to the speech from the Throne on the ground that it is an empty basket. I do not agree with these hon. gentlemen in that regard; I think it is a most full basket, and it contains a great deal that suggests thought. Every clause in it contains something that is worthy of consideration by the people of this country. In this connection, I think it would not be out of place to refer to some of the speeches from the Throne delivered to parliament on previous occasions when our Conservative friends were in power; and the people of this country would do well to compare the conditions described in those speeches with the conditions described in the speech from the Throne which is before this House to-day. If our present bill of fare is an empty basket, or not a very full one, the bills of fare that were presented to us in 1895 and 1896 were perfectly empty baskets. The speech from the Throne delivered to parliament in the session of 1895—I will read only the most important feature of that speech—after referring to the depression of trade that existed in the country, said:

> Although this has not resulted in any considerable decrease in the volume of our trade, yet, owing to low prices and recent reductions in and removal of taxation, it has been followed by a serious decrease in revenue derived from customs and excise. In order to produce equilibrium between revenue and expenditure for the coming year, it will be necessary to observe the greatest possible economy in the appropriations for the various branches of the public service.

I think you will find in that, Mr. Speaker, an entirely different tone from that of the speech now before the House. In 1896, with practically the same conditions of trade existing, and with the revenue of the country entirely inadequate, the Conservative government tried to excuse themselves with a statement of this kind in the speech from the Throne:

> You will be pleased to learn that the revenues of the country show a gradual and con-continuous increase, and that the promised equilibrium between income and expenditure on Consolidated Fund account for the current year bids fair to be realized.

In the speech now before the House, we find an entirely different condition of affairs described. It reads as follows:

> It gives me great pleasure to be able to congratulate you on the remarkable expansion of the trade of Canada with other countries, the total trade of the past year far exceeding that of any of its predecessors. A gratifying result of this expansion was that the revenue of the last fiscal period of nine months was more than sufficient to meet expenses on Consolidated Fund, National Transcontinental Railway, Capital and special outlays, all expenses of the Dominion of every kind, and leave a balance of over three million dollars to be applied in reduction of the public debt.

This describes an entirely different condition of affairs from that of the later years of the administration of our Conservative friends, and a condition of things that I am sure the people of Canada are proud of and desire to see continued. Now, Sir, I claim that this condition of affairs exists under decreased taxation. Our friends on the opposite side of this House claim that taxation in this country has increased. They claim that because the revenue in this country far exceeds that of previous years, that means an increase of taxation. Now, Sir, it is no more an increase of taxation than it would be for me, if I had one farm this year and another farm next year and another farm the year after that, to pay an increased tax on account of my increased holdings. Because of the increased business I was doing, I would naturally have an increased tax to pay. The same principle applies to the business of a country as to a man's own private business. We do not find any expressions in the speeches from the Throne, under the late government regarding the flood of immigration into this country. But we do find in the speech of to-day the following clause:

> The stream of immigrants coming to Canada continues to increase in volume, the year now drawing to a close showing a larger number than any preceding year. It is gratifying to observe the many coming from the British Isles.

In that connection there is no expression of opinion by our Conservative friends when they were in office regarding the inflow of immigration. It is very satisfactory indeed that we should be at present enjoying that influx of immigrants which we have been witnessing for some time, but I regret to notice that some of our hon. friends opposite are taking the position that the aid we are giving immigration should be lessened or discontinued. The position I take is that we should continue a vigorous immigration policy, if we are going to build up and increase the trade of this country. To do this we must get people into the country, for nothing has done so much for our development as the immigration policy of this government. That policy must be continued, and possibly, owing to the little stringency now being experienced, it will be wise for this government to use greater efforts in that direction. It would be wise for the government to double their energies in that respect. We have a vast country to develop. We have millions of acres which will be without any value until they are populated, and I would advise the government to use still greater energy than ever before in the direction of bringing in immigrants to fill up our untilled acres. In order to give you a little idea of the value of immigration, let me quote an estimate which was prepared and which I believe is authentic. We have had a considerable immigration from the United States, which possibly is the most valuable that comes to this country. In the year 1906, some 61,252 people came from the United States. To show you the value that they brought into the country, it is estimated that the value per capita of these 61,252 people was $809. Thus in cash and effects those people brought into Canada the sum of $49,586,138. That is the actual value in cash and effects brought in by American immigrants in one year. That is only the value for one year, but what must be the value of all the people who are settled on the lands of this country? That value cannot be figured out; it is untold. And what kind of people are they? I have a few extracts from an American official who was sent to this country to look into the immigration situation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Americans have been getting a little alarmed about the exodus to Canada. They consequently sent a gentleman, Mr. Charles N. Pepper, as special agent to look into the question. Here is what he said :—

The most important immigration to the Canadian Northwest is that from the United States. The movement began in 1898-9 when 12,000 persons crossed the border.

This was after our Liberal friends came into power.

During the early years of the movement the larger proportion of the settlers were native born Canadians——

What does that mean? It means that the Canadians, who were going from the country when our Conservative friends were in office, began to return.

—who had been living in the United States and who repatriated themselves, resumed their allegiance as British subjects if they had been naturalized in this country. Then followed groups of colonists such as the Mormons, who engaged in raising beet sugar in Southern Alberta, Russian Mennonites and other sects. European immigrants to the United States who had not yet become naturalized though in some instances they had taken out their first papers and finally all classes of American citizens, the majority of whom were native born. At present the trend of population to Canada may be said to be a general one based on individual rather than on collective association, though many groups are formed to establish themselves in a selected locality.

Then he goes on to describe the work our Canadian government is doing throughout the United States. The business way they advertise our country and establish agencies throughout the United States and other lands has created this flowing tide which has brought us such prosperity. Mr. Pepper goes on to say :—

According to the statistics of the Canadian customs houses, settlers' effects to the amount of $5,500,000 are annually admitted free. These include household goods, farm animals and agricultural implements of almost every description. In view of the liberal construction of the customs officials in interpreting the tariff revision, the probability is that the total valuation of goods thus withdrawn from the United States is nearer $10,000,000 than $5,000,000.

It is not only the value they actually bring into our country but the value they give us from year to year. As Mr. Pepper says in his report :—

Their superior knowledge and experience in practical farming. They not only do not have to be taught by official agents but their methods are valuable in showing the raw immigrants from Europe the best way to get results from the wheat lands.

The cash capital that they bring with them. Every arrival from the States is well supplied with money to buy land and to purchase the means of improving it. This creates an unusualy active market condition for pioneer communities. The majority of the American settlers insist on acquiring a full section instead of being content with a quarter-section which is allotted to homesteaders and which is more than the ordinary European immigrant is capable of handling.

You observe that Mr. Pepper considers that an American is practically equal to four European immigrants. A quarter-section is all that the ordinary European can farm, but an American can farm a whole section of land, educating, training and directing the European labour necessary to carry on his operations. I will not go into the details of his estimate, but I may say, generally, that he arrives at the conclusion that this western country is capable of producing 400,000,000 bushels of wheat annually in the near future, besides other products of various kinds. Now, I must say that, so far as the bill of fare for the present session is concerned, it is, beyond all comparison, better than that of twelve years ago. The next clause of the speech, to which I would refer, says :

The Dominion has been blessed by a long series of prosperous years,——

That is something that never happened while our Tory friends were in power——and, though at the present moment its business is being restricted by the financial stringency which prevails throughout the world, I feel assured that this unfavourable condition will be temporary and that the illimitable resources of Canada and the world-wide recognition of them give us ample guarantee of continued material progress.

As to this alleged money stringency, I hold that, owing to the solidity of our Canadian banking and financial institutions, and owing to our general conditions, we need not be afraid for the financial future of our country. I am satisfied that there is no real stringency in the money market. There may be some tightness for different reasons ; there may not be the free money for extravagant speculation that there was in the past few years ; but, according to my experience, there is enough money for all legitimate business. I am interested in two or three concerns that use more or less money every year, and I can say that, in our relations with the banks, we have never had as liberal treatment or as easy money as during the present year. In one case, we asked for certain lines of accommodation. But, owing to the increased trade, we were forced to overdraw the lines that we were allowed ; and, without any hesitation, the banks provided us with all the money we wanted.

There is more or less discussion in the country on the movement of the wheat crop of the west. There seems to be an impression abroad that there has not been sufficient funds for the moving of the western crop. That may be right in a certain sense. On the other hand, I think there is an easy explanation of the situation. In conversation, I have learned the opinion of some of our western grain men who ought to know what they are talking about. They told me they were satisfied there was plenty of money in Canada, but it was not in the proper channels. In Winnipeg, the financial centre of the western country and the headquarters of the grain trade, the condition prevailing up to recently was that two or three banks have had all the grain accounts. But the Dominion bank, which is the principal institution of this group, and the others, seem to have found themselves not quite in a situation to handle the trade this year as readily as before. One reason for this may have been that it took more money by half to handle the same quantity of grain this year than last year, owing to the increase of value. Whatever may have been the reason, these two or three banking institutions found that they were not able to meet the situation. And, when our grain companies went to the other banks to seek relief and to secure the means of handling their business, these other banks told them : We have not had any of your business in the past ; we have not had any profits from you ; and we have other demands for all the money that we have available ; consequently, we do not want any of your business at present. So they practically sat back in their chairs, and laughed at the situation. It was not a question of the quantity of money at all. The whole question, so far as Canada is concerned, I believe, is to get the money into the proper channels.

Take, for example, the district in which I live—and the conditions with us, I believe are the same as for two-thirds of the province of Manitoba. Judging from these conditions, I see no reason whatever to agree with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt who declared that we had before us only blue ruin and soup kitchens. In my district, and in the province of Manitoba generally, the conditions are the very opposite to this. I venture to say that this year has been the most prosperous and profitable year Manitoba has ever known. I have been in that country about thirty years—I think I have grown something over thirty crops myself—and I know that this year's crop is the most profitable we ever produced. Just let me show you where we are at. I know a farmer living close to where I live, who received for a carload of oats, delivered about a mile and a half from his own door, $1,050. I know farmer after farmer who has produced stuff this year which, counted at current prices, would represent a larger sum than the value he puts on his whole farm. Under these conditions, what can we have but prosperity ?

I propose to give you a few facts showing the production of at least some portions of this country and the possibilities. This year was an exceptional year, and for a long time we were apparently up against the worst conditions. Nevertheless, the farmers of that country have never got better returns than they did this year. The poor farmer had reasonable returns, and the good farmers had the best returns they ever had in their history. Land values there today are better than they ever were before. I can mention a number of sales in the last few days that I know of personally where the farmers sold their farms and quarter sections at very high prices. A farm I had cropped myself this year, without any improvements except the breaking, sold for $4,500 in cash, that is a quarter-section of land. Another farm I was interested in jointly with another party, that produced some 2,500 bushels of wheat worth $1 a bushel, 800 bushels of barley, and I do not remember how many oats and other feeds, after these crops were taken off, sold for $3,300. Another quarter-section a few miles from where I live was sold for $6,000; another one for $4,000. These were after the crops were taken off and with just a few farm buildings. This shows, I think, a very prosperous condition of affairs. I have here a few particulars as to what was produced on some of the quarter-sections, and I will give a few instances. The clipping is from the Gladstone 'Age' :

Albert Clayton, two miles south of Gladstone, has taken in $3,800 for the wheat that grew on a quarter-section this year. So nobody can find fault with the natural richness of Westbourne soil.

J. C., 18, 16, 15 w. 1st, 2,500 wheat number two grade, besides oats and barley, also sheaves.

Wm. Greentree, 30, 15, 15, w. 1st, 110 acres at 23 bushels sold at 96 cents.

H. H. Riley, 15, 16 w. 1st, 21 bushels over 225 acres sold at $1.06½ to $1.02 at Eden station.

T. C. Harris, 35, 15, 16 w. 1st, 16 bushels to acre, over 340 acres, 5,200 bushels; sold at $1. Had 3,000 bushels of barley from 80 acres sown last week in June.

G. F. Elsey, 10, 14, 15 w. 1st, 215 acres wheat threshed, 3,680 bushels wheat, 1,700 bushels to acre, sold three cars at $1 a bushel.

Smith Brothers, Eden, 300 acres, 23 bushels to acre, 6,900 bushels, sold three cars at 95 cents, $1.01 to $1.02.

These facts show that in that section of country, at least, there is no immediate prospect of soup kitchens. That condition of affairs applies to two-thirds of the province of Manitoba and to the whole of my division, which is in the centre of Manitoba, I might say the hub of Canada. I have another clipping here from a paper showing that a short time ago a parcel of land bought for $1,000, was afterwards sold for $1,500, and the most recent sale of that tract of land was $20,000. These facts show that the western part of the country is in a very prosperous condition. If we continue the present vigorous immigration policy and bring people into this country who will develop the undeveloped portions of it, the prosperous conditions of the present will continue and expand. Of course it is not all milk and honey. We have our little troubles and our little grievances in that western country. We have had these big yields, and we have had, as I said, sufficient money for all purposes. So far as the purchasing of grain was concerned in that country, there has never been any money stringency at all. When farmers came on the streets of Portage la Prairie, Neepawa or Gladstone, so far as I have heard, and were prepared to sell their wheat and get their cash tickets, they could get the cash for it right on the spot. Any man who loaded his wheat in a car, which hundreds of them did, if he was wise enough to keep control of his own position, and keep the bill of lading and have it made out shipped to his own order, could get an advance of 75 cents per bushel on that wheat; on a thousand bushel car he could get $750 of an advance, and the balance when the return was received from Fort William.

But we have had a stringency, in a sense, and we have a grievance, I think, to-day, and a complaint to make. Some of our farmers perhaps were not as wise as they might have been, and were not up to business deals as much as they ought to have been. We had a short time ago very high prices offered for wheat. I think that within twelve or fifteen miles from the town in which I live there was possibly three or four, or five hundred thousand bushels sold under contract at $1, $1.01, $1.03, $1.05 or $1.06 a bushel. The farmer making his deal for that wheat seemingly never thought of anything else but getting a big price. The contracts read that he would be paid along the lines of his return from Fort William when the wheat was shipped to Fort William at a certain time, possibly in November or December. He never thought where he would be in so far as finances were concerned and these contracts did not provide for any advances or anything of that kind in connection with his wheat. Therefore we find that we are up against this situation; we find to-day that there are hundreds of farmers who sold their wheat in that way who have not received a dollar for that wheat up to the present time for the reason that our transportation is in such an outrageous condition that the wheat has not arrived at Fort William yet. I have proof of that condition in my pocket here to-day. I have shipped wheat myself; I have a number of cars in transit at the present moment. I shipped wheat in my own district on the 21st October and up to Tuesday—the last report I had from home—that wheat had not arrived at Fort William and until the wheat arrives at Fort William people who sell under these contracts are not able to realize a dollar on it. On that account we are tied up in a way we ought not to be in so far as money is concerned. Those people are simply hard up; they are up against it, not because money is tight, but because of the conditions of transportation in that country. Just imagine it taking a month to move wheat one hundred and sixteen miles. That does not apply to one car only, but to hundreds of cars and that is the position we are up against to-day. Talk about rural mail delivery, talk about what you like, but there is nothing which so affects the welfare of the western farmer to-day as does the question of transportation. We remember the situation which existed last winter but there are parts of the country which are in as bad a condition to-day as we were a year ago with regard to transportation. Last winter there was the excuse that the snow fall was so great as to interfere with the movement of freight, but there has been no snow this year. I will mention a few facts which illustrate the situation. In the town from which I come a buyer told me that he believed there were sixty cars of wheat standing at our own station, some of which had stood there for a month and had never been moved. The siding next to our town was filled with loaded cars of wheat and barley. At one time there was not a car moved in three weeks. I have four cars of wheat at one point and I am at the expense of storing it in the elevator. I intended to ship it direct, but I could not get cars to load it and I could not get it moved. At another point I had two cars of wheat in the elevator for over a month and not a car to be had. Hundreds of cars are on order but no cars available and, seemingly, even if they do get cars, they do not move the wheat out—a terrible condition. That is one of the great factors in making money tight in our part of the country. I think that some stringent means should be resorted to in order to remedy that situation. I hope some action will be taken but there is nothing at the present time that has impeded our progress so much as the question of transportation. That will be an important factor, no doubt, for some time in that western country.

We have, in the speech from the Throne references to several other matters that possibly deserve some consideration. There is the labour question. The declaration is contained in the speech that there is a difficulty in obtaining labour and material at a time of great business activity. Some of the hon. members opposite have taken the position that there is a surplus of labour in this country at the present time. I must take exception to that statement. I am satisfied that, in so far as this whole country is concerned, there is no surplus of labour. There may be a surplus at this little point or that little point, but throughout the whole country, if the labour is properly distributed, I am sure there is no surplus. Our farmers out in the west, during the whole season, have been short of help. In the fall the threshing outfits in our part of the country could not get half enough help. Threshing outfits that could thresh 3,000 or 2,500 bushels a day, for want of help, were running short handed and they were only threshing 1,000 or 1,500 bushels a day. The day before I left there was not one available man in the district from which I come that could be hired for love or money and hundreds of men wanted to go back into the bush to chop wood. North of where I live there is a great quantity of timber. The people were going into the bush there to take out wood, and it is very necessary in the west that there should be a fair supply of wood. They pay from $1 to $1.50 a day for men to go out and cut wood and there is not a man to be had for other work. With respect to the city of Winnipeg I noticed a statement in a paper the other day—and I have the clipping here—that every man who was willing to go out and work was being employed as fast as he would agree and he could leave the city of Winnipeg at almost a moment's notice if he were prepared to go. They were paying from $20 to $30 a month and board which represents possibly about $2 a day. Seemingly, in so far as that report is concerned, there was not a sufficient supply to meet the demand; in fact, in some lines of axemen there was a great shortage. With regard to the supply of tie makers or good axemen the situation was this:

> Two hundred tie makers are wanted in the worst way by the companies interested, but up to the present the demand has not been met. An examination of the situation scarcely bore out the statement literally—— —that were made that there were more men than there was employment for.

In all the local offices where contracts were being made for labour, men were being hired in large numbers and it was clear that any able-bodied man could make a contract within a few minutes, and could leave the city for the place of his work at any time. In order to secure employment, however, the applicant must be willing to leave the city and he must be ready to accept smaller wages than have prevailed during the past few years.

There are some slight reductions in the wages of bush men, but there is any amount of employment and the wages are still good.

In the speech from the Throne I find that there is a reference made to the Japanese agitation. As to that question I am quite satisfied. This is another indication of the progress and advantages of Canada. These Japanese are anxious to come here and make money as they possibly think they can make it here more quickly than in other places. I am satisfied that the Japanese difficulty will be adjusted satisfactorily to all. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which has received so much from Canada is as loyal as it ought to be to the interests of the Dominion, then they can do a great deal to settle the Japanese question because they stand charged with being a party to making contracts for bringing the Japanese into this country by thousands. I have a great respect for the Japanese people; they are one of the progressive nations of the world to-day. I believe they are a reasonable and a clever people and their reasonableness combined with the ability and integrity and foresight of the leader of the government will bring about a happy solution of the difficulty. But where do we find the Conservative party on this question? I have before me a report of the Vancouver speech of the leader of the opposition and in it we see the same indefiniteness in regard to this matter as with regard to other questions of public policy. I have before me the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' one of the strongest Conservative papers of Canada, and it reports the speech of the leader of the opposition under big head lines:

> Mr. Borden's emphatic demand for a white Canada.

Let us see what his demand is. He says:

> I am willing to agree with the people of the west that if present conditions continue the immigration from China and Japan will mean the driving out of the white people from British Columbia. The question is whether British Columbia in future shall be dominated by the subjects of the Mikado or by Canadians. But——

The word 'but' comes in.

> But Britain has made a treaty with Japan, a powerful nation, and the spirit of this treaty must be carried out.

I would like to appeal to our British Columbia friends who are here; I would ask the people of British Columbia what encouragement they may hope for from such a speech by the leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman is always ready to make people believe that he is going to do something great and grand but in the end he has nothing to offer but indefiniteness. The hon. gentleman continued to say :

So let us have a due sense of the imperial as well as the Canadian rights.

Well, perhaps that is a very wise statement. A great many people in Canada have got cold feet in connection with this yellow scare and they have gone beyond all reasonable limits and have jumped at a conclusion before giving the question due consideration. And to these people I would commend the language of the leader of the opposition who says that in the end we must submit to the imperial authorities, which is of course sound constitutional doctrine. Mr. Borden continued to say :

Let us consider the rights of a great nation like Japan and her relation to trade and commerce, and while recognizing our duty to the empire we maintain that Canada must be accorded free judgment; just as free as that enjoyed by the other dependencies of the empire.

I think the people of British Columbia will see from this language that if ever the Conservatives got into power, so far as the leader of that party is concerned their position with respect to the Japanese immigration would not be any better. But let us compare the language of the leader of the opposition with the words of his ablest lieutenant in this House. The Hon. George E. Foster spoke in Toronto on November 7, and the 'Mail and Empire' says :

Dealing with the immigration question, Mr. Foster advocated the admission of all those with the elements of good citizenship and expressed hope that the day would never come when Canada would shut her doors to desirable citizens, because their hair was of a certain colour or because they held certain beliefs or had certain blood in their veins.

Here we have the great lieutenant of the leader of the opposition taking different ground from his leader. In view of that difference of opinion among the members of the Conservative party what hope can our friends in British Columbia have that even if the Conservative party came to power there would be any consolation to them in that event.

The speech from the Throne refers to one regrettable incident, namely the collapse of the Quebec bridge. That sad event is to be regretted for many reasons not only because of the loss of life and the loss of money, but the great delay that will be entailed to the progress of transportation. It is gratifying to know that in connection with our postal system there has been a surplus in the Post Office Department, and that is so different from anything that ever happened during the Conservative regime that it forms a striking contrast. As to telegraphs and telephones and railways, I have my own particular ideas, which may not agree with the opinions of some other people.

In the town from which I come we have a certain amount of municipal ownership and operation, but I have never seen yet where the people were making any great profit out of their municipal undertakings. Under the conditions that exist in this country at the present time I do not think that the question of the government ownership and operation of railways, and possibly I might say also telegraphs and telephones, is worthy of consideration. I believe that a better system can be worked out. If we can couple private enterprise with government control, I am satisfied that the results will be much more satisfactory and profitable to the people of this country than any other system. Our friends opposite accuse us of graft and corruption. I am satisfied that if the railway business and the telephone business of this country were under the control of the government, the opportunities for making charges of that kind would be a thousand times greater than they are to-day. If we have the right to control private enterprise and to require a certain kind of service to be given at a certain price, I think that is the best arrangement that can be worked out. If it is not possible for us through a commission to work out that arrangement to the advantage of the people, I am sure that it will be impossible for us to manage the whole machine to the advantage of the people. The great opportunity of making a success of government ownership and operation of railways in this country was lost when our Conservative friends handed over the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

In the bill of fare presented to the House we are promised some amendments to our election law. If there is one thing that is pleasing to me more than another, it is the promise of some legislation along that line. Every session since I have had the pleasure of being in this House, I have spoken on the subject of the election law and its application of the province of Manitoba. We in that province are up against a condition of things that should not be allowed to exist one day longer than is possible. We hear that Whitney is going to purify elections in Ontario, that the Roblin government in the province of Manitoba is a pure government, and that the Tory party is going to purify elections throughout Canada. Any person who takes any stock in declarations of that kind cannot be in his right senses. The idea that the government of Manitoba will purify elections is so far from the fact, in so far as my experience is concerned—and I have been mixed up in elections in the province of Manitoba for the last twenty years—that I cannot possibly understand it. The only people I know of who have been convicted by the courts of election offences are Tories; the only members of parliament who have been unseated for corruption in Manitoba are Tories; the only ballot-boxes ever burned in the province of Manitoba were burned by Tories; the only ballot stuffing I ever heard of in the province of Manitoba was done by Tories. Then what can we expect from the Roblin government in the way of purifying elections? I leave you, Mr. Speaker, to form your own opinion. In what position do we stand in the province of Manitoba to-day? We are in this position, that if a Liberal appeals to a justice of the peace with certain information in regard to elections, the partisan justice of the peace refuses to receive the information. That has been done. Now, what is going to happen in Ontario? Whitney, I understand, has dismissed every justice of the peace who was in existence when he came to office, and he has no doubt appointed in their places partisans, who will not in my opinion give any Liberal any quarter, but will act in the same way as the partisan justices of the peace in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. W. JACKSON (West Elgin). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did I understand him to say that the present government of Ontario had dismissed every justice of the peace in that province?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my information.

Mr. W. JACKSON. I have to say that that is not correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, I will accept the hon. gentleman's statement in that regard, but I am still of the belief that every justice of the peace who would not submit to the dictates of Whitney in Ontario was dismissed.

Mr. W. JACKSON. The strongest Liberals in Ontario were left on the magisterial bench.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, that does not make much difference. We have had an experience in Manitoba of the operation of our election laws during the past few years that we will not go through again, and I wish to tell the hon. the leader of the House to-day that unless there is a change in the election laws he need not expect a Liberal candidate in that province. It is all right for a Tory there to do almost anything, but it is all wrong for a Liberal to do the slightest thing. I have here the voters' list of the polling division near where I live. There are two lines on it, a red and a black line. If a Liberal draws a red line on that list he is persecuted and prosecuted by the Manitoba authorities. All the judicial power in the province has been used against Liberals for using that red line. There is a black line right through the list for the same purpose. The Tories used the black line. They struck a hundred names off the list under instructions, I am told, of the Attorney General of Manitoba, and every one of them goes scot free, but if a Liberal does it he is persecuted and prosecuted to the limit. That is the condition we are up against in Manitoba. We have to use the provincial voters' list in that province, and owing to the fact that the polling divisions and boundaries do not coincide with those of the Dominion districts, it is necessary to make some changes in the voters' list. In the list I have in my hand there is a polling division and there are about sixty names on the list who do not belong to my division. To get a list of that poling division it is necessary to do that kind of work because the polling divisions arranged for by the provincial authorities overlapped. The provincial authorities in Manitoba have undertaken to go after the Liberals for doing just what they did themselves. If they had any excuse for doing what they did in their own voters' list, it would be different. Here is a list of voters certified to by a judge. Those were entirely taken off the list, I understand, through instruction of the attorney general of that province. And under the certificate of Judge Walker there is a list of voters in a certain polling division in Manitoba put on the list and certified to by Judge Walker, of Winnipeg, but under the instructions of the Attorney General, Mr. Campbell, they were all taken off and every one disfranchised.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the reason?

Mr. CRAWFORD. We will come to that.

Mr. BENNETT. Then there was no reason?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, no valid reason. They were just simply disfranchised. Here is an official list of the district of Rockwood in Manitoba. On that first polling division they struck off with this black line 90 names and only left on some 45. If a Grit had done that he would have been put in the penitentiary, if the Tories could have convicted him, but because it is done under instructions of the Tory party, every man goes scot free. If you apply to a justice of the peace the chances are you are turned down and have no recourse.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why do you not lay an information against some of the people and have them prosecuted?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I know of men who went to a justice of the peace and he would not take the information.

Mr. LANCASTER. In those cases?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not in those, but in others.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then lay the information in those cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If there was any excuse for the authorities in Manitoba resorting to these means, I would possibly not consider it so much of a grievance. But take their Acts of Parliament and what do you find? We find that they rearranged the polling divisions. In chapter II. of the statutes of 1907, the Election Division Act of 1907, they provide for a redistribution of certain electoral divisions. They take from one electoral division and add to another, but they failed to make the necessary provisions for the correction of the voters' list. On this voters' list before me, certified to as an official list, they struck off some 200 names and added, after the certificate of the revising judge, some 235 names. That is a sample of how things are conducted in Manitoba.

Mr. BENNETT. Were they struck off in open court?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No court; they simply did it on the side and it was all right.

Mr. BENNETT. Has there been a session of the local legislature in Manitoba since this so-called outrage was committed and was it brought up in the House by the hon. gentleman's friends?

Mr. CRAWFORD. This was done since the last session of the local House, but they had just a few days before redistributed the province and they made special provisions for taking care of the list in the city of Winnipeg. But in the rural district they failed to take any notice and took no power to themselves for this kind of work. To show how far they go, let me point out that in order to let some of their friends down easy they passed a special Act, chapter 13, which placed the names of certain persons on the list of electors:

> Whereas the persons hereinafter named were on the thirtieth day of May, 1906, entitled to be registered, under the Manitoba Election Act and its amendments, as electors of the Electoral Division of Kildonan and St. Andrews, on the list of polling subdivision No. 13 of said electoral division, and personal applications by each of them were made to the registration clerk acting at said polling subdivision on said date for such registration, which applications were refused.

Here is a registration clerk who violated his oath of office by refusing to put in this one polling division a certain number of electors on the list, and to let him down easy, instead of prosecuting him, as they would have done were he a Liberal, they went to work, and to satisfy a few electors, passed this special Act. That is quite a different procedure altogether to anything we have ever heard of before, and, of course, quite contrary to any treatment that has been extended to the Liberals of Manitoba by our provincial authorities in the revision of the Dominion lists. So far as right election methods are concerned, possibly we are as pure as the people of the east. But let me tell my Liberal friends here that we have known individuals to be imported from the province of Ontario to instruct our people in the west. One individual particularly came up and organized a school to teach our men how to do their work. And what kind of work? Ballot-switching and ballot-box stuffing. And you have this kind of people to-day, and, in the Tory party you must expect more or less work of that kind. I think they still have the people in Ontario who do that kind of work. Look out for them. Do not think that under Whitney or anybody else the Tories are going to give you clean election. They do not expect to run pure elections. A few of them may, on the side, dispute that position, but that does not matter. I speak according to what my experience has been. This man who organized the school in our country to instruct our innocent western people—and some of them got caught—he was recommended to my opponent in the late election as having been 'a good man in North Bruce.'

Now, I notice something else in the speech from the Throne that is very pleasing to me. We are promised a Bill in connection with the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. From what I know of the government, and of the liberal treatment they have given the new provinces in the west, I have every confidence that Manitoba will be liberally dealt with. There is not only the question of extension of boundaries but also the question of subsidies. Of course, as we grow bigger, our need of money grows greater. I am glad to be able to say that we expect to get matters of that kind adjusted, and that in the near future. One of the hon. gentlemen who preceded me in this debate, advocated certain railway legislation. I would agree with him, except that I think he does not go quite far enough. There are some matters in connection with our railways that require consideration at an early day. One of these is the question of the cattle-guards and fencing of the railways. Many cattle have been killed in our western country as a result of the poor cattle-guards—they are simply no guards at all. Losses are caused by the railways in other ways also, yet the laws seem to be in such shape that it is almost impossible for an individual to get justice from a corporation. I have had some personal experience and I believe that the general conclusion is that it is better for the private individual who has not a large amount at stake to allow losses of this kind to go rather than fight the matter in the courts. I think that legislation should be passed which would make it cheaper and easier for people to demand and secure fair treatment from the corporations.

I believe that some legislation is required also in connection with our financial institutions. While I have found the banks quite liberal at most times, at other times it has been unsafe for business men to have anything to do with them. I have known bank managers to actually canvass for business. They have been ready to carry their accounts along for a certain length of time, but, as soon as some little panic arose, or there was a change of policy at the head office, the money was called in, and men in good business standing were closed out without due consideration. Oftentimes, business men with assets double their liabilities have been closed out just because of some special crazy move on the part of the bank. In the city of Winnipeg the other day a business man with a surplus of good mercantile assets, just because he could not raise at once a certain sum of money, had his stock sold out at twenty-five cents on the dollar. That is something that the people of this country should not have to submit to. When a man's assets are sufficient he should be given a reasonable time to gather himself together, and not forced to sacrifice his holdings. I have been up against it myself in some of my dealings. The bank is most liberal at the start, perhaps even canvassing and encouraging a man to go into a certain line of business. But, just at the time when the assistance of the bank is most needed, the business is closed down upon without reason. A law should be passed which will prevent the banks from taking advantage in that way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up more time than I intended——

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAWFORD. However, most of the subjects I have discussed will come up later in the session, and then if our friends opposite want another dose we may be able to give it to them. And we may go even further than we have gone to-day in showing up the inconsistencies of the Tory party.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speech of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). Judging by his remarks, he seems to be one of the most self-satisfied men I have heard recently. He talks about the financial condition of affairs in this country as perfectly satisfactory, I suppose from his own point of view; then he turns round and winds up his speech by telling us about some large manufacturing or other interests in his county having been sacrified, and are only able to pay 25 cents on the dollar. If you can make anything out of these two statements satisfactory to the country, I cannot. He talks about pure elections in Manitoba, and warns the people of Ontario against the machinations of Tory politicians. Why did he not tell us about 700 names that were struck off by the thin red line? Why did he not tell us about the Prince Albert frauds? Instead of warning the Conservative people of Ontario, he would do well to warn the people on his own side of politics, because when you come to investigate corruption in the province of Ontario, you will find that it has been almost entirely practised by the Liberal party, while within the past number of years, not one action of corruption has been brought home against the Conservative party. He tells us that there are no men out of work in the Northwest, that men are wanted all over. Well, I pick up the Manitoba 'Free Press,' and when I look down the want advertisements what do I find? You would expect to see advertisements of men wanted, but instead of that I see 'Wanted, husbands for marriageable ladies,' 'wanted, young men to assist in a dining-room,' wanted for an amateur production of a leading Scotch play.' I look down column after column, but I do not find any want advertisements. Turning over to the situations wanted, the hon. gentleman can find column after column in that paper where men are anxiously asking for employment.

An hon. MEMBER. What paper is that?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Manitoba 'Free Press' of December 4. Of course, the hon. gentleman took a great deal of time to tell us about the wonderful prosperity, but he cannot point to a single piece of legislation this government has placed upon the statute-books that has had anything to do with bringing about this prosperity. Time and again the leader of the opposition has asked the Prime Minister to mention one piece of legislation placed upon the statute-books since this government came into power, that has been instrumental in bringing about the present prosperity. It cannot be done. The hon. gentleman says he is satisfied with the American immigrants coming into this country. No man is more pleased and glad than I am to know that a great many intelligent Americans are coming over from the United States to become citizens of our Dominion. But when you come to look at the immigrants being brought in from foreign countries across the water, and the careless manner in which they are being let in, you cannot help feeling that things are going wrong, and it is time a stop was put to it. I would like the hon. gentleman to go to the frontier at Niagara, or come with me up to Port Huron, and he will see hundreds of immigrants turned back each year because the United States will not allow them into that country. Those immigrants come with their passages paid and their tickets practically all marked through to the United States, but they are turned back at the frontier because they are unfit, and so become citizens of this country. What we want in Canada to-day is quality, not quantity. He tells us about postal arrangements and says he is perfectly satisfied with them, that he has no need for rural free delivery. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman sits in his office in Portage la Prairie and has his mail brought into him every morning, judging from the easy street in which he gives us to understand that he lives on at the present time. He talks about public ownership. Why did not the hon. gentleman tell us that right in the town where he lives the electric light plant and telephone system are owned and controlled by the city of Portage la Prairie, and is one of the most successful public ownership concerns that you will find in the country? I have no time to take up any further subjects touched by the hon. gentleman.

I listened attentively to the speech from the Throne in recent years, it contains very little progressive legislation. Each successive speech from the Throne contains more and more indications of a dead and dying parliament. It is the same old story of a government dying at the top and drying up, becoming time servers instead of live and progressive men introducing legislation to meet the needs of the people and the demands of a clamouring public. I only intend to-day to deal with one important piece of legislation mentioned in the speech from the Throne, and which has been before this government for the past five years, though the proposition has received nothing but abuse and discouragement from them. I refer to rural free mail delivery to farmers in the rural districts, coupled with government control and management of telephone and telegraphs. I put these three services together, because I believe that the day is at hand when no progressive government will allow either the telephone or the telegraph to hamper trade and compel persons, professional men, to subscribe for two telephones where one would do the work more expeditiously and more economically. Were the telephone and telegraph under government control and management, and conducted in a businesslike manner under such civil service reform as the leader of the opposition has proposed, a twenty-five cent business message would be delivered in Canada for twelve cents, as t is delivered in Great Britain; and a fifty cent message would be delivered for half the present price, and telephone and telegraph messages would be delivered throughout this land to the people for half what they have to pay to-day. I will not give statistics with regard to these two services. Those of us who have read and heard the evidence given before the Telephone Committee some years ago must admit that it was sufficient to prove to any sane man that the nationalization of these two important services would be one of the greatest boons to the people of Canada. Let me give you one illustration. In the township of Bosanquet, in the county I have the honour to represent, we have two telephone systems. One of them is the people's telephone system, with some hundreds of subscribers. These people had been paying only $3 per annum for the use of the telephone. Last year they were asked for $6 per annum, $3 of the $6 to be set aside as a fund for emergencies. They have only used some 9 per cent out of that fund. But on the other hand, I will take you to that same township and show you where the Bell Telephone Company have gone in and where the farmers are paying $20 for the use of the Bell telephone system. They are inconvenienced in the same way by local calls and rings as the People's Telephone. This is only one of the thousands of instances which might be given in different parts of our country. This is not as it should be and the remedy is in the hands of this government. Now, just the other day we had a speech from the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and I am sorry he is not in his seat because I wish to refer directly to him and to the statements which he made in regard to the ownership of telegraph and telephone systems. In his speech on December 2 in this House he said that the last report of the Postmaster General of Great Britain, Mr. Buxton, has shown conclusively that the telephone and telegraph systems of the United Kingdom are not paying concerns.

He went on to say:

> I have the report in my hand. I will not quote it—it is very extensive.

But he quoted an editorial from the Montreal 'Gazette' and in quoting that editorial I think he was most unfair to the people of Canada in passing over some of the important items that he must have had in the book which he claimed to have in his hand. I have here the book, which I imagine, he held at that time. It is a statement of the Post Office Department of the United Kingdom. According to the Montreal 'Gazette' the net deficit in working the telegraph system for the year was £652,000. The total revenue from the telegraphs of the United Kingdom amounted to £4,369,230, but the total expenditures were £5,021,285. That does show a difference of £652,055. But, had the right hon. First Minister taken the pains to have looked at the different expenditures that made up that £5,021,285, he would have found that a large portion of it should be charged to capital account. For instance, in the expenditures on page 96 of the report he would have found items such as these:

Sites and buildings,—purchase of same	£ 11,774
Erection of buildings	80,122
Extension of the system of telegraphs	305,253
Terminable annuities for advances under telegraph accounts—Acts	351,246

Now Sir, there is a total of £748,395 which no common sense man would place in any other position than capital account, and I am surprised at the right hon. First Minister of this Dominion taking the position that he did in regard to that article and I feel confident that in so far as the Montreal 'Gazette' is concerned it will right the wrong when it comes to investigate the matter.

Let us go a little farther with this. On the same page of the expenditure account he would have found this as well: The percentage of salaries to total revenue is 62·31, the percentage of maintenance to total revenue is 21·93, a total of 84·24, leaving over 15 per cent of a profit in the running of the telegraphs of the United Kingdom. My attention was called to it by reading the right hon. gentleman's speech and having visited the telegraph and telephone systems of the United Kingdom and having made some investigation in regard to them I was surprised to see the statement that he quoted from the Montreal 'Gazette.' Upon looking it up I found the facts to be exactly as I have stated them here. When you come to think that a business telegram in the United Kingdom is sent for 12 cents when it would cost in this country 25 cents you can readily see the great advantage there is in the operation of the government telegraph system. Let us have a little more investigation into the telegraphs since the hon. gentleman has brought the question before the House. As we have seen there is an expenditure of £748,395 which should have gone to capital account. This does not include further sums such as interest, £118,642, and superannuations, £125,823, making a total of £244,465 that might be added to capital account. The gross expenditure of £5,021,285, less capital charges of £748,395, leaves £4,272,890. The net revenue after deducting expenditure in the nature of capital is £96,340 leaving a balance of £468,212. If the £118,642 represents interest at 3 per cent on the amount invested then the capital invested in telegraphs is £3,954,700. If, in 1907, the statement shows that after setting aside, out of gross revenue, for interest, £118,642 there is a profit remaining of £96,340, this means earnings of £214,982 or more than 5 per cent on the outlay.

Now, there were 89,493,000 telegrams sent in 1907 on which there was a profit of £96,340 or $468,212 which means about half a cent on each telegram. There are now in the United Kingdom 10,587 telegraph offices at post offices, and if the right hon. gentleman had investigated that report he would have found that hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of telegraph offices had been abandoned and that the telegraph instruments have been taken into the post offices for economy's sake. Had he examined the telegraph system of the old land he would have found that while two years ago they had a crude system to-day it is being wonderfully improved and a large amount of money is being expended upon it. There are 2,406 telegraph offices at railway stations.

A word or two in regard to the telephone system in Great Britain. At page 97 of the same report I find the financial statement regarding telephones as follows:

Telephones, 1907.

Income	£908,246
Working expenses	456,459
Apparent credit balance	£ 451,787
Capital authorized by statute	7,300,000
Of which amount there remains unexpended	257,558
Actual capital expenditure	£7,042,442
3 per cent on capital invested	£211,273
Leaving for depreciation	245,186 3½%

(One-fifth of total expenditure new, having been purchased in 1907) which would be four and a half per cent on the other four-fifths.

Expenses made up as follows:

a. London exchange	£330,512
b. Provincial exchange system	116,973
c. Trunk line system	460,761
Total expenses	£908,246

Balances available for depreciation, interest, &c.:

a. London exchange	£187,861
b. Provincial exchange system	38,227
c. Trunk line system	225,699
Balance	£451,789

I merely place these figures before the House to show that the statements of the First Minister are wide of the mark, and I sincerely hope he will give the House and the country some more definite knowledge of his position with regard to the telephone and telegraph systems of this country.

If there is one thing more than another which I am interested in, it is rural free mail delivery. I believe that not only should the cities of our land have free mail delivery, but that the rural districts should have much more consideration than is given to them at the present time. Back of our industries, back of our mines and timber lands, back of our railways and telegraphs and telephones, back of our schools and colleges stand the farmers, the back bone of them all; the foundation from which flows that mighty stream of products to feed the cities and towns, the source from which in past years has gone our surplus to feed the millions beyond the sea. Remember that in 1905 we sent out some $25,000,000 worth of cheese, $7,000,000 worth of butter, $35,000,000 worth of wheat, $50,000,000 worth of meats and perishable products, or $114,000,000 worth in all. Were it not for this large amount of money coming into our country year after year we would find that so far as Canada is concerned she would be practically in a bankrupt condition. As was rightly said by the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) the relations between this country and foreign countries showing a balance of trade of $121,000,000 against us, is a thing to be regretted. That money goes out to maintain industries in foreign lands, to not only build up their industries and pay their workmen but in turn to consume the products of the farmers of these foreign lands, and instead of this Canadian government cultivating and developing a home market and the home trade in our own land we find them ready and willing to develop the industries of foreign nations. We have to-day 600,000 farmers in the Dominion of Canada producing as they did in 1906, an estimated product of $700,000,000 worth. Surely this is an important industry. Is it not an industry worthy of more attention than it has received during the past ten years from this government? The agricultural interests of Canada are the coming source of her greatness; that interest will grow and expand to just the extent that our people and our government afford opportunities for its development. I want to state to the House some of the benefits of free rural mail delivery as I see them. It brings the post office practically to the door of the great mass of the people. Instead of these people having to go or send to the post office for their mail, a government official delivers it daily. It is a great benefit to the business man who has connections with the rural districts. It increases the revenue of the Post Office Department; it increases the circulation of the press of our country which is an educator; it delivers parcels for a few cents from the merchant at the nearest town to the farmer thereby saving the farmer time and expense; it connects the farmer with the latest current reports; it has been the means, where tried of improving the roads in the country districts; it is estimated in the United States reports that it increases the value of the farms, where it is in operation, twenty-five per cent. It is easier for one man to deliver the mail to one hundred farmers than it is for one hundred farmers to drive or walk miles to a post office, and when you come to think of the scarcity of labour in farming districts and the expense it is to them you can readily see the force of that statement where one hundred farmers are compelled to go and get their mail, when by rural free delivery one man could deliver the mail for them. The mail carrier receives money for transmission through the mail and gives receipts for same at the farmer's door; the money is then taken to the office and the postmaster's receipt given to the carrier who delivers it also to the farmer. Registered letters are received and receipts given in return. Money order blanks are also carried and given at the usual charges. The rural man does not pay any more and receives the same accommodation that he would if a general post office were at his gate. The mail carrier is compelled to take with him stamps, post cards, stamped envelopes, sufficient change so that a farmer who only requires a two cent stamp, if he puts five cents or more in the box with a letter unstamped he would find the correct change in his box and his letter promptly delivered. Rural free delivery has been the greatest kind of a success in Great Britain and the United States. I feel safe in saying that no intelligent man can go into the rural districts of the United States or the Post Office Department at Washington with an unprejudiced mind, and make a thorough investigation of this subject, and come out of it without being a most ardent admirer and an enthusiastic supporter of the Post Office Department at Washington. Free delivery of mail to rural districts is not a new or an untried thing. In 1843, the government of Sir Robert Peel in Great Britain desired that all places where the letters for which exceed one hundred per week should be deemed entitled to the privilege of a receiving office and a free delivery of their letters. This principle was followed until 1850, when a service was made quite general throughout the British Isles. In some cases only tri-weekly or bi-weekly, and the result proved very satisfactory to the department. This continued up to the Queen's Jubilee and July 22, 1897, was made the occasion of a universal rural free delivery service within the United Kingdom, and which has not only proved a great boon to the people, but been the means of increasing the revenue and increasing the surplus which amounts for the past year to over £26,000,000. In France, Belgium and Switzerland a regular delivery to the rural districts prevails and was established previous to 1897. In Germany and Austria-Hungary, in addition to France, Belgium and Switzerland there is a system of rural free delivery.

The Postmaster General of the United States commenced operations in 1896, recognizing as he did that rural free delivery should be a service for the people and by the people. As the United States is our nearest neighbour, and a country with vast territories unsettled, with sparsely settled districts similar to our own, the material that I will largely use in my remarks to-day is gathered from frequent visits to the rural districts of that country during the past five years, and considerable time spent in the Post Office Department at Washington within the past two months. The statements have been gathered from the reports of the United States Post Office Department and from the courteous officers in the Postmaster General's employ. I am safe in making the statement at the outset that no more enthusiastic supporters of rural free delivery and no more confident men as regards its successful operation can be found than those in closest touch with its operation in the Post Office Department of the United States, and to them I owe most generous praise and commendation for the very kind and courteous treatment they afforded to me during my stay. This service has passed the experimental period in that country, and if we are to benefit from the experience of the United States, this is the time to act. I have with me a book filled with letters and statements from men in all walks of life, situated in the rural districts of different parts of the United States, whose words of praise and commendation would be sufficient to enthuse even our own Postmaster General were he to consider them worthy of his perusal. I have here the remarks of President Roosevelt in his annual message of December, 1901. I can only take time to read one paragraph, which is as follows :

Among recent postal advances, the success of rural free delivery wherever established, has been so marked, and actual experience has made its benefits so plain that the demand for its extension is general and urgent. It is just that the great agricultural population should share in the improvement of the postal service.

Charles Emery Smith, Postmaster General of the United States, November 25, 1901 :

The policy of rural free delivery is no longer a subject of serious dispute. It has unmistakably vindicated itself by its fruits. It has been made plain that this service is a potent, educational force, that it brings agricultural life into far closer relations with the active business world, that it keeps the farmer in daily touch with markets and prices that it advances general intelligence through the increased circulation of the journals and periodicals, stimulates correspondence, quickens all interchanges, promotes good roads, enhances farm values, makes farm life less isolated and more attractive, and unites with other wholesome influences in checking and changing the hitherto prevailing current from country to city.

He states that on an average there were 125 families on a route. Under the old system they travelled from 2 to 4 miles in going to the post office. If the cost in time and other factors be reckoned at 10 cents a day for each family, it is clearly a moderate estimate. That made an aggregate of $12.50 a day. The government can deliver the mail at the doors of all for $2 per day. Why shouldn't it do so and save them the larger burden? It is demonstrated that the establishment of rural delivery in invariably followed by a large increase of postal receipts, and analysis of the returns for the last fiscal year show that in the free delivery offices the increase of receipts average 11 per cent, in the non-delivery presidential offices 3½, and in the strictly rural sections 2½ per cent. Long experience has made it clear that under the old conditions, the annual rate of growth of postal revenue in country communities is about 2 per cent, but wherever rural delivery has been established, this annual gain has risen to 8 or 10 per cent. The ratio of increase on the rural routes is substantially equal to that of the free delivery in cities.

That is the statement of Charles Emery Smith, Postmaster General to the United States in 1901. Let us come to Postmaster General Cortelyou, on June 30, 1906. He says :

The rural delivery has undoubtedly increased the bulk of the first-class mail matter. . . . The giving of additional facilities, within reasonable limits, is almost invariably followed by an increased use of the mails, and consequently additions to the revenue.

The following statement is by Mr. Meyers, the present Postmaster General of the United States, taken from the New York 'Times' of August 15, 1907 :

As regards the criticisms that have been made of the rural free delivery system, I want to say this: The service was started in 1898 and the deficit in that year in the department was $8,000,000. In 1906 the rural delivery cost $25,000,000, but the department's deficit was only $10,000,000. So the rural service, like a branch railroad, while it may not make money itself, acts as a feeder and greatly increases the business of the department. This year the cost of the service will be $35,000,000. In the first quarter ending March 31, there was no deficit at all. I cannot give the figures for the second quarter until October. It is just a straw but it is a strong straw and it shows the tremendous amount of business being done in the country.

Yet you will find the Minister of Agriculture and our present Postmaster General stating that the deficit in the United States on rural free delivery is anywhere from 10,000,000 to $20,000,000, while here is the statement of the Postmaster General of the United States that in the first quarter of 1907 there was no deficit at all. Let me quote the same Postmaster General in a speech delivered in Philadelphia while I was there, in regard to rural parcel post ('Public Ledger,' October 27, 1907) :

Heretofore the opposition to the extension of the parcel post has come in the first instance from the express companies, and then from the retail merchant and the country storekeeper, the fear in his case being that the mail order house would derive a benefit to his own disadvantage. Now, I can disarm the criticism of the retail country merchant and storekeeper by the fact that I shall recommend a parcel post system on the rural delivery routes, a special rate to be charged on packages for delivery from the distributing office of the rural route, or if mailed by a patron of any rural route for delivery to a patron on the same route, or at the distributing office of said route. The rate would be five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound up to 11 pounds. This will be a great boon to the farmers and others on the rural routes, because when they are able to order their goods by telephone or postal card it will relieve them of the inconvenience of going to town to obtain the necessaries of life.

It will facilitate the consumption and increase the business of the country merchant, who necessarily obtains his goods from the wholesale dealer. Therefore, all will be benefited. The result of this service will be an increased cancellation of stamps which, in turn, means an increase of salary to the fourth-class postmaster, as well as a larger revenue for the postal service, which could be credited to the rural delivery routes, as it would be practically all pure gain over and above the commission to the postmasters.

They are some interesting figures in connection with the rural delivery which are not yet appreciated by the general public. Often we hear criticisms of the enormous expenditures required in order to maintain the rural delivery service, which at first blush seem to be justified, when we recall that 10 years ago the amount expended was only about $15,000 for the year, whereas the cost for the year ended June 30, 1907, a decade later, was about $27,000,000. On the other hand, the deficit 10 years ago was $11,500,000, while for the year ended June 30, 1907, the deficit will be $6,692,000, so that notwithstanding this increase of nearly $27,000,000 the deficit decreased nearly $5,000,000, showing that the rural delivery has added to the general revenue of the postal service.

We find the hon. gentlemen opposite condemning the system because of the wonderful deficit that is rolling up from year to year. Remember that in 1896, before rural free delivery was established in the United States, the deficit in that country was $11,500,000. This last year it only amounts to $6,692,000, so that noting this increased expense of $27,000,000 there is a decrease in the deficit of nearly $5,000,000, showing that the rural free delivery has added to the general revenue of the department. The chief officers connected with the rural delivery service distinctly state that to-day the rural mail service is practically on a self-sustaining basis. We have listened to men who know what they are talking about. Let us now listen for a few moments to some who do not. Sir William Mulock, when Postmaster General, on June 28, 1904, said, in reply to a question I put to him in Committee of Supply, regarding the rural free delivery in the United States :—

> The United States people were rather dragooned into the establishment of a rural free mail delivery, and it has raised serious difficulties in that country.

When asked by Mr. Clarke to explain how the United States were dragooned into the system, Sir William Mulock replied that false returns had been made to the Postmaster General of the United States and he added :—

> The unfortunate administration is evidently at its wits end to know what to do with this monster which has been raised up and has apparently no way of controlling the thing.

He also said :—

> Fancy the establishment of a rural delivery system within an area the size of all Europe. That is what is involved in proposing to adopt rural delivery in Canada, and the first step of the Postmaster General would be to ask the House to vote $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, perhaps not the first year, but in a very short time. The first year perhaps $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 would be sufficient, but it would go on so that in five years the Postmaster General would have to ask the House to give $10,600,000 or $15,000,000 to establish rural delivery. Parliament would not be in favour of voting that sum of money. I doubt if the country could afford that amount of money. It might be that in a few years we would be called upon to vote an item of probably not less than $25,000,000.

Just imagine the Dominion being asked to vote $25,000,000 when our postal expenditure during that year amounted to less than $5,000,000 and is but little over that to-day. That certainly was a misstatement by the then minister. Is it any wonder that remarks of this kind have frightened the people in Canada with regard to rural mail delivery ? He repeated that statement and said:—

> The United States have taken hold of a problem which is alarming, and one which no prudent government would think of adopting in Canada at the present time.

In 1905, the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), moved for a return of all papers in the post office department regarding rural mail delivery and supported his motion with a splendid speech. In reply, Sir William Mulock ridiculed the idea. He said it was one of the wildest schemes the United States had ever embarked on. I asked him if the deficit in the United States postal department was due to rural mail delivery and he said it was. Had he studied the information in his own department, he would have seen that the rural delivery could not have contributed more than $8,000,000 towards the deficit, because the increase in the appropriation for rural mail delivery in that year was only $5,000,000. On that occasion I urged the then Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) to have a thorough investigation into the matter. In his reply he spoke of our northern latitude and the difficulties of keeping the roads open, but he said he would have an investigation made and all papers connected with that system, and among those brought down I found a copy of a report from Washington, giving the information obtained by our officials whom we sent to Washington. A copy of this report I have before me, and a greater misrepresentation of the whole subject could not be imagined. The gentleman sent either did not try to obtain the information or deliberately prepared a report in direct opposition to the facts. On the first page of that report I find the following :—

In the matter of obtaining positive information as to the eventual scope and cost of the service and the statistics which would enable us to arrive at conclusions as to the increase in postal business consequent upon the establishment of rural free delivery, our visit was not specially successful. The Postmaster General, and the fourth assistant, who has this service under his jurisdiction, have just assumed office, and have not had time to inform themselves on the subject sufficiently to formulate the future policy which would be pursued by the department; and in the absence of instructions from his superior, the superintendent of the service was unable to speak with authority on the matter.

Yet these gentlemen were able to bring in a lengthy report and wind it up with these words :—

In view of the facts herein set forth we are of the opinion that the time has not arrived for this department to enter upon a rural free delivery service.

Let us look a little further into that report :—

The rural free delivery service has been in operation several years, but we were assured by the superintendent that it was only since January 1 that statistics had been compiled for which they would be prepared to vouch.

I feel confident that if those men had used reasonable diligence they could have gathered from the post office department of the United States statistics previous to 1903. If they had gone to the records in the library they could have found sufficient to prove that, so far as rural mail delivery is concerned in the United States, the Postmaster General and his officials have made report after report of the most enthusiastic character in support of that service. These gentlemen continued further :—

You desire that information be obtained as to the extent of territory still uncovered by this service and as to how far the plans on which the department has been working would carry the country in the way of expense. On neither point could information of a specific character be obtained.

Again referring further to the United States they say :—

They do not contemplate extending the service to the very sparsely settled districts, until population increased to a point which will enable the department to serve them under their rules.

In reply to a question asked as to the measure of accommodation, the department felt bound to furnish in establishing free service in a district, no definite answers were given. And so I might go on practically through the whole report. You will find that, so far as definite information is concerned, they were unable, apparently, to secure any of it. Here is a little more referring to percentage of the expenditure :—

At the same percentage of loss that took place on the new service established during the year ending June 30, 1904, the loss on this $14,141,025 will be $9,686,600, and the total deficit on rural free delivery at the end of June 30, 1906, will be $17,839,581. The amount of the deficit will, as a matter of fact, be much larger, from the fact that the more remunerative areas must have been already covered, and the new services will necessarily go into districts which cannot yield as large returns as those now covered. We could not, however, come closer to actual results, and with this explanation the figures given will perhaps serve. When the 45,000 or 60,000 services are put on, to complete the present plans, the deficit will, on the same favourable estimate, be from $21,659,195 to $29,057,195.

Now, compare these figures and the previous deficit of $10,000,000 before rural free delivery was established in the United States with the condition to-day when we see a deficit of only $6,000,000. The report says also:

It must also be observed that there is no finality about the present plans of the department, however liberal they may be.

And they close with the statement :

In view of these facts, the time has not yet arrived for the department to enter upon rural free delivery.

And in this conclusion they declare against rural free delivery without any facts, of any great value. I cannot help feeling that on this question, the people of Canada have been humbugged by the Postmasters Generals of this country during the last four years. Let me refer to a statement made by the present Postmaster General on February 15, 1907, page 3149 of 'Hansard.' I asked what had been done with regard to rural free mail delivery. I am sorry that the Postmaster General is not now in the House, but I feel that this is an important matter of legislation and should be brought before the House as early as possible, so that hon. members may become thoroughly acquainted with it. The Postmaster General, in reply to my question, said:

This question was a more live one three or four years ago than it is to-day. When it was first suggested that we should adopt in Canada the rural free delivery system which they have in the United States, officials of the department were despatched to Washington to study that system. The result of their investigation can be summed up in two words. In the United States it has not been a great success, and it has involved the Post Office Department in a succession of annual deficits ranging from $15,000,000 to $16,000,000.

You can readily see, Mr. Speaker, by the statement I have given that these figures are not correct. Taking that statement of the Postmaster General that rural free delivery has involved the United States

Post Office Department in a succession of deficits ranging from $15,000,000 to $16,000,000, and comparing that with the annual deficits that I will give to the House, you can see how wild and reckless have been his statements. The hon. gentleman called rural free delivery a luxury, and at present it must not be thought of except as an ideal. Let me give to the House a statement of the fourth assistant Postmaster General of the United States, showing the expenditures, appropriations and deficits of the Post Office Department since 1897. I realize that in making so many quotations and using so many figures I am in danger of wearying hon. members, but I trust the importance of the subject and the need that exists of placing the facts before the House, will be regarded as a justification for the course I am pursuing. Let me preface the statement I am about to give by saying that in 1890 the deficit of the United States post office was $5,377,449. This was before there was any rural free delivery. In 1895, the year before rural free delivery was established, the deficit was $10,196,423. The following statement shows the number of rural free delivery carriers, the appropriation and the expenditure on rural free delivery and the total postal deficit:

Fiscal Year.	Carriers.	Appropriation.	Expenditures.	Postal Deficit.
		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1897	83	40,000 00	14,840 00	11,411,790 00
1898	148	50,250 00	50,241 00	9,020,905 00
1899	391	150,032 00	150,012 00	6,610,776 00
1900	1,276	450,000 00	420,433 00	5,385,688 00
1901	4,301	1,750,796 00	1,750,321 00	3,923,727 00
1902	8,466	4,089,075 00	4,089,041 00	2,937,649 00
1903	15,119	8,580,364 00	8,051,599 00	4,560,044 00
1904	24,566	12,926,905 00	12,645,275 00	8,779,492 00
1905	32,055	21,116,600 00	20,864,885 00	14,572,584 00
1906	35,666	25,228,300 00	25,011,625 00	10,516,995 00
1907	37,582	28,350,000 00	26,755,524 00	6,692,000 00

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the deficit shown is the total deficit of the department. It is impossible, as the accounts are kept, to state separately the expenditure and the balance on account of rural free delivery.

It is evident that, so far as the present government is concerned, there is no intention to take action in this matter, but I am proud and glad to know that the leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition in this House is taking up the question, and is ready to investigate it thoroughly and to put it in operation when he takes the reins of power, as he will do at no distant day. The present Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), speaking in this House on April 18 last, said:

While I was in Washington recently I studied with some of the post office officials there the question of rural delivery, and, unfortunately for my hon. friend, I found that instead of it being a boon to the public it was a great deficit producer to the department, in fact, to-day at Washington, among the officials, the question is seriously considered whether they shall not have to restrict the rural mail delivery instead of expanding it. My hon. friend——

Referring to myself.

—will admit that we are not ready to spend millions to establish all over Canada a rural mail delivery system. But we are doing the next best thing. During this session and within a few hours probably hon. members will see in the supplementary estimates a sum of money to be applied to the establishment of the free delivery system in cities and towns whose population shall justify it; that is to say, in towns having a revenue of $10,000 or $20,000 a year.

In passing, I want to call the present acting Postmaster General's attention to the fact that in the United States all cities of 10,000 inhabitants and a revenue of $10,000, receive free delivery, and it has been tried in several of the smaller places of from 1,500 to 2,500 inhabitants, and has been found to be a considerable success. The hon. gentleman goes on:

This is a move in the right direction. In the United States the rural mail delivery system has caused a deficit in the Post Office Department of something like $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 a year.

After the statement I have read, Mr. Speaker, you can see how wild and reckless were the figures he used in that regard. He goes on to say:

With the experience of the United States before us we cannot think of giving this country rural free delivery.

He read an article from a paper in the western states, supporting the Canadian system of mail delivery, and ceased reading it by stating that it was almost too flattering to his department to permit him to read it. A school boy reading the same article could see at a glance that it was a fictitious article, based upon imperfect knowledge of our system. It referred to a rural free delivery in different parts of the country sparsely settled when we have not such a system in operation in our country. On page 3152 he said that the deficiency in the United States for 1906, was $16,000,000 when the annual report of the Postmaster General for the United States distinctly shows that it was only $10,000,000 instead of $16,000,000. I tried my best last year to show the Postmaster General that his figures were wrong, but he still clung to his first statement, and ended up his remarks by saying :

When we reach a population of twenty millions—which I hope we may under this good government—if I am still Postmaster General I can promise a free rural mail delivery.

A remarkably radical idea, but I really believe he never intends to grant the country free rural mail delivery. This is too important a subject to treat in the light manner in which he discussed it. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have a number of other important figures to give to the House in regard to this question, and as it is now six o'clock, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, December 9, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 17) to amend the Canada Shipping Act. He said : This Bill purposes to amend the Canada Shipping Act with reference to the inspection of steamboats. It is a question which I have brought to the attention of the House in former sessions. The Bill simply affects the right of engineers to operate steamboats with or without certificates. My amendment asks that the exceptions to the employment of certificated engineers be confined to steamboats used exclusively for pleasure ; and boats whose engines have a nominal power of 10 horse-power single cylinder or 18 horse-power double cylinder.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 18) to amend section 298 of the Railway Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. KENNEDY. This is a Bill which I brought before the House last year but which did not reach its second reading. The Bill asks to strike out of section 298 of the Railway Act the words ' crops, lands, fences, plantations, buildings and their contents.' The section then will read:

Whenever damage is caused by fire, caused by a railway locomotive the company making use of such locomotive, &c., shall be responsible, &c.

By striking out the words I have mentioned the section will cover everything that may be destroyed by fire caused by a railway locomotive instead of confining it to crops, lands, fences, plantations, buildings and their contents as at present.

To the Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Company, Limited, of Aroostook Falls, N.B., to export electrical energy at a rate not to exceed one thousand (1,000) kilowatts.

To the Electrical Development Company of Ontario, Limited, of Niagara Falls, Ont., to export energy at a rate not to exceed thirty-four thousand three hundred and sixteen (34,316) kilowatts.

To the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls, Ont., to export electrical energy at a rate not to exceed forty-five thousand (45,000) kilowatts; and to the Canadian Niagara Power Company of Niagara Falls Ont., to export electrical energy at a rate not to exceed thirty-nine thousand one hundred and sixty-five (39,165) kilowatts.

All the licenses are for a period terminating on the 31st March, 1908, and are subject to regulations approved by the Governor General in Council, a copy of which is attached hereto.

Ottawa, November 7, 1907.

Sir,—I beg to inform you that in virtue of the provisions of the Act, 6-7 Edward VII., chapter 16, 'The Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act,' an order in council has been passed, dated November 4, 1907, establishing the following regulations for the governance of the exportation of electrical power, petroleum, natural gas, water or other fluid capable of being exported through pipe lines or other like contrivances, and the same are hereby made and established accordingly:

Regulations.

1. These regulations are to be construed as subject in all respects to the provisions of the Act and the several words, terms and expressions to which by the Act meanings are assigned shall have therein the same respective meanings:—

(a) 'Minister' means the Minister of Inland Revenue;

(b) 'Department' means the Department of Inland Revenue;

(c) 'Contractor' means any person or company undertaking to generate electrical energy, gas or fluid for exportation from Canada;

(d) 'Purchaser' means any person or company to whom electrical energy, gas or fluid is furnished by the contractor;

(e) The expression 'Unit of supply of electrical energy' means one kilowatt hour, i.e., 1,000 watts passing for one hour;

(f) The expression 'electrical horse-power year' means the passing of 746 watts of electrical energy for one year.

2. Before commencing to supply any electrical energy, gas or fluid for exportation, the contractor shall obtain from the department a license in respect of such exportation, the application for which license shall contain full and exact information as to the quantities proposed to be exported from Canada.

3. The contractor, shall, on or before April 1, of each year, make application for the license referred to in the previous paragraph and shall pay therefor the following fee, namely:—

(a) In the case of an electrical plant generating not more than 10,000 horse-power, twenty-five dollars;

(b) In the case of an electrical plant generating over 10,000 horse-power, fifty dollars.

(c) In the case of a natural gas plant, fifty dollars.

4. Any license issued hereunder shall be revocable at will by the Governor in Council if the licensee refuses or neglects to comply with any of the conditions from time to time imposed by the Governor in Council with regard to the supply and distribution of electrical energy, gas or fluid in Canada and, moreover, whenever such electrical energy, gas or fluid is required for the use of purchasers in Canada any such license shall be revocable upon such notice to the licensee as the Governor in Council deems reasonable in each case.

5. Monthly reports shall be made to the department by the contractor containing full particulars as to the output of the generating plants or wells of production, showing separately the total number of units generated for export and for consumption in Canada.

6. For the measurement of electrical energy integrating watt-meters of approved design shall be installed in such a manner as to show the total number of units generated for export and for consumption in Canada, respectively.

7. Before commencing to construct, subsequent to the issuance of the license, transmission lines of wire for the exportation of electrical energy, or lines of pipe for the exportation of gas or fluid, the contractor shall obtain from the department a license for such construction.

The contractor shall furnish a drawing or map showing the proposed location of the transmission lines or any extension thereof, also:—

(a) The gauge of the wire conductors for the transmission of electrical energy;

(b) The diameter in inches of the pipe lines for gas or fluids, and

(c) The number of conductors or pipe lines that it is proposed to build or construct.

8. Where a supply of electrical energy, gas or fluid is provided in any part of Canada by the contractor for export and home consumption then the price charged to any person or company in Canada by the contractor shall not exceed the prices at which electrical energy, gas or fluid is sold by the contractor for export in like quantities under similar circumstances.

9. Any officer authorized by the minister for the purposes of the Act may at all reasonable times, and not less frequently than once in every year, enter any premises in which electrical energy, gas or fluid is generated or produced in order:—

(a) To inspect the generating plant, to test any wires, pipes, meters or other measuring devices through which electrical energy, gas or fluid may be supplied to any purchaser, or

(b) To inspect the contractor's books for the purpose of ascertaining the quantities and prices of the commodities sold and such other information as may be deemed necessary for the proper administration of the Act, and

(c) To inspect all contracts entered into between the contractor and the purchaser for a supply of electrical energy, gas or fluid.

10. The accuracy of any meter or other measuring device through which electrical energy, gas or fluid may be sold, either for export or home consumption, shall be determined by the department in accordance with the provisions of the Electricity and Gas Inspection Acts, chapters 14, 1907, and 87 Revised Statutes, 1906, respectively, and the regulations made thereunder.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS PASSED.

Mr. LANCASTER asked:

1. What is the total amount of the accounts and claims payable by the Government which had been passed for payment in or previous to March, 1907, and which remained unpaid on 1st December, 1907?

2. What is the total amount of the accounts and claims payable by the Government which had been passed for payment in the months of April, May, June, July, August, September, October and November, 1907, respectively, and which remained unpaid on 1st December, 1907?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1 and 2. The Finance Department is not aware of any such accounts.

Accounts can only be deemed to be due where there is appropriation to cover them. It occasionally happens towards the end of the fiscal year that the appropriation for a given public work or service proves insufficient, for example, a contractor on a given work might do a larger amount of work than was expected and the appropriation might be exhausted. In such cases accounts would have to wait until an appropriation could be obtained from parliament by a supplementary estimate. In the case of the Public Works Department this is particularly provided for in the terms of their contracts.

TOBACCO MANUFACTURER'S FINES.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. Were any fines or penalities imposed upon any manufacturer of tobacco in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, since the 1st of January, 1907, for infraction of the Inland Revenue Act, or of any regulation thereunder?

2. If so, what are (a) the names and residences of the person or persons fined, (b) the nature of the infraction or infractions of the Act or regulations, (c) the date or dates of infractions and fines, (d) the name or names of the official or officials who tried the cases, (e) the amount of fine imposed in each case, and whether paid or not, and when?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. A sum was voluntarily deposited as a penalty.

2. Daniel J. Riley, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

(b) For having sent out of his factory caddies of tobacco with only one-half of a revenue stamp attached thereto.

(c) Dates not definitely known.

(d) Deputy collector Caven of Montreal investigated the charge.

(e) A voluntary deposit of $200, as a penalty, was, under the provisions of section 136 of the Inland Revenue Act, made on October 10, 1907.

TIMBER BERTH No. 1168.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. What is the area of timber berth No. 1168?

2. Was it put up to public competition? If so, when?

3. What offers were received and what bonus paid?

4. Who is the present owner?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. The area included in this berth is 329·80 square miles, but the licensees were to make a selection therein. Up to the present time they have selected 6·75 square miles.

2. It was not put up to public competition. It includes timber berth No. 106 granted to Thomas Wells by Order in Council of October 3, 1882, timber berth No. 199 granted to E. H. Le Baron by Order in Council of March 6, 1883, timber berth No. 200 granted to G. C. Hanson by Order in Council of March 19, 1883, timber berth No. 203 granted to C. E. Kennedy by Order in Council of March 27, 1883, timber berth No. 204 granted to John Martin by Order in Council of March 23, 1883, timber berth No. 242a granted to T. F. Jones by Order in Council of May 4, 1883, timber berth No. 425 granted to The Alberta Lumber Company by Order in Council of May 2, 1884. These berths, except No. 425, were assigned to The Alberta Lumber Company, and in a re-adjustment of the company's berths made in 1904, all were included in one berth designated as timber berth No. 1168.

3. None.

4. J. S. McEwan and O. P. Carter, assignees of The Alberta Lumber Company.

HOUGH, CAMPBELL AND FERGUSSON—SALES OF LANDS.

Mr. AMES asked:

What lands were sold by the government to J. S. Hough and to Hough, Campbell and Fergusson, during the nine months ending March 31, 1907?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). None.

TIMBER BERTH No. 1100.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. What is the area of timber berth No. 1100?

2. Was it put up to public competition? If so, when?

3. What offers were received and what bonus paid?

4. Who is the present holder?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. 143·45 square miles.

2. It was not put up to public competition. It includes timber berth No. 105 granted to John Taylor by Order in Council of October 3, 1882, timber berth No. 185 granted to Joseph Dawes by Order in Council of August 4, 1883, and timber berth No. 186 granted to Wm. Mackenzie by Order in Council of August 4, 1883. These berths were assigned to The Alberta Lumber Company, and in a re-adjustment of the company's berths made in 1904, were included in one berth designated timber berth No. 1100.

3. None.

4. J. S. McEwan and O. P. Carter, assignees of The Alberta Lumber Company.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES asked:

1. What progress has been made in regard to the construction of the new ice-breaking steamer for the winter navigation of the Northumberland Straits?

2. Have the plans for her construction been completed?

3. If so, what will be her passenger and freight capacity, and what her tonnage and horse-power?

4. When is she expected to be ready for service and what steps have been taken to ensure that she will be able to overcome the difficulties with which she will have to contend?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The plans and specifications which were prepared by Mr. Duguid after his visit to the island, were submitted by the minister when in England to the largest shipbuilders in Europe for their advice and suggestions.

2. The plans have been completed on those suggestions and the High Commissioner has been able to secure the good services of experts of the admiralty to examine and report, and this is expected shortly.

3. The passenger and freight capacity will be much larger than on the existing steamers, with six thousand horse-power.

4. The government will call for tenders without any delay and will exact from the contractors a guarantee that the ice breaker will successfully meet all the difficulties of winter navigation.

ROSS RIFLE—SERVICES OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. How many officials of the government, civil or military, or officers of the active militia, perform services in any way connected with the manufacture of rifles for the government by the Ross Rifle Company?

2. What are their names, ranks and duties, and the amount of their individual salary or remuneration?

3. What is the total amount (apart from contract cost of rifle), or expenditure by the government with the Ross Rifle Company, including any bonus, loans, inspections, cost of testing, commissions, or expenditure of any kind, with individual amounts?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence.) I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) to be good enough to present that in the form of a motion, as I find that the answer is very voluminous and would take a good many minutes to read. I am having it prepared, and the moment it is moved for, I will lay the return on the table.

Mr. SPEAKER. Question 15 stands as notice of motion for return.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL—ENGINEERING STAFF.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask whether any investigation has been made into the reasons for the retirement of Mr. Hodgins from the service of the National Transcontinenal Railway commission?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot answer that question offhand. Could my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) put it on the notice paper? I will have to ask the Commissioners about it.

THE ALL-RED ROUTE.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto.) Will the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) please take occasion, say to-morrow or as soon as convenient, to make a statement to the House with reference to the proposed fast line, or all-red route service. I see in the newspapers repeated statements concerning sundry and various parties engaged in communication and negotiations on the subject. I think it would be well that the First Minister should state to the House and the country what is being done, and especially what is being done so far as the government itself is concerned in reference to this route.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can answer immediately. At present, nothing is being done. Certain parties are trying to organize a company for the purpose of this service, but no official action has been taken in the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. And no one authorized it for the government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No one authorized it.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. JOS. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton.) Mr. Speaker: When this debate was adjourned on Friday last, I was dealing with the statements of the present Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux.) I will now take up some of the statements made by the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher.) I think that the farmers and the people living in the rural districts of this country will see that the present Minister of Agriculture is not in favour of granting them rural free delivery. And, after reading his remarks and statements on that subject, I think they will agree with me that he is deserving, perhaps of even more serious censure than he received in Chatham on account of his inspection regulations. I have here a statement made by the hon. gentleman. It appears in the Ottawa 'Free Press' of Saturday, November 10, 1907, in the report of a speech delivered by the hon. gentleman at Mansonville, Que. These are some of the words he used:—

The experience in the United States is not such as to warrant our following their example in the matter of rural mail delivery. They began spending $14,000 on this in 1897, and raised it gradually until they spent $420,000 in 1900. The United States post office showed a deficit last year of over $10,000,000, but if it had not been for their rural mail delivery they would certainly have had a surplus of at least $10,000,000.

I would like the hon. gentleman, when he is making a reply to the statements I am making, to be good enough to give the report of the United States Post Office Department, or any statement made by prominent officials of that country, in which such figures are used. The hon. gentleman went on:—

These are fearful figures, and when you remember that our country, while its population is only six millions, as compared to the eighty millions of the United States has an area almost as large to serve, with a scattered population it would mean that we would be overburdened by an expenditure of rural mail delivery which the population of this country would never submit to and which they could not stand.

And he winds up his speech by saying :

But when it comes to adopting rural mail delivery, that at the present time is an impossible policy, for it would involve us in financial disaster from a post office point of view.

Now, as against this, let me read one sentence from the words of the Postmaster General of the United States, published in 'Collier's Weekly' of August 31:—

He has already begun an investigation to find out where the blame for the deficit lies——

Referring to the deficit of 1906——

--and has satisfied himself that the rural free delivery system is not responsible for it, but rather the reverse.

Now we find the Minister of Agriculture in this House, on December 4th, making use of this statement. When asked by Mr. McIntyre (South Perth) in regard to the cost of the service in the United States for the year 1907, $35,000,000, the Minister of Agriculture said :

Practically it is the whole cost. It is true that by reason of the adoption of rural mail delivery they have been able to cut off a few country post offices. I am informed, however, that the amount thus saved is trifling in comparison with the amount spent.

Let me give the House some figures for the last six years regarding post offices in the United States :

In 1901	there were	77,000	post offices.
In 1902	"	76,000	"
In 1903	"	74,150	"
In 1904	"	71,130	"
In 1905	"	68,130	"
In 1906	"	65,600	"

There is a saving practically in six years of 12,000 post offices to the United States postal department, owing to the establishment of rural free delivery in that country. When you consider that the average increase in the number of post offices in the United States is 2,500 a year, instead of there being 65,600 post offices in that country to-day, you would have, were it not for rural delivery about 90,000. So you can see that instead of the saving being trifling, as the minister would have the people of this country believe, there is an enormous saving. In Canada we have a little over 11,000 post offices. Last year the revenue was $5,940,000, and the expenditure $4,922,000, leaving a surplus of a little over $1,000,000. This year's surplus is over a million and a half. Let me show the hon. gentleman another saving that is effected in the United States by the adoption of this system. In 1903 there was saved by way of the discontinuance of stage routes, as follows : In 1903, $303,000 ; in 1904, $579,000 ; 1905, $535,000 ; 1906, $383,000. The hon. gentleman refers to the wonderful post office facilities in the Dominion of Canada, and boasts that the present government have extended the system to towns of 12,000 population, and with a revenue of $20,000. If that hon. gentleman would examine the reports of the United States he would find that for years people living in cities and towns of 10,000 inhabitants and with a revenue of $10,000, have been receiving their mail free, and in towns much smaller than that, a free delivery system has been attended with a great deal of success. The government have to-day under contemplation extending rural free delivery to very small towns and villages in that country. Let me quote again on page 237 from the remarks of the minister :

I confess that the United States statistics have staggered me and made me feel that we must not plunge lightly even into a discussion of the question.

Well, Sir, I cannot think that the hon. gentleman has thoroughly investigated the reports of the United States, or he would not make so timid a statement. In 1896, before rural free delivery was established in the United States, the deficit in the post office department amounted to over $11,000,000, while to-day with an expenditure of nearly $35,000,000 under rural free delivery, the deficit last year only amounted to a little over $6,000,000. To-day the Postmaster General has distinctly stated that for the first three months of this year there is no deficit at all. Yet these gentlemen would try to lead the people of Canada to understand that it is one of the most reckless and extravagant ideas to be conceived of. I asked the hon. gentleman this question.

What is the difference between the cost of rural free delivery as established in the States and a system of postal expenditure such as he referred to ?

He was unable to tell, he had no estimate of the cost. He went further and made this statement :

I have no hesitation in saying that people who live in isolated districts have more need for such postal facilities than those who live in thickly populated parts of the country, because with the good roads in these settled localities the people go frequently to the local centres and they can call at the post office to get their mail with very little trouble.

From that I understand that in thickly settled portions of the rural district the government have no intention whatever of giving them any better service than they have to-day. Those are strange statements for the Minister of Agriculture to make, the man whom the farmers in the rural districts look to for legislation that will benefit their interests. Indeed, look over the last ten years since the hon. gentleman assumed his present office, and examine the legislation he has put on the statute-books that has been of any great benefit to the farmer, and you will need a searchlight to find anything. You can well remember his measure in regard to chicken fattening stations that he established throughout the country, where he was going to fatten chickens with a squirt gun method. Then he invented a scissors to cut peaches without stems off the trees. Investigate his Seed Bill, and you will find that as it is at present administered, it is a detriment rather than a help to the farmers of this country. If you go down into the city offices, where those seeds are examined and ask where they come from, they will tell you that they do not come from the farmer, very few come from the farmer, but they come from the wholesale man. The wholesale man gets his seed from the farmer or the retail man, and sends it on to the government for examination, and the outcome is that he farmer must expect by the time he gets a record of his samples to receive a much smaller amount than he would otherwise. What about his cold storage proposition ? You investigate the cold storage apparatus that he is paying for across the Atlantic and on the railways, and you will find that instead of his having control over the regulations on the boats and on the cars, the companies are practically carrying goods as they please, and he has no control over them whatever. The same with his Cold Storage Bill. He tells us that during the past year three cold storages have been established under this present Bill. Mr. Speaker, you would naturally expect that that many cold storages would have been established ad there never been such a Bill. What about the Fruit Marks Act ? If you investigate that you will find that it is a nice thing to have it said in the old country that our fruit is sent there in good condition. But what about the large crop of fruit produced in this country that cannot be sent over there because of the Fruit Marks Act ? If you go into different districts of this country you will find that the bulk of the apples and a great deal of fruit is going into the canning factories or going to the evaporating works. Cross the line, and you will find that the United States send their fruit into Great Britain on the same footing as we send ours. You will find that they have a wonderful advantage over us in getting into the German market on the minimum tariff whereas we are compelled to get our goods in there not only under the maximum tariff but under the surtax in addition.

And what about his position on the preference? When you come to look at the hon. gentleman's position in that regard you cannot help feeling that far from being a help to the farmers he has been a hinderance. The Minister of Agriculture has placed himself on record time and again as being opposed to a preference in the British market to the Canadian farmer. That hon. gentleman knows that if a preference were granted to the Canadian farmer in the British market the farmer would receive more money for the products of his farm; that his farm would be of greater value and that it would have a most beneficial effect in securing for this country the best kind of immigration. Take the hon. gentleman's position on the cattle embargo question. Ten years ago he promised that he was going to revolutionize conditions and that he was going to remove the stigma that had been cast upon the reputation of our Canadian cattle. How has he done it? Two years ago it was my privilege to place before the Committee on Agriculture a resolution whereby we asked that the Minister of Agriculture of the Dominion and the Ministers of Agriculture of the different provinces constitute a committee to go as a body to the British parliament and see if something could not be done. It was left to the Minister of Agriculture to call that committee together. The Committee on Agriculture passed that resolution unanimously; it came to this House; it was passed through this House, but as far as I can learn the Minister of Agriculture has paid no attention to it.

How about his position in regard to our goods going into Germany ? What is his position in that regard? If you will investigate what he has said and done in regard to Canadian farmers' products going into Germany you will feel that it is high time for a change in that department. When you think that Germany, with her 60,000,000 of people, imported last year over $1,800,000,000 worth of products, that $200,000,000 of these goods were agricultural products, $66,000,000 worth of wheat, $34,000,000 worth of barley, $17,000,000 worth of rye, and millions worth of fruit and perishable products and that Canada was only able to send her a few thousand dollars worth of such products you will realize how necessary it is that a change in the present conditions should take place. The Minister of Agriculture, in so far as we can learn, has not raised a finger to throw open that market, but instead of that his government have done the very opposite. When, in 1896, they came into power the farmer of Canada was able to send his goods into the markets of Germany under the minimum tariff, but to-day every pound of goods that he exports to that country goes into that market not only in the face of the maximum tariff of Germany, but the surtax which has been imposed against Canadian products. You find that the little Argentine Republic sent in 1906, $48,000,000, Brazil, $27,000,000; Chili, $21,000,000, and Australia $28,000,000 worth of goods to Germany; that Germany is importing over $200,000,000 worth of the very goods that the farmers of this country produce and want to export in large quantities, and yet they are not able to get a profitable market for those products owing to the bungling mess that this government has made of the tariff regulations between Canada and Germany. Talk about your French treaty! We sent to France some $420,000 worth of farm products last year, but what do we import from France? The hon. gentleman is a temperance man, a great temperance worker, but if he looks into the Trade and Navigation returns he will find that we imported over $1,000,000 worth of wines, whiskies, brandies and spirituous liquors. He is in favour of letting down the wall and allowing these goods to come into our country and to take advantage of our people in that regard. I might tell you also about his Meat Inspection Act; how he was practically driven out of Chatham, in the western district, but I will pass on from that to the question of rural free delivery. We find him to-day taking a stand against free rural delivery. I say, Sir, and I say it most emphatically, that the stand he has taken in that regard is one certainly not in the interest of the farmer. He is ready to give away anything to the monopolist or to the North Atlantic Trading Company or to the middleman. He can defend charges of the most wholesale bribery and corruption that are proved on the floor of this House and give his energy and vote in defence of his party against these charges, but the farmer who pays two-thirds of the taxes must be satisfied with his policy. How much longer will our people stand it? The only advice I can give the farmers of this country is to turn out this dying, time-serving, reckless government and place men in office who will give the country advanced legislation and promote their welfare by offering all legitimate encouragement to their industry.

This government say to the farmer: Stand by ye solid yeomanry, pay into the coffers of this country two-thirds of the running expenses, but we cannot give you any legislation that will assist you in the establishment of rural free delivery. Do not grumble about rural free delivery. It is a luxury, says one, or it is a monster, says another. It has staggered me, says the Minister of Agriculture, and do not let it stagger you, Mr. Farmer. The minister has his mail delivered on his desk and he has the envelopes taken off for fear that he will soil his fingers, while the poor farmer has to plough through the snow and ice for miles to get his mail. He gives the advice to the farmer that was given some years ago by Sir Richard Cartwright when he tells them to work a little harder and eat less. Sail on ye grand old Liberal party, spend millions for your docks and your wharfs and North Atlantic Trading Company, while you have not a penny to contribute towards the development of rural free delivery for the benefit of the farmers. Pound the desks for me, ye men at the back, says the minister; no hope for promotion can you expect unless it is to the rest cure, the political charnel house of this Dominion. But the farmer is doing some thinking in regard to this question and when he comes to cast his ballot at the next general election he will see to it that the men whom he sends to represent him in parliament will be men in favour of rural free delivery.

I have tried to show that as far as rural free delivery is concerned this government has no intention of introducing it in our land. Let us examine it a little further. Between 1896 and 1897, rural delivery service, in its inception, was started over seven states with divergent conditions; it rapidly increased in popularity and is now in operation, giving a conservative estimate, in two-thirds of the United States where conditions will permit its establishment. There are instances of men 55 miles from a railroad station now receiving their mail delivered and also a number of instances along the Canadian border where Canadians have purchased boxes from Uncle Sam and receive their daily mail through the kindness of the United States Post Office Department. Some even cross the river St. Clair in a row-boat to connect with the rural delivery men on the other side. Since the establishment of rural free delivery star routes, or routes that formally carried the mail to other post offices, have been discontinued, thus showing a saving between two and three million of dollars annually by the substitution of rural free delivery. The improvement in road building is very marked, and in states such as Indiana and Pennsylvania the people have passed laws declaring that a route traversed by a rural free delivery carrier is a public road and providing penalities against those in charge of it for failure to keep it in order. The United States have now nearly reached the limit of cost of the delivery system. As the service becomes systematized they will be able to cut off almost as many routes by centralization as the number of new routes to be opened. This is being rapidly done by country service in counties with a sufficient population and roads suitable for covering the whole territory by rural delivery.

They are all carefully mapped out, all minor post offices are discontinued, along with each star route supplying them. On the 30th of June, 1907, there were 653 counties in the United States completely covered by rural delivery. In North Dakota routes have to be thirty miles long, as it is a sparsely settled country. The discontinuance of minor post offices in the United States is increasing yearly, in the year 1906 there were over 3,000 of these offices which receive $1,000 per annum, the discontinuance showing a saving to the department of $300,000 per annum. There were 37,525 routes in operation on April 16 of this year. The length of the standard route is twenty-four miles and a reduction of $18 pre mile in carrier's salary is made on routes shorter than that amount. I wish to place on record the salaries and the length of the routes of the rural free delivery, which is as follows:—

Routes.	Per annum.
24 or more miles	$900
22 to 24 miles	864
20 to 22 miles	810
19 to 20 miles	720
16 to 18 miles	630
14 to 16 miles	540
12 to 14 miles	504
10 to 12 miles	468
8 to 10 miles	432
6 to 8 miles	395

It will be perceived that the length of the standard route is 24 miles.

In 1904 the extension of the rural free delivery resulted in the discontinuance of 3,750 post offices, making in the years 1904 and 1906 (I have not 1905) 6,750 post offices discontinued in these two years. During the year 1904 the salaries of the postmasters at these offices aggregated $171,121. In Dubuque county, Iowa, the service entirely covers the country. Forty routes now cover an area of 738 square miles, furnishing daily services to 15,000 people. More than 2,000 daily papers have been subscribed for as the result of the establishment of this service, which starts from fifteen post offices. As a result of its inauguration, sixteen post offices, ten star routes, one messenger service have been discontinued. The cost of this superseded service is saved to the post office department and goes into its general account, but cannot be credited on the auditor's books to rural free delivery. I have taken Dubuque county merely as an illustration. The officials in the department at Washington assure me that with the completion of a rural service, the volume of mail will reach such proportions as to insure sufficient additional revenue to support the service. Take for instance, Carrol county, Md. It is, strictly speaking, an agricultural country. Seventy-five per cent of the population, 33,000 in all, residing outside the small cities and villages, the largest of which is Westminster, the county seat with a population of about 3,200. The number of letters delivered in Carrol county during 1902 increased almost 16 per cent, postcard delivery showing an increase of 21 per cent, newspapers and periodicals 9 per cent. circulars 120 per cent, packages a little less than 35 per cent, and registered letters delivered 23½ per cent; an average increase of 21 per cent. The total number of pieces of all classes of mail delivered during the year tells of the steady stream of mail pouring into the country from outside sources. It is apparent then, that rural free delivery not only stimulates the use of the mail service in the locality in which it is directly opened, but also throughout the country. Regarding the amount of mail delivered in Carrol county after the establishment of rural free delivery had been in operation for three years, during the year 1902, carriers collected 496,742 letters, an increase of 14·2 per cent over the number collected the year before. About the same rate of increase was maintained in the number of postal cards collected, while the number of newspapers and periodicals gathered on route show only an increase of 1½ per cent, showing that the farmer seldom mails newspapers or periodicals. The aggregate number of pieces of mail collected throughout the county reached 725,703, as against 605,886 in 1902, or an increase of 20 per cent. 95 per cent of the mail despatched by the farmers of this country was first-class matter, letters, and post-cards. The farmer is the constant user of the two-cent stamp. If he mails a newspaper it is not at one cent a pound, the rate enjoyed by newspaper publishers, but he must pay 1 cent on the ordinary size newspaper, or on a package of papers at the rate of 4 cents a pound. The country merchant too is a profitable customer of the rural free delivery service for the circular or third-class matter which he sends out, and which in Carrol county, increased 157 per cent in that year, at the rate of 1 cent for each piece. That is a profitable rate of postage. During the year 1901 the rural letter carriers of Carrol county received applications for 1,776 money orders. During 1902 they supplied their patrons with 2,994 money orders, an increase of 1,228 or 70 per cent. Every money order delivered to a patron on route means a saving of a ride from five to ten miles for the farmer who purchased it. Many other counties could be quoted giving equally as favourable a report as Carrol county. I will not deal further with it, than to say that sufficient proof has been given to show that rural free delivery causes a healthy and steady increase in the gross receipts of the post office in the locality or county in which free delivery is general. It is responsible for a large portion of the increasing revenue of the large offices accruing from the stimulated use of the mails by merchants and others who are now able to reach patrons of rural delivery throughout the country. Fully 70 per cent of the mail delivered in that county originated outside its limits, and the proceeds of the postage on this portion of the mail helps to make up the revenue of the post offices from which it is despatched. The United States report of 1902 (page 30) says : Money orders increased 50 per cent in that year where rural free delivery was in operation and 114,959 letters and packages were registered by rural carriers in isolated farming communities when in 1902 the United States had only 6,400 carriers. What must it be to-day? Under our system this privilege can only be obtained by taking a day off and making a long drive to the nearest village or post office. There is hardly a limit to the good work to be done through the medium of rural delivery. The weather bureau, for instance, finds the service a valuable aid in the distribution of weather forecasts. At many post offices where the proper information can be obtained early enough, display signals are carried by each carrier and in this way the farmer by a glance at the passing wagon knows just what the weather probabilities are, and this information is received anxiously by the farmer. Blue prints are made of all routes, and roads are measured with bicycle wheel with cyclometer on it by a government official, who is sent to investigate the route. He also reports whether it is advisable to lay out route. The petition asking for rural free delivery must have eighty-five signatures of people willing to put up a government box and receive mail delivery. There must also be 100 residents on a route of twenty-four miles, before application can be made or a proportionate number if route is shorter. Patrons are required at their own cost to put up boxes for the reception of mail. These boxes must comply with certain specifications as to size, shape, and workmanship, and be of a galvanized sheet-iron or steel, and approved of by the department. Each box must have a signal attached by which a carrier may know whether there is mail in the box, or the patron know that mail has been delivered. 142 styles of boxes have been approved of by the department, which are sold at prices ranging from 50 cents to $3.50 each. Registered matter and special delivery letters must be delivered by the carrier in person at the patron's door, if within one mile of the route.

I wish to make an explanation in regard to the scattered districts. It is generally understood that in Canada we have a great deal of sparsely settled country, but when you come to investigate many of the farming districts of the United States you will find that they have a much vaster area of sparsely settled country than we have in Canada. It is distinctly and plainly laid down by the department that the standard route must be twenty-four miles long, that there must be one hundred families on that route and that eighty-five of those families must not only put up boxes but agree to take rural free delivery if the route is shorter than twenty-four miles. There must be a proportionate number of people on route and the pay to carrier proportionately less. Thus the rural free delivery system can only be installed in a district where it can be successfully carried on, and if these requirements are not fulfilled, the system cannot be installed until the population increases.

Of the 35,666 carriers employed June 30, 1906, 13,365 were serving routes twenty-five to thirty miles in length, and 7,540 routes of twenty-four miles in length, showing that considerably over one-half of the carriers travel from twenty-four to thirty miles. Of the remaining carriers, 7,536 are performing service on routes from twenty to twenty-four miles in length. It is expected that 45,000 carriers will be employed in this service in the United States in 1908. Assuming that these men travel an average of twenty-three miles per day, it will be seen that 1,035,000 miles will be covered daily in serving the rural districts of the United States. At a low estimate the people thus served would have to travel an average of two miles each time they visited the post office, and as on the average route there are one hundred families, this means the traversing of four hundred miles on each route, or a total for the 45,000 routes of 18,000,000 miles per day, or 5,400,000,000 miles each year. These figures should keep the Minister of Agriculture staggering for some years to come. The saving of time and labour to the farmers of the United States from this service is simply incalculable. The carriers travelling of four miles per hour, so that the average route of twenty-four miles is covered in five or six hours. The average time required for a rural carrier to serve one mile of route, as deduced from a comparative table of eleven representative states, is a few seconds over sixteen minutes, and the cost of such delivery to the government for 1903 was a trifle over 8·1 cents. Surely the cost is not exorbitant ; compared with our mail transportation to country post offices it is entirely reasonable.

After this year rural carriers will deliver books and merchandise not exceeding eleven pounds in weight, mailed at the distributing post office of any rural delivery route for delivery to a patron thereon or if mailed by a patron of any rural delivery route for delivery to a patron thereon or at the distributing post office of said route. This applies to small packages of merchandise, such as foodstuffs, tobacco, dry goods, drugs, &c., and an order to the local merchant by post card, telephone or message will bring the goods to the farmer's door.

The rate of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound up to the limit of eleven pounds is considered ample remuneration for the department, as there is no railway transportation and the packages are delivered by means of a system already established. In this way the rural mail delivery service gives the farmer a parcel post system without interfering with the country merchant, and the large central store, such as Eaton's, in Toronto, would not be able to deliver goods for free delivery on such a route as I have explained.

The total number of pieces of mail delivered in the United States by rural free delivery in 1904, was 906,424,121.

Examinations for the position of rural carriers are held under instructions from the rural carrier Examination Board, and Local Civil Service Examiners and Postmasters. Each mail carrier must give security for $1,000 and the carriers receive all national holidays and Sundays except Christmas. If Uncle Sam can do this work and do it successfully, why cannot we?

I have received communications from farmers in different parts of Canada, some offering to pay any reasonable tax that the government would levy, in return for delivery of mail; others pleading for its establishment. I will quote a few words from one of the letters. This farmer says:

> I lived in Michigan three or four years and had the advantage of rural free delivery while there. Since my return to Canada I have had to travel about 800 miles a year and my farm is closer to the post office than thousands of others. I only lived one and a quarter miles from the post office. The time and energy I have taken going for the mail could be used to great advantage in other directions on my farm.

The statements I have made, from outside sources, should at least be sufficient to call to the attention of the House the importance of this subject. The farmer works from sun to sun. Why should he be compelled to be his own mail carrier? If farmers had rural free delivery, they would write more letters, read more papers, do more business, have more enterprise. For years there has been a rush of population from country to town and city. The glamour and hurry of city life have attracted many to our clouded, smoky and restless cities. Railways, electric wires, telephone, telegraph and rural free delivery and good roads will distribute the population, and the loneliness and isolation of farm life will be banished for ever. The farmer feels the need of communication with the outside world, he cannot get it with the means at his disposal. He must get it through the mail and the government must provide the means. Surely a government with a vote of $135,000,000, as was voted last year, might provide some consideration to the men who pay the bulk of the taxes. The Post Office Department boasts of a surplus of one and a half million last year. What are they going to do with it? Is it asking too much that more generous treatment be given to the farmer, who makes possible through the development of our country the present increased revenue. If the farming community were as well organized as other classes in this country, they would soon force the government's hand. Are they to wait until we have 20,000,000 of a population? Will 20,000,000 of people fill up the sparsely settled and remote districts of Canada ? No, nor twice 20,000,000 ; we will always have a scattered population. Therefore I ask in how much better position the department will be to undertake such a service when we have a population of 20,000,000 than it is to-day?

Are the farming interests to be for ever sacrificed, so that the railroads, canals and public works of this country may be constructed, and the useless expenditure in regard to many of them be continued?

Remember that the farmer of to-day is not the illiterate, non-reading, non-writing non-thinking man that some delight to paint him. The men who are objecting to this service to-day are men who live near a post office and who can get their mail with little effort. The townsman who has his mail delivered three times daily should not object to the farmer receiving his once each day. The mail delivered in this way makes up for lectures, entertainments, libraries and intercourses with the outside world. No class more carefully read and digest all they receive than does the farmer. Rural mail delivery is a child of modern development and you might as well try to turn Niagara back as to stop it. It may be hindered but it will ultimately come.

Sending news and getting news, receiving newspapers, telegrams and periodicals is the greatest medium of an advanced civilization. The newspaper receives the telegrams and telephones from the different parts of the world, and in a few hours the printed sheet is ready for the public.

It starts out on its mission, the wagon at the door is ready to take it to the train, the express carries it seventy-five miles in two hours, on a track that has cut the farmers lands into triangles, and for which they pay, generally speaking, for its maintenance and support and in many instances its building. The paper is taken to the local office in a few moments and ready to deliver to the farmer. Within two hours and a half from the time the press receives the message it is in the town post office. If you have not the rural free delivery, it may remain for days until the farmer calls, after a hard week's work. The newspaper has its money, the railroad its money, the post office or government that rush it on with neatness and despatch will have nothing more to do with it, and after all this outlay of money, brains and care, hurry and bustle, it is left dejected and undone, dumped into a pigeon-hole in a country post office, there to rest for four or five days, and by the time the farmer gets it, he has already sold his hogs and lost $15 on account of not having the latest market reports; it is not worth to him hardly the paper it is printed on. One thousand copies of this old paper would not sell for a copper on Ottawa streets and if a newsboy were found guilty of selling such, except for waste paper, he would be fined. But the farmer must be satisfied with his lot and wait for generations yet unborn to bring him the happy day when rural free delivery will become an established fact in Canada. Let this government do something to take this mail package out of the pigeon hole and do it now. Why give a benefit to cities and towns and not to the rural men?

One may send a letter from Ottawa to Hong Kong, to Australia, to New Zealand, to Ceylon, the Straits Settlement and other far off outposts of the British empire at the same postal charge as it would cost to send a letter home in Ontario. Last year, in 1906, the mail subsidies and steamship subventions amounted to $1,227,000. There is no talk about this system not paying. But when it comes to serving the toiling farmers, the men who pay the large revenues on which the government presume to extend postal arrangements to outside nations, they are told by the Postmaster General it is a luxury and they must wait. They are told by another minister that rural free delivery is a monster. They are told by another that he is staggering now from the thought of it and he does not want the question discussed in the House at all. We pay subsidies to steamships to carry mail to foreign shores and no one objects, but why not give a little consideration to our rural men. If you mail a letter in Canada to a farmer in the United States, he receives it at his door, while if an American farmer mails a letter back to his Canadian farmer, the Canadian has to walk miles to obtain it.

We owe much to the pioneer farmers of this country, the men who have hewn their way into the woods and broken up their homesteads in our great west. We are proud of their achievements, proud of their deeds of valour and heroism, proud of that patriotic spirit that has made them willing at all times to defend the flag. It is their love of this country and their abiding faith in its resources that has brought us up to the prominent position as a nation we hold to-day. Let us be fair with these men. Let us be reasonable. Let us deal out justice to them and I feel confident that if such is done, the nation will be rewarded a thousand fold.

Let us probe the matter of rural free delivery to its fullest extent. It will bear investigation. Let us devote time and attention to solving its merits and I feel confident that if honest and reasonable research is given it that we will find it one of the greatest boons that ever became the property of our nation, and we will hand down to posterity an elevating, refining and intelligent piece of legislation that will ever redown to the honour of the men who established it.

Waiting until we have 20,000,000 of people is a humbug. Life is too short. Let us pin the words 'rural free delivery' to the mast and below it 'Do it now.' I beg to move in amendment:

That the said motion be amended by adding to the proposed address to His Excellency the Governor General the following paragraphs at the end thereof.

We desire to express our respectful regret that more adequate reference has not been made to matters of public interest alluded to in Your Excellency's gracious speech and that other matters of grave public concern have altogether escaped mention therein.

We also humbly desire to express our regret that Your Excellency's gracious speech contains no allusion to the importance of inaugurating a system of rural free mail delivery under which our rural population may enjoy so far as Canada's resources will permit the great advantages in that respect which have been secured to the rural communities of other countries.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). I shall occupy, Mr. Speaker, the time of the House but a very few minutes and shall devote myself mainly to one question of the many which have been raised during this debate. That question is the much discussed but in my judgment the very much misapprehended question of the balance of trade. As regards the plea made by my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Armstrong) for rural mail delivery, his arguments are disposed of by a leading article in one of the leading organs of his party, the Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day. I shall therefore not take up the time of the House in discussing that matter.

The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) took up the greater part of his speech with discussing the balance of trade. He informed us that because our imports largely exceeded our exports, this country was on the eve of financial ruin. We were on the high road, he said, to national bankruptcy, and if he were Minister of Finance, he would quickly change that deplorable condition of affairs. It was bad enough for a member occupying the position in the Conservative ranks which the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) does, to take that stand, but I notice that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) gave expression to the same opinion. I notice also that the hon.

the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) dwelt at some length upon what he called the adverse balance of trade and pointed to it as proof of the business incapacity of this government and particularly of the Finance Minister. Nor was that all. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) moved an amendment in reply to the address to the speech from the Throne, embodying this idea and calling His Excellency's attention to the fact that our imports exceed our exports and that consequently a financial crisis was impending and inevitable. And every member of the opposition voted for that amendment. Well, Mr. Speaker, there could not possibly be a more erroneous opinion or more fallacious reasoning. When the imports of a country exceed its exports, that is proof positive that its foreign trade is healthy and is conducted on profitable lines, and the excess of imports over the exports is a measure—perhaps not a full measure—of the profits made upon its foreign trade. One would have thought that the fact that the imports of all the leading, progressive, commercial nations of the world exceed their exports would be sufficient to show these hon. gentlemen the untenableness of their position, or at all events, would cause them to seriously examine the grounds of their belief.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the case with the United States ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will listen to me——

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) to say that his statement applied to every leading country in the world. Does it apply to the United States ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I made that statement. The hon. member for East Grey, (Mr. Sproule) was not present the other evening when the Minister of Agriculture adduced figures, which were not controverted, to show that all the leading nations of Europe and America—all with the exception, so far as Europe was concerned, of Russia, had imports exceeding their exports. And it is only reasonable to suppose that that would be the condition of affairs. Now, I say that that fact ought to be sufficient to cause these hon. gentlemen to, at all events, seriously examine the grounds of their belief.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman excuse me if I give the figures quoted by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to one nation ? That hon. gentleman said :

> I find that the imports of the United States for 116 years amounted to $37,000,000,000, and the exports to $42,000,000,000, or $5,000,000,000 more than the imports.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I would ask the hon. gentleman for East Grey to listen to my statement, and if I do not convince him that he is wrong, I will be surprised. I say again that the statements and the statistics made and quoted by the Minister of Agriculture were unanswerable. But I will submit one or two concrete illustrations, and I think that, possibly, these will have more effect than a prepared and elaborate argument. I lay down this proposition—that when the imports of a nation exceed its exports that it is trading at a profit, and that the excess of imports ever exports is a measure of the profits of its trade, though, perhaps not a complete measure. I hold myself prepared to prove that statement. Suppose I buy a cargo of wheat in this country, say 100,000 bushels, and for easy computation, let us say that the cost is $1 per bushel, or a total of $100,000. I send that cargo to Great Britain and sell it at a profit of, say 50 cents per bushel. That means that I receive $150,000 for what cost me $100,000. I reinvest that sum in merchandise which I bring to this country. The export entry was $100,000, the import entry will be $150,000. I have made a profitable transaction, and what is profitable to me is profitable to my country. The imports exceed the exports by fifty per cent. That transaction in wheat will hold good as illustrative of the principle in every conceivable commercial transaction and for every commercial commodity and the reverse of that is true; If I sell at a loss, say of 50 cents per bushel, and reinvest what I receive in merchandise and bring it to this country, the import entry will be only one-half of the export entry and I am trading at a loss and the country is trading at a loss. Does the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) find any fault with that statement or that reasoning ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) had better convince the former Finance Minister, Sir Richard Cartwright, a much abler man in finance than the hon. gentleman.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I understand that my hon. friend Mr. Sproule, finds no fault with what I have stated. Now the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) speaking upon this question a few days ago, stated that if a merchant's purchases were greater than his sales, he was doing business at a loss. I think I see what was in the mind of the hon. member when he made that statement. He considered that a merchant's purchases would be analogous to the imports of a nation, and that what he sold analogous to a nation's exports. In that he was quite right. But the hon. member took the second step in his argument before he finished the first, and he ended by finishing neither. But let us finish the step. The goods and money that the merchant gives in exchange for the goods he buys are his exports. Manifestly, then, the less he gives and the more he receives, the more profitable the transaction. Now, take the next step—and I address my remarks on this point particularly to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt)—the merchant's sales are, properly speaking, his exports ; the money and goods he receives in exchange for the goods sold are his imports. Here, again, the more he receives and the less he gives out, the more profitable the transaction. All trade is, in its last analysis, barter ; and it makes no difference whatever whether money is used to facilitate the transaction or not—it does not change the essential nature of the transaction. Some, perhaps, may object to my first illustration by saying that the exporter is not necessarily the importer. Suppose I bring back payments for my cargo in coin or bullion, or—what is more likely—a bill of exchange, it is said that that will make a difference. It makes no difference whatever. For, if I bring in my receipts by a bill of exchange, it will go to my credit with my banker here and to his credit in London, and will enable some other man who is an importer to import a larger bill of goods than he otherwise would if that transaction had not taken place for the simple reason that the country will have the exchange to pay for it. It will enable me, because of my trading profitably, to purchase more of the necessaries and luxuries of life from the man who did import them. If I do not use all the profit on my transaction in buying the necessaries and luxuries of life, the balance will go to swell the accumulated capital of the country. That is the reason I said that the excess of imports over exports might not be the full measure of our profit on our foreign trade, because a portion of it may go to swell the accumulated capital of the country. All profit in trade is made by taking things from where they are relatively cheap to where they are relatively dear. Hence it follows that all the nations of the earth might trade with one another, and the imports of all be greater than the exports of all, paradoxical as that statement might appear at first sight. The weight, the colour, the size of the things transported do not change, but the price changes, and that is the whole cause of the trade. If that were not so, there would be no trade. Does any hon. gentleman find any flaw in these statements, or in the reasons deduced therefrom, and if there is none, I have proved my case. If I have proved it, then I have a right to say that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and supported by the opposition, was crude and silly, and upon examination of it, the members of the opposition must come to that conclusion themselves.

Mr. WM. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). It was not my intention to make any remarks on this subject, but after listening to the speech of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), and his very extravagant statements. I feel it is my duty to say at least a word or two. Hon. members on this side of the House have been paying but little attention to the speeches made by the member for Portage la Prairie because we did not consider they were worthy of reply. But the hon. gentleman has become so bold that I think it is now necessary to take some notice of his remarks.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie, in his opening remarks, paid a compliment to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House for the calm, sincere and dignified manner in which they have conducted this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. Sir, I do not think it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to call attention to that fact, because it has long been known, both in this House and out of it, that when hon. gentlemen on this side of the House rise to speak to any of the issues before it, they do so with calmness, sincerity and dignity. I notice that the hon. gentleman was unable to extend the same congratulations to his own leader and to the ministers who have spoken upon this question. Why did he not congratulate them ? Because the Prime Minister who leads this government, though he had prepared a text, had to revise it ; and he had prepared a brief, I suppose, in order that he might be able to develop that text. But instead of doing what the people of this country would expect him and his colleagues to do, he threw his text aside, and took for his subject the platform of the Liberal Conservative party which was constructed by the leader of the Liberal Conservatives of this country, and the men who sit beside him. This platform, as I say, was constructed by the leader of the opposition, and it was announced upon the platform at Halifax in August last, as the platform upon which the leader of the opposition would speak from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. That platform has been endorsed by every Conservative organization in the Dominion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Not one organization, not one Conservative, and I may say not one honest-thinking Liberal, have found fault with the platform upon which the leader of the opposition is at present appealing to the country.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie had a great deal to say about prosperity. He claimed that this administration deserved the credit for all the prosperity we have been enjoying for the past ten years. He was not willing to attribute to Providence the least credit for any degree of that great prosperity. Replying to the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Elson) the hon. member for Portage la Prairie said :

> The hon. gentleman thinks that Providence has had more to do with our success than anything else. But in my experience I have found that Providence was of very little use to me, or to the people I represent.

Now, Sir, is there any dignity in such a speech as that? Do you find that proper sense of dignity and reverence that should characterize an hon. member in speaking of Providence in this House? The hon. gentleman had a great deal to say about the prosperity that exists in his own particular locality. Well, we are all glad to know that they have good crops there, and that that locality is prosperous. But, I think he should at least give a little credit to Providence for the climatic conditions which have helped to grow and mature the crop, and enable the farmers to harvest and sell them. Since the hon. member would not give credit to Providence, possibly he was able to bring down from the Yukon that great rainmaker we have heard so much about. I have only this to say to the hon. member, that if he had power to bring the great rainmaker from the Yukon to give them the moisture necessary to mature their crops, he should not have been so selfish, he should have been willing to let that rainmaker come a little further south in the province of Manitoba and give a little more moisture to the locality which I have the honour to represent. But the hon. gentleman was not good enough to allow other people in that great western country to get the benefit of the rainmaker that has been employed by this government. The hon. gentleman has no doubt had a very satisfactory crop in his locality where the quality has been good. The price has also been good but, with the exception of the southern portion of Manitoba and Alberta I want to tell the hon. members of this House and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie in particular, that a more damaging frost never struck that great western country than that which visited it during this last year. We might as well deal with facts. The hon. gentleman knows that in the northern part of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta the quality has been so impaired by frost that the grain is almost unsaleable except for fuel. At the beginning of the season there was a fair price paid for this damaged wheat, but we find to-day that the price has been reduced from 75-90 cents to 29-35 cents per bushel. There is not the prosperity and the great amount of money among the farmers of that western country that this hon. gentleman would like to lead the members of this House and the country to believe.

The hon. gentleman, in referring to the speech from the Throne, called it a bill of fare, and in so doing he compared it with a speech in the eighties. If the hon. gentleman had desired to make a fair comparison, if he had wished to tell the people about the conditions that existed in bygone days, he might have gone back to the early seventies. The hon. gentleman would like the members of the House and the people of the country to believe, like all Liberals, that the Liberal party was only born in 1896, but I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the Liberal party was not born in 1896. It was born away back in the early seventies. What was the condition of the country then? As we have been told by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), there were soup kitchens and hard times then. My hon. friend from Brantford has predicted that we are getting back to the same condition of affairs. I only hope that my hon. friend's predictions are wrong. The condition of affairs in the early seventies was such that it demanded a change of policy. It demanded that the government of that day should inaugurate and carry out a policy that would change the condition of the country; and, Sir, which was the party that was able to successfully bring about that result? Delegation after delegation, as history shows, waited upon the government of the day and asked them to do something to remedy the condition that then prevailed, but they were told by Sir Richard Cartwright, as an hon. gentleman has stated to-day, that if they wanted the condition of affairs to change they would have to go home, work harder and eat less. The Conservatives of that day framed a policy, they appealed to the people upon that policy, and the result was that the people took that policy and considered it, as they are considering the policy of the Conservatives to-day, they went to the polls, they voted upon it, and the Conservative party were entrusted with the inauguration and operation of the great national policy, the policy which is in operation at the present time, and to which policy is due the great financial prosperity that this country has enjoyed for the last ten years.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie also had something to say about taxation. I do not think that his argument requires any answer, because he answered it himself. He said that we are being taxed to a greater extent than we were at the time this government took office. The true basis upon which to make this calculation would be to take the per capita taxation, and if the hon. gentleman looks into the statistics he will find that at the time this government took office the taxation per capita was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5, while to-day it is almost $12.

The hon. gentleman had a great deal to say about the immigration policy of this country. He referred particularly to the class of settlers that we are getting in the west. He had a great deal to say about the Americans who are settling up our country. I quite agree with every word of praise that the hon. gentleman uttered of the American settlers who are coming into our country. They are settlers who have had experience in developing the prairies to the south of us, they come to our country, not only with experience, but with some financial substance, and in a few years they are able to make great progress. But when the hon. gentleman was making reference to the good class of American settlers, why did he not tell us about the European settlers who are getting into this country? Why did he not tell us about the religious fanatics, the Doukhobors, who, not later than last summer, left their respective villages well shod and well clad, journeyed through the province, yes, right through the constituency of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, until their shoes were worn out and their clothes were not sufficient to cover them? Why did not the hon. gentleman tell this House about that class of immigration that we are getting into this country? Why did he not tell us that after they had walked miles and miles they reached the city of Winnipeg, that the citizens of Winnipeg appealed to the government of this country to take care of these immigrants that they had fathered and nursed for years, and that the government told them they would have nothing to do with them, the result of which was that the poor unfortunate immigrants had to be fed and cared for by the good people of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman might have told the House about the amount of money that was expended at the time that the late Conservative government were in power. He remembers well that the hon. members who were then in opposition found great fault with the government of the day for expending $120,000 for the purpose of bringing immigrants into our country, but to-day we find that this government are expending not thousands, but millions of dollars. And where does it go? In those days we did not have a North Atlantic Trading Company. We find that the government of this country has given the North Atlantic Trading Company, $350,000, and more to bring immigrants into this country, and that while we have given that amount of money the people are getting no value for it. In those days we did not have immigration agents such as Jackson, or a Preston, or a Philip Wagner. We had honest men acting for us then, and with $120,000 a year expenditure we were able to prove that this was a desirable country for settlers, and I believe we got just about as many settlers then as we do now, the difference being that the settlers in these days were of a better class. What we want in our immigrants is quality, not quantity.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) had a great deal to say about the money stringency, and he told us it was easier to borrow money from the banks of that western country to-day than it was ever before. I am pleased that such is the experience of the hon. gentleman. I am pleased that he is able to go to the banks of his own particular town, as he tells us, and get more money than he was ever able to get before. But while that may be true with regard to himself, I can tell him that it is not the condition of affairs generally throughout the west. I can mention specific cases right in my own locality where men have gone to the bank this year, and where I have gone and pleaded for them myself; men who a year ago could go to the same bank and borrow on their own note from $3,000 to $5,000 for temporary loan or for a whole year if they wanted it, but these same men cannot do that to-day. I know a man who this year went to the bank with better security than he had a year ago; he not only offered his own signature but the signature of a man equally responsible; he wanted to borrow $1,200 or $1,300 as a temporary loan but the bank told him the instructions were that they were not to loan one single cent. I can tell the House that this gentleman to whom I refer is in as sound a financial position as any farmer in southern Manitoba, and yet he was unable to borrow a single dollar this year. In face of this, the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) announces that there is no financial stringency and no lack of money. But the Minister of Finance does not agree with the hon. member (Mr. Crawford). The hon. gentleman will remember that the subsidized Winnipeg 'Free Press,' which is the organ of the government, announced in big headlines some time ago that the Minister of Finance was going to supply the necessary money to handle the crop and thus relieve the financial depression. How does the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) reconcile his statement with that announcement. Only a few days ago the Minister of Finance is recorded as saying on the floor of this House:

> Mr. Fielding made a statement in regard to the financial conditions of the Dominion. There is at present, he said, outstanding a temporary loan of £500,000 bearing interest at the rate of four and a half per cent. In addition there is an overdraft of £301,000 in the Bank of Montreal at London which bears interest at the current Bank of England rate. During the next year there are falling due £1,500,000 due in April and £4,500,000 due in November, respectively. Mr. Fielding stated that the government has been in communication with the Canadian financial agent in London in regard to them, but in view of the financial stringency he has decided to take no action towards their liquidation at present.

We have here the admission of the Minister of Finance that there is a financial stringency in the west, but the member for Portage la Prairie does not seem to know about it. The hon. member (Mr. Crawford) had a great deal to say about the transportation question, and he told us that in the part of the province that he represents, hundreds of farmers had shipped carloads of grain in October last and that the grain had not yet reached Fort William. That may be true as regards the hon. gentleman's constituency and if it be true then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) is recreant in his duty to his constituents in not appealing to the railway corporations to relieve this congestion, or in not applying to the Railway Commission for relief. I can tell the hon. gentleman that if such a thing as that happened in relation to my locality, I would not sit quietly down as he does, but I would take strenuous measures to have relief granted. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) had a few words to say as to public ownership of telegraphs and telephones, and I was surprised to hear him state that he did not think this question was deserving of any consideration. Does he forget what he had to say and do with this same question less than a year ago? Does he remember being at an executive meeting with the leader of the opposition in the Manitoba legislature, Mr. Brown, last February in Winnipeg; does he remember that that convention considered the public ownership of telephones and telegraphs in Manitoba, and that next morning their organ, the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' announced that they were willing to go a step further than the Roblin government; that they were not willing to leave it to the municipalities to say whether they would have public owned telephones or not, but that they were going to force it upon the municipalities and construct telephones all over the province. It was that policy which the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) was advocating throughout Manitoba not later than March last. Why has he changed his mind? In so far as his announced opinions on the telephone question are concerned now, and in so far as the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman goes, it requires no further reference from me. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) had also a great deal to say about the election law in the province of Manitoba. I do not purpose taking up the time of the House now in discussing the Manitoba Franchise Act, but when the discussion on that question does come before parliament I can promise the member for Portage la Prairie that he will have data which will explain the true facts of the cases he mentions, and that this data will not be clippings from the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the subsidized organ of the Liberal party.

The best tribute I can pay to the election law of Manitoba is to quote the opinion of the leader of the opposition in the legislative assembly in Manitoba. Mr. Michel stated upon the floor of that House that it was the best election law that was ever placed upon the statute-book, and the only objection he had to find with it was that it was somewhat costly in operation. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie said that if that law was in force at the time of the next general federal election, there would not be a Liberal returned to this House. I wish to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if that law is in existence and is fully enforced and the honest electorate of that province have a chance to express their true convictions, not one Liberal will be returned; but if that election law is to be handled as it was in the last general election, if the lists that are prepared by this government are to be taken up to the province of Manitoba and handed over to Leitch, Ayot and Ingram and others of that class, the expression of the will of the people of Manitoba may be prevented. The lists when received there were taken into private chambers, these gentlemen dipped their pens into red ink and disfranchised hundreds and hundreds of the honest electors of that country as the hon. gentleman well knows. Sir, if the people of Manitoba are allowed to carry out the intent of that law and the electors get a chance to express their views by ballot there will not be, as I said before, one Liberal returned to this House.

What was the condition of affairs on the morning of the election, November 3, 1904? I was in the polling booth in my own particular town, and when the box was unlocked the list looked as though it had been dipped in blood. I said to the deputy returning officer, what does this mean, what does it signify? He smiled, and said: It signifies danger—and danger it was, because we had the electors coming to that poll, as to every other poll in that province, coming to the places where some of them had been accustomed to vote for the last twenty years, and they were told that their names had been struck off the list at that polling place and that they would have to seek some other place to cast a ballot. This was the condition all over that province, on that particular election day.

I well remember two electors, at this poll, applying for a ballot as they had always done. They were told that they were not on the list there and were driven to five other polls, but eventually they came back to the first polling place and asked the right to cast their ballots. I appealed to the deputy returning officer. I said: Here you are, a member of the church in this town; you have known these gentlemen for years and years; you know that they are entitled to the right to cast their ballot; what are you going to do? Finally he said: Well it is pretty hard, it is more than my conscience will allow me to do to refuse them a ballot—and they were allowed to cast their ballots. But in many other polling places this right was not so granted and the honest electors were disfranchised. The night before my own election, my opponent and his colleagues said: We have Staples beaten and he does not know how. I admit that I did not know how, but, Sir, when that list was brought to my attention on the morning of the election, I concluded that I and every other Conservative candidate in Manitoba would be beaten—and the surprise to me to-day is that there is one of us here. In the constituency of Macdonald, they disfranchised some 360 honest electors; they went it pretty strong but not quite strong enough.

The hon. member never speaks in this House without having something to say about the Roblin administration. He deals with small things. He deals with things of which I am free to say he has not much knowledge or he would not advance the arguments he has used upon the floor of this House. Why does the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) not deal with some of the big things the Roblin government has been able to effect? Why does he not speak of the railway policy of the Roblin government, of that policy which has given back to the farmers of Manitoba —and he is one of them and has received the benefit—thousands, yes hundreds of thousands of dollars? They have reduced the rates as he well knows and the result is that the people of Manitoba have received a great advantage. But what was the policy of this government when they were making a contract, as the Roblin government did, with a railway company? They assured the people of Manitoba that they would receive special benefits in the way of legislation when the contract for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific was entered into. Did they insert in that contract a clause similar to that imposed by the Roblin government in their contract with the Canadian Northern? No. This government was asked in a resolution moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) seconded by the then hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) that the same clause should be inserted in the contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific, but the majority of this government came in as usual and voted that resolution down. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) might have told this House that the government of Manitoba in the last freight tariff which they sent over to the Canadian Northern reduced the rate on coarse grains to that on wheat. He might have told this House and this country that the people of Manitoba have received a great advantage from this reduction. The day after this tariff was submitted to the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific Railway inaugurated the same rate. Has that been any advantage to the province of Manitoba? Yes it has been an advantage to the extent of about $280,000 to the farmers of that province. It has been an advantage not only to the province of Manitoba, but to the western provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta; these provinces have each received an advantage of about $110,000 per annum. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie has referred to a matter which I noticed in the speech from the Throne, that is the boundary question. I am glad to know that at last this government has seen fit to announce that at this session of parliament some degree of justice will be done to the province of Manitoba. This question has been taken very seriously by the citizens of Manitoba for many years. They have employed every argument and exerted every effort to induce this government to extend the boundaries of Manitoba, and we are told in the speech from the Throne that this question is going to be dealt with during the present session. While, if that is the case, I want to tell the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows), the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) and the seven Liberal members opposite, that this is not the time this question should be dealt with. This is not the opportune time for doing justice to the citizens of Manitoba. The time to have dealt with the boundary extension of that province was when the autonomy legislation was going through this House. When the legislation creating the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta was submitted to this House, then was the time to do justice to Manitoba; and if the representatives from that province supporting the government had exercised the influence they then had we should have had an Act passed giving our province extension westward. But what do we find? We find that these hon. gentlemen, on being told by their leader to sit up and be good or they would be chastised, were brought into proper submission by the threat. I well remember the ex-premier of Manitoba, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) sitting in his seat, rolling his fingers slicking his whiskers and dusting his coat and not saying a word. I admit that it was pretty hard for him to take the medicine, but he had to take it. It was so hard at one time that after he had voted he shuffled out by the back door. Out of the back door he made his exit, notwithstanding the musical strains of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) singing: 'Tommy, dear Tommy, don't go.' But he went. It may be that he had a promise of preferment. It may be that all these members from Manitoba who voted with the government were promised favours. They may have been told that they would get a senatorship, a judgeship or a lieutenant governorship. Well, if there is any man in this House who has qualified up to the standard raised by this administration in order to entitle a member to a judgeship, a lieutenant governorship or a senatorship, it is the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). That hon. gentleman was wont to go up and down the province of Manitoba and throughout this Dominion shouting: 'Hands off Manitoba; equal rights and equal justice for all.' But what was he willing to do when this autonomy legislation was going through?

An hon. MEMBER. Anything.

Mr. STAPLES. Anything. He also preached: 'Free lands for the settlers.' But no doubt he has been promised a senatorship or a judgeship, just as my other friends from Manitoba may have been promised a senatorship, a timber berth or a snag boat; and for those petty things they were willing to sell the birthright of the people of Manitoba. The people of Manitoba hold these seven Liberals who sat behind the leader of this government responsible for the fact that we then did not get justice and were debarred from the extension we are entitled to. I have noticed the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) appearing at times in his seat opposite very much annoyed. Then he would apparently be cheered up. I suppose at this particular time he was enlivening his mind with some of the beautiful campaign poetry that he himself composed and which was used in the province of Manitoba. It is very amusing to read it. I have some of it here.

An hon. MEMBER. Sing it.

Mr. STAPLES. I am only sorry the rules of the House will not permit me to sing it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Song, song.

Mr. STAPLES. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that probably some time when we are waiting for the whips to come in and take a vote, I may give them a bar.

LIBERAL MARCH.

Men and Liberals, ye whose action,
Put to rout the Tory faction,
In their ranks spread wild distraction
Vanquished all their bands!
Follow still the chiefs who led ye,
Keep your ranks still firm and steady,
Keep your swords still sharp and ready,
Ready to your hands!

Chorus.

Shoulder press to shoulder,
Onward march and bolder
Triumphs more we yet shall see
Before we are much older.
Railways, trade and education
Be our aspiration,
Till we win them for the nation,
And our land be free!

I will give you another:

Honest principles inspire us;
Calls of noble leaders fire us;
In the struggle naught should tire us
Till the work is done.
Every man in combat straining,
Foot by foot the vantage gaining,
Till the people's cause is reigning
And the victory won.

Chorus.

Greenway's government shall rule us,
Men like these will lead, not school us,
Tory tricks no more shall fool us,
We've a better way!

Equal rights all shall be sharing,
Equal burdens all be bearing,
Each for all, for all each caring,
Speed the happy day!

Chorus.

I have three or four more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. STAPLES. Well, I shall give you another. I know you all could join in the chorus, because it is the old familiar tune, 'Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching':

With a loud and ringing cheer,
Which will echo far and near,
Let us hail the noble chieftain of our land,
For he lives to see the day
When the clouds have passed away,
And prosperity shines over all the land.

Chorus.

Give three ringing cheers for Greenway,
Grand old chieftain of our band!
For he lives to see the day
When the clouds have passed away,
And contented men are working on the land.

With a brave and honest heart,
He hath borne a noble part,
And the people's truest friend hath ever been;
Always foremost in the fight,
For the cause of truth and right,
Ever faithful to his country and his Queen.

Chorus.

Give three ringing cheers for Greenway, &c.

But there is here another stanza I think should be read for the benefit of this House. It is another poem. I shall tell the right hon. gentleman at whose cost these were printed before I sit down. I am sorry I cannot do the darkey act very well, but this song is headed: 'Campaign Song,' to the tune of 'There will be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night':

Come along, get you ready, don't be long comin' down,
For dere's gwine to be a meetin' in dis good, good old town,
Where de 'lectors know de speakers, and de speaker all know you,
And you've got to vote right or you'll be de hoodoo.
When you hear Tom Greenway make his speech,
The Grits all say, 'Oh, ain't he just a peach!'
And he makes the Tories want to yell and screech,
There'll be a hot time in de old town to-night.
You Liberals.

Chorus.

When you hear de 'lections am at hand,
Grits quit work all over de land,
And the chorus of the Liberals will sound grand,
There'll be a hot time in the old town to-night.

One more stanza let me read, and then I will discontinue:—

Some connection with the British is their heavy battle cry,
But they always talk of that when they winked the other eye;
Now they know that Wilfy Laurier give de British Preference Pie,
And the trade with Johnny Bull is mounting pretty high.

Such 'loyal' talk would give us all a pain,
And when they get a chance of power again,
They'll find this people talking pretty plain, and
There'll be a hot time in the old town that night.

Now I want to tell the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the people of this country are beginning to think and talk pretty plain, and when the elections come on, he will find that the platform he has been trying to belittle is a sound one; he will find that its declarations touch a sore spot. It is making the right hon. gentleman and his followers dance; and it will continue to make them dance until they are waltzed across the floor of the House by the people of this country and relegated to the benches on your left, Mr. Speaker, where they always belonged.

Mr. BENNETT. Who prints that poetry?

Mr. STAPLES. This poetry that I have just sung——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. STAPLES—or, I should say, recited, was printed by the poor deaf and dumb students in the Institute in the city of Winnipeg, and was paid for with the money of the people of Manitoba. I say, as Premier Roblin of Manitoba said, when speaking at Carmen, 'It was enough to make a bronze statue weep. What a spectacle! the public money being used to print defiled English.' This was done by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) ex-premier for the province of Manitoba, who, as I have said, has been made to sit up in this House and submit to the wishes of the Prime Minister and his followers so far as the boundaries of Manitoba are concerned. Now, we must have this Bill before us before we can discuss it intelligently. When it is brought down, I shall be only too glad to support it, provided it gives to Manitoba the justice to which she is entitled. I only ask justice, and I do not ask that injustice be done to any other province. But, as I have said, justice to Manitoba demands that her boundaries shall be extended not only northward and eastward, but westward also. And, as already stated, if the hon. gentlemen opposite representing the province of Manitoba had continued the demands they at one time made, justice would have already been done to their province. As I have said, we do not know what that Bill will contain. The only forecast we have had is that given by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson). We all know the hon. gentleman. A couple of years ago, when there was a by-election in Manitoba, the hon. gentleman folded his map, packed his grip and hurried to the constituency in which the election was to be held. He hung his map up on the wall and, assuming his official air, and taking a pointer in hand, with a few scientific flourishes, such as he alone is capable of, informed the people exactly what the province was to get in the way of boundaries. I asked the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he gave the hon. member for Selkirk authority to make that statement. However, we will wait with patience—although, I must confess, with some anxiety—to know what the Bill is to contain. But, as I have said, if, when it comes down, it gives to the people of Manitoba the justice to which they are entitled I shall be only too glad to support that Bill in every way. But let me say to my hon. friends from the province of Manitoba, sitting upon the government side of the House: We, the people of Manitoba, expect, when this Bill comes down, that you will not allow yourselves to be set aside as you were when the autonomy legislation was before the House. Now, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), in the course of his remarks, the other day, said that they had prepared for us at a future day another dose. I do not know what the hon. gentleman had in mind. He spoke of crookedness and dishonesty. He came very close to the border line, and I want to tell the hon. gentleman that if he continues to make such accusations as he has been making, he may get a dose that will be very hard for him to digest. Now, in conclusion, let me repeat that all I have to say is that we are anxious only that justice shall be done to the province of Manitoba in the way of extension of her boundaries, and that what is given shall be given without constitutional limitations.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Before I resume discussion of the subject before the Chair, I would like to throw out a suggestion to the honourable leaders of the House that they try an experiment some of those days in the method of conducting discussions on these great public question. I would suggest that after the pawn the light-armed artillery had succeeded in demolishing each other, the knights and the bishops of debate be moved forward to take their places, and then the heavy guns be brought to the front, who would succeed in patching up the scattered arguments and in piecing them together in proper shape so as to make a fair presentment to the great jury of this House. Under present conditions the heavyweights of debate come first, and after they have pretty fairly exhausted the subject, the middleweights take their place, and after they have got through the lightweights are brought forward. As a rule, Mr. Speaker, when a new and inexperienced member gets up, the subjects are pretty well exhausted. About all has been said that can be said, and better said than he can hope to say it. He generally has the inspiration, if so it may be called, of addressing his remarks to empty benches, particularly on the other side of the House, sometimes to a few tired members, and not infrequently to the reporters gallery when the reporters have grown tired and have gone for a little diversion or have become utterly weary and gone home.

Now to return to the question before the Chair. Reference has been made to the existing condition of trade in Canada, and as that matter has an intimate relation to the subject under discussion, I may be pardoned for examining it a few minutes. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), addressing this House the other day, pointed out the adverse balance of trade against Canada and raised a warning note with regard to it. He directed the attention of the government to existing conditions with the view that they should endeavour to rectify those conditions, so far as that can be done by legislative or administrative action. The hon. gentleman was criticised in this House as having tried to create a panic in this country. I cannot help thinking that such criticism comes with very bad grace from certain hon. gentlemen opposite who, a few years ago, traversed this country from Halifax to Vancouver crying blue ruin. Up and down the side line and concession, in the House and out of it, on the platform and in the press, in season and out of season, in wet and dry, cold and heat, on every occasion, they were crying blue ruin. They kept this up for many years, until they finally succeeded in bringing about a condition of affairs that might well be described as unsatisfactory. However, I do not think we have had in late years in Canada anything that might be described as blue ruin, and I hope we have not such a condition of affairs just now. But, Sir, hon. members of the government, led by that old knight of blue ruin, have done something infinitely worse than cry blue ruin. They started out on a deliberate campaign in this country to set class against class, to set individual against individual, to set the manufacturer against the artisan and the artisan against the manufacturer, to set the farmer against those with whom he dealt, and they kept up that miserable propaganda for many years. I hold, Sir, that they are open to censure by every right thinking Canadian for the course they pursued in this regard. But, Sir, the discussion has been useful inasmuch as it has cleared up certain matters in the mind of the great public with regard to the policy of the government. We did not clearly understand until a few days ago that an adverse balance of trade was a splendid thing, and that the government of this country had been bending their energies in that direction. It is true, there are certain other men who make some pretension to a knowledge of financial affairs who do not look at the subject in quite the same light. For instance, the president of the Bank of Montreal a few days ago, in referring to the excess of imports over exports, stated, as reported in the daily press, that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, the excess of imports over exports was $118,760,000 ; and he used these words which I commend to the attention of the government :

> The balance has to be liquidated sooner or later.

The Toronto 'Globe,' a couple of months ago, having some anxiety with regard to the existing condition of affairs, found it necessary to direct the attention of its readers to the subject and to allay public uneasiness, by stating that this condition of affairs was only temporary, that matters would soon rectify themselves, and we would get back our balance of trade. But it appears now from what has been said by the Minister of Agriculture that that is not likely to happen, and according to the views of the government it would be a calamity to this country if we should ever get into such a position as that our exports would equal our imports. If an adverse balance of $118,000,000 was a proof that our condition was satisfactory, we have a further evidence of prosperity since that day, because our adverse balance has now reached the figure of $122,000,000 ; that is to say if the Minister of Agriculture and the rest of the government are right, we are $3,000,000 better off now than we were when the first statement was made. The Minister of Agriculture, dealing with that matter the other day, took my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) severely to task for desiring to see exports equal to imports and he asked : Does the hon. member for Brantford wish to emulate Russia ? Russia is a country that has more exports than imports. Of course the hon. gentleman might have mentioned one or two other countries, but I suppose he did not think that they were of any consequence. He might have mentioned Great Britain and he might have mentioned the United States ; but he did not see fit to do so. It will be a revelation to the people of Great Britain and to the great financiers of the United States to learn that they have been working on wrong lines, that they are courting disaster and I have no doubt that when they come to read the speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture they will immediately set about to alter their policy and work it out on the lines that have been suggested by the same minister because we know that he is a great authority, a man that can give advice to any member of the government. In matters financial he is ready to speak for them. He can direct the affairs of the Militia Department, and he can direct all matters pertaining to the postal affairs of this country, as well as have everything connected with the Department of Agriculture at his finger ends. I presume that he must be the most level headed man in the House. He ought to be because, as has been already stated in the debate, he parts his hair in the middle. That is probably the greatest effort we see in that direction.

Now, Sir, it has been claimed by the government that they have been instrumental in bringing about whatever measure of good times Canada has been enjoying and my hon. friend from East Middlesex (Mr. Elson), in dealing with that subject a few days ago saw fit to give credit to Divine Providence for contributing the very good crops that have helped to make reasonably good times in Canada. He was immediately brought to book by hon. members on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) got after him in these words :

> The hon. gentleman thinks that Providence has had more to do with our success than anything else, but in my experience I have found that Providence was of very little use to me or to the people I have had to deal with.

Probably his intercourse has been confined to the government for some time past.

> My experience is that where success and prosperity exist it is to be found among the people who help themselves.

I will give the hon. gentleman this credit by saying that there are evidently other members of the House who accept the same doctrine. If we look over the Saskatchewan land deal, the Robbins Irrigation deal, the various leases of land that have been made out there, the Blairmore townsite steal and the accumulation of vast timber areas under conditions that will hardly bear investigation, we are irresistibly driven to the conclusion that there are others who are guided by the motto that 'The Lord Helps those who help themselves.' But a good deal depends, when we use these mottoes, as to the interpretation and application of them and I would advise that hon. gentleman to look into this matter a little because there is just a possibility that the inspiration that has helped him in this interpretation may have come from the bottomless pit and not from above.

The claim of the government that they have been instrumental in bringing good times to Canada will stand looking into a little. I have no doubt that they have reiterated this so much that they have succeeded in making themselves believe that they had something to do with it. But I feel like giving them some credit. I think they have done something towards bringing about good times in Canada. One of the principal things for which I would feel like giving them credit is that they have not put into effect after they came into power the policy which they advocated while in opposition. That puts me a little in mind of a boy's composition on whisky. It started off like this : Whisky has saved thousands of people's lives. When called upon to give an explanation it went something like this : Whisky has saved thousands of people's lives by people not drinking it and killing themselves. If the government have, to some extent, saved the situation in Canada it has been along the same lines ; that they have not put into effect the policy that they advocated, in opposition, which would have killed Canada. In regard to the claim that they have been instrumental to some extent in bringing good times to Canada, I am reminded of an old gentleman who, a few years ago, lived in the constituency I represent. He was a very quiet and inoffensive man but he used to take a little too much to drink sometimes. Two men of grosser calibre got into a row after which one of them displayed a discoloured optic. A wag made the old gentleman believe that he had something to do with bringing about that result although he was not within gun shot of the place and he was surprised to find next morning that he was responsible for giving another citizen of the town a black eye. The old gentleman spent a great deal of time in going around explaining to his friends that he must have struck harder than he knew and that his provocation must have been great. He was thoroughly convinced that he must have done it and it was not without a little pride that he mentioned the circumstance. I have no doubt that the members of the government have told the thing so often that they really have come to believe themselves that they had something to do with bringing good times to Canada. But, they have been repeatedly challenged to point to the particular piece of legislation or the particular Act of administration which has in some measure contributed to good times in this country. So far they have been unable to point to a particular Act. I had lived in hope that at some time, on some occasion, somewhere, some member of the government or some supporter of theirs would rise in this place or somewhere else and enlighten the public upon this question. But, I have just about given up hope that I will ever witness the attempt. They ought to pick out the particular piece of legislation and, reasoning from cause to effect, show the people of the country just what they have done so that we may emulate them in future. I hope that at some time some of them will give us a little light upon this subject. So far we are unaware of any such piece of legislation.

Now, dealing with the question again of depression in this country, it is well for us as reasoning citizens and members of this House to look into this question and see what the causes really are. To my mind one of the contributory causes is the shortness of crops. Another cause that apparently has not been very much considered by the members of this House is the great drain on the resources of Canada that is constantly going on to keep up the markets in Wall Street, the kings of the wheat pit in Chicago and other speculative interests. I believe that the drain in this respect is more widespread than the public generally realizes, and I think it is the duty of every member of this House and every public man in Canada, to direct attention to the matter. I believe that Canada contributes very largely to the lambs that are annually slaughtered to keep up these same financial magnates. I believe that if the money lost in this way were gathered together and put into one great aggregate sum, it would startle the people of this Dominion.

Another thing which has drained the resources of Canada is this reckless mining speculation which has sunk a vast amount of money in the Cobalt region and other regions of a like nature. It has been stated that a mine usually consists of a hole in the ground and one or more liars around and about it, and I believe that the general public as a rule realize very little out of the money sunk in ventures of that kind. Certain of the press have raised their warning voice, but I have no doubt that many gentlemen of the press have put their money in such ventures and that this fact has to some extent paralysed the arm that held the pen. I believe that ministers of the gospel should raise a warning voice, some of them have, but there are quite a number of them who have not, because they like other members of the community have been caught by this get-rich-quick microbe and it has silenced their tongues.

I want to say a word or two with regard to the trade policy of the government because after all that is very important. We are told that the magnitude of our export trade is a guarantee of the soundness of our fiscal policy, and the members of the government and those who support them delight to take the sum total of our exports and our imports and they roll the total volume of trade under their tongues as a sweet morsel, and they point to it as proof positive that Canada is progressing on right lines. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the temerity to take issue with that conclusion. To my mind it is not true that Canada is adopting the wisest course in this matter. Let me give an illustration. Suppose a cattle rancher or a farmer dealing in cattle in Alberta has cattle to sell; he rounds them up at considerable expense, gets them to some place where he can ship them, gets them loaded on a train and they start on their long journey. They are taken at very great expense to Montreal; somebody has to accompany the train and look after that stock; they have to be rested and watered and they are removed from the car; they have to be fed and handled at a good deal of expense and finally they are loaded on the steamer at Montreal. Then some one has to accompany them across the Atlantic; they have to stand the rigours of the ocean voyage, and generally some of them die in transit. They have to be landed at some market of the old nations of the world; they have to be looked after there for some time before they are fit to be slaughtered; their value is reduced a great deal; they are many pounds less in weight than when they started on their journey, and all the incidental expenses have to be borne. Now, I hold that this is not an ideal condition of things. I think a better market could be procured than away on the other side of the earth; I hold that we can convert Calgary into a Birmingham and Edmonton into a Manchester; that we can take the other towns such as Medicine Hat, Strathcona, Red Deer, Lacombe, High River, Macleod, Pincher Creek and convert them into manufacturing centres. We can provide a market right at home, and it is my view that the home market is the best under all conditions. I think it would be wise policy for the government of this country to bend their energies in that direction, but apparently the government takes an opposite view. The government seems to imagine that the further away a market is and the more expensive it is to get there, the better it is. That seems to be their settled policy. After the people of Canada, at an enormous expense have reached that foreign market with all its disabilities they get back what little profit is left for them and they put it in their pocket for the moment. Then the farmer and others scrape around and they add to that the little money they have made at home, the money their wives have made out of the butter and eggs, and they scrape on until they get the last dollar and then they send it over to the United States to purchase goods manufactured in that country and on which they have the freight rates with all the incidental expenses to bring into Canada. Now, that may be an admirable condition of affairs in the mind of the government, but I am bound to say that it is just about as nearly as possible opposed to common sense as it can very well be. However, the members of the government delight in picturing to the farmers of this country the beauties of an arrangement like that. Indeed, we cannot always tell what the government really does mean. We did not know until the other day—even though they have been occupying the treasury benches for some years—what a splendid thing it was for Canada to have an adverse balance of trade. Such a declaration from the government is not without its compensation; that I am bound to admit. It is a very nice thing for the farmer of Ontario or the west whose crop has been damaged by drouth or frost, and who finds that when he comes to sum up things at the end of the year and pay his help that he is a little behind and has to go to the bank and draw the little savings that he has there. Of course he would be feeling blue about that, but after he has read the great speech of the Minister of Agriculture he will be satisfied he is on the right lines and on the high road to prosperity. And the merchant who has been buying a lot of goods and has done his annual stock taking and finds that he has bought a good deal more than he has been able to sell, and who has no more goods on the shelf and no more money in the bank and has had anxious days and sleepless nights, when such a merchant reads the beautiful speech of the Minister of Agriculture he will realize that he will very soon —if he keeps on in that line—be a millionaire; if he does not get into bankruptcy in the meantime. A good deal which is hardly worth following has been said by members on the government side. The hon. gentleman from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. J. J. Hughes) referred to this question and proved to his own satisfaction that Canada is realizing enormously on this adverse balance of trade. He says that by subtracting the value of our exports from the value of our imports, we arrive at the amount of money that we have made in the year, and that in all probability we have made a great deal more than that amount. Our total sales have been a little over $238,000,000 in the last year and according to the hon. gentleman's way of thinking the difference of $122,000,000 between that and our imports is profit that we have made on that amount of business and there are other profits in addition to that, according to his reasoning. Some of the great financial institutions of this country are making a serious mistake in not having that gentleman on their board of directors. Any bank governed by that hon. gentleman would have no shortage of money; it would have such a large cash balance that it would be able to relieve any stringency in the Canadian money market without any trouble whatever.

The farmers of the United States are in a better position than the farmers of Canada. In visiting relatives engaged in the farming business in that country a little time ago, I discussed this question with a gentleman there. He pointed to a large market wagon capable of carrying a couple of tons, and said: I can load that with perishable produce from my place, drive it into the market town and dispose of it for cash in twenty minutes. I replied: In an ordinary town in Ontario a man driving in with a load like that could peddle it from Dan to Beersheba and then he would have to truck it off in some of the stores, but he would still have to take some of it back to his farm. I asked him how it was that he could dispose of it as he said, and he replied: The explanation is very plain. We do all our manufacturing for the United States in our own country, we do a large part of the manufacturing for Canada, and we do a good deal of the manufacturing for the rest of the world; that means that we have large towns, very large centres which create a market right at home for the farming community. That, I think, is a position of affairs infinitely better for the farmer than the condition in this country.

The hon. gentleman has pointed out that farmers are coming from certain sections in the United States into Canada to benefit by our free lands. I am prepared to admit that there are a large number of farmers coming from the United States to Canada, but they are coming from that portion of the United States that has not yet been filled with manufactories to the same extent as the middle and eastern States. But we have not nearly as many farmers coming from over there as the figures given by hon. gentlemen opposite would indicate. Prior to the taking of the last census in the Northwest figures were compiled by the government and according to these tables there should have been a larger number of people there than was found there by those taking the census. According to their figures 300,000 people had got lost. I have very little confidence in the method used in securing those figures. I had occasion some time ago, when coming up from St. Paul to Winnipeg to cross the boundary line. I had met some gentlemen from the other side of the line who were going up to Canada to speculate in Canadian lands; there was not one homesteader or settler in the party. At the boundary one gentleman answered the question put by the officer for all the rest. I asked this gentleman afterwards what the question put to him was, and he replied that the officer asked them if they were American settlers; the gentleman answered that they were, and consequently they were all put down as settlers coming from the United States. That is about the care exercised in compiling the figures given to us from time to time. On another occasion I was going from Fort William to Winnipeg. An officer in uniform came into the car and made certain inquiries in regard to the destination of the people. All the information that he seemed to require was an answer to the question whether you were going to Winnipeg. We were nearly all going there, as there was really no other place to go, and I have no doubt we were all put down as settlers going to that northwestern country on account of the answers given to that question. I ascertained the calling and destination of the various people in the car, and there was not one settler among them. There were half a dozen commercial travellers going there to take orders; a woman with a couple of children who had been visiting her parents at Fort Francis and who was going to Minneapolis; an old gentleman who had been on a trip to buy potatoes and was returning to the west; an old man and an old lady, a couple of boys and a girl and a young man, members of a troupe who had been giving dime shows, they were from the State of Iowa. They had a couple of trick dogs with them and I presume they were all put down, dogs and all, as settlers going up into that northwestern country. We are told that the population of Canada is increasing by leaps and bounds. I have shown you some of the sources from which the figures are derived, the figures which have enabled hon. gentlemen opposite to arrive at the conclusions which they announced to us.

I wish to point out that our emigration to the United States to-day is probably equal to the number of people coming to Canada from the United States. During the last ten years I am confident there is not a year in which there have not been as many going from Canada to the United States as coming from the United States to Canada. We have a constant stream of emigration going out of this country to the adjoining republic, composed of the cream of our young men and women, who find over there a diversity of employment which they cannot find at home. Our young women cross the line to become nurses in the hospitals, to take charge of or work in millinery and dressmaking establishments, to become domestic servants, and in time the majority of them marry American citizens and will become the mothers of future generations in the United States. This thing is constantly going on, hon. gentlemen opposite to the contrary notwithstanding. In the town where I reside a considerable proportion have gone to the United States in the last few years, and the same is, I believe, true of other towns and villages throughout Canada. Making every allowance for the general tendency of people to move to large centres, I believe that the trade policy of the United States is the great attraction which is drawing our people from this side. Owing to that policy the Americans pay better wages, as a rule, and the conditions under which the labouring class work are much better. We cannot hope in Canada for any great increase in population while this state of things exists. All the time we are working at a great disadvantage. By their very high tariff wall we are debarred from doing any considerable business with our American neighbours; and yet we raise but a very low tariff wall against them, so that when our manufacturers demand British fair-play in the great battle for commercial supremacy, they find themselves confronted by conditions that are absolutely unfair and un-British. In my judgment, we cannot hope for the development of any great trade under the circumstances. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that we are increasing our population by leaps and bounds, but it seems to me evident that Canada, which has occupied this portion of the North American continent for the last three hundred years, has not much to boast of in the fact that she has to-day but a population of some six millions, while on the other hand the United States, which have only been occupying their portion of the continent about the same length of time, have a population of eighty millions. It would be no great surprise to me if it were shown that possibly one-half the native-born Canadians are in the United States at present. In proof of this I need only point out to the fact that when some time ago a great disaster overtook a city in California, there was hardly a city, town or village in Canada which had not given some contribution from its citizens to the numbers who were in that city at the time of the earthquake, many of whom had gone there within the last few years, and one can readily understand what anxiety is felt by their friends and relatives who remained at home. If a like catastrophe should happen in Detroit, Chicago, Buffalo, New York or Boston, the number of Canadians affected would be very great indeed. Those American cities are full of Canadians who have gone there within the last few years, and that number is increasing every day. What we need in Canada is a policy which will develop this country, which will keep our people at home, and then we shall have a population filling up our fertile lands of which we might well be proud. To-day we are trying to make up for this exodus by bringing in foreigners, by importing Doukhobors, Galicians, unattached people from all the countries of central Europe and the floating population of the great cities of England. When a representative came over here last summer he said that we were not getting good settlers from England, but simply the offscouring of the cities. I am simply using the term used by Mr. Perks, and I think he knew whereof he was speaking. It would be well for us to ponder over the statement he made, and see whether the immigrants we are getting are really of such a class. In the town where I live we have some of these, and it is impossible to get them men to do a day's work. Some of our charitably disposed ladies went around getting work for the wives of these men, simply because their husbands will sit down at the wharfs and fish and chew tobacco, which is about all you can possibly get them to do. Of course, all are not of that class, but a large number are, and such people will not contribute anything to the development of this country, but become a source of great anxiety, expense and trouble. It is impossible that we should bring into Canada large numbers of that class without lowering the moral tone of our population. How are you going to assimilate them? How are you going to make good citizens out of them? When the time of depression comes, we will have a task on our hands greater than we are able to undertake. It would be much better for Canada, even if our population did not increase, to pay more attention to the quality of those we bring in than to their numbers. I would rather keep in our country one good Canadian young man or woman than bring in a dozen of these foreigners, because the result would be much better. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up the time of the House at more length than I expected. There are some other subjects that I think might fairly well be discussed; but as I am an advocate of short speaking, as I do not believe in any member of this House, unless the occasion imperatively demands it, taking up more than an hour of its time, I shall not trespass on the rule I think should be followed. It is unfair to members generally that a few should make very long speeches and thus shut out others who may wish to address themselves to the subjects that may happen to be before the House. I thank the House, Mr. Speaker, for the patience with which they have listened to my remarks and the courtesy and attention they have given me, and shall very gladly give way to others.

Mr. GEORGE SMITH (North Oxford.) I wish, Mr. Speaker, to trespass but a few moments on the indulgence of the House. I rise under rather discouraging circumstances, as I have to be classed, according to the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright), as a light weight, starting in at this stage of the debate. And I was rather amused at some of the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. William Wright) who has just sat down. I have been taught to believe that the popular theory concerning what is called the adverse balance of trade is, according to such authorities as Thorold Rogers, Fawcett, Mill, Ricardo and others, quite a mistaken idea. However, we have the opinion of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wm. Wright) against that of such distinguished authorities as those whose names I have given. We have in our provincial university text books which teach the very opposite doctrine to that enunciated by the hon. member for Muskoka. That provincial university is supported by public funds. It receives a larger measure of support from the present Conservative government of Ontario than it ever did from the Liberal government in the past. If it is teaching public heresies, it is the duty of hon. members on the opposition benches to endeavour to convert the premier of Ontario and to bring about a change in the teaching of that university. And, that accomplished, they would still have work to do; for, as I understand, and happen to know, in the universities of Great Britain and in nearly every university in the United States, the teaching is the same as that in Toronto University. True, the hon. member for Muskoka says that this is wrong doctrine, that it is false political economy. I trust that he will at once set about correcting and righting these wrongs that he has endeavoured to point out. I shall not claim much of the time of hon. members in what I have to say. While I entertain, and have stated that I entertain, a high regard for the methods of debate followed by the leaders on both sides of this House, yet I regret, in reading the newspapers and in listening to the discussions in this House, to find assertions made that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), while on his western tour, when he was at Medicine Hat never referred to the Robbins Irrigation deal, and at Saskatoon said not one word concerning the North Atlantic Trading Company. And while he was in the country of the Doukhobors, he was entirely silent with reference——

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. George Smith) allow me to ask a question?

Mr. GEORGE SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. I was at the Saskatoon meeting, and heard Mr. Borden speak of the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. GEORGE SMITH. It is, then, the word of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Thomas Chisholm) against the word of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher) who, as I understood him, stated what I have quoted.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. But I was present, and heard it myself. The Minister of Agriculture was not there.

Mr. GEORGE SMITH. This reminds me of an anecdote I heard once concerning Wendell Phillips. He was travelling in a railway train; on the same train was a clergyman, who, hearing that the great Wendell Phillips was aboard, expressed a great desire to meet him. The conductor offered to introduce the clergyman to Wendell Phillips, and when the clergyman met him, he said: 'Mr. Phillips, I am very pleased to make your acquaintance. I have a great admiration for much that you have said on the public platform. But there is one thing I notice, and that is that Wendell Phillips does not go to the Southern States to talk Abolition.' (It would appear that the leader of the opposition, when he goes to the west, does not talk about those subjects that he talks about here that particularly relate to that country.) But the reply of Wendell Phillips to the clergyman was characteristic. He said: 'You believe in the doctrine of eternal punishment, do you not?' And when the clergyman replied in the affirmative, Wendell Phillips asked him, 'Well, why don't you go there and preach that doctrine?'

Now, with reference to the question of immigration which was touched on by the hon. member for Muskoka, there is one thing that can be said with certainty, and that is that during the regime of the Liberal party, the goods have been delivered. Mr. Emmerson Hough, the celebrated American writer, has stated that we have going on here in Canada one of the greatest world-movements of humanity known in the life of the race—greater than the movement of the Aryans into Europe, greater than the movement of the Goths and Cimri from Northern into Southern Europe. Now, surely the policy of the Liberal government is entitled to some credit for causing this great influx of population. Surely there is some quality when there is so much quantity. These people are not all Doukhobors; they are not all Galicians. And, even if they were all Doukhobors, I am not sure that they would not be an advantage to the country. I was talking to an elector of North Oxford who had visited the Doukhobor settlements. I asked him what sort of people they were. He told me they were very much like the German Mennonites of North Oxford. Well, I can say that there is no better class of citizens in this country than these German Mennonites, as found in the riding of North Oxford. While I was in Edmonton last year, I stood on the corner of Jasper avenue and one of the streets leading out to the north; and I saw turning the corner of the street, and trekking out, what they call out there a bull team. There was the sturdy six-footer, with cow-hide boots, long whip, and his four oxen; behind that team there were two mares, two colts, and the female portion of the immigrants on the second load. There was wealth going into the country, and I thought that perhaps this was a Canadian who, driven out during the lean years of Conservative rule, had returned to enjoy the sunshine and prosperity of the Liberal regime.

Now, I have felt, sometimes, that I was probably not doing my duty to Ontario in sending broadcast throughout my riding literature advertising the great West. But my better thought tells me that that is a provincial idea. I believe that we in Ontario feel that we are doing a great work in empire-building when we start our men out there to keep the West, Canadian—to keep it, if you will, Anglo-Saxon. If we are losing, we are certainly in some respects, gaining; if we have given, we also receive; if we have taught, we also are taught. And I believe that we in Ontario are quite pleased to do our part in this work of empire-building by sending our sons out to that great West to keep that West, Canadian.

I believe we are writing a page of history to-day in that boundless west in which all Canadians of the east and west can feel a pride. We are writing that story, not with the implements of war but with the peaceful implements, the axe and the ploughshare of the pioneer. Permit me to quote, as showing our honoured Premier's part in this history, an opinion from a non-partisan source; I would like to read an article from Appleton's Magazine for November, 1906, written by Mr. Wm. S. Stewart. I will only read a few paragraphs:

> For more than one hundred and forty years in Canada the question whether it was possible for Anglo-Saxon and Gallic communities to grow and prosper together remained unanswered. If to-day it not only appears possible, but is an observable fact, the result is the work chiefly of one man, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
>
> Bismarck achieved a united Germany by war, but the man of blood and iron would have failed in Canada. The conditions which confronted the constructive statesmen of the Dominion called for conciliation and compromise. A broad-minded grasp of the problem, clearness of perception between essentials and non-essentials, the genius to conceive a policy which could be accepted by all sides, and the courage and persistence to follow it against whatever obstacles—these were the qualities demanded of the man who should unite Canada. For his success in the face of great difficulties Sir Wilfrid Laurier is well entitled to the encomium of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, that he is 'one of the five great men of the world.'

Further on he states:

> As the settlement of the school question in 1896 was the beginning of the end of racial strife in Canada, these steps are the first in the evolution of an independent nation north of the United States. Both are the accomplishments of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

This is an American writer, as you will notice. I will conclude this quotation:

> The dominating policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's life—a policy early determined by the conditions in the Dominion—has been the championship of civil and religious freedom, and a resistance to the denationalizing tendencies of sectarianism and racialism.

I think, Sir, we may well say that we have less of religious and racial antagonism in Canada to-day than we have had in years gone by. I have read Tam-o'-Shanter, and I believe that when he describes the trip of his hero from the old Kirk Alloway to the 'Keystane o' the Auld Brig,' when he describes the evil spirits, the pitfalls and the dangers, he is drawing a picture of life with its pitfalls and dangers. I believe that we in Canada here have passed from our Kirk Alloway to the 'Keystane,' and that we have now a plain road forward to a united Canada, and to a great empire.

Now, one of the chief endeavours of the Conservative party to-day is to try to create a belief that we in Canada are morally and politically worse than we were in years gone by. On this point allow me to read a quotation from a letter of the Hon. Edward Blake, written in 1891, and which is reproduced in Willison's life of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The quotation is taken from his celebrated revenue tariff letter:

Worse, far worse. It has left us with lowered standards of public virtue and a death-like apathy in public opinion; racial, religious and provincial animosities rather inflamed than soothed, with a subservient parliament, an autocratic executive, debauched constituencies and corrupted and corrupting classes.

Is not that a true picture of Canada under the regime of the late Sir John A. Macdonald? Let us look at it for a moment. Lowered standards of public virtue—I think we may find all over America a tendency of late years to raise the standard of public morals, and I think you will admit that some progress has been made in that direction. Racial religious animosities—I think we have happily passed in Canada to-day that sad era of racial and religious animosities which formerly prevailed in Canada. Debauched constituencies—surely our Conservative friends will admit that this is a true picture of the conditions in 1891. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wm. Wright) referred to the annual report of the Bank of Montreal. I would like to read a quotation found in the same report, from the vice-president, Mr. Clouston:

The stringency is largely the result of universal prosperity and as a natural consequence the world has been spending more and saving less. This state of affairs will cure itself by retrenchment. When it comes suddenly, as it usually does, it brings many hardships, but we will eventually reach a much better and sounder basis.

The president, Sir George Drummond, referring to the agitation against trusts in the United States, said:

No doubt all these disturbing conditions may be expected to pass away and normal and saner views once more rule, and it must not be overlooked that all the present trouble leaves the resources of that country practically undiminished and its powers of recuperation unimpaired. Here in Canada we have escaped most, if not all the troubles of our neighbours.

Further on he refers to this adverse balance of trade of which I have spoken, and I also find this paragraph:

Canada has experienced a decade of remarkable commercial expansion. Ten years ago our total foreign trade, on the basis of imports for home consumption and domestic exports, amounted to $234,926,000; in 1907, on the same basis, it reached $571,783,000, showing an increase of not less than 143 per cent.

According to the census of 1901 the population was 5,370,000, and in the six years which have since elapsed the returns show some 930,000 immigrants to have entered the country for settlement and adding to this the natural increment our population to-day is approximately 6,600,000, representing a gain of 23 per cent, as compared with a gain of 143 per cent in foreign trade.

These figures indicate an extraordinary increase in population and commercial development, perhaps unparalleled in any country and, mark you, during a period corresponding with a period of Liberal government, from 1896 to 1906-7.

Now, one word more and I am through. In reference to hard times, I think you will find from the statement of that vice-president that they are rather the opposite. It has been a period of over prosperity. I was talking to a citizen of Detroit only the other day, I asked him what was the trouble over there, and his answer was 'over-prosperity.' He said: Take the building line, we have been going on in Detroit, our population has nearly doubled, we have now a population of nearly 500,000, and during the last three years we have been building to excess; probably not more than $300 or $500 has been paid on a $3,000 house. When the crisis comes, when the hard times arrive the equity of these would-be owners will be gone and whole streets will probably be deserted by the owners and their equity will be swamped.

Another matter that almost escaped my observation is the silence of members opposite in reference to the Arctic scandal. We have heard no more about that Arctic scandal. Why? I suppose it is that expedition has made good, that the expedition has gone to its destination, policed the shores of that great Canadian sea, asserted the sovereignty of Canada, or, if you will, of the British Empire, on these shores, has returned and has shown by what it has accomplished that it has justified all the expenditure. Hence the silence of hon. members opposite.

Mr. W. JACKSON (West Elgin.) Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for the citizens of Canada to read the speeches of the members of this House to know whether there are hard times or not. I think that they know themselves the condition of affairs in their own localities just as well before they have read some of the speeches that have been delivered in this House as they do afterwards. I think they are the best judges and they will be the judges. We have been discussing the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. I claim it makes very little difference to the majority of the people of Canada so long as we are well governed. What we want in Canada is an honest and advancing administration. Now, we have a bill of fare laid down before us in the speech from the Throne which is more remarkable for what it does not contain than what it does contain. The best proof we have of this is that upon looking over the Order Paper we find that two prominent members sitting on the government benches have given notice of motions, one for the remodelling and one for the abolition altogether of our upper chamber, the Senate. What has led up to this agitation? The motions that have been introduced here represent the opinion of the people from one end of this Dominion to the other that there is something wrong with our upper chamber. There is a feeling, it appears, from one end of the country to the other that some change should be made in the Senate. I do not say that there is a very strong opinion that the upper chamber should be abolished, but there is a feeling abroad that the Senate should be elevated to a higher standard than it has up to the present time attained. It is my contention, and I believe it is the contention of all right thinking citizens of the Dominion, that we should send to this chamber the very best men that the country can produce. I have no objection to whatever party is in power sending men of its own stripe to the Senate, but I do say that it should select good men to occupy seats in that House. I am not so narrow-minded as to say that there are not good men in the Liberal ranks, but I do say that it is from among the best men that the appointments should be made to that body. I will go farther and say that there should be no trafficking in so far as that body is concerned. What would we say if we were to find members of our bench stooping to the things that members of our Senate are doing to-day? When a man is appointed to the Senate, from whichever side he may come, or by whichever party he is appointed, he should from that time on refrain from taking an active part in party and political controversy. We respect our bench. We would not respect our bench if our judges went about the country and acted in the way that a great many of our senators are acting to-day. If they would go into the country when elections are not on and in that way show their good will and attempt to develop and improve the tone of our people we would not say much about them. But, we only find them moving around the country when there is an election or something of that kind going on. We find them, when there is a candidate wanted in a constituency, supporting aspirants for that position. We respect the bench, and I believe that in Canada we have a bench that is above reproach, but let our judges do as our senators are doing to-day and we will lose that high respect for them that we have at present. I will cite you one instance here. The right hon. the leader of this government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was forced by the condition of things to reorganize his cabinet. I ask you: Had not Mr. Derbyshire been member for Brockville at the time, would he be in the upper chamber to-day ? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we should get the very best talent we have in Canada to go into that chamber. Then, our people would have confidence in the Senate, and it would fill a want in this country. I regret another plank that this government seem to have adopted and that is that no man can receive an appointment either in the Senate, on the bench, or to any other high position, except by passing the threshold, by being a member of the party or a candidate of this government. That is a vicious system, and one which is bound to demoralize the tone of these institutions.

There is another question that I wish to call to your attention for a moment or two, and that is a question that I believe I have some knowledge of. I refer to the cattle industry, which is an important branch of agriculture. Last year I called the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that his department was not giving that attention and care which it ought to this branch of our agricultural industry, and the minister was kind enough to say he agreed with most that I had said, and he would see that my ideas were put in force. No country in the world has as fertile an almost unlimited area of pasturage as has Canada. There is no gainsaying the fact that we can produce the best cattle and the best beef in the world, but I regret, as a farmer, to have to say that we are not doing so. We have just as good cattle in Canada as they have anywhere else, but the trouble is that our cattle is not uniform. We have a Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, we have experimental farms from one end of the Dominion to the other, but with all that they are doing practically nothing along the lines I have indicated. Let the average man who wants to engage in agricultural pursuits and who has no special knowledge of farming, let him look at the results of the demonstrations on these farms as published in the blue books, and he will be driven to the conclusion that no man can engage in the industry and come out with a balance on the right side unless he is subsidized by the government or a rich friend. Well, that is misleading. We who have spent our lives in that industry know that such is not correct, because we have built up our homes and we have put aside some savings for our families, and we have demonstrated that if agriculture is properly conducted there is a fair profit in it. I regret the Minister of Agriculture has not carried out the suggestions I gave him last year as he promised to do, and I trust that he will now see his way to adopt my ideas. Canadians can go to the United States and carry off nearly all the first-class prizes for their cattle, but notwithstanding that I regret to have to say that when we go to the British market our cattle are not quoted as high as United States cattle. We have heard a great deal during the last three or four years about what the Department of Agriculture is doing in the matter of cold storage and the improvement of butter and cheese, but whilst they are bolstering up that one branch of the agricultural industry they should not neglect all others. As my hon. friend who sits beside me told the Minister of Agriculture last year, he is paying too much attention to the butter and cheese industry and neglecting the live stock industry. I would point out to the minister that no branch of agricultural industry can be conducted with as little labour as that of producing beef, and in a country like Canada, where labour is scarce, that is an important consideration. The government should direct its attention to an effort to make our herds more uniform, so that we may produce better beef; and if they did so, it would tend greatly towards increasing the revenue of the country. I do not think there can be a grander sight than to see a herd of Durhams, Herefords or Polled Angus roaming over the pastures for seven or eight months of the year, feeding, fattening and becoming more valuable to their owner without any laborious effort on his part. I trust the Minister of Agriculture will introduce legislation calculated to improve that trade.

There is another matter I wish to call attention to. Although a farmer myself, I represent a constituency partly agricultural and partly industrial. I believe it is the duty of every man in this House, no matter what his business, to assist in the development of the natural resources of Canada. I think the population of this Dominion may be divided into three great classes—the agricultural, the industrial and those engaged in transportation—and each is dependent on the other. To quote the motto: 'United we stand, divided we fall'; the agricultural interests cannot stand without the transportation interests, and what would the transportation interests be without progressive agriculture? In this connection I want to say a word about farm crossings, and now I have no reference to railways crossing public highways. I sympathize with what the member for East Middlesex said with regard to public highway crossings. Of course, the railway corporations do not want to injure the agricultural industry of this country, but nevertheless they are looking out for their own interests first. Traffic on our railways is increasing every year, trains are running faster, and in the near future there will be a demand for greater protective regulations at public crossings. I sympathize with the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) in his efforts to provide greater safety for the people living in populous centres, but I regret his Bill does not go further and that it does not seek to provide greater safety at farm crossings, which are just as dangerous as crossings in cities and towns. This legislation gives railway companies power to run their lines from one point to another, and in doing that they may take away the farmer's land. The farmer has no say in this matter and I think it is the duty of this government to relieve the farmer, as far as it lies in their power, of the inconvenience to which he is continually put by reason of that railway going through his farm. It may be said that the farmer enjoys the convenience of a railway near his door, but he enjoys no more convenience than does the farmer next him through whose farm the railway does not run.

In a large country such as this conditions vary in different districts and possibly it may be difficult to enact legislation that will be equally suitable for all parts of the country, but I shall describe the conditions that exist in the section from which I come, in the western portion of the province of Ontario. We have running through the counties lying north of Lake Erie, a network of railways such as cannot be found in any other section of the Dominion. It forms a short cut for all of these American railways between New York and Chicago, and there may be three or four railways running side by side through the one farm. It is a great inconvenience to the farmer to have these roads run through his place, but he has no redress; they run the road through his farm, paying him for the land but never for the inconvenience that he and his successors are put to. The traffic on these roads is increasing with great rapidity, and the speed of the express trains is also increasing. Some of the roads running through St. Thomas between Detroit and Buffalo have a running time of between fifty and sixty miles per hour. I wish to quote some information with reference to the amount of traffic in that country, which I secured for the use of the committee on the Lord's Day Act, session before last. I have here a letter addressed to myself:

> Dear sir,—With reference to our recent conversation, I find that during the months of January, February and March of this year, 105,959 freight cars were moved out of St. Thomas in 2,497 trains on the main line only, making an average of 1,177 cars a day.

That is only one of the roads doing business through that part of the Dominion and in addition to that heavy freight traffic, there are a dozen express trains a day with scarcely one stop so that they are of hardly any convenience to the people of Canada; they are practically through trains between Detroit and Buffalo or Chicago and New York, with this vastly and rapidly increasing volume of traffic, the inconvenience to the farmers is greatly increasing.

Two or three years ago a commission of which Mr. Robertson, of St. John, was chairman, went through the country investigating the question of public crossings, but the public crossing is not of so much interest to the farmer as the private crossing. He uses the public crossing for the driving of stock possibly twice a year but he has to use his private crossing for that purpose three or four times a day, and while there is on the statute-book an almost perfect definition of a public crossing, there is no provision for a private crossing in the statute-book. At the sitting of that commission in St. Thomas, a number of farmers, some of whom had travelled forty miles to be present, testified and the chairman promised he would lay their ideas before the Railway Department. Mr. Hugh McAlpine, a farmer through whose farm a railway runs, said :

I came here more for information than to give suggestions. I have a railway going through my farm. I find that as far as our own interests are concerned we are naturally very selfish, but this question is a very serious matter with the farmer, when he attempts to cross the track with a herd of cattle: he always has to get assistance in driving them over the track. I have thought this over and have had considerable trouble. Where farmers have a track running through their farms I would like to make a suggestion that I think would be a help to him, and that is for the farmer to have fences built up to the track on his farm crossings. If it is too expensive for the company to give, let the farmer have the privilege of putting it up himself. I have this summer attempted to drive cattle across the track alone and I was in danger. It is not always easy for the farmer to get help. When you do this and a train comes along, a number will go east and others west and then you are in trouble and also in danger. I would suggest that if the farmers cannot get the railway company to build up to the track that they be allowed to do it themselves under the inspection of the railway company and have them kept so that it will be safe for all. If I am going with a drove of cattle to market, I generally have assistance, but cannot always get it every time I drive my cattle over the track on my farm. On my farm there is no chance of getting a subway under the track. With a herd of cows, once they get in the way of crossing over two or three times a day it is not so bad but it is a serious matter to do it with steers. The farmers placed in this position should have some consideration.

Q. You mean to have the privilege of making a fence up to the track and then you would not ask for a cattle guard. You could manage them across the track if you had them up to a point?—A. Yes, I could feel safer then. The expense would be very trifling and if we cannot get the railroad company to do it, I would be willing to go to the expense myself if I had the privilege for the sake of the safety. It is a very serious matter.

These men who do not have railways do not seem to have any sympathy with the man who has to cross them two or three times a day, and it is a very serious matter and we have no right to suffer.

Now that is the idea of a prominent farmer whose farm is crossed by one of these roads. He is willing as he says here to go on and erect these fences in order to secure safety for all concerned.

I wish also to quote from the evidence of Mr. Hill, who said:

I do not know that I have anything to say about the public crossings. I am interested in the farm crossings. I live in Aldborough——

This man came forty miles to put his ideas before the commission expecting to get relief from this government.

—and there is a double-track on the M. C. R. and L. E. and D. R. also passes through my place.

There is a space of five rods between the two. I find it very inconvenient driving my cattle through there, and I think dangerous both to my cattle and the railway. It is not safe for one person to drive them through there. There are ditches and water on each side, some will go down to the water and some up the track. I have fifteen rods to drive them until they are through and three tracks to cross. The trains run very fast there and have often come at the rate of a mile a minute. I have quite a lot of stock. Have nine cows and thirty-eight cattle, and every time the cows come home they have to cross those three tracks, so it is very inconvenient to me. I think as Mr. McAlpine does, that if there was a fence built up the tracks it would be of some help.

I wish now to read the opinion of an ex-member of this House, Mr. Jabel Robinson, whose acquaintance many hon. gentlemen here no doubt have enjoyed. He said:

Farmers have rights as well as the railway companies and we want them to respect their rights and they will if they are made to. I have great respect for those who have railways running through their farms. He has to drive his cattle over tracks twice a day to water them and you can see the difficulty he has in driving the cattle, and I think it would be only wise for you to recommend in a case of that kind, that the railways assist the farmers to get a proper crossing.

That is one point I think the farmer should have consideration about. Mr. McAlpine's point is that it should be fenced up to the track. I think that is right. . After you get through the gate there is generally water in the railway ditches and the cattle will turn down to the water and you have difficulty in getting them back and through the other gate.

Let me just read what the Act says about these farm crossings:

Every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossing of the railway for farm purposes.

I claim that that does not go far enough. The second clause is as follows:

Live stock, in using such crossings, shall be in charge of some competent person, who shall take all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents.

As a matter of fact, the farmers take every precaution that they can, but they have this difficulty to contend with. Take any of our domestic animals, take, for instance, a horse and buggy, as soon as you bring that horse to the plank and he sees the shining steel of the railway track, that horse is very apt to stop or falter. Take cattle, when you are driving them across, they do not want to cross that concern at all and will buck on either side. A simple remedy would be to build crossings for the private use of the farmers. I am glad to see the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) taking his seat and hope he will assist the farmers in the line I am pointing out to the House. In the statute there is no provision at all as to how a farm crossing shall be constructed. All that it has reference to is the way the cattle guards and fences should be built for highway crossings. It says that the fence shall be run from the parallel fence of the railway up to the edge of the track and there an efficient cattle guard be put in. What the farmer wants is something of the same kind for his private crossing. He does not use the public crossing more than once or twice a year when he takes his cattle to market, and then he takes his men with him who drive his cattle across. But he cannot do that every time he drives his cattle across his farm.

Another thing to which I would call attention is the gates. The Act provides:

> Swing gates in such fences at farm crossings of the minimum height aforesaid, with proper hinges and fastenings. Provided that sliding or hurdle gates, constructed before the first day of February, 1904, may be maintained.

Therefore, if all the gates on those railways constructed before 1904 be sliding or hurdle gate, they need not be disturbed. But all the gates constructed after 1904 must be swing gates. Well, if it was right to relieve the farmers by ordering the companies to put up swing gates after 1904, why not have the sliding gates then in existence changed to swing gates? Take a sixteen feet sliding gate; the farmer's little daughter or son sent to drive the cattle cannot open that gate, but a child could open a swing gate. There is no desire on the part of the farmers that the gates should be removed. They want the gates to remain where they are put, but they want a safe means of getting the cattle to the other side without any possibility of their going to the right or the left. I am sure that the railway companies will not be opposed to the remedy I am suggesting. What is more dangerous for an express than to have a herd of cattle, with two or three persons behind them, trying to drive them from one side to the other, with the risk of a bullock or a horse at any minute jumping on the track in front of the engine and causing loss of life or property. You have the Act so drafted that if anything is destroyed or hurt on the railways by crossing the track the owner has no redress against the company. Hon. members all claim to be friends of the farmer, and here is an opportunity for them to put their professions into practice. There is not a man in this House who has been as good a listener and has done as little talking as I have in the three or four sessions I have been here, and I would not get up now if I did not feel that I had an imperative duty to perform on behalf of the farmers. I ask the House to do everything possible to make the responsibility and the risk to the farmer in connection with these railway crossings as light as possible, and in so doing you will, to no small extent, promote the safety of railway traffic on our railway tracks. I sincerely hope that during this session the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) will give this matter his best consideration. Nothing that has been brought about in the last twenty years will, I am confident, be as great a boon to the farmers as what I am now asking for. On looking over our legislation it will be found that the farmers are prejudiced in this matter and it is about time that a remedy should be applied. I shall not further take up the time of the House. I am asking the co-operation of each and every one in this House to assist me in removing this inconvenience under which our farming community suffer.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, the members of the government, instead of treating the matters set out in the speech from the Throne, deal with the policy which was enunciated by the leader of the opposition in his tour of Canada, which commenced at Halifax and extended to Victoria. The policy enunciated by the leader of the opposition, if we may take the press as an indication of the feeling of the people, is favoured by a large majority of Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Minister of Finance (Hon. W. S. Fielding), in an attempt to belittle this platform, alluded to a petition which, he said, had been presented to the leader of the opposition at Winnipeg, praying that a convention should be held for the discussion of the platform of the party. I have it on the highest authority that such a petition was never presented to the leader of the opposition. The statement made by the Minister of Finance emanated from himself, or probably he took it from the Calgary 'Eye Opener' which was the first paper in Canada to state that such a petition had been presented to the leader of the opposition.

Now this platform seems to have nettled the members of the government. Why did not these hon. gentlemen and their supporters discuss the matter contained in the speech from the Throne? Simply because the speech from the Throne afforded them no material for discussion. It was stated by the Minister of Finance that this policy of the leader of the opposition was favoured by the leader of the opposition alone, and would not commend itself to the people of Canada because it was not agreed to by a convention of the Liberal Conservative party. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance this question: Does he remember when the national policy was propounded by the late Sir John A. Macdonald in 1878? Was that policy laid before a convention of the Liberal-Conservative party, or announced to the people of Canada as the utterance of a convention? No; it was simply enunciated by Sir John A. Macdonald himself; and the people of Canada, in 1878, carried that policy by an overwhelming vote. In no uncertain tones, they instructed Sir John A. Macdonald that this policy which he had enunciated was their policy, and they gave him power to carry it into effect. Mr. Borden, taking a leaf out of the book of Sir John A. Macdonald, enunciated his own policy, and I believe that that policy commends itself to the people of Canada as fully as the national policy commended itself to the people of Canada in 1878.

A great deal has been said by the supporters of the government in this House about the great expansion in Canada's trade. And we have the remarkable statement by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) that the balance of trade shows that Canada's foreign trade is healthy and that, though the balance of trade is strongly against Canada, that is only a proof that the profits made on the exports of Canada have been used to buy greater quantities of goods abroad for importation into this country. Now, we find that last year the exports, the products of Canada, amounted to $238,000,000. The balance of trade against Canada was something like $122,000,000. According to the argument of my hon. friend from Kings, there must have been a profit of something like fifty per cent on these exports. If that were so, it would be a good thing for the people of Canada. But does any reasonable man believe that on our exports for the last fiscal year we made a profit of fifty per cent? It seems to me that to ask the question is to prove that the position of the hon. member for Kings is wholly untenable. This adverse balance of trade means that, for every man, woman and child in Canada, $20 worth of goods was brought in more than was sent out. Last year the Minister of Finance took out of the pockets of the people $1,322,000 a week or $800,000 more than was collected under the previous government eleven years ago. The taxation for the nine months ending March 31 last, amounted to $68,750,000 or $10.30 per head. The average for the five years ending 1896 was $27,750,000 or $5.66 per head. The Minister of Finance boasts of his surplus, declaring that in eight or nine years these surpluses have amounted to over $90,000,000. What has the Minister of Finance done with that money? And what was that hon. gentleman's opinion of surpluses before he entered this House to support the right hon. Prime Minister? What did he say in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' when he was simply editor of that paper and not a member of this House?

> A surplus of millions at the capital is just so much money withdrawn from the trade of the country. How long can the Dominion stand the drain?

And again:

> Every dollar of the surplus is taken out of the pockets of the people without the shadow of an excuse.

Last year he boasted that $3,000,000 more was taken out of the pockets of the people than was required to run the government of this country. Will he repeat the statements that he made previous to becoming a member of the government of Canada, and say that it is not in the interest of the people that so large an amount of money should be taken out of their pockets, that whenever a surplus is taken from them it is without a shadow of excuse? Will he tell the people of Canada that there is not a shadow of an excuse for taking these millions out of their pockets? No, but he gets up in parliament to-day and justifies it. He says: We paid out of the treasury, not only these millions of dollars, but we have paid greater sums in order to meet the wants of the people of Canada. It may be all right from his standpoint to-day, but it was not all right from his standpoint previous to 1896. He boasts of the $644,000,000 of trade to-day although the export trade only amounts to $238,000,000. As has been well said by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), after we have sent away our butter, our cheese and other products, we have to put our hands into our pockets and pay out $122,000,000 in cash to meet the balance. Still the Finance Minister does not attempt to justify the situation, he does not refer to the position he took previous to 1896; but he simply comes in here and makes a big bluff. He criticises the action of the leader of the opposition with reference to his policy and the manner in which he has put it before the country; but he does not say one word with reference to the position which he occupies himself as to the $3,000,000 of surplus and the disposition he has made of it. He says:

> The Dominion has been blessed by a long series of prosperous years, and, though at the present moment its business is being restricted by the financial stringency which prevails throughout the world, I feel assured that this unfavourable condition will be temporary and that the illimitable resources of Canada and the world-wide recognition of them give us ample guarantee of continued material progress.

He thinks that the unfavourable conditions will be temporary and that the illimitable resources of Canada are ample guarantee of material progress. He makes that bald statement. Any gentleman in Canada could make that statement. But has he attempted to justify it? He referred to many things which had been accomplished by this government, but which the people themselves do not approve. I might refer to the navigation laws and to the coasting trade. Last session an hon. gentleman in this House made a speech in reference to the manner in which the coasting trade of this country was conducted. We find that men from Norway and Sweden are doing our coasting trade, men who have taken away the bread and butter from our own seamen. We find Norwegian steamers to-day doing a great part of the coasting trade of this country, carrying coal from Pictou, Sydney and other parts of Canada which produce coal, to Montreal and even to Toronto. What is the reason of this? Simply because the government are afraid to ask Norway and Sweden to enter into a treaty, the consequence of which would do away with this great injury to our own seamen. But the government are afraid. Why should they not be as anxious to make a treaty with Norway with respect to this matter as they are to make a treaty with France respecting the admission of absinthe and light wines?

We find to-day that the great shipbuilding industry, which was so prosperous twenty years ago, has almost gone down to nothing. What is the reason? Because foreigners are allowed to come into this country and do all the coasting trade. Norwegians bring their ships into this country and are permitted to trade from port to port in Canada. They pay their seamen about one-half the wages which Canadian seamen get or should get, and the consequence is that our Canadian seamen are put out of business altogether. In Pictou the other day a gentleman who is engaged in the coasting trade told me that he was there for six weeks with a schooner and could not get a load of coal, whereas during that time five or six Norwegian steamers came in and were filled right to the decks with coal and left for Montreal. Some which were loaded after he had arrived there had come back empty and were ready to load again before he could get his load at all. Privileges are granted by corporations and others to these tramps who come here from foreign countries, and our own steamers are excluded from the benefit of the trade of this country. Something should be done this season to foster the business of the transportation of commodities by our own people, by the seamen of our own country; and unless some such legislation is put upon the statute-books this year, you will find that the maritime province trade will soon be in the hands of foreigners altogether. I know that is the feeling throughout the maritime provinces. Every seaman I have spoken to has told me that he was absolutely disgusted with the manner in which the Dominion government were conducting this business. Petitions have been sent to the government over and over again, representations have been made, but no remedy has been applied to protect the seamen of Canada; and the consequence is that young men who should be engaged in a seafaring life in Canada are leaving and going into other occupations. Why should we not have to-day a shipbuilding industry? We have everything that is necessary to build up this industry; we have our iron, we have our steel, we have our men. Why should our young men go to the United States to build up the shipbuilding industry in that country? I know that from my own province fifty or sixty young men are in the works in Fall river building ships for the United States navy. The fact is that in almost every maritime province port there are young men who have obtained an education in the iron industry, but cannot obtain employment, and they are compelled to go to the United States. You will find in every shipyard in the United States men from the maritime provinces, and I presume from Ontario, who could not obtain employment in Canada. This industry is fostered by the United States, they are building an immense navy, and the cry in the United States to-day is: Make the navy stronger. What is the cry in Canada? Let us have no navy. What kind of vessels are to-day employed by our people in the coasting trade? Old derelicts of the United States, vessels that were abandoned as unseaworthy at Portland and ports in Massachusetts. These vessels are sent up to Canada and are sold to our Canadian seamen, who attempt to navigate them, and if you read the newspapers you will find that scarcely a week passes but that one or more of these vessels founder with all on board. The iron industry is fostered by the government; it fosters every other industry but the ship-building industry, which would build up this country more perhaps than any other industry. Where do we buy our vessels? For the coasting trade we buy the derelicts of Massachusetts and New Jersey. Where do the other vessels come from, those steamers which are engaged in the coal trade? From the Clyde. Why could we not build those vessels ourselves? Why could we not build every vessel for the coasting and carrying trades of Canada and for the trade between Canada and the United Kingdom? I understand that the first steel vessel to be constructed in the maritime provinces is now on the stocks in New Glasgow, N.S. This should be an object lesson to the government; it should show what private enterprise will do and if the government would give some help to the men engaged in this great industry we would have perhaps the greatest commercial navy in the world. It may be said that we have enough of these bonuses, but we have not enough of that kind of bonus. What would be the result if we had a great ship-building industry in the maritime provinces? Take Prince Edward Island; we last year raised something like 6,000,000 bushels of oats and we raised 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 bushels of potatoes. We have no place to put these potatoes or oats. We also raised enough wheat to support ourselves. We probably would be in a position to place these oats if we had facilities to move them, but to-day we have no such facilities. We have not sufficient steamship and railway facilities to move this crop. If we had a tunnel connecting Prince Edward Island with the mainland we would very probably, in the winter season, be able to move these products of Prince Edward Island, and we might be able, if these great industries were started in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, to supply the men who would be engaged in them with the means of living. But as it is to-day three-fourths of the products of Prince Edward Island are kept in that province until navigation closes by reason of the want of facilities to move them. We are told by the Department of Agriculture of the province of Prince Edward Island that during the season of 1907 between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 worth of products were yraised in that province. With something like 103,000 people living in Prince Edward Island that represents a production of $600 or $700 for every man, woman and child during the season. I think that when this state of affairs exists and when the government have these reports from the Department of Agriculture of Prince Edward Island they should see that better facilities are given to the people there to move this great product to the markets of the world. We have been told, and this matter has been threshed out in this House day after day during the last three sessions of parliament, that 'we will consider the matter,' that 'the matter is under consideration,' that 'we will give you a steamer.' Only to-day it was stated that Mr. Dugas, an expert from the old country, had come out, that he had made certain recommendations; that these recommendations were under the consideration of the government; that they were sending them to Lord Strathcona, that probably in the dim future estimates might be made for the construction of a steamer to combat the severity of the winter and the ice between Prince Edward Island and the mainland and that in the dim future we might be able to move our products during all seasons of the year to the mainland. But what guarantee have the people of Prince Edward Island that this steamer will ever be constructed. We have a right, Mr. Speaker, according to the terms under which we entered confederation to be connected with the mainland by continuous steam communication, and I say it, and say it advisedly, and it is the opinion of not only Mr. Dugas, who is the adviser of the government, but it is the opinion of Sir Douglass Fox and of every other engineer who was employed by the government to look into this matter, that there is only one way to fulfil the terms of confederation and that is to construct a tunnel across the straits of Northumberland between Capes Traverse and Tormentine and give us every day in the year communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Our position as a farming and fishing community warrants us in asking for this boon. I said 'boon,' I do not consider it a boon. It is a matter of right. Last year according to the statement of the Department of Agriculture of the province of Prince Edward, our product amounted to $7,000,000. Where will you find on the continent of America a farming community of 103,000 people who can raise $7,000,000 worth of products? I do not think it exists in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Quebec or New Brunswick. I do not think it exists in any state of the great republic to the south of us. I think that the product which we raised last year was so extensive that the government of this country should take cognizance of the fact that we are entitled to all the facilities which people who are so energetic as we are should have in order that we may be able to meet the markets of the world as the rest of Canada are by reason of the facilities which the government have provided for them out of the public treasury. They have given to the great Northwest millions of dollars and they are giving to the great Northwest millions of dollars in places where there is not one inhabitant. Along the Grand Trunk Pacific, built from Moncton, N.B., right to the extreme Pacific coast, for hundreds of miles there is not one inhabitant. I think this government should look after the thickly settled portions of Canada before they commence to spend money where there are no inhabitants at all. It is all very well for the government to say that it is necessary in the interests of this country to build these transcontinental lines. We are a nation, they say, and it is necessary for us to do great big things in order to show to the world that we hold a position, that we are a nation and that we should be recognized as a nation by other nations of the world. But we should commence in places where the people are most thickly settled. We should build our railways where they are required by the inhabited portions of Canada. We should build them in the first place on the north shore of Prince Edward Island where there are no railways, and we should build them in many places in Ontario and Quebec where they are required to-day. I know there are many places in Nova Scotia, such as Antigonish and other counties, where railways are very much required. I think the government should build these great public works. They boast about their surplus of $3,000,000. Why not take a portion of that $3,000,000 and make an estimate of that tunnel? Last year, the year before and the year before that they promised that they would spend money in order to make an estimate. What did they do? They simply sent one of their engineers from the department here, a man who had no knowledge of matters of this kind, an ordinary man, a very ordinary man, down there; he went, stood upon a cliff on Cape Tormentine, looked over to a cliff on Cape Traverse and said: I believe that the business is feasible. He came back and reported the matter to the Minister of Public Works and he had the statement of the Minister of Finance that the matter was under consideration. That is what these gentlemen who compose the government of this country are telling the people of Prince Edward Island—we have this matter under consideration. The government have had it under consideration since 1896, and that is all the distance it has got. Why have they not mentioned it in the speech from the Throne? It is a matter of national interest, just as much as the thin red line or the All Red Line. When the Prime Minister was in the old country every newspaper in Canada had it in large type that we were to have the All Red Line; the newspapers we got on our breakfast tables were full of it, but there is not a word about it in the speech from the Throne. Time and again, when the Prime Minister was asked in this House the news about it, his answer was: We have the matter under consideration; we cannot give you an answer just now. That is the way this government trifles with the people of Canada. The speech from the Throne tells us that there is financial stringency in Canada, but when we come into this House we are told not to say a word about it. Why does the government thus blow hot and cold? Well, they found the statement in the speech from the Throne did not commend itself to their followers, and so they ask us in this House not to say anything about it because it might stop immigrants from continental Europe coming to this country. Here we have immigrants pouring in at the rate of 600 a week to find in Toronto, and in Hamilton, and in Winnipeg and elsewhere that there is no employment. When the government knew this financial stringency existed why did they not cable to Lord Strathcona to stop these people coming here instead of allowing them to flood the country, without a dollar in their pocket, to become objects of charity. That is the way this government is conducting the business of the country.

Then we have this great French treaty of which we have heard so much when the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine were in the old country. The farming people of my province thought there would be something in that treaty which would be beneficial to them, but they find now that there is no reduction in the duty on any commodity which comes from France except claret, and light wines, and absinthe and other poisons. These gentlemen went to France at the expense of thousands of dollars; they kept running between Paris and London; they said the treaty was a great boon to the people of Canada; that it was the first time in our history the right to make a treaty had been conceded to us; they heralded in every paper in Canada, the United States, and the continent of Europe, that they had made a great treaty, but now we find that the treaty stands to-day as it did in 1893 except that light wines and absinthe and such poisons are allowed to come in at a lower rate.

We have heard a great deal about the administration of the postal service, and the government boasts they have made a large surplus in the Post Office Department this year. A question was put on the Order Paper this week by the senior member for Queens (Mr. Martin) and he was told in reply that there were a large number of post offices in Prince Edward Island which had only a tri-weekly or a bi-weekly service. Why is not the post office surplus used in giving a daily mail to every portion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, instead of a bi-weekly or a tri-weekly service? I have nothing to say against the rural free delivery, but before the argument on that question is entered into I would like to see a daily mail service placed at the disposal of every man, woman and child in Canada. The government built a railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour in my own province and before that railway was built the people in that locality had a daily mail. It started from Charlottetown at six o'clock in the morning and was distributed all along the route down to Murray Harbour before six o'clock in the evening. The people hoped when the railway was built that the mail service would be improved, but now the mail starts from Charlottetown at 3.20 in the afternoon and instead of the mail being delivered in those localities as to the rest of the province on the day it arrives in Charlottetown, it is not distributed till the next day. This shows there is something wrong. When you ask the Post Office Department what is the cause of the delay they throw the blame on the Railway Department, and the Railway Department gives as an explanation that the government of Canada cannot afford to run two trains a day on that railway. Now, the fact is that the railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour is, and I say it without fear of contradiction, the best paying section of the Intercolonial Railway. But with all that, the people along the line get the mail one day later than before the railway was constructed; and in addition there are other drawbacks which make that railway almost useless to the community with regard to mail accommodation and otherwise.

Something has been said on the question of insurance and the speech from the Throne stated that a Bill would be introduced this session in reference to the matter. One would have thought that in view of the fact that such an important matter has been before the people of Canada for a year past, some reference would have been made to it by the leader of the government. In answer to questions placed upon the Order Paper we have been informed that Mr. Shepley, who is solicitor for the government has received $25,000 for his services in connection with that insurance commission. During that time he carried on his own private practice, he was engaged in his practice in the Supreme Court of Canada and in the courts of Ontario; he was occupied with the commission for smething like nine months and the government of Canada paid him $25,000. They paid altogether to that commission, including the expenses of the commissioners and travelling expenses, something like $96,000. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you have ever seen anything to represent this great outlay. Have you ever seen any results? Have you ever heard of any results? Have you ever seen anything at all which was the result of that commission which would commend itself to the people of Canada? I have never read anything nor has anything been tabled in this House, nor has any statement been made in this parliament which would lead me to believe that there was any result at all from the work of this commission which was appointed by the government, the appointment being given to their own particular friends and involving the expenditure of $96,000 of the people's money. If I could see that there had been any good results from it I would say nothing against it, but I know from my own experience and from the feeling expressed to me in all parts of Canada where I have heard this matter discussed, that no good results have been given by this commission, certainly nothing commensurate with the great expenditure that it has involved. They have, it is true, made political charges against certain members of this House, but these charges have fallen flat before the people and to-day they are not even thought of or heard of.

Mr. Speaker, as the hour is late and as there are doubtless other gentlemen who wish to speak on this matter, I do not wish to make any more extended remarks at this time.

On motion of Mr. Uriah Wilson, the debate was adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—DESTITUTE IMMIGRANTS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the House adjourns, has the acting leader of the House any intimation to make to us regarding the three hundred Bulgarians who are yet stranded in Toronto, and I believe there are also four hundred in Halifax. Could he state what the government has done with regard to this matter or what disposal it intends to make of these men?

Mr. FIELDING. I would rather not answer my hon. friend in the absence of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). I am aware that some arrangement has been made. I think that in each case the numbers have rather been exaggerated in the information given to my hon. friend. However, I hope he will refer to the question again to-morrow in the presence of the Minister of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 19) to incorporate the Bank of Winnipeg.—Mr. Bole.

Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville-Prince Edward Bridge Company.—Mr. Porter.

Bill (No. 21) respecting the British Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill (No. 22) respecting The Macleod, Cardston and Montana Railway Company.—Mr. Herron.

Bill (No. 23) respecting the Ministers', Widows' and Orphans' Fund of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the West Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 25) respecting the Hamilton Radial Electric Railway Company.—Mr. Clarke.

Bill (No. 26) respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Cash.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 27) to amend the Government Railways Act. He said: The Bill which I have the honour to introduce is similar to one which I introduced last session. The provisions of the Railway Act with regard to the rights of railway companies in connection with claims made against them on account of damages due to negligence are clearly settled and pretty well defined. There are no such provisions in the Government Railways Act, and the object of this Bill is to incorporate in that Act similar provisions to those in the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On questions being called:

Mr. FIELDING. I would ask that the questions be allowed to stand, as there is a misunderstanding, this not being a question day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no objection to letting them stand. The misunderstanding probably arose in view of the terms of the motion originally proposed by the Prime Minister, namely, that the order for the debate on the address should have precedence next after questions.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so, and therefore questions would come upon the regular question day. I know that the First Minister was under this impression, because when I spoke to him in regard to the questions to-day, he said this was not a question day.

DEATH OF B. B. GUNN, ESQ., M.P.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is unavoidably away for a few moments, it becomes my duty to call the attention of the House to a very sad event which is already marked by the presence on a desk on the other side of the chamber of that wreath which usually signifies the presence of death amongst us. It is somewhat sad to reflect that though we are as yet only in the first days of the session, death has already twice appeared amongst us, a fact which is well calculated to make us all serious, sad, and thoughtful. It was not my pleasure to know Mr. Gunn, the departed member for South Huron, so well as he was known to many other members. He did not take a very active part in the debates of the House, but he was very attentive to his duties on committees. When he did take part in our debates, his remarks were received with attention and respect. Those not associated with him politically have often had the opportunity of meeting him in that happy way in which gentlemen on both sides meet each other in social intercourse from time to time, and I wish to say for the government and for all the members on this side of the House that we desire to offer our warmest sympathy to the family of our departed friend, and in that expression I am sure that every member of this House, irrespective of party, will join.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thank the hon. Minister of Finance for the sympathetic words he has just uttered respecting the untimely death of our friend, Mr. Gunn. It is true that Mr. Gunn did not take a very active part in the debates of this House; nevertheless he took a keen interest in public affairs and was a faithful and diligent servant of the people who sent him here. It is not more than a week since he was walking around amongst us apparently in the full enjoyment of his health and strength. I saw him on Saturday last, and he hoped then to resume his place once more amongst us within a very few days. Neither he nor I had the slightest idea at that time that the end was so near. We thank the hon. Minister of Finance for his words of sympathy for the family of Mr. Gunn. Our own sympathy goes out to them in the largest possible measure, and in this time of trial I am sure that this message of sympathy from both sides of the House will be to them a source of very great comfort.

DISTRIBUTION OF BLUE-BOOKS.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the government what new arrangements have been made with regard to the House of Commons post office. During the long time that I have been in parliament the blue-books issued to members have been placed in the post office, where each member had a box at his disposal for the purpose. I find that now the blue-books for members of the opposition are piled in room No. 6, where we have no means of taking care of them. Many members of the House have private rooms where they can properly take care of their blue-books, but I am not so fortunate as to have a room. I cannot see why the arrangement which has been in existence for so many years should not be continued. I would like to have some explanation from the government as to why this change has been made.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the First Minister a few days ago, in answer to a question, gave an explanation to the effect that there was not sufficient space in the post office to enable them to carry on the old arrangement. However I shall be prepared to discuss the point with the other members of the Internal Economy Committee. This is not a matter for the government but it is one of those referred to that committee, which comes under the direction of Mr. Speaker, who has associated with him several ministers, of whom I am one. I therefore cannot repudiate responsibility.

BROCKVILLE—OTTAWA RAILWAY SERVICE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Has the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) yet interviewed the Railway Commission with respect to the connection at Brockville from the west. Yesterday in order to get here, I had to leave home at eight o'clock in the morning, go to Brockville, and remain there four or five hours. The Canadian Pacific Railway left at two twenty and the Grand Trunk Railway was fifteen minutes late, so that there was no connection. It is high time that the hon. minister moved in this matter and saw that something was done.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The question of railway connection at Brockville has been claiming some of my attention the last few days. I have had a communication from the Railway Commissioners, in which they gave me the history of what has been done. It is however rather a history of what has been done than of what has been accomplished. We took the matter up with the two railway companies, and each expressed its willingness to meet the situation if the other would. The difficulty of arranging a time table, which affects their trains, is greater than it may appear on the surface, and I have a good deal of sympathy with the company who take the position that their through time tables should not be disarranged in order to make any such connection. But I am still of the opinion that the connection at Brockville could be made if the companies were not so obstinate in trying not to have it made. Each company now puts the blame on the other. The matter, as taken up by the Commission, has resulted in a sort of tentative arrangement by which the Canadian Pacific Railway agrees to hold its train at Brockville, if the Grand Trunk Railway conductor in charge of the fast train will wire to the Canadian Pacific Railway that he has passengers on board for Canadian Pacific Railway points. But they do not remain longer than ten minutes, so that if the Grand Trunk Railway from the west is fifteen minutes late, the passengers are left stranded at Brockville. Last week there was even a more serious state of affairs ? The mails at Brockville which might have been placed on the Canadian Pacific Railway, had connection been made from the west, remained five days out of the seven, last week, over at Brockville until the next day. On one occasion part of the mail was on the Canadian Pacific Railway when the train steamed out leaving the balance on the truck. This thing must be remedied. Unless the railway companies, with whom the Commission are now having some correspondence, decide to make connection at Brockville which, while not being unreasonable to themselves, will reasonably accommodate the public, I think the government must be prepared to place some amendment on the Railway Act which will compel the companies to look after the interests of the public. But we are in hopes that some arrangement will be arrived at without going to that length. I repeat however that if the companies do not show a reasonable desire to give the accommodation required, it will be the duty of the government to amend the Railway Act so as to compel the companies to do what they ought to do voluntarily.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The hon. minister might take pattern from the British Board of Trade and compel every railway company to submit its time table connections and any changes proposed to the board of trade.

Mr. SPEAKER. This does not arise out of the question.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the hon. minister take up the question of having the connection made at Prescott Junction ? That was done for thirty years and I would like to see that connection made again.

Mr. GRAHAM. I mentioned that latter to the Commission. They said it was the first complaint they had had. This morning, in reply to a letter of theirs, I explained the situation and what was necessary to be done in order to make that connection.

HARLAKA JUNCTION—INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. J. B. MORIN. Has the hon. Minister any information to give regarding connection on the Harlaka Junction of the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have taken that matter up and hope to be able to have a reply in a day or two. None of the hon. gentlemen who asked me the question the other day, except one of them, complied with my request to put their request in writing.

Mr. ALCORN. This matter is already covered by section 903 of the Railway Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not like to be positive but I think that the Act does cover the situation and possibly we might make it a little more emphatic.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session and the proposed amendment of Mr. Armstrong thereto.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). In the speech from the Throne our attention is directed to the fact that it is the intention of the government this session to submit a measure in amendment to the election law. It is particularly with respect to this matter which I wish to direct my attention. I do not know how our laws correspond with those of Great Britain, but we all know that such a thing as bribery and corruption in Great Britain is very rare. And we all know equally well that in our own country the reverse is the case. In fact I may go so far as to say that bribery and corruption is sometimes winked at. The fact that the laws we have dealing with this matter have not been properly enforced has led us to ignore them completely. I sincerely hope that something will be done this session to improve this condition, because it is a standing disgrace to this fair Canada of ours to have to admit that such performances as have taken place in the past and are taking place to-day may continue. I believe that, all other things being equal, and under the conditions which we have had in the past, it is possible to influence the elections in three-quarters of the constituencies of this country by the use of money, by reaching the corruptible vote which is to be found in nearly every constituency, sometimes small and sometimes large. I feel that we are simply continuing the course we have pursued of making criminals by neglecting this matter. In the corruptible element in every constituency we find men who are not made worse by the purchase of their vote; but there is in every constituency a class of men who, I believe, are lowered in the scale when they are approached and purchased. Therefore, I say we are simply making criminals by continuing the course we have pursued in the past. I have more sympathy for the man who sells his vote than for the man who purchases it; I have the greatest contempt for the oily, smooth canvasser who goes about with his pockets full of bills, sounding this man and that man to see whether or not they are corruptible. It may be the first time that the voter has ever been approached. Think of the process of reasoning that goes on in that man's mind while he is being sounded by this canvasser! It is a matter which affects his self-respect; he finally succumbs; he is bought up, and there you have another corruptible voter for all time to come. We turn from the ordinary voter and the corrupt canvasser and we go higher, we go to the system under which such a condition of affairs can exist, and what do we find? I believe that from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the money subscribed for election purposes in this country comes from interested people; it comes from contractors who expect to get their bills of extras allowed and want favourable consideration; it comes from corporations which want legislation or favourable attention from the government, who want a line or a few words in an Act changed; or it comes from private individuals who are seeking favours from the government. I do not think any hon. gentleman in this House is prepared to deny that. Therefore, if we go a step further what do we find? We find that the government that is in power, if this system is to continue, as it has continued, becomes compromised and involved with gentlemen who are seeking favours from the government, and such a condition of affairs ultimately arises that when favours are asked and legislation is sought, or when contracts are to be given and supplies are to be purchased, these matters cannot be dealt with upon their merits. Therefore, I contend that this lies at the very foundation of the good government of this country, and I sincerely trust that some method will be devised whereby the conditions will be improved.

I have noticed comments in the press from time to time in respect to election petitions. It is sometimes said when, after a general election, one party accuses the other of corruption, that the accusing party can resort to the courts, that protests may be entered and justice in that way may be had. I look upon the election petition as the greatest farce in existence. Why should a private individual be forced to prosecute people who have infringed the law in regard to an election and bring them to justice any more than he should be obliged, at his own expense, to prosecute a man for committing a theft? Why should a man be put to the expense of such a trial? Most of the members of this House, in the first place, are not financially able to stand the strain. An election fight, I understand, is a very expensive legal battle. Supposing after a general election in this country, out of 214 constituencies it might be considered in the interest of justice to enter protests in 50 of those constituencies, say 13 maritime constituencies, 30 in Quebec and Ontario, and 7 in the western provinces. That means first the depositing of $50,000 to cover the $1,000 deposits required by law. I understand that sometimes the legal and other expenses in connection with an election petition run up into the thousands—sometimes $5,000, sometimes more than $5,000—but assuming that in these 50 constituencies the expense of the trial will average $3,000, making $150,000 in all, we have a total of $200,000 required to carry on these protests. Why should private individuals be obliged to go to any such expense as that to enforce an election law any more than to enforce the criminal law of this country? Therefore, I hope that some amendment to the Election Act will be devised that will overcome the evils to which I have referred, and others which I shall not detain the House to mention now.

Then, too, I have never been able to reason out in my mind why the criminal laws of this country have not been put into force in respect to the crimes of bribery and corruption. We have in our criminal law ample provision for the prosecution of people charged with bribery or conspiracy to commit bribery, and yet for many years past, with the single exception of what took place in Ontario last year, there have been hardly any prosecutions under the criminal law. I cannot understand why the attorneys general of the different provinces of Canada have not enforced the criminal law in regard to bribery and corruption; that law has lain as a dead letter in the code for years and has been absolutely ignored. One Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. Gibson, dealt very lightly with this subject; on one occasion he made the statement, when asked to take certain steps in this matter, that he was not a policeman. This statement of his is well known throughout the country. We have in this House to-day an hon. gentleman whom I see before me, who has occupied the position of attorney general for New Brunswick (Hon. Wm. Pugsley), and I am sure it will be very interesting to all of us to know why, in all his experience in politics and during all the time that he occupied the position of Attorney General of his province, he did not prosecute offenders under the criminal law in respect to bribery and corruption.

I have not had the pleasure of meeting any gentleman who could speak with authority on that subject, as occupying the position of Attorney General in any province ; but we have now before us face to face an hon. gentleman who, I am sure, will be glad to enlighten us upon the subject. In this connection I may remark that a good deal has been said by the hon. gentleman, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) about certain things which took place on the eve of the last general election in 1904. He has not said much about it in this House, but he has said a good deal outside of this House. From the time he decided to enter federal politics, and from the time he was nominated in St. John, New Brunswick, he has said a good deal to his partisan followers in this country with regard to corruption in elections ; therefore we are glad to have him with us face to face in order that he may enlighten us on this subject. While speaking of what took place on the eve of the last federal election, I want to call attention to what I consider was a most sensational and spectacular affair that took place. I have in my mind a certain function which occurred at a point not very far from Ottawa, in the month of October, 1904. I think the House will be interested in knowing something about this affair because it leads up to other things I want to refer to. In that month, in 1904, there was an excursion on a trip extending over 1,096 miles, and which was composed of 120 gentlemen. This excursion or expedition was chiefly controlled by the Minister of Public Works, whom I see before me, and his friend, Mr. David Russell. It appears from the rumors current at that time that the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Public Works, seized no doubt by a true patriotism, and his friend Mr. Russell stood by him, desired to sacrifice himself on the altar of his country, and if possible by a flank movement to capture the portfolio of Railways and Canals. These were the rumours which were current in the city of Montreal, in the city of Toronto, and in other places. I say by a flank movement, because what object could this excursion have had if it did not mean that it was desirable to bring that hon. gentleman to the attention of the country, and help him to supersede the gentleman who then occupied the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, the Hon. Mr. Emmerson. Mr. Speaker, what happened ? In order to find out what happened, we had better refer to the accounts published in the daily papers at that time. The St. John 'Telegraph,' the Liberal organ at that time, stated on the 6th of October what the programme was. In great headlines it said :

Off to banquet to Dr. Pugsley.—Special train away with 120 New Brunswickers.—Guests of Mr. Russell.

Then it gives the name of the conductor of the train, gives the number of sleeping cars, 8, two dining cars, and one baggage car. The Montreal guests, who were in evidence in great number, joined the train at Montreal. Then they returned to Montreal after the banquet the same night at Caledonia Springs after they had partaken of refreshments to the Windsor Hotel, where the party were breakfasted and lunched as the guests of Mr. Russell, who paid the bill. The weather was damp, and I understand that the party was supplied with umbrellas and overshoes. Cabs were engaged at the expense of Mr. Russell to drive the party round Mount Royal and see the sights of the city. The guests outside the city of St. John received free transportation to St. John and return. It was stated in this report of the St. John 'Telegraph' of that date that attached to the train out of New York were three cars bearing Mr. Russell's guests to this celebrated banquet—out of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to follow up the thread of my argument I wish to read the views of some of the Liberal papers at that time in regard to the purpose of the banquet. The Montreal 'Herald' of October 7, says :

St. John's Attorney General feted at Caledonia Springs.—Generosity of Mr. David Russell brings together a large number of maritime province and upper province men to do honour to a Liberal statesman.

It further says :

Mr. David Russell, the extremely enterprising gentleman from the maritime provinces, gave a banquet last night to the Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Attorney General in the New Brunswick government. It was a most remarkable dinner in many ways. Mr. Russell himself the genial host of the evening, through his magnetic personality pervaded the entire function, did not actually utter a single word for public hearing.

A beautiful oration which effectually awoke the gathering at a very late hour of the evening was delivered for him by a phonograph, which unkindly refused to stop for the applause. Mr. Russell, during its delivery posed gracefully with his hand on his heart and smiled at his delighted guests.

The gathering was also noticeable for the great enthusiasm with which it protested against Hon. Mr. Pugsley's expressed desire to remain in provincial politics, and for the conviction manifested by his maritime and western friends alike that he should seek a larger sphere for his services.

This quotation appeared in the Montreal 'Herald,' of October 7th. In the St. John 'Telegraph' there appeared this report upon the same thing, beginning with these headlines :

Feeling strong among the guests that Dr. Pugsley will in the future be forced to heed the call to the larger sphere of activity.

Now I want to show what the Minister of Public Works said at that banquet in respect of Mr. Russell. But before doing so, I will read a few lines from the remarks of Mr. C. N. Skinner.

Recorder Skinner, at the conclusion of his speech, alluded feelingly to Mr. Pugsley's announcement of his desire to remain in the provincial service 'He says he will remain where he is,' said Mr. Skinner. Our country will be glad if he does. But I hear a call coming from many quarters for the Attorney General to go up higher and perform greater duties for this Dominion. This country is a very jealous mistress, and if the call she gives is once slighted she is likely never to come back again. Therefore I would beg the guest of the evening to bear this in mind. In this I speak not as a mere resident of the province down by the sea, but for the whole of Canada. There should be but one Canada, no east, no west, no north, no south, nothing but one country indivisible for ever, and it is in the interest of that country I ask him to consider.

When the hon. gentleman got on his feet he spoke as follows :

I am proud that we in St. John have given to you in Montreal a young man of the sincerity, integrity, ability and foresight of Mr. Russell. (Applause.) It was my pleasure to know Mr. Russell a number of years in the city of St. John in the days of smaller things with him and with me as well. He was my friend and is the friend of us all here to-night (applause), and I have no doubt that he often looked out of the city of St. John and longed to exercise his talents in the successful enterprises with which his name in recent years has been associated.

It is the man who can look ahead and see where possibilities are to make enterprises pay. These are the men who are holding up this country. The capitalist comes in after the success of an enterprise has been demonstrated. It is men like Mr. Russell who are able to select the worthy enterprises and discard the unworthy ones.

You gentlemen from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, I want to say there has come here to-night the flower of the men of New Brunswick (applause). I thank you most heartily for coming here to do honour to me, and in doing honour to me you are also doing honour to the splendid host who has given us the honour of gathering in this magnificent hall and witnessing the surroundings of the health-giving springs.

I will not detain the House very much longer in reading the extracts, but I think I ought to read an editorial which appeared in the St. John 'Telegraph' of October 7, dealing with this matter. It is headed 'The Pugsley Banquet.'

Considerable space is devoted in our news columns this morning to a report of the splendid function at Caledonia Springs last night, where Hon. William Pugsley was the guest of honour at a banquet given by Mr. David Russell. The banquet was non-political and Mr. Pugsley deprecated the insistent intimation that he is to be called into the greater arena of Dominion politics. He expressed his intention of remaining in the high and responsible position which he now holds. It was noteworthy however, that the feeling among the distinguished company at the banquet board was that the guest of the evening possessed talents which marked him as a public figure who would not long withstand the imperative call of the country to activity in a wider sphere.

The list of guests, the speakers and the speeches, and the arrangements generally made the banquet one which must long be recalled as a marked success. Not least among the notable features was the fact that the guest of the evening, the host and the chairman were all sons of this province who have acquitted themselves with distinction in the useful activities of the Dominion. The gathering was widely representative and the manner in which men of prominence in both parties and many walks of life embraced the opportunity to do honour to the attorney general is and will long be a pardonable cause of pride on his part.

I have read these extracts because, as I have said before, this was the most spectacular affair that happened on the eve of the last general election. It was a most remarkable thing. There was, up to that time, no precedent for such an excursion, and I have seen it stated in the press that the whole thing cost about $15,000. Now, it will be in the minds of hon. members of this House and there will not be very much doubt as to what the object of it was. The hon. gentleman and Mr. Russell were very intimate. They were intimate in business, they were intimate in newspaper deals—and we have heard a great deal about newspaper deals—and they were intimate in land deals.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I may say that this statement that I was associated with Mr. Russell in newspaper or land deals is entirely erroneous. My hon. friend has been completely misinformed as to that.

Mr. KEMP. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, Mr. Speaker, but I will just point out to him what I was going to say. I think that he did not have in his mind what I had in mine. It was in reference to the St. John 'Gazette' that I was speaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The St. John 'Gazette'?

Mr. KEMP. The St. John 'Gazette.' I understand that the hon. gentleman owned or controlled the St. John 'Gazette.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that the only transaction I ever had with Mr. Russell in connection with the St. John 'Gazette' is this : I was one of the proprietors and I sold out my interest in the 'Gazette' to Mr. Russell.

Mr. KEMP. That is all I intended to say in regard to the St. John 'Gazette.' The hon. minister, amongst other things, during the short time he has been in federal politics, has talked a great dealt about campaign funds. He knows the exact amount of the Conservative campaign fund of 1904. If so he is wiser than any one else in that respect because I do not suppose that anybody else knows what the campaign fund was although he knows it down to a dollar.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Don't you believe yourself. There are many others who know it besides myself.

Mr. KEMP. I observed the statement of the hon. gentleman in regard to this matter, I made a reference to it in the city of Toronto a few weeks ago and after I had made a reference to it the hon. gentleman took to the city of St. John, got on the platform and said : I have not denied it. I did not know that a man could deny something of which he had no knowledge. I said a moment ago that no one had any knowledge in respect to the matter ; I will repeat it. I know that he cannot produce any one and if he does know any one who has any knowledge on this subject he ought to produce him. In so far as my knowledge of this matter is concerned I may say that I look upon the proposition as one of the most preposterous and ridiculous that was ever made in this country. Talk about a party in opposition having such a campaign fund. Let me direct the attention of the House to what happened in the province of Ontario a few years ago in respect to the provincial elections when it was proved and demonstrated that the total amount of money that was used in the campaign fund of the Conservative Party in Ontario in that election was $26,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was that the Conservative fund ?

Mr. KEMP. That was the Conservative fund, when the Conservative were in opposition, and it was during a political contest in Ontario that the whole facts were made public. I may say that in so far as a campaign fund is concerned, if the elections were carried on in other parts of the country with as great an amount of economy as they are in the province of Ontario, if a cypher were taken off the figures that were mentioned by the hon. gentleman the statement would likely be nearer the truth. But, Mr. Speaker, I have referred to the statement which I made about this matter in the city of Toronto to the reply which was made by the hon. Minister of Public Works. I desire to refer to another matter. The hon. Minister of Public Works has made the statement in this country, on the hustings, at meetings of his partisan supporters, that in a certain county in the province of New Brunswick there was spent the sum of $25,000, and he is prepared to give the names of the persons to whom this money was sent. A few weeks ago in the city of Toronto, as I have stated, I said, knowing that this money had been sent into a constituency and assuming, as we must assume, that the money was sent into that constituency for corrupt purposes, the hon. gentleman, being Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, should have prosecuted the parties that were guilty. The hon. gentleman met that statement by saying that he had only recently learned of the fact, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman admits that he knew of the matter at the time of the Minister of Finance's by-election in Shelburne and Queens. But whether that is so or not, he says he is in possession of the facts, he knows all about them he says, and surely it is his duty to lay information against the guilty parties and to prosecute them under the criminal law as was recently done under similar circumstances in the province of Ontario. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has chosen to deal with this matter in what appears to me to be a very frivolous fashion for a gentleman occupying the high and responsible position he does. He said :

If I started prosecutions the jails would not be large enough to hold all the Tories of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, who is a minister of the Crown, makes a frivolous statement like that with respect to such a serious matter. I would suggest to him that he should go ahead and prosecute, and then when the jails are filled he should let a few go on suspended sentence until there was room for them. Surely the government with all its money which it expends so lavishly can provide jail accommodation for all the criminals in the country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has resorted to the lowest kind of a campaign in this matter ; he has gone before public meetings of his partisan supporters and he has made statements which I challenge him to make in this House face to face with us. At a meeting in Ottawa last week when Mr. Caron was chosen as Liberal candidate in the by-election, and in the presence of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Public Works indicated that he looked upon the leader of the opposition as a hypocrite and a liar. Now, no matter what the feelings of the Prime Minister are we must realize that he tries to so conduct himself as to leave the impression that he is a gentleman, and yet he allows the Minister of Public Works in his presence and without reproof to use such language towards a colleague in this House. And the Minister of Public Works has sat in this House since the opening of the session, and in view of the statements he has made with regard to bribery and corruption in the province of New Brunswick on the public platform, he has not dared to explain to this House what he means or to reiterate the charges. He told his hearers at the meeting in Ottawa the other night, that when he was in Woodstock on the eve of the last election he had received a telegram from a gentleman asking him to go on the stump with Mr. Blair, I trust that when the Minister of Public Works gets on his feet in this House, he will tell us who that gentleman is, and tell us all he knows about the case. It will be of some interest to the country if he does. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has spoken about campaign funds. I do not know how much he knows about campaign funds, but I would presume he knows a good deal to hear him talk. However, if he wants any information with regard to campaign funds I would direct him to ask the Prime Minister who it is, that has handled the campaign funds for the Liberal party in this country during the past eleven years. A letter from the Prime Minister to these gentlemen will unseal their mouths and they will be able to give the Minister of Public Works pointers he has never heard about. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) not to overlook the name of the Speaker of the Senate if he wants to find out about campaign funds; if he goes to that gentleman he can doubtless find out something about such matters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have referred to this matter of political corruption; I have referred to the position which the Minister of Public Works has taken in regard to it, and to the plight he finds himself in at the present time. He has talked a great deal about a libel suit—that is a specialty of his—and he has gone so far as to give notice of a libel action against the Toronto 'World.' How my heart bleeds for the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean); how he must tremble in his shoes when he thinks of this terrible libel suit the Minister of Public Works is to take against his paper. And here is the basis of the libel suit which the Minister of Public Works threatened:

> There are some now think that Mr. Pugsley was on the inside in all the Blair-Russell deal.

That is what the Minister of Public Works takes as an offence against him, and he threatens to sue the Toronto 'World' because it said that. I see published the names of the lawyers who are acting for him. I have not asked the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) what is the position of that libel suit to-day, I do not know anything about it, but I venture to say there has never been another step taken in regard to it. And yet the Minister of Public Works talks about taking libel suits. I can direct the hon. gentleman's attention to a libel suit which he might institute. I can draw his attention to what appears to me to be a libel if it is not true, and it is a statement made in a very prominent newspaper which is published right at his own doorstep in the province of New Brunswick. And yet I do not believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) has taken an action for libel against that newspaper. Here is what is said in an editorial in the Fredericton 'Gleaner':

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the Fredericton 'Gleaner'?

Mr. KEMP. Yes, the Fredericton 'Gleaner.' The hon. gentleman shakes his head; he does not like the sound of the name of that newspaper. This editorial is in the Fredericton 'Gleaner' of September 18, 1907, and it deals with the $25,000 matter to which the hon. gentleman referred in his speech at his nomination in St. John. It says in part:

> In the contest of 1904 (when the $25,000 which Mr. Pugsley himself alleges he knew was spent in Westmoreland against the Liberal candidate, who was Mr. Emmerson, the most active opponent of Mr. Emmerson was a bosom friend of Mr. Pugsley, the closest friend he had, and one who has been identified with him in a business way for years and who supports him in all things. What Mr. Pugsley knows about this alleged expenditure of $25,000 he knows as a back-slasher of the then Minister of Railways, whose place he was seeking, and whose downfall he was evidently endeavouring to bring about by whatever means would accomplish the end. As to that expenditure, Mr. Pugsley can speak with some authority, for there was nothing that was done with the purpose of bringing about the defeat of Mr. Emmerson in Westmoreland that he was not aware of, and our opinion has always been that he was the chief advisory man in the scheme. The money was paid over by friends of Mr. Pugsley to serve Mr. Pugsley's ends and in endeavouring to work the game Mr. Pugsley operated under the cloak of others. It may be that if Mr. Pugsley does not wish to go farther into this $25,000 business somebody else will, for now that he has chosen to make reference to it, and that in the fashion peculiar to himself and for a purpose not in keeping with the dignity of men who are respected in the public life, the matter is one in which the people will expect to be enlightened as to all of the facts.

If the Minister of Public Works considers himself to have been injured by the article which appeared in the Toronto 'World,' a very innocent article, he must have been ten times more injured by this article; and yet the hon. gentleman has not entered an action for libel against this newspaper nor even protested against the article. Now, I hope that the Minister of Public Works will deem it his duty to make good what he has stated outside of this House. In the speech he delivered in Ottawa, he practically accused the leader of the opposition of being a hypocrite and a liar. I have under my hand the newspaper in which the report of that speech appeared, and I doubt whether the hon. gentleman has the courage to stand up in this House and repeat what he then said in effect upon the public platform in Ottawa. The hon. gentleman has reflected upon gentlemen in Montreal and in the province of New Brunswick, alleging in effect that they conspired to defraud the electors of the county of Westmoreland, and I doubt if the hon. gentleman has the courage to lay the information by which these gentlemen will be brought to justice if they are guilty. The hon. gentleman claims to be in possession of certain facts in regard to that election, the alleged offences being a breach of the criminal law; but I doubt, as I say, whether he has the courage to lay this information in Montreal and New Brunswick for the purpose of bringing these people to justice. Mr. Speaker, the press is reeking with statements based on this hon. gentleman's insinuations. He is bound to go further. He does not need to spend a dollar of his own money, he only needs to hand the matter over to the Crown prosecutors in Quebec and in New Brunswick and they will carry it on. So far as I am concerned, and I believe any other hon. member on this side of the House, we desire to see him go the full length. It does not make any difference whom this hits, be they high or low, be they in this House or out of this House; we want to see this matter brought to light, and we want to know what there is in it. If the hon. gentleman refuses to go further, if he is satisfied to make insinuations in the way he has done outside of this House, without taking steps to make his position good, I cannot but feel that he is condemned before the country for making statements which he knew were not true. Sir, he has talked of these things on the hustings ; but he has sat in this House like a whipped spaniel, not daring to open his mouth. He is now, Mr. Speaker at the bar of public opinion, and let him choose his course.

Mr. W. McINTYRE (Strathcona). Mr. Speaker)——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh. Speak now.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, if hon. gentlemen opposite expect to disconcert me by political fireworks, they are doomed to disappointment. My only reason for speaking at this particular moment is to discuss the matter which would naturally call for discussion under the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). In that amendment the hon. gentleman puts forward a proposition which it is the duty of the members of this House to discuss, not as it affects the constituency of East Lambton, but as it affects the whole Dominion of Canada. It does seem to me, without making any criticism concerning the different sections of the country, that there must be some laxity of employment on the part of certain men from the eastern portion of this great Dominion, when they take up their time discussing matters which to my mind belong more to the hustings than to the floor of this House. That does not apply to one side of the House alone. It seems to me that as representatives of certain bodies of people, it is our duty to discuss more particularly what is for the betterment of this country. The proposition contained in the amendment of the hon. member for East Lambton is that of the enforcement of rural mail delivery. That question is one which possibly affects his constituency specially, and he seems to think that it should apply to the whole Dominion of Canada. The hon. gentleman, in discussing the question, gave us a great mass of statistics which he assured us had been taken from the reports of the Post Office Department of the United States ; and from these he attempted to prove that it would be a good business proposition for the Dominion of Canada, at this stage of its growth, to institute a system of rural mail delivery. I wish to say that when an hon. member is considering matters concerning his own constituency, he must as a federal representative bear in mind that there are other parts of this great country to be considered. If you take the meagre surplus which we have from the Post Office Department to-day and spread that over the various portions of this great Dominion which must necessarily be served by the Post Office Department, you will find that you cannot inaugurate any great reform in any particular portion of the country without affecting the whole country. The hon. member for East Lambton, when giving his statistics, had the misfortune to suggest under what conditions the system of rural free delivery should apply. At page 396 of 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman said :

> It is distinctly and plainy laid down by the department that the route must be twenty-four miles long, that there must be one hundred families on that route and that eighty-five of those families must not only put up boxes but agree to take rural free delivery. Thus the rural free delivery system can only be installed in a district where it can be successfully carried on and if these requirements are not fulfilled, the system cannot be installed until the population increases.

The hon. gentleman, in putting forward any such condition as that, cut western Canada entirely out of the system. He has put it beyond our grasp, and if we should institute any such service in the Dominion at a cost of $10,000,000—the American system cost $35,000,000—what would be the result ? In my constituency we have the different settlements stretching out into the more remote parts.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. If he had read the whole of my speech he would not make the statement he has made. Twenty-four miles is a standard route, and in Dakota the routes were thirty miles long. I gave the salaries paid to the men up to thirty miles and under twenty-four miles.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The hon. gentleman gave us the regulations under which this matter was carried on. He has put himself on record, and by that record must he be judged. He can make any other additional routes he chooses. He can make it twice as long, and he still cuts out our great west in the operation of this altogether. In his scheme of carrying out these regulations he has not taken into consideration the fact that the condition of our roads out west is such as to entail very great difficulty in travelling. There are mail routes that run, not one hundred miles or ten or twenty-four miles, but that run hundreds of miles, and you must take this into consideration, that when you use up the surplus, when you use up in the new scheme the money that goes to carry on the post office operations, where are you going to get money to institute new mail routes and establish new post offices and new post office centres? We are complaining in the west to-day with a great deal of feeling that our post office system is not extended far enough. But what would be the case under such a system as the hon. gentleman advocates? It would result necessarily in a further starving of the west, and I would be remiss in my duty if I did not stand up and protest here against any such system being instituted. Rural delivery may be good in those places where it can be carried on, but I am here to speak for those places where it cannot. What we want out in the west is our present system extended. We want more frequent service, a greater number of post offices, and in order to give us that you must use the surplus revenue you now have. You can institute no great reform in the system which will not interfere with furnishing the west such conditions as are now obtained in the older settlements of Ontario. Speaking of the number of miles a farmer has to travel to get his mail, the hon. gentleman pointed out how great a distance a certain constituent of his has to cover in a week in going for his mail. But what would he say of a man who has to travel once a week for forty miles in order to get his mail, who has to take his team—possibly the only one on the homestead—and use his own time going that forty miles. The hon. gentleman, if he had a case of that kind in his constituency, would know something of hardship. Here is a man in a village, who no doubt has children who could easily go for the mail, who lives within a mile and a half of the post office, what great hardship is it to him that he knows not rural mail delivery? That man knows nothing of the difficulties of a homesteader or pioneer settler out in the west.

On the subject of increased postal facilities I have this to say. On inquiry at the Post Office Department I find that I am supposed to be the last man to grumble, for within the last month my constituency has received more mail contracts than any other in the Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you do it?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. The only trouble with me is that I do not do enough. We must still widen out; we must still more increase our service, but if you use up your surplus in instituting some great reform, these people out in the west will not be able to get the service they are entitled to. No doubt some hon. gentlemen will say that in the thickly settled portions of this country a greater revenue is supplied and that the postal surplus really comes from the eastern provinces. But we are legislating for the whole Dominion. We are besides carrying on an immigration propaganda, and when you bring people in you must give them a fair measure of postal facilities. If we had the rural delivery system, it would be idle to think of citing to you the enormous distances you would have to cover to go over my constituency alone. In my constituency alone there is as much arable land and as fertile as you can find in the whole province of Ontario south of Lake Nippissing. If you are going to establish a rural free delivery over so great an area, you are going to use up practically in so doing all the surplus you have now. Another feature to be remembered is this, that in the constituency which I represent is one-third the population of Alberta, and yet to institute on the lines laid down by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) regular routes would practically deprive my whole constituency of rural free delivery. One hon. gentleman last year, in reply to an hon. member from the west, said that we were not having a fair, square deal in this particular of mail delivery generally. He said that one reason why we did not deserve greater post office facilities was the fact that we were an unreading class of people. No statement could be more fallacious. You will find that the people in that country are a reading class and per capita a greater letter writing class than any community in the east. Most of these people are isolated from kith and kin and consequently write home to numerous friends, and thus have a greater correspondence than people in the eastern provinces.

Mr. BLAIN. What member on this side made that statement?

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I did not say that any hon. gentleman on that side made it. What I said was that an hon. member of this House made it. The question is one that resolves itself simply into a business question, and as such it must be considered in all its aspects. It may be a vexed question in certain thickly settled populations, but with us the question is greater post office facilities under the present system. I believe that hon. gentlemen who will study this matter carefully will see that any argument brought forward to support rural free delivery, in our present condition, is fallacious, and the carrying out of any such system would result in increasing the facilities at one point and further starving them at another. There is no hon. gentleman here, no matter how much he may think of his particular constituency, who would like to put in operation any such system that would necessarily shut out people who have not yet received the post office facilities to which they are entitled in order that some little further privileges should be granted their own immediate locality. I appeal to the sense of fairness of this House that it should recognize that the institution of any such system as a free rural mail delivery would be to the detriment of Canada as a whole and of the west in particular.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) in speaking to his motion the other day took occasion to criticise certain statements made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) during the debate regarding the Transcontinental Railway in 1903. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) stated that the right hon. the Prime Minister had said that the new Transcontinental railroad would cost the country $13,000,000 and not a cent more. He then read extracts from the remarks of the Prime Minister at that time, quoting from the 'Hansard' of 1903, at page 7691:

> The sum total of the money to be paid by the government for the construction of that line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 and not a cent more.

The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), who spoke after my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) took occasion to criticise the hon. member for Brantford in a very extraordinary way. I suppose that those criticisms must have been in accordance with the rules of this House, but it seems strange to me that he should designate the utterances of an hon. member as—> Dishonest—a foolish and silly attempt to deceive this House—absurd statements.

In another part of his speech he claimed that the hon. member for Brantford was guilty of separating from their context a few words of a speech and this he said was surely not an honest thing, not a right thing and something unworthy a member of this House.

I have taken occasion to read the remarks of the Prime Minister during the debate of 1903, and I consider the statement made the other day by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) as exactly as it ought to have been and as quite by the book. My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) simply stated that the Prime Minister had said that the road would cost the country 13,000,000. That is just exactly what the Prime Minister did state. If you read the Prime Minister's speech you will find that he nowhere gave an estimate himself regarding the total expenditure and obligation to be assumed by this country in connection with that road. This matter of the total cost seems to have been slurred over or forgotten at that time. A few days after the speech of the Prime Minister in 1903 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) went into the matter of the actual cost of the road. At the same time he backed up the Prime Minister in claiming that the cost to Canada would be only $13,725,706. Please note how carefully he made up this statement, exactly to one dollar. This seems to have been an evident attempt to mislead the voters of this country as to the obligations which Canada was to assume in connection with this Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad. I know, of my own knowledge, that this argument was used on the platform in the last campaign, as a reason for supporting this government, which was so wise and able that it could build a railway from Moncton to the Pacific and have it cost the country only $13,725,706. I was confronted with this argument on many platforms in my campaign and when I stated that it was absurd, that this simply meant the loss of interest that this country would sustain, I was informed by my opponents in a very sympathetic fashion: Oh well, if Mr. Perley knows more about it than the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance why, all right. In other words, the attempt was made to laugh me out of court in the matter as not knowing anything about it whatever. As a proof that, intentionally or unintentionally, this was used to deceive the people of this country at the last election, I wish to refer to one of the campaign sheets published and spread broadcast by this great government before the last election. I hold a copy of it in my hand. On the front page it says:

> Progressive policy—Record of the Liberal government—Conservative fallacies exposed.

On page 10 of this little pamphlet we find in letters so large that if you look carefully you may see them across the House:

> A transcontinental railway for $13,000,000.

No words of explanation—it is true that in very small type farther down it says that this is only going to pay our loss on interest account. It reminds me of an advertisement published some years ago when two railways were competing vigorously between Ottawa and Montreal. They had been making the run in three hours and a quarter, but one of them came out with an immense advertisement:

> Ottawa to Montreal in two hours!

Then underneath in little type that you could hardly see:

> And 59 minutes.

That is about the way that this announcement, spread broadcast throughout the country appears to me, and I would ask if it was fair for the government to put this information before the people of this country in that sheet at the last election and if it was fair for the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) to speak as he did the other day in this House with regard to the remarks of my friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) who certainly put the case, as

I understand it, exactly in accordance with the facts. It appears now when every one sees that such vast sums will be required for this Grand Trunk Pacific, that the ministers wish to have this little estimate of theirs forgotten. In that connection I would like to say that even the estimates made of the actual cost of this road seem to have been far away below what they should have been. I noticed at the time that the late Hon. Mr. Blair, who certainly did everything he could to put the matter before the people in its proper light, estimated the total cost of this railway as $121,000,000. The Minister of Finance, in his estimate of the cost, stated it would be something under one hundred million dollars. Now is it going to be built for that sum ? It is a matter of knowledge that the contracts which have already been let have been let at a great deal higher figures than any one expected in 1903. Before this government gets through providing money for this Transcontinental Railway, they are going to have a good deal of trouble in getting it in the money markets of the world, or I am much mistaken. Even this estimate of $13,000,000 is based on a 3 per cent rate of interest and I will ask if this government is able to-day—not that it shows anything wrong with the Dominion, because our credit is as high as the credit of any other country ; but as interest stands to-day, it is impossible for any one, or any government, to borrow this money at 3 per cent. They will have to pay a greater interest, and have to stand a greater loss of interest than they expected. I notice that the Hon. Mr. Blair at that time explained that if the government had to pay 3½ per cent interest, the extra loss in the seven or ten years' interest would be $18,850,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a word of congratulation to my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. Thos. Chisholm) for the remarks he made the other day on the French treaty. I thought those remarks were made in such a way as to make us all understand that the ratification of this treaty by this House would by no means be plain sailing. It is a treaty that ought to be most carefully considered. We certainly want to cultivate trade with the great French republic on a fair basis ; but I doubt very much, after the criticism of the hon. member for East Huron, whether this convention now before the House has been made on a fair basis. It is to be remembered that the farmers of France are especially the backbone of that country, even more than are the farmers the backbone of other countries. In France the land is divided into small holdings, and they carry out a system of intensified farming which produces more to the acre than we are in the habit of producing in this country where land is so much more plentiful. It seems to me that the French government were bound to protect the farmers of France, especially when they were negotiating this treaty. Our government surely must have realized that before they went to France to make this treaty, and I do not see how they could expect to get for our farmers reasonable reductions in the French rates of duty, which would be of benefit to our farmers in sending their products to that country. However, we hardly need be surprised that this government should have gone there without thinking of that, when they refuse to give our own farmers the protection they are able to give on their products.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Hall), in moving the address the other day which we are now discussing, made a comparison between the increased debt of this country at two periods in its history, namely, the last eleven years of the Conservative regime and the eleven years which have just passed under the present regime. He stated that the Conservatives, in the last eleven years of their regime, had increased the trade by $66,000,000, and increased the debt by $118,000,000 ; while the wonderful government of the present day had increased the trade by $378,000,000, and increased the debt by only $5,000,000. Now, I believe that is so, but I would like to ask what that has got to do with the question. What connection is there between the two facts ? The question whether the debt has increased has nothing to do with the increase of trade. It all depends on the rate of taxation and the expenditure of the country, and I submit that the trade of this country would have increased just as fast during the past eleven years if the government had borrowed more and taken less from the pockets of the people. I think therefore that the argument of the hon. member for West Peterborough was not well founded.

It is strange that the supporters of this government always take credit to themselves for everything good that happens. I notice that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), on the 6th of December, when discussing this address, said :

> In my experience I have found that Providence was of very little use to me or to the people I have had to deal with. Providence is, of course, all right in a way. But my experience is that where success and prosperity exist it is to be found among the people who help themselves.

I think I never heard the Grit policy so plainly enunciated before. In our experience on this side of the House we have always found that we owed more to Providence than to anything else. That has been my experience, and I regard the remarks of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie as rather strange, to say the least.

Now, I would like to say a few words with regard to the question of surpluses which has been mentioned during this debate. In the first place, I would say that I am much better able to agree with Mr. Fielding when he was editor of the Halifax 'Chronicle' than I am to agree with the hon. Mr. Fielding, Minister of Finance, with regard to this matter. This surplus, so-called, was not brought about by the magic wand of the government. In the first instance we have to inquire how much money we take in taxes. It may be said, Sir, that the people of Canada have two pockets, they have their own private pocket, and they have the pocket of the government, which is surely the pocket of the people, or ought to be.

The government is able to increase the taxes, and this government has increased the taxes from $5.66 per head in 1896 to over $10 per head now. It is, of course, a good thing to make both ends meet in a government such as ours as far as receipts and expenditures are concerned, but if this government collected less taxes and borrowed more money there would be no surplus. At the same time I submit that the country would not necessarily be worse off if the people paid $10,000,000 a year less taxes and the government had to go and borrow $10,000,000 in the English market. The people would have that $10,000,000 left in their own pockets and would therefore, in a way, be as well off as if the government had taken the taxes from them as it is doing now. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on the 3rd of this month, made quite an argument in regard to the surpluses of this government as compared with those of the Conservative government. He stated that he found that the Conservatives, in their last eleven years, had had an average deficit of $249,000, whereas this government had had a net surplus in the corresponding eleven years of $93,626,000. The Minister of Finance congratulated himself on this grand showing. He also congratulated himself on the fact that this government had made $127,000,000 of the capital expenditure while it had only added 5,000,000 to the debt. I claim that neither of these facts is an argument in favour of the wisdom of this government or a proof of wise and economical administration. I claim that the question of the surplus is purely a question of taking money from one pocket of the people and putting it into the other pocket. It seems to me that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) must be forgiven for making an argument of this sort in support of the wisdom of this government, but it is utterly beneath the dignity of the responsible position of the Minister of Finance to try and make party capital out of a fact of that kind. There are always in this country too many people who think that the government is something away above and outside of them and something with which they have nothing to do. I find that many of the electors of this country think, if they get some money from the government for their own use, or to be spent around them, that it really does not cost them anything, that it comes from some outside source, some great benignant source that does them no harm. I think it is a pity that the Minister of Finance should try to encourage this idea. You would think that this surplus was coming down like manna from heaven and that it cost nobody anything, whereas, it represents so much money taken out of the pockets of the people. Surely if this government had taken $93,626,000 less from the people in taxes during the last eleven years there would have been no surplus. That is true. It would have been necessary for this government to have borrowed money, but our people would have had in their pockets $93,626,000 more money than they have now. I think, Sir, that a government can make wise or unwise laws, can spend our money wisely and economically, or can spend our money on graft and rake-off. In other words, it seems to me that the government is able to make good times better or bad times worse, and to help the people by wise legislation, but that it is able to make a surplus of $93,626,000 out of nothing, is of course impossible. I think that the main question is whether the money which it takes from the people is well expended on remunerative public objects and for public purposes. I find that the total disbursements of the Dominion of Canada have increased from $44,000,000 in 1896 to the equivalent of $87,700,000 in 1907; in other words, they have just about doubled. I find under the head of taxation, in the public accounts which have been brought down, that while the Conservatives in 1896 collected from the people $27,759,000, this government during nine months collected $51,565,000 which would be equal $68,753,000 for twelve months. That is the record of this government. The Conservative government had great works to carry out. It spent large sums of money on the Canadian Pacific Railway which has been of so much use to this country, on the system of canals and in acquiring the great Northwest. This government has had no great expenditures to cope with. The Grand Trunk Pacific is being built, but a comparatively small portion of that money has yet been spent by the government. In other words this vast expenditure, it seems to me, has been frittered away in small things. The money has been spent for useless public works, in many cases for rake-offs and deals of various kinds. I do not propose to-day to go into such matters—they have been referred to in this House many times—such as wharfs built where they are not wanted, dredging done for twice what it ought to cost, deals like the Moncton land deal, bridges built for municipalities, like that at Disraeli, and in order that I may not be accused of referring only to things away from my own county, a wharf at Greece's Point in the county of Argenteuil was built by this government which is of no use to anybody whatever. The hon. Minister of Finance, at page 108 of 'Hansard,' says that this government has had in their eleven years larger charges for capital account than the Conservatives had in the previous eleven years. Larger ? Yes, larger in total but not larger in so far as the usefulness of the works upon which this money was spent is concerned. I claim that the Conservatives, although they had so much less to spend, although they took from the people of the country so much less in taxes, accomplished far more with a smaller amount of money than the Liberals have in the past eleven years with their vast expenditures. I believe that the people of Canada are at last awakened to this fact and that they will remember it when they cast their votes at the next election.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). Mr. Speaker ; the debate has been very interesting in many respects but it has developed some peculiarities. The great width of the field open to each speaker, brings it about that each speaks with regard to what ever particular feature appeals to him and the peculiar result follows that as one member takes his seat after treating of his particular subject the next rises and deals with an entirely different matter, thus breaking completely the connection of the debate. I, however, shall endeavour to stick closely to the amendment moved by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) which is really the question before the House. It seems to me, that that gentleman having spoken for such a length of time so eloquently and so powerfully, must feel somewhat dissatisfied that even on his own side of the House his remarks have not been appreciated as they deserve.

An hon. MEMBER. He did it all himself.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. If that be so, then it is evident that gentlemen on the Conservative side feel that the two members who previously spoke on their side, did not sufficiently develop their points, because they seem to be willing to give them considerable assistance in that respect. For my part, I shall at least pay the hon. gentleman from East Lambton the compliment of a remark or two on his amendment, and I trust that by brevity I shall show my idea as to what should be the length of a speech in this House of Commons on most subjects. The amendment of the hon. member is divided into two parts : In the first part we have a regret that certain statements mentioned in the address have not been sufficiently developed, and also a regret that other subjects which ought to have been mentioned are absent from it. In that feature of it the amendment is a want of confidence motion and as a government member it invites my opposition. The second part of the amendment treats more especially of rural free delivery of the mails, and although the member for Lambton travelled over a wide circle, his remarks more especially centred on criticising the Post Office Department, the administration of which the Liberal party as a whole has been proud of. And, I confidently believe that we have had very good reason to be proud of the administration of the Post Office Department, under the present government. When the Liberals came to power the department was placed in charge of a very strong minister with a very able deputy, and as we look at the development of his policy and see the result of it ; the improvement of business methods by which old deficits were changed to surpluses, the lowering of the rates of internal postage, the obtaining of imperial penny postage ; these, and everything in connection with the department have reflected the highest credit on its administration. It is rather an unusual thing that a department of the government that has been so successful and progressive should be asked by a member of the Conservative party to advance still more rapidly. But, the member for Lambton has told us he feels very keenly on this particular question ; he tells us he has studied it for a length of time and given it a great deal of thought, and that in the pursuit of his investigations he went to Washington to interview the Postmaster General of the United States and his officials with regard to the operation of the service in that country. The hon. gentleman tells us he was courteously received at the American capital ; that he got a great deal of information and that he comes back full of enthusiasm for the service, and I think I may say with also a considerable amount of impatience towards those who have not been able to see as he does in connection with it. As I beheld the picture the hon. gentleman painted of the merits and advantages of rural free delivery, it certainly charmed me because I have taken interest in the matter myself. I have felt, as does the hon. gentleman, that it would be a very great benefit indeed to many parts of our country. In what he said as to its advantages from a business and social point of view I agree with him, and with him I have hopes that the time is not far distant when we can enjoy these advantages. So far as that particular part of his amendment is concerned I am thoroughly in accord with him. I do not think he exaggerates the advantages to be obtained by the introduction of rural free delivery ; when it can be properly and economically brought about. But I have noticed also that in his amendment, the hon. gentleman has taken stronger ground than the leader of the opposition takes in the platform he laid down in Halifax. That particular item of the public service is dealt with in the Halifax platform, and the benefits of it are described, but attached to it there is a rider—the exact phraseology of which I do not remember—in which the leader of the opposition says that rural free delivery is to be undertaken after the due consideration of the cost. That is a very prudent rider to attach to such a policy. Not only does the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton go further than the proposition of his leader, but the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) go still further than his amendment. In his enthusiasm, zeal, and earnestness, he proceeds to very great length and in his closing remarks he not only nails the motto to the mast, but he adds : 'Do it now.' In my opinion it would be a very good thing indeed if we could prudently and properly do it now. I have such a liking for the movement as a general principle that I wish it could be undertaken now, but I fear that the enthusiasm—the youthful enthusiasm, shall I say—of the hon. gentleman, has carried him beyond that prudence which must naturally guide the party in power, and from all I can ascertain I fear it is not possible to do it now, without doing very great injustice to the financial affairs of our country. Up to a certain point I follow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) but when he says : 'Do it now,' I fear I must separate myself from him. I do not say that with any intention to throw discredit on his judgment, and certainly I do not wish to throw any obstacle in the way of his desires. But I must remember that the hon. gentleman went to Washington with his mind very largely settled in the desire to obtain rural free delivery, and when he asks me to accept his judgment on all the facts which have been placed before him, I must remember that he asks me to forget that our Post Office Department in Canada has been under the control of a very able man who was not unwilling to adopt such a programme, but who a session or so ago showed very plainly that with all his willingness he could not see his way clear to do so. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) asks me to forget that the reports made by the officers of the Post Office Department were not favourable to any immediate adoption of this scheme ; and so, after all, I feel that at the present time and in view of the dangers incident to the great financial cost it would entail, I must hesitate to accept the judgment of my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) ; I must give due weight to the argument of the expert officials of the department, and so I cannot conclude that the phrase : 'Do it now' has been wisely applied by the hon. member.

I realize also this difference, that there are advantages and disadvantages to the different parties in this House. The government party has the advantage of being in power, and, therefore, in a position to put into force its particular policy. The opposition has not that advantage, but the opposition has compensating advantage, of which my hon. friend has availed himself. An opposition can announce a policy which it knows it will not be called on to put in force. It is a right and privilege of an opposition to bring up new a question, and even to advocate it, before the country is quite ready for it. I will not say that my hon. friend does not deem the country ripe for this reform, but his motion is not accompanied by any other responsibility than a desire to see it accomplished. On the other hand, the government, clothed with the responsibility of immediately putting the project into operation if it accepts the principle, of imposing the expenditure on the country, and providing for the deficit which unfortunately might result, must think well and think long before it undertakes such a project. But favouring as I have done the principle of such a measure, as soon as it could possibly be obtained, I have not failed to urge it on the government, and I hope that as soon as it can be done it will be done. I hope that the government will not only act with prudence in the matter, but have courage enough to strain prudence almost to the point of adventure in order that we may obtain this boon, but I am not to condemn them for exercising proper care and prudence in the meantime. On this question my hon. friend and namesake from Strathcona very vigorously defended, as he always does, the interests of the west. I can understand indeed that the inauguration of a system of rural mail delivery in the more thickly settled parts of the east might to some extent injure the prospects of better mail service in the west. I hope it would not do so, but it might. The hon. gentleman is no doubt right in looking after the interests of his own constituents. In the same way I feel that as representatives of thickly settled parts of Ontario, the hon. member for East Lambton and myself have the right and the privilege, and are in duty bound, to look after the postal facilities in our districts. I think the rural population of Ontario will not hereafter increase very largely, so that when rural mail delivery comes, as I believe it will come eventually, it will not find a much larger rural population in Ontario than there is now, or a condition of affairs in which it will be any more strongly desired than it is now. But if we look for an absolutely even division of all these privileges and opportunities we cannot get it. At the present moment we have not got it. The hon. member for Strathcona might also object to the free mail delivery which we have in the larger cities and which we have extended to the smaller cities. For my own part, while I do not object to that, I would rather see any further extension of free mail delivery in towns postponed until we can accomplish something for the country. In the meantime I see that the government is looking forward to the inauguration of free rural delivery, as soon as it is prudent and proper to undertake it, for I believe that the department has the matter in view and I notice a suggestion from the Minister of Agriculture that the present facilities be increased. I accept that suggestion with a great deal of heartiness. I have not in the past had the amount of success which I desired in the way of obtaining post offices and postal facilities. I think I can in one respect quote a very unusual and almost anomalous state of affairs; I doubt whether any other member from Ontario can quote the like. I do not quote it as a complaint; it is simply one of the peculiarities of the situation. There is in my riding a township, a fine township, peopled by splendid people, as you will acknowledge when I tell you that they give a Liberal majority of nearly 300. Within that township, and it is an intelligent township, too, there is not a single post office. However, I do not say that the people lack postal facilities; that is a peculiarity of the situation of the township, the post offices being round about. However, though I have not had quite the success which I desired in obtaining post offices and postal facilities, if rural mail delivery is not to be established in the immediate future I will certainly act on the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture and persistently haunt the corridors and offices of the Post Office Department until I get greater favour in this respect than I have obtained in the past.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). Mr. Speaker, the speeches of the members of the government who have spoken during the present debate have been a great disappointment to myself and I believe to the country at large. Instead of taking up the important subjects which were brought to our notice in the speech from the Throne, they have delivered speeches which one might rather have expected to have heard on the public hustings during the heat of a contested election. There is one subject which was mentioned in the speech from the Throne, which I believe is at the present moment occupying more attention amongst the people of the country than any other, and which is perhaps the most important subject dealt with in the speech from the Throne, and in their remarks during the present debate that question has not been touched upon by the members of the government. I refer, of course, to the financial stringency which exists at the present moment throughout the Dominion of Canada. We might very well have expected that some light would have been thrown on this subject, and we might also well have expected to hear what measures the government proposed to take in the emergency. There have been various reports in the public press of interviews with the Minister of Finance on the one hand, in which he is reported to have stated that he had made arrangements with the bankers of the country for facilitating the purchase and transport to the markets of the world of the crops of the Northwest; while on the other hand we have had reports that his interviews with the banks had been productive only of failure. At any rate, whatever may have been the outcome in his mind of these interviews, I can tell him that the crop of the Northwest is not being moved as it should be at the present moment, and that conditions in that country are far from what we would wish them to be. The farmer who cannot sell his produce except at ruinous figures, and the merchant who cannot collect the debts due to him on the one hand, while on the other hand he finds his credit curtailed, and the man who is hard up and does not know where to find the money to provide himself with the necessaries of life or to find the work in order to obtain that money, will not consider the speeches which we have heard from the government in this debate to be in any degree satisfactory. I wish to call the attention of the government to the state of affairs which exists in many parts of the Northwest. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), in speaking the other day, gave us a story of the prosperity which exists in his own immediate district. We have, of course, similar prosperity in other portions of the Northwest, but I regret to say that that prosperity is not universal. Unfortunately the impression which was conveyed by the speech of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie was to the effect that great prosperity exists throughout the whole of the new provinces in the Northwest, and that the last crop has been more satisfactory to the producers of that crop than the crop of last year.

We have even seen interviews during the last few days with the Premier of Saskatchewan, in which the same impression is conveyed. There never was a better promise of a heavy crop throughout certain portions of that country at any rate, than during the present year. But the very luxuriance of the crops was their undoing. The season was late there, as in many other parts of the world, and unfortunately frosts came before the crops were in a condition to be immune from damage. The consequence has been that in some districts you may go out and see some of the finest crops, hundreds and thousands of acres, still standing, absolutely uncut, which will never be cut, which have nothing in them. There are many other portions where the crops have been cut, and the farmers feel they would be better off if they had never cut them. But I am speaking more of the grain which is in the farmers' hands at present, and which they desire to market. There is an extreme amount of difficulty in selling the feed wheat at any price. I had a letter only this morning in which I was told that the price offered for feed wheat at a large centre on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the province of Saskatchewan was only fifteen cents per bushel of sixty pounds, and that even that price was not given to everybody. You had to have a pretty fair quality of wheat even to get that. There were people who had wheat for which they could not get any offer at all. I had another letter from that point some days ago, in which I was told that the price offered for oats was 23 cents and for wheat 19 cents, and that the prices were gradually coming down even from those figures. This is a very serious question. It is very serious when some of the best wheat growing districts find that five-sixths of their crop comes under the category of feed wheat, and when, in the majority of instances, the yield was only ten or twelve bushels per acre, and the harvesting was extremely expensive. I know of one case in which a gentleman, who had a magnificent crop before the frost came, and who has a pretty considerable amount of grain from it, finds he would be much better off if he had let that crop stand. The cost of harvesting and threshing and hauling to the market—he has some little distance to draw it—was greater than he can realize from the prices now offered. It may be said that what I am now stating is not borne out by what we read in the market reports. There is no doubt whatever that the prices for contract grades are good at present and have been good throughout the season, but the prices for the lower grades, especially the feed grades, are absolutely illusory. I have come across no one who has been able to avail himself of the prices that are advertised for those lower grades of wheat. Few are able to sell at the prices we see quoted and a great many are absolutely unable to sell at all. And while I am on this question, I would like to call attention to the feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction which exists at present with regard to the grading system. It is of course especially difficult to grade to the satisfaction of everybody in a season like this, in which there has been so much frost and so many different grades of wheat. There will never be a satisfactory solution of the question until we are able to get a sample market. I do not see any prospect of that in the very near future, but I still hope it will not take many years before we have it. But there are other ways in which the government can do something to relieve the present stringency, and I propose to make a suggestion later on. I am not sufficiently conversant with the grain business to give an opinion which would be of value to this House regarding the reasons generally speaking for the low price of inferior grades of wheat and the reluctance of grain buyers to pay even those low prices; but there is one reason, which has a considerable bearing on the question, and which it is in the power of the government to remedy. I refer to the lack of transportation facilities. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) made a complaint regarding the transportation facilities throughout the portion of Manitoba from which he comes. But I can tell him that in Manitoba he can have no conception whatever of what we have to put up with in the provinces further west, especially the province of Saskatchewan. The Prime Minister himself said the other day that he was aware there were complaints that the railways in the new provinces were not properly discharging their duties and he believed that some of the complaints were well founded, and the remedy he suggested was in their control by government and parliament. I hope the right hon. gentleman will exercise that control. For years past we have had a constant shortage of cars and motive power throughout the Northwest. The climax was reached last year when for months scarcely any part of the crop was moved during the winter. Certainly excuses then were to be found in the extreme rigour of that winter, and I for one, and other gentlemen, did not deem it the proper time to take the strenuous action we otherwise would have done. We brought the question before the House, and I myself had the assurance, as well as others, that the companies were doing everything possible. But while last year there was ground for excuse, there can be none this year. This year the crop is very much smaller and the weather since the harvest has been simply ideal for railway purposes. Yet we find that the condition is nearly as bad in certain parts of the country as it was last year. The condition is such that no one can reckon on getting a car for months after he has ordered it. Consequently there is a great spread between the street price and the track price. If you cannot get your grain into a car, you have to take whatever you are offered for it by the wagon load or by the car load in the street.

The Manitoba Grain Act provides in very considerable detail for the distribution of cars amongst the different people who desire to ship wheat but it does not insist—and there is the great matter in which it falls short—on a reasonable number of cars being supplied to meet the demand for transportation facilities; so that to-day if a grain dealer buys a carload of wheat he cannot be certain of shipping it within six or eight months. With an uncertain market the purchase of feed wheat then becomes so speculative that the dealer quite naturally does not wish to touch the proposition at all. I found that the spread in price between track and street quotations depends to a great extent upon the prospect of getting cars at a certain point. I noticed where cars were coming in pretty freely the spread between track and street price was only 12 cents. At that same point two or three weeks earlier, when no cars could be obtained, one of the grain dealers told me that he would not give within twenty-four cents of the track price for street wheat.

During the last month or two before coming to Ottawa I made a large number of inquiries in regard to this transportation question at many different points and I found that the usual answer I received as to the spread in price between track and street wheat fit only for feed was 20 cents a bushel, and that was entirely due to the fact that the railway companies were not supplying the transportation facilities which they should. At one point where I happened to be on November 7, I was told there were one hundred and twenty-two applications for cars on the order book and that from the time the first car was supplied on October 17, to the day of my visit, November 7, only some five cars had been supplied by the railway company at that point. I could multiply cases of this nature, but do not propose to do so. I shall however give one specific case which occurred last year which was told me by a gentleman whose name would carry weight in any part of the province of Saskatchewan.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment of Mr. Armstrong thereto.

Mr. LAKE. When the House rose at six o'clock, I had been calling attention to the lack of facilities for moving the wheat crop in the Northwest, of which the public are complaining at the present time. Having given some examples of the present condition of affairs, I was proceeding to mention as a further example a case which had been brought to my notice showing the difficulties which our farmers experienced last year. I was giving the case of a gentleman in the province of Saskatchewan who is well known, and whose reputation stands extremely high, and his statement can be accepted as thoroughly reliable. That gentleman told me that last year he had raised a crop of 11,000 bushels, and had put that into an elevator on the 15th of September last year. He was unable to ship the whole of that wheat until the 15th of August this year; so it took him eleven months to ship out 11,000 bushels of wheat, though throughout the whole of that time he was using every endeavour to get the railway company to carry that wheat for him. He told me further that he only got three cars provided for him in six months and a half, that is to say, although he was anxious to ship his wheat, in six months and a half, all the facilities the railway company could supply him with were only sufficient to ship 3,000 bushels or perhaps a little more. I stated a little while ago that I did not wish to go into this whole question of transportation at the present time, but later on I wish to do so. I think I have said enough to-day to show the government that a very serious condition exists at the present time, and I would urge them in the strongest way to take this question up and see whether something cannot be done to relieve the situation which exists in considerable portions of the new provinces. Navigation has been closed at Fort William, and therefore any wheat which is not shipped at the present moment and which it is intended to bring down to the east, will have to go by the all rail route.

I am informed that in the province of Ontario there is a great shortage of feed, and the farmers have to dispose of their cattle at prices which are absolutely ridiculous, otherwise they would have to allow them to starve for lack of feed. Now, I would suggest to the government that they bring these two parties together, bring the man in the Northwest who has cheap feed wheat to sell into communication and into contact with the Ontario farmer who is most anxious to obtain such feed for his cattle. I think this could be done by entering into an arrangement with the railway companies which are operating west of Fort William and getting them to supply sufficient cars to take the feed grain which is offering in the western provinces and transport that grain by the all rail route, at a reasonably cheap figure; I think the present figure might be cut in two. It would be greatly in the interest of the whole country if this suggestion were adopted. Then the Canadian Pacific Railway and other transportation companies could be approached with a view to getting them to transport this feed grain at low rates to the eastern provinces. I do not think we need go far to find a precedent for the government taking such action as this. It will be remembered by this House that at a time not long past when the farmers of Nova Scotia were in straits for want of feed, the government stepped in and granted them transportation for hay, I believe practically free. Immediate action is called for, and I trust the government will not let this opportunity go by. I notice the statement has been definitely made that the government is assisting the banks with money to do business in the Northwest. If that is true, though we have not had it so stated in the House, the government should certainly go one step further and make arrangements with the railway companies in the manner I have suggested.

There is another question affecting the Northwest that I wish to impress upon the members of the government, and that is the absolute necessity of looking after some of the newly arrived settlers in that country. The government are under some special responsibility with regard to the large number of immigrants who have recently come into that part of the country. The government control the whole of the public domain, they control immigration, they are responsible for all the regulations under which these immigrants are permitted to take up land : they have encouraged the immigrants to come in and to settle on homesteads, they are also responsible for the statements in pamphlets which have been spread broadcast encouraging them to come into this country ; therefore, I say, the government are under a special responsibility in regard to those immigrants. In the past the custom in that country has been that merchants and business men have practically carried the newcomers through the first year or two of settlement. I do not suppose one man in six who comes into that country to settle, has enough money to build his house, buy his implements and stock, and secure the necessaries of life for the first two or three years, and until he is able to produce sufficient to keep himself and his family. In the past the merchants have been able to give credit to those who they believed were likely to succeed in that country. At the present time that condition is changed. The merchants themselves have to rely upon the credit which they have from the banks of the east, and if that credit is very largely closed down by the banks and business people of the east, they will no longer be able to give credit to the newer settlers. I very much fear that many of the new settlers who have not been long enough in the country to get themselves fairly established may be up against a very difficult proposition during the present winter. Many of them may be short of food and fuel for themselves and seed to put in their crops in the spring. In the past the local merchants have generally seen to that part of it, and if the credit of the local merchants were such at the present time that they were able to take charge of the newer settlements I feel quite sure that they could safely be left in their hands. And I think it would be the part of good statesmanship for the government to see that the merchants of the Northwest are put in as good a position as they have been in the past to look after new settlers who have come into the country. I believe that if it had not been for the way in which the merchants of the Northwest have carried the newer settlers when they came into that country we should have had very few people in the west at the present time. They could not have stayed there and the conditions yet are very much as they were in the old days when we had so many difficulties to contend with in the way of early frosts and drought.

Now, Sir, in my opinion, it would have been more commendable if the members of the government had gone into these financial questions more closely in speaking during this debate rather than to have branched out into political campaign speeches and an arrogant glorification of the prosperity of the country and of the share which they stated they have had in bringing about that condition. I have been very much struck by the way in which the members of the government, as well as their followers, have arrogated to themselves the whole credit for the prosperity which undoubtedly this country has been enjoying during the last few years. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) distributed to the members of this House copies of a speech which he had delivered, I think, in the town of Aurora not very long ago, and I was very much struck by the language which he used in regard to the present prosperity of the country. This is what he said in one particular part of his speech :

> Much as we owe to Divine Providence, one must realize, however, that the general policy of the Reform government, which was entrusted with the affairs of this country in 1896, has added not a little to that happy state of things. Whilst it is unnecessary for me to dwell at length upon the cause of this prosperity, yet it is but fair to remind you that the fiscal policy of the Liberal administration has given the farming community of Canada the good times which it is your happy lot to enjoy.

It will be noticed that the Postmaster General did allow that a certain amount of credit was due to Providence for the good times which this country has been enjoying in the past, but it remained for a follower of his, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) to take quite an opposite view, to refuse to give any credit at all to Providence for these good times, and to ascribe the whole of it to the way the Liberal administration have been carrying on the affairs of this country. This is what the hon. member for Portage la Prairie says :

> The hon. gentleman thinks that Providence has more to do with our success than anything else, but in my experience I have found that Providence was of very little use to me or the people I have had to deal with. Providence is, of course, all right in a way, but my experience is that where success and prosperity exist, it is to be found among the people who help themselves, and unless people help themselves and use energy and effort, Providence, I think, plays a very little part.

I do not propose to say anything in regard to the good taste of that part of the speech, but it shows that not only members of the government but their followers are ever taking to themselves the whole credit for the prosperity which Canada has been experiencing in the past. Canada has been prosperous, it has been a growing time, and I think it may be fairly said there has been a splendid period of expansion of trade throughout the whole world; but I claim that the prosperity is not so great in Canada as one might reasonably have expected from the magnificent chance which the government of this country have had before them. They have had a new country to open up which I think is unequalled in any part of the world in regard to its vast natural resources, and in my opinion they should have been able to do more than they have done. Let me take the basis which they have selected as the gauge of the prosperity which this country has been enjoying. They have taken in every case the tables of trade and commerce and they have argued from the splendid increase in our trade and commerce that the prosperity of Canada has been greater than that of any other part of the world. Comparisons have been made in this House—they were made by the hon. gentleman who moved the address (Mr. Hall)—with the older countries of the world. I would suggest to him that it would be very much wiser to make comparisons with the young and more growing countries of the world, and I would suggest that he might make a comparison with other countries which are in much the same position as ourselves, with the great self-governing colonies of the empire, with that sisterhood of nations which was represented at the late imperial conference. I have been looking into a very interesting book of which a large number of copies are purchased for our library—The Statesman's Year Book—which has been a standard work for a great number of years. I have looked at the figures which are given in that book for all the colonies of the empire. Unfortunately the years for which the tables of trade and commerce are given are not the same in every case, but about five years are given in pretty nearly every case, and in these years I find that the colony of Australia had an increase in its trade and commerce of 35 per cent, while Canada had only an increase in its trade and commerce to the extent of 29 per cent. Cape Colony, during the four years which are given in that book, had an increase of 85 per cent, while Canada had only an increase of some 24 per cent. New Zealand is the only one of the great self-governing colonies which has not beaten the record of Canada in regard to her trade and commerce, the basis which these gentlemen have selected as the gauge of their prosperity. I find that New Zealand had an increase of 16 per cent, while Canada increased 24 per cent. Newfoundland, during the period given, increased her trade 31 per cent, while Canada only increased her trade and commerce by 21 per cent. I might mention also one other great dependency of the empire which had a representative in that conference; that is the empire of India.

During the three years for which the figures are given, the trade and commerce of the empire of India had increased some 27 per cent while during the same period in Canada our trade and commerce had increased only 18 per cent. It appears to me that our increase in trade has not been as great as we might reasonably have expected when we compare it with the expansion of trade in most of the great dependencies of the empire. When we speak of trade and commerce (which includes the imports and exports according to these tables), we are only telling half the story, because we have still to take into consideration the proportion between the exports and the imports, and I think the true gauge of the prosperity of a country is that exports and imports should increase in reasonable relevancy to each other. I find that in every one of the great colonies, and in the empire of India, their exports have steadily increased, and they have been for the last two or three years in excess of the imports. It is the first time I have ever heard the argument advanced, as it was by the Minister of Agriculture the other night, that the prosperity of a country was to be gauged by its imports. I think it is perfectly true that it is impossible to lay down any fixed rule, as to whether it is necessary for the exports of a country to exceed the imports to prove that a country is prosperous, or whether it is necessary, in some countries at any rate, that the imports should exceed the exports, but I hold that there should be a steady increase in both, and that there should not be a most extreme disproportion between the two as has been the case in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture in support of his rather astounding doctrine quoted from the writings of some German economist, but the statement of that authority was simply to the effect that the old idea had been exploded, that a country which was importing more than it exported was necessarily doing a worse business than a country in which the conditions were the reverse. However, the authority quoted by the Minister of Agriculture did not go on to say that for a country to be prosperous it was necessary it should have an excess of imports over exports. Only the other day the president of the Bank of Montreal, who is a gentleman who has studied this question perhaps more deeply than have most members of this House, called attention to the fact that the foreign trade balance is running somewhat heavily against Canada, and that in five years the imports for home consumption exceeded the domestic exports by $291,850,000 ; and he went on to state that this balance will have to be liquidated sooner or later, showing that in his opinion there would come a day of reckoning if our imports continued to so enormously exceed our exports. In this connection I call attention to the fact that in the speech from the Throne, a statement is made which, if the true meaning of the word 'trade' is considered, is not in accordance with the facts. The government put in the mouth of His Excellency this statement :

> It gives me great pleasure to be able to congratulate you on the remarkable expansion of the trade of Canada with other countries; the total trade of the past year far exceeding that of any of its predecessors.

Now if the true meaning of the word 'trade' is an interchange of commodities, and it is, it is not true that the interchange of commodities last year exceeded that of the preceding year. I will take a charitable view of the ministers and I will say that they have been so accustomed to talking of this increase of trade without considering whether it was imports or exports they were speaking of, that they possibly had not the intention of stating what is not correct. But it was perfectly easy for them to be candid with the people of Canada, and to make a statement which was absolutely and emphatically true, and to do that they simply had to substitute the word 'imports' for the word 'trade,' and then the people of Canada would have known what the true state of affairs was ; and they would have learned that our imports had increased during the past year in a degree far exceeding that of any of the preceding years. It might be well for me to say that the Trade and Commerce returns for the year ending August 31 (the last returns which I have been able to procure) show that the exports of Canada have actually fallen off by more than $2,000,000 although the imports have increased to such an enormous extent. I therefore claim that the trade of the country has shown a falling off. I have made a comparison which shows that Canada is not making the same progress as some of the self-governing colonies of the empire, but I think our condition can be better shown by a comparison with the great Argentine Republic ; and I am encouraged to make this comparison by reason of the fact that a member of the British House of Commons who was entertained by the Canadian Club in London a few days ago, made this same comparison which I have been looking into for some time past. The Argentine Republic is our greatest rival at the present time ; the conditions in that country are strikingly similar to those in Canada. The Argentine Republic is the great colonizing country in South America as we are in North America. Its area is not very dissimilar from ours if you deduct these portions of Canada in the far north which so far we have not been able to settle. The area available for settlement in the Argentine Republic is similar to ours ; the population of the two countries is almost alike, and both countries have been getting in about the same number of immigrants.

The immigrants into the Argentine Republic have been from the southern races of Europe, mostly Italians and Spanish, while we in this country have been getting our immigration from what we call the more virile, at any rate the more energetic races of northern Europe; and therefore we might expect that our trade would increase more rapidly than that of the Argentine Republic ; and yet I find that the imports and exports of the Argentine Republic increased from $268,085.000 in 1900 to $527,998,000 in 1905, an increase in the five years of ninety-seven per cent, while during the same period the increase in the foreign trade and commerce of this Dominion was only twenty-three per cent. So that on the basis on which members of the government and hon. gentlemen opposite generally gauge the prosperity of this country, it has fallen very far behind that of the Argentine Republic.

But when we go a step further and inquire into the imports and exports respecively, the disparity is even greater. In the five years mentioned the excess of exports over imports in the Argentine Republic amounted to $455,639,000 while in Canada our excess was the other way—it was an excess of imports over exports, and it amounted to $116,858,905. In that period the balance of trade was in favour of the Argentine Republic by some fifty per cent of its total business, and in no one year did its imports exceed its exports, while the balance of trade against Canada amounted to about nine and one-half per cent of its total business, in spite of the fact that in two years of the six given, the balance had been in favour of Canada. In the past year the balance of trade against Canada has amounted to nearly fifty per cent.

There is another striking comparison which might be mentioned to show that these gentlemen had not been making use of the opportunities which they had for forwarding the interests of this country. That comparison is furnished by the Republic of Mexico. A short time ago the Department of Trade and Commerce distributed a statement by their commercial agent in that republic which gave some figures in regard to Mexico. Mr. Donly used these words :

> While the totals are only about one-half of Canada's foreign trade for the same period, the percentage of increase during the last ten years has been quite as remarkable as that of our own foreign trade.

And he goes on to give the figures for those ten years, which show that the increase in the trade and commerce of Mexico in that period amounted to 145 per cent as against an increase in the foreign trade and commerce of Canada of 130 per cent; showing again that even the old-established Republic of Mexico has been forging ahead more certainly and more surely than this new Dominion of Canada with everything in its favour. The balance of trade in those ten years has also been in favour of Mexico, while it has been against us for many years past. In connection with this it must be remembered that Mexico has a very large debt and has to spend a large amount of money on her army and navy. In fact, her expenditure on these three services amounted to 63 per cent of her whole revenue, leaving only a comparatively small percentage to be devoted to the building up of the country; while the expenditure of Canada on debt and militia during the same period amounted to only about 25 per cent of our total revenue. It seems to me that we should have been able to show far better returns for the great expenditures we have made than these other countries to which I have been calling your attention.

Another matter referred to in the speech from the Throne is that of the abounding revenue, for which a great deal of credit is taken by the government; and, strange to say, they use that as a further argument to show the prosperity of the country. The Minister of Finance the other day admitted that he had been converted from the opinion which he had formerly held that a surplus is just so much money withdrawn from the trade of the country, which are the words he used a good many years ago. Now, Sir, I think that the Minister of Finance is taking a wrong view of that matter. I believe the view he originally held was the much more correct one. Perhaps I would not go so far as to adopt his exact words, and say that it was so much money withdrawn from the trade of the country. But if that was his opinion at that time, and I have no doubt he held it sincerely, what would he have said to the fact that some sixteen and one-half millions of dollars were taken out of the pockets of the people of this country in nine months above and beyond what was necessary to carry on the business of the country? If he was correct in that view, how much better would not our position have been at the present moment if those sixteen and one-half millions of dollars had remained in the pockets of the people to enable them to meet the financial stringency which we are up against to-day? The Minister of Finance did what to me appeared to be a very extraordinary thing; he drew a comparison of the surpluses and deficits during the last eleven years the Conservatives were in power with his own record in the eleven years in which he has been Minister of Finance, and he actually appeared to boast of the fact that during those eleven years he had on the average been out eight and one-half million dollars every year in his calculations as to what would be necessary to carry on the government of this country, while during the eleven Conservative years the finance ministers of those days had only on the average been out in their calculations about a quarter of a million dollars. It seems to me that that is a most extraordinary confession for a finance minister to make. If a chancellor of the exchequer in the old country were to come down to parliament and admit, after having imposed let us say a shilling on the pound as income tax, that he had taken out of the pockets of the people some sixteen and one-half millions pounds more than was necessary for the carrying on of the government, I think he would very soon find that he would have to vacate his job. It would be something the people would not stand for a moment. If he had made a slight miscalculation of two or three millions, he would try to correct that in his next year by taking off or putting on a penny of the income tax.

But is is simply inconceivable to me that any Chancellor of the Exchequer in the mother of parliaments would dare to come down to the British House of Commons and boast that he had in eleven years made a miscalculation to the extent of $9,500,000, or pounds sterling, on the average every year. The principle is an entirely wrong one to apply in this country, namely, to take from the ordinary revenues of the country to meet the expenditure which should be charged to capital account. We are a young and growing country and we should allow the people who are to populate Canada in the future to bear some share of the capital expenditure which we are making in the present day. To-day we are short of cash, yet we find the government boasting that they have taken sufficient money out of the hard earnings of the people to build the National Transcontinental, to meet all charges in that respect and other capital expenditure, and actually to pay off some of our debt; and they are actually proposing in the speech from the Throne to apply something more than $3,000,000 at present to further extinguish the debt of the country. I protest strongly against any such step. It would be most fatal policy to send now $3,000,000 more of our cash out of the country for the purpose of extinguishing to that extent our national debt. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said, in his earlier days, that if these surpluses were created in some magic way, it might be well enough; but that every dollar of them was taken out of the pockets of the people without a shadow of excuse.

Allow me also to take up a very few moments more in discussing the high taxation under which we are at present labouring. I shall merely deal with one item of that taxation, the customs duties. The customs duties, during the twelve months ending the last day of August this year, amounted to the enormous sum of $58,259,233, while in the year 1897 they only amounted to $19,891,997. Thus that taxation has actually increased very nearly three times what it was under Conservative administration; and it is an actual fact, to which attention was called by the leader of the opposition the other day, that higher duties are being paid on specific articles to-day than were paid when the Conservatives were in power. It may be that, in some instances, the rates of duty are lower; but it has been the policy of this government to increase the values of articles for customs purposes, so that the duties which our people are actually paying are higher than they were under the Conservative regime. By various devices and pretexts, which they carefully concealed from the general public, the government have been able to extort from the pockets of the people the enormous customs taxes which they are taking from us at present. In proof of this, let me just mention one item, that of cement, concerning which an expression of opinion was given by Mr. Ashdown, a strong supporter of the government in Winnipeg. Mr. Ashdown, in his evidence before the tariff commission, speaking of those dumping clauses of which the government are so proud, said :—

The operation of the dumping clause, as a rule, injures the consumer and benefits no one except the American manufacturer, who generally raises his prices accordingly.

Further on he said :—

The duty on importations of cement amounts this season to nearly forty-eight per cent since a duty was put on the sacks. This is on actual importation and on the values approved by the customs.

Then he added : It is an outrage. I do not think that any one in this House had any doubt whatever, when the duty was placed on the sacks in which cement was imported from the United States, that it was intended to work out, as it has done, in an increase in the duty on the cement itself. Therefore I consider I am right in saying that the government have increased the duties by various pretexts, which they have endeavoured, and with some success up to the present, to conceal from the people. These same dumping clauses, as Mr. Ashdown has said, are forcing the Canadian consumer to pay to the foreign manufacturer more than the foreign manufacturer is willing to supply his goods to this country for. It is a policy in favour of the foreign manufacturer and against the Canadian consumer and its effect has been to lead to higher prices. The increase in prices may not be entirely due to the action of this government, but a considerable portion of that increase is in a measure due to their policy. I find that the average customs taxation per family in Canada in 1896 only amounted to some $19, while this year it amounts to nearly $50, and in the words of the Minister of Finance it has been taken out of the pockets of the people without any shadow of justification.

Allow me also to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) upon the admission he made the other evening that the principle of protection has been in the tariff ever since he knew it and that it is there still. I am glad that he has at last come to the point of making that confession, because we find the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) session after session reiterating the same old speech in which he professes to show that this government have carried out in their entirety the policies which they laid down in their platform of 1893. That platform definitely laid down this policy in regard to the tariff :—

That the customs tariff of the Dominion should be based, not as it is now, upon the protective principle, but upon the requirements of the public service.

* * * * *

We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound and unjust to the masses of the people and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours.

The promise was clear and definite in regard to the elimination of the protective principle from the tariff, and so I hope we shall hear no more about the government having carried into effect the promises which they made in the year 1903. The present Prime Minister made several speeches prior to the elections in 1896 in which he defied pretty clearly the policy of the Liberal party and showed clearly the meaning of the Liberal tariff plank. At Winnipeg he said :

I came before you to-night to preach to you this new gospel of freedom of trade. I denounce to you the policy of protection, as bondage, yes, bondage, and I refer to bondage in the same manner in which American slavery was bondage.

Later on, speaking at Montreal and Quebec, he let it be clearly known that the intention of the Liberal party under their tariff plank was to have free trade as it exists in Great Britain. He said :

Upon that question I need not tell you we stand at the very antipodes of the Conservative party. The Conservative party believe in protection; all their hope is in protection. The Liberal party believes in free trade on broad lines such as exists in Great Britain, and their immediate object is a revenue tariff, a tariff to be derived from customs but which will levy no duties except for the purposes of revenue.

Speaking at Quebec the Prime Minister said :

I have told you that our object is to have a customs tariff for revenue only. Upon the question of protection there can be no compromise. We stand here against protection and in favour of a customs tariff based upon the principles of revenue and nothing else. The system of protection has been the bane and curse of Canada. The Liberal party believe in free trade on broad lines such as exist in Great Britain.

He went on further to say :

We will tax for revenue, but not one cent for protection. When we are in power we will relieve the people of protection which is a fraud, a delusion and a robbery.

Thus he set forth most clearly that the intention of the Liberal party was, as we have always believed it to be and as the people of this country believed it to be, to produce just such a customs tariff as they have in the old country, a customs tariff which under the name of free trade raises a considerable revenue by means of the taxation of certain luxuries and certain necessaries of life, but does not afford any protection whatever.

Therefore, Sir, I say that after the confession of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the other day that the protective system is still embodied in the tariff, we expect the Liberal party to accept the situation which they have themselves admitted, that they have failed to carry out the promises which they made to the people of this country in regard to that question. As an example of an attempt to explain away a difficult situation, the statements made the other evening by the Finance Minister as to what was meant by the Liberal tariff platform exceeds anything I have ever come across. He said that their meaning was that they endeavour to reduce the tariff but with due regard to existing industries. That is his explanation of the meaning of the tariff plank in the Liberal platform of 1893.

In the Northwest the Liberal party press have always posed as free traders and they have always declared that the Conservative party are high protectionists. The speeches which were delivered the other day by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) must have convinced the Liberal press of western Canada that such contentions are absolutely at variance with the facts.

I wish in conclusion to refer briefly to the speeches bearing upon that particular phase of the amendment now before the House which refers to rural free mail delivery. I feel that the country is indebted to the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) for the extraordinary amount of information which he has been able to lay before the people of this country in dealing with this most important question. He has evidently devoted an immense amount of time, energy and industry, to the preparation of that information, and I consider that the facts that he was able to lay before the House certainly deserve some answer and some consideration at the hands of the members of the present government. I would like also to congratulate the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Gilbert McIntyre) upon the statesmanlike way in which he dealt with that question. He and the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre)—who I think dealt with it from an extremely narrow point of view—both appeared to agree that the postal facilities in the west were not what they should be, and I most cordially endorse that statement. With the extraordinary revenue which the Post Office is making out of the people of this country it is a scandal and a disgrace that the postal facilities in the newer settlements in the west are not better then they are to-day, and I hope that some part of the much boasted postal surplus will be immediately applied to the relief of the people in the west. But it does not necessarily follow that giving rural free mail delivery in the more densely populated portions of Canada would interfere with the extension of postal facilities in the Northwest.

The evidence adduced by the hon. member for East Lambton went to show that rural free mail delivery in time became self-supporting and was really a factor in adding to the postal revenue of the country. The two improvements in my mind could go on side by side. I commend the proposal that there should be a system of rural free mail delivery most heartily to the consideration of the present government. If they refuse to take it into consideration I believe the people by their votes at the elections, which we believe are likely to take place in the near future, will state most definitely and positively that they believe equal postal facilities should as far as possible be given to the farmers as are given to the people who reside in our cities and towns.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the debate, after the numerous amendments that have been proposed to the address in reply to the speech from the Throne, I feel that I would not be doing my duty if I gave a silent vote, and I shall therefore explain the position I intend to take on the address. At the opening of this session we are generally informed of the proposals which are to be presented to the House. We have seen part of the policy of the government in the speech from the Throne, and I may add that there are matters which will come up in the House that are not referred to in the speech from the Throne. The subjects dealt with in that speech might, I think, be divided into two groups, the things that are good for the country and those that are not so good. Amongst the many good things which have been presented for our consideration by His Excellency, I notice with pleasure that the government propose to initiate many liberal measures, such, for instance, as old age pensions, an amendment to the Insurance Act, government control of telephones and telegraphs and better postal facilities for the country. I am sorry I have not heard a clear declaration from the government in favour of public ownership, but I understand that they propose to advance step by step, and that some day that will be the policy of the country. The Finance Minister the other day, speaking I think of Colchester, said he had not found there any sentiment in favour of public ownership except in respect that it was opposed to the economy practiced on the Intercolonial. This would tend to prove that the policy of the Liberal party should be that works of public utility should be property of the public and then operated under the control of the government, or rented to some private company which would operate them under the control of the government.

But the chief point, I think, in the speech from the Throne was the reference to the Imperial Conference, and I am glad to be able to congratulate the Prime Minister on his having saved Canada's autonomy at that conference. He championed colonial autonomy against some jingo and imperialistic attempts by other members of the conference upon the freedom and liberty of the colonies.

Mr. FOSTER. What one ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I think the Prime Minister of Australia, Mr. Deakin, was one and I think there are some others. But I am not an Australian and have nothing to say as far as that colony is concerned. But at the same time we have seen a new scheme launched at the Imperial Conference, which is now before the public as a great point of interrogation, I refer to what is called the All Red Line. What it is, we do not know yet ; but I hope that if it comes before the House this session it will be thoroughly discussed. At first sight it seems to me that the Canadian parliament would be subsidizing an Imperial scheme, and would be sacrificing some portion of Canadian autonomy. For instance, we have at present in Ottawa interviewing the government a delegation from Ireland asking that if there is to be an All Red Line it should start from Ireland. The very fact of this delegation coming here shows the physical impossibility of establishing such a line without sacrificing a certain portion of our autonomy. If the Canadian parliament were to express an opinion as to the point where this All Red Line should start from, the Australian parliament might express another opinion, and the Imperial parliament itself might express an altogether different opinion, and where would we be ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. An All Green Line should start from Ireland.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I do not think the Imperial parliament would favour an All Green Line. However, these incidents show that before this scheme is adopted it should be discussed thoroughly, because as I have just said, it seems to me it would be impossible to accept it without sacrificing some part of this country's autonomy.

Then we find the French treaty is mentioned in the speech from the Throne. Of this I will say but little. We are told that trade follows the flag. I think capital follows the trade also. The treaty, although not perfect, is a good one. It should tend to encourage French immigration to this country and capital also along with the trade. Everybody knows that of all countries in the world there is in France the greatest amount of surplus capital available for starting new enterprises in various parts of the world. I cannot say that the treaty is altogether perfect. I think I could agree with my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Thomas Chisholm) who the other day objected to the introduction of absinthe or imitations of cognac. But these are small defects which could be easily remedied. I think the country will profit from the treaty, and so far as that goes, it is a credit to our Canadian diplomats.

But the speech of His Excellency also refers to some things which are not quite so favourable to the country as was the attitude of our Premier at the Imperial Conference, and the French treaty. First of all, we are told that the country is in the midst of a financial crisis, though that is not as bad as in the United States. But there is a crisis in the country, and something should be done to relieve the situation. First of all, I think that the banks are somewhat to blame. I think the government should put some capital in the banks, and relieve some of the uneasiness which is felt to-day. I have seen the suggestion that if the government paid the debt it has in the country they would put so much more money into circulation and relieve the banks to some extent. I think also that something should be done to prevent the banks from sending Canadian money to the United States to favour wildcat schemes, when that money is urgently needed for circulation in Canada. The difficulty is that when the money goes abroad we cannot get it back again when we want it.

We have also to deplore what has been called a national calamity, I refer to the collapse of the Quebec bridge. It may truly be called a national calamity, when in consequence almost 80 good workingmen went down to their death while doing their duty in constructing a government work. Apart from the loss of life, there is a great loss of time in getting the bridge ready for the railway, and a great loss of capital which is now at the bottom of the St. Lawrence. I hope that the government will take steps to have a vigorous investigation into this matter. Last year my hon. friend for Quebec county (Mr. Robitaille) made a very learned speech on this subject, and we discovered from his statements that although the government should have had an engineer to supervise that work according to its contract with the Quebec Bridge Company, no such engineer was there. We also heard during the debate last year about graft in connection with that company. Nothing has been proved so far, but this much we know, that the bridge has disappeared, and that no satisfactory inquiry has been made into the accident. The public mind is still in a state of tension and anxiety, and will not be satisfied until we have a complete and searching parliamentary inquiry and investigation.

Another suggestion in His Excellency's speech which surprised me more than anything else was that we should rejoice over the increase of immigration into this country, and that the immigrants have come mostly from the British Isles. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have made my position on the immigration policy of the government quite clear. I am opposed to bonusing immigration, because it can have only the one effect of securing quantity and not quality.

When I raised that question last year in the House I must admit that my words did not carry very far. I must admit that I had no great success. I must admit that my policy was challenged as being that of a little Canadian,—and as such I was proud of it. But, what has happened since? The motion that I had the honour to bring before the House has been taken up by the press of the country, and since then there has been throughout Canada a strong current of opinion against the bonused immigration policy, and to-day we hear that it is time for Canada to stop bonusing immigration. The policy followed to-day especially in Great Britain has had no other effect than to hypnotize immigrants and to bring them to this country under false pretenses. We have been advertising our country as a patent medicine and the result is that all the diseased have come to our country, diseased in body, diseased in mind and diseased in soul, and I cannot think we will succeed in making sound Canadians out of them. The British immigration, which I think ought to be the best immigration that we can have in this country, has been spoiled by the policy of bonusing and canvassing immigrants, and to-day we see in almost all the English press of this country reports that in the west, in the province of Ontario as well as in the province of Quebec, the immigrant who came from England has no means of securing work or engaging in business in Canada, because there is no need for him. By bonusing immigration to this country we have brought about no other result than to spoil the very best immigration which could be brought to this country. I think that should be stopped. I think that this policy of advertising Canada and of bonusing booking agents and steamship companies should be stopped immediately in the best interest of our country and in the interest of the future of our country. There is no use of bringing to Canada the scum of the continent, or even the scum of the British Isles. Blood may be thicker than water, but there is one thing after all that is more important to every Canadian. It is not the maxim that blood is thicker than water, but that Canada is for the Canadians and that Canada should be looked after before any other part of the empire. We have seen the result of the labours of those employed by the agents of the government. We have seen that the Church Army have been calling on ex-convicts drunkards, tramps, hooligans, and people from the slums who are diseased in mind and body to come to Canada. We have denounced that system, and I see that the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada have denounced that system. I see they have denounced also the Salvation Army. It was insisted upon that an investigation take place.

Whether by his department——

The Department of the Interior.

—or the Department of Labour, it mattered not, and that if, as a result of the investigation, it was found that the allegations made were well founded, the granting of moneys to the Army, as well as the grant toward the maintenance of one of its institutions in England, should immediately be stopped.

That has been found out after investigation. But, what have we also seen? We have seen that in Vancouver there were riots. These riots are said to have been started by men who are not Canadians but who are Americans, and who had no other idea in mind than the creating of a disturbance in Canada. I think not. I think that these riots were not started by anybody from the United States. There may have been some agitation coming from the United States, but that agitation came from the labour leaders who are united with the labour men of Canada, and who want to protect white labour, it may be of the United States or it may be of Canada, and I am one of those who believe sincerely that British Columbia is for British Columbia, and that it should be a white man's country. It is true that we have sent one of our ministers to Japan. Is the treaty between Great Britain and Japan one that has been passed by Canada? I do not think it is. It is a treaty which has been passed by the Imperial government. I think it is time to apply what has been said of our country, that if we are daughter in our mother's house we should be mistress in our own, and if Canada does not want to have any Japanese immigration we should not look first to a treaty of which we had nothing to say, but we should urge our ministers in Canada to represent strongly to the Imperial government of Japan that Canadian labour wants to be protected and that British Columbia wants to remain a land for the white man, and wants to keep its labour for its own children. That is my humble opinion with regard to the general policy of the government immigration, and I strongly appeal to the government as a Liberal government in the best interests of the country to stop bonusing immigration. If we do not want to have this country within twenty years, or within ten years, especially in the Northwest, filled with a foreign-born population who will rule with a rod of iron the Canadian-born population, who will find themselves to be a minority and an insignificant minority, we must stop the policy which has prevailed in the past and which the government are still continuing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have seen also in the speech from the Throne that the Dominion Lands Act will be presented again this year. I might safely add, I think, that it is understood also that certain additions will be made to some provinces of the Dominion. I understand—I may be mistaken—that it is promised that parts of the Northwest will be added to Manitoba and also certain territory to the province of Quebec. I hope, if these additions are made to these provinces, that the broad principle upon which confederation has been based, the respect of minorities, shall be maintained in those territories after they enter the old provinces. I sincerely hope that the Conservative party will join hands with the government so that the rights of the minority will be respected, and I think I can safely guarantee that if any territory is added to the province of Quebec, the Protestant, English-speaking minority will not have to suffer, but will receive the same treatment from the province of Quebec that it has received from the time of confederation. But I hope that in the western provinces, or in Manitoba, a law, and a strong law, will be passed in this House to protect the rights of the minority, that the opposition will join hands with the government on that question and that we shall see maintained by both sides of the House the broad principle upon which our confederation has been based, and that we will have maintained the principle upon which our confederation stands to-day, that there will be equal justice for all, and that the minority, be it a Catholic or Protestant minority, shall be protected and shall see its rights and privileges maintained when it enters into any province of this Dominion. I saw the other day in the Toronto 'News,' I think, that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), when he was out west, skated over a very important question—the school question. If the report is true that the leader of the opposition skated over that question, it could be for only one reason, and that is that the principle I have always maintained in this House that the majority is not the fanatical body of human beings which it was reported to be in the ministerial press of Quebec, but that it is a broad and generous majority, ready to give to its fellow countrymen all the privileges and rights that have been granted them, and if the leader of the opposition skated over that question in the Northwest it was because he thought or because he had found out that the elements which had been dominating the Conservative party on that question were wrong, that there was only one opinion, be it amongst the English-speaking and Protestant Canadians, or be it among the French-speaking Catholics, that the minority, whether it be in the Northwest, in Manitoba or Quebec should see its rights and all its rights protected. When these new territories enter confederation, as part of one or other of the provinces, I trust we shall accord to them a complete measure of justice, not a half-measure, and that all parties in Canada shall join hands in giving them that to which they are rightly entitled.

Now, Sir, I have come to that part of the policy of the government which is not to be found in the speech from the Throne. I regret there has been such long delay in publishing the revised statutes in the French language. I doubt if the work was pressed forward as it should have been, but now, eight months late, we have an assurance that the French version of the statutes will be ready at an early date. I know the Solicitor General too well to accuse him of being the cause of this delay, but I would not be doing my duty if I did not suggest to the Minister of Justice and to his successors in that office, that this should be the last time in the history of confederation when the compact of 1867 made between the two great races of Canada will be violated. I trust that in the next consolidation of the statutes, and all succeeding consolidations, the French and the English version will be published simultaneously. The right hon. the Prime Minister has declared on the floor of the House that the French language was on equal footing with the English language, but I have to express my regret that such has not been the case. I give as an instance the Intercolonial Railway in the province of Quebec on which conductors are employed who cannot speak a word of French. At the Levis station, where all the population is French, the notice of the arrival or departure of trains is posted only in the English language, although there is a penalty provided in the Railway Act for not publishing it in both languages in the province of Quebec. I am sorry to see the government railway violating the law, and being a government railway we have no opportunity to sue it in the courts unless we file a petition of right and obtain a fiat from the Minister of Justice. Perhaps it will be sufficient to ventilate this grievance in parliament. It must be remembered that the Intercolonial Railway has half of its line in the province of Quebec, and that it gets almost three-quarters of its revenue from that province. It is therefore only just that the language of the people who have the largest part of the burden of that railway on their shoulders should be accorded recognition. I make these remarks without any bitterness; I make them because I conceive it my duty, and because I think the matter has been overlooked by the Minister of Railways. I trust that in the future the travelling public who speak French will be better treated by the government, and that in all the departments of government the French language will be placed on an equal footing with the English. And when the government departments do use the French language, I trust they shall use the French language and not the Iroquois translations which are circulated throughout the country and outside the county, to the great chagrin of the French Canadian people.

One other point, and I conclude. Last session we had a most unfortunate incident, which is known throughout the country as the Fowler incident. If that incident was not threshed out on the floor of parliament, it is not the fault of what has been called the independent Liberal party in this House. This year we are threatened with an incident of the same kind. The other day the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Pugsley), speaking at the Russell Theatre, is reported in the Montreal 'Herald' as follows:

> The audience expected a fighting speech, and they got it. Mr. Pugsley renewed the accusation he has several times made about the existence of a corruption fund in Montreal in 1904, and this time gave the dates and the amounts of money sent into one New Brunswick constituency, $20,000 of it a couple of days before the election, when so large a sum could not possibly have been used for any but illegal purposes. He did not name the riding, and he did not name the bank through which the money was sent, nor the persons who sent or received it, but he made it quite clear that he was ready to do all three if urged sufficiently by the opposition. In fact the thing was put so straight, and with such appearance of confidence, that it is difficult to see how the opposition can overlook the challenge, unless motives of prudence prevail over all others.

Well, Sir, last year, we tried to get the member for Kings (Mr. Fowler) to speak, but unfortunately, first, the majority of this House, then a technicality, overruled us. I trust that this year no technicalities will be invoked, and that no majority will prevent the Minister of Public Works from speaking. If he has anything to say he should say it now. For the sake of the reputation of this parliament we should stop the practice of throwing from one side of the House to the other, challenges to bring to light immense scandals and deeds of corruption, and then when brought to the proof, as was the member for Kings last year (and as I hope will not be so with the Minister of Public Works this year), their authors sit down and say nothing. For the good name of the country, the Minister of Public Works should not wait to be forced to speak, and if he does wait, I think he should be forced. That 'La Presse' deal, and what is known as the Blair-Russell affair should be threshed out. We have heard a good many things about them in the press; prominent men have been accused of misdeeds, but all we know of this mysterious affair is that 'La Presse' was sold to the syndicate and that Mr. Dansereau was sold with the plant. If the Minister of Public Works knows more, if he knows of any corruption, it is his duty to himself, it is his duty to the country, it his duty to the Liberal party, it is his duty to the government to bring these facts to light. If he does so, then I as a Liberal promise him my support; my honest and humble support. If, on the other hand, there is nothing to be said, all this talk should cease immediately. We should have no more of these tactics, such as were resorted to by the Trojans who stood on the ramparts to challenge the Greeks to combat, and then ran away when their opponents advanced. If these charges of corruption be true, we cannot have clean politics in this country.

If there is one thing above another which we want in this country, it is precisely clean politics, because clean politics produces clean government. Let us therefore do our utmost for clean politics. Let us also not forget, Mr. Speaker, that our country is for the sons of this country; that Canada is for Canadians. Let us not forget that in this country there are no more victors or vanquished, no more majorities or minorities, but only Canadians, all with the same rights, that is, the rights guaranteed to them by the constitution of 1867 and by the spirit that has been put into that constitution by our forefathers. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall take my seat. I have nothing to add, except, perhaps, one word; that is, that I shall try as a member of this House to follow the example which was given to me by a man who has disappeared from this House—I mean the ex-member for Labelle, Mr. Bourassa. He has fallen in the battle, but he has fallen like a man. He has fallen for his principles and for what he believed was for the good of the people and of his country. He has fallen for the policy he has maintained in this House, that is, the principles of justice, truth and liberty. I hope,

Mr. Speaker, that I shall be able, with my humble means, to follow the example he gave to me when he was in this House, and that I shall never rise before this parliament for any other cause than that of liberty, truth and justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The Minister of Public Works.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, in spite of much urging, in spite of much what you might call baiting on the part of members on both sides of this House it seems almost impossible to bring the Minister of Public Works to his feet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You must not be too impatient.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I have no doubt that the castigation which the hon. gentleman received to-day at the hands of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) requires some little time for cogitation on his part before he can make a reply. Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been the practice of this House to allow the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne to pass with comparatively little criticism. This fact, however, has been seized upon by certain Liberal journals throughout the country who have endeavoured to make party capital out of the same by claiming that everything was going so satisfactorily under the government, that the opposition could find little or nothing to criticise or comment upon adversely. Undoubtedly, had the opposition during those years seen fit, in the exercise of their duty, to subject the various speeches from the Throne to a fair amount of debate, these same journals would have raised the hue and cry throughout the country that the opposition were obstructing the business of the House. On this occasion it was considered that the government were especially vulnerable by reason of their many sins of omission and commission, and it was considered that the debate on the address was one of the few occasions on which a member might exercise considerable latitude in discussing not only the subjects dealt with in the speech, but also the omission from the speech. On this occasion also, by reason of the remarkable speeches of the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance, who travelled very far afield and went out of their way, leaving almost untouched the subject-matters mentioned in the speech from the Throne in order to make stump speeches on the Halifax platform of the leader of the opposition—by reason, I say, of this fact, the opposition decided that they were willing to meet them even on these grounds, and give matters a full, clear and legitimate amount of discussion. During the last few years the dominant note in the various speeches placed in the mouth of His Excellency has been the prosperity Canada has been enjoying. At the same time you will look in vain in any of those speeches or in any speech delivered by any cabinet minister, either inside or outside of the House, or in any speech of any of their followers, for such an expression as 'the prosperity which prevails throughout the world.' Not, Sir, that this expression could not have been truthfully applied; not that this would not have been a fair description of the condition of affairs universally existing throughout the world, but it was designedly left out lest it might detract from the credit arrogated to themselves by the government in their attempts to lead the country to believe that our prosperity was indigenous to Canada and the result of Liberal statesmanship. But now that the pinch of hard times is upon us, now that the prosperity consequent on good crops and high prices has received a temporary check, now that many of the manufacturing industries are running on half time or with a smaller number of hands, now that the farmers of the Northwest are holding their grain at great risks of its being destroyed rather than part with it at unremunerative prices, now that money is tight in the country, what are the words placed in the mouth of His Excellency by the government of this country? Here they are:

> The Dominion has been blessed by a long series of prosperous years, and, though at the present moment its business is being restricted by the financial stringency which prevails throughout the world——

And so on. How very consistent these hon. gentlemen are! They endeavour to take all the credit for prosperous times, but when the opposite condition of things is upon us they try to unload the responsibility and attempt to leave the impression that it is but a reflection of the condition prevailing in every country of the world. Now, Sir, it is undeniable that the prosperity which we have had in recent years has been universal in its application, and it would be a strange thing indeed if a country situated like Canada, blessed by Providence with its magnificent resources—its splendid agricultural wealth, its immense forests, its teeming fisheries, its growing manufacturing industries—did not enjoy her full share of prosperity. But to the condition of financial stringency which we are suffering from to-day I claim that the same terms cannot be applied, that it is universal in its application. It is true, Sir, the country to the south of us has been hit even harder than we have been. That is but paying a just tribute to the soundness of our financial institutions and our more conservative business methods. But it is also an undeniable fact, patent to us all, that Germany, France and England have sent many millions of dollars to this continent in order to relieve the financial stringency prevailing on this continent—money that would not be allowed to depart from these countries were they suffering the same degree of financial stringency that we are suffering on this continent.

The government and its friends are very anxious to take credit for the financial prosperity, but certainly want to divest themselves of any responsibility for the opposite condition of affairs. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), in a budget speech delivered in this House some few years ago, declared that we were then on the crest of the wave of prosperity, that we could not look for a continuance of the same for any length of time, and that already there were clouds on the horizon indicative of the approach of financial storms. What then was the duty of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) in view of his own salutary warning. Was it not to reef sail and prepare the ship for the coming storm Was it not to apply the pruning knife and cut down all unnecessary and useless expenditure ? Was it not to reduce taxation and thereby lessen the burdens of the people and put the country in a better position to withstand the coming wave of adversity ? Has he done so ? No, Sir, quite the contrary. The expenditure of our country has nearly trebled since he came into office. Our taxation has more than doubled. The debt of our country, under which these hon. gentlemen claimed the people were groaning, when we had a Conservative administration, has increased by millions of dollars instead of decreasing. Surpluses so called have disappeared as if by magic, and in no instance has the hon. gentleman displayed that spirit of prudence and wisdom which we might expect from any judicious Finance Minister under the circumstances. 'Taxation is an evil that nothing but the absolute requirements of the government can possibly justify.' Such was the dictum of Sir Richard Cartwright in former days. No doubt the House will recognize this well known phrase, these words of wisdom, which came from the mouth of that gallant knight in those days when he was a member of the opposition. Yet that hon. gentleman is still a member of this administration which has taken millions of dollars annually out of the pockets of the people more than was necessary to meet the requirements of even this more than extravagant government. Had this money been expended judiciously, there might have been some justification for the expenditure. But what has become of it ? Much has been utilized for the bribing of the people with their own money. Much has been spent in building useless wharfs and breakwaters ; constructing expensive public buildings in villages and towns where they are certainly not needed, and where the revenues from these expenditures certainly do not warrant them ; in purchasing from party friends millions of dollars of supplies without tender, and this by these great sticklers for contract by tender in days gone by ; in paying large and exorbitant prices and making huge fortunes for the middlemen ; in paying out to the North Atlantic Trading Company from the hard earnings of the people, for bringing in immigrants which it had not the slightest thing to do in securing and many more the country would be better without. The members of which company are so sensitive about having their identity disclosed to the world, that they threatened self destruction, and were not to be taken alive. Far be it from me to advocate self destruction, but if these gentlemen be so particular about having their names proclaimed to the world, notwithstanding the fact that they made a contract, in which there was a clause binding them to do nothing contrary to the laws of the country in which they were to operate—if these men were to hide themselves behind the stool pigeons, in the form of office clerks, who represented them—if these men are so sensitive to exposure that they prefer a short cut to eternity, it would have been much better for the people of Canada had they carried that threat into execution before dipping into the Canadian treasury and taking from it some $400,000, which would have been a million dollars had it not been for the watchfulness of the Conservative opposition. These are some of the ways in which the money of our people has been frittered away, the want of which is so seriously felt by our people at present.

Surpluses are evils. They tend to extravagance. They are indefensible.

This is another well worn expression which I am sure the hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), if he were here, would recognize. Many a day has that hon. gentleman's tones reverberated through this hall, hurling denunciations against the Conservative administration for the somewhat modest surpluses they then had, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) now says they were. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in giving voice to that declaration, seems, in view of subsequent events, to have been blessed with almost prophetic vision, but he does not appear to have benefited by it. We had on these very grounds an evidence and a singular illustration of the incompetency of this government. They had a wing added to one of our departments ; but by reason of its faulty construction, right in the shadow of the main parliament building, under the eyes of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) and his high priced officials, no sooner was it constructed than it tumbled to the ground in ruins. That work is indicative of the class of work going on under this Public Works Department from the Atlantic to the Pacific—this department which was presided over by a gentleman, (Mr. Hyman) who, for the last two sessions he was in charge, was in possession of a seat stolen in the city of London.

We had another exemplification of this incompetency in the collapse of the Quebec bridge, entailing the loss of millions of dollars besides the irreparable loss of many lives. I am strongly of the opinion that had the government taken proper precautions by having its own inspector on the grounds and by having the plans and specifications passed upon by its own inspector as well as the construction of same, much sorrow might have been alleviated, much destruction of life, and much loss of money.

The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), when he uttered these prophetic words I have quoted, no doubt had some dim anticipation of the Moncton land deal by which certain lands required by this government were secured by party friends at current figures and then sold to the government in the course of a few weeks at enormous profits.

No doubt he also could see in anticipation the subsidizing of the party press, by paying out annually hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of polluting the fountains of information.

No doubt also he could see in the future the paying out of the treasury of Canada millions of dollars annually, in the form of bonuses, which he and his friends declared was a most vicious form of protection.

With such a mirage passing before his eyes, no doubt the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) spoke prophetically when he said that surpluses were an evil and tended to extravagance. When the crops are good, when prices are good, when money is plentiful, when trade and commerce is expanding, it does not require a master hand to guide the ship of state. The test of true statesmanship is to be found in the hour of adversity. Judged by this standard, how lamentably have the present administration failed. Contrast the activity displayed in the recent crisis by the American government with the apathy of this administration. While the American government grappled strenuously with the difficulty, this government did nothing to alleviate the hard times. By interviews in the press, the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) endeavoured to excuse his inactivity and explained the difference between Canadian and American banking operations. But he was forced to take action by his own supporters. Rumour has it that a certain senator came from Manitoba to urge him to make the pretense of doing something to relieve the situation in the west and thus help the party. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), did take some action and make some sort of a pretense of activity, and thus gave an excuse to party leaders in the west for declaring that he was placing $10,000,000 to the credit of the banks for the purpose of moving the grain of the west to the head waters of lake navigation and thus take away all grounds of complaint. But wonderful to say that $10,000,000 is not forthcoming, and the moving of the grain is still handicapped by want of funds, and in the meantime the lake navigation is closing. Prices are taking another drop, as they always do at the close of navigation, and this serious state of affairs will be seriously intensified by the want of confidence in the Finance Minister's administration of our financial affairs.

If such a condition of affairs existed under a Conservative administration how the welkin would ring with charges of Tory incapacity and Tory incompetence! It is difficult to estimate the great loss that has been sustained by the people of the Northwest by reason of their not being able to find a ready market for their grain this fall. Owing to unfavourable climatic conditions, there was a great percentage of frosted grain this year, and on account of the lateness of the harvest many farmers were compelled to cut their grain on the green side, and it was only by finding a ready sale for such grain that it could be prevented from deteriorating. I know personally of cases where farmers hauled grain many miles to market only to be informed that the elevators could not find room for such grain, as so much grain was stored in special bins, and therefore these farmers were compelled to take the grain home again at great trouble and cost or to dispose of it at sacrifice prices. In the meantime the farmers were being pressed for overdue accounts by merchants, the merchants by the wholesalers, and the wholesalers by the manufacturers. I know personally of many men who have been refused their usual lines of credit or have had them seriously curtailed so that they could not obtain the money requisite for their legitimate lines of business. Then too, many farmers have been induced to hold grain in the hope of higher prices by reason of the fictitious reports sent out by the eastern papers, which were copied by many of the western papers, to the effect that the Finance Minister, in his zeal for the welfare of the financial institutions of the country was rushing to their assistance and placing at the disposal of the banks the treasury of this country; but when we came to investigate the condition of our treasury we found it was empty, the spendthrift had been there in advance. This is an exemplification of Liberal statesmanship, of the administration of a government who have boasted of their surpluses, but who have fallen down when confronted with the first serious difficulties of a financial character involving the interests of producers and business men—difficulties which might have been avoided or largely remedied if proper measures had been applied.

The speech from the Throne referred to the large revenues which the Post Office Department has been reaping during the last few years, and this question of the surplus in the post office seems to be a favourite theme for Liberal orators and newspapers to dilate on. If surpluses in the past have been evils, as these gentlemen used to say, there is no department to which this can be better applied than the Post Office Department. That is a department which should not be run for surplus purposes, and if the Postmaster General will take my advice, after returning from paying his respects to the Emperor of Japan, he will follow the example of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and go to the west—and he will find many avenues where he can spend the surplus to the advantage of the settlers who are crying to-day for much-needed improvements in their postal facilities. If he cannot accept this invitation, let him read the press and he will find sufficient grounds of complaint, sufficient hardships endured and grievances requiring remedy, to keep him busy for some time, and if, instead of gloating over surpluses he endeavours to make the lot of the settler in the west more easy, by giving him much needed postal facilities, he will be making some proper return for the increased taxation levied on the people of this country by this government.

The government also propose to place telephones and telegraphs under a certain amount of government control by means of the Railway Commission. The only member of the Liberal cabinet as originally constituted, who was really sincere in his advocacy of state-owned telephones was frozen out of the cabinet by reason of his espousal of such a policy. However, owing to the growing sentiment throughout the country in favour of government ownership of such utilities, and especially owing to the stand taken by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), the government's hand has been forced in a measure, and so they have had to meet the demands of the people at least to a certain extent, and, while the Bill proposed does not go as far as government ownership, but merely places the services under a certain amount of control by the Railway Commission, that measure will be welcomed by the people, although it will not satisfy them. Evidently the government have not had the courage to follow in the footsteps of the Manitoba government and inaugurate a state-owned system, a policy which I am pleased to say has been adopted and followed in Alberta and Saskatchewan. This is only another exemplification of the progressiveness of the Roblin government in Manitoba, and it is likely to redound to the benefit of the people of that province. I am, Sir, greatly surprised to read the remarks of a fellow member from Manitoba on this question of government ownership. If there is one place in Canada where government ownership of public utilities is popular, it is in Western Canada, and especially in Manitoba, and I marvel at the hardihood, as I might almost call it, of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie in getting up and voicing such expressions as the following:—

In the town from which I come we have a certain amount of municipal ownership and operation, but I have never seen yet where the people were making any great profit out of their municipal undertakings.

Mr. Speaker, who is desirous of running our municipal 'phone system for the purpose of making any very great profit? Are not the people reaping the advantage by low rates? Do they not own their own plant? Have they not absolute control of it in every respect? The best evidence of this is to be seen in the hon. gentleman's own town of Neepawa, where the municipal ownership of telephones and electric light plant has been in operation for years and the citizens would not part with it on any account. That municipality is giving a cheaper service than is given anywhere else, and yet the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) says it is worthless, and he does not favour it. A compliment was paid to the hon. gentleman's town by Mr. Roblin in calling his fellow townsman, the Mayor of Neepawa, Mr. J. H. Howden, into his cabinet to take charge of the newly-created Department of Telephones and Telegraphs, where his vast experience of the municipal ownership system will be of service to the entire people of Manitoba.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) went on:

Under the conditions that exist in this country at the present time I do not think that the question of the government ownership and operation of railways, and possibly I might say also telegraphs and telephones, is worthy of consideration. I believe that a better system can be worked out. If we can couple private enterprise with government control, I am satisfied that the results will be much more satisfactory and profitable to the people of this country than any other system.

When did the hon. gentleman make up his mind to that fact? Not twenty-five years ago. I am not holding him to a declaration dating as far back as that, as the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) refused to be bound by a statement as old as that. Is it one year ago? The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) rightly exposed him in the House the other day. The leader of the opposition in the province of Manitoba, Mr. Brown, in the provincial campaign last March, declared repeatedly that he had a certain policy which would meet the requirements of the people of our province much better than the policy of the Roblin government, that whereas Mr. Roblin's policy embraced merely the government ownership of long distance 'phones, leaving the local exchanges to municipal ownership, he would go one better and provide for government ownership in its entirety. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie aided him, abetted him, encouraged him, spoke for that policy, canvassed on it and possibly may have got some votes on the strength of that appeal. In the face of this declaration of last March, I ask the hon. gentleman if he then considered such a system was not worthy of consideration If so, how humiliating a position he must occupy to-day—or is he of the lightning change variety, can he change his policy to suit the exigencies of the day?

Now, so much for government ownership. I am pleased also to see that at long last the province of Manitoba is promised at least a measure of justice in connection with the extension of its boundaries. But we have heard so many diverse reports as to the character of the proposed extension that we await with considerable interest the production of this Bill. I view with a certain amount of apprehension the concluding words of the sentence referring to this particular subject in the speech from the Throne. It says :

> Among the measures to be submitted to you is a Bill for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba and of other provinces.

What other provinces have to do in connection with the extension of Manitoba's boundaries, passes my comprehension. 'Tis true, the Prime Minister invited the governments of Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan to come down here in conference and discuss the disposition of the district of Keewatin. I take it that the question of the boundaries of Manitoba is one between this government and the government of Manitoba alone ; and speaking as a Manitoban, I emphasize that opinion by reason of this fact, that when the last boundaries of the province of Ontario were affected it was distinctly stated that those boundaries were to be for all time to come. In connection with Saskatchewan, just the year before, this government had given them 250,000 square miles of territory, and why that province should be called in to decide as to the disposition of the district of Keewatin, I cannot comprehend. The member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) who seems to be more loquacious out of the House than he is in it, has already given two diverse reports as to the character of this proposed extension. The member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has referred to it. During the by-election in the constituency of Mountain, in the province of Manitoba, that gentleman took the platform and told the people there that amongst the Liberals themselves they had decided on the proper boundaries of the province of Manitoba, and that the northern boundary was to be the Churchill river, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to have equal access to the bay by way of the Churchill river, and a measure was to be introduced to that effect. The session went on and no Bill was introduced. During the last provincial election Mr. Brown, the leader of the opposition, stated publicly that he had a pledge from this government that a Bill would be introduced last session for the extension of the boundaries of our province, and he would not be at all surprised if that Bill were introduced prior to the provincial elections. The elections were held, no Bill. The session was ended, No Bill introduced. We have had the hon. member for Selkirk, within the past month, breaking forth in songs again, and this time he is reported in the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the Liberal organ, as having said that a Bill would be introduced this session for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, and that Bill would provide that the northern boundary would be the 60th parallel, making it harmonize with the northern boundaries of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Now the hon. gentleman cannot be right in both these versions, and which is accurate ? I am somewhat sceptical of the hon. gentleman's right to speak with authority. We remember that the Prime Minister has seen fit to invite the governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Ontario to a conference to take into consideration the disposition of Keewatin. They came down, they placed their cases before the government, he stated their representations would be taken into consideration, and he would let them know the outcome. From that day to this, so far as my knowledge goes, the governments of those provinces have not been made aware of the decision of this government in that respect. If the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk is true, this is what happened. The hon. member for Selkirk, a private member of this House, who was not a member of that conference, has been taken into the confidence of a member of this government, to the neglect and slighting of the premiers of the other provinces who were invited here, and who are still ignorant of the proposed extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, or the proposed disposition of the district of Keewatin. However, I trust that when that report is brought down it will be found that the lands, the timber and the minerals there may be on those lands in that added territory, will be handed over to be owned by the province of Manitoba ; if not, that Bill will not be satisfactory to the people of our province, in view of the experience we have had during the last few years.

Now, there is a paragraph which refers to two of the ministers having been sent as special plenipotentiaries to France to negotiate the French treaty. I am not referring to this for the purpose of discussing the treaty, but judging by the able exposition of it by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Thos. Chisholm) I am almost inclined to the opinion that it amounts to a license to sell absinthe, wines, spirits and liquors in Canada. Whatever the treaty may be, I am afraid, so long as that gentleman's speech goes uncontradicted, and the government have not answered any of his Statements, that the people of Canada will make up their minds that the French treaty will be of very little value to them. I trust however that it may prove more useful to Canada than it appears on the surface. However, we will wait with interest the debate which will occur on this question. But I referred to the two ministers merely in view of the very natural curiosity of the people of this country to know who really compose this cabinet. In recent years there have been several changes in that cabinet, for divers reasons which I will not mention. But let any one compare the cabinet of 1896 with the cabinet of 1907, and he will see at once the sad deterioration that has taken place so far as quality is concerned. So far as quantity is concerned, we remember that while in days gone by the Liberal opposition severely condemned the Conservative government for having too many ministers and over-governing the country, as soon as the Liberal government came in they immediately went to work and increased the number of ministers by two.

I cannot admire the spirit of gratitude of the Prime Minister. He did not exhibit a marked amount of gratitude when, in 1896, he passed over his tried and true colleagues, those who had sat side by side and shoulder to shoulder with him during his eighteen long years of travelling in the wilderness of opposition, and who naturally looked for their reward when the plums came to be distributed. But the new Prime Minister said to them, in common parlance, go away back and sit down, you do not possess the requisites, you are not of cabinet material ; you may be all right as privates in the ranks, to do menial work, but when I make up my cabinet I will hie me to the provincial arenas. So he did, and he took in the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, the Premier of New Brunswick, the Premier of Ontario and the Attorney General of Manitoba. He has recently brought into his cabinet gentlemen who did not even occupy seats in this House, notwithstanding his large following in the House, and conferred upon them cabinet rank to the slighting of his old supporters who had stood at his back for so many years. While I say that I cannot admire the Prime Minister's spirit of gratefulness in passing over his friends who have faithfully stood by him so long, we must say that in forming his first cabinet he had, comparatively speaking, a fairly strong government. But when we compare it with his present government we may well apply the scriptural quotation : 'There were giants in those days.'

Now, Sir, we are also promised some needed amendments to the Election Act. No doubt amendments are sadly needed for the purpose of remedying the disgraceful proceedings that have been carried on in our country during the last few elections. We have seen a trained band of experts in ballot switching, ballot substitution, ballot manipulation, whose duty it was to go round from constituency to constituency and rob the people of their franchise. Is it not enough to make every honest Canadian, irrespective of party, hang his head in shame when he observes the degradation of our political methods, and especially when he takes up the journals of the motherland and reads the uncomplimentary references to our Canadian political methods ? What a spectacle we had in this House only a few sessions ago ! We had evidence that the constituencies of Brockville and West Huron were stolen from the Conservative candidate by such methods. The leader of the opposition attempted to place the people in possession of this information. In the discharge of his duties he brought this matter to the House, and moved a reference of all these matters to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Prime Minister, apparently sincere, made a declaration of his willingness to have that done.

If a wrong was done he said I want that wrong remedied. If any one has been guilty of these crimes they should be brought to justice. The matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and a condition of affairs was revealed there, that, had the Prime Minister known it in advance, I venture to say that he never would have agreed to the adoption of the motion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. But the session closing before that matter could be completed, the leader of the opposition, the following session, renewed his motion and then what do we see? —the Prime Minister rising in his place— he had a new light in the interval, pressure had, no doubt, been brought to bear by some of his following to, for Heaven's sake, stop this exposure which was bringing disgrace not only upon the country but especially on the party and calling upon his following to vote down the resolution which he had agreed to the preceding session. When the Prime Minister of His Majesty's premier colony did that, we were inclined to ask ourselves the question: Are we in autocratic Russia or in democratic Canada ? We despaired for the future of our country. It is all very well for the Prime Minister to deplore as he did last year bribery and corruption and he especially condemned ballot switching, but, Sir, I hold that the Prime Minister as chief of the executive of this country, and his colleagues, have done more to lower the tone of political morality in Canada than any other man or men. Why do I say that ? Simply because the records of the country will bear me out in that declaration. He might have if he had brought the parties to the bar of justice at the outset saved a repetition of these notorious actions, but he threw the mantle of charity over them and he even protected those who were guilty of these crimes. Take St. James division, Montreal, where my hon. friend from Beauharnois

(Mr. Bergeron) had the seat stolen from him, where bribery was rampant, of the ordinary and the extraordinary kind, where perjury was resorted to and where personation was reported. Did the government place the Justice Department at the disposal of the gentlemen who were chiefly interested in exposing this wrong-doing? Not so, and it remained for my hon. friend from Beauharnois and his friends at great expense of time, labour and money to bring some of the more guilty ones to justice and place them behind the bars. Then the Justice Department got busy, and worked overtime in their efforts, and eventually they released from prison one of the chief culprits on the ground of failing health. We saw the Prime Minister's colleagues fleeing the country in order to escape personal service for fear that they would be brought before the courts of this country to answer for their political crimes and to explain how they had swept the province of Nova Scotia. They knew how they had swept the province of Nova Scotia by the most questionable methods and they were endeavouring to take advantage of a legal quibble to escape from justice. But there was one hon. gentleman from whom we expected something better, but whom bad company has rather spoiled, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who removed to another part of the British empire, but who, when he was brought back, took the witness stand and categorically replied to many of the questions that were asked of him : I refuse to answer on the advice of my counsel. If the hon. gentleman had nothing to hide, nothing to screen, I do not think he would have taken that position. What a contrast that is to the position that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition took when he went into the witness box and answered every question honestly and manfully, who had nothing to hide or screen, who had nobody to defend and who therefore answered every question like a man. I do not think that it is a comparison which is at all favourable to the Minister of Finance.

Then, again, we had the perpetrators of the thin red line outrage which we have heard considerable of in the province of Manitoba. I venture to believe that that was an outrage the parallel of which we have never witnessed in any province of this Dominion and which for audacity and boldness has never been surpassed in the history of our country. Returning officers, having had the clerk of the Crown in Chancery send to them the election lists, sent their lists in to be doctored, to be fixed, to use their own expression at the time, by whom ? by a judge of the land, an impartial tribunal ?—not so, but by a Liberal organizer of the province, Mr. Leach who kept a staff in Winnipeg working night and day for weeks striking out names and disfranchising Conservative electors by the wholesale. When these matters were brought to the public gaze, did the Dominion government step in and offer to prosecute the guilty ones ? Nay, nay. When in 1896 something was brought to their attention by the then Liberal government of the province of Manitoba, which refused to prosecute themselves and threw the entire expense upon the Dominion government, and when, in the constituency of Macdonald, they claimed that there were gross irregularities, they appointed several Liberal lawyers in the west to prosecute and they arrested a good many innocent men. Many of the deputy returning officers were arrested. They spent $10,000 upon that investigation. Although the bill sent in was $19,000 or $20,000, showing that these Liberal officers were out for graft then, the law officers of the Crown cut it down to one-half and the country spent nearly $10,000 without securing any convictions. But, on this occasion what did we find ?—the provincial government—like the Whitney government—doing their duty by placing the wheels of justice in motion. They brought these parties to book and no longer ago than three weeks when the assizes were on at the city of Winnipeg and when these cases were called, what do we see ?—a Liberal lawyer in Winnipeg appearing in court. In whose behalf ? He appeared to represent the Dominion government. What for ? For the purpose of prosecuting the persons accused of these crimes ? No, Sir, but for the purpose of defending them. Sir, I am sure it will considerably surprise the members of this House to know that the treasury of this country is placed at the disposal of these men who have been arrested for political crimes in the province of Manitoba. Then, again, there is not only this thin red line, but there are many others. You might take the Prince Albert case. While the government were not directly interested, indirectly they were because they failed to prosecute. A couple of new polls were opened and it was the duty of the returning officer to notify the Conservative candidate. He went away, mailed back to the Conservative candidate a notification of the opening of these new polls, then he came back, met the Conservative candidate and never let him know anything about these polls. The deputy returning officers were sent out to take the vote at these polls in the northern districts. Some of them had been in the employ of this government, they went out, they did not go near the place where they were advertised to hold the polls, but they sat down on the broad prairie 150 miles north of Prince Albert, pulled out their boxes and pulled out their books, entered 150 fictitious names—I believe the Rabbit family figured conspicuously amongst them —placed 150 fictitious ballots in the box every one marked for the Liberal candidate. They did not have the generosity to mark a solitary ballot for the Conservative candidate and then they came back to Prince Albert, their caps in the air, heralding a great victory, moral and otherwise, and especially otherwise. When this matter was brought to their attention, did the government put the Minister of Justice on the trail of the guilty parties? Not at all. What did occur was this: Through the efforts of private individuals these gentlemen were brought up and the Crown attorney, the representative of the Justice Department, appeared once more to defend the guilty who threw themselves on the mercy of the court, pleaded guilty and got off with a nominal fine. With that record staring him in the face a recount of the ballots was held. The judge holding that recount, notwithstanding that these men had pleaded guilty and had been fined, held that he had no official notice of this and counted every one of these 150 ballots.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer, and in view of that I am not even a judge and I thank heaven for it, but while that may be in accordance with strict legal technicality, according to the technicalities of the law, there is no person in this House or out of it who will claim that this either was justice or common sense. They were advised that if anything were wrong they were to take it to the election courts of the land, and they acted on that advice. They took it to the Supreme Court presided over by five gentlemen, three of whom were appointees of this government, one of whom is a brother of the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), none of whom you may say, or some of whom, never had an important brief as lawyers in their lives before they were put on the bench. No high legal attainments had they; no practice at the bar. These three out of the five declared—although the judge advised that these cases be taken to the election courts—these three declared: We have no election courts in the province of Saskatchewan competent to try any election case. The other two judges, men of eminence at the bar, men of high legal attainments, men who have for years served the public in the capacity of judges and who have the confidence of the people, they ruled otherwise. But the majority was against them, and this is the kind of thing that is practically placing a premium on crimes of this character. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) spoke of some gross irregularities in the province of Manitoba in regard to voters' lists. I shall not now discuss the making of the voters' lists in that province by the respective governments, for that will come up on the amendments to the election law, but there are one or two remarks made by the hon. gentleman either through ignorance or because of an attempt to mislead the House that I wish to draw attention to. He declared that in the province of Manitoba the present government did exactly what their friends did at the last Dominion election; he said they drew a black line through the names. He was mighty careful not to say that the Conservative government disfranchised these men. What we complain about is, not that the Liberals drew a red line through the names, but that many of these voters were not placed on any other list and were disfranchised, and that among those who were placed on other lists many did not know to what poll to go because they were kept in the dark, while the Liberals were informed in advance as to the polls they should vote at. This is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) said with regard to the lists made by the present government of Manitoba:

> Owing to the fact that the polling division and boundaries do not coincide with those of the Dominion districts, it is necessary to make some changes in the voters' list.

If the changes had been made in the last Dominion elections, only in those places where there was absolute necessity there would be no fault found if the changes had been made honestly and by the proper party. But who was the proper party? Was it the Liberal organizer? Did the hon. member ever know in any province of this country of lists sent in by presumedly non-partisan returning officers being handed over to a party organizer to be doctored and tampered with? Would you expect to have fair play shown to political opponents by that process. The hon. member further says:

> In the list I have in my hand there is a polling division, and there are about sixty names on the list who do not belong to that division. To get a list of that polling division it is necessary to do that kind of work because the polling divisions arranged for by the provincial authorities overlapped. The provincial authorities in Manitoba have undertaken to go after the Liberals for doing just what they did themselves.

That is absolutely foundationless. The Conservative government of Manitoba did not do that. The Liberals did not merely draw a red line through the names, but, as I said before, they dishonestly disfranchised hundreds of Conservatives.

If they had any excuse for doing what they did in their own voters' lists it would be different.

And the hon. gentleman flourishes the list before the House and says:

> Here is a list of voters certified to by a judge. Those were entirely taken off the list, I understand, through instruction of the Attorney General of that province. And under the certificate of Judge Walker there is a list of voters in a certain polling division in Manitoba put on the list and certified to by Judge Walker, of Winnipeg, but under the instructions of the Attorney General, Mr. Campbell, they were all taken off and every one disfranchised.

Mark his words: Certified to by Judge Walker as a correct list and then under instructions of Attorney General Campbell they were all taken off and every one disfranchised. The member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) asked: 'What was the reason,' and the reply of the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) was: We will come to that —but he failed to come to it. The member for East Simcoe said: Then there was no reason and the member for Portage la Prairie answered: No, no valid reason; they were just simply disfranchised. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you the whole facts of the case and the members of the House can see how very different my true statement is from the figment of the hon. gentleman's imagination—all too vivid imaginaion as it is—which he pictured to the House. I have here the certificate which Judge Walker, who is chairman of the registration board for every constituency in the province of Manitoba, and I have here the certificate referred to by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. I will read that first. This is what Mr. D. M. Walker, the chairman of the registration board, certifies to:

Winnipeg, June 29, 1903.

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the Board of Registration, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on registration register of registration district No. 2 of the electoral division of Springfield, added at the adjourned meeting of the Court of Revision held at Lac du Bonnet on the 24th day of June, 1903.

D. M. WALKER.

Now, how did that court of revision come to be adjourned. I will tell. The man who held the court of revision in this constituency was an ardent Liberal partisan who lives in Selkirk. That very fact is evidence that the Manitoba government cannot be so very bitter to their political opponents. They left it entirely in the hands of those who constitute the Board of Registration, of which Judge Walker is chairman, to appoint all the returning officers, and although there are forty constituencies, thirty-five of these constituencies were divided between nineteen Conservatives and sixteen Liberal revising barristers. Was not that a good proportion to give our opponents in view of the fact that they had only about eight members in the legislature? The court of revision was held under instructions of a proclamation sent out by the Attorney General's department, and the time and place were mentioned therein. That court of revision was held, and at the end of the day this Liberal official took it upon himself to adjourn the court of revision to another time and another place in order to accommodate a little bunch of his own political following in another district that he wanted to make sure would get on the list. He went beyond his powers and he went beyond the law, and Judge Walker would not give him the same certificate that he gave to every other constituency in the province of Manitoba and which read as follows:—

Winnipeg, June 16, 1903.

I, David Marr Walker, chairman of the Board of Registration, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy of the names, residence and occupation of the persons appearing on the several registers of the electoral division of Carillon, and duly qualified to appear as such as electors for the said electoral division.

D. M. WALKER.

Mark the words 'duly qualified to appear as electors;' I defy you to find in the certificate granted by Judge Walker to which the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) referred these words. The chairman of the registration board was of opinion that the adjourned meeting was illegal, and he referred the matter to the Attorney General's department, and that is the reason these gentlemen did not vote at the election, and that is the true version of the case, and it is an entirely different version from that given by the hon. member (Mr. Crawford).

Now, Sir, there are a few things this government has done outside of their election methods, and since I see the genial Minister of the Interior in the House—and he is getting more genial every day—I will touch him up a little on a few acts of his own administration. We have heard of certain men being kept in the employment of this government who are a disgrace to the country, and the attention of the people of Canada cannot be too often drawn to that fact in order that they may severely and justly punish this government when they seek their suffrage. We have heard of Philip Wagner; we have heard of Mr. Nixon, and we have heard of others who have been taken under the wing of the Minister of the Interior. It would appear that if an official of this government is an ardent political partisan, who is willing to commit political crimes, that constitutes a stepping-stone for him to preferment, or at least to increased remuneration.

Then, take the case of Mr. Nixon, the gentleman who was at the head of the land agency at Macleod. This gentleman, it was reported, had for some years been going astray, had been leaving the straight and narrow path, and had been appropriating to his own use the moneys of the people of this country, moneys that had been paid by people for their land, but had never been forwarded to the government and no account of which had been sent in. These things coming to the ears of the government and an inquiry being demanded, the same Mr. Leach who got his $3,000 position by reason of his operations in connection with the thin red line in Manitoba, was appointed to conduct the inquiry. He went to where Nixon operated, and in twenty-four hours found sufficient to justify him in reporting that there had been several hundred dollars of discrepancies in Nixon's accounts, that he had manipulated the books and made improper returns; and he so reported to the government. What happened? The government closed the land office immediately, punishing the people for the crimes of their officer. It is true, they opened it again after a time, but in the meantime the people had to travel many miles to another land office to do their business. Notwithstanding the fact that Nixon was so reported upon by the government's own officer, he was given a better position at an increased salary, the government thus putting a premium on wrong-doing. Nixon attempted to put the blame on his own son, who was only fifteen years of age when the delinquencies were committed, and who was seldom in the office.

Another case was that of Mr. Philip Wagner, the special protégé of the Minister of the Interior, the gentleman employed as an interpreter for the immigrants coming to this country and knowing not our laws or our language, and in whom they trusted implicitly as a government official, while he was taking their money and appropriating it to his own use. Charge after charge was made against this gentleman, the Catholic missionary going so far as to tell the department that it was a disgrace to keep such a man in the employ of the government. At last he was arrested and sent to trial. On two counts he was convicted, and was sentenced to six months imprisonment with hard labour. A certain time after he was liberated the present Minister of the Interior actually took this man to his bosom and gave him another position at an increased salary. In that position he draws $1,200 per annum, although I believe he was only drawing about half that amount when convicted of his crimes. When these cases were brought to the attention of the Minister of the Interior in his own city of Edmonton, he stated, 'I am not going to go back on my friends.' This is the character of the friends that my friend the Minister of the Interior has fallen in with.

Take the case of the Thessalon postmaster, another gentleman who had been appropriating public money to his own use for several years. This also came to the ears of the government, and the Postmaster General of the time sent his inspector to investigate the postmaster's affairs. The inspector reported that a most disgraceful condition of affairs had existed, that this gentleman had for years been appropriating public money to his own uses, that he was $1,600 behind in his accounts, and he recommended that he should be dismissed. So glaring was the case that the Postmaster General dismissed him. But an election in the meantime came on for both the province and the Dominion, and this ex-postmaster who was an ardent politician and stump speaker, stumped the county for the Liberal candidates in both elections; and on the ground that one good turn deserves another, or more appropriately that one bad turn deserves another, the member for the riding brought all the influence he could to bear, and actually had that defaulter reinstated in his position, again practically putting a premium on crime. This brave postmaster, perhaps not having a son on whom he could lay the blame, blamed his daughter, whom he branded before the world as a common thief, and the government aided and abetted him in so doing.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is Leach doing now?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. He is Superintendent of Land Agencies at a salary of $3,000 per annum. All these people are well looked after; they receive their reward, and that is where the government make a mistake. They carry on operations of this character, and place themselves in the hands of these men who are guilty of infractions of the criminal law. They take them into their councils and confide in them their political secrets, as in the case of W. T. R. Preston, and when the public conscience arouses them from their apathy, they dare not dismiss them for fear of the disclosures of these people.

In view of the fact that the other matters which have come up for discussion in this debate have been fully dealt with by other gentlemen, it is not my intention to trespass on the time of the House at any further length on this occasion: but when the Minister of Finance and his leader twit the leader of the opposition on his platform, I can inform those hon. gentlemen that they need not quote any spurious resolutions that were never presented to the hon. leader of the opposition by the Young Men's Conservative Association of Winnipeg, saying that they were dissatisfied. That is pure fiction, pure myth. I can tell these hon. gentlemen that the hon. leader of the opposition's tour throughout the west has aroused the people to a sense of the notorious actions of this government as they were never aroused before. He has made a deep impression upon the people of the west by discussing public questions in a manner in which these hon. gentlemen are not in the habit of doing, for they preach one doctrine in the east and another in the west. That was not the course of the leader of the opposition. His platform as laid down in Halifax was the same platform that he advocated from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in the west as in the east. The people of the west are a sensible and intelligent people who know a good thing when they see it. They heard the leader of the opposition expound his policy. He did not make speeches of an entirely destructive character, but, true statesman as he is, while criticising his opponents' policy, he laid down his own policy as to the principles which should guide a government in administering the affairs of this country ; and if the people are given a free voice in the next election, instead of having a comparatively small number of Conservatives in this House, as we have to-day, we shall have a large representation, and it will be hardly possible to find the supporters of the government with a microscope. I can tell the Finance Minister, in return for the implied and intended reproach in his remark that the leader of the opposition was trying to stir up strife and discord in the Pacific province by reopening the question of provincial subsidies and the question of Japanese immigration, after those questions had been settled, that a gentleman who lives in such a frail house himself should not throw stones. A gentleman who tried to take his own province out of confederation after that question was all settled, who tried to stir up strife, who tried to excite the people to discontent—such a man is the last who should cast a slur on the leader of the opposition or make the accusation against him that he was trying to stir up strife when he was merely carrying out the pledge he made before, and which stands to-day as on the day he made it.

Mr. E. PAQUET (l'Islet). (Translation.) I hope the House will allow me to make a remark with respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong).

It is my firm belief that Canada will some day carry out the free rural postal delivery wherever the country is sufficiently populated. I have the honour to represent a constituency wherein lay several settled parishes, the inhabitants of which are eight, ten and even twelve miles away from a post office. Under the prevailing conditions, I would ask the government to increase the number of post offices rather than establish rural delivery, in order to facilitate matters to our farmers, thereby fulfilling a long felt want among settlers. Under the circumstances, I am unable to vote in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lambton.

House divided on amendment, Mr. Armstrong.

Amendment negatived.

On motion of Mr. Barker, debate was adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—ORGANIZATION OF COMMITTEES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House adjourns I would like to ask the Prime Minister when the committees will be organized. I do not think they have yet been called together for organization purposes and there is work ready for one of them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not usual to organize the committees pending the debate on the address, but immediately after the conclusion of the debate they will be organized.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I heard some suggestion of that kind and looked it up in 'May' this evening. I found the opposite rule prevails in Great Britain; the work does go on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand for my part that the rule does prevail in this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know that such a rule applied, but if it does, of course it should be observed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is true that usually the debate has not lasted for such a long period as it has this session, but as a rule the committees are not organized until the address has been adopted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not look up precedents, but I remember in one session, about 1898, the debate lasted for about four weeks, in respect to a proposed railroad to the Yukon. The Prime Minister will no doubt remember.

Mr. FIELDING. Were the committees organized?

Mr. PAQUET.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not look it up, but I did look up the practice in Great Britain, and I find they have no such rule there.

Mr. FIELDING. I think it is a custom rather than a rule in our parliament.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, December 11, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

COPYRIGHT ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 28) to amend the Copyright Act. He said: This Bill I presented last session, but it did not get beyond the second reading. It is a very short amendment to the Copyright Act, and proposes simply to shorten and simplify the notice of copyright to be attached to any publication. It proposes to substitute the words 'Copyrighted, Canada, year.....,' by .....,' instead of the formula 'Entered according to Act of the parliament of Canada, in the year....., by....., at the Department of Agriculture.' This is a formula which defaces some publications, such as art post cards, and is besides very lengthy.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE FISHERIES ACT — AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Fisheries Act. He said: Under the law a fishery officer is ex officio a justice of the peace and has power to try fishery cases. In various parts of the country there is a common complaint that these officers are apt to make up their minds that some one has committed an offence against the Fishery Act. The officer lays the complaint before himself, then summons the defendant to appear before him. The officer is therefore the complainant and the judge. I am proposing to take away this jurisdiction and compel such cases to be brought before a stipendiary magistrate or justice of the peace.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 29) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: This Bill in part proposes to re-enact what I proposed in a Bill I introduced last session, but which never got beyond the second reading owing to the session closing. I propose to enact what is commonly known as the compulsory voting clause. Bills to this effect have been introduced before and referred to select committees and been recommended by select committees, but failed to pass the House. The first clause deals with compulsory voting. The second clause is consequent on the first. It enacts that the day set apart for the general election throughout Canada shall be a public holiday, so as to give no excuse to any one for not voting. Clause three proposes to repeal all the clauses of the Election Act which require any deposit to be made by a candidate for election to the Dominion House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

PAYMENTS TO NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What sums of money have been paid for advertising and printing, respectively, to the 'Sun' and 'Star' newspapers of St. John, N.B., the 'Chronicle' of Halifax, the 'Echo' and the Glace Bay 'Gazette', and the St. John 'Globe,' during the following periods, respectively: the fiscal years 1904-5, 1905-6, and from June 30, 1906, to date?

2. Is the printing so far as concerns the 'Sun', 'Star,' 'Chronicle' and 'Echo,' done in the job offices of these papers, or is it farmed out by these papers to other concerns?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It would not be convenient to give the information in the form of an answer. I would suggest to let that question stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. It stands as a notice of motion.

THE BOYLE CONCESSION.

Mr. AMES asked:

Has the Dawson Legislature memorialized the government of Canada regarding what is known as the Boyle concession? If so, what action has been taken in regard to the same?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). We have no notice of the receipt of any such memorial, but have wired to the commissioner at Dawson to ask if any such has been forwarded.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL—ENGINEERING STAFF.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked:

What changes, if any, have been made in the National Transcontinental Railway Commission's engineering staff during the current calendar year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). That information is being prepared by the commission, and I shall have it in a day or two.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

RELEASE OF GILLIS.

Mr. WARD—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Was a man named Gillis sentenced to be hanged some years ago at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, for the murder of one 'Callahan"?

2. Was this prisoner's sentence commuted to imprisonment for life? If so, on what grounds?

3. Was this prisoner removed from Dorchester to Kingston penitentiary? If so, for what reason?

4. When did this removal take place, and how long has the prisoner been confined at Kingston?

5. Has this prisoner been released? If so, when and upon what grounds?

6. From what source did the request for his release come?

7. Upon whose recommendation was this prisoner released?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. Yes; in January, 1886.

2. The prisoner's sentence was so commuted. As to the grounds upon which such commutation proceeded, I am quite unable to answer, but the well established constitutional practice in that regard is that in general, the advice tendered to the Governor General in such cases is regarded as confidential, and not to be communicated even to parliament unless under very exceptional circumstances. Such circumstances would not appear to exist in the present case.

3. Yes; for disciplinary reasons.

4. In August, 1894. He was in Kingston penitentiary until his release in July, 1907, after (in all) over twenty-two years actual imprisonment.

5. He was released. The reply to question 2 applies to the latter part of this question.

6. From several persons interested in the prisoner who, from time to time during several years, urged his release. It is not the practice to communicate the names of memorialists or petitioners in such cases.

7. Upon mine.

3. Is their work completed?

3. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. A part of the question does not seem to be answered—the place of residence of each of these parties.

Mr. BRODEUR. The only one whose residence we have on record in the department is Mr. Falconer. We have not the addresses of the others.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps, then, that part of the question might stand.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have nothing in the department which shows the residence of these parties. In fact, the contract was made with Mr. Falconer alone, and he is the only man whose residence we know.

FERRY WHARF, CHAPEL POINT, LENNOX ISLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Were tenders called for the construction of a ferry wharf at Chapel Point, Lennox Island? If so, when, and if on more than one occasion, state dates, and also state if advertisements for tenders differed and how?

2. Was any vote passed for the construction? If so, when, and for what sum?

3. Did the government make any survey for an approach on the Port Hill side, and at what point?

4. Were tenders called for such an approach, and at what point?

5. Is said approach to serve the purpose of loading vessels of light draft of water as well as a ferry slip?

6. Was any recommendation made by the government that the approach on the Port Hill site should be constructed at the end of the Port Hill road, as being more feasible and of better service to the public, and what decision has the government come to on this point?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Tenders were called for the construction of a ferry scow and for landing places on Lennox island, and on the shore opposite. The advertisement was inserted without change three times in weekly paper in July, 1907.

2. Yes. Supplementary estimates, 1907-08. $800.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. MACPHERSON asked :

1. Has the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, 'that it is not an offence for a Chinaman to enter Canada, and that the most the government can do is to sue them for the head tax of $500,' been brought to the attention of the government?

2. Was it the intention of the government to make it a criminal act when the legislation was passed that the Chinamen trying to evade the law would come under the Criminal Code?

3. Is it the intention of the government to amend the law so that there can be no question as to the intention of parliament, and that it will be a criminal offence to attempt to evade the Act?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) that no official record has yet been received of the decision referred to; and, until it is received, it would not be advisable to consider whether or not the operation of the existing law would be affected.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

How many and what nations will share in the rates of duty accorded to France by the new treaty, under the favoured nation clause?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). That information was given to the House at a previous session, and, I think, was substantially correct. Nevertheless I prefer not to give a list of the countries at this moment because it is desirable we should have from the imperial authorities a definite statement of their views in the matter. But, when we come to deal with the French treaty, we will give the information in more definite form. I think it is not wise that I should commit myself to any particular list of the countries at the present moment.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

Hon. L. P BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Mr. Gaudette was appointed to investigate alleged irregularities on the part of a foreman of works on Lake St. Peter.

2. His duties were as indicated, and so far two advances amounting to $600 have been made to him.

3. No report has yet been received.

4. When received his report will be placed on the table of the House

MR. HODGINS AND NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

2. How many years before making such request had he performed the duties of judge?

3. What reasons did he give in support of his request to be pensioned?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. Mr. Justice Ouimet applied by letter of January 27, 1906, to be pensioned.

2. Nine years, eight months, eight days.

3. Ill-health, supported by the certificate of his physician, Dr. P. E. Mount, to the effect that he was afflicted with chronic cystitis.

PROHIBITION ZONE ON GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. AMES asked :

By whom and under whose authority was a prohibition zone created along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific east of Winnipeg ?

2. What was the original width of said zone ?
3. Has this width been reduced at any points along the line of construction ? If so, where ?
4. On whose demand was such reduction agreed to or made, and what reasons have induced the government to so act ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The Governor in Council, under authority of Rev. Stat. Can., 1886, c. 151, now part of the Criminal Code.
2. Twenty miles on each side of the located line, including the line itself, but excepting within the limits of incorporated cities and towns in the said area.
3. Yes, to five miles through the province of Manitoba and to ten miles through the provisional judicial district of Rainy River, in the province of Ontario.

3. $66,784.99.
4. The department is unable to give the amount, that is yet payable to the contractor as the final estimate has not been made.
5. $7,884.98, up to date. There are no extras under the schedule. This is for additional work in foundations, drains and sewers, flooring and water-proofing basements with concrete, grading for and laying reinforced concrete platforms all at schedule prices as stipulated in contract.

ENTRANCE TO TORONTO HARBOUR.

Mr. MACDONELL asked :

1. Has the government definitely decided to construct the proposed new western entrance to Toronto harbour ?
2. If so, when is it proposed that the work shall be commenced, and how long will it take in construction ?
3. What is the estimated cost of the work ?
4. When will tenders be asked for to do the work ?
5. Has the government engineer at Toronto completed his report on the said work ?
6. Has the government conferred with the municipal authorities of Toronto or the Toronto Board of Trade regarding the location, character or other details of the said work ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes, subject to parliament granting the necessary appropriation.
2 and 4. The time of construction is estimated at three years.
3. Upwards of $400,000.
5. Yes.
6. Representations have been made to the Minister of Public Works by the Mayor of the City of Toronto, the President of the Board of Trade and representatives of the Harbour Board and Board of Control, regarding the location and character of an improved western entrance to the harbour.

STORES ON INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY LINE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). May I be permitted to call attention to an answer I gave on Monday to a question put by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. R. N. Walsh). The question was as follows :

1. Have any representations been made to the government regarding the stores or buildings placed on the Intercolonial boundary line ?
2. If so, what was the nature of such representations ?
3. Does the government intend taking any action in regard to their regulation ?

The answer I gave was :

The government have received no representations on this subject.

I have since ascertained there was a typographical error in the question ; instead of being the Intercolonial Railway line, it should read the International Boundary Line. I have to inform the hon. member that we have received from Rev. Dr. S. D. Chown, of Toronto, a communication on the subject. It appears that stores are built exactly on the boundary line, one part in Canada and one part in the United States, and when offences are committed in these stores they are difficult to reach and difficult to punish. The question is one of a rather delicate nature, and could only be effectually dealt with by treaty between the two governments.

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the Finance Minister whether he is prepared to say if the Budget speech will come on before or after the holidays. Some arrangement might be made in regard to it.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Until the conclusion of the debate on the address I would hardly be prepared to make any announcement on the subject.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Hall for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, I think we should be wanting in our duty to the people of Canada if we passed this resolution without further discussion of that paragraph in His Excellency's speech from the Throne which relates to the Quebec Bridge disaster and I propose, before I take my seat, to move an amendment on this subject. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to enter into any question of the legal liability of the Phoenix Bridge Company or of the Quebec Bridge Company for this disaster. This is not the time or place for such a discussion and, moreover, we have not yet all the facts that are necessary to be known in that regard. But, Mr. Speaker, I do propose to discuss the accountability of ministers for their connection with that great work and for the disaster which led to such loss of life, which, in a moment, without warning, sent some seventy or more men, all unprepared, to face their maker, which also hurled in utter destruction to the bottom of the St. Lawrence, a great national work which had taken years in production, which will take years to replace, and upon which have been spent millions of public money which might as well, or even better, have been cast into the sea. I say, Sir, that this is a national work and no one will dispute that it has been so treated by the government. No man can question that it was and is a work in which the people of Canada were and are deeply interested. It has been so treated by the government, and indeed, upon no other basis or consideration could any ministry have asked parliament to undertake the obligations which have been undertaken on behalf of the Quebec Bridge Company. A fair appreciation of the relative importance of the bridge as compared with the great transcontinental railway project may be had in this way : The estimated cost of the bridge—from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000—corresponds to the estimated cost of about 180 miles of railway, and if unfortunately the Quebec Bridge Company should be found accountable for the disaster, or if the Quebec Bridge Company should be unable to recover from the Phoenix Bridge Company, the money that has already been paid to them, the ultimate cost of the bridge will probably be $12,000,000, or equal to the estimated cost of fully 300 miles of railway. I think I need say no more to impress upon this House and the people the enormous importance to this country of the subject which hon. gentlemen opposite were dealing with when they guaranteed the bonds or securities of the Quebec Bridge Company. I may perhaps pause here for a moment to say—and I think that hon. gentlemen in the House will join me in what I am about to say—that I sincerely hope and trust that, apart from any question of legal liability upon the part of either company, the government has seen fit to see that substantial care has been taken of, and relief afforded to the people who were dependent upon the unfortunate men who perished in that catastrophe. I do not think that anybody would desire that the government should neglect what is their duty in that regard, although I do not pretend for a moment that there is any liability on the part of the government to these people. That bridge, Mr. Speaker, when completed, will be the greatest bridge in the world. The eyes of men of science in all quarters of the globe have been upon it. Canada's reputation in regard to it has been at stake, and millions, I say, of the people's money have been pledged upon it. Most serious complications may arise and probably will arise if there shall be any serious delay in the completion of the bridge. It is a part to all intents and purposes of the transcontinental railway and should there be a gap or break in that railway on its completion by reason of this bridge being unfinished and the traffic have to be ferried across the St. Lawrence, the matter might be a most serious one to this country from that point of view alone. In 1903, the government had projected its plan for a transcontinental railway. It committed the country to that project before it entered into its arrangements with this bridge company. I say it was the government's project because, although, on this side of the House, we were in favour of an additional transcontinental railway, we objected and strongly objected to the particular plan and scheme of the government. Not a man on this side of the House would have opposed for one moment any such reasonable scheme as was proposed in writing to the government in 1902 by the Grand Trunk Railway Company under the signatures of Messrs. Cox, Hays and Wainwright. If that had been known to this House there would have been no delay, there would have been no hesitation, but we were not allowed to consider it. For eighteen months nearly—perhaps fully eighteen months—the government concealed the fact that any such proposition had ever been made to them. Every paper that the government had in connection with the scheme was demanded. The government professed to have brought down every paper, but although that proposition of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was in existence and in possession of the government the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) informed the House that all the papers had been produced, and it was not until eighteen months later that we heard a word about it. We would have been prepared to accept the Grand Trunk proposition. I do not want to be misunderstood on that point. I believe that the Grand Trunk Railway Company asked for a subsidy, much larger, probably, than they hoped to receive. We would have been willing, everybody I think would have been willing, to subsidize them most handsomely, but it was not necessary to give them a subsidy in the precise form they chose to put in that paper. But, Sir, the government having committed the country to that transcontinental railway project, the Quebec bridge, which had always been an important work for this country, became doubly important because it became really a part of the transcontinental railway scheme itself. When completed the bridge would have formed the great thoroughfare for all the railways centreing about Quebec. It would have been the highway for all the produce of the west to Europe, it would have been, under the government's scheme, the natural outlet from this country for all the products of the great Northwest. Therefore, the moment the government had been committed to its transcontinental railway project it became doubly important that every care should be taken in the construction of that bridge.

What was the condition of the Quebec Bridge Company at that time? Anybody who takes an interest in that question will find it all fully set forth in the Act of 1903, chapter 54. There you will find the complete details of the financial position of the wonderful Quebec Bridge Company which seems to have lived and prospered under the wing of this government. The Quebec Bridge and Railway Company was incorporated some 20 years ago with power to construct a bridge across the St. Lawrence river at or near Quebec. It was authorized to issue capital stock to the extent of $1,000,000, and it did not neglect, in procuring its charter, to have inserted that well known clause, of which railway and bridge promoters are so fond, enabling the company to issue its stock as paid-up stock to persons who perform certain services for the company. Up to 1903 the company had received subscriptions for only $200,000 of the stock with which to construct this immense work and upon that stock, up to the autumn of 1903, the stockholders of this Quebec Bridge Company had paid only $65,585.70. Whether any of that $65,000 was paid in cash or whether it was all issued for services we do not know, but we do know that in the arrangement made in October, 1903, with this government not a word seems to have been said about the existence of that stock in money. In any case, with that beggarly capital of $65,595.70 the company boldly started out to construct the greatest bridge the world has known; a bridge, Sir, estimated to cost between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000, apart from the loss by the disaster which is alluded to in the speech from the Throne. Probably the promoters did not, as you may guess, rely much upon that paid up capital of theirs; that would hardly have paid the directors' fees, I fancy, during the time of the existence of the company. They got bonuses from different sources; from the province of Quebec, $250,000; from the city of Quebec, $300,000, and from the Dominion government, $374,353, a total in hard cash of $924,353, and in 1903 that money had all been spent except about $9,000. Out of nearly $1,000,000 which they had received as gifts they had in hand, apparently, about $9,000. They had constructed, according to the statement appearing in the statute to which I have referred, some approaches to the proposed bridge and they had finished the sub-structure and work had been begun on the superstructure. They had expended in part payment for the work done $914,862, out of the cash subsidies, thus having, to give the precise figures, $9,491 in hand, plus, of course, the little capital if that existed. But they had not paid in full for all the work done; they were still, they say, in debt $779,550, which included some bonds they had sold. They had sold bonds for $472,000, and what do you suppose they got for them? This great company, engaged in constructing this great work, sold their bonds for $283,279, just about sixty cents on the dollar; and their alleged paid up capital represented about 86 cents only for every $100 that the work required. That was a most extraordinary position for such a company, and I have no doubt that these bonds were never sold for cash at all; they were probably given over to some contractor at 60 cents on the dollar on account of his work.

That, then, was the company's position and the government knew it, because they had the statements before them. They were in debt $779,550 and they had assets, allowing the balance of the subsidies and the possibly paid up stock, of $75,076, leaving their net debt, in October, 1903, $704,473.30. That is, this bridge company was on the wrong side by over $700,000, and had not one cent with which to proceed with the superstructure. They had to face a money market which was rapidly increasing in stringency, as the Finance Minister knew because he admitted it in his speeches upon the railway problem. The bridge, if they could build it at all, was likely to cost $7,000,000, or $8,000,000, and, having regard to the possibility of an accident, such as has occurred, might cost $12,000,000. That was the position of this company when the government undertook to deal with it. The company was on the rocks, stranded, helpless, thoroughly bankrupt, and yet in that condition, and knowing well the importance of this great work, hon. gentlemen opposite undertook to guarantee the company for $6,678,200.

One would have thought that would be the last thing that any sensible man would have imagined the government could have been asked to do. I venture to say that there is not one hon. gentleman sitting behind the government who, if he had been asked under those conditions to advise the guarantee of nearly seven millions of money for that company, would have listened to it for one moment. I do not believe there is one hon. gentleman, responsible to the people, who would have advised the giving of that guarantee, or who would have hesitated to take advantage of the condition into which the company at that time had fallen and assume the work and build it as a national work. What an opportunity that was for the government. They had launched out on a great railway undertaking which was to involve the country in some 150 millions of money. In the middle of that work was a river requiring a great bridge. Here was an utterly bankrupt company, with only $65,585 of capital, and even that apparently not in existence, and they allow that company to continue in control of work on which so much depended for the business interests of this country. They knew that they had only to say to Mr. Parent, the president of this Quebec Bridge Company, that he could go on with the work if he chose, but he could not get any more public money, and Mr. Parent would have come down and would have been glad to have the government take it off his hands. The people would willingly return to the company their $65,000 threefold if they wanted it. It was a big question. The country would have been glad to get rid of the company almost on any terms; but Mr. Parent was a friend of the right hon. leader of the House, both a political and a personal friend, and he was able to come here to Ottawa and secure what I think he must have hardly expected. A very singular feature of the transaction occurred at that time. The House had been sitting for eight long months, from March until the end of October in that year 1903. On the 19th of October the government entered into a contract with the Bridge Company, which, with all the facts I have stated, is set forth in the statute to which I have referred. The contract was signed by the hon. Finance Minister on behalf of Canada and by Mr. Parent on behalf of the bridge company. In that contract it is recited that the estimated further cost of the bridge, including the debt owed by the company, was $6,866,882. The government made one stipulation: they stipulated that the bridge company should issue $200,000 more of stock, and have it paid up, so as to recoup to the company the discount on the bonds that they had issued; and on this bankrupt company agreeing to do that the government undertook to guarantee the securities of the company to the extent of $6,678,200.

Mr. HAGGART. Did that include the bonds they had issued?

Mr. BARKER. That included their floating debt and the bonds. Their total debt including the bonds was $779,550, but they were to make good to their own company the discount on the bonds by issuing $200,000 of stock and getting it paid up. As I say, that contract was signed on the 19th of October by the hon. Finance Minister and by the right hon. leader's political and personal friend, Mr. Parent, a partner of one of the right hon. gentleman's colleagues in the government. We can understand how Mr. Parent was able to introduce himself to the Finance Minister. Within five days after that agreement was signed, the Act confirming it was rushed through both Houses of parliament.

Now, I would like to know if there is one hon. gentleman who sits behind the ministers who will dare to go before his constituents next year and justify or excuse that contract. I do not ask what they will do here, no doubt they will vote that it was all right; but I ask, does any hon. gentleman feel in his heart that he will be prepared to go before his constituents next year and justify or excuse the government for entering into such an agreement as that with a bankrupt company dry on the rocks, with not a dollar to bless itself with, in connection with the greatest bridge in this world, costing millions? And that was done by the Finance Minister as perhaps he would buy a horse or a cow in a hurry. I think probably he would take more trouble in getting an estimate of the value of the horse or the character of its owner. The only explanation I can see is, that this contract was one characteristic of this government—it was a deal with a middleman. Every business consideration would have led the government to undertake that work themselves, to see to the financing of it, to keep control of it until the end, and then to operate it as the great connecting link between all the railways centering in the great city of Quebec. But no; the middleman had to be satisfied, and he was satisfied to all intents and purposes.

One would have thought that Mr. Parent had enough on his hands, as president of the bridge company, in looking after that immense work. One would have thought that the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would have been content with what he had done for his friend, but the right hon. gentleman was not content. Not considering whether Mr. Parent had more to do, in watching and supervising the construction of that bridge, than he was able to perform, the First Minister coolly appointed him Chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, with the handsome snug salary of $8,000 a year. We have heard of certain gentlemen having a pull, but Mr. Parent evidently had a great pull somewhere.

It may be interesting perhaps to show what a nice thing this Chairmanship of the Transcontinental Commission is. We can gather a pretty fair idea of it by looking at the Auditor General's Report for the nine months' expenditure to the 31st March last. We find that these Commissioners have obtained an official car, and in connection with that official car the people have had to pay during those nine months $13,026.21. The details are given in the Auditor General's Report, page W—283. They started off by getting a car from the Railway Department for $8,000. That car, of course, being only fitted for an ordinary mortal, or perhaps for a minister of railways, must be fixed up. It was remodelled and refitted at a cost of $1,400. Then they paid $290.50 for dishes, tea cups and saucers, &c. They also bought for the car table linen, bedding, carpets and sundry articles, $1,673.90. They did more They had their bedsteads, but they wanted mattresses. They got hair mattresses and they had mattresses remade and they got a large chair and some folding tables and mahogany cabinets, and for all these they paid $393.95. But they were still not satisfied. They wanted the porter of the car to be properly fitted up to represent them at the back door, so they got a cap for the porter. What do you suppose they paid for it? $5. It was not a silk hat.

Mr NORTHRUP. A night cap.

Mr. BARKER. That would pay for a good many night caps. It is a cap for the porter, and it cost $5. I shall not go through all the items, for there are too many, but they all foot up to $13,096.21. You can understand what a nice position Mr. Parent has, and I wonder if he had similar comforts in connection with the bridge company. At all events, he gets $8,000 a year for presiding as Commissioner in connection with the Transcontinental, and the Lord only knows what he gets in connection with the bridge company.

The entering into such a contract as I have described was indefensible, but that is not the most serious part of the matter, because that meant simply money. Section 12 of the agreement is in these words:

> The plans and specifications for all the work to be undertaken shall be submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council, and the said undertaking shall be completed not later than the 1st December, 1906.

By section 14 the government have the right to appoint three directors of the bridge company. You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the contracting party, the one who puts stipulations of that kind into a contract, assumes an obligation to those he represents. By inserting those provisions in the contract the government assumed a very responsible duty towards the people. They took an important power. As between the government and the people, that contract imposed on the government the obligation, not merely to make sure that the plans were all that they ought to be, but that hour by hour and day by day, during the construction of that work, there should be experts on the bridge to see that the plans or specifications were not in the slightest degree shirked and that everything was done which the builders of the bridge had contracted to do. Not only that, they should have had an expert there who, when he saw from time to time, in the course of the work, that modifications might be necessary, would be competent to advise the government and have those changes made. There was this further circumstance that, in the absence of such competent expert there might be delay in remedying anything going wrong. In the case of any mishap or casualty, instant action might be necessary, and any hesitation or delay might be ruinous. In the progress of the work a hundred contingencies might arise requiring the most prompt attention. The government should have foreseen that in the absence of proper officials and competent authority something terrible might happen, as it did. And who was likely to be the loser? The people of this country are providing the money. If the Quebec Bridge Company have been neglectful, if their officers have been incompetent, that company is not worth sixpence. This country is providing all the money, and you might as well try to take the breeks off a highlandman as to get anything off that company. The Phœnix Bridge Company must have been paid very large sums on account of their work. If the money is to be recovered from them, the Quebec Bridge Company or the government will have to go to the United States and sue for it, and I suppose, after long litigation, we might, or might not, get a judgment, and get the money.

That is the position we are in. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) referred to this subject, and in doing so quoted from the 'Scientific American,' which, as everybody knows, is one of the most capable engineering journals in America. having certainly no superior. The writer of the article in that journal says:

It is evident, however, from the statements of the consulting engineer, that the enterprise laboured under two serious drawbacks——

Now, the first of these drawbacks, I understand the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to say Mr. Cooper, the consulting engineer, does not admit—the insufficiency of money. I will not refer to that further. But the writer in the 'Scientific American' goes on:

The consulting engineer's detailed story of the discovery of the eccentricity in the bottom chord; the making light of it by the engineer in charge; and the tardy and roundabout measures taken to stop all further additions to the weight on the bridge, read more like the story of the building of some county bridge than the record of the erection of the greatest work of bridge engineering of the century.

And there you see, I say, the direct result of this unfortunate arrangement made by the government with the Quebec company.

Later in his speech, as reported at page 53 of 'Hansard,' the leader of the opposition said:

What I ventured to ask was whether or not the plans had been approved by order in council, as provided by the Act of 1903.

To this the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said:

As to that I cannot say, but I presume that the law has been observed.

The right hon. gentleman says also that they had to act upon the report of the engineer; I suppose the engineer of the Railway Department—or was it the architect of the Public Works Department? And had the engineer who passed the plans annexed to this agreement, which was got through so hastily, as little time to study the plans as parliament had to study the agreement? It would be very interesting to know that. Now, I venture to say, there is no chief engineer of any railway in Canada or in the United States who would dare to assume the responsibility for settling the plans for such a work. I venture to say that if the right hon. gentleman had asked Mr. Schrieber in those days to approve of these plans that gentleman would have declined the responsibility. I venture to say the chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk or the chief engineer of the Canadian Northern would have declined to accept such a responsibility. During late years, since bridge building has taken the form of iron and steel structure, the engineering for such work has grown into almost a distinct profession. The men who design these bridges, who undertake the criticism of the plans and specifications, are experts who give their whole time and thought and attention to this class of work, and the ordinary engineer on a railway never interferes with it. I know that of my own knowledge as to engineers. I have seen it stated in the press, and it may have appeared in some of the evidence taken by the commission, that the Deputy Minister of Railways, Mr. Schrieber, advised the government to employ a competent expert to superintend the work on the bridge, and it is said that the government passed an order in council in accordance with that request, and that later they cancelled that order in council. Now, I do not assert this as a fact, but I have seen it stated in the press, apparently as taken from evidence given somewhere. But we have the extraordinary fact that the Prime Minister does not know whether there was such an expert or not. When he is asked a question by the leader of the opposition his only reply is that he presumes the law has been complied with. I would not be understood as stating that there was no consulting engineer. Mr. Cooper, of New York, a very eminent engineer, was employed—by whom I do not know, whether by the Quebec Bridge Company or by this government. But he was not employed to go to the works, to stay upon the work, to watch its progress from day to day, as was necessary for any proper supervision. Mr. Cooper is, as I have said, a very eminent engineer. But he is a man of seventy years of age and in feeble health, unable to leave New York. When this catastrophe was imminent, Mr. Cooper could not go up to Quebec and visit the bridge. The man in charge had to rush off to New York to see Mr. Cooper and explain the position to him. And Mr. Cooper, instead of going up to see for himself, had to accept the description given by another engineer, and on that basis give advice. And this, apparently, was the expert whom the government or the bridge company employed. We all recollect what occurred at the time. There were gentlemen on the bridge who were informed that there was something wrong with one of the beams. Notwithstanding that, the unfortunate men who perished were allowed to go on working on the structure. An immense machine used for carrying heavy loads on to the bridge was allowed to roll out with its load, endangering the defective work. There was not a man there, apparently, competent to decide and act. The bridge company had nobody to do what was necessary; the government had nobody—it was everybody's business, apparently, and therefore nobody's business. And the bridge went down and the unfortunate men were hurled into eternity.

I do not wish to take up time unnecessarily or to go into everything that might well be said in discussing this matter. I have only to say this, that I was astonished when the question was asked of the minister and he had to make the reply: He was unable to say, he presumed the law had been complied with.' Possibly the right hon. gentleman may have thought there was something in the Railway Act that governed this matter, or perhaps in the Act respecting public works; or he may have thought the law was in the Act relating to the Receiver General. But he had in his mind that there was something in the law. One would almost imagine that he had never heard of the agreement. Not a word about the agreement, not a word as to whether they had complied with and carried out the intention of the agreement. He simply answered, I cannot say, I suppose the law has been obeyed.' Now, the Finance Minister was particularly responsible for that guarantee, and it came rather more in his line. Then this was a great railway bridge to connect all the railways entering Quebec, and one would have thought that the Minister of Railways would have taken some little interest in it, and found out something about it so that he could have prompted the right hon. gentleman and told him what to say. And there was the Minister of Public Works. Surely such a bridge as this was a great public work, though not technically under his charge. Now, when these four gentlemen, the right hon. the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, had been sitting together around the table in the Privy Council not so many days ago, and cautiously settling what His Excellency would be asked to say about this catastrophe, surely they might have taken enough interest in the subject to ascertain, a most obvious thing, what had been done on the part of the government for the safety of the workingmen and to see that the work was properly supervised. Evidently not one of them thought about it, they were absolutely indifferent to it. The only answer we get is: 'We cannot say, we suppose the law was complied with.' Did any mortal man ever hear of four responsible persons giving such an answer to such a question? There they sat, a wretched quartet, knowing nothing, not even taking the trouble to know, although aware that they would be questioned in this House. Mr. Parent probably could have told the Minister of Finance if he had chosen to ask him. The Minister of Public Works I think could have found out something. They could have sent for Mr. Parent and found out. If the government had not appointed an expert themselves they might at least have found out what Mr. Parent had done. Millions of public money had been spent, and hundreds of lives in jeopardy. Millions have been lost and lives have been lost, and these gentlemen quietly settle the speech of His Excellency, and do not ask one word that every sensible man would have thought it necessary to ask.

Mr. Speaker, I have somewhere read that every country is governed as it deserves. If that be really so, and if Canada be no exception to the rule, what can she have done to deserve such government as this?

I beg to move in amendment to the address:

That the said motion be amended by adding to the proposed address to His Excellency the Governor General the following paragraph at the end thereof:

We desire to express our respectful regret that more adequate reference has not been made to matters of public interest alluded to in your Excellency's gracious speech, and that other matters of grave public concern have altogether escaped mention therein, and especially that the allusion in your Excellency's gracious speech to the collapse of the great bridge in course of construction across the St. Lawrence river omits any reference to the unfortunate and unbusinesslike conditions under which that great national work has been carried on.

We especially deplore the loss of life on that occasion, and we also deplore not only the destruction and loss of millions of capital, but the serious delay in a great work which forms an essential part of the National Transcontinental Railway, and we greatly regret the unbusinesslike arrangements and absence of efficient control in the public interest with regard to that work.

Mr. SPEAKER. In regard to the first portion of this amendment, I am inclined to think that it is a clause which cannot again be introduced in an amendment to the motion under consideration. The House has apparently passed upon that subject on the disposition of a former amendment. It does not refer to any matter of definite consequence, but it is a repetition of something which has been disposed of already on a former motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Accompanied by a different illustration.

Mr. SPEAKER. It does not say the illustration refers to that portion at all. However, for the moment I am not able to decide absolutely that it is out of order, but I would like that point to be considered in dealing with the next amendment, if there is to be one. The question is on the amendment.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would not enter into the question of whether this amendment is in order, and I would not desire to take any advantage of the point if Mr. Speaker should decide that the amendment was out of order. I feel, however, that we are not called upon at the present moment to make any extended remarks in regard to the very important question to which the hon. gentleman has referred, the principle reason being that this is by no means the time for a discussion in the line on which the hon. gentleman has addressed the House. We are at the beginning of the session. It is a well established principle under constitutional government for an address to be presented to His Excellency in reply to the speech from the Throne, and while hon. gentlemen who may be sitting to the Speaker's left have an undoubted right to move any amendment they please, it is a well established custom of parliament that you do not attempt to discuss public questions generally, with a view of calling for a vote upon them before the House is placed in possession of the information which might be necessary for a consideration of the whole matter. I think the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is open to the suspicion that he is very much afraid that when the papers in connection with the Quebec bridge are brought down, he will find no cause for complaint against the government; and therefore he hastens to find fault now, before the report of the commission of inquiry is brought down, and before the House has a single document before it.

The hon. gentleman found it extraordinary that when he put the question to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister—were these plans approved by the Governor in Council ?—my right hon. friend said : Well, I cannot say offhand, but I presume the law was complied with. My hon. friend made merry over it. He said : The Prime Minister does not know and the ministers around him do not know. The hon. gentleman might ask a question about five hundred orders in council which no minister could answer at the moment. If the hon. gentleman had been in earnest in his desire to obtain information of that nature, he would have put a notice on the paper and allowed of an opportunity to make an investigation. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) put a passing question to my right hon. friend—fair enough in its way—I do not complain of it—whether these plans had been approved of, and my right hon. friend gave an answer, but my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I presume, if he attached importance to it, would have given notice of his question. He asked the question, legitimately enough, and then passed on to other things, but the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) dwells upon it as evidence of gross neglect on the part of the Prime Minister that he could not answer a question offhand as to one of five hundred orders in council which may have been passed since the date of the contract referred to. What are the facts of the case ? Years ago it was recognized that it was necessary to have a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec. A company was incorporated for the construction of the bridge. My hon. friend treats that company as being from the beginning a company of straw ; he has made merry at its expense, he has treated it as a bankrupt company and has said everything that is bad of it. That company is composed of some of the most respectable citizens of Quebec and I venture to say that my hon. friend would not go down to the city of Quebec and make the statements concerning the gentlemen composing that company which he has rashly made on the floor of this House to-day. The government of the province of Quebec——

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. BARKER. Is he arguing that these gentlemen in Quebec are responsible for that bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am arguing that they are responsible for everything concerning the company of which they are the directors, and when the hon. gentleman sneers and jeers at that company and treats them as a bankrupt and worthless company, I say he is attacking the standing, the reputation and the character of some of the most reputable men in the city of Quebec. If my memory serves me—and I think I will be excused if I do not go into the matter very fully—we have not the details, we have not the information at this moment when we are expected to discuss the question,—but speaking very hurriedly and without looking at the books, my recollection is that the province of Quebec contributed $250,000 towards that bridge. That does not indicate that they regarded the company as being worthless, or as being composed of men of straw. The city of Quebec contributed $300,000 in cash and placed it in the hands of the company to assist in the construction of the bridge. Surely that does not indicate that they regarded that company as being a worthless company. The parliament of Canada, without a division, agreed to contribute $1,000,000, in cash towards the construction of that bridge. Again I am speaking from memory, but my recollection is that not a voice was raised in this House against the passing of the Act to give that company $1,000,000. Yet to-day the hon. gentleman treats this company as a bankrupt, worthless concern and does everything within his power to condemn it and make it appear ridiculous in the eyes of the country.

This great enterprise was undertaken by these gentlemen in the city of Quebec from high-minded and patriotic motives. They desired to advance the interests of their city and of their province. They were men of high standing; some of them were men of large means, and surely it is not fair to treat these men as being animated by any other purpose than that of carrying on a great public work which was going to be a benefit to the city of Quebec, to the province of Quebec and to the Dominion at large. Before they began work they had the aid of the city of Quebec, they had their private capital, whatever it may have been, they had the aid which the government of the province of Quebec had given them and they had the grant of this government—$1,000,000—out of which we have actually paid something less than $400,000. I submit that this is an indication that this was not a worthless and bankrupt company. The company was a company of serious, high-minded men animated by the patriotic motive of doing something for the good of the city, the province of Quebec and the country at large. Like other companies they found that the obligations laid upon them were more than they were able to meet. They found that the enterprise was a costly one, as the work went on they found difficulty and they came to this government for further aid. The government agreed to come to their aid. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) says that when we granted that guarantee it was the last thing that any sensible man would vote for. Every man in this House voted for it. The one member who has the right to qualify that statement is the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) who made a speech in which he questioned the wisdom of the course that the government was taking, but even he did not record his vote against it and the records of parliament show that this vote was carried through this House without any division. I submit that it is not fair and decent treatment, after what has happened to come in at this eleventh hour and say: No sensible man would vote for it. If our foresight were as great as our hind sight, a great many things that we have done would be left undone. But when the government brought forward that scheme for guaranteeing the Quebec bridge bonds it was a scheme which, with the exception of a single hon. member, commended itself to the judgment of the House. The hon. gentleman says that it was rushed through the House. The records will show that there was no objection on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite in point of time. The hon gentleman did not ask that the matter be held over; it was a large and important question and they would have had the right to a reasonable delay, but the fact is that so far as the records show the hon. gentlemen conveyed the impression that they wanted to help the Quebec bridge and they allowed the matter to pass with only the little remonstrance that came from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. We did not bring that guarantee before the House without some good reason. Long years ago estimates were made by competent railway men which went to show that the earning power of the bridge would probably be sufficient to pay the interest on its cost, and in later years we had further estimates made. The hon. gentleman has referred to Mr. Schreiber; Mr. Schreiber would not do this and Mr. Schreiber would not do that. Mr. Schreiber made a report—it was either made by Mr. Schreiber or was confirmed by him—to show the volume of traffic that would pass over that bridge and the effect of the report was that, taking the probable volume of traffic and making a fair and ordinary charge for every car which passed over the bridge, the interest on the cost of the undertaking would be earned and the government would be protected absolutely against loss. We had the reports of railway experts and either Mr. Schreiber made a report himself, or, at all events, it was made by the Railway Department of which he was the chief engineer.

The hon. gentleman said that no engineer would approve of these plans. If we were discussing this question with the proper information before us, if due notice had been given of a motion in this House, and if the papers had been brought down, we would be able to go into all the details of this matter, but in so far as I had any knowledge of the transaction in connection with the Quebec bridge nothing was ever done in reference to the engineering of the bridge that was not done with the full approval of the chief engineer of the Railway Department. My hon. friend has asked me: Was this or that plan approved by the Governor in Council. I could not tell him without looking at the records, and I will have to answer him as my right hon. friend did when he said that he presumed the law was complied with, but I know that at every step in the matter in connection with the bridge Mr. Schreiber, as chief engineer of the Railway Department, was consulted, and I am satisfied that when the report of the inquiry comes in and when other information is brought before the House, it will be shown that in so far as engineering matters were concerned no step was taken at any time by this government without the full and cordial approval of Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals. I do not wish to continue the discussion of the question now. The hon. gentleman has not given the House any information, the hon. gentleman confesses that he has not the information, he says that he has heard this and read that, but he does not know whether it is true or not. Nevertheless, he undertakes to discuss it. Surely my hon. friend will see that in these matters it is not enough to have read something in the newspapers, but in all fairness when we are asked for reasons he should make his motion in this House so that we would have the information before us and, in the absence of that information, for the hon. gentleman to get up and make the attack that he has made to-day upon the Quebec Bridge Company and all connected with it, I say is not fair and not reasonable and the hon. gentleman's speech in that respect will find no response in the city or province of Quebec, or in the mind of any fair minded man in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). At this stage of the debate I would not feel justified in taking up a great deal of the time of the House, but I must say that I was happy to second the resolution of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), and I rise as a member representing a constituency in the province of Quebec to say that the resolution has my very hearty approval, that I approve it in every part, and that I am perfectly certain, contrary to what has just fallen from the lips of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), that a very large majority of the people of the province of Quebec and of the city of Quebec, of whatever political complexion, will approve of our bringing this matter early to the attention of the House, and will approve of the spirit and terms of this resolution. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) says that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is the workman of the eleventh hour. We know, Sir, that the workman of the eleventh hour was rewarded just as the workman of the first hour was. In this instance the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has rendered an important service to the House and to the country and to our own province by calling early attention to this matter. What are these papers that will be brought down and that will throw any additional light upon what my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) has stated, upon his clear statement of facts, so far as we know them, without any doubt, at the present moment? There are no papers that will do that. We will no doubt get a report in due time, and a very expensive report, from some engineers, men who will couch in technical terms a report of the cause of this dreadful calamity, which many of us will not be able to understand, but what we do know now is that that bridge has been destroyed and that a large number of lives have been uselessly sacrificed through the want of care, the negligence, the inattention of the government in this matter. What we want to guard against, what we must guard against, is a repetition of what has too often happened since I have had the honour of a seat in this House: At the end of a session, when it is impossible for the House to take up with any care an important vote of money, we are called upon to either refuse our adhesion to the vote or else to pass it, as in the instance referred to by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), in the last hours of the session, without any explanation, without any discussion and without those data which are absolutely necessary in order to make efficient legislation on a matter of this importance. I was glad, for two reasons, that this resolution was moved by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). It has too often been said in the province of Quebec that this great public work was not countenanced by members of our party from other provinces. This resolution lays down the principle which was enunciated long before 1896 by the Conservative party that it looked with favour upon this enterprise, that it considered it as a national work and was anxious to support that enterprise by all the means in its power. There will be an end of those remarks that have too often been circulated in our province. Secondly, it sets forth the neglect, the carelessness, the unbusinesslike manner in which this work has been so far carried out, and it will, I trust, have the effect of preventing any recurrence of this unbusinesslike way of carrying out public works, at least in respect to this enterprise. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has said that the member for Hamilton treated the members of the Quebec Bridge Company as men of straw. The hon. member for Hamilton never uttered any such remark. We all know that there are very few gentlemen of the city of Quebec really interested in this enterprise. There are some gentlemen whose names are excellent and who have no doubt contributed their small quota to the paid-up capital of this company; but, as a matter of fact, I assert that this company in reality is composed of four or five men at the utmost who have contributed an extremely small sum of money to the capital stock of this company, but who have taken hold of that enterprise with the most unpatriotic motives, motives of personal gain and private interest, and by furthering their own views, their own motives and their own aims, have effectively been the cause of the very grave disaster which has befallen the enterprise and which will cause a great loss of money to this country, and will retard quite unduly and unnecessarily the completion of what was to be, not only a national work, but a work of very particular importance to the province and city of Quebec. I submit that a work which was to cost anywhere in the vicinity of $10,000,000 should never have been undertaken by a private company. There is no doubt that in the beginning, long before 1903, the work was started by a company. It received encouragement from the city of Quebec and from the province of Quebec. We ourselves readily voted at the time a subsidy in support of that company, but at that time, as members who were here then will remember, we were given the assurance time and time again by the Minister of Finance that this company would itself contribute a very much larger amount than it really did to the carrying on of this work.

Mr. FIELDING. No; I dissent from that

Mr. MONK. But my hon. friend has a way of interpreting the reports of 'Hansard' to which I cannot absolutely give my adhesion. When my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) referred to the debate in this House in 1903, which took place a few hours before prorogation, and says that I was the only one who on that occasion opposed this engaging of the responsibility of the country for such a large amount, he was mistaken, and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. FIELDING. Who else dissented?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend on my right, the member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), expressed exactly the same views, and there are other members, if my hon. friend will refer to the debate, who followed the same course. The debate has almost a prophetic character. It was not necessary to be a seer or a prophet to see what was going to happen when these arrangements were made, and it was in our power only to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance and the government to the extreme danger of that undertaking, as we were entering into it. My hon. friend will find that Mr. Clancy, the leader of the opposition and other members, although the session was almost closed, said enough to intimate to the government that although it was impossible at that time to oppose the assistance being given to the company, because then conditions had changed, the Transcontinental Railway had been decided on, and this work had to be constructed and would form part of the Transcontinental Railway itself, they disapproved of the government's action. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) admitted it himself in the speech he made on that occasion; and when asked, as he was, why, since it was a national work which we would have to assume sooner or later, which we must within three years take over or pay for, we did not at that time assume the responsibility of the work, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will see what an uncertain and unsatisfactory answer he gave.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will allow me, I have been looking over the record and I see that several questions were asked. One hon. gentleman did express his dissent, but I was speaking from the record that showed that no vote was taken. I had that in mind.

Mr. MONK. It is childish, Mr. Speaker. It resembles the speech which my hon. friend made on the address the other day when, instead of taking up seriously as Minister of Finance the present financial stringency and showing what steps the government has taken, if it had taken any, to meet that very difficult situation, he entertained us during half an hour on the doings of John Doe in the province of New Brunswick. An argument such as my hon. friend has made cannot be made seriously to any man who takes the trouble to look at the debate which took place on the 22nd of October, 1903. My hon. friend says that no vote was taken. There is enough time lost in this House, Mr. Speaker, without our calling for a vote under the circumstances shown by that debate. Now, what is the position? During the ten or twelve years that I have been in this House I have observed my hon. friend very closely. Even to-day he defends the government very lamely, but if hon. gentlemen will take up the record of 'Hansard' for that 22nd of October, 1903, they will see that my hon. friend very reluctantly brought those resolutions to the notice of the House. It is impossible to observe the manner of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the House and not to distinguish easily between those cases in which he is really enthusiastic and satisfied with his case and the speech he delivered when the House was in committee in 1903 on the resolutions guaranteeing those bonds. What was the reason? Sir, if we take up the record of that session we find some very strange things. It is not necessary to have the wisdom of a Nestor in order to read between the lines and see what took place in regard to the Quebec bridge during that year. In the very inception of the summer we had a Bill, which was sanctioned on the 10th of July, 1903, respecting the Quebec Bridge Company. The company at that time, as my hon. friend from Hamilton has truthfully stated, was absolutely bankrupt; there is no doubt about it. This is no reflection on Mr. Price, of Quebec, or any of the other gentlemen who were connected with the company. But the company came here slyly, and with the assistance of the then Minister of Justice, had its charter amended. At that time it had received $300,000 from the city of Quebec, a quarter of a million from the provincial government, and nearly $400,000 from the Dominion government, and it had a capital of $200,000, with $65,000 paid up. My hon. friend from Hamilton concedes that that money was paid up. I do not believe it was. It is my belief that there was never any money paid up of the capital stock of the Quebec Bridge Company, and until those papers which are so important, which are going to change the situation completely from what we have had to-day from my hon. friend from Hamilton are brought down, I will continue asserting that there never was any stock paid up in that company. Gentlemen of undoubtedly respectability lent their names——

Mr. GEORGE PARENT. I for one can tell the hon. gentleman that I paid for stock in the company, the full amount of the shares.

Mr. MONK. Well, it was probably a present from the hon. gentleman's father. At any rate, there have been time and again questions asked in this House and in the Senate, and the answers to those questions have always been evasive. Under these circumstances I shall be gratified to know that in reality some money was actually paid in cash for that stock. That was the situation in the summer of 1903. The company had received all this money; it had spent it all. It owed over $700,000, and what assets had it? A couple of piers, if they were completed then, on each side of the river; that is all. The company came here and secured a statute, which was sanctioned on the 10th of July, 1903, giving it very extensive powers—a kind of all-embracing capacity for everything that could by the greatest stretch of the imagination be connected with it. It was given power to generate and distribute electric energy, to build tramways almost everywhere to construct ferries, to acquire patents, to build wharfs, docks, telephone and telegraph lines, to own and control terminal lines and to make arrangements with all the railways coming into the city of Quebec. In fact, the effect of the legislation then obtained was to give this company the right to control all the approaches to the bridge and from the bridge into the city of Quebec—the approach from the north end to the Canadian Pacific Railway and from the south end to the Intercolonial and the Grand Trunk, and the approach from the bridge itself, which is some distance outside of the city of Quebec, down to the centre of the city. From a bridge company that was designed to build a bridge at Quebec and nothing else, it became a company having for its object to exploit the whole neighbourhood. I have no doubt that about twenty years ago when the company was formed, and these gentlemen became connected with it, it was regarded as a company that was only to bridge the river at Quebec. But in 1903 it became a necessary link in the transcontinental railway system, and this legislation was passed evidently to compass all the ends which could be brought within the purview of the company. At that time, it must not be forgotten, Mr. Parent was Prime Minister of Quebec, mayor of the city and president of the bridge company.

I do not wish to malign Mr. Parent. He is a man with qualities, a man of business, and not long ago he was knifed by a portion of his party in the province of Quebec. In that respect he has my full sympathy. After the Quebec Bridge Company had obtained these powers and had obtained an extension of ten years for the building of the bridge, after the stockholders had paid up this $65,000 of stock—if it ever was paid—what happened? At that time, in July, 1903, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) also, and the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick), very well indeed knew that this company was absolutely incapable of prosecuting the enterprise. They knew that parliament would have to be called on to vote a very substantial assistance; but these gentlemen were silent altogether until the late autumn, in the session's last hours, when parliament was about to be prorogued. This was, in my experience of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), his hour of temptation and struggle. I do not think that my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has been absolutely fair to the minister, because I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) did make a battle against the absurd, ridiculous and absolutely indefensible scheme which was finally adopted. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) baulks sometimes. He balked on that Northwest question, concerning which he asked the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) a few days ago if he had not expressed his opinion in the Northwest.

Mr. FIELDING. Did my hon. friend never balk?

Mr. MONK. I did, I admit, but I have not the faculty of afterwards, on being circled and coaxed, negotiating the obstacle. In this instance my hon. friend did not display that gracefulness in negotiating the obstacle which I have seen him show on certain other occasions. We need only refer to his speech, when he defended these resolutions in committee, just before prorogation—and you need not read between the lines—to see that he had struggled against this absurd and ridiculous system, and had finally given way, because, in the dying hours of the session, he placed the scheme before the House and said practically: 'There it is; I have given way; and I think you had better give way also in order that we may be able to prorogue the House.'

I do not wish to unduly detain the House, but this is a matter upon which I think the resolution of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is most timely. If we are not careful, if we do not take up seriously this question, we shall see repeated our experience of 1903. At the very end of the session, we shall see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) coming down with his scheme and saying to us: Now, are you going to refuse assistance to this undertaking or are you ready to give it, and let us prorogue the House? I want to guard against that. I have given a notice of motion which calls for information in connection with this enterprise, and for my part I shall not give my consent to any continuance of this folly—because that is what it really was—unless we undertake that work and prosecute it as business men who have at heart the interests of the country and not the advancement of the fortunes of a few individuals.

What characterized that scheme? The company had no assets. We have had no accounting of how these vast sums which were given the company were expended. There was no accountability, no responsibility, and there is none to-day. We stipulated, it is true, that the plans should be subject to the approval of the government. That is what we do whenever we grant a subsidy, but were those plans ever submitted for approval to men really competent? Ordinary engineers are not competent to examine the plans of such a vast and unprecedented structure. What really was done, I have no doubt, is that the plans were passed the department, as a matter of course, without careful examination, without any written report. Will the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) say when the engineers of the department found themselves confronted with the plans for the execution of a work, of a kind the equal to which is not to be found in the past—will the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) say that the government engineers gave the plans that careful examination which such an immense enterprise exacted? Was there any written report to the government in detail? Did this government, when it was pledging the credit of the country to the payment of these immense sums for the construction of this bridge work, take the trouble to consult an expert, a specialist? We pay $25,000 and $30,000 to lawyers to attend commissions; we give immense sums to commissioners who are called upon to investigate. Would it have been such an extraordinary measure of precaution for the government to have spent $2,000 or $3,000 or even $4,000 in order to have these plans passed upon by really competent men, men in the old country who are skilled in such construction? Nothing of that kind was done. We parted also with the control and supervision of the work. It was surely most important that we should know, when we were paying $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 for this structure, that it was being constructed according to the plans and specifications? But there was nothing of the sort. I can scarcely credit the rumour to which my hon. friend refers, namely, that an order in council was passed naming an engineer to supervise the work and that the order was subsequently cancelled. But of one thing there can be no doubt, and that is there was no supervision.

Neither was there any examination of the past accounts of the company. What would have happened had this great disaster not occurred? There is not a business man or any man of common sense, who will look at the charter of that company, as it was adopted in July, 1903, who can fail to arrive at the conclusion that if the bridge had been safely built, we would have to pay, on taking possession of it, millions of indemnity over and above the amount subscribed by the government. All these side undertakings were authorized by parliament. The company would have to be indemnified for the terminals it had built and the arrangements it had made in that connection. I know that there is a stipulation in the deed of agreement that when the government took possession, it should indemnify the stockholders, by giving them ten per cent over and above the amount of their stock plus five per cent interest from the time the stockholders paid for their stock. But there is nothing in that agreement, I say, which would prevent that company from urging other claims. Moreover, it had the power in virtue of this agreement, of contracting any new obligations it wished to contract, with the consent of the government. But, outside that restriction which was in the deed, I say it was a pit of claims. We should have had to pay large indemnities even outside the amounts fixed in the deed of agreement as to guarantees. And the ultimate effect was to have the work carried on by an irresponsible company. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was quite right in saying that, because there was nothing to ensure the company's responsibility. I say we would have been obliged to pay at least twice the amount which the bridge would have cost normally if the work had been supervised and carried on by the government itself.

Now, just to give an instance of the enormous waste into which this system had led us, I do not think I am mistaken when I say that the contractors for the substructure were paid by stock, with a discount of 40 per cent. And I do not think I am mistaken when I say, that, ultimately, when the guarantee of the government was given these contractors, or somebody, profited to the extent of the whole of that discount. It became their profit—a profit of 40 per cent on $300,000. When the government guarantee came in, there was an upleap of this security of 40 per cent which benefited somebody—I suppose the contractors who were the holders. When we made the agreement on the 19th of October, 1903 it was provided that before the guarantee was entered into the company would have to subscribe $200,000 of new stock and pay it up. The object of that obligation placed upon the shareholders was to cover the discount on the bonds. That discount amounted to, if I am not mistaken, to over $188,000 which went into the hands of somebody. That was a sheer loss of money under the circumstances, because, if we had undertaken the work ourselves there would not have been that discount. But the object of obliging the company to pay up $200,000 more worth of stock was to cover this discount. Was that stock paid up ? And, if it was not paid up, where did the amount of over $188,000 come from to cover that discount ? We must have full and detailed information on that point. But I say that, at the present moment, I have very grave doubt indeed as to whether that stock was really subscribed and paid up. And I will await the statement to that effect from the right hon. the Prime Minister before I will believe it. Because, the moment it was conceived in the province of Quebec, and in that little restricted group who were to benefit by this singular and unbusiness-like way of carrying on that enterprise—the moment it was known that the transcontinental was going to be built, that it would require this bridge and this link, a dead set was made upon the government and upon the treasury of the country in order to enrich that group of individuals, to the injury of the country and of the enterprise.

Now, Sir, we recognize that the Quebec bridge is a national undertaking. Nothing that has fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) can be interpreted otherwise than in the sense that we have always recognized, and particularly recognize now, that this work is a national undertaking ; that we must carry it on. But I say also that it is the duty of parliament under the circumstances, in view of this great disaster that has supervened, to be fully and thoroughly informed as to the affairs of the company. We will not shirk our duty ; we will carry it out. We will terminate that enterprise, but I for one will not give my adhesion in the future to any scheme which places third parties between the government, or the country, and the enterprise. The work will have to be done under our own supervision. It will have cost us dear ; because I have no doubt that, whatever may be the report, the company itself has no resources. I am told that the bridge company which has undertaken this work is not itself ready or capable of meeting this immense loss. But I have no certainty as to that. At any rate, there is not a man in this House who doubts that we shall have to pay a much more considerable amount than we undertook to pay in 1903, in order that this work may be finished. In the province of Quebec we are peculiarly situated. We have special conditions, special privileges ; and, to my mind, that very fact imposes upon us special duties. Here is a great national work. It is situated near the old city of Quebec. It is destined to benefit the whole country, but, no doubt we are all glad that it should benefit that section of the country especially. But, I say, it is our duty, under these circumstances, in view of these very special facts, that the work should be carried on honestly, with due regard to proper principles of government, with economy, and in a way which will meet absolutely the approval of the House and the country.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker : It is to be regretted that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), who as he himself said, is sometimes a balker did not balk on this occasion rather than give his countenance to an attempt to make political capital out of a great national calamity. The destruction of the Quebec bridge is a national calamity—the hon. gentleman himself says so, and so does everybody else. I venture to assert that if that calamity had not befallen, this motion in amendment would never have been placed in your hands. The gist of the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is simply a censure of the government for having dealt with the Quebec Bridge Company instead of undertaking to build the bridge itself. I followed the hon. gentleman's speech pretty closely, and I think I am not mistaken in saying that the only fault he, at this moment, lays at the door of the government is that the government itself did not construct the bridge but endorsed the bonds of the Quebec Bridge Company and left the work in its hands. If this was a wrong policy in 1903 that was the time to attack it; if it was good policy then it has not become bad policy since. The session of 1904 passed and we heard no criticism against the government on this score. The session of 1905 passed and no censure of the government was proposed on this score. The session of 1906 passed and at this session also we heard not a word of censure against the government on this account. The session of 1906-7 passed in the same way. It is only now, at the beginning of the session of 1907-8, that, for the first time, it is proposed that the government shall be censured for this mode of constructing the bridge. And why? Simply because in the meantime there has been a great calamity which has destroyed life and has been the cause of the loss of much money and much valuable time.

Mr. MONK. It has brought out the fact that there was no supervision or careful examination of the plans.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The very words the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) now uses are the strongest condemnation of his attitude. How does he know that there was no proper supervision of the plans? A commission has been appointed to investigate this matter and tell us where the blame lies. The fault may have been in the plans; it may have been in the supervision; it may have been in something else. But, certainly, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has no information and will not know the facts until the report of that commission is before us. Still, the hon. gentleman is not above censuring the government though he does not know the facts and though the facts are at this minute being investigated. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the gist of the offence which is charged against the government is that they did not carry on this work as a government work, but entrusted it to a company. I am surprised that my hon. friend should have spoken as he did of that company, that he should have cast slurs upon it, that he should have questioned its motives and its honesty. The hon. gentleman is aware, or he ought to be aware, that some of the directors of that company are men whose characters are above reproach; that they are some of the best men, not only in the city of Quebec, but in the whole country. I have not all the names at my disposal at this moment, but I have several in mind. First of all there is Mr. Parent, the chairman. Mr. Parent is a gentleman of undoubted business ability, of undoubted integrity. He has been in the limelight for many years; he has been accused, but he has come out triumphantly out of every accusation brought against him. Next to Mr. Parent in influence perhaps is the Hon. John Sharples, a member of the Legislative Council of Quebec, one of the ablest businessmen in that city, whose family has been connected for generations with the lumber trade. Moreover, the hon. gentleman should not forget that Mr. Sharples is not a member of the party to which I belong, but a member of his own party. Another name is that of Mr. Gaspard Lemoine. He also is one of the ablest men in the city, and enjoys the highest reputation for honesty; his character is above reproach. Again, if I may say so to my hon. friend, if it be any certificate of character, Mr. Lemoine also belongs to the Conservative party. Another name is that of Mr. H. N. Price. He also is a well known business man of the city of Quebec, and if the fact will remove any of the objections my hon. friend has to the board, I may mention that Mr. Price is also a member of the Conservative party. Another one of the directors was Mr. Dobell, a former member of this House and of this government, a most respected gentleman, whose character was above reproach. Another director was Mr. Audette, head of the firm of Thibaudeau Bros., and one of the most respected men in the city of Quebec. Now, Sir, would the hon. gentleman dare to say that these gentlemen I have mentioned, Mr. Parent, Mr. Audette, Mr. Price, Mr. Lemoine, and Mr. Sharples, would be guilty of any such offences as he has mentioned? Does he believe that these gentlemen, whose business reputation is of the very highest, would have been guilty, as he said in his too hasty and inflammatory remarks, of attempting to plunder the treasury in the summer of 1903 when it became known that the Grand Trunk Pacific was to be constructed? Sir, such language is intolerable in this House; such language is not worthy the hon. gentleman, it is beneath his dignity. He ought not to have spoken in that way of men who, if I may say so, are his equals in every respect.

Mr. BERGERON. Were these gentlemen, whose names have been mentioned, original directors of the company? Could the hon. gentleman say when they were appointed to that position?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as my information goes, these gentlemen have been connected with the scheme, I will not say from its inception, but for ten years at least, I think they were connected with the company in 1899. I speak under correction, but I am sure my information will be found absolutely correct. Now we might have adopted the plan suggested by the hon. gentleman and made this a government work. But though we might have done so, I am sure that everybody at that time in this House, everybody on these benches at all events, believed that the work was confided to gentlemen who were absolutely reliable, and that these gentlemen who were then active directors of the company would properly and honestly expend every cent of that money. I have no reason to believe the contrary. The hon. gentleman has made a speech which he should have made upon another motion. He wants to have an investigation held upon the manner in which the bridge was constructed. I have no opinion to express upon that question. But I have only to say that the observations he made would come more properly on another occasion. I must say that the hon. gentleman has spoken on this occasion with a levity which greatly surprised me. He stated that the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was justified because lives had been lost through the want of care, through the negligence of the government. Why, Sir, what warrant had the hon. gentleman to speak in that way?

Mr. MONK. I base that allegation on the fact that the government failed in its supervision.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What evidence has the hon. gentleman on which to make that statement? The fact is that immediately after this fatal accident took place, the first thing we did was to appoint a commission to investigate this very fact.

Mr. MONK. After.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Of course after; how could it be before? The responsibility for this accident rests somewhere. It may rest upon the government, and we will see that in due time. It may rest upon the plans, as being faulty and defective; it may rest upon the supervision. But the responsibility rests somewhere, and at the present time a commission of competent engineers, competent men whose efficiency has not been questioned, is engaged in finding out where the responsibility rests.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the right hon. gentleman inform the House just what supervision there was on the part of the government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I believe there was ample supervision. The hon. gentleman wants to make a point that the government had no engineer there. I do not know, I cannot say.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether there was one or not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can say that Mr. Hoare was the engineer appointed by the Quebec Bridge Company. The Phœnix Bridge Company had one or two engineers on the spot also, whose business it was to supervise from day to day the work of construction. I do not know what more supervision could be had even if there had been no engineer there on the part of the government. The Phœnix Bridge Company, with two or three engineers on the spot, had every interest to see that the work was properly done, and so far as I know, the work of construction was very well done by the company; that is so far as the material was concerned. Then the engineer of the Quebec Bridge Company, Mr. Hoare, was a competent man. All these engineers were there from day to day to see that the work was properly done. The hon. gentleman said he was not sure whether the plans had been approved. Why, Sir, neither any member of this government, nor the hon. gentleman himself, had he been a member of the government, could pass any opinion upon a plan when presented to him. What can you do in a matter of this kind? The hon. gentleman stated very properly that an ordinary engineer, a railway engineer, would hardly be able to pass upon plans prepared for a bridge of such magnitude. This was a special work. Well, we do know that every one of these plans had been approved by Mr. Cooper, who, as the hon. gentleman said himself, is a man of recognized ability and an authority upon bridge construction. It will be shown later on, that the plans prepared by the engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company had been submitted to Mr. Cooper and approved by him. Now it will be shown whether or not the engineers made a mistake.

Mr. HAGGART. Were the plans drawn up by Mr. Cooper?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My information is that they were not drawn up by Mr. Cooper, but by Mr. Szlapka, and were afterwards submitted to Mr. Cooper and confirmed by him. That is the information I have, but, of course, as to that I speak by hearsay; I do not know, but we will know presently when we receive the report of the commission. That is all I have to say on this occasion as to these matters. It seems to me that nothing could be more unfair, nothing could be more unjust——

Mr. MONK. May I ask my right hon. friend if Mr. Cooper was acting for the government or for the bridge company?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Cooper, as I understand it, was acting for all parties. He had been the recognized authority, and he was certainly acting for the Phœnix Bridge Company and also for the Quebec Bridge Company. That is all the information I have on this subject at the present moment. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), a moment ago, taunted me because I did not answer a certain question at the moment when it was asked of me by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). Does he expect me to carry in my mind all the orders in council that I have ever signed? It is simply absurd, and I repeat what I said a moment ago, that nothing could be more unfair or unjust than the attempt which has been made to cast a slur upon the government when the hon. gentleman or no one else knows anything in particular about this case.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, a new doctrine has been laid down in this House by the Hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who have just spoken, and that is that an item which is mentioned in the King's speech, and in which attention is drawn to some particular subject, is not a fitting question for discussion because a royal commission has been appointed to inquire into it. That certainly is a new doctrine. The King's speech draws attention to the catastrophe that happened in Quebec, to the fall of this bridge and to the loss of life that resulted. We are within our strict rights in discussing that matter to the fullest extent, and it is a new doctrine to place before this House that because the government appoints a commission we are not to discuss the subject until the commission pleases to report upon it. What has become of the doctrine of ministerial responsibility? Under the old rule laid down by the members of the present government when they were in opposition, the ministry, no matter whether they had knowledge of it or not, were responsible if an accident happened. I had the charge laid often against me that because some official in my department, when I was Minister of Railways and Canals, had committed a wrong, had connived at a theft, or done something or other of that kind, the responsibility should be placed directly upon the minister who had in his employ such a person. Certainly that is the correct doctrine. The ministers are directly responsible, and upon them devolves the responsibility of showing how and why this catastrophe happened. When, in 1903, the right hon. Prime Minister brought down his scheme for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway the completion of the Quebec bridge became an absolute necessity. We were all favourable to it. We gave all the powers to the government that were necessary for the purpose of acquiring the bridge. The government, previously to the passing of the Act, had entered into an agreement, which was embodied in the Act of parliament, vesting in them the control and management of the bridge. They had, first of all, to approve of the contract, they had to place the bridge under the supervision of an engineer and the control and management of the bridge were vested by Act of parliament in the government of the country. What are the facts of the case ? As to the company, no imputation has been made as to the character of the individuals who compose it. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has been accused of casting such an imputation upon them and the right hon. gentleman asks : What has he to say about Mr. Sharples ? what has he to say about the late Mr. Dobell ? He has never made an attack upon any individual at all. What he stated was that a bankrupt company which could not go on and build the bridge came to this House, and in saying this he only used the words of the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), who stated so when he introduced the Bill. He stated that they were unable to go on and complete the undertaking and he was obliged to introduce this Bill to the House. What were the facts in reference to the bridge company ? They had $900,000 and they had $60,000 alleged to have been paid in as subscriptions for the capital stock of the company. The $900,000 was composed of contributions by the city of Quebec, the province of Quebec and the Dominion government. They sold their bonds or securities upon the undertaking, which realized sixty per cent of their value. There was owing to the contractors who were building the bridge, $700,000. The amount they had altogether realized was in the neighbourhood of $900,000, and the indebtedness of the company when they came to this government was $700,000. We agreed to guarantee bonds for the purpose of completing the bridge to the extent of nearly $7,000,000. On what condition ?—on the condition that the contract and plans should be approved by the government and that the control and management of the undertaking should be placed in the hands of the government from the day of the passage of the Act. It is true the company had a subsidiary interest in it under the agreement which was that after a certain amount was paid in the form of interest the residue belonged to the company. It is not at all probable that this agreement would ever result in anything being payable to the company. Virtually the absolute control and ownership of the bridge passed with the Act of 1903 to the government of this country. One of the conditions was that the bonds which had realized sixty per cent were to be supplemented by a paid up capital of $200,000 for the purpose of making up the deficiency between the selling price and par value of the bonds. We have no means of knowing in what form that was done. Perhaps the contractor who was owed $700,000 for his work on the foundation of the bridge would be very glad to subscribe $200,000 for the purpose of getting in $500,000 clear. Is there any one in this House who believes that the company itself, being a bankrupt company, and there being no possibility at all of any amount of money being returned to it, paid out of its own pockets $200,000 in order to get $500,000 from the government of the country to pay some contractor ? Is there a possibility of it ? Does the right hon. gentleman himself believe anything of the kind ? The fact of the matter is that it enabled the contractor by subscribing to the capital stock, to obtain payment of the balance that was due him of $700,000 less $200,000 by entering into a scheme of that kind.

The effect of the agreement made with the government at the time was that the control and management of the affairs of the bridge was vested in the government owing to the advances made to the company. As to the ministerial responsibility in such cases, I have some recollection of arguments used by hon. gentlemen opposite and of inquiries that were made in reference to expenditures of that kind. I remember perfectly attacks that were made on us when we were on that side of the House upon such matters, in which it was stated that in the case of any expenditure by any official or any act by a company controlled by the government there was ministerial responsibility until the matter was explained. But now we are told that we are not to discuss the matter because it is the subject of a royal commission appointed to inquire into it. Why debate on any subject might be prevented in this House if the government appointed a royal commission to inquire into it. We are told that we are not to discuss the Quebec bridge catastrophe because a royal commission has been appointed, but we do know that the bridge fell from engineering faults in the design, as stated in the evidence given by Mr. Cooper. It is known anyway that it fell and we certainly have a right of inquiry in the subject. The matter is mentioned in the speech from the Throne and we certainly have the fullest right to discuss the subject.

What are the facts? This expenditure upon the Quebec bridge which was supposed to be, under the contract, in the neighbourhood of $6,900,000, plus the amount expended on the approaches to the bridge, was in the neighbourhood of about $1,700,000, and what position are we now in in reference to the ultimate construction of that bridge? Is the whole superstructure to be redesigned and erected of a more solid character by the government of this country? What are we to do with reference to it? The bridge which was supposed to cost the country seven or eight million dollars will cost in the end twelve or fourteen million dollars. This is one link in the National Transcontinental Railway which we were assured by the right hon. gentleman who leads the government would not cost the country over $13,000,000! The expenditure on the Quebec bridge alone will exceed the limit set by the Prime Minister as the cost of the entire Transcontinental railway. There should be some responsibility. I have not heard a statement from the government as to the methods of approval of the plans and specifications by the government engineers and the government. What reason have the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals given to the government? What is the report to the government in reference to the supervision upon that bridge? Surely the government engineers approved of the plans or the government would never have entered into the arrangement with the contractors. As this subject is mentioned in the speech from the Throne, this information should be given; this House should have the fullest information in the possession of the government upon this subject. Yet we are told that we must not discuss this matter because a commission has been appointed to inquire into the matter. It may be mentioned in the speech from the Throne, it may be a question of notoriety from end to end of the country, but this House is not to discuss the matter because there is a royal commission, which may take any time it likes to consider the matter and report. I never heard a greater absurdity stated in this House. We have a right of discussion before a royal commission reports upon the subject. The only tribunal whose existence would prevent discussion upon a subject of that kind is a commission appointed by this House to inquire into the matter. You cannot burk discussion and inquiry by appointing a royal commission to inquire into any catastrophe or any of the faults of the engineering or expenditure of the government. We are entitled to an explanation from the government with reference to the catastrophe at Quebec, nothing can stifle our right of inquiry, and for those reasons I support in the heartiest manner the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker).

Mr. BARKER. I would like to be permitted to correct some dates which I quoted. The agreement was dated on the 19th of October, the papers were laid on the table of this House the next day, October 20; on the 21st the government gave notice of a resolution on the subject; on the 22nd the Finance Minister moved the resolution on the subject and on the 22nd the Bill was passed through all the stages in this House.

Mr. LANCASTER. And when did the House prorogue?

Mr. BARKER. The House prorogued on the 24th, but the Bill had to go to the Senate in the meantime.

House divided on amendment, Mr. Barker.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Might I renew the question I put to the Finance Minister? One of the difficulties having been negotiated, perhaps I can get some information from him as to what we may expect.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It is only fair that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) should have the information. I had anticipated that the budget would come on before the Christmas adjournment. But our plans have been somewhat disarranged by the protracted nature of the debate, I think I had better say to my hon. friend that the budget will not come on before Christmas.

ORGANIZATION OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to say to the Prime Minister that, there being no difficulty now in the way of carrying on the business, the committees should be called together for organization at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To-morrow or the day after?

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, December 12, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains). moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 30) to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill is intended to amend section 196 of the Railway Act, and to repeal and also amend certain sections between section 196 and section 214. These sections make up that portion of the Act which concerns the exploration of lands to be acquired for purposes of railway construction. The principle involved in this Bill is the shortening of the interminable delays in these expropriation proceedings and the diminution of the enormous amount of costs incurred by the parties interested through the execution of the existing law. The Bill provides for the appointment of experts instead of arbitrators as at present. The experts are to be appointed in the same way as the arbitrators under the existing law, but difference comes in in the definition of the powers and duties of the experts to be appointed under this proposed amendment. The experts are appointed by a judge; and, within a delay fixed by the court, make their report as to the amount of indemnity to be given to the parties whose land is to be expropriated. The powers of the arbitrators are defined in section 201 of the Act. Under this Bill subsections A, B, C and D of that section are not substantially affected. But the change proposed to be made is in relation to the proceedings to establish the value of the expropriated property. Under the present system, the arbitrators appointed by the judge go through the country hearing evidence as to the value of the lands affected, sitting in one place one day and in another place another day, being served by a clerk, employing a shorthand writer and bringing witnesses before them. After a delay of six months or so, and after they have heard contradictory evidence as to the value of the land—a question of fact—they render judgment. This is sent to the clerk of the court and is subject to appeal in the ordinary form before the civil courts. The costs involved sometimes amount to $7,000, $8,000 or $9,000—and, when the proper time comes, I shall bring before the House some instances to prove the existence of grave abuses against interested parties under the existing law. This Bill provides that the powers of the experts shall be limited. They will have power to require the production of books, papers, plans, specifications, drawings and documents relating to the matter before them, and to enforce the attendance of the depositaries of those papers. They will have no right to take verbal or written evidence as to the value of the lands to be acquired; they judge for themselves the value of these lands, and make their report to the judge as already stated, in a determined delay. If the parties interested agree to the conclusions of that report, a judgment is rendered, and, this judgment being accepted by both parties there is no appeal. If after the report has been made to the court within the delay fixed, one of the parties will not accept the conclusion, he asks the judge to proceed in the ordinary way as in civil matters on trial. In that case the judge hears the case and renders judgment. After the judgment has been rendered and served on the parties, an appeal is allowed if the amount in question is over $600, as provided by the existing law, the appeal being to a superior court according to the laws of the province in which the case arises. This is a much simpler and more expeditious method than the present. Under the existing system, three arbitrators are appointed who hold two or three sittings a day for which they receive from $6 to $10 a sitting, who pay a clerk and a shorthand writer and whose proceedings involve the costs of bringing twenty or twenty-five witnesses or experts on each side, although two or three could specify the value of the land, which, it may be, is only an acre or two. In sections 6 to 14 the words 'arbitrator' or 'award' are replaced by the word 'expert' or a 'report of experts' in order to enable the law to be understood.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 31) to amend the Fisheries Act.—Mr. Sinclair.

QUESTIONS.

THE BOYLE CONCESSION.

Mr. AMES asked:

Has the Dawson legislature memorialized the government of Canada regarding what is known as the Boyle concession? If so, what action has been taken in regard to the same?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). No reply from Dawson has yet been received.

TUNNEL TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked:

Has the Hon. the Minister of Finance done anything, if so, what, to obtain the information referred to in reply to a question in the House of Commons on the 11th day of April last as follows, and also the nature of the information obtained, if any?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We already have considerable information on the subject. Whatever further information be necessary in order that we may be fully informed as to the approximate cost of the tunnel or bridge should be obtained, and efforts will be made, so far as our engineers are available, the coming season to obtain a report. I shall do my utmost to get such information at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Through the engineers of the department or special experts?

Mr. FIELDING. I think we have sufficient engineering skill in the various departments, but if the services of our engineers are not available undoubtedly we shall have to obtain expert opinion outside.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The hon. member has moved for a return which will probably cover this question. A report is being made, and will be presented to the House.

Lease calls for construction of cold storage building within one year, from date of lease and stating provisions with respect to the shipping of freight on Intercolonial Railway.

LAND GRANTS TO SOUTH AFRICAN VETERANS.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked :

What steps have been taken by the government to carry into effect the resolution passed by this House on December 10, 1906, to set apart grants of Dominion lands for those residents of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, who took part in the South African war, 1899-1902?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). No piano has been purchased for the rooms of the Speakers of the Senate or the House Commons. A piano has been rented sessionally for use in said rooms, as follows : 1904-5, Orme & Son, $10 per month; 1905-6, C. W. Lindsay, $5 per month ; 1906-7, C. W. LOAN OF AUGUST 17, 1907.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. The grants and allowances payable under the British North America Act, 1907, are due on the 1st January and 1st July in each year ; but, in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the annual sums payable in lieu of debt and in lieu of public lands under the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts are still payable on the 1st September and 1st March in each year, inasmuch as the British North America Act, 1907, does not affect these allowances.
2. Yes.
3. No sums are now owing.

FRENCH TREATY AND MOST FAVOURED NATION TREATIES.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

To what countries, by virtue of the most favoured nation treaties, will Canada be obliged to extend the concessions made to France in the treaty now before the House for ratification?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). For reasons stated yesterday, I would rather not give the list of the countries, but of course the treaty will apply to those countries which are recognized as favoured nation countries.

Mr. FOSTER. Any special objection to giving the list ?

Mr. FIELDING. I gave the list the previous session, and it is possible that some of those treaties expire from time to time.

It is a matter of imperial concern, but I will ask for the latest up-to-date list. I do not care to commit myself to the list until I get the information. I think probably the information already before the House will be found to be substantially correct. Of course, the information will have to be given when we proceed with the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly before we separate?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, before we separate, and we will possibly be able to proceed with it. As to that I am not quite sure. But at all events the information will be available.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AMENDMENT.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill (No. 2) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Lancaster.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) asked me to allow this Bill to stand until Monday. I am quite willing that it shall stand.

Order allowed to stand.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. LANCASTER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 3) to amend the Railway Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, this matter is one that is in no sense new to this House and if it were not for the, I may say, extraordinary position taken by the Senate in regard to this Bill last session, I would feel that it was out of place to speak at any length upon the subject, but, in view of the position taken, I think that perhaps it is my duty to—at a little length, discuss the matter in this House. The matter sought to be remedied by this Bill is a long-standing evil in the country, it is so admitted by every hon. gentleman in this House and it is so admitted by every senator who passed upon the Bill last session. The matter has been dealt with by this parliament at every session since the last general election. In the year 1905 a Bill was introduced dealing with the remedy that is sought to be accomplished by this Bill now before the House. The Bill was not in the same language as the one now before the House but the subject matter dealt with was the same although a remedy of a somewhat different kind was proposed. It was discussed here and it went to the Railway Committee of this House. It was dealt with day after day at that session by the Railway Committee, thoroughly discussed, arguments heard pro and con, all that the railways could say against the Bill when they were opposing it vigorously was said and at last the House concluded, the suggestion following of the then Minister of Justice, the present Chief Justice of the Dominion of Canada in the Supreme Court, that the remedy that was proposed by me at that time was not the proper remedy although the evil was well known to every member of the House to exist. That Bill proposed that every level crossing in every thickly peopled portion of the cities, towns and villages of this country should be protected by a watchman to warn people of approaching trains. It was said that that was not the proper protection, that there might be other protection that might be equally good and gates as well as watchmen were substituted. At the next session of parliament I again brought in a Bill and to show that I was trying to meet the views of those who differed from me I re-drew the section so as to provide that they should be protected by watchmen or gates. That Bill went to the Railway Committee, it was dealt with again, one might almost say ad nauseam to such an extent was the opposition made by the railways and so much time, in my humble opinion, did they take unnecessarily in trying to make black appear white and in endeavouring to convince the representatives of the people of this country that there was no harm in them converting, as some of the newspapers say, level crossings, in some parts of the country, into a mere shambles. That Bill was drafted, it was discussed in the Railway Committee, it was brought back to this House and upon a motion to go into committee, the Railway Committee having reported against it, it was contended by some hon. gentlemen that I should leave the question of protection open, that some protection other than that provided for by the Bill would probably answer and that all we should do was to enunciate the principle that some protection was required and then leave it to the Railway Commission to say what that protection should be.

Again, having respect for the hon. gentlemen in this House, and believing that in the multitude there is wisdom, I withdrew the Bill. Although we may not all agree upon party political questions, I believe we are all interested in doing what we can for the welfare of the country, and having respect for the opinions, the prejudices if you like, of the hon. gentlemen who had voted against the Bill at a previous session, I again introduced it in 1906 without the provision that there should be a watchman at the gates, but asking the House to assist me in saying who should devise what proper protection should be. The then Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) realized, as he always did, that the Bill was designed to remedy an existing evil and he had it referred to a special committee composed of Hon. Mr. Lemieux, Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Mr. Macdonald of Pictou, Mr. Lennox, the late lamented Dr. Stockton, and myself. The railways were heard at great length before that committee and the evidence of engineers and railway experts was taken. The Bill I had introduced was not recommended by the committee, but on the suggestion of the Minister of Railways a Bill was reported to the House which, if passed, would result in remedying the evil. The Bill which I now have the temerity to present, notwithstanding what the Senate said last session, is in the same form as that suggested by the Hon. Mr. Emmerson. I have accepted it as being a well intended disposition of the matter. In the session of 1906 the special committee reported that Bill to the House, it was adopted unanimously by the House, it went to the Senate and the Senate thought in the dying hours of the session they should not pass it. Then last session, the House knowing the history of the Bill during previous sessions, considered it duly and again passed it. Let me point out to hon. gentlemen that the law as it stands to-day is absolutely nugatory; the clause in the Railway Act which by this Bill I am seeking to replace is absolutely of no effect. The present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court when Minister of Justice admitted that the section is a mere dead letter, and no doubt that fact had its influence on the Hon. Mr. Emmerson in suggesting the amendment he did. The clause at present reads:—

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board.
> The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

Now, that means that trains are allowed to pass through these thickly peopled localities at a speed exceeding ten miles an hour so long as they comply with the other provision of the Railway Act, but it so happens that there are no other sections of the Railway Act dealing with thickly peopled portions of cities, towns or villages. As Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, when Minister of Justice admitted, the clause as it stands is nonsense. It is futile, it is misleading, it gives people to think that there is protection at these dangerous places when as a matter of fact there is not, a point which has been settled in the case of Mackay and the Grand Trunk in the Supreme Court of Canada. The amendment which I have the honour to propose to-day is word for word the same as that recommended by the Hon. Mr. Emmerson, when Minister of Railways, except of course that the date at which it is to come into operation is necessarily changed. It was always thought that the railways should have a year's notice in order that they might make arrangements to comply with the provisions, and hence in this Bill I purpose giving them a year's notice in advance. Now, this is the clause which the House has unanimously for two sessions agreed to:—

Section 275 of The Railway Act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—

275. No train shall pass over any highway crossing at rail-level in any thickly-peopled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, unless such crossing is properly protected, or unless such crossing is constructed and thereafter duly maintained in accordance with the orders, regulations and directions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and of the board in force with respect thereto. The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate that it deems expedient.

2. The company shall have until the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and nine, to comply with the provisions of this section.

All sorts of ridiculous arguments prevailed on the Senate to throw out the Bill, but I am asking the House to again send the Bill to the Senate, which branch of the legislature will, I hope, now come to the conclusion that the 214 members of this House know what they are doing when they pass a Bill of this kind after four years mature consideration. There were two objections made in the Senate last year, one of which was that the legislation was hasty, that it was sprung upon the country, and that the members of the House of Commons had not taken due care in passing it. I do not know what the hon. gentlemen of the Senate would say was not hasty legislation. During the seven years I have been in the House I do not know of any Bill that has had one-tenth of the consideration and attention that this measure has had. In the year 1905 the Bill was read a first and second time, it was referred to the Railway Committee which is composed of about two-thirds of the members of the House, and counsel for the railway companies had an opportunity of being heard ad libitum. It was then reported to the House, discussed fully upon the floor of the House, but it was not passed because it was suggested that a different remedy might be devised in the following session. The second year it went through the same routine; it was referred to the Railway Committee and again dealt with in the House. The third year it was sent to a special committee on the theory that seven or eight members could give special attention to it, and that special committee consisted of three cabinet ministers; a member from the government side ; two able gentlemen from the opposition side, in addition to your humble servant who is perhaps not entitled to be so described.

That committee, irrespective of their party affiliations, had in view the united object of dealing with this question in a manner most in the interest of the whole people of Canada. After careful and impartial consideration a report was presented by that committee, drawn by the then Minister of Railways; that report was adopted by the 214 members of this House and is the basis of the legislation which I have now placed before the House. I ask the House to consider the statement of the Senate that this legislation was hasty, as the most preposterous joke that that body, which is very fond of joking, has got off on the members of this House in many years. It shows what a lobby of railway counsel will accomplish. Before the special committee in 1906, one of the objections of the railways to the proposed Bill was that there were a lot of orders by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, a body which was superseded by the present Railway Commission, dealin with these crossings; there had been a great deal of ligitation to establish the meaning of these orders and the railways contended that they should not be put to the expense of obtaining duplicate orders from the Railway Commission. Mr. Emmerson, the then Minister of Railways, thought there was some foundation for this claim and inserted in my Bill, which he re-drew and which is the Bill now before the House, a provision that orders made by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should stand, and be subject only to new orders by the Railway Commission; that is, if nothing was done in regard to them the orders would stand. With this provision the railways would no longer have the right to complain of unnecessary expense. This legislation was unanimously adopted by this House and again adopted last year; it went to the Senate, and, repeating what they were told in the lobbies by the railway counsel, we find the senators objecting that we in this Chamber did not know what we were doing, because we had used the words 'Railway Committee of the Privy Council' a body which had been abolished. They might as well have said that a decision of the old Court of Queen's Bench or the old Court of Chancery is no longer good because the present High Court of Justice has not decided the same thing over again. It simply shows what can be said if it is not desired to pass a Bill in the public interest. Counsel for the railways insisted on the objection to the Bill that it would not continue to them the protection of the old orders and when that provision was inserted to save them expense, they got the senators to say that this provision showed that our legislation was hasty and that we did not know what we were doing. The 214 members of this House have unanimously agreed in two consecutive sessions that this legislation is just what the people want These members, coming from all parts of Canada, are the best judges of what the people want, as was correctly said by the Hon. George W. Ross, when speaking in the Senate last year in support of the Bill, in opposition to the majority of the Senate. His speech will be found at page 910 of last year's Senate 'Hansard,' and I commend it to the attention of hon. members of this House, as Mr. Ross has recently come from the people and has not forgotten their wishes. If the Senate had returned the Bill to us with an amendment and said : We do not think that is the right remedy and will suggest another in its place, I could perhaps agree that there was some excuse for their course ; but when they do not amend that Bill as they should under the constitution and propose an alternative recommendation to this House, admitting that they cannot suggest any better remedy for the evil than this, and can offer no other reasons for their rejection of our proposal than that the legislation was hasty, the proper course for this House to adopt is to send this Bill back to them every session and let them wrestle with it until they understand it, and either suggest a better remedy or back down and say: We cannot suggest anything better and therefore leave this matter to be dealt with by your 214 members of the House of Commons. I have here 50 pages of evidence taken before the Railway Commission in 1905 at the instance of the railways. No evidence was taken on behalf of the people, none was necessary; hon. gentlemen in this House knew the evil, knew what the people wanted, but the railways had to give sworn evidence to show that the hon. gentlemen in this House did not understand what they were talking about, and were proposing, according to the Senate, hasty legislation. Members of parliament knew what the evidence in favour of the people was, from five minutes' conversation with their constituents. On the expression of opinion, unanimously coming from the ranks of both sides of politics and all over the country, the House concluded to pass the Bill as it now is. Then before a special committee of seven, an equal quantity of the evidence of engineers was given showing the difficulty and showing it to them to what end? In order to prove that if the railways put up gates and appointed watchmen to open and close them, that would cost so much money as to cripple the companies, and besides it was not necessary in all cases. If we made the railway companies do the ideal thing, if we made them abolish level crossings, that, they claim would financially ruin them. They pretended that electric bells might be sufficient at certain places and that some particular crossings, although within the territory described in the Bill, did not need any protection at all because of the peculiar advantageous geographical position and that in such cases all that was necessary was the warning signs: 'Railway crossing.' This Bill, therefore, was so drawn that they need not do either the one thing or the other, provided they got permission from the Railway Commission to dispense with either. Should they be able to convince the Railway Commission that a certain class of crossings did not require any particular protection, that certain other crossings required only electric bells and certain others required only watchmen, and that others again required to be taken off the level either by an overhead bridge or by a cutting beneath the level, all they have to do is to comply with the order of the commission. That is just what this Bill calls for. It establishes the principle that the railway companies must protect the public, but they can go before the Railway Commission and, on proving to the satisfaction of that body, that a certain class of crossings do not require protection, they are not bound to go to the expense of providing it. Where then is the injury or the unfairness to the companies of such legislation? All they have to do is to convince the Railway Commission that a certain kind of protection is all that is necessary and the Railway Commission will issue an order to that effect.

But to come back to first principles, who owns the public highway ? Who has the first right upon the public highways in cities, towns and villages ? The railway companies do not lease these highways or buy them. They are the King's highways, belonging to the King's liege subjects, and the railway companies are permitted, by a general clause in the Railway Act to cross these highways without paying any compensation. Whenever they cross private properties, they have to pay compensation for the usage, but they are allowed to run freely, without paying any compensation, over the King's highways. But, it is said, we must have railways and we must give them the privilege of crossing the public roads. That is all very well ; but we do not want these companies to be allowed to kill people when crossing these highways, which they are allowed to use, absolutely free of toll or rent or any other compensation to the people who own them. Is it too much to ask, under these circumstances, that these companies shall protect the public at these crossings in such a manner as the Railway Commission think is necessary ? That is the object of this Bill. Without this Bill, neither the Railway Commission nor anybody else can compel these companies to protect their crossings. I find that the railway companies have induced the newspapers to say that this Bill is a measure to compel the railways to reduce their speed to ten miles an hour. Sir, it is no such thing. I might as well be charged with introducing a Bill to hang people because I want people to be hanged who have committed murder. If the railway companies be not willing to go to the Railway Commission and have such orders made as the commission, in its judgment, deems it advisable to make, if these companies defy public opinion and will not ask the Railway Commission to declare what sort of protection is needed at level crossings, then they must be under the penalty of not running faster than ten miles an hour, at these crossings, so that people may have some chance of escaping being run over. If these railway companies will not do anything to prevent the destruction of lives at these level crossings, it is something terrible to say to them : At all events, if you will not do that, you must run slow enough to give people a chance to get out of your way. As the Hon. Geo. W. Ross said in the Senate, the speed of railway trains is all the time increasing.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is referring to a debate in the other House, and it is a well known rule of parliamentary law that is not permissible.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose I can refer to the action of the other House. The Senate, has, by its action, practically said that this legislation is not necessary, or rather it has said——

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not like to press too strongly but it is laid down explicitly in Bourinot as the unwritten law of parliament that no reference can be made to a debate in the other House :—

It is a part of the unwritten law of parliament that no allusion should be made in one House to the debates of the other chamber, a rule always enforced by the Speaker with the utmost strictness. Members sometimes attempt to evade this rule by resorting to ambiguous terms of expression—by referring, for instance, to what happened in another place, but all such evasions of a wholesome practice should be stopped by the Speaker, when it is evident to whom the allusions are made.

I think we had better strictly follow that rule.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want to break the rule by any means or device.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That rule is not always strictly followed in the British House of Commons. For instance, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman referred directly to proceedings in the House of Lords on a certain Bill and moved a resolution regarding it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice I have cited seems to be the practice followed under our procedure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is absolutely necessary to refer to proceedings in the Senate when Bills come back to us from that body. It may not be necessary to refer to their debates, but we must refer to their proceedings.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule laid down seems to be that an hon. member cannot take the debates of the other chamber and quote from them. No reference to what has occurred in the other chamber can be made. That seems to be the rule laid down in our practice.

Mr. LANCASTER. Am I at liberty then to read verbatim what the Hon. Geo. W. Ross said in the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is permissible to quote from the records of the Senate.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is the Senate debates to which I am referring. The Hon. Geo. W. Ross said :—

I had the honour of supporting this measure when it came first before the House, and am of the opinion still that it is a good Bill. My hon. friend from Montreal says it is not well drafted, and in proof of that assertion he compares this Bill with the Railway Act. I understand the Railway Act, as it is now on the statute-book, is practically the same as the Act passed in 1903. This Bill now before us went before the House of Commons in its present form in 1906 and also in 1907. It passed through the hands of two different Ministers of Justice, the highest legal authority in the House of Commons or in the country, extra judicial of course, and of the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and the present Minister of Justice, Mr. Aylesworth. As to the members of the House, I would assume that they would see that the Bill was consistent with itself. I would assume that their opinion should carry a good deal of weight. It does with me. I would assume that they would not allow a Bill to go through the House inconsistent with itself or that was badly drafted, or in any sense a bungled Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) permit me ? I find in Bourinot, page 479, a statement of what may be referred to.

It is perfectly regular, however, to refer to the official printed records of the other branch of the legislature even though the document may not have been formally asked for and communicated to the House.

I do not know whether the document from which the hon. gentleman is quoting is the official printed record or not. I should think not from its appearance. But, if he assures me that it is the official printed record, of course, I accept his statement.

Mr. LANCASTER. I should have thought that the House would take my word for it.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the point would be whether 'Hansard' is the official record in the strict parliamentary sense.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not sure that it would be. I do not care to press the matter unduly in this particular instance, but I think the practice is as I have stated, and should be followed as carefully as possible. It may be suggested that the printed 'Hansard' would be the official record. I cannot say as to this at the moment.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is some repetition of what I stated, but I do not want to embarrass the question at issue with a debate on a point of order. This is too serious a question for me to jeopardize by attempting anything of that kind. I do not therefore, wish to take any chance on what would be right for me to say, because it is hard to argue a case if you are in doubt of your right to say what you wish to say on the subject. I do not think that my case is so weak, either, that I have anything to gain by running the risk of diverting attention from it.

Well, since what has happened to this Bill has happened, the press of this country has spoken. Boards of trade and other municipal institutions have expressed their opinion ; coroners' inquest juries have dealt with it. You can hardly pick up a newspaper but you find one or other of two things. In one day's newspaper, you will find that a person has been killed at one of these level crossings, and in a newspaper a few days after that you will find an expression of opinion from some tribunal other than the Senate declaring that the legislation which was introduced last year and thrown out by the Senate, should be passed. Let me read, for instance, the resolution of the Board of Trade of Toronto, passed as soon as this Bill was adopted in this House and sent to the Senate :

Resolved that the council of the board of trade heartily endorses the Bill introduced by Mr. E. A. Lancaster in the Dominion House to provide for the proper protection of level railway crossings in cities, towns and villages, and trust that it may become law.

There is an expression from the citizens' point of view, and that from the board of trade of the largest city in the province of Ontario. Similar resolutions have been passed by boards of trade in other places. Now, I have here a newspaper published in the interests of the farmers—'The Farmers Advocate,' published in London, Ont. It has an article headed 'The deadly level crossing.' This article says :

Mr. E. A. Lancaster, M.P., for Lincoln and Niagara, has, for the fourth time, we believe, introduced his Bill in the Canadian parliament for the protection of the lives of the people on level railway crossings.

I would just interrupt the reading of this article there to say that this paper knows that this legislation was not hasty, but that for four years it had been discussed, as I have said.

It proposes that, after January 1, 1908, railways must protect their crossings in the thickly-settled portions of cities, towns and villages, or else slow down. Newspaper scribes treat the subject with more or less frivolity, describing the measure as a 'hardy annual,' a 'perennial plant,' and so on. Last year the Bill was incorporated in the General Railway Act, but was amputated in the Senate, that graveyard of not a little legislation in the interest of the people. Meanwhile, the railways have gone on remorselessly killing the people and destroying horses and rigs, evidently bent on making time records at all hazards. The list of these accidents during the past year has been appalling. Success to Mr. Lancaster's Bill.

Now, let us go a little further west. I take up the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' and find the following article :

MISCHIEVOUS INTERFERENCE.

The Canadian Senate, in the dying hours of the present session is supplying in its own acts sufficient reason for its reformation. Yesterday it distinguished itself by vetoing Mr. Lancaster's amendment which prohibits railway trains from running faster than ten miles an hour over level crossings in cities, towns and incorporated villages.

This is a railway reform which Mr. Lancaster has advocated for some years, and which he finally succeeded in inducing the House of Commons to endorse. Why the Senate should stand in the way of a piece of popular legislation of this kind is not apparent. It is assuredly flying in the face of public opinion when it refuses to co-operate with the lower House in such an essential measure of public safety.

The level crossing is a menace to public life under any circumstances. In congested communities it is a veritable death trap which every year claims hundreds of victims in Canada and United States. If the level crossing cannot be abolished in cities, towns and incorporated villages, or if it cannot be protected with gates or watchmen, then it is surely desirable that railway companies should limit the speed of their trains as proposed in Mr. Lancaster's amendment.

Nothing could be fairer than giving railways the option of protecting their crossings, or of reducing their speed at crossings where protection is not afforded.

The newspaper quite understands the fairness of the legislation as it gives the railway company the option of going to the Railway Commission and getting an order authorizing them to reduce the speed if they would rather not go to the little expense of making the crossing safe.

The House of Commons interpreted the overwhelming force of public opinion when it endorsed the Lancaster amendment, and the Senate made out an exceedingly good case for its reform, or its abolition when it declared that railways should continue in the right to convert public crossings into shambles.

Now, I take up another newspaper in Ontario, published at Galt, where a coroner's inquest inquired into the death of the driver of a horse and buggy over a level crossing :

The jury returned the following verdict : 'Your jury find from the evidence submitted that the late Frederick Reid, of Goderich, came to his death by being struck by a Grand Trunk train while crossing the Waterloo road on Friday, September 20, 1907; also that on account of the great number of accidents at level crossings we would recommend the Railway Commission to consider the advisability of having them abolished.'

This newspaper writer evidently thinks that the Railway Commission has the power to control these matters. The Railway Commission, of course, has no right to do so, and will have no right to do so unless the Act is amended. The point is good as it stands, but if we amend the Act as proposed, and as twice unanimously declared for by this House, the Railway Commission can act. But the quotation I have given helps to show how the newspapers regard the matter. Now, those are the things that have been urged against this Bill that, it seems to me, can no longer be urged.

I have taken up a good deal of time, and I apologize for it. But in extenuation, I plead the importance of the matter to this country as well as the strong feeling I have upon the subject and also my duty out of respect to the two hundred and fourteen members of this House who supported this legislation. I ask this House again to pass this Bill and send it to the Senate for their concurrence.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I think I ought to be credited, to a certain extent, as the cause of the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) this afternoon. Possibly, had I had time to communicate with him before the House met to-day, we might have been deprived of his eloquent and earnest address. It is said by some people that many ardent protectionists by day are very busy freetraders at night. Those of us who urge strongly that the speed of trains shall be limited are among the gentlemen who always want to take the fastest trains that run. And, perhaps, there is no class of men in Canada who are more clearly on record in that regard than the members of the House of Commons, who, when they found that their passes were not good for the fastest trains, those that run through cities, towns and villages at breakneck speed, almost rebelled in order to have their passes made good on those trains. Sometimes our acts outside this House are not wholly consistent, perhaps, with the Acts we pass in this House. However, this question of level crossings is one that deserves very serious consideration. I am sure that my hon. friend did not mean to bring undue pressure to bear on me when he quoted as positive proof in substantiation of his contention the words of my old friend Hon. G. W. Ross. It is a pleasure to me to know that he is an apostle of Mr. Ross, in this respect at least.

Now the question of level crossings and their dangers is one that will not down in this country. The accidents that happen, not only in Canada—because perhaps Canada is as free as any other country, if not freer than some other countries, in that respect—forces this matter on our consideration. I am not one of those who cry out against corporations, or against railways because they are run by corporations. We have to remember that we urged, and coaxed, if I may use that word, some of these railway corporations to invest their money, and their money has been invested for years, for which they have got little or no return, in some cases. But that is no excuse for any laxity in protecting the rights of the people. The question of transportation is one of great importance, and the methods of moving people to and fro is one of great interest to the people themselves. But the paramount interest, to my mind, is the protection of the lives of the people. This may be regarded by some as a small matter, but to my mind it is not a small matter. We have throughout the country districts, leaving out anything which this Bill touches at all, many crossings that are very dangerous. Every member of this House can call to mind some crossing in his own constituency, the approach to which is very dangerous to the travelling public. While it would be rash to go to the extent of insisting that something should be done at these crossings all at once, I am in hearty sympathy with the movement to approach the subject gradually, and take in thickly settled parts, such as cities, towns and villages. While saying this, I have no desire to encroach upon the rights of the railways. We have now a commission and that commission is to be enlarged. It has been proved heretofore that the duties placed upon that commission have been so onerous and so numerous that the members have not been able to perform them, and if we placed this work upon that commission with its present number, we would perhaps burden them unduly. But it is the intention of the government, with the approval of this House, which I believe will be unanimous, to enlarge this commission and provide that these complaints shall practically go to the decision of the commission, and the orders of the old Privy Council will be included as well, to avoid certain injustices that might otherwise be done. I do not wish to make any further remarks, only to say that I concur in this Bill, and I will consent to the second reading, without its going to the Railway Committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I presume this Bill is in the same terms as the Bill passed last year by this House, with the exception of the date ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Exactly. The only difference is that it will come into force in 1909 instead of 1908.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the expression 'thickly peopled portion of any city' might be a difficult one to interpret, though I cannot suggest anything better.

Mr. LANCASTER. That has always been in the statute, though the point has been discussed a good deal in the Railway Committee. But those words have been in the statute since 1859, and have been the subject of a judicial interpretation, and we think it better to leave them.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CO-OPERATION.

On the order :

Second reading of Bill (No. 5) respecting Co-operation.—Mr. Monk.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Will my hon. friend consent to have this Bill postponed until the return of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) ?

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Will he soon be back ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is too much to ask me at this moment. I presume the Bill will go through.

Mr. MONK. The reason I ask is that my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) was the chairman of the special committee which investigated and examined this Bill with great care last year. He took a lively interest in it, and concurred absolutely with the recommendations of the committee, in fact it was he who prepared the Bill. It appears from that report of the committee that the measure is one which should be adopted without delay. The Postmaster General having concurred in the Bill as it was amended by the committee, I would not like his prolonged absence to prevent the passage of the Bill, for reasons which it is unnecessary for me to state now. You might let it stand to-day, with the understanding that if my right hon. friend thinks fit, it shall stand over until after the Christmas vacation.

Mr. GRAHAM

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the return of my colleague were to be, as the hon. gentleman thinks, unreasonably late, the Bill might be proceeded with at the present time.

Mr. MONK. Will the right hon. gentleman consent to leave it on the Order Paper as it is ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

HOURS OF ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew) moved:

That it is desirable in the interests of good legislation that the rules of the House of Commons should be amended so as to provide that the hour of adjournment of the House of Commons should (excepting on extraordinary occasions to be decided by the government), be fixed, when there are evening sittings, at not later than 10.30 p.m.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am asking for no radical change, for no very drastic measure. I am merely asking that the machinery which is now in motion should have some regulating device so that it should not run perpetually but come to an end some time earlier in the night than it does now. Before proceeding further perhaps it is right that I should explain what is meant by an extraordinary occasion. In reference to this I would refer you to what took place in the session of 1903 when we were passing the Railway Act. When we came to a certain portion of that Act we found that even the officers of the House were at a loss to know just exactly what was the mode of procedure which we should adopt. We then had several conferences with the Senate, we went backwards and forwards several times before we came to an arrangement, and the House finally adjourned about 1 or 1.30 o'clock next morning. This certainly would come under the head of an extraordinary occasion, and it would be left for the government to say what is or what is not an extraordinary occasion. What are the reasons for asking for this change? Take for example the case of a member who is anxious to discharge his duties faithfully and intelligently in the interest of his constituency and in the interest of the country ; what has he to do ? As a general thing most members are on three or four important committees. These commence in the morning, say, at ten o'clock, and one will perhaps be over at eleven. Then, the member will go to a meeting of another committee and remain there from 11 until the adjournment for lunch. Then he comes back to the sitting of the House at three and he remains here until six o'clock when the House adjourns for dinner, he comes back at eight o'clock and remains here perhaps until all hours of the morning. Under such circumstances what chance has that member, if he is anxious to discharge his duties faithfully and well, to inform himself on the various subjects which he has to legislate upon? Take, for example the present session there are some very important measures to come before the House. There is this treaty with France which we will have to look over very carefully, there is the transportation question which will require the most earnest consideration of this House and there are other things of great importance that we will have to inform ourselves upon. If we have such hours as we have at present what time has any member to qualify himself or legislate properly on these questions? If we were to meet, say at nine o'clock, or ten o'clock in the morning—I do not see why we should not meet at half past nine—then meet again at two, the same as we do on Wednesdays now, then meet at the ordinary hour of eight o'clock and adjourn at half past ten o'clock, we would have far more time to do our work, and it strikes me that the work would not only be better done, but perhaps more quickly done then it is at the present time. It is not only the private members who have these difficulties to contend with, but if the private members have these difficulties how much more are the difficulties which the Prime Minister, the members of the government and the leader of the opposition have? Our leader is not as young as he used to be. We all have every confidence in his ability. We are looking forward, every one of us, to years of service for us, we want him still to carry our banner and to carry it to victory, but if we exact the very last ounce of strength from him by requiring him to sit here all night, how can we expect that he will remain at the head of affairs for years to come, as we hope he will? He has to be here and watch every movement; he has to be here every hour in the day, or should be while the session is going on. How is he to prepare addresses? He is expected to speak on every subject. How can we expect him to do all this and do it faithfully and well. The members of the government are in exactly the same position. They have to receive deputations and they have to speak on almost every subject that comes before us. We cannot expect Herculean tasks from these men because they are human as well as ourselves, and why should not we restrict the hours and give them a little more chance to prepare themselves for the performance of their duties? Take the case of the leader of the opposition. He is, perhaps—and I am not going behind the boards to say it—one of the best members we have in this House—certainly one of the best members they have on the opposition side. I am not afraid to say it; I am proud of the leader of the opposition. We must have a good opposition. An opposition is a fine thing for a government because a government is sometimes too strong unless it is held in check by a good opposition. It is apt to do things which are not exactly right. I am anxious that we should have a good, strong, competent opposition, and I hope that the present leader of the opposition will be maintained in his strength so that he can conduct his party not to victory, but to a long period of usefulness in this House. I remember that not only last session but the session before, the leader of the opposition became completely exhausted by the labours that were exacted from him. He had to go away for a week at a time to recuperate, and he came back with renewed strength. I do not think we should exact such labours from the leader of the opposition as to exhaust his strength in the performance of his public duty. Scarcely a session passes but one or two of our members are called away suddenly by death for the very reason that they are required to exert themselves for too long a time and too late into the night. The majority of the members of this House are not accustomed to late hours; they are men who have been born and brought up in a Christian country. We work during the day and rest during the night, and I do not see why we should depart from that good old rule.

It is not only the government, the opposition and others that I am concerned about, but what about the officers of the House? Take for example, the little pages, thirteen in number, who range in age from 10 to 13 years. Should we not look after their interest too? We have a law on the statutes of Ontario defining what a child is. It says that a child is a person under the age of 14 years. The age of these little page boys range from ten to thirteen years, and they consequently come under the category of children. This law also states that no child shall be employed in any factory in Ontario for more than six hours a day and not more than 60 hours in a week. But in this great factory of words and phrases we violate that law and compel these little boys to stay here from 12 to 16 hours a day, and when we have morning sittings they remain here double that time. These little page boys are orphans or the sons of widows, and they are here only because necessity compels them to be here, and when the session lasts six or seven months these boys are deprived of the opportunity of going to school. Is it not time we should take this into consideration as well? What about the other officers of the House? What about the reporters, and in that I include not only the 'Hansard' reporters, but the reporters in the gallery, who, although they are not officers of the House, are a most valuable adjunct, and they should be considered just as well as any one else. When we have sat here all night or until six o'clock or seven o'clock in the morning, what about the reporters?

Their labours are not ended even when the House rises; they have to prepare the reports for publication, revise them and see that everything is all right, and they are obliged to remain here for an hour after we go home. Is this just, is it right, is it fair? should we not consider this? Let me draw attention to one other thing which I noticed particularly during the long session of 1903, and there is nothing like bringing these things down to the concrete. The deputy clerk, Mr. Laplante, had to stay here all the time during that session and the sittings were protracted every night until after midnight. The result was that at the close of the session Mr. Laplante was not able to stand upon his feet and he was told by his physician that as soon as it was possible he must get away and recuperate; it was not medicine he wanted, but rest, absolute rest. Now, have we the right to exact this from the employees of this parliament? Is there no limit to our personal liberty? Personal liberty has its limits. For example, I have the right to swing my arms in any direction; that is my personal liberty. But if I swing my arms too close to John Jones' nose my personal liberty stops there and John Jones' liberty begins. Have we the right to exact such labours from the members of this House as will render them incompetent for perhaps all the days of their lives. I say no. I think the government is to some extent responsible for this, and that they should aim to put an end to existing conditions. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to another thing. It is said that if we should venture to do this terrible things may happen; that the session will never come to an end, that we will be here for the whole year, that there are lions in the path. Well, there may be lions in the way which 'Faint-Heart' sees, but my contention is that if you advance you will find that these lions are stuffed with straw. There is no necessity of our being frightened. If other nations of the world are able to do all their legislation during the day time surely we ought to be able to do the same. Let me point out what the legislatures of other countries do, and if they do it why not we? Are we lacking in intelligence; are we more lacking in force than are our neighbours? Surely not. In Austria, with a population of 47,000,000, the Reichsrath—both Houses—sits from October to June; the lower chamber three and four days a week from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. or 5 p.m. There are no night sittings at all and yet they are able to legislate for 47,000,000 people. In the Belgian Chamber which legislates for a population of 7,000,000 they sit four days a week from 1.45 p.m. to 5.30 p.m. and occasionally from 10.30 a.m. to 12.45 p.m. to expedite business. In Denmark the Folkething sits from half an hour to four and a half hours, and the Landsthing for three hours. The French Chamber of Deputies, which legislates for 40,000,000, usually sits from 2.30 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. or 7 p.m., and the Senate much the same. In Germany, where they legislate for 60,000,000 people the session of the Reichstag usually lasts from November until May, and sits from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m., and the Landtag follows suit. The Hungarian House of Deputies sits from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. and the House of Magnates commences at 11 a.m. In Italy they legislate for 32,000,000 people and the Senate sits from 3.30 p.m. until 6 p.m. or 6.30, and the Chamber of Deputies from 2 p.m. until 6 p.m., and sometimes 8 p.m. with occasional morning sittings. And what is the procedure in Japan, the country of the Mikado, which has sprung so suddenly into importance and which takes rank among the foremost nations of the earth. In Japan with 50,000,000 people, the Diet sits for three months each year, the House of Peers from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and the House of Representatives from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. In the Netherlands the first Chamber of the States-General sits from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the second Chamber from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. or 4.30 p.m. If these nations are able to do their work during the day time why should not we? The Portuguese Cortes meet at 2 p.m. for a four hour sitting and the session generally last about three months. The ordinary sessions of the Spanish Senate and Congress last six hours and they legislate for 19,000,000 people. The Swedish Rikstag usually sits from January to June with morning and evening sittings. In Switzerland the sittings of the Conseils begin at 8 a.m. in summer and 9 a.m. in winter, and lasts until 1 p.m. or 1.30 p.m. And what about the United States which legislates for 90,000,000 people? There the House of Representatives meets generally at 11 a.m. and the Senate meets at noon and usually the sittings last until about 4 p.m., and only on extraordinary occasions do they have night sittings.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if all these nations are able to carry on their legislative work effectually during the day time, surely this House of Commons ought to be able to accomplish its duty by closing at 10.30 at night. And who asks for these long hours from us? Are our constituents demanding this? Is the press demanding it? Is any one asking for this? On the contrary, we know full well that many of our constituents upbraid us and ask us why it is that we keep such abominable hours. They even accuse us of choosing the darkness rather than the light because our deeds are evil. That may be true and it may not, but it is certain that nobody is exacting these hours from us except ourselves. Under these circumstances I cannot see why we cannot shorten our hours of sitting and thus add very much to the health and comfort of every member here.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I would wish that on a subject of this kind which concerns very directly all the members of this House, there would have been a general discussion of the views advanced by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright). The rule to which he has objected is certainly open to reasonable exception, but this rule has the prestige of observance for an almost unprecedented number of years; it has secular sanction. It has been the rule in England for many generations, and I think it is still the rule there, although there is a certain tacit understanding that the House is not to sit beyond a certain hour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They have the 12 o'clock rule, but it is frequently suspended.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I believe it is more honoured in the breach than in the observance. At all events of late years we have practically adopted the rule suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. Wright). It is very seldom during late years, especially in the earlier part of the session, that we have sat later than 11 o'clock, or occasionally 12 o'clock. Towards the end of the session when we are all anxious to be relieved from our duties we all put on a little extra pressure and we sit sometimes pretty late; but for my part I have been brought up, if I may say so, under the rule of Sir John Macdonald, who was quite an authority not only on politics but on many other things; and he always adhered to the present rule. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) I think will remember that although appeals of a similar nature were made in former times, Sir John never favoured them, but rather adhered to the present rule which has been maintained.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that on the whole it is as well to leave the rule as it is and to have a mutual understanding that we should conclude our sessions between 11 and 12 o'clock. When there is danger of a very late sitting, as happens sometimes, then the two sides of the House might agree to adjourn at a reasonable hour. It is very true that we lead a strenuous life; my hon. friend has spoken of this House as a great manufactory of words, and in this manufactory of words we do not know or observe the eight-hour law. We work very strenuously, for all we are worth, for seven months in the year, and it is unfortunately injuring the health of many of us. If my opinion is to count for anything, I would rather leave the rule as it is, and have the understanding I have just spoken of, that at this stage of the session and for several months, until we come to the closing days of the session, we should not sit later than 12 o'clock and should usually adjourn at 11 o'clock. The rules of the House were carefully revised only two years ago, and I believe that the work done then by members on both sides of the House was well done. The new rules seem to be satisfactory. In these we have an experiment, having the House meet at 2 o'clock on Wednesdays and rise at 6. So far as my observation goes the rule has worked satisfactorily, giving more leisure to members and a good deal of work has been despatched in the four hour sittings. If that innovation is confirmed and continued, perhaps we may find this an example to follow and extend it also to some other days. Undoubtedly it will be far preferable if we can work during the day time and have leisure in the evening, but if we are to despatch the business of the House, I am afraid we will have to do as we have done, work not only in the day time, but also to some extent at night. My hon. friend (Mr. A. A. Wright) has brought up a subject which is worthy of attention; he has handled it in a very felicitous manner, and I would request him now not to proceed further but to allow his motion to be withdrawn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Before the motion is withdrawn, I would like to say that I think the thanks of the House are due to the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. Wright) for bringing the subject before the House. It seems to me that in matters of procedure such as this custom counts for a great deal, and it does seem singular that in the American Congress they transact the business of the great republic to the south without sitting in the evening, while we in Canada are obliged to sit until 11, 12 or sometimes 2, 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, in order to accomplish ours. It is perhaps due very largely to habits of the past, to the customs of the House, to methods of procedure, but I should not dispair of seeing the reform which has been advanced today by our friend (Mr. A. A. Wright) accomplished. If it could be brought about without any serious interference with public business, it would be a great reform indeed. It has been adopted in Great Britain under what is called the 12 o'clock rule, but as the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has very well observed, in Great Britain it is found necessary, I think, to suspend the 12 o'clock rule frequently, especially as the session approaches its conclusion. If it were possible to have the government entirely reasonable with regard to its measures—and I rather despair of that good result so long as the government is constituted as it is at present—and if the opposition should continue to be as reasonable in the future as it has been in the past—and I am sure that it will—some reform like this might be brought about. Criticism could be put into a more concise form, the government could bring down its measures in good time and we perhaps could accomplish as much before 10.30 at night as is now accomplished by sitting to 11, 12, or 1 o'clock in the morning. However, that seems to be a matter that cannot very well be entertained at present. I trust my hon. friend from Renfrew will not let it drop, but bring it up another session.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). What my right hon. friend has said is very true, that the late Sir John Macdonald was always opposed to any arbitrary limitation of our sittings. For my part I have a confession to make. I was opposed to the rule we adopted last year of the House rising at six o'clock on Wednesdays. I feared it would retard the work of the House and lengthen the session, but I have no hesitation in saying that I have been converted to the new rule. I think it operates excellently well. It is a great relief to get a breathing spell one night out of the week in the very midst of the work, which one may devote to recreation, or, as many of us do, use for the purpose of pulling up back work, which we would have to overtax our energies in doing if it were not for this intermission. Just as I was wrong then, I may be wrong to-day in thinking that if we came to the conclusion to arbitrarily end our sittings at half-past ten, we would not accommodate ourselves ultimately to that restriction and perhaps in the end get through more work and be in better shape physically than we otherwise would. But if our present rule is to be amended, as I think in course of time it will be, I think there is another respect in which a change might be made advantageously. I am perhaps as great a sinner as any man in this House in the matter of making speeches longer than they should be. In the United States, although they do not sit at night, they limit the time of a speaker; and although their 'Hansard' does not show any evidence of it, that is probably due to their elastic method of allowing speeches to be handed in and published as if really spoken. But possibly their system has the effect of making the debates more brisk and perhaps more to the point and certainly prevents long winded speakers like myself from taking up too much of the time of the House. On most of the questions which come before us, a half an hour or three-quarters of an hour should be quite long enough to enable a man to say all he has to say regarding them. Of course there are occasions when it would not be advisable to restrict certain speeches within that limit. For instance when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has to bring down his budget, it would be rather too much to ask that he should be limited to half an hour or three-quarters of an hour or perhaps within the hour, though if we take the example of the British House of Commons, we find that the budget speeches there, as a rule, are remarkably condensed. In the case, however, of minor debates, such as on the estimates, I think they might well be shortened, and that the result would be that a better debating power would be developed, we would get more quickly at the kernel or the heart of the subject, and we would not have so many historical disquisitions, especially if we had a government which behaved itself better and did not furnish us so much provocation to go into history with regard to its administration. But seriously speaking, if the rule were adopted of closing earlier in the evening, either by general consent or by rule of the House, and if there was a general disposition to curtail discussions on minor subjects and restrict these within a limited space of time, that I think would be found in the end beneficial. There is a point I wish to emphasize, and I think my right hon. friend will agree with me. Where the strain comes upon a hard working member of the House is in the last three or four weeks of the session. There is then more taken out of him than in all the preceding weeks. That arises from the fact that the great mass of the estimates, which are of great importance, are thrown into the last two or three weeks and sometimes into the last two weeks of the session. While it is the case that the main estimates of late years have been brought down at a fairly early period, other things have intervened, and all estimates, special and supplementary, are thrown on to the last days of the session. That is where the difficulty comes. If the government would be reasonable and bring down its estimates in good time, bring down its important legislation in good time, I am sure the opposition would be fairly reasonable and despatch them promptly and thus save ourselves a good deal. I agree with my hon. friend that the health of the members should be considered in conducting the business of the country, and that public business should be conducted in such a way as not to be too exacting upon our physical powers. Those members who have been in the House a number of years know, and sadly know, the strain and the results of that strain upon their health. It ought to be possible to get through with our daily business by half-past ten every night. At the same time, unless some other changes are made as well, I would rather leave this to the general good sense of the House. But I hope my hon. friend will not lose heart and courage and that, having gained a moral victory this time, he will trudge on until he gets a more substantial measure of success.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would like to say a word, in accordance with the wish expressed by my right hon. friend the First Minister that we should give our views regarding these proposed changes in the customs of the House. I listened with a great deal of attention to the arguments given by my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. Wright). I think he has taken a step in the right direction, and I think it would be a still better step if we were to confine ourselves to day sittings, such as he has indicated in the very exhaustive research my hon. friend has made into the practice of other countries. From the information given us by my hon. friend, it appears that in all civilized countries, except England, they have but one sitting a day, and except also probably in the dependencies of England which are governed by British customs. But in England the conditions are totally different. It would be very difficult there to have the meetings of the House, as in other countries, from two or half-past one until six. The members of the House of Commons in England are in general men of leisure, their habits are different from ours, and it is more convenient for them to meet at three o'clock and sit in the evening. But there they have endeavoured to limit the night sittings to the twelve o'clock rule except towards the end of the session. I have seen many members here whose health has been seriously affected by these late sittings, to which most of us are unaccustomed, because most of us are busy men as well outside of parliament—professional men or men who have other business that requires their attention—which renders it doubly difficult for us to withstand the fatigue of evening sessions. We made a very beneficial change last year. And my experience of our sittings on Wednesdays is that we get through a great deal of business and that the change from the evening sitting has been a very satisfactory one.

My hon. friend has stated that the House is a 'word factory,' and that idea has been expressed by other speakers. My own belief is that, if we had strictly business sittings from two to six or half past six, the discursive style, the style of long speeches which exists in this House, I think, more than in any other House I have any knowledge of, would be greatly curtailed. I am not in favour of that rule which prevails in the United States of limiting the time of the speaker, or allowing the handing in of a written speech for incorporation in the record of the debates. I do not think that is consonant with the spirit of our institutions. As my hon. friend is well aware, it would be impossible, in the House of Commons in England, to take up the time which some speeches take up in this House; because, by common consent in that chamber, the aggression would not be endured. I am sure that all who have any knowledge of the working of the House of Commons of England will agree with me in that. I believe that even Mr. Gladstone himself, when he proposed the second reading of the Home Rule Bill, occupied only a little more than an hour, and then he apologized for taking up so much time. I believe they got through more business in half an hour than we get through in a week here. I merely rose because we were invited by the Prime Minister to state our opinions. I regard this as a most important subject, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Wright) has brought it before us in a very forcible manner. And I would go further. I think we should try the day sittings. We should have plenty to do in the evening, and I believe the work of the session would be greatly facilitated.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). With the exception of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I am the senior member of this House now present. There are only three other members of the House who are my seniors—the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), the former Minister of Railways and member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Having put in twenty-five years in this House, I have come to the conclusion that we ought to make a change, and I would suggest that the change should be made in this way: let the House meet at ten o'clock in the morning and sit until one, then meet again at two and sit until six, and then adjourn. Our committees could meet at eight o'clock. This would relieve the cabinet ministers, as they could have from eight to ten to do their council work and prepare their business for next day, very few of them being members of committees. The majority of members would be relieved from attendance on committees for most of the evenings of the week, only one or two committees meet in one day. Our committees now usually have only two hours for their business, meeting at eleven and adjourning at one, and they would have as long time in the evening and be able to adjourn at ten. The ministers would benefit by not being compelled to sit in this House until twelve or one o'clock at night. And I believe the House would do more work and do it with less strain upon the health of members.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. If it is the wish of the Prime Minister that the resolution should be withdrawn, I shall certainly withdraw it. If I have failed I have certainly failed in a splendid cause.

Motion withdrawn.

ANGLO-JAPANESE CONVENTION.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada and the imperial authorities, and a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada, and any person or persons, and of all reports communicated to the government in respect to the Anglo-Japanese convention regarding Canada.

He said: The object of this motion is to bring to the attention of the House and to the knowledge of members the correspondence which preceded the adoption for Canada of the Anglo-Japanese convention of 1906. My principal desire in proposing this motion to the House is to find out what representations were made to this government, either by the Imperial government, by the government of Japan, or by other parties, as the motion indicates, concerning particularly Article 1 of the treaty of commerce between Great Britain and Japan which was signed on July 16, 1894, and to which Canada adhered under the agreement which was made at Tokio on January 31, 1906. I will read that article as it is important:

The subjects of each of the two high contracting parties should have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the Dominions and possessions of the other contracting party, and should enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

They should have free and easy access to the courts of justice in pursuit and defence of their rights; they should be at liberty equally with native subjects to choose and employ lawyers, advocates and representatives to pursue and defend their rights before such courts, and in all other matters connected with the administration of justice they should enjoy all the rights and privileges enjoyed by native subjects.

In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel; to the possession of goods and effects of any kind; to the succession to personal estate, by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the subjects of each contracting party should enjoy in the dominions and possessions of the other the same privileges, liberties and rights, and should be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation. The subjects of each of the contracting parties should enjoy in the dominions and possessions of the other entire liberty of conscience, and, subject to the laws, ordinances and regulations, should enjoy the right of private or public exercise of their worship, and also the right of burying their respective countrymen according to their religious customs, in such suitable and convenient places as may be established and maintained for that purpose.

They should not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are, or may be, paid by native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.

This clause, I say, is important. It has given rise in this country to a great deal of comment on the part of many people who take a deep interest in immigration, and who severely condemn our adhering to such an agreement. But there are other clauses in the treaty that have a commercial aspect, and in regard to which we would like to have the correspondence, which, I believe, has never been laid upon the table of the House. There must have been quite an extensive correspondence between the home government and the government of the Dominion. I think I am not mistaken when I say that all the important dependencies of Great Britain were excluded from the operation of the treaty. I quote from article 19 of the treaty of commerce between Great Britian and Japan, in 1894:

The stipulations of the present treaty shall be applicable, so far as the laws permit, to all the colonies and foreign possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, excepting to those hereinafter named, that is to say, except to India, the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Cape, Natal, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia, Western Australia and New Zealand. Provided always that the stipulations of the present treaty shall be made applicable to any of the above-named colonies or foreign possessions on whose behalf notice to that effect shall have been given to the Japanese government by Her Britannic Majesty's representative at Tokio within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty.

I am not aware that any of those dependencies except Canada has agreed to the treaty, but I have no positive information on that subject. They were given two years in which to adhere to it, and it was only in 1906 that we, through the British ambassador in Japan, adhered to the treaty and to all the clauses contained in it. Now, Sir, that stipulation of a free entry into this country of Japanese subjects is a very grave matter indeed, and I think we should see all the correspondence on that subject as soon as possible. I said there had been correspondence between the home government and the government here. There may have been some correspondence also between this government and the Japanese consul here, possibly some correspondence also with Japan, although I presume that direct communication could only be made through the colonial office and the embassy in Japan. But the motion aims further to get all the correspondence between the government of Canada and any person or persons, and the reports communicated to the government in respect of that Anglo-Japanese convention regarding Canada. I think it was about the time this convention was entered into that our Mr. Preston, who had been a long time controller of European immigration, ceased to occupy that post in Europe, and he was sent elsewhere. I believe at that time he was sent to Japan, if I mistake not, at any rate I saw that he had visited that country, and I presume that in the exercise of the new functions which the government gave him he had occasion to send in reports and communications to this government which had come directly from that country. It would be interesting to see these reports, and to see the recommendations contained therein.

I do not wish at this moment to go into the general question and to discuss here the pretensions which were lately put forward during the severe agitation that took place in British Columbia. But it must de obvious to every member of this House that an agreement such as the one which I have read to the House must necessarily infringe a principle for which I myself, and many other members of this House, have time and again contended; that is to say, that we should at all times, and in the interest of this country, and in favour, not only of the working classes largely interested, but of all classes, keep and maintain an absolute control over our immigration. This is an absolute abandonment of that principle. Now I venture to say, for my own part, that I would never give my adhesion to any such principle nor to its insertion in any treaty with any country. We have here an exceptional situation. We have an immense country, a sparse population, widely scattered, immense natural resources which are becoming daily better known. There are other countries, such as the empire of Japan, where the population is beyond the capacity of the country, and there are European countries where the population is extremely dense and where there is a continual tendency to overflow. What more natural than that the population of those countries should in large numbers, as no doubt they will in the ordinary course of things, tend towards this country where there are great facilities for settlement It is, therefore, our duty, as I have often said, and others have said it better than I, to maintain absolute control over our immigration, so that we can stop it, or modify it, and regulate as we like the people who are coming to make this country their home.

Very far from pretending that we have any dislike for the Japanese, for my own part I have the greatest possible admiration for that people. I consider that their civilization has advanced in a marvellous manner within the past half century. They are a wonderful people, and I admire them greatly, and in many respects I am prepared to admit that they are our superiors. But there is a fact that we cannot forget, that experience has proved beyond all doubt. The civilization, the modes of life, of his oriental people are entirely different from our own. I will not discuss at present whether our civilization is superior or whether their mode of life, their method of government are better or worse than our own. Suffice it to say that they are entirely different, and the best proof of the immense difficulty of assimilation between oriental people and people of Aryan extraction is the fact that although for centuries past we have had establishments in the far east we have not assimilated with those people in any way. The establishments we have had at Hong Kong, Shanghai and all other places in the east, where Europeans are stationed, have remained isolated from the surrounding population. All the writers I have read on the subject have declared that the assimilation of these two races was most improbable, and indeed was impossible. Therefore it seems to me there is nothing in any way offensive in the attitude which I take, and many others with me, that we are opposed, in the present state of the development of our country, and in our present circumstances, to any surrender of our absolute right, given us, probably, for that very purpose at the time of confederation, to control immigration. There is no European country, as I have said, with whom, if we made a treaty, I would consent to the insertion of such a general clause as that. I foresee that the government will say that at the time that treaty was approved in this parliament there was no question as to these difficulties that have since arisen. My answer to that is that at that time we had the absolute assurance of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that there would be no considerable immigration from Japan. He must have had some ground for that statement and the ground will probably be found when the correspondence and the reports which it is the object of this motion to have brought down are placed on the table of the House. But, under any circumstances, I am prepared to say to-day that the legislation went through too hastily. I do not know whether it was such legislation as the House had under its consideration yesterday which went through at the last moment of the session, but there is no doubt that, at any rate, from the question which was put at that time by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) or by some member in the House, objection was made and that it was overruled, or not considered because of the assurance we had from the Prime Minister. At that time and since we have been on very friendly terms with the empire of Japan, and I, for one would be very sorry to utter a single word which might be interpreted as not favouring those relations. Far from it. The empire of Japan is the ally of Great Britain and we are in very close union with the empire, forming part of it, and, for my part, I would be very pleased, to a very great degree, to see our commercial relations with the empire increased and developed and made most friendly. But, there is nothing unfriendly in the maintenance of the all-important principle that we should not be deprived of the right of exercising absolute control over our immigration. Oriental immigration, for the reasons to which I have very briefly adverted, is a particularly dangerous one. It is dangerous, not because—at least that is not the ground I take now—there is an objection to the oriental himself, but because you have there an element immensely numerous and desirous of expansion whether you consider the case of India, or Japan, or China. Japan particularly, I believe, is seeking, outside of the present limits of the empire, new spheres of settlement and establishment because her inhabitants are so numerous. There is a fundamental objection to people whose customs, whose habits and whose civilization are entirely and absolutely different, and, under those circumstances, ought we, who are at the present moment nation building, in a country where there are already different races, though all European, endeavouring to assimilate, to allow to come in absolutely unrestricted a people so much at variance, so different from ourselves ? I maintain that we should not, and I therefore consider that the government acted very incautiously, very inconsiderately, very improvidently in adhering to that clause of the treaty concluded between Great Britain and Japan. It is a clause usually adopted in treaties between European nations and under the circumstances of this treaty there was no reason for not inserting that usual, formal clause, because nobody anticipated and nobody could anticipate while treating for Great Britain that there would be any considerable invasion or immigration into Great Britain of Japanese. The thing never had occurred and never could occur, and there was no reason why that clause which is found in numberless treaties should not be inserted in this particular one. But, when we came to adhere to the treaty we should have made at that time a restriction in regard to immigration—a restriction in favour of Japan and in favour of ourselves. There would have been nothing whatever offensive in the insertion of that restriction, it was a reserve of the most ordinary prudence and caution, and how the government came to omit it I cannot understand. At any rate we will have, if this motion is adopted by the House, all the papers and correspondence, perhaps the justification of the assurance which was at that time given by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, and we will be in a better position to appreciate this very grave situation.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I have no fault to find whatever with the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), with the spirit which characterized them or with the manner in which they were expressed. The House is entitled to the fullest information upon this subject. My hon. friend has very properly drawn attention to the fact that our civilization and the civilization of the oriental nations is so much at variance that it will be difficult for many years to come, if not for generations, perhaps for ever, to remove these objections which exist at the present day. I am quite sure they exist in a remarkable degree—in a degree that we cannot forget and certainly the considerations which my hon. friend presented to the House a few moments ago were in our minds when we determined to adhere to the treaty which had been negotiated between Japan and Great Britain some fourteen years ago. The House is entitled to have the fullest information upon the subject, it must have it and therefore the government have no objection to the motion and agree that it should be carried. I may say to my hon. friend, however, that for reasons which he will appreciate, it would not be advisable that these papers should be brought down and made public while Mr. Lemieux is still in Japan in connection with this very subject. We hope that Mr. Lemieux will be back in a very short time, but at all events if,—I will leave it to my hon. friend himself—in the opinion of the House the delay should be unduly great, the papers can be called for.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my right hon. friend allow me to ask him a question ? He has spoken of Mr. Lemieux. On what ground does Mr. Lemieux stand as our representative in Tokio ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is difficult to exactly define on what ground Mr. Lemieux stands. We have, as my hon. friend knows, no diplomatic status anywhere, but Mr. Lemieux has been introduced to the authorities at Tokio by His Majesty's ambassador, and it is under His Majesty's ambassador that negotiations—if negotiations they can be called—are being conducted, or that the representations are being made by Mr. Lemieux.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION—TENDERS.

Mr. JACOB T. SCHELL (Glengarry) moved for:

A return showing: 1. The estimated quantities used by the Transcontinental Railway Commission for arriving at the moneyed values of the tenders for the construction of the 50 miles, more or less, from Moncton westerly; for the construction of 62 miles, more or less, from Grand Falls westerly; from the south side of the St. Lawrence river, easterly 150 miles; for the 45 miles, more or less, westerly from near La Tuque; and for the 150 miles easterly from near Abitibi, known as the Abitibi section.

2. The various prices which each tenderer placed opposite the several items in the schedule or form of tender.

3. The total amount so ascertained of each tender.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a year ago a somewhat similar motion was placed before the House with reference to a contract which had been let upon the Transcontinental Railway previous to the contract referred to in this motion. I ask for the returns specified in this motion for two reasons. In the first place I wish the information asked for to be brought down; in the second place I wish to refer to the manner in which the Transcontinental Railway Commission is not only asking for tenders but to the manner in which they act after the tenders are received. A special Act was passed with reference to the Transcontinental Railway and in that Act it is specially mentioned that the contracts shall be given to the lowest tender, and so it becomes a matter of very great public importance that the details of these contracts should be given to the public. We certainly have a right to get these details when they are moved for in the House, as I move for them now, but I think they should be given to the public without such formality. It is a well established custom among the railroad companies of Canada and other countries; it is the custom of the Ontario government, to give this information publicly. For the information of hon. members of the House who may not be conversant with the details of contracting and of railroad contracting in particular, I shall refer to the course generally pursued in such a matter. The first thing done towards building a railway is to survey a trial line; and if that trial line is thoroughly satisfactory a trial permanent line is the next step taken. If upon going over the gradients, elevations, and curvatures, it is found that upon that survey a good permanent line can be established then the permanent survey is finally made. After this permanent survey is completed, calculations are made as to the estimated cost based upon the estimated quantities. I presume that has been the practice followed by the Transcontinental Railway Commission. One reason why I do not refer to the contracts originally awarded is, that probably—and I speak advisedly—probably the estimated quantities were not actually ascertained over the entire extent of the contracts that were first let, or if they were so ascertained there were immediately variations, alterations and changes in the route, and I have it from one of the best authorities that actually the first contracts were not based upon properly ascertained estimated quantities. I direct my attention to the last contracts for the reason that I believe these contracts were entered into after the surveys were thoroughly completed and the quantities properly estimated, upon which to base the contemplated value of the contract. I repeat that this is a question of public importance and I propose to demonstrate that it is in the interest of the government, in the interest of intending contractors, and in the interest of the country that the utmost publicity be given whenever these contracts are let. I propose to show why, if this is done, not only the government, the parties interested, and the public will be safeguarded, but that there cannot be any ground whatever for any suspicion that everything is not done fairly, openly, above board and without any possible chance of the slightest hint of wrong-doing in connection with it. Whether that is the case at present or not, I will not discuss. My information is not absolute, but I will say this much with regard to the contracts that have been already let, that the variation in the price, in other words the total amounts of the tenders ascertained from estimated quantities have varied so largely that no question of interference with the matter so far could have taken place. But that may not always be the case. I wish to explain the procedure now so that every person who hears me may be thoroughly conversant with it. As I stated before, the estimated quantities must be ascertained before the contract can be let intelligently. Every railway company, before it lets a contract for the construction to go on (as is usually done in these days at so much per yard of excavation, so much per foot of timber, so much per ton of iron, and so on), every railway bases the cost or the value of the tender upon the estimated cost of quantities. Now, having your estimated quantities and your tender based upon the estimated quantities, the next thing is to figure out the money value of these tenders, and especially at that point I wish to place it beyond cavil as to what should be done. Let me give you an example to illustrate the customary procedure. A few days ago I received a letter from the Canadian Pacific Railway stating that they proposed to let a certain number of miles of railway to be constructed. They wrote to me: Inclosed you will find a list of estimated quantities, if you wish to tender for this work we will supply you with profiles and any other information needed at the head office in Montreal. I went to the head office of the Canadian Pacific in Montreal and obtained a profile without charge; the Transcontinental Railway Commission charges $1 a mile for profiles if you wish to go out over the work. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Northern, and every other railway that I know of, provide enough profiles for the use of all who wish to tender, make no charge for them and do not ask you to return them. In tendering on Canadian Pacific Railway work you are given a profile mile by mile, and this profile gives the estimated quantities. I have here the profile of mile 12. It sets out solid rock excavation, 2,923 yards; loose rock, so many yards, and so on with embankment, grubbing, excavation, concrete in abutments, concrete in culverts, concrete pipe, rip-rap, excavations for pipe, timber—every item is given mile for mile, and at the end of each division the entire amount is tabulated. When they ask for tenders, they give a list of these quantities. I have here an estimate for 25 miles in which the number of acres of clearing, the number of squares of cross-logging, the yards of excavation of different materials and the quantities of different materials required in construction, are set out fully. This is the way in which the Canadian Pacific Railway does its work. When the Ontario government let out the building of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, they did it upon precisely the same lines, excepting that they did not send out estimated quantities, but if you called at the office, as I did myself, you could see the estimated quantities. They gave a profile and all the information they possibly could that would be of assistance in tendering. A few days after the awarding of the contract the Ontario government issued, as coming from the commissioners of the railway, a pamphlet showing the particulars of all tenders. This will be found at page 16 of sessional paper No. 49 of the Ontario Legislature, 1902. There you have set forth in tabulated form the name of each tenderer, the estimated quantity of each class of work or material, the tenderer's price per unit of work or material, and his total price for each item in the tender. That was published broadcast; there could be no question of any tampering; there could be no question of any favouritism, that is giving publicity to public tenders and publicity of the right kind. When the first tenders on the National Transcontinental Railway were given I asked the right hon. the Prime Minister if he proposed to issue such a report as was issued by the Commissioners of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, and he said: No. I thought it was right to have issued such a list; that it was right in the interests of the government and for that reason I have brought this matter up in the House. At the time the first contract was awarded, a number of weeks elapsed before the contractors were decided upon, and I remember reading in the Ottawa papers, as well as in other papers, a long description of the wonderful system that had been devised in the Transcontinental office by which no engineer knew what part of any one individual's tender he was working on. It was a wonderful system; something so supremely able and so elaborate that no newspaper had been able to describe it. There was no more necessity for any of that childish nonsense than there is to try to climb to the moon. There is no necessity to take a week to publish the figures of two dozen contracts. There is no necessity to cast suspicion upon the integrity or honour of the engineering class of the Dominion of Canada, even by implication. There is no need of having an engineer handle the matter at all; a school child who could multiply 1,200 by 30 and 1,500,000 by 30 could tell the cost of 1,200 acres of clearing at $30 an acre, and of 1,500,000 yards of excavation at 30 cents, and by adding up the results could within a few hours tell the value of any tender sent into any railway office. When these figures are published openly so that any one can study them, then the government may stand before the world and know that no contractor can gainsay his own figures and no person could find any fault. Some time ago in talking with a gentleman having something to do with the Transcontinental Railway he said to me: Oh, estimated quantities may get you into trouble the word 'estimated quantities' is a sort of guarantee and so forth. They are simply estimated quantities. They are based upon the estimates tendered upon railway work. No man, however able, can look upon a rock cut or a cut, when the formation of the country about it would indicate that in all probability a part of that is earth and a part rock—there is no power under the sun that can tell us as to the actual quantity. That is estimated and must be estimated. But if you safeguard simply by putting in the words 'quantities not guaranteed,' there can be no objection and no one can make any claim. It is not like building a wall, where your walls are one foot and a half thick and they are built of brick and are absolutely defined. Railway work is something that is entirely a matter to be found out, so far as the cost goes. That can only be told after the construction is over, not before, and the estimated quantities are simply a matter of opinion or guess or judgment, just as you may wish to call it. An engineer, looking over the ground, would put down his soundings. He will say there is a good bottom, but he knows nothing about it until the actual construction goes on. Where he thought there was a good bottom, he may find there is no bottom at all. This summer, where we had a section passed over as good bottom, I was obliged to drive a pile one hundred and four feet before I found good bottom. You cannot tell what the rock, sand, or earth of a country may develop, until after that cut is out. Persons who have the experience and know anything about this matter, know that estimated quantities are simply estimates and nothing else in railway work. I have discussed this matter with the commission, and the commissioners are able men. I understand they are four of the ablest men that can be found in the Dominion for the purpose for which they were appointed. But if you handle a business of this kind, I do not care whether you employ shirt makers or green grocers, or what the commissioners may be, put out your tenders in that way upon the estimated quantities, and there can be no question of any claim upon the government or that commission. I am asking to have this return for the information it will give, and I am making these few remarks, backed up by the evidence of railway construction in this country, backed up by the experience of the Temiscaming and Northern roads; and I trust that the commissioners, in their own interests, will let their contracts, as other companies and governments have done. While it is of no benefit to a contractor that these matters should come out, they are all curious and anxious to know. I say it is no benefit in the matter of estimated quantities, I will give over a piece of work and will not always agree with those estimated quantities; but if in going down past a bluff, I see that the geological formation assures me, in my judgment, that there will be a large amount of rock underneath apparently sand or clay cuts, I shall know there will be a great deal more work and put in my tender accordingly. But it is a matter of guess or judgment just as in the case of the engineer who puts down his estimated quantities. But the fact remains that the estimated quantities must be the only basis on which a tender is asked for and put in. I hope that this will have a dual effect—this order which I have put upon the paper.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. H. BELAND (Beauce). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether he intends distributing to the members of the House copies of the French tariff with respect to the items contained in schedule A of the treaty now submitted to the House ? The items contained in that schedule comprise Canadian products entitled to special favour, or to the minimum tariff in the French market ? That would indicate that there is a maximum and a minimum tariff in France and in order to judge of what special favour or what preference the Canadian products in the list are entitled to in the French market it is necessary that the maximum and minimum tariff of France should be distributed amongst the members of this House.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the information is being prepared and will be distributed.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with the French treaty may I ask the minister if he would have a note made on the information as to the countries that at present enjoy France's minimum tariff ?

Mr. FIELDING. The French minimum tariff ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the French minimum tariff. It is very important in connection with one part of the treaty as to shipments of goods.

Mr. FIELDING. The list of countries which enjoy the French minimum tariff ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. I will endeavour to meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Bill (No. 33) respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 34) respecting the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company. —Mr. Sam. Hughes.

SUPPLY—FRAUDULENT CIRCULAR TO IMMIGRANTS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Supply I would like to call the attention of the government to a rather remarkable circular which has been placed in my hands, issued in one of the large cities in Canada, in which the gentleman who signs it, after enumerating a number of kinds of business which he is willing to transact, goes on as follows :—

Issue marriage licenses, citizen papers, make all kinds of legal papers, passports, get permits for old or crippled people to be allowed to land in Canada, &c.

It is rather a remarkable statement to be floating around the country in the form of a circular. I thought it right to call the attention of the government to it. The letter which accompanies this circular and which is from a very reputable person, who is engaged in the charitable work of assisting men who are out of employment and who have recently come to this country, states that it is due to a regular business of this kind carried on in some parts of the country that we have many of the helpless people in Canada at the present time who are to be found in all of the larger cities. I shall be very happy to send the circular to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that they may consider whether some action ought not to be taken with respect to an advertisement of that kind scattered broadcast among the immigrants of the city to which I allude.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would be very glad if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) would send me over the circular. I shall certainly see that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) takes cognizance of it.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR REMOVAL OF CROPS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I noticed that yesterday, in another place, a member of the government made rather an extended explanation in reference to the arrangement which had been made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) with certain of the banks looking towards the facilitation of the removal of grain from the Northwest. Several questions have been put to the Minister of Finance in this House but he has pleaded that it was not quite opportune or advisable that explanations should be given and this side of the House has given way as it felt it might for a time to the plea which was made. But I think that is all taken away when a gentleman, being a member of the government, lets it all out as far as he has it in his position in another place. I sympathize a little with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in being forestalled in a matter in his own department, but I think it is due to the House that he should be equally as alert as his much older colleague.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am unable to say anything in reply at present. I asked my hon. friend opposite to withhold his application for this information for a reasonable time, and he was good enough to consent. I think it is in the public interest that we should not make public the arrangement now, and probably there is still enough behind what has appeared in the press to make it interesting when the papers come down. I hope that shortly after Christmas we shall be able to discuss the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Will there be an injunction placed on the elderly member of the cabinet who seems rather anxious to satisfy public curiosity?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I shall have to take that into consideration.

DRUGS AND PATENT MEDICINES.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Might I ask if it is the intention of the government to bring down this session a Bill dealing with drugs and patent medicines? I put the question the other day when my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) informed me that the matter was under consideration. It might remain under consideration a very long time, and I think we ought to know whether it is his intention to bring down such a measure on not. If it is, I shall be very glad ; but otherwise I shall have to bring the matter up in a different way.

Hon. WILLIAM TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). I think I will be able to give a very definite answer in the course of a few days. The matter has not been overlooked. We have had several proposed Bills before us and are considering them now .

THE ALL RED LINE.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I notice in the despatches of the Canadian Associated Press that Mr. Sifton has with him in London the Dominion geographer, and the tenor of the despatch would seem to indicate that Mr. Sifton was using this official in the matter of his negotiations with reference to the proposed fast line in a way rather to give the impression that he is acting on behalf of this government. What is the particular purpose for which the Canadian geographer is away from his duties here and dancing attendance on Mr. Clifford Sifton in London?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. White, the Dominion geographer, is in Europe at my request in order to collect data concerning the lines of steamers now plying on the Atlantic from all ports, with the view of obtaining information as to the possibility of reducing the time. We have been in communication with Mr. Sifton upon this point all along, and I see no objection to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it supposed by the government that the Dominion geographer is the man best qualified to get data with reference to trade and traffic matters, such as are involved in this fast line steamship communication, and are his expenses being paid?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. His expenses are paid, and I am informed that he is very competent for that work.

POST OFFICE AT TRENT BRIDGE, EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). I would like to ask the right hon. the First Minister, who, I believe, is acting Postmaster General during the absence of Mr. Lemieux, when the post office at Trent Bridge in the county of East Northumberland will be reopened? Early in October the man who had been postmaster there a number of years left for the Northwest. Since then the post office has been closed. This is one of the oldest post offices in the county and its closing puts the farmers to great inconvenience. Some have to drive eight or nine miles to get their mail. Several petitions were sent to the government recommending certain men to be appointed as postmaster, but there were other petitions asking that these men be not appointed. It would be only just to the people in that part of East Northumberlaud to have this post office reopened as early as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the name?

Mr. OWEN. Trent Bridge.

THE GRAIN COMMISSION.

Mr. STAPLES. When will the report of the Royal Grain Commission be brought down? It was promised a few days ago. This is very important information to which our western farmers are looking forward.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have the word of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this report will be brought down as soon as it is received.

POST OFFICE—PARLIAMENTARY DOCUMENTS.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if anything has been done regarding a matter about which I spoke to him a short time ago. Our parliamentary documents are not put in the post office as formerly, but are scattered all over the lobby, which causes great inconvenience to members and also causes loss, through these documents being appropriated by other people and not returned.

Mr. FIELDING. This is a matter which concerns the Committee of Internal Economy. That committee will meet shortly and deal with it in such a way as to meet the convenience of members.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Governor General's Secretary's Office—salaries, $11,937.50; contingencies, including salary of Miss Gilbertson at $650 per annum, and allowance of $300 to A. F. Sladen, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $40,600.

Mr. FIELDING. The only change there is an increase in the number of chief clerks from one to two. There are the statutory increases; the net result is an increase of $50 in the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to be made chief clerk?

Mr. FIELDING. When we ask for a vote like this it is sometimes not possible to tell who is to be appointed, but in this case I can tell that it is Mr. Walker.

Mr. FOSTER. What is Mr. Walker's present salary?

Mr. FIELDING. $1,900; the maximum of the first class; he is put in the way of promotion by being given a higher rank.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the other first class clerk?

Mr. FIELDING. The other chief clerk is Mr. C. J. Jones.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is Miss Gilbertson who is mentioned in the item?

Mr. FIELDING. Speaking from memory, Miss Gilbertson is a young lady who came out from England with His Excellency's staff and who consequently had not our civil service certificate.

Mr. FOSTER. It is an evasion of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FIELDING. Evasion is a hard word; it is a provision to make up for something the Civil Service Act lacks.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of the $300 for Mr. Sladen.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Sladen, in addition to his rank in the service acts as private secretary to His Excellency, and receives this extra amount in recognition of that face.

Office of the King's Privy Council of Canada—salaries, $32,175; contingencies, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not suppose it required an explanation as there is a decrease of $1,275.

Mr. FOSTER. That is so extraordinary that I should have thought the right hon. gentleman would be on his feet at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The explanation is that one of the officers has been dropped and there has been a promotion of one or two of the clerks. Last year there were two first-class clerks, this year one. There were six junior clerks, one has been promoted and the other has been dropped. I do not remember the names but the promotions have been made by way of seniority.

Mr. FOSTER. They have been all by seniority ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as I remember, yes.

Department of Militia and Defence—salaries, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $63,500; contingencies, $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. We are at a disadvantage inasmuch as the parts of the Auditor General's Report already brought down do not cover these items of civil government.

Mr. FIELDING. There are several of the departments not included in the volume brought down, and if the hon. gentleman wishes them to stand over it is a reasonable request.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item is not in the report brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this should stand.

Mr. FIELDING. Very well.

Department of the Secretary of State—salaries, $46,387.50; contingencies, $7,500.

Mr. FIELDING. The Secretary of State informs me that there is no increase in the staff. One junior second-class clerk will be dropped and replaced by a third-class clerk. The statutory increases only are asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. And the statutory increases are all given ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you the names of the clerks whose salaries have been increased ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, but I think I can safely say that every clerk who is eligible has received the statutory increase. I know that is the general rule.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that apply to officers in all classes.

Mr. FIELDING. Wherever an officer has not reached the maximum of his class he gets the statutory increase.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BERGERON. And no new clerks have been appointed ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Secretary of State informs me there is no increase of staff whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is meant by 'clerical assistance;' by whom is that work performed ; are the persons who render it members of the civil service ; have they passed the examination or are they persons taken in to do this temporary work.

Mr. FIELDING. In this case they would have to be persons qualified under the Civil Service law.

Mr. HENDERSON. And they are so qualified ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Unless the words 'Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act' are mentioned, the Act must apply.

Department of Public Printing and Stationery—salaries, $44,475; contingencies, $9,100.

Mr. FIELDING. The Secretary of State who has charge of this branch informs me that one junior second-class clerk is dropped, the statutory increases account for the difference between this vote and the net decrease of $135.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Mr. P. M. Draper in the employ of the Printing Bureau ?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot tell ; I shall have to get information for my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that this Mr. Draper is a candidate for what is known as the Board of Control in this city. What is the policy of the department in that respect ? In some parts of the province of Ontario intimation has been given that public officials must not be municipal candidates. How is it then that we have a municipal candidate in Ottawa in the person of a gentleman who has a leading position in the Printing Bureau. Has the minister ever heard of Mr. P. M. Draper ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have seen the gentleman's name occasionally in the press, but I was not aware until now that he was in the service. My official tells me, that he knows from his general knowledge of the public service that Mr. Draper is an officer of the Printing Bureau. I am informed that some gentlemen in the service are engaged in municipal affairs, so that it is quite evident that there can be no such rule as my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. BENNETT. However, the hearty concurrence of the department is with Mr. Draper in his present candidature.

Mr. FIELDING. I really do not know. If the gentleman happened to be a candidate in the ward in which I live I would not like to guarantee that I would vote for him. I would have to hear both sides.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to call attention to the fact that the item under discussion is not included in that part of the Auditor General's Report which has been brought down. It is in the volume that is missing.

Mr. FIELDING. The portion relating to the Department of the Secretary of State is down and I thought this item was included in that. Apparently it is not, and if it is desired that it should be held over, I have no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. We want to find the name of the gentleman who is running for municipal honours in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. FIELDING. My official tells me he is an officer in the Printing Bureau.

Mr. BENNETT. I think he is rather an important officer and he has had a pretty rapid promotion. He is very active in labour circles, too, and comes to the assistance of the government when necessary. What is his salary?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not state his salary off-hand, but I shall be happy to get the information later on.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the minister the number of hands in the Printing Bureau at present?

Mr. FIELDING. No. If hon. gentlemen want any information of that kind of which I have not a personal knowledge I would suggest that they mention it now and I shall be very happy to get it.

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to an employee of the Printing Bureau becoming a candidate for municipal honours, I think it is important that we should understand that if he is elected a municipal officer and is called upon to give a certain amount of his time to the city of Ottawa, we should not pay him for that portion of his time which he gives to municipal affairs, but which belongs really to this country. I think a man who gets a good salary, as this gentleman does, should devote all his time to the service of the country and not divide it between the city and the country. It strikes me that there is a principle here which the government should take notice of. I would be entirely opposed to any man having anything to do with the municipal government of Ottawa so long as he remains in the civil service. If he wants to go into municipal politics he should throw up his position in the service.

Mr. FIELDING. While I am rather inclined myself to favour the view of my hon. friend, it may be difficult to lay down a general rule. Mr. Draper, I am informed, is not in the strict sense of the word a civil servant, though he is a salaried employee of the Printing Bureau. It is a debatable question whether an official of that kind might not become a member of the municipal council, which is a body without pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is a candidate for the Board of Control, the members of which are to receive pay.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that that is a salaried office, and I have no hesitation in saying that if Mr. Draper should be elected he would probably have to resign his position in the Bureau, but I do not know enough of the duties of the board of control to speak positively. On general principles an officer who receives pay as a public servant should devote his whole time to his office and should not receive pay as a municipal officer at the same time. Whether a public official should be an alderman or not is a larger question, and while I would prefer that he should not be, at the same time I would not like to lay down any general rule.

Mr. FOSTER. That brings up another question—how far are employees of the Dominion government to be allowed to engage in Dominion elections and provincial elections? I think they stand on a quite different plane, and, if I am not wrong, the Prime Minister himself has on more than one occasion in this House given decided expression to his opinion as to the participation actively in Dominion or provincial elections of persons who are in the employ of the government. There was, in fact, a resolution passed, and passed unanimously by the House on that subject, while, if my memory is not at fault—if it is, my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works may be able to give me the information—an employee of the government on the Intercolonial Railway recently not only took a part in matters connected with Dominion politics, but was very actively engaged in trying to get for himself the nomination for the Dominion parliament at the recent party convention in the county of York. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works was present at that convention. I have heard that there were very lively times there. It is stated that when the ballots were all counted the number that came out of the hat was about 400, but that when the delegates were counted the number was only about 150. That brings up also the question of methods in party elections, and I am quite sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, with the extreme sensitiveness that characterizes him with regard to contributions to election funds, must very decidedly have frowned down any attempt on the part of a Dominion employee to change the position of affairs, in a party sense, in the county of York. Probably he did not understand that that was a rule of this House or that his leader the Prime Minister not only gave his adhesion to that rule by voting for it, but also strongly expressed himself in favour of it. I think we ought to have an explanation as to whether this is all talk which hon. gentlemen opposite may give to the electors in the way of resolutions and fine sentiments, to be entirely disregarded in practical work, or whether it is to be made an efficient rule.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I may say to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat that it is all talk as to the part which Mr. Allan, the gentleman to whom he no doubt refers, took at the convention in the county of York. Mr. Allan was not present at the convention. I was there but——

Mr. DANIEL. They had a lively time there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Allan had nothing to do with the matter. There was a very lively interest taken in the nomination of the candidates; I was glad to see that the names of three very prominent and popular gentlemen were submitted to the convention and there seemed to be a very strong feeling among the friends of all the candidates that whoever would be chosen would be sure to carry the constituency, and that is perhaps why more interest was taken in the convention than is ordinarily the case, especially where it is not thought that the candidate has much chance of success. So far as Mr. Allan is concerned I may say, having been in the county, that I do not think there was anything in his conduct which was at all inconsistent with the position which he occupies in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. Of course, as Mr. Allan had contested the county some years ago and is a very popular man there, hon. gentlemen will understand that he would quite naturally have friends who would be desirous of having him nominated as a candidate. Had he been nominated I am quite sure he would have felt it his duty to immediately resign his position on the Intercolonial, but I can assure my hon. friends that he took no part in the convention. With reference to New Brunswick matters, with which my hon. friend is less familiar than he used to be, I would suggest that he should not accept all that he sees in the newspapers, particularly the partisan papers representing his side of politics as the truth.

Mr. FOSTER. I have taken that lesson much to heart, and certain things that were stated in the papers as having been said by gentlemen high in administrative circles, I have learned to treat with little attention and to give but little adhesion to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to say a word or two partly in support of what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said. He has expressed a desire that the government should give some expression of opinion as to whether or not there is a policy with regard to Dominion officials entering into the arena of Dominion or local politics. I take it that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) disapproves entirely of the idea that any one in the employ of the government should participate in party affairs or should seek office at the hands of electors as a party candidate. In this he is apparently enunciating the policy of his party and I wish to refer to a case in my own constituency, about which I did not intend to complain and do not now complain, but since my hon. friend is anxious about this matter I may say that in my own constituency an employee of this government has certainly taken a very active part in politics. He has been the candidate of his party in a political fight; he has been successful, but no complaint has been made by anybody on behalf of his party, and I hope that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will see that a complaint is made.

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot hear a word of what you say.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did not intend it for you.

Mr. BERGERON. Speak louder, we cannot appreciate it.

Department of the Interior—salaries, $190,012.50; contingencies, $36,900.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The sum of $182,050 was voted for civil government salaries for the fiscal year 1907-8, and it has been estimated that it will require $190,012.50 for this service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1909, an increase of $7,962.50. This increase includes statutory increases provided for clerks eligible for the same, $4,924; promotion of J. M. Roberts and T. Marchand to chief clerkships at $1,000, $3,800; of A. R. Morrissette to a second-class clerkship at $1,200, or $5,000 for these three promotions. There is also a difference in estimating for the salaries of three third-class clerks. This gives a total increase of something over $10,000, but there is $2,000 deduction to be made from this on account of the salaries of the gentlemen promoted in their former ranks, leaving the net increase at $7,962.50.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is Wagner still in the employ of your department?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is he getting any increase this year?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Wagner's salary does not come under the head of civil government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many officials are there altogether in the inside service of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. OLIVER. One hundred and forty-nine.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many were there this time last year?

Mr. OLIVER. One hundred and forty-six.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will look at page 13 of the estimates he will find that information.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the necessity urged by the department for two more chief clerks?

Mr. OLIVER. It was thought that in the interest of the administration of the department Mr. Roberts, the gentleman who has charge of the registration and who has conducted his branch with very great satisfaction, should have the rank of a chief clerk, as he had charge of a very important branch of the work and was doing it very well. The other gentlemen, Mr. Marchand, was assistant to the chief accountant and it was thought reasonable that, on account of length of service and ability, he should also receive that promotion.

Mr. HAGGART. Ability or qualifications on the part of the officials is not sufficient reason; what is the necessity for two more chief clerkships for the department?

Mr. OLIVER. It is our belief that it was in the interest of the service that these gentlemen should be given the chief clerkships for the reasons I have given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is asking about the observance of some provision of law in connection with these appointments?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it is not a question of the qualification of the individual; it is the reason assigned by the department for the necessity of two additional people of this rank.

Mr. OLIVER. I have tried to give reasons, and will try again. The reason for the promotion of Mr. Roberts to a chief clerkship was that he was in charge of an important branch of the department, a branch of such importance, and he being of such qualifications, it seemed to me, warranted his appointment to a chief clerkship in order that he might have that authority, standing and prestige necessary for the best working of the department. Mr. Marchand has been assistant accountant. It is, in the nature of things, necessary that our chief accountant should, from time to time, be absent from the office here to attend to the work of the department in other places, leaving some other person in charge of the accounts branch for considerable periods of time. It seemed to us that it was a right and proper thing that Mr. Marchand, being qualified and having the proper length of service, should have this rank of chief clerk.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) had to assign a reason for these changes in the order in council which gave the consent of the Governor General for this increase.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the terms of that order in mind, but the order was passed and there will be no objection, of course, to laying it on the table.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me these orders in council should always be brought down when a new position is created as in this case. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) seems to be under an entire misapprehension in this matter. As I understand the law and the practice, when a new position such as a chief clerkship is to be created, it must be because the public service demands it. When that office has been created, you select a suitable person to fill it. I can understand that; but I cannot understand the establishment of a new position merely for the purpose of appointing a certain person to it, which is the ground assigned by the Minister of the Interior. That is not a ground within the law, and if the order in council sets it forth as a ground, I do not think the order in council is within the law. Therefore, I would suggest to the minister that we should have the order in council before the item passes, so that we may understand the position exactly. I am not suggesting that this gentleman is not eminently qualified to fill the position. But that is not the point—the point for the committee to consider is whether the establishment of a new position of that kind is necessary in the public interest.

Mr. FIELDING. A case may arise where an officer who has been in the service a long time and has rendered particularly faithful service is at the maximum of his class. Would not the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) think that, in order to retain the services of such an officer, the minister would be justified—I am not speaking of the legal phase of the case—in promoting him to a higher rank by creating an additional chief clerkship? I think that would be a proper thing. Of course, the guiding principle in these matters is that the number of officials and their several grades shall be such as will best promote the interests of the public service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the maximum of the first-class?

Mr. FIELDING. It is $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. This officer has not reached that.

Mr. FIELDING. I am speaking of the general principle to which the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) referred, and not as to this particular case. I do not know this man at all. But I know that if you adhere rigidly to the rule that before you appoint a man to a higher rank you must consider only the question whether the work would not go on as well if he were kept in a lower rank, you would not be showing proper appreciation of a good and faithful officer; and I think that circumstances might arise which would justify the creation of an extra clerkship in order to keep a man in the service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree that if you have a work of a certain character, performed by a certain officer, and cannot have that performed except by a man at a salary and occupying a position of the character mentioned, that might be a proper consideration for such a change. But the ultimate consideration would be the interest of the public service, and not the promotion of the officer. The Minister of the Interior put it on the ground of the promotion of this officer. The consideration to be had in regard in such matters is whether or not the establishment of the office is in the public interest. Some of the considerations that have been mentioned by the minister might, undoubtedly, have weight in determining that question. But it was not in that way that the Minister of the Interior put it forward.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the minimum of a chief clerk?

Mr. FIELDING. It is $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. The same as the maximum of a first-class clerk. Then, one of the reasons given by the Minister of Finance falls to the ground. Mr. Marchand is now receiving only $1,600 and Mr. Roberts, $1,500 a year. It will be seen that it is possible, if it be deemed proper, to give these men recognition in a monetary way, without moving them up a class, which opens the way not only for a present large rise in salary, but for their advancement to the maximum of the chief clerkship. Mr. Roberts has to earn $400 yet before he reaches the top of his class, and Mr. Marchand, $300. At the regular increase of $50 a year, they could go on advancing in the position of chief clerk for years yet. There are other clerks there who are receiving more than these gentlemen, but you are promoting these two, who could do their work just as well if called first-class clerks. It does not add anything to the real ability or efficiency of a man to call him chief clerk instead of first-class clerk. And it does seem to me unfair that the minister should take these two gentlemen who have not arrived anywhere near the maximum of their class and re-arrange the order and system of the department by the creation of two new chief clerkships, the only reason given being that these two gentlemen are good officers. I think this system is being worked to a very large extent and it certainly seems to me to be outside the genius and spirit of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I seem to have succeeded in making myself very thoroughly misunderstood. I tried to say that these men were placed in these clerkships because it appeared to me that their work was such as required that they should have this rank in order that their work might be better done.

Mr. FOSTER. How?

Mr. OLIVER. Because Mr. Roberts is in charge of an important branch of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. And does it well?

Mr. OLIVER. He is the head of the branch——

Mr. FOSTER. He does it well?

Mr. OLIVER. He does it well. He has a large number of employees under him, and we believe that he would be in a better position towards his employees if we gave him this superior rank and increased salary with the result of securing better work in his branch.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way?

Mr. OLIVER. I am only giving my hon. friend the reasons which I wish placed on 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER. No, you are giving an impression. What is the ground upon which you give that impression?

Mr. OLIVER. The ground is that if there is a large room full of men working together, all on approximately the same salary and all in approximately the same rank, one of these men will not have the same authority over the others as he would have if he had a higher rank and a higher salary. I think that is an elementary principle that even my hon. friend will understand and appreciate. That was the reason why Mr. Roberts was given this increased salary and promotion. If I failed to make myself clear before, I hope I have succeeded now. I just wish, in this connection, to touch on the position taken by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. He said that if the necessity of the service requires the creation of a certain office then the office should be created, and we should find the man to fill it. That sounds very well and it reads very well.

Mr. HAGGART. It is the law.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly it is the law, and I think my hon. friend will find that we have not contravened the law but we have taken our reasoning in another way. In practice it is a very undesirable thing to create an office unless and until you have a suitable man to fill that office. In this case we created the office because we thought it was necessary, and at the time we created it we had what we believed was a suitable man to fill it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be that the order in council will show whether the reasons are satisfactory or not. I would suggest that the item stand until the order in council is produced.

Mr. CROCKET. I noticed in the public press that Mr. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration, had recently been in St. John conferring with the provincial government authorities in reference to a proposal that this government co-operate with the New Brunswick government for the promotion of immigration into that province. Is the hon. minister able to state if any arrangement has been made between the two governments for that purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. There have no definite arrangements been made, but there have been preliminary negotiations entered into. Mr. Scott did go down to Halifax and St. John in connection with his ordinary duties at these two receiving ports, and while there did discuss with the government of the two provinces the desirability of some sort of a mutual arrangement in regard to the inducement of immigration into these provinces and the distribution of such immigration as would come to them. There have been no arrangements entered into in so far as I am aware up to the present time, but there is a discussion going on in regard to the matter.

Mr. CROCKET. Would the hon. minister state if the provincial government submitted any proposal in the matter?

Mr. OLIVER. Not, that has come to my knowledge. I think there has been a preliminary discussion between Mr. Scott and the Immigration Department and the representatives of the provincial government, but in so far as I am aware, no definite proposal has yet been submitted on either side.

Mr. HAGGART. There has been an arrangement made with the Ontario government, has there not?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there is no arrangement with the Ontario government. Some time ago, if it is of interest to the committee, the Ontario Minister of Agriculture and myself had an interview, and at that interview the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario gave me to understand that he would consult his colleagues of the provincial government and possibly as a result of that consultation they would decide to withdraw their present efforts with regard to the distribution of immigrants at Toronto. That is a matter entirely of their own concern and, of course, if a conclusion is reached, it will be of their own motion and not by any agreement with us.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the hon. Minister of the Interior, in reply to a question by my hon. friend the member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) as to the number of clerks in the Interior Department to say that there were 149. I find in looking up the pages of the Auditor General's Report here that this vote is asked to pay 616 people, as I find by counting over the names. There are about 120 draughtsmen in the Department of the Interior. I wonder how the hon. gentleman reconciles the fact that when he answers my hon. friend from Lanark that there are only 149 clerks he is asking a vote to pay the salaries of some 616 clerks. Surely he refers to the permanent staff only?

Mr. OLIVER. I am only sorry we are not able to pay 616 clerks out of this vote. The vote asked for here only applies to what we call the inside service. The vote under the head of civil government covers the salaries of employees who are in what we call permanent employment and they constitute only a comparatively small part of the total of the employees of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the number today, compared with 1896, of permanent and extra employees in the Department of the Interior, and why should 120 draughtsmen be required?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable at the moment to give the number of employees in the department in 1896, and I could not at the moment either give the number now, but I think my hon. friend will admit that with a settlement of something like 120,000 people in the Northwest inside of three or four years as against half that number in all the years preceding 1896, there is room for a very considerable increase of the staff necessary to deal with that part of the public business.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. Has the work in the Department of the Interior increased this year as compared with last year? Have more homesteads been taken up, or is the work so much greater as to require more clerks?

Mr. OLIVER. In some branches the work has increased considerably, not however in the number of homesteads taken up. The number of homesteads taken up during the past year is larger than in any previous year excepting the one immediately preceding.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the figures for the two years?

Mr. OLIVER. Approximately 41,000 for the year before last and 32,000, I think, for this year. I want to point out that the taking of the homestead entry is only a very small part of the work of the department dealing with the lands. After the homestead entry is taken up the greater part of the work comes to be done. It is after the entries are made that applications for cancellation or extension of the time come in and ultimately inspection of the lands by the inspector. All these require a great deal more time and office help than the mere taking of the homestead entries. The inspection of the homesteads and the issuing of patents begin three years after the entry is made, so that with regard to the large rush of entries which took place three years ago, two years ago and last year, the work is only beginning. Up to last year, this work was not nearly so great because the entries three years previously were much less numerous. But this year and next we shall have to deal with a tremendously large number of applications for patent. Therefore, although the number of homestead entries is not as large as last year, our work has increased because of the large number of entries of the previous years.

Department of Indian Affairs—salaries, $67,100; contingencies, $15,375.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. minister give us the number of inside officials and the number in the outside service and some idea of the general expense ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are about fifty in what is called the inside service and some three hundred in the outside service, that is who are paid salaries. But there are besides a very large number who are paid fees. That number I am unable at present to give.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. minister tell us whether that three hundred is in excess of the same class of officials in 1906 ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to give the actual figures, but my information is that the number is practically the same. If there is an increase, it is very trifling.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that under these, we have the name of Mr. Bryce, medical inspector. The minister has no doubt seen his report on the Indian schools. That report shows a lamentable condition of affairs especially with regard to sanitary conditions. How does the hon. gentleman explain that ? Have those in charge of the schools been altogether careless or inefficient, or is this due to lack of inspection and supervision ? Was this the first time medical or some inspector made the first round of these institutions and reported on them ?

Mr. OLIVER. As the Indian schools are not directly under the management of the government, it would be well perhaps that I should not venture at the moment to account for the facts stated by Dr. Bryce. We have inspectors whose business it is to inspect all matters connected with the Indians. These men have from time to time inspected the schools, but I think that this recent visit of Dr. Bryce was the first occasion on which a general and comprehensive inspection was made regarding the conditions of health. No doubt my hon. friend was startled at the conclusions of Dr. Bryce. They certainly require very careful consideration, and I assure my hon. friend they are receiving that consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose at another time the minister will be prepared to tell us what measures have been taken. We give a large amount of money, and the results seem quite inadequate. What struck me most was the almost appalling carelessness regarding the health of the students, causing such mortality.

Mr. OLIVER. As regards the mortality, I might say that while the mortality shown in Dr. Bryce's report is certainly appalling, on the other hand it has been represented to us that the conditions in that respect within the schools are no worse than those outside.

Mr. FOSTER. But they ought to be better.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in my own defence in this case. I am simply giving the argument as it was given us. The matter is of course one of very grave importance. It has been taken up with the authorities who are in direct charge. I think that I shall be in a better position a little later on to go into the matter more fully and deal with the suggestions I shall submit to the House in due time.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very reasonable position to take, and when the time for that discussion comes the minister ought to be able to make some suggestions. It strikes me we had better get out of the business altogether, if, with the large expenditure of money and the end aimed at of really doing some good to the Indian children, we cannot do better than has been done in the past. The subject of education is a very difficult one as has been found both in the United States and in Canada. It may ultimately be shown to be folly to attempt, to adopt what you might call higher methods of education for these children, and that the best thing to do is to teach them farming or some trade. I would not say that all the money heretofore has been wasted, but when you come to pick up the beneficial results I am afraid it would take a fine-tooth comb to get hold of it.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the result of the legal contest that has been going on for some time between the province of Ontario and the Dominion government in respect to Indian lands ?

Mr. OLIVER. The case recently dealt with by the courts begins with the North-west Angle treaty made in the seventies when the western boundaries of Ontario were not defined. A treaty was made by the Dominion government for the purpose of buying from the Indians the land over which they had rights. The land was purchased and the cost and expenses in connection therewith paid out of the Dominion treasury. Afterwards a part of the land east of the Northwest Angle, became a part of the province of Ontario; the land became the property of the province and as is the case in other parts of Ontario, as the province owns the land which was bought from the Indians, it is held that the province should pay the cost of it. That principle has been conceded in, I think, all the other treaties made with Indians in regard to land now owned by the province of Ontario, except this particular part which at the date of the treaty was in dispute. I assume that under the circumstances the province did not feel warranted in accepting the responsibility without a decision of the courts. By consent between the Dominion and the province a case was submitted to the Supreme Court; a portion of the contention of the Dominion was upheld and that portion so upheld involved the payment of a certain sum by Ontario.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Did the minister say that the Indian schools are not directly under the control or management of the Dominion government?

Mr. OLIVER. There are two industrial schools managed directly by the government. All the others are managed by one or other of the religious denominations, and the government allows the denomination in control of the school a contribution towards its support. The church and not the government is directly responsible for the control of the schools.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Did the report of Doctor Bryce deal with the government schools as well as with the denominational schools?

Mr. OLIVER. It dealt with all schools that his instructions covered.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Was the same criticism directed against the government schools?

Mr. OLIVER. Doctor Bryce deals with each individual school and his criticism is a criticism in particular and not in general.

Mr. FOSTER. Some are better and some worse.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Does not the government exercise some supervision over these schools to the support of which they contribute?

Mr. OLIVER. They have the responsibility of inspection, and if the schools do not conform to certain arrangements, the government would not be warranted in paying the assistance agreed upon.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have seen in the newspapers that one of the Northwest schools had been raided; that a serious state of things was shown to exist, and I would like to know whether that school is under the management of the government, and whether they have control, or whether the children are helpless under such circumstances. If the newspaper reports are correct it is one of the worst outrages ever committed in Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. What is the name of the school?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I think it was the Kamsack school. It was a most terrible affair if the newspaper reports are correct.

Mr. OLIVER. I imagine the newspaper report referred to is the same as I read. It related to a school not at but near Kamsack, and which I think is on the Crowstand reserve. It is in charge of the Presbyterian church. Some of the occurrences alluded to in the newspaper took place some time last May. They came to the attention of the officials of the Indian Department who brought them to the notice of the authorities of the church, and the authorities of the church decided that the conditions were not such as would warrant drastic action on the part of the church authorities towards the officials of the schools.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think I saw a statement in the newspaper that there were prosecutions and some parties found guilty.

Mr. OLIVER. The press report dealt with a series of cases extending over several months. Convictions for the sale of liquor took place by reason of the action of the officials of the Indian Department.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The article I saw stated, I think, that there were forty prosecutions already started, and I think there have been some convictions. Has the government no responsibility in regard to that particular school?

Mr. OLIVER. Those convictions were not in connection with the school at all. They had reference to the sale of liquor to Indians in and about Kamsack and on the reserve, and had no connection with the incident in the school which my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That was not at all the statement that I read. Some of the pupils of the school were taken out and kept two days and made drunk. The article at great length related all the circumstances connected with the matter, which certainly had to do with the school. It was a very serious offence the like of which I have never seen mentioned in Canada before, and certainly it should be investigated. It was on the 27th of November that the incident was published in one or other of the Toronto papers.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that the statements in the papers were not absolutely correct, as I have seen since a statement from the Board of Trade of Kamsack contradict-ing in many important particulars the statements which appeared in the papers, and generally indicating that they were unreliable. However, a number of convictions were secured against people for selling liquor to Indians on the Kamsack reserve. The arrests were brought about by the action of the Indian Department and the cases were tried and the fines inflicted by the Indian agent.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Am I correct in understanding the minister to say that there are only two Indian schools under the control and supervision of the government, and what is the standard by which he pays out moneys from the Indian fund towards the maintainence of the schools that are under church control ?

Mr. OLIVER. There were at one time three schools under the direct responsibility of the government—one at St. Paul's, Manitoba, another at Elkhorn, Manitoba, and the other at Calgary. The St. Paul's school was burnt some years ago and has not been rebuilt, the school at Calgary is about to be closed, and the school at Elkhorn is carried on. The schools under the direct control of the churches are aided by the government by a grant per head of the pupils in attendance, varying from $72 to $130 according to the circumstances of the school.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to ask the minister if any attempt is being made by this government and the government of British Columbia to settle the vexed question as to whether or not the province has a right to Indian lands. If nothing has been done to settle that question, I am of the opinion that it would be a very wise thing on the part of both governments to make a test case and carry it to the Privy Council if necessary, so as to decide once for all who has control of the Indian lands after the Indians have ceased to use them as reserves. A great many reserves in British Columbia are contiguous to large centres, and it would be much better for the Indians themselves and all concerned if they were removed from the centres of civilization. There are also some very fertile valleys in British Columbia which are nominally Indian reserves, but which as a matter of fact are not occupied by Indians and never will be ; but they are kept unused, by the Indian Department, I presume through no fault of theirs, and settlement in the surrounding country is retarded in consequence. As an instance, I may mention Squawmish valley, one of the most fertile valleys of the province. Very few Indians are there, and if they were removed and that valley opened for settlement, a considerable quantity of land would be brought under cultivation by white people, who would do something for the country. I make the suggestion to the government, not with the view of provoking an acrimonious dispute with the provincial government, but with the view of the two governments getting together and settling the question of the ownership of these lands, so that some arrangement could be made for buying out the claims of the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. The question which my hon. friend has brought up is one of very great importance. It is of much greater importance in the province of British Columbia than in any of the other provinces, because though the area of that province is very great, the amount of agricultural land is comparatively small, and of that land, scattered all through the province, the Indians have taken their pick, with the result that the development of the province is undoubtedly very seriously retarded. When the reserves were set apart, and subsequently, in the negotiations between the province and the Dominion for the entrance of the province into the Dominion and for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, the question of the Indian reserves was dealt with, and the conditions respecting the reserves in British Columbia were made different from those respecting reserves in other parts of the Dominion. In other parts of the Dominion the Indians have an absolute right to the land, and when the land is disposed of the proceeds accrue to the Indians. But in the province of British Columbia, under the arrangement made between the province and the Dominion, the ultimate right in the land, the reversionary interest, is in the province. This is the agreement between the province and the Dominion. While, when this arrangement was made it looked like a preservation of the interests of the province, and as being in the best interests of the people of that province, as it came to be worked out it was found that instead of being for the benefit of the province in securing its development it has so far prevented the alienation of Indian lands, which are now unused, because it is perfectly clear that if the Indians are not going to get the benefit of the lands which they are not using, but which they might alienate, they are not going to alienate them or permit them to be alienated, and as a consequence the Indians all over British Columbia have been sitting tight and holding their thousand reserves in a thousand places in that province. The British Columbia government was not in a position to displace the Indians and neither was this government because, as the guardian of the Indians, being charged with the responsibility of their protection, it was not for this government to say to the Indians : you have too much land in this place, you must get off. On the other hand, the British Columbia government was not in a position to assert any right or authority to compel the Indians to get off and the result has been the holding up of the province. It was not the fault of either the Dominion or the province but the position was such that the Dominion could not approach the Indians satisfactorily to secure the surrender of any of their reserves. The time came, however, when an opportunity seemed to occur in the case of the Metlakatla reserve at the port of Prince Rupert. When the Grand Trunk Pacific desired to acquire a large area of land upon that reserve for townsite purposes, it seemed as if something might be done ; the Indians were approached and asked if they would alienate a portion of that reserve at a figure, subject of course to the reversionary interest of the province of British Columbia. The agreement was entered into, the alienation was made so far as the Indians were concerned but then the province stepped in and said : Our rights are such that any relaxation of the hold of the Indians on any of these lands, transfers that land absolutely to us. That is the position in which that land stands to-day and of course as long as that situation continues, this government is absolutely debarred, as a business proposition, from undertaking to deal with any other reserve in the province of British Columbia. However, there have been negotiations between the two governments looking to a decision by the highest authority as to the respective rights of the Indians and the province in these lands. This government has agreed or suggested that the British Columbia government should join issue with us and have this question tried and finally settled. The Dominion government recognizes that it is not to the advantage of the Dominion that these fertile valleys in British Columbia should be held in the hands of people who do not use them. At the same time, as guardian of the Indians, it is not for us to undertake to displace them nor is it for us to trespass in any way on the rights of British Columbia. So we hope that with the concurrence of the province we will have it tried before the courts ; the Dominion will have to act for the Indians, not in any spirit of hostility to British Columbia, but merely is discharging the responsibility placed on us to guard the interests of the Indians. The matter will be tried in due time, and when a decision has been rendered it will be possible to deal with the reserves in a more businesslike way than in the past.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a matter of importance as any one who has visited British Columbia and is at all familiar with the situation will realize. I have had occasion to bring this matter up several times when this vote was under review in past years. It seems to me that it ought to be a very easy matter for the two governments, presided over presumably by business men, to get together, even without the intervention of the courts and arrange this matter in such a way that the Indians will be much better provided for by the proceeds of the sale of these lands than by their possession. Any one familiar with the reserves knows that, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver, they are in many instance close to towns, and valuable lands are thus prevented from being used for settlement, which is not in the interest of the country ; and this also brings the Indians into too close communication with modern civilization, which is not always an advantage to the Indians. The two governments should get together in a friendly spirit, and in a business way settle the question ; let the lands be put up to public tender and sale and the proceeds divided, a portion going to buy out the reversionary interest of the province and the balance going to the Indians.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This is such an important question from a British Columbia standpoint, that it is scarcely proper to discuss it in connection with the salaries of the officials of the Indian Department. I might say, however, that even if a judicial decision is secured in reference to this matter, I do not think it would settle it so far as the Indians or the people of British Columbia are concerned. If the courts hold that the province of British Columbia has a reversionary interest, we are just in the position we are in now, that is that there shall be no encouragement to the Indians to abandon the right to their reserves and nothing would be done.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the only question that would come before the court ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I suppose so. I suggest that as this government has secured 3,500,000 acres in the Peace River Valley, and 6,500,000 acres in the railway belt in British Columbia, the minister ought to bargain with the provincial government and offer to exchange a portion of this land taken from the province of British Columbia for the reversionary interest in the Indian reserves. If the province should abandon its reversionary interest in the Indian reserves these reserves should be dealt with by the department just as in other parts of the Dominion. To-day, of the whole Similkameen valley, one of the richest in the Dominion, only half is open to cultivation. There is room there for from 100 to 200 families growing fruit. It is absolutely impossible, under present conditions, to have anything done with it. The Indians quite properly say : We do not want to do anything ; if we abandon our right to the reserve, any money to which we are entitled for abandoning that right goes into the provincial exchequer, not into our pockets at all, so why should we abandon our right ? Thus it is practically impossible to do anything while you have what is to all intents and purposes dual authority over the lands of the Indians. I would throw out the suggestion to the minister that if we can get prompt action by giving the province of British Columbia a quid pro quo for its reversionary interests in the shape of lands, and you have plenty of land in the province of British Columbia, owned by this government, it would be an easy and satisfactory method of settling the difficulty.

Mr. OLIVER. I only want to say a word as to the suggestion that we ought to be able to arrive at a satisfactory and amicable solution of this difficulty by agreement with the province of British Columbia. There was a time when we hoped to be able to do that. But, in view of, what seems to me, the very extraordinary attitude taken by the province in this matter—that is, its view that whatever the Indians do to release any portions of the lands that act thereby transfers that land to the ownership of the province—as long as the province maintains that attitude we have nothing to negotiate ; we are not in a position to make any bargain in regard to any thing. We believe that that is not warranted under the law, and, believing that, and being guardians of the Indians, we are not able to accept it. But, should it be decided by the privy council that the contention of the province is right, of course we should accept it, and we would then be in a position to negotiate with the province, acknowledging that the land was theirs.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any question as to the reversionary right of the province, say in case of abandonment of the land by the Indians ? Is not that settled ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are many questions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not admitted that if the Indians sell out the land it goes to the province.

Mr. FOWLER. It is only in case of the dying out of the tribe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is very different from the selling out of their rights by the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. Speaking generally, and without prejudice—I want that to be understood, because I am not familiar with all the details—it is admitted that on the dying out of a band of Indians, in the case of certain of the reserves of the province, their land would thereby become the sole property of the province. But that is not the point at issue. The point is in regard to portions of the reserve not in use by the Indians. We believed, at the time we entered into this transaction with regard to the Metlakatla reserve, that it was perfectly within the right of the Indians to alienate that part of the reserve which they thought it was more in their interest to alienate than to hold. But the province of British Columbia holds that, it matters not under what condition, as soon as the Indian lets go, their right steps in. That, of course, puts negotiation out of possibility. The only course is to submit the matter to the courts. Once it is decided, we shall know our position. I can assure the House and the country that this government has no intention or desire to contest any right of the province of British Columbia. But it must discharge the duty placed upon it of maintaining the rights of the Indians. To go into the matter a little deeper, there are several classes of cases in these reserves in British Columbia. There are reserves which were set apart when British Columbia was a crown colony—set apart by imperial authority and direction. There are reserves which were set apart by the province before it entered the Dominion. There are reserves which were set apart after the province entered the Dominion. And the question of the reserves within the railway belt is in a somewhat different position from the others. Having these four or five different classes of reserves, everybody will agree, I think, that it is very desirable, in the interests of the province on the one hand and of the Indians on the other, that there should be a judicial decision in regard to it.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose the province had the reversionary right after the Indians where it was a case of the extinction of the tribe or abandonment. But, if, as has been pointed out, this is not a case of the extinction of the tribe, the matter ought to be finally settled by the courts.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to call the attention of the minister to a matter of great importance to the settlers in the country in which I live. This may not be exactly the best time to discuss it, but the importance of the case is my justification for speaking of it now. I speak of the shipping of cattle from the Piegan reserve and an incident which occurred there during the month of November. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is aware of the situation of this reserve, and knows that it is surrounded on all sides by an agricultural and stock country, and that the railway—the only railway in that southern country—passes through this reserve. The stock men this year, for the first time, sold their cattle by weight. The only scale on the railway for a distance of a hundred miles is situated on the reserve. The settlers who had cattle to ship drove their cattle as usual to the corral on that reserve where the scale is. They have been shipping there for a number of years and never had any trouble until this particular case arose in November. They were marking and shipping their cattle for about three days when the police came along and arrested the man in charge of the shipment of cattle. This man was taken as a prisoner to the agency and fined $10 a day for the time they were on the reserve, besides costs of $5.75. The accused wanted the case remanded in order that he might have opportunity to consult a lawyer and make his defence. But this remand was refused by the agent who, as magistrate, tried the case. Taking it all round, it seems to me this was a very arbitrary piece of work. The stockmen of that locality may wish to ship cattle this year. They might be shipping even now, or any time during the fore part of the winter. I would like to know if this matter has been brought to the attention of the department, and, if so, what steps have been taken to protect the cattlemen and give them an opportunity to ship their cattle at that point.

Mr. OLIVER. The matter was brought to the attention of the department when it occurred, and we have had the inspector of agencies visit the locality to make a report. I would not like to express myself further in regard to the matter until I receive the inspector's report. But I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) that the interests of the cattlemen who ship at that point will receive every consideration, subject, of course, to the rights of the Indians.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to impress upon the minister very strongly the importance of a settlement of that question to the people in that locality. As I have stated this reserve is surrounded by stockmen, and this is the only point between Lethbridge and the Crow's Nest Pass where they can ship, selling by weight. In shipping at that point, they are doing no injury to the reserve or to anybody, and I am sure that it is in accordance with the public interest as well as to their own advantage that they should have an opportunity to ship on this Piegan reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no doubt I shall be able to give the result of the report received when we get into other estimates of the department.

Mr. STAPLES. In previous sessions, I have called the attention of the minister to the case of the town of Swan Lake in the province of Manitoba, and have urged that he should acquire the Indian reservation at that point. I would like to know what progress is being made in this matter. This is a matter that I have brought to the attention of the minister every session of this parliament. He has given me his promise that he will do his utmost to try and acquire this particular reservation in order that it may be settled up by a class of agriculturists who will advance the interests of this particular town and locality. I would like to know what success the minister has had in arriving at a settlement with the Indians of that reservation.

Mr. OLIVER. I had a special agent visit the reserve comparatively recently and within a few days we received his report. He was not able to get a surrender of the whole reserve, but he was able to get a surrender of about one-half of it, and I think it would be well for us to accept the terms in regard to the part that he was able to secure a surrender of.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. minister tell me what portion of the reserve he has been able to get a surrender of?

Mr. OLIVER. The sections on the north and west sides of the reserve.

Mr. STAPLES. I presume the minister will be able to give me full information about it in a few days?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I can by to-morrow or the day after, if the hon. gentleman will allow the matter to stand until then. I will bring down a sketch and memo. as to the proposed surrender and lay it on the table.

Mr. STAPLES. That will be very satisfactory.

Mr. LAKE. Has the minister made up his mind that he will sell the surrendered portion of the Crooked Lakes reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. The reserve is now surveyed and we can sell it at any time. Our intention was to sell it in the spring. We thought that, perhaps, under all the circumstances, during the present fall the best price might not be realized, and that we might be able to do better in the spring.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to ask the minister if the department has on file any report in regard to the proposal for the removal of the St. Mary's reserve opposite the city of Fredericton to a location more distant from the city?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, our information is that the Indians will not consent to the proposed removal.

Mr. CROCKET. The Indian Commissioner, I believe, has very strongly advised it, has he not? Of course it cannot be accomplished without the consent of the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is an Indian reserve the Indians have absolute rights so long as they choose to assert them, and we are not in a position to remove them except with their consent.

Mr. BLAIN. Does Mr. MacRae, the Inspector of Agencies, make a written report to the department?

Mr. OLIVER. He reports in writing each inspection that he makes.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister will be good enough to lay on the table the most recent report.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend wish to mention any particular report?

Mr. BLAIN. The last report Mr. MacRae has made.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that he does not make a general report but only a particular report on each inspection. If the hon. gentleman wishes to have these reports covering a certain period——

Mr. BLAIN. Say for the last six months.

Mr. OLIVER. All right.

Mr. BOYCE. May I ask the hon. minister whether he has had brought to his attention the report of Mr. Bryce on the condition of health of the Industrial schools in Manitoba and the Northwest?

Mr. OLIVER. The investigation was made on my order.

Office of the Auditor General—salaries, $70,425; contingencies, $18,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The increases there are statutory and to provide for certain promotions which the Auditor General desires to make. He proposes to appoint one additional chief clerk, to promote three second-class clerks to first class, to promote three junior seconds to second class, to promote four third-class to junior seconds, and to appoint five extra clerks to third-class clerkships at their present salaries. That is extra clerks who are now in the temporary class and are paid out of contingencies will be made permanent. In the contingencies there is an increase of $1,000 which includes fifteen statutory increases. The Auditor General proposes to ask that of his temporary clerks five be placed on the permanent list, and that will leave some vacancies on the temporary list for emergencies as they arise from time to time.

Mr. U. WILSON. Why should the item for contingencies be so large?

Mr. FIELDING. The item of contingencies includes temporary clerks who are not on the permanent list. If they are on the permanent list they appear under the head of civil government, but if they are not permanent they are paid out of contingencies.

Mr. U. WILSON. How many are there of them?

Mr. FIELDING. Twenty.

Mr. U. WILSON. Are they constantly employed? If so, why are they not on the permanent list?

Mr. FIELDING. The practice is to have a number of temporary people who are sometimes employed longer than one expects, but the theory of their appointment is that when the work is not pressing they may be dropped.

Mr. U. WILSON. Do you not think that is a pretty large number?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. FIELDING. You must have some elasticity. There are seasons when the work of the Auditor General is very pressing, and you must have these extra clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. How many chief clerks are there in all?

Mr. FIELDING. Last season's appropriation for chief clerks made provision for seven and we propose to give eight.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the positions all filled last year?

Mr. FIELDING. There are seven actually in the service now.

Mr. FOSTER. Were there seven all through the year?

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor General informs me that I am mistaken. There were six actually in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there was provision made last year for seven?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. But there was not an additional one appointed?

Mr. FIELDING. No, that is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason for making provision and then finding it is unnecessary?

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor General informs me that provision was made by his predecessor, but that he did not carry out what was his apparent intention. He did not create the office.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the same remark apply to the first-class clerks?

Mr. FIELDING. The number of first-class clerks proposed now is six as against five.

Mr. FOSTER. There seems to have been only four last year.

Mr. FIELDING. You have to add Mr. Bissonnette, who was a second-class clerk, and has been promoted since the 31st March, after the Auditor General's Report was issued.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the promotions you propose to make?

Mr. FIELDING. The names are not yet determined. They will be largely, if not wholly, in the way of seniority. The first step is to get the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. At the same time it is usual to find out the intention of the department, as otherwise we can have no effective criticism.

Mr. FIELDING. It would be very inconvenient if every time we asked a vote for a public servant we had to determine who is to fill the vacancy. Some times it is easy to indicate, but in others it is not.

There is no list of names submitted. We are asking a vote to make these promotions and will after decide who are entitled to them.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you propose to make them in order of seniority?

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor General says he cannot answer for every individual. As a rule they are made by seniority, but not necessarily so.

Mr. BERGERON. Our former Auditor General frequently complained of not having sufficient clerks to do the work properly. He wanted to change the whole office. Is our present Auditor General satisfied that he has sufficient men to do the work as it should be done?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is mistaken as regards our former Auditor General. He never asked for the appointment of additional clerks to his office without his request being granted. My rule has been to allow the Auditor General, who is not exactly an official of my department, but an official of parliament, a very free hand as to the number of his clerks and the promotions he should make. In every instance the clerks asked by the Auditor General are granted and their promotions made as he desires.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember well our former Auditor General complaining. However, it makes no difference if the present Auditor General is satisfied with his staff.

Mr. FIELDING. He has got all he has asked for.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board —salaries, $66,352.50; contingencies, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $14,000.

Mr. FIELDING. The contingencies are the same as last year. The increases are entirely to provide for the statutory increases which we propose to give to all who are eligible.

Mr. FOSTER. What was expended on the contingencies last year?

Mr. FIELDING. The expenditure for the last fiscal period of nine months was $10,195.91.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no change there?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Department of Customs—salaries, $81,862.50; contingencies, $7,000.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). There is no change in the commissioner and assistant commissioner. In the chief clerks there is a decrease of $462.50 owing to the promotion of Mr. Frost from first-class to the position of chief clerk. Mr. Farrow was made assistant commissioner. His salary was $2,500. Mr. Frost was promoted to his place at $1,937.50, being $562 decrease. The $50 statutory increase went to the remaining two chief clerks, which makes the net decrease $462.50.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Farrow gets the full $3,000?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. There is no change in the first-class clerks except the statutory increase of $50.

Mr. FOSTER. They all get the statutory increase?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, all who are not at the maximum. In the second-class provision is made for a statutory increase to all, twelve at $50 each.

Mr. FOSTER. In the juniors you have four additional. What is the reason for that?

Mr. PATERSON. There is a provision made for statutory increases to all of this class who are not at the maximum. There are twenty-four at $50 each, and two at $12.50 each, making a total increase of $1,225. The two who get the $12.50 each increase get it to the 1st of July, which makes the difference. The two who only get the $12.50, the portion to which they are entitled of the statutory increase, Mr. Ross and Mr. Rochester, will not reach the maximum until the 1st of July, 1908, and their promotion will have to be considered later. Owing to the transfer of four from the outside to the inside in the current fiscal year at less salary than estimated for in 1907-8, there was an over-estimate of $400. There was an over-estimate in the current fiscal year of $400 on the item of junior second-class clerks; deducting this from $1,225 for statutory increases there is a net increase of $825. We brought some officers from the outside. We could not bring them in at a higher rate and we have estimated higher. We also provide for four additional junior second-class clerks; one at $1,000 and three at $900 each, total, $3,700. This provision for new clerks and the $825 for statutory increases makes a total of $4,525 under this item. I may say that these four clerks are really in the service now and are engaged in this work, but hitherto they have been paid out of the vote for the Board of Customs and we desire to bring them into the regular civil service.

Mr. FOSTER. The other vote will be decreased ?

Mr. PATERSON. It should be decreased; it is not our intention to fill their places. There may however be an increase in that vote on account of other expenses..

Public Works Department, $77,187.50.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). There is a very slight change from last year, the increase being only $575, and that is made up entirely of statutory increases.

Mr. FOSTER. Practically all have had statutory increases ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All that are eligible.

Mr. BENNETT. If the deputy minister is here I would like to get information with reference to the valuation fees paid for the new departmental buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would not that discussion more properly come up on the estimates for the new buildings ?

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps so, but if the deputy were here we might have the information now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The deputy is not here, but I will have the information for these particular items when they come before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that Mr. M. N. Mathé, a second-class clerk, has been paid $427 for travelling expenses ; how was that expended ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. During the short time I have been in the department it has come under my notice that quite a number of clerks are necessarily sent to look after public works in various parts of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Mathé seems to be a second-class clerk.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He might have some special information which would enable him to attend to particular work. I will obtain the information.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that, and the travelling expenses of Gelinas, $369.

Mr. DANIEL. There seems to have been only $44,000 expended last year out of the $62,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be accounted for by the fact that the Auditor General's Report only covers a period of nine months.

Mr. BENNETT. At page V—23, Auditor General's Report there is an item of $704 for Mr. W. O'Mara in connection with that land purchase ; is he on the permanent staff.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is not. The purchase of the land for the new Dominion buildings was quite a large purchase and there were a good many properties to acquire. A gentleman was appointed to examine the properties, make a valuation, and endeavour to acquire the properties by purchase. He was of course also instructed to arrange for the expropriation of those properties which could not be acquired otherwise. In the discharge of his duties he felt it necessary to employ the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers. His employment was temporary.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BENNETT. Who was that—Mr. Riopelle ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Riopelle was the gentleman who was appointed to acquire the properties.

Mr. BENNETT. I find on page V—329 and 330 of the Auditor General's Report some correspondence about a payment to a clerk named Emile Lacas of $129.16. It would seem to have been a question between the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister as to whether or not this man earned the money. The Auditor General calls attention to the fact that the records of the department prove that the man had worked during the month in question, and he makes this note :

Mr. Lacas' time-book has not yet been received, and the payment is still withheld.

I was in error in saying he had been paid. Is the minister aware whether the matter has been cleared up ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware. Mr. Lacas has applied for leave of absence. He is at the head of one of the photographic branches of the department. I have been aware in a general way of the discussion that has taken place between the Deputy Minister and the Auditor General, but I am not aware whether the matter has been settled.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he still in the employ of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is still in the employ of the department, but I have recommended that he be granted a short leave of absence.

Mr. BENNETT. And he is now on leave of absence ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know whether he has actually taken the leave or not.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister inform the committee what his policy is in respect to his employees taking part in elections ? We have the advantage of a new minister, and I think the present is an opportune time for him to lay down a policy in this respect. We have had some trouble in regard to that in the past, and we do not wish to allow our new minister to get into the same trouble.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure I appreciate and desire to express my appreciation of my hon. friend's anxiety not to get me into any trouble, and it will be a great pleasure to me to have his assistance at all times. I am not aware that any of the officials of the department over which I preside have taken part in elections ; I do not think it would be desirable, and I would discourage such a practice. I received a request that a gentleman employed in my department might do certain clerical work in connection with elections by reason of his having certain knowledge which would fit him for the work, but I refused to give the permission. I think it is better that the clerks should confine themselves strictly to the work of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. I would think that such an application would indicate to the minister that something of that kind had gone on in the past.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I am not at all prepared to say that. The application came from one who I would suppose had not any particular bias; but I thought it well to adopt the policy, which I have no reason to suppose was not the policy in the past that the officials should adhere as strictly as possible to the work of the department and not take part in election matters.

Mr. BENNETT. I find at page V—327 that a gentleman named Mr. Vautelet has made a very large claim on the department. It would seem that this gentleman had been engaged to prepare certain plans for what is known as the St. Andrew's dam. Is that the dam below Winnipeg?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems extraordinary that a department manned as this department is, with skilful and experienced engineers and draftsmen, should have to go outside and employ a gentleman for $15,000 to prepare these plans. I think it will rather astonish the people of the country to learn that when a work of this nature, not of any extraordinary technical difficulty, is to be undertaken, the Department of Public Works has to confess its inability to supply a competent man for that work—either that or the work of the department is so pressing that no person can be spared to take it up. The hon. gentleman has assumed the control of a department that has not given much satisfaction to the people of this country during the last ten years, for almost every session the answer to every query is: 'I knew nothing about it, I had nothing to do with it, I was not the minister, some one else had it in charge.' This is a claim of such striking size that I would ask the minister if he could give the House an explanation—first, under what minister this engagement was made, why the sum of $15,000 has not been paid over, and why it is that of this large amount $5,000 has been paid, and Mr. Lafleur, the engineer of the department, recommends the payment of $5,000 further, and does not recommend the payment of the bill in its entirety. The last letter of the Auditor General's Department says this, over the signature of Frederick Hayter, for the Auditor General:

There should, I think, be an order in council for an arrangement of this magnitude. If one has already been obtained, please have a copy furnished to this office.

In making a large payment outside of the department for services similar to those generally performed by the departmental officials, it would be well to give an explicit statement of the reason for so doing—whether lack of time in the department or extra technicality in the work under discussion.

The rate of 3½ per cent should be certified by the chief engineer as 'fair and just.'

I ask the minister what explanation can possibly be given for going outside the department technical staff and asking a man to prepare plans with such a large consideration as this, no less than $15,000. If any head of a department may do this without, as the Auditor General properly says, going before Council, where is the limit? The Minister of Public Works would have just as much right to engage an engineer at $100,000 as at $15,000. I would ask the minister, who has not been long in his department, are any obligations of this nature now being incurred in connection with any public enterprise? Has the minister himself personally contracted with any engineers or contractors for work outside and if so to what extent? I am not aware that the minister has done anything of this kind, and I wish to ask him what his policy in respect to such undertakings will be in the future.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend's question is a very proper one, and one to which answer as full and satisfactory as possible should be given. The facts of the case are that Mr. Vautelet, of Montreal, is an architect enjoying a very high reputation for the erection of large works, more particularly where the construction is of steel. He has done a good deal of work for the Canadian Pacific Railroad in connection with very expensive buildings. As hon. gentlemen are aware, there has been until recent years considerable delay and dissatisfaction in connection with the construction of the important works known as the locks at the St. Andrews' rapids, below Winnipeg. My information is that the then minister, Hon. Mr. Hyman, felt that in undertaking these works, with a view of having them constructed with as little delay as possible, and of the most perfect character, he was justified in calling in the best engineering skill it would be possible to obtain, and it was he who employed Mr. Vautelet, for the superstructure of this dam at the Red River rapids. Hon. gentlemen may ask themselves as to whether or not this was a prudent act on the part of the minister. I am not at all prepared to say that when the department is engaging in a work of great magnitude and unusual character, it is at all imprudent or improper to engage the services of outside engineers or architects. Mr. Hyman took the view that this work required such skill on the part of the designer that his course was in the public interest and I am not prepared to question his judgment. We know that railway companies when engaging in the erection of large buildings or other important works of unusual cost go beyond their own staffs and employ specialists who have been successful in the particular class of work called for, as the Grand Trunk Railway have done in calling in one of the leading architects of New York to design their new hotel in Ottawa, which it is desired to make one of the finest on the continent. It must be remembered in justification of such a course that an error of judgment on the part of the designer of such a structure might cost hundreds or thousands of times the amount of money expended for the services of such an engineer or architect.

Mr. BERGERON. Was this gentleman not engaged before Mr. Hyman became minister ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for the St. Andrews locks.

Mr. BERGERON. He was for the Quebec harbour ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is another matter ; that was for the plans of some works at Montreal in connection with the harbour improvements but the department did not pay his claim in regard to that and a suit is now pending in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it the same man ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the same gentleman who was employed by Mr. Tarte in connection with some very large works at Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that case is now before the courts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but that has nothing to do with the matter. I find here a memorandum from Mr. Hyman accepting Mr. Vautelet's offer that he should be paid 5 per cent on the cost of the work. This matter has engaged my attention since I have been minister, I have been applied to for the payment of the balance of this claim ; I have the matter under consideration and no payment will be made without an order in council. The matter will be fully considered. I have not employed any outside architects or engineers, and I am not aware of any outside engineer being now in the employ of the department for special work; of course in saying this I do not include what we call the non-permanent staff.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not aware of the nature of the work at the St. Andrew's dam as I have not seen the plans, and I quite agree that on a work of that kind, where there are special difficulties, it would not be out of the way to call in an outside engineer. But let me review this gentleman's whole connection with the department. In the first place the department employs him for some sheds at Montreal. I do not know the ground of the action now pending, whether he was not properly hired by the department or whether the services rendered were insufficient. While I am willing to admit that there might be cases where the department should call in a gentleman from outside to give the benefit of his experience, it seems to me that the people of Canada will wonder why, we have to go outside the department and obtain the services of a gentleman at an expense of $12,250 for the preparation of plans for ordinary freight sheds at Quebec.

Now, I do not know what was the character of these sheds, but I suppose they were plain and of structural iron, like other freight sheds in different parts of the country. It must be a matter of wonderment to the public that the Department of Public Works declares, in effect, that its chief engineer is not capable of putting up an ordinary iron shed. You can hardly go into any little town in the province of Ontario where you will not see a skating rink or a large hall which has been erected by a local architect. And here we have an ordinary iron framework shed, and the department admits that it has not an engineer capable of preparing the plans for such a structure, but must go to an outsider and pay him $12,250 to prepare plans. I have heard something of the connection of this engineer with the Public Works Department. That he was a friend of the former minister (Mr. Tarte) goes without saying. And his claim is of such a nature that the department for reasons of its own —but reasons well known to the public— have refused to pay it, and here we find him a creditor of this Dominion to the amount of $12,250 in respect of these sheds erected in Quebec. It is now about six o'clock, and perhaps the minister may be able to give us this evening a description of the sheds re-erected in Quebec.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not give a description of the sheds erected in Quebec. I think they were very elaborate in design, but they were not erected.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) might give us the proportions of these buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will try to do that.

Mr. BENNETT. Even though we may have no great technical knowledge of this subject, we may be able to reach some conclusion as to whether the department should have gone outside to employ an architect or engineer to design this building. Perhaps the minister will give us the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Department of Public Works—salaries, $62,-187.50; contingencies, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that I asked the deputy minister to obtain the information in regard to the extent of the works in connection with the superstructure of the lock at St. Andrew's rapids for which Mr. Vautelet was employed, and also in regard to the sheds at Quebec. He has not apparently been able to get the information yet. I would suggest that my hon. friend give me a memorandum of any other matters which occur to him now and I will get the information. The public works items will be up for discussion again when we come to page 63 of the printed estimates. Then I will be able to give very much fuller and more satisfactory information than I can hope to do now.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that will be quite satisfactory.

Department of Agriculture—salaries, $83,-500; contingencies, $22,750.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). In regard to civil government, the committee will see that there is a decrease. That is due to the dropping of two third-class clerks. It has been our practice to raise patent examiners who have served a certain length of time to the grade of first-class clerks. We have raised two examiners to first-class clerkships, but we have not filled up the vacancies thus created. The amount asked for printing and stationery is the same as last year.

Department of Inland Revenue—salaries, $51,012.50; contingencies, $7,000.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The total increase is $85. Two officials were superannuated, and statutory increases were given the others, and the difference between the two is the $85. The aggregate number of employees is the same as last year.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the superannuation allowance to the two men ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Burns, aged 75, gets $1,018.10 retiring allowance. Mr. Dunne, aged 46, gets $766.66. The latter, though a comparatively young man, was absolutely incapacitated by rheumatism. He was from twenty to twenty-five years in the service. The former was about thirty-four years in the service and was retired at his own request.

Department of Mines—salaries, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $87,742.50.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The increase is more apparent than real. The Department of Mines was organized last year, and officials who were then serving the government in the outside service were brought into this department. For instance, Dr. Eugene Haanel, now director, receiving $3,000 per year. Mr. Nystrom, a mining engineer, $1,837.50. These were paid from a vote of $5,500 for the Mines Branch of the Interior Department voted last year. Their salaries are now voted as officials of the Mines Branch. In addition, B. F. Haanel, E. Lindeman, H. Leverin, all mining engineers, were on the temporary staff, also paid from the same vote, so that the increase is more apparent than real. There is no increase except the statutory $50 in the case of Mr. Nystrom. The other increases are all statutory. There are twenty-eight technical officers. Dr. Bell's salary remains at $3,000. All the others received $50 increase except in the case of Mr. Denis, who gets an increase of $300. Mr. Denis is a technical officer of high standing, who has been attached permanently to the Mines Branch and his salary made similar to those paid other technical officers. This will account for all the increases. There are no new appointments but simply a transfer from the temporary to the permanent staff.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does this include the Geological Survey officials ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This $12,000 is added in salaries taken from the Interior Department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Formerly these officials I have named and who have been put on the permanent staff, were paid from the vote of $55,000 for the Mines Branch of the Interior Department last session.

Mr. BERGERON. So that will not appear in the other item.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The vote for the Mines Branch of the Interior Department will be reduced by a relative amount, although I think in the other estimates we are asking quite as large a sum as before for the purpose of carrying on the Mines Branch.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a transfer of salary from one branch to the other ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the intention to do away with the Geological Survey Department as a separate department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. There are very few votes in these estimates asked for the Mines Branch, in all seven officials, while in the Geological Survey Branch there are about forty.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the number of officials in that department ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. About forty-six in the entire department.

Mr. CROCKET. How many in the Geological Survey ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Twenty-eight technical officers ; two first-class, three second-class and five junior second-class, who receive salaries ranging from $3,000 down to $800.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How much devoted to the Mines Branch ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One officer, $3,000 ; one at $1,837 ; two at $1,850 ; one at $1,750 ; one at $850 and one at $800.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What duties have been discharged by the head of the Mines Branch, and the other prominent officers?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. Cirkel, M.E., is investigating the chrome iron ore deposits of the Eastern townships, after which he will collect material in the province of Ontario for the report on the mining metalurgical industries of Canada. Mr. J. W. Bell, M.E., is collecting material in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, for the report on the mining and metallurgical industries of Canada; Mr. Robert Hedley, M.E., is obtaining material in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, for the same report; Mr. Lindeman, M.E., is to investigate the iron ore deposits of Vancouver Island and conditions necessary for the inauguration of an iron industry in British Columbia. Mr. Nystrom, M.E., is to investigate the peat industry in Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Holland and Ireland, and we expect to have his report at an early date. Mr. B. F. Haanel, B. Sc., is investigating the iron ore property in the township of Leeds, and Mr. J. J. Bell is collecting statistics in Ontario and Quebec for the report on the mining and metallurgical industry of Canada. It is intended to issue a very comprehensive report and we hope a very creditable report on the mining and metalurgical industries in Canada.

Trade and Commerce—salaries, $24,025; contingencies, $11,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is Mr. W. T. R. Preston, please?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Preston is in Yokohama.

Mr. BERGERON. What is he doing there?

Mr. FIELDING. He is supposed to be a commercial agent looking after the extension of Canadian trade.

Mr. BERGERON. I see there was a Mr. Preston present at a dinner given by the Tokio Board of Trade to the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, is that the same gentleman?

Mr. FIELDING. Very likely, he is in Japan.

Mr. BERGERON. If he is in Yokohama he cannot be in Tokio.

Mr. FISHER. They are only eighteen miles apart.

Mr. BERGERON. I don't know as much about Japan as does the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. If you did you would not put that question.

Mr. FIELDING. A slow train could take him there in a couple of hours, and it is worth going eighteen miles to a good dinner. Provision is made for the annual statutory increases and the increase in the department is only $212.50. The chief item in contingencies is an increase of $1,000 on account of the department having to pay postage on packages which formerly went free.

Mr. U. WILSON. I think this is the department that employs Mr. J. L. Haycock, the inspector of binder twine.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. U. WILSON. Well, three or four days before voting day last general election Mr. Haycock appeared on the public platform in my town in company with a cabinet minister and made a strong speech against me.

Mr. BENNETT. That is what he is paid for.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I want to know if officers paid out of the public treasury are to be allowed to go round stumping against members who are opposed to the government. If the Minister of Finance wants to read an account of Mr. Haycock's doings on that occasion he will find it in the Toronto 'Globe' of the 29th of October, 1904. I object to that sort of thing, and I do not think that kind of an official should be retained in the public service.

Mr. BENNETT. Send him up our way.

Mr. FOWLER. You will take care of him.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) brought the matter up last year and perhaps the year before, and there must be some statutory limitation in these things. If my hon. friend desires my opinion I have no hesitation in saying that I think that where a man does not receive a living salary; where he receives some small salary which is not a living wage, there may be some difficulty in defining his proper status; but where a man receives a living salary he has no business to take any part whatever in politics other than to exercise his franchise as a citizen. That is the view I have always held, and I would strongly enforce it wherever it came within my authority so to do. But sometimes, I do not say it is so in the present case, many of our officers receive but a very small allowance and it is pretty hard to draw the line in such cases. I would say unhesitatingly that every officer of the government who receives a living wage ought to abstain from any political action except the right to exercise his franchise.

Mr. BENNETT. Does any minister enforce that principle?

Mr. FIELDING. Every minister should do it as far as possible, and if it has not been done thoroughly in the past, I would not hesitate to say that it ought to be done.

Mr. U. WILSON. Mr. Haycock gets $1,600 a year salary, and $1,300 a year for expenses, which is more money than he ever earned before in any one year in his lifetime. I think his present office is simply a reward because when he was leader of the Patrons he gave a guarantee that he would not see Sir Oliver Mowat defeated in the local House. I know Mr. Haycock very well, and I know he has been accused on several occasions in my riding of distributing money and trying to bribe voters in the rear of my county. Perhaps that is not since he has been an officer of this government, but it is nevertheless true. I want the Minister of Finance to know Mr. Haycock's general character. I need not tell him how low he was before he got this office and how near he was to a bar-room loafer, and his own brother-in-law told me on the streets of Napanee that he was the biggest liar between Napanee and Gaspé.

Mr. FIELDING. Does Ottawa lie between these points?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is the character his brother-in-law gives to Mr. Haycock, to whom this government is paying $1,600 of salary and $1,300 or $1,400 of expenses, and allowing him or permitting him to go on the stump against an opponent.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to ask if it is true that Mr. E. H. S. Flood has been appointed a trade commissioner?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What is his salary and his sphere of duty?

Mr. FIELDING. His salary is $3,000 a year, in addition to which he is entitled to travelling expenses. His work is to travel through the British West Indies, from island to island, with the view of interesting parties in the development of Canadian trade.

Mr. FOWLER. Haven't you men down there now supposed to be doing that work?

Mr. FIELDING. There are four local agents stationed at different points and receiving from $250 to $400 a year, very small sums, for which they cannot be expected to do very much service, and the idea is to have a commissioner who will be constantly on the move interesting people in Canadian trade. It is a most desirable move to encourage West Indian trade, and the prospects at present are more promising than usual.

Mr. FOWLER. What qualifications has Mr. Flood?

Mr. FIELDING. He is, I am informed, a university graduate. At all events, he is a well-educated man and has been engaged in business in the city of St. John, where he and his family are well known.

Mr. BENNETT. Have you still Mr. J. B. Jackson in England? If so, where is he and what is his salary?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Jackson is still the agent at Leeds, with a salary of $3,000 a year.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And how much expenses?

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever they are, I am not able to give the amount, because they are not covered by this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. I find by the Auditor General's Report that he was paid last year $4,197.07. Is that correct?

Mr. FIELDING. I believe so.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. As a matter of fact, his salary and expenses amount to from $5,000 to $6,000 a year. I have had returns on two or three occasions in regard to Mr. Jackson.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed that Mr. Jackson has offices in both Leeds and Hull, and, therefore, he would naturally incur greater expenses than some other agents. However, there is a special vote covering expenses, and when we reach that I shall be glad to give any aditional information that may be sought.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many months in the year is Mr. Haycock in the employ of the government?

Mr. FIELDING. He is employed all the year around, his duties being inspector in the binder twine business, and he also checks the accounts rendered for bounty by the manufacturers of binder twine. He visits all the factories for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no danger of a conflict between the employees of the Department of Trade and Commerce and those of the Department of the Interior all over Europe?

Mr. FIELDING. No, their lines are different.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that Mr. Preston has nothing at all to do with immigration now?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. BERGERON. How many of these agents of the government are in Europe today?

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be very happy to give the hon. gentleman the information later, as it does not come under this vote. The immigration agents come under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know how many agents of the Department of Trade and Commerce are in Europe.

Mr. FIELDING. Six.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are they?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Ball at Birmingham, Mr. Jackson at Leeds and Hull, Mr. McKinnon at Bristol, Mr. MacNamara at Manchester, Mr. Poindron at Paris and Mr. Sontum at Christiania, making four in England and two on the continent.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is Mr. Preston?

Mr. FIELDING. He is in Yokohama or Tokio.

Mr. BERGERON. That would be seven.

Mr. FIELDING. But Tokio is not in Europe.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know how many agents the Department of Trade and Commerce has in Europe, or China, or Russia, or anywhere else.

Mr. FIELDING. That was not my hon. friend's question. He asked for the number in Europe. In addition, Mr. Larke is in Sydney, Australia, Mr. D. H. Ross in Melbourne, Mr. Chesley in Cape Town, Mr. Donly in Mexico, Mr. McLean in Japan, five in the West Indies, of whom four are local men with small salaries and not in the same rank with the others, and Mr. Arnaud in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Mr. BERGERON. That is eighteen altogether. What are the duties of these gentlemen; does the department get any report from them and how does the department know whether or not they are doing any work for the money they receive?

Mr. FIELDING. These gentlemen make reports very frequently, which reports are mailed to every member of this parliament. I am afraid my hon. friend's mail has miscarried.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. I read these reports. It is very good reading, but does their work amount to a great deal for the country? It looks to me as if these appointments were made more to provide positions for some people than anything else.

Mr. FIELDING. The department is well satisfied with the results for the money we expend. If we had not these agents, I am sure my hon. friend would be the first to complain that we were not looking after our foreign trade. A trade agent is like an advertisement—you cannot just tell when the business will come, but in time the business increases and we hope that will be the case with these agents. At all events, every member of this House will feel that we should make an effort to get some share of the trade of the world, and if we do not send out these commissioners and make the effort we certainly will fail.

Mr. CROCKET. Which of these seventeen or eighteen agents enjoys the highest salary?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Preston gets $3,600, the others $3,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Mr. Preston, for the nine months ending March 1, received in addition $1,254.55 travelling expenses and $833.30 living allowance. Are the other agents entitled to living allowances?

Mr. FIELDING. No; Mr. Preston received living expenses because on his way to the east he went to South Africa, and did some temporary service there. But when he reaches Japan he becomes a salaried officer at $3,600 and is not entitled to living allowance. The others are not entitled to living allowance but are entitled to travelling expenses when travelling.

Mr. LALOR. Why was Mr. Preston removed from England?

Mr. FIELDING. He was regarded as a most excellent man for the work in the east and we like to send the best man where the work is most difficult.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the minister of his own knowledge, know if Alexander Smith, late Liberal organizer for Ontario, was ever associated with Mr. Haycock in any seizures and paid for that service ?

Mr. FIELDING. The officer of the department assures me that he has no information of that kind and I can certainly say from my knowledge that I have no information. It might not have come under my notice but the officer of the department, who should know, assures me it is not so.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I refer to a seizure in the city of Chatham, against the M. J. Wilson cordage company in which Smith accompanied Haycock on the settlement of the seizure. The fine was collected by the Magistrate, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Haycock together in a private office. I asked the amount of the seizure last year and it was stated to be $300.02. Of this $67 was given by a cheque to Mr. Haycock and Mr. Smith's bill was $245. Mr. Smith refused to accept a cheque payable in Chatham for his share of the spoils, if they were spoils, he wanted the cash and when he could not get that he wanted a cheque payable at Toronto. The cheque was paid.

Mr. FIELDING. Whose cheque ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. It was drawn by the M. J. Wilson Cordage Company. I have the cheque and can produce it if the minister cares to see it.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend says he has the cheque I take it for granted that he has. If Mr. Smith were employed in a legal capacity it would be by the Department of Justice and any payment to him would come through that department. If my hon. friend will intimate what information he desires I will feel it my duty to inquire and at a later stage to answer any question he chooses to put.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I would like to have the whole transaction gone into

Mr. FIELDING. At what date did this occur ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. In 1904-5. It is supposed that Mr. Smith came to Chatham in his official capacity as a government agent. The cheque was made out separately to Mr. Smith and he wanted to get his share. It does not appear in the Auditor General's Report except the fine, $300 and the $67 to Mr. Haycock.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand it, this comes out of the Department of Trade and Commerce and such a case should surely come within the knowledge of the deputy. It seems extraordinary that Mr. Smith, ex-Liberal organizer, should go up there with Mr. Haycock, also an ex-political organizer and take these people by the throat and that Mr. Smith should take $245 out of them. Such a case must surely be in the knowledge of the department. These men are well known, their characters and reputations are known all through the country. My hon. friend just described this man Haycock in accordance with his known reputation. Last night the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) described certain men as thieves and embezzlers in the public service. It is no use mincing matters, let us call a spade a spade. We have the case of Wagner, a convicted thief who is in the Department of the Interior. This man Jackson at Hull was stigmatized by Judge Street as a perjurer. It is about time that the public should know the true character of these men. It is a disgrace to Canada to have a man of the character and reputation of this fellow Jackson in England to-day. If the minister met a British cabinet minister in England to-day and was asked who Jackson was, I venture to say he would sacrifice the truth rather than tell his reputation, he would be ashamed to say that Canada had to-day as their agent in England, a man of the reputation of this man Jackson. Look at the department of Public Works. The second most important official in that department stands before the whole country, a convicted thief, as can be seen in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At what page does the hon. gentleman find that ?

Mr. BENNETT. I shall give it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman should give it now.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman wants to drag out the name of one of his officials I will give it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do, and if my hon. friend will pardon me, I think I have a right, when a statement of that kind is made in the Commons, as head of the department and in justice to the officials of the department to insist that the reference to the Auditor General's Report should be given so that it may be known to what official the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. BENNETT. I will give it when I sit down, but in the meantime I will make this statement of facts that last year after the Auditor General had challenged a large expenditure by an important clerk in his department—I will give his name privately unless the minister wants it publicly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do.

Mr. BENNETT. It is Mr. Gelinas, secretary of the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is not second in the department.

Mr. BENNETT. Secretary and the second official in his department, next to the deputy minister. When the Auditor General pointed out a large amount charged for hack hire what was the result ? He refunded the money, practically admitted that he had been embezzling. Where is he now ? Is he not secretary of the department? I saw something in 'The Globe' the other day, saying that Mr. Foster should not use such words as 'thieves and embezzlers in the public service to-day.' Not one of the four ministers beside my hon. friend will deny this case, it has all been threshed out. He is the second most important to the deputy minister, in the department and there he sits to-day. There is a power behind these men which prevents their being put out of office. I am not blaming the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) for it, for he has only recently come into the department. It is the fault of the system that has gone on. Let me tell the Minister of Public Works that one thing he will find in the department is the sworn testimony of a man who was paid $3.50 a day to inspect dredge scows to see that they were filled with mud. This man cheerfully swore that he had not been near these scows and knew nothing about them, and also that an official on an adjoining scow had taken from him $1 a day for keeping it quiet. I can tell the minister that he will find an awful crowd when he goes among his people in the province of Ontario. If he will look up the tenders for the work at Port Arthur and Fort William, he will find that one firm put in two tenders under different names with the idea that, if there were no intervening tenders, the minister would be able to draw out the lower tender and let the work at the higher price. The Minister of Public Works is new to this arena.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I want to learn all I can.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, he will learn many things that will surprise him very much if he has been where matters were run fairly and above board. He should look up the evidence in respect to the Gelinas correspondence. Claims were made for pay for officers in the department. The pay-list was demanded by the Auditor General before he would pass the account. But the pay-list was not produced—I assume because it would prove that the claim was not an honest and straightforward one. All I can say, so far as this man Jackson and this man Preston are concerned is that, it would be more creditable for the country if both were out of the public service and decent men put in their places.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I may say for the information of the department that in the settlement of the seizure of the Chatham Cordage Company, settled on the 24th of February, I have the check to Mr. Haycock, giving him $67.50; the check to M. Houston, who was the magistrate in the case, $300.02; and check to Alex. Smith for $245.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is he?

Mr. CLEMENTS. He is the Liberal organizer for the province of Ontario. I asked last year what the total expenses were, and the amount was given to me as being $349.02. I immediately wrote to the manager of the Cordage Company, Mr. Wilson, and he wrote me back saying that the settlement cost him $612.52. Now, I would like to know—and I hope the minister will go into the matter—why Mr. Alex. Smith could go up there in this capacity and extract $245 from Mr. Wilson.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a proper matter for inquiry. But what struck me as remarkable is that this is a matter which is at least three years old. If Mr. Wilson felt that he had a grievance, I should think he would have made a complaint to the minister. Is my hon. friend Mr. Clements aware whether he did so or not?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I may give the facts which will explain to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) why this matter was not gone into before. This seizure took place at a time when the elections were spoken of. There was a short session, and the elections followed, and this seizure took place just prior to the time when the elections were to come off. Mr. Wilson and the whole management of the concern, some of them relatives of my own, were strong Conservatives. This seemed to be the only concern seized at that time. They realized the position that the seizure placed them in, and thought that if they wanted to do business they had better 'let sleeping dogs lie.' But the factory is now out of business and the machinery sold. The men concerned are anxious that the matter should be gone into. It was put into my hands last year, and I was going to bring it up in the Public Accounts Committee. But the session closed earlier than was expected and I left it over until this session.

Mr. FIELDING. But has the management ever made any representation to any minister of the Crown explaining this transaction. There are thousands of officials acting for the government. While it is quite possible something may occur which would give just cause of complaint, I would expect the party aggrieved to take the earliest possible opportunity of making his grievance known to the minister. If he made that complaint, and that complaint were not fairly dealt with, he would then be quite justified in bringing the matter up in this House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The manager of the concern gave this matter into my hands. Mr. Wilson is prepared to come here and give evidence of the whole case if that privilege is accorded him.

Mr. FIELDING. But that does not meet the point. Did Mr. Wilson make representations to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any other minister complaining of having been wrongly treated? How could the government be blamed for not affording him relief if they were not told that a wrong had been done ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I believe Mr. Wilson has made no complaint to any minister of the Crown. He complained to me and asked me to bring the matter up.

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree that it is open to any citizen to have a grievance brought up in this House. But I think that if a citizen has a grievance against the government he should first make it known to the minister and give him an opportunity to make the matter right. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) will agree with me that it was Mr. Wilson's duty, the moment the error occurred, if it was an error, or the wrong was done, if it was a wrong, to make representation to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and demand an inquiry. If he could not do it at once for such reason as the hon. member has stated, he should have done it later. However, the matter is brought forward now, and I will see to it that the information is obtained.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The point is whether Mr. Alex. Smith was entitled to this $245—

Mr. FIELDING. I think that most of us, if we had been, as we believed, wrongly deprived of $200 or $300 four years ago, would have found a way to bring the subject to the attention of the proper minister instead of waiting so long and then bringing it up in parliament. That would have been the businesslike way of doing it. Mr. Wilson may have a grievance but the marvel is that he has nursed it and kept it to himself instead of bringing it to the attention of the proper minister.

Mr. LALOR. But it has been explained to the minister that this firm is now out of business, and its members are no longer afraid of Mr. Smith. While they were in business they were afraid to make complaints. Now, they bring it to the representative of their riding in this House to have it investigated.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that I cannot admit that that is a sufficient reason for this delay. The hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) admits that he has had the case in his hands for over a year.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I may tell the hon. minister that this matter was to have been brought up in the Public Accounts Committee prior to the closing of last session. I had no thought of the session closing when it did, but as soon as the matter was brought to my attention I gave notice of it, and I have taken the first opportunity of bringing it up.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the first name of this Mr. Wilson?

Mr. CLEMENTS. M. J. Wilson.

Mr. BOYCE. It was somewhat interesting to hear the words that dropped from the lips of the hon. Minister of Finance in regard to the non-complaint to any department or any responsible minister of the Crown in reference to the misdoings of an official of this government. I presume the hon. gentleman must be joking, I presume he must have forgotten the history of the past year, that he must be making a play upon the history of the past, upon the history that has been set forth in this House —and this is a matter of record—because we know and we know from bitter experience how futile it is, how puerile it is, how silly it is for any hon. gentleman in this House to have the audacity to complain to any responsible minister of the Crown, aye, to complain in parliament itself, of the misdoings of any official of this government. Complaints were made in regard to the conduct of a responsible officer of the government in the district of East Algoma. I am speaking of a certain postmaster. So grievous were those complaints that the inspector of this government was sent up there, that inspector went into that office, investigated the state of things and recommended that man's instant dismissal.

Mr. BENNETT. What for?

Mr. BOYCE. For theft; for larceny. He did his duty. What became of the charge? The man was allowed to resign. He was begged and entreated to resign, and four months having elapsed between the issue of the fiat for his dismissal and the time of his resignation he was paid during all that time, petted, pampered and kept in office by this government. Being a thief, being a man who had been reported to be a thief by their own official, the inspector of the Post Office Department, what became of him? He began to be very useful to this government in elections. He was used by the candidate of this government in the election and in the provincial election in January, 1905, and on the following 25th January, 1905, and in February, 1905, the same gentleman applied to the Postmaster General for his reinstatement and he was reinstated. There is one instance of the futility of complaining to a responsible minister of the Crown in this government of the misconduct of an official. Does the hon. gentleman want another instance? He is more familiar with the records of parliament than I am. Another occurs to me and it is right up in the same district. It is the case of the postmaster at Copper Cliff. Complaints were made, and a petition signed by over 500 residents of the town of Copper Cliff was sent to this government asking for the removal of the postmaster. It was alleged on the floor of this House, on the 12th July, 1906, as an absolute fact and proved by the records of the court, that this man had been found guilty of corrupt practices in elections, and that he was still holding office. What became of him? Records of this parliament show that the Postmaster General stood up in his place and said that he saw no reason for interfering with the postmaster at Copper Cliff—Mr. W. C. Kilpatrick. That is another instance, and I could go on ad infinitum. There is the case of Philip Wagner in the Northwest. There a man was found guilty by the court of preying upon and stealing from the immigrants. While it was his duty to safeguard them he stole from them. He was indicted for it and he went to jail. During the time that he was in jail his salary was paid by this government, and when he was released this jail-bird was taken back into the arms of this paternal government and given a more important office with an increased salary. Surely the hon. Finance Minister must be perpetrating a little joke on this House when he taunts my hon. friend from Went Kent (Mr. Clements) with not having brought this matter at an earlier date to the attention of the government. These matters are brought to the attention of the government in this House and very little attention is paid to them, but later on they will be brought to the attention of the government through the medium of the popular vote.

Mr. FIELDING. We are quite accustomed to hearing hon. gentlemen say what they are going to do with the popular vote. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) will have to give us something newer and fresher if he wants to make any impression on the House. He began by saying that it was the silliest thing in the world to make any representations to this government or even to parliament and that, of course, is the explanation of the speech which he has just delivered. I have not sufficient familiarity with the various departments to give him a reply in regard to the various matters to which he has referred. Some of his questions have been discussed from time to time by the responsible ministers, and I remember that the explanations which they gave seemed to be fair and satisfactory.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman think the explanation was sufficient in regard to the Thessalon postmaster?

Mr. FIELDING. I remember that the impression I received was that it was sufficient.

Mr. BENNETT. The postmaster blamed the theft on his little girl.

Mr. FIELDING. May be so.

Mr. BENNETT. That satisfied the minister?

Mr. FIELDING. If I had to undertake the defence of the details of all the departments of the government on a vote respecting binder twine I am afraid that I would be undertaking a good deal. But I am ready to go back to the original complaint which is that a certain person was obliged to pay $200 or $300 improperly. If that gentleman had a grievance it was his duty to place it before the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and if he has failed to do so then he has no ground of complaint. Now that the hon. gentleman has mentioned the matter I will feel it my duty to ask the department officials to look into it, but I think this man has no ground of complaint, because he failed to make representations to the proper officer.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the Finance Minister does not do himself justice. Talking of the Thessalon post office, he said that, having a recollection of all that happened in that case, the Postmaster General satisfied him that his course was right. What was the course of the Postmaster General? A friendly post office inspector was sent there to examine the books.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the hon. gentleman referring to? Where does this evidence appear?

Mr. BENNETT. In the report of the post office inspector at the time and in 'Hansard.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what year?

Mr. BENNETT. Several years.

Mr. FIELDING. It is annual.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, that is so, but the hon. gentleman is getting so calloused to these things that he lets them all pass by. There was a time when the hon. gentleman would wince in this House. I remember the temperance plebiscite vote in the province of Quebec when it was proved in this House and when the evidence was read to show that ballot boxes were systematically opened, that men who were members of this House, that men who are to-day judges, were implicated in it. When these ballot boxes were opened in the province of Quebec it was found that there were more votes recorded than there were votes on the list. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), the temperance apostle, pricking up his ears. When the returns were brought in there were only 30,000 votes polled against prohibition in the province of Quebec, while after there were 90,000 against. How were these returns made up?—by men opening the ballot boxes days after they were closed, filling them with ballots, and although the names of these offenders were sent wide and broad over the country, this government did not dare to make an inquiry. The record shows that there were more votes polled in these divisions against prohibition than there were names on the voters' list. The Minister of Agriculture, who had been doing business on the temperance platform for years, had not the courage to say that there must be an investigation, there was no investigation and, to-day, in the 'Hansard' of parliament and the 'Hansard' of the Senate, there are to be found the names of men—members of this House—who were charged with complicity in these frauds. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had better abandon the position he has taken to-night, that this government is going to do what is right. Let him take the brave stand which was taken by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), when he answered my hon friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) regarding one of these embezzlers. When he was asked what the government did when these cases are disclosed and the theft laid bare, his reply was: 'The government comes in as administering public affairs and not as administering justice. That is the ground which this government takes. No matter what wrong is committed, no matter what crime is perpetrated, this government, if the accused is a friend of theirs, are going to stand by him. If the people want a government of that kind, let them have it. Every country deserves what it gets. Should a Sodom and Gomorrah overtake this country some day, the people will richly deserve it. We have a government which says, no matter what thieves we may have in our service, we will keep them there because they are party friends. That was the case in the matter of the Thessalon post office. It is childish to say that the explanation which the postmaster gave, that his little girl had stolen $1,300 out of the till and was never noticed, is even plausible. This government dare not prosecute most of these criminals.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend has just been repeating the old accusations concerning the plebiscite vote in the province of Quebec. As regards the hon. gentleman himself, I would not take the trouble to reply, but as there may be others, who do not know him and who may attach some credence to what he says, I wish to say that his statements are absolutely without foundation. The accusations against the province of Quebec were absolutely unfounded and were shown to have been so.

Mr. BENNETT. Why did not the hon. gentleman, in defence of his colleagues, who were branded all over the country—two or three of whom are judges in the province of Quebec—have an inquiry into these accusations ?

Mr. FISHER. We had sufficient inquiry to show they were false.

Mr. BENNETT. Was it a public inquiry ?

Mr. FISHER. No, there was no necessity for a public inquiry

Mr. BENNETT. Take the record as it stands, and that will prove these charges.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BENNETT. I have here a few of the polling returns on that occasion. Here is the return for poll No. 3 Quebec Centre. 105 votes were polled and yet there were on the list only 101 names. Would the minister say that was a straight poll ? Will this temperance apostle say that in a polling division, where you get only 101 names on the list, 105 votes could be honestly polled. Take poll No. 20 Quebec Centre. There were 121 votes polled and 133 on the list. Take No. 1 Quebec West—114 polled and 115 on the list. No. 2 Quebec West—111 polled, 114 on the list. No. 13 Lachine —108 polled, 111 on the list. St. James No. 20—137 polled, 146 on the list. Richelieu—151 polled, 160 on the list. There was nearly 100 per cent polled of the number on the lists. These were in the French speaking counties where the people were taking very little interest in the vote at all, and mark you in these there was not a single vote for prohibition. Why were 125 votes polled against prohibition when there were only 101 on the list ? Go to the counties where there was active interest on both sides. Take Brome represented by the Minister of Agriculture. 1,216 were polled in favour of prohibition and 691 against. In this division both sides were bringing out the vote, yet only 1,917 were polled out of 3,684 on the list. Not much more than 50 per cent voted, and yet in these other divisions, more than 100 per cent of the vote was polled in some of them. Take Huntingdon, there 1,266 voted for prohibition and 221 against. There were 1,487 votes out of 3,363 on the list.

Mr. DEVLIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the province of Quebec took absolutely no interest in the matter of prohibition ?

Mr. BENNETT. I say there was practically no interest taken in it.

Mr. DEVLIN. As I remember, there was a very active interest taken on the question.

Mr. BENNETT. Let me draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the Senate Hansard of 1905. There he will find the keen interest taken, when certain colleagues were stated to have gone to the polls, after the polls had been closed, and urged on the deputy officers that, under instructions from one Pacaud, of Quebec, something desperate had to be done. There is evidence in the Senate debate, page after page of these frauds. What could be more fraudulent than having 105 votes polled in a division where there were only 101 on the list ? Will the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) meet a Presbyterian clergyman in my riding, who then lived in the Eastern townships and who is a strong Liberal, and say to him that the vote was honestly taken ? I have heard him discuss the frauds perpetrated.

Mr. BERGERON. Is here any increase in the number of officers ?

Mr. FIELDING. Only the statutory increases. There is one promotion of a second-class clerk to a first-class clerkship and there are the statutory increases.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I quite agree that it is very necessary to have men in these foreign countries looking after our trade. How does the information, outside of these weekly reports, get into the hands of the public so that the manufacturing interests may take advantage of them ? What quantity of these reports is printed ?

Mr. FIELDING. About 2,500 are sent out every week. They are sent to every member of parliament and every newspaper on the register for receiving our publications, and every individual who asks for them is given them free of charge. If any person in Canada wants these weekly bulletins, they will be mailed to him without any charge by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do the newspapers make use of them ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am told that it is the habit of the newspaper representatives to call at the department constantly and there they are shown these reports. A brief is made of them in the form of bulletins which are distributed. They are official reports placed at the disposal of the press irrespective of party. I am constantly reading in the public papers references to these bulletins, stating that the Trade and Commerce Department has inquiries about this, that and the other matter. The thing is very widely advertised indeed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are these letters given openly to the press or are they not culled over and only those the government select sent out ?

Mr. FIELDING. If I had any document come to my department I should certainly exercise the right to judge whether I should give it to the press or not. If a minister receives anything which he regards as of a confidential nature it would be highly improper that he should give it to the press.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not mean anything of a confidential nature.

Mr. LALOR. I do not wish to depreciate these foreign agents, but as one who is interested in many lines of export trade, I wish to say that I have corresponded at different times with the people who are mentioned in these weekly reports as wanting to buy certain goods I had to sell and I have never found these reports of any use. I never found any practical benefit or business arising from them and I doubt very much if there is a business man in this House who is interested in the export trade who can bear testimony as to any value arising from these weekly reports.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I can state that not later than last week a large manufacturer in Hamilton told me that through these trade reports they had made inquiries in New Zealand and as a result they are preparing a very large set of samples for that trade and they anticipate getting a very large order. This gentleman spoke most highly of the Trade and Commerce Department for the efforts it is making to extend our trade in foreign countries and I think the case I mentioned in Hamilton is an ordinary result of the efforts the department is making in that direction.

Mr. LALOR. I hope good results may come to the city of Hamilton from the correspondence my hon. friend mentions, but I venture to say that in a few months from now he will find disappointment. In the greatest number of these instances where foreign firms inquire for Canadian products and correspondence has been entered into, if you look up their record you will find they are not safe people to do business with. My experience is that it has been an utter failure and that is the general feeling in the country.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I have given an instance of what has actually taken place and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) has no right to say that no good will come of it, because he knows nothing about it. Let me ask the hon. gentleman this: As a business man would he advise the withdrawal of all these commercial agents? I would ask any business man in this House if he would advise such a thing. I do not believe there is a man in this country who does not approve of the system.

Mr. LALOR. My hon. friend misunderstood me. I did not say the experience to which he referred would be a failure, but I said I doubted that it would be a success. I do not wish to depreciate the foreign agents, but I would advocate putting much better men in these positions. I would advise the government not to appoint rascals, I may say, men who have been condemned by the courts of the country, and some who should be in jail for political offences, and because the government is afraid of the revelations these men may make they send them to represent Canada in foreign countries.

Mr. FIELDING. As the most effective answer to the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) I am informed that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association made use of these reports and have in various ways indicated to the officials of the department that they regard them as very satisfactory and very useful.

Mr. PUGSLEY. While the matter is fresh in my mind, I desire to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) who sits opposite me, stated that in the Auditor General's Report for 1906 I would find correspondence in reference to the secretary of my department which would indicate, if I remember the hon. gentleman's words correctly, that he was shown to be a thief.

Mr. BENNETT. I used the word embezzler.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have read the correspondence and I say to my hon. friend that there is not one word there to sustain his statement. No matter what mistakes, no matter what errors Mr. Gelinas may have been guilty of, there is not one word in that correspondence which would justify the hon. gentleman making such a charge as that. I say it is unworthy of any member of this House to make a statement of that kind against a young man who is not here to defend himself.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) is getting very brave; he was not so very brave the other day; his bravery has cropped up suddenly. In the first place I did not wish to mention the name of his clerk and I told him so at the outset, but he has precipitated the name of his clerk into the discussion and I can tell the hon. minister that it is not the fault of the clerk, but the fault of the system of this government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the fault of the system which has permitted this thing to go on and condoned it. The hon. gentleman will find that the Auditor General draws attention to the fact that this gentleman has charged several hundred dollars for cab hire, and when he is called upon to give an explanation he said that he had a book that contained day by day the items of his expenditure. But when this clerk is taken in hand by his minister and when the whole matter is laid bare he refunded two or three hundred dollars. Does the minister challenge that statement? Now, this brave minister, he sits there like what? I will let the public judge what it thinks of him. The minister has right under his hand a statement which shows that $300 were returned by the secretary. Why did he return the money? If he had expended it honestly in the public service why did he give it back? And when he is questioned he gave the childish answer that he did not keep an account of this $600 or $700 expenditure, but that from time to time he put it down on a lot of small pieces of paper and that not thinking he would ever be called upon to produce these pieces of papers he destroyed them. I ask the minister to tell me why the secretary returned that money. If he honestly spent it, why did he go down in his pockets to give it back? I am surprised that this minister who was so judicious the other day, who was so careful the other day, who was so thoughtful to keep out of the storm, should have rushed in to-night. It is true there is a reward offered for the discovery of the hon. gentleman; the hon. gentleman has gone from one end of the country to the other challenging any man in this House to make a statement about a certain expenditure in a New Brunswick election, and when the hon. gentleman is challenged to make the statement he sits there as dumb as the oldest Egyptian mummy that was ever embalmed. You cannot drag a word out of him. Yesterday he was slapped in the face in his own caucus for making charges outside and not being able to substantiate them, and one of the greatest newspapers in the country has a cartoon showing a barn and there is a man making a great noise inside that frightens the animals, and protruding from beneath the barn there is a pair of massive feet and there is a prize of $5,000—

An hon. MEMBER. $500,000.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister deals in large sums and the newspaper offers $500,000 for any person who can find the man to whom the feet belong. Well, it is the hon. gentleman who is under the barn and he will stay under the barn. Now, the hon. gentleman came up here with a reputation for a certain amount of brag, bluff and bluster. He has sustained it outside, but he has not kept it up in this House. I would recommend the hon. gentleman, when I again make a statement in this House, not wishing to drag in the name of one of his clerks, to have a little respect for the clerk's feelings and not make it public himself. I tell the minister again that it is plain from that report that the secretary of his department returned to the funds of Canada $200 or $300, and I ask him, if that money was honestly disbursed, why did he return it? Canada is not so poor that it is going to take from a poor clerk $200 or $300 of his own money. The minister had better be careful in future when he makes statements in this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I feel that I ought to be very grateful to the hon. gentleman for the gratuitous advice he gives me. I am new to this House, I am a stranger to a large number of the members, but I trust that I shall be able so to conduct myself as to gain the respect of this parliament. Since I came here I have heard statements made by some hon. gentlemen which I would not have expected to hear in a parliament of gentlemen, and I think the hon. gentleman ought to cultivate the habit of discussing public questions in a manner that will not reflect discredit on the parliament of which he is a member. With regard to myself, let me say that when it becomes necessary for me to defend myself I am prepared to do it either here or before any other tribunal or in any other place ; but I will not permit any member of this House to tell me when I shall speak or what course I shall take in this parliament or anywhere else. As to that, I shall exercise my own judgment. But, Sir, to-night the hon. gentleman made what I thought was a most unworthy, most unjust and most unwarranted attack on a young man who is employed in my department. That young man is not here to defend himself. He charged him with being an embezzler. He mentioned the secretary of my department, and then he hides himself behind the excuse that I asked him to give the name.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will pardon me. I told him across the floor of the House, and 'Hansard' will prove it, that I would give him the name privately, and he refused that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is worse still for the hon. gentleman to make a statement that will go broadcast throughout this country that there are men in my department who are guilty of embezzlement and who are being kept there. This parliament has a right, and the public have a right, to know who is the man to whom the hon. gentleman refers. If it can be shown to me that there is any man in my department who is guilty of theft or embezzlement, he will not remain there one hour after the proof comes to me ; but I shall not take the word of the hon. gentleman as proof, because the hon. gentleman's reputation has gone beyond the bounds of this parliament as one who is not always sure of his evidence when he makes statements with regard to the character of others. I repeat that a perusal of the Auditor General's Report, while it shows that this young man has made a mistake in not keeping an accurate account of travelling expenses, cab hire and other bills, does not show that the amounts charged were not expended by him. It does not show that he is guilty of the very serious crime which the hon. gentleman has charged against him.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman does not yet read the correspondence, which shows that the clerk does not give an explanation why the $200 or $300 was refunded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have read the correspondence.

Mr. BENNETT. The name of the clerk would not have been heard in this discussion if the hon. gentleman had not precipitated its mention himself. The hon. gentleman has paid his respects to myself, saying that he has heard my name outside. I can only say that I cannot reciprocate and say that his name has been heard particularly in Ontario. I think the hon. gentleman's name would have been very little known in Canada, at least in Ontario, had it not been for that braggart defiance which he threw out a few weeks ago. That was the hon. gentleman's entry into Ontario politics, when he made certain charges against the honoured leader of the opposition. That is what advertised him. Perhaps that is what he was seeking for—cheap notoriety. He has got cheap notoriety by that, but he has got cheaper notoriety by his silence in this chamber.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the nature of the mistake ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find in the Auditor General's Report that Mr. Gelinas declares that every dollar of his bill had been expended in travelling expenses, not only for himself, but for certain other persons, including some messengers connected with one of the departments ; but as he had not the vouchers, he apparently consented to make a return at the request of the minister. He still, however, makes the positive statement that these moneys were disbursed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the practice to require vouchers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I may say that the rule of the department now, which I have given instructions strictly to be adhered to, is that the accounts for all these travelling expenses shall be given item by item, and shall be certified to by the Deputy Minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN Was that the old practice ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Apparently not ; there was some looseness. The secretary, being I admit somewhat careless, had not kept an accurate account in writing of the various items of expenses.

Mr. BERGERON. There was a rule some twelve years ago that money would not be paid unless vouchers were given.

Mr. FOWLER. Might it not be possible that this young man had mixed his own private cab hire with the public ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He says not, positively.

Mr. FOWLER. It is possible for that kind of thing to occur. I do not know that I have in mind any instance under this government ; but I know that in our local government there was some private business mixed up with public. These things might occur.

Mr. BENNETT. Was it a minister ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might perhaps be no more than right to remark that it is unfortunate that the mistake was in favour of the young man himself. It is a charitable view, perhaps, to say that it was entirely a mistake. If vouchers are required for these disbursements and no vouchers were forthcoming, the items should not have been included in the expense account; I think the minister will agree with that. It seems that he has laid down what I regard as a very salutary rule, that not only must the vouchers be produced, but the Deputy Minister must add his signature, so that there may be no mistakes of this kind. That is very good for the future. So far as the past is concerned, the minister is inclined to take a gentle view of the question, but I think the gentleman in question should not have included these items unless he were prepared to furnish the vouchers, and it is unfortunate, to say the least, that the mistake made in his expense account was entirely in his own favour and against the interests of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I quite agree that it was unfortunate for the young man that the mistake occurred, but in the face of his positive assurance that the money was actually paid out I would be very sorry indeed to make the statement which the hon. member made in regard to him. As I said before, I think it is wholly unwarranted in the correspondence in the Auditor General's Report. The rule which has been established will prevent such a thing occurring again.

Mr. BOYCE. I presume the minister has no reason to doubt his statement that the money was paid out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no reason.

Mr. BOYCE. Then can he give any reasonable explanation of why the money was refunded by the young man after he had paid it out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surely the hon. gentleman can very well see that if the minister was not satisfied with the statement, as he had not the vouchers, the minister might say: I cannot allow that, you have not the vouchers although you say you spent the money.

Mr. BERGERON. It was paid.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he paid it back. The minister may have insisted that it should be paid back. I do not know what took place but I can understand that the minister might have said: You have not the vouchers for this, you say you paid it, you are positive you paid it but as you have not the vouchers the amount cannot be allowed and you should refund it. That is the charitable view of it and I am disposed to take that view rather than suppose that the young man committed the crime charged against him.

Mr. LALOR. The discovery that these vouchers were not with the accounts was made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and there is no credit for it due to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOWLER. Was all the money for which there were no vouchers refunded?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware as to that.

Mr. BENNETT. I shall refresh the memory of the House; the correspondence is in a preceding report of the Auditor General. The attention of the Public Works Department was called by the Auditor General to the fact that Mr. Gelinas had a bill of about $700 of which a large part was for hack hire. Furthermore, in that letter the Auditor General calls attention to this fact that as this clerk lived almost on the line of the street railway in the city it was absurd to believe that he should have disbursed this large amount for cab hire. Mr. Foster brought this up in the House and read this letter and what was the result? Mr. Hyman then acting Minister of Public Works, must have brought Mr. Gelinas on the carpet, because it was announced afterwards that reparation had been made by Mr. Gelinas. The minister says the correspondence shows that it was a straight above board transaction. It was a mistake. Let me read this letter. It is dated from the Auditor General's office, April 3rd, 1906:

Sir,—A deposit receipt has come to hand for $281.60, credited to 'casual revenue, 1905-6,' and endorsed with the following explanation: 'Repayment by F. Gélinas of portion of expenditure of 1904-5 (departmental contingencies), telephones, telegrams and letters under travelling expenses, $128.85; cab-hire at Ottawa, $152.75, total $281.60. Please send a detailed account, showing the manner in which these sums were calculated.

The letter from this office dated April 22, 1905——

That is the year before.

—discussed the charges of 1903-4, as well as those of 1904-5. What progress has been made towards adjusting any over charges of 1903-4, and previous years?

Your attention is called to the second-last paragraph of Mr. Gélinas' letter of April 27, 1905 (transmitted to this office February 16, 1906), which reads as follows: 'I do now make the most categorical declaration that all the sums charged in my accounts were duly spent.'

At what date did the necessity for a refund become obvious to you? Was it after February 16, 1906, the date of your letter or transmission?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. FRASER,
Auditor General.

Where is the answer to that letter? There is no answer forthcoming. Here is Mr. Gelinas in 1905 making a categorical denial that there was one cent improperly charged by him, and here is Mr. Gelinas in the year following giving back to the department $281.60. The minister says he made a mistake and cannot give the details of where he made the mistake, he cannot give any details. In one year he makes a categorical denial that he owed a cent to the department, he says that it is a true and honest account and afterwards he gives this money back to the department. What does the minister call that? Is that embezzlement, to take your employer's money and in a brazen-faced way say that you have not his money and next year bring it back? What is that if it is not embezzlement, or theft, or obtaining money under false pretenses, or whatever you choose to call it? The minister has brought in the clerk's name; it would not have been brought in except by him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then why do you make the charge?

Mr. BENNETT. Because the clerk himself admitted the charge. I wanted to spare the clerk's name and did not mention it and told the minister I would give it to him privately.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You think it is better to make the general charge?

Mr. BENNETT. However, after the minister has been here a while and has gone through the crowd he will have to meet with——

Mr. PUGSLEY. You think I will get accustomed to you, do you?

Mr. BENNETT. Well, that may be.

Arts, agriculture and statistics—Archives, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the Archives in the new building?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, I am very glad to say that the archives are in the new building near Sussex street, a building of which I am very proud, and which I would ask every member of the House to visit. I will not detain the committee by going into details of this work, but only ask every member to visit the archives, inspect the building and its contents, and become familiar with the work carried on there.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the total cost of the building and grounds?

Mr. FISHER. That is rather a matter for the Public Works Department. The ground belonged to the government, and my recollection is that the building cost about $75,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad of this opportunity to express my opinion that the man in charge of this branch of the public service, Dr. Doughty, is probably the best man for the position that could be found in Canada. He is a man well fitted for his duties and entirely devoted to them.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear the hon. member (Mr. Bergeron) speak as he does. I believe that Dr. Doughty is the right man in the right place. He is especially qualified for his work, and enthusiastic in the performance of it. I am glad I was able to secure his services, as I believe they are of exceptional value to the country.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his salary?

Mr. FISHER. It is $3,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the maximum?

Mr. FISHER. It is a special sum settled by agreement between Dr. Doughty and myself, when he was engaged about a year and a half ago. The salary is paid out of this lump vote.

Mr. BERGERON. I would not like my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) to think that I want the salaries increased, but I am sure there is no case in which an increase might more properly be made than in the case of Dr. Doughty.

Mr. FISHER. What Dr. Doughty wants more than an increase in salary is money to carry on his work. And, if more money is wanted for this purpose, I will ask the House to grant it, as I am sure it will be well spent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Dr. Doughty is a great acquisition to the service of which he is the head. He is an enthusiast in his work, and I believe, as the minister has said, that he thinks more of the progress of that work than about any personal ambition in the way of an increase of salary or otherwise.

'Patent Record,' $17,000.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. How many copies of the' Patent Record' are printed?

Mr. FISHER. Twelve hundred.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does this cover only the printing and paper?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems a good deal for twelve hundred copies.

Mr. FISHER. It is published monthly, and it includes cuts of all the articles patented. That is what costs the money.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the same amount as last year?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. U. WILSON. Why should not the person applying for the patent furnish cuts?

Mr. FISHER. He furnishes a drawing, but we have to get the cut made.

Mr. U. WILSON. Why should not the patentee pay that?

Mr. FISHER. This is no part of his application. This record is published for the information of the public.

Mr. U. WILSON. The patentee has not to get a regular machine made, as was formerly required.

Mr. FISHER. The application for a patent must be accompanied by what is called a working drawing—a drawing by following which a mechanic could make the article. This is submitted to the examiner. If the patent is issued, that is all the applicant has to do with it. We have to print a picture of that patent for the information of the public, and the making of all these cuts is expensive. If the 'Patent Record' were all letterpress, it could be printed for half the money.

Mr. U. WILSON. Under the old system, the patentee had to furnish a model.

Mr. FISHER. That was done away with years ago.

Mr. U. WILSON. But it was not provided that they should furnish a cut as well as a drawing?

Mr. FISHER. No. The change with regard to models was made fifteen years ago.

Mr. U. WILSON. It is not that long since you sold the old models.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Have all those models been disposed of?

Mr. FISHER. Long ago.

Census and statistics, $30,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the work of the census still going on?

Mr. FISHER. Not of the decennial census. But we have a Census Bureau which takes the place of the old statistical office, and every year we are taking a census of some special kind and issuing the figures in bulletin form.

Mr. BERGERON. Are all the volumes of the last census issued in French and English?

Mr. FISHER. Yes; long ago. The volumes were printed with alternate pages in French and English.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not remember having received these volumes. How many were there?

Mr. FISHER. Speaking from memory, four volumes. The whole work was finished two or three years ago, and I have not the information under my hand at the moment.

Mr. BERGERON. I have often received pamphlets and bluebooks of census statistics, but I do not remember receiving any bound volumes.

Mr. FISHER. They were sent out with the sessional papers, in the usual way, to all members of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember that the volumes of the census of 1880 were bound in a green cloth, making fine volumes for a library. I do not remember receiving the volumes of the last census in that form.

Mr. FISHER. Those of last census were bound in yellow cloth. They were of the same size as the others, so that they could be placed with them on a library shelf. They were issued three years ago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture to consider the advisability of gathering statistics from foreign countries and giving the people of Canada some idea what the nations of the world are doing in their trade with other countries. It is practically impossible to obtain any information in regard to foreign trade between different nations by looking through our statistics. If the hon. gentleman will investigate some of the United States reports he will find how important and necessary it is and I sincerely hope that some effort will be made in that direction.

Mr. FISHER. I confess that I have taken a different view. I thought it was better for us to confine our attention largely to the statistics of our own country and to give that information to the world at large as completely and as frequently as possible. Of course, I can understand that some people, like my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong), perhaps, who is studying trade questions, will find it very convenient to have abstracts made of the foreign blue-books, but it would be a very laborious process if we had an office for that purpose. The number of people in the country who would be interested in it would be comparatively small and they can get that information out of blue-books or official statements of foreign countries. Nearly all the governments now issue information about their own countries and these publications are available all over Canada and in the library of parliament here for reference and study. If the House wishes to have an office of the statistical bureau devoted to that kind of work, of course I can organize it. But I really think that it would be more important for us in Canada to tabulate the statistics of our own country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would occur to me that it would be well for the minister to remember that he has the census staff between the decennial and quinquennial census. I do not know whether more are required or not. It may be possible that they are not very busy

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they are very busy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They are really overworked ?

Mr. FISHER. I hope they are not overworked, but they are busy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope not; I hope their health is not suffering. The Department of Trade and Commerce does acquire statistics in regard to foreign countries. I do not know whether they are properly tabulated or not. I am not aware that they are. It would occur to me that some men might be employed in tabulating the information which is obtained by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I do not know whether that information is as useful as it could be made. If the Department of Trade and Commerce is not doing that the census department might be doing it. This is entirely without prejudice to what is proposed further by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), who suggests that something more extensive than that is desirable and I am inclined to agree with him.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know exactly to what extent the Department of Trade and Commerce is tabulating the information with regard to foreign commerce. I have no doubt there is some information of that kind. We have in the Statistical Department all the statistics of foreign countries and occasionally when definite questions are asked us I have asked the officers of the Statistical Department to look up and get answers to those questions for the individuals applying. But I have never thought it was wise or necessary to prepare a volume of statistics on foreign countries. That is a question well worthy of consideration and I am not disposed to be dogmatic about it at all and to say that we should not do it, but I can assure my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that this staff is busy. Perhaps he does not remember the explanation I gave on a former occasion that between the decennial censuses we are taking other censuses. For instance, in the five year period we took the census of the Northwest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I referred to the quinquennial census.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and at the same time we took other quinquennial censuses. We took a census of the manufacturing industries in Canada coming in between two decennial censuses so as to be able to make comparisons and give the people of the country newer information than was available in the census of five years ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How often is that taken ?

Mr. FISHER. We have done it once since the decennial census, and very likely will do it again before the next decennial census.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything done with respect to the population of Canada when any of these censuses are taken, because I see statements sometimes in the papers about the increase of population. Is that based upon any information from the department?

Mr FISHER. The statistical office has for many years made up yearly an estimate of the increased population.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That has been omitted during the past two years ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, because, as a matter of fact, it is found to be somewhat misleading. It was based upon what was called the natural increase and it did not take account of either immigration or emigration.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be a very conservative estimate?

Mr. FISHER. It would be a rather conservative estimate, I think. But, I explained some two or three years ago, when I asked the House to authorize the establishment of a permanent census and statistical office, why I thought it was well to take statistical information between the decennial censuses and not to wait for ten years for information. We have been carrying that out. At the same time as we took the quinquennial census of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan we took the agricultural census of that part of the country and we have taken an agricultural census of the rest of the Dominion which is nearly ready for publication.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you any employees other than the permanent ones?

Mr. FISHER. No, we do that by correspondence. We send out forms all over the country to persons whose names are on the lists we have. We base the applications for information upon the names we have in the decennial census. We took a manufacturing census. I will give an instance of the way in which the work is done ; we took all the manufacturers who had made returns in the decennial census of 1901; we got information from the Manufacturers' Association and from all other sources we possibly could of new establishments and we sent a schedule to be filled out by all these establishments.

Mr. BERGERON. By themselves?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we sent them through the post.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the other forms sent to generally?

Mr. FISHER. The agricultural forms are sent to people with whom we are in correspondence and who seem to have the information in regard to the agricultural production of the different provinces. This is largely done through the provincial governments. We get lists of farmers from the secretary-treasurers of the muicipalities. This is a pretty complete method of reaching the facts. At the same time I want to confess frankly that it is not absolutely accurate. It is as complete as possible, but not absolutely so.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it costly?

Mr. FISHER. No, it costs simply the salaries of the people here and the printing of the forms.

Mr. LALOR. Do the people who give the information receive anything?

Mr. FISHER. A few dollars are paid to the local secretary-treasurers who give us the lists of persons to whom to apply, but the people who fill in the forms get nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. That would not be much.

Mr. FISHER. It is $2 or $3 in each case. The whole thing practically costs very little more than the salaries of the officers here to whom my hon. friend the leader of the opposition referred, and some printing. We have the use of the mails for nothing and the returns are brought in free, and the result is we shall be able in a few weeks to place before the country a fairly accurate census of the agriculture of Canada for this last year. The whole of this cost amounts to $30,000 this year, but that includes all the statistical work of the department which, before this kind of work was begun, cost from $15,000 to $18,000. We imagine that at a cost of $15,000 for the statistical branch every year, apart from census year, we shall be able to issue these interim statistical statements of the production and trade of Canada. The work is being done in such a way that it will not cost nearly as much as it is worth.

Mr. BERGERON. That will no doubt be of advantage in taking the next census.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, we are able to take the censuses in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta much more cheaply in consequence of having a permanent staff. We did all the preparatory work in the office without employing extra men. We only employed extra men during the compilation. We used our permanent officials as commissioners. The chief officers were all taken from our permanent staff.

Statistical Year-book, $6,000.

Mr. BARR. Is the present Year-book any improvement on last year's? Last year's book was very defective. Three years ago the Year-book had a lot of valuable information, but last year a great deal of information given in former years was left out. I hope the hon. gentleman will return to the former custom and give us a Year-book which will contain valuable information.

Mr. FISHER. I hoped to lay the book on the table before Christmas, but I am sorry that I cannot bring it down before early in January. The only difference is that I have omitted information about foreign countries. The information about Canada is as complete and very much the same as it has been for years.

Mr. BARR. That will depreciate its usefulness very much.

Mr. BERGERON. Who prepares the Year-book?

Mr. FISHER. The staff of the census.

Mr. DANIEL. Last year the minister promised he would alter the Year-book in certain respects so as to remove the objections which some of us made. But from what he has just said, I presume he is not going to make any change.

Mr. FISHER. What were the points of objection?

Mr. DANIEL. When Mr. Johnston had the making of the Year-book there was a great deal more information in it especially with regard to foreign countries and other matters which I cannot recall just now. The hon. gentleman promised he would have the book improved so as to make it as useful as the former one. In last year's, a great many of the tables were simply extracts from the census, and it did not contain the variety of useful information which we found in the former publication. From what I heard, that seemed to be the general opinion.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend is quite right in saying that last year's book had a good deal of census in it, but that was because it was the first Year-book published after the census was taken. What was taken from the census however consisted of compilations, in which the striking and main facts were put together in such a way as to make them comprehensive in their relation to one another. That having been done last year, it will not be repeated this year, and the tables will be on different subjects, except that certain things are put in every year and brought up to date so as to give the information which it has been customary to give for many years.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the information for the year be to the end of the present fiscal year, the 31st March, or as before to December 31st?

Mr. FISHER. I must confess that I do not know. I should think however it would be to the end of our fiscal year, because the information in the Year-book is taken from the departmental returns largely, which are made up to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not agree with the minister that we should cut down the statistical Year-book and not give the information given in former years, particularly with regard to foreign countries. Instead of our getting more information yearly in that book we are getting less. It is important that we should have the statistics of other countries, not only for the convenience of members of this House but for the convenience of all those who wish to compare the progress of our own country with that of foreign countries, otherwise they will have to go to our parliamentary library or send for that information to foreign countries. Possibly twenty pages added to the present report, giving these statistics such as you will find in many of the foreign reports, will be all that is necessary.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate that there is a point there. I would get all the information of course about the foreign countries, and you might put a certain amount in and then hon. gentleman would say there was something else they wanted and the particular thing a student wanted was not there, but it is worth considering and I shall be very glad to consider it.

Mr. DUBEAU. (Translation.) I wish to ask the hon. the Minister of Agriculture whether he would be kind enough to take the necessary steps, in order to have the French edition of the Statistical Year-Book issued, if possible, at the same time as the English edition, so that those who, like myself, refer to the French edition for information, may have it before them, as soon as possible.

Of all the official reports issued by the department, I consider the Year-Book as the most important one. I may further say that I have carefully studied the edition of 1905, and that I did find in that report some most useful information, not only to members of this House in general, but to all business men who are concerned in matters relating to the progress of the country.

Therefore, I hope, the hon. Minister of Agriculture will spare no effort to have the French edition of the Year-Book issued this year, at or about the same time as the English edition.

Mr. FISHER. (Translation). I heartily congratulate my hon. friend for having called my attention to the grievance he has just referred to, and I may tell him that I have also entered a grievance on the same matter. It seems that it is by no means an easy task for the government printing bureau to issue the French edition of the Statistical Year-Book at the same time as the English edition. Nevertheless, I have deemed it my duty to inquire into the cause of the delay in the publication of the French edition, and here is what I was told: They pretend that it is necessary to have the English edition first, before beginning to make the translation for the French edition. I must confess that I hardly realize why that should be necessary. Therefore, I have taken the determination to have the French translation of the Year-Book in my department, so as to be able to send the copy of both editions simultaneously to the printing bureau. Through this arrangement I hope I may succeed in issuing both editions at the same time.

Let me further state that, in my opinion, the various departments should make it a duty to issue their reports simultaneously in both languages. In Canada, we have two official languages, French and English, which are on a footing of perfect equality. Therefore, the reports of all departments should be issued at the same time, in both languages.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear! hear!

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see the member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) in his place but it has reached the mystic hour of half past ten and in honour of his presentation of the case yesterday I think we may adjourn now.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, December 16, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery his certificate of the return of John Stanfield, Esquire, for the electoral district of Colchester.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked :

What changes, if any, have been made in the National Transcontinental Railway Commission's engineering staff during the current calendar year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). If the hon. gentleman will consent to put that in the form of a motion for a return I will likely be able to put it on the table as soon as the motion is passed.

TIGNISH HARBOUR.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. A. A. McLean—asked:

1. Has the government received information that the harbour or run at Tignish, Prince Edward Island, is too small to accommodate the large number of sailing craft and the fishing fleets from New Brunswick which seek shelter there?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1 and 2. The government has received a petition from the people of Gloucester county and a resolution from the Alberton and West Prince Board of Trade, both asking for the enlargement of the harbour at Tignish. The petitions are now in the hands of the resident engineer for report, for which we have to wait before any opinion can be expressed on the matter.

3. The Department of Railways informs me that it has not been asked to put a spur track from Tignish station to the breakwater.

7. The chief officer holds an extra master's board of trade certificate, the best certificate that can possibly be obtained. The chief engineer holds a chief's certificate.

PACIFIC COAST WIRELESS TELEGRAPH STATIONS.

Mr. M. S. McCarthy asked :

1. Has the government, since last session, entered into any arrangement for the erection and equipment of wireless telegraph stations on the Pacific coast ?
2. If so, what system is to be or has been installed, how many stations are to be established, and what is the price to be paid ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. Five stations. Cost cannot yet be ascertained as stations not completed.

COMPENSATION PAID BY RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked :

1. Has the Russian government paid to the owners of the British Columbia schooners 'Carmolite' and 'Vancouver Belle' the sum of $44,701, the amount agreed upon for damages for wrongful seizure ?
2. Have the claims of the owners of the schooners 'Maria' and 'Rosie Olsen,' which were seized at the same time as the 'Carmolite' and 'Vancouver Belle' been recognized by the Russian government ? If so, what is the amount to be paid to the owners of these vessels ? If not, on what grounds does the Russian government refuse to pay these claims ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. The government has just been informed that the award, with interest, totalling £16,962.58 or $82,549.77, has been paid to the High Commissioner for Canada through the Colonial Office, as the amount awarded by Russia in respect of outstanding claims.
2. No. On the ground that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the seizure of these vessels.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LIFE-BOATS.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY asked :

4. Were Canadian motor boat builders given an opportunity for tendering for the construction of this vessel? If not, why not?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes, and many Canadian establishments have turned out excellent work, but it was impracticable to employ them in this instance because it was necessary to have the boat built by a firm having experience with this special type of construction. The department consulted the United States life saving service and entrusted the work to the firm that has been almost exclusively employed by that service and at the price paid by that service.
3. $10,900.
4. No. Because the boat was built from designs furnished by the United States life saving service, embodying all improvements in the type of self righting and self bailing life-boat suggested by the long experience and under the supervision of the constructive officer of that service, and only by giving the order to the Electric Launch Company of Bayonne, N.J., could the boat have been secured for use this winter. The boat is built of solid mahogany by men specially brought from England trained in that special lifeboat work. It would have been impossible to have secured either men or materials in time in Canada. The government, however, favours the policy of doing such work as far as possible in Canada, and if any further motor lifeboats are required, will, if practicable, have them built in Canada.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The hon. gentleman will see that the question is very broad ; it covers all expenditures or votes since confederation. I do not know whether my hon. friend intended that, but I would ask that he let the question stand as a notice for a return.

THE BUBONIC PLAGUE.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked :

1. Is the government aware that up to December 1, of the present year, 114 cases of bubonic plague have been found in the state of California and that seventy deaths have been the result, and further that two deaths have recently taken place from the same disease in the city of Seattle?
2. What steps have the government taken to prevent the spread of bubonic plague into British Columbia and other parts of Canada?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. The government is aware of the presence of the bubonic plague in the State of California since August last, and is also aware of the outbreak of that disease in the city of Seattle in October last.

2. At the seaports in British Columbia, all vessels arriving from California and Puget Sound ports are breasted out at a distance of six feet from the pier ; their mooring ropes are guarded with funnels or discs ; and the gangways, reduced to a minimum, are guarded and the vessels fumigated with sulphur once a week. Such precautions are taken to prevent the landing of rats from the vessels, these animals being the usual medium of infection. By arrangement with the United States Public Health authorities, similar precautions are taken at the ports of departure to prevent rats embarking on the vessels. Special instructions to inspect for the bubonic plague have been given to the regular quarantine officers in British Columbia, and the customs officer at the unorganized maritime quarantine stations have been instructed to have a medical examination of every vessel arriving direct from California or Puget Sound ports. Special medical officers have been stationed at the various points where railways enter British Columbia from the United States, with instructions to specially examine for the bubonic plague. On the report of the news of the outbreak at Seattle, the Director-General of Public Health was at once sent there and to British Columbia to supervise the precautionary measures being taken. While at Seattle, that officer was able to secure, by the courtesy of the United States Public Health authorities, that an arrangement should be made by them with the various railway companies running out of Seattle, that empty freight cars should be sprinkled with chloride of lime or carbolic acid, and that their doors should be kept closed, especially when at a station platform and always at night, to prevent so far as possible the entry of rats into the cars. A supply of Yersin's anti-plague serum was sent to the different quarantine officers, maritime and inland, in British Columbia, and will be renewed from time to time. Haffkine's plague prophylactic fluid is prepared in our quarantine laboratory, and has been placed in the hands of our medical officers in British Columbia.

Question allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

3. When were they transferred to the provincial government, and what were the conditions of the surrender?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of Interior):

1. The government has not surrendered to the province of Saskatchewan any coal lands in the neighbourhood of Eagle lake.

In July last the agent of Dominion lands at Battleford was instructed to reserve from all applications until further instructed certain lands in township 32, ranges 20 and 21 west of the 3rd meridian, at the request of the premier of the province of Saskatchewan. This reservation included the coal mining and surface rights of these lands which were available for disposal by the Crown. A discovery of a small seam of coal had been reported, and as the existence of any large coal measures in that part of the province was at that time very doubtful, the reservation was made to enable the provincial authorities to make a thorough test with the view of establishing beyond doubt whether or not coal of economic value existed there.

2. The lands included in this reservation were : Sections 11, 12, 13, 14 and 23, in township 32, range 21, and section 18, in township 32, range 20 west of the 3rd meridian.

3. The lands have not been transferred to the provincial government.

Mr. AMES asked:

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. White is in England for the purpose of collecting information and data on all lines now plying between Europe and America, on the Atlantic, and cognate subjects.

WHARF AT HIGGIN'S SHORE, P.E.I.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Alex. Martin—asked:

Has the government received a request for the extension of the wharf at Higgin's shore, so as to make it available for small trading vessels, and is it the intention of the government to grant such request?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Yes, a request has been made and the matter is under consideration.

Mr. FOWLER asked:

MR. R. T. MACILREITH.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. When was R. T. MacIlreith first authorized to act as agent for the Minister of Justice in Nova Scotia?
2. Is he still acting in that capacity?
3. Over what territory do his services extend?
4. In what cases has he acted for the government, what was the amount of this bill as rendered in each case, and at what was it taxed by the Justice Department?
5. What is the total amount received by him to date for such services?
6. What action has been taken by Mr. MacIlreith as a result of the following letter :—

Ottawa, July 12, 1904.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that a complaint has been made to this department on behalf of Mr. A. J. MacDonald, barrister, of Baddeck, Nova Scotia, your agent there, that you have retained one-third of the amounts allowed him on taxation in the following matters: Port Bevis wharf site, Breton Cove wharf site and MacQuay's wharf site. I am directed by the Minister of Justice to state that he deems such action on your part highly improper, and I am to request you to pay over the amount retained to Mr. Macdonald with as little delay as possible. These instructions apply also to your other agents in case you retain any portion of the amounts allowed them.

I am, your obedient servant,
(Signed) A. POWER,
Acting D.M.J.

R. T. MacIlreith,
Barrister, Halifax.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

7. Has any inquiry been made as to his alleged tolling of sub-agents' fees in Nova Scotia? If so, with what result?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. On the 8th April, 1903.
2. Yes.
3. The province of Nova Scotia.
4. An answer to this question would involve the examination of accounts of five years, distributed among various departments of the government.

The House, on the 6th February last, ordered a return showing copies of all accounts, vouchers, cheques and documents relating to payments made to Mr. MacIlreith and such return is being prepared.

5. The total payments, to 31st March, 1907, as appears from the annual Reports of the Auditor General, since Mr. MacIlreith's first employment amount to $20,-362.24.

To ascertain the amount of subsequent payments would involve a reference to each department of the government (including the management of the Intercolonial Railway) and, if required, could more conveniently be given in the form of a return.

6 and 7. Mr. MacIlreith took strong exception to this letter on the ground that he had engaged Mr. Macdonald in the matter under an agreement that if, instead of Mr. MacIlreith attending personally to the whole of the work in question, he employed Mr. Macdonald, as his agent, to do part of it, the fees chargeable for such work as should be done by Mr. Macdonald should be shared, (as is the well understood custom, obtaining, in such circumstances, among solicitors in England and in Ontario), and in the proportion said to be 'the usual and regular agency basis in Nova Scotia, viz. : two-thirds to the agent and one-third to the principal.'

Mr. Macdonald denied the existence of any such agreement, and the department being unable to decide the difference left the parties to adjust it between themselves.

No inquiry has been made by the department on the subject, except the correspondence arising out of the difficulty above referred to.

THE 'SAULT EXPRESS'—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING AND PRINTING.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. What sums of money were paid by the government during the years 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907, for advertising, printing, or for any other purpose, or any other account whatever, to the 'Sault Express,' a newspaper published at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, or to any person, firm or company for, or in respect of, any work done by said newspaper for the government, or any department thereof?
2. For what purpose were such moneys paid and by what departments, respectively?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The hon. gentleman had better move for a return.

Question allowed to stand as notice of motion.

DREDGING PORT ARTHUR HARBOUR, &c

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. What contracts for dredging in the St. Mary's river, Kaministiquia river, Port Arthur harbour, Fort William harbour, Thunder bay and Mission river, have been let during the years 1905, 1906 and 1907?
2. Was the work, in each case let by tender? If so, who were the tenderers in each case, what was the amount of each tender, and to whom were the contracts awarded, respectively?
3. What was the nature and extent of the work in each case, and at what price was it let?
4. If any bonds were taken to secure the due performance of the work, who were the securities in each case?
5. If such security was furnished by deposit of marked cheques, whose cheque in each case was deposited, and for what amounts, and on what banks?
6. Are such cheques still held by the government? If not, why not?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). That had better be in the form of a motion for a return.

Question allowed to stand as notice of motion.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo) moved :

That in the opinion of this House steps should be taken to restrict the influx of oriental immigrants into Canada; and inasmuch as the policy of the government concerning Chinese immigration has proved entirely satisfactory, a definite policy should be immediately put into operation looking to the accomplishment of equally satisfactory results with regard to all other oriental immigrants.

He said : In moving the resolution which stands in my name, calling upon the government to restrict the incoming of oriental labour into British Columbia with regard to the Japanese to the same extent as they have done with regard to the Chinese, I am fully aware how the discussions on this question have been associated in the minds of certain members of the House who have not had the western experience of this question, with the principle of provincialism and race prejudice.

In 1902, when I addressed this House on this question previous to the imposition of the head tax on Chinese, one good old Presbyterian, a conscientious old gentleman, in this House, rose and said that in his opinion the policy I had advocated was contrary altogether to the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Sir, it was easy to associate a discussion of this question with provincialism. I have heard it stated repeatedly that the oriental question was a provincial question. It is true that the agitation on this subject is confined to British Columbia, because the effects are more directly felt in British Columbia. I do not think it is possible for the members of this House to have a correct conception of the importance of this question until they have had a personal experience of it in the west. I have known leading members of this House, on both sides of it, who, some years ago, expressed strong views against the anti-oriental agitation, but after they paid a visit to British Columbia and came in contact with the actual circumstances and conditions, when they met the facts face to face, they came back to this House willing to favour restrictions being placed upon that class of immigrants. This is not a provincial question. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, as a representative from British Columbia, that we, the representatives of that province, are supposed to be informed of the actual circumstances surrounding this question. I desire to say to this House that I do not support the principle of restriction on this kind of immigration because I think it would be beneficial only to British Columbia ; I want to take the broader stand that what is bad for British Columbia is so because its ultimate results would be bad for Canada as a whole. I want to take the position in this House that what is good for British Columbia can only be so considered when it can be conclusively proved that the operation of the same principle will be good for Canada. I am prepared frankly to make the statement and allow myself to be placed on record, that though it may appear at first sight as peculiarly affecting the interests of British Columbia, that ultimately it will be detrimental to Canada. This is a national parliament, and I am not advocating a provincial question. If it is a good thing to allow unrestricted oriental immigration into British Columbia then it must be also in the interests of Canada. Why, Sir, the protection of British people in British Columbia, the development of her industries on proper lines, are evidently and undoubtedly in the interest of the whole people of Canada.

Then this discussion has been associated by its opponents with race prejudice. Mr. Speaker, there always was a race prejudice. So far as I am concerned, I have been trying all my life to practice a belief in the equality of races and of men, and I am not easily influenced to do anything or to say anything contrary to the principle of the equality of races. But no man with observation and experience will say that there is not a race prejudice, that there is not an influence in that direction affecting men's minds. That influence has to be recognized, it is a universal principle that cannot be obliterated by any revolutionary process in a few minutes, or in a short period. Why, Sir, race prejudice is part and parcel of the inequalities existing as a consequence of the depravity of the human race, and is seen not only in the conflict of man against man but of race against race. The antagonisms existing in systems of government and in economic conditions are based on the same principle as race prejudice. I have faith enough however to believe that the words of the Scotch poet will come true :

> When man to man the world o'er > Shall brothers be, and all that.

But we know by experience, we know in our business operations, we know by the ordinary competition of man against man, of member against member in this House, that jealousies associated with race exist wherever we go. Then the advocates of this principle have also been associated with spoliation and injustice. I have heard it stated by members of this House that the agitation against oriental immigration into British Columbia might be considered a system of spoliation and injustice. My view is that an unrestricted system of oriental immigration into British Columbia is a system of spoliation and injustice to the British people in British Columbia. I do not think that laws protecting the interests of employees in mines, factories and railways in British Columbia can be considered a system of spoliation and injustice.

While the prosperity of the country may not consist in the enlargement and development of railway systems, factories, and the operation of mines, it is quite possible to be grinding out, by a system of alien and low priced labour, any amount of high dividends and enormous profits, but in spite of such prosperity and development it is possible that we may not be grinding out these profits in the best interests of the country. I do not regard this condition as a system of spoliation and injustice, but I do regard a system which has for its object the promotion of the personal and private interests of the few as against the welfare of the people of the country as a whole as a system of spoliation and injustice. We are very apt to be tainted and affected by the excitement which is associated with this question in British Columbia. All level-headed and sensible men in British Columbia have had to bring pressure to bear to restrain the explosive tendencies of the province. Every sensible man who wanted to view this question without prejudice, to consider it from every standpoint, to be fair and to take into consideration every interest, has had to use his influence to restrain feelings that can so easily be aroused under such conditions as these. It has been difficult for the representatives of the people in parliament to impress upon the public mind of British Columbia the seriousness of this question from every standpoint. The disposition, in consequence of that natural excitement, is not to look at and see the national or international aspects of this question. I regard it as a most important question, and while some men have been ready to try to use this question in the interest of party politics, in so far as I am concerned, I desire to say that I have too strong an opinion in regard to the seriousness of the subject, as it is associated with the social and industrial life of British Columbia and of Canada, and as it is associated with international considerations in every part of the world, to sympathize with any attempt on the part of any one who make it serve political ends. It is an important question. It is important because of its international features. We stand in this House for peace and harmony. We stand in this House as representatives prepared to give every consideration to international affiliations and interests. We recognize our responsibility as representatives in this House for maintaining the closest feelings and connections with the other portions of the empire. When any question affecting a local interest is likely to involve anything that would injuriously affect the association of Canada with the British Empire, it is an important consideration. Although there may be on the surface an evil that may directly affect a local interest with which I am associated, still I am prepared, in the consideration of that question, to look at it only as it affects the international interests with which we are associated. This is an empire problem and it must be looked at in the light of our empire. What is bad for Canada cannot be very good for the empire. If the settlement of this question is good for British Columbia it is good for Canada, and what is good for Canada is good for the empire. We cannot disassociate these several interests. The strength of the empire depends absolutely upon the quality and condition of the units that constitute that empire, and any weakness or any supposed injustice felt by any people in any section or portion of the empire is something that creates a weakness in the link connecting together the various parts of that empire. It is a serious question because there is an attempt on the part of the imperial authorities to suddenly work out the assimilation of alien races. The disposition of the British government is to make settlements in the interest of peace, of trade and of more close and friendly relations with alien powers. It is in the line of the advancement of civilization. It is the duty and the business of this government—and we believe it is a part of the great prerogative of the British empire—to seek to influence and to bring about conditions of peace and friendly relations with every alien country in the world in the interest of her own commerce and people. But, it does strike me that with the disposition of the British government in creating treaties with oriental countries like Japan there has been a tendency to seek to bring about an association of alien races on a plan that is more sudden than it is possible to work it out. There is existing in the minds of people generally, the idea that the Asiatic race cannot be brought to suddenly assimilate with the occidental race. I know that it is generally supposed that the prejudice is all on the side of the occidental. It is common to hear the statement in Canada that Canadians are prejudiced against the orientals. I could occupy the time of this House by giving instances from literary men who have lived in those countries, who have written works connected with the history of those countries, who have had an experience of those countries to show the bitterness of the jealousy existing in the mind of the oriental against the occidental. It is not the occidental against the oriental, but it is vice versa. To say the least, it is as much on one side as it is on the other. Centuries have developed insurmountable divergencies between the oriental and occidental races and it may take centuries to obliterate the divergencies which have been created. I am hopeful that it can be done. Still, there are some people who do not believe that it can. I am absolutely certain that it is not within immediate reach, and I am also certain that a process of slow and intellectual moral development and a change of system must take place to bring about the eradication of the prejudice that exists between these two races. It is a serious problem also because it may mean a tremendous oriental invasion. Let me draw a picture for this House ; let me look at two aspects of the question. Some philosopher in British Columbia, not confined to the man on the street, has prophesied that it may mean a military invasion by the Japanese on the Pacific coast. That has never bothered me for one minute. It is stated in British Columbia that Japanese spies have been making observations of the British portion of the Pacific coast, laying out their plan of operations and finding out, with minuteness and completeness, the whole situation. This has been interpreted as evidence of a spirit and a disposition on the part of the Japanese authorities to look to a military invasion of Canada. Well, Sir, so far as I am concerned, that is too remote, too far off, to enter into the domain of practical politics. I have neither the time nor the mind to deal with a theory of that kind, and personally I do not believe there is any such contemplation in the minds of even the Japanese themselves.

But, I want to remind this House that whilst there may not be a military invasion contemplated, a labour invasion is easily within practical accomplishment. Let me mention two things—in the orient are eight hundred millions of starving, competing people, without the spirit (except within these few later years) without the spirit of enterprise connected with the full development of their own country. It is not sufficiently enterprising to provide labour and to afford a livelihood for its own people. That is a picture of the orientals at home. On the other hand Asia is easily accessible to the Pacific coast of Canada; it is within a few days reach of what? It is within a few days reach of a land in their imagination to be flowing with milk and honey, a rich country sparsely settled, a country of tremendously large areas beginning to be populated, a country where men are becoming rich by labour, in comparison with conditions of remuneration in Japan and China, and these depressed, and impoverished, and starving millions have heard of this prosperous land. Can we wonder that they come to this country, and can we not see that if unrestrained; if the barriers are thrown down, or if the present restrictions are not raised, that within sight there is an easy possibility of an overwhelming labour invasion from the orient into the Pacific province of Canada? Now, Sir, I contend, as I contended in reference to the Chinese question, that an argument on a question of national importance is not good if when driven to its logical conclusion it is defective in any degree. If it is good that we should have 25,000 orientals in British Columbia for the purpose of developing industrial enterprise, why should it not be good if that principle were absolutely unrestrained and unlimited, and that these eight hundred millions of starving labourers be given an opportunity to come to all of Canada to develop her resources ? If it is a good thing that the industries of British Columbia should have the benefit of the immigration of the Asiatics into that province, why is it not good for the Northwest, why is it not good for Ontario? Why should the mill operator in Ontario, or Quebec, or Nova Scotia or any other province, be deprived of the supposed benefit of the oriental labour if it is good for the mill operator in British Columbia? If it is good for British Columbia to have this partial invasion of Asiatics, then drive the argument to its logical conclusion and say it would be good for all Canada. If that argument holds, then, where you have a labour market of 800,000,000 why should we not bring in orientals to develop and make Canada a prosperous and enormously rich country; why should we not go to the logical extreme and say : let the orientals spread over all Canada; they will open up the country, they will develop enterprise, they will enrich the country; let us bring them in ?

Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, under existing conditions it is absolutely necessary at this present minute that we should consider effective and permanent methods of restricting the invasion of oriental immigrants, and especially of Japanese immigrants into British Columbia. Now, I anticipate difficulties with regard to this phase of the question no matter what policy we may pursue. If this immigration is absolutely restricted it is quite possible that European and American capital will organize and enter the countries of the orient to develop them, and to promote commerce within them. Japan is in a position of great advantage in that she is able to supply every want of her own markets. The probability therefore is that European and American capital will seek a field in that country, and will develop its great resources so that in the next decade we may expect a mighty competition in the commercial markets of the world, and a reversal of the existing commercial relations between the west and the east. British capital invested in that country with its tremendous resources and with an inexhaustible supply of the cheapest kind of labour, is going to present to Canada in future years a tremendous commercial competition, and that in my mind will be the aspect in which the question will have to be considered in years to come. Old ideas of Asia have to be modified to-day ; we cannot regard her in the same light as we have been accustomed to in the past. Asia has awakened, and she is in competition with the United States and with Canada in every respect. We are forced to realize that fact. Now, whenever the commercial interests of Canada are in jeopardy we have no hesitation at all in deciding to protect these interests. We are always in this House ready to raise a barrier of restriction with the view of placing the commercial interests of Canada in a position of equality with those of any other country. One side of this House may not be quite as ready to give that protection to exactly the same extent as the other side, but the principle of commercial protection to Canada as against the cheap productions of other countries appears to be the well settled policy of this parliament. And why should not that principle apply to the immigration of cheap labour just as it does to the importation of cheap goods?

There are two things which it is very difficult for us to understand, and especially is it difficult for people who live in the east to understand them. One is, that the Asiatic can always under-live and under-sell the white man. We have to make that confession when we come to consider this question. The old argument we used against the Chinaman does not apply here. We used, fifteen years ago, to say in British Columbia that one white man was worth two Chinamen. Well I never said so; I always said that if one white man was equal to two Chinamen there would not be any competition in labour, and therefore there would not be any Chinese question. However, that may be, it is generally recognized that to-day, we have to change the formula, and we have to be prepared to admit that industrially and economically the Japanese comes in and makes it impossible—either in the commercial or industrial world of Canada—makes it impossible for a citizen of this country to compete with him. Some people may consider that a very serious admission, but whatever they may think it is an admission that must be made. Our old conception of the inferiority of the Asiatic race in industry and commerce has to be revised. To-day we do not want the Japanese in, not because he is inferior industrially, but for very different reasons; because industrially and commercially he is evidently in some trades our superior. Let me remind the House of this—when the agitation on the Chinese question was strong in British Columbia you could not get the commercial interests of British Columbia to support that agitation with the same earnestness as the industrial classes did. Why? Because the Chinee was simply a labourer; he did not enter into competition with the commercial interests; the commercial interests of the country on the whole got a benefit out of him, and in some sense and to some degree the commercial interests employed him. That aspect of the question has completely changed. To-day, the commercial men of British Columbia fear the Japanee as the industrial classes ten years ago feared the Chinaman. The Chinese coolie entered into the industrial competition with the man who had to work with the pick and the shovel, the hewer of wood and the drawer of water; but the Japanee—and this accounts for the extraordinary excitement and position of antagonism against the Oriental in British Columbia at the present time—the Japanee enters into competition with the commercial classes of British Columbia, which fact has extended the problem from the industrial into the commercial world. Every business man in British Columbia today is just as ready to sign the petition and is just as enthusiastic on the subject as the industrial classes themselves.

Now, let us see what has been the experience of other countries in which restrictive legislation has been tried. The United States was obliged half a century ago to adopt restrictive legislation against the importation of Chinese; yet, strange to say, there are more Chinese in the United States to-day than in any other single country in the world outside of China itself. The United States has also been placing restrictions upon Japanese immigration, very important and very strong restrictions, and when the people of the United States thought that under the operation of this restrictive legislation the whole question of oriental immigration was settled, there arose, about a year ago, in connection with the regulation of the public schools in San Francisco, an agitation which started a movement from one end of the United States to the other, which has had the effect of bringing to the minds of United States statesmen the absolute necessity of further regulations on this question.

In Natal, where there has been restrictive legislation against Asistic immigration for many years, the Legislative Assembly at its last session adopted anti-oriental legislation of the most drastic kind. There has been similar legislation in the Australian colonies and in New Zealand. Just a year ago a Chinese ambassador visited the Australian commonwealth, met the members of the Australian government and discussed with them the question of removing the restrictions on Chinese immigration, and what happened? When the parliament of the Australian commonwealth met six months afterwards, instead of diminishing the pressure of the Asiatic exclusion law, they decided by a unanimous vote to carry out to the last possible degree the regulations against oriental immigration.

Take the case of the Transvaal, which shows how far-reaching is the opposition to oriental immigration. There are no Chinese in England or indeed in the British Isles, but suddenly, by a combination of circumstances which placed a large number of Chinese labourers in the Transvaal, there arose the mightiest political force that has existed in England in modern times. The Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, in the midst of the great conflict that was raging in South Africa, promised the labouring people of England that the acquisition of the Transvaal would provide an outlet for the surplus labour of England at high wages, as it would bring the invaluable mines of that country under British control. He was returned to power on that proposition and made a settlement with the Transvaal in the interest of the British people. Did he send the surplus labour of England to the Transvaal? The same government negotiated, under an indenture with the people of China, for a supply of servile labour from China for the mines of the Transvaal. This does not seem to be pertinent to the subject, but this is the point I wish to make. What did the English people think of that transaction? What happened the moment they discovered that they and their friends had to compete in South Africa with this servile Chinese labour? They had never experienced the competition of Chinese labour before and knew nothing about it. But because British interests were being affected economically in one part of the empire, there arose in England the mightiest political force of modern times, which on that same question swept the Conservative government out of power, and the Liberal government was elected on the promise that it would change the condition of affairs in the Transvaal by giving that colony legislative authority to pass an ordinance doing away with Chinese labour. This is a clear evidence of the feeling of the British people on this subject when they are brought into contact with it.

What is the history of this question in Canada? Just twenty-five years ago the member for the district which I have the honour to represent in this House, Mr. Gordon, the member for Vancouver Island, submitted to this House the following resolution :

> That in the opinion of this House it is expedient to enact a law prohibiting the incoming of Chinese to that portion of Canada named British Columbia.

Sir John Macdonald requested the withdrawal of that resolution on the promise that he would appoint a royal commission to investigate the question. That commission was appointed in the following year, the commissioners being the Hon. the Secretary of State and the Hon. Justice Grey of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. At that time the Canadian Pacific Railway was under construction and hundreds of oriental immigrants had been brought into British Columbia for the purpose of working on that railway. The commissioners reported to the House that it seemed to them that that work could not be carried on without the assistance of Chinese labour. Now, Sir, I am not prepared to criticise the condition that existed twenty-five years ago. I am not prepared, even for a political reason, because a Conservative government was then in power and its ministers stated that in their opinion Chinese labour was a necessity to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to take the ground that they were mistaken in their judgment.

What I say is that that was the foundation of the importation in large numbers of orientals and that the Commissioners reported in favour of it. Two years later the government of the late Sir John Macdonald put on a head tax of $50. That was the year 1886. All through this period the people of British Columbia were petitioning and protesting against Chinese immigration. The whole question was supposed to have been settled up to 1899, when the matter was brought by the British Columbia members very strongly to the attention of this government. This government doubled the head tax from $50 to $100, and the following year it appointed a royal commission with instructions to inquire and report in order that this question might be finally settled. They made their report, I think, in 1902, and they reported in favour of a $500 head tax. The government carried out the suggestions of that commission. The people of British Columbia had never asked, through its representatives, for any larger restriction. There is not a petition in this House, ever made to any federal government, for any larger restriction than the imposition of a $500 head tax on Chinamen.

But there is an important argument in connection with the Japanese immigration. The Japanese has become a factor in British Columbia between the time when this commission began its inquiry and the date of its report. In 1898 there was no serious Japanese question in British Columbia. The Japanese began to come in at that period, and before this commission got through it had to consider the question of Japanese labour in that province. In 1901, at the last census, there were 4,300 Japanese in British Columbia. But I find in this report something very important, of which this House and the government ought to be reminded, and that is that during the sittings of that commission, the Japanese consul in Vancouver voluntarily proposed to the commission to use his influence in favour of the regulation of the Japanese influx into British Columbia. The commissioners reported that as the Japanese authorities had voluntarily consented to regulate the immigration of their people into Canada, it was important that this should be understood as a settlement of the question at any rate for that present time. And I think I am right in stating that, on the strength of that report, and based on the regulation which the Japanese consul had voluntarily accepted, the recommendation was made to this government that in consideration of this understanding there was no need for legislation against Japanese immigration; and no legislation was passed that time or since :—

The emigration of Japanese has for the present practically ceased, only fifty-six having arrived at Canadian ports in the last six months of 1901. This is doubtless owing to instructions given to local authorities by the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs for Japan instructing them to prohibit entirely the emigration of Japanese labourers destined for Canada or the United States. The commission was favoured by a copy of these instructions, through the Japanese Consul at Vancouver, which is as follows :—

Department of Foreign Affairs,
Tokio, Aug. 2, 1900.

To the Governors of the Prefectures.

You are hereby instructed to prohibit entirely for the time being the emigration of Japanese labourers for the Dominion of Canada or for the United States.

VISCOUNT AOKI,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The commissioners appreciated that instruction and reported to this government that they did not consider it at all necessary to pass any legislation, so long as that understanding was maintained. The question, to all practical intents and purposes, was settled up to 1906. Speaking only for myself, I want to state plainly to this House that from the period when the $500 head tax was imposed on the Chinese and from the time when there was an understanding between this government and the government of Japan, by reason of which no legislation was imposed against the Japanese—from that period up to last year, when the treaty was considered and endorsed, I am not aware that there was any serious Japanese or oriental question in British Columbia. Some will ask : Did not the legislature of British Columbia seek to impose restrictions during all this period? Is it not true that the legislature sought to impose regulations or restrictions, from year to year, during the very period when you say there was a complete settlement, and was it not through the influence of the imperial authorities on the Dominion government, that these provincial Acts were disallowed ? I want to say that there was no public agitation in favour of any restriction against the Japanese during that period. I am not prepared to say that politicians in the local legislature were not making a political football of this question, but what I do say is that during the period I have stated, from 1902 to the beginning of 1907, there was no public demand for any increased restrictive legislation against orientals coming into British Columbia by public petition to representatives in the House of Commons. So far as I am concerned, I understand, when I endorsed that treaty in January, 1907, that it was in the public interest. I endorsed that treaty because there was no demand made upon me in my district in favour of increased restriction and because I understood that that immigration was absolutely regulated by the understanding between the federal government and the government of Japan and that the practical results of that understanding were quite as effective up to that period as if there had been positive enactment. There is one thing more which it is important to mention. The Chinese question had become entirely obliterated, as the head tax had operated almost to their entire exclusion. Let me give the House the figure. The tax was imposed in 1903. In 1904, only three Chinamen came into British Columbia. Of course I am estimating the number of Chinese immigrants, by dividing the amount of tax collected by 500. There were only $1,500 collected in 1904, which would give only three Chinese. There were only eight Chinese imigrants in 1905. In 1906 there were 22, and in 1907, 91. But from the first day of January, 1907, up to the end of October of the same year, I am surprised to find there were 829. Before I am through I propose to try to account for this sudden increase.

For five years it was almost prohibited by the passage of that law and the imposition of the tax almost completely stopped this immigration. But, in this present year we see that 829 Chinese have paid the head tax to get into Canada, a matter with which I shall perhaps deal later on. After the endorsement of the British treaty by this parliament a very sudden change occurred in British Columbia. The Hindoos had then been coming in for a year before, and their appearance created some excitement, but was never considered by the commercial and industrial interests of British Columbia generally as being as serious a question as the importation of Chinese or Japanese. There were two reasons for this: The Hindo was not as great a commercial advantage to the average employer, he was not as suitable a workman, he could not be employed with the same percentage of benefit and interest, and in the second place neither the conditions nor the climate nor the surroundings were suitable to the individual himself. Thus the competition of the Hindoos in British Columbia was never regarded as serious as Japanese or Chinese. But the strange thing is that in this very period of 1907 nearly 900 Chinese paid the $500 head tax to get into British Columbia and enormous numbers of Japanese came in in the same period. I shall give to the House a statement to the immigration of orientals into Canada for the last seventeen months. According to my calculations and information gathered from the Immigration Department of the government, nearly 9,000 Japanese entered British Columbia in less than seventeen months. 1,000 Chinese came into British Columbia in the eight months of the present year and in the past seventeen months 4,080 Hindoos entered British Columbia. I wish also to give a statement of the number of Hindoos alone entering British Columbia in the whole period, as I do not think it has ever been presented to this House.

Year.	Number of Hindoos.
1904-5	45
1905 6	387
1906-7	2,124
8 months of present year	1,956
Total	4,512

According to the best information I can gain, of that 4,512 British Indians who came into British Columbia, 1,421 left for the United States, leaving a balance of 3,091 remaining in British Columbia. Thus we see that 9,000 Japanese, 1,000 Chinese and 3,500 Hindoos have come into that province, according to my calculation, although I have not been able to arrive very definitely at the numbers. Still there are undoubtedly many thousands of Orientals in that province.

It seems to me important to find out the cause of this. How was it that a certain class of oriental labour was able to pay $500 a head to come into this country? How was it that such a number of Hindoos were brought into that province in the same year? How was it that such a large number of the Japanese, out of all proportion to the number of Japanese already in British Columbia, were brought in the same year 1907? The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) when he was in British Columbia spoke about this subject in Victoria, and I had the honour of listening to him. He suggested—he did not state very emphatically, in fact I think I should put it even more mildly and say he insinuated—but at least he left the impression that he knew the reason why Japanese had been brought into British Columbia. The reason he presented was very far-fetched, official correspondence and events have demonstrated that his theory was absolutely wrong, his reason was not a correct reason at all. He suggested the extraordinary reason that Mr. W. T. R. Preston, who was tragically described as a discredited official, who had been superintendent of immigration in Great Britain, who was not believed by his own colleagues, who could not be believed on oath, according to the views of some people was the cause of the Japanese immigration into British Columbia. I have no brief for Mr. Preston. I took the opportunity during the investigation of Mr. Preston's work in connection with the Labour Bureau in England to cross-examine Mr. Preston myself and I must admit that I am not absolutely sure that he did not do more than he was ever paid for doing and was understood to be doing in connection with the Immigration Department in England. But because he may have made mistakes in England in connection with immigration, it is a tremendous stretch of the imagination to think that as a commercial agent he would go to Japan and send the Japanese to British Columbia. I wish to remind my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the Conservative press took that statement up after he left the province and I mention it here because we have had to meet that assertion. What have the British Columbian press to say upon this question, that this discredited official was taken hold of by the Department of Trade and Commerce and transferred to Japan, that the government had secretly endorsed a treaty and just after the treaty was settled this discredited agent, at the expense of the people of Canada, was sent to Japan and was the direct cause of the importation of Japanese. I made some inquiries about Mr. Preston's appointment, but if Mr. Preston cannot be believed on oath, then I suppose hon. gentlemen will say that those who would promote his interest could not be believed on oath, so perhaps it will be of no use to read the orders in council by which he was appointed commercial agent to Japan. I find that Mr. Preston was not in Japan until six months after the contracts were made in British Columbia under which the Japanese were brought into this country. I think it is fair to say that much in Mr. Preston's defence. I am not criticising the statement of the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) for the sake of doing it, and I would not have referred to this except that it has been brought up in the Conservative press as a good argument and it shows that it must have been difficult for my hon. friend to find a reason.

I wish now to come to the real reason of the importation of a large number of orientals within such a short period. We have some information. The government sent Mr. Mackenzie King as a commissioner to British Columbia to look into this question, and I have before me two of the contracts that were made, part of the evidence given before the commissioner, that account absolutely for the immigration of the Japanese into British Columbia at this period. These contracts were made with the Wellington Coal Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As regards the Grand Trunk Pacific, I cannot speak so positively. I have looked over the evidence to see if the Grand Trunk Pacific had made contracts to bring them in, but I did not find it. I looked over the evidence carefully, and according to that evidence I found that two contracts were made, one by the Wellington Coal Company and the other by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and these explain fully the large influx of orientals into British Columbia this year. I desire to call the nature of these contracts to the attention of the government. I do not think it ought to be possible for contracts to be made to bring orientals into this country, or to bring in skilled labour of any kind, unless these contracts are authorized and supervised by responsible officers of the government. I hope the government will give some consideration to that opinion. These contracts do not constitute a voluntary agreement between free and independent men, but between an irresponsible company and corporate wealth in Canada. I do not think that any financial company ought to be authorized to bring in servile labour to Canada. Who compose the Wellington Coal Company? The Wellington Coal Company is presided over by Mr. Dunsmuir, the present Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia. I am not associating that position with the company, I am simply stating that the Dunsmuirs were the principal owners of this enterprise. Now the Wellington Coal Company has been enormously subsidized company for the purpose of building a railway from Victoria to Nanaimo on Vancouver Island. It has received a cash subsidy of $750,000, and 1,900,000 acres of land, free for ever from taxation. The Wellington Coal Company entered into negotiations with certain Japanese who were at the head of an organization called the Canadian Nippon Supply Company, to bring in 500 Japanese labourers to work in the coal mines.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that while there is an intense feeling in British Columbia against the coming in of Japanese, there is a special objection to the employment of Japanese in coal mines. Every piece of restrictive legislation in the provincial legislature has been particularly directed against the employment of orientals in coal mines. No man who knows anything about coal mining can be ignorant of the cause of this legislation. Twenty years ago there were many serious disasters in the coal mines on Vancouver Island, which were traceable to the employment of orientals. The Wellington Coal Company and the Nanaimo Coal Company came together twenty years ago and made an agreement that they would never again employ orientals in their mines. But here is a contract made to bring in 500 orientals, for five years, to pay their wages over to this Canadian Nippon Supply Company, who will in turn pay them over to the labourers. Here are conditions in this contract making the company responsible for consequences if the white men strike against any unfavourable conditions the contractors must be responsible for keeping the Japanese at work, thereby bringing Japanese labour directly into competition with white labour. Then the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made the same contract for the same period, to bring in 2,000 Japanese. I want to say that I am entirely opposed to the possibility of such contracts being made in this country, under any circumstances, or unless, as I have already said, they are entirely supervised by the government. I think also that this principle should apply to the contracts regarding all kinds of labour. I hope the government, in framing their immigration policy will exercise more discrimination in allowing immigrants to come into this country under contract. I think legislation should be immediately passed forbidding the making of contracts in Canada to bring in labour from other countries.

Now, I will come back to the treaty. The British treaty was ratified by this parliament because it was thought it would be in the commercial interest of this country. It was not a question between Liberals and Conservatives, every member in this House agreed that it was a treaty commercially in the interest of Canada, and was likely to develop trade connection with Japan. It has been said, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition said in Victoria, that the British Columbia members said nothing about it, that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) was the only man who said anything about it. My explanation has been given that we were acting under an agreement with Japan at that time and the treaty was endorsed by us on that understanding. I was as anxious as any member of this House to make arrangements whereby trade between this country and Japan could be fostered and increased, because I thought it was in the interest of the Pacific coast. I do not fear the result; I am prepared to meet the political effects of that assertion. I say that if the full development of British Columbia is to take place, we must have a share of oriental trade. The prosperity of that country, the development of its trade, require a market in the orient. Canada as well as the United States have goods that we are anxious to send to the orientals, and they have goods that we desire to purchase. What we need is a treaty which, while securing to both countries the benefits of commerce, will give each country reciprocal protection in regard to the immigration from one country to another if we cannot make such an arrangement then we must abandon oriental trade relations. I do not see, how, by diplomacy, a principle like that cannot be developed and worked out. Now, Sir, the trade with Japan, in my opinion, is tremendously important, and I have gone to the trouble of making a statement or two about it.

Exports to Japan.

	1897.	1906.
United States	$13,000,000	$35,000,000
Canada	65,000	500,000

The total increase of the export trade of the United States in ten years was $22,000,000 while the total increase in the export trade of Canada for ten years was $435,000. The export of Canadian goods to Japan is on the increase for in 1905 Canadian exports to Japan were $365,399 and in 1906 they were $500,620 or an increase of $135,000. The increases of the exports to Japan from Canada are important because they affect the development of the western portion of this country. Wheat and flour were exported from Manitoba and Alberta, pig lead, lumber and fish from British Columbia, and rubber goods, paper and canned goods of different kinds from Ontario. I have also prepared a statement which I think it is important to give to the House on the invested Japanese capital in British Columbia, for as I have already explained, there is a strong commercial feeling against the investment of Japanese capital, and as a consequence the representatives of the commercial interests have joined in strongly in the campaign against the Japanese. The statement of invested capital is as follows :

Business.	Number.	Capital invested.
General and provision stores.. ..	36	with capital of	$ 786,000
Copper mining..	1	"	100,000
Banking	1	"	50,000
Boarding houses	28	"	228,000
Lumbering	60	"	120,000
Contractors and brokers	6	"	229,000
Printing offices.	2	"	20,000
Restaurants ...	9	"	17,000
Shoemakers.. ..	2	"	4,000
Tailors	4	"	30,000
Rice mills	4	"	60,000
Liquor firm ...	1	"	10,000

Barbers and.. bathhouses. ..	6	"	12,000
Farming	15	"	30,000
Property owners.	400	(market value)	1,200,000

Making a total invested capital of $3,250,000, all coming into competition with our peoples' commerical interests.

I want to deal for a little while with what I consider to be the remedies for this question. A day or two ago I was very much struck with the importance of looking up the comparison between the treaty of the United States and the treaty that was endorsed by this parliament in January of this year. I admit to the House that I was surprised at the very clever diplomatic method of the executive head of the United States in bringing about regulations that seem to me to cover all the advantages that we have obtained by the endorsement of the British treaty and yet maintaining their system of protection and regulations as against Japan—reciprocal of course, regulating one country as against the other. In the treaty between the United States and Japan, Article 1, which is practically the same as in the treaty between Great Britain and Japan, gives the Japanese full liberty to enter, travel and reside in any part of the United States. But here is the point that I want to call to the attention of the House.

Mr. R. SMITH.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date ?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The date of the treaty with Japan was 1894. The American treaty was made in the same year as the British treaty. They received all the privileges of the favoured nation clause included in the British treaty, but here is a provision that I would call to the attention of the government.

It is, however, understood that stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of labourers which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

This, of course, as the House will see, is a reciprocal provision. United States labour had no objection to a stipulation in any treaty that United States labour should not go to Japan. The executive authority of the United States sought to protect the labour of that country by stipulation that the Japanese should not come to America and while it was made a reciprocal provision it does not seem to have been a grievance to the Japanese authorities at all, for the Americans continue to do the largest trade of any country in the world with Japan, and it does not seem in any way to have affected the conditions between these two countries. The United States Congress passed an Act called an Act to regulate the Immigration of Aliens into the United States. This is another point that I call to the attention of the government and the House. Provision was contained in the American treaty making it possible for the government of the United States to adopt regulations and enact laws affecting immigration. At the same time it did not interfere with the continuance and operation of the treaty. It gave them all the privileges that we British countries got by the treaty with Great Britain but they also were left free to legislate on the question of immigration. On the strength of this power provided for in their treaty they enacted, in January, 1907, what I regard as extraordinary legislation. The treaty operating, no conflict between Japan and the United States, the commerce of the United States maintained, trade constantly increasing and yet we find them, in January, 1907, according to the powers reserved by that provision of the treaty, enacting this clause :

Provided, further, that whenever the president shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possessions of the United States or the canal zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labour conditions therein, the president may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passport to enter the continentl territory of the United States from such other country or from the canal zone, or from such insular possessions.

What does that mean ? Remember that in January, 1907, the United States passed a law making it impossible, notwithstanding their treaty, for Japanese with passports to the Insular Possessions of America to be landed in continental America. I want to call the attention of the House to a striking coincidence. In January, 1907, the United States passed that law, and is it not a strange coincidence that in the month of February of that very same year, by Japanese capital organized in Vancouver, 1,400 Japanese were landed from Honolulu into British Columbia. The Japanese who went to the Insular Possessions of the United States had to be landed somewhere else than in the continental portions of the United States ; it was easy to make contracts ; British Columbia was near at hand, and so by reason of this exclusive legislation of the United States in January these Japanese were landed in Vancouver. I want to mention another startling fact. In January, 1907, the United States passed an ordinance to this effect :

Any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such persons does not belong to one of the excluded classes, and that said ticket or passage was not paid by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly.

Now, Sir, I want to say that we have here a provision that directly affects the Japanese immigration into the United States, because in spite of the operation of that peaceful treaty between Japan and the United States, the Japanese cannot be taken into the United States under contract. That, to my mind, is a most important provision. Suppose we had had that provision in this country (as I have suggested to the government we should have), what would have happened in the matter of the oriental immigration to British Columbia? We have demonstrated to the House that the thousands of orientals that have been brought to British Columbia have been brought under contract, and under the influence of Canadian companies and of the Japanese authorities. If we had a provision in our immigration laws similar to that enacted in the United States in 1907, such contracts would be made illegal and it would be impossible for these immigrants to come here. Let me point to the government that just in proportion as the United States law prohibiting the entrance into the continental United States of Japanese with passports to the Insular Possessions of the United States ; just to the extent that law prohibited successfully, Canada was made the dumping ground for these very people. Honolulu is crowded with Japanese, and as the United States has declared that these Japanese even when they have passports to Honolulu cannot enter the continental United States, they are brought across the sea in thousands to Canada. They cannot be taken to the United States, they must be taken to Canada. And, Sir, if no provision is made against that system of contract ; if there is no supervision by this government, then we will have open contracts bringing these Japanese from the Insular Possessions of the United States and dumping them in Canada, while all the time the United States is in possession of its treaty with Japan which helps the Americans to do more business in Japan than is done by any other country in the world. If the industrial and commercial interests of Canada are to be protected from the effect of this special legislation of the United States, it seems to me it is necessary that the Canadian government should take this amendment very seriously into consideration, and just as soon as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up the time of the House to perhaps a greater extent than I expected, but I want to ask indulgence for a few more minutes so that I may refer to other aspects of this question. There never was a time when European and British labour was coming into British Columbia in anything like the same proportion as during the last one or two years. The advertisements about this rich and undeveloped country have recently attracted hundreds of British miners to the coal mines of Vancouver Island. These are men of the class we want; men who come with their wives and families to British Columbia to take up their homes there. And, Sir, I say to this House that the great misfortune is that just when these enterprising citizens were coming to the Pacific coast and getting themselves comfortably settled among us they had to face the competition of the contract labour brought over from Asia. How is it that we have experienced so much difficulty in inducing European people to come in British Columbia? The record of British Columbia with respect to oriental immigration is the answer to that question. I was in England some years ago, and when I asked English miners : why do you not come to British Columbia where you will find better opportunities, better conditions, and better prospects, the answer was : Why, that is an oriental country. During the last five or six years, on account of the successful operation of the law enacted by this parliament in 1903, that impression of British Columbia was gradually being obliterated, so that during the last twelve months or so British labour was being encouraged to come there to a greater extent than ever before. But just as this British labour had begun to endeavour to change its fortunes and to seek a home in a British province on the Pacific coast, it finds itself face to face with an influx of ten thousand or eleven thousand Asiatics in sixteen months. The impression will surely go forth that if these contracting companies are allowed the right and the privilege to contract for oriental labour, then there can be no room and no opportunity for European labour in this British country. That is the case I put before the government and before this parliament. I say that the attitude of the government from 1903 to 1906 was successful in preventing the invasion of British Columbia by orientals. I take the responsibility of that opinion as a member of this House; I say it here, I say it everywhere. But I do say, that when looking over the remedies for the present grievances, and remembering the restrictive legislation that has been provided by the United States in spite of the international treaty they have with Japan ; it is the duty of this Canadian government to take action immediately—and by that I mean as soon as possible. I do not know what is the result of the negotiations of the Minister of Labour in Japan ; I have no opportunity of knowing. I cannot prophesy what we may expect to be the result of these negotiations. What I do expect is that we can continue the successful operation of the commercial understanding which we have with Japan to the commercial advantage of Canada, and yet make such a diplomatic arrangement with that country as shall afford a positive restriction upon the influx of Japanese into Canada which will settle the question for all time.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver City). Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the motion moved by my good friend the hon. member for the city of Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), I wish to compliment him and to congratulate the House upon the very excellent manner in which he has put this question before this parliament and before the people of Canada. I suppose that there has been no question brought up in this House since I have been a member of it that opens a wider door for the demagogue than this anti-oriental question. It is easy for the man on the street to denounce anybody and everybody in connection with oriental immigration, because the man in Canada finds his fellow with a skin not the colour of his own coming into the country, and immediately that which is latent in the mind and heart of every white man, the question of colour, comes up. I do not wish to approach this question in any demagogic spirit, nor do I wish to draw the colour line too clearly while dealing with it. I would rather approach the question from the broad standpoint of Canadian citizenship and the best interests of our country. An attempt has been made to throw into the political cockpit this oriental question. My good friend the leader of the opposition, in his pilgrimage to the Pacific coast, opening his tour with a meeting in the city of Vancouver, brought this question into the sphere of active politics by an attack upon the government and an attack upon myself. A little later on I will give reasons for my belief that the hon. gentleman's position was not correct, and I am prepared to stand or fall in the estimation of the part of the country I represent as to whether or not my actions have been correct. A few months ago there was brought down to this House by the right hon. leader of the government a Bill for the ratification of the treaty which had been entered into between Great Britain and Japan, and which included Canada. At that time there was not, inside or outside of this House, any question as to whether or not we should enter into that treaty. There was no Japanese question at that time, as nobody could know better than myself, who lives in a hotbed of anti-orientalism in British Columbia. When that treaty was before this House, the hon. member for the city of New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) brought up the question, whether or not free intercourse would be allowed between Japan and Canada, that is, whether Japanese and Canadians might come and go freely in their respective countries. At that time we had the assurance in writing of the Consul General of Japan, which every hon. member of this House was prepared to accept, which I accepted, that a restricted number only of Japanese would be allowed to come into Canada. Upon that assurance I relied and this House relied, and upon that assurance the right hon. leader of the government put through the treaty, which made Canada a party to it. The hon. leader of the opposition, when in Vancouver, said : Where was the hon. member for Vancouver when this treaty went through ? I was in my seat in this House ; and if that question can be asked of me as a private member, much more can it be asked of the hon. leader of the opposition: where was he as the leader of a great party when an important question like that was brought before this House ? If it is asked why I did not open my mouth, I ask, why did the hon. leader of the opposition sit as dumb as an oyster in its shell when the question was brought before this House? I stated on the platform in Vancouver, and I state here, that I had no reason to raise my voice on the question, because there was at that time no question on which any man was called on to speak in regard to that treaty. I ask the hon. leader of the opposition, where was he when that treaty went through ? Why, Sir, he was just as ignorant of the question as he was dumb on the question, and I was exactly in the same position, and so was every other man in Canada, because it was not then known and could not be conceived that so soon would come this bolt from the blue in the crisis that arose in Vancouver last summer. Therefore I say it ill becomes the leader of a great party to throw into the political cockpit a question of this kind.

Nor do I wish to shirk the responsibility placed upon me in this matter. No man can foresee the future, and every man's hind sight is better than his foresight. We can look back and appreciate the mistakes we have committed ; but so far as the government of Canada is concerned, there was no mistake other than their putting faith in promises which were not lived up to, but which they had every reason to believe would be respected. I am not saying that the government of Japan broke their promise. They may have lived up to the letter of their agreement. But what I say is that it was made possible for the citizens of Japan, over whom Canadians had no control, to wink at the letter of the law and break it in spirit, as has been done during the last four or five months. When the treaty became law there was an understanding between this government and the government of Japan that only one passport per month would be given from each of the Japanese provinces to Japanese citizens to come to Canada. There is a considerable number of provinces in Japan from which there is no emigration ; and taking into consideration the number of provinces from which emigrants might come, it was estimated that not more than 600 or 700 a year could possibly come to our shores. However, after we had entered into this arrangement, we suddenly found ourselves confronted in British Columbia with a very serious influx of Japanese from Honolulu, and every man from that island was in possession of a Japanese passport from Tokio to Honolulu, dated May and June. There were three vessels, two belonging to the Weis line and one flying the French flag, which were chartered by boarding-house keepers in Honolulu to carry emigrants to Vancouver. The first boat to land was the Admiral Jukeberry, which brought out 500 or 600. Two weeks later the Kennerie landed with 1,187 men, every one of whom was in possession of a passport from Tokio, dated May and June, and to Honolulu only. Another boat, the Indianapolis, was on her way and had arrangements made to carry nearly 2,000. The Kennerie was to go back and bring out 1,200 more. They had all arrangements made for carrying a vast number of Japanese to our shores, and apparently we were helpless to stop the influx. People living east of the Rocky Mountains cannot understand or appreciate the position we took. We saw coming to our shores these numbers of Japanese, apparently prepared to come in thousands more, who would oust our people from our country. That may be said to be a strong view and the average man will tell you that it is a very extreme one. But, Sir, we have in British Columbia a country rich beyond the dreams of avarice. Its mines are rich, it has fertile valleys and teeming fisheries, all of which are waiting to be developed. It is a country with a territory of 387,000 square miles and less than one person to every square mile. Within two weeks journey of that country across the Pacific is another country, with a territory of only 10,000 square miles and a population of 46,000,000 people or 400 people per square mile. They see in British Columbia a country in which they can make as much in one day as they can in their own in a week, and where they will enjoy every privilege, a country only waiting for the hand of man to develop it. It has been said that the Japanese will not come to us because they have Corea and the southern Manchurian peninsula to go to since the Russian war. But Corea is a poor country and Manchuria is already in the hands of the Manchurians and the Japanese cannot oust them. There is nowhere any country in which they can do so well as the Pacific coast, and that country is the Eldorado, where they hope to make a great deal of money and still remain Japanese. You may say that is no reason why we should object to them. Well, I am not objecting to them because they are industrious and diligent, but on broader grounds. In this Dominion the white people are as yet but a small community. We have an immense heritage and a great future, but no country can be great which depends solely upon the riches of its soil and its mines and its wealth in lumber and fisheries. No country can become great whose people are not great. You cannot build up a great country by mixing the occident and the orient together. It is impossible to bring about cohesion between races which are so directly opposite in views as the oriental and the Caucasian. It is just as impossible to do this as to mix oil and water. Perhaps in two hundred, three hundred or four hundred years, some amalgamation may take place, but in that time your history will be written in bloodshed, and we cannot afford to allow any considerable number of people to come to our shores out of whom we cannot make good Canadian subjects. That may seem to some members of this House to be exceedingly strong language, but I am convinced that if we are to have a great nation in Canada, if we are to have such a country as we would wish to leave to our children and our children's children it must be a country developed by the white races of our land ; it never can be done by letting down the bars to the free and easy access of the hundreds and thousands and millions of orientals who are ready to come to our shores.

Reverting to the position in Canada at the time the treaty became effective, it may be said that there was then no oriental question bothering us in British Columbia. It may be said also that the local legislature in every session for the last eight or ten years has passed and repassed an Act which practically prohibited orientals coming into the country. I accept that as a fact. It has been passed, but there are few men in the British Columbia legislature who are manly enough to get up and say that they were merely embalming laws on the statute-books, because that was an act entirely beyond the purview of the local legislature, and for that reason was of no effect. The British Columbia legislature can pass Natal Acts, which are only educational tests, until the crack of doom; they will never stop one Oriental from coming in to the country. To carry that question to its logical conclusion, they may watch the border line of our country and our seaports, but they must not forget that British Columbia borders on the province of Alberta, and they cannot prevent orientals from coming into the province from another province. I do not think it requires the training of a constitutional lawyer to recognize the fact that the province of British Columbia was entirely outside its jurisdiction when it passed the Natal Act; the only authority that can handle this question is the Federal government at Ottawa, and to the Federal government at Ottawa we look for the solution of this problem.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock I was endeavouring to show the attitude, the false attitude, I think, of the British Columbia government in passing what is called the Natal Act. The reason why I call their position a false one is this, that the British Columbia government in passing the Natal Act arrogated to itself a power entirely outside their sphere, that is, the regulation of immigration into the province. Now, Sir, the passing of the Natal Act has become a hardy annual in the province of British Columbia. There have been very few members in that province who would care to get up and declare they were wasting their time and going outside their prerogative in passing such an Act, for the reason, apparently, that they were afraid their action might be misconstrued when it came to the point of facing their electors at a re-election. However, I maintain that the Natal Act, so far as British Columbia is concerned, is just so much waste paper. The only authority who can satisfy us on this question is the federal government at Ottawa.

The reason why the people of British Columbia are so strongly opposed to oriental immigration is not far to seek. I remember very well when I first went to British Columbia twenty years ago that the fisheries were entirely in the hands of white men and Indians; there were very few orientals engaged in that industry. Mining was also in the hands of white men, and the lumber industry was entirely in the hands of white men. These are the three principal industries of our province, and we have endeavoured, so far as we possibly could, to keep them in the hands of men who would help to build up a white Canada. The fisheries upon the Fraser river, that one time employed five or six thousand white men and Indians, are to-day entirely in the hands of the Japanese; you will see three or four thousand Japanese engaged in that industry and very few white men. The canneries are entirely in the hands of orientals; so far as the fisheries of British Columbia are concerned, they are to-day entirely at the mercy of orientals. If these people were to take it into their heads at any time to stop work, there would be no fish caught and no fish canned in Canada. That is a rather serious phase of the question, that one of the biggest industries we have in our province is entirely in the hands of orientals, when it might just as well be entirely in the hands of white men who would build up the country. It is the same way in the lumbering industry. A few years ago it was a rare thing to see a Japanese or a Chinese in the lumber woods, but to-day it is becoming a rare thing to see a white man there.

Yet the people in the rest of Canada tell us that we must have cheap labour, we must have oriental labour or we cannot carry on the industries of the country. Now if that is so, why is it that no other part of this great Canada has been obliged to bring in orientals to develop their industries? Why does not the province of Alberta require them? Why does not the province of Saskatchewan require them, or the province of Manitoba, or the old province of Ontario? None of these provinces ever attempted to bring in orientals to build up any other part of Canada. I think the cry that you must have cheap labour by orientals to work in the different industries in the province of British Columbia, is the curse of our country to-day. I maintain that we have as much right to say to the rest of Canada that they shall have orientals as the rest of Canada has to say that British Columbia shall have them.

Another reason why we object to orientals is that we are the buffer province of Canada. It seems when we go east to the Rocky Mountains that we find a different view point prevailing, every thing is viewed from a different standpoint west of the Rocky Mountains. They appear to be the dividing line. During the troubles we had in British Columbia this summer we found little or no sympathy, either from public men or from the press, east of the Rocky Mountains. The sympathy that we found was entirely along the Pacific coast. We found a lot of sympathy down on the American side, and the Americans found sympathy on our side when they had the same troubles that we had. The American people on the Pacific coast did not find any sympathy east of the Rocky Mountains, neither did we in Canada find any sympathy east of the Rocky Mountains. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I state that the people of eastern Canada fail to grasp the seriousness of this question in British Columbia and as it affects the Pacific coast, I make a statement that is well backed up by facts. Had there been a few more ship loads of oriental immigrants, such as we saw in the city of Vancouver when 1,100 were landed in one day, had we had a recurrence of that four or five times, I myself, Mr. Speaker, am afraid to say what the consequences might have been for the rest of Canada. I am afraid to say how long we would have stood quiet seeing our country flooded with orientals, and being told that we must submit to it because it was necessary in the interest of British connection. I am of the opinion that there is no British connection strong enough to justify any part of Great Britain, or any dependency of Great Britain, sacrificing itself for the sake of such connection. Now that may be a strong statement to make, but we have an evidence of that fact in the history of British people. The man who says that we must endure this for the sake of an ally of Great Britain, that we must sacrifice any part of Canada for that purpose, is saying something which is not borne out by the facts of history. I say that no part of Canada should be sacrificed on account of that treaty, and I do not believe the treaty calls upon us to make a sacrifice to that extent. We believe that legislation can be passed by this government which will remove for all time any danger of a further influx of orientals into our country. The Japanese are not the only people we object to, we also object to Hindoos, but we are told we must allow them to come in because India is a British possession. Well, Sir, Hindoos cannot go into Australia, and that is a British possession, Hindoos cannot go into New Zealand, and that is a British possession. They cannot go into Natal, and that is a British possession. Surely we in Canada can afford to make laws against the influx of orientals as any other part of the empire.

This is a question, Mr. Speaker, that I have a great deal of difficulty in approaching in a calm and satisfied manner. I think I could make myself a little better understood if I were outside of this House. I find that I have a litttle difficulty in restraining myself when we are told that we must, for the sake of peace and quietness, accept the situation and that we are powerless and helpless. I say that we are neither helpless nor powerless, and so long as I have a voice in the public affairs of this country so long shall I raise up my voice against any further oriental immigration into this Dominion. We have, at the present time, Mr. Lemieux, one of our ministers, over in Japan treating with the Japanese government, seeing if proper arrangements can be made and seeing if the Japanese government will pass such legislation themselves as will stop any further influx of Japanese into Canada. I maintain that we have to do our part as well. I maintain that we have to keep our fence up and meet them half way in their keeping their fence up. If the Japanese government say they will not allow any more Japanese to come to our country beyond a certain number, as they said in a letter to the government in 1902, then, there is no reason why the Japanese government should object to our saying that none but those who are holding passports from Japan to Canada shall be allowed to land; so that it would be impossible for us to have a recurrence of the practice of using the Island of Honolulu as a bridge from Japan to Canada. If we do not stop the influx into Canada I maintain that we will soon find a greater number of orientals in British Columbia than white people. I maintain that in a very short time, we would lose a very important part of Canada if any trouble should ever arise between the orient and Great Britain. The Japanese, Chinese and Hindus would have a surplus of population as compared with the white people in our province, and they would have no difficulty in taking possession of the Pacific coast. It is my opinion that the yellow peril is much closer than the people of this country have any appreciation of. Even if it is not, it is a wise precaution, on the part of our government in view of what has taken place in the last few months, to take such measures as shall practically and thoroughly stop any further influx such as we have had during the last few months. The city of Vancouver has given an object lesson to the rest of Canada. I am not in sympathy with popular outbreaks, which suggest the idea of a riot, because we are a law-abiding people, and we endeavour to protect those who come to our shores, but if a few more shiploads of these orientals come it will only intensify that feeling and an intensification of that feeling would work disaster for the rest of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM SLOAN (Comox-Atlin). Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us for discussion brings prominently to the people of this country a question which has been less or more engaging public attention not only in Canada and many other colonies of Great Britain, but also in the United States. From the fact that I have spent a period of my life in the orient, I will deal with the question from a not altogether local point of view. In its present aspect the question of oriental immigration and its consequent effect upon our country is to my mind the most vital, the most important matter which has been before parliament since confederation. And I do not concur in any sense with the efforts which have been put forth to make this a merely sectional or political issue. Holding the views which I do upon the subject I desire to discuss it from the standpoint of loyalty to my own native Canada, of loyalty to the flag under which we live. The hon. members who have preceded me have dealt very fully and ably with various features connected with the question, and it will not be necessary to give in further detail or cite the many able efforts which were made by those opposed to Chinese and Japanese immigration, efforts which resulted in parliament declaring, feebly it is true, in 1885 for a white Canada by imposing a head tax of $50 upon Chinese entering our Dominion. Again, in 1900, with more emphasis the parliament of Canada declared for the principle of a white Canada by increasing the head tax to $100. In 1903 parliament again declared in no uncertain voice for a white Canada when the head tax on Chinese was increased to $500, and this was coupled with the statement made upon the floor of this House that Japan had agreed to restrict the emigration of labourers to this country. Sir, I was one of those who favoured at that time a policy of exclusion, and I have not changed in that regard my views then held. The action of parliament, however, was accepted by the great majority as settling the question accepted by all as a compromise, and thus disposed of and regarded as definitely settled. Recent events have shown that we were unduly optimistic, that a $500 tax does not altogether exclude, for within the past seven months some 900 Chinese have paid the head tax and the understanding given to this government by the then and still accredited representative of Japan, has been evaded, in that the maximum was 600 Japanese labourers, as I understood it, to arrive in Canada in any one year. The arrivals, however, from 1st July, 1904, to 30th November, 1907, are 11,113 (of whom 10,000 have arrived in past few months), and as has been pointed out another new and disturbing feature also is the influx of Hindoos, over 4,000 having arrived in the past two years. And thus we have again reopened the question of whether this Dominion of ours or any portion of it is to be white or yellow. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has stated that the situation as far as Japan is concerned is different. I agree with him fully in that statement, but from the very fact that it is different and more difficult it is the more dangerous and the remedy naturally must be the more drastic. Sir, by those who favour—and they are not a few—oriental immigration into Canada, the statement is made that labour was scarce in the west. That may be true, but it was equally true as regards Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia or the prairie provinces. Labour in all parts has been sharing to a less or more extent some degree of our prosperity. But you would seek to rob the labourer of his legitimate share of this prosperity by an unjust competition. And as has been pointed out not only the labourer but all classes and conditions are affected by the influx of Japanese, and other orientals. The potent result being naturally to discourage those of our own race who would, were different conditions prevailing, be more readily inclined to settle on our western shores. Again it has been contended that we must have cheap labour to develop our natural resources. The natural resources of Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec, the prairie provinces have been developed by white labour, and it is a gross libel to say that the Pacific province with resources more varied, more extensive, more valuable, cannot be developed with white labour. It will mean a more equal division of the wealth produced. It may mean a decrease in dividends and a consequent shrinkage of unearned stock values to a proper legitimate basis, to employ white labour, but the final result will be good business for Canada, for Canadian enterprise and Canadian dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

We are just rounding off the first century of British dominion on the Northwest coast of America. In that brief space of time through the indifference of Imperial statesmanship we have lost large areas of territory and coast line both on the south and north of what we now hold. And my firm conviction is in view of past history and present conditions that unless there is a complete reversal of policy, time will see our present possessions of British Columbia from the Rocky Mountains westward to the Pacific ocean become a colony, and ultimately a possession of a united orient.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never, never.

Mr. SLOAN. Hon. members say 'never, never.' We can all subscribe to that sentiment, but never, never, does not stop the locust swarm of Asiatics now coming, nor is it in any sense a check on the uncounted millions of the far east. Who can pretend to say what the outcome will or will not be. I state my convictions viewed in the light of past and present policy.

We have to trace England's rise to greatness to her position as a great world power, to her present position of naval and commercial supremacy through a long gradual process of development. We see in our own generation looming up on the horizon of the Pacific, appearing with meteoric suddenness another great world power, both commercial and naval, a nation young, vigorous, aggressive, with recuperative powers as yet undimmed by devastating wars, a giant undoubted, with possibly limitless ambition. Who can tell? That Japan aims to become the commercial and naval power of the Pacific is unquestioned. That she has also ambitions to sovereignty over the orient would appear from the recent utterances of Count Okuma, who has been prominent in financial and commercial affairs of Japan, and who, in a speech at Kobe, 'declared that Japan would surely disappoint the people of India if she failed to afford protection to the millions there now being oppressed by Europe.' Their ambition may also extend to the occident, and furthermore it is undeniable that the inevitable overflow of a new over densely populated country will follow the lines of least resistance.

England guards with jealous eye and with her best blood the northern passes of India. Mistress of the Pacific and with rapidly increasing colonies on our western shores will not a united and land hungry Orient turn a trained and calculating eye upon the passes of the Rocky Mountains. It will be noticed as an almost universal law that the political boundaries of nations of the old world are the mountain ranges creating and maintaining distinct national and racial divisions. In North America where the struggle for land has not yet become acute we have penetrated the mountain barriers unopposed. We have upset this almost universal law of the eastern hemisphere, although unconsciously it has appeared in the provincial and state divisions of territory. The All Red Line from which we expect so much is a bond drawing together the outposts of the British dominions. It narrows to a slender thread in the defiles of the Rockies. Guard well then the west; fill it with people who will be loyal to our ideals of national life. Guard well the strategic position which is not only of dominion but of empire.

An eminent statesman of the United States stated :

> The Pacific ocean, its shores, its islands and the vast regions beyond will become the chief theatre of events in the world's great hereafter.

In fifty years more the fulfilment of that prophecy will be past history. England has made an alliance with this new world power, but this alliance and all other treaties or compacts of an Eurasian complexion can never endure. They can at best possess only the elemets of expediency. They can never possess the elements of permanence or stability. It is impossible, it is impracticable, nay more, it is unnatural. As individuals the races do not and never will assimiliate. As nations their ultimate individual destiny, their world-wide interests, their undying ambitious centre in channels as opposite as the poles. Canada recently accepted this treaty made by Great Britain. Whether this was done at the request of the Imperial authorities or of her own volition matters little. It is claimed that trade relations with Japan and the orient are of paramount importance. It will be found on investigation that trade with Japan is not an important factor as yet. Take the report of our Commissioner of Japan, Mr. McLean, it is not at all optimistic especially with reference to one of our principal exports, the item of flour. Let me read from weekly report No. 197, dated 4th November, 1907, page 615 :

> Recent correspondence may be recited in order to show, what has already been shown from time to time in these reports that the unreadiness on the part of Canada to entertain any considerable export trade to the far east is disappointingly evident.

And again on page 618 :

> It will be noticed that one correspondent of June 10, cites the milling trade as of the opinion that their sales to the orient have been so far at a loss or at a less net profit than if done at home. Another under date of August 12, states the objection to the Japanese market to be that it leaves no profit whatsoever. This simply goes to show that Canadian flour can get a better price than the market in Japan will offer which is a comfortable situation.

Those familiar with conditions upon the Pacific coast are well assured that this is not permanent. Already we have within a short time a remedy for the existing state of affairs.

Let us consider the present volume of trade with Japan.

Our total imports from Japan for the years 1902-1906 inclusive were..	$6,644,381
Our total exports to Japan for the same period were..	1,793,892
The export item of salt fish, the product of Japanese labour in British Columbia, is..	729,348
The export item of flour..	350,000
Leaving a balance of..	714,000

made up of miscellaneous items of which lumber is about one-third.

Japan's commercial and manufacturing activities are rapidly increasing and those who are now pressing for trade relations will in a few years be praying for relief for protection against the cheaper manufactures of oriental origin. The United States is not disturbed over trade relations with the orient. Why should Canada ? I quote from House documents of 29th Congress, first session, in the report of the Department of Commerce and Labour, 1905-06, page 50 :

> China offers a fertile field for American products and American manufactures but if the price to be paid for trade with China is the unrestricted immigration of Chinese of all classes, then in the interest of American labour, and American citizenship we had better forego entirely that trade.

Oriental trade will flow in the most favourable competing channels and when we consider that the ports of Vancouver, Victoria and Alberni are 600 miles nearer Hong Kong than San Francisco, it gives Canada an undeniable advantage, and again, Prince Rupert with a harbour equalled by few and surpassed by none in the North Pacific Ocean east or west (and I have visited all those of importance with the exception of Port Arthur and Vladivostock), Prince Rupert occupies the commanding position from the fact that the distance to the orient is 350 miles less than Vancouver, and nearly 1,000 miles less than San Francisco. Prince Rupert backed by the grain fields of Alberta and Saskatchewan equipped with elevators and terminal facilities is destined to command the trans-Pacific trade, irrespective of oriental restrictions.

It has, however, only taken a few months' experiment with this treaty to manifest the weakness of our position in so far as immigration is concerned, and it has been found necessary to send a plenipotentiary in the person of the Minister of Labour to Japan, with a view to more definite understanding. That our representative to Tokio will be firm, even to the verge of failure, is my hope for Canada at this time, thus leaving the government in a position to carry out their avowed policy of 1903, and I trust that legislation will be introduced this session with that in view. Canada should not and must not recede from the position that immigration to this country should be controlled from within and not dictated from without. Other self-governing colonies assume and maintain this position ; that we, the connecting link, of British Dominions should do likewise is doubly imperative.

I notice in the recent press despatches from Tokio a statement credited to Baron Ishii, chief of the Bureau of Commerce of the Japanese Foreign office, who has just returned to Japan from a trip to the United States and Canada investigating the immigration problem. The essence of his statement is that Japan would bow with deference to the wishes of the United States and discontinue sending her labourers to that country, but would continue to send a limited number to Canada. If it be true that Japan has yielded to the wishes of the United States, disregarding the understanding with this government as expressed on the floor of this House, the position of Canada as a colony of Great Britain is indeed humiliating.

It has been charged that the whole question of oriental immigration was largely the result of labour agitators and labour unions. Speaking for myself the charge is absurd. The interest I have in this is a national interest. In my constituency I have not even a labour union, much less a labour agitator. I merely mention this matter of local interest to corroborate what I say. I have no sympathy with mob demonstration or mob violence. But I do sympathize with legitimate agitation, the recognized weapon of every free-born British subject. Are we to stand idly by and see our Canadian national life degraded to the standard of a contract slave ? Are we to saddle upon our offspring and the future generations of Canada the blighting prospect of everlasting competition with the outpourings of the Orient ? Are we to allow our Dominion to be sacrificed to commercial and corporation greed or expediency ? Why should we not agitate, agitate for the future of our country, agitate for a white Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific ?

It has been stated that this is a problem for the west. To that I must take exception. In my opinion it demands the highest consideration of statesmanship and diplomacy, both Colonial and Imperial. That this problem presents many difficulties no one can deny. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has solved many difficult problems with lasting advantages to Canada and the enrichment of his fame for statesmanship, and I trust that in this he will acquit himself also with dignity to his country and added honour to his name. This is not a question for the West, Mr. Speaker, it is for Canada and the Empire.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, the problem of dealing with Asiatics is no new one ; indeed, the question is as old as the sons of Noah. For many centuries, the people of Europe were threatened by what is popularly known as the Yellow Peril, and it was not until about five centuries ago that the ascendancy of the white man became clear and decisive. The Europeans went on voyages of discovery, and took possession of the vacant lands, and afterwards retained possession of those lands by a free use of gunpowder. As a writer in the 'Edinburgh Review,' points out:

> The white man fails to realize that he has owed his ability to dictate terms to the men of other colours, far less to the mental superiority in which he prides himself, than to the restless spirit of dispute and inquiry, which led him from one discovery to another. The invention of gunpowder, about the same time, enabled the white man to obtain supremacy over his less fortunate neighbour, and that supremacy, although sometimes threatened, has been maintained until the present.

Under such conditions, a great disparity in the density of population, so far as the different races were concerned, was bound to come. 800,000,000 persons of the yellow races, occupy 7,000,000 square miles of the southern and eastern fringe of Asia. Of these 350,000,000 people, or over 20,000,000 square miles, are under white government. 600,000,000 persons of the white race occupy, to a greater or less extent, some 25,000,000 square miles in all parts of the earth ; and control 13,00,000 or 14,000,000 more. In other words, the proportion in favour of the whites is about five to one.

Ambitious yellow men are determined to remove this inequality, and, as Rudyard Kipling stated in his Ottawa speech, they no longer have the same exalted idea of us that we have of ourselves. The most convenient vacant spots for these people are on the Pacific slope of the American continent, and while these spots remain vacant, inrushes of orientals can naturally be expected.

One has only to learn of the way in which the people of China live to be convinced that the desire of these people to secure more land, is a natural one. Malthus, on population, speaking of China:

> The whole surface of the empire, is with trifling exceptions, dedicated to the production of food for man alone. There is no meadow, and very little pasture; neither are the fields cultivated in oats, beans or turnips, for the support of cattle of any kind. Little land is taken up for roads, which are few and narrow, the chief communication being by water. There are no commons or lands suffered to lie waste by the neglect or the caprice or for the sport of great proprietors. No arable land lies fallow. The soil under a hot and fertilizing sun, yields annually, in most instances, double crops.

Notwithstanding that the great majority of the people live under such frugal conditions, the prodigious number of them occasions a great deal of misery, and the same authority quotes the following :—

> The country, however extensive and fertile it may be, is not sufficient to support its inhabitants. Four times as much territory would be necessary to place them at their ease. In Canton alone there is, without exaggeration, more than a million souls, and in a town three or four leagues distant, a still greater number. But what is this to the whole empire, which contains fifteen great provinces all equally peopled? A third part of this infinite population would hardly find sufficient rice to support itself properly. It is well known that extreme misery impels people to the most dreadful excesses. It cannot be said in China, as in Europe, that the poor are idle, and might gain a subsistence if they would work. The labours and efforts of these poor people are beyond conception. A Chinese will pass whole days in digging the earth, sometimes up to his knees in water, and in the evening is happy to eat a little spoonful of rice, and to drink insipid water in which it was boiled. This is all that they have in general.

What is true of China is true to a less extent of Japan and other Asiatic countries. France always maintained a proper proportion of people to its area. Poverty is scarcely known there, and people generally are able to live comfortably, and save for a rainy day. If we take France as maintaining a proper density of population and compare it to China and Japan, we find that there are millions upon millions of people in these countries without room to live. Is it any wonder then that at the investigation recently held by Mr. Mackenzie King, in Vancouver, a Chinese contractor and employer of labour, who is thoroughly acquainted with conditions in his own country, should have made a statement to the effect that if the $500 head tax were removed half the people of China would come to this country of their own accord looking for work.

But there are poor people in countries outside of China and Japan. Great Britain is not without her poor, largely because the area is limited, and a portion of the land is in the hands of individual owners, who do not cultivate it. As one writer puts it :

> But in London there is no escape. Base, brutalizing poverty sweeps along Park Lane, and gazes with sorrowful, hungry, cowardly eyes, at the palaces of South African millionaires. It crowds the June morning parade of smart ladies in Bond street. It touts for cabs or needlessly sweeps crossings in front of the restaurants. It fills the Strand with drunkards and Piccadilly with prostitutes. It is to be seen in the squares of the fashionable neighbourhoods where its presentment is drunken women asleep with their babies in their arms. England may be the richest country in the world, but London is a swamp of dreadful poverty. In degree, the provincial cities are as bad. Who that has ever seen them can forget the palpable miseries of the poor of Edinburgh and Glasgow and Dublin? There is little choice between Manchester, the home of Richard Cobden, and Birmingham, the home of Joseph Chamberlain.

So that while we have a large amount of sympathy for the yellow race, it should not be sufficiently expansive to crowd out that sympathy we ought to have for the people of our own race blood.

British Columbia entered confederation some thirty-six years ago. It is easily the richest province in the Dominion of Canada. The opportunities for peopling it were many, and it offered every possible attraction to the settler. But British Columbia seldom received any encouragement from the government or parliament of Canada, and imperial statesmen refused to appreciate its importance as a factor in the building up of the empire. The requests of its mere handful of people were generally treated with contempt. In the general scramble for appropriations, some wise and some otherwise, that were made since confederation, and are still being made, there was nothing left for poor British Columbia, after the fellows with more votes got what they wanted. Secession was threatened in the early days, because the then government refused to carry out the terms of union, and finally, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, the eastern people said, now those British Columbians should be satisfied for all time to come, and this federal government took the position that the people of British Columbia could not expect any more when a railway was built for them. But the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway did little or nothing to open up and develop British Columbia. From the time it enters the Rockies, until it reaches the delta of the Fraser, it runs through the poorest portion of the province, with the exception of a very limited area. It opens up no valleys, and it practically escapes the mineral bearing sections. You closed our free ports in which we could buy the cheapest goods that were to be used in the development of our great natural resources, and you thereby forced us to buy your highly protected eastern wares, hauled to us by a railway that was absolutely under no control, and which charged us every dollar they could extract from us. It is quite true that incidental to the completion of the road, a great city grew up at its western terminus, but this was about the only benefit British Columbia received from the construction of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The people clamoured for railways to open up the valleys of the province, to give transportation facilities to its mineral and timber resources, but while this parliament generously voted large subventions for development roads elsewhere, for many years it turned a deaf ear to the representations of British Columbian representatives.

The federal government spent thousands of dollars in encouraging immigrants to the Northwest, but not one dollar in getting emigrants for British Columbia. Arrangements were made with transportation companies for cheap rates to the Northwest, and the self same companies were allowed to compensate themselves for these reductions by soaking those who had the courage to venture to British Columbia. So far as British Columbia was concerned, its chief function as a part of confederation, was to produce revenue, to be expended elsewher, in making this a great country. An hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Armstrong) exemplified this same selfish policy when he introduced a resolution calling for free rural postal delivery. By this resolution he simply declared that we ought to starve the undeveloped portions of this country in the interests of the more populous eastern portions.

Honourable gentlemen seem to think that the picture has been over-drawn, but I have resurrected an authority which should appeal, at least, to the honourable gentlemen opposite. A number of them will remember Hon. Col. Prior, who represented Victoria in this House, for a number of years. He was a Tory of the Tories, whose party loyalty could not be questioned, but he ran up against the studied neglect of British Columbian interests, and finally, driven to desperation he wrote to Sir John Macdonald, the Premier of Canada, a letter which substantiates to the fullest extent, the statements which I make. This letter bears date December 12, 1890, and in part, follows :

Mr. D. ROSS.

Dear Sir John,—Both Earle and myself see the matter in the same light and are heartily sick of trying to do our duty to our constituents without being able to accomplish anything.... I consider that ever since I have been in the House you never tried to do justice to Victoria. When I say 'you' of course I mean your government.

Nothing that I asked for to amount to anything has been granted, although I never asked for anything out of reason.... All I want to do is to get what is fair for my constituents.... In conjunction with my colleague I repeatedly brought to the notice of different ministers the necessity of new post-office and customs buildings here, but no notice whatever, is taken of our application.... When a minister comes here he accepts a banquet, takes a drive around a block and is off again. He never takes the trouble to see for himself what our requirements are, and even when he is told by the representatives, he makes a note of them, perhaps, and that is the last of it.... I shall call a public meeting, explain the whole matter, and resign my seat. I know it wont make much difference to you, and you will say: 'Let the young fool resign' . . If Victoria is not to get what she is justly entitled to, I do not wish any longer to be her representative.

(Sgd.) E. G. PRIOR.

Needless to say Col. Prior did not resign, and the same conditions prevailed until this government came into power in 1896.

An elaborate defence of the policy of this government need not be made. There were times when it could not rid itself of the traditions of the past, and it listened to the tempter, in the shape of the importunate easterners with a greater voting power, but it can be safely said that when the history of Canada is written due credit must be given the Laurier government for its early appreciation of the fact that the destiny of this country, if it were to become great, was bound up in the west, and in its efforts to develop and people that portion of the Dominion, British Columbia received substantial recognition.

The construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway did more to develop British Columbia than any other factor. The government was severely criticised by honourable gentlemen opposite for its policy in this connection, but no more profitable investment of money was ever made by any country than that by Canada when she granted a few million dollars to aid in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Coal mines were opened up, lumber mills were established, the fertile portions of the valley were brought under cultivation, with the result that to-day from Medicine Hat to Kootenay Landing, is a valley of prosperous growing towns and villages.

The main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway runs a little over a hundred miles north of the international boundary line, and practically all the development of British Columbia, except portions of Lillooet and Cariboo, and a portion of the coast, is south of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line. This is accounted for by the fact that there are no railways north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and while the hurricane deck of a cayouse and the stage coach are interesting and picturesque, they do not tend to hasten settlement or development. British Columbia is seven hundred miles in length, from the United States to its northern boundary. About one-sixth of its area—the southern portion is partially developed; five-sixths remains undeveloped. The country north of the Canadian Pacific Railway is just as rich in mineral resources, in timber, and in agricultural lands. Again, this government endeavoured to bring about the construction of a railway through the northern portion of the province by which a promising district would be opened up, and the trade of the Yukon conserved for Canadian people, but when honourable gentlemen opposite could not defeat the project themselves, they had it defeated in another place. During the fat years of the Yukon trade, Seattle got the cream, and Northern British Columbia remained unpeopled and its resources undeveloped.

But the great colonization road is the Grand Trunk Pacific. It will run through the centre of the undeveloped five-sixths. From the time it leaves Tete Juan Cache, until it reaches Prince Rupert, it will open up a country of the most desirable kind for settlement. The great Peace River Valley with its ten million acres of agricultural lands in British Columbia, is brought nearer. The Bulkley, Kispyox, Oosta Lake, Nechacho, and other valleys will be invaded, and an illimitable wealth of mineral and timber will be made available, while the branches which are sure to be built to make southern connections with this railway, will open up districts equally desirable. British Columbia is coming to her own after long years of not very patient waiting. Had statesmen of the past, either Canadian or imperial, realized the importance of British Columbia from an imperial point of view, we would have to-day one million white people in British Columbia, instead of less than two hundred and fifty thousand; and with one million white people in British Columbia, the oriental question would scarcely be worth discussing. Our own people would then have possession of the land, and they would be strong enough to retain possession. But see the situation to-day, Mr. Speaker. There is room for the million people, yes for two or three million people, the opportunities are there, and the vacant places are fast being made available. The settlement of British Columbia can no longer be retarded; but the choice of settlement has to be made. Shall it be white or yellow? The struggling, starving masses of the orient look across the Pacific, and see in British Columbia a veritable promised land, overflowing with everything necessary for the comfort of man. Are we going to let them come? British Columbia has room for a million or more of either one class or the other, but there is not room for both. As well try to mix water and oil, as mix white and yellow. Race prejudice has existed since the day when an all-wise though inscrutable Providence, took sides by bestowing a special blessing on the sons of Japhet, and will continue to exist for all time.

We cannot appreciate the oriental mind. We cannot understand his ways, nor he ours. Summing up Lafcadio Hearn's Works on Japan, the 'Edinburgh Review' places the whole situation in a nutshell as follows :—

> The conclusions which we are entitled to draw from Hearn, conclusions which have the sanction not only of the most thoughtful writers on Japan, but of the Japanese themselves, warn us in our dealings with the country to avoid equally an attitude of susceptive admiration or of Pharisaical superiority. The Japanese are no worse than ourselves; they may possibly—Heaven help them—be no better. But they are, and they will remain, fundamentally different. Should they conceivably or inconceivably, adopt Christianity, they will produce an entirely different sort of Christian; should they break themselves into the Roman character, they will still read life from right to left. We shall never be abe to foretell their mental processes more accurately than those of the cat upon the hearth-rug, even had we as favourable opportunities for study.
>
> We might in a dozen ways and with untold profit to ourselves, take Japan for an example; we might strive to shame our timorous apathy with the contrast of her determination; but even should we sit at her feet we must never imagine that we do, or can, understand her. That she will outwit us for good or evil, we may take for granted.

Meredith Townsend, another well-known writer, speaks of the 'dull unconquerable unmitigable, distaste of Asiatics for white men.' Is it any wonder that this feeling is reciprocated?

Such, then, are the people who are looking with longing eyes on British Columbia, anxious to take possession. No greater mistake could be made by the British empire, there could be no graver menace to its future, than to allow the Pacific province to become filled with orientals. We are told that we should do nothing to disturb the friendly relations between two great world powers. There can be no umbrage taken from our desire to regulate our immigration as we see fit. It is a fundamental maxim of international law that 'every state has the right to regulate immigration to its territories as is most convenient to the safety and prosperity of the country,' and such regulations do not violate any rule of international comity. It is quite true that the relations between Great Britain and Japan are cordial to-day, but what of to-morrow? What of a people whose mental process we cannot gauge more accurately than that of the cat upon the hearthrug? In the event of trouble, we cannot denationalize the Jap, within our borders. Once a Jap, always a Jap. From Vancouver to the summit of the rockies, our great national military railway, the safest and surest means of convoy between Great Britain and the orient, is manned to-day by subjects of the Mikado. The alert, aggressive little brown men, do sentry duty at 'The Loop' and other high trestles, that are the marvel of engineering skill. Should trouble come, a stick of dynamite would destroy one of these trestles and our national military railway would be out of commission. This is only one instance to show that there may be other questions to be considered besides that of welcoming a people we do not want, and do not understand.

The people of the Pacific province have been severely criticised for their language and their actions, in connection with this question. Violence is to be deprecated, but the people of British Columbia have said nothing and done nothing that had not been said and done before in other British countries, where they had the problem to solve, and where they invariably solved it as we want it solved in British Columbia. My hon. friend, who represents Vancouver, has been censured for having made some referenc to a modernized repetition of the 'Boston tea-party,' a reference which he repudiates, but even if he were guilty, he would have been not without a distinguished precedent. A gentleman who was knighted in recognition of his valuable services to the empire, and who happened to be the leader of the government of New South Wales, was guilty of giving utterance to the following, in 1888. Speaking on the Chinese Restriction Bill, he said:

> In this crisis of the Chinese question, and it is a crisis, we have acted calmly with a desire to see clearly the way before us; but at the same time we have acted with decision, and we don't mean to turn back. Neither for Her Majesty's ships of war, nor for Her Majesty's representative on the spot, nor for the Secretary of State for the Colonies, do we intend to turn aside from our purpose, which is to terminate the landing of Chinese on these shores for ever, except under the restrictions imposed by the Bill, which will amount and which are intended to amount to practical prohibition.

The gentleman was Sir Henry Parks. Needless to say, his views prevailed, and his name goes down to history as that of a statesman not an agitator.

Some ministers of the Gospel have been manufacturing biblical platitudes and firing them at us for our position on this question. Conspicuous among them, has been Rev. Dr. Johnston, of the American Presbyterian Church, Montreal. He visited British Columbia this summer, (and we were glad to see him) and he happened to be in Vancouver at the time of the riot. He returned home full of information about the oriental question, and, availing himself of an opportunity to address a banquet of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, he won their plaudits by denouncing what he has been pleased to call the narrow views of the people of British Columbia. Now, the Rev. Dr. Johnston is a gentleman entitled to the very highest regard, but it may be stated that the American Presbyterian Church in Montreal is not the best place in the world to study all the economic and socialogical phases of the oriental question, and the plaudits which he received from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association should have warned him that his final summing up must be entirely wrong, and not in the best interests of this country.

Rev. Dr. Johnston could get another view, another outlook, by studying life at closer quarters, and in its more varied phases in the great city of Montreal. Let him leave Dorchester street, where his church is situated, let him cease admiring the beauties of Dominion Park. Let him desert his comfortable, wealthy congregation, for the nonce, and let him go down into the city below the hill, where we are told the people are so crowded that if the denizens of a block stood shoulder to shoulder they would completely encircle it. There, he may find a new light on this question, and he might ask: can we escape our responsibilities in connection with these people, whose condition cannot be improved without some effort on our part, by boosting for an alien race who will come and fill our vacant spots without any effort on our part and then, having asked himself what we are going to do with these and the millions of others of our own race, who are even less fortunate, he might go back to his early school days and his Canadian history, and read the following extract from Lord Durham's report of Canada:

> These great waste lands of the empire were the rightful patrimony of the English people. The ample appenage which God and nature had set aside in the new world for those whose lot had assigned them but insufficient portions in the old.

The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) during his recent pilgrimage to the west, earnestly and conscientiously strove to make some political capital for his own party out of the situation in British Columbia. With his efforts in this direction no fault can be found. He had a good deal to say about the fact that the seven members from British Columbia uttered no protest when the Japanese treaty came before this House for ratification. We appreciate the compliment very much when he delegates to the members from British Columbia, the duties and the functions of the opposition, but he can scarcely escape his share of the responsibility in that way. If any objections could be offered to the ratification of the Japanese treaty, it was surely the duty of the opposition who are here to analyse, to criticise, to oppose the measures of the government, to have found these objections. They cannot escape the responsibility for not having made these objections by saying that the members from British Columbia took no part in this discussion or offered no protest at that time. We heard the discussion when the Japanese treaty was submitted to parliament for ratification, and we had the assurance of the government that the friendly arrangements entered into between this government and that of Japan, in reference to the restriction of immigration, would be carried out notwithstanding the ratification of this treaty. We had not only these assurances but the assurance was again given by the Japanese consul that notwithstanding the ratification of the treaty these restrictions would be lived up to by the government of Japan. And, having these assurances, we saw no good reason then why the treaty should not be ratified.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman referring to assurances that were given in the House ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am referring to assurances that were given in the House and outside the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What were the assurances given outside the House ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The assurances given outside the House were contained in a letter which was written by the representative of Japan to the government, that, notwithstanding the ratification of this treaty, he would undertake, on the part of his government, to carry out these restrictions. Now, the hon. leader of the opposition not only did not oppose the ratification of the treaty, but if any criticism at all were offered it was in the nature of attacking what he and his friends were pleased to call the dilatory methods of this government in not securing the ratification of the treaty at an earlier date. I remember the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) protesting because this treaty was not ratified in connection with some grievance, I presume, that some constituent of his had in regard to trade with Japan. On May 15, 1906—I am quoting from "Hansard"—the hon. leader of the opposition spoke as follows :

It seems to me that prompt measures should be taken so that those who desire to ship to Japan should have the advantage of the treaty at the earliest possible moment. I do not know that we have taken sufficient pains up to the present to promote and develop commercial relations between Canada and Japan. It is generally conceded that a very large business might be done in certain lines and it would be a great disappointment to those who propose to develop that business if they were to find that there are still difficulties in the way.

So that you see, Sir, that if any criticism were offered at all by the hon. leader of the opposition or any of his supporters, it was to urge the government to procure the ratification of this treaty. When the treaty was up for discussion in connection with its ratification I find that the hon. leader of the opposition took part in the discussion. As the leader of a great party looking at legislation which was certainly an innovation in this country, practically delegating to an oriental country the right to dictate to us our own policy with reference to immigration,—I say as the leader of a great party he took part in that discussion and I will again quote his remarks in that connection. You will find them at page 1547 of 'Hansard,' 1906-7, vol. 1 :

"Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the value of a yen ?"

That is the only contribution to this important debate made by the hon. leader of the opposition and yet he will go out to the province of British Columbia and endeavour, as I have said before, to get some political advantage out of this question. He will tell the people there that the members from British Columbia took no part in this discussion when he himself as leader of a party only offered a mercenary argument in asking the question : 'What is the value of a yen' ?

Mr. BLAIN. What were the seven Liberal members from British Columbia doing?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I thought I explained to the House what they were doing. As I pointed out, when this treaty came up for ratification the government stated to the House that the arrangements then entered into with the government of Japan and which were then being carried out to the satisfaction of the people of British Columbia would still be carried out notwithstanding the ratification of the treaty and with the other assurance that the Japanese consul, living in the city of Ottawa, had written to the government that he would undertake on the part of his government to see that these restrictions were carried out, we did exactly what every member, whether a supporter of the government or the opposition, did in this House —we unanimously supported the ratification of the treaty.

I am willing to take my share of the responsibility in that connection, but the leader of the opposition cannot escape his share. What I do object to is that the leader of a great party, sitting in his seat in this House and using no argument except to ask the question: What is the value of a yen? should go to the province of British Columbia and denounce us because we took no part in that discussion and offered no objection to the measure. It is quite true that after leaving the province of British Columbia where this question was a live one, he regaled his audience in Winnipeg with extracts from 'Hansard' to show that he had sounded a note of warning in reference to Japan, but he did not tell his audience that these remarks of his were delivered some two years before the treaty was ratified by parliament, and that when the treaty was up for ratification, he did not have any comment to offer. As one who takes a keen interest in the welfare of the hon. gentleman, might I be permitted to suggest that the criticism of the hon. leader of the opposition would be far more effective if it did not generally come two years too soon, or a year too late.

The objection of the people of British Columbia to unrestricted oriental immigration have been ably stated by preceding speakers, and those objections are not dissimilar to the objections offered in every self-governing British colony where climatic and other conditions make the land desirable for the residence of the white man. I desire to put the objections of the people of British Columbia in concrete form. They object to the Asiatic:

Because they usually get a grip on the country they enter.

Because, while they may come as hewers of wood and drawers of water, they do not remain in a servile position.

Because they are incapable of assimilation.

Because they are strangers to our civilization.

Because they are out of sympathy with our aspirations.

Because they are unfitted for our free institutions.

Because they create in our own people a degraded estimate of manual labour, similar to those in communities where African slavery has been permitted.

Because they inevitably force a lower standard of living for white working classes.

Because, given an opportunity, they become capable of doing expert work, and then as all work would be 'niggers' work, there would be nothing for a white man to do.

Because as they consume less than white men, they are worth less, commercially, to the empire.

Because they make the country of no value as a home for the surplus population of Great Britain.

Because we want to preserve the British type in our population.

Now, as to the remedy. The policy of this government in arranging with the governments of countries whence these people come, to keep their people from coming here, is a satisfactory solution of the question if such policy can be made effective. But the orientals must be kept out of this country, and if satisfactory arrangements cannot be made by diplomacy then we must pass legislation with that object in view. Hon. gentlemen have criticised the action of the Prime Minister in reference to the difference of the treatment accorded Chinese and Japanese. He has even been accused of immoral conduct because of it. I am bound to say that the position of the right hon. gentleman in connection with this question is ethically correct and diplomatically sound. China is a large country with an enormous population and with a weak government absolutely incapable of controlling its own people. Even if we entered into such an arrangement with China as we have with Japan, and even if the government of China agreed to such an arrangement they are absolutely incapable of carrying it out. It therefore became necessary for us to pass legislation against Chinese immigration. But the situation in Japan is different. Japan has a strong government which has demonstrated its authority over its own people, and if the government of Japan imposes satisfactory restrictions, and if these can be secured by diplomatic negotiations, the people of British Columbia are satisfied. But if they cannot be secured by diplomacy, then we insist that this parliament and this government shall pass legislation that will restrict the Japanese and other orientals from coming here. Our right to legislate with this object in view without violating any international law is unquestioned. Such legislation has been passed and carried into effect in other self-governing British countries. The most practical way of restricting oriental immigration is by passing what is popularly known as 'The Natal Act.' It assumes that the only desirable immigrants are those which come from European countries, and that the surest and easiest way of determining whether they are from a European country or not is by applying a test as to their knowledge of a European language. If the time should ever come when it is absolutely necessary to secure a class of labour that cannot be found in this country, or from Great Britain, or from a European country, then that class of labour might be obtained from the orient, but only upon such conditions being imposed by the Canadian government as would provide for the repatriation of these people after the specific work for which they come here had been completed. I thoroughly agree with the view expressed by the member from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith), that in all cases of contract labour the Canadian government should exercise supervision over such contracts, and that no contract labour should be imported without the consent of this government. It has been asked: should we legislate against the immigration of Hindoos who are British subjects. Why not? We are legislating to-day against British subjects who come from the shadow of Downing Street; our immigration laws declare that we shall only take those who come up to the standard we want whether they come from Great Britain or elsewhere. If we do that in connection with British subjects coming from Great Britain why should we not do it in connection with British subjects coming from Calcutta or Bombay?

Mr. SPROULE. Because of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not understand my hon. friend.

Mr. SPROULE. I say, because of the contract entered into with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I still cannot understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) says: If we only take from Great Britain those immigrants whom we want, why cannot we do the same with regard to other countries, and I say it is because of the contract entered into with the North Atlantic Trading Company with reference to the immigrants coming here.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. There was nothing in the contract entered with the North Atlantic Trading Company that interfered in any way with the strict enforcement of any immigration laws which this parliament might pass, and possibly one of the strong reasons for cancelling the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company was because under the contract we were not getting the class of people that we did want.

In this connection may I be permitted to speak very briefly of the situation which developed in the Transvaal. The imperial government conceded the right of the government there to pass legislation against British Indians, and placed its stamp of approval upon the legislation. Under President Kruger, the Transvaal attempted to enforce restrictive legislation against Hindoes, but the British government objected, and the subsequent respresentative of the British Indian claims subsequently made, before the British government, stated that they had 'cherished the anticipation that the war had for one of its main objects the rescue of British Indians from the harsh treatment to which they were subjected by the late Boer republic.' After the war the government of the Transvaal passed legislation far more restrictive than that inforced by the Boer republics, and on the advice of Sir Arthur Lawley, Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal, and Lord Milner, High Commissioner in Africa, the imperial government refused to interfere with the legislation of a self-governing colony, and British Indians became subjected to restrictive immigration laws, in a British colony, far harsher than those which the Boer republic desired to impose upon them before the war. If the Transvaal without the same measure of self-government that Canada enjoys, is allowed to pass such legislation, Canada's right to pass similar legislation cannot be questioned. The issues involved in legislation of this character are fully dealt with in a letter of Sir Arthur Lawley, Lieutenant-Governor of the Transvaal and a covering letter by Lord Milner, High Commissioner for South Africa, transmitting Sir Arthur Lawley's letter to the Colonial Secretary. These letters are too long to be inserted in 'Hansard,' but they may be found as an appendix to L. E. Neames' work, 'The Asiatic Danger in the Colonies,' a work which is well worth the study of any one who takes an interest in the subject.

But, after all, Mr. Speaker, the best solution of the question is summed up in Rudyard Kipling's watchword, 'pump in the whites.' This policy cannot be made a success without the support and encouragement of this parliament and this government. Every possible attention, every posible assistance, should be given to opening up the desirable portions of the province of British Columbia by aiding the construction of railways, by improving our harbour facilities, by greater expenditure on public works, by offering every possible encouragement to the white man to go and settle there.

No portion of the Dominion, nor of the world, for that matter, lends itself more to becoming the ideal white man's country than the province of British Columbia. Its climate, its scenery, its soil, the nature of the industries which can be developed, all combine to make British Columbia the most desirable home of the white man. Some years ago the Princess Louise visited British Columbia, and she wrote Her Royal Mother that she was in Victoria, midway between Balmoral and heaven; and, in later years, a vice-regal representative, having seen the country for himself, stated that the Princess Louise erred in placing Victoria so near Balmoral. The same vice-regal representative, in discussing fruit-growing, at the opening of the New Westminster fair, said:

> Fruit growing in your province has acquired the distinction of being a beautiful art, as well as a most profitable industry. After a maximum term of five years, I understand the settler may look forward with reasonable certainty to a net income of from $100 to $150 per acre, after all expenses of cultivation have been paid. Gentlemen, here is a state of things which appears to offer the opportunity of living under such ideal conditions as struggling humanity has only succeeded in reaching, in one or two of the most favoured spots upon the earth. There are thousands of families living in England to-day, families of refinement and culture, and distinction, families such as you would welcome among you with both arms, who would be only too glad to come out and occupy a log hut on five acres of an apple or pear orchard in Canada, if they could do so at a reasonable cost.

It is well within the mark to say that there are one million acres of fruit lands in British Columbia. Five acres of fruit land are equal to 100 acres of wheat land, and will maintain a family of five. With the development of this industry to its fullest extent, a population of over a million would be assured. Allow the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Hindoos to engage in this industry, to take possession of the land and to cultivate it, and you completely destroy the industry, so far as the white man is concerned. No white man would do 'niggers' work in the south, and the south for years remained dormant and undeveloped, because the dignity of labour was destroyed. No white man or woman in British Columbia is going to do chink's work, and once the oriental gets a grip on any industry, the white man will no longer engage in it. Foolish prejudice, you will say ; but it is a prejudice which we must face, because it cannot be eradicated.

It is well within the mark to say that there are 15,000,000 acres of agricultural lands in British Columbia. We have boasted of our efforts to people the vacant lands of the Northwest with a desirable class of settlers, but there is a limit to the unsettled area of the Northwest. The hon. member for St. Antoine division of Montreal (Mr. Ames) made a calculation in this House during the session of 1905, to the effect that at the then rate of alienating the public domain, there would be no further lands available for settlement in 1910. I am not particularly enamoured of my authority on Northwest matters, but there is sufficient in the statement to warrant the conclusion that some other vacant spots must be made available in the near future if the good work of taking hold of our own people who may be unfortunate through no fault of their own, is to continue, and by settling them on the land they are given an opportunity to become something worth while.

Again, British Columbia is the most attractive field for this work ; but allow it to be filled up with orientals and these people might as well starve at home as starve in British Columbia, because there won't be room for both, and the yellow man has, through thousands of years of patient trying, learned how to live upon less than enough to keep a white man from starving.

With coal measures sufficient to supply the world for centuries, with the greatest compact area of merchantable timber on the American continent, with mines which have already produced 300,000,000 of dollars, and the mineral area has scarcely been touched, with fisheries whose annual revenue is from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000, and which are only in the initial stages of development, with agricultural and fruit lands much more extensive than the mountainous character of the country would indicate, and which offer compensation for physical disadvantages, by yielding far more per acre than land anywhere else in Canada, with millions of acres of pulp wood, with petroleum deposits, whose extent cannot yet be determined, and with inexhaustible measures of iron ore, all inviting capital and industry ; with all those advantages, together with a climate, which easily reaches the white man's ideal, is it any wonder that we, who live in British Columbia and get enthused over its potentialities and possibilities, should be anxious to keep this province for our own race ? Let us develop it. Let us build up a country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and people it, not with an unassimilative rabble of different races and colours but by strong white men, proud of the country in which they live, and prouder still, that under the old flag conditions will be such as to enable them to maintain the land for themselves, their children, and their children's children.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster) Mr. Speaker there has been so much said on this question already, the subject has been so well handled by the different speakers who have addressed the House, that there is very little left for me to say. As some of you will remember, when the treaty with Japan was submitted to us for ratification last session, I gave my views on the question, as I thought, very plainly and briefly. There was a very thin House at the time, and a great many of the members do not know yet that I said anything. I have been asked to-day how it was that nothing was said on this question last session, and I notice that the Conservative papers in British Columbia made a point of declaring that the solid seven Liberals from British Columbia sat mum when the treaty was before the House. They evidently did not know either that I said anything or they did not choose to know: However, if any one doubts, what I said is to be found in the Hansard of last session, page 1548.

However as there were so few present then, I may be pardoned if I repeat a little of what I did say, and I do not think that it will hurt any one to hear it the second time. We in British Columbia feel very keenly on this matter. Some people have the idea that we are simply making an agitation for political purposes ; but I think I can show before I am through that I at least have not been influenced in any shape or form by any such motive in the stand I have always taken. I went to British Columbia in 1877. There were not so many Chinamen there then as there are now and very few Japanese, but there was a very curious conglomeration of different colours from the South Sea Islands as well as from China. When I went out, I found it necessary to work as a common labourer, but that was not very troublesome to me because I was brought up on a farm, and I was one of those settlers who took the first job that came along. I had to compete with Chinamen, and I speak from experience when I say that at that time any white labourer going to that country and having nothing before him but the work of his hands to depend on, would think it a very good place to get out of as fast as he could. I would not have stayed there long if I had not thought that I was able for something better than ordinary day labour, and that it would not be very long before I got beyond it. I was right in my surmise. I have been thirty years in that country, and after the first few months I became myself an employer of labour, and I had, in conjunction with some of my fellow men with whom I was in partnership, to employ Chinese labour, but I always made it a point to employ white men whenever I could get them, and keep the Chinese out. I have followed out that principle and policy ever since, and I am convinced that we could very easily get all the white labour we required if every one would act on that principle. But there are so many large corporations, and so many people anxious to make money, and so many people who are always talking about the necessity of cheap labour, that white labour has a very poor chance. I must say that I have always considered cheap labour degraded labour. But there are so many of these people who will give preference to cheap labour, that the Chinamen nearly always gets plenty of work, while the poor white man is obliged to go somewhere else to look for it.

In 1885, as you were told this afternoon by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith), a commission was appointed to investigate the whole matter. You were told who composed that commission so that I need not repeat the information. That commission issued a number of questions to the employers of labour and people in different walks of life generally in British Columbia, to be answered at length. There were twenty-seven questions in all. One of these blanks was sent to me and I answered all the questions. I need not inflict all these answers on you to-night, as that would be trespassing too much on your patience. I shall simply quote the last question and my reply :
