Q. Can you give any statistical or other information, or furnish any facts bearing on the general question now being considered by the commission, which will facilitate its work or make its labours more complete.—A. My ideas on the whole question have been formed and are entirely governed by what I call a common sense view of the situation, and not by statistics furnished by any authorities, either here or elsewhere. The Chinese come here in swarms; nearly all are single men and none of them will marry here. If any women come with them, they are common prostitutes. Scores of them will crowd together in one small building that would barely suffice for one ordinary white labourer's family. They become proprietors to a very limited extent, and do very little building in proportion to their numbers, ninety-nine per cent of them raise no family, and none of them take any part or interest in either municipal, political or educational matters. Unlike those of other nationalities, they do not become assimilated to our customs, dress, manner of living, or even laws, any more than they are obliged to by law. Is it possible then that our province can prosper as well with labourers of this class as with the class of white settlers who are now coming into the country in limited numbers, and in many cases bringing families with them, and who would come in much larger numbers if the Chinese did not stand in their way. This latter class will live in houses, not dens; will send their children to school and church; will take an intelligent part in municipal, political and educational matters; will become largely proprietors of the soil, and thus be permanent settlers, while their children will grow up to be our future city and county councillors, and in some cases our future legislators, as well as to fill many positions of both public and private importance. As an example: Look at one of our sawmills employing other labour than Chinese. In the immediate neighbourhood there springs up quite a village, with store, school-house, church and other places of public benefit ; while a cannery with the same capital invested, and employing mostly Chinese will only show one large barn-like building for their use, and probably one or two houses for the proprietor and overseer. I know that the white labouring class here has in the past been largely composed of single men, who were ready to move off at any time, but that state of affairs is rapidly changing with the opening up of the country. I know that during the present summer many white labourers have had to leave this town and district, because so many Chinamen are employed in our mills and canneries, as well as in the wood-cutting business; and I consider the loss of one permanent settler as greater to the country at large than that of ten who only intend staying long enough to make a little money.

That was my opinion in 1885 and at that time I had not the slightest idea of ever being in politics, so I could not be accused of holding those ideas for political purposes.

One thing about these yellow men, both Chinese and Japanese, to which we object very strongly is that they are brought here in a state of semi-slavery. You heard my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) to-day read a copy of a contract that had been made with both the Canadian Pacific Railway and a coal company whereby a certain number of these men are brought out for a given time by a certain company. The men are never consulted in this matter at all, the business is all done with the company, the wages are paid to the company, and the employers in this country do not know whether these men receive any wages or not. As I told the House last session, if an employer of labour wants a number of Chinese or Japanese, he does not engage them individually, but goes to a 'boss' and employs so many men at a certain wage, and he knows nothing about the wages they receive, or if they receive any. I consider that slavery to a certain extent, and something that should not exist in this country of ours which has always made a boast that we never had slavery here. What chance has a white labourer to live as a white man should and compete with men like these ? It is all very well for clergymen and philanthropists to talk about what should be done for the labourers and what the labouring classes should do, how they should be elevated and made to live a higher and better life than they do. How can they do that if they have to compete with men who live as the Chinamen and Japanese live. Let any one, as I said last session, follow a number of these Chinese and Japanese to their homes and see how they live and then ask himself if any white man could compete with men like them and keep a family, or even clothe himself decently and live as a white man should. It is utterly impossible. I do not know better how to bring this matter home to the members of this House than by giving them a few examples near home. Most of us are acquainted with the city of Hull across the river from Otttawa. If you go to Hull you will find that most of the men of that city work for the E. B. Eddy concern. Let us suppose for a moment that that concern was manned almost entirely by Japanese or Chinamen, then where would Hull be ? There would be no city, it would not be even a village. There would not be 100 houses in the whole place. The same thing would apply to any manufacturing town or city in the province of Ontario, or Quebec, Peterborough, Chatham, Guelph, Galt, Valleyfield, or even the large cities. Let Chinese or Japanese take the places of the men who are doing the unskilled labour in these towns, and the people of the eastern provinces would soon realize that the people of British Columbia have good grounds for the objection they make to the importation of orientals in the large numbers that we are now receiving. Many people have the idea that white labourers cannot be obtained out there. They cannot be obtained until we get rid of the others, because the presence of the Chinese and Japanese there has degraded labour to a certain extent ; cheap labour is always degraded labour, and until we are willing to pay white labour decent wages, so that the men can live as they should, we cannot expect many to go to the country.

Those who drew up the treaty with Japan evidently did not think of the difference that exists between the two nations, Great Britain and Japan. I pointed this out last session. Japan has a very large population but has no outside colonies of her own to which she can send her surplus population Great Britain, on the other hand, has many large colonies which can absorb all her surplus population, and I do not think that Britain should have made any such treaty as the one she did make with Japan, the very first article of which recites :

> The subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel or reside in any part of the dominions and possessions of the other contracting party and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

They might well have changed or omitted that clause. It certainly would have been a very great benefit to all the other colonies as well as to British Columbia. We are told in some quarters that British Columbia can look nowhere else for trade than to the orient, China and Japan. We do considerable business with other countries. A great deal of lumber is cut in British Columbia, and I do not think so much of it is shipped to either Japan or China. It goes to Australia, South America, and Mexico. I noticed the other day in the ' Labour Gazette,' that Mr. William White, second vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway who was in Vancouver, made the following statement :

> It is the intention of the company to reserve sites for grain elevators on the Vancouver water front. This idea is being kept in view in the yard improvements now being carried out, as it is impossible to tell what effect the building of the Panama canal may have on the export movement of wheat from the prairie provinces. One result may be that the very large percentage of the grain may seek an outlet via Vancouver instead of reaching Liverpool market via the St. Lawrence river route. Under these circumstances we have felt justified in making provisions for future contingencies. If the grain from a big area of the Canadian west can be hauled here and loaded on steamers, making the passage of the Panama canal and landing it in Liverpool, only one transhipment being involved, as compared with elevator charges for transhipment at Fort William and Montreal—I say if this can be done more cheaply via Vancouver, then the business is bound to come this way.

The officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway may be credited with a good deal of far sightedness in business matters, and I think they have seen a good way ahead in relation to this question. They have shown us that the ports of British Columbia are not obliged to look to Japan and China for their business. But even if they had, I would say that no matter how important the business of China and Japan may be to Canada, better that we should lose that business than allow our country to be filled with aliens, and our own labouring classes driven back to this end of the Dominion. Who would be most benefited by this oriental commerce ? None but a few capitalists. It is all very well for the Manufacturers' Association to talk in this way, but they care nothing for the welfare of the labouring classes of the Dominion at large.

Now we have heard to-day some reference to statements by political leaders. I am not going to give one party much more credit than the other in their attitude on this matter, although the present government have done what no Conservative government ever did, in that they have raised the head tax on Chinese to $500. I only wish we could get the government to do the same thing to the Japanese. But both political leaders seem to be a little shy on this question. Why, I can hardly understand. It is not very long since nearly all the writers in the religious press of the country took strong ground against any thing being done to keep these people out of Canada; but I notice that a great change has taken place within a year or two. I notice that a change has taken place in the Presbyterian Church to which I myself belong; and if any one will take the trouble to look at the 'Presbyterian Record' of last October or November, he will see a sensible article written in a very different spirit from that of the articles which used to appear in the same paper. I think that a similar change is going on in all the denominations. They are now beginning to see exactly how the question stands, they are beginning to realize that the people of British Columbia have a substantial grievance, and one that is well worthy their consideration.

I do not think it is much use to take up more time of the House. This question has been thoroughly discussed, arguments have been advanced from many different standpoints, and I think by this time the House must be convinced that British Columbia has a grievance, and that the members of that province are justified in trying to force the government to take some action. Of course until we hear the result of the hon. Mr. Lemieux's mission, we do not need to press the matter. But in the meantime, I would like every member of the House to ask himself how he would look at this question supposing the same trouble arose in his own constituency. Would he not look at it in much the same way as we do? In conclusion, I have to say that I hope this motion will be passed without any opposition.

On motion of Mr. M. S. McCarthy the debate was adjourned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

He said: This motion has been on the order paper for some time and it has been suggested to me that instead of adjourning on Thursday, the House should adjourn to-morrow (Wednesday).

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are altogether in the hands of the House, and if it be the wish of the House we will comply with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Then as it seems to be the wish of the House, I move that the motion be amended to read as follows:—

That when the House adjourns on Wednesday the 18th instant it will stand adjourned until Wednesday the 8th of January next.

Motion as amended agreed to.

SURVEYS AND SURVEYORS.

Bill (No. 9) respecting surveys of public lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys—Mr. Oliver—read a second time and the House went into committee on the Bill.

Mr. LAKE. Is this identical with the Act passed last year?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER. (Minister of the Interior). Practically identical. There are verbal changes so that this Bill will stand by itself on the statute-books, but to all intents and purposes this is the same Bill as was agreed to last session.

On section 6,—Fees.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You omit from this section the words 'Registering assignments;' how did they get in there in the first place?

Mr. OLIVER. In practice they are not required in the Act. It is not conceivable there could be an assignment that would require to be dealt with under this Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is why I ask how they came to be inserted originally.

Mr. OLIVER. This was a part of the Lands Act before, and these words no doubt had some reference to the general provisions of that Act.

On section 8,—qualified to survey.

Mr. EMMERSON. I notice that by this section, only those who were qualified in the provinces previous to the 14th of April, 1872, are qualified for work under the provisions of this Act. Why is it that they are limited to a qualification which they received previous to April, 1873 ? There are in the provinces very many competent land surveyors who qualified subsequent to that time, and why they should be shut out should it be necessary at any time to secure their services is a question I think is very pertinent.

Mr. OLIVER. They are not shut out, but they are required to pass an examination provided for in this Act in order to qualify as Dominion land surveyors. Those who were qualified before that date are accepted on that qualification, they being held to have a vested right.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between a provincial land surveyor who qualified before 1872 and one who has qualified since, if they underwent the same examination based on the same curriculum ?

Mr. OLIVER. There may be no difference ; it is not a question of difference. The point is that for good or bad reasons it has been assumed, not only in this Bill, but in the Act already existing, that the provincial land surveyor who was qualified before that date had a vested right, which it would not be proper for this government to deprive him of, while those who became qualified after that date have not that vested right, and the Dominion government was warranted in requiring them to conform to the regulations set down for the qualification of Dominion land surveyors before permitting them to practice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that provision was inserted in the Act when it was passed ; that is the real explanation. The Act was passed in 1872. It was then provided that persons who were then qualified in any province of Canada to practice would be qualified under that Act, but that persons qualifying afterwards should qualify under the provisions of the Act as it was then passed.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer but I am satisfied that the explanation given by the hon. leader of the opposition is the correct explanation.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, why should it be so ? In all the provinces there are duly qualified surveyors, and I think it is not too much to say that they are as well qualified as those who qualify under the Dominion statute. If it was right in 1872 to recognize the provincial qualifications, it seems to me that the examination held in the provinces for Crown land surveyors should be recognized to-day. Frequently before this parliament we hear very potent arguments in favour of general qualifications for physicians and other professional men. It seems to me that this parliament should recognize surveyors who are qualified under the provisions of the laws of the respective provinces, and I can see no reason for continuing these words in this Act. You might properly put in the words, after the 17th day of December, 1907, the time of the passing of this Act, rather than the date named, which was the date on which the original Act was passed. The hon. leader of the opposition has given the true reason and the only reason why that date appeared, and it seems to me that the hon. Minister of the Interior should change the date in this Bill, and make it the 17th day of December, 1907.

Mr. OLIVER. In this connection I would like to repeat what I said to the House last year, that it was not my desire or my intention, in dealing with this question of Dominion land surveys and surveyors, to make any changes in principle, but merely minor changes to facilitate administration. The change suggested by my hon. friend is of course a very radical change in principle. While it is a perfectly fair matter for discussion, I would not feel warranted in accepting the change suggested. The Bill is almost solely a consolidation of provisions already on the statute-book. I would assume that reasons which have stood good on the statute-book for thirty-five years may very well be accepted as good still, unless we know of some strong reasons to the contrary, which my hon. friend has not brought forward. Although I am not responsible for the provision and not even responsible for its being in the present Bill beyond the point I have stated, still I think it is only fair to say that there is a reason for it, and the reason is not that a provincial surveyor may not be in every way as qualified to make a survey as a Dominion surveyor. That is not the purpose of the section, but the purpose is this, that dealings which necessarily take place on the responsibility of this government shall take place through men who, in their qualifications, are responsible to this government. It is a question of fixing and continuing responsibility, not a question of the respective qualifications of provincial or Dominion land surveyors. If the provincial land surveyor is qualified, he has no difficulty in becoming a Dominion land surveyor under the provisions of this Act, and thereby becoming responsible to this government for the work he does under this government, for which work this government must be responsible to the people who are affected by it.

On section 12—examinations,

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not wish to raise any further question respecting this provision, but it is well that we should understand it. One would have to qualify, in the first place, as a student before this board and then serve an apprenticeship, and later on qualify by examination, before he becomes a full fledged Dominion land surveyor. No one, no matter what his qualifications may be to do the work, can be employed by the government unless he conforms to the provisions of this Bill. For instance, assuming that Dominion lands have to be surveyed in the Saskatchewan and there was a surveyor who had qualified under the laws of Manitoba, he could not be employed by the government to do this work. If that is the desire of the committee, well and good, but we must recognize exactly what we are doing. That may have been the law heretofore—certainly I had not supposed it was—but we are confirming it now, and the Bill is deserving of some consideration before we decide whether we should go that far.

Mr. OLIVER. Look at section 21. Provision is there made for the qualifying of provincial land surveyors as Dominion land surveyors, according to their previous qualification. Section 21 is for the purpose of meeting the cases my hon. friend mentioned and is the same as the present law with verbal changes only.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does this take the examination of Dominion land surveyors out of the hands of the Dominion land surveyors of Canada and leave it in the hands of the commission appointed under this Bill? In the Yukon a man entitled to be a land surveyor because he was a graduate of the Royal Military College of Kingston, was not allowed to qualify because of some technicality in the regulations. People in the Yukon required a surveyor and he was prepared to do the work and wanted to qualify, but was not allowed to qualify because of some technicality.

Mr. EMMERSON. Perhaps he had not served a term under articles to a surveyor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, he seemed to have complied, so far as the lay mind could see, with all the provisions of the law, but there was some technicality he could not overcome. I understand it was because the Dominion land surveyors themselves had an association which prevented applicants of that character from being examined.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not familiar with the case mentioned, but it seems to me that I did hear something of the case of a military graduate who wished to qualify as a surveyor; and if I recollect rightly, it was decided, on reference to the department here, that he was entitled to a certificate and had the right to practice.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am glad to know that. At the time, he could not qualify because of some technicality. Have the surveyors themselves an association which would interfere in any way with the carrying out of this clause?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say whether they have an association or not, but certainly the purpose of this Bill is that the authority of the government shall be supreme and that there shall be no delegated authority which shall prevail against that of the government.

Mr. HAGGART. Who constitute the board? Are they appointed by the government or by the Dominion surveyors' association?

Mr. EMMERSON. The 9th clause governs that.

Mr. OLIVER. The board consists of a surveyor general and two Dominion topographical surveyors appointed from time to time by the Governor in Council.

Mr. THOMPSON. Is it possible to extend that board so that the minister may be able to appoint a man in a district territory without sending the board out there to examine him or having him come here?

Mr. EMMERSON. My reading of the Bill is that no one can be appointed unless he has been examined for admission as articled pupil in the first place and then serve an apprenticeship under a qualified surveyor, after which he must pass his examination. I apprehend that the obstacle in the way of the gentleman mentioned by the hon. member from the Yukon (Mr. Thompson) a gentleman who has qualified by reason of his attendance at the Royal Military College was that he had not served a term as articled pupil or apprentice.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 12 provides that special examination may be held, under rules provided by the board, by persons appointed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. THOMPSON. Independent of the board.

Mr. OLIVER. Not exactly but without the immediate presence of the board—under the rules of the board.

On section 18—variation of form when pupil is of age—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand that section. If you substitute the word 'then' for the word 'and,' immediately before the words 'in the event of his being transferred,' it would make sense. It does not make sense as it is at present.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is the idea, but I am not certain. If agreeable to the committee, I will take a note of the suggestion and will hold the section over for consultation with the surveyor general. The Bill is highly technical in character, and I do not wish to make changes unless I have good authority for doing so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I dare say the minister has the same difficulty that I have in understanding the section as it is at present.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I do not care to make any dangerous admissions.

Mr. THOMPSON. As to section 12, I would like to ask a question. Would the men who are now Dominion land surveyors become, automatically, Dominion land surveyors under this Act?

Mr. OLIVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then we could have an examination made by a man who was qualified in the Yukon as a Dominion land surveyor.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 18 stands.

On section 22—as to surveyors qualified otherwise than under this Act—

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In the explanatory note to this section I see it stated that:

> It is expected that the board will admit under this clause land surveyors from New Zealand, Australia and Cape Colony, the standard of examinations in these colonies being very high.

Can the minister tell us what the laws of these countries provide in this regard? That is to say, would there be reciprocity in regard to the qualification of land surveyors between these countries and Canada? Is there an association of Dominion land surveyors that would be likely to raise a protest against this clause unless there was a reciprocal arrangement between Canada and the countries mentioned?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able, at the moment, to answer that question. In discussing this clause with the surveyor general, we had in view the momentary requirements of this country in regard to land surveyors. That is to say, we have not as many surveyors at the moment as we really need to keep up with our work and it is a question of what surveyors we could afford to admit while still being sure that we would have good work done. Therefore, I did not discuss the point my hon. friend has mentioned. If he lays stress on the point I shall reserve the section and ask the surveyor general to place the House in possession of the information later on.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to have the point noted, because if there is a paucity of surveyors I think it would be wise of the Dominion to permit the provincial surveyors to have the precedence, to widen rather than to restrict the field from which they may be taken.

Mr. OLIVER. Has my hon. friend read section 21 which makes very wide provisions for provincial land surveyors?

Section allowed to stand.

On section 30—allowances to members of board, secretary and special examiners.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I notice in reading that section in connection with section 11, which deals with the appointment of a secretary to the board, that the minister is taking unto himself the power to appoint a secretary. Heretofore I understand that power has been vested in the board itself. Was it because of any failure on the part of the board to appoint a suitable and qualified person that the minister is making the change or is it to have more patronage at his disposal?

Mr. OLIVER. The change is made on the recommendation of the surveyor general. The principle, I think, is mentioned in the section, that as the secretary is a departmental officer it is proper that the minister should have control of the appointment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. One member of the board of examiners is the surveyor general, who should be a competent judge as to the proper person to be chosen as secretary.

Mr. OLIVER. This Bill has been prepared by the surveyor general, and this change is made on his express recommendation.

On section 42—townships, road allowances and sections—

Mr. LAKE. When this or a similar Bill, was up before the House last year, I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that it was very desirable that there should be a road allowance around each section instead of around every two sections as at present. He promised to take the matter into consideration and consult the authorities of the local governments in the Northwest in regard to the matter. I should be glad to hear whether he did so, and whether he proposes to make any change in the present system.

Mr. OLIVER. My observation in regard to the question has not led me to suggest any change from the present system. The government of the province of Alberta made a certain recommendation to me in regard to road allowances, which, it seems to me, would probably meet the immediate requirements of the case. It was this: that provision should be made for reserving out of a quarter-section granted as a homestead, up to two and a half acres which might be taken as a special road allowance by authority of the provincial government. This would not apply after the land had been patented. But during the time it was held by the homesteader without patent it would be competent for the provincial government to force a road allowance to the extent of two and a half acres across the quarter-section. In the hilly country even a road every mile does not necessarily strike a place where a road could be made; it is necessary in the case of river valleys and hilly country that a road should be placed wherever it is possible to place it, and it was thought advisable instead of providing for a legal road allowance every mile running north and south, that there should be a road allowance every two miles with this provision for forcing a road where necessary. We thought we were meeting the wishes of the people better by doing that.

Mr. LAKE. This is an important departure and it seems to me that the fact of having a road allowance surveyed around every section would assist the minister in carrying out his idea, because then, instead of taking away two and a half acres from a man you could exchange with him part of the regular allowance for the proposed road through his land. My experience as a member of the local legislature has led me to the conclusion that it is important to provide a road every mile. I presume the surveys made this year have only provided for a road allowance every two miles, but I would impress upon the minister the importance of leaving a road allowance every mile in future surveys. The minister might take up that matter with the local governments.

Mr. HERRON. No one knows better than the minister (Mr. Oliver) the importance of having a road allowance every square mile. It is difficult to provide for that where the country is developed, but where new country is being surveyed it would be a great improvement. It would be a great injustice to the settler to force a road through his land to the extent of his losing two and a half acres. But I am glad to have the assurance of the minister that such a provision is not being made in this present Bill. If it should come before the House I will have something to say on it.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this matter arose because of the question raised in the legislature of Alberta with reference to buying road allowances ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not finally decided that they would have to buy the road allowance in every instance where they departed from the regular survey?

Mr. LAKE. In the newer settlements, as a general rule, the question of a regular road allowance will not come up until the people have been two or three years on the land, and by that time they will likely have their patents so that the remedy proposed by the minister would be ineffective. I adhere to my strongly expressed opinion that there should be a road allowance every mile.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the remedy proposed by the minister ?

Mr. OLIVER. The evil is that in many cases there are not sufficient east and west road allowances to give proper facilities to the settlers, there being a road allowance every second mile. My investigation leads me to believe that where the country is level and accessible, that is not a grievance; but where the country is broken by rivers, valleys or hills it may happen that one of these road allowances is impossible, so that there would be four miles between the roads instead of two. At the request of the provincial government we are providing for the forcing of a road where the provincial government may see fit according to the needs of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. It is an injustice to the land owner to take his land from him without compensation. In Ontario there is a road allowance called a blind line between the two concessions, and that may be opened up if any one desires the use of it, but otherwise it is divided between the parties whose land adjoins it. It would be convenient if such an arrangement were made in the Northwest.

Mr. OLIVER. The suggestion I have placed before the House is exactly in line with the Ontario practice. In the west there is a road allowance each alternate two miles and it is proposed that the provincial government may open a road allowance on that blind line if it pleases.

Mr. LAKE. Without compensation ?

Mr. OLIVER. Without compensation.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there a hundred acres of land for each of these parties, exclusive of that road allowance? He occupies that in addition, if it is not needed.

Mr. HERRON. I understand the case to be a little different to that. The provincial government is asking for more than authority to force a road on a blind line. It is asking for authority to go through any man's quarter-section, which I think would be a great injustice to the settlers, and I hope the hon. minister will consider the question fairly before giving that authority.

Mr. OLIVER. We do not deal with that matter in this Bill at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I confess that I do not understand the view that the minister has put forward. Is it suggested that after any homesteader receives his patent, this government is in a position to authorize the provincial government to do anything with that man's land ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I assume that after the man has his patent, it becomes a question of civil rights and will thereafter be entirely under the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

Mr. OLIVER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, what the minister is dealing with is something different, that is, a road allowance which is still vested in the Crown by the right of the Dominion?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And he proposes to confer on the provincial government the right of judgment as to whether or not a road allowance is necessary—is that it?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has stated the case exactly.

Mr. SPROULE. That would seem to be an amendment to the constitution rather than to the law.

Mr. LAKE. The point I wish to make is this, that you propose to give the local government the right to take away from the homesteader two and a half acres of his quarter-section. I suggest that if you make an additional road allowance so that there will be a road allowance to every mile, you will be able to give the settler the part of the road allowance around his section which is not used in return for the road allowance you are taking through the section. In that way you would not be depriving him of a portion of the land for which he has entered.

Section agreed to.

On section 54—surveying to be by contract or tender—

Mr. SPROULE. How is the minister having the surveys run now? Is it by a fixed tariff of so much a day or so much a township, or otherwise, and what rate is he paying?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to give the actual rate, but there is a tariff per mile of line for what are called subdivision surveys, the tariff varying according to the nature of the country. For prairie there is one rate, for scrub another, for timber another, and the contract is let to surveyors at these rates. Base lines, and block surveys which inclose four townships, are run by surveyors working by the day. I do not at the moment know of any cases of subdivision surveys being done by the day. Of course, there may be such cases, but as a general rule they are done by contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister know what rate he is paying now either for blocking or subdividing ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the information at hand, but I can bring it to the House if desired.

Section agreed to.

On section 58—resurvey of land disposed of—

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). How will the minister fix the amount—on the report of a surveyor or any other officer of the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. It will be a matter of taking evidence.

Mr. CARNEY. Will the owner of the property have to bear a portion of the costs or will the government stand the loss ?

Mr. OLIVER. As in ordinary cases, if the complainant does not make good his complaint, it would be reasonable that he should stand the costs.

Mr. SPROULE. Under this a surveyor may make a change whether a man has or has not the right to the land.

Mr. OLIVER. The idea is that where a patent has been issued, there can be no change without the consent of the patentee. Where a patent has not been issued, a change may be made under certain circumstances ; but if there be improvements on the land, the man who has made the improvements, and who is their owner, is entitled to compensation. It is the ownership of the improvements which must be compensated and not of the land.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not apply to patented lands ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, only to unpatented lands.

Mr. CARNEY. Would it not be better to have the compensation fixed by arbitrators rather than the minister ? A man on the ground is more capable of giving a decision than one who is distant from it.

Mr. OLIVER. In the first place the error must be an error of fact, and that can only be settled by a qualified surveyor. Then, if there be an error, some one must give an opinion as to whether it is advisable, under all the circumstances, to correct it. There may be cases where an error has been made and yet where it may not be advisable to make a correction ; but somebody has to be vested with that discretion, and under our system of responsible government, the minister should be the one in whom to vest that discretion. Then there is no getting behind the record. If a proper decision be not given, everybody knows who can be attacked for it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). But should there not be an impartial tribunal to decide what compensation should be given for improvements ? A good deal of trouble may arise as to the value of these improvements.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend's point is well taken, but it seems to me that in practice, if they were valuable improvements, there would not, in the ordinary exercise of discretion, be any change made. If one of the parties made valuable improvements, it would be for the minister to decide in his discretion whether a change should be made in the boundary or not.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE : The section speaks about the error being more than five chains, in which case it may be corrected. Then the minister may, without the consent of the holder, authorize the correction of the error, but the person acquiring any improvements, through such correction, may be taxed for compensation as the minister may decide. There might easily arise such a case as I have suggested.

Mr. OLIVER. The point would be well taken, if the change were mandatory. But, as I understand the section, it is discretionary with the minister, and I think that discretion would turn very largely, or almost altogether, on the question of the value of the improvements. Therefore, the minister would naturally be aware of the value of the improvements in reaching a decision as to moving the boundary. Then it could be arranged that provision would be made for an arbitration. Such provision, of course, is cumbersome, and it seems to me that, under the actual circumstances as they are, it is scarcely necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister has discretionary power in making the change, he may impose loss upon the person who has hitherto held the land. The minister has the power to determine what amount shall be paid as compensation. It seems to me that it would be fair to give the owner the option of an arbitration. Let it be determined by the minister, as a summary method of dealing with the case, subject to this option of an arbitration. A man might want an arbitration for the purpose of calling witnesses and having his rights dealt with as they would be dealt with in the courts.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there would be no objection to that. Of course, it will involve the burdening of the Bill with considerable machinery unless my hon. friend would suggest some wording to cover the arbitration provision more simply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should say that a few words would accomplish it. For instance, it may read: 'As may be fixed by the minister, or at the option of the owner, by arbitration under the laws of the province.' I do not give that as a final draft, but as a suggestion.

Mr. OLIVER. Hold the section over and I will have an amendment drafted as suggested.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 58 stands.

On section 59—resurveys—finding of original monument after resurvey—

Mr. LAKE. Has the minister decided to adopt the suggestion made last year to place the monuments every half mile instead of every mile along certain lines? I think it would be a great advantage on a certain number of the resurveys if we had more monuments.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the necessity for resurveys has arisen rather from the fact that former survey lines were marked by wooden posts than from any other reason. Now, I think, all surveys are marked by iron posts, and it is fair to suppose that these are much more permanent than the wooden ones. The cost of surveys, of course, is very considerable, and, while the cost of the greater number of posts is, possibly, not very great, still we have tried to be as economical as possible and have not, so far, undertaken to place the posts every half mile.

Mr. LAKE. It would be a great convenience.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a great deal to be said in favour of my hon. friend's suggestion. I will discuss it with the surveyor when I am discussing the other things that have been held over. I shall be able to say more on the subject to my hon. friend when the Bill comes up again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 59 stands.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Auditor General's Report, Vol. II., for nine months ended March 31, 1907.—Mr. Fielding.

IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 10) to amend the Irrigation Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. minister give us an idea what the Bill contemplates?

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill contains practically three amendments. One of these may be said to be simply verbal. In describing the sources of water mention is made of 'river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek,' but mention is not made of 'spring,' and as a spring is an important source and may be thought not to be included in the meaning of the other words, it has been thought well to insert the word 'spring.' Therefore, three clauses of the proposed Bill are merely for the purpose of inserting the word 'spring' amongst the descriptions of water supply. The first of the two important provisions is to preserve to municipal authority municipal rights within the limits of the municipality as against irrigation rights. No provision was made in the original Irrigation Act for the preservation of municipal rights which might be affected by irrigation schemes. Since the establishment of the provinces and the general development of the country it has been found to be possible for a conflict to arise between an irrigation scheme and a municipality, the irrigation proposition claiming rights under Dominion legisation which would ignore the municipal rights granted under provincial authority. It is thought that this is not well and that, within the municipality, municipal rights should prevail. Section 4 of the Bill proposes to meet that condition. Section 5 is provided to meet a condition which arises when the user of water acquired from the irrigation system has to lead that water to his property from the main ditch. It is to give him the right to cross the property of other people; that is to say to give to a man who wants to use water which he takes out of the main ditch of the irrigation enterprise the same right to cross other property as the main scheme itself has. That is found to be necessary in order that the general proposition of irrigation may be worked out. Otherwise, a man whose property is, technically speaking, under the ditch, and who may desire to get water, may be prevented from getting it by people holding land between his land and the ditch. This section is intended to provide that he can make a connection between the ditch and the land that he wishes to irrigate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 3—section 25 amended—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the effect of that?

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of this amendment is in regard to provincial and municipal rights as to highways. It is believed that under the present wording of the clause, those constructing irrigation works under the provisions of this Act are required to keep open only such public highways as are then travelled. In a new country there are many cases in which the surveyed road allowance may not be travelled and the understanding of the irrigation companies is that they are not required to keep such open. A road allowance that may not be in use to-day may be required to be used a year hence, and provision is made requiring them to keep open any road allowance whether it is travelled or not.

Mr. SPROULE. The wording of this amendment does not seem to carry out that idea.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest that the word 'theretofore' should be retained in the section so as to make its meaning quite clear.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be better if we struck out the words 'theretofore publicly travelled as such,' and I move that the section be so amended.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4—consent of municipality to construction of work—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Has it occurred to the minister that no machinery is provided for appealing from the decision of a municipality in this matter? That may be right in the case of a city or town but in a scattered municipality considerable difficulty might arise because of the absence of such an appeal. Does this Act apply to the railway belt the same as to the other Dominion lands?

Mr. OLIVER. It does not apply to the railway belt.

Mr. SPROULE. In private Bills empowering telegraph and telephone lines to enter municipalities, we not only provide that the companies shall get the consent of the municipalities but that they shall carry on their works under the supervision and direction of the municipal officers. We omit that provision in this Bill. If the ruling of the court be that as an irrigation company they have a right under their Dominion charter to carry on their works, the municipality is bound to consent; then in this Bill there is no provision that the work shall be carried on under municipal control within the municipality.

Mr. OLIVER. I should think that the municipality has the right to refuse an irrigation enterprise to be carried on within its limits.

Mr. SPROULE. This is practically the same question as has arisen with regard to telephone lines. As far back as 1879, I objected to interference with municipal rights without giving the municipal authorities control, and it was then said that if the municipality did not consent the company could not go on with its work. But the courts have held that the federal parliament having empowered them to build and operate, the municipality was bound to consent. It has been found necessary for us to make provision in telephone and telegraph Acts that all work within a municipality should be under the direction of the municipality, and I believe it is equally necessary we should make similar provision in the case of irrigation companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be better to follow as closely as possible the language which was incorporated, after careful consideration, in Bills relating to telephone companies and other corporations of that character. There seems to be a possible criticism of the language of this clause because it does not express how the consent of the municipal council shall be given. It might be possible for a question to arise as to whether or not oral consent of a sufficient character might not be given, and it should be provided that the consent should be written consent or consent by by-law.

Mr. OLIVER. It might be just as well to specify in what form the consent should be given so as to make it definite. But I am unable to follow the contention of my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) that because a company has a Dominion charter it would have authority to force its works within the limits of a municipality. This is an amendment or addition to the general Act, which I should think would necessarily govern any private Act, and a private Act could not trespass on the limits of a general Act without an amendment being made to the general Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the point was this. We provide here that they shall not enter without consent. The hon. gentleman for East Grey suggests that you should also provide that the work shall be maintained under such regulations as the municipal council or other authority shall prescribe, so that when they have once given their consent they shall also have power to provide that the work must be maintained under such conditions as shall not endanger life or property.

Mr. OLIVER. There is something to be said in favour of that contention, and I will hold the clause for further consideration on that point. But the condition is not exactly the same as that of the establishment of a telephone service in a city. Handling the water supply of an irrigation ditch is a very different matter, and it might possibly render the irrigation proposition unserviceable or ineffective if it were placed under the same jurisdiction of a municipality as it is perfectly right and proper that a telephone system should be placed. The purpose of the amendment is to recognize the right of the municipality, and so far as we are able to do that and preserve the efficiency of the irrigation work, we want to do it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think as far as the section goes it is all right, but it does not go far enough.

Section allowed to stand, and progress reported.

SUPPLY—NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two about the celebrated North Atlantic Trading company and the financial relations between that company and the government as disclosed by a recent answer given by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. It has been said by some journals in this country, and the statement has been repeated in this House, that during my recent tour of the west of Canada some of the scandals which have come out in such great numbers during the past two sessions were not discussed. I would like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and to those journals, that if we did not discuss all these scandals at every meeting, it was due to the great number of the scandals and to the lack of time to deal with them all. As far as the time at our command served us, we did discuss every one of these scandals, whether in the west or in the east of Canada ; and I wish to say that if my right hon. friend the Prime Minister sees fit to make that tour in the west next summer which has been prophesied by some of the public journals, I shall be only too happy to accompany him and discuss every one of those scandals on any platform in the west, or in the east either, for that matter.

Among the scandals to which allusion has been made is that of the North Atlantic Trading Company, and I desire to apologize for certain inaccuracies in my statements in regard to that company—to apologize to the enterprise of the company and to the facility of the government in disposing of public moneys. I have said throughout the length and breadth of this country that this company, or the persons, whoever they may be, into whose rapacious pockets these large sums of public money have gone, had received about $300,000 from the public treasury of Canada. I did these people a great injustice, for according to the statement of the Minister of the Interior they have received $367,245.85 ; so that I did them an injustice to the extent of nearly $100,000. There is another circumstance connected with the financial relations between this company and the government which merits a moment's attention. Taking the figures from a return which was brought down in the last session of parliament, I find that from the 30th of June 1903, to the 30th June 1906, or it may be to September 19, 1906, this company received $204,585.20 ; and, according to the recent answer of the Minister of the Interior, they have received since the date last mentioned the further sum of $61,234.83, making in all for the past three years a receipt by this company out of the public treasury of this country of no less than $265,820.03.

Now, an officer of the Department of the Interior has been sent to the continent of Europe for the purpose of examining the accounts of these gentlemen, whoever they may be, and ascertaining whether or not during that period they have fulfilled the terms of the contract by expending the sum of, I think, about $20,000 a year. He made this report, which I have under my hand. That report declares that not only have these gentlemen paid out the amount required, under the terms of the contract, but a little more, so that their total disbursements from the 30th June, 1903, to the present—I assume it is up to the present because this officer who makes the report gives no further expenditure—is $84,-428.61. If you deduct from their receipts during that period, amounting to $265,820.03, the expenditure I have just mentioned, $84,-428.61, you find that these fortunate friends of the government, whoever they may be, received a net profit during the past three years of no less than $181,391.42. A very fair profit indeed upon a total expenditure of but little over $84,000. Under these circumstances, we may very well ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to give us some account of the system under which bonuses are being paid for immigrants at present. It is supposed by some persons throughout the country that although these gentlemen have ceased to benefit at the public expense to the extent of $60,000 a year, under the name of the North Atlantic Trading Company, the same concern, the same parties, are still receiving bonuses for bringing out immigrants. That conjecture may be entirely without foundation, but that is the belief held by some people in this country who say they have good warrant for holding it. What is the government doing at present with regard to bonuses ? Is it true, as has been stated in the public press, that they have issued instructions to their agents in England to discourage the immigration of people of a certain class ? But before coming to that, I would like to say a few words more regarding the disbursing of these sums to the North Atlantic Trading Company. That company, as I have said, on an expenditure of a little more than $84,-000 in three years, netted a profit of over $60,000 a year, or $181,391.42 in the three years.

What was the object of making this contract behind the back of parliament, behind the back of the people of this country, by which these gentlemen were enabled to take that money out of the public treasury and put it into their own pockets ? What good purpose was subserved by that contract ? If these men were carrying on any work not forbidden by the laws of the countries in which they were operating, why did not this government itself disburse that money and accomplish the same results ? Are there not officers of this government who could have done all the trifling work, which these men did, in distributing literature and carying on correspondence with intending imigrants, just as effectively as did these men ? That is a very fair question, one which demands an answer from the government, and especially the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) who, although not personally responsible for this contract, is politically responsible inasmuch as he is the successor in the cabinet of the gentleman under whose auspices that contract was made. I assume that these gentlemen were to do nothing, under their contract with this government, which was forbidden by the laws of the country in which they operated. Why then put $181,000 of public money into the hands of these mysterious individuals, when the work they did could have been properly and as well carried on by our own officials ? On the other hand, if this work was not such work as could be properly carried on under the laws of the countries where these immigrants were sought, why did this government enter into any such contract at all ? This government were not justified in undertaking, by means of the North Atlantic Trading Company, any operations in these foreign countries, which could not be properly carried on by its own officials.

From day to day communications come to me from all over the country pointing out that there are men in our great cities, who were induced to come to Canada at the instigation of some person—very often people who claimed to represent this government—and who, when they land, are without work and have to be supported by charity. I have here a copy of a circular which was received in Great Britain by a man who is now without employment in Toronto. That circular is as follows :

Established 1879.

W. E. RUMSEY.

Licensed by the Board of Trade to issue first, second and third class passages by steamship lines leaving Great Britain for United States, Canada, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India, China, South America, Canadian emigration and land agent.

Weavers for Toronto, Canada.

Dear sir,—I am in a position to find immediate employment with a firm at Toronto for twenty experienced weavers at wages from $17 (£3 10s. 10d.) to $20 (£4 3s. 4d.) on a Brussels loom. In order to earn the latter amount it is necessary to weave forty yards per day. Good weavers are guaranteed constant work the year round.

Those selected must furnish references as to ability and also pay their own fare to Toronto, which is as follows:

Ocean fare..	£5 10 0
Rail fare..	1 13 9
Total, Liverpool to Toronto.. ..	7 3 9

I shall be glad to know at once if you are prepared to accept this offer, as I have a large number of applications to choose from.

Those going out will be placed in employment on arrival at Toronto.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) WALTER E. RUMSEY.

I am acting in this matter for the Grand Trunk Railway Company who cabled over for the men. There are two going from Stoneport next Friday.

(Sgd.) W. E. R.

A most extraordinary postscript. I do not believe that the Grand Trunk Railway ever gave this man any such information or direction. It is inconceivable that the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway company should be telegraphing this man to send out weavers to Canada. It is the most remarkable statement I ever saw in a communication of this kind. Inasmuch as this man puts on his note paper the statement that he is the Canadian Emigration and Land Agent, it behooves the government to look into this question and ascertain what all this means. The man to whom this letter was sent is in Toronto to-day. He was brought out as a weaver. I understand that the Grand Trunk Railway claim, and no doubt truly, that they know nothing about it. This man is now in Toronto without money and unable to get back to the old country where he left a good situation in order to come to Canada on the strength of this circular. Under the circumstances, I am doing no more than my duty in bringing this matter to the attention of the House and asking what all this means and whether there are men, claiming to be immigration and land agents of this government in the United Kingdom, who are sending people to Canada at this time upon promises of employment which prove absolutely illusory when these immigrants reach our shores.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). With regard to the last question of my hon. friend, as to whether this gentleman who advertises himself so elaborately is an agent of this government, I can only say that he is not an agent of this government so far as this government is aware. I fancy, however, from the nature of his advertisement, that he is an agent of an institution known as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, with which this government has had some correspondence. The nature of the correspondence was this: the association has urged the government to use its agents in the old country for the purpose of inducing artisans, such as the weavers mentioned, to come out and take employment in manufacturing establishments in Canada; and to these demands the government has always given an absolute refusal to act as an employment agency for any interest in Canada except those of agriculture, railway construction and domestic service. The instructions of the government to its agents in Great Britain are specific on this subject. And its policy is such that, if the agent whose name has been mentioned has in the past been acting as an agent of this government—that is to say, has been using his license under the British government as authorization for soliciting immigrants to Canada, and has been recognized in that capacity by the government of Canada—if this agent has had business dealings with the government of Canada in the past as an immigration agent, or in the work of soliciting immigrants, the knowledge that he has issued such an advertisement as that referred to would preclude his doing business for the government of Canada again. That is our policy; that is our system of administration. We have had to cut out of our dealings men who have abused their position, as this gentleman has done, so that, even although they should hereafter secure desirable and suitable immigrants to Canada, we would refuse to pay them a bonus upon those immigrants. We have laid it down as a rule that we will not have dealings with people whom we cannot depend upon in their advertisements and in the representation that they make in Great Britain. I may say that one of the agents of the Manufacturers' Association, who has, in that position, solicited recognition from this government in the sending out of immigrants, and has represented to us that, although he is an agent of the Manufacturers' Association, and that, as such, his business in London is to send out artisans and competitors with the labouring classes of this country under the instruction of this Manufacturers' Association, at the same time he was able to send out to us agricultural immigrants, people suitable for railway labour and people suitable for domestic service. And he said: Why should I be cut off from the same bonus as another agent who would send out such people? I have said to him—have been compelled to say to him—that, in pursuance of our policy in immigration, the fact that he was there as an agent carrying on business in that way, avowedly sending out immigrants whom we were not desirous of bringing, prevented us from having business dealings with him. I would like to give his name. Sometimes it is Louis Leopold and sometimes it is Leopold Lazarus. He now occupies the high and responsible position of labour agent of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in London, England. We have no objections to him, but, so long as he is engaged in the business in which he is now engaged, we cannot have business dealings with him, nor with any other man in England, Ireland or Scotland, carrying on that line of business which is opposed to our policy.

Mr. BARKER. What about Preston ? You have kept him.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Preston is not in the employ of the Immigration Department; has not been in the employ of the Immigration Department for a matter of a year or a year and a half. I understand, as was said the other day in the House, that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) saw fit, when in Victoria, B.C., to accuse Mr. Preston of being the cause of the recent influx of Japanese into British Columbia some six months before Mr. Preston had set foot in Japan. With regard to the payment to the North Atlantic Trading Company——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister permit me? There was one thing I forgot to ask him. Is this so-called final payment accepted by the company in full of their contract and of all alleged damages under the terms of that contract?

Mr. OLIVER. It is accepted by the company in full of all claims for bonus. But, so far as I am aware, the question of its acceptance on account of damages is not——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is left open ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is left open.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is asked 'Are there any claims still outstanding?' And the answer is 'No.'

Mr. OLIVER. No claims outstanding for bonus. And, so far as we know, there is no claim outstanding for damages; but, of course, it is competent for the company to make any claim it likes. Our answer goes as far as our knowledge.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, they have not made such a claim?

Mr. OLIVER. Not formally. They have suggested the possibility of putting in such a claim. In regard to the question my hon. friend has asked as to the reason the agreement was entered into with the North Atlantic Trading Company. The answer, I think, is elementary. The reason was that this country desired immigrants. It had not been able to get immigrants in sufficient numbers before. It therefore entered into this agreement, and under this agreement it did get large numbers of immigrants. Under the agreement, certain payments of money were made by the government to the company. Under the agreement, these payments were large in amount, but the only reason that my hon. friends, when they had charge of the affairs of the country, did not make as large, or doubly as large, payments was that they did not bring in so many immigrants. For, I find that, from the year 1891 to 1895 the government of that day was prepared to pay $10 per head for immigrants from Continental Europe—$5 on landing, and $5 more when the immigrant had settled on land in the west.

The only reason they did not pay $364,000 was because they could not and did not get the necessary number of people—I presume the reason they did not was that they did not go the right way about it. I think my hon. friends have no good grounds for complaint against the amount of money that has been paid out to the North Atlantic Trading Company when they themselves undertook to pay out twice as much, and failed only because they did not succeed in getting the number of people they wanted.

This government did pay out a large amount of money; it did get a large number of immigrants; it did secure some 156,000 immigrants and it paid out bonuses on 57,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it was so good a contract why was it cancelled?

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions changed. The country was starving for people when this contract was entered into; the Northwest was still undeveloped, although it had been under the magnificent management of our hon. friends for some eighteen years and under the management of this government for a number of years. Under these circumstances this government entered into the North Atlantic Trading Company contract. It entered into an aggressive campaign in the United States to secure immigration. It entered into a similar campaign in Great Britain under the management of this person to whom so much objection is taken, Mr. Preston. In all quarters it achieved more or less success, and after a number of years of successful effort, when the country was no longer starving for people, when the Northwest was being rapidly filled up, when my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) declared that the time had come when Canada should cease to put forth any effort at all to secure immigration—when that time came it was not necessary to take the same means to secure immigration as had been necessary under previous conditions. We were getting large numbers of immigrants under the North Atlantic Trading Company contract. We were paying for some small proportion of those we were getting, but there were provisions in the contract which, in my humble estimation, were not being lived up to by the company. It seemed to me, as I stated at the time, that judging by results the company was not using the efforts they were expected to to secure immigrants from certain countries of Europe; we saw fit to cancel the contract, and we did cancel it for these reasons. It seemed to me that the reasons for entering into the contract were good and the reasons for cancelling it were also good. When the country was starving for immigrants we were glad to get whomsoever we could get, but when the country commenced to fill up it was time for this government to adopt a different policy, and from time to time, as occasion arose, to meet the occasion, in immigration as in other matters. To-day we are dealing with the immigration question as it stands; we are not dealing with the North Atlantic Trading Company; we do not find it desirable under the circumstances I have mentioned to continue under that arrangement. We have to-day a certain measure of immigration effort in continental Europe, but my hon. friend may rest easy, it has no connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company. He has asked for information on the subject; I gave that information to the House last session, but I have no objection to repeating it. We provide that in certain countries of continental Europe, France, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Holland, Sweden, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Belgium and Switzerland, we give to selected booking agents a bonus of 10 shillings on each adult immigrant of the agricultural class sent to Canada.

Mr. OWEN. As the hon. minister is so generous, I would like to ask him if he would give us the names of the men constituting the North Atlantic Trading Company?

Mr. OLIVER. I may say, as I have had occasion to say previously, that I do not know the names of the members of the North Atlantic Trading Company; that I do not care what their names are or were; that I never felt that it was any concern of mine any more than it was to know who are the shareholders in the Canadian Pacific Railway or any Cobalt company or any other incorporated company. The whole question was results. If we got results we paid; if we did not, we did not pay; and if we did not like the contract we cancelled it. That was our connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company.

In the countries I have mentioned we pay a bonus of 10 shillings to selected booking agents for passengers of the classes we have desired to take to Canada. The names of the agencies have been placed on the table of the House in response to a question, so if my hon. friend is alarmed at the possibility that any of these people are members of the North Atlantic Trading Company or that the North Atlantic Trading Company has anything to do with them, he has all the information on the subject that I have and he is welcome to all the information he is able to secure.

In regard to our immigration effort in Great Britain, we have pursued there what we think has been a very successful campaign during the past year or two. We have succeeded in attracting British immigrants to a greater degree than ever before. That was partly because of the changed conditions in Canada. There was an insistent demand for labour in eastern as well as western Canada and we used reasonable efforts to fill that demand. We advertised in Great Britain; we employed agents and agencies in Great Britain; we paid a bonus to booking agents in Great Britain and we got a large number of people. To-day we find that our efforts have been perhaps too successful; and this year, instead of the immigration automatically and of itself ceasing or decreasing in the fall of the year, when labour has become overabundant in this country, we find that the stream of immigration is keeping up although the condition of the labour market in this country in the last few months has not been good. The ordinary absence of demand for labour in the winter is now upon us. Under these circumstances it became necessary to take action to prevent any unfortunate conditions such as might arise, and we have taken such action. We have notified the steamship companies and our agents in the old country that the market for labour at the present time in Canada is overstocked and to advise people not to come to Canada during the winter, or if they come between now and spring, if they are not coming to friends or assured employment, that they should have with them money to support them until employment can be secured when spring opens. That is our policy and system in the old country and I believe that our effort in the past has been acceptable to the people of Canada as well as to the people of the old country, and we believe that the people of Canada and the people of the old country as well, have sufficient good judgment to commend the efforts that we have made to bring people here when there was a demand for them and to commend with equal readiness our action in advising immigrants not to come when there is not a demand for them.

I beg to assure my hon. friend that we are keeping our eyes open; that we are keeping our finger on the pulse of immigration, and that it is just as much our interest to see that the demand is supplied as it is to see that the demand is not over-supplied. We are not able to achieve the impossible or to say that there would not at one time be too few or at another time too many people, but we are able to use reasonable endeavours to bring people into this country when necessary and we are just as able to use means from hindering them from coming when their arrival is not desirable.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if the government has any special arrangement with the Salvation Army with respect to immigration?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, we have special arrangements with the Salvation Army. The Salvation Army is an organization different from any other in immigration work from the fact that it not only solicits immigrants, but it also cares for them on their arrival. The proper distribution and care of immigrants is just as important and as expensive as the soliciting of them, and in view of that part of the policy of the Salvation Army this government does give the Salvation Army special consideration. We contribute to the rental of the army offices in the old country; we take a certain amount of advertising space in the army papers and we make a small grant to aid the army in its work of distribution in Canada. That is the extent of our assistance to the army. Otherwise they stand on exactly the same footing as all other immigration agencies in the old country. I have some further information on this subject that I would like to give the House, and I would be glad, Mr. Speaker, if you would be kind enough to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

Mr. OLIVER.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). When the House rose at six o'clock, I was proceeding to endeavour to gratify the desire of our hon. friends opposite, as expressed by the numerous questions they have put on the Order Paper from day to day, for further particulars in regard to the immigration policy of the government. Very shortly after I had the honour to become a member of this government the need of an active, may I say the need of a more active immigration policy so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, was brought to my attention. I became a member of the government on April the 7th or 8th, 1905, and I notice amongst the correspondence of the department dated Ottawa, 9th of May, 1905, the following letter addressed to the Hon. 'William' Oliver, Minister of the Interior, Ottawa:—

I am in receipt of the inclosed correspondence from the proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau of Brantford, in which he makes special request to me to endeavour to forward to our city various classes of help that are at present urgently needed in that city and district. Would you oblige me by kindly noting the matter and advising me at your earliest convenience as to what method, if any, we can pursue to attain the required ends. The letter, I believe, contains fairly correct information and Mr. Hall, the proprietor, furnishes several letters of reference as to his standing and ability to place the various classes of labour required.

Hoping to receive an answer from you at an early date or, if convenient to wait upon you in connection with the matter, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

Mr. SPROULE. Whose is the signature?

Mr. OLIVER. I will give it in a minute. I find also the following letter dated Brantford, May 5th:

Referring to conversation with you some days ago regarding the immigration question as in connection with Brantford, I beg to advise, as proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau, in this city, I have experienced considerable difficulty in supplying the demand for men, boys and girls. Help in all the various branches, is scarce and I have many applications for mechanics, moulders, farm hands, servants, factory hands, &c., &c. which have remained unfilled for the reason that labourers are not to be had.

At present, the call for men, especially, is greater than we can commence to meet. We have openings every day, for which, had we but the available material, we could furnish men with.

Then he gives a list of the labour wanted and the rate of wages paid, and he continues:

The above is by no means an exhaustive list, but will serve to give you a fair idea of the class of people we could accommodate.

You will note the calls for help are many and varied, and with our present limited facilities, cannot be adequately answered. But, could we fall back upon and rely upon the Immigration Department, for help, we could not only supply the wants of many who now suffer inconvenience owing to vacancies which cannot be filled, but an avenue might be opened whereby we could aid a few of our less fortunate fellows and thus in a measure help to relieve the congestion of some of the overcrowded centres from whence come many of our immigrants.

You will, I am sure, agree with me that an immigration agency would be a good thing in this city. Brantford, as you know, is a growing city, whose watchword is 'forward,' and with the onrush of business and the ever increasing prosperity of the citizens now here, the class of people required, as above enumerated, is lessened, and Toronto, the seat of the nearest immigration office, being seventy-five miles distant, there is a wide radius of country round Brantford, which could be better reached from here.

That letter is signed by the proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau of Brantford, Ont., and it is inclosed to me with a letter, which I previously read, by W. F. Cockshutt.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister did not give the name of the proprietor of the bureau?

Mr. OLIVER. So far as that is concerned, that is as dark and mysterious a secret as the names of the celebrated North Atlantic Trading Company. But our mutual friend (Mr. Cockshutt)——

Mr. BLAIN. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. OLIVER. The date of the letter from the employment company to Mr. Cockshutt is the 5th of May, 1905, and Mr. Cockshutt's letter is dated the 9th of May, 1905. As I have already stated, Mr. Cockshutt informs us that Mr. Hall is the proprietor of the immigration bureau. This is the gentleman who wants to empty the overcrowded tenements of England into the city of Brantford. It can hardly be believed that the same Mr. Cockshutt is one of the grand army on the other side of the House who has placed on the Order Paper a resolution as follows:—

That in consideration of the great congestion that at present prevails in the labour market in many of the industrial centres throughout the country, it is highly expedient that assisted immigration, excepting only the agricultural and domestic servant classes, should immediately cease, and that no further bonuses shall be paid to individual agents or companies for sending or bringing in such immigrants. Further, that the time has come for the strict enforcement of the law that requires that only the financially, morally and physically fit shall be allowed to enter this Dominion as settlers.

That is to say, on the 9th of May, 1905, our friend endorsed a proposition to empty the overcrowded tenements of England into the cities of Ontario, but on the 28th of November, 1907, he declares that assisted immigration, excepting only the agricultural and domestic servant classes should immediately cease, and that only those who are financially, morally and physically fit should be allowed to enter the Dominion. I am very glad to know that our friend from Brantford has seen the error of the position he took in 1905, and has become in this instance at any rate a straight supporter of the immigration policy of the government.

In regard to what was the policy of the government at that time, I will read the reply of the Superintendent of Immigration, dated May 29, 1905, to W. F. Cockshutt, Esq., M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa:

My office will not fail to do what it can to make known the need that exists at Brantford for various kinds of help, but I may tell you that the great majority of our immigrants make up their mind before leaving Europe or the United States that they will go to the Northwest and settle on the farm lands offered by the government there, or in the towns which are springing up as a consequence of the growth of the farming community in western Canada, and that it is difficult to dissuade them from this intention and to avail themselves of the openings in various employments such as are referred to in the present correspondence. The Immigration Department of the province of Ontario might do something in the matter, and I think it would be well for the proprietor of the employment and information bureau of Brantford, to write as fully as he has written to you to Mr. Thomas Southworth, Director of Colonization, Toronto.

But Mr. Cockshutt was not the only person who brought to the attention of the Immigration Department the needs of this country for immigrants. Here is a letter from the Ontario Malleable Iron Company, Limited, of Oshawa, Ont., addressed to the Immigration Bureau, Ottawa:

We are at the present time short of labourers, and write to ask if you could send along some men as Oshawa is an excellent point in the placing of men for labouring work.

We could ourselves take at the present time twenty men if we could get them, and there are other firms in town who are also looking for men.

Anything along this line that you could do for us will be appreciated.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the date of that?

Mr. OLIVER. October 4, 1905. The Secretary-Treasurer of the Dominion Textile Company, Limited, Montreal, on October 3, 1905, wrote:

We will consider it a great favour if you will be kind enough to advise Mr. Walker, also any of your other agents in Great Britain, that our company is desirous of obtaining weavers or any other good cotton mill help to work in our factories in this country. We have thirteen mills in operation, and at the present time could give employment to several hundred good mill hands if we could secure them.

We have a letter from the Meaford Board of Trade, dated October 2, 1905, as follows:—

I am instructed by the president of the Meaford Board of Trade to write you explaining the position of matters here with regard to unskilled labour in the hope that you might be able to help us.

In addition to two tanneries, a foundry, canning factory and two sash and door factories we have a large furniture factory, employing 60 to 70 skilled hands and some 15 to 20 unskilled hands could they be got, the Seamen-Kent Company, who manufacture hardwood flooring and deal quite extensively in lumber, transhipping through here from vessels. Then there is another large factory nearly completed which will manufacture wheelbarrows and will be able to employ 20 or more unskilled hands at least. The three last-mentioned concerns are now and expect to be short of hands, both skilled and unskilled, and it occurred to us that possibly if we acquainted you with the position of matters here you might be able to steer some of the immigrants who desire to locate in towns in preference to taking up farming this way and so help both us and them.

In addition to the factories, the grain elevator, at the harbour, 750,000 bushels capacity, is short of shovellers. Pay there is 20 cents an hour. I believe work could be got here from now till navigation closes. Work for at least 30 hands could be given in and around the factories all winter, and in addition the Seamen-Kent Company will require to send men to the bush in connection with their sawmills.

If you think you could make use of this information to our mutual advantage we would be well repaid. Each of the factories could take on a number of boys from 15 to 18 years of age and train them. There is no strike on.

But there were other demands for labour. In 1904 the labour organizations made strong representations against the importation of skilled labour, and this brought forth resolutions from the county councils and other organizations of many Ontario counties. Here is a petition from the county of Halton, Ont., dated January, 1904:

The undersigned petitioners, having read the representations made to you as Minister of the Interior by representatives of labour organizations on January 4, 1904, in the city of Toronto, to the effect that more mechanics and farm labourers are not wanted in this country, we the County Council of the county of Halton, wish to emphatically protest against this most unwarranted statement, knowing as we do that exactly the reverse is the case. Hundreds of unfinished buildings and thousand of buildings projected have not been started that would have been built under favourable conditions of the labour market, which testifies to the undoubted fact that there has been throughout the province of Ontario during the past season an extraordinary scarcity of mechanics. And every farmer in Canada will testify that farm labour has been extremely scarce, indeed, almost unprocurable. This is largely due to two circumstances: First, the unprecedented number of people who have moved to the Northwest during recent years; second, to the fact that large numbers have drifted into the cities, where they have had no difficulty in procuring employment at high wages.

Your petitioners would therefore pray that every possible encouragement should be given by your government to induce farm labourers to come to Ontario, knowing as we do that profitable employment can be given to any number of people who can be induced to come here.

This petition was signed and sent to the Interior Department by some sixty organizations—county councils, farmers' institutes and agricultural associations of one kind and another. In response to the statements thus set out, in response to the demand of the agricultural community of the province of Ontario, in the response to demands made in parliament, not only by my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt), but by other members in their places, the Dominion government did expand its immigration policy in regard to Great Britain with a view of supplying these demands. But I want to point out that the Immigration Department did not accede to the whole of the demand. I have no wish to delay the House, but I would ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, while I read an extract or two from the printed circulars issued to booking agents in the United Kingdom on March 20th, 1906, after it was decided to carry on an aggressive campaign in Great Britain for the purpose of supplying the requirements here:

Bonuses will be paid provided the regulations of the department are complied with, upon tickets to Canada sold to British subjects, whose occupation in the United Kingdom has been for at least one year, one of the following namely: Farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway surface men, navvies or miners, who have signified their intention of following farming or railway construction work in Canada; and female domestic servants.

The bonus will be one pound on each person of prescribed classes, eighteen years of age or over, and ten shillings on those between one and eighteen years of age. No bonus on infants, tourists, returning Canadians, prepaid tickets or persons of other occupation than one of the above named, or on persons mentally or physically unfit.

This was supplemented by a circular sent to the booking agents, and I shall take the liberty of reading one or two clauses so as to set out more clearly the policy of the government, in order that the government may be judged, not on the policy ascribed to it, but on its actual policy. The booking agents are the people upon whom we depend for the spread of information which we desire to get before the British people. They are licensed to sell transportation under the laws of Great Britain they receive a commission from the transportation companies for whom they sell tickets, and it was thought that by adding to that commission on the tickets sold to Canada, we would thereby enlist their active assistance. But while we were glad to enlist their services, we were very careful to enlist them only on behalf of the classes of people we considered were required in this country. Besides we went beyond that and explained to them why we took that position. We said :

The classes of people on whom bonus is paid by the Canadian government are expected, by reason of their experience at home, to find scope for their abilities in the occupation of the vacant lands of Canada, in employment upon the lands now occupied and cultivated, or in the railway development now in progress. And while it is not asserted that people of other callings or conditions of life should not come to Canada, or may not find a career open to them in this country, it is desired to have it well understood that the government of Canada assumes no responsibility with respect to any other immigration than that of the classes mentioned as eligible for bonus payment. It is not asserted that the farmer or farm labourer is necessarily a more desirable citizen than any other, but it is a simple fact that the demand in Canada is for people to occupy the as yet vacant lands of the country, to aid in the cultivation of those already occupied, and also to assist in providing additional transportation facilities. This it is which justifies the government in assuming the expense of immigration effort. To go beyond the attempt to meet these requirements would be to use the money of certain classes of Canadian taxpayers for the purpose of securing competitors against them in their several callings, for which they would naturally hold the government to account.

Besides pointing out to the booking agents why we do not pay bonuses on others than the classes mentioned, we placed before them the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1906, passed for the purpose of promoting immigration from the British Isles. We did this because we believed that if we are to get the approval of the people, we must use every effort to bring out only desirable immigrants and should also use every reasonable effort to keep out undesirable people. Therefore at the same time that we increased the British bonus from seven shillings to twenty shillings per head, we enacted an Immigration Act which gave us the power to exclude undesirable people, as we were not able to do previously. We said to the booking agents :

It is important that the provision of the Canadian Immigration Act of last session, prohibiting the landing in Canada of certain classes of people, should be carefully studied (copy herewith), so that the booking agent will understand thoroughly that for his own credit and the advantage of his business he will not book people of these classes. They are liable to be returned to the place from which they came at the expense of the steamship company. This liability exists for two years after their landing in Canada. It will be noticed that the following classes of people are prohibited from landing and are subject to deportation within two years: Feeble minded, idiotic, insane, or who have been insane within five years, afflicted with any loathsome, contagious or infectious disease; anyone who is a pauper, who is destitute, who is a professional beggar or vagrant or who is likely to become a public charge, any prostitute or person who lives by the proceeds of prostitution, or any convicted criminal. Persons who are deaf and dumb, blind or infirm may be admitted if accompanied by members of the family who will be responsible for their support and safekeeping. Unless so accompanied they are subject to deportation.

We also dealt in this circular with cases such as were mentioned this afternoon by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), when he stated that a man who advertised himself in the old country as a government agent was sending out people of classes other than those upon whom we were willing to pay a bonus. In regard to that point, we had this to say :

In the past it has been found necessary on occasion to discontinue business relations with booking agencies for various reasons, such as presentation of improper claims, booking of undesirables, the special booking of artisans under contract, and improper advertising. It is hoped that no difficulties of this kind will arise in future; but as the Immigration Department is a part of the public business of Canada, it is necessary that its work and connections should be kept clear of misunderstandings of every kind. The department would prefer not to have relations with any agency with which it might find itself at cross purposes, and whose actions might subject its work to misrepresentation.

We have this further to say with regard to the kind of people wanted in this country :

It is not in the interest of the individual immigrant that he should remove to Canada unless there is reasonable prospect of his success here. The arrival of any large number of immigrants in this country who are unfitted for the conditions here, must necessarily re-act against the continuation of the immigration movement. In spite of the fact that his failure to succeed is due to personal causes, the unsuccessful man will blame the country, and complain to his friends at home, thereby deterring them from coming out, and the efforts of the Immigration Department will be discredited with the people of Canada who will therefore withdraw their support from those efforts. The men wanted in Canada are those who will do well here, who are recognized in the United Kingdom as being fit, but who are looking for the wider opportunities of the new country, not to be found at home. The efforts of the Canadian Immigration Department are not directed towards those who are merely looking for a place where they may live, but towards those who, while they are able to live under present conditions in the United Kingdom are on the look out for an opportunity to better their position in life.

That is the policy of the Immigration Department to-day and that was its policy in 1906. I would like the House to contrast it with the policy suggested by Mr. Hall, the proprietor of the employment and information bureau of Brantford, Ontario, as endorsed by Mr. Cockshutt, member of parliament, on the 9th May, 1905. I am sure the House will agree that I have reason to be pleased at the adhesion of Mr. Cockshutt to our policy, as expressed in his proposal placed on the Order Paper.

But I want to point out to the House that we not only have a definite policy, but we have carried it out. And we have been carrying it out under difficulties and opposition from people right here in this province of Ontario. But, before I come to that, I wish to read a circular letter addressed to steamship booking agents in Great Britain and Ireland, advising in regard to the destination of immigrants:

It is scarcely necessary to point out to you the desirability as far as possible of keeping these newly arrived immigrants out of the cities and the immigration branch has appointed a number of employment agents in the various counties of Ontario in order that you may send farm labourers, coming to this province, direct to the locality where their services are in demand. If immigrants are sent to the cities, it will be readily seen that the likelihood of their taking farm work is considerably lessened, especially if there is any demand for tradesmen or general labourers. It is therefore in the interest of the booking agent to direct immigrants to our employment agents.

I wish to place before the House part of a resolution of one of the most influential financial, and, I might say, political, bodies of this country, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. This resolution was communicated to us by Mr. G. M. Murray, secretary, under date May 28, 1907. Mr. Murray says:

By direction of the executive council of this association, I have the honour to inform you that, at their last meeting, the following resolution regarding the immigration policy of the Dominion government was unanimously adopted:

I need not read the 'whereases.' The main part of the resolution is as follows:—

Resolved, that the Dominion government be respectfully urged to encourage, through its present immigration officers, and by the appointment of special representatives, for this purpose, the immigration not only of farm labourers but also of skilled mechanics, where opportunities are known to exist, and thus assist in building up our national industries.

Under date of May 30, 1907, Mr. Murray wrote the department a letter in which the following appears:

I have been requested to remind you that the association opened an office in London in January last for the express purpose of engaging for its members skilled help which they were unable to procure in Canada. This being the case, we think it only reasonable that, pending a change in the government's immigration policy along the lines indicated in our resolution, instructions should be given to the immigration agents of the Canadian government in the United Kingdom to refer those who inquire of them as to the chances of securing work in Canada at the various trades to the London office of our association. It will be found at 15 Strand, London, W.C., and Mr. Louis Leopold who is in charge will cheerfully place at the disposal of such applicants all the information in his possession.

In reply to this, the following was sent to Mr. Murray under date June 6:

In reply to the resolution conveyed in the letter of May 28, I beg to inclose herewith copy of a circular to booking agents in the British Isles issued November 15, 1906, in which is set out the position at present taken by the Immigration Department in regard to the matter to which you allude. So far as I can see there are many difficulties in the way of the government acceding to the terms of the resolution, and at the moment I am unable to give any assurance of a change in the policy which is set out in the circular to booking agents to which I have alluded.

Mr. Murray 'came back' on June 22. Speaking of the association and its resolution, he said:

They make their request of the government in order that some means may be provided whereby the ever-increasing needs of our industrial establishments in the way of skilled labour will be taken care of. I need not point out to you that the country is enjoying unprecedented prosperity and our manufacturing establishments have been greatly taxed to supply the demands of the home market. If they are to continue to retain their hold on this trade, they must be in a position to take care of the orders that are turned in to them and they cannot do this unless their supply of labour is greatly increased. The department which this association has established for this purpose has itself engaged and shipped to Canada in four months over two hundred artisans and has orders on file for five hundred more. This, our committee think, should in itself be sufficient evidence of their absolute bona fides.

On July 11th Mr. Murray was replied to as follows:—

In reply to your inquiry I would say that the difficulty which we desire to guard against is a possible congestion of indigent immigrants in towns and cities which would result in causing an outcry against the policy which it might be alleged produced such congestion. It is in order to keep the department clear from any such charge that we confine our efforts absolutely to securing labourers for employment on the land and on railway construction work. This, however, does not apply to female domestic servants.

We had this further communication from the Manufacturers' Association, dated June 25, 1906:

I beg to inclose you herewith a resolution passed by the executive council of this association at its meeting held on the 21st inst., having reference to the importation of skilled workmen.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) J. F. M. STEWART,
Secretary.

IMPORTATION OF SKILLED WORKMEN.

Resolution unanimouly passed by the executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers Association (incorporated), at its regular monthly meeting held in Toronto, June 21, 1906:—

Resolved, that the executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association reaffirm the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association held in Montreal, September 20, 21 and 22, 1904, having reference to the importation of skilled workmen, as follows:—

1. That the Dominion Department of Labour as such should give equal consideration to the needs of employer and employee, that its exclusive system of labour correspondents should be abolished, and that it should, as far as possible, be constituted in policy and practice, an impartial tribunal to advance the interests of all classes in the Dominion.

2. That provision should be made for the lawful importation of skilled mechanics from any other country, provided that the help required cannot be obtained in the Dominion.

3. That the Immigration Department of the Dominion government should encourage and not discourage the emigration to Canada of the best classes of skilled workmen from other countries, provided that these workmen are required in Canadian industries and cannot be secured in Canada.

And that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the members of the government and members of the House of Commons.

I wish to point out to the House that the instructions to booking agents were not an empty form of words but that they were carried out in practice. I have here a copy of a letter dated June 30, from Mr. D. Bruce Walker, government agent in England, which reads:

I have written again and again to steamship booking agents, including Mr. Bardwell, pointing out that they ought to use the government employment agents in Ontario for all persons experienced or inexperienced who desire to go upon farms, and that, under no circumstances should they be sent to any of the large cities in Ontario, and that, under no circumstances, should mechanics or other skilled tradesmen be sent to these government employment agents. I have also pointed out again and again to Mr. Bardwell and others that men intended for railway construction may safely be booked to the steamship ports of Canada, but that on every occasion they should possess enough means to insure their transportation to where the work is, and that they should consult the government agent at that port for such information and other general guidance. This point is emphasized in your own circular as well as in my own, and I hope by constant repetition to bring conviction to the minds of booking agents as to what they should do in these circumstances.

I have also a letter from the department to Mr. Jas. S. Waugh, Canadian government employment agent at Chatham, Ontario, one of the agents appointed throughout the province to distribute farm labour, which reads:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, and in answer to your urgent request I immediately wired as follows:

'Department does not expect you to secure employment for immigrants except at farm work.'

With further reference to this matter and to other items in your letter, I beg to say that I had a number of complaints from employment agents that mechanics of all sorts were being sent to them with the understanding that the agents would secure for them employment at their respective trades. In every case where the matter has been brought to my attention I have endeavoured to communicate with the booking agent in the old country and notify him that he must not give cards of introduction to such men. In this connection I would be glad to have you send me any letters of introduction you receive in cases of this sort. On receipt of them I will be in a position to take the matter up and to prevent further difficulty.

I am pleased to know that men are taking to farm work and that some who at first refused it have gone back to you to be placed on farms. Commission will be allowed you on these immigrants providing, of course, you succeed in putting them on farms a short time after their arrival, but it will not be possible to allow you commission on persons placed at other occupations than farm work and domestic services, as the matter was fully discussed and finally decided before offering any appointments.

If you are receiving numbers of men who will not take farm work, the best thing to do is to notify me at once of the name of the organization sending such men out. The central (unemployed) body for London have sent out a good many men who have been accustomed to general labourers' work, but imagine that very few of their immigrants will have had experience in farm work. Probably the majority of inexperienced men you receive will be sent to you by a few societies or organizations similar to the above mentioned.

Mr. W. D. Scott, superintendant of immigration, writes to Messrs. E. Evans & Co., New Cross Roads, London, England, as follows:

Mr. John Patterson, Canadian government employment agent, Toronto Junction, Ontario, has sent me your advice form re Mr. George Simmons and Mr. Fred Parrott, due to sail on the 25th instant per steamship 'Sardinian.' I observe these men are fitters and engineers and wish to obtain similar employment in Canada, and I am writing this letter to draw your attention to the fact that Mr. Patterson is not responsible for obtaining employment at any other occupation than farm work and he will be obliged on the arrival of these two men to refuse assistance. I supposed that our circular was sufficiently explicit to have prevented this, and I would ask you to kindly note that in all future bookings of mechanics or clerks of any sort such immigrants must not be directed to one of our employment agents.

As these men do not sail until the 25th instant I think you will have time to notify them that they must not expect Mr. Patterson to secure for them employment at any rate.

Here is another letter from Mr. Scott on the same subject:

I am in receipt of your favour of the 2nd instant and regret that you are dissatisfied on account of commission being disallowed on a mechanic placed by you. The department in carrying on its immigration propaganda in the United Kingdom advocates the emigration of farmers, farm labourers, domestics and railway labourers only and lays particular stress upon the fact that any one coming out with the intention of engaging in mechanical industries must do so entirely on his own responsibility and without any assistance from the departmental agents on this side. The booking agents as a class understand that this is the attitude of the department, and while there may be a few who issue cards of introduction to persons other than the specified classes, still the number acting in such manner is small and when a case such as the one you mention is brought to the attention of the department the booking agent is immediately notified to discontinue issuing such cards of introduction.

On November 28, 1906, Mr. Scott had occasion to send the following letter to our agent in England:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt in due course of your letter of the 14th instant, enclosing copies of correspondence between Captain Taylor, of Liverpool, and Mr. J. R. Ronald, of Montreal, and stating that as there appears to be a genuine demand for weavers you have told Captain Taylor that there will be no objection to his advertising for the men. I think that it would be well for you to hold entirely aloof from any business of this kind and to avoid expressing any opinion in the matter. It is sufficient in such cases to say that Canada is encouraging the immigration of farmers, farm labourers and domestic servants but that the government does not take the responsibility of expressing any opinion as to the probability of persons in other callings obtaining employment and doing well in this country, and that their coming here, if they do come, must be entirely their own affair.

I have tried to place before the House clearly and distinctly that the policy of this government in regard to immigration, while it was a policy of active encouragement of those who were especially desired, was a policy of just as active discouragement of those who were not desired, and if there is at this time in this country a congestion of immigrants such as is alleged in the resolution of Mr. Cockshutt, the blame, if blame there is, must be placed elsewhere than on the shoulders of the Immigration Department. I have already read to the House the action that is taken in the way of bringing out immigrants by that powerful organization the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. As well there are in England powerful organizations for the purpose of sending out those who have not employment in that country, organizations which are taking the suggestion of our friend Mr. Hall, recommended by Mr. Cockshutt, that it is desirable to empty the crowded tenements of Europe into the cities of Canada. There are a number of these organization, benevolent organizations, at work. There are the Self-Help Emigration Society, the East End Emigration Society, the Central Unemployed Body, the Central Emigration Board, the British Women's Emigration Society, the Church Emigration Society, the Church Army and the Salvation Army. I have read from the circular to booking agents the policy of the department and I think nothing can be more distinct than that, however well we may wish to the philanthropic instincts of the men who are engaged in these organizations, we do not recognize that what they assume to be their obligation is in any degree our obligation. That is to say, while we recognize their charitable efforts in trying to do well for the people of whom they have taken charge, we do not recognize any such obligation on our part. We deal with these people simply on their merits as prospective citizens of Canada, and if they come up to a sufficient physical standard and if they come with good intentions and if there is reasonable opportunity for their employment in Canada in the calling which we desire to have filled, we give those immigration societies the same consideration as we give any other booking agent. But, if their efforts do not result in the bringing of those whom we could, in accordance with our policy, admit and pay bonus on, then they have to do their work without any assistance from us, or, if they go too far, we exercise the powers given us under the Immigration Act and either reject or deport.

In regard to the total flow of immigration to the country during the year, I may give a few figures. The total arrivals numbered 273,009. From across the ocean there were 217,150, of whom 131,337 were from Great Britain, and 85,813 from the continent. There were 55,859 from the United States. We have no means of knowing how many of the 131,337 from Great Britain represented the work of charitable organizations, but we do know that the charitable organizations claimed bonus on 5,167. They were paid bonuses on 3,347. That is to say the claims of the charitable organizations on immigrants brought out were rejected to the number of nearly 2,000—I fancy a much larger number than will account for the total so-called congestion that there is in all this Dominion of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has given us the number who came from the United States. I saw somewhere—I think it was from government sources—some information as to the number of Canadians who went to the United States last year. Has he any information on that, and if so, would he kindly give it to the House?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no information on that subject at present. It, I fancy, would be available from the returns of the United States. I do not think we have those returns.

Mr. MACDONELL. I would like to ask the hon. minister, if, from his last remarks, we are to take it that the charitable organizations to which he has referred attempted to obtain bonus on 2,000 people or thereabouts on false or pretended claims without any merit in them?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) thinks he is in the police court or not. I do not think his question is well put. I would like to say that the man who wants has a different point of view from the man who gives, and the charitable organizations may very well have a different view of what their rights are from that which the Immigration Department may have. But, as a matter of fact, I have given the hon. gentleman the figures of the claims made by the charitable organizations and of the number of those claims allowed by the Immigration Department. We were not able to see eye to eye with the charitable organizations with regard to the number of their claims any more than we are able to see eye to eye with them in regard to the purpose of their work. Their purpose is to do good to the unfortunate of the old country; our purpose is to get from the old country the best they have so as to improve and not to deteriorate the population of this country.

Regarding the effect of the payment of bonus in securing a desirable class of immigrants, I have already pointed out that the bonus is paid for the express purpose of giving an inducement to the booking agent to send us the man upon which he can get a bonus rather than the man upon whom he cannot get a bonus. As we have the endorsation of our hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) in regard to our immigration policy, I am especially glad to be able to refer the House to the endorsation of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in regard to the principle of our bonus policy. On April 9 last, the hon. leader of the opposition enlightened the House as follows:—

> It does not seem to me that the payment of bonuses in itself has any tendency to bring in a less rather than a more desirable class of people into this country. That would depend altogether on the way you work it out. If without the payment of bonuses you permit people to come in indiscriminately, if you use every possible means by advertising and otherwise in any particular country from which immigration is not very desirable, you might, without a system of bonusing at all, increase the tendency to bring in people who are not desirable. On the other hand, if you used the system of bonusing, you might attach to it such conditions as would not tend to bring in undesirable people.

I think the House will agree with me that in that particular we have met the requirements of the leader of the opposition. He says further:

> In a word, I would be inclined to restrict our efforts in so far as the system of bonusing is concerned to the people of the British isles.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). I would like to ask the minister what are the regulations governing the agents in the constituencies throughout the Dominion, and what are the conditions under which they are entitled to receive the bonus upon each immigrant placed? How long has an immigrant to be here before the agent is entitled to receive the bonus of $2?

Mr. OLIVER. The immigrant has to be in farm employment before the man who places him in that employment is entitled to the bonus of $2 for placing him.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to say to the minister, if I may be permitted, that in the riding which I have the honour to represent, Mr. James S. Waugh—in regard to whom I had a question the other day on the Order Paper although his name is there given as John S. Waugh—received $1,280 for placing immigrants whom he had brought to the county of Kent during the last year. I can say with all authority to the minister that 25 per cent of those immigrants for whom he was paid $2 apiece were not in the riding twenty days and I can also say that 50 per cent of the immigrants for whom he received $2 apiece were not in the riding twenty days after he received that bonus. They simply went across the border to the United States. I am opposed to paying a bonus of $2 a head For immigrants who come to this country, I believe the time has gone by when we should pay any money to induce immigrants to come to this country. I think we should get a bonus rather than pay one out.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Clements) has made a clear cut statement of policy on which we would be glad to take issue at any time and on any occasion which may seem convenient. I would like to say, however, in regard to his position as to the policy of bonuses and as to the requirement that if a man is placed on a farm he therefore must always stay on that farm that I do not at all agree with him; nor do I admit that the payment of $2 to an immigration agent thereby mortgages the body or soul of the immigrant so placed. The best we can do is to place a man in employment such as we undertake or desire to fill. If the employer and employee cannot agree we cannot do any better. We have done very well when we have placed with the farmers of Kent the number of men from the old country that has been stated, and if they have not been able to keep them that is something which is beyond our control.

Mr. CLEMENTS. My contention is that if you pay $2 to an agent for placing an immigrant on a farm in Kent or any other county in Canada, that immigrant should remain upon the farm a certain length of time before the agent receives the $2. I can tell the minister that the agent received $2 a head on account of immigrants in West Kent who did not remain on a farm for twenty-four hours; he simply got his certificate and that was the end of it.

Mr. OLIVER. I would not say that our representative in Kent is perhaps all that might be desired. We appointed a large number of agents throughout Ontario and we have to take our chance on the man we got, but I assume that the man we got in West Kent was fairly representative of West Kent.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The minister evidently does not know that gentleman's reputation in the riding of West Kent.

Mr. OLIVER. I must admit I do not, but I am merely assuming that we got a fairly representative man and that his work is fairly representative also.

Mr. CLEMENTS. May I ask the minister who recommended that man for the office?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to give the hon. gentleman the information now but we can get it later on. I would like to place before the House some further information in regard to the situation as to the supply of labour at the present time, and as to the attitude of the department and its action thereon. In former years the rule was that the rush of immigration took place during the months of May and June; that it fell off greatly after June, and that there was practically no movement of immigrants in the fall and winter months. Therefore we concentrated our attention on the securing of immigrants such as fulfilled our requirements during the spring months, and the rest of the year took care of itself. Whether fortunately or unfortunately; whether because of favourable conditions in Canada or because of energetic advertising, or because of both, this year the flow of immigrants did not cease with the passing of the spring months but continued into the fall and apparently was likely to continue into the winter. That was a new condition and it required to be met. Naturally there is a falling off in the demand for labour as winter sets in, and there was some depression in financial conditions which added to the ordinary lack of work in the winter, and we found for the first time in some years a surplus of labour in some of the cities of Canada. We were not in any sense responsible for that congestion of labour. I have pointed out to the House that it was practically contrary to our policy; I have pointed out to the House the direct causes which brought that labour there and with which we were neither directly nor indirectly connected. But it was a fact that it was there to a certain degree, and it was for us to consider what our attitude should be. We believed that in the presence of more or less unemployed persons in the cities, accompanied by the fact that the demand for labour is slack during the winter, it was not desirable that the ranks of the unemployed should be increased by further arrivals of unemployed from the old country. Therefore on the 3rd of December we wired to Mr. Bruce Walker in London:

Advertise in newspapers and notify by circular, agents, booking agents and steamship companies, that the demand for labour of all kinds in Canada is over for the season. Strongly advise by same means all persons looking for employment in Canada not to sail earlier than April next and then only if they have employment assured or have sufficient cash to keep them until they secure employment.

On the 6th December we sent the following to steamship agents:—

In view of the condition of the labour market, immigrants landing should have sufficient money to keep them until spring; understand that a large number of immigrants are liable to land, bound en route to Toronto. If without sufficient funds, notify this office, giving particulars before landing.

Then the steamship agents who were willing to co-operate with us said:

You require passengers to have money if they have not employment or friends in view. How much money shall we insist they shall have?

On December 11 we wired as follows:—

Notify all steamship companies, booking agencies and government agents in British isles and on continent that immigrant passengers arriving Canada until the 15th of February must have $50, and from then to 1st April, $25 in addition to inland transportation unless they can show to the satisfaction of the emigration officers that they have assured employment or will be cared for by friends.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that apply to all comers?

Mr. OLIVER. It applies to those who have not employment or who have not friends to take care of them. It does not apply to the families of men already in this country who are coming to join them ; it does not apply to men who know they are going to get work. It does apply to the ordinary immigrant who without friends and without employment must depend on somebody until work opens in the spring, and we think it is not unwise to give notice beforehand as to the conditions and as to the requirements.

Mr. SPROULE. The department is paying a bonus on certain classes and many of these may be included in this prohibition. Therefore you are trying to discourage them coming here while you are paying the companies to bring them here. That notice apparently does not restrict the bonus on farm labourers or domestic servants whether they have one dollar or fifty dollars, or whether or not they have immediate employment when they reach here.

Mr. OLIVER. If the men are excluded then no bonus will be paid on them. This circular is to the booking agents to inform them that this is an additional requirement and that if they book people without that requirement being fulfilled they must not expect that bonus.

Mr. SPROULE. No matter what lines come on?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely. Our information is that farm work is slack at present and that possibly there are men enough in the country to fill all requirements, and therefore we do not wish to encourage men to come out at this season. We will be glad to have them later on, but we do not want to have them at the present time. It may be said we did not take this action soon enough and that we should have foreseen what was about to take place. But I may point out that there are others who were not more far-seeing than we, and in fact there are some who do not recognize even now that the condition is at all serious.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the hon. gentleman leaves that point, I would like to ask him if the condition that a man must have $50 in his pocket applies only to immigrants coming from the British Isles ? I saw a notice of that condition in the public press, and to my mind it was to that effect.

Mr. OLIVER. The notice says: 'Notify all steamship company's booking agencies and government agents in the British Isles and on the continent that immigrant passengers arriving in Canada until the 15th of February,' and so on. The Montreal 'Star.' on September 28, 1907, said:

The fact of the matter is that the demand for unskilled labour in Canada is greater than the supply.

The Toronto 'World' on March 22, 1907, in an article on its welcome bureau, said:

This year promises to being the high water mark of Canadian immigration, but let as many come as may, there is room and to spare for them many times over.

On November 23, 1907, the Edmonton 'Journal,' discussing an arrangement made by the British Columbia government and the Salvation Army, said:

The British Columbia government has concluded an arrangement with the Salvation Army, whereby the latter contracts to supply a given number of immigrant settlers and workingmen, the government thus expressing its confidence in the army's system. It would be a good thing for Alberta if our government would follow suit. We need men.

The Winnipeg 'Telegram,' on April 3, 1907, said :

Never in the history of western Canadian development has western Canada so desired men, skilled and unskilled in railway construction, building enterprise, &c. Never have the opportunities been greater for the man willing to work, and never has it been more important than that the labour market of the west shall be supplied to some degree proportionate to the crying demand at the present time.

The annual meeting of the Toronto branch of the Manufacturers' Association was held on July 11, 1907. The retiring chairman, Mr. John Firstbrook, gave an address, from which I quote:

The city was not attractive to the manufacturer unless there was plenty of skilled labour to be had, and this was where Toronto was sadly handicapped. Skilled help is even more difficult to obtain now than a year ago, and the situation was indeed an acute one, vitally concerning the welfare of the city as a whole. Factories had expanded altogether beyond the increase in the number of available mechanics. Notwithstanding the repeated agitations the government persisted in confining its efforts to the encouragement of the immigration of agriculturists and railway labourers, while the importation of skilled labour and factory hands was left to private initiative. This policy, which would inevitably throw the splendid markets of the rapidly developing Northwest into the hands of the United States manufacturer, had compelled the Canadian Manufacturers Association on February 1 last to open a labour department in London, Eng. In the short space of five months since then, in spite of all these difficulties for organizing such a bureau, over 800 skilled workers have been contracted for to come to Canada, of which nearly 300 have arrived to-day. Toronto was getting her quota of these, but they were a mere pittance through the industrial thirst. The situation demands the execution of the same aggressive government policy to encourage the immigration of skilled labour and factory hands generally that is now pursued in the case of agriculturists. From investigations carried on by the branch two months ago it is conservatively estimated that there is employment for 25,000 additional girls in Ontario alone, of whom 10,000 could easily be absorbed in Toronto. The number of male mechanics wanted is incalculable, but the excessive dearth of labour is patent on all sides.

At the thirteenth annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade, held at St. John, N.B., on August 21 and 22, 1907, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, that the maritime provinces with their rich and varied resources afford in farming, lumber, fishing, mining and manufacturing, and in commercial life and other spheres of activity, exceptional opportunities for the obtaining of a comfortable livelihood, and the making of pleasant homes with all the surroundings essential to the highest degree of happiness, that there are here great opportunities for development and progress, and that all reasonable efforts should be put forth by the various provincial governments and municipalities as well as by the federal administration, to induce our young men to remain at home, and also to divert to the maritime provinces a portion of the ever increasing stream of immigration which is now flowing from the notherland and other European countries to the Canadian west.

In regard to the character of the immigration of this year, while the evidence may not be valuable, it still may be interesting. I quote from the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of June 15, 1907:

The volume of immigration into the Canadian west continues to swell. In economic efficiency, as well as in numbers, the newcomers appear to be nearly all that is to be desired. The proportion coming from the United Kingdom shows a welcome increase.

On March 16, 1907, the 'Mail and Empire' had this to say:

Some leading employers of labour have sounded a note of alarm against the large inflow of immigration, fearing that should there be any shrinkage of demand for labour the country might have on its hands a large army of unemployed.

It concludes :

There is little danger that the country will be burdened with an excess of labour, for any considerable period, because the higher cost of living here and the cheapness of ocean steerage rates quickly enable any surplus to adjust itself to avoid unemployment.

On November 11, 1907, the 'Mail and Empire' said:

In these days of rapid growth and expansion there is a danger of dwelling too much on the undesirable element in immigration, forgetful of the great material prosperity that the average immigrant family brings with him to this country.

The Montreal 'Star,' in a lucid interval, had this to say on December 9, 1907 :

Members from the west are speaking out in support of assisted immigration. They seem fearful that the feeling against it engendered by the pathetic spectacle of men and women brought from Europe at this season of the year to swell the numbers of the unemployed in our cities, may lessen the activity of the Immigration Department in bringing in new settlers for the prairie country. But there is really nothing in common between the two classes of immigration except the ocean voyage. The man who comes prepared to take up and stock a farm in the west is a man who proposes to give employment to himself and possibly others. He will not join the unemployed, but the employers.

It is something, I think, upon which the government may be congratulated, that it has the support of the 'Star' in its immigration policy. The Winnipeg 'Telegram' on November 1, 1907, speaking of emigration from Great Britain, says:

Statistics all show that the class which left the country last year, and those who have since left, has been the very best the country can furnish, and to that extent the colonies have been the gainers.

We notice too that the 'Mail and Empire' itself has joined in endorsing the government policy. In an editorial on Monday, December 16, 1907, it had to say:

The men who came to Canada qualified to take their places among our producers are, generally speaking, prosperous, and would not exchange their present position for the one they left to come here. Immigrants are doing well as farmers. Capable farm labourers and willing and adaptable general labourers have saved enough money to tide themselves over the short period of dullness. No anxiety need be felt on account of the industrious, fit and saving immigrant.

If the Immigration Department has to some extent been taken by surprise, both by the continuance of the flow of immigration and by the somewhat slackening demand for employment, I submit that it is only in company with all the leaders of thought throughout the country on this question. If we have erred, so has every one else. So that there may be no mistake about what the policy of the government is in regard to immigration, I quote from a pamphlet issued in 1907, reprinted from a former issue :

In this it is set out that the classes wanted in Canada are tenant farmers, farm labourers, general labourers and navvies. The classes not wanted are clerks, draftsmen, telegraphists, shop assistants, professional men, schoolmasters and teachers, civil engineers and architects, surveyors.

In a more recent pamphlet the following appears :—

The immigration efforts of the Canadian government are confined to securing for Canada farmers, farm labourers, railway construction men and female domestic servants. Those seeking occupation other than the above specified are advised to secure absolute assurances of employment before they leave home, as the government cannot assist them in securing employment.

Here is another :—

Important to farmers. Farmers, farm labourers, railway construction men and female domestic servants are the only people whom the Canadian Immigration Department advises to come to Canada. All others should get definite assurance of employment in Canada before leaving home, and have money enough to support them for a time in case of disappointment.

I have placed before the House, Mr. Speaker, at some length, the policy, the administration, and the results achieved by the Immigration Department. I have done so because, in the first place, immigration is one of the most important interests under the direction of our government. We cannot expect that the electorate will shut their eyes to the policy of the government on immigration, or its lack of policy. What we ask is that we be judged on our policy as it is and not as it is misrepresented. We ask to be judged on our policy and on our administration, which we believe to be effective. We ask to be judged by the results, which we believe to be beyond expectation and to which is largely due the great advance this country has made in the past few years. A few years ago Canada was pretty much in the position of a farmer who owned a comfortable farm, but who had a growing family whom he expected to leave the farm and look elsewhere for fields of activity. As a prudent man he thought it well to buy new land on which his boys could settle. It was a similar idea which caused the Canadian people to acquire the Northwest. They acquired it in the hope and expectation of becoming, through its possession, a great nation on this continent. It is more than half a century since that policy was first taken up by Canadian statesmen. For a long time it lay dormant. It was first taken up by the statesmen of old Canada. Immediately after confederation the project was pushed to completion. The new farm was bought, the price was paid for it, vast expenditures were made for the maintenance of law and order in the new territories, vast sums were spent in the construction of railways, in the payment of Indian claims and in many other ways, but the country looked with confidence to a profitable return on its investment. It was expected that these new possessions would cause the exodus of Canadians to the United States, which had gone on so many years, to cease, and that our own people would build up a greater Canada between the lakes and the Rocky Mountains. But for one reason or another, the expected did not take place. I think myself that was chiefly due to the fact that our hon. friends opposite, who were then in control, failed to appreciate, the necessity of bringing in people to fill these vacant lands. They had the country, they knew it was a good country, they knew they had spent money to develop and govern it, but they did not realize that without people there were no country. Therefore instead of the new farm furnishing a field for the employment of Canadian labour and capital and furnishing homes for the sons of Canada, it was a drag, financially and otherwise, upon the old homestead. Eastern Canada for years looked upon western Canada as a load to be carried and not a profitable asset. But when the administration changed the policy changed. The new government appreciated the fact that people were necessary to make the country, that if there was to be wealth produced in the west, there must be people there to produce it, and they set about getting the people. Their first attempt was to bring back from the States those hundreds of thousands, of native born Canadians who had up to then found their homes in the great republic. The Liberal administration entered upon a vigorous campaign in that connection. It was slow work at first and difficult. This government then directed its energies to England and the continent and endeavoured to induce from these countries a stream of immigration of the classes of people who would make homes on our prairies and make productive the lands that had lain fallow so long. At last success began to smile on their efforts. Our Canadians began to come back, others came with them, people came from Europe and the British Isles, the country began to be cultivated, production increased and so did wealth, trade and prosperity. And as the prairies in the west became productive so did the country in the east progress. Our friends opposite try to depreciate that policy, but I think the country will agree that what we did was done for the best, that what we did had good results, and that our policy was far better than the do nothing policy which characterized the administration of our hon. friends opposite. One of the strongest factors in the progress Canada has made in the past few years has been the immigration policy of this government. That policy has not been the same from the beginning. It has had to be changed according to circumstances to meet the different cases as they arose. At one time it would have been madness to have induced people to come from Europe to the eastern provinces of Canada. Previous to 1896 it would have been an insane proposition to bring out British immigrants to Ontario or Quebec. There was not room in these provinces for the people who were there. Skilled labour was then leaving Canada so fast that our neighbours enacted an alien labour law to protect themselves. We had placed a million people in the United States in the preceding years. This government has followed an active and energetic immigration policy for the past eleven years. It has been phenomenally successful. But, in these eleven years, notwithstanding that success, in drawing people from all quarters of the earth, it has not been able to replace the native-born Canadians who were lost to this country before this policy was entered upon. It has not been able to bring into Canada a million people; our friends on the other side were able to send a million Canadians out. We ask the country to judge between their policy and ours.

Mr. ALPHONSE VERVILLE (Maisonneuve). I always had a very clear opinion of the Manufacturers' Association, and the quotations made by the minister have shown me that this association is exactly what I thought it was. I am convinced that the present immigration situation in our cities is the result of the work of the Manufacturers' Association. It is all very well to say that skilled mechanics are needed in different cities throughout Canada, but the present condition of the labour market should convince anybody that skilled mechanics are not needed in our cities. Let me give a few instances of how skilled labour has been treated. During last summer the Manufacturers' Association, through the famous Leopold, so well known in this House, sent circulars broadcast throughout England, making representations that skilled labour was needed in Canada. Let me cite the facts concerning some of these. It was stated that in the city of Montreal, fifty bricklayers were wanted. As a matter of fact, there were about two hundred and fifty bricklayers walking the streets of Montreal at that time. This circular held out to the bricklayers of England these inviting terms: You will earn 55 cents per hour, which will make your wages for the year about $1,400; you will have to pay only about $200 for your board; and, allowing $200 more for clothing and pocket money, you will have $1,000 left for your year's work; and if you are in Canada for ten years you can come back to England a rich man with $10,000. Is it possible for any one of common sense to believe that you can lay brick here at this time of the year, or when you have bad weather? Can any one of common sense believe that a bricklayer can earn $1,400 a year? In the same way, not very long ago, circulars were sent out stating that twenty carpenters were needed in Montreal. And at this particular time, four or five hundred carpenters were walking the streets of that city. The circular said: You will be paid from 25 cents to 33 1-3 cents per hour and you will be assured of work for a year or more. A number of carpenters reached Montreal. They were offered 19 cents per hour. They had no money and no friends, and finally they had to accept the 19 cents rather than starve. Something had been said here about the cotton mills. Well, just about the time the Manufacturers' Association was trying to induce textile workers from England to come to Canada, the textile workers in the different factories in this country were asking for an increase in wages, that is they were asking for a living wage. But the Manufacturers' Association were anxious to have people to replace these workers at a worse starvation wage than those working for them had been receiving.

Now, last September, and that is not very long ago—in the city of Winnipeg I went down a certain street where the work of digging a sewer was in progress. Out of fifty men working in that sewer, thirty-one were skilled mechanics—among them being four printers, four plumbers, two watchmakers, two metal polishers and eight stonemasons. Does any one suppose that if these skilled mechanics could get employment in their several trades, they would take a job as labourers in digging a sewer? And still, the Manufacturers' Association plainly stated that they were short of skilled mechanics. What the Manufacturers' Association wants—and we know it very well—is to have five or six men knocking at the door of every job that offers in this country. They are looking to their own interests, and they are going to protect their own interests regardless of the interests of other people and of the country. Last September, the Trades and Labour Congress held its session in Winnipeg. We declared against the immigration into Canada of skilled mechanics. And is it not a fact that about the same time the Manufacturers' Association sat in convention in Toronto and protested against the attitude taken by the Trades Congress? As these misrepresentations have been made, especially through the famous Leopold, what were we to do? The labour people of this country, on November 29th last, sent a man to England to represent to the people there the condition of the labour market of this country, and that man is there at our own expense and will be there for five or six months. We are going to fight Leopold on his own ground. Formerly, he had it all his own way. Of course, we used to send cablegrams telling the conditions of the labour market. But he had men on the job—and he has plenty of men for the Manufacturers' Association is a powerful organization financially and otherwise—and he would send these men to different meetings to tell the people that the labour men of Canada simply wanted to keep the work for themselves, and were not willing that Englishmen should come to Canada to earn their daily bread. I hope that this will be stopped through the efforts of the man who was sent by the organized people in Canada.

I may also mention the case of the moulders. I am sorry that I did not know that this question was coming up to-day, as I have letters and documents which I wished to read in the House, but if members are anxious to have them, I shall afford them means, before the close of the session, to see all the documents I have in my possession. Recently moulders were again asked to come to Canada through the Manufacturers' Association. It was stated that a few moulders were wanted in Toronto, a few here and a few there. When they were asking for moulders for Toronto 300 were walking the streets of that city. It was the Gurney Company that was asking for them. Why? Because they had been fighting labour for a number of years past with the help of the Manufacturers' Association.

I was more than pleased to hear the minister read these letters and make these quotations from government circulars, &c., because the other day when the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) spoke on the immigration question I did not believe that he was sincere; but now I know that he was not sincere. To show what the Manufacturers' Association are liable to do—I am not stating that the firm to whom I am about to refer are members of the association, but they might be for all I know—only last month, in a little city not far from Montreal, a certain manufacturing concern attempted to force their employees to take shares in the company, saying: Either take a share or leave our employ. Is it a fact that the Manufacturers' Association will go so far as to compel girls of fourteen or fifteen to take a share in a company or be without work for the balance of the winter? I really believe that that association is liable to do anything. I am one of those who are willing to give credit to that association for any good they do, but I am also willing to fight them when they do wrong. The question of immigration is a capital question for organized labour, especially the immigration of skilled mechanics. You have never heard organized labour in this country state that they were against farm immigration or against immigration; what we are opposed to is the immigration of skilled mechanics because we have to suffer, financially or otherwise, on account of the skilled immigration that we have coming to this country, and that has to be supported in the winter. It is all very well to call a labour society a charitable organization, but at the same time it is no more than fair that the Manufacturers' Association should bear the burden imposed by that immigration as well as we do. I hope and trust that the government will be able in a short time to stop the misrepresentation that has taken place in England, and this would be one means to that end. I know that the government last session obtained the passage in England of a law concerning such misrepresentation, but it is so easy for the Manufacturers' Association, especially with the famous Leopold as their agent in England, to evade that law and bring into this country as many immigrants as they choose, in order, as I said before, to have as many men as possible rapping at the door for a job, to lower the conditions of labour, and to lower the wages. If they lower the wages, the manufacturers themselves will be, if not the first, at any rate the second to suffer.

If this country has been prosperous for a good many years past, I am quite sure it is not due to the Manufacturers' Association, but to somebody else. I am not going to give the credit to that association for the prosperity of this country, because they have tried to fight the best element, probably, that we have in this country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, in one way I was sorry that the minister read these letters, because they show that the Manufacturers' Association has had too much influence over him in this matter, as it had over other gentlemen with reference to the trade policy of this government. The Manufacturers' Association or the protectionists of this country seem to have had altogether too much influence on the government, that is if they wished to carry out the policy on which they got into power, free trade as they have it in England. The minister quoted a great deal of material which I thought he would not have quoted had it been from his own political friends. It used to be the pride of this government that they bonused only farmers, farm labourers and domestic servants, and I was opposed even to that. I am one of those who have stood up in this House from the beginning and opposed bonuses to any kind of immigration to this country. We have a striking example in the United States. The federal government has never given a bonus for any immigrant to come to the United States. Some years ago they found out that their prisons, alms houses and charitable institutions were filled. They investigated to ascertain the reasons and found that a large number of those in these institutions were foreigners and immigrants. They appointed a commission to go to the old country, and this commission found that in several of the old countries it was the custom of the governments to take the worst criminals out of their gaols and prisons, pay their passage to the United States and so get rid of them. I am afraid that we have gone too far in extending the bonus system to others than farmers and farm labourers. The minister said that it extended only to these people in Great Britain. That is a mistake. I have here a circular, which I shall read, as to the countries in addition to Great Britain on immigrants from which, other than farmers and farm labourers, bonuses are paid. There are booking agents in France, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Denmark and Norway, and these people are allowed to get a bonus on farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, railway service men, navvies, miners, and domestic servants. How much further need it go to cover the whole outfit? It seems to me that even mechanics might work in under that system, and I for one wish to protest in the strongest possible manner against this extension of the bonus to immigrants other than farmers and farm labourers, and if I had my way I would even cut them down. We have an illustration of the result of this. I have clippings from the newspapers in the various cities of this country showing that these people who came out to work on our railways—and on whom I presume this government paid bonuses—are now in destitute circumstances. In Toronto they have been huddled up in houses with neither furniture nor bedclothes, nor fire. The authorities of the city have applied to the local government, and they were going to apply to the Dominion government, to the municipal council, and to all charitable people who had any labour to do, that they go on and do it now, that these people might be given employment so as to keep them from suffering. I understand that a deputation waited on this government to ask that something be done, that railways and public works be pressed forward now during this inclement weather, so that these people may be able to get something to do and thus earn their living.

Then, I find, that, in his speech before dinner, the hon. minister claimed that they were the people who had started immigration work in the United States. I know, of my own personal knowledge, that that is not true. I know two men, and I know them very well, who were the first immigration agents to the United States. One was Capt. Holmes and the other gentleman was a Mr. Webster. I had a personal acquaintance with both of them and Mr. Holmes was the man who planned out the policy which this government have, I presume, extended. They have not extended it for nothing to the people of this country. The amount of money they have paid out for agents, subagents and for people who have abused their positions is something very wonderful. Then, we have had the question of Mr. Preston up this afternoon. Mr. Preston is a gentleman whom I have known since 1882. I first met him in the town of Port Hope when he was running a newspaper. The next year, I believe, he became organizer for the Liberal party in the province of Ontario and I have a distinct recollection of meeting him on one occasion in the riding of Lennox, in the by-election in 1892, when I was a candidate. He did not quite succeed, but he came mighty near leaving me at home. Mr. Preston was the gentleman who introduced into this country the Doukhobors. That is a class of people that I have always contended we did not want in this country. I take the ground that we do not want a class who will not conform to the laws and usages of our people, and I think it was a great mistake when the government made concessions to these people. They claim now that they have letters from the Minister of the Interior to the effect that they would be permitted to live in villages and get their lands just the same. Now, there are some things which are interesting with respect to these Doukhobors. There are some members of this House who are not very well satisfied, I believe, with the presence of the Doukhobors in the parts of the country in which they live. I know that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) was a very different man from what he is now, when he was a private member, in so far as immigration is concerned. I recollect that there was no freer lance in this House than the Minister of the Interior. But, I want to read an extract or two from a letter dated December 15, 1906, and addressed to the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister, Ottawa. Here is what a member of this House says about these Doukhobors :

> There are several ways of dealing with the question. I would suggest, and I think it is in harmony with the minister's idea, that these people should be given a fair chance to become Canadian citizens and cultivate their individual quarter-sections. If it were an American settler and he refused to do this his land would be cancelled without further consideration. Then why should the Doukhobors be placed upon a higher level than the Americans?

Then he goes on to say :

> There is one thing which stands out more prominently than others and which is producing a crisis at the present time, it is the fact that a British subject or an English speaking American looks on and sees the fact demonstrated that the Doukhobor is receiving much better treatment at the hands of the government than he can hope for or expect and that this treatment is in violation of the Homestead Act and is in favour of foreigners who are not favourable to our government nor our mode of life.
> Yours truly,
> (Sgd.) E. L. CASH.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the present member ?

Mr. U. WILSON. I cannot say whether it is the present member or not, but that is what I suppose. We know the trouble that the government has had from the beginning with the Doukhobors. We know of their immoral practices ; I mean by that their view of matrimony—their loose ideas of matrimony. Their leader in the old country wrote to them that a Doukhobor must not put away his wife and marry another because he would be punished for bigamy, but he should be allowed to put away his wife and take another without marrying her. I think it is a standing disgrace to allow people to live in our country in that way without being punished, and if we have not a law to punish them we should make one. These people are huddled together in villages. The government decided to take their lands away from them, but not until they were pressed on every side, and I think the House will agree with me in saying that these are not the kind of settlers that we want in this country.

Then, we have that celebrated North Atlantic Trading Company contract that we have heard so much about on so many occasions. I think that is the most unbusinesslike contract that I have ever seen during my lifetime. I think that perhaps I was the first member of the opposition who saw it and when I reported to my chief the nature of the contract he was astonished, and he could hardly believe that I had taken correct notes from the contract. The government actually made a contract which was all one-sided under which the company only had to spend $15,000 and under which they were entitled to receive $5 a head for every man, woman and child that came to this country, the only condition being that the immigrant was of the farming class or in domestic service. That was not all. The company did not have to report to the government the number they brought over. That was not part of their business. Every person who came to this country from the countries that were covered by their contract the government had to pay $5 for, and they had to report who they were and the number of them to the company. Nobody can dispute that. That is part of the contract. On the other hand, the government did take certain precautions. They put a clause in the contract which I think was right, that the company should not violate the laws of any country in which they operated. They covered that by operating from one country to another, using the mails, &c. The government tried to shield the men who were violating the laws of these countries, a fact which must have been known to them, because they could not possibly be ignorant of it, and their ostensible reason for undertaking to shield them and for refusing to give the names of the members of the company was that some of them said that if their identity were disclosed they would commit suicide. I have been in public life, one way and another, for a good many years, but I have never had anything to do with a contract that was not open to the fullest investigation. A man has no business in public life whose contracts will not bear the strictest investigation. This contract, as a matter of course, was concocted by this celebrated Mr. Preston, contrary to the wishes of Lord Strathcona. The High Commissioner opposed it and he did not want to have anything to do with it until he got the opinion of Mr. Ross, a lawyer in London.

Mr. Ross reported against it because he did not see how they could possibly conduct the business specified in that contract without violating the laws of these other countries. Lord Strathcona opposed it, and although Mr. Preston tried to lay the blame on Lord Strathcona and tried to make out that he endorsed it, we had the letters of Lord Strathcona before the Public Accounts Committee in 1906 in which he repudiates having had anything to do with it. Lord Stathcona's statement is : that he opposed Mr. Preston's views, but Mr. Smart came over, and Lord Strathcona, and Mr. Preston and Mr. Smart went over the draft contract ; they were to meet again and discuss the matter and finally settle it, but Mr. Smart had to leave in a hurry one day and he took the papers with him and Lord Strathcona never saw them after that. Lord Strathcona stated that he found the department here was so anxious to make the contract that he did not feel he ought to interfere. Well, we know something of the history of the matter after that—Mr. Smart who was Deputy Minister of the Interior, a position that any man might be glad to get ; a permanent position worth $4,000 a year ; he resigned that position to become the representative of the North Atlantic Trading Company in this country. Does that look as though the contract had been managed in the interest of this country, or does it not look rather like a job put up by these gentlemen to get a profitable contract in the profits of which they were to participate. We all know what Mr. Jury stated about Mr. Preston, and I am afraid I will have to repeat it notwithstanding the high character which the Prime Minister gave Mr. Preston a session or two ago when the right hon. gentleman said that Mr. Preston had been before the two committees and had come out of the ordeal unscathed, and pure, and white, and clean. But you remember that Mr. Jury, who was a servant of this government said, that the opinion of the shipping people in Liverpool was that Mr. Preston had an interest in that contract. Some one said to Mr. Jury in the committee : Don't you remember that Mr. Preston denied that, and Mr. Jury answered : I don't care for that, I don't believe it. That is the opinion of one of these officials about the other, and yet they are both still in the employment of this government. Is that as it ought to be. Although these two men had known each other for years in Canada before they went to the old country, and although they worked together there, yet they have so poor an opinion of each other that one man said the other was so disreputable that he would not believe him upon oath.

Let us look for a moment at the amount of money that has been spent on the North Atlantic Trading Company, and it is a great deal. When men make large fortunes, if they do it honestly, it is not objectionable, but when men get hold of a government that is willing to be bled it is a very easy matter to make money. A year or two ago I moved for a return as to the payments that were made to that company, and I have the figures here. I may say that the Minister of the Interior, the other day, in reply to a question gave exactly the same figures. Previous to the date of this return the government had paid them $306,011.22, and since then they have been paid $61,234.83, or a total of $367,245.85. Now, the bulk of that money has been paid within the last three years. According to my figuring, during the years 1903-4, 1904-5, 1905-6 they have been paid $284,546.58 if the figures are correct, and during the same period this company has paid out $84,428.61. According to these figures that would give them a profit in three years of over $200,000. I think there may be a mistake in that of $20,000 or $24,000 and as to that I am not sure, but in a large amount like this we can afford to be generous and if a company with an investment of $84,000 can in three years make $181,000 I think it is considerable. But we have been told by the Minister of the Interior and by other members of the government that this is a good contract. That was not the opinion of Lord Strathcono, who stated in a letter which I think he wrote to the Prime Minister: that he was of the opinion that under the old system we got just as many immigrants as we did under the new, and that if the old system had continued the country would have been saved a lot of this trouble and expense. As a matter of course we all know that when this contract began to be discussed in the House, the Auditor General became curious and he refused to pay the money to the company, and the government had to send a responsible clerk from the Interior Department to Amsterdam to get the information, and of course he reported that these people had paid out all the money they had agreed to pay and even more, and so the government paid the balance due them. But these people are not yet satisfied. We have had three or four reasons given as to why this contract was abandoned. The other day the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) said it was abandoned because we did not get good enough immigrants; the Minister of the Interior said it was because we did not get sufficient immigrants, but the North Atlantic Trading Company says it was abandoned because the Minister of the Interior was a new man in the office; that his deputy was a new man, that Mr Preston was in London too far away to be consulted; that Mr. Scott had never taken any interest in it, and that the opposition in parliament had pushed the matter so hard that the government got scared and notwithstanding their moral obligation to recognize their own agreement they gave notice to rescind it. But that is not all. The North Atlantic Trading Company claims that they spent a very great deal of money in advertising, in getting things in shape to conduct the business during the ten years the contract was to run, and that they have sustained serious loss through the government giving notice to cancel the contract. I have a great deal of information here that I might quote with reference to the stringency in the money market which has caused such great trouble to the poor people who have been brought to Canada, I fear under false representations. But, Sir, this government is not at all satisfied with anything like ordinary evidence: the Manufacturers' Association has had altogether too much influence over them. The government sent to the old country last year thirty-five special agents to advocate the interests of Canada and bring in more immigrants, and I saw by our local paper last week that the brother of the Minister of Justice had started on his way to engage in similar work. I do not know whether that is true or not, but that is the report from the village in which he lives. Now, Sir, we spent in salaries for these special agents last year $8,751.86 and we spent in expenses $11,541.11, making a total for salaries and expenses of $20,292.97.

There was a very great difference in the cost of these men. The cheapest man was paid for a month's expenses $56.30, while the most expensive man for three months and a quarter of expenses was paid $766.42. This is equivalent to $235.80 a month for the one man as against $56.30 a month for the other man, a difference of $179.50 a month. There must be some aristocratic gentlemen among those sent out, and some ordinary men who are able to live on ordinary fare. We used to be better satisfied with farmers and farm labourers than we are now. The bonuses are now extended to farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, railway service men, navvies and miners. I think that is carrying it altogether too far. The government has changed its opinion wonderfully in regard to the value of immigrants from Great Britain and Ireland. They used to pay them 7s. 6d.; now they give them a pound They used to give a pound for immigrants from the continent; now they give 10s. They used to give a pound for a farmer and every one of his family, and for a farm labourer and every one of his family, even to infants in arms. The government has changed that policy. Now an immigrant has to be a year old before he gets anything, and up to eighteen years of age he gets only five shillings. I think this is a change for the better; but I see no reason why we should give a bonus at all, especially for immigrants from the continent, from which we get a good many undesirables, and we shall get a good many more if we continue as we are going. In the United States, with all the care exercised, and it is believed that they are much more careful than we are, they get a large number of undesirables. The percentage of foreigners in their gaols and charitable institutions and asylums is very much larger than that of the native born; and I think you will find that the same is the case here, and is likely to be more so if we continue to bring in people without the proper safeguards. I do not think we are likely to get good people by giving bonuses, and I will tell you why. A man who wants to come to the country is a man who has made his mind up, and he will come; but a man who does not know and is not particular where he goes will be got hold of by some smooth steamship agent and will be brought out by him. The agents are not interested as to whether the people they bring out are good or bad; what they want is their pound. Since I have been interested in this question, the point I have always made has been this: if we cannot get quantity and quality, we ought to be very particular to get quality. I would rather have a few and have them good than have a great many to become paupers. We hold out inducements to all kinds of people that there is plenty of work at high wages, and they come. But, Mr. Speaker, I expect that there will be another opportunity to discuss this question before the session is over, when I hope I shall be very much better prepared than I am at the present time; because I had not much idea this morning that I was going to have anything to say in this debate. I trust that the government will cease to take the advice of the Manufacturers' Association, and that if they are going to give bonuses at all they will confine them as before to farmers and farm labourers. There was a time when people had to pay a head tax to come into this country. To-day people pay $4 a head to get into the United States, and it does not seem to stop them. I hope the government will reconsider their policy. If my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior were as free to-day as he used to be in the old days when he sometimes came to my relief when I was getting the worst of it, I am sure he would take a different view. He used to say that he did not know what change was coming, but he welcomed any change because he knew that things could not be worse.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Excise—Salaries of officers and inspectors of excise, &c., to provide for increases depending upon the result of excise examinations, $417,122.56.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The increase in the total vote is $35,995. The increase in the excise salaries over last year, $5,495, is entirely due to the fact that every official of the department who is entitled to receive a statutory increase in his salary, is to receive it.

To provide for extra duty at large distilleries and other factories, $9,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is an increase in this vote of $500, which is due to the increased business at the large distilleries. The general increase is due to the statutory increases, and the increase of business. For instance there is an increase in the amount required for stamps, $15,000, and that is due absolutely to increase of business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume the hon. gentleman is making a great deal more whisky than formerly. Is it on that ground we are called upon to rejoice in the prosperity of the country?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is one of the evidences.

Mr. HENDERSON. That the people are able to drink more whisky. I congratulate the minister on his contribution to the prosperity of the country?

Travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c., excise, $85,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The increase of $10,000 is due to the increase of business.

Mr. LENNOX. We should have some items showing how that increase is made up.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is due to the establishment of new factories, and the extra travelling caused thereby. The excise revenue collected during the five months ending August 31, 1907, exceeded that received during the same five months of 1906 by $660,000, showing the enormous increase in the business of the department.

Mr. LENNOX. That does not answer my question. This is said to be for increased travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c. Can the minister give us the increase on each item? What is the increase in rent for instance?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is simply an estimate of what we think will be required, and I cannot say positively whether it will all be expended or not. My officials think it a fair estimate.

Mr. LENNOX. Even with this government we have always in the past been able, after pressure, to get the figures by which they arrive at the increased amount. This is not a mere guess, I presume, but an estimate arrived at from actual calculation and the result of certain figures set down and added up. The minister should have that information.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The officials of the department estimate that $10,000 additional will be required, based upon the cost to the department of the travelling expenses of officials and the additional rent and fuel required. The travelling expenses have yet to be incurred, and we cannot say exactly where or to whom they will be paid but we know that an additional amount will be required.

Mr. LENNOX. The more we talk about this, the more the government seem to be in the dark. The minister does not give us any additional information. He says it is an estimate for travelling expenses which have not been incurred, for fuel not burnt and for rent of buildings not occupied. How many new buildings is he going to open and where are they to be placed? How much of the addition is for rent and how much for fuel? Are the travelling expenses due to the opening up of new offices or to more frequent journeys? It is perfectly idle to tell us that this is an estimate or a mere guess.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We spent $77,000 last year, and the increased business will require this additional money. It cannot be expected that we shall do increased business on the same expenditure. It seems to me quite clear that, with the growing business more officials are needed, and, therefore, an additional vote.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister did not answer the question put to him. Are more distilleries to be in operation next year than this year, making the appointments of new officers necessary? Have rents gone up? Is the cost of travelling higher than it was? These are data that ought to be available.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One new distillery was opened in New Westminster last year. I am not aware of others to be opened. But in the new provinces and in British Columbia, and also in New Ontario, a number of bonded warehouses are being opened. This is especially true of Alberta and Saskatchewan. In some cases also, increased rents have to be paid, as, for instance, in Montreal and in Edmonton. The proposed increase is a small sum. We require enough to carry on the business of the department, and the increase is due solely to the reasons I have stated.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. What was the increased expenditure last year over the year before under this vote?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It was $8,300.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Has the minister made an estimate of the probable increase of output of distilleries next year as compared with the current year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I can give the figures for nine months of the current year as compared with last year. The grand total of spirits manufactured last year was 6,743,243 gallons, and for the nine months of the current year 5,561,389 gallons.

Mr. SPROULE. At that ratio, there will be an increase to between seven and eight million gallons this year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. With a new distillery running in the west, that is probable.

Mr. SPROULE. It speaks well for the success of temperance sentiment in the party, and the reduction of liquor selling through local option.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Our export trade in that line is increasing, I think.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister said he required enough money to carry him through the year. I understand that last year he expended $77,000 under this head although the vote was only $75,000. Will the minister explain where he got that other $2,000 and how he justifies spending money without parliamentary authority?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We expended at the rate of $77,000 for the twelve months. The expenditure was actually for nine months, and our over-expenditure under this head was $19.75 for the nine months.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there any superannuation among preventive officers during the past year?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Stamps for imported and Canadian tobacco, $70,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The increase is $15,000. This is due to the increase of business and the necessity for holding a stock of stamps sufficient for the demand. The duty collected on tobacco for the five months ending August 31, 1907, exceeded that during the same months of 1906 by $251,748.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the minister able to tell us what was the total amount of duty on tobacco for the nine months ending March 31st, last?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The total duty collected on cigars was $901,200, and on tobacco $4,062,098—that is the total excise duty collected on tobacco during the last fiscal year. The duty on raw leaf was $1,198,122. That is the excise duty on imported raw leaf.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to find out how much of the duty on tobacco during the nine months was owing to the legislation of 1897? I want to know what the increased duty on tobacco was?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I could give that information later, but it will have to be figured out; the deputy informs me he can arrive at the information, and it will be sent to my hon. friend.

To pay collectors of customs for duty collected, $7,000.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is an increase of $1,000 practically for the same cause. Customs officers who do excise work get a commission for collecting the excise revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. What commission?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Five per cent up to $3,000 collected, and after that it is graded. This is found in the department to be a very economical method, as in many places where the collections are small it would be exceedingly costly to have officials collecting excise and doing nothing else. We pay 5 per cent up to $3,000 collections, and above that it is graded, but $250 is the limit paid.

Provisional allowance of $100 each to officers whose salaries from any government source do not exceed $1,000 each, $5,000.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to know from the minister if it is the intention of the government to grant increases of salaries to the Montreal excise officers? They have been complaining for the last three years that they are receiving very low salaries. I understand that the Montreal custom house officers and employees have been given a fair and substantial increase of salary during the last year, and I think it would be but fair that the same substantial increase of salary should be given to the employees of the Montreal excise office. The higher officials of the Inland Revenue Department in Montreal are getting fair salaries, but the ordinary employees are not in receipt of sufficient salaries to enable them to live properly. Quite a number of them in Montreal are not getting more than $550 to $600 apiece. Under the present circumstances, due consideration being given to the increased cost of living, no man can live decently in or around Montreal on the paltry sum of $500 or $600 a year. I understand that most of the officers in the Inland Revenue Department in Montreal appeared before the Civil Service Commission, and that they were given some promise that they would receive an increase of salary. This seems to be the proper time to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to ask this House to vote some proper and substantial increase of salary to the officers and employees of the Inland Revenue Department at Montreal.

Mr. M. MARTIN. I endorse all that my colleague (Mr. Gervais) has said with reference to the salaries of the Inland Revenue officials of the city of Montreal, but I would ask, in addition, if it is the intention of the government to increase the number of officers there. I have myself suffered from this cause; for two days I could not get goods from my bonded warehouse because the officer in charge of my factory had sixteen factories to supervise daily. As to the salaries, I have nothing to add to what the hon. member for St. James Division (Mr. Gervais) has said, he has said all that is necessary under the circumstances. Our officers in Montreal are certainly not paid sufficiently.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am pleased that the hon. members have called attention to this matter. I can see at once that the salaries of the officials in the Excise Department, not in Montreal alone, but all over the country, are too low, particularly those under $700 or $800 a year. We have in the department in Montreal, Toronto and all the other cities of this country, officials who are receiving only $500, $600 or $700, which I am free to say is, in my opinion, too low altogether. We have been waiting in the Department of Inland Revenue for the report of the Civil Service Commission now about to be presented, and we expect that that report will contain a recommendation not only respecting the Department of Inland Revenue but through all the departments of the government with respect to the underpaid officials of the government, those who are receiving less than, say, $1,000 a year. I am hopeful that with respect to the Inland Revenue Department the commission will so report. I sympathize greatly with that class of officials who receive only $500, $600, or $700 a year, and I would almost say that if the commission do not report in favour of improving the condition of these officials, I will be disposed to come to the House, if not this session, next session, with a proposition to increase their salaries.

Mr. SPROULE. Whether there is an election in the meantime or not?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes. I think the House will approve that course. As to the number of officials I do not feel disposed to say that we ought to increase the number in Montreal or in any other city. I would much prefer that we should get the best men we can and pay them adequate salaries. For the information of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) I might say we have relieved the situation in Montreal by putting on one new official there to-day.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it not possible for the government to give some increase to some of the worst paid employees in the Inland Revenue Department at Montreal this session ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It would be quite possible, I suppose, under the supplementary votes, to increase the salaries this year, but I do not know whether that will be done or not. I do not make any distinct promise.

Mr. GERVAIS. I may say to the minister that many inland revenue officers and employees in Montreal have been waiting for years for a little increase in their salaries, and it would be fair that this House of Commons should do them justice now.

Mr. M. MARTIN. I would say to the committee that I am one of the number in Montreal who have suffered from the fact that there is not a sufficient number of inland revenue officers in that city. I wrote to the deputy minister in May last but got no answer. I know an officer who had to come two days to my factory and he had sixteen other factories to visit in Montreal; I could not get goods out of bond. We need more officers in Montreal because those who are now in the service have too much work. Operations in my factory were delayed because there is not a sufficient number of officers to do the work. The incident to which I referred happened last May and the statement which I make is true.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister give us the name of the new official and the salary and a statement of his qualifications for the work?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think his name is Rivet and his salary at the start is $500.

Mr. BLAIN. What is his special qualification for this work?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He is a young man who will be required to pass the civil service examination. He has had no special training in the work.

Mr. SPROULE. He has not passed it?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not yet. He is on temporarily for six months until he passes.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the minister if that is quite fair to the large number who have passed the civil service examination?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot say whether it is fair to those who have passed the civil service examination. This man goes on at $500. He will be required to pass the civil service examination at the first opportunity. Otherwise, he cannot be permanently employed and he cannot get any increase in his salary. When officials are needed and they have not already passed, they are informed that if they do not pass at the first opportunity they will be expected to retire from the service. We are trying to follow out that policy and we are succeeding in most cases.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the minister to say that his department were employing men who had special qualifications for the work. Here is a man appointed only to-day without any special qualification whatever, not having passed his civil service examination. Yet the hon. minister comes forward and says that he has appointed him to an office in the city of Montreal commencing to-day. It seems to me it is very unfair to the large number of men who have already passed the civil service examination and are seeking employment from the government. It flavours of political patronage and I have no doubt that if the hon. minister would tell us all he knows about it he would say that on the recommendation of some member of this House this gentleman was appointed to this position. May I ask the hon. minister if he was appointed on the recommendation of some member of this House?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I really do not remember on whose recommendation it was, but I am aware of the fact that the collector of Montreal asked for the appointment of three additional men for his work. A number applied to the collector directly. He examined them and considered what their qualifications were, and of those applying he recommended this one to the department as being the only man who was qualified for the office. As the qualification can only be got by experience we do not expect to get men who have already had experience in the excise department. They can only get that after they come into the service. We could not get them for $500 or $600 a year.

To enable the department to supply methylated spirits to manufacturers, the cost of which will be recouped by the manufacturers to whom it is supplied, and to pay for rent, light, power, freight, salaries, &c., $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us where he gets his methylated spirits and to whom it is sold?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is an increase in this item of $3,000. The methylated spirits which is sold by the department is made by the department in its warehouse at Ottawa. It is made from grain and wood alcohol. The grain alcohol is purchased from the distilleries of the country, a little coming from all of the distilleries and the wood alcohol which is mixed with it is bought from Gall & Co., of Montreal, under a contract, which, my hon. friend will remember, was made for a period of three years at a rather high figure according to the price of wood alcohol at the present time, which contract, I am glad to say, expires in March next. As the amount of methylated spirits sold is increasing, this increase of $3,000 is to enable the department to purchase the alcohol which is required for making methylated spirits. The department, for a number of years, have made a profit on selling methylated spirits of approximately something like $15,000 a year. We reduced the price a year ago and in 1907 the profit was about $1,400. For this current year there really will be no profit. There may be a little loss at the price at which we are now selling.

Mr. SPROULE. At what price are you now selling it ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. 65, 70 and 80 cents per gallon.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the establishment that you had near Orillia for the manufacture of wood alcohol and methylated spirits ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a wood alcohol business.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought you manufactured methylated spirits there ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, that is all mixed here in Ottawa.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. What was the quantity you bought last year from the Gall Company, Limited ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Alchohol, 913 proof gallons at ten cents per gallon ; and 4,263 proof gallons at 25 cents per gallon ; wood naphtha, 3,044 proof gallons, in nine months.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. When does the contract with the Gall Company end ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. March next.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Is it the intention of the government to leave the contract open so that American firms can tender ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the government will undoubtedly buy in the best market. We have no intention at the present time to do otherwise, but of course we will give preference to the Canadian product.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Is the minister aware that this contract was awarded at $1.39 per gallon and that a quotation was sent in for fifty cents a gallon ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Well, that is so.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. It was sent in through a senator.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. If you look at the departmental papers you will find the Wood Products Company of Buffalo tendered at 50 cents a gallon, delivered in Ottawa free, in bond, if the government wanted it. Can the minister explain why the customs duty is $2.40 on this article when it costs 25 cents to manufacture it in Canada. The Americans take our wood from this country, make the alcohol, and send the alcohol back here for 50 cents a gallon. The Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech last year that it was the intention of the government to try and reduce the price of wood alcohol, and I understand from the statement made by the Minister of Inland Revenue that 90 per cent of grain alcohol is used in the mixture. You get grain alcohol at 20 cents a gallon, that makes 18 cents ; 10 per cent of methylated spirits you can get at 50 cents ; and therefore you could sell the methylated spirits at the nominal figure of 23 cents a gallon. These figures are standard, but I understand there is some kind of relation between the Customs Department and Inland Revenue Department, to prevent American goods competing against certain Canadian manufacturers who I understand have a hold on the Inland Revenue Department. Methylated spirits is the raw material for varnishes and other manufactures, and it is not right to permit these industries to be handicapped by one or two factories who are given such an extraordinary high protective duty. There are other industries which need more protection than this does, and still the government takes this industry under its special care. I would be pleased if the minister would give some information to the House on this important subject.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. In 1905 tenders were called for the supply of wood alcohol and four were received. A. D. Gall, Montreal, $1.29 per gallon ; G. P. Magann, Toronto, $1,37 ; Railway Spring & Supply Company of Montreal, $1.40 ; Standard Chemical Company, $1.40. The tender of A. D. Gall being the lowest, was accepted, and the contract was then made for three years for the supply of all the wood alcohol required by the department for making methylated spirits. In consequence of the introduction of denatured alcohol in the United States the price of wood alcohol there fell from 70 cents or 80 cents a gallon to probably 40 cents or 50 cents a gallon. In consequence of the reduction in the price of methylated spirits by the department the price of wood alcohol in Canada was reduced by the manufacturers to the general public, and although we have been paying under our contract, $1.29 for wood alcohol, the public have been buying from the same manufacturers I have no doubt at a much less price. I do not know what the market price is at present, but I would not be surprised to be informed that it was not worth more than 60 or 70 cents a gallon.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. The government buys it at $1.10 for the Marine Department.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. When my hon. friend (Mr. Robitaille) says that a manufacturing firm has a hold upon one of the departments of this government, I am afraid he went a little too far. There is no manufacturing concern in Canada that I know of that has any influence or hold upon the Inland Revenue Department. This contract was made in 1905 and we are living up to it rigidly ; buying all the wood alcohol from that company that we require for that purpose and we intend continuing that until March next. In the meantime the fact that we have had to pay $1.29 per gallon for wood alcohol has prevented the department from decreasing the price of methylated spirits or denatured alcohol as it would wish to. After March next when we are paying a less price for this denatured substance than we are paying now, we can decrease to a relative extent the price we are now charging for methylated spirits. I do not know whether my hon. friend is figuring as to what the denatured alcohol might be sold for is correct or not ; I did not hear everything he said. But having made a very close calculation this year I say now that it is absolutely impossible to put upon the market in Canada at the present price of ethyl alcohol, a denatured spirit at anything like the price my hon. friend mentions which I think was 23 cents per gallon. It is absolutely impossible to do it. We pay 25 cents per gallon for grain alcohol to-day to the distillers, and that is the very lowest price with the exception of very small quantities we are getting from a distillery in Montreal in connection with a sugar refinery where we get a very small quantity at 10 cents a gallon, but this particular alcohol is, shall I say, the refuse of the distillery—not the refuse of the distillery, but it is a low grade of alcohol containing impurities which make it all the better for the purpose of the denatured alcohol. It is utterly impossible when we pay 25 cents a proof gallon and then sell the methylated spirits 65 per cent over proof which would bring the price of that grain alcohol to us itself at 41¼ cents at a strength of 165 ; it is utterly impossible that this grain alcohol could be purchased in Canada for less than 25 cents per proof gallon to sell in Canada at the price named by my hon. friend. Where you have to buy grain alcohol at even one-half the price we are paying now it cannot be done, however desirable it may be to do it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister know anything about the price of denatured alcohol in the United States or in Germany ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I cannot give my hon. friend the figures now. Before the session is over we may have some question as to denatured alcohol. As you will remember one of my hon. friends on the other side made a speech on this question last session. The United States Congress passed a law at the beginning of this year liberating alcohol from bonded warehouses, and permitting it to be denatured and freely sold. Up to the present time the department is without any information from Washington as to the success of that experiment. We have written to Washington for all the data we could obtain as to the success of the United States government in attempting to put on the market a cheap denatured alcohol. We have a vast amount of information from Germany on the question, and I shall be glad to take it up later in the session. We are trying to cheapen methylated spirits, but from my study of the question I am quite positive that unless the farmers of this country can grow potatoes at ten cents a bushel or less, we cannot produce denatured alcohol cheaply enough to compete with gasoline or coal oil as a fuel or as an illuminant. But perhaps we can take up the question at a later stage in the session.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, December 18, 1907.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

THE DEBATES COMMITTEE.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (Montreal, St. James). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the following motion for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in a motion which was passed by this House on the 3rd December, 1907, in so far as it affects the committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates:

That the resolution adopted by this House on the 3rd December, instant, granting the several select standing committees certain powers be rescinded in so far as it relates to the committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the House, and that on the Library of Parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand the motion. What is the meaning of it?

Mr. GERVAIS. For the last two years the committee appointed to supervise the official report of this House has been included among the select standing committees of the House. For more than thirty years previous that committee has been entrusted with the supervision of the official report and things incidental thereto. We want the privileges of our committee not to be interfered with. This year, the following resolution was passed by this House:

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, it was resolved, that the Select Standing Committees of this House shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon; with power to send for persons, papers and records.

According to the working of this resolution, any power which the committee for the supervision of the official report ever had has been taken away, and we can do nothing unless the House of Commons, by special order, refers something to us to be done by us or amend that motion passed through error. I think under the circumstances the motion of December 3 is a clerical error, and the object of my motion is to have such error corrected, so that our committee can go on with its work.

Motion agreed to.

FROZEN WHEAT.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a question of urgent public importance, namely, frozen grain that is now being shipped from Manitoba and Western Canada to Ontario and the eastern provinces.

Leave being granted.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I well understand that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is devoting a good deal of attention to the question of the distribution of foul seed in different parts of Canada, this is a matter that requires special attention on the part of the minister and of the government. The shortage of the crop this year in some parts of eastern Canada, particularly in the northern parts of the province of Ontario, is causing a great deal of anxiety to the farmers and the country generally, resulting in the importation from the province of Manitoba and the Northwest provinces of considerable quantities of frozen wheat for fodder purposes. I have a letter from one of my own constituents, which I will take the liberty of reading:

Elmbank, December 16, 1907.

Sir,—What does the Seed Act say in regard to wheat from Manitoba? I have seen some frozen wheat from Manitoba which is full of foul seed. Does the Seed Act stop grain coming in without being properly cleaned? If not, it should. Our country is overrun with wild seed without bringing them in. I think parliament should compel all grain to be cleaned.

(Sgd.) GEO. BROCKLEBANK.

This is but one letter of several which I have received from my own county; and the House should bear in mind that in the county which I have the honour to represent the crops have been very good this year; indeed, it was among the best in the country for good crops. Farmers in many other counties of Ontario will no doubt be importing larger quantities of this grain. It may be said that wheat comes from the west to eastern Canada every year. That is true, but that wheat is used for grinding into flour. The wheat to which I refer is used only for feeding cattle and other farm stock. If it be a fact that in the grain which is being brought from western Canada to the eastern provinces there is a large quantity of foul seed, the matter is of sufficient importance to call for the special attention of the minister and for such regulations as will prevent such seed becoming an evil to the farmers of eastern Canada. I do not wish to enlarge on the subject. I merely wish to draw the attention of the hon. minister to the fact as a note of warning. I do not need to say anything as to the condition of agriculture in western Canada. I am aware that there is on the statute-book of Manitoba a first class Noxious Seed Act, which is pretty well enforced by the government of that province. When we bear in mind that this is a poorer class of grain which is coming in from the Northwest, we will realize the importance of the government taking some measure to see that the people of the eastern provinces, who are importing this grain for feed purposes, do not import a large quantity of foul seed. I would like the hon. minister to give special attention to this and see that some regulation is adopted which will give protection and keep out the foul seeds to which I have referred.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I have much pleasure in seconding my hon. friend's resolution. We suffer a great deal in the province of Quebec from foul seeds, and any importation of that article ought to be prevented as far as possible. My hon. friend has done good service in calling the attention of the government to this important matter.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I appreciate fully the danger of the importation of foul seeds into the better agricultural parts of the Dominion. My hon. friend has alluded to the Act of this parliament, which was passed at my own instance not long ago, for the purpose of controlling the sale of seed to be used by the farmers in sowing their crops. But that Act applies entirely to seed grain and does not apply to grain used for feeding purposes. Section four provides that the Act shall not apply to any persons growing or selling seeds for the purpose of feed. We know that frosted grain is being brought from the west for feeding purposes to Ontario and Quebec this year. This grain is sold at a low rate and is not good for milling purposes and evidently is not fit to be used for seed. It is quite true that the grain usually brought from the west to Ontario is used for milling purposes and made into flour and the foul seeds in it are separated and generally destroyed at the mill or else ground up and sold at a cheap rate for feeding purposes. But this frosted wheat, which is being brought from the Northwest, will be ground for food, and I venture to say that a very large proportion of any foul seeds in it will be destroyed in the process of grinding. Occasionally this wheat may be fed whole but that is not the most economical way. The better farmers will grind it in most cases, although in some cases it may be fed whole to hogs. We have no statute that I know of which can in any way control the danger my hon. friend mentions. How best to deal with that danger is a question open for discussion. I have not yet seen a very clear way to prevent the sale of foul seed for feeding purposes. To do so would probably add so much to the expense of the feed that the farmers would feel themselves aggrieved, although it would probably be in their own interest in the future that the bad seed should be taken out and destroyed. My hon. friend has done a good purpose in drawing attention to the point as no doubt his remarks will be reported and spread throughout the country and perhaps induce those who are purchasing this seed to see that it is ground to such an extent that the foul seeds will be destroyed. I am not prepared to say anything regarding the extent of the evil. True in the west there is a good deal of foul seed grown, but that occurs also in the east, and is a danger to the farmers who buy feed for use on their own farms unless they take precautions, which it is not very difficult to take, but which still involve some trouble. These precautions, I regret to say, are not always taken by the farmers. We have no Act dealing with this matter, and it would be difficult to frame an Act and put it through this session even if we could find out the true solution.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 42) intituled an Act respecting Insurance. He said: A year ago a Commission, which was appointed to inquire into insurance matters, presented to the government and parliament, in connection with their report, a draft Bill for a revision of the Insurance Act. The measure was one of such importance that we did not deem it advisable to proceed with it immediately. We preferred that it should lay on the table for consideration at another session. In the interim we have been enabled to give the subject further consideration, and with the assistance of insurance experts of large experience, recognized ability and unquestioned impartiality, we have prepared a Bill which I have now the honour to present to the House. The Bill is necessarily somewhat complicated and technical in its character. Much of it can be best understood by insurance experts or those who have the assistance of experts. For the present therefore I need not burden my speech by many remarks dealing with the details of the Bill. It will serve the purposes of the House better if I call attention at this stage to what may be regarded as the most important features of the measure.

The Bill presented by the Commission dealt with life insurance only. In the Bill now submitted the whole question of insurance is dealt with, but the amendments are chiefly in connection with life insurance.

Mr. FIELDING. I will do that, so far on some recommendation of the commission or is it a consolidation of all the Acts relating to insurance?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a consolidation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend be good enough to explain to what extent he has followed out the recommendations of the commission?

Mr. FIELDING. I will do that, so far as important matters are concerned. There are many details with which the House would not care to be burdened at this time.

The Bill deals with insurance generally. The Commission's Bill dealt with life insurance particularly. The amendments in this Bill are almost entirely confined to the life branch of the business. In the course of the investigation, it was complained that the powers of the government, through the Minister of Finance, were not as broad as was desirable. In the Bill which I now submit we are enlarging these powers. It was the opinion of good authorities that the Minister could only withdraw or suspend an insurance company's license under very exceptional circumstances. Under this Bill it is proposed that for any violation of the provisions of the Insurance Act the Minister of Finance may withdraw a license which has already been issued, or he may refuse to renew a license at the expiry of the term for which it was issued, or he may suspend a license for a period, as the circumstances may seem to require. We also give the superintendent of insurance somewhat wider power. He is to have the powers of a deputy minister in respect of insurance matters, and also to have special power enabling him to visit the offices of the American companies which are situated most conveniently to us, and to make inspections at the head offices of the companies when he may deem it desirable to do so. He is also to receive power to make special audits where such seem to be necessary and to appoint valuators to value the property of a company wherever he thinks that such further valuation may be desirable.

Under the present law, foreign companies are empowered to deposit a portion of their moneys in Canada in the hands of trustees who are private individuals. We have thought it well to provide that, wherever a vacancy should occur in the existing boards, the place should be filled, not by a private individual, but by a trust company, incorporated either by the parliament of Canada or by one of the provinces of the Dominion, subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance. And, hereafter, all such trust funds are to be placed in the hands of incorporated trust companies and not in the hands of private individuals as at present. That, as I have said, will only apply as vacancies occur among the existing trustees, because we do not wish to disturb trustees now in office.

A question very much discussed in the insurance field is that of deferred dividend policies. It was claimed, in the investigation which took place in the United States, that the existence of large funds arising from deferred dividend accumulations which were not distributed was a cause of much abuse. The Commission proposed to abolish all such policies and to provide for an annual distribution of the surplus. We realize that the object which the Commission had in view is a good one, but we are inclined to think that provision for the compulsory annual distribution of the surplus is rather undesirable, and we propose that it shall be a compliance with the law if the company divides that surplus once in three years. Some companies already provide for the annual distribution of surplus, and, of course, they are still free to do so. But, in any case, they must distribute their surplus at least once in three years. The Commission recommends that these surplus funds, arising out of deferred dividend policies, be treated as liabilities of the company. To this the company have strenuously objected. We propose to accept the recommendation of the Commission, with a qualification. These funds, we propose, shall be treated, to a certain extent, as a liability of the company, and shown in its report accordingly. But, in the case of depreciation of securities held by the company, which would involve a loss, that depreciation may be charged against the surplus fund, and, in that way, the balance will appear as a liability of the company. The argument for this is, that where there is depreciation of securities which is very considerable—as occurs for example at the present time—to treat the whole sum as a liability, and, at the same time, charge the company with this depreciation of securities, might place the company in a position of apparent insolvency. The Commission, recognizing the abuse which had been created, in other countries more than in ours, thought it would be proper to treat that entirely as a liability. We propose to treat it as a liability, but with the qualification to which I have referred.

A question that has been very much discussed is the question of the expenses of new and renewal business respectively. This is one of the most difficult problems. The Insurance Commission recommended that the expense of new business be shown separately from the expense of old business. That is a very desirable result, but we realize that the companies may occasionally find some difficulty in making a distinction in the proportion of expenses which should be charged to the old business and the proportion which should be charged to the new business. However, feeling that the object is a good one—though realizing that the working of the clause is not free from difficulty—we have allowed the clause recommended by the Commission to stand in the Bill.

The question of salaries and commissions is one which has been very much discussed in regard to insurance companies generally. We propose that the officials at the head office of the companies shall not be permitted to receive commissions in any shape or form. They shall be entitled to receive whatever salaries are properly attached to their offices, but not any commissions on the business done. This is a recommendation of the Commission, and we concur in it. The agents, of course, may be paid by way of commission, but officials at the head office must be paid by salary and not by commission——

Mr. LENNOX. Is there a limit to the salary an official may receive ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am coming to that in a moment if my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will permit me. It is proposed that no salary of $5,000 or upwards shall be paid without being specifically voted by the board of directors. This is a recommendation of the Commission and we concur in it. Without this provision it might be possible for a general manager, by his own act, to make a contract for the payment of a larger salary, or it might be done by a finance committee or some authority less than a board of directors. The Commission recommends that no salary agreement be made for more than three years. The object there, we think, is a good one, but we incline to think that a three year limit may be too short. We propose that a salary agreement may be made for a period not exceeding five years. The payment of excessive salaries and commissions was one of the subjects much complained of in the United States. We think that the provisions to which I have referred will, to a large extent, operate against any such abuse in Canada. And, as a further protection, we provide that, in the case of all salaries and commissions amounting to more than $4,000 per annum, a list of such salaries and the persons to whom they are paid must be set forth in the returns of the company and published in the report of the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. FOSTER. Salaries and commissions, each by itself, or the two combined ?

Mr. FIELDING. The two combined—the income any man is to receive in one form or other. The person receiving over $4,000 shall have his name returned and published. We think that publicity is the only reasonable guard we can place against further abuse in that direction.

With regard to rebates or special favours, the Commission have recommended that these be forbidden. The Bill of the Commission proposed that in every such case of granting a rebate, a penalty of $1,000 should be imposed upon the director or manager of a company the agent of which has granted a rebate. It seems to us on consideration that that is perhaps too severe on the director, and it does not take account of the agent who gave the rebate or of the policy-holder who received it. What we propose is that the clause as respects the fine of $1,000 to be imposed on the director or manager, shall still apply, provided that the offence is committed with his knowledge. Without that knowledge, it does not seem to us it would be reasonable to impose a penalty on a director or manager ; but in the case of a director or manager who knowingly permits this offence, we provide a penalty of $1,000; and that the agent who gives the rebate and the policy-holder who receives it, shall be subject to a fine of $100, in each case to be covered by any person who takes action.

The Commission made a recommendation respecting pension funds which we are not able to agree with. They recommend that all pension funds be forbidden. It seems to us, in view of the operations of all large corporations which find it necessary to make some provision for the future of their officers in order to secure the services of the best men, that the recommendation of the Commission in that respect is rather severe. We propose to permit the establishment of pension funds, provided that in every case they are authorized by the general annual meeting, or a special general meeting of all persons who are qualified to vote in the affairs of the company. But it must not be done by arrangement with the manager or directors alone ; if such fund be established it must be done with the consent and approval of the whole body of persons, whether shareholders or policyholders, who may be entitled to vote.

The Commission made a recommendation with respect to the method of voting by policyholders, which was taken from the recent New York law. Hon. gentlemen may remember the difficulty, confusion and expense which arose in the United States from the administration of that section. It is rather complicating to conduct an election by mail, to have machinery whereby a ticket is nominated, and rival tickets are put into the field, and people are invited to vote for them by sending in ballots. I do not think any abuse has occurred in Canada which makes that recommendation a matter of urgency, and inasmuch as it is of doubtful expediency, in the light of experience in the States, and inasmuch as it has undoubtedly given rise to much difficulty, to much confusion and expense, we think that for the present we cannot recommend that to the House, and so we have dropped that clause out of the Bill. However, in regard to voting we think we can do something which may guard against abuse. We understand that it is the practice of president and directors to have proxies from their policyholders extending over a number of years. A man signs a proxy and forgets all about it, and for years the president or director, or some other official, holds that proxy and votes upon it. We think this system of voting by long standing proxies should be abolished, and that no proxy should be good unless it is executed within two months of the meeting at which it is to be used. This is rather an important change, and will, I think, serve a very good purpose. A case has been brought to my notice recently where special conditions were made against the public interest. This general clause will, we believe, prevent any abuse of proxy voting.

The Commission recommended what are known as standard policies. The object there is a very desirable one indeed ; but the conclusion we have reached, under the advice of the Department of Insurance, is not to demand standard policies, but that certain standard provisions must be of necessity inserted in every policy. If in addition to that the company wishes to insert other provisions, then the company must submit its forms of policy to the superintendent of insurance and get his approval. I think the attempt to arrange for a standard policy is surrounded by difficulties. But if we create standard provisions, which must be inserted in every policy, and then permit a company to add other provisions in any other form, upon submitting such form to the superintendent of insurance, the objects the Commission had in view will be accomplished.

With regard to fraternal insurance we make some important provisions. Experience shows that the fraternal insurance organizations, started always in good faith, very often by men with little knowledge of the principles of insurance, do not flourish for a long time. For a little while they are able to give the cheap insurance which they are established to give ; but as the years roll on and deaths occur frequently, it is discovered that the rates of premium in the form of assessments are not sufficient to pay the death losses in full. The experience of some of these companies has been such that the directors, recognizing the weakness of their position, have been glad to adopt other conditions. There is in existence what is known as the National Fraternal Congress' Table of mortality, which is employed by actuaries as a fair basis for that class of business. In the case of business of that character already existing, we do not disturb it. Companies having policies of that character outstanding may carry them, but we require that they should keep the accounts of such business entirely separate from those of the new business which they may do. The new business must be carried on according to this standard to which I have referred, the National Fraternal Congress' Table of Mortality; and as respects the old business, the company should be allowed to work it out as best they can. But they must not take premiums derived from the new business to pay losses or other expenses arising from the old.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How do you separate the two classes of business? Is that done on a head basis, or a percentage basis?

Mr. FIELDING. We have no special provision in the Bill touching that point, we should have to work it out in practice.

Mr. FOSTER. But the two funds would be absolutely kept apart?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The idea is that if the old fund is weak and cannot carry the policyholders, you cannot help it; but they must not take the money of new members to meet the claims of the old policyholders.

Another condition which we propose to insert with regard to companies doing more than one line of business is desirable. What is proposed is that, without interfering with that right, they will have to have a separate policy form for each line of business and not combine the two or more classes.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the minister mean by a line of business?

Mr. FIELDING. For example, it has occurred in the case of life and accident policies that a general policy is issued. We do not forbid companies doing this business, because they are within their chartered and licensed rights, but we say they should issue separate forms for each line of business, instead of one form governing both. There is a clause permitting private underwriting. There is little of that done now, but it has been done in the past, and not satisfactorily. With regard to deposits to be made with the Receiver General, we provide that any company may make its deposits in the form of Imperial or Dominion securities, either direct securities, or securities bearing Imperial or Dominion guarantee. Any company which is a foreign company may deposit the national securities of the country in which it is incorporated. That would apply, I would say, to an American company, and we will interpret that to mean either the national securities of the United States or the securities of one of the states of the union.

Mr. EMMERSON. Are Provincial securities permissible?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, Canadian securities would include Provincial securities. Then other securities may be deposited subject to the approval of the treasury board. Deposits of trustees in Canada may be in any of the securities in which a Canadian company is allowed to invest.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any supervising or discriminating authority as to national securities? You might have widely divergent national securities, most of them good, but some of them worthless.

Mr. FIELDING. In the case of investments provision is made for the very point which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) raises and, possibly, if it is not broad enough to apply to every case, we may well consider that, but I will deal with that in regard to investments. Probably the investment clause is one of the most important and the one in regard to which there would be the most interest. The Insurance Act, as it now stands, authorizes investment in a class of public securities such as Imperial Dominion, Provincial and so on. As to these there will be no question. They are legitimate forms of investment. We continue the provision respecting that class of securities enlarging it to this extent—

Mr. FOSTER. What class?

Mr. FIELDING. Public securities of the nature of Imperial, Dominion or Provincial securities of a character as to which there is hardly any question. We continue the right to invest in that class of securities and we broaden it a little. We propose that the guaranteed security, whether Imperial, Dominion or Provincial, should stand on the same footing as a security direct. Under section 49 of the existing Insurance Act, subsection (b), provision is made for investment by insurance companies in a large class of securities. I think I had better read it for the benefit of such hon. members of the House as are not familiar with the Insurance Act. I shall read from the existing law, not from the Commission's Bill. It says that any life insurance company may invest in:

(b) The stock of any chartered bank in Canada, or the debentures, bonds, stocks or other securities of any building society, loan or investment company, trust company, water works company, water power company, gas company, navigation company, street railway company (by whatever power the railway is operated), electric light or power company, heat and light company, rolling stock company, bridge construction company, harbour trust company or commission, telegraph, cable or telephone company, dock company, fire insurance company, or the debentures or bonds of any steam railway company, which has earned and paid regular dividends upon its ordinary preferred or guaranteed stocks for the two years next preceding the purchase of such bonds or debentures, if such society, commission or company is incorporated in Canada.

It will be observed here, Sir, that authority is given to invest in the stock of any chartered bank or in the debentures, bonds or stocks of a large range of companies which are specified by classes.

Mr. BERGERON. It will be shorter to mention where they cannot invest.

Mr. FIELDING. I have something like the thought of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) in my mind now which I am going to suggest for the consideration of the House. The Commission recommended that that clause remain, with the qualification that the power to invest in the stocks of all classes of companies should be abolished except with respect to the stocks of chartered banks. The Commission recommended that insurance companies be permitted to invest in the stocks of the chartered banks but not in the stocks of the other classes of corporations therein mentioned.

Mr. BERGERON. Is not that the proposed law that you are now reading ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am pointing out wherein the Commissioner's report differs from the existing law and from what we propose. Under the law as it now stands insurance companies are permitted to invest in either the stocks or bonds of the classes of corporations mentioned. The Commission recommended the same thing with this qualification that they struck out all stocks, excepting bank stocks. While our chartered bank stocks are undoubtedly of the highest class, still they carry with them a special burden in the shape of a double liability, and there may be room for some question whether they should receive that distinct preference which is suggested by the Commission. However, the manner in which we propose to deal with the matter is somewhat broader. We propose to strike out all that list or class of companies which the existing law particularly mentions and endeavour to reach a basis in a different way. We propose to take as a test of the character or class of the stock its earning power. We propose that if a company has been established for a sufficient time and has earned its dividends, that fact shall be taken as establishing its grade and as an indication of the character and standing of the stock.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Whether foreign or otherwise.

Mr. FIELDING. In some respects. If a company is doing business abroad it will have the right to invest in securities issued in the country in which it is doing business, within certain limits to which attention will be drawn later. A Canadian company doing business only in Canada would have to limit itself to the securities of companies in Canada, but a Canadian company doing business in a foreign country would have the power to make investment within moderate limitations in the securities of the country in which it was doing business. The method which we have adopted as the basis is this : We say that the bonds of any company incorporated in Canada, or where the insurance company is doing business, must have been outstanding for at least five years, must be secured by real estate and other assets of a market value of at least 25 per cent in excess of the bonds, and there must have been no default on these bonds for a period of five years. Next, we authorize investment in debentures provided they have been outstanding for seven years without default. Next, we provide for investment in the preferred stock of such companies if it has earned dividends of 4 per cent for at least seven years. Finally we say that a company may invest in the common stock of any such company if it has earned dividends of not less than 5 per cent for a period of ten years. To summarize, then, we say that bonds which have been outstanding five years without default, debentures which have been outstanding seven years without default, preferred stock which has paid dividends of at least 4 per cent for seven years, and common stock which has paid dividends of five per cent for at least ten years shall be available for investment. All these seem to us to be evidence that the companies, as respects these particular classes of stocks, are of good and substantial standing and that their securities may properly be invested in. I think, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will read the new clause and let me say that the new clauses in the Bill have been printed in italics so that hon. gentlemen will readily have their attention drawn to them. The section is as follows :

60. Any life insurance company which derives its corporate powers, or any of them, from an Act of the parliament of Canada, or which is within the legislative power of the parliament of Canada, may invest its funds, or any portion thereof, in the purchase of:—

The debentures, bonds, stocks or other securities of or guaranteed by the government of the Dominion of Canada; or of or guaranteed by the government of any province of Canada; or of or guaranteed by the government of the United Kingdom, or of any colony or dependency thereof; or of or guaranteed by the government of any foreign country, or state forming a portion of such foreign country, wherein the company carries on or is about to carry on business, provided the Treasury Board has signified its approval of such securities; or of any municipal or school corporation in Canada, or elsewhere where the company is carrying on business.

That refers to the question asked by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to the securities of a foreign country. It will be observed that with regard to the Imperial securities, and the Dominion securities, and the provincial securities, they may be purchased as of right without any question, but with regard to allowing them to invest in the securities of any foreign country, or of a state forming a part of such country, we require that it shall be subject to the approval of the Treasury Board. To illustrate, we would undoubtedly accept without question the securities of the United States government; we would without doubt accept the securities of the great state of New York, or Massachusetts. But there may be some state—I do not mention any names—there might be a state in the union which had so mismanaged its affairs that its securities were not in favour and we would be free to refuse them. There might even be some of the minor republics which have a national existence and which while good enough in their own way but the bonds of which are not regarded by us as the highest class of security. We therefore reserve to the Treasury Board the power to refuse or to accept these foreign securities, whereas in the case of any of the Imperial, or Dominion, or provincial securities, the right of investment is without question. Then, Sir, subsection B reads:

The bonds of any company incorporated in Canada or elsewhere where the company is carrying on business, which bonds have been issued and outstanding for a period of at least five years prior to the time of purchase and which are secured by a mortgage to trustees or otherwise upon the real estate and other assets of such company and which real estate and other assets are of a market value of at least 25 per cent in excess of the amount of the bonds so secured thereon, provided default shall not have been made in any regular interest payment upon such bonds within said period of five years; or

The debentures or other evidences of indebtedness, not secured by mortgage, of any such company, which debentures or other evidences of indebtedness have been issued and outstanding for a priod of at least seven years prior to the time of purchase, provided default shall not have been made in any regular interest payment upon such debentures or other evidences of indebtedness, within said period of seven years prior to the time of purchase; or

The preferred stocks of any such company upon which regular dividends of at least four per cent have been paid for the seven years next preceding the purchase of such stocks; or

The common stocks of any such company upon which regular dividends of at least five per cent have been paid for the ten years next preceding the purchase of such stocks.

Now then, attached to that is a provision of some importance, namely, that while the companies may invest in the stock, bonds or other securities of any of the corporations to which I have referred if they have the length of standing and the evidence of good faith in regard to the payment of interest and so on, this limitation shall apply:

Provided that not more than twenty per cent of the total issue of such bonds, debentures or stocks, respectively, of any such company shall be purchased by any such life insurance company.

That is to say, the life insurance company cannot create a subsidiary company. It may in a bona fide way invest in one-fifth of the stock or one-fifth of the bonds, or one-fifth of the debentures, or one-fifth of any class of security of a corporation which has the standing required by the proposed legislation, but it cannot under the guise of another corporation invest a very large sum and practically control the separate corporation; it cannot have more than one-fifth interest in any class of the securities issued by any other corporation.

Then, provision is made for investment in ground rents or mortgages on real estate in Canada or elsewhere, where the company is carrying on business provided the amount loaned on such mortgage shall not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the real estate covered by such mortgage. Then there are provisions regarding investment in life or endowment policies the same as before.

So far for the investments.

Now, with regard to the power of the company to lend its money; the provision we propose is:

Any such life insurance company may lend its funds or any portion thereof on the security of,—

(a) Any of the bonds, debentures, stocks or other securities mentioned in the preceding subsection; or

(b) Real estate or leasehold for a term or terms of years or other estate or interest therein in Canada or elsewhere where the company is carrying on business: provided, however, that no such loans shall exceed sixty per cent of the value of the real estate or interest therein which forms scurity for such loan.

I have said that the power of investing in foreign securities is subject to limitation; that limitation applies both to investments and to loans. Subsection 3 of section 60 reads:

The total amount invested in or loaned upon securities other than Canadian securities by any such company shall not exceed by more than twenty per cent the reserve or re-insurance value of its policies other than Canadian policies, calculated upon the basis of valuation adopted by such companies.

The provision of the existing law is that they may not invest outside a sum more than 10 per cent in excess of that reserve, and we propose to make the figure 20 per cent.

That, Sir, deals with all the questions regarding investment and loans. The only question remaining is with regard to the manner in which this Act shall be brought into operation. It would be manifestly unfair if we were to require the Canadian companies to hastily dispose of any securities which they may have acquired and which do not happen to fall within the category we propose to lay down in the new Bill. It is therefore expedient that a reasonable time be allowed to the companies to dispossess themselves of any securities which they now hold and which do not come within this classification. We propose to allow the company in any case five years in which it may dispose of any such securities which it now holds; and if at the expiration of five years any particular cause can be shown—where the matter is in progress and has not been brought to a conclusion—the Governor in Council may increase the period by making it six years instead of five.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the minister give consideration to another phase of that, as to whether it would or would not be advisable to leave that matter as regards past investments entirely in the hands of the company. I wanted to ask whether the minister in drafting this clause had thought of that?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; we thought that if we required them to dispossess themselves of these securities within a short time it would be manifestly unjust, but we thought that if the time were made liberal the companies would not object to it. At all events that is the way the Bill is now drafted. We have drafted this Bill as the result of the best judgment we could bring to bear upon an exceedingly difficult question; we have had the benefit of the assistance and experience of reliable officers of the Insurance Department. Our view has been to recognize the fact that the Commission in its report and Bill, have made many valuable suggestions, and these we have been glad to accept and include in the Bill now submitted to the House. In a number of other cases, after further consideration, we thought their proposed measures were too drastic and we have either dropped their proposals or we have made changes of the nature to which I have already referred. I think I can say that every effort has been directed to the production of a reasonable and sensible Bill. I am not unmindful of the fact that in a measure so complicated as this must necessarily be, and where there are undoubtedy conflicting interests involved, we may not hope that this Bill will please every one. I quite anticipate that I shall find myself within two lines of criticism. On the one hand there will be protests—intimation of which has been given to me already in certain quarters—that we should have adhered rigidly to the provisions of the Bill submitted by the Commission a year ago and not have made any concessions to what are regarded as the views of the companies. On the other hand, I am afraid that I cannot congratulate myself that the insurance companies are going to be willing to accept the provisions of this Bill unreservedly. But I would hope that between the two extremes there is a happy medium which the House will be able to reach. That has been our effort at all events. I thought it well to bring down the Bill on the eve of our Christmas vacation, in order that hon. gentlemen might have an early opportunity of considering it, and it is my purpose, shortly after the holiday recess, to move the second reading, not for the purpose of provoking a discussion on the Bill then, but in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, so that the companies and others who desire to be heard on the subject will have an ample opportunity to do so. Probably the House will reserve its own judgment until after that hearing takes place.

Mr. BARR. I would suggest that copies of the Bill be sent to the members during the holidays.

Mr. FIELDING. Copies of the Bill have been sent to the distribution office, and will be distributed immediately.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WIRES AND WATER MAINS ACROSS RAILWAYS.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 43) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to facilitate the crossing of railroads by telephone and telegraph wires and water mains. Those who have had anything to do with carrying telephones or telegraph wires or water mains across railways have experienced great difficulty in accomplishing their object without going before the Board of Railway Commissioners, with the result that much time has been wasted. Another great objection to the law as it stands at present is that it imposes an enormous amount of unnecessary work on the Railway Commission. I find by the return I moved for a few days ago that during the last two and a half years some fifteen hundred cases have been sent to that board, and in every one of these cases the commission has granted the permission desired, proving beyond a doubt that there was no reason in any of these cases why the permission should not have been granted by the railway companies without putting the parties to the trouble of going before the Railway Commission. The difficulty and expense of going before the Railway Commission is not by any means small, particularly to those with small telephone lines. These are very numerous in every part of the Dominion of Canada. I speak more particularly of the province of Ontario, where telephone lines are being established everywhere. Business men, doctors and others find it to their advantage to run out telephone lines to accommodate their customers and increase their business. A small telephone corporation wishing to carry its line across a railroad does not anticipate the opposition which it usually encounters from the railway company; so it goes ahead and puts up its poles, and when it comes to the railway, it asks permission of the agent to cross the track. Then it is told that if it pays $5 for each crossing it will be allowed to string its wires, but if it will not do so, it will have to go to the Railway Commission. In my county there is one little line that crosses a railway four times and for this the railway company demanded $20. The telephone company went before the commission. It happened that the Railway Commissioners at that time were on their holidays, to which being a hard worked body, they were justly entitled, and the result was that nothing was done, and that small corporation was held up for six weeks until the Railway Commission met. After the commission met, objections were raised by the railway company, notwithstanding the fact that they had been willing to allow the telephone corporation to cross their tracks by paying $5 for each crossing, and the case was held over for three weeks longer. When the board met, they gave the permission, as they have done in every case. As telephones and telegraphs are increasing throughout the country, the demands on the Railway Commission will correspondingly increase. To my mind this is entirely unnecessary, and my Bill provides that parties desiring to string wires across railways may do so on giving notice to the agent of the railway company in the locality, and if the railway company do not take action and notify the board within ten days thereafter, the parties can go on and string their wires according to the rules and regulations laid down by the Railway Commission. Water mains occupy a little different position. The Bill provides that if a party or corporation desires to carry a water main across a railway, they must not only give ten days notice, but must pay an engineer not to exceed $3 a day. I think the Bill is in the interest of the public at large. I will explain its provisions more fully when I move the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of Labour for 1906-7.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I beg to lay on the table of the House copies of two letters from the Deputy Minister of Justice to the Controller of the Northwest Mounted Police with reference to the observance of the Sunday law in the Yukon Territory. These letters were referred to in an answer which I gave on Thursday last to a question put by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), and I promised to have them brought down.

QUESTIONS.

ROYAL PROVINCIAL COMMISSION RE BELGIAN SYNDICATE.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked:

Does section 33 of chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada apply to the Honourable Judges of the Superior court of the province of Quebec, Sir François Langelier, acting chief justice, and Charbonneau, puisne judge, at present employed by the provincial government of that province to inquire, as members of a Royal Provincial Commission, into certain accusations brought against that government and regarding the administration of that government in certain transactions with a Belgian syndicate, the object of which inquiry is to make a report, without judgment, to the government of the province of Quebec?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I take the question to be whether the judges named in it are or are not within the prohibition of the section of the statute referred to. Answering it in that view, I have to say: The question whether or not any legislative enactment applies to some given set of circumstances, or whether such circumstances do, or do not, fall within the meaning of such enactment—is one in regard to which every one must form his opinion for himself, but I have no objection to expressing my own opinion that where a judge undertakes any work of judicial character under Royal Commission issued to him, such work thereupon becomes a part of his judicial duties within the meaning of that phrase as used in the section of the statue referred to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE, QUEBEC.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked:

1. Is the Minister of Justice aware that the number of judges in the province of Quebec is not sufficient for the administration of justice?
2. If so, does the government intend appointing more judges?
3. Has the Minister of Justice received any complaints in this regard, especially from the bar of the city of Quebec?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH Minister of Justice):

1. No.
2. The government has no power to make such appointments until the necessary legislation in that behalf has been passed.
3. Representations on the subject have been made on behalf of the bar of the district.

GOVERNMENT LANDS, ALBERTA.

Mr. HERRON asked :

1. How many acres of odd numbered sections in the province of Alberta are there still in the hands of the government?
2. How many acres of even numbered sections in the province of Alberta are there still in the hands of the government?
3. How many acres of coal lands is it estimated the government has possession of in the province of Alberta?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Estimated at 56,000,000 acres.
2. Estimated at 62,000,000 acres.
3. From information at present available an estimate cannot be given of the area of coal lands in the province of Alberta in the possession of the government. Coal has been discovered in many parts of the province, but in the large majority of cases the development of these several discoveries has not yet been sufficient upon which to base an estimate as to the extent of the coal measures. In addition to this more than one half of the province lies north of Edmonton, and as no great demand for coal in this northern part of the province has yet arisen, very little prospecting has been carried on. New discoveries of coal in the southern portion of the province are still being made, and while it is known that the coal measures of the province are of very great extent, no estimate has been attempted as to the number of acres of such lands in the possession of the crown.

IMMIGRATION AGENTS FOR NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to appoint agents to encourage immigration to the province of New Brunswick from Great Britain and Ireland or any portion of continental Europe?
2. If so, who have been named for such appointments, and at what remuneration?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The subject of appointing agents to encourage immigration to the province of New Brunswick from Great Britain and Ireland is under consideration.

FREIGHT ON STEAMERS BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND THE MAINLAND.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN asked :

1. What was the total quantity of freight carried on the winter steamers between Prince Edward Island and the mainland during the past two seasons, 1905-6 and 1906-7?
2. What amount of freight was delayed in transit for those two seasons?
3. What is the freight rate on the different classes of goods carried?
4. What was the amount received for freight during the two seasons?
5. What was the amount received for passengers and number carried?
6. How many days did the steamers fail to cross in each of those years?
7. What was the amount of damages paid to shippers for delay of goods in transit

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Better let that stand as notice of motion for a return.

84TH ST. HYACINTHE REGIMENT.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What is the total amount of pay due the 84th St. Hyacinthe Regiment by the government on account of its annual drill exercises?
2. When was the account or statement of amount so due to the said 84th Regiment sent to the government?
3. Why has the amount so due not been paid?
4. When will said amount be paid?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) :

1 and 2. Not known, as pay sheets have not yet been received at headquarters.

3. The delay is due to the fact that the regiment has not carried out musketry practice and accounts have not been adjusted as to 'efficiency pay.'

4. As soon as the amount due for 'efficiency' pay has been ascertained ; in the meantime $1,500 has been advanced on account.

FRENCH TREATY AND GERMAN SURTAX.

Mr. AMES asked :

How will the coming into force of the new French Treaty affect Canada's position in respect to the surtax upon goods imported from Germany?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It will have no effect upon such surtax.

FRENCH TREATY—PREFERENTIAL INTERMEDIATE AND FRENCH MINIMUM TARIFF.

Mr. AMES asked :

What are the countries designated by the words contained in Article VIII. of the new French Treaty, viz.: (a) 'or from a port of a territory enjoying the preferential or intermediate tariff;' and (b) 'or from a port or country enjoying the French minimum tariff'?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

(a) No country at present enjoys the benefit of the intermediate tariff.

The countries to which the preferential tariff applies are contained in the customs tariff of 1907.

(b) The countries enjoying the French minimum tariff are :

Germany, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canary Islands Colombia, Denmark, Egypt, Ottoman Empire (including Turkey in Asia), Ecuador, Switzerland, Spain, Venezuela, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg (Grand Dutchy of), Morocco, Mexico, Montenegro, Netherlands, Tripoli (Regency of), Paraguay, Persia, Spanish Possessions on the coast of Morocco, Argentine Republic, Dominican Republic, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Sweden and Norway, Uruguay.

Those enjoying the French minimum tariff on certain articles only are:

Danish West Indies, Brazil, Congo Free State, Costa Rica, Hayti, Zanzibar, Corea, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Ethiopia, Hong-Kong Colony, Republic of Liberia, Muscat, Siam, English Protectorates—East Africa, Centre Africa, Uganda, United States of America, Seychelles Islands, India, British and Allied Native States, (Travancore, Cochin, Sochin, Janjira, Cambay, Cutch, Baroda, Jungahad, Navnagar, Bhavnagar, Parbander, Morvi, Jafrabad), Island of Ceylon, Republic of Honduras, Jamaica, Netherland Colonies Nicaragua, Canada, China, Porto Rico, Salvador.

This information has necesarily to be obtained from other sources and I would not like to guarantee it too exactly.

FRENCH TREATY—FAVOURED NATION TREATMENT.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. So soon as the French treaty of 1907 shall have been brought into force, what other foreign powers, by reason of a treaty with Great Britain, will become entitled to like advantages with respect of their commerce with Canada?

2. Will the reduced customs rate upon imports from Canada to such other foreign countries, and upon exports from Canada to such other foreign countries, be dependent upon conformity to direct shipment conditions such as are described in Article VIII, of the new French treaty?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. This portion of the question will be answered with question No. 17.

2. The advantages to France of any tariff reductions under the convention are contingent upon the direct shipment conditions of Aricle VIII. thereof.

Advantages of the treaty reductions on imports into Canada from any other country by virtue of favoured nation provisions would similarly be contingent upon the like conditions, as such countries could claim no greater privileges than are granted to France.

With regard to the exports from Canada to the favoured nation countries, Canada is entitled in such countries to the best treatment that is accorded to any country. The French treaty does not affect that situation.

FRENCH TREATY—IMPORTS VIA UNITED STATES.

Mr. AMES asked:

Would goods, coming from France to Canada via a United States port, put on a through bill of lading, and vice versa, be excluded from the benefit of the reduced tariff under Article VIII, of the French Treaty?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

France would not have the right to claim the reduced rates provided in the convention on goods sent into Canada via United States port unless Canada should extend to the United States the benefit of the intermediate tariff.

The treaty of 1893 provided that Canadian goods should not receive the benefit of the reduced rates of duties unless sent by direct shipment from Canada to France. This rule is continued in the new treaty.

FAVOURED NATION TREATMENT.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. What conventions or agreements respecting the commercial relations between Canada and other countries, exclusive of Great Britain or the British possessions, are at present in force?

2. When were these several agreements concluded?

3. Who were, in each instance, the plenipotentiaries authorized to represent Canada in the negotiations?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1, 2, 3. The only countries entitled to favoured nation treatment by reason of treaties which have been approved by the parliament of Canada are France, by the treaty of 6th February, 1893, and Japan, by the treaty of 31st January, 1906. Other countries entitled to favoured nation treatment in Canada have become so entitled by virtue of old treaties between those countries and the government of the United Kingdom. These treaties vary in their terms, and difficulties sometimes arise in determining whether in every case they are now applicable to Canada. As to several of the countries, there are debatable questions which are now the subject of consideration. The following countries, however, are unquestionably entitled to favoured nation treatment and will therefore receive the benefit of the concessions to be granted to France:—

Argentine Republic, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Columbia, Denmark, Japan, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Venezuela.

As to some other countries a further statement may be necessary at a later date.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—MURRAY HARBOUR AND TIGNISH SECTIONS.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked:

1. What is the freight and passenger earnings of the Belfast and Murray Harbour section of the Prince Edward Island Railway for the year ending March 31, 1907, and the same information respecting the Souris and Tignish sections of the same road?
2. What is the working expenses of each of those three sections for the same period?
3. If the freight and passenger traffic on the Murray Harbour section is as favourable as the Tignish and Souris sections, why is the former discriminated against by giving only one train a day?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The accounts of the Prince Edward Island Railway both for the expenditure and the earnings are kept as a whole and not for separate parts of the line. No separate account is kept for the Murray Harbour branch or Tignish sections, and therefore it is impossible to give the information asked for.
2. Answered by number one.
3. Answered by number one.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Before you leave the order of questions, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement bearing on the French treaty. I intimated to the House that I would probably bring down some papers with relation to this matter before the holidays. I had hoped that they would be ready to-day or to-morrow. I find, however, that there will be delay in bringing them down as they are somewhat difficult to prepare owing to the mass of figures. Should I not be able to bring them down to-day, they will be left in the distribution office, and I would suggest that hon. members who desire to see them in the holidays should leave directions so that the papers may be forwarded. I expect to have them down before the end of the week, and they will be sent direct to the distribution office.

TIMBER BERTHS.

On the order :

For a return showing, in respect of timber berths Nos. 1220 to 1226, 1238 and 1272, all bonuses, rentals or dues paid to date by the lessees or other assigns to the government, together with a copy of all applications, correspondence, reports, advertisements, tenders, leases, transfers or memoranda of any description in connection therewith, and the production of the original applications and tenders.—Mr. Lake.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Stand.

Mr. LAKE. The minister has twice asked this to stand without stating any reason. It is of importance that the documents referred to in this resolution should be brought down as early as possible. The motion was put on the paper on December 2nd. Might I ask the minister if he is not ready to have it moved now?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. LAKE. If the delay is deemed necessary merely because of the form of the resolution, that might be arranged for, with the permission of the House, if the minister will allow the motion to go on. Am I right in supposing that it is the production of the original documents in this particular case which is the difficulty in the minister's mind?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. I consider the production of these original documents of great importance, but still I would be willing to allow the concluding words of the resolution calling for the original documents to be struck out for the present, but with the understanding that a resolution would be moved later asking for the original documents covered by this and the two next succeeding motions. As to these original documents, I may say that application was made to the minister by a member of this House for permission to examine them, and it was at his own suggestion, in refusing that application, that these words were included in this resolution. With the permission of the House, I would move that this resolution be passed striking out the final words 'and the production of the original applications and tenders.'

Motion as amended agreed to.

On the order.

For a return showing, in respect of timber berths Nos. 1048, 1049, 1122 and 1168, all bonuses, rentals or dues paid to date by the lessees or other assigns to the government, together with a copy of all applications, correspondence, reports, advertisements, tenders, leases, transfers and memoranda of any description in connection therewith, and the production of the original applications and tenders.—Mr. Boyce.

Mr. BOYCE. Perhaps the minister (Mr. Oliver) would have no objection to this order also being moved, with same amendment as that proposed in the other.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection if the motion is amended as suggested.

Motion as amended agreed to.

On the order :

For a return showing, in respect of timber berths Nos. 1031, 1118, 1119, 1097 and 1098, all bonuses, rentals or dues paid to date by the lessees or other assigns to the government, together with a copy of all applications, correspondence, reports, advertisements, tenders, leases, transfers or memoranda of any description in connection therewith, and the production of the original applications and tenders.—Mr. White.

Mr. WHITE. If I might be permitted to move this motion with the same amendment, I would do so.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CRUISE OF THE 'NEPTUNE' IN HUDSON BAY.

On the order :

For a copy of the report of superintendent J. D. Moodie, on service in Hudson bay for steamer 'Neptune' in 1903-4.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I may observe that we have that report already in the Sessional Papers, No. 28 of 1905.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

BRANCH RAILWAY P.E.I.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN moved :

For copy of all surveys, correspondence, petitions, agreements, reports, memoranda and any other information respecting the construction of a branch railway to Stanley Bridge and New London, P.E.I.

Hon. GEO. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The report of the Marine Department of April 30, 1906, covers all that information. It is fyled in the Sessional Papers of the House of Commons, No. 122, 1906.

Motion dropped.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

On the order :

For a return showing: 1. In respect of each category mentioned in schedule A of the new French treaty (Canadian products enjoying the benefit of the minimum tariff when going into France), (a) the general and the minimum French tariff expressed in terms equivalent to those employed in the Canadian customs tariff, together with the calculated percentage reduction of the latter on the former; (b) the value of the exports to France and her colonies in each class of goods enumerated in said schedule A for the last five years, and the yearly average value covering the same period.

2. In respect of each category mentioned in schedules B and C (French products enjoying (b) the benefit of the intermediate tariff, or (c) of a special tariff when coming into Canada), (a) the general and the intermediate rate under the Canadian tariff, upon each class, together with the calculated percentage reduction of the latter on the former; (b) the value of the imports, from France and her colonies to Canada in respect of each class of goods enumerated in schedules B and C for the last five years, and the yearly average value covering the same period.

3. List of items, if any, in schedules B and C upon which there is a surtaxe d'entrepôt, and the rate of said tax reduced to familiar Canadian terms.

4. A statement, in category, of Canada's export and import trade, for the twelve months ending June 30, 1907, with those countries, to which, under the most-favoured-nation arrangement, the privileges of the new French treaty will require to be also granted.—Mr. Ames.

Mr. AMES. I understood from the minister to-day that it was his intention, during the recess to lay a return on the table of the House, and send copies of the same to the members, which would contain a considerable part of the information mentioned here. If what I have asked for here is to be covered by what the minister intends to send us, there is no necessity for me keeping this motion on the paper, and I am willing to withdraw it, with the understanding that the minister will give consideration to what is asked for in this resolution when he brings down the information he has promised.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Every new request for information to be included in these papers delays the completion of the papers. We have not had time to give much attention to this particular motion. I think it includes a good many things that we are not in a position to produce at all. We can produce any information we have in the departments, but we cannot always produce information which has to be obtained from abroad. If the hon. gentleman will allow the motion to stand in the interim, I will endeavour to meet his wishes.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. PATERSON. With regard to clause 4 of the hon. gentleman's motion, if he will make it for nine months, ending March 31, 1907, instead of twelve months, ending June 30, I could give him that information at once. Otherwise it will take some time to get the information he asks for.

Mr. AMES. Then I ask leave to amend the fourth clause, and ask for a statement ending March 31, 1907.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the information to be brought down will cover at least some portion of this clause. Then, if the hon. gentleman feels it necessary to ask for something further we will consider it.

Mr. AMES. I will suggest that the Minister of Customs send his information to the Finance Minister.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ontario) moved:

For a copy of all orders in council, correspondence, documents and papers, during the present year, relating to the immigration of Japanese into Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in connection with this motion which stands in my name. The subject has been before the country for some three or four months. It has been before the House during the three weeks of the present session and up to the present time we have had very little information indeed from the government in regard to their attitude with respect to this question. We have from the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a great deal of discussion of some other matters that perhaps were not as relative to the debate upon the address as this is; for example, a discussion of the Halifax platform, as it is called, or the policy of the Conservative party, as set forth in a speech which I delivered at Halifax on the 20th day of August last. The discussion of that policy did not seem to be very relevant to a debate upon the speech from the Throne, but I have very great satisfaction indeed in realizing that the Prime Minister thought it better to devote attention to my speech than to the speech of His Excellency; and I may say to the right hon. gentlemen that before the session closes I venture to think that he will get all the discussion desirable with respect to the various planks of that platform which occupied to so great an extent his remarks upon that occasion.

The attitude of the government in regard to this question is as little known to the people and parliament of this country as it was when this session opened. It does seem a remarkable circumstance that when the subject was presented two days ago to this House, when five hon. members from British Columbia made speeches in regard to it—exhaustive speeches, interesting and some of them instructive,—not one single member of this government saw fit to say one single word in connection with that great question or in connection with the subject of the resolution which was proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith). It was either a gallery play, arranged beforehand, or else these gentlemen must consider that the government treated them and the motion with the utmost possible contempt, because I observed that from time to time there was a pause when one of these gentlemen would take his seat, evidently in the expectation that some member of the government would feel himself constrained to give some information to the House with regard to the attitude of the government. Yet, although these five gentlemen arose, and, one after the other delivered important speeches upon a great subject, that subject was regarded of such trifling importance by the government, that, as I have already said, not one single word was uttered in regard to it. Well, that is a matter that has to be settled between the government and these hon. gentlemen, and afterwards, I suppose, between these hon. gentlemen and their constituents.

I may be permitted, however, on this occasion, to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister what was the nature of the assurances which were alluded to in the debate, not imparted to this parliament but imparted to the members from the province of British Columbia. It seems to me a rather new phase of constitutional government that when a great treaty like this comes up for discussion in parliament there is information afforded by the government to their own followers, or to certain representatives from one province, but which is not afforded to this House, and I venture to think that it is high time that the government should give to parliament as a whole and to the country as well the information that is said by one of the hon. gentlemen who spoke, the day before yesterday, to have been received by the members from British Columbia from the government on that occasion.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I think he refers to myself. I did make a statement to the effect that assurances were given inside the House and outside the House, but I did not say that these assurances were confined to the members of British Columbia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That removes it, I suppose, this one step farther that the information was given to the caucus, was given to all the members on the other side of the House and was denied to us.

Mr. DUNCAS ROSS. No, if the hon. gentleman will allow me, I think the information was given possibly to the hon. leader of the opposition and was given some two years or one year before the treaty was ratified in a reply by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to a question from the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be a very plausible explanation if the hon. gentleman had not spoken of information given outside the House. I am aware that any information given inside this House is free to all, but I distinctly asked the question across the floor of the House and I got a very plain and distinct answer, and if it meant anything it meant that information had been afforded to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House which had not been afforded to parliament as a whole.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me again, because I do not want him to misunderstand me. Surely information imparted by the representatives of the Japanese government to this government is not information given inside this House but information given outside of this House. He has no seat on the floor of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, seriously expects the House to believe that that is what he desired us to understand by the answer which he gave to me across the floor of the House. Well, we would like to hear from the right hon. the Prime Minister in regard to that. I am sure the hon. gentleman will not object to as to what he has just stated and that he will allow us to say that we accept his assurances—not his assurances but his suggestions—in a parliamentary sense and exactly as he expects us to receive them. Now, there was one circumstance in connection with this subject, which, I think, has not been adverted to in this House at all, and that is the attitude of the party of which the right hon. gentleman is leader, as expressed in a recent convention in the province of British Columbia.

The right hon. gentleman has been very earnest in his deprecation of any appeals to passion or prejudice, but when asked to make good his statement that there had been on the part of any member of the Conservative party such an appeal, he came down in the final analysis to this statement: 'that because, the Chinese were a peace loving people, and had not a great army and a great navy, they might, in effect, be treated with contempt and indifference, but because Japan has a great army and a great navy and is a great power she must be treated in an entirely different way. I venture to think that is the fair inference from the statement the right hon. gentleman made to this House. He has been good enough to attack those who have suggested that his government should make good to parliament and to the people of Canada the assurance upon which that treaty was ratified or else it was in a position and is to-day in a position to ask for the abrogation of that treaty. The attitude of the right hon. gentleman seems remarkable in one who at all times has announced himself to be a great lover of peace. The right hon. gentleman over and over has proclaimed himself as the great apostle of peace, but now he declares that the Chinese nation which has been practising and preaching the doctrine of peace for a thousand years should be treated with a contempt and an indifference, to use his own words, which he would not venture to extend to a great military power like Japan. If I have misunderstood the right hon. gentleman let him make his position clear on that point, but what I have said seems to be the only meaning which one can gather from the remarks he has vouchsafed to this House and to the country in reference to this question. The right hon. gentleman has declared it an unworthy suggestion that this treaty might be abrogated. If the understanding upon which it is supposed to have been made does not hold good, is the suggestion improper? In that connection I would say to the right hon. gentleman that he and his Minister of Finance as well, have seen fit to reproach me that the Halifax platform so called has not commended itself to certain members of the Conservative party. I would tell the Minister of Finance were he here, and I will say it in his absence that when he refers to the action of the Conservative club of Winnipeg, he might have remembered that at a banquet attended by 600 people which they tendered me in that city, the very last words they uttered were that I might be absolutely sure that the city of Winnipeg will send a good Conservative member to the House of Commons at the next election. And at the very next meeting of that association, a unanimous resolution of confidence in and approval of the platform which had been announced in Halifax was passed and forwarded to me. I think therefore that the right hon. gentleman and his friend the Minister of Finance might very well have occupied themselves with matters of graver public concern than to talk gossip of this kind.

But I have something a little more cogent than that for the digestion of my right hon. gentleman. The Liberals of British Columbia met on the 18th of November last to lay down the platform of the Liberal party in the province of British Columbia, and article 6 of that platform reads:

> That as the opinion of British Columbia generally is against the immigration of orientals and as the Liberal party of the Dominion has successfully excluded the Chinese, the party should adopt an immediate policy which will accomplish the same object against all orientals. And that in the opinion of this convention the Natal Act which has been effective in restriction of oriental immigration in other British countries, should be passed as a federal enactment, and any existing treaty which prevents the passage of the Natal Act should be abrogated at the earliest possible date.

Perhaps the right hon. gentleman will inform us to what extent his party in British Columbia and the policy of that party as laid down by the convention demand his sympathy or his reproach. And before he endeavours to set the houses of other people in order it would be well indeed that he should give a little attention to the policy of the Liberal Association in British Columbia, and inform the House and the country whether they are speaking with his knowledge or approval, and whether he is prepared to utter the words of reproach in respect to them which he has seen fit to utter against very much milder utterances by public men on the same question. I would like to say to the right hon. gentleman and to his Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) that it is perhaps not too wise to go into the question of appeals to passion and prejudice, because some interesting illustrations might be given if need be. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was prompt to exercise his usual tactics when he was on the other side of the water this year. An interview with him, published in the Montreal 'Star' over the signature of their correspondent Windermere contains this interesting paragraph:

> What, Mr. Brodeur asks, can Mr. Borden mean when he declares the Conservatives will keep British Columbia for the great pioneer races, British and Canadian. Are not the French the pioneers in Canada; are they to be excluded by Mr. Borden's new national policy?

You can see the appeal and the intent of that language of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These are words which I trust will command the disapproval of the Prime Minister when he comes to speak in this parliament, although he has not been unwilling apparently to take full advantage of such appeals. I would refer him notably to the utterances of that organ in the city of Quebec, 'Le Soleil,' the direction of which was handed back to him by senator Choquette after the Prime Minister had seen fit to interfere in the municipal politics of the city of Quebec. When the right hon. gentleman was challenged with the control of that paper he said he did not control it, but up to the present time he has never seen fit to explain how it was that the direction of that paper could be handed back to him if it were not absolutely under his control every day of the week and every week of the year. Well, I want to tell the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that if he had waited a little to see the true report of what I said in British Columbia he would have found there was nothing to alarm him and nothing on account of which he could offer any such reproach to me as he did. What I said in British Columbia was this—and I am willing to repeat it here to-day—I said that above all commercial considerations, above all material considerations, above all considerations of trade and commerce there was one consideration which should be kept supreme, and that was that the great province of British Columbia must at all times in the future be inhabited and dominataed by the same great pioneering races which have peopled and developed the eastern provinces of this country. I intended to include in that not only men who come to us from the British Islands, but men of the great French race, which I cheerfully acknowledge to have been the first pioneer race of Canada. I intended to include also men of German descent, who not only in my own native province of Nova Scotia, but also in the province of Ontario, have been among the most worthy pioneers of this country. So there was no need of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries attempting to raise this old cry, which has been repeated by 'Le Soleil' and 'Le Canada' day after day and week after week until I am tired of following and contradicting their utterances in regard to myself, which in every case of that character are absolutely unfounded and based on nothing except the imagination of the men who wrote the articles.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us come to consider what the position of the government is in this regard. The right hon. gentleman was warned in 1900 by a man whom he has seen fit since to elevate to the judicial bench of British Columbia; I refer to Mr. Morrison, then a member of this House, from that province. I will not read the whole of the language which Mr. Morrison uttered on that occasion with respect to the undesirable character of Japanese immigration; I would not care to do so at the present time. He went very far indeed; he used language very strong and very cogent; but I may be permitted to quote just two or three lines to show that the Prime Minister at that time had the most ample warning with regard to this question, and disregarded that warning, and disregarded it knowingly. Mr. Morrison said:

In referring to the Japanese I may say that the objection economically to their existence in British Columbia and in Canada is even greater than the objection to the Chinamen. They are, as far as opposition with white labour is concerned, infinitely more objectionable than the Chinamen. They meet the white man at a greater number of points of competition. They live just as objectionably as the Chinese.

Then he went on to use stronger language than any that I have quoted, and a little further he declared, basing his statement upon quotations from British Columbia papers:

Japanese are still pouring in here. The steamer 'Riojun Maru' brought 800, and the big liner 'Goodwin,' 1,100. The steamer 'Milos' brought eighty more, and the 'Braemer,' at the end of this week will bring more than 700.

What was the attitude of Mr. Morrison at that time? He desired to amend the Immigration Act by adding to it provisions which were essentially the same as those which were to be found in the Natal Act on this subject. The Prime Minister declined to accede to Mr. Morrison's request He asked that the amendment should be withdrawn, and it was withdrawn, and he used on that occasion language to which I have already drawn attention both in this House and before this session opened; language in which he declared that the matter was already in a sufficiently satisfactory condition, that the Japanese had taken the matter into their own hands, that they permitted no emigration from their country into Canada, especially of the labouring class, and that therefore the amendment proposed by Mr. Morrison was entirely unnecessary and entirely undesirable. The right hon. gentleman was warned again in 1903 by his commission, which said exactly the same thing as Mr. Morrison, which declared that, as far as competition with white labour was concerned, the Japanese were more dangerous than the Chinese, and that some satisfactory solution of their proposed immigration should be brought about. The government were warned by myself in 1903, when I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, on his return from Japan, as to what effect the closer relations between Canada and Japan might have on immigration, and what effect the immigration might have on the status of labouring men in British Columbia, and my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture made reply in language which I have already quoted, and to which I shall take the opportunity of referring again. He said:

The government there, in accordance with negotiations with our government, issued orders, I think about two years ago, that for the future no permit should be given to the Japanese except the classes I have mentioned, to come to Canada, and that has been strictly maintained to the present time. I had the assurance of the government there, personally and in writing, that this policy would be maintained.

Well, from that time up to the present, notwithstanding all the discussion in this country on this question, the government has not seen fit to lay on the Table of the House the written assurance which the Minister of Agriculture obtained from the government of Japan. Not only that, but the Prime Minister has not seen fit to allude to it in his reply to one of the labour organizations of the country which called upon him to take steps for the abrogation of that treaty; because, in replying to the Trades and Labour Congress in the month of September last, the right hon. gentleman used this language:

I have given due consideration to your request that immediate steps be taken to terminate the treaty with Japan. I would observe that this treaty, when brought into existence some fifteen years ago, did not apply to Canada, and that some two years ago, in view of affording Canadian producers with an opportunity of taking their share of the growing Japanese trade, the Canadian government became a party to this treaty, and that it was unanimously ratified by the Canadian parliament.

The treaty has proved of great advantage, and our trade with Japan under it has considerably increased. You base your appeal for the denunciation of the treaty on the allegation that a crisis has arisen in British Columbia by reason of the unprecedented influx of Japanese. Whilst it is true that most regrettable incidents have lately occurred in Vancouver, which have been rendered public, there seems reason to doubt that the cause was the influx of Japanese, as I am in possession of a telegram from the mayor of Vancouver, which has been rendered public, which expressly avers that the disturbances were directed against Asiatics, generally, rather than against Japanese. Under such circumstances any precipitate action might be regrettable, and before committing themselves to such a course the government think that they should carefully inquire into the causes which in the recent past have caused a greater influx to our shores than previously of oriental people.

Not one single word in that answer with reference to the assurances that had been extended to this government by the government of Japan. These assurances, or some of them, have been in writing. The Minister of Agriculture obviously does not allude to those which have been alluded to by the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross), but to those which were given to him in Japan during his visit there. I understood the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo to refer to distinct assurances which were gven at Ottawa by the Consul General of Japan, now resident in this city. So in respect of neither one nor the other of these assurances have we had from the government up to the present time any information.

Now, it seems to me that we are entitled to some statement from the government as to their position in this matter. My. hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) spoke upon the subject in September last. As reported in the Victoria 'Colonist,' he said this :

> Provincial Acts aimed at their exclusion, have been disallowed by Ottawa at the request of the Imperial government, and it is utterly useless, except as an appeal to demagogy to continue to enact such legislation.

My hon. friend does not seem to have given this question much study or he would have found over and over again in the records of this parliament evidence contradictory of what he said. He would have found that during the session of 1905 the answer of his government, delivered twice, was as follows :—

> These Acts have been disallowed for the reason that they were ultra vires and not in accord with Dominion policy.

There was not a word about imperial policy. I remember well a discussion, in which the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the then Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick) participated. The attitude of the government then was distinct. The disallowal was not based upon imperial policy but altogether on Dominion policy. In the "Hansard' of 1905, pages 6475 and 189, the answer of the government is given twice in the terms I have just now quoted. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) does not seem to be very well acquainted with the history of this subject upon which he undertook to enlighten the people of British Columbia.

Further than that there are the well known despatches of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, despatches which were quoted by the Hon. David Mills, then Minister of Justice. These despatches wer sent on the 23rd March, 1899, and the 20th July, 1898, and both are to be found in the records of parliament. I shall read one and the second is exactly similar. This is a despatch from the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, to His Excellency the Governor General :

> I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of numbers and dates noted in the margin, in which you forwarded copies of various communications received by you from the Japanese consul for Canada respecting the anti-Japanese legislation recently passed by the legislature of British Columbia. I shall be glad if you will lose no time in transmitting in accordance with the request contained in my telegram of June 18, copies of the Acts to which M. Shimizu takes exception, together with the observation of your ministers thereon.
> In the meantime I have to request that you will impress upon your ministers that restrictive legislation of the type of which the legislation in question appears to be, is extremely repugnant to the sentiments of the people and government of Japan, and you should not fail to impress upon them the importance, if there is any real prospect of a large influx of Japanese labourers into Canada, of dealing with it by legislation of the Dominion parliament on the lines of the accompanying Natal Act, which is likely to be generally adopted in Australia.

The telegram of 23rd March, 1899, repeats in exactly similar language the decision contained in the despatch I have just read. So that my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue does not seem to be very well acquainted with the history of this question.

The position of this government, when it asked parliament to ratify this treaty, was as follows. The First Minister stated in 1900 that there was an understanding with Japan by which the emigration from that country into Canada should be so restricted that it could not possibly occasion any difficulty or inconvenience. Dealing with the question of Chinese immigration in 1903, he took the same ground, and his Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) during the same year expressly assured the House that there was a written understanding between this government and the government of Japan upon which this country could rely and under which no emigration of any account would go from Japan to Canada. In 1907, when this treaty came up for ratification, the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took exactly the same position. That was accepted by the House as a substitute for the control of immigration which is provided for by the treaty between the United States and Japan, but which is not provided for by the treaty between Canada and Japan.

The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) brought to the attention of the House a couple of days ago the article of the American treaty to which I have just referred. So far as the right to enter, travel and reside is concerned, that treaty is in practicaly the same words as the treaty negotiated between the United Kingdom and Japan and to which this country has become a party by the treaty of 1906. But the United States treaty contains this saving clause :

> It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding articles do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of labourers, police and public security, which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

We have not got that in our treaty. Perhaps is might have been more prudent to have it, but it would not have been necessary if the assurances conveyed to the House by the First Minister and his colleagues had proved effective. They have not proved effective. 10,000 Japanese have come into British Columbia within a little over a year. The white population of that province is not a large one, and in the face of this enormous influx, the government has been utterly helpless. It has not even referred to these assurances, when questioned by the great labour interests of the country. It has simply made reply that the subject should not be dealt with in a precipitate manner and that some further inquiries should be made. But if these assurances were effective, as the Prime Minister led us to believe they would be, they should have been put forward in the first instance, the House should have been informed of them as soon as parliament assembled, and the government should have stated definitely then, exactly what those assurances were, in what language they were couched, and should have given reasonable explanation to the House as to the causes of the disregard of those assurances. The question seems to be at present an economic one. The standards of life of labouring men in Canada are entirely different from those of the labourer in China and Japan. That has been dealt with fully by the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia, and if I were to repeat the language which some of these gentlemen have used, my right hon. friend would be the first to rise and accuse me of appealing to passion and prejudice. I shall not repeat their language but simply say that the question is an economical one. They are different standards of life. We cannot change, and we do not seek to change, those good standards of life which prevail among the labouring men of Canada. If we desired any change at all, it should be in the direction of improving these standards and with those even as they are at present, it is absolutely impossible for white labour in British Columbia to compete with the labour from China and Japan.

I do not believe that it is possible for white labour, under present conditions to stand that competition in the province of British Columbia. But, though this is, at present, merely an economic question, it may develop into a more serious question. And it is for that reason that I think we should have the policy of the government announced to parliament in clear and unmistakable terms. We should know what is the exact object of the mission of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to Japan. We should know with what success that mission has been attended. We should know whether or not the newspaper reports that that mission has practically come to a conclusion are correct, and we would particularly like to know whether or not the despatch in to-day's newspapers is correct stating, that no change will be made in the treaty, and no written assurance given, but that the oral assurance already given, will be repeated. Is that the whole outcome of the mission of the Postmaster General to Japan? If so, it does not seem to me that it improves the situation to any great extent. We have had oral assurance, we have had written assurance twice repeated and, if, as an outcome of the Postmaster General's mission to Japan, we have simply the oral assurance repeated, I do not see how the situation is materially improved. For these reasons, I thought it desirable to say a few words on this subject, in the hope that the Prime Minister might be induced to break his silence on this question, to treat the question as a serious one, and to give the House and the country some intimation of the policy of the government in regard to it.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), if I correctly interpret it, deprived of its warmth, and of the rhetorical flourishes with which it was embellished, is simply a request to have an authoritative statement of the position of the government on this question. It seems to me that he cannot be in doubt as to the position of the government in the matter. It never was the intention to keep himself, or anybody else, in doubt as to that policy, and

I have always been under the impression that that policy has been expressed so that it could be understood by anybody who would set his mind to the understanding of it. But, if, notwithstanding the efforts made, the hon. gentleman is still in doubt, he is quite entitled to have a full answer and that I will endeavour to give him.

I preface what I have to say with the remark that the question is one of very great moment, and one that ought to be treated with as much calmness as possible. I may say at once, in answer to the observation which my hon. friend made with regard to the treatment of Japanese immigration and Chinese immigration into this country, that, for many years past—in fact, ever since we assumed office—we have always made a clear distinction between Chinese immigration and Japanese immigration. For good or ill—I believe for good and not for ill—we have taken the position that Japanese immigration and Chinese immigration could not be treated in the same manner. I know that, so far as British Columbia is concerned, opinion is the same with regard to the two, and that the feeling is not sympathetic for either. But I have taken the position more than once on the floor of this House, and in the presence of my hon. friends from British Columbia, that we could not apply to Japanese immigration the same treatment that we have applied to Chinese immigration. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is aware of that. He knows the circumstances and has referred to them. He referred to them for one purpose alone, and not so as to cover all the ground. In 1900, Mr. Morrison, then a member of this House, spoke upon this question. My hon. friend is aware that I told him on that occasion that we had reason to suppose—we were not much informed upon the question, being new in office—that there were differences in the two classes of immigration, that coming from China and that coming from Japan, and that it would be our duty to inquire before adopting a policy with respect to them. We told him we intended to investigate the question. We did have the question investigated by a commission which reported to this House. Our action has been based upon the report of that commission. The commission reported that the people of British Columbia were hostile to both classes of immigration, but suggested that a different treatment might be introduced with regard to the Chinese and the Japanese. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) tried to make a little point between the government and their supporters by stating that information had been imparted to the members from British Columbia which had been withheld from the members of the House generally. My hon. friend's memory is singularly at fault on that point Had he referred to the speech delivered in this House only two days ago by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) he would have found that that hon. gentleman stated that the action which was adopted by the government was based upon the report of the commission which investigated this question. I think I am not referring to a past debate in quoting this speech, as this is practically the same debate. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ralph Smith) said:

> But I find in this report something very important, of which this House and the government ought to be reminded, and that is that during the sittings of that commission, the Japanese consul in Vancouver voluntarily proposed to the commission to use his influence in favour of the regulation of the Japanese influx into British Columbia. The commissioners reported that as the Japanese authorities had voluntarily consented to regulate the immigration of their people into Canada, it was important that this should be understood as a settlement of the question at any rate for that present time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was referring to the statement by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) which he will find at p. 774 of 'Hansard.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had not the pleasure of hearing that speech, having been called away. But I heard the speech of my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) and, speaking under correction, I do not think there was any difference in this respect between that speech and the speech of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo. As I have stated, the basis of our operation was the report of the commission, to which I shall allude at greater length later on. My hon. friend stated that our action with regard to Chinese immigration and Japanese immigration was based upon the fact that China was a comparatively weak country, while Japan had a big fleet. That was not my statement but was the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). That hon. gentleman stated that we had a different way of treating Chinese immigration and Japanese immigration because China had no fleet while Japan had a big fleet, and that this was immoral. This was given by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) as the basis for our action. But I do not wish to be bound by the language of the hon. member for North Toronto. I think that if I interpret my own words, they will be better understood than if I leave them to be interpreted by that hon. gentleman. The basis of our treatment of Japan and China in this matter is not the condition of these nations as to naval strength, but the circumstances in which these nations stand at the present time. The report of the commission of investigation, as regards Chinese immigration, was as follows:—

> In reference to the representations made by the people and legislature of British Columbia, wherein it is alleged:

That the province is flooded with an undesirable class of people, non-assimilative and most detrimental to the wage-earning classes of the people of the province, and that this extensive immigration of orientals is also a menace to the health of the community; that there is probability of a great disturbance to the economic conditions in the province and of grave injury being caused to the working classes by the large influx of labourers from China, as the standard of living of the masses of the people in that country differs so widely from the standard prevailing in the province, thus enabling them to work for a much less wage; that it is in the interests of the empire that the Pacific province of the Dominion should be occupied by a large and thoroughly British population rather than by one in which the number of aliens would form a large proportion:

We find that these representations are substantially true and urgently call for a remedy.

We also find that the increase of the capitation tax from $50 to $100 is ineffective and inadequate. Your commissioners are of opinion that the further immigration of Chinese labourers into Canada ought to be prohibited.

That the most desirable and effective means of attaining this end is by treaty supported by suitable legislation; that in the meantime and until this can be obtained, the capitation tax should be raised to $500.

The only point upon which your commissioners could not agree is the date when the capitation tax of $500 ought to come into effect.

Therefore upon this report, we brought in a Bill in 1903, imposing a capitation tax of $500. Now what was the report of the commissioners with regard to Japanese immigration? Did they also suggest that we should impose a capitation tax upon Japanese immigrants, that we should treat them exactly as we treated the Chinese? Nothing of the kind. They had a different treatment to suggest for the Japanese, and that is to be found in these words of the report:

Your commissioners fully appreciate the action taken by the government of Japan on August 2, 1900, whereby the governors of the prefectures of Japan were instructed to prohibit entirely for the time being the emigration of Japanese labourers for the Dominion of Canada. It is stated in a pamphlet purporting to be published by the Japanese consul at Vancouver: 'The principal reason for the measure thus taken was to avoid any friction that might occur by allowing them to come into British Columbia where their immigration was not desired by a certain element of that province,' and that 'the government of Japan wholly stopped the issuance of passports to any intending emigrants for Canada since the 1st of August last, 1900, and still continues to do so, under a provision of the Immigration Protection Law.' (Law No. 70, 1896.)

The course adopted by the Japanese government, if we may without presumption be permitted to say so, is most opportune, eliminating all cause of friction and irritation between Canada and Japan, and so favouring a freer trade and intercourse between the countries than could otherwise obtain.

Nothing further is needed to settle this most difficult question upon a firm basis than some assurance that the action already taken by the government of Japan will not be revoked.

Your commissioners desire to express their earnest hope that in the continuance of this friendly policy, legislation on this subject, by the Canadian government may be rendered unnecessary. Should, however, a change of policy be adopted, in this regard by the Japanese government whereby Japanese labourers may again be permitted to emigrate to Canada, the welfare of the province of British Columbia imperatively demands that effective measures be adopted to take the place of the inhibition now imposed by the Japanese government.

Your commissioners recommend that, in the event, an Act be passed by the Dominion government on the lines of what is known as the Natal Act, made sufficiently stringent and effective to accomplish the desired result.

Therefore, upon the advise of the commissioners to whom we entrusted the examination of the whole subject, we did not apply the same law to Japanese immigration, and for the reasons there stated by the commissioners, that the Japanese government themselves had undertaken to restrict the immigration of their people to Canada, and especially to the province of British Columbia. The commissioners went on to say that if this arrangement proved satisfactory it would not be necessary to take any other step; but if it did not prove effective, then they would advise the government to pass the Natal Act, which is, as every body knows, simply the imposition of an education test upon certain immigrants coming from Asia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the right hon. gentleman understand that while this treaty remains in its present form it is competent for us to pass such an Act?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is simply begging the question, because I have already said to the hon. gentleman that we have an understanding with the Japanese government. But I will come to that point presently. I have no hesitation however to say that under the treaty we have now, we could not pass the Natal Act, it would be contrary to the treaty. But I have also to observe to my hon. friend that we ratified the treaty on the assurance that the restrictions then existing would be continued.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have you any objections to producing these?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated two or three days ago, in answer to a motion moved by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that as soon as Mr. Lemieux came back, whether he was successful in his mission or not, the whole correspondence would be brought down. The hon. gentleman, I am sorry to say, is not as patient in this respect as he might be. We will have all the information in proper time.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should we not have had this information when we were ratifying the treaty with Japan ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We were ratifying the treaty on an understanding that we had with Japan. But let me go on and complete my answer to my hon. friend. The leader of the opposition asks what is the attitude of the government upon this question ? As I said a moment ago, in 1903 we refused to apply to Japanese immigration the same restriction that we applied to Chinese immigration, for the reason stated by the commissioners whom we had instructed to investigate the matter, namely, that the Japanese government had undertaken to restrain their own people, not because we wanted Canada to be flooded by Japanese immigrants in spite of public opinion in British Columbia, but simply because the Japanese government themselves, out of friendship for the Canadian people, out of friendship for the British people, out of friendship for the King of England, who was their ally, they had themselves undertaken to impose restrictions upon immigration to Canada in order to maintain the good relations then existing between the two populations. Well, the years 1904, 1905 and 1906 passed on. There was no Japanese immigration of any consequence into British Columbia. The understanding which we had was respected. But something occurred in the meantime. We had an exposition in Tokio, a very successful exposition, and the merchants of Canada asked us to have the treaty which existed between Great Britain and Japan apply to Canada. That request came from both sides of this House, and from the whole country. When we took measures to have that treaty with Great Britain applied to Canada, the matter was referred to the Canadian parliament, and not a word of dissent was expressed. I knew very well that we would have the same difficulty that we had before, I knew very well that the question of immigration must arise ; so we had correspondence with the Japanese authorities on the subject and we had from them reasonable assurances that the restrictions which had been placed upon the immigration of their people by the Japanese government, would be continued. The matter went on until this season. This season, all of a sudden, there was an influx of Japanese immigrants to British Columbia, some 8,000 were landed there during the summer. That was contrary to our understanding, I say this without any hesitation. Then what was to be done ? Were we to assume at once—and this is the reproach that I made some time ago to the leader of the opposition—were we to assume at once that the Japanese authorities had gone back on their understanding ? We would not take that position, but we acted, I think, in a reasonable manner. Finding that the understanding we had with the Japanese authorities was not as we conceived it to be, we did not jump at a conclusion, we did not send notice to at once put an end to the treaty and we did not use any threatening language. We adopted the very simple and very ordinary method of sending a commissioner to Tokio in order to obtain a proper explanation as to what had taken place, what the reason was for what had taken place, and how a recurrence could be prevented. Does anybody blame the government for taking that attitude ? Was that not the proper and legitimate attitude to take ? Before coming to any conclusion, before denouncing the treaty or taking any rash action, was it not better that we should go to Tokio to confer with a friendly government, a government which we have reason to believe, is friendly which, at all events, is the ally of our Sovereign ? Was it not better to go there and say, why is it that this understanding we have with you has not been respected ? There is more than one way in which an understanding can be violated. It can be violated wilfully. We refuse, in the absence of further information, to believe that it has been violated wilfully. It can be evaded by designing people. I believe that that is what took place. At all events our commissioner has gone there to try to obtain information and upon the result of his mission must depend the decision as to the action we shall take. The treaty might have to be denounced if it were shown that the Japanese authorities had been wilfully and systematically violating it. I refuse to believe that such is the case, but if such were the case there would be no other course open to us than to denounce the treaty. If it had only been evaded, if certain designing parties had taken means to get around and surprise the good faith of the Japanese authorities then that is a matter which can surely be rectified, and when it is rectified we will continue to get the benefit of the treaty and the benefit of the restriction which we have had up to the present time. I ask my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), since he has taken some interest in this matter, if he does not know as well as I do that the people of British Columbia are averse to having any Asiatic immigration in the country. I regret this position of the people there. I regret that this should be the public opinion, but it is public opinion, I know, and therefore we must pay respect to it. But, if such be public opinion, is it not infinitely better, in view of the relations which we have with Japan, in view of the fact that Japan is the ally of the King of England, and in view of the fact that we want to have trade relations with the empire of Japan, that the restriction which we desire to have imposed should be imposed, not by enactment of this parliament, but that it should be brought about by the voluntary action of the Japanese themselves ? Who can doubt that ? My hon. friend himself will admit it and that is the reason that we have our commissioner at Tokio. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked me a moment ago if we are to believe certain rumours of newspapers. Well, Sir, I have only to say that my hon. friend should not be too hasty in crediting newspaper rumours. The modern journalist is a very enterprising man, he wants to have a paragraph for his paper and he will publish anything that comes in his way without taking the trouble to confirm it or to see see whether it is absolutely accurate or not. The journalist who has published this, I may say to my hon. friend, has more information than the government, and I think the government has all the information that it is possible to have upon this question at this moment What will be the success of the mission of Mr. Lemieux is something that I am not prepared to say because I do not think that any conclusion has been reached as yet. I have reason to believe, and I hope that Mr. Lemieux's effort will be crowned with success, and that he will come back with a satisfactory solution of this difficulty. But, it is a matter which is absolutely in abeyance, as to which there is absolutely no information and as to which there cannot be any information until Mr. Lemieux has concluded his mission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Any information as to the probable date of his return ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I expect that Mr. Lemieux will sail probably not later than the 3rd of January next.

Mr. FOSTER. Direct ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER Direct, of course. Why should it not be direct ?

Mr. FOSTER. The newspapers have led us astray again.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is too old a bird to be caught by that chaff, I am sure. He ought to have more experience than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I always used to believe the St. John 'Sun.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, if the hon. gentleman will believe the St John 'Globe' it would be better.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the 'Globe' now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the present time it is impossible to say whether the conclusion has been satisfactory or not. I am not able to give any information, but I venture to express the hope and the strong hope that it will be. Now, I think that I have made the position of the government very clear. I have only this other word to say. We have had some correspondence upon the subject. The other day we had a motion on the paper, moved by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), to have this correspondence laid on the table. I said then that there was no objection but that I must warn my hon. friend that we could not bring down this correspondence until the completion of the mission of Mr Lemieux. Mr. Lemieux will be here certainly about the 15th of January, and as soon as he comes back it must be our duty to give the House all the information that we have on the subject. In the meantime let me recapitulate our position. We have made a difference between Chinese and Japanese immigration. We appointed a commission in order to be advised upon the subject. We were advised by our commissioners that we should bring in legislation to restrict Chinese immigration. We brought in legislation. We were advised by our commissioners not to bring in such legislation as far as Japanese immigration was concerned. We relied upon the information which had been given to us and upon the assurances which had been given us by the Japanese authorities that they would restrict immigration and we acted upon that suggestion. We were advised further by them that so long as these restrictions were maintained by the Japanese authorities no legislation was advisable. We have acted upon the faith of these assurances which were repeated to us, but when we found that these assurances had not been absolutely carried out, when we found that in spite of these assurances a large contingent of Japanese had come into the country who were obnoxious to the people of British Columbia, we sent a commissioner to Japan in order to ascertain the exact position of affairs. We are awaiting the report of that commissioner before any action is taken, and at the present time I think the position of the government upon this matter is as clear as it is possible to make it, and I do not intend that there should be any ambiguity about it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, before this motion is disposed of, I would like to add an observation or two to what has been already stated in support of it. I take it from my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the mission of the commissioner who represents us at present in Japan is not terminated, that he is still there, liable to receive instructions from this government and that his proceedings have not yet come to an end. I think that is important, in view, particularly of the despatch which most of us no doubt saw in the press this morning, that his mission had come to an end, and I may say, Mr. Speaker, that for my own part, if it has come to an end, it does not in the least degree surprise me. As I understand that cable message the Japanese government have informed Mr. Lemieux that they intend placing some restriction upon immigration without in any way bindng themselves to do it, without giving him a diplomatic note to that effect and without in any way giving up the very important privilege which they secured by the convention of 1906. That result which should surprise nobody because it seems to me that that country, having obtained from Canada a very important concession indeed, could not be expected, under the conditions laid down in the treaty, to give up that concession.

It has occurred to me that since the opening of this session we could have approached this question differently, and that we could have strengthened the hands of our envoy to Japan by permitting him to make known to the government of Japan what is the unanimous feeling of this country with regard to that particular clause of the treaty which has taken him on such a distant mission. There is a precedent to be found in other countries for adopting a resolution indicating the feeling of this House on the subject, and I believe that a unanimous expression of opinion from this House would have enabled Mr. Lemieux, as it has enabled diplomats in other instances, to bring pressure to bear upon the government of Japan by showing that public opinion here was unanimous against that most regretful surrender of our rights which this government conceded to Japan in 1906. I would have upheld a resolution in that sense ; not a resolution such as has been proposed, a wishy-washy milk-and-water resolution merely saying that we must adopt a policy looking to restriction. I would have favoured a resolution affirming the principle, that in the case of no nation will we give up the all important principle to us that we must retain our absolute control over immigration. As was hinted at by the question put a moment ago by the leader of the opposition and which the Prime Minister has found it impossible to answer, we have undoubtedly by that clause completely abandoned our control with respect to immigration coming from Japan. As I understand it we have abandoned and surrendered, so far as Japan is concerned, these measures which it has been found absolutely necessary in the interests of Canada to embody in our general immigration laws. We cannot now exclude Japanese coming to this country who would be stopped under these immigration laws for the causes enumerated in these laws. We have abandoned that control, and I believe that had we made known to the government of Japan that there was a unanimous opinion in this House and throughout the country that such control had been abandoned injudiciously and contrary to the manifest and unanimous wish of our people, it would have strengthened Mr. Lemieux and enabled him to arrive at some other conclusion than that at which he appears to have arrived, judging by the terms of the despatch received this morning.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. MONK. Certainly.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the treaty prevented the operation of our ordinary immigration laws as against Japanese ?

Mr MONK. Certainly. That is what I understand from the terms of the treaty, and if my hon. friend will take the trouble to read the first article of that treaty he will find that the Japanese are the only subjects of any foreign nation which send immigrants to this country, who under the terms of that article are placed, so far as their right to enter this country is concerned, upon the same footing exactly as Canadian subjects themselves.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I was referring to the general regulations of the immigration laws, and I want to inform my hon. friend that Japanese subjects coming to this country have been deported repeatedly for general reasons which apply to any other class of immigrants under our immigration regulations.

Mr. MONK. I must tell my hon. friend immediately that I cannot find in our treaty with Japan any such reservation as there is in the treaty between the United States and Japan. If my right hon. friend, or some one on his behalf, had taken the trouble at the time we entered into this very serious agreement, to look at a somewhat similar treaty entered into a short time before between the United States and Japan, he would have found an immense difference between the two. In the treaty of 1894 between Japan and the United States there is to be found a special reservation, which we have not copied into our treaty in any way, reserving to the United States government the right to control absolutely by immigration laws the right of Japanese to enter the United States, the same as with reference to any other people. I say, Sir, that a resolution passed in the sense I have indicated—whatever may be Mr. Lemieux's position with respect to the Japanese government—would have given strength to the representations he was making. But in order to have such a resolution we would have to have in the game (which evidently was prepared by the government as to the discussion which has taken place in this House) a little more diplomacy than we have hitherto found among gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches. Have we really in this government any diplomats ? Can we find among these gentlemen on the treasury benches ; I will not say the village Hampden of Grey's Elegy, but any man of the type of Lord Palmerston, or Cavour, or Bismark, or to come down a little nearer to our own country, can we find among these gentlemen any man who has the foresight shown by Macdonald or George Etienne Cartier in the building up of this country. For my part I see no such diplomats among the gentlemen who sit before me to-day. My right hon. friend has a sunny smile I admit, and in his own country that sunny smile is very often effective, but in his relations with other countries it has been of no assistance to him. I well remember in 1896 that I very nearly lost my election because we were told in the county of Jacques Cartier that if the Liberal party came to power we would have for the first time since confederation a real live Minister of Agriculture who with one stroke of the pen would obtain for our agricultural interests untold advantages in the American market Has anything come of that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs says 'yes.' I would like him to point out, in the balance of nearly $100,000,000 a year against us in our trade with the United States what has been achieved by this government in the direction then foretold. We had a very costly commission to the United States ; we had several of our best qualified men on that mission, but how did it end ? All the questions to be solved were left in abeyance except one which was chosen for pre-eminence, and the House and the country knows that with respect to that question we were foiled from the beginning, and in the end lost an important part of our territory. And when we denounced our treaties with Belgium and Germany—and that stroke of policy has been the boast of my right hon. friend and his colleagues more than once —when we denounced our treaties with Belgium and Germany, what became of it ? From the absolute want of foresight and prudence and care in negotiation on the part of this government, we have had the doors of that important country, Germany, practically closed against us by a surtax, and we are deprived of an immense commerce, which goes to benefit our neighbours to the south. We gave preferential treatment to Great Britain, and twice, in the most definite manner, my right hon. friend and the hon. Minister of Finance have tried to obtain something for us by way of compensation. Have they succeeded ? They have failed. And as a last instance of want of that diplomatic foresight which must be acquired by these gentlemen if we are not to fall into greater mishaps, we have this fatal clause in the convention made with Japan, of which we have not seen the end, and which could easily have been avoided if our hon. friends had only brought to the consideration of that treaty a little of that prudence and foresight which Americans displayed the other day when they treated with the empire of Japan on the subject of immigration. On more than one occasion, and again to-day, my right hon. friend has endeavoured to shield the indefensible position of his government by invoking the amicable and friendly relations which exist between Great Britain and Japan. Let me point out that this question, in reality a small and limited question, of the uncontrolled rate of immigration into this country of orientals has nothing to do in any shape or form with the conditions of amity and alliance which exist between the British empire and Japan. They are not for a single moment to be considered together. Who knows what are the definite stipulations and guarantees between Great Britain and Japan? Nobody knows even what that treaty is. It is a political treaty. It lies hidden in the chancelleries of both countries, under the care of men who would rather surrender their lives than make known what the conditions of that alliance are. It concerns interests infinitely vaster and infinitely different from those which we have been discussing here to-day. It is entirely foreign to the immigration question of British Columbia or even of Canada. It has been brought about by menaces to our empire in the east, by growth and discernment on the part of Japan, and by other causes which have brought those two powerful nations together. But that is a very different consideration from the question of commercial arrangements, and it would be futile and childish to suppose that our dealing with this question interferes in the slightest degree with the important treaty of alliance, whatever the terms of that treaty may be, which exists between Great Britain and Japan. Indeed, Sir, the conditions of the commercial convention concluded in 1904 between Great Britain and Japan are so totally and entirely distinct that they are not to be considered in any way with that alliance, upon which, if we are to believe hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House, our arrangements regarding immigration to a certain extent depend. They are totally different, and it is unfair in the highest degree to endeavour to throw the responsibility for this particular convention upon the British government. Indeed, Sir, it is sufficient to take cognizance of the commercial treaty concluded between England and Japan in 1904 to see that with rare prudence and foresight Great Britain excluded Canada and all the important British dependencies from the operation of that treaty. In other words, at that time, when England was concluding commercial arrangements with Japan, she was giving us, in the freest and most independent manner, the right to make our own convention concerning our relations, commercial or otherwise, with Japan; so that the responsibility for the convention of 1906 rests entirely upon my right hon. friend and his government, and upon nobody else. It is, moreover, a commercial arrangement.

Let us for a moment open the books which contain commercial treaties. In all those treaties special clauses are inserted reserving to the parties the right of denouncing them. There is not a commercial treaty which is not liable to be denounced. One would suppose that when a man speaks in this House of the denunciation of this particular little convention of 1906, he is to a certain extent placing in peril the political relations of the empire of Japan and the British empire. I invite the consideration of the House to the inanity of such an observation as that; there is nothing in it. The United States and other countries conclude commercial treaties every day; they denounce them, and the treaties come to an end; they are not put into operation at all. The American Republic had a treaty of commerce with France in 1898. A little misunderstanding arose, and it has not been put into operation; the relations of the two countries remain as they were. When Great Britain denounced the commercial treaties with Germany and Belgium, did that denunciation interfere in any way with our relations? Not at all; our relations continued excellent. The terms of the commercial arrangement were revised and re-concluded, and the great mistake we made was in not providing for our commerce with both of those countries at the time Great Britain was treating diplomatically with them. I mention these facts, because it seems to me that there is in the public mind the idea that anybody who wishes to get rid of this obnoxious surrender which this government most improvidently made in 1906 puts in peril in some way the relations of the British empire with Japan. I venture to say that if to-morrow this purely commercial arrangement were denounced, the reasons for it would be obvious to the Japanese government and would no doubt lead in a short time to the conclusion of new arrangements without the slightest friction or the slightest difficulty arising between the two countries.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of denouncing the treaty?

Mr. MONK. I will come to my hon. friend's question in a moment. My hon. friend took occasion to explain his views here the other day, and this leads me to remark that although we are peacefully discussing this question here, it did not look so peaceful at one time. I can remember a few weeks ago when two gentlemen from the province of British Columbia came to Montreal, and I think one of them was my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. You do me too much honour.

Mr. MONK. They were the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) and the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher). If those gentlemen interpreted rightly the feelings which animated them, I can only compare them to two whirlwinds from the way they spoke when interviewed by our papers in Montreal.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I think that neither in Montreal nor Ottawa nor elsewhere did my hon. friend find any statement to any newspaper from me regarding that matter.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend stood by his colleague and spoke in no measured terms. He said that we were going to have a renewal of the Boston bay difficulty.

Mr. GALLIHER. May I be allowed to set the hon. gentleman perfectly right? It always gives me considerable pleasure to stand by and listen and not express myself unless I feel like it.

Mr. MONK. I should have thought that as my hon. friend and the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) are arcades ambo, and my hon. friend expressed no dissent from this menace of civil war, he endorsed the language used by his comrade in arms. On the principle that 'qui ne dit mot consent,' I should say they were both on the same platform, and they were equal, both of them, to the 20,000 Cornish men who wanted to know the reason why. I perceive, however, that these two gentlemen have modified their views since, and to-day they are more peacefully inclined. But with reference to the question: What is the use of making long speeches and passing resolutions, if we passed a hundred resolutions, they will be of no avail? Well, there is no use our proposing to adopt a policy to regulate the coming of the orientals to our country, when we ignore the real cure for the evil. The only cure is to remove the obstacle which lies in our way and which will prevent us, until we do remove it, from carrying out any policy of restriction. Why were not references made by these gentlemen opposite to that point? It can only be, as was pointed out by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), because there is a kind of entente cordiale between the government and my hon. friends from British Columbia. To me the conduct of my hon. friends is as good as a play. If the Japanese in this country, who are very intelligent, saw that play as I see it, what opinion could they have of this parliament and of its manner of asserting its rights ? There is no doubt in my mind that the general opinion of this country is that we committed a grievous mistake when we abandoned, as we did in that carelessly made treaty, the right to control immigration to this country, from whatever country it comes. Is there a man in this House who will rise and say that we were right when we abandoned that control? Is there any one who will say that we should allow any nation, white or yellow, Japanese or European, free and uncontrolled access into this new country which we are building up ? There will not be found a man who will uphold such an idea even with qualification. My hon. friends asked me if I would denounce the treaty. They set traps in order to be able to say afterwards : You want to denounce the treaty. Well, I take this position : I say that after having exhausted diplomatic means, after having sought to make the Japanese people understand that we committed a mistake, that we did not interpret properly the feelings of our own people,—after having done all this and failed, what then have we to fall back upon ? Why, we should fall back upon our right ; a right is embodied in the treaty. You will find it in every one of these small commercial arrangements the right to put the treaty at an end on six months' notice. Would I hesitate ? Not for one moment. Having exhausted all diplomatic methods, I would see that the feeling of this country was respected, and would proceed to have embodied in a new treaty such a provision as the Americans have in their arrangements with Japan, and which has worked perfectly well.

My right hon. friend says we ought to wait for the papers before discussing this question. What papers ? On the 24th April, 1906, my right hon. friend spoke as follows :

> I beg to lay on the table the treaty with Japan and all the papers connected therewith.

But now when we are face to face with the results of the treaty and when we are seeking information, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), gives us practically the reply which was given by the clerk on the circumlocution office to the man in Dickens. When asked when the case of Jarndyce and Jarndyce would go on, he said, you must not say you want to know, you know, for you will not know. That treaty was a mistake. I find, on reference to 'Hansard' that it came to us from the Senate, and I am within the judgment of hon. members when I say that we do not, as a rule, follow as carefully perhaps as we should the Bills which come to us from that House. Whether the reason be that we have too much confidence in that House or do not expect anything harmful to come from it, that is the invariable custom. I remember well the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) spoke on that occasion. Otherwise I frankly confess I would not remember having been in the House so quickly did the measure pass through. I remember my hon. friend's remarks on that subject, and I regret to learn, that his frank exposé of the situation and his warning given in most unmistakable terms, but to which the government paid no heed, has brought him, not the gratitude of the government, but the loss of the nomination for his constituency in his own province. I hope that is not true, but if it be, it only shows to what depths sometimes politics bring us in this country. I am not inclined to think that the denunciation of this treaty is a matter of such grave importance. The government made an indefensible mistake. If the measures taken to retrieve the mistake should fail, it will be necessary for us as Canadians to stand on our rights. It may become necessary for us to say to the Japanese government that for reasons, which no doubt with their intelligence they will understand, it has become necessary for us to put an end to the treaty.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). No exception can be taken if hon. gentlemen opposite wish now to discuss the Japanese treaty I might, however, remind them that it is the rule in the British parliament, which is the model of our parliament, not to try to make party political capital out of our relations with foreign countries when negotiations are still going on with those countries. I do not accuse hon. gentlemen opposite of trying to do that now. I would not accuse my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) of doing that, but I fear very much that the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite will take this question up and make party warfare over it. The result will be to give the impression abroad that this question is being made a subject of party warfare in Canada. That certainly should not be the case. It is a question in which Canada is greatly interested—I am frank to say, it is a question in which the empire is interested. We have adhered to the treaty between the King of Great Britain and the Dominions beyond the Seas with the empire of Japan. We did so with the thorough approval, I think, not only of the people of Canada but of the government of Great Britain, because the adherence to that treaty meant improving the cordial and friendly relations between the British empire and the Japanese empire, an object held close at heart by all true people belonging to the British empire. We did this, also, with the full concurrence of the parliament of Canada. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr Monk) confesses that his own memory was so slightly impressed with the question of the Japanese treaty a year ago that, except for one speech, that of my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Kennedy) he would not have remembered that the Treaty Bill had passed the House. That appears to have been the state of mind of the whole opposition. I find no criticism of the treaty. The opposition concurred in what was done. I have the report of 'Hansard' of that day's debate. The right hon. leader of the government moved the second reading of the Bill respecting a certain treaty between Canada and Japan, and explained the effect of the Bill. Mr. Borden asked what was the value of a yen. He then went on to say: 'I do not find any mention of grain or flour.' Then, I find some remarks by Mr. Kennedy, and a question by Mr. J. D Reid, as to the wages of white men in British Columbia. And I find no other reference by any other member of the opposition to the question.

Mr. BERGERON. Or by any member from British Columbia ?

Mr. FISHER. Or by any member from British Columbia. Because, the whole parliament of Canada was satisfied with the adherence to the treaty.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman will permit me a question, I would like to ask him if he finds that the Prime Minister assured the House that immigration would be limited by Japan to about four hundred or five hundred a year ?

Mr. FISHER. Not on that occasion. If hon. gentlemen opposite thought that important why did they not ask the Prime Minister about it ?

Mr. FOSTER. He was asked and gave the assurance, and it is there before the hon. gentleman's eyes.

Mr. FISHER. Where is the question ?

Mr. LENNOX At the head of page 1551.

At the present time the Japanese government do not allow immigration from their own provinces with the exception of a very few from each province. I think it is not more than four or five from each province.

Mr. FISHER. That is right, but that was not in answer to a question from the opposition. There was no demand from the opposition——

Mr. FOSTER. That was after Mr. Kennedy had made his objections to the treaty. The point having been raised by Mr. Kennedy, it was not necessary for any one else to raise it.

Mr. FISHER. It was evident that the opposition did not ask it anyway.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is not making this a party question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) have any objection to giving to the House the written assurance that he spoke of in 1903 ?

Mr. FISHER. I have not it here. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said the treaty was a mistake. I do not see why the hon. gentleman at the time did not——

Mr. MONK I did not say the treaty was a mistake, but that that article was a mistake, and that I had concurred in its adoption upon the assurance of the Prime Minister.

Mr. FISHER. I took down what I thought were the hon. gentleman's words when he spoke them. Of course, I accept his statement. I understand him to say now that the treaty is not a mistake.

Mr. MONK. I said that the treaty was a mistake inasmuch as it provided no control of the immigration of Japanese into this country.

Mr. FISHER. Then the hon. gentleman says that it is a mistake to that extent. The treaty, as a treaty, may be interpreted in that way, but as explained by the leader of the government, when the treaty passed the House, we had an engagement from the Japanese which had been in existence for some time and which had worked well, in regard to Japanese immigration into Canada. It was expected to be continued, and for good reason, under the treaty. It had worked satisfactorily and well, and there was no reason why it should not continue to work satisfactorily and well. I will not go into that part of the question because my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has dealt with it very fully. But one or two points raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier should be referred to. That hon. gentleman compared this treaty with the treaty between Japan and the United States. That treaty was made in 1894, at about the time when the treaty between Great Britain and Japan was made. Japan was then in a very different position from that in which she was in 1906 when Canada adhered to the English treaty. At that time we had every reason to believe that Japan would not accept any conditions in connection with the adherence to that treaty. When she made the treaty with the United States, Japan had not fought the Japanese-Russian war. She was not then in the position, the proud position, which she occupies to-day. At that time Japan was very eager indeed to secure immunity from the interference in affairs within her own territory by European nations and the United States. It is well known that, in these treaties, she demanded no tariff concessions at all commensurate with the tariff concessions she yielded to these countries. Why did not she do so ? Simply because she was eagerly reaching out to acquire that recognition amongst the nations of the world which she had not then secured; she was anxious for that, and for that alone. She was then ready and willing to submit to conditions which she would not dream of submitting to when we adhered to this treaty. Now, hon. gentlemen have not undertaken to depreciate in any way the value of the treaty to Canada in other respects. I am glad they did not, because I find that hon. gentlemen opposite, on various occasions in this House, have affirmed the value of a treaty of this kind with Japan. The first reference to the matter I can find in the House of Commons, was made by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). On May 29, 1905, he called the attention of the government to a letter which had appeared in the Yarmouth 'Telegram,' copied from 'Industrial Canada.' It was a letter written by the 'J. Spencer Turner Co., H. H. Lehman, secretary and treasurer.' This was a New York company, and the letter showed the disadvantages which Canadian cotton manufacturers laboured under in the Japanese market in comparison with American cotton manufacturers. The hon. member drew the attention of the Minister of Finance to the matter, saying:

This is a very important matter for the consideration of the government, if it has not already been dealt with.

The Minister of Finance replied. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) also spoke on the question, rather implying a rebuke to the government because they had not adhered to the treaty. I may say that in the same year, on June 22nd, in a discussion of this question, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) said:

This is one of the most important commercial questions before Canada to-day. The market of Japan, I believe, is the best market we can hope to gain—and a growing market too.

Evidently hon. gentlemen opposite fully appreciated good relations with Japan, and urged adherence to the treaty so as to get the commercial advantages which that treaty gives. I may say incidentally that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), when speaking on the address in 1906, spoke at considerable length in regard to Japan, and deliberately censured the government for not having adhered to this treaty earlier. He said:

If there is one reason now why this treaty should be hailed and acclaimed with delight and with applause, as I believe it should be, there were ten reasons ten years ago why it should have been adopted and its provisions taken advantage of by this country, simply because ten years of added benefit over and above what this country can now obtain, would have been obtained by intercourse with that country at a period of time when, probably its demand upon such products as Canada could have afforded, would have been even greater than they will be in the years to come.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. BARKER. Those are commercial benefits.

Mr. FISHER. I am speaking of the commercial benefits. Hon. gentlemen opposite are urging the commercial benefits, as they were then. No doubt it was because they appreciated the commercial advantages, as the government did, as the people of British Columbia themselves appreciated the commercial advantages perhaps more than any persons else in Canada—it was for that reason that the treaty was accepted without any provisions in the treaty itself against immigration from Japan.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman spoke a moment ago of the difficulty of getting Japan to consent to such a stipulation as that which was included in the United States treaty of 1894. Was there any attempt made, and was there a refusal?

Mr. FISHER. We were impressed with the belief that Japan would not adhere to the treaty with any conditions attached to it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was any attempt made?

Mr. FISHER. That is a matter I cannot speak about, the Prime Minister can speak about it better than I.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the Prime Minister will tell us.

Mr. FISHER. Now, I have here a copy of the Montreal 'Gazette' of this morning, which I think even the leader of the opposition will acknowledge is a Conservative paper, if it does not always support his policy. I will read an article which appeared in the 'Gazette' this morning in consequence, no doubt, of the remarks made in this House yesterday by the hon. gentleman who spoke on this question. Speaking of those gentlemen it says:

They should have protested last year, when the treaty with Japan was before the Houses for ratification. They had ample warning of what the treaty was. It was pointed out in at least a portion of the press that the arrangement was more than a trade convention, that it was a treaty of friendship, guaranteeing to the people of each country when residing in the other the full rights of natives in all that related to freedom of movement, trade, domicile and protection of the laws. The provisions were as plain as they could be put in the English language. They were reciprocal and mutual, and were in no way limited by the domestic regulations of either country. The treaty was sought by the Canadian government after the matter had been discussed in parliament. The time to have objected to it and to the immigration of Japanese which it provided for was when it was presented to parliament for ratification. Those who did not object then are neither doing themselves nor their country credit by raising an outcry now when the honour of the government, of parliament and of the nation is concerned in living up to an agreement freely entered upon, with another free nation

That is the opinion of the Montreal 'Gazette.' But the 'Gazette' has overlooked a fact which has clearly been stated on various occasions, and was well known before the treaty was undertaken, before the treaty was brought into this House for ratification, that the government had an arrangement with the Japanese government by which immigration from Japan into Canada would be restricted without any reference to the treaty at all. We had that full knowledge, as parliament had, and with that full knowledge parliament ratified the treaty and consented to adopt it without conditions which were outside of the treaty with Great Britain. What I said to the leader of the opposition a moment ago in regard to the conditions in the United States treaty, was simply an explanation of the difference between the Japan of the date when this treaty was ratified and the Japan of the date when they ratified their treaty with the United States, a totally different condition of affairs, a totally different nation with which to deal. I have reason to believe that the question as it came before us in 1906 was this, Will you adhere to the British treaty without conditions, in view of the arrangement which our government and your government have made or will you not adhere to the British treaty at all? That was a position which I think this government were justified in taking, and they recommended to parliament the adoption of this treaty, and parliament was safe in undertaking to adopt the treaty.

I will not repeat what has already been said so well and a great deal better than I could say it, by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will only allude to it to say that I believe most emphatically that the Japanese government are desirous and have been desirous all through, of adhering to the arrangement that was made about 1902 between the right hon. leader of the government and the Japanese government. I believe they are as desirous of adhering to that arrangement to-day. I believe they are quite willing to carry out that arrangement, but I do know that during the last few months in British Columbia, that arrangement has been evaded or ignored and that people have come in in larger numbers than, under that arrangement, they ought to have done. I am not prepared, knowing something of the Japanese, to believe that the Japanese government had themselves either connived at or instigated, or deliberately allowed an evasion of that arrangement. That is my own personal opinion. The House may take it for what it is worth, but I am fully satisfied in my own mind that the Japanese government will live up to its treaty arrangements. I do not believe that the Japanese desire the denouncement of this treaty any more than we do. I am prepared to say quite frankly—and I speak for myself, I speak for every one in Canada, I speak for the gentlemen of the opposition as well as the gentlemen on this side of the House—that it would be a misfortune to Canada if the Japanese treaty had to be denounced. As was said a few minutes ago by my hon. friend the leader of the government, it may come to the point that such a thing may have to be done, but I would deplore that condition of affairs, I would regret it extremely and I believe it would be to the injury of Canada if that treaty had to be denounced. How can we evade denouncing it? We can evade it by making representations to the Japanese government through the medium of our commissioner in Japan to see whether we cannot secure such an arrangement as will be entirely satisfactory even to the people of British Columbia in regard to Japanese immigration into Canada. I still hold that we can succeed. Hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted newspaper reports as to what is happening in Tokio. They need not rely on these.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is the same paper that the hon. gentleman quoted from —the Montreal 'Gazette.'

Mr. FISHER. It may be but there is this great difference that I was quoting the editorial opinion of the paper. The hon. gentleman was quoting the news reports and they are very different things. I am not basing anything I said upon what the 'Gazette' reported to have occurred somewhere else. I was giving the hon. gentleman the opinion of the 'Gazette' itself. I know that it is not always welcome to the hon. gentleman, as we know that on not infrequent occasions the Montreal 'Gazette' has hauled the hon. gentleman over the coals and told him very clearly that he is not expressing the views of the party. I do not know whether the 'Gazette' is right, that is for him and the 'Gazette' to discuss and not for me. As to their news, it is quite a different thing, and I think the hon. gentleman and his friends had better wait until they have authoritative news before discussing diplomatic questions when the diplomacy is being carried on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman going to give us the written assurance I asked for?

Mr. FISHER. I would ask him to possess his soul in patience. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has undertaken to read us a lesson on history, has been telling us how much better the diplomatic relations of Canada were attended to by Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Etienne Cartier than they recently have been and he dragged me into the discussion. I do not want to be dragged very much into the discussion, I am not boasting to-day, or in general, I think, a great deal about the results of the policy of the Dominion government in agricultural matters. I leave the facts to speak for themselves, but as the facts have to speak for themselves, I will just give the hon. gentleman one fact which perhaps may be of advantage to him in the discussion of agricultural matters again. He said that in 1896 the electors of his county were told that in consequence of the fact that a prominent farmer was going to be the Minister of Agriculture in the Laurier government, we were going to get great advantages in the market in the United States and he asked : Where are the advantages ? Well, I will just give him one of the advantages. Speaking from memory, about six months after the Laurier government was formed, I entered into negotiations with the Department of Agriculture at Washington. I went down to Washington and I spent a week there. I was told and warned by a prominent agriculturist of the Conservative party that there was no use in my going to Washington on the question of the quarantine of cattle between us and the United States because the Conservative party had been trying for years to remove the quarantine without success and therefore, of course, it was no use for a poor Liberal to try to do it. I went down there and I effected an arrangement by which the quarantine arrangements between Canada and the United States, in so far as our exports of cattle and sheep to the United States were concerned, were done away with, and I did it in less than a week. What was the result ? In the years before—1893, 1894, 1895, 1896—the average value of the cattle that we sent to the United States was about $10,000 a year. I brought the arrangement into force in February, 1897, and in the first half of that fiscal year we exported half a million dollars worth of cattle to the United States ; in the next year we exported $1,250,000 worth ; in the next year we exported $1,250,000 worth ; in the year 1900 we exported $1,500,000 worth, or a total, in three and a half years, of $4,500,000 nearly of value as against $10,000 a year for the four years previous to 1897.

Mr. MONK. All that was due to my hon. friend ?

Mr. FISHER. It was due distinctly to me, because I did what the friends of the hon. gentleman said there was no use of my trying to do, and what one of them told me I need not try to do because his leaders had failed.

Mr. MONK. Did my hon. friend lower the tariff on agricultural products ?

Mr. FISHER. I am not talking about tariffs; I am talking about what I knew I could do, what I tried to do, and did do, and I did not attempt to do things that I knew I could not do.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the question——

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend will please not interrupt me. I have only five minutes until six o'clock and I am not going to be interrupted. The hon. gentleman also talked about our policy in connection with the British preference. Now, I want to say to the House that if the hon. gentleman can find anything in the fiscal history of Canada which is more the proud boast of the Liberal party or of the people who are concerned in the trade of Canada than the British preference, I want him to name it. I am proud of the British preference, every Liberal in Canada is proud of the British preference, and I venture to say that in spite of certain leaders of the Conservative party the great mass of the Conservative electors are proud of the British preference. Why am I proud of the British preference ? I am proud of it first of all because it was the master stroke by which we were able to secure the denouncement of the German and Belgian treaties—treaties which throttled Canadian trade and in regard to which the Canadian people were not consulted. Previous to the denouncement of those treaties Sir Charles Tupper and the leaders of the Conservative party had tried for a long period of time to have them denounced and had failed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is getting a little away from the question.

Mr. FISHER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling, but I am only replying to the words of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and if it had not been for his reflection upon our diplomacy, it would not have been necessary for me to have referred to these matters. I was just pointing out that our diplomacy in regard to these things as in regard to the Japanese treaty had been successful. It was an indiscretion no doubt on the part of the member for Jacques Cartier, but not on my part. If I may not discuss the British preference I will only say that the arrangements in connection with the French treaty are an eviednce of the wisdom of the hon. the Prime Minister in his diplomacy with other countries including the mother country, and that they are just on a par with the advantages we have secured commercially in regard to Japan, which are of the utmost importance to our manufacturing industries, and which I believe will be of great benefit to Canada without doing that injury which some people in British Columbia have feared, but which I am satisfied will not result from that treaty.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would remind the Minister of Agriculture that he has made repeated allusions to a written assurance he has got from the government of Japan, and the Prime Minister has on occasions declared solemnly to this House that he had brought down all the papers with reference to this treaty. This paper was in the hands of one of his ministers years before the right hon. gentleman made that announcement, and I think we have a perfect right to ask that that written assurance that a minister of the Crown has, and which he has quoted in the spirit if not almost in the letter, should be at once laid on the table of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should have this question settled.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rose to call attention to the fact that it was the American government who removed the quarantine and not the Minister of Agriculture of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is as follows:—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion passes, I would ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, if there is any good reason why a document which has been referred to repeatedly by the ministers of the Crown for the purpose of securing a ratification of this treaty, and which has been referred to by the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, should not be laid on the table of the House. I understand that a document of state referred to by a minister of the Crown in debate is bound to be laid upon the table of the House. I should think there is every reason why we should observe that rule in the present case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I stated a moment ago to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and I repeat, that as soon as the commission comes back all the papers will be communicated to the House. I think it is a rule of diplomatic relations that when a mission is in progress it is not proper to lay the papers before parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But if the documents were of a confidental nature, they ought not to have been referred to here by a minister of the Crown. If the document were really confidential, well and good. But it was obviously not of a confidential nature because the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have referred to it as a ground on which they proceeded in asking ratification of the treaty by parliament. Under these circumstances, it is idle to talk of it being a document of a confidential nature. How could a communication of that character be a document of a confidential nature? It is absurd to make such a suggestion in connection with a document of that kind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These papers are at present the subject of a commission to the Japanese government, and it would not be proper to bring them down. They will be brought down at the proper time.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another document which has been referred to, and which, if not a state document, is something very much like it. I refer to the letter said to have been written by the consul of Japan in which he made certain undertakings on behalf of his government in line with the statement of the Prime Minister, and the assurance that was given to us by the Minister of Agriculture. That has been used in debate, and the information it contains has been urged before the House. Is there any reason why we should not have that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The same reason.

Mr. FOSTER. I consider the reason a very flimsy one.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 6 p.m.

SHIPMENT OF FEED WHEAT.

Mr. LAKE asked :

1. Has the government taken any special steps to facilitate the shipment of feed wheat from the prairie provinces to the eastern markets during the present winter, (a) by arranging with the railway companies operating in the west for an adequate supply of cars for all feed wheat offered, (b) by arranging for reasonable freight charges by the all-rail route, or (c) in any other manner?

2. If so, what is the nature of such arrangements?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. Officials of the government had communication with railway officials and urged that all possible facilities be employed for the prompt conveyance of such wheat eastward.

2. The movement of this wheat was one of the objects contemplated by the government's arrangements for advances to such banks as wished to assist in moving the grain.

The markets division of the dairy and cold storage branch learned in November that the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association would have a large quantity of frozen wheat to dispose of and at once advertised the fact throughout Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces with the result that hundreds of inquiries have been received by the association, and it is hoped that considerable direct business will result.

In a letter to the markets division, dated December 6, the secretary of the association stated that they had received assurance from the Canadian Pacific Railway that shipments of feed grain would receive preference on their line over any other class of traffic this winter.

FREIGHT RATES TO THE YUKON.

Mr. THOMPSON—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What report did the Railway Commission make upon the result of their investigation into the White Pass and Yukon Railway freight rates?

2. Did they find that they had control over any part of this line? If so, what part?

3. Did they find that they did not have control over some parts of the line? If so, what parts?

4. Can they control the rate on a through bill of lading?

Hon. GEO. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals).

1. The Board of Railway Commissioners has made no report or order respecting the freight rates charged upon the White Pass and Yukon Railway. The board held a sitting in Dawson for the purpose of hearing the complaints against the rates charged upon this railway ; but the evidence laid before the board to form an opinion whether the rates were higher than were reasonable under the circumstances of the traffic. The board then directed its chief traffic officer to make full inquiries and report upon the subject. The traffic officer investigated the books, accounts, and records of the railway company, and subsequently obtained, by authority of the board, the services of an accountant to assist him in dealing with them ; but, on account of the labour involved and the pressure of work in his department, as well as of his having been obliged to go into a hospital for treatment during the past summer, the traffic officer has not made any report in the matter. The board expects that the report will be ready shortly.

2. The board has not given any decision upon the other questions asked, and does not expect to do so until the report of the traffic officer shall have been received and considered.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN TOBACCO PROTECTION—AMENDMENTS TO INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. J. A. DUBEAU (Joliette) (Translation) asked for :

Copies of all documents, petitions, memoranda and correspondence received by the Government since 1904, to this day, regarding the amendments to be made to the Inland Revenue Act for the purpose of encouraging and protecting still more the Canadian tobacco industry.

Mr. Speaker, the motion which I have the honour to present to this House has reference to an industry of considerable importance for the county of Joliette, which I have the honour to represent here, and for other sections of the province of Quebec, but also for all the districts wherein tobacco growing is carried on successfully.

I may be allowed before this item is disposed of to set forth the means whereby, in my humble opinion, the development of that industry may be fostered and greater returns from it ensured to the growers.

In order that the House may form an idea of the importance of that industry, I beg to recall that we have in Canada twenty-six factories handling tobacco of foreign origin and thirty-eight handling home-grown tobacco.

The quantity of tobacco manufactured in these establishments amounts to about thirteen million four hundred and sixty-two thousand three hundred and ninety-pounds 13,462,390.

However, that state of things has not always existed. It is only of late years that our farmers have increased their output and that this industry has made considerable headway, as regards the manufacture of the home-grown leaf.

As a matter of fact, in eighteen hundred and ninety-six (1896), our output of leaf tobacco amounted to about one million five hundred thousand pounds (1,500,000), while it reaches to-day about twelve million pounds.

There were then in the country only ten factories handling the home-grown leaf and twenty-nine factories handling the tobacco of foreign origin. To-day, as I stated at the outset, we have thirty-eight factories handling the home-grown leaf, including those which manufacture mixed tobacco, and twenty-six factories handling imported tobacco.

Honourable members will notice that the number of factories handling imported tobacco is decreasing, while the number of those handling the home-grown leaf is increasing.

In 1896, there were manufactured out of imported leaf, nine million six hundred and nine thousand, seven hundred and ninety-four pounds (9,609,794). According to the report of nineteen hundred and six, the manufacture of tobacco of foreign origin reaches seven million, four hundred and seventy-two thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine pounds (7,472,729), which means a decrease of two million four hundred and seventy-two thousand, seven hundred and twenty-nine pounds (2,472,729).

Now if we look into the statistics relating to the manufacture of Canadian tobacco, we are pleased to find an increase of four million six hundred and seventy-two thousand, one hundred and seventeen pounds (4,622,117), while in 1896 the manufacture of Canadian tobacco barely amounted to four hundred and seventy-four thousand two hundred and five pounds (474,205) in 1905, while in 1906-07 there were manufactured five million, ninety-six thousand, three hundred and eighty-two pounds (5,096,382) of Canadian tobacco.

I say then, that our farmers have reaped great advantages from that increase in the use of Canadian tobacco. Now, should any one inquire what have been the causes of that increase in the output of Canadian tobacco and of the great progress accomplished in the manufacture of the home-grown leaf, no other reason can be assigned but the means taken by this government as far back as 1896. At that early date, indeed, the Liberal government realizing that the tobacco industry was destined to make great headway in our country and to become one of our most important national industries, did all in their power to protect and encourage it.

A duty of ten cents per pound was enacted on foreign tobacco; besides always with the object of protecting the Canadian tobacco grower, the Minister of Inland Revenue (then the Honourable Mr. Brodeur) induced parliament to pass a Bill which had the gratifying result of destroying at one stroke a trust which threatened to take root in Canada; and in order to encourage furthermore the growers of tobacco in our country, manufacturers were authorized to mix Canadian tobacco with the imported leaf, with the result that the consumption of Canadian tobacco increased considerably, and also the cigar factories opened their doors to the Canadian leaf, whose merits are beginning to be recognized in that industry. Lastly, and still with a view to furthering the interests of tobacco manufacturers and tobacco growers in Canada, the Honourable Mr. Fisher sent two of our fellow citizens to Wisconsin, for the purpose of studying their methods as regards the sowing and planting and drying of tobacco; and later on called here Mr. Charland, tobacco expert, whose thorough knowledge of that industry has already been of great service.

Should such a beneficial policy be adhered to, it will not be long before we have to record magnificent results, our tobacco will find in foreign markets a ready sale, and large returns will be ensured to a thriving agricultural industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we look into the particular cause of the great advance of the Canadian tobacco manufacturing industry since eighteen hundred and ninety-six (1896), we must admit that it is due mainly to a customs enactment whereby the raw material of foreign origin was made to pay a higher rate of duty.

The opponents of that proposal had against its enactment two reasons to urge, both of which were of very doubtful value. Some manufacturers who confined themselves exclusively to the use of the foreign raw material, contended that the Canadian product was not suitable for manufacturing purposes. Others claimed that the raising of the duty would work to the detriment of the consumers. But events have shown, in the first place, that the Canadian product was quite suitable, since the output of tobaccco manufactured from the Canadian leaf has increased in a great proportion (of one thousand per cent, that is, from four hundred thousand pounds to five million pounds). Now, the judge as to this was the consumer himself; and if, as was claimed by certain manufacturers, the Canadian product had been worthless, such a result could not have been obtained.

Then, as regards the price of the manufactured article, I may state that in spite of the increase in the duty, the people have been enabled and are still at liberty to buy tobacco in all shapes at lower prices than those which they had to pay before the Canadian leaf was introduced into the manufacturing industry. The fact is easily explained. Owing to the difference of thirty cents per pound in favour of the products manufactured from the Canadian raw material, the manufacturer is in a position to sell tobacco manufactured from that leaf twenty-five cents per pound cheaper on the average than that manufactured from the raw material of foreign origin.

Some exception has been taken and may still be taken to the use of that tobacco on the ground of quality as compared with the foreign product; but the people, who after all are the sole judge in such matters, have decided in favour of the Canadian product. Of course, if the quality had been wanting, that tobacco would have entirely disppeared from the market, and we should not have witnessed the great increase which we find in its output.

However, we should not forget that customs enactments cannot by themselves make a future for that business, considered either from the industrial or from the agricultural point of view. Some people are prone to think that the growing of tobacco is a very simply thing and requires no special effort. That is a mistake; on the contrary, the growing of tobacco is a very complex form of special farming.

As an article of commerce, tobacco has more of the character of a manufactured than of an agricultural product; and if our growers have been slow in improving their methods, it is because they have never had an opportunity of posting themselves as to varied requirements of the industry which makes use of their product.

True, Canada is not in a position to supply all grades of tobacco; but it can produce a sufficient number of varieties to enable Canadian to rid our markets of the greater part of imported tobacco, whether for smoking or for cigar-making.

The requirements of these two industries vary greatly in character, and if heretofore cigar manufacturers have not given great encouragement to Canadian growers, it is because our growers have not realized what are the particular needs of that industry and have not taken sufficient pains to turn out the article specially required.

I am aware that steps have been taken to spread the necessary information among tobacco growers, and I wish to thank the Honourable Mr. Fisher for his endeavours in that direction; but I hope that very soon we shall see these efforts become more systematic and thorough.

To my mind, we should, as in other countries, establish, in the midst of the tobacco-growing sections, stations under the management of experts whose duty it would be to spread a knowledge of the proper methods of handling the raw material and turning out a saleable product.

And by the word 'stations,' I do not mean to say that the government should necessarily erect, build up at its cost where experiments would be made, but I think it would act wisely in giving to the chief expert, Mr. Charland, three or four assistants, also experts who, at the very beginning of next season, who would reside in the tobacco-growing districts, where after having chosen a certain number of farms as fields of experimentation, would invite the tobacco growers in the neighbourhood to come and benefit by their experiments.

Under the guidance of these reliable men, the tobacco growers should as a whole, succeed in attaining a fair measure of success.

On the other hand, there is a part of the work which devolves naturally on the government. The regulations concerning the manufacturing of tobacco which, at the time of the tariff revision, in eighteen hundred and ninety-seven (1897) were amended in a practical and efficient way, in order to permit a mixture of the foreign-grown and the Canadian-grown tobaccos still oppose certain difficulties to the full development of the industry, as far as the Canadian product is concerned.

I refer particularly to the granting of special licenses for the manufacture of foreign tobaccos, mixed tobaccos and Canadian tobaccos exclusively, and to the separate marking of these products by means of labels of various colours in each case.

Such a state of things does not appear reasonable to me. The system would seem on the contrary rather calculated to depreciate the Canadian product in the eyes of the public, especially as, in certain parts of the country, there still exists against it prejudices which are entirely without foundation.

The colour of the stamp should not be regarded as a certificate of quality; thus, under the black stamp showing tobacco manufactured from foreign raw material, we meet with goods of a very inferior description, while on the other hand, the green stamp of the Canadian leaf sometimes covers the very best product, capable at least of giving entire satisfaction to any unprejudiced consumer; and this is most amply established by the statistics quoted by me at the beginning of my remarks. Why then should we maintain this system of distinction? For whom and in whose favour? Why should the department of Inland Revenue attempt to judge and classify the product?

The public should be the sole judge of its own taste; but the present system, far from favouring such an idea, leads people into the error of supposing that the foreign product is superior and into paying fifty per cent more for goods proved to be in no respect better than the Canadian article.

In concluding these remarks, I wish to observe that in my opinion the rational method would be so to amend the Inland Revenue Act as to place the manufacture of tobacco under the operation of the same license for each industrial classification, such as the manufacture of cigars, that of tobacco, &c., with a uniform stamp for each.

It seems to me that even from an administrative standpoint, such an arrangement would be useful for the purposes of controlling and collecting the revenue. But even were it otherwise, the latter consideration should not be allowed to counterbalance the great practical advantage which such a change would bring about.

I may add that as far as I am able to judge, new life might be given to this industry and increased confidence imparted to the capital engaged therein—not to mention the encouragement to agriculture—by again increasing the excise duty of foreign tobacco entering as raw material for industrial purposes.

This is a subject which cannot be too carefully studied. It is one of paramount importance and may effect the agricultural, manufacturing and financial interests of this country. I trust, therefore, that the government will lose no time in altering the Inland Revenue Act in the manner I have outlined.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques-Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the motion is carried, I desire to say a few words upon the subject treated by the hon. member for Joliette. This tobacco question is one of great interest to several counties in the province of Quebec, and I congratulate my hon. friend on the effort he has made to bring the matter before the government in the hope of inducing them to apply a prompt remedy to what is, in my opinion, a real grievance in that province. I listened with interest to the statistical data submitted to the House by the hon. member, while much regretting that, in the present state of the question, he has limited his motion to a request for papers; he has thus been led into the academic discussion a question which has passed that stage, being a grievance of which we have long complained in the province of Quebec and demanded redress by the amendment of the Inland Revenue Act. We know all about the correspondence; my hon. friend from Joliette has perused it as I have. What we want is the remedy. We ask that the repeated representations made to the government be carried into effect. Since the beginning of the session the question has been put in a much more practical form than it was to-day. I requested of the Minister of Inland Revenue to state—and several members supported me—what changes would be made? What was the answer? The Minister of Inland Revenue simply replied:—Under consideration. Well! we have passed that stage, and I hope in the face of the numerous petitions and representations addressed to the Minister of Inland Revenue, we have a right to expect a clear statement of the government's policy, and to know in what they intend to meet the just claims of those who have suffered so long from the present state of things. The development of the tobacco industry, of which my hon. friend from Joliette made such seasonable mention, shows that we can no longer tolerate in our excise law any such invidious distinction as between foreign tobacco and our own, a discrimination to which the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) formerly minister of Inland Revenue, promised several years ago, to put an end. I say that we are deeply interested in this industry, those of us at least in whose constituencies tobacco is cultivated. It is a paying crop, as everybody knows. In those years when tobacco reaches its normal price of from eight to ten cents per pound, as much as one hundred dollars may be got out of every acre under cultivation. In my county, in a good many others of the province of Quebec, and in several of the Ontario counties, some people depend almost entirely upon this crop. Their land is not extensive, they may have some ten acres planted, and when tobacco sells at a reasonable figure, they are enabled to earn their livelihood and maintain their families in comfort. I mention this because it appears to me to be the duty of the government to help farmers of limited means. There should be no delay in redressing the grievances complained of and which cannot be soothed by empty words. I have said, Mr. Speaker, that this motion, to have been effective, should have asked for something more than the mere correspondence, because the latter is already well known to us. We are all aware—and the hon. member for Joliette knows it perhaps still better than I do—that the representations made to the government have been unanimous and all in the same direction. If we would really encourage this branch of agriculture and promote the greater development of the tobacco industry, we must do more than the government has done so far. Justice must be meted out to those who demand uniform stamps of a uniform colour and that the branding of the home product in such a manner as to impede its sale should be stopped. We must do what has been done in the United States to encourage the cultivation of tobacco in several states, in Connecticut, in Virginia and specially in Wisconsin, whose territory stands much further north than the two former. Enormous sacrifices have been made to improve the methods of cultivating, drying and curing tobacco, and most marvellous results have followed. But for all this a little money must be spent. My hon. friend from Joliette has shown us in what direction we should work. He has suggested experimental stations, not very numerous, it is true, but well equipped and under competent directors. In Connecticut $30,000,000 were spent to improve the cultivation of tobacco and secure the results which obtain to-day to the advantage of the people at large. The product is quite different from the tobacco grown before the adoption of new methods. To those states tobacco planting has become an important source of revenue. Belgium and Holland purchase this tobacco for state controlled consumption in those countries. To secure such results the best methods of growing, reaping, curing, packing and shipping must be followed. Some time ago the Canadian government sent a gentleman—I do not remember his name—on a journey to Europe with a few samples of our tobacco. He finally reported to the government, but proceedings had to be taken in this House to obtain communication of it. It has not been printed or distributed. That gentleman, a competent man, stated in his report that our tobacco, even upon the ill-cured, ill-prepared and badly packed samples placed in his hands, had been very favourably received on the continent of Europe. In England, I think it was at Liverpool, a large tobacco manufacturer told him that if this tobacco were properly cured, we might easily sell our entire crop. He was also told, I think, in Belgium and Holland, that the tobacco was good and of good substance, and that if properly cured, prepared and packed it would be easily disposed of. Did we act upon the results of this experimental journey made at the country's expense? I think not. I know that the Minister of Agriculture employed for some time in his department a French expert for the purpose of developing tobacco cultivation. The gentleman was heard before the committee. At that time he had only just begun his work. Have the suggestions made by this Mr. Charland—I think that was his name—been carried out? I do not believe they have, and I am informed that the gentleman has not got beyond experimenting. We require not only an early alteration of the Inland Revenue Act in fairness to our growers and manufacturers of Canadian tobacco, so that there shall be no difference, from a fiscal point of view, between them and the manufacturers of foreign tobacco, but also the prompt establishment of experimental stations as suggested by my hon. friend from Joliette.

Why should we not incur the yearly expenditure of perhaps $20,000 to secure the service of two or three competent experts from Connecticut, for example, men of tried methods who would direct the experimental stations under government control. The cultivation of the plant is worth it. Those $20,000 would give extraordinary agricultural and commercial results, especially in respect of exportation to Europe. The report now before us justifies this view. The problem to be solved is not only how the plant should be cultivated, but also how it should be prepared for export. I say therefore that considering the profitable nature of the crop and the large number of poor families having but a few acres of land to live on who raise it, the results would be out of all proportion with such a moderate expenditure. Why, Mr. Speaker, we frequently spend twenty-five, thirty, forty and fifty thousand dollars to build wharfs that crumble under the pressure of the first spring tide. We erect public buildings in places where they are not even asked for, for the vain-glorious satisfaction of the representatives of certain ridings. Why not therefore employ a few thousand dollars in developing an industry which must give such immense returns? To sum up my opinion, I say that we should first of all amend the Inland Revenue Act, and I hope that we will hear the Minister of Inland Revenue declare to-day that the changes asked for shall be made in the course of the present session.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago my attention was called to this tobacco question by some of the growers of tobacco in Western Ontario. I made some inquiry into it and I found that they have a substantial grievance not only in regard to any encouragement which the government might give them in the cultivation of tobacco, but, as they stated, the laws in connection with the manufacture of tobacco, under the Inland Revenue Department, are hardly fair to them. I would like the minister to make some kind of an explanation to-day and give an answer to the complaint of the tobacco growers of the west. They say that they cannot continue in the business under the present regulations and certainly it would appear to me that they have a grievance. They represent a large portion of the farming community which has it in its power to develop a very important industry if it can get sufficient encouragement. There is no reason why Canada should not raise the great bulk of her tobacco. The government should take into consideration the grievance of these people and try to do something to ameliorate the conditions that at present exist.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Will my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean) be kind enough to tell me to what regulations he alludes—and what are the grievances ?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I had the correspondence a while ago and I will try and look it up and send it to the minister. The whole matter was very fully set out in the press. All the tobacco growers gave their experience. I will give the correspondence to the minister.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, as I represent a constituency where they grow really first-class tobacco and out of which Mr. Charlan, the expert of the Department of Agriculture, after visiting that constituency, states that they can make cigars almost equal to the best Havana cigars, I am very glad that my hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Dubeau) has introduced this resolution. I regretted very much that I was unable to follow him, but before the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) replies I wish to say that the tobacco growers in my constituency are not satisfied with the present regulations. They believe that they are handicapped by these regulations. They are anxious that the numerous stamps that are now being used in connection with the Inland Revenue Department should be abolished and that only one stamp should be used for all cigars manufactured in Canada. They are also anxious that the regulations should be so amended as to absolutely abolish the system of rebates on clippings which has been in force under the present regulations for some time back. Tobacco growing is a very important industry, in so far as British Columbia is concerned, it is becoming more important each year, and I hope that the Minister of Inland Revenue, in the legislation which, I understand, he is about to introduce into the House, will so amend the present regulations as to give greater encouragement to tobacco growers.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I was not able to follow my hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Dubeau) and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). I want to congratulate my hon. friend from Joliette upon moving the resolution. I am sure that in so far as my remarks are concerned on the tobacco question at the present moment they may appear to be somewhat monotonous to this House. But this is a very important question; it is one that this government should deal with and I regret that they have not dealt with it long ago. This is a question which affects a very large section of the farming community in the western part of Ontario, which I have the honour to represent. I do not know how the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) intends to amend the existing regulations, if he does intend to amend them, but what I ask is that he shall give the Canadian farmers a chance to grow tobacco in Canada for the Canadian market. One of the largest tobacco growers in Kent told me only last Saturday that he was compelled to sell a magnificent crop of 38,000 pounds at from 3 to 6 cents a pound. I say to the minister and to every man in this House who knows anything about growing tobacco that no farmer can grow tobacco at that price. Canadian farmers can grow tobacco equal to any that can be grown in any part of the United States, but if you want tobacco to be grown in Canada you must give the Canadian farmer proper protection. I care not how it is given to him, but you must give him sufficient encouragement to enable him to establish proper buildings for the curing of tobacco, which is the most important point in connection with the production of Canadian tobacco. If the tobacco is cured under proper conditions we can produce tobacco of a quality sufficiently good to make cigars equal to the best demanded by any ordinary man in Canada. I again congratulate the hon. member for Joliette upon having brought this question up before the House. As I have spoken several times on this question I am sure the minister knows my views in so far as our Canadian farmers are concerned, and I sincerely hope that he will acquiesce in the wish not only of the mover of the resolution, but of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Mr. L. ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Mr. Speaker, I think it would not be right for me to allow this question to pass without saying a few words in regard to it as it is a question which is of interest in the riding that I have the honour to represent. I think that perhaps the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) did not do tice to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Dubeau) in stating a few moments ago that the motion was not formulated properly and also in seeking to convey the idea that the motion had been brought in too late in the session. My hon. friend from Joliette asked a question of the government about 2nd of December as to the government's intention regarding this question, and as the answer was of a general nature naturally he made this motion to-day asking for further particulars and calling for the papers and documents. I do not think it was quite right for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to take as a subject of criticism the attitude which the government appear to have taken on this matter. I have been studying this question somewhat in my riding and I find that there are different parties who are curing tobacco and who seem to be doing it pretty successfully because many buyers from Montreal come down and buy preferably the tobacco of some of the growers in my riding as well as of the growers of Joliette and the surrounding parts of the country. I remember that one day I even attempted to enunciate a proposition to the farmers of my own riding and that was the formation of a company which would establish some kind of a curing station to be operated under the supervision of a government expert. The company would pay half the salary of the government expert, the government would pay the difference and they would utilize the services and knowledge of the experts. There would be a series of conferences in the counties in which they would like to cultivate tobacco. As soon as the farmers of these counties had been enlightened as to the best method of sowing and cultivating tobacco, the company would buy in the open market the tobacco in which had been grown and bring it into this special establishment and curing there with the aid of an expert so as to arrive at the best method of producing a superior article in the least expensive way. I was in Montreal during the recess and I had occasion to meet one of the largest cigar manufacturers in Canada. Being interested in this tobacco question he brought it up during the course of our conversation. He gave me a few pointers which, I think, if put into practice, would perhaps remove the present difficulty. It was from a purely business standpoint that this gentleman was speaking. He claimed that in order to induce Canadian manufacturers of cigars to give a preference to Canadian tobacco for filling there should be an advantage given under the excise regulations, and he also asserted that if the government would levy a customs tariff on foreign tobacco the place of which could be taken by Canadian tobacco, reducing slightly the excise duties on Canadian tobacco which could be used for filling, the result would be most beneficial to the Canadian tobacco industry. This gentleman suggested that if both the customs and excise duties were put on an equal footing giving free to the cigar manufacturers their strippings made of Canadian tobacco granting them thereby an inducement, it might be satisfactory for the present, and he further stated to me that if a sympathetic feeling were created in favour of Canadian tobacco it would be used in the manufacture of cigars only if there is an advantage in the cost price for producing and that there were many manufacturers in the United States who would bring capital to Canada and establish factories here. These companies would also engage in the work of educating the farmers in the methods of properly growing and caring for the tobacco plant; they would buy in a green state direct from the farmers cure it properly, and devote to the Canadian tobacco industry the knowledge they had acquired by years of experience in Wisconsin and Connecticut, and other states of the Union. I do not think the government would be under any financial burden in this respect, although perhaps a subsidy might be given to be applied towards the education of our farmers in tobacco culture. This prominent cigar manufacturer to whom I have referred, has told me that if no inducement is offered to Canadian manufacturers they will always prefer the imported tobacco for the reason that the foreign tobacco is better prepared than is the Canadian tobacco under present circumstances, and further, that the manufacturer is under a great disadvantage should he try to supplant foreign tobacco by Canadian tobacco in the market. I am led to believe that cigars filled with Canadian tobacco can be manufactured and sold cheaper than can cigars made of imported tobacco, and although at the start the Canadian cigars may be inferior, as time goes on they will prove to be equal if not superior to the imported article.

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains). (Translation.) As a representative of a county which is as essentially agricultural as the county of Montcalm, where tobacco-growing is a specialty, I wish to express my most hearty concurrence in the remarks of the honourable members for Joliette and Jacques Cartier. Undoubtedly the production of the papers asked for by the hon. member for Joliette is most timely, inasmuch as it will allow those hon. gentlemen who, not being familiar with the French language, are unable to appreciate the suggestions which he has made in his speech, to find in that correspondence and those papers the grounds which justify the proposition he is now making with a view to giving a new impulse to the culture of tobacco and the development of our native industry.

I coincide with the opinion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier that the tobacco question has reached such a stage as to induce the government to take more efficient steps in order to secure for the Canadian farmers who engage in that industry all the benefits they may derive from it.

As early as 1897, at the time of the readjustment of the tariff, the government gave their best attention to that new-born industry, by raising the duty on foreign raw leaf tobacco, stemmed or unstemmed, to 10 cents per pound, which resulted in a great impulse being given to that industry. Since that duty of 10 cents was imposed on foreign raw leaf tobacco, our tobacco-growing industry in Canada has flourished wonderfully, and I may say in this connection, that in the county of Two Mountains, not to mention any other centres, whereas before 1897, our sales of tobacco amounted only to four or five thousand dollars a year, we now put on the market from ten to twelve thousand dollars' worth of tobacco every year. It goes without saying that this situation results from the readjustment of the tariff just referred to.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) referred a little while ago to the agents sent over to Belgium, one of them, Mr. Dugas, of Saint-Jacques l'Achigan, being recognized as an expert, in order to place on the foreign markets samples of our tobacco. My hon. friend called our attention to the fact that this tobacco, not cured, not packed, not prepared as tobacco should be, and being thereby in a state of manifest inferiority, did none the less obtain a most favourable reception from Belgian and Dutch dealers, men of great responsibility, who encouraged the exportation of our tobacco to European markets.

Unfortunately, in the province of Quebec, as also in the province of Ontario, we lack the services of such experts as might give our farmers an up-to-date training in regard to the curing and packing of tobacco, so as to enable them to prepare for the market as good a tobacco as may be grown in Wisconsin, Connecticut and elsewhere.

Our farmers are very willing men, but they lack method and experience, and I think that if we had the suggested experimental stations exclusively devoted to the cultivation of tobacco, under the direction of competent men, the whole farming community and the manufacturers themselves would be greatly benefited thereby.

There is a grievance of pretty long standing, which was particularly urged upon the attention of the government last year. I refer to the uniformity of stamps asked for. We have seen numerous delegations waiting upon the government from the counties of Montcalm and Joliette, with that end in view. The farming community are in favour of that uniformity, and a good many manufacturers who would like to see that industry grow and prosper, are also in favour of the same. Therefore, I believe that within a reasonable time, the government will deem it their duty to comply with the wishes of the interested parties.

Indeed, the government has already done a great deal to promote the growth of the tobacco industry. We have all witnessed the exertions put forth by the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur), when he was Minister of Inland Revenue, to stifle at its birth the trust of the American Tobacco Company. We have also witnessed his success.

Judging from what is taking place in the United States, and from the troubles existing in those states which that trust holds in its clutches, and which are ransacked by it, we should congratulate the Dominion Government for having nipped the evil in the bud in Canada.

Before resuming my seat, I wish to say further that from their accession to power up to this very day, the government have never hesitated to redress grievances, and

I have not the least doubt that, after having heard the representations made to them, they will amend the law as it stands, and even if necessary, they will not hesitate even to amend the tariff, by raising the duty on foreign tobacco, so as to allow our native industry not only to maintain its position on our domestic market, but also to hold a preponderating place on the foreign markets.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a tobacco-growing county I wish to express my concurrence in the desire that has been expressed that special attention be given to the very important question of the tobacco industry of Canada. The riding which I have the honour to represent is perhaps as much interested in this question as in any question which could be discussed in this House. Tobacco has been grown in the south-western peninsula of Ontario from time to time for the past two hundred years, which is a pretty good tribute to the adaptation of the soil for the growth of tobacco. I believe that the Tobacco Nation of Indians grew tobacco in Western Ontario a great many years ago. In the last ten years, however, there has been more progress made in the growth of Canadian tobacco than at any other period in its history, and instead of the government being censurable I think it is entitled to commendation for the steps it has taken to build up this business. In 1897 the government put a customs duty of ten cents a pound on tobacco. That, I think, has done very much to promote the growth of Canadian tobacco. Whereas there were perhaps 500,000 pounds of Canadian tobacco grown and manufactured ten years ago, there is to-day an annual output of 5,000,000 pounds and the industry has been so profitable in some years that as much as twelve cents a pound has been obtained. In the present year, I regret to say, there is more or less stagnation. The Empire Tobacco Company, the principal manufacturer of Canadian leaf, say that their warehouses are full owing to the large crops during the last three or four years, and this year the demand for Canadian leaf has not been equal to the production, and for that reason the prices have not been as good as they were during the three or four years previous. I believe that a great deal of the imported tobacco could be replaced by Canadian-grown tobacco. It is grown successfully in British Columbia, in the Okanagan Valley, and it has long been been grown in the province of Quebec as well as in the southwestern counties of Ontario. All who are interested in this question are, I think, unanimous in the opinion that the present stamp regulation, which has been in existence for many years, is an obstacle to the growth of the industry, and that there should be only one stamp. I hope the government will do something to remove that grievance. Another matter which I think ought to receive the attention of the government is the perfecting of the growth and maturing of the leaf. A great many manufacturers in Canada will have nothing to do with Canadian tobacco. I think they are prejudiced unnecessarily against it, but what they say is that it has not the proper flavour, not being properly grown or cured. If that is so, it is a matter which requires some experimenting. This might take two or three years, but even if it took ten years, and the country had to employ a high-priced man, who was acquainted with the methods of curing in other countries, to apply those methods to the industry in this country, the money would be well spent. No doubt there will be an opportunity for further discussion when the Bill is introduced. At the present time I merely wish to say that the matter deserves all the attention which the government can give to it.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who has just taken his seat has struck the key-note of the whole matter. I do not think it makes much difference what kind of stamp we use for Canadian tobacco. The whole secret of success in bringing that tobacco into larger use will be the curing of it so as to impart to it a flavour equal to that of the tobacco which the great bulk of the people of Canada are now using—a flavour similar to that of Tuckett's in Hamilton or Macdonald's in Montreal. It would pay to spend a very large sum of money to secure this. Until a better flavour is obtained for Canadian tobacco, I do not think that all the regulations which this government can propound or enforce will bring that tobacco into general use. The objection to the tobacco is not that it is Canadian. We would prefer to use it because it is Canadian, but the objection is that it is not presented to the public with that agreeable flavour which those who use tobacco desire. I have made this statement in the House on previous occasions when the question of tobacco culture came up, and I wish to emphasize it now. It devolves on the minister who is in charge of this department to see that every possible means is taken for securing a flavour in the Canadian grown tobacco that will accord with the tastes of the Canadian people. I cannot understand why Canadian tobacco could not be made just as pleasant in flavour as American leaf grown possibly in the same latitude. Is it possible that the Americans have a secret which we have not? Is it possible that they have discovered a means of curing tobacco which is unknown to Canadians? Then, surely a government which is capable of all kinds of corruption should be able to corrupt some American by bribing him to give to the Canadian people this secret. I press this upon the minister in charge, and I say as a user of tobacco for over fifty years that I am quite sure he will never succeed in getting Canadian tobacco generally used in Canada until he accomplishes what the hon. member for South Essex has suggested.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate my hon. friend from Joliette for having brought forward the motion which is now before this House, and especially having accompanied his motion with so remarkable a speech.

The tobacco question engaged my attention, when I sat as a member in this House, even before holding the portfolio of Inland Revenue. I further gave it my attention when I assumed the direction of that department.

Allow me first, Sir, to reply briefly to an astonishing remark fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, when he endeavoured to convince this House that the present government had done nothing for the encouragement of the culture of tobacco.

Mr. MONK (Translation). It is not what I said.

Mr. BRODEUR. I stated that the hon. member had suggested so. I am glad to see he acknowledges that the government has done something and even a great deal.

Mr. MONK. Not a great deal.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I shall endeavour to satisfy him that the government has done a great deal to promote that industry, and the results obtained so far are really surprising. My hon. friend will remember that previous to our coming to power—I recall the fact because he has thought fit to question the beneficial results of this government's policy—my hon. friend will remember that previous to our coming to power, in 1896, there had been forwarded to the late government numerous petitions requesting that a duty be imposed on the foreign leaf. On several occasions, delegations, not only from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, but from other provinces as well, proceeded to Ottawa with a view to obtaining that something further be done towards promoting the growing of tobacco. Now, these petitions have invariably been ignored. The late government has made no effort to comply with these requests; far from it, it seems that no heed whatever was taken of them.

I need not insist on the importance of tobacco growing, especially in the older provinces. To-day the grain crops which used to be grown in these older provinces are produced almost exclusively in the West. The export trade of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec used to consist mainly of such products as are now exported by our friends in the western provinces, who have got ahead of us in this respect. It is up to us, therefore, to encourage new farming industries better adapted to the conditions of the older provinces, I mean the maritime provinces, Quebec and Ontario.

It seems advisable that intensive farming be taken up, and the growing of tobacco falls in that class. Of late years, we have made great progress in market gardening, as well as in the production of butter and cheese.

Tobacco growing is one of those Canadian industries which seemed to call particularly for encouragement on the part of the government. The late administration failed to realize the fact, but the present government has shown greater wisdom in this respect. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if we compare the output of tobacco in 1896 with the output to-day, as evidenced by departmental statistics, we find that 500,000 pounds represented the total amount of tobacco produced or manufactured in 1896.

Mr. MONK. It was much larger than that.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend states that it was much larger.

Mr. MONK. I mean that the amount of tobacco produced was much larger than that.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am referring to the quantity manufactured and regarding which we have reliable data. I am well aware that there is being sold some leaf tobacco, which has never passed through a factory. Now, according to the statistics we have in hand, it would appear that in 1896 the output of Canadian tobacco amounted to 500,000 pounds, while to-day the following figures are given in the report just issued form the Department of Inland Revenue:—

Cigars.	1905.	1906.	1907.
Canadian tobacco.. .. ..lbs.	2,262,400	1,167,600	1,178,870
Blend. . . . . .lbs.	7,221,760	9,265,405	7,002,774
Cigarettes.
Blend. . . . . .lbs.	8,350,330	6,950,989	8,290,950
Canadian tobacco. . . . .lbs.	3,107,827	3,172,466	2,261,377
Blend.... .. ..lbs.	1,878,738	1,905,742	1,474,709

That statement is to be found at pages 22 and and 23 of this year's report.

As will be seen, the measure adopted since our advent to power, enabling manufacturers to blend foreign and Canadian tobaccos, has been very effective.

The figures I have just quoted, Mr. Speaker, are evidence that the growing of Canadian tobacco has made rapid strides, the enacting of a duty of ten cents per pound on foreign tobacco having put the Canadian grower in a better position to hold his ground against the foreign producer.

Moreover, the government have promoted by all means the growth of the best possible quality of tobacco. At my suggestion, my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) secured the services of an expert, who was then in the employ of the French government. That gentleman, who is very well up in the subject, has been with us for a couple of years and I hope we will be able to keep him many years more to instruct our farmers and our manufacturers as to the best means of turning out a good article.

I admit that the criticism made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is warranted as regards the past. It must be acknowledged that our tobacco was not, a few years ago, as good as might have been expected. But considerable headway has since been made, and I have no hesitation in saying that to-day we are turning out a quality of tobacco equal to the foreign brands. So much so, that I know a goodly number of manufacturers who to-day are using Canadian tobacco for the manufacture of the foreign article. They even go to the extent of paying the duty of 25 cents per pound on the Canadian weed for the purpose of blending it with the foreign article and offer it—possibly to my hon. friend from Halton—as imported tobacco, bearing as it does the black stamp.

The suggestions made by the hon. members for Jolliette and Jacques Cartier and several others in this House, as regards the advisability of having uniform stamps, do not seem to me as entailing serious difficulties, and the question is worthy of consideration on the part of the government.

As the House is aware, last year, when the hon. Minister of Finance brought down his revised tariff, it was suggested that some changes would be made to the Inland Revenue Act. However, for reasons known to the House, the session had to be cut short. But I trust and I am in a position to give the assurance that this year the government will bring down a measure to that effect. I am not at liberty to state just now what these changes will be. I repeat it, however, a Bill will be introduced this year with a view to amending the Inland Revenue Act, especially in so far as it relates to the question of tobacco.

I do not propose enlarging any further on what the government have accomplished towards promoting that industry; but I may say in conclusion that they have endeavoured to find out the best means of developing and improving that industry in the past, and if anything remains to be done, they will not hesitate to comply with the wishes of the people concerned.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I suppose the French press of our hon. friends opposite will attack me bitterly for not speaking to this motion in my mother tongue, but through courtesy to my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) and the majority of the House, who would not understand me if I did, I shall address the House in English though I should much prefer to speak in French.

This question of encouraging the cultivation of Canadian tobacco has become part of the political stock in trade of hon. gentlemen opposite, but that was not always the case, as I propose to show later on. We heard a good deal of this question the other day during the by-elections. Some remarks have been made to-day by some of my hon. friends from the other provinces, which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has not answered. There seems to be an understanding on both sides of the House that something requires to be done in this matter of stamps, but I hardly think that the reply just made by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) to my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) can be satisfactory even to the minister himself. If I understood well what the hon. minister said, it seems that the colour of the stamp is intended to deceive the consumers. It is intended to lead the man who buys tobacco with a black stamp on it to imagine he is smoking imported tobacco. That is the kind of trick which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) plays on my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). My hon. friend buys a piece of tobacco with a black stamp on it and imagines he is smoking imported tobacco, whereas he is smoking instead Canadian tobacco. That convinces me that something has to be done in this stamp matter. We have suffered a great deal in our province from lack of proper protection to the cultivation of Canadian tobacco. This is no new question in this House. In 1878 a gentleman who sat then on the left of the Speaker, and who is to-day Senator Bolduc, made a motion calling on the government, of which my right hon. friend was a member, to do something to encourage this industry. At that time the majority of the House, composed of Liberals, were very much opposed to the cultivation of Canadian tobacco—not only the Liberal members from the other provinces, but also from the province of Quebec. My right hon. friend himself was one of these. On the 23rd of April, 1878, in answer to the remarks of Senator Bolduc, who wanted the government to encourage the growth of Canadian tobacco, my right hon. friend, who was then Minister of Inland Revenue and, I presume, not more of a smoker then than he is to-day, opposed that motion. He said :—

He did not know to what point the two propositions were compatible. He could not see how the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, and the importation of foreign tobacco could be equally encouraged. . . . Was this country adapted to the cultivation of tobacco?. . Was it possible to maintain seriously that Canada could ever produce enough of this article to enable it to be exported? It was well known that, above all in the province of Quebec, and in the maritime provinces, and also in Ontario, we could not produce tobacco which could enter into successful competition with the foreign-grown article. We produced an inferior quality of tobacco, which was used for local purposes.

It would hardly do for any of the right hon. gentleman's friends to repeat that statement to-day on the stump in the province of Quebec. Or if any one on this side were to say in the province of Quebec that the right hon. gentleman had ever used such language, there would be a thousand voices raised to deny that he had ever said anything of the kind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, but he has learned the contrary since then.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. gentleman then went on to say :

The agricultural class was frugal and economical, and it produced tobacco for its own consumption; but, on the other hand, it was equally certain that it was perfectly impossible to raise in Canada tobacco which could enter into successful competition with the foreign article, for the simple reason that we had not the climatic conditions necessary to its growth.

Climatic conditions in the province of Quebec must have changed greatly since that time.

The province of Quebec, above all, and all the provinces east of Quebec, could not raise tobacco on a considerable scale, for the simple reason that their climatic conditions were not proper to the growth of this plant, which was excessively sensible to such conditions. Again, our seasons were too short to permit its successful cultivation. Spring was too late, and autumn came too soon; and under the best possible climatic conditions, the tobacco which we cultivated could never attain maturity.

I do not want to detain the House any longer quoting this remarkable speech of my right hon. friend. I have quoted sufficient to show that he was then very much opposed to anything being done to promote the cultivation of tobacco, and the ground he took was that it was impossible to grow in the province of Quebec tobacco which could be smoked by anybody except its frugal economical farmers. The late Mr. Laflamme, who represented the county of Jacques Cartier, and who was then Minister of Justice, went still further. He spoke as follows :—

He contended that tobacco was not a natural legitimate product of Canada, and those who had entered into its cultivation on a large scale had, with rare exceptions, found it to be a ruinous production. The revenue on tobacco was indispensable to the administration, and could not be replaced in any other manner. In fact the duty ought to be raised, as this weed was injurious to the health of those who indulged in it.

Mr. BERGERON.

No doubt he meant Canadian tobacco was injurious to those who used it. I mention this to show that hon. gentlemen opposite in former Liberal administrations and their friends were very much opposed to the encouragement of the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, and if that industry has since flourished it is in spite of their opposition. It was the Conservative party which in its tariff of 1879, took the first step to encourage that great industry, and that step was opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite by every means possible. We had to fight against their opposition on that question during the entire eighteen years we were in power. Whenever we wanted to encourage the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, we had to meet their most determined opposition. But when they came into power, they felt compelled to keep up the same tariff which we had introduced and only made some changes in the regulations. Yet after eleven years experience, their own friends from Essex and Joliette to-day tell them that their regulations are still inadequate. I believe, as we have always done on this side, that we can grow Canadian tobacco just as good as that which is imported, provided we take the precaution to cure it properly. I will go further and say that even to-day, although our native tobacco is not as well cured as it might be, those who smoke it say it is the best grown and will never smoke anything else.

An hon. MEMBER. They all die.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. It is a case of sudden death.

Mr. BERGERON. I strongly approve of the position taken by the hon. members for Joliette and Essex and would urge the government to do something else besides making promises. I would urge them not to confine themselves to making speeches on the hustings but to do something practical. We send out of Canada millions of dollars every year for the purchase of foreign tobacco, which money ought to remain in the country. Since our people will smoke and since we can produce in this country as good tobacco as any imported, why not encourage the cultivation of our own product ? Although I do not believe it is absolutely necessary that an expert should be appointed to find out the best way of curing tobacco, still I am in favour of doing everything possible to encourage the growth and the curing of our own product.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). I regret that a good deal of this discussion has taken place in a language with which I am not familiar. But I am very much obliged to my friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) for having for my special benefit, addressed the House in my own language. I am not familiar with what happened thirty years ago in this business, and I am afraid I cannot say anything to relieve the hon. gentleman of his difficulty. However, this is an age of advancement and improvement, and, even in the question of tobacco and its growth in Canada, the conditions and opportunities are receiving, and have been for a considerable time receiving the very serious attention of the Department of Inland Revenue. I have been a smoker of cigars for many years, and I know that the numerous labels put on cigar boxes are a detriment to some extent to the native-grown article. If the adoption of one uniform label will place the tobacco growers of Canada in a better position than that they now occupy, for my part I know of no good reason why we should not have one uniform label. I agree also with the remarks of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that much may be done in instructing the tobacco growers of Canada in the best methods of growing and curing tobacco. One of the great difficulties is that the tobacco is not properly cured. I feel sure that Canada, particularly my own province of British Columbia, can grow as good tobacco as may be grown on the continent of America, excepting, possibly, the island of Cuba. I believe my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) intimated that this question was receiving the attention of the department and that we hoped, before the present session is over, to introduce a measure amending the Inland Revenue Act along the line proposed in the discussion here to-day. Just what that Bill will be it is premature for me to say; but I hope that, before many weeks have passed, we shall be in a position to announce to the House a measure that will, to a considerable extent at any rate, remove the difficulties under which the tobacco growers of Canada are said now to be labouring. There can be no objection, I take it, to the motion.

Mr. MONK. I desire to move a short amendment, which, I think, will be accepted by my hon. friend (Mr. Dubeau)——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Monk) having already spoken, is not in order.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I move :

That the following words be added to the motion: ' and that in the opinion of this House all revenue stamps to be used on Canadian tobacco should be of the same colour.'

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I submit for your opinion, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment is not in order, as not being germane to the motion before the House. The motion does not involve a question of policy but simply a question of the production of papers.

Mr. MONK. Speaking to the point of order, I may say I examined that point before preparing the motion, and I submit that the amendment is quite in order. I am very much surprised that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should raise this point. The amendment is to give effect to the wish expressed by every hon. member who has spoken in this debate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But this is not the orderly method of doing it.

Mr. MONK. I think the explanation is in the citation given by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). Evidently, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is opposed to what we want. The motion is—

For copies of all documents, petitions, memoranda and correspondence received by the government since 1904, to this day, regarding the amendments to be made to the Inland Revenue Act for the purpose of encouraging and protecting still more the Canadian tobacco industry.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a motion for papers merely.

Mr. MONK. There is my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) also opposing this. Does he coincide in the raising of this point of order ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly. I say that this proposed amendment is not germane to the motion. The motion is simply for the production of documents, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) seeks, by this proposed amendment, to declare a policy.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) interrupted me; I had not finished. I was explaining my point of view. It is very strange, considering that the object of the amendment is to incorporate into this motion an expression of the wishes of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Dubeau)—and, I think, quite in accordance with the rules of order—that we should find two ministers trying to have it ruled out. But, upon the point of order : it will be seen that the papers asked for relate to amendments of the ' Act for the purpose of encouraging and protecting still more the Canadian tobacco industry.' My hon. friend (Mr. Dubeau) has stated, and every one of us has echoed his opinion, and the memoranda asked for, particularly and above all things, that the stamps should be made of a uniform colour. Will it be pretended for a moment that that which interprets the very wish expressed in these memoranda is not germane to the motion ? Why, it is giving practical effect to that which these memoranda contain. I submit that the amendment is germane; and I think it is extremely surprising to find my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) opposing it. But we have in the quotation given by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that the right hon. gentleman is opposed to the encouragement of the Canadian tobacco trade. And my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has also objected, though protesting that they wish to render justice to the Canadian tobacco growers.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think that the point of order is well taken. The practice is pretty well laid down by Bourinot that an amendment must be relevant to the motion proposed to be amended. In this case, the motion appears to be merely for the bringing down of certain documents and the proposed amendment is in the nature of a declaration of policy on a question. I think the amendment will hardly be considered to be relevant, and so I feel called upon to rule that it is out of order. The question, therefore is upon the motion.

Motion (Mr. Dubeau) agreed to.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Mr. F. D. MONK moved :

That a select committee of this House composed of seven members be named to take into consideration the proposed convention respecting commercial relations between Canada and France laid upon the table of the House on November 28 last, with the view of ascertaining to what extent the said commercial arrangement will result in an increase of trade between the two countries.

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to employ a shorthand writer to take down such evidence as the committee deem necessary; and that the said evidence be printed from day to day for the use of the said committee, and that ruly 72 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said : The object of this motion is to obtain the nomination of a special committee for the purpose of looking carefully into the French treaty, which is to be taken up by the House, and making a report as to how far the conditions of that treaty are favourable to Canadian trade. At the time the news of the conclusion of the treaty reached Canada, the treaty was shown to us through the organs of the government—in Montreal at any rate—as one of the most extraordinary strokes of policy that had ever been carried out by any government in this country.

I believe I am expressing the sentiments of everybody throughout the country, perhaps more particularly in the province of Quebec, when I say that we were all pleased to know that we were going to conclude a treaty with France, the country of origin of many of us, and a country at present on special terms of friendship with Great Britain, and tokens of that friendship having passed from one of the great nations to the other on several occasions quite lately. But at the same time we were not prepared, in the province of Quebec, for the extravagant demonstration which greeted the ministers on their return from France. Those of us who reside in the province of Quebec know that the whole fleet of government steamers, if I am not mistaken, was put into requisition to go down and meet these gentlemen in the gulf. There must have been, in connection with the triumphal procession which accompanied the ministers up the gulf to Quebec and from Quebec to the home of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a considerable expenditure of money. For my part it seemed to me at that time that as the treaty was not yet known in any sense, not yet confirmed, not having been brought to the knowledge of parliament and of the nation, it was almost an absurd manifestation, involving as it did so great an expense to the country, before we knew in reality what these gentlemen had done. Members of the House know that the conclusion of a commercial convention between nations is an every-day occurrence, it passes almost without observation among the nations of Europe and the civilized nations of other countries, because it is so frequent. Unless the convention contains some extraordinary and epoch making conditions, there is not much attention paid to it. It was in 1898, I think that Mr. Kasson, on behalf of the United States, concluded an important commercial convention with France. He came back quietly to New York, went to his office, and we find no trace whatever of such a triumph as that which surrounded the two ministers when they returned from France.

Naturally the people were led to ask what were the extraordinary advantages guaranteed by this treaty. Of course in that respect, whilst the triumph, the torchlight processions and the addresses at the landing stations proceeded, nobody was any wiser, because nobody knew what the proposed treaty contained. I noticed that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance switched off from the procession at Quebec, I think, and went away to his native province, or came to Ottawa; at any rate, he disappeared from the triumphal procession and left the honour to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who, at every stage, was presented with an address congratulating the government on the extraordinary treaty just concluded with France, and more particularly on having obtained, for the first time since Canada became a nation, the right to conclude its own treaties. You can open every paper published in the province of Quebec, in the ministerial interest, and you will find that this great point was made salient in the addresses. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries had at last bravely and courageously revendicated in England and before the face of Europe the right of Canada to conclude her own treaties, and he had succeeded in concluding a great and marvellous treaty with France. He had met with great difficulties, but had triumphed over them all. At first the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who had just arrived from Europe, did not know how to meet these demonstrations ; whether he knew that the contention was absurd, or what the reason was, I noticed that in replying to the first addresses he was extremely modest. But towards the close of the triumphal procession, when he came to his own native village, he was told that no man in this country had every revendicated the right to Canada to conclude her own treaty, that he was the first who had obtained it. He appeared to have taken the thing quite seriously, for we find in the report of his answers that he said he had experienced a great deal of difficulty, but thanks to the assistance he had received from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in England he had absolutely claimed that right and obtained it for Canada and had put it into execution. That is what my hon. friend said; if he wants the quotation we can find it for him. Then he said that of course he could not reveal the terms of the treaty, but when they came to be known the whole country would see that it was a marvellous victory and would applaud him and the government.

Now, Sir, that is all buncombe, and my hon. friend knows it. I cannot understand how any man occupying the position of minister should, in the province of Quebec, where after all we are fairly intelligent, put forward such an extraordinary claim, and nobody being there to contradict him, to make the statement, which was publicly circulated, that he had been the instrument adopted by Providence to bring about this great advance, which he had achieved under great difficulties. Let me read to you in this connection something that will show you the way this treaty is regarded in France, a country where, whatever may be its faults, you cannot indulge in that kind of clap trap very long. Let me quote to you from the 'Patrie' newspaper of the 2nd of January, a correspondence from Paris containing the views of Mr. Seigfried, a distinguished Frenchman, who has occupied a very high position in France, and was, I think, at one time Minister of Commerce, at any rate he speaks with great authority on commercial subjects. This is what he says to a correspondent:

Mr. Charles Seigfried, reporter of the projet de loi on the Franco-Canadian Commercial Convention is a fervent friend of Canada. It was not necessary to ask that gentleman if his report would be favourable, his answer was prepared in advance. This projet, said he, is perhaps not without defects; what human work can boast of perfection? But as it is, this projet constitutes in its entirety a remarkable monument in respect of impartiality and anxiety to be just. Neither France nor Canada have been sacrificed, neither one country nor the other can reasonably boast of having obtained any very particular advantage. It is not easy, added Mr. Seigfried, to satisfy everybody. The Franco-Canadian treaty will be severely criticised, do not doubt it; but I think it will be ardently defended. Besides, its partisans are more numerous, on the whole, than its adversaries. The treaty will be voted, you may be pretty sure of that. My opinion is that the ratification of the treaty might be carried through about the last days of January. My report is ready. The modifications which I may be called upon to make will only be secondary ones. I intend depositing my report about the twentieth of the month, and to demand an immediate discussion. This discussion even admitting that it will not take place immediately, will soon take place. We will, therefore, be able to vote the treaty in the chamber and to send it to the Senate. In ordinary times the Senate might begin the discussion immediately.

He goes on to speak of the procedure. He expects that after the discussion on the treaty has been begun it will be carried through in about fifteen days.

Mr. Denis Guibert, former member for Martinique, well known in Canada on account of his writings in the 'Figaro,' and his works on Rome, would like the Canadian newspapers to put a little discretion into their triumph.

Will my hon. friend the minister make a note of that?

The treaty is advantageous to Canadians. That is true. But it is not well always to exaggerate the truth. So saying Mr. Guibert took from his pocket a Canadian paper in which there was an article with large letters at the head of the article 'Mr. Brodeur has thrown down the French ministers. The French ministers had not the necessary strength.' Evidently, continued Mr. Guibert, the Canadians are right in being satisfied, but they ought to wait in order to proclaim it, until all things are concluded, signed and perfected. Supposing this Canadian journal fell into the hands of some hostile senator or even some member of the Chamber inimical to the project, you could hear him easily reading these lines from the Tribune of the Chamber and that indiscretion would be quite sufficient to cause the project to fall through or at any rate to make the voting of it much more difficult.

I wished to quote from the high authority of Mr. Siegfried to show that people not only on this side of the Atlantic but on the other viewed with favour this treaty and hoped it would be carried through with such amendments as might be found necessary in the interest of the commerce of both parties. But, it is not the complete, the extraordinary triumph that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has tried to make it out to be. The members of the House know perfectly well that this treaty has been concluded under exactly the same procedure as all treaties concerning Canada for over thirty years. Does the hon. minister deny that? Certainly not. Neither would the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I will state that there were never any treaties negotiated exclusively by Canadian ministers as this one has been.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. What difference is there, as far as the method of discussing and concluding this treaty is concerned, between this treaty and the treaty concluded by Sir Charles Tupper in 1893 ? What is the difference ? Can my hon. friend point it out ? There is none at all. My hon. friend knows it perfectly well. He is silent because there is no difference whatever.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am stating to my hon. friend that previous treaties were all negotiated exclusively, through the British ambassadors or by the British ambassadors alone and if he reads the papers relating to the negotiations of 1882 he will find there that instructions were given to the British ambassador in Paris to negotiate such a treaty although the Canadian government had asked to negotiate this treaty themselves. In 1893 the negotiations were not carried out by Sir Charles Tupper alone but they were carried out by Sir Charles Tupper and the British ambassador in Paris.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend has not answered the question that I put to him. Sir Charles Tupper concluded the treaty of 1893 in Paris with the assistance of the British ambassador in the name of the Queen of England and this treaty was concluded in the name of the King of England in exactly the same manner and by the British ambassador in Paris with the assistance of these two hon. gentlemen. It is exactly the same. How can the hon. gentleman contend that there is any difference in the procedure ? In 1879 or in 1880, I believe, there was a treaty concluded by Sir A. T. Galt. There was a treaty with France and Spain in 1879, and Sir A. T. Galt acted in exactly the same manner as these hon. gentlemen acted in this instance. The procedure has not been changed in any way.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it has been.

Mr. MONK. It could not have been unless a change had occurred in our fundamental law. I point that out because there is no difference whatever in the manner of negotiating this treaty from the treaty of 1893 or the treaty of 1879, made by Sir A. T. Galt and the treaty that we made with Japan. We have no power to conclude treaties in our own name. My hon. friend knows that, neither was this treaty concluded in the name of Canada. If my hon. friend thought it was such an important point and if he thought that he could come back to Canada covered with so much glory for having dealt with a foreign nation in the name of Canada why did he sit silent through the entire time of the intercolonial conference and make no attempt to impress upon that conference the necessity of conferring on us the power to negotiate treaties in our own name ? He never opened his mouth on this subject ; neither did my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I merely wished to point out that phase of the question because an endeavour has been made to throw a false colour over it. This treaty has been concluded by Sir Francis Bertie, the British ambassador in Paris, and by the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries acting for his Britannic Majesty, as all other treaties have been concluded. There is no difference. If we incurred the very large expense which we incurred in sending the reunited fleet of Canada down to meet these gentlemen because they had done something extraordinary it was done under false pretenses.

Now, I come to the more practical object of this motion. I do not wish to take up the time of the House but the House will have seen, when I quoted the appreciation of Mr. Siegfried, that treaties, when passing through parliament in France, are examined most minutely and carefully. They are looked into by special committees of which the reporter is always one of the ablest men in the Chamber, a man conversant with the subject—in this instance, this being a commercial treaty, one of the highest commercial authorities in France, Mr. Siegfried—and they are thoroughly sifted before they are approved. I think that we, anxious as we are to cultivate commercial relations with France and to be on friendly terms with that country, should bring to bear careful attention upon this treaty and that it should be examined by a committee of the House. When we concluded the treaty with Japan in 1904, do you think that if the proposed treaty had been carefully sifted by a select committee of seven members of this House we would have had in it that unfortunate clause, article 1, which has been the cause already of so much difficulty in regard to immigration into this country and of which we have not yet heard the end ? Evidently not. If the treaty had been carefully examined by a committee the fatal difficulty of that clause would have been detected and very probably we would have had introduced into our convention with Japan such saving stipulations as were carefully introduced into the convention made between the United States and Japan and which saved the immigration question in the United States. It is because the treaty was passed without sufficient study and attention that the clause was passed over and we have had the difficulties which we have had. In this case it is not the same thing but the treaty requires to be carefully examined by business men in order that we should ascertain what are its advantages, what is the extent of the favourable changes it affords to our trade and in order that by timely suggestions, such as Mr. Siegfried mentions in his remarks we may make some alterations to it which may be very trifling but which yet may make a great deal of difference in the operation of the treaty. The situation in France, as the House knows, is a somewhat peculiar one. One would at first sight be inclined to believe, particularly after reading the blue book which was laid, in the first instance, before the House, that we were deriving very great advantages from being placed under the French minimum tariff.

One would suppose from this blue-book that the articles mentioned are entitled to admission into France without paying almost any duty. That is clearly not the case. France is a highly protectionist country and its maximum tariff is almost prohibitive. Its minimum tariff is of course better, but it by no means gives unmixed advantages to those nations which have the benefit of it. I shall not go into any lengthy examination of the articles of Canadian origin which under the projected treaty are placed upon the French minimum tariff. But, take for example the item of horses, and the French maximum tariff on horses is 200 francs and the minimum 150 francs, or thirty dollars, for the class of horses which are generally exported from Canada. It is not probable that Canada can do a very large business in horses with France in view of this specific duty of thirty dollars per head. There is at present under the ordinary German tariff a lower duty than that, and yet we do not do a large trade in horses with Germany. The House will at once see that unless the French duty on horses is lower than the present minimum tariff, Canada cannot export many horses to France. The minimum tariff on butter going into France is $2.50 per hundredweight, and from what I can learn from the large exporters of butter in Montreal, if Canadian butter has to pay freight and insurance and $2.50 per hundredweight duty, there is not much chance of our developing a trade with France in that article. So it is with cheese and with eggs and with other agricultural products. In the case of live and dead meats there is an improvement in the minimum over the maximum tariff, but those who are conversant with the export trade in live and dead meats are not sanguine that there is much of a margin to work on to encourage trade with France in these articles. As to all kinds of grain there is no difference between the French maximum and minimum tariff; and we do not do any great trade with France in these commodities. Of course there is a clause in the treaty—otherwise the whole thing would be illusory—which says we are to benefit by any lowering of the tariff, and if in France they lower their maximum tariff (which is most improbable) or if they change articles from the maximum to the minimum, we get the benefit of that on the articles enumerated in the treaty. But, until something of that kind is done there is not much prospect of increasing our trade with France in grain, and wheat and eggs and articles of that kind. The House must realize that all these matters require to be carefully looked into. It is a matter for a special committee getting the evidence of the best authorities of the country on these questions in order to ascertain if the conditions can be improved in any way. At any rate the House, when it gets to the report of such a committee will know exactly where we stand, and if changes could be made in the projected convention which would make it more advantageous to us.

There are two clauses in this draft treaty to which I would take exception at once, unless the report of the committee should favour them. Under one of the clauses of the treaty we find ourselves to give the most favoured nation treatment to France on all the articles enumerated. That favoured nation clause is not meeting with much approval to-day amongst civilized nations; it is an old-fashioned clause which used to be introduced in treaties between nations which were almost constantly at war, and it has been found in modern times to operate most inconveniently as between nations who have been constantly concluding new and altering old conventions. I think all the modern economic writers are agreed on that point. It therefore seems to me that unless it is absolutely necessary it would be better to omit that clause and let each treaty with each nation stand upon its own merits. Another clause requires that in order to benefit by this treaty we must ship directly to France and that goods coming to Canada, to obtain the benefit of the treaty here, must come direct to our shores. If our exports go by any other than the direct route they are liable to the surtax, and the French surtax is prohibitive, it being three francs and sixty centimes per kilogram.

Mr. FOSTER. It is higher on some articles.

Mr. MONK. I am told it is higher on some articles. If we are to simplify our commercial relations with France, if we are to derive all the good we possibly can from this treaty, why should shipments be forced in this manner. Liverpool and other English ports have an immense trade with France, and if it be possible to ship via those ports, why should it be prohibited? The utmost latitude should be given to shippers; they should be able to ship by any route they like and when the goods reach their destination they should be given the benefit of this treaty. It seems to me that this treaty is susceptible of useful changes, and that some slight variation in its terms would operate advantageously. In France they are going to submit it to most careful scrutiny by a committee of their own parliament, and it is with the view that we should do the same, that I move this resolution.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I regret we are unable to accept the motion submitted by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk). I cannot help thinking that the hon. gentleman's method of dealing with the question is somewhat extraordinary. We have on the Order Paper a notice of motion which will bring up in a proper way the whole question of the French treaty. The House has already been placed in possession of the treaty and the motion on the Order Paper is designed to invite attention to the whole subject with the view of parliament giving to that treaty the approval which is contemplated by one of its clauses. Why my hon. friend should endeavour to anticipate that discussion and raise the question now, before it has been properly reached in the House, is one of those things which no fellow can understand. I do not intend to follow my hon. friend in discussing the merits of the treaty; I think the time is not appropriate. I think that every word which my hon. friend has said in condemnation of this treaty, if he so meant it, is not only unjust and unwarranted by the facts, but, what is worse, is entirely out of place. I prefer, therefore, to confine myself to the object of my hon. friend's motion as it appears on the Order Paper, and that is that we should appoint a special committee for the purpose of inquiring into this matter. I am unable to concur in that proposal, because it is without any precedent. This treaty is a part of the fiscal policy of the government of Canada. It has been negotiated under the responsibility of ministers and it has been presented in this House in precisely the same manner as we would present any other part of the fiscal policy of the government. It stands in precisely the same position as if the Finance Minister should come down to the House and propose to increase or diminish or abolish the duty on any given article, or to do anything else in regard to the ordinary fiscal policy of the country, and I think my hon. friend will search the records of parliament in vain to find a case in which any part of the fiscal policy of the country, propounded by any responsible minister, has been submitted for investigation to a special committee. Believing that the course which my hon. friend proposes is unusual and improper, believing that he is attempting to anticipate a discussion which will properly come up at a later stage and in light of full information, I am compelled to take exception to his motion, and to ask the House not to permit him to establish such a precedent or to depart from the sound principles of government whereby the government are made responsible for the fiscal policy of the country. We need not discuss the merits of the treaty. Whatever its merits or demerits may be, it is presented to this House as a part of the fiscal policy for which the government must be responsible to the House and the country, and that being the case I see no reason why it should be sent to a special committee for investigation.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into the merits of the treaty. The motion of which the Finance Minister has spoken, when it comes before the House, will probably give us all the opportunity of that kind that is necessary. However, I do take exception somewhat to the reasons which have been advanced by the Minister of Finance why the matter should not go to a committee. First, he says that it is against precedent. Well, for a progressive people, and especially for a Liberal government formed as this government is, I should think that old precedents might very well stand their chance of revision. It seems to me that it is rather the essence of Liberalism that the old precedents should be thoroughly examined and if necessary new ones put in their place. What we want to do in this case is to approach the treaty with all the information we can possibly get, and I think it is quite possible for us to get more information than we have got. The Minister of Finance brought down the convention. That showed us absolutely nothing of the merits of the treaty. He then, at the request of gentlemen on this side of the House, brought down a tabulated statement, in which we find the three schedules of duties and some other information, but he might just as well put a Latin essay before the common man with an idea of his getting needed information out of it as to suppose that the information which he has given to this House in that document is sufficient. It is all Greek to the man who does not spend a good deal of time in examining and making calculations, and those calculations have to be made two or three times over. On a certain article we have the minimum and the general duty in France and we have the unit of the duty, which is the kilogram. Now, the kilogram, as I understand it, is 220 pounds and the franc is 19·3 cents, so that the man who wants to know what an article going to France by the direct method will be taxed has to inform himself first as to what the kilogram is and what the franc is and next to make double calculations. Then we come to other difficulties. The lumber schedule is an impossibility to a man who does not have a pair of scales and a thorough knowledge of the lumber business. In France the duty on lumber is determined by weight; our method in Canada is by measurement. The statement that there shall be so many francs of duty on a kilogram of lumber going to a French port does not convey a very luminous picture to my mind of exactly what the exporter will meet when he gets there. On another variety of articles you have the French measurement, and on that you have to make a somewhat abstruse calculation, involving both weight and measure in order to get at what the duty is. I plainly state that if the Finance Minister brings the treaty before this House tomorrow or next day and attempts to put it through with anything like fair speed, it will be put through before nearly all the members of this House and anybody in the country outside knows or can form the least idea of what its advantages will be. Therefore, I think it will be a very good plan to select as intelligent a committee as can be selected from both sides of this House to examine the treaty. That does not destroy the responsibility of the government. The Finance Minister seems to fear that they will not have responsibility enough. I think there is plenty of responsibility on these hon. gentlemen now; I think they will find it is rather well heaped up. But why do they appoint royal and other commissions? In doing so do they throw their responsibilities from their own shoulders? They are quite willing when it suits themselves to throw the responsibility on a commission. They are quite willing, when it does not suit themselves, to declare that they will not do so. The committee is formed, takes its testimony, and gets the information for the ministry, and the information is necessary for this ministry, both in fiscal and financial matters ; I do not think they can have too much of it. But the hon. Minister of Finance says we ought not to discuss the merits of this question.

My view has been somewhat the same as that of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) that it would have been well for the ministers themselves to have refrained from having a jubilation over the treaty until its plain Anglo-Saxon meaning was made public. Perhaps, however, there was a little bit of wisdom in the conduct of these ministers. They have had, at any rate, the jubilation whether later they get the approval of the people with reference to the treaty or not, and that jubilation of course is a point gained. But proper consideration is what is necessary, and that consideration cannot be given in a talk across the floor from one to the other, on information furnished on the spur of the moment by the minister, and which cannot be assimilated by members of the House with equal expedition. It seems to me that not only would no harm be done, but it would be conducive to the enlightenment of the House to have this matter ventilated by a special committee, which would report to the House, and whose report would give hon. members the information they require before coming to a decision. Something has been said by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) with reference to the clauses of the treaty itself, but, as I have already said, I do not propose to go into these now. It will be time enough to do that when the question comes up on the motion of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I do not think, however, that anything would be harmed, on the contrary I think that much good would be done, by our having this treaty referred to a special committee. But, says my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), it is part of the fiscal policy of the government. Well, suppose it is. There is one thing about this French treaty which strikes me, and it is this. The policy propounded, as the all-sufficient policy last year, by these hon. gentlemen when they put their tariff Bill through, has utterly failed on the very first attempt made to get treaty conditions with a foreign country by its means. Last year they said that when they had a general tariff and an intermediate and a preferential tariff, they would have all the instrumentality required in order to enable this government to make a treaty and have it proclaimed into force by order in council. That is what they asked for and that is what they got. They asked and got that, because of their assertion that with a general, and intermediate and a preferential tariff, they had all the machinery required to negotiate treaties. Then they went to France, and the very first attempt they made to negotiate a treaty, they found that the intermediate tariff would not do the business, and they are obliged to come back to parliament with their treaty, as formerly and ask the sanction of parliament. This treaty has not been put into force by order in council.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend say that we declared last year we would make treaties by order in council ?

Mr. FOSTER. No, but what I did say was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) declared that by this machinery of an intermediate and a general tariff, the government had the instrumentality by means of which they could make commercial arrangements with other countries, and once those arrangements were made, they could put them into force by order in council.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not quite correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Let my hon. friend tell us what he did say.

Mr. FIELDING. What we did say was that by creating a discrimination in our tariff, by having a general tariff and an intermediate tariff, we were able to offer some inducements to other countries to trade with us. We were able to offer them something in return for what they gave, and if we did not have that intermediate tariff, we would not have had this treaty at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Why, I notice in the memo. that with these two hon. gentlemen, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), it was a case of 'After you my dear Alphonse,' in every instance. First, it was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) who writes to the French minister, and then, an hour or two afterwards, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) writes to the same minister an exact copy of that letter. Everything had to be done double in order that neither minister might take precedence of the other.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) managed to get the precedence in Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. So he did. My hon. friend will not deny that they were opposed on the question of giving the government power to make commercial arrangements by order in council which might be negatived by the House if the House did not find it beneficial ; for, as we pointed out, there is always the difficulty of negativing an arrangement which is in force between two countries, a difficulty which does not exist if the arrangement does not come into force until ratified by parliament. So that the intermediate tariff did not do what my hon. friend claimed for it. Foreign countries do not take these things just exactly as the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) arranges them here. The French government said to the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) that the intermediate tariff had very little force with them because it was the lowest and most favoured nation clause they were after. Therefore the first memo, of my hon. friend was not acceptable to the French government and he had to come down to another basis of arrangement. So that in this case, as I have stated, their fiscal policy fell short of doing what they supposed it would do, and they had to come to this House in the end for a ratification of the arrangements they had made. It is an inviting and an attractive field of speculation to try and estimate the mental strain undergone by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to convince themselves that they were accomplishing something effective, in this terrible battle, for freedom of action by Canada against what might be the assumptions of the mother country. That is rather an inviting field to enter, but I think we may have opportunity for that a little later, and I shall defer doing so on account of my desire to give the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) the opportunity of dilating a little upon this particular branch of the matter, as I perceive that he is anxious to do.

Motion negatived.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

EXTENSION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF MANITOBA.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to inquire of the government whether any steps have been taken to obtain the consent of the legislature of the province of Manitoba to the proposed extension of the boundaries of that province. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember that a Bill to that effect has been promised. He will recollect also, no doubt, that, under the amendment to the British North America Act, the consent of the province by its legislature is necessary. Has this proposed extension been communicated to the executive of the province of Manitoba, and have any steps been taken to obtain the consent of the legislature of that province to the proposed extension ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I do not believe that the government has to take any such steps, at this moment, to secure the consent of the legislature of Manitoba. In introducing this legislation, we are only complying with the request made by the legislature of Manitoba itself to have the boundaries of the province extended. Of course, when our Bill is prepared, and when the prayer has been looked into, and accepted in whole or in part as the case may be, it will be for the province of Manitoba to say whether or not it accepts that legislation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to understand the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The proposition, as I understand it, is that the extension of the boundaries is to be provided for by Act of this Parliament, leaving it to the legislature of Manitoba to give or withhold its assent as it may be advised ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the matter in this way : The legislature of Manitoba has asked to have the boundaries of the province extended. It has made a very large and sweeping demand. Whether the whole extent of that demand can be granted or not is a matter which may come up for discussion later on. If we agree with the whole of the demand made by the legislature of Manitoba, I suppose there will be no question as to securing the consent of that legislature. But the province of Ontario has made a strong protest against the granting of the whole demand of Manitoba ; and the government has to decide whether it will accept the prayer of the province of Ontario or that of the province of Manitoba, or whether it will consider both. The Bill will settle that question, and it will be for the province of Manitoba to say whether or not it agrees to that Bill.

TREATY NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING QUESTIONS PENDING BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would also like to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether there are any negotiations on foot for the completion of a treaty between Great Britain and the United States with respect to matters that have been the subjects of controversy between the Dominion of Canada and the United States. My reason for asking this question is that, in a recent issue of a reputable journal in Great Britain, the assertion is made that negotiations have been under way for some time, and that a treaty is on the point of being arranged.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With respect to what question ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With respect to different questions—fifteen in all. One of them is the boundaries question, another the question of the Behring Sea fisheries, also the convention of 1818 relating to the fisheries on the Atlantic and other matters of a similar nature.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House has been informed already that the government of Canada agreed to have a reference made to the Hague Tribunal of the question of the fisheries understanding with the province of Newfoundland. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that there are also informal negotiations going on, I understand, between the British ambassador and the American authorities upon numerous questions, but these have not taken formal shape except in the case of one or two questions with regard to what is known as the International Waterways Commission.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). May I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if the report of the Civil Service Commission is ready to be brought down ? It was rather intimated that it would be ready by the first of the year.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I have not seen any of the commissioners lately. One of the gentlemen engaged in the service intimated to me during Christmas holidays that the report would be ready. I will endeavour to obtain the information desired.

THE MINT.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I had a notice on the paper of a question intended to bring out information with reference to the Mint. I changed it afterwards to a notice of motion, and it was carried in that form. . The Minister of Finance (Hon. W. S. Fielding) told me, as I understand him, that the information was ready. Can it be brought down at an early day ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I did not say the information was ready, but that I would give directions to have it prepared. It will be brought down at an early day.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENTS.

On the order :

Second reading of Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). I have come to an understanding with some of the members from the west to take this Bill up as soon as they return. I hope to proceed on the next occasion when the discussion is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 18) to amend the Railway Act. He said : This is a very simple Bill. It is to strike out a few words in clause 298 of the Railway Act so as to make it include a little more than it includes now. Section 298 reads, in part as follows :

Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations or buildings and their contents, by a fire, started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive, whether guilty of negligence or not, shall be liable for such damage——

Now this Bill asks to strike out the words 'to crops, lands, fences, plantations or buildings and their contents.' This would leave the section to read :

Whenever damage is caused by a fire, started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive, whether guilty of negligence or not, shall be liable for such damage—— —and so on. I do not understand why these words that I have read were put into the Act. There are many other things besides those mentioned that are liable to destruction by fire caused by locomotives, and, certainly, the owner should receive compensation in the event of such destruction. I do not think there can be any objection to this Bill on the part of any one who looks into the matter carefully.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). There is no objection to this Bill going to the Railway Committee. The words referred to were put in for a reason, but possibly that reason will be threshed out better in the Railway Committee than in a discussion taking up the time of this House. Opening up the section as my hon. friend (Mr. Kennedy) proposes would leave it pretty wide and make it include things which the House did not intend to include when the Act passed. But there is no objection to the Bill going to the Railway Committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no danger, I suppose of injuring the constitution by sending it to the Railway Committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend refer to the constitution of the Act or to the British constitution?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Both.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). moved the second reading of Bill (No. 28) to amend the Copyright Act. He said: This is a very simple amendment, and I propose it with a full knowledge of the unwisdom of interfering very much with the Copyright Act, which is to-day considered by all to be in a very unsatisfactory condition. If it is meddled with or tinkered with at all, it is hard to say how far amendments might go, or how far it might be wise to undertake anything like a revision of the Act. This amendment is designed to simplify the formula which is at present required to be printed upon the various books, maps, charts, photographs, engraving and other articles of that kind mentioned in the Copyright Act, and which are subjects of copyrights. This amendment is asked for by a large number of important publishing houses in Canada who strongly object to the disfigurement of many post cards, engravings, charts and other works of art by printing the very long formula now required by the Act, which is as follows:

Entered according to Act of the parliament of Canada, in the year , by A.B., at the Department of Agriculture.

This formula is considered to be very long and cumbersome, giving information that is not at all necessary. I propose to substitute for it these words: 'Copyright, Can., 190—, by A. B.' This is the form used in the United States and other countries in connection with their copyright. This amendment, as I say, is asked for by a large number of publishing houses, and I understand that the public generally approve of the Bill. I have spoken to the hon. Minister of Agriculture in regard to it; I do not see him in his place to-day. He did not intimate to me that he was in any way opposed to the Bill, though I am not saying he was in favour of it. I mentioned the matter to him and asked for his consideration. The Bill was introduced at the last session of parliament, but owing to the lateness of the session it did not reach its third reading. Since that time persons interested in the business have renewed their requests to me, urging that the Bill be passed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no objection to this Bill; it seems to be in the right direction. I merely ask that after it is reported it shall stand for the third reading until the Minister of Agriculture is here.

Bill reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business do the government propose to take up to-morrow, which is now a government day?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take up two Bills of the Minister of the Interior, on Irrigation and on Land Surveys. Then we will go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, January 9, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I beg to lay on the table correspondence and memoranda relating to the French treaty. This is the material which was to be printed during the recess. I lay it on the table that it may be included in the documents.

QUESTIONS.

CANADIAN-AUSTRALIAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. MACDONELL asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to discontinue the subvention to the Canada-Australian steamship service?

2. If so, when was such decision arrived at, and what are the reasons therefor?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). On the 27th of July last, an order in council was passed authorizing the Minister of Trade and Commerce to renew the existing contract with the Union Steamship Company of New Zealand, Limited, for a steamship service between Canada and Australia. The contract has been prepared, and has been sent to New Zealand to be signed.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next, to consider the following proposed resolutions :

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows:—

1. That the convention of the nineteenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and seven, entered into at Paris by plenipotentiaries appointed by His Majesty and by the President of the French Republic be approved.

2. That there shall be levied, collected and paid after the said convention is brought into force, and so long as the said remains in force, upon all natural and manufactured products enumerated in schedule B to the said convention originating in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, imported into Canada in the manner provided in the said convention, the several rates of duties of customs set forth in column 2, 'Intermediate Tariff,' of the Customs Tariff, 1907, and in any amendment of the same; and that there shall be levied, collected and paid, during the time aforesaid, upon all natural and manufactured products enumerated in schedule C of the said convention, originating and imported as aforesaid, the several rates of duties of customs set opposite to each item respectively in the said schedule C.

3. That whenever in the manner provided in the said convention the terms thereof are extended to Tunis, the provisions of the last preceding clause of these resolutions shall apply to Tunis and the products thereof, to the same extent and as completely as said provisions apply to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possession, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China and the products thereof.

4. That the Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such orders and regulations as are deemed necessary to carry out the said convention and the intent thereof.

5. That the advantages granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, with respect to the commerce of said countries with Canada, shall extend to any and every other foreign power which by reason of the operation of such convention is, under the provisions of a treaty or convention with His Majesty, entitled, in whole or in part, to the same or to the like advantages with respect to its commerce with Canada, to the extent to which in manner aforesaid such other foreign power is entitled thereto; and that such advantages shall continue to so extend to such other foreign power as long as the said convention remains in force, or until the right of such other foreign power to such advantages under its treaty or convention with His Majesty is sooner determined.

6. That the advantages so granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, shall extend to the United Kingdom and the several British colonies and possessions with respect to their commerce with Canada, so long as France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the said territories continue to be entitled to such advantages; and that during the period for which France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the said territories are so entitled to such advantages, all laws inconsistent with the enjoyment thereof by the United Kingdom, and such British colonies and possessions shall be suspended to the extent to which they are so inconsistent: provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be held to diminish any advantage which the United Kingdom and British colonies and possessions now enjoy under the British Preference Tariff.

7. That from the date of the coming into force of the said convention as provided in article xx. thereof, 'The French Treaty Act, 1894,' and chapter 3, 58-59 Victoria, 'An Act respecting commercial treaties affecting Canada,' shall thereupon be repealed.

8. That the operation of all laws inconsistent with giving to the provisions of the said convention and of this Act their full effect shall from time to time be suspended to the extent of such inconsistency.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject-matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Is it the intention of the minister (Mr. Fielding) to discuss the treaty really on this resolution ? It can be discussed either on the resolution or on the Bill ; it does not make much difference which, so far as I can see, but the House should be made aware which it is to be.

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be happy to agree to the suggestion that the resolution might be assented to pro forma, and that the Bill, which is to follow immediately, be made the subject of discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. Immediately ?

Mr. FIELDING. The same day. That will be convenient, I think, because one is really a copy of the other. It is put in this form to comply with the rules.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another matter of which I spoke the other day. We are glad of the information the minister was good enough to have printed, but it does not go far, as the minister himself will see. To understand the effect of the duties under the treaty, each individual member of the House must calculate every item in the different schedules, and that involves a good deal of labour. I would suggest that, if possible, a statement might be prepared showing in parallel columns, the duty as provided in the treaty and that duty reduced to our units—that is, calculated upon the ton or gallon, or whatever it may be, and shown in dollars and cents. Any one could make these calculations in a few hours, and such a statement would be of great convenience to the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I am most anxious to furnish, as far as possible, any information that hon. gentlemen may desire. Many questions have been put—proper questions—and I have endeavoured to answer them as far as possible. I have also given one of my officials instructions to see if he can do any more along the same line. But I am afraid that a statement such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has suggested would be more difficult than he imagines. One making such calculations would have to take the French trade returns and these duties expressed in French currency, and work them out in English and according to our standards of weights, measures and money. I question whether that is worth while.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty of making such a calculation is the very reason why we should have it.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not quite see that. Of course, there is a great deal of information that it would be very nice to have if one had time to get it out. But if you take the figures which show that, whereas in a certain article the present duty is 20 francs, and it is reduced to 15 francs, the proportion of change is at once apparent to every hon. member. It is not necessary to have a printed column of figures in order to show that. But that is part of the information that the hon. gentleman seems to desire.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the minister will see that that does not go far enough. Of course, we are to discuss this treaty clause by clause, and it would not be reasonable to ask us to pass a clause of the treaty unless we could first understand its commercial effects.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what we want, everything the minister has spoken of. I can sit down and to a certain extent pick these things out myself. There is the franc in which it is expressed, there is the kilogram, and when we reckon 220 pounds for a kilogram, and 19·3 cents for a franc, one can figure it out by arithmetic. But why cannot this be done by an officer of the department, and then we would have the exact information, and so reduce it to the dollar the ton, or whatever it may be. For instance, I look here at the iron schedule, and I find that cast iron, foundry iron, containing less than 25 per cent of manganese is 1½ francs. One and a-half francs what ? Per kilogram. I have to make the calculation to find out how much that is a ton. Now the fact that you get a quarter, or a third, or an eighth reduction does not bring to the mind of the examiner what he wants; he wants to know what the rate is compared with our own rate. For instance, in lumber, the ministers who made the treaty must have known what the thing figured out in the units we have in Canada, and they ought to be able to give us the advantage of what information they have. There is no desire to delay but rather to facilitate the examination of the treaty, and so far as the minister can help us in that respect, it will facilitate our object.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was going to say that probably if the minister looks up the records of the negotiations he will find that all this has been prepared, because it is difficult to understand how the treaty could have been negotiated without some calculation of this kind to enable the plenipotentiaries to understand exactly what they were doing.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with the hon. gentlemen in their view of the importance of the points they have mentioned. It is of the utmost importance to us that we should get the best treatment on these various items for Canada ; that was the essential feature, that we should get the best treatment granted to anybody, and it was not necessary to enter into calculation to which the hon. gentleman alludes in order to determine that point. However, I have given directions to my officers to meet the various requests that have been made so far as possible, if it is possible to meet them, and if so, I shall be happy to bring down the information. But it may necessitate postponing the date of the consideration of the treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one thing that might easily be got, that is the total importations into France under the minimum tariff, and the average percentage on dutiable goods under the minimum tariff; and the same thing with reference to the general tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree that these things are half as easy to do as the hon. gentleman seems to think, but I will endeavour to get what information I can. My observation is that a great many of the things asked for will be much more difficult in the preparation than the hon. gentleman imagines.

Mr. SPROULE. We want to be in a position to understand what advantage it would be to Canada to get this reduced rate, or any rate. We would like to know what the present rate is with regard to any particular line. We require that information to enable us to understand whether it would be an advantage or otherwise to try, not only to increase that rate, but to extend it as much as possible, and whether the advantages we are likely to receive from this reduction would stimulate that trade to any great extent.

Mr. FIELDING. I think what it is important for us to know is that on an article which concerns Canada mostly, we get the best treatment that is granted to anybody. If it is the best that is granted to any one, that is all that we can get. However, I shall try to conform as much as possible to all the requests that have been made for information.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not only important to know that we get the best treatment, because that may be of no value whatever to us, and in that case there is no inducement for us to make the treaty. We want to know if there are any special advantages that will accrue to Canada by this treaty, and in order to estimate what those advantages are, we want to know what we are doing now on those lines, and what the duty is on those lines in France. We should have those facts translated into our own coin so that we can understand them.

Motion agreed to.

THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called I desire to ask the Minister of Finance if he would request the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee to call a meeting of that committee to-morrow morning.

Mr. FIELDING. The chairman informs me that the meeting has been called.

THE SUB-TARGET MACHINES.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to a question that I brought up early in the session. The First Minister moved that the Auditor General's Report and the Public Accounts of last year be referred to the committee. There was also a question about a subject which was under investigation but not finished, the sub-target question, and that remains unfinished. I would ask the First Minister if he will include that in the motion. The facts of the case are that last year when we got the papers, they were referred to the Public Accounts Committee, who went into the matter, and partly investigated it; but it remains unfinished. I would like if the First Minister would refer those papers to the committee this year in the same way as the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report. The committee meets to-morrow, and I want to subpœna witnesses so as to get the case on early.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). So far as I was concerned, I was simply endeavouring to discharge an undertaking I had made with the leader of the opposition. I am not aware what action has been taken with regard to the sub-target matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I can say to the First Minister that this was not expressly mentioned, but I think it would come within the spirit of what was undertaken, because in consequence of the arrangement which was made last year, the Public Accounts Committee did not sit again during that session. If it had continued to sit, of course this matter would have continued under investigation, and would no doubt have been finished. It was not expressly mentioned in the undertaking which the Prime Minister gave to me, but I think it was within the spirit of what was agreed to.

QUEBEC BRIDGE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask whether the commission which was authorized to investigate the Quebec Bridge disaster has yet reported ?

Hon. GEO. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The report is not yet ready.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the government any information as to when the report is likely to be presented ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not definite, but it will be down very shortly.

LEASE OF WATER-POWER ON BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the Prime Minister if he has any objection to let me have a copy of the new lease which has been passed between the government and the company on the Beauharnois canal. I understand a new lease has been made, and I would like to see a copy of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that a new lease has been made. I think everything has been brought down.

THE ALL-RED ROUTE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask for some information from the Prime Minister with reference to a despatch from London, which I find in the newspaper press, reading—

Mr. Sifton gave an interesting address on the All-Red route. The resolution of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at the imperial conference, Mr. Sifton pointed out, was for the purpose of providing a system of transportation between Great Britain, Canada and Australia. Canada was willing to contribute one-half of the amount necessary to secure an Atlantic service, and a very substantial amount of what was necessary to secure a Pacific service. There was absolutely no ground for supposing that Canada was endeavouring to lay the burden upon some one else, which she was not herself prepared to share.

I would like to know whether Mr. Sifton had any authority to pledge the government of Canada to one half of the cost of an Atlantic service or to any amount.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I do not understand that Mr. Sifton undertook to pledge Canada ; I think that Mr. Sifton rather expressed the opinion that the Canadian people generally would be disposed to contribute very generously towards that route.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has any information as to the further continued immigration of Japanese into the province of British Columbia. There have been press reports within a week or ten days indicating that there is a very considerable influx of Japanese at the present time. I have taken the Prime Minister's warning not to trust too much to these newspaper reports and for that reason I am asking the government what they know about it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend has acted wisely in taking a leaf from my own book. The information he has received, I think, is not correct. I am not aware that there is at this moment any influx of Japanese into British Columbia. I understand there is a possibility of some immigration but there is none actually taking place.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has not begun yet ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware of it.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the Prime Minister aware that there is not any.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I think I may say I know there is none.

MR. SIFTON IN ENGLAND.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if Mr. Sifton who has just been referred to has a letter from my right hon. friend for any member of the British government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend mean a letter of introduction ?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to say that I gave a letter of introduction to Mr. Sifton.

SURVEYS AND SURVEYORS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 9) respecting the surveys of the public lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys.—(Mr. Oliver.)

On section 18 ; variation of form when pupil is of age.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). When the Bill was under consideration in committee on a previous occasion, this section was held, as it was suggested that its working did not clearly convey the idea that it was desired to express. I beg to move that the following section be substituted for section 18 as printed.

If an articled pupil is, at the time of his entering into articles or of his transfer, of the full age of 21 years, form 'B' or 'E' may be so varied as to provide for the articles being entered into or the transfer made on the responsibility of such articled pupil himself, without reference to the consent and approbation of his father or of any other person.

The purpose of the section is clearly that the transfer of articles shall be on the responsibility of the pupil if he is of responsible age.

On section 22, as to surveyors qualified otherwise than under this Act.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to this section the question was asked by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) if there was reciprocity in the acceptance of surveyors between the different parts of the empire. In reply to that I would read to the House the statement prepared by the Surveyor General in explanation of the section as now printed, this being an amendment of the existing Act. He says :

This amendment is intended to apply to a class of men who, although well educated and possessed of the very best qualifications, technical as well as practical, are too old to undergo an examination in school subjects. In 1900 Australia and New Zealand entered into an agreement requiring uniform qualifications for surveyors, examinations being held on the same days everywhere and the same papers being given to all candidates. Articled pupils are required to serve four years, of which two years must be in the field, and the standard of the examination is higher than in Canada. Surveyors who have been admitted anywhere in Australia or New Zealand, have the right to practise throughout these two countries.

Canada was invited to join in this arrangement but the existence of separate land surveyors' organizations in every province prevented united action in the matter. Moreover, it was felt that to increase the term of service of articled pupils and to raise the standard of the examination would further restrict the number of surveyors, which would be most inconvenient at this stage of the country's development. The invitation had therefore to be declined for the time being.

In South Africa land surveyors from other portions of the British empire who have passed examinations in certain subjects, equivalet to those required from South African surveyors, are dispensed from examinations in such subjects provided reciprocal privileges are granted to South African surveyors. The qualifications required from surveyors in South Africa, are, however, still higher than in Australia and New Zealand, so that Canadian surveyors cannot take advantage of the privilege of exemption from examination.

The fact is then that Canada was asked by Australia and New Zealand to enter into reciprocal arrangements and declined for the reasons given. Reciprocal privileges are given by South Africa but Canada is prevented from taking advantage of them simply by the fact that the qualifications in South Africa are much higher than those in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The net result will be that the minister proposes that this section shall remain as it is.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be my proposal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The advantage of being able to get men of this character from other dominions outweighs any consideration of reciprocity.

Mr. OLIVER. It would not outweigh any consideration of reciprocity; but seeing that reciprocity is now offered by South Africa and has been offered by Australia and New Zealand and was refused by us, it appears to me fair to accept the section.

On section 58,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This section deals with the method of determining the amounts payable for lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, for lands where there is a change. It is proposed in accordance with the suggestion of the leader of the opposition to add these words :

Or in case either party is dissatisfied with the finding of the minister, such an amount as may be determined by the award of a single arbitrator if the parties concur in his appointment; or if not, by the award of three arbitrators, one to be named by each of the parties and the third by the two so named, provided in the latter case that if either party refuses or neglects to name an arbitrator within one month after being notified so to do, an arbitrator may be named on his behalf by the agent of the Dominion lands of the district.

2. The award of the single arbitrator or of a majority of such three arbitrators shall be final and the proceedings upon such arbitration shall be governed by the laws in force in the province in that behalf.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 59,

Mr. OLIVER. There was a question asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) as to the placing of posts at every half mile. I am informed by the Surveyor General that iron posts are planted only at section corners; wooden posts being used at quarter-section corners for the sake of economy. It has, however, been found advisable to use iron posts at quarter-section corners in winter surveys owing to the difficulty of placing wooden posts in frozen ground. The use of wooden posts might be abandoned and the additional cost of iron posts is only about $10 per section. The change can be made by the minister without an amendment to the Act, and I have given the Surveyor General authority to use iron posts. I desire to add the following to the Bill as a repealing section:

Sections 16 to 80 inclusive, 200, 212, 221 to 224 inclusive of the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 55 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, are repealed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand this is a repealing section which is made necessary by the consolidation of the Act it is now proposed to pass.

Mr. OLIVER. No. It is a repealing section made necessary in order that this Act may have effect no matter whether the present Dominion Lands Act remains in force or not. It is to separate from the Dominion the provisions in regard to surveys now existing in that Act, without regard to any further amendment of the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is simply to repeal these sections in the Dominion Lands Act?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked certain questions regarding the rates of pay on surveys. I have the information here; it covers four pages of foolscap and I can hand it into 'Hansard' if there is no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hand it into 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. Or I can lay it on the table.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be more convenient to have it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. May I be permitted to let it go into 'Hansard' without reading it?

Mr. SPROULE. So far as I am concerned, yes.

Mr. OLIVER. It is as follows:

291. When the services of a surveyor are of a temporary character, his salary is at the rate of $6.50 per day for ordinary surveys, but for surveys of block outlines and for services requiring special qualifications, the rate is $7.50 per day.

295. The surveyor is allowed the actual cost of hire of men, provided their number and rate of pay is not in excess of what is permitted by his instructions.

296. For the transport of himself and party and miscellaneous expenditure (not including meals, board and hotel expenses, camp equipage and stationery), the surveyor is allowed actual expenses supported by vouchers, provided they do not exceed what is allowed by his instructions. Requisitions for railway tickets are furnished to him and he is expected to obtain transportation at the lowest rate after inquiry from the ticket agents. Return tickets or excursion tickets must be used whenever practicable, or limited tickets when they answer the purpose as well as unlimited tickets.

289. The surveyor in charge of a survey party is allowed a special ration allowance of $1 per day for the party, such allowance being paid as long as the surveyor remains in the field. He is further allowed an ordinary ration allowance of 55 cents per day for himself and every member of his party while in the field.

299. For meals, board and hotel expenses of himself and party, while in the field, the surveyor is allowed, in addition to the ration allowance, a sum of 40 cents per day for himself and 4 cents per day for every other member of his party.

300. Camp equipage is owned and furnished by the surveyor. For its use he is allowed, while in the field, 40 cents per day for himself and 6 cents per day for every other member of his party.

302. When an assistant is regularly appointed as such by the Minister of the Interior, the board and camp equipage allowance for him are 25 cents and 10 cents per day respectively.

303. A sum of $10 is allowed for stationery.

304. While engaged at office work preparing returns the surveyor is allowed $1 per day for living expenses, in addition to his daily salary.

305. In special cases, when it is considered that any of the regulations respecting rations, board, camp equipage or stationery is not suitable, the surveyor may be allowed actual expenses supported by vouchers.

Contract Surveys.—312. Section lines are paid for at the rate of $2.50 per mile of line surveyed.

313. A further payment at the rate of 50 cents per chain ($40 per mile) up to ten chains in a section side is made for opening, cutting and blazing the line through woods, windfalls, underbrush or heavy scrub.

314. Any opening, cutting and blazing of the line in excess of ten chains in a section side is paid at the rate of 25 cents per chain ($20 per mile).

315. No payment is made under the provisions of clauses 313 and 314 where the line could have been measured without opening and cutting

320. A further payment at the rate of $3 per mile is made for section lines surveyed over rough or hilly country. A section side is classified as rough or hilly when the field notes show that it crosses a ravine not less than 100 feet deep, or two ravines not less than 50 feet deep, or that the difference of level between two points of the line not more than half a mile apart exceeds 200 feet, the depths or heights being measured by aneroid barometer. In case the corner of the section falls in the ravine or on the side of the hill, payment is made for either of the adjoining sections, but not for both.

321. A further payment at the rate of $4 per mile may be made upon a report of the Examiner of Surveys, concurred in by the Surveyor General, stating that the survey presented unusual difficulties on account of large rivers or of marshes too deep to be waded across. Payment, if made, is for the number of miles recommended in the report.

322. A further payment at the rate of $4 per mile is made for surveying the meridian outlines of a township when such outlines are included in a subdivision survey contract, but such payment is not made for resurveying or retracing lines previously surveyed.

324. A further payment at the rate of 25 cents per pit in prairie and 40 cents per pit in the woods is made for erecting a boundary monument, such payment covering the cost of planting and marking the post, building the mound and otherwise completing the monument. A witness trench is paid for as four pits. A stone mound is paid for as four pits in the woods. A long quartersection post planted in a marsh is reckoned as two prairie pits (50 cents).

325. Traverses of lakes and rivers and connecting traverses are paid at the rate of $11 per mile. For traverses of lakes and rivers the distance to be paid for is measured along the bank of the lake or river from every point fixed by the survey in a straight line to the next point. Nothing is paid for offsets.

326. A payment at such rate as the Surveyor General may allow, but not exceeding $2 per mile of township outline or section line surveyed may be made for the determination of the astronomical direction of the lines of the survey.

329. A deduction at such rate as the Examiner of Surveys recommends is made from the payments to survey contractors for deficiency in the survey monuments, whether the deficiency be in the size of the pits, the marking or driving of the posts, or the scattering of the earth from the pits. The deduction recommended by the examiner is at the rate of 6 cents per cubic foot of deficiency in the pits in excess of a foot and a half per pit, and 5 cents per pit for not scattering the earth away from the pits. The deficiency is averaged on the pits examined and applied to the whole contract.

In paying for traverses, $1 is deducted for every offset less than the number required by the manual. Distances measured by means of improper triangles are not paid for.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION ACT—AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 10) to amend the Irrigation Act—Mr. Oliver.

On section 4,

Mr. OLIVER. On this section the point was taken that although provision was made to require the consent of the municipality before the irrigation company could enter with its works within that municipality, it did not provide for the future protection of the interests of the municipality where these interests might conflict with those of the irrigation company. The point was also taken that there should be defined the form of consent that should be given by the municipality so that there could not be any possibility of doubt as to the consent having been given. In regard to the first point I submitted the question to the Department of Justice. The object of the section is of course to protect the rights of municipalities. The reply I received was in effect that inasmuch as the consent of the municipality was necessary to the entry of the irrigation works into the municipality, it was within the right and power of the municipality to dictate terms, such terms as would at the time and for the future effectually protect its interests, and that therefore it was not necessary to add to the terms of the section as it stands in the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Might we not be confronted with the same difficulty that occurred in regard to telegraph and telephone lines? Our understanding was that the municipalities had the same control over them that it is proposed by this Bill to give to them over irrigation companies; but it was afterwards decided by the courts that where a company had the right to erect a line, for instance, a long distance line, that right carried with it the power to compel the municipalities to allow it to pass through without imposing any restrictions or conditions upon it. Is it not likely that the courts would decide in the same way in this case? If we gave an irrigation company power to make a ditch fifty miles long, passing through several municipalities, would not that power carry with it the right to pass through those municipalities without being subject to any restrictions which the municipalities might attempt to impose?

Mr. OLIVER. The difference, I understand, is this. The railway, telegraph or telephone company holds its rights by a special charter, while the irrigation company holds its rights under a general law and is limited in its rights and powers by the general Irrigation Act, which we propose to amend by making this provision. It is suggested that a special Act might be passed by parliament giving to an irrigation company special powers which would over-ride this section. In that case the condition would be such as my hon. friend has suggested in the case of railway, telegraph and telephone companies. But that is not contemplated. What is contemplated is that irrigation companies shall be incorporated under the general Irrigation Act, and that their powers shall be only such as that Act confers.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Irrigation Act provide that they shall have the right?

Mr. OLIVER. No. This section would limit the rights of an irrigation company when it comes into conflict with a municipality.

Mr. SPROULE. What serious objection could there be to providing in this Act, as we have done in several private Acts, that when an irrigation company gets permission to pass through a municipality it shall do so under regulations made by the municipality, which are not inconsistent with the right of the company to carry on the work?

Mr. OLIVER. There are difficulties which exist with regard to irrigation companies which do not exist with regard to railway, telegraph or telephone companies; and a regulation that might be perfectly adequate and satisfactory as applied to one town might be absolutely inadequate and unsatisfactory if applied to another town; or, to put it another way, what might be absolutely burdensome and unnecessary in regard to one town might be an actual necessity in regard to another. The purpose of this section is to place the municipality in absolute control of arrangements suitable to its own conditions.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in the understanding that if an irrigation company desires to take its irrigation ditch through a municipality, the municipal council can refuse it permission to do so under certain stipulations which it regards as necessary in the interests of the municipality ?

Mr. OLIVER. So I am advised.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that is right, for this reason, that the power to withhold consent implies the power to give consent subject to certain conditions or stipulations. A practical difficulty which might arise would be that unless a municipality, in giving its consent, reserved to itself the right in the future to make regulations with regard to maintenance, it might find itself without the power to do so. For that reason I would prefer that the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey should be adopted, because then, in the event of an oversight of that kind, or apart from any question of oversight, that would confer on the municipality the power at all times to regulate the maintenance, so that the safety of life and property might be guarded. It may be guarded under this provision if the authorities of every municipality are vigilant and understand exactly its legal bearings; but if they should not be vigilant, a case might arise in which it would find its right of control gone.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Another difficulty might arise after a municipality had extended its limits. I am given to understand by the minister that he submitted that objection to the Department of Justice, and that they have advised him that when the consent of the municipality were given, such restrictions might be placed upon the right of the company to carry on its work as would protect the municipality in the future. It is absolutely impossible to foresee what works are going to be carried on in the neighbourhood of the municipality, and I would remind the minister that representations were made to him on this very point by the Union of Alberta Municipalities, which met at Red Deer on the 8th, 9th and 10th of January, 1907. A copy of their resolutions has been sent to him, so I have been advised by letter. Copies have also been sent to all the western members. On that very point, these resolutions say :

This convention also desires to add that some regulations should be adopted for any irrigation works which are already constructed and which will come within the limits of the municipalities as organized by law later on.

It is absolutely impossible for these municipalities to ascertain where these works are going to be carried on. They may be carried on within a mile or a mile and a half of the municipality ; and in the western country, where the greater part is not under organized municipalities, the point might arise as to what course should be taken in case the boundaries of a municipality or town should be extended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or in the case of a municipality established after the irrigation works are constructed.

Mr. OLIVER. There is nothing to prevent a municipality, in its arrangement with a company, providing for the extension of its boundaries. When we vest a municipality or a provincial government, as the case may be, with the right to withhold or give, there does not seem to be any difficulty about the municipality or the provincial government, in its arrangement with the company, anticipating the future extension of its limits. Whether it is desirable that parliament should go further or not, I am not at the moment prepared to say. I am desirous of safeguarding in every possible way the interests of the municipalities, but it is very difficult to formulate conditions which would apply to every case. It seems to me a fair proposition that a municipality should be vested with full authority to protect its own interests and then depend on the municipality doing so. So far as I am concerned, I am very willing to limit the rights of irrigation companies in the public interest ; but, on the other hand, those who are acquainted with irrigation conditions will agree that that is a very serious responsibility to assume, and I am not anxious to assume it. Even if absolute necessity be shown, I would much rather not assume the responsibility of imposing regulations on these companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand that there has been any suggestion of the necessity for regulation by the minister, but merely that the language of the section should be so extended that in all the cases mentioned by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy), and certain cases I mentioned, the public interests should be protected somewhat better than they are at present. The section, as it stands, is open to the difficulty which I mentioned a moment ago, namely, that unless a municipality reserves the right of future control, when giving its consent, it might have no future control.

Mr. OLIVER. Surely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. McCarthy) mentions the case of the extension of the boundaries of a municipality. Of course that might be provided against by the consent given in the first instance, but you would require very great foresight to cover all possible cases that might arise. Then there is the third case mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. McCarthy). That is the case of the establishment of a town upon a location through which irrigation works are already constructed. That does not seem to be provided for by the section at all. It would seem to be wise to make some better provision in the first two cases and some provision of the same character in the last case.

Mr. OLIVER. Take the case of irrigation rights having been granted. Take for instance the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which proposes to irrigate three and a half million of acres by the waters of the Bow river. That project involves tremendous expenditure, and its financial success depends on the company being able to carry out its project according to its original intent. We would have to consider very seriously the proposition to clothe a municipal organization with an authority which might seriously interfere with that irrigation project, after the money had been expended. We have to see that the interests involved in the success of the project are protected as well as the municipality.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You mean that the regulation might be of an oppressive or confiscatory character.

Mr. OLIVER. I think we would have to be careful in that regard. Where a municipality is in existence before the irrigation project is accomplished, the municipality has the right to lay down its conditions; but where the municipality comes into existence after the irrigation project has been established, is not at all a case to be put on the same level, and we would have to give a consideration to that case which we need not to the other.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would seem desirable in the public interest that there should be some regulation in the latter case. The regulation by a municipality might be made subject to the approval of some higher authority. I do not think the minister has made out a case for the absence of any regulation, nor do I understand that his argument leads to that conclusion. The only question is what should be the character of that regulation. Shall we give a municipality the power of regulation subject to an appeal by the irrigation companies to some higher authority? That might be one solution. But it is a matter which ought to be considered and provided for in this Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not consider the idea of providing for an appeal to a higher authority opportune. Suppose an important irrigation project were on foot and it were absolutely necessary for that project to enter to some extent within the boundaries of an organized municipality, and suppose the municipality should absolutely refuse its consent, it is a question whether it would be in the public interest to permit the municipality to exercise such authority. I think it is provided, to some extent, in the Railway Act that, under such circumstances, in case of a dispute between a municipality and the company, there shall be an appeal. It seems to me that that might be a way out of the difficulty in the case of an irrigation project, which it was proposed to force through a municipality, and it might also apply to a case arising after the irrigation ditch was built. But, as these cases are not now immediately pressing, as no immediate difficulty has arisen, it seems to me that the matter might very well be left for the time being until we saw what the trend of circumstances might be. The present necessity is to provide for the protection of a municipality—to provide for its absolute protection, which is done by the Bill as it stands without any right of appeal. If we provide for an appeal we thereby take from the absolute authority of the municipality. Until it is shown, on the one hand, that the municipalities are liable to make improvident concessions, or on the other, that they are likely to hold up or obstruct useful enterprises, it seems to me, the safest and best policy, and the one most acceptable to the municipalities, will be to leave them, as the section does leave them, in absolute control.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is a matter that, apparently, has been in the minds of members of the Union of Alberta municipalities referred to by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy). For, I observe that one section of the first resolution which they passed says:

> This convention also desires to add that some regulations should be adopted for any irrigation works already constructed, and which come within the limits of the municipality organized later on.

They have in mind the case of construction of irrigation works and the extension subsequently of a municipality. They do not say that the municipalities should regulate, but they say that there should be some regulation. Of course, I am not so familiar with conditions in the West as the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) is. It may be that these conditions would justify the postponement of the consideration of this question. I do not think it should be left out of sight, because the conditions in the west are those of very rapid development, and difficulties of this kind may come upon the people of the west very much more rapidly than any of us at present anticipate.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think there would be the slightest danger of these points passing out of consideration. But what I want to emphasize is that the point dealt with in the Bill is of immediate, pressing necessity, and that the section as it is placed before the committee is adequate to meet that necessity as it exists. The other conditions suggested by my hon. friend from Calgary, while well worthy of consideration, yet, as they are not immediately pressing, might fairly be left for consideration until they begin to arrive, when we shall have a fairer view of those conditions and a clearer understanding of what will be necessary to meet them than we now have when we are not absolutely face to face with conditions as we are with the conditions dealt with under the section.

Mr. SPROULE. But if we wait, is there not danger that a company will fall back on its vested rights, and say that it is not to be interfered with ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Even though conditions may yet be ripe, we can see that they may ripen in the future. Speaking for myself, I believe it is good legislation to provide for these conditions if we can draft a Bill in such a way. If the conditions arise, the Bill can be applied to them. It does no harm to have such provisions in the Bill. Let us make our legislation as perfect as we can for, otherwise, considerable trouble may arise. For instance, a project itself as has just been suggested, might be blocked by an unreasonable municipality refusing to allow it to go through that municipality ; or the development of a municipality not now in existence may need to be protected. I think we could so frame the Bill as to meet difficulties of this kind, and I believe it is wise that we should do so.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite satisfied that we can frame provisions for this Bill that will, for the time being, and as far as we know them, meet the conditions that have been suggested. But I say also that we cannot frame any such conditions without derogating from the absolute right of the municipality, the protection of which is the leading feature of this section of the Bill.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I do not think the minister should press this section until an opportunity is afforded to communicate with the Union of Municipalities which has met twice, once in September in Medicine Hat and again in January at Red Deer, on both of which occasions they seemed to fear that if legislation respecting irrigation is passed, their future rights could not be protected. They have sent copies of their resolutions, as I have said, to the minister and to the members from Alberta. In writing the other day, the secretary of the Union of Alberta Municipalities, stated :

> The convention attaches very great importance to these resolutions, copies of which have already been sent to the Hon. Minister of the Interior, and which the convention hope will receive your favourable consideration and support.

Mr. OLIVER.

Now, it seems to me that the minister could go back to the Department of Justice and satisfy them that this question is one which, at the present time, is agitating the minds of the people of this country. He can very easily show them that the right of the municipality to consent would not protect the interests of the municipality which should extend its boundaries. I do not think the section should be allowed to pass until we have had an opportunity of communicating with these people with regard to it. Another reason why the section should not be urged to-day is that, as I observe, an entirely new Bill has been distributed, substituted for the Bill which we discussed before the Christmas adjournment. I am not familiar enough with the question of irrigation to discuss the clauses of the Bill without some opportunity to take those clauses up with the people who are so much interested and who have a right to be heard in connection with this matter.

Mr. WARD. Is it the intention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to take action this session in connection with the request of the Western Canadian Irrigation Convention, which, I observe, met in the city of Calgary last month. On that occasion a very strong resolution was passed in favour of the conservation of the forests on the watersheds. It was pointed out that the forests in which the streams rise were likely to be denuded, and the resolution of the convention is that some action should be taken to conserve the forests of the watersheds. It seems to me this strikes at the root of the source of supply of the whole irrigation system of the Northwest.

Mr. OLIVER. The various resolutions of the Western Irrigation Convention are receiving every attention at the hands of the department. The department was represented at the convention for the purpose of exchanging information and arriving at the best conclusion possible under the circumstances. The resolution mentioned by my hon. friend is being considered along with others. In regard to the suggestion made by the member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy), that we should hold this section over for further consideration, I have no objection. Certainly at this early stage of the session I would not wish to force any legislation that might be the better for consideration by the people who are immediately interested. However, I would point out that this section has been before the House ever since it opened, and there has been every opportunity to consider its provisions. Its provisions have been considered, and its principle is, I think, very clear cut. I would not like, on my own responsibility, to suggest any amendment to the section as it now stands, fortified as I am by the opinion of the Department of Justice that as it stands, places the municipalities in control of the situation. If that is the case, I would not like to be a party to amending that section in any direction that would derogate from that control, unless and until it has been shown that it is either the desire of the municipalities themselves, or is necessary in the public interest.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. No one has suggested that control should be taken away from the municipalities, the suggestion from this side is that greater control should be given to them. The mere fact of getting the consent of the municipalities now, should not be a detriment in case their boundaries should be enlarged. The minister knows that he would not like to have to say now what sections of the country are to be brought under irrigation. The municipalities may not foresee that there would be any irrigation works carried on within their limits. Then the section as it stands to-day would be amply sufficient, I think it does protect the municipalities as it stands. But it is the point which is taken by the Union of Alberta Municipalities which I want the minister to guard against, the objection they take to the section as it stands. I am told and I assume it is correct, that on the 5th of December the minister communicated with the secretary of the municipalities and told him that a Bill would be introduced in due course. So the minister's statement is hardly correct when he says that this Bill as it stands has been before the House since the beginning of the session. I do not know the date of the first reading of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. December 5.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY Apparently the same date as that of the letter which was sent to the secretary of the union saying that a Bill would be introduced.

Mr. OLIVER. What I have said in regard to the sections we have had under consideration does not apply to a great deal of the printed Bill that is placed before the House to-day. During the adjournment I was able to go into the subject of irrigation a little more fully than I had been able to do before the opening of the House. Before the opening of the House my object was to meet the views of the municipalities in protecting their interests, and to make other provisions in the same direction. But during the adjournment, after looking carefully into the provisions of the Bill, and having had favourable opportunities of considering its possible operation, and knowing the Bill had to be considered again in the House, I thought it well to suggest certain further amendments, which I have had embodied in the proposed Bill, and have had placed before the House to-day. I would not press these new provisions to a conclusion to-day, but I would be glad if the committee would consider these amendments introduced to-day in place of the amendments that we considered before the adjournment; I would like to have at least a preliminary discussion upon them, so that the country may have an opportunity of considering them as a result of this discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that would be quite satisfactory, coupled with that the further reference, that before the Bill finally left the committee copies of it should be sent to the Union of Alberta Municipalities, so that we may know what criticism they have to make upon its provisions.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me this is rather a strange mix-up. Notice is put on the paper of an Irrigation Bill, and it is introduced in the House, explanations are made, the discussion takes place upon the principle, the House assents to the principle, and we are prepared to go into committee on that Bill. But after an interregnum of a short time, we come back and find another Bill put into our hands materially different from the one which the House considered, and sent to the Committee of the Whole. We are asked now to take up this new Bill in place of the other one. Now what is the authority of the minister for passing around this new Bill in place of the old one? I scarcely think the circumstances justify his changing the Bill and handing us another one.

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill that was before the House before the adjournment is before the House to-day in its reprinted form. I presume it would have been quite in order, after the amendments which were contained in the original Bill had been considered in committee, or during their consideration, to have made other amendments. It would have been however inconvenient, or impossible in fact, for the House at large to have acquainted itself thoroughly with these amendments as they would have had to be moved from time to time. Therefore I thought there could be no objection, although slightly deviating from the ordinary rule, if I took the opportunity of embodying the proposed amendments in the Bill so that each member should have them in his hands. A comparison will be noticed between the sections of the Act as it stands to-day, and as it is proposed with the 'amending words.' Although this is a deviation from the ordinary rule, I hope the House will accept it for the sake of arriving at a good understanding of what is wanted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A reprint of the Bill as now proposed?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. With regard to section 4, the reprint is different from the clause first proposed. Is it proposed to carry the clause as it originally came down, or as reprinted?

Mr. OLIVER. The reprint contains an amendment which was suggested by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), and which we desire to propose to the House should we consider the passing of the section; as at the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) I do not intend to push the section to a conclusion to-day. I would move, if it is necessary, that we take up the amendments as placed before the House to-day and consider them from the beginning in order that I may explain the purpose of each proposed amendment.

Section 4 allowed to stand.

On section 1, interpretation clause,

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of this amendment is to make a convenient and suitable provision so that we may use the expression 'domestic purposes' in a sense more in keeping with its true intent. The existing Act provides that 'domestic purposes' means household and sanitary purposes and all purposes connected with the watering of stock and the working of railways or factories by steam.' In applying the Act we find when we wish to use the words 'domestic purposes' we are compelled to use them in a sense that will cover the operation of railways and factories, which is not, properly speaking, domestic purposes, and we think it better to make a change providing a section which will cover purely domestic purposes, putting the use of water for railways or factories under a provision for industrial purposes. We would propose that section (k) of section 2 should read :

'Domestic purposes' means household and sanitary purposes and all purposes connected with the watering of stock and the working of agricultural machinery by steam, but shall not include the sale or barter of water for such purposes.

That is to say we want to allow the use of water to generate steam in a threshing machine, crushing machine, &c., as domestic purposes, but as I said we do not want to include under this, water required for railways and factories; that should come under 'industrial purposes' for which we provide under section No. 2.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the expression 'industrial purposes' used in the Act?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes, in section 10.

On section 5, use of water for domestic purposes.

Mr. OLIVER. This amended section makes clearer our purpose in making the distinction between domestic and industrial purposes. We thought that whenever any person acquired the right to use water for irrigation purposes he should also have the right to use it for domestic purposes. But as domestic purposes were originally defined in the Bill, the water could thus be used for railways and factories on the pretense that such purposes were domestic purposes. After amending the definition of domestic purposes we think we are justified in saying that wherever a man has secured the right to divert water for irrigation purposes he should have the right to use water for domestic purposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But not for industrial purposes?

Mr. OLIVER. Not for industrial purposes.

On section 6, the right to use water for preservation of life, &c.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 11 in the original Act preserves the inherent right to use water as it flows. The section reads :

No application for any purposes shall be granted where the proposed use of the water shall deprive any person owning lands adjoing the river, stream, lake or other source of supply, of whatever water he requires for domestic purposes.

We desire to add to that words that will preserve to any person the right to use that water wherever he may find it for the preservation of life, or the protection of property. The right to the water is inherent in the government ; that is to say in the whole people. Although we allow the irrigation company to use the water under license for the purpose of irrigation, we consider that they should not be entitled to prevent any person from using that water to drink or to put out a fire. It is more a matter of principle than it is a matter of real utility. We want to affirm the principle that the actual right to the water remains with the people ; we sell only the use of the water to the irrigation company, we do not sell them the water itself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The drafting of that section is not happy. Reading the amendment without the context one would get the idea that the applicant for the right was the same as the person who is not to be deprived of the water, and that is not the intention. It would be an improvement were it to read :

And any right to water granted to any applicant under this Act shall not deprive any other person of the right to the use of such water for the preservation of life and property.

Mr. OLIVER. I will make a note of that and attend to it. Now, section 15 of the original Act provides for the filing of plans with the commissioner of irrigation, who, when this Act was passed, was also the Commissioner of Public Works for the Northwest Territories. The offices are now divided and the commissioner of irrigation has no connection with the provincial government. While providing for the filing of plans with the commissioner of irrigation, we have to make provision for the filing of plans with the Commissioner of Public Works for the province, as we provide for requiring his consent in respect to the crossing of roads and other property under the control of the province. There is an amendment to provide for that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand this amendment with reference to the authorization of a work by the Dominion government, and the withholding of consent by a municipality.

Mr. OLIVER. It is hardly a business-like proposition in a way, but it is in case the provincial authorities should refuse to give their consent until the Dominion government had authorized the work. Now we will not authorize a work until the provincial authorities or the municipality gives their consent and this amendment is to get over any possibility of a dead-lock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You should insert the word 'satisfactory' before the word 'evidence' so as to make it read : 'satisfactory evidence.'

Mr. OLIVER. Very good.

On section 13,

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of this amendment is to make definite and clear the responsibility of the minister in regard to the agreements between the company and the users of water. As the section stands at present, the by-laws, regulations and tariffs of the company are subject to the approval of the minister. This places a very heavy burden of responsibility upon him, and yet does not give him that full right or power of protection of the interests of the users of water that he should have if he is to be charged with such responsibility, inasmuch as an agreement might be made which might be to a very great extent to the disadvantage of the users of water, and that would not be under the supervision of the minister. It seems to me that if the minister is to be brought into this matter at all, he should be vested with the full right of protection, otherwise he should be relieved of the responsibility of protecting the users of water.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the practice ? Is there a standard form of agreement ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The form of agreement is submitted from time to time for approval. Each agreement is a standard for itself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I mean, has each company a standard form of agreement ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and it is a question just how far the authority of the minister goes in regard to that agreement. I think the doubt should be removed, and that if the minister is to have any responsibility at all he should have full responsibility.

On the question, that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to pass any legislation such as was asked for by the Western Canada Irrigation Association, which met in July last, and at which there were present representatives of the Department of the Interior, the government of British Columbia and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. One demand which they particularly made was that certain lands should be withdrawn from sale and settlement, after investigations had been made, for the purpose of establishing natural reservoir sites. I would ask the minister if he intends to introduce the legislation they request in that regard, either in this Bill or in a separate Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that legislation is necessary to meet the requirements in that regard. For a long time there have been certain reservations of land with a view to their use as reservoir sites and other purposes necessary for irrigation, and I think the government has still authority to make such reservations.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Last session I asked the minister what was being done in this regard, and he informed me on the 11th of March, 1907, that he had three men in the field making investigations, gauging streams and seeing what steps could be taken to preserve the water supply. This was his answer :

> Last season three parties were in the field. One party was occupied in gauging the rivers and large streams to determine the flow of water therein and in obtaining general information for the hydrographic branch. The other two parties were employed in gauging the smaller creeks in addition and in inspecting works in connection with irrigation schemes.

I do not know how the minister proposes to do this without legislation. A school section might be found to be the proper sight for a natural reservoir. It seems to me that some legislation would have to be passed to withdraw these lands from sale and settlement. The Western Canada Irrigation Association made other demands to which it is not necessary for me to refer the minister, as they are in his department. What I would ask is what he intends to do with regard to the resolutions passed by that association ?

Mr. OLIVER. As I have already said, the intention of the department is to give every consideration to the resolutions passed, and to deal with the subjects discussed in those resolutions from time to time as it seems possible to do so. Regarding the question of the reservation of reservoir sites, as I have already said, the government has for many years been clothed with authority to make such reservations. That authority seems to be sufficient, because a number of such reservations have been made. With regard to school sections, inasmuch as they are already under reservation and can only be disposed of by authority of the department, it does not seem to me that legislation is necessary to protect the interests of irrigation in that regard.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is the department taking any steps to select natural reservoir sites at the present time ? Have the three men who were out making investigations made any report ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend is under some misapprehension as to the chief purpose of the employment of the three men whom he mentions. While they are taking notes of the general conditions governing irrigation, gauging streams and looking out for reservoir sites, their main purpose is to meet the requirements of proposals which are from time to time put before the department looking to active irrigation. The time they are able to give to a consideration of the general question is only a small part of their time. But from time to time, as they arrive at a conclusion and place that conclusion before the department, the department is prepared to act as may seem best in the public interest. It is impossible for me to say that the department is prepared to reserve every possible piece of land in the Northwest which may at some time become useful as a reservoir site. On the other hand, it would be impossible for the department to refuse to reserve a piece of ground that is represented as necessary for the purposes of irrigation. We have to deal with these matters as they come up.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Last session I put this question to the hon. minister regarding the investigation being carried on by these gentlemen :

To what extent, if any, is the government, or any department thereof, carrying on investigations in the western provinces, bearing upon the measurement of streams and the conservation of the water supply for irrigation and other purposes by the location and withdrawal from sale and settlement of natural reservoir sites?

The minister replied that these three gentlemen were making an investigation. I would like him to inform the House to-day what the Department of the Interior is prepared to do in the matter. I would like him to say whether, after hearing the representations made last session and those which were made to the officials of his department present at the meeting of the Western Irrigation Association, he has decided that certain sites should be set aside at present as natural reservoir sites for the conservation of the water supply.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be impossible for me to give the information this afternoon, but if my hon. friend will move for a return with regard to any of these matters there will be no difficulty about procuring it.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. Whom does my hon. friend expect to serve by this Bill? Is it intended to serve private companies or to impose restrictions on irrigation companies? On reading over the Bill it seems to be full of objections to the operations of any one who wants to irrigate in the Northwest. Would it not be a better policy for the government themselves to irrigate the Northwest? That work has been done by the United States government in the western parts of the United States, and I do not see why the Canadian government should not do the same thing in our Northwest. When I was in the Northwest I was told that there are millions of acres in that country which would yield three crops a year if irrigated. If that be the case, why leave this work to be done by private companies, subject to all the restrictions put upon them by this Bill? Why not let the government do it and let those who use these fertile lands later on pay their share?

Mr. OLIVER. No doubt for the same reason that the government does not build all the railways and steamboats and other public utilities in the country. There is still some room in this country for the exertion of private enterprise and the application of individual energy. While the question of irrigation by the government is one that may fairly be considered, on the other hand irrigation is one of these things which may always be dealt with by private enterprise. The fact that there is a great deal of irrigation to be done is not conclusive evidence that the government ought to do it. There are limitations even to the ability of the government.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. All the business of the country cannot possibly be prosecuted by any government.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. If there is one kind of work which seems to me that should be done by government it is work of this kind. How can every private owner of lands in the west irrigate them himself without encroaching upon the rights and privileges of his neighbours? I do not quite understand how such work can be carried on by private parties, but can quite understand that it might well be done by the government on a large scale or by a large company like the Canadian Pacific Railway which has been spending a great deal of money in irrigating its own lands. If it is profitable for the Canadian Pacific Railway to do so, would it not be good policy for the government to irrigate those immense areas of government land, the irrigation of which will make them so fertile?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt a good deal in what my hon. friend says and it is a fair matter for consideration. But up to the present there does not seem to me to be any cause for complaint that irrigation works are not being prosecuted on a sufficiently large scale or that there has not been a fairly rapid development of irrigation enterprise in the Northwest. Even yet irrigation in the west on a large scale as a commercial undertaking is a matter of experiment. That experiment is being carried on by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Alberta Irrigation Company and other companies, and until irrigation has been demonstrated a commercial success, I think it would be well for the government to refrain from undertaking the vast expenditure which would be required in order to bring under development the areas that now require irrigation.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows that irrigation of public lands has been the policy of the United States government for some years past. He knows that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not have gone into that business unless assured of success. I think the success has been proved already. I believe they have spent over $3,000,000 on irrigation and propose spending more next year and every other year until they have irrigated all their lands that require irrigation. If it pays the Canadian Pacific Railway to do this, why would not the same policy be a good one for the Canadian government. That is the proposition I submit to my hon. friend, and the adoption of such a policy would dispense with the necessity of introducing Bills such as this, which seems to contain restrictions rather than anything else.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has said about the operations of the United States government is absolutely correct, and these operations have resulted in this beneficial feature. In the United States these lands when irrigated, are handed over to the settler at the cost of irrigation. But in this country, under the policy lately inaugurated by this government, as exemplified by the Robbin's irrigation deal, the lands are sold to the settler at such prices as the company may see fit to exact. There is no limit fixed on the price the company may exact from the settler. Under these circumstances, what my hon. friend said is worthy of our gravest consideration. The United States irrigation system has been a vast success—there is no doubt about that. It has been carried on by economical and businesslike methods and is to-day adding enormously to the wealth of the United States by bringing into the market for the benefit of the settler great areas of land upon which the crops are always certain. In this country we have a very large area which can be irrigated. Up to the present time, this work has been altogether left to private enterprise. We might not complain so much about that, if it had been left to private enterprise under the latter policy of the government, under fair conditions. But it has not been left to private enterprise upon conditions that are fair to the settler. I allude again to the illustration mentioned just now of the Robbins Irrigation Company, which seems to have been devised not only to hold up the settler in the future but more particularly to put into the pockets of friends of this government about $750,000 or $800,000 without the expenditure by these gentlemen of more than a trifle. I should think that, under these circumstances, the attention of parliament ought to be very carefully directed to this question of irrigation in the west; and so I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) is very timely.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I regret that I do not seem to be able to make myself clear to the Minister of the Interior. I have tried to get from him an answer to a question similar to one which I put last session, as to what steps the government have taken, and what they intend to do with regard to the conservation of the water supply in that country. People in that country to-day are becoming alarmed at the concessions given to such concerns as the Robbins Irrigation Company and other large companies covering permission to tap some of the largest streams. Therefore, an agitation has grown up in that country in favour of an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining what length of time the water supply will last, having regard to the amount of land likely to be brought under irrigation. I asked last session, and I repeat the question now: What does the government intend to do? Is the government making an investigation at the present time? If so, has it determined that certain lands should be set aside as natural reservoir sites to conserve the water supply? The minister tells me that I had better move for a return. I fail to see how a motion for a return can bring to light what the government intends to do with regard to this question. I have put the question fairly and have tried to make myself clear, and I would like to get a fair answer from the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know any better way for the hon. gentleman (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) to learn what the government has done than to move for a return. As to what the government is going to do, I have stated to the hon. gentleman, and I can only repeat, that the government is taking such means as indicated in the answer last year to arrive at a conclusion as to what is necessary and practicable. We will act according to the information secured from time to time as the circumstances require. I am sorry if I have not made myself clear, but that is the best I can do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the government information on the subject?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is it, in effect?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the papers before me, nor have I the facts at my fingers' ends. But, from time to time and from year to year, the government has collected records through its surveyors in regard to these matters. These records are available, and I shall have great pleasure in placing them before the House if they are desired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the government acquired sufficient information to enable it to reach a determination upon the question of policy?

Mr. OLIVER. The question of policy cannot be altogether decided by a mere investigation upon the ground. The question of policy is raised by my hon. friend from Beauharnois, that is, how far the government will assume governmental responsibility with regard to the irrigation of that country. There are different degrees of governmental responsibility that might be assumed. That is a matter of policy not decided by the results of the surveys. But there is no difficulty in giving to the House and to the country from time to time the conclusions which have been reached and the information which has been collected by the different surveys that have been made during the many years past with a view to arriving at a knowledge of the conditions. Of course, it will be obvious that until we have a very complete knowledge of the conditions, it is doubtful what policy we should follow. We must be guided to some extent by the conditions as we find them on the ground and also by our own limitations in regard to financial and other matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the two questions which the minister seems to think identical were absolutely distinct. The question brought up by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) related to the undertaking by the government of a system of irrigation as a public work, while the question brought up by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) is the location and survey by the government of sites available as reservoirs for the storage of water. This latter work might be carried on quite compatibly with leaving the work of irrigation itself to private enterprise. The question was with regard to the government's policy, and it was on that my hon. friend from Calgary wanted information. I can understand that the government's policy would depend a great deal upon the information which may have come into their possession.

Mr. OLIVER. Dealing with that point: If we were going to take hold of irrigation as a governmental responsibility, we should certainly make reservations for reservoir sites, though we would not make such reservations if we were depending in this matter upon private enterprise, for depending upon private enterprise we must not only consider the possibility, but also the reasonable probability, of a certain area being used as a reservoir site in connection with irrigation, so that we need not make useless reservations. It is just as necessary that we should not make useless reservations as that we should make useful reservations. Therefore, there may be many places where a survey would show that, if the government were undertaking the responsibility of irrigating the whole country, it would be wise and proper to make a reservation of a reservoir site, where, unless and until the government assumed that responsibility, it would not be wise to make a reservation, because the loss by making the reservation would be greater than the gain from the use of it by private enterprise at a future time.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister must have come to a decision before sending out the survey parties to get information. He had decided then upon a policy of some kind and he sought for information on the subject. That is two years ago. And, in the meantime, it is to be supposed, he has received information from the parties sent out to make the surveys. What the House is anxious to know is what the minister has done on the information he thus received. Has he decided upon a general policy, or has he decided upon any irrigation work at all?

Mr. OLIVER. So far, the government has not decided upon any irrigation——

Mr. HAGGART. That is what we wanted to get at long ago.

Mr. OLIVER. Then why did you not say so? So far, the government has not decided upon undertaking irrigation work in the west as a governmental responsibility.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, the minister has not met the point yet, he is talking about something else altogether. I understand there is not enough water available in the west—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—to irrigate all the land which could be used for that purpose. Then, whether the government is going to undertake the work of irrigation or whether such work is to be carried on by private individuals and corporations, it is certainly manifest that we ought to know, in the interest of the people, what supply of water can be made available for that purpose. For that reason this association of persons interested in enterprises of that character has asked that there shall be a location and survey, not in their interest, but in the interest of the people as a whole, in the interest of carrying on this work, whether by government enterprise or otherwise—that there shall be a location and surveys of waters available for irrigation in order that we may know exactly how much may be made use of for that purpose. It seems to me that is a very important question for the people of the west, and that we ought to have a little more information on the subject than the minister has given us. He has contented himself simply with saying that the government have not decided to carry on this work as a government work. What have they done, what information have they obtained as to the quantity of water which can be made use of for this purpose, and what proportion of the irrigable area in the west can be made into fertile land by means of that water ? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend wishes his remarks as they will appear on the 'Hansard' to stand as a motion for returns, there will be no difficulty in meeting his views. I suggested a motion for a return to the hon. member for Calgary so that I might see in black and white exactly what he wanted to know.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister understands it now.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I think I can get it from 'Hansard'.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has no more approximate statement to make to the House ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. These surveys have been going on for many years, and we have obtained information from time to time as a result of them. But we have not thought it necessary, or thought that the time had arrived, to put all our information together in a form which would suit my hon. friend. It may take some time to do that, but we are willing to have that information made available and put before the House. All I want is a definite statement as to what the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Quite proper. One more question. Has the government taken any action on the information already collected, or has it come to a conclusion as to a policy upon that information ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it has not come to any conclusion as to any change of policy. The present policy has been in vogue ever since the Irrigation Act was passed in 1898, in fact I may say that since the first Irrigation Act was passed about 1893 there has been no change of policy in regard to irrigation. There was an amendment to the Act in 1898 introducing a number of changes, but the principle was the same right through. We have not yet arrived at the point of deciding to change that policy.

Mr. FOSTER. What appears regrettable is the delay. The minister says he has been getting information for the last six years, as I understood him.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman may add six years more.

Mr. FOSTER. For at least ten years the department has been gathering information with reference to this question and yet the minister has not done anything towards making this information public, he has not thought it necessary to bring that information before the House. When questions are asked him requiring information to be brought before the House, he asks us to make motions therefor. What appears to me to be the radical defect is that all this time delay is going on, insufficient information is being gathered. As I understand the minister, he is just getting what his own officers and surveyors pick out from time to time and report to his department. The question of irrigation and that of water reservation are different. What my hon. friend from Calgary has been talking about is the reservation of the water sources. These are important questions, and I think the government ought to have a policy as to whether they intend to do irrigation work or not. The great wants in that wide country are water, and timber and fuel. With reference to the water supply of the country, the government has been getting information, but it has not been utilizing this information. Has it been, during this time, granting water rights to private parties, and may it not wake up some day to the conclusion that it is necessary to take this matter into its own hands when it finds that rights have been given away to private individuals for a mere trifle, and then may it not have to go to work at great expense to acquire a reversion of these rights to the government ? That is where I think the trouble is. The minister does not appear to think that there is any urgency. All the while that he is thinking there is no urgency, private individuals are getting hold of these sources of water supply. I do not know how many have been given already, the minister himself will be better informed on that point. But in a question of so much importance, the government should be alive, and make up its mind whether it is going to control or reserve the water supply on any broad and general principle. If it simply gives to this applicant, and that applicant, and the other applicant the sources of this water supply, why, the country may wake up by and by to find that they are in the hands of a few individuals, and the government may wake up to find that it will be at large expense to get these back into its own hands. Therefore time has been lost, and expense has been made which otherwise would not have been necessary. I read not long ago a very suggestive article in a United States magazine which was highly appreciative of the position of Canada in this respect. The main idea of that article was that Canada, for a hundred years to come, in the last analysis, is the great remaining source of water supply and of timber supply on this continent, and that thoughtful men on the other side of the line look to the country north of the 49th parallel for the great ultimate supply of timber for this continent. The timber and the water supply are very closely joined together. If a country is denuded of timber, the water supply goes with it. If the water supply is to be preserved, the timber resources of the country must be carefully looked after. Now this is the greatest franchise that the Dominion has in our northwest country. Your minerals, your agricultural lands are not so valuable, as a franchise, as the timber resources and the water resources of that great Northwest. In times past we have extravagantly and recklessly disposed of the great franchises of this country to private individuals, for nothing or next to nothing. All governments in this country have been wise after the event, and have been foolish before the event. But there is now a general stirring up of public opinion in all countries to-day especially on this continent with reference to the conservation of these great natural resources.

The government could put itself to no task which is more important or which, if properly carried out, would bring greater benefit to the country than the task of absolutely controlling the cutting of timber on all areas which belong to the government with economy and prudence with a view to keep the supply constantly up to the demand. With proper care you may cut these great areas so that at the end of 100 years you will have a better forest reserve than when you commenced to cut; you may do this not only without expense to the country but actually with a revenue from these forests. To do this the forests must be treated as possessions of the country, not belonging to any individual or to any party for party purposes but the franchises and possessions of the country and they must be worked as a business man would work a patrimony, looking not to his lifetime alone, but also to the interests of those who come after him.

The minister undoubtedly has a great opportunity; he has command of the great Northwest, he has an army of officers, he has all the money he wants at his disposal. Every yard of land suitable for forest or water reservation that is available in this country ought to be diligently surveyed and carefully mapped by the government no matter what it costs, and some policy ought to be adopted, whether government control with private ownership or the government development of some system of irrigation; an intelligent and persistent policy should be adopted looking, in the first place, towards co-relating all these sources of water supply so that they may be used to the best advantage for all the people and in the second place reaping the advantages that may come from them in the way of preservation of your lumber and timber areas and the future fertility of that western country and its power to sustain its population. These things depend on the preservation of the water supply; dry up the water supply coming from the hills protected by forests, and your summer suns will do but little towards making fertile the mighty plains which stretch for a thousand miles and which depend for their fertility on the supply of moisture that comes from the mountain tops.

Nothing I say that could be done by the government would redound to the benefit of this country than a systematic and scientific study of these matters and comprehensive and intelligent action in reference to them. If we had been wise in the past all the mighty water-powers which we have given away in this portion of our country could have been preserved for the use of the people and would have been an enormous source of profit and benefit to the people as a whole instead of being, as they are, a great advantage to a few people. Nothing is more important than the preservation of this great Northwest. If it is allowed to go to the hands of speculators, private individuals and corporations, seeking to reap what benefit they can for the year, the Northwest will in the future, instead of being a fertile garden, become something more like a partial desert, for nothing will keep it fertile but the rains and the waters, nothing will give you this moisture but the forests properly preserved.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—salaries, $108,200; contingencies, $21,150.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that whereas last year we paid for 56 employees in that office the minister this year is asking for 77; that instead of 9 second-class clerks he is asking for 15; instead of 13 junior second-class clerks, he is asking for 18; instead of 4 third-class clerks, he is asking for 13. I presume the minister is making this tremendous change as the result of his investigation into the account system. Am I right in that ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). No.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not ? Then I withdraw all I have said so far as it bears on this; but it seems to me that before we are asked to vote this very large increase we should understand the nature of that investigation and the conclusions come to by the contractor who has cost this country $42,000 to give some hints on bookkeeping and the management of offices. We should know exactly the ground on which the minister asks this increase. Then too, a royal commission composed of three able gentlemen has been appointed to investigate the civil service and these gentlemen have gone into the different departments including his department. It does seem that before saddling this department with 21 more clerks, it would be well to wait for the report of that commission. Does the minister want to forestall that report and what the House may think it is reasonable to carry out ? Would it not be wiser to leave this over until we have this report of the commission ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that I have not increased by one man the number of employees in the department. When I entered the department I found there were a number of temporary employees paid out of various votes and who were doing ordinary clerical work.

Mr. FOSTER. They were not on the civil list.

Mr. BRODEUR. They were not, and I thought the system was irregular and not in the interest of the public service. I gave instructions that when these employees passed their examination they would be put on the civil list and that has been done. There is no real increase in the number of employees ; it is simply that temporary employees have been put on the permanent list.

Mr. BERGERON. The statutory increases would not account for the $8,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is an extra chief clerk, Mr. McElhinney, who is an old employee of the department, who has been a faithful officer, and who I thought deserved promotion.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he is a good man and a good officer ; a very faithful man.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is an increase of $100 for Mr. Bell-Dawson, a very good officer, who has charge of the diving service.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the chief engineer?

Mr. BRODEUR. Colonel Anderson. There are four statutory increases to technical officers. Mr. McElhinney being promoted and Mr. Gordon having died, their places will be taken by Mr. Roy and Mr. Campbell at a salary of $1,500 each. There is a statutory increase to fourteen. In the second-class clerks there is an increase of $4,937.50. Mr. Roy and Mr. Campbell who had salaries of $1,400 each, are promoted and their places will be taken by two officers at $1,200 each ; ten clerks get a statutory increase of $50 and one of $37.50. There will be an addition of four clerks in this class at $1,200 each.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There are to be four new second-class clerks.

Mr. BRODEUR. They will be taken from the junior second-class and promoted to the second class.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are they ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not absolutely decided who are going to be promoted, but the selections will be made from amongst Mr. A. M. Ross, Mr. M. D. Kelly, Mr. Houde, Mr. Rodd, Mr. Frechette, Miss Tremblay, Mr. Hawken, Mr. Gorman, and Mrs. Lamouche.

Mr. BARR. How will the minister make the selection ?

Mr. BRODEUR. According to merit and the values of the services they have rendered.

Mr. BARR. Political service will have nothing to do with it, I suppose ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say there would be no increase in the number of clerks in the department. How many are in the department now, all told ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Do you mean temporary clerks and all ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I mean the staff we pay for.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are 77 clerks provided for in the estimates ; there are 22 draftsmen in the office of the chief engineer; there are five clerks in the office of the construction of lights who may be called temporary clerks ; three in the ship channel branch, one in pilotage, and one in marine hospitals, making a total of 103.

Mr. TAYLOR. I figure from the Auditor General's Report that you have 108 clerks, and according to the Auditor General's Report for 1896 there were 74 all told, so that you have increased the number by 34.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is precisely in accordance with the statement which I made, that the number of officers in the department is not increased. What I did was this: I found that there were many officers who were purely clerks on the temporary list and whose salaries were charged to various outside services, and I gave instructions that they should pass the examination and be put on the permanent list.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the staff was increased by 34.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I did not increase the number of officers employed in the department. I simply had people who were on the temporary list placed on the permanent list, as I thought it was more regular.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend says he has not increased the number of persons employed in the department. If he looks at the Auditor General's Report for 1895-96, at pages K—3 and K—4, he will find that the total number of officers employed was 74, whereas to-day, according to the Auditor General's Report, he has 108, making an increase of 34.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not pretend that the number has not increased since 1895-96. My hon. friend knows that the business of the department has increased immensely since that time. The work in connection with the St. Lawrence ship channel and the work of the hydrographic survey have been added to our department.

Mr. TAYLOR. In every department of the government the staff has practically doubled.

Mr. BRODEUR. The country has been growing.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the minister why, with the staff he has at his command, he cannot do the work of his department without hiring men from other departments. At page P—37 of the Auditor General's Report it appears that he paid to Horace St. Louis for services in drafting Bills re Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and Three Rivers $200. Then at page P-97 it appears that he paid E. Lacas, clerk in the Public Works Department, for making blue prints of lights, &c., at 14 cents per square foot, $449.90. Why cannot the hon. gentleman have this work done by the staff of his own department?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. St. Louis was instructed by the late minister to prepare a Bill relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. It was a very difficult Bill to prepare, entailing a great deal of work, including an examination of all the legislation passed with reference to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners for a great length of time. Mr. St. Louis was paid $200 for that work, and I do not think the amount can be considered too much for a work of that importance.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is a translator paid by the House?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I think he is a sessional clerk. With regard to the other case mentioned, Mr. Lacas is photographer to the Department of Public Works, and he has been doing some work for us as photographer.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the minister pay the man or the department?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was paid himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the minister see that as this gentleman is an employee of the Public Works Department and gets his salary as such, his time and services are due to that department? If the minister wants some work done which the Department of Public Works can do through one of its servants, he ought to negotiate with the Minister of Public Works and pay the Department of Public Works for the time of the servant taken from that department.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the way that I understand it was done.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend said that the pay went to the man and not to the department. If it went to the department that would be a real economy, because it would prevent my hon. friend setting up a photographic establishment in his own department. This is irregular and all the row made against the Conservative government for the double payment plan was on account of the practice which my hon. friend is now putting in force. He is paying an employee of another department $200 while at the same time he gets his pay from another department.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention, and I shall be very glad to look into it. The Department of Public Works might require his full time and we might not be able to get his services so easily, unless we had an arrangement with that department under which we would pay a part of his salary.

Mr. FOSTER. That is perfectly right, if the minister and two or three other ministers would pool their issues on the photographic business, and each contribute a part of the salary. But this is evidently an afterthought of the hon. gentleman's. What has been done has been to take this man from his regular work and pay him extra.

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall inquire into the matter, but there is good reason why our department should pay something in order to ensure that the services of this man will be at our disposal. Otherwise the Minister of Public Works might not be willing to lend him to us.

Mr. FOSTER. I never knew the Minister of Public Works to deny anything. He will do all the service he possibly can and do it willingly.

Mr. BENNETT. The complaint of the House and the country will not be regarding what is paid the permanent staff but what is paid the outside staff, because this department is notorious for outside extravagance. In the past few years they have rushed in every direction to try and spend money, and what is worse is that they get no return for the money expended. Let the hon. minister turn to page P—171 of the Auditor General's Report and he will find there this startling item:—

Georgian Bay Fisheries Commission, commissioners—
John Birnie, Collingwood, advances not yet accounted for, $2,250.
J. J. Noble, Little Current, advances not yet accounted for, $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman wait until we have reached that item? The officers of the fisheries branch will be here when we discuss the fisheries estimates, and I shall then be glad to give all the information he wants.

Mr. BENNETT. I had better introduce the matter now, and the minister will be prepared to fortify himself later. He knows what these items represent. They represent one of the grossest travesties perpetrated on the country for years. These two Collingwood men went about the country on a fishery commission. One of them was not a fisherman at all, but a lawyer. And the government have actually paid these men over $3,000 and have not got a bill from either of them to show what value they have given or what they have done. Last year we had something of the same kind appearing in the Auditor General's Report. In that report I find that the Auditor General asked the department to get bills from these men for the amounts paid them. Yet in the face of that warning last year, the minister paid these two gentlemen this year over $3,000 more without a single voucher or bill to show what they did with the money. The minister's deputy is here at his hand and must know all about it because he is the deputy minister of the fisheries branch as well as of the Marine Department. When we are voting the salary of the deputy minister and other officials, are we not entitled to an explanation as to how it could possibly happen that over $3,000 should be paid these two gentlemen this year, without their rendering any bill, especially when the Auditor General complained last year that money had likewise been paid them for which they had given no account. How is it that these payments are made when we have all these officials to prevent abuses of that kind?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that it is customary, when officers of the department have to travel, to advance them moneys for their disbursements, and it may happen that their accounts have not been put in before the close of the year or have not been settled. If I remember right, in this case there were some advances made to these commissioners for travelling and other expenses. I think their accounts have been put in and are now in the hands of the department, but I suppose not in time to be embodied in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. minister to obtain for us the information where this Mr. Lacas, who got $499 for making blue prints, is at present, and what department he is working in? I understand that he is spending the money on a trip to England.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask the hon. gentleman also to have the information to-night regarding these payments to Messrs. Birnie and Noble of over $3,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. When we reach the estimates I shall have all the information.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) find out what Mr. Lacas is doing now?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is not in our department, as I explained. But I understand that he is on leave of absence.

Mr. TAYLOR. But he was employed in doing work for the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Brodeur's) department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, as I explained before recess.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister may remember that when the Liberal-Conservatives were in power some of the ministers, in order to economize, gave out copying to civil servants, the work to be done after hours. But charges were preferred and these civil servants were dismissed for doing this work. I understand that an order in council was passed to prevent a repetition of this kind of thing. But here is a clerk in the Public Works Department to whom this minister of Marine and Fisheries pays $499.90 for doing extra work—the work, no doubt, done during the hours when he ought to have been working for the Public Works Department. And this, notwithstanding the fact that the minister of Marine and Fisheries probably has in his own department men who might just as well do the work. And the same in drafting bills. They have a law clerk in the department, a law clerk in the House of Commons, the Solicitor General with his staff, and yet the minister must come to Mr. St. Louis and give him $200 to draft a bill. That is a scandalous way to handle the people's money. Perhaps the minister has some further examination. If not, I have another matter to which I wish to refer.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may repeat what I have already said. The work done by Mr. Lacas was special work. We had to choose between employing a man for this work at a cost of perhaps $1,500 or $2,000 and having the work done by Mr. Lacas at a cost of $499.90.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the minister know what blue prints are worth ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think this was for making blue prints.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General says it was—making blue prints at 14 cents a foot, and that is just double the price that the work can be had for anywhere.

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant of the department informs me that this was for blue prints. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is right.

Mr. TAYLOR. And does the hon. minister know what this work can be done for outside ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Personally, I am not aware what blue prints are worth. But these accounts are certified by Col. Anderson, the chief engineer of the department, and I am sure that he would not certify any account that was not right.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will move for this account in the Public Accounts Committee. I understand that in this item we are voting also the salary of Mr. Fraser who is in charge of the Dominion light station at Prescott. I look upon that as simply an institution to harbour a hundred men or so for the purpose of trying to change the political complexion of that constituency. Let me read an article from the Prescott 'Journal,' a good Liberal paper, in which article the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) is referred to :

Dr. W. C. Brown was the recipient of a handsome gold-headed cane on Friday evening last, the donors being the workingmen at the Dominion lighthouse depot. The presentation took place in the parlours of the Revere, which were tastefully trimmed for the occasion. The donation was accompanied by the following:

Prescott, Ontario, November 28, 1907.

Dr. William Brown,

President Liberal Association of Grenville.

Dear sir,—Your many friends of the workingmen employed at the Dominion lighthouse depot, Prescott, take this the first opportunity of thanking you for the deep interest you have taken in their behalf since your election as president of the Liberal Association of Grenville. We know that you have worked hard, and accomplished much in the general interests of the Liberal party. It would not do to go into details at the present time with reference to matters that you have dealt with during your short time in office, but we know that what you have done in our behalf will be plainly seen when the proper time arrives.

When voting time comes round these men will be on deck.

We feel that as workingmen, it is a pleasure to approach you with any misunderstandings between ourselves and the department for which we labour, and that everything has been so agreeably arranged by you that we cannot allow this festive season to pass without in some way showing our appreciation, and would ask you to accept this gold-headed cane as a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by the workmen at the Dominion lighthouse depot, Prescott. We trust you may be able to carry it many years as a support to help you to continue your good work.

As our representative, we would ask you to convey to the Hon. Louis P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, also those in authority at the Prescott works, our thanks for the many acts of kindness shown in our behalf. To Mrs. Brown and the little Browns, we express our deepest feelings, wishing you all long life and prosperity.

Now are we going to pay men, a hundred and more, employed there, making I dont know what, some trimmings for a lighthouse, at an awful expense to the country, and very little use to the seamen, simply as a political school, who say, according to this letter, that 'when the time comes we will show our appreciation of you as president of the Liberal Association.' When the proper time comes their votes are ready for the candidate that supports this government. This is the way that the public money is wasted in supporting a hotbed of Gritism. I say it is a disgrace, and the government ought to repudiate any such statements coming from their employees. I hope the minister will repudiate it at once.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am very glad to hear from my hon. friend that these people in Prescott are satisfied with their lot. I had to-day a delegation from Prescott asking the department to do something for these men, saying they were not treated fairly, and they ought to get a bigger salary. From what my hon. friend says, I am glad to see that they are satisfied with their position. Of course we have not been able to meet all their wishes concerning an increase of salary, but I am not without hope at an opportune time of doing something for them.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is this gentleman, the president of the Liberal Association, an officer of the government at Prescott ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he has no connection at all with the department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Well, I understood he was.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he is not an officer of the department at all, has no connection with the department.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Has nothing to do as an official of the government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he is not in receipt of any money from the government.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is very indelicate for any establishment belonging to the government to allow its employee to put on record such an exhibition as that. It is clearly barefaced misconduct, and I think it should not be overlooked by this House. It should not be allowed, and would not be allowed if the gentleman at the head of that department had a proper appreciation of the propriety of the situation. This is a political machine, made up of employees of the government, who are under control of the department, and the head of the department has not one word to say against such conduct. I am surprised that the Minister of Public Works, who is member for Brockville, does not repudiate it, because he is reputed to be a fairminded man who desires to do what is right.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice in the Auditor General's Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries that no less a sum than $45,997.11 of the people's money was spent in travelling by the ministers and his officials, during nine months.

Mr. BRODEUR. Where is that?

Mr. TAYLOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the page in the Auditor General's Report for every item. Let him look first at page P—6 to begin with. This is the way the people of this country are deceived. Hon. gentlemen supporting the government do not take the trouble to inform themselves of what is going on. I dare say there is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who has looked over the report to see the extravagance of this government. I am preparing a statement, which I will present in a few days, showing a comparison of the expenditure in that department for travel in 1896 with what it has cost this last year for only nine months. On page 6 there is a sum of $1,730 for travel; Hon. L. P. Brodeur, $596; F. Gourdeau, $290; A. W. Owen, $234; M. P. McElhinney, $100; R. A. Willard, $400; R. N. Venning, $97; Napoleon Potvin, $11. That is all right, nobody objects. Then on the same page he will find 'Travel of Ottawa officials paid from votes other than Civil Government,' and these items amount to $8,388.19. If the hon. gentleman will turn over every page of the Auditor General's Report he will find items for travelling mixed up with other items. For instances, turn to page 29:

Advances to Minister of Marine and Fisheries for trip to England, $2,000; ocean fares of minister and party, Canada to England, $890; sleepers to St. John, $25.

Now the price of a sleeper from here to St. John is $2.50, so the hon. gentleman must have taken ten persons in his party to make up the $25. Then he had to take his secretary and a messenger to make the party complete, $1,150 to these two gentlemen. Altogether, we have in this place about $4,000. I could go over page after page and show where the people's money has been thrown away in this manner. Take page 12, $114; page 28, $26, $518, $1,204, $868; page 29, $84.20, $172.71; page 31, $319. So it runs on page after page. On page 78 you find an item of $4,059 to Commander Spain, that amounts to $10 a day for the nine months, supposing he travelled every day. He went over to New York, and we had evidence last year what he was doing in New York; he spent the people's money in trumping up evidence in a divorce suit. Yet this government paid over $4,000 to Commander Spain for travelling. So it goes on all through the book, the total coming to some $4,000. I want an explanation from the minister as to why these officers have received this money.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see on page 6 that the minister and deputy minister received some travelling expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not object to that.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman does not object to that. He does not object I understand to travelling expenses of Ottawa officials being paid from votes other than Civil Government.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think a good deal of that has been extraordinary.

Mr. BRODEUR. I might explain what the duties of these officials are and then my hon. friend will perhaps see that the expenses are not too large. Col. Anderson is the chief engineer of the department and has to look after the work from British Columbia to Halifax.

Mr. TAYLOR. His assistant has received over $1,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, Mr. D. H. Fraser, who has been travelling a great deal. Mr. Fraser has had special supervision of much of the work, especially the work on the St. Lawrence. He has gone to British Columbia and I do not think that the amounts which have been spent are too large.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was Mr. Fraser, doing in New York at the end of October?

Mr. BRODEUR. I see he went to New York but I do not know exactly for what purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister let us know about that and also about Commander Spain's trip?

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall be very glad to give the information.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister let me have the information about the advance to Messrs. Birnie and Noble?

Mr. BRODEUR. I asked if we could get the information to-night but the department was closed.

Mr. BENNETT. The officers who are with the minister must know how it occurred that this further advance was made to these gentlemen after the Auditor General had called the attention of parliament and of the department to the fact that the previous amounts had not been fully explained.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed that these advances were made on the recommendation of Prof. Prince, chairman of the commission, but I shall get all the information.

Mr. BENNETT. I am surprised that the minister should be informed that these advances were made on the recommendation of Prof. Prince. The minister knows that Prof. Prince was not with these men on their peregrinations for several months past.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sorry my hon. friend wants to discuss this question just now. It properly comes under the Fisheries branch and I do not think it fair to ask for details on the item now under consideration. My hon. friend said this afternoon that he wished the information when we reached the item and he will get more information from me if he will be kind enough to wait until then.

Mr. BENNETT. We are voting the salaries of the general officers of the department who should know about these advances in view of the attention called to them by the Auditor General. Did not the minister authorize the advance of $2,500 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember but I do not think I did; such accounts never come before the minister. I worked in the department from nine in the morning for about fifteen hours in the day but in spite of that I am not able to look into all these details.

Mr. BENNETT. Then who did advise the advance ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall be glad to give the information when we come to the item. I know that Prof. Prince, who he says did not know anything about what was done by his colleagues on the commission——

Mr. BENNETT. I did not say that, I said he had not been with them and as a consequence would not know how much travelling they had done.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was under the impression that he had been accompanying them for most if not all the time. I know he was engaged on some other commission, and perhaps he has not been there for some time, but it is easy to ascertain whether these gentlemen were doing their work or not by looking at the evidence and ascertaining the dates and places of sitting.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I am at a loss to understand why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) should so persistently renew his attack on the fishery commission. The hon. gentleman knows full well that Professor Prince is the chairman of that commission, and consequently the director of it, and if he did not want the commission to sit in his absence all he had to do was to say so, for as chairman he would dominate. It is idle to say that Professor Prince did not know what was going on and what was being done; if he did not know then he was derelict in his duty, and I do not think that even the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will say that. It is easy for the hon. gentleman to get up and say in glib language, that the doings of that commission are a travesty on justice, but we have not had one title of evidence and not one statement from his mouth in condemnation of the work of that commission. To my way of thinking that commission has done good work; it has informed the public of the depletion of the fisheries in that district; it has warned them of the necessity for waking up to the situation if the fisheries in the future are to exist in anything more than a name. If they have done that and that only the commission would be worth the money expended on it. Last session the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) saw fit to make a very vicious attack on Mr. John Birnie, a member of that commission, and although I was in the building at the time the hon. gentleman did so, I was not in my seat for the moment. Again this evening, the hon. gentleman has made some slighting remarks with regard to Mr. Birnie. In the first place he stated that Mr. Noble and Mr. Birnie, two members of the commission, come from Collingwood. In that statement the hon. gentleman is absolutely incorrect. Mr. Noble is not a citizen of Collingwood; he resides at Little Current, and for his appointment I am in no way responsible. For Mr. John Birnie's appointment I am responsible; I recommended his appointment, and I have had no word of complaint from any fisherman or any citizen on the Georgian Bay in respect to that appointment. I happen to know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has had a personal and private quarrel with Mr. John Birnie; some kind of a business disagreement, something outside of this commission altogether, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman is not behaving as an hon. gentleman ought in the discharge of his public duty when he brings up in this House extraneous matters with regard to which his personal feelings may have been hurt, and makes a malicious attack in this House against a man who cannot protect himself. Mr. Birnie doubtless will have to account for every dollar he has had, and Mr. Birnie is capable of doing so. Last year Mr. Birnie was held up by the hon. gentleman as too bad for words to describe. Well, let me tell the House that in the first instance Mr. Birnie is a King's Counsel, and in the second instance he has been for years the legal adviser of the municipality of the town of Collingwood. As the hon. gentleman knows, Collingwood is, at all events in local politics, a Conservative town; it has given the local member in past years from 10 to 200 majority. Mr. John Birnie in the last election when the Ross government was swept out of existence, ran as a Liberal against the very popular member for West Simcoe, Mr. James Duff. The town of Collingwood, Conservative as it always had been up to that time, gave Mr. Birnie a majority of the votes. If his reputation is so bad as the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) would lead us to believe, he is at all events recognized as a man of considerable standing, considerable integrity, and considerable reputation in his own town in which he has resided for many years past. I say this, in justification of Mr. Birnie, I say it because of the pertinacity of the hon. gentleman in pressing this question, even to the extent of bringing it up at an inopportune time, when the question is not properly before the House, and when he can only bring it before the House on the flimsy excuse that this being a vote for the civil service at Ottawa, some civil servants have been derelict in their duty. As the minister has pointed out, the chairman of that commission is responsible for the money paid out to the commission; it cannot be had without his recommendation; he must say that the commissioners are entitled to it. It may be that these gentlemen were entitled to a great deal more than they got when the money was advanced, although the money may not have been accounted for at the time, and indeed it may have been already accounted for although not published in the Auditor General's Report. It appears to me that it is quite unfair for the hon. gentleman to force a discussion on this matter at the present moment. We have not got the facts before us; the papers are not here. There are many ways of investigating the matter. When the vote for the fishery commissioners comes up we must get full explanation in regard to it, and if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the explanation given here, the Public Accounts Committee is open to him to make further inquiry. He made a motion last year for the papers in regard to the moneys paid to Mr. Birnie in the Public Accounts Committee, and that can be investigated there. I do appeal to the hon. gentleman, that it is only fair to Mr. Birnie—for whose appointment I am responsible, having recommended it—that the hon. gentleman should wait to discuss the matter until we have all the facts before us.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) has said that I made a vicious attack on Mr. Birnie. I do not know what the viciousness of the attack consists in, because my attack was directed on the department; that after this department had had its attention called to the fact that one of its officials had not made a proper explanation of moneys advanced to him, the department should have advanced to these two gentlemen $2,500 more. I am in the judgment of all fair minded men that that is the extent of the attack I made. I never said anything about Mr. Birnie's professional standing. True I have not lauded him as my hon. friend has; true I have not told the House and the country that Mr. Birnie is a King's Counsel. It was only modesty that prevented the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) from telling the House that he is in the same batch. There was a time in the province of Ontario when the government was so busy at grinding out K.C.'s and J.P.'s that there were as many K.C.'s created as J.P.'s. The Minister of Railways who was in the Ontario Legislature will, I think, bear me out in that.

Mr. GRAHAM. With reference to the J.P's; I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is referring to this past year.

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend (Mr. Graham) is quite right that the J.P.'s were rolled out in the past year for the benefit of the province of Ontario, and he knows full well that many respectable J.P.'s were reappointed, and he knows full well how many of the older type of J.P.'s were not. The time has gone in Ontario when so-called magistrates are carted around as they were formerly to counteract the judgment of the presiding magistrate and to make a travesty of justice as was the system under the Ross government. Did the Minister of Railways ever read the celebrated case of the Queen and McCrae, tried in the county of Simcoe, where it was shown that half a dozen of these magistrates were brought there, and where Chief Justice Armour said it was a disgrace that the government should appoint men who would allow themselves to be reduced to the position of trying to crowd out the presiding magistrate in that case. True, there have been K.C.'s rolled out or rolled in as you please to call it, and Mr. Birnie was created a K.C. and so was my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy). In these days it was similar to the conditions after the late civil war when nearly every one was made a colonel. Since my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) has introduced the subject as an evidence of great legal standing and impresses us that Mr. Birnie is a K.C., I need only point out that Mr. Birnie is a K.C. who shuts up his law office and travels all around the country for six dollars a day. That is a fair sample of how cheap the position of K.C. has been reduced in Ontario, when a K.C. shuts up his law office and hawks around the country for six dollars a day. It strikes me that when a K.C. can shut up his offices and go hawking around the country at $6 a day, there must be a pressing necessity on his part to be paid in advance. Why has he not made an explanation of the prior charges.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the accountant of the department that he made the explanation, and when we come to discuss this question I will give the hon. gentleman the explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister cannot shield himself by that. He is on trial for all the work of his department. We are to-day running through his executive—his deputy, his technical officers and all the machinery by which he carries on the work of his department, and this House has a perfect right to refuse to vote the supplies for civil government if it considers that the minister has not well administered his department to the meanest branch of it. It is a mere matter of convenience as to when you will discuss that; but when you come to the rights of the case, my hon. friend from Simcoe has a perfect right to discuss it, and get the minister's answer before this item goes to a vote.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not quite agree to the principle just asserted by my hon. friend. The estimates of the department are composed of many items. We are now considering the salaries of the officers, and my hon. friend claims that under these he has a right to go over the whole administration of the department. Is that his contention ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I do not know much about parliamentary procedure, but that does not look to me to be in accordance with the rules of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me put this point to my hon. friend. He has charge of a dozen different branches of his department. We will suppose that one of these branches is absolutely corrupt and is shown to be absolutely corrupt within the knowledge of the minister. Would he have the House vote the moneys for all the other branches of the department and put them at the disposal of the minister in the face of a circumstance of that kind ? When we are voting the minister's salary and the salaries of all his officers, and we ask a question as to which the minister has some knowledge, is he going to refuse to answer on the ground that it is not according to parliamentary practice? No. My hon. friend is here to answer for his department, and when he will answer as to what is a mere matter of convenience. I have no doubt, however, that my hon. friend from Simcoe will not press the question unduly if the minister shows a fair disposition to give an answer. But the minister and his deputy together ought to be able to give an answer that will satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. BRODEUR. I might of course give an answer to the hon. gentleman, but at the same time I must tell the House that I shall be in a better position to give all the information when we have the papers. I will lay before the House all the papers in reference to this matter. We can then discuss it very much better, and see whether there has been anything wrong in connection with it. With reference to the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman, that on the civil service estimates we can discuss everything connected with the department, I cannot agree with him. I think it would be very much better that on these estimates we should discuss only the salaries of the officers. To enter into a discussion now of the administration of the Fisheries Commission would not be fair either to the House or to the minister.

Mr. BENNETT. Had the minister before six o'clock volunteered the information which he has given just now, that the first account to which the Auditor General called attention had been satisfactorily adjusted, the whole matter would have dropped. Can he tell me whether it is $6 a day which Mr. Birnie has received ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure it is more than that. It would not be fair to him, in view of his position, to pay him only $6 a day.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister what he is paid ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $17, I am informed.

Mr. BENNETT. Exclusive of expenses ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Exclusive of expenses.

Mr. BENNETT. What is Mr. Noble paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy says $6 or $7 a day.

Mr. BENNETT. Was it agreed at first that Mr. Birnie should be paid $17 and Mr. Noble $6 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether the order in council mentioned how much they were to receive or not.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, it is a great tribute to the sagacity of this department. A commission is appointed to investigate the fisheries of the Georgian bay. Three gentlemen are selected. Nobody will take exception to Professor Prince. Nobody will take exception to Mr. Noble as a practical fisherman. This practical fisherman, who is supposed to know something about the subject, gets $6 a day, and a lawyer gets $17 a day. This will not commend itself to common sense men. One thing the minister will thank his stars for is that he did not make this arrangement. Is he the minister responsible for arranging the pay, or did he find it arranged when he came in ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Being at the head of the department I am of course responsible for everything done there even before I became minister. My hon. friend wants to discuss the case of Mr. Birnie before the papers come down.

Mr. BENNETT. I will discuss it again.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it would be better for all concerned if my hon. friend would wait until we have the papers. I may tell my hon. friend that Mr. Birnie was not only a member of the commission ; he was also the secretary of the commission, doing all the clerical work in connection with it, preparing subpœnas and documents of all kinds, and that is the reason he was paid $10 a day extra.

Mr. BENNETT. When all the documents and correspondence come down there will not be a title of evidence to show that Mr. Birnie was to be paid $17 a day at the outset, but they will show that there was a dispute as regards his remuneration. Had the hon. minister said a while ago that the account to which the Auditor General had called the attention of the House had been settled, he would have prevented all this discussion. On himself and his deputy and the other officials rests the responsibility for prolonging it. He will find nothing in the arrangement made at the outset providing that this celebrated K.C. was to receive $17 a day. He was paid to make out subpœnas and that is about all the K.C.'s appointed under the Ontario government are fitted for.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman might give his experience as a K.C. There was a batch that did not live long.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister only gave us part of the information with reference to his travelling expenses. He did not explain the point I raised in reference to Commander Spain having spent $10 a day during nine months.

Mr. BRODEUR. I promise the hon. gentleman that I can give information regarding those travelling expenses to New York.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let him explain for himself how he took $2,000 over to England and charged the expenses of his party against the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not charge the expenses of any one accompanying me. I paid myself all the expenses of those who were with me. What happened was this. An account was sent to the department to cover not only my own accommodation on the steamship and trains, but also that of the commissioner who was accompanying me besides my secretary and some other persons. The department paid that, and I have given instructions to reimburse the amount.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report says plainly that they were paid by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. We left here the beginning of April or end of March, and it was just at the end of the fiscal year. I was away six months and could not render an account before I came back, but I have rendered it since.

Mr. TAYLOR. But this was twelve months ago, immediately after the adjournment of the session a year ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was away until the month of October. What my hon. friend sees is the money advanced just before I left. I was away during six months and therefore could not render an account or settle with the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. This report is to the 31st March of last year and there is no credit in it for a rebate. The minister took over $2,000 and charged the country with the expenses of himself and party to England. Surely he did not pay all that for his own passage nor did he pay $25 for a pullman from here to St. John. This was done a year ago last spring, and the Auditor General's Report closed the 31st March last.

Mr. BRODEUR. The settlement will appear in the accounts of the existing fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1908. The money was advanced just before I left, and in the Auditor General's Report to the 31st March, 1907, there is no account of those $2,000 because I came back six months later. Since then the matter has been adjusted between the Auditor General and myself.

Mr. TAYLOR. But this was a year previous.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, this was done the 31st March, 1907, and not the year previous.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister was here on the 31st March, 1907.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I started at that time. I started at the close of the fiscal year, and this money was advanced on the eve of the closing of that year. Of course there was no account adjusted between the minister and the Auditor General because the minister was away, but in the existing fiscal year the adjustment will appear.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand the minister, he left between the 1st of April and the 9th.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the 4th or 5th .

Mr. FOSTER. He made a requisition before the end of the last fiscal year, thinking, I suppose, it was rather risky not to get his money lest there might not be funds to meet his expenses. So he made a requisition days before he needed the money and just at the close of the last fiscal year. The $2,000 written up against him is money which he has expended during the current year ending the 31st March next, and the mistake was made of charging up not only his own expenses, but the expenses of other officials of the government, making them appear as the minister's own expenses. Who were those officials?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Venning, assistant commissioner, and my secretary.

Mr. TAYLOR. Your secretary has a separate charge.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Canadian Pacific, after I left, sent an account to the department, not only for my own accommodation, but also for the accommodation of the others, including my wife, who were accompanying me. I heard that my secretary had been doing that and I wrote to the deputy minister not to pay and that I would pay the amount on my return. But it was paid at the time by the deputy minister against my orders and since my return I have adjusted that.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman ever adjusted the matter of disobedience of his orders by his deputy?

Mr. BRODEUR. When my secretary informed me of that I wrote to the deputy, but he replied that the amount was paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Had the minister, when he arrived, explained the matter to the Auditor General he would not have been put in a false position. The Auditor General would have put in an explanation if the minister had asked him.

Mr. BRODEUR. I sent the accountant to see that the matter should not appear in the public accounts, but the Auditor General said they were already printed.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend's explanations might satisfy himself, but certainly not me. He left here on the 18th or 19th of April.

An hon. MEMBER. The 4th.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, he was here up to the 18th or 19th. He did not pay for his pullman until the day he went—$25. That would be the 18th or 19th of April. How does that amount come into the accounts of the year that closed with the month before that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have already explained that the account was sent in by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and paid by the department. I wrote the deputy minister not to pay the account out of public moneys, as I would pay it myself. But I was too late to pay the money or to have the matter set right before the Auditor General's Report was prepared.

Mr. TAYLOR. But how does the Auditor General take accounts contracted on the 19th of April and put them into the previous month?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken—it was about the 5th of April.

Mr. TAYLOR. Even so, the amount should appear in the accounts of this year, not of last year.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know why the amount appears in the accounts of last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. And why was this amount of $800 for ocean tickets put into last year? The minister was here on March 31 and for several days in April.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister sure that this does not refer to his previous year's trip?

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not make a previous trip to Englnd.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the minister's explanation can hardly be accepted by the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have told what happened so far as I know it. I applied to the department for an advance of money about March 31 or April 1.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister got his advance of $2,000. But that is not what we are talking about.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to the other, I have already explained—that the account was sent in by the Canadian Pacific Railway and paid before I could arrange the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister buy, or send his secretary to buy, tickets, or does he get them on tick?

Mr. BENNETT. And with $2,000 in his pocket?

Mr. BRODEUR. We had the tickets, and I supposed that my credit was good.

Mr. FOSTER. In our day, we had not the cheek to ask for tickets without paying for them.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Times have changed. Honest men now.

Mr. FOSTER. Times have changed indeed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the tickets were sent to the department and no money was paid to the railway company.

Mr. TAYLOR. But how did the account for the steamship tickets get into the Anditor General's Report for last year? Did the steamship company also send in an account?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. I have explained the matter several times. If the object is to have me explain it again, I am quite willing to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did the steamship company send in an account ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was it paid ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who purchased or ordered the tickets ?

Mr. BRODEUR. My secretary, I suppose.

Mr. TAYLOR. He travelled as one of the party ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a charge of $1,150 for the expenses of the secretary and messenger, besides $2,000 that the minister got and $890 for ocean passage for himself and party, and also $25 for pullmans.

Mr. FOSTER. I really think this item will have to stand until we receive an explanation that will commend itself to the House. This business of walking aboard a steamship and leaving somebody who happens to remain on this side pay the account is a new thing. By the time the bill is sent in the minister is half-way across the ocean, and cannot be reached except by Marconi. And then, somehow, the account does not appear in the accounts of the fiscal year in which it was paid. Could it have been dated back ? In any case, the minister had $2,000 in his pocket; why did not he pay his way like a man ? Was he economizing for a grand blow-out on the other side ?

Mr. FIELDING. Where his credit was not so good.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, where his credit was not so good. He could not walk aboard a steamer crossing the English channel, say, and tell the purser to send the bill to some official in Canada. But there is more. The Minister of Finance has told us that some $16,000 had been appropriated for the expenses of the ministers attending the Intercolonial Conference, and that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries bagged $4,000 of that. Is that in addition to this $2,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister sure of that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance has told us that $4,000 of this went to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That will appear in the accounts of the current year. I am quite sure the Minister of Finance would see to it that no such contretemps would arise as that money paid after March 31 should be charged before that date. So, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will find in this year's accounts $4,000. He has already had $2,000—total $6,000. But even that is not all. There is a private secretary, who, in these matters, is, in effect, the minister. I find that it is convenient sometimes for a minister of this government to have a private secretary to appear in the public accounts for sums of which the minister gets the benefit. The private secretary got $400; he got also $1,000 —total $1,400. Then, the minister has $596.05 charged up to him outside of this. This makes a toal of $8,890. That is a sufficiently large sum. This is the growing time, but amongst all the things that grow there is nothing that grows like the ministerial travelling expenses of that department. The minister is an extravagant minister. There may have been one more extravagant—his predecessor. Now am I right or not—I am not going to cavil about proper expenses—am I right or not in saying that all the expenses of the members of the Intercolonial Conference were paid by His Majesty's government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not all the expenses, not the travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the hotel bills ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some of the hotel bills were paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Then by what rule or reason can a single man take $4,000 out of the treasury of the country to visit an intercolonial conference, even if he spent a couple of months, when the hotel bills, the automobile bills and all that kind of expense, are generously provided by the inviting government, and justify it before the House ? The Minister of Finance is extravagant in some respects, but he is a model, and deserves an illuminating medal, alongside of his brother minister. He went over to the other side of the water, he spent just as much time as my hon. friend, he ate, I daresay, just as much, and enjoyed himself I think just as well, and his bill was $1,400.

Mr. FIELDING. My bill is not yet paid. That is not fair to my colleagues.

Mr. FOSTER. Will it be more ?

Mr. FIELDING. There will be something in addition.

Mr. FOSTER. I venture to say it won't come up to $4,000. But whether it does or not, I say the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has no right to take $4,000 of the taxes of the country and spend it for a trip to the other side ; he cannot spend that legitimately, it is impossible ; and if the minister has taken that much, he had better let his conscience assert itself and make a return to the Auditor General—as some of his officers in that department have had to do.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say, at first, that the figures which have been given by the hon. gentleman, the calculation he has made with regard to my expenses, are not correct, and I hope he did not know they were not correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I take the figures I have here.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then if my hon. friend is not sure, why does he assert such and such a thing ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you what I am sure of, I am sure of the figures that I have read out of this book.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is all very well, to mix up figures.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not mixing figures.

Mr. TALBOT. But you make it a case of conscience.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) is not my bishop, although he looks very much like one. I take exactly the figures that are given here, figures given for the information of this House and the country by the Auditor General, an officer of parliament, and he tells me in plain print that the minister, the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, got $596.05, that his private secretary got $1,400, that the minister himself got $2,000, that for the ocean part of the trip $890 was spent. Then the Minister of Finance tells me that $4,000 was taken out of that particular vote of $16,000, for the expense of ministers to the conference. Now that is the state of things that has come before the House. That is all I have stated. If the minister has any explanation to make of that, he ought to make it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I have already made an explanation. I am very sorry to see that the hon. gentleman, who is generally a fair-minded man, should still quote figures before the House which I have several times declared were not absolutely as represented. Now he wants to charge me with the amount of $890. I told him this amount had been reimbursed. Why then does he persist in stating that I charged $4,000 outside of that ? Is that the act of a fair-minded man ? I leave the hon. gentleman to judge for himself whether it is or not. Now he says that I got $2,000 in advance. He says, Well, you got this year $4,000 ; the Minister of Finance says $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman says that I got during the existing fiscal year $4,000. He takes the $2,000 of last year, and the $4,000 of this year, and says now that I got $6,000. Then he adds the $1,400 for my secretary, and says he gets $8,000 or $9,000. I have already told him that one of his items is absolutely incorrect. I also told him that I had reimbursed one of the other items. When we started on the trip there was no money available. The hon. gentleman knows that, and still he tries to create the impression in the country that I am extravagant, that I am spending money which I have no right to spend. He knew very well, however, that this amount which had been voted for the Intercolonial Conference was not available, I could not take the money out of that vote, and I had to get an advance from the department out of some other votes, and this I have reimbursed. My hon. friend won't give me credit for that. I say that is not the argument of a fair-minded man.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, I do not think the minister has said that before. I have heard him say to-night that he had to get that advance out of another vote and pay it back out of the $4,000 which went to him after that came to be available. He never mentioned that until this moment.

Mr. BRODEUR. If my hon. friend will look at the Auditor General's Report which he has in his hand, he will find that this was taken from some other vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Where ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman read the item, he must know where.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me very improper to take money from one vote and use it for another purpose. One of the objects of putting every item in these votes under its own head is for the purpose of enabling parliament to see what that money is required for, and to see that it is spent for the specific purpose for which it was voted, and no other.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has made his own case worse, in trying to get out of a difficult hole he has fallen into a bigger one. That is the fact that is now pointed out to me. The minister is responsible for the policy of the department, he has to lay down the law to his officers, and he ought to be a model of the way in which appropriations are made and spent, he ought to set an example to every one of his departmental officers. But the minister actually takes $2,000 out of a vote for ice-breaking and applies it to a trip across the Atlantic to the Intercolonial Conference. Is that the principle on which my hon. friend runs his department ? It is, he has done it in case after case. It is a most vicious principle. And what is the example my hon. friend is setting ? It is an example to every one of his officers to get money, if there is any vote at all out of which it can be got, and afterwards try by some hocus pocus to get it back again into its proper place. The minister had no right at all to take $2,000 from the ice-breaking vote ; parliament did not authorize that vote to be spent in taking ministers across the Atlantic. When they want to buy buffalos they take the expedient of a Governor General's warrant, and they buy their buffalos with it. There are other ways of getting expenses besides breaking the plain and constitutional practice of the country. There is no department in this government that is so guilty in that respect as my hon. friend's department. He does not care where he can get the money if he can lay his hand on it ; he will take it and divert it from one plain parliamentary purpose to another with which it has nothing whatever to do. So my hon. friend made his position worse instead of better. He tried to put me in the wrong by saying that I knew that he got this as an advance from another vote and that he had explained this to the House. He never said that to the House ; the first I heard of it was when he made the statement just now. That is susceptible of explanation. If he wrongfully took $2,000 out of another vote as an advance and used part of the $4,000 he got afterwards to pay it back, that is capable of explanation and explains it to some extent, but the minister has not given information to the House yet as to how it was possible for bills incurred in April are charged back by the Auditor General to the previous fiscal year and it remains yet to be explained what this hon. gentleman has taken out of the country for these travelling expenses. At the best it will be found to be a very extravagant sum.

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant informs me that the ticket had been ordered before the close of the fiscal year, so that will cover the point made that this amount should not have been charged to last year, but should have been charged to this year.

Mr. FOSTER. Had they been bought and the bill rendered before that?

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant is not very sure about that, but my hon. friend knows that as a question of administration bills are rendered sometimes after the close of the fiscal year. A month or six weeks is allowed for the payment of bills which have been incurred before the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. FOSTER. If incurred before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. FIELDING. I know nothing of the particular case, but what would probably happen would be that the arrangements were made just before the close of the year and in that sense the obligation was incurred, but it could be paid any time before the time fixed for the closing of the accounts.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that this a matter which the minister ought to explain at once without waiting for any information, because the position stated by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) seems to be perfectly logical and clear. I cannot understand why my hon. friend cannot explain it. He must not think that these questions are asked or this criticism made in a carping spirit. They are not. As one who has sat in this House for 12 years I must say that the rate at which the travelling expenses for members of the government have increased since I have been in the House has become perfectly scandalous. Wherever a trip has been made the expenses have exceeded anything just or reasonable. Another abuse which used to be condemned, but which has been greatly magnified since this government has attained power, is the use of private cars. My hon. friend himself was one of those who used to condemn that on every hustings in the province of Quebec, and when that aged statesman, Sir John Macdonald, happened to move in the province of Quebec in his private car, it was my hon. friend himself who used to criticise him with most virulence.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend never heard me say any such thing, never.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is surely not serious. His memory seems to be wonderfully defective of late. I could never understand that criticism, because I believe there are occasions when a minister should have a private car, but it has been carried to an extent never heard of in the past. Trips to the United States, as an hon. member says. What possible reason can there be for ministers—they do not all do it, it is confined to some—they go to the United States and take a private car and take their friends; they go to Montreal and take their friends. In an election campaign for instance, where both parties are suppose to be waging a just fight, is there any sense in a minister going to a county in a private car taking his friends? In this instance it is particularly flagrant. As I understood the reasoning put forward by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) it was not answered by the minister when he said he would be obliged to repeat what he had said; he was not giving any information because his previous statement contained no information. What we have is a distinct statement from the Minister of Finance that of the $16,000 vote $4,000 was paid to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There is here a payment in advance to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of $2,000. I have listened to what he said and I do not understand whether to-day he stands as having received $6,000 or whether he has reimbursed a portion of that. He received in cash $6,000 for this trip, the expenses of which, the House and committee must remember, were defrayed by the home government. My hon. friend says the travelling expenses were not paid. That is news to me; I thought an amount had been set aside for that. At all events, all expenses on the other side were paid. The Minister of Finance has a bill of expenses of $1,400——

Mr. FIELDING. It is not fair to make any such comparison. I did not attend the colonial conference, although I was one of those chosen for the purpose. As my hon. friend knows I remained until the close of the session. I went over afterwards on other business and no portion of that colonial conference money was drawn by me. I was away about five months, chiefly on treaty work, and I am afraid when the bill comes in I will hardly be in a position to receive the compliments of my hon. friends.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be a little sparkling in Paris——

Mr. FIELDING. At all events the prices sparkle in Paris.

Mr. MONK. By his explanation my hon. friend makes the case stronger, because his own expenses were not met by the home government and they appear to be $1,400.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not final.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is not one of those who incur great travelling expenses.

Mr. FIELDING. The $1,400 is not a fair comparison at all. That does not represent my expenses.

Mr. MONK. It is very fortunate my hon. friend represented the government at Paris in this instance, because I know some others who would have cost us much more. I do not wish to harp on it, but here is an additional expenditure, absolutely unexplained, of $890 for tickets incurred probably in April, which is charged to the fiscal year closing March 31, and unless the explanation given in the last instance by the Minister of Finance applies, there is no possible way of understanding how this amount comes to be charged in the Marine Department's account for an icebreaking steamer for the lower St. Lawrence. Eight hundred and ninety dollars for tickets for whom? My hon. friend has stated in the last instance that that amount has been reimbursed. When and by whom has it been reimbursed? I think we are entitled to an explanation of that as well as of the item of $25 for sleepers to St. John. I say once more that I think the mode of expenses on travel, especially in the last six or seven years, ought to be a subject of closest scrutiny by the House. It has passed all the bounds of what is reasonable and just. As regards the employment of private cars, if anything of this kind comes up this year I am going to call it in question with every manner of detail. Now, here we have the hon. gentleman apparently having received $6,000, with those other charges that to me are not sufficiently explained up to the present time. How was the money provided which was expended in the trip made by the minister from Rimouski to his residence. The whole of the government fleet was down to meet the ministers when they returned from the old country; there must have been an expenditure of several thousand dollars for coal, for men, for food, and liquid refreshments upon these steamers which brought the minister from the ocean steamer to his home in his own county. Was this deducted from the large amount received by the minister? Where does it stand charged against the people of this country?

Mr. BRODEUR. I must say at once that there appears to be in the public mind a wrong impression with regard to the use of private cars. They do not cost anything to the country; everything we take on a private car we have to pay for it. For my own part I would like very much to use private cars oftener, but they are too expensive. The hon. gentleman has said that the ministers used private cars and that it was very expensive to the country. It is true that some times we may use private cars, but we have to pay for——

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman say that the ministers pay for the private cars themselves?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but the railway companies give a permit for the private cars to travel on their lines, and it does not cost a cent to the country.

Mr. BENNETT. Who buys the cars?

Mr. BRODEUR. The government.

Mr. BENNETT. You mean the people.

Mr BRODEUR. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) wanted to create the impression, or he was under the impression, that the nourishment we take on private cars is paid for by the country, but that is absolutely erroneous. We have to pay for it ourselves. I have used private cars four or five times when I believed it necessary in the proper transaction of the business of my department, but generally speaking I do not use a private car for the simple reason that it is too expensive.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do the railways charge for hauling the cars?

Mr. BRODEUR. The railways do not charge.

Mr. FOSTER. They get return courtesies on the government railways.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that is the custom between all railways, and I presume it is done on the Intercolonial Railway, and that courtesies are exchanged in that way. I suppose there is no harm in the Intercolonial Railway doing the same thing as other railways are doing. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) spoke of steamers coming to meet me at Rimouski. Yesterday he said they met me in the Gulf, but to-night he fixes on Rimouski, and I can tell him that no steamers came to Rimouski to meet me. We came up the Gulf and to Rimouski on the steamer which carried us from Liverpool, and so my hon. friend is mistaken in regard to that. He says there was expense incurred, well it did not cost anything.

Mr. MONK. Will the minister deny that steamers went down to meet him and that they conducted him to his home?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not to Rimouski.

Mr. MONK. Well, never mind the exact place, where was it?

Mr. BRODEUR. There was none. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his information.

Mr. MONK. Where there any government steamers which took the minister on board with his friends who accompanied him so far as his home.

Mr. BRODEUR. What happened was this : I came from Quebec to Three Rivers and Sorel in a government steamer. There was no fleet and all the expenses incurred on that boat were paid by myself personally as I generally do. In connection with that—I do not know that I should boast of it in the House—but since hon. gentlemen opposite seem anxious to attack me in regard to this expenditure I may say that last year I made an inspection trip and when I came back I asked the agent to give me a statement of all the expenses in connection with the running of the boats and the supplies taken on board as I wanted to pay. He said to me: that never was done, and he added: it was never done even in Mr. Foster's time. It therefore would appear that I was not any more extravagant than even my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with that. Now, as to the $2,000 being charged to the vote for an ice breaker, I explained that there was no fund available for the expenditure which was to be incurred, and as I was going to England and Germany for the purpose of examining into ice breakers with a view of obtaining the best one available, the amount was charged to that vote, with the understanding however that when the proper vote is available this money will be reimbursed, with the exception, of course, of the money expended in connection with the visit to Germany and Russia.

Mr. J. D. REID. Didn't the government steamer go from England to Russia? Was not there a government steamer in England which had just been repaired and didn't she make a trip from England to Russia?

Mr. BRODEUR. I don't know what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. J. R. REID. How did the hon. gentleman go from England to Russia?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the cars.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was there not a Canadian government steamer being repaired over there?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Russia?

Mr. J. D. REID. No, in England?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Stanley' was sent over to England to get new boilers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did she come from England direct to Canada?

Mr. BRODEUR. She didn't go to Russia.

Mr. J. D. REID. Didn't she go from England to Russia?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. J. D. REID Did the minister use the 'Stanley' when he was in England?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. The 'Stanley' was being repaired.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the minister use her after she was repaired ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I never saw her there.

Mr. FOSTER. The rumour arose in this way: I saw the statement going the round of the papers. Some of the enthusiastic friends of the Minister of Marine thought, I suppose, that it would be 'infra dig' for him to go to Russia in a commercial or tramp steamer, and they issued the statement, and it went the round of the papers, that the minister had mounted a government steamer and was going to steam right up into the Czar's dominions in royal form.

Mr. BRODEUR. That must have been in the Conservative papers.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it was in the same papers which, before this government came into power, were indulging in giving verbatim reports of the vehement denunciations of the Minister of Marine because there was an appropriation of $1,000,000 for arms for Canada. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) will make the same remark with reference to that, as he did in reply to my friend from Jacques Cartier, that he does not remember ever making such speeches as I refer to.

Mr. BRODEUR. Which statement ?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement that it was a very wrong thing to tear from the arms of French mothers their sons and send them abroad to be slaughtered by the cannon of the enemy, and that it was altogether wrong to spend a million dollars of their hard earnings to buy artillery for the equipment of the defence of Canada. My hon. friend does not remember that. With reference to this matter of private cars and private inspection trips, my hon. friend was too particular. It makes one suspicious, when he went on an inspection trip for his own department, in a vessel of his own department, to find that his conscience was so tender that when he came back he asked how much sugar and how much tea and coffee he had used, and offered to pay it himself. The country will give him no credit for that. If a minister is going on the country's business, the country will raise no objection to his using a private car or any other conveyance for the purpose.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was speaking of the friends who were with me.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a different matter. But the private car business has been carried to an absurd and scandalous extreme. I commenced clipping from the newspapers every item I saw about a minister in his private car from Ottawa. Sometimes it was to Montreal to attend a play. The names of the large party with him were given, and a little bit of high life was enacted on the car. These trips were chronicled until it became painful to read of ministers going to New York almost every week or fortnight, with the names of all the young men and young women who made up the party. It is a scandalous thing. As a member of this parliament doing good work for my country, I went down to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and looked around a little. I had to do it at my own expense. I was inspecting in a certain way. I had barely got across the straits and entered Nova Scotia when I saw a government car with a gaping crowd around it. Having it at his command was a member of this government, who used it to come from his place at Cornwallis to Digby and show the inhabitants what an immense man he was. Why should that be ? There is no reason why it should be. That minister is not here tonight; but the Finance Minister told us that the Minister of Militia and Defence took $4,000 of that $16,000 for his trip of a few weeks to the continent. The people of this country will not endorse that. The minister is not here, but we shall have another opportunity of taking this up. I have never cavilled at the reasonable expense of ministers since I have been in opposition; but the thing has gone so far that in justice to the members of the cabinet who do not trespass in that way it is high time that the matter was ventilated.

Mr. MONK. I take it, then, that there was an amount of $4,000 plus $2,000 plus $890 paid for crossing the Atlantic and $25 for sleepers to St. John. That is the way the account stands so far, from what we have heard from the minister. I would like to know in what form the British government defrayed the expenses of the visiting colonial premiers. Was it simply by the payment of their hotel bills, or was there an amount handed over to them ?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Imperial government took charge of most of the hotel bills, I understand.

Mr. MONK. There was no money given to the ministers ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No money was given to the ministers.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to know from the minister how this $2,000 was got from the Auditor General for this trip. I understand that the Auditor General cannot allow any money to be paid for something for which it has not been voted. There must have been a wrong certificate or wrong information given to him, or he took it upon himself to allow this money to be wrongfully taken. If so, I think he is entitled to the censure of this House, and the minister should explain why $2.000 was taken from the money voted for ice breaking on the St. Lawrence to pay the expenses of this trip ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was understood before I left that there was serious difficulty with the ice breaking steamers on the St. Lawrence and in the Northumberland straits. It was represented that the steamer we had was not strong enough, and an appropriation was made for another. I took the opportunity of my trip to England to look at the ice-breaking steamers in Europe, and that is the reason the money was taken out of that account.

Mr. MONK. I see on page P—29 of the Auditor General's Report an item which in the statement I made a moment ago I seem to have omitted : 'Detailed under travel of Ottawa officials (Potvin and Wiallard), $1,150.' I understand that Mr. Potvin was my hon. friend's secretary; is that correct ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, he was a messenger.

Mr. MONK. Is that the Mr. Wiallard who is now agent in France ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the matter of Lacas was finished. He is an employee in the Department of Public Works, getting a salary of $1,500. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries employed him and paid him for work done for the Marine Department $500 in round figures. I want to point out to my hon. friend that there is I think an order in council which absolutely prohibits anything like that being done. My hon. friend knows that in the investigations which took place under the Liberal-Conservative regime clerks were punished and ministers were held responsible because clerks were given work to do outside of their office hours and were paid for that work. There was no question at all that they did the work outside of hours and did their regular office work during office hours. Nevertheless that was considered a demoralizing practice. Clerks were dismissed for having been implicated in it, and deputy ministers and ministers censured for having allowed it, and an order in council was passed expressly forbidding it. That order in council has been contravened by this transaction, if it be as I have stated it. The minister is simply doing what no minister ought to do if he has any regard for discipline and a healthy condition in the civil service. What is the result ? Some man who is doing his office work and earning his salary conscientiously finds that another man, who is working in the same capacity, but who happens to be wanted by some minister, for some purpose or another, slights some of his work, is absent when he ought to be at his desk, and gets besides his pay $500 from another department. Can there be anything more demoralizing or more calculated to excite jealousy and discontent ? The only proper way in which the services of a man in one department might be utilized by another department would be to make the other contribute part of his salary, but not give this man extra pay for doing work, which he cannot do, without neglecting his regular duties. But we are told that this man was not a photographer and that therefore the minister was entirely wrong in the explanation he gave, and that he got $500 for copying out blue prints at an extravagant rate. That is something for which the minister owes an explanation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was under the impression that he was doing photographic work because I knew he was a photographer, but as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) tells us it was not photography he was doing, I shall inquire into the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister will find the item on page P—97 of the Auditor General's Report. It appears by the item that Mr. Lacas was paid for making blue prints of lights, etc., at 14 cents per square foot. One-half that price per foot would be a very large price. The government gave him $449.99, to make it appear that they have cut him down to the finest point. He is in the employ of the Public Works Department and is on a six months leave of absence. He went to Cobalt and speculated there, made a pile of money in some way, and now is taking a trip to the old country, doing up France, Germany and England after doing up the minister, and is still drawing his $1,500 a year from the Public Works Department. Are these facts correct ? How did he get that big pile at Cobalt ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am afraid I cannot explain that.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the minister interested ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, not in Cobalt. I shall make inquiries, but I am informed that before we got that work done by this gentleman, we were paying more.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not wonder at that.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend said the price was extravagant. I am informed that it is an improvement on what was paid before.

Mr. TAYLOR. Something like the improvement in the lights which were to cost so much less than the old system and that the saving in the lighthouse keeper's salaries would pay the difference. But we shall deal with that on another item. All this is on the same line. What the minister wants is to throw out money. He wanted a bill drafted for the harbour commissioners and he paid a gentleman, who is employed for the revising of the French Consolidated Statutes, $200 to draft a couple of Bills for the harbour commissioners, and he did this although the department is teeming with law clerks and other clerks doing nothing, and although the Solicitor General's department has half a dozen solicitors in it, all lying idle. It is simply throwing the money of the people away for the benefit of political friends. I would like the minister to explain how it is Mr. Spain spent on an average on travelling expenses $10 a day during nine months. And I find that Mr. Spain was not satisfied with a couple of trips to New York himself but took Mr. Anderson with him and Mr. Fraser, the commissioner of lights.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Spain is a wreck commissioner and has to make investigations all over the country. There is an item in this account for a trip to New York, and I said I would make inquiries into that. I suppose it must be a trip on business connected with the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the hon. minister think that $10 per day is a modest sum for the travelling expenses of an official during nine months besides his salary, and travelling with a pass in his pocket ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether he has a pass or not.

Mr. FOSTER. When the government is paying him $10 a day for travelling expenses, the minister ought to know whether he has a pass or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think we are paying that amount.

Mr. TAYLOR. $2,508 for travelling expenses during nine months is $10 for every day.

Mr. FOSTER. Taking out the Sundays, it amounts to more than that.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would not be fair to say that the amount is $10 a day for his expenses. Included in that are his travelling expenses. Toronto and Windsor, July 27 to August 7, $158.60. You must add the travelling expenses, car fares, and so on.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is all travelling expenses.

Mr. BRODEUR. But my hon. friend said he was in receipt of $10 a day. Perhaps it amounts to that, but if a man has to travel a great deal by rail and pay his fare, this is not extravagant.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps not for the minister, but surely it is for a civil servant. I leave it to any man in this House who has commercial travellers out to say if this is not an extravagant charge. Why $5 a day is all that a first-class commercial traveller is supposed to pay, including fares and hotel bills. But this government is flush with the people's money and quite reckless with it.

Mr. BRODEUR. These men have not to travel long distances. Suppose a man has to go to the Pacific coast, it will cost him $10 a day to pay railway fare.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. minister knows that is not a fair comparison. This man travelled from Ottawa to Toronto——

Mr. BRODEUR. I see that he went to Winnipeg and to Port Arthur. He also went to Windsor.

Mr. TAYLOR. The statement is made here that this gentleman also had a pass in his pocket.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) sure of that?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the information given to me by a friend——

Mr. BRODEUR. Then, the hon. gentleman makes the statement that he knows this to be the case.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not my duty to know. But it is the minister's duty to know every one in his department who has a pass; and the man who uses a pass should not be paid for railway fare.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never went to ask the officers whether they had passes or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the minister pays their accounts just the same.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never see their accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a royal method. The minister can afford that, for the money is not his own.

Mr. BRODEUR. I rely on the officers of the department for these matters. If they are not faithful to me, so much the worse for them. I cannot be expected to find the time to examine all these accounts. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has been head of a department. If he tells me that he made it a practice to examine these accounts, of course I will accept his statement, but I do not believe he will say so.

Mr. FOSTER. But it would not take many months of the minister's time to simply issue instructions that no man should be paid for expenses that are covered by favours from corporations in the shape of passes. After the minister had done all this, if he would take the rest of the time, he would have plenty of time to himself.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) may be sure that the officers of the department who certify these accounts have to see to it that a man does not get paid for railway fare when he travels on a pass.

Mr. FOSTER. The officers of the department know their minister. And the minister knows that Merwin, for instance, simply put on his hat, walked across the street and bought engines and machinery for the government and sent in his bill for from $200 to $600 more than he paid, and he found officers of the department to certify to the Minister of Finance that the charge was reasonable and just. And millions of the people's money has been paid on the certificate of officers of that kind. And those officers are there yet, and money is being paid to-day on their certificates.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister does not say that $46,000 is too much for travelling expenses for his department for nine months. But there are the facts in the Auditor General's Report. This is simply an outrage on the country. In a few days I shall have a comparative statement made with the travelling expenses for the year 1896.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose the hon. gentleman will include in the account for 1896 the travelling expenses for branches of other departments that, since that time, have been added to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. minister name them? There is the ship channel, but there are no travelling expenses connected with that. The travelling expenses are practically all connected with the Marine Department and the Dominion steamers.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see some expenses connected with the St. Lawrence channel.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is Nap. Potvin given a cheque for $150 to be accounted for? The minister will find it at page P—6 in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know exactly, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister does not think $10 a day is too much to allow a man for travelling expenses. I have no hesitation in saying that, if any man drew $10 a day for travelling expenses and hotel bills, he put some of the money in his pocket. I think that will be shown before the Public Accounts Committee; and so far as I am concerned, now that this matter has been brought up, I think that we ought to have the whole matter investigated.

Mr. BRODEUR. I should be very glad.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose the minister feels that the oppositon criticises him harshly when it says that he is extravagant in his department. The figures in the Auditor General's Report convince me that the Department of Marine and Fisheries under its present head is more extravagant than any other department of this government. We had reason to suspect that the present minister would be extravagant as the head of a department. He was practically the head of a department some years ago as Speaker of this House. Now every Speaker of this House of Commons for the last twenty-five years only spent, on an average from $500 to $800 a session for the expenses of his office, but during the three years the hon. minister was Speaker it cost $8,929 simply to enable him to sit in this chair as Speaker of the House and pay the expenses in connection with that position. That shows that as Speaker he was a very extravagant man, and the facts that are now coming out show that in the department he is now administering he is pursuing the same extravagant habits. For that reason I think he deserves the criticism that has been made.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not complain of criticism. My hon. friend says that I was very extravagant as a Speaker. I do not think so, I think I was very economical. I may tell my hon. friend that whatever money was expended in connection with that office, it was not for my personal benefit but in the public interest. Sometimes it is necessary to discard old furniture in the Speaker's apartment and purchase new furniture. My hon. friend knows that sometimes distinguished strangers visit the Speaker, and surely he would not wish the Speaker's apartments to be shabbily furnished. I do not think I spent more than other Speakers in that respect. I do not complain of criticism of my department. But some of the charges of extravagance which have been made against the department I have disproved entirely. I have tried to do my best, and to administer the department as economically as possible. Indeed, I have often heard complaints that I was too economical.

Mr. J. D. REID. When we look at the number of steamers the hon. gentleman has, travelling up and down both the lower St. Lawrence and the upper St. Lawrence, doing practically nothing, entirely unnecessary, we must come to the conclusion that he is an extravagant minister. He has more steamers than are required for his service on the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Kingston, and if he will investigate the matter he will come to that conclusion. I know for a fact that he has a yacht lying down here at Ottawa for the last two or three seasons, doing practically nothing. The minister knows that boat is absolutely useless. Why should the men on that boat be kept here from one season to another, paid a salary for doing nothing? And still the minister goes on buying more boats.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose my hon. friend has read the report of the departmental officers; if so, he will find that they report sometimes that more boats are absolutely needed for the service. Let him read the report of Col. Anderson, the chief engineer; he states that it has been impossible for him to do some absolutely necessary work because of a lack of boats.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think the reason for that is that the minister uses the government boats a great deal too much himself. There is a steamer practically in charge of the head of each department of this government. I know for a fact that there are more steamers used on the St. Lawrence than are actually required.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not according to the reports of the officers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps not. But I know for a fact that some of those steamers belonging to the lower St. Lawrence go all the way from Montreal up to the Welland canal, when there is no necessity for it whatever.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is making a statement that is not correct. He says that I use the government boat a great deal. I did not use it for two days.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was away down the gulf more than two days.

Mr. BRODEUR. That was the year before.

Mr. J. D. REID. This summer he was away in the old country. We are speaking now of last year. He says he only used it two days. He knows that is not a fact.

Mr. BRODEUR. I went down from Quebec to inspect the different stations and called at Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, that was the year before. That was a necessary trip, made to get information.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman says there have been complaints that there were not enough boats. I think the reason is because too many of the boats are used by ministers. I remember a case last summer when one of the Canadian Pacific Railway Empresses could not land her mails at Rimouski because the 'Lady Evelyn,' I believe it was, which had been built purposely for that service, was engaged in carrying a minister down the gulf.

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Lady Grey' was never used for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. It was used by the acting minister and the Postmaster General, who were inspecting something in the gulf. The 'Lady Evelyn' not being available for landing the mails, a little boat at Rimouski had to be used. The 'Empress' had to wait eight hours to get the mails landed.

Mr. BRODEUR. The boat at Rimouski is not under the charge of this department.

Mr. BERGERON. The 'Lady Evelyn' was the boat which was mentioned, I saw the statement in a Liberal paper, complaining that the 'Lady Evelyn,' or the boat that should have been at that place, was down the gulf promenading some of the ministers. Later, when the Prime Minister came back from the conference in England, all the government boats were pressed into service. There was even a row between the Postmaster General and the Solicitor General; they did not agree amongst themselves at Quebec.

As to the passes I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should find out from the railway companies which employees of the government are favoured with passes. We on this side of the House have nothing to say as to the railways granting passes to any employee of the government; that is the company's business, but the heads of departments should find out from the railway companies which of their employees receive passes and then when these officials travel they should not be permitted to charge their transportation expenses to the government. We had a case of that years ago. One of the chief engineers of the Department of Railways and Canals was travelling on a pass and charging his expenses to the country. This was proven before the Public Accounts Committee and is not a practice which should be continued. This should be found out from the companies and not from the employees.

Mr. BRODEUR. You must have more faith than that in our employees.

Mr. BERGERON. That is childish. The man who charged his expenses although he had a pass was an old man, one of the most trusted employees of the department, an engineer of renown. He thought there was no harm in that. He was not the only one; that year five or six were shown to have charged their travelling expenses while travelling on passes. They said they had many small expenses they could not charge and covered them in that way. But to return to the item, would the minister state what employees of the second-class in his department are going to be raised to the new positions he is creating?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have twice given the names of the nine out of whom four will be selected. I could not give the four names exactly at the present.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is not the intention of the minister to take on new temporary employees in the place of those now placed on the permanent list?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no.

Mr. BERGERON. Where does the difference of $8,000 come in? Is it statutory increases?

Mr. BRODEUR. Statutory increases and the appointment of more employees on the permanent list.

Mr. BERGERON. The names on page 16 do not represent all the employees of the department, only certain classes?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. There are, for example, draughtsmen, technical officers who are permanent men. I cannot expect these men to be appointed permanently because they are discharging particular duties. My policy is that all those doing clerical work must pass examinations and become permanent officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say that when he was occupying the Speaker's chair he thought he was very economical. I have looked up the Auditor General's Report for 1902, one of the years in which my hon. friend occupied that position, and I find that he went to Montreal and purchased from Messrs. Cody & Brodeur two clothes baskets at $9. Who ever heard of paying $4.50 for a basket for holding soiled clothes? He went to another firm, Messrs. Richard & Desjardins, and had them reline a quilted silk coat and vest for which he paid $22.

An hon. MEMBER. For whom was that?

Mr. TAYLOR. For himself or some of the officers, I do not know, what business has this government with such expenditures? The minister says he ran the Speaker's Department economically. Nine dollars for two clothes baskets and $22 for lining a coat and vest! Yet he talks of running his department economically. Other speakers expended $800, but he ran it up to $3,000. These are but samples. I can read page after page of these items. Economical when he and his officials spent $46,000 in travelling expenses in nine months and ask the country to pay for it.

Mr. J. D. REID. During that time the minister spent $1,090 for silks and satins, silk draperies, silk cord, bed covers, &c. There is $822 for silk damasks, silks, satins, &c., I suppose all these things were left in the Speaker's apartments?

Mr. BLAIN. As the question of the extravagance of the minister is before us perhaps it would be worth while to place on record the expenses of the different speakers of the House as compared with the record of my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) when he was Speaker. The expenses were as follows :—

Mr. Speaker.	Term.	Expenses.
		$ cts.
Mr. Ouimet, July 1, 1890, to April 28, 1891.	9 months and 28 days.	1,175 23
Mr. White, April 29, 1891, to August 18, 1896.	5 years, 3 months and 21 days.	4,976 15
Sir James Edgar, August 19, 1896, to July, 31, 1899.	2 years, 11 months and 13 days.	4,189 29
Mr. Bain, August 1, 1899, to February 5, 1901.	1 year, 6 months and 5 days.	229 27
Mr. Brodeur, February 6, 1901, to March 11, 1904.	3 years, 1 month and 5 days.	9,899 20
Mr. Belcourt, March 12, to January 10, 1905.	9 months and 29 days.	703 51
Mr. Sutherland, January 11. 1905, to July 1, 1906.	1 year, 5 months, and 20 days.	301 69
Total expenditure in 16 years...		$ 19,474 34

When we were discussing the so-called extravagance of my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) it may be well to point out that he learned some of these habits when he was Speaker of the House. Whether he is getting any less extravagant, a search in the accounts of the Marine Department will tell. But he appears to be learning some new lessons now that he is commencing to pay his own expenses, and possibly if we wait till we see him next year he may further improve.

Mr. FOSTER. Does Mr. Anderson, the engineer, prepare all the plans that are necessary for the lighthouses ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; he prepares all the plans in connection with the construction of lighthouses.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of the fact that we are spending about $1,000,000 a year on this service, does the minister think that one man, no matter how competent and faithful he may be, can properly do all that work. I find that Mr. Anderson has a great deal of travelling to do ; does he not have an assistant engineer to go on with the work in his absence.

Mr. BRODEUR. What I intended to convey was that the plans are prepared under the supervision of Colonel Anderson ; he has under him some draughtsmen, two architects, and some assistant engineers.

Mr. FOSTER. These gentlemen take their instructions from him.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, the plans are prepared under his control.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Continue in supply.

Mr. FOSTER. The same ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election of Peter Douglas McLean, Esquire, for the electoral district of Centre York, Ont.

REPORT PRESENTED.

The Canadian Year-book, and Report of the Experimental Farm.—Mr. Fisher.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to ask with reference to two returns, an order for which was made early in the session, one with reference to an expert employed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and another with reference to a cold storage company in the city of St. John, and correspondence in relation thereto. These papers should not take long to prepare, and I would like to have them.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). With reference to my department, there are ten or fifteen different reports made in connection with the book-keeping there. These are being copied, and will make a voluminous return.

Mr. FISHER. I will inquire about the St. John matter. I think the report must be nearly if not quite ready. I will see that it is brought down.

SUPPLY—ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE —CHARGE AGAINST A CADET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a matter of interest to the militia of the country, as it concerns the military college at Kingston. We all know that in schools or colleges of that class there is always more or less freedom among the students to go into each other's rooms and take cake, fruit, apples or tobacco. That is common, not only in universities, but in the Royal Military College at Kingston. A year ago a gentleman who occupies a seat in this House found that an injustice, as he considered it, had been done to a young cadet attending the Royal Military College, and whose father was dead. This gentlemen had also a son at the college at the time, and he took up the case of this friendless boy and had it placed before the Minister of Militia. I understand, though I am not familiar with the details, that the order of the commandant of the Royal Military College was reversed with reference to that case a year ago. At that time the member whose son was attending college was warned that it would be indiscreet on his part to champion the case of this young man, on account of his own son being there, and he would likely find that he was making trouble for himself. Time wore on, and just previous to the last Christmas holidays the trouble culminated. A number of cadets, of whom this young man to whom I refer was not one, were found guilty of the crime of taking some fruit cake, or sponge cake, from each other's rooms. These young men had entered the rooms of their comrades and, according to the custom that prevails in most of these institutions, had helped themselves to the cake of their neighbours. These boys were rusticated. At the same time a charge was made against the young cadet, the son of this member who had championed the friendless lad a year ago, that he had been guilty of stealing. The charge was investigated by a sweat box process, and I want here to say that the sweat box process, I understand, is in vogue in that college. Evidence has been produced before the minister and some of his officers, I believe, showing that the commandant of the college brought these young lads before him or one of his officers, one after another privately, not in presence of the cadet who was charged, but in front of himself or his officer privately, and by every species of questioning, and by impression sought to get from these young men unfavourable answers against their fellow cadet.

I regret to say that the evidence, in so far as I have been able to ascertain, does not disclose one solitary cadet as having the manhood to tell the commandant that he was pursuing a cowardly, underhand and sneaking procedure in getting this evidence from them. A few years ago I chanced to be one of the members of the Board of Visitors of the Royal Military College and my fellow visitors will bear me out in saying that when, as had been the custom previous to that time, the Visitors brought these cadets before them privately and sought to ask questions concerning the professors and others in connection with the college, I dissented from that line of conduct and refused, in so far as I was concerned, to ask any cadet any question excepting it was in the presence of the man in regard to whom the questions were being asked. It is the only manly way and if we are going to send these young fellows out into the world as men, we have to train them that the first principle of British justice—a principle which has been established for hundreds of years—is that the accuser and the accused shall stand face to face and that there shall be no sweat box process employed in the training of these young gentlemen whom we are going to send out as officers and engineers in the Canadian or British army. This commandant brought these boys before him and, by this sweat box process, in the absence of their comrade, sought to get evidence from them to incriminate him. He absolutely failed in the attempt. To the credit of the boys they gave no evidence against their comrade. I suppose if they had had any they would have given it freely, but to their eternal discredit, and I want this to be impressed upon their minds and hearts, we have no evidence that one solitary cadet stood up, looked his commandant in the face and said : You are taking a cowardly course when you ask us in secret to peach on a comrade. Ask us any thing before him and we will tell you but we want none of this private sweat box process. However, the charge was dropped, he had to drop it but he raked up another one against this cadet of having cheated at cards. That was carried on by the sweat box process also. I understand that poker is not allowed in the college, but nevertheless it seems that the young gentlemen are fairly well versed in the arts of the game. This was this young gentleman's first game and he told them : You fellows know nothing about poker ; I do not understand the game very well myself, I did something or other and you never caught on but I would not take your jack pot under any consideration; take it back. So, that charge fell to the ground. Another charge, I believe, nearly a year old, was raked up by this sweat box process and it was that this young cadet had, on one occasion when he was on sick leave and absent from duty hanging around his room, been guilty of walking into the room of a comrade—a very common thing in college—taking his cigarette case and offering some of the cigarettes to the boys, asking them to have a cigarette on—naming the lad who was the owner of the cigarette case. He returned it. In the afternoon again, not being allowed out on account of illness, he walked into his com-rade's room, took the cigarette case again and finished the three cigarettes that were left in the case. About this time the owner of the cigarette case and a couple of other boys came up and asked him : Have you my cigarette case ?—and the lad promptly handed it out and said : Yes and I have smoked all the cigarettes but I was waiting to refill it. On this being brought out by the sweat box process the commandant took action and his order was to rusticate this boy. The father of the boy promptly brought it before the authorities, the matter was tried before the minister, the deputy minister of justice, the general, the adjutant general and other officers—I do not know who all were concerned in it—the judgment was reversed, the order of rustication was cancelled entirely, it did not take one solitary mark form the cadet and his restitution to the college was ordered. This order was communicated to the commandant of the Royal Military College. When the young cadet was ordered to report to the college he went there and in place of being treated as a free man, as he was under the judgment, he was placed in close confinement and kept there until two o'clock in the afternoon although at eight o'clock in the morning the officer commanding the Royal Military College had the judgment in his hands clearly exonerating the cadet from any fault in the matter. Then the cadets, that afternoon, were assembled in one of the buildings and in place of reading the judgment of his minister and of his general without comment, the commandant of the Royal Military College delivered a harangue condemning the father of the boy, telling the young cadets that the father had practically, in his presence, lied to the minister and the general and in that way had obtained a reversal of the judgment, that he had restored the other four cadets whom he had rusticated for hooking the sponge cake so that they could not be classed with this other young man, and he did every thing he could to heap odium on this young cadet. I have understood that on this reaching the notice of the minister, orders were promptly issued that the cadets should have the full judgment of the court, as I may term it, read to them. They were yesterday assembled—I think it was yesterday—and in addition to the judgment being read another harangue, another speech, to the cadets blackening the character of this young cadet and seeking to heap odium upon him in the college, was delivered. As an old teacher, as a man who has had much more experience in military tactics and discipline than the commandant and as a man who understands as much about honour and comradeship between man and man, I have no hesitation in saying that the commandant of the Royal Military College, if these statements are true, and I believe they are, is unfit to stay twenty-four hours longer in his job. I have nothing more at the present time to say. I think that in justice to the young men of this country we have to instill such a spirit into them that they will not submit to such treatment, that when they are put into the sweat box they will tell any commandant that they refuse to answer questions unless they stand face to face with the young man against whom they are asked to testify. I am surprised that among a lot of young gentlemen coming from the best families in Canada not one of them seems to have the manhood enough to stand up and tell the commandant face to face that he was pursuing a cowardly course.

Mr. TALBOT. Would the hon. gentleman approve of such conduct as a military man ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Of what ?

Mr. TALBOT. Approve of the conduct of these young men in telling the commandant that he was pursuing a cowardly course ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Certainly I would. The military rules of Canada or any other nation that I know of require no officer or man to do a cowardly or contemptible trick. The subject who is truly loyal to the chief magistrate will neither advise nor submit to arbitrary, or contemptible, or cowardly measures. Therefore I am surprised——

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the fact that all the cadets agreed to take the same course is some proof in favour of the commandant of the Royal Military College ?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No, not at all, but I know that boys in college all feel they are subject to military duty, and the natural tendency the world over is to bow to tyrants. But I want to put a little manhood into the hearts of these fellows, so that if this is ever done again the commandant will be shown that he has no authority under military or civil law or under any code of honour the world over, to ask a boy to stoop to such a degradation as has been attempted. I bring the matter before the minister and the House in the hope that some action will be taken.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Under ordinary circumstances I think it undesirable that questions of discipline in the Royal Military College should be discussed in this way or discussed at all if it can possibly be avoided. However, my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) told me this morning that he intended to bring the matter up, as I understood with particular reference to a cadet whose name he has not mentioned, but whose name I presume I have liberty to mention, Cadet Lancaster, the son of an hon. member of this House. Cadet Lancaster has been disciplined, together with a number of other cadets by the commandant of the college. I have not the papers before me to go into the general question of discipline, but I must say, in justice to the commandant, that I cannot for a moment think he would be actuated by any low motive in his conduct towards any cadet. I think it is only fair that I should say that and that whatever methods he may have pursued, I understand that he has pursued only the methods which are customary in the service.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is a military college.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well it has always been assumed to be and under military control.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the minister pretend that he has any evidence that such a system has ever prevailed in any military college ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think the evidence will disclose that anything which would be unusual, we will say in connection with the discipline of a regiment has occurred in connection with the college. However, I have not the papers here, and I will leave the matter in that way. My belief is that the commandant has proceeded regularly.

Now to come to the point, I happen to have here the judgment which I gave in connection with this particular case and in a moment I shall read it.

Mr. TISDALE. Was an appeal made from the judgment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not exactly an appeal, no. This is the case : When a question of discipline is considered in the college and the commandant gives a decision, we will say to sentence a cadet to rustication, the sentence cannot take effect until it is approved by the minister. That is the way in which this case came before me. There were several cases, I might mention, of irregularity.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Against other cadets.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Against other cadets, some four or five, I think five cases in all. As my hon. friend has said, four of them had been proved to have taken articles, cake, chiefly, belonging to brother cadets. They were sentenced to rustication, four of them for one month, but the sentence was immediately remitted and these cases never came before me.

Mr. LANCASTER. Remitted by the commandant.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And they never came before me. There was a fifth case, that of Cadet Lancaster, in which the commandant came to the conclusion that a cigarette case belonging to another cadet had been taken criminally, taken with the intent to keep it, and for that the cadet was sentenced by the commandant to four months rustication. That case was referred to me and I think it desirable that what I have to say about that should be given by reading the judgment which I gave and which was sent to the commandant with subsequent instructions to read it to the college. It was read yesterday or the day before to the cadets and professors, duly assembled for the purpose.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. Was any complaint made by the lad who lost the cigarette case that had been lost or stolen ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think not. The cigarette case, as a matter of fact, was returned within a few hours after it was taken.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As soon as asked for. The minister said the instructions to the commandant were to read this judgment to the cadets. Was the judgment read to the cadets by the commandant on its first being received by him ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, but it is only fair to the commandant to say that the judgment was sent to him and the instructions to read it were not sent until the next day.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A speech was made on the first occasion.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. On hearing that the judgment had not been read I sent word to the commandant to read it and he has read it. This is the decision :

1. This case comes before the minister to review the sentence of four months' rustication pronounced by the commandant. The commandant at the trial or investigation of the matter proceeded upon oral testimony of which, in accordance with the customs of the service, no written report was made, but the nature of the case and of the evidence offered has been made by the commandant; and Mr. Lancaster, on behalf of his son, who was present during the proceedings, has been afforded an opportunity, of which he has availed himself, to state his recollection with regard to it.

The minister entertains no doubt that the commandant proceeded regularly in accordance with the regulations and practice in such cases, and that in reaching the conclusion and awarding the punishment which he did, he was governed solely by his view of the testimony and the punishment which he deemed to be deserved, having regard to the character of the offence found by him and in the interest of the discipline of the college.

2. The minister is, however, upon the case as represented to him, unable to adopt the finding of the commandant that Cadet Lancaster took the cigarette case with criminal intent.

The testimony given, as understood by the minister, fails to establish a case inconsistent with an intention on the part of the young man to do more than temporarily avail himself of the use of the cigarette case, and the improbability of an intention to commit theft seems also to the minister to be a reasonable assumption from the circumstances of the case.

There can be no question, however, that Cadet Lancaster did take the cigarette case, using the cigarettes which it contained, and did keep the same in his possession for several hours without the consent or permission of the owner, to whom, however, he afterwards returned the empty case upon demand. Admitting the intention claimed on behalf of Cadet Lancaster not to deprive the owner permanently of his cigarette case and to restore the same, Cadet Lancaster's conduct was, nevertheless, in the opinion of the minister, an act to the prejudice of good order and military discipline of the college, especially at a time when more serious offences with regard to misappropriation of property were occurring and were the subject of inquiry on the part of the officers of the college.

3. The commandant, therefore, could not have properly overlooked the offence of Cadet Lancaster when brought to his attention, as it was, but he erred in considering the more serious offence of theft to have been established beyond reasonable doubt by the evidence at the hearing of the case.

4. In the opinion of the minister the justice of the case will be satisfied without danger to the maintenance of the discipline of the college if he records Cadet Lancaster as guilty of the minor offence of being in improper possession of the cigarette case without the consent of the owner, and reduces his sentence by remitting the unexpired portion thereof, which he hereby does.

(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN,
Minister of Militia and Defence.

Ottawa, January 6, 1908.

One word more. My hon. friend referred to the fact that Cadet Lancaster was placed under arrest when he returned to the college on Sunday. As a mater of fact, he was under arrest and was allowed to leave the college during the Christmas vacation, and of course when he returned he came back to the position that he was in before. I understand that he attended his classes, so that there was no serious detriment to him in that respect. The moment this decision reached the commandant the cadet was relieved from arrest, because the judgment I gave at once relieved him from rustication.

Mr. H. A. WARD. I would ask the minister if rustication and arrest are synonymous terms? Is he under arrest when he is rusticated ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. He was under arrest previously, during the trial of the case. He had been under arrest for some time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But he was rusticated after the period of arrest ceased?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think he remained under arrest until my decision was reached.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may tell the minister—I do not know whether he is aware of it or not—that the commandant of the Royal Military College has no authority to place anybody under arrest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may be a good deal in what is suggested by my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). I have not examined carefully the statutes relating to the college, but I think there may be reason to doubt whether the powers of military discipline assumed by the commandant are founded on any law permitting him to take the course he did. So far as the main aspects of the case are concerned, I had some opportunity of inquiring into the evidence upon which the decision of the commandant was founded, and I am bound to say that in my judgment there was not one iota of evidence which justified his finding. It was just about the same as if one hon. member of this House on intimate terms with another should go into the other's room and take up his cigar case and put it into his pocket and keep it for a few hours. That is all there was about it. It was a mere boyish prank, and it seems to me that the decision at which the commandant arrived was of the most extraordinary character, and one which indicated his absolute inability to appreciate the evidence brought before him, and his further inability to understand the real essentials of the crime with which he undertook to charge this young man. I am very glad indeed that the minister has taken the course of setting this decision aside. It is quite true that there may have been something in this boyish prank which would call for some very minor punishment in order to maintain the disclipine of the college, but to endeavour, as was done, to attach the stigma of a crime to this young man was an intolerable decision, and for my part I cannot understand how any reasonable man could have arrived at it.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I do not wish to go into the merits of this case, but I think a word should be said in defence of the Commandant of the Military College. Those who have the pleasure of knowing him know that he would not do anything that he did not deem proper, but judging by the document that has been read, the offence that was committed appears to have been merely a boyish prank. At the same time I think the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) should not have said that the commandant acted in a cowardly way or that the cadets did, because the cadets had only one choice, to answer the questions that were put to them, and my hon. friend knows very well that in military matters when an investigation takes place the accused is not taken before the investigators.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, he is.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, because I know that in the case of a man named Gouin, in Quebec, the evidence was taken in his absence.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It was all wrong.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Well, he took an action for damages and the courts decided that it was all right and that must have been a good judgment, because it was rendered by Judge Seymour. At all events, the Commandant of the Royal Military College acted under the evidence that was taken, and I do not think any blame can be attached to him. Is not Captain Lafferty the commandant?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, Lieut.-Col. Taylor.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. However, my hon. friend knows that the commandant did not act in any other way than according to the evidence that was given, and when the judgment was referred to the minister the commandant obeyed the minister's order, and therefore the matter was one which I think should not have been brought before the House.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (Norfolk). There are one or two things connected with this matter which I think might serve as a warning to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia to look into the practice of the Military College. I believe it is usual in cases of petty offences for cadets or privates or non-commissioned officers, or even officers, to be quietly brought before the commandant before any other step is taken. I do not know whether this course is legal or not in this country, but certainly it is provided for in the Queen's Regulations. I am not going to speak of the merits of this case at all. Everybody seems to concur in what the minister did, and I am sure he would not reverse a decision of a commandant unless he had good reason for doing so. But where a criminal offence is charged it is a different matter from the class of petty offences incident to the maintaining of discipline and good order in the college. I do not think we should look too closely into the methods of those in charge, but I do think that if this commandant has the power which he exercised in this case, it ought to be taken from him or any other commandant. It puts into the hands of an enemy or those who want to annoy or bring discredit upon a young man the power to have him charged with a crime and tried without his having a chance of being defended.

If it be the fact that the commandant has that power, it ought to be promptly taken from him. Here is a college which young gentlemen enter in order to get a military education and be fitted to command our volunteers, as they should be commanded, and be fitted also to enter the Imperial service for the defence of the empire. It is essential that these young men should be taught to assume the responsibility of their conduct, and the best way to do this is to hold the commandant and his staff strictly to account for their actions. I do not agree with my hon. friend from Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that because the boys themselves did not tell the commandant their opinion of the course he had taken, that was any evidence of cowardice on their part, whatever may be said about the conduct of this officer himself; but I feel called upon to say that it is unbecoming, un-British and unsoldierly for a commandant to accuse a cadet, under his charge, of a crime, take upon himself the trial and as commandant bring together the other cadets and examine them in private in order to try and establish the crime. This was not the case of a petty offence but of a charge of theft. It is one of the first principles of the rights of a man, not to speak of a lad, that when he is charged with a crime, those who give evidence against him shall do so in his presence, and he shall have the right to employ counsel.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That was done in this case.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand that counsel was refused.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. TISDALE. At all events no commanding officer of a military college should be allowed to call the lads before him privately and examine them privately in the case of a criminal offence. That is where I consider the commandant seriously abused his authority. Not having the facts before me, I am not prepared either to condemn or condone what the officers did, but I repeat —and the army office in Great Britain will sustain me—that no commanding officer of a military college has the right to hold a private trial in the case of any cadet charged with a criminal offence. If this commandant has that power, it should be taken from him. If he has not, then he is to be condemned, because he ought to be certain of his right before undertaking to act.

Mr. HENRY A. WARD (Durham). If the commandant of the military college has the power to try such cases as these, that power should be taken away from him. But I doubt if he has it. I would ask the hon. the Minister of Militia if his powers are the same as those of the commanding officer of a regiment?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the presumption and that has been the practice. The college has been conducted according to that view since it was founded down to the present.

Mr. WARD. Then I would like to read to the House exactly what the powers of an officer commanding a regiment are. I doubt if such an officer has the power to try any such cases as the one in question at all. I need not go through the list of the powers conferred on commanding officers of regiments. In the military law, as laid down for the guidance of officers in Canada, there are eighteen sections, but in none of them do I find any power whatever given the commanding officer to try a case of theft. After enumerating all the ordinary offences which a commanding officer has the power to try, it is provided that any other offences which the commanding officer desires to dispose of summarily will be referred to superior authority. What is that superior authority ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That would be no doubt a court martial.

Mr. TISDALE. Or the civil authority.

Mr. WARD. There is no choice in the matter, I suppose. It is quite true that cadet Lancaster was given the choice by the commandant of a trial before court martial or by the commandant himself, and he chose the latter. But had the commandant of the school any power to sugest to Cadet Lancaster that he might make a selection ? If he had not, he should have referred the case to superior authority at once because this section goes on to say :—

A charge of any other offence which the commandant desires to dispose of summarily will be referred to superior authority by the latter briefly stating the circumstances of the case and accompanied by the prisoner's company default sheet.

I suppose there was no default sheet in this case because, I understand, this cadet had a very high standing in the college. That is the course laid down by military law ; and the commandant of the college, who has only the power of a commanding officer of a regiment, had no right to try the case at all, even if the lad did make a selection. I understand that a question was asked the commandant to this effect :

Did the gentleman cadet who lost the cigarette case make a complaint?

This offence took place two or three months before and no action was taken. But because there was some suspicion that some other offence had been committed by the cadet—not Cadet Lancaster—the endeavour was made to fasten it on Cadet Lancaster. And because this particular offence could not be fastened on Cadet Lancaster, this old affair, which occurred two or three months previously and had never been reported, was brought up against him. Another question was asked :

By whom was the charge made?

The commandant had to acknowledge that he himself it was who made the charge. So that he stood in the position of making a charge against the cadet and trying it himself. Was there any fair-play about that ? If so, I cannot see it. Another question was asked :

Was not Cadet Wanklyn, who lost or was deprived of his cigarette case for a few hours, examined, and did he not swear that he thought Cadet Lancaster had no intention of stealing the case?

And the commandant answered yes. Here is the position. The commandant makes a charge for something which occurred three months ago and tries it himself, and in defiance of the evidence of the man most interested, he brings in a judgment branding Cadet Lancaster as a thief. After having absolutely refused to allow the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) to appear in defence of his young boy, who was charged with a criminal offence, I think there is grave reason to call for an inquiry into the fitness of this commandant to hold the position he does.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). This case strikes different persons in different ways. The way it strikes me, I do not think has been called to the attention of the House so far. It seems to me perfectly clear that if this young man had not been fortunate enough to have a father at his back to fight his battles inasmuch as no report of the evidence was taken, the decision of the minister would depend entirely on what version of the evidence the commandant chose to give. It seems therefore quite clear that had not this youth been fortunate enough to have a father to take up his case, the minister would naturally have acted on the uncontradicted report of the commandant and branded this youth for life as a thief. Now I understand there are 95 to 100 young Canadians in that military college, and it strikes me as a terrible thing that all these bright young Canadian youths should be at the mercy of a man who clearly is unfit to be in that position, and to exercise command of that institution. I would call the attention of the government to the fact that the sooner these young men are protected by having, in the first place the powers of the commandant clearly defined, and in the next place by putting a man into the position who has shown that he is fit to exercise those powers, the better for the college and the better for the Canadian boys.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. May I be allowed a single word in addition. It is fair that the House should be put in full possession of the facts. The very moment the case was referred to me I saw there was no evidence on oath and I found it very difficult indeed to reach a conclusion. One of the results, at any rate, of this investigation has been that instructions have been issued that in future, although I believe it is not in accordance with the practice in regimental investigations of that kind, evidence must be taken down and forwarded to the minister. Now a word in regard to to the matter brought up by my hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward). It is only fair to say that the preliminary proceedings consisted in the summoning of a board of inquiry. That board was composed of three officers of the college, and that board proceeded to take evidence, of different cadets and others connected with the college. The charge or charges such as they were which were referred to the commandant, were made the subjects of this inquiry. That is what took place.

Mr. WARD. Were these witnesses who gave evidence before the board called on the trial ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Most of them were called on the trial, and the cadet who was under arrest was given the right of questioning and cross-examining.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I might correct the minister there. The cadet charged was not permitted to ask a question. He dared not ask a question directly of the witness, but he had to put his question through the commandant who took the witness into his own hands.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, he was permitted to ask questions, but the commandant required him to ask the question through him.

Mr. E. G. PORTER (West Hastings). From what has been said by the minister it occurs to me that the usual practice of the college has not been carried out in this case, but was deliberately violated. If I understand the minister correctly, the practice in a charge such as this was to formulate the charge, take evidence upon that, and then refer the case to the minister before the sentence came into force. Now in order to carry that out properly, the evidence upon which the conviction is based, as well as the charge, ought to be forwarded to the minister in order that he might form a proper judgment upon it. It is evident that had that been done in the first instance as it was afterwards done, the sentence would never have been enforced at all against this young man. It seems to me that the course of procedure adopted by the commandant of the college discloses clearly the motive of the commanding officer in acting as he did. If I am correctly informed, and understand what has been said here, evidence of two characters was taken before the board of inquiry. First, there was evidence taken of the young cadets who were not sworn at all, they made statements before the board, and in the absence of the person accused. Then afterwards certain other evidence was taken under oath.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But from the same cadets, or some of them.

Mr. PORTER. Now the whole of that evidence was before the board of inquiry and before the commandant and it must have been in view of the whole evidence that he undertook to form his judgment. Therefore, the whole of that evidence should have been before the minister to enable him to form a correct judgment upon the matter. Now if I am correctly informed, the evidence that was sworn to was not forwarded to the minister.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was not taken down.

Mr. PORTER. But the evidence that was taken, not under oath, a brief of it, was forwarded to the minister; in other words, the commandant asked the minister to form a judgment upon the unsworn testimony which was taken behind the back of the accused; that was sent to the minister and upon that he was asked to form his judgment. It seems to me that discloses a motive. A motive is further disclosed by the fact that the young man was tried before upon two alleged offences, and this was the third one. The case looks to me as if there was a deliberate pursuit of the young man with the fixed intention of getting a conviction against him in some way or other; and in order that the conviction might be sustained the evidence upon which it was professed to be based was suppressed and not submitted to the minister. If I am correct in my conclusion, no one will say that a man guilty of conduct of that kind ought to be continued in the honourable service of the militia of Canada, or in any school in Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me impossible that the minister should have exercised his discretion unless all the evidence was forwarded to him. As the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Porter) has just pointed out, the so-called evidence which did come forward was the result of inquiries made, not under oath, but made behind the back of the man who was charged, nor did the accused have an opportunity himself to cross-examine before the commandant. There was not a single trace of that evidence to be found when the matter came to be investigated. This perhaps cannot be made a charge against the commandant, because I think in the course he pursued he had the concurrence of other military men who looked into the matter. But it is an irregularity which urgently demands correction, and I understand from the minister that he has corrected it already.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have done so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am surprised that the correction has not been made before. I suppose it is due to the fact that no circumstance of this kind had arisen in the past ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is the first case of the kind since I have been minister.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, $535,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the minister goes into this, it might be well for him to give us the explanations which were not finished last night in two or three cases.

Mr. BRODEUR. What cases ?

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will remember there were what seemed to be the extraordinarily large expenses by Commander Spain. Then there was the Lacas case; and there was some confusing matters with reference to the minister's own disbursements which he could not understand himself, and therefore could not make us understand, and with regard to which he was to refresh his memory.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to Commander Spain, a report has been made to me which I will read ;

Commander Spain is the Wreck Commissioner for Canada, and also he is in charge of the marine service and the pilotage services. He has to travel very extensively in connection with these matters, as his instructions are to endeavour to investigate every casualty of any importance which takes place in the Dominion. He is allowed $6 per day by order in council living expenses as wreck commissioner. He was instructed to go to New York to find out the system adopted at that port of transhipping pilots to and from ocean steamers, and also the way in which the pilotage system was conducted there. The information he obtained was very valuable to the department.

This officer is not in possession of a railway pass at the present time, nor has he ever at any time had a pass from any railway company or steamship company in Canada, the United States or elsewhere.

F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the expenses which have been charged by Commander Spain are $6 per day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, for living allowance. Then his railway fare has to be added.

Mr. FOSTER. Besides the $6 per day he is paid his travelling expenses of all kinds ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Of all kinds.

Mr. FOSTER. Not his hotel bills ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, his living expenses include the hotel bills.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, is that indicative of the way in which the minister deals with his officers ? The good old fashioned system was that the man should account for all the moneys given to him, and that he should put in certified accounts of all that he spent. It was not at all the rule to grant certain sums to a man en bloc to cover his living expenses. That was done sometimes when gentlemen were sent from departments across to London on work of the government; then deputy ministers and the like of that were allowed a living allowance at so much, because their mission was considered important in the public interest. But it is a bad practice to single out men from the service of Canada and allow them so much as an allowance for living. They get their salaries, they are in pay of the country, and the country will foot every legitimate bill. But it is not supposed that outside their salary they are going to get living allowance which will enable them to make their salary larger than it otherwise would be. We have a great many men in the service who travel, and where you pick out one and give him that privilege you certainly do not seem to deal equally with the service as a whole, with men equally valuable and with men equally efficient. You will get rid of all the difficulty if you simply say, Whatever you reasonably expend for your travel and your living, put in your bills and they will be paid by the government. That may be a little more difficult for the officers, but that is what the officers are for.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am now informed for the first time that in the case of Commander Spain there was a special order in council passed providing that a fixed sum be allowed him for his living expenses. The deputy minister informs me that this is not a general custom in the department, it is the only case where an order in council has been passed fixing the living expenses.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does that order cover everything except railway fares ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Everything. The general question is certainly important whether we should give to officers of the department a certain fixed allowance according to their salary and position, or whether we should continue the system which has been in existence in the past, by which they are required to submit to the Auditor General a detailed statement of their expenses. I think in the case of deputy ministers it has been the practice for many years to give them a fixed sum for travelling expenses, whether in Canada or outside of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. The old practice was only for outside of Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. If it is a good practice for travelling outside Canada it would be as good for travelling within Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Why ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware of any reason for a distinction.

Mr. FOSTER. For instance, if we send the Deputy Minister of Finance across the water to forward some financial transaction, the practice was to give him a certain allowance. There is a difference between outside and inside travel.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know about that, there is room for a difference of opinion. I do not know what the difference would be in regard to the travelling expenses of the deputy minister inside or outside of Canada. When he is sent away it is for some very important work, he has to meet people in a social way and perhaps it is very difficult for him to account for every cent of money he has spent. But, he may be sent away in Canada for the same purpose. Then would it not be advisable that the same principle should be adopted in regard to his travel, not only inside the country but outside as well ? The matter is now engaging the attention of the treasury board but no decision has been reached as to whether we should adopt the principle of giving a fixed sum of money for living allowance or whether we should continue the system which now exists. For myself I have no definite views on the matter although perhaps it would be just as well in the interest of the country if a fixed sum were determined upon according to the social position and nature of the work of the officer.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the practice of the ministers themselves?

Mr. BRODEUR. Ministers present accounts and certify that they have spent so much without giving any details.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the cases of Mr. Lacas and Mr. St. Louis ?

Mr. BRODEUR. As to Mr. Lacas, an arrangement was made in 1903, between Mr. Sutherland and Mr. Préfontaine, Mr. Sutherland being Minister of Public Works and Mr. Préfontaine Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There is a letter dated the 20th April, 1903, sent by Mr. Sutherland in which he stated, in answer to a question of Mr. Préfontaine as to whether the Department of Public Works would be prepared to permit Mr. Lacas to do work required for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that:

I have no objection to granting the desired permission, but of course you will have to make some arrangement for paying the expenses in connection with any work which he may do for your department.

Mr. FOSTER.

There is a letter from Mr. Préfontaine acknowledging that on the 12th May, and saying that the arrangement was agreeable to him. I may say in connection with what the hon. member was referring to in regard to that clause of the Civil Service Act by which a member of the civil service is prohibited from being paid by two departments, that Mr. Lacas is not a member of the civil service, not a permanent officer, and consequently he would not fall under the control of this law. The matter was brought to the attention of the department by the Auditor General, and an order in council was passed ratifying the agreement between the two ministers which has been read.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, but the agreement which has been read by the minister does not provide for the pay of the man. Does Mr. Sutherland say to Mr. Préfontaine : Yes, you may take and use this man 365 days in the year, but you will have to pay him what he wants for his services and I will go on and pay him his salary even though he does not work one day in the year? Evidently what was contemplated was this: If you want my officer for the time that you are using him you will have to account to my department for his pay.

Mr. BRODEUR. Account to the department ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he is being paid by the department. While he was doing work for the minister last year he was paid his regular salary in the other department of $1,550. Just reason it out for yourself. If you can employ him twenty days surely you can employ him 300 days. He will get his salary of $1,550 from his own department, and you will pay him $1,300 or $1,400 for the other work. It does not work out properly and although there is a distinction technically in that he is not a permanent employee, of course, the trouble that was provided against or sought to be provided against is just as much a trouble in the temporary service as it would be in the permanent service.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have here a communication from Mr. Lacas addressed to Mr. Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries under date of November 18, 1902, in which he makes application for the work of executing copies of plans and doing photographic work for the department. This man was in possession of photographic apparatus and we had to have this work done. This work had previously been done outside under the control of the chief engineer of the department, and Mr. Lacas has been simply carrying out the arrangement that we had before that, but with much better results as far as the administration of the department is concerned. The work was not so advantageously done outside as it has been done by this man, he made application to the minister to do this work, it was given to him and a certain remuneration was paid him.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the work done?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is done when it is required.

Mr. BLAIN. When was the work done for which this amount was paid to this gentleman?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not a statement of the accounts here, but I suppose it was done during the year.

Mr. BERGERON. Does he present an account?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he presents an account to the department for so much and this account is paid on the certificate of the officer for whom this work is done.

Mr. BERGERON. If you had a copy of the account you could find out when the work was done?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not at all satisfactory, I may say to the minister. He dodges entirely the question of taking one man's employee, that employee getting his full salary for the year, using him for a part of the year for his own purposes and paying him extra for it. There is no question as to the economy of it. If this gentleman had the apparatus for the work and if he could do it better, it was better to have it done if he had the time to do it, but he should not have double pay.

Mr. BRODEUR. As far as the department is concerned there is an advantage in having the work done in that way, because we are not obliged to go outside—to go to Montreal or some other place to get it done. We can have the work done here. We had the good fortune to have this man under our direct supervision and we could see that the work was done without any delay, not at a greater cost, but on the contrary, at a less cost. Perhaps this man was working at night; as to that I do not know, but I do know that we have a more satisfactory arrangement than we had before.

Mr. BENNETT. How long was he occupied in earning the $400?

Mr. BRODEUR. The work which he does is the reproduction of plans by photographic apparatus.

Mr. BERGERON. That will have to be done in day time?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy informs me it is not necessary to do it in the daytime as it is an electric process. It is not a question of time but of the value of the work he was performing.

Mr. BLAIN. We find that in the Public Works Department that Mr. Lacas was engaged and paid $750, at the rate of $1,500 a year. The committee wants to know if he was doing any of this work for the Marine Department during the six months he was working for the Public Works Department?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know exactly at what time he did this, whether in the day or at night. The department required that work to be done. Formerly it was done by outside people and we did not have as much satisfaction as we are receiving to-day from this gentleman. We got him to do it and it is done more advantageously as far as we are concerned. I am asked why we did not have this done by the Public Works Department; it is found more satisfactory to have control over a man by giving him the money direct and that induced the department to do the work in this way.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no objection to the same man if competent doing the work for the two departments provided he is doing temporary work in each department; but what we want to find out is whether when he was being paid by the Public Works Department a salary for doing work there, he was also working for the Fisheries Department, during the time he was supposed to devote to the Public Works service. The ministers of the two departments should look into this matter and find out whether they are taking each other's help; we should know whether this man is receiving two salaries or one.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a question if with $1,500 from the Public Works Department and $500 from us, a total of $2,000 a year, this man is being paid too much.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister does not see the point at all.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may not quite follow what my hon. friend says but I have been trying to tell him that our department is in a better position in this matter than before.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend does not disassociate himself from the government; he talks about his department and says it is all right to steal another minister's man from him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He could not steal him if the two ministers agreed upon it. I understand that Messrs. Préfontaine and Sutherland came to an agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I think the House should take hold of this and find out if a man is being paid a salary in one department and is being allowed to go around by the back door to earn half a year's salary from another department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I heard the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) state distinctly that an arrangement had been come to between Messrs. Préfontaine and Sutherland when in charge of the departments under which this gentleman was permitted to do certain work for the Marine Department. It may be that the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine thought that the $1,500 and the $400 or $500 from the Marine Department would be a reasonable salary for the services performed; but I may say to my friend that I will make inquiry, in my department as to this gentleman's work and if on the advice of the officers of my department it is thought that the amount he receives is more than he is entitled to, I will see that the salary he gets in my department is reduced to a reasonable figure.

Mr. FOSTER. That is fair.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked last night what Mr. Lacas was doing and I was told he was on six months' leave of absence.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was so informed.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister should not come to the House and make statements if they are not correct. To-day he is not a member of the civil service. Does the government grant leave of absence to men who are not civil servants ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly there are a number of people not on the civil service list who can get leave of absence.

Mr. TAYLOR. This gentleman has been in the employ of the department for many years and the minister to-day says he is not a member of the civil service. He was not in the House prior to 1906, but the Prime Minister was, when complaint was made by the Liberals, then in opposition, against the government for employing temporary clerks to do copying at their homes at nights, and paying them for it. The Conservative government made the legitimate defence that in this way they could get the work done much cheaper than by putting on additional clerks. Each case, however, was investigated, those who were drawing pay from two departments were given their walking tickets and an order in council was passed saying that this should not continue. In the face of that the Minister of Marine and the new Minister of Public Works justified the course now taken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not said anything about it one way or the other except to state the facts.

Mr. TAYLOR. A sacred order in council was passed saying that no man should draw salary from two funds. Can the minister justify giving this man $500 when he is drawing a salary from the Public Works Department ? Although he is on six months leave of absence. I presume his pay is going on. The Liberals made a charge against the government in 1896 for simply giving out a little copying to be done by temporary clerks at their homes, the sums involved being small, $5 and $10; but here is $499 of the people's money thrown away to a civil servant who is drawing $1,500 a year and the minister attempts to justify it.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been stated that this gentleman in the last year has been for months away from his work in Ottawa in the Cobalt; it is now stated that he is in Paris. What he is doing I do not know but it is worth while for the minister to ascertain whether he has been receiving pay and at the same time has been granted extended leave of absence to work out his own projects in Cobalt. The Minister of Public Works might look up that matter in connection with his department as it will come up when we reach his votes. If he was a temporary employee and was doing work in the two departments in this way that would perhaps not come under the strict letter of the order in council. But if at the very time he was supposed to be in the service of the Minister of Public Works he was engaged in doing work for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and was getting pay for it, that would be drawing double pay and would be manifestly unfair.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to get the information for my hon. friend when the estimates of my department are before the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose the minister has no objection to furnishing the committee with the account rendered by Mr. Lacas for the payment of $449.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly, there is no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister was to look into the question as to whether Potvin got a cheque.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, he got a cheque before the 1st of April.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the policy of the minister with reference to giving advances to messengers? Why was an advance given to Potvin?

Mr. BRODEUR. Because he came to England with us.

Mr. FOSTER. And the minister had his private secretary?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And also a messenger?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. A royal progress. A duke could travel all over this country without a messenger. If he wanted his boots blacked, he would not bring a man from the middle of Germany for the purpose; he would pay five cents or a tip to a boot-black. What in the world did the minister want with a private secretary and a messenger also ? I make this statement, that in less than eighteen months, taking in the last fiscal year and a portion of the current year up to the time the minister came back, he and his private secretary have received these amounts of money: $596.05, $1,400, $2,000, and within a shade of $4,000, making $7,996 for travelling expenses, besides which $892 stands in the accounts against the minister for the expenses of the party across the Atlantic, and $25 for the pullmans down to the sea, making altogether $8,913.05 in less than eighteen months. The minister said last night that he had recovered part of that. He knows how much he recovered, and it would not be unfair to ask him to give that information to the committee now.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to my own expenses I have no objection to state what has been done; quite the reverse. I gave the information yesterday, and the hon. gentleman is still drawing attention to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I intend to draw attention to it until the abuse is cured, if it takes fifteen years and I am here.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. gentleman waits till I give the explanations, he will find there was no abuse. First, he says that $890 was paid for my transportation expenses. I may say that the first question that presented itself was whether the expenditure had been incurred before the end of the last fiscal year or after the beginning of this year. I am informed by the accountant of the department that the order was given before the 31st of March, and that the tickets reached the department before that date, and consequently the account was entered before the end of the fiscal year, and could be paid out of the previous appropriation. Now, the hon. member is somewhat surprised at the amount for tickets, and wishes to know whether it represents the cost of my ticket alone, or covers some others. As a matter of fact, the account showed that there was paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the department not only my own travelling expenses, but the expenses of some others who were with me. Some of those persons were officers of the department going to England on official business, and of course the department was perfectly justified in paying their expenses. The arrangement had been made before I left. In fact, as my hon. friend knows, we were busy with the work of the session, and those details were carried out by my private secretary. My hon. friend says I was in receipt of some $890. I explained yesterday how that was paid, and I am going to read a letter which I sent to the deputy minister in order to show the hon. gentleman that the aspersions he has tried to cast upon my honour and reputation are not at all justified. I may have my failings, but I am just as anxious as my hon. friend himself to see that everything, especially connected with myself, is carried out in the most proper way. I explained to him yesterday that last year, when for the first time I made an inspection of the different works of the department, I had with me some friends who to a certain extent were interested in the works which I was visiting, men connected with the shipping interests; but I thought the country should not pay their expenses, and what did I do? I adopted a policy which I was told by the officer with whom I conferred it was not the habit of the department to act upon, that it was not even done at the time when my hon. friend himself was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know whether that is the reason why my hon. friend attacks me so bitterly. On the 23rd of April I wrote the following letter to the deputy minister:—

During the crossing I asked my secretary to let me have the amount that was paid for the transportation of my party, and he informed me that the account would be paid by the department. I am writing you immediately so as to give instructions on the subject. There is, of course, no objection in paying for the transportation of Mr. Venning, Mr. Wiallard, my secretary, Potvin, and myself, but as far as the transportation for my wife and the other two ladies is concerned, I will pay that myself, and if this account has been paid when you receive this letter, explain and notify the accountant that I will see to the paying of this on my return to Ottawa when a refund can be made.

There is what I have done. I stated those facts yesterday, on my word as a Minister of the Crown and as a member of this House, and I am extremely sorry that my statement was not accepted as it should have been by the hon. gentleman. For my part I am always willing to accept the word of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend say that when he explained that he proposed paying back the amount and so directed his deputy minister I did not accept his statement? If he does, he is saying something which is entirely outside my recollection.

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot say whether the hon. gentleman is to be considered as having accepted my word yesterday or not, but I just find from a statement which fell from his lips a few moments ago that he appears as if he wanted the House to believe that I had received so much money despite the facts that I declared yesterday that I had given positive instructions not to pay this amount, and if it had been paid that I would reimburse it on my return. In all fairness to myself the hon. gentleman should have accepted my word.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not go a little further and say that I return to this statement to-day, as I told the minister. I read all the items which I find in the official publication as charged to himself. I stated at the same time that the minister said yesterday he had paid back or was to pay back some of these items. And I asked him to-day if he would state to the House how much he had refunded of those items. What is the use of the hon. minister trying to make a grievance where none exists? The minister is here to be examined with reference to the expenditure of his department and his personal expenses in connection with the department whenever these appear to be outrageously extravagant. On the minister's own admission he has been extravagant. Why should a young man like him take a messenger in addition to a private secretary all over Europe. When I went to England and made loans for the Dominion and made them successfully, and had to spend two months at a time in putting through the transaction, I did not take a messenger and a private secretary, but did the work myself, and my expenses were not over $1,000 all told. Why ? Because I was not born in royal splendour and with immense sums of money always at my disposal. But the minister is so different in that respect that he finds it difficult to retrench.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman seems to think that those I brought with me did not render any services to the country. Let me tell him that I spent several months in London and in Paris, that in those two places I was working in the interests of my country, and I may say that my secretary, whom he sees fit to attack—

Mr. FOSTER. I have not attacked your secretary.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, the hon. gentleman is attacking me for having brought a secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. What I am attacking is the outrageous expenditure.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me tell my hon. friend that my secretary worked during these six months probably harder than he does in the department every day. Does the hon. gentleman think that when we were over in London and Paris we were doing nothing; that we had no correspondence to attend to, no reports to prepare, no work to do? Take the negotiation of the French treaty. At every meeting we found four deputy ministers attending the French ministers and they had five secretaries besides. All we had was my colleague the Minister of Finance and myself and only two private secretaries, and the secretary of the Minister of Finance had to leave before the work was completed so that we had then only one secretary. And he had plenty to do preparing reports and documents. The French government had a complete staff of officers at work, whereas the Minister of Finance and myself were alone with our two private secretaries, and during part of the time only one secretary. My hon. friend does not understand why we had somebody to work for us. I repeat that the work of my secretary was most useful and necessary. He had to work day and night, and it is not fair to him to say that his services were not required. If we had not our secretaries with us, we would have been obliged to engage a number of persons to do their work. Was it not better to have that work done by Canadians, on whom we could rely for absolute secrecy ? I may tell the hon. gentleman that if I had to do the same thing over again I would bring my secretary again.

Mr. BENNETT. And the messenger, too?

Mr. BRODEUR. The messenger had plenty of work to do. We had work for him and if we had not had him we would have had to engage others. I may say that when the deputy minister received my letter he gave immediate instructions to the accountant, not to pay that amount, but the letter was received the 23rd of April and the amount had been paid the 12th of April. That is why it appears in a blue-book and the Auditor General's Report. That is the reason it appears in the Auditor General's Report. And I think it shows that the charges hon. gentlemen opposite have been trying to make against me, that the expenses of unofficial members of my party were paid by the country are absolutely unjust and unfair.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that the refund does not appear in this report if it was made immediately ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that when I came to Ottawa, I sent a cheque to the accountant, but the accountant came to me and told me that the amount of the cheque was too large ; I had included not only the expenses of those who were with me but also expenses of Mr. Venning and my private secretary. That was on December 9th. The matter has not yet been adjusted.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be adjusted ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has talked a good deal, but has diligently abstained from giving the information he promised to give. Notwithstanding all he says, we find charged against him the amount of $8,913.05, and there is nothing in what he has said to show how much has been refunded.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have said that I gave a cheque, but it was too much.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was $915.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister says that this refund of $915 is too much. But give him the benefit of the whole of it, and say that he has refunded $915, and we find that there still stands against him $8,000. for eighteen months. The minister made out a clear case to show the need of his secretary accompanying him whilst he was negotiating the treaty with France, but not for the time when he was in London, which was nearly half the time. He did not make out a case for taking the messenger at all. Whenever any criticism of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) is attempted, he tries to turn it so as to make it appear a personal attack upon himself or those about him. He says I have attacked his private secretary. Why, I do not know his private secretary from Adam. The minister says he is a good man, and I hope he is the very best of private secretaries. But we are not to be diverted from the main point, and that is that, even allowing for a refund of $915, the minister has spent $8,000 in eighteen months or less. That is absolutely and outrageously extravagant. I had almost gone further than that ; but, at least, it is a way of getting money that a minister should not take.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just said that the accounts were not adjusted, yet the hon. gentleman accuses me of extravagance. Why does he say I have spent $8,000 when he has my statement that the account has not yet been adjusted ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that it had all been adjusted except this $915 proposed refund which was too much.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. There is also a question of $2,000 that was advanced from the vote for the ice-breaking steamer. As I explained yesterday, I required money to travel—I have not the good fortune to be a wealthy man. I was going to England not only on account of the colonial conference, but also on the business of the ice-breaking steamer. Therefore, the advance was made out of the amount for that service. This account has not yet been adjusted. I have my account in the department for my expenses in connection with that service. Lately I have received the amount from the colonial conference vote.

Mr. FOSTER. But the question of adjustment does not touch the vital point. The minister received and spent $596. His secretary received and spent $1,400. The minister received $2,000 from a vote from which he had no authority of parliament to take it. He has not refunded a dollar of that money, and he still has it except what he has spent. He then received within a fraction of $4,000 and none of that money has been refunded. He attempted to make a refund of $915, but his secretary tells him it is too much. But, allowing him the benefit of the whole $915, we find that he has drawn over $8,000, not one dollar of which has been refunded to the Auditor General. Does he propose to take money in April, put it in his pocket and keep it until the succeeding April before he pays any of it back ? Is that the way he runs his account for expenses ? If so, it is no wonder that his officers do the same and that the Auditor General has the time of his life in getting in accounts for advances made. The minister's explanation has not explained any thing. There still remains the sum of $8,000 which he has succeeded in spending———

Mr. BRODEUR. I have told the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that I did not spend that sum of money.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the minister has it in his pocket. It is the country's money and not his, and it ought to have been put back in the treasury.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly. And, as I told the hon. gentleman, I will not follow his example and allow the expenses of unofficial persons accompanying me to be charged to the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. minister be a little plainer ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The system which existed when I became head of the department, and which was always followed, was that when ministers travelled on government steamers all expenses were paid by the department. I changed that.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) is the only virtuous minister in the lot. It is a wonderful thing he has done, truly. He went on a tour of inspection on the government steamer, and when he came back he asked for the bill for the tea and coffee and other things that had been used by himself and party, and paid that back. The country does not ask him to do that. I am willing to stand a comparison of travelling expenses with my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) or any minister of this government. The minister cannot get out of such extravagance as spending $8,000 in eighteen months by cavilling over what a minister of any former government may have done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This ought to be a very simple and plain matter. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has given a statement by which it appears that the travelling expenses of the minister and his secretary for eighteen months amount to a little over $8,000. At all events, in respect of the items mentioned there is an expenditure of $8,000 claimed, and it appears in the public accounts and has been paid out of the treasury. The minister says the actual amount is less. All the committee desires is to know what is the actual amount. The minister should be prepared with that information to-day ; before this item passes the minister should be in a position to give the committee the exact sum in respect to the item referred to by the member for North Toronto.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see they are charging me not only with my own expenses but with those of others, in order to be able to state later on that I have been extravagant. In this amount of $8,000 the hon. member for North Toronto did not include my own expenses only, but also the expenses of the persons who accompanied me.

Mr. FOSTER. By the minister's own statement here to-day he sent in a cheque of $900 to cover all that.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, this amount was not adjusted. The accountant refused to accept the cheque because he said it was more than I should reimburse, saying that it included an amount which had already been charged to another person. I have not got the exact amount which has been spent of this $2,000 which has been charged to me, I think it is $1,320. So there would be the difference between $1,320 and the $2,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. How many months since this payment was made ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The account came to me only a short time ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister is mistaken in saying that the member for North Toronto is charging him with these things, it is the Public Accounts that are charging these things against the minister, and he says in effect that the Auditor General does not present a fair statement of the expenses which have been alluded to. There is a very simple mode by which the matter can be put right. Let the minister give us a statement of the exact amount that should be regarded as his expenses during that period, and the committee having received that information, can make any comment upon it they see fit. But it is idle to debate matters in respect of which the minister is not in a position to give us information. He cannot tell us what his expenses were during that period. Let the item stand until he can tell us.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wants a detailed statement of my personal expenses, what he wants to know is the amount which is to be charged to the government on that account. Now it happens that at this particular time there is an amount of $2,000 which appears as being charged to me, and there is also an amount of $900 which appears as charged to me in the Auditor General's Report of last year. I have not got the exact figures, but I think it is $1,320 that has to be charged out of the vote of the $2,000. Consequently there would be $780 which will have to be reimbursed to the department.

Mr. BENNETT. For how long a time were the hon. gentleman's expenses paid by the British government when he was on this mission ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not mean that all the expenses were paid by the British government during the Colonial Conference, but some of them were paid, I suppose for about a month and a half.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the nature of these expenses paid by the British government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know exactly what the British government paid. They were represented in the account.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman and his party stayed at the Hotel Cecil, did they not ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Did the hon. gentleman pay his bill at the Hotel Cecil ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, accounts were presented to me by the Hotel Cecil which I paid.

Mr. BENNETT. Then the hon. gentleman had to defray out of the expenses mentioned, his hotel bill at the Hotel Cecil ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I say there were some accounts presented to me which I paid, I do not say I paid everything.

Mr. BENNETT. I have no doubt that if the hon. gentleman purchased a cigar he did not ask the British government to pay for that when he was heaping up an average of $15 or $20 per day of expenses. It is refreshing to hear the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of all the men in this House. I was in this House in 1892 when the hon. gentleman occupied a seat on the opposition back benches, and every little item of $1 or $2 was debated and the loudest and strongest voice in denunciation of those items was that of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But he has grown so high and so mighty since he has been elevated, that when he was Speaker he would not put his feet under a table unless it was covered with a $50 table cloth bought by the people of Canada. He would not touch a napkin unless it cost $2.50. These are high and mighty times for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. No wonder that his department is known as the most notoriously extravagant department of the government. Look at the way his ice-breakers are fitted out in the most extravagant manner. No wonder that the Auditor General called the attention of the people to the fact that when a boat is to be put on the Canadian waters a hundred dollars has to be paid for a single table. I am bound to say that before the hon. gentleman came into politics his knees never went under a $50 table, he never wiped his hands daintily with a $2.50 napkin.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one ungenerous thing of which the minister is guilty. Both last night and to-day he has represented the British government in the most niggardly light. He would not be generous and honest enough to say that the British government found them their apartments at the Cecil, paid all their living expenses and treated them with the most generous hospitality. But he cavilled, and twisted, and turned, and wriggled to make this parliament and the country believe that he paid a part of his bills, he would not say how much; the British government did pay some portion, but he would not say how much. If ever men were entertained in a princely way these gentlemen were entertained in a princely way while they were guests of the British government at the Intercolonial Conference. Everything was put at their disposal, palatial apartments, automobiles and everything of that kind, and because the minister happened to pay for a 15 cent cigar now and then for himself, he comes before the House and the country and gives the idea that while the British government may have paid some of their bills they did not go far in that direction. That is the impression the minister gave us.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. He ought to have been the first man, when the opportunity was given to him, to have stated to the committee in what a princely and generous way they were treated by the British government while they were there, and that all their necessities were looked after as if they had been princes and dukes of an empire.

Mr. BRODEUR. I never said what the British government have paid because I do not know what they paid. No accounts were presented to us; they settled them in whatever way they liked. I was asked as to whether I had some expenses in London and I said yes. I had some hotel expenses that I paid in London.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think we ought to come down now to the item under discussion. I have spent a great deal of time trying to find out where the money of the people is going to. In 1896 the government then in power ran the country and ran it better than it is being run to-day on less than half what it is costing now. I find, in making a comparison, some pointers which show where this money is going. This vote is for Dominion steamers and ice-breakers. In 1896 we had nine steamers—the 'Aberdeen,' the 'Alert,' the 'Druid,' 'Le Canadien,' the Lansdowne,' the 'Newfield,' the 'Quadra,' the 'Sir James Douglas' and the 'Stanley.' These boats for that year cost $150,000 including every expense in connection with them. The government at the present time have nine Dominion steamers— the 'Aberdeen,' the 'Champlain,' the 'Druid,' the 'Lady Laurier,' the 'Lansdowne,' the 'Minto,' the 'Montcalm,' the 'Quadra' and the 'Stanley' and the expenses for these nine steamers for nine months amount to $457,310. For the full twelve months add twenty-five per cent and you will get $610,080 as the amount which it has cost the country this last year to run these nine steamers, whereas the late government performed this same service for $150,000 showing that there has been an increase in the cost of $459,560. I want to know what has become of the money. I turn up the detailed account and I find that in 1896 the then government carried on the service performed by these steamers, the hydrographic survey and other works and they spent $505 for uniforms while this government spent, last year for uniforms,—and I will give a few details of this expenditure—$9,883.90, or for the full year $13,178.53, or an increase of $12,673.15. Now, we will just show what they are doing.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to give me the page for that?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give you the page for every item and I will give the pages for the corresponding expenditures in 1896. At page K—13 of the Auditor General's Report of 1896 it will be seen that the government purchased uniforms to the amount of $21.20 and at K—18 they expended $184.15, making a total of $505.35. This government purchased last year, for the 'Aberdeen,' as shown at page P—8, the following: From James Halliday, Halifax. officers uniforms, 11 at $25; blue jumpers and trousers, 30 at $7.50; white jumpers and trousers, 30 at $3; flannel shirts, 30 at $1.50; blue collars, 30 at 40 cents; case 50 cents, making a total of $647.50.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that by tender?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, not by tender. They divided the orders up among their political supporters. Then from M. R. Lane, Halifax they purchased officers caps, 11 at $1.50 and sailors' caps, 30 at $1.30, making $55.50. At page P—9 they purchased from W. & C. Silver, Halifax, overcoats, 5 at $28; reefers, 34 at $8.25; white coats, 1½ dozen at $12, and furlined coats, 2 at $50 making $538.50 or a total expenditure for uniforms, for officers and men on this steamer of $1,241.50.

For the steamer 'Champlain,' at page P—10, it will be seen that they paid, on account of uniforms, $595 and for the 'Druid,' page P—12, $536.20. For the 'Lady Laurier' page P—14, they bought of Thomas Brenton, Halifax, officers uniforms, 12 at $25; sailors blue suits, 31 at $7.50; white suits.

31 at $3; flannel shirts, 31 at $1.50; collars, 31 at 40 cents; case 50 cents, making $684.90. At page P—16 it will be seen that they went to W. & C. Silver, Halifax, and bought captain's uniform, $25; furlined coats, 2 at $50; overcoats, 3 at $28; reefers, 4 at $8.25, white coats, 1½ dozen at $12; making $557, or a total of $1,241.90 for the 'Lady Laurier.' Then, for the 'Lansdowne,' page P—17, there was an expenditure of $413.75, for the 'Minto,' page P—17, an expenditure of $138.50 and another of $140, and at page P—18 there was an expenditure of $125 and another one of $112.50. At page P—19 there is an expenditure of $322 and at page P—20 an expenditure of $142, making a total of $980. These expenditures were all divided up amongst certain political supporters some of whom furnished two suits, some three and some half a dozen. Then, we have the 'Montcalm' at page P—21. They bought uniforms, 10 at $25, 10 at $21; overcoat, $30; white coats, 12 at $1.50; blue trousers, 38 at $2.90: blue jumpers, 39 at $2.50; white duck suits, 39 at $2.50; white dickeys, 39 at $1. The idea of going and paying a dollar apiece for dickeys for the sailors! Thirty-nine dollars of the people's money thrown away for white dickeys for the sailors on this steamer 'Montcalm!'

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the ice-breaker?

Mr. TAYLOR. The ice-breaker. These sailors on the ice-breaker had to have white dickeys at a dollar apiece! We have the minister talking economy in the running of his department while allowing his officers to go and pay $39 for thirty-nine dickeys for the sailors on the 'Montcalm.' These purchases amount to a total of $1,131.35.

Mr. FOSTER. All for dickeys?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, for suits for the men, dickeys included. At page P—24 we find that they spent for uniforms on account of the 'Quadra' $342. At page P—26 on account of the 'Stanley' there is one item of $90, another of $145, another of $117.50, on page P—27 another of $117.75 and another of $141.30, making a total of $611.55. These expenditures are made on account of the Dominion steamers, a list of which I have read. But, they bought more than that. We have also the 'Lady Grey.' They supplied the officers on the 'Lady Grey' with uniforms, as shown at page P—28, to the amount of $885.95 and on the 'Arctic,' page P—25, they spent $86 only for uniforms this year, but dear knows they spent enough the year before. Here is another boat—the 'Maisonneuve'—shown at page P—51. The 'Maisonneuve' is the boat that lies down here in the river at Ottawa and which takes the minister down the river once or twice a year. One hundred and thirty-one dollars was spent for uniforms for the men who take the 'Maisonneuve' out once or twice in the year.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

Mr. TAYLOR. At page P—51.

Duhamel, J. C., Montreal, uniforms, officers 3 at $22; sailors', 2 at $10; overcoats, 3 at $12; caps, officers', 3 at $2; sailors', 2 at $1; freight, $1.70, $131.70.

Mr. FOSTER. You left out the castor oil.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am only dealing with uniforms now.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. A dickey is not a uniform.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, it is not, but I wonder at my hon. friend sitting there and laughing at the extravagant way this government are throwing the people's money out to their political supporters for something that the country has never demanded before.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I was only laughing at your calling a dickey a uniform.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is under that heading in the Auditor General's Report, uniforms for officers and men, 39 dickeys at $1 a piece for the men. At page P—60, maintenance of lights, we have uniforms $240.25 and at page P—74, maintenance of lights, P.E.I., $122.30. At page P—75 for the same service we have uniforms, $145.75. The Conservative governments maintained lights, but we did not buy uniforms for the lighthouse keepers or for the crew of the boat that supplied the lighthouses. At page P—98 we find $82.25 charged in the general accounts. On the hydrographic survey, P—108, $145.20 was paid for uniforms. At page P—111, $236.15. At page P—120 the ship channel is charged with $745 for this purpose, making a total for the year of $13,178 against $505 spent in our time for this purpose, an increase of $12,673. No wonder the expenditure has swollen as it has.

I promised my hon. friend that I would give him in detail the travelling expenses for 1896 as compared with those for 1906 for the minister and officers of the Marine Department. The travelling expenses for the nine months of last year in connection with the minister, his officers and staff in performing the work of the Marine Department, amounted to $45,998.11. Adding the percentage to make the 12 months we find that this comes to $61,330.81. We did the same work in 1895-6 for all the services except the ship channel for $9,769.53, including travelling expenses of the Hon. John Costigan, Mr. William Smith, the deputy and all the officials of the Marine Department. I have the items and pages for every expenditure in each case. There is in this item an increase of $51,661 over 1895-6.

I have given the increase on the nine Dominion steamers; it has cost this government practically half a million dollars more to maintain the same number of ships. I have taken the 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen,' two of our government steamers carrying no passengers. In the nine months the 'Aberdeen' purchased in groceries, simply to feed the men, goods to the value of $9,851. I do not know whether these boats run for the nine months continuously from June 30 to March 31, but I am assuming that they did and that they had a full staff there all the time. That then amounts to over $25 a man for the food of the 40 men on this vessel. I am sure there is not a man on the other side of the House who will say that he could not feed 40 men on a steamer, supplying them with a cook, steward and good service, for $2.50 a week, or $10 a month. Here is $15 a month of a rake-off on each man.

Mr. GALLIHER. What would you feed them on?

Mr. TAYLOR. With the very best provisions. There is not a steamer on the ocean that does not feed its men at $10 or at the outside $12 a month.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend has no experience.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I may say that I have had more experience than my hon. friend in that line, and I say without hesitation that no man can do what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend can make his speech afterwards. When I come to speak of the prices paid it is no wonder the expense is so heavy. The 'Lady Laurier' for the nine months cost for provisions to feed the men $9,315, an average of over $25 a month per man. No wonder our expenditure is running into the hundreds of millions when the administration is carried on this way.

At page P—7 you will find that the 'Aberdeen' bought 10 bushels of potatoes at $1.20 a bushel. At page P—9 the 'Aberdeen bought pots, pans and kettles for the galley costing $116.70; two barrels of apples at $7 a barrel, and they paid for sundry articles, kitchen utensils, $78.80, making $200 for kitchen utensils. To make it easy for the men they got eight cases of Radnor water at $8.35, as will be seen on P—9. To fit out the 'Lady Laurier' and make her comfortable for the sailors they went to a friend in Quebec and got four mahogany cabinet lavatories with desk attachments and tanks complete at $132 a piece, $528 (P—15). There were nine cases of Radnor water there again, and 14 pairs of chickens at $1.40 a pair. We must let some of our country friends know what the government are paying for chickens to feed the sailors. They bought a bag of flour, 50 pounds of brown flour, at 10 cents a pound, $5. To make it comfortable for the men and the officers, five large Morris chairs were bought at $18 each, $90. They also purchased 8 gallons of English body varnish at $7 a gallon, $56 (P—25). Any one knows that the best body varnish that can be obtained in this country can be laid down for about $3.65. We use any quantity of it every year in our business. I have here a price list from one of the largest varnish and japan manufacturers in England, William Schmidt, varnishes for coach builders and decorators, and their finest body varnish is sold at 12s. 6d. and in casks of 50 gallons 1s. per gallon off that price. That makes 11s. 6d. for their best varnish. Adding 12 cents a gallon freight and 50 cents duty we have it laid down here at $3.65. Yet this government pays a friend $7 a gallon for varnish.

To fit out the 'Lady Grey' nicely so that the crew would be perfectly comfortable they got brass cuspidors, two at $3.50, and two at $4; silver coffee pot, $9.40; coffee server, $8.50; entree dishes, two at $10 each, $20; a jardiniere at $8.50; a muffin dish at $9.10, a silver teapot at $8.20, a silver tray to serve the tea at $7.80, a syrup jug at $8, bread trays, three at $2.50, one at $5, two at $6.50, making $25.50; dinner plates, two dozen at $6; tea plates, two dozen at $5; soup plates, two dozen at $5. And so it goes on—sundry cutlery, $150.95; sundry dishes, $117.45. Then to make it handy for the cook to chop up the meat——

Mr. FOSTER. To make hash.

Mr. TAYLOR. They bought the end of a saw-log to use for a butcher's block and paid $18 for it.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of wood—mahogany ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know what kind, but you will find it in the Anditor General's Report at page P—29. Is there a man in this House who would pay $18 for a butcher's block ? Yet that is what this economical minister done, and his officers will certify the account. Charged to the same account, at page P—37, you will find a payment of $150 to the Toronto 'Daily Star' for a publication in the summer resort directory. They wanted to give the Toronto 'Star' something, and they had this charged to the Marine and Fisheries Department. Then, the department undertook to enrich some of the ministers and their friends by changing the system of lights from coal oil to acetylene gas. The minister came down here and promised this House and the country that that would enable him to dispense with the services of many lighthouse keepers, and the saving of their salaries would pay the increased cost ; yet, after having spent between six and eight million dollars, which had been paid to these firms of Brooks, Merwin, Willson and the Fog Signal Company, which was organized by a few friends of the government, we find by the Auditor General's Report, from page P—39 to page P—46, that the salaries of lighthouse keepers for the nine months of last year amounted to $197,235, and for the year to $262,980. The lighthouse keepers were kept on ; the same list is there that was there before. In 1896 the salaries of lighthouse keepers amounted to $199,348.61, and last year, instead of a decrease, they amounted to $63,632 more than in 1896. I want the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to get up and justify the promise of a reduction in this expenditure which he made in this House. The only lighthouse keepers he dismissed were three or four in the Thousand Islands. After making these changes so that the department might purchase acetylene gas for the lights and buoys, the minister made the statement that a late Minister of Public Works was a member of the firm that was furnishing acetylene gas to the government.

Mr. BENNETT. Everybody knew that.

Mr. TAYLOR. This thing was done for the purpose of getting these gas buoys and authorizing these new lights. The minister's engineer, Col. Anderson, never recommended the change, but the minister got a clerk in the office appointed as a Commissioner of Lights, and he recommended it. There is a report in his department from his officers, if he will produce it, condemning the acetylene gas buoys and opposing the change. But the government ran the country into millions of dollars of debt to make this change for the benefit of their friends, and after the change was made there was an increase in the expenditure for salaries of lighthouse keepers of $63,000 over the expenditure of 1896. Then, see how the expenditure for the maintenance of lights has grown. At pages P—47 to P—77 of the Auditor General's Report you will find that the expenditure for the nine months amounted to $499,512.72 ; for the year it will amount to $666,016.96. In 1896 the cost of the maintenance of lights was $225,691, showing an increase of $430,325.89, nearly half a million since 1896, and we had as few wrecks on the waters then as we are having now. It is easy to account for the millions of money which this government is squandering. To make things easy for one of their former ministers who is now Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, this government went to Sir Henry Joly de Lotbinière, as is shown at page P—60, and bought cedar spars, 5,026 feet at 19 cents, from him to make buoys for $954.94—nearly a thousand dollars for a few feet of cedar timber. Then they decided to construct a lighthouse at Seven Islands, and at page P—91 you will find that a gentleman who boarded some of the men and who purchased some supplies was paid 10 per cent commission, amounting to $20.71, for the supplies he purchased at high prices. Among the items purchased were two dozen of Bovril at $9 ; 120 pounds of red beans at 7 cents a pound, or $4.20 per bushel. Fearing that these beans would cause a pain in the stomachs of these gentlemen who were working at this lighthouse, they bought 2 dozen of painkiller at $3 and charged it to the construction and maintenance of lights. They then go to the depot at Prescott which is costing the country millions of money to keep a little army of men there to try to convert the county of Grenville from a Tory constituency to a Grit constituency. I read last night the address which these men sent to the minister and the compliments they paid to him for what the President of the Liberal Club had been doing there, when they presented him with a gold-headed cane. They presented him with a gold-headed cane, these poor officers, and to make it easy to sit down on a bench out there, the minister went to one of his supporters and got a cushion 25 inches by 84 inches made of leather and stuffed with hair for which they paid $42.

An hon. MEMBER. How much is it worth ?

Mr. TAYLOR. $18 or $20.

An hon. MEMBER. What kind of leather ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report does not say, but the very best leather, such as you put in buggy cushions. A cushion of that size would not cost more than $18 or $20.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the hair ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but when the people begin to think, when they feel the pinch of hard times, and see how their money is thrown away, hon. gentlemen opposite will laugh on the other side. On page 111, Hydrographic Survey, W. J. Stewart is down for a lot of travelling expenses and a suit case besides which cost $11. We not only clothe our officers but we buy suit cases for them to carry their clothes in. Then we come to the St. Lawrence ship channel, page P—120, and there we find R. Charlebois, Montreal, is paid for officers and sailor's suits and caps and collars, &c., $745.80. I wonder how many yards of dirt that would take out of the ship channel between Quebec and Montreal. $745.80 for clothes for the men working on that job. On page 121, I find charge for two cases of Radnor water at $9. Surely there is water enough in the ship channel without purchasing two cases of Radnor. These surely did not deepen the channel to any extent. On page P—122, I find a charge for a decorated soup tureen, $20. I do not believe that there is a member in this House has a $20 soup tureen decorated, of crockery or china, on his table. Yet for these men working in the ship channel, this economical minister goes to I. L. Lafleur and buys a $20 decorated soup tureen. They got two tea kettles at $8.64 each. They would not put down a charge of $8.50 or $8.65 but made it $8.64 so as to show how closely they had bargained. Is there a gentleman in this House who has a tea kettle which cost him $8.50, for boiling his hot water.

An hon. MEMBER. A copper tea kettle.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can get the best of copper tea kettles at $2.50 or $3 each. Why should they want these expensive tea kettles down there for deepening the ship channel? There are two brass beds at $25.50 each, which is not out of the way if they are good quality. Six white coats at $6.50 each. Those are, I presume, for the cooks on board these dredges and barges. On page P—124, there is a charge for three seamless cuspidores at $3.55 each, one tea kettle, $7.11. It would not do to charge $7.10; but in order to mislead the people by making a great pretense of economy and of cutting down prices to the smallest item, they make a charge of $7.11. Two tea pots with steel handles, $9.68. These were no doubt to deepen the ship channel. Two water pitchers at $5.92 each. They would not make them $5.90, but were careful to put in the two cents to show how closely they bargained. Then for these sailors on these dredges and barges deepening the channel, they purchased from the James Robertson Company, Limited, Montreal, Twyford cabinet folding lavatories complete, nine at $55, making $315 of the people's money thrown away. Also two white enamelled baths, one at $23.50 and one at $19.60—to deepen the ship channel. Then I find an item for fire extinguishers, and I think I read something in the report about some one having a rake-off on fire extinguishers. These are for the government steamers on the St. Lawrence as well as in the ship channel. I find under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, page P—19, P—23, P—36, P—57, P—100 and P—102, that $729 was paid P. Perrault, Quebec, for fire extinguishers.

Mr. FOSTER. Were those Lemieux's extinguishers ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I fancy they were the same thing. $729 of the people's money thrown away for something that was worth nothing. You might as well have a bottle of vinegar hung up in your closet as one of these fire extinguishers. On page 50 there are some remarkable lighthouse supplies charged. There is an expenditure charged there of $8,755 for these supplies. On page P—57 there is a charge for the same thing of $1,744, on page 68 a similar expenditure of $2,897, and on every page you find expenditures for the same purpose of smaller amounts. Then we come to the fellows who are getting a rake-off. On P—95 I find an expenditure with F. L. Brooks and Company, of Montreal, amounting to $56,679.50. I thought that after the investigation into the transactions of these men in the Public Accounts Committee last session, the government would have done with them. It was proved in that committee, both in the accounts of Merwin and Brooks, that somebody was getting a rake-off, through middle men who purchased for the government, The country lost thousands of dollars by this. We paid Brooks and Company $56,679.

Mr. FOSTER. Any tender?

Mr. TAYLOR. No. On page P—98, George T. Merwin got $50,641.50. Then we had a company organized here. I do not know who was in that company, I do not know whether any of the ministers was in it or not, but I am credibly informed that there is an ex-minister in it. I am referring to the International Marine Signal Co., Ltd., which was formerly Thomas L. Willson. This company was paid $238,-162 for automatic gas and bell buoys. Formerly, it was Thomas L. Willson; now it is a company organized here in Ottawa, and I am credibly informed that the ex-Minister of the Interior is a member of that firm. Altogether they purchased lighthouse supplies last year to the amount of $476,018, and a great share of the amount is purchased from Brooks and Merwin and this new Ottawa Company, formerly Willson.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does Strubbe come in?

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not bother with Strubbe. His account is not very heavy this year. I want the minister to expain in detail why these enormous increases have taken place in every branch of his department. Why has he furnished the sailors on these Dominion steamers clothing to the extent of $12,673 last year, when the clothing was furnished at $505 when we were in power? Why has an expenditure of $51,616 been incurred for travelling expenses by the minister and his officials, when that account in 1896 amounted to only $9,769? Why did nine Dominion steamers cost $610,000 last year, while the same number of steamers—not the same steamers, but the same number—cost only $150,519 in 1896?—an increase of $459,560. Then I want him to explain why it costs $25 per month per man to feed the sailors on the 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen'? And how does the minister justify himself, as an economic minister, in allowing his officers to make such expenditures as I have read—$8 for a butcher's block, $122 for a lavatory, and all these other expenditures for table cutlery and supplies? I have given the minister the page for every item, and I hope that when the committee resumes after six o'clock, he will give us the explanation.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

MONTREAL, OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. R. STEWART (Ottawa) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 47) respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would like some explanation of the nature of this Bill, if the promoter will kindly give it.

Mr. STEWART. The only explanation I have is that the Bill is to provide for an extension of time, and this is made necessary by the fact that no decision has been given by the department that had the matter in hand of examining the papers that were filed with the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. TAYLOR.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, $535,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the statement I made before the House rose at six o'clock, I referred to the acts of the predecessors of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). Of course, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) said, he has to assume responsibility for what was done by his predecessors. But, aside from that, we have a Prime Minister who is responsible, and will be held responsible by the country, for the manner in which the public business has been conducted by the predecessors of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That hon. gentleman fell into the tracks made by a very extravagant minister. He may have tried to curtail expenditure, and even succeeded in some instances. But, in some cases he has even exceeded his predecessor. I stated this afternoon that the minister had promised us that the change in the methods of the lighthouse service would result in a saving to the country. If he will refer to 'Hansard' of 1904, page 5325, he will find the following:—

Mr. BLAIN. The minister stated that when this new system was introduced there would be a great saving in maintenance of the lights. He said there would be a saving of $10,500 a year. Does he expect that saving to take place in the near future?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I stated that the saving for the present would be $1,610 a year.

Mr. BLAIN. I will read what the hon. gentleman said last year when he was giving to the Commons the reasons for changing the old system of lighting to the new system:—

The ten new ranges of gaslights will require no keepers, saving an annual charge of $3,000, and the proposed conversion of the lights from an oil to a gas basis will enable the keepers to be dispensed with as opportunity offers at a saving of $7,000 per year, or a total saving in cost of maintenance of $10,500 per year.

I stated also that the hon. minister gave comparisons, and if hon. members will turn to page 5301 of the same 'Hansard'—1904—they will find that statement:—

The following is a comparative statement of the cost of the lights under the old arrangement and the new:—

Under old system—
Maintenance 6 lights at $40 each..	$ 240
Keepers' salaries..	1,280
Under present system—
Maintenance 6 lights at $60 each..	$ 360
Salary of caretaker, Manly Cross..	550
Total..	$ 910
Saving in cost per annum..	610

The carbide purchased for these lights is purchased from the Ottawa Carbide Company at the wholesale price of $65 per ton. This is the price paid by the wholesale dealers in carbide, including the Canadian Pacific Railway, which uses a very much larger quantity than the government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the minister include in that comparative statement the cost of the steamer 'Scout,' that is scouting around the lakes with a large crew on board?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The steamer would have to be maintained all the same to look after the buoy service.

Mr. TAYLOR. The lights were there for many years and we had no steamer to look after them; nor did we have to maintain a factory and employ about 100 men up there at Prescott in connection with this carbide which is made here at Ottawa by a company in which some of the cabinet ministers are stockholders.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Well, what if they are?

Thereby proving that there were ministers who were partners in the carbide factory which was started here to manufacture carbide, and this factory was brought here purely for the purpose of buying the product of this carbide company of which ministers of the Crown were stockholders. There is the minister's own word for it, and I have given you the page in the 'Hansard' where it will be found. I also made another statement that we had spent already in changing this system about $6,000,000, but I was away below the mark because I put a question to the minister on the 3rd December, 1906, and it will be found at page 471 of 'Hansard.' It is as follows:—

1. What was the total expenditure in connection with the lighthouse and coast service for the years ending June 30, in each year, for 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896, and what was the amount expended in each year separately?

2. What was the amount expended for the same service for the years ending June 30, for 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906, and what was the amount expended in each year separately?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. 1891-2	$ 503,639 12
1892-3	503,011 66
1893-4	476,635 07
1894-5	475,903 72
1895-6	466,057 55

Now we come to the five years under the regime of this economical government. In 1901-2 it had jumped from $466,057.55 to $696,311.02. There had been no change brought about with reference to the new lights then but the cost had increased by over $200,000. In 1902-3 the cost was $964,143.74. It had just doubled that of the last year of the late government. In 1903-4 it was $1,275,016.87; in 1904-5 $2,507,307.03, and in 1905-6 $2,688,484.52, making a total of $8,131,263.18. For five years our expenditure was $2,425,247.12, and this statement means that there has been an increase of about $6,000,000 in the five years following. Two years have elapsed since then, and if we had the same proportion it would mean that $10,000,000 of the people's money has been over-expended for making this change in the lighthouse system. There are the minister's own figures and he cannot contradict them. I stated before six that I was pleased to see the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) enter the House. I asked him to be back, but I am sorry he is not present now. I see he is going out on the hustings in Stanstead in a few days and I want to ask that hon. gentleman to get on the platform and contradict any statement I have made in reference to the expenditure of this government to-day if he can do so. I am quite sure he will do it because he is prepared to uphold this government in anything that it does as I will prove before I sit down. But, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was present, and if there is a gentleman in the House for whom I have a particular respect it is the hon. Minister of Customs. He is my senior as to age by a few months and he is my senior as a member of this House by a few years. Therefore, it is on this account, not because he is a member of the government and is helping in the mal-administration of the affairs of the country, that I have a respect for him. I believe him to be a fairly honest man—outside of the influence of this government a perfectly honest man—but I will assure the House and the country that the minister who is leaving, I understand, to take part in the election in Huron will not get up and justify this expenditure by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He will not justify it because he has a conscience. He can call to recollection what took place in this House previous to 1892. He can remember one occasion when we sat here until two o'clock in the morning, when he and Sir William Mulock, the hon. Senator McMullen and a few others held this House until two o'clock discussing one item. What was it? to pay for the pay car 'Jamaica'—they called here at that time—which was used by the premier of this country when he went on a trip—an old dilapidated car—nothing like the luxurious cars that these gentlemen are riding about in to-day. I saw in the papers this morning that the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), the ambassador to Japan, passed through Winnipeg in his private car, but because we had an old dilapidated car handed over by the railway companies for the use of the premier of this country, and because he made his trips in it, we were held until two o'clock in the morning by these gentlemen. The offence which he had committed was riding in a private car and incurring a small expenditure for cab hire.

The poor old man had spent a few dollars, as the young Minister of Marine and Fisheries does to-day, for cab hire. The Minister of Customs walks. I looked through the Auditor General's Report and I did not find anything charged up by him for travelling expenses or for cab hire.

Mr. BENNETT. But he rides in a private car.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well he may. If some of the other ministers went he might go with them in a private car, but he would not take one on his own account. If after he became a minister he had entered a private car he would have asked himself: Why did I charge Sir John Macdonald with doing something improper in going around in a private car? He has walked ever since because he charged that grand old man with being guilty of an impropriety in travelling in a private car or in expending a small amount of money for cab hire. They kept that poor old man sitting here until two o'clock in the morning at which time he got up and gave them this answer: I am too old to walk, I am too poor to hire a horse and, therefore, as long as I am Prime Minister of this country, I will have to charge my cab hire up to the country. That was his answer, but it did not satisfy the then opposition of this House. To-day the Minister of Customs cannot put an account in the Auditor General's Report for cab hire after having been a party to accusing our late lamented premier with having done something wrong in having used a cab. Look through the accounts to-day and see the charges for cab hire. Every minister except the Minister of Customs appears as having incurred expenditure for cab hire. The Minister of Finance does not figure very largely.

Mr. FIELDING. He is too young.

Mr. TAYLOR. And Sir John Macdonald, when he made that statement, told the truth. He was too poor to buy a horse and when he died his estate proved it. All that he left was simply a little fund collected for him by his friends a few years before his death, and put in such shape that it would be available at his death. He did not have the millions that some of the ministers and ex-ministers have acquired since they came into power. He died poor and the other members of his government either died poor or if still living are not in affluent circumstances. Look at the estates which ministers and ex-ministers have rolled up into the millions. They came in poor men and they are walking around to-day with their millions. How was the money made? These parties were not satisfied then with attacking Sir John on his expenditure, but they made the country ring from one end to the other because some of the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway had made Lady Macdonald a present. Let me read from the 'Globe' of July 10, 1886. This was the mouth-organ of the then opposition—the Liberal party.

It has been rumoured for weeks that the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway presented to Lady Macdonald a diamond necklace and other ornaments of great value. The lowest price stated was £5,000 sterling or $25,000; some put the price as high as $50,000. It was also rumoured that the same gentlemen made a valuable settlement on Sir John Macdonald's daughter. In more than one instance it was stated that this was $250,000 in bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We said nothing of these rumours until they had become so general——

They had been talked over all the platforms in the country by these gentlemen——

—that it became a duty to make such a statement as would enable Sir John Macdonald to contradict them if they were not true or should they prove true would enable the public to understand more fully the character of the premier and the nature of the great transaction in which he has been engaged for some years. Sir John Macdonald's friends have frequently asserted that he has never abused his position to put money in his own purse,——

That was proved when he died; he died a poor man.

—that he disregards pecuniary advantages and that when he helps his supporters to defraud or plunder the public, he never takes any share of the booty for himself. He and his supporters may be a band of Corsairs, but he is, they say, a most generous and unselfish chief.

That is what the 'Globe' said of Sir John Macdonald and it was reiterated on every platform throughout the country and in this House as well. Sir Richard Cartright speaking in 1891 said——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman think that these remarks have any bearing on this item?

Mr. TAYLOR. I certainly do. I am showing the extravagance of this government and contrasting it with the expenditure of the late government.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman was coming back to the item.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am showing why this item should be reduced 50 per cent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item covers maintenance and repairs of government ice-breakers.

Mr. TAYLOR. Quite so. The hon. member for North Toronto was perhaps not wrong when in speaking of that $2,000, which was put down in the wrong account, he said he thought it ought to be put just where it is, for ice-breaking, because on that trip of the minister to England and France, he required to break a good deal of ice at night and a good deal more to put on his head in the morning to keep it cool. Sir Richard Cartwright quoting and approving from Mr. Blake, said:

Another case was the gift several years ago to the present First Minister by means of a settlement upon his family of the sum of about $80,000, which was subscribed for and presented to him or to his family while he was First Minister of Canada.

That is the fund his Conservative friends made up for him.

It was so subscribed and presented largely by actual and intending contractors, whose business it was to obtain favourable contracts from the government, and having obtained them, to get the largest prices for the least returns, and the most liberal allowances for extras that they could manage. It was subscribed largely also by public corporations, greatly indebted to the treasury, and dependent upon the executive for favourable settlement of their indebtedness, and favourable adjustments of their financial relations.

That statement was made by a then leading member of the opposition, now a member of this government, and I want him to apply the words there used—because that present was made by Lord Strathcona, Sir William Van Horne and Mr. Stephens—I want the minister to apply that to the Prime Minister of to-day who is responsible for the extravagant expenditure of money in each and every department of this government. Let him apply that statement that he made when in opposition, with the Premier of to-day sitting alongside of him. Lord Strathcona is one of the largest stockholders in the Hill system of railways. He is one of the largest stockholders in the Canadian Pacific Railway and besides that he is an employee of this government. And what did he do? He sent over an automobile costing thousands of dollars to the present Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. What will Sir Richard say to that?

Mr. BENNETT. He will say, give me one too.

Mr. TAYLOR. If there is one man in the country who is ready to justify any and every act of this government, no matter how glaring and how bad it may be, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is prepared to do it. This country is satisfied that one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated in this country was the expenditure in reference to the steamer 'Arctic.' We have expenditures for the 'Arctic' in the item under discussion. I read a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture a few days ago. He was endeavouring to rally the Reformers and make them believe that this was money well expended, because he knew that the statements made from this side of the House with reference to that great extravagance were having their effect in the country and he said:

Why should any Reformer be ashamed of anything in connection with that incident? We find that in the year 1904-5, the year in which great complaint was made as to the expenditures for the supplies for that steamer, $112,-050 had been expended, but I point out that in the year 1905-6 the expenditure for the supplies for that steamer was only $12,813 and in the year 1906-7 the expenses were only $11,588. And those of us who are as well informed as we ought to be, know of the splendid work the 'Arctic' and her officers have done for Canada since that investigation took place. We know that the 'Arctic' has gone to the northern seas, has taken possession for Britain and for Canada of islands that might otherwise have remained disputed territory; we know that the Union Jack was planted on islands over which it never waved before; we know that the Hudson bay has been marked without any uncertainty as a closed Canadian sea—a matter which will probably prevent very great friction between this country and the United States, and has secured for us undisputed rights in territory that will be of very great value.

Thus the Minister of Agriculture justified that expenditure. Has a Liberal paper in this country attempted to justify it? Let me read a statement made by one of them —and if there ever was a damning statement these statements by this organ in reference to that expenditure are damning statements. This is an editorial published in September, 1907:

Captain Bernier is back from the Arctic regions. He brings with him a cold in the head and a large number of interviews for the reporters. The real treasures he leaves behind in the frozen seas, properly ticketed so that there will be no mistakes about ownership.

For many years now Captain Bernier has cherished the desire of finding the north pole, but the north pole is obdurate, although the world agrees that if ever the pole were going to reveal itself it would be to the indomitable courage of Captain Bernier. Such was the perseverance of this noble man in high endeavour that, until his efforts were placed on a government footing, hardly a year passed that he did not take up a collection. Undaunted was he by wreck and hunger and darkness and horrid cold. He could not pick up a newspaper without reading disaster, but he looked these terrors gaily in the face, and, humming a merry song the while, passed the hat with undismayed zeal. This went on for years, and every year Captain Bernier brought out a new scheme for reaching the pole, enduring the hardships of the dreadful voyage in the most jocund spirit. Presently his explorations brought him to the House of Commons at Ottawa, and there the captain made a great hit as a vote discoverer. It was a sight for sore eyes to see the brave navigator seated in No. 16, his pipe in his hand, and a thrilling sea tale on his lips. To behold him there, surrounded by the dangers he was prepared to encounter—the Arctic silence, broken only by the seals gargling the long Arctic night, so long that a poker game once started has to last six months, the northern lights with their fierce blinding glare untempered by lamp shades—to behold him thus, girdled with perils, was, we repeat, a heroic spectacle. No. 16 melted to this bold spirit. The captain sailed clean through the ice of reserve which besets most governments and secured an appropriation. With the appropriation was bought and stocked the 'Arctic.' The 'Arctic' was brought across the Atlantic under her own steam, the captain handling her as if to the binnacle born, ably assisted by a crew of French journalists. The voyage was a great success. There were four meals a day, and the main brace was spliced every hour. It was felt that the captain had established his right to take his ship anywhere that a man may go on pemmican, paté-de-foie-gras, truffles, and certain other bare necessaries of life. The pole has not yielded to the captain. It still keeps its secret just as the end of the rainbow still hides its pot of gold.

The captain has not been able to put into effect his ingenious plan of sailing three hundred and fifty miles northwest of the pole, and then drifting back to it. He has never realized his dream of climbing the blamed thing, striking a fine attitude and waving a Union Jack from the top of the world. He has done none of these things, but the Arctic is, nevertheless the wonder of the northern seas. Captain Bernier may not have found the pole, but he can find an island with his eyes shut. Let it disguise itself how it will with wrappings of ice, there is no fooling Captain Bernier. He just scrapes the rind off with his knife, and there's the island underneath, and, sooner than you can say Jack Robinson, swifter than second base can put it on the runner, quicker even than Toronto University can tack an LL.D. on a distinguished visitor, Captain Bernier has the island down on the chart, latitude and longitude noted, and the British flag flying from the highest iceberg on that part of the map. Captain Bernier is the greatest island namer and claimer in the business. With its terrific speed—four knots an hour under forced draught—the 'Arctic' can overhaul any island that was ever made. When the 'Arctic' is seen in the offing, bearing down on an island, the island feels at once that it cannot get away from such a relentless pursuer as Captain Bernier, to say nothing of the fact that islands in those waters are generally weighted down with ice, which interferes even more than barnacles to prevent them showing an enemy a clean pair of heels.

Now, I ask my hon. friends who are prepared to justify that expenditure, as the Minister of Agriculture did, what they think of that article from the leading Grit organ of this country, the Toronto 'Star.' That is the only justification the 'Star' can find for the grossly extravagant expenditure on the 'Arctic'; and yet the Minister of Agriculture defends it. He is prepared to get up and defend anything, no matter how bad. I am sorry that the Minister of Customs was not in the House a little while ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON. We told him you threw him bouquets.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not throw him boquets; I never do. I said he had a conscience, and therefore when he went to South Huron he would not get up and justify the gross mismanagement and extravagant expenditure of this government. This government are the trustees of the people of this country. What company in this country would retain a president and board of directors who squandered their money as this government is squandering the money of the people of this country? I said that the Minister of Customs had kept this House sitting until two o'clock in the morning while he attacked Sir John Macdonald's expenditure for cab hire, and he has walked ever since because he has a conscience, and I said he would not go into South Huron and justify the squandering of the people's money by this government. But the Minister of Customs is overridden, or he likes office too well to get up and kick, though I think that some credit may be due to him for keeping down some extravagances. When the people find that these gentlemen to whom they have entrusted their money have squandered it as they have been doing, and have more than doubled the expenditure since 1896, when the affairs of this country were managed honestly by the late Conservative government, they will dismiss them from office.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Before the minister makes his reply, which I have no doubt he will, to the observations of my hon. friend from Leeds, I want to call attention to one or two subjects on which the hon. gentleman spoke. In the course of his remarks I think he did injustice to some very honourable tradesmen. Among a great variety of charges he referred to some bills that had been rendered to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for supplies of clothing and other articles at Halifax. I am somewhat familiar with what is done in that locality——

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I made no charge of extravagant prices for clothing. What I did complain of was the quantity of clothing bought by this government as compared with what had been bought previously.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. No doubt my hon. friend is familiar with the outfitting of ships, and I dare say he knows the construction of a ship from the taffrail blocks up to the catharpings. But I would remind my hon. friend that since he has been at sea—and I think he has been a good deal at sea this afternoon—great changes have taken place. In his days the crew could be fed on salt horse, hard tack and three water grog, and if they did not like that they would get the cat-o'-nine-tails for insubordination. But all that has been superseded. Now the scale of victualling is prescribed by the Board of Trade of England, and all ships must conform to that scale. If any ship does not, the crew can have the captain or owners arrested and fined. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the cost of meats and other supplies used by crews has very much risen.

Mr. TAYLOR. How about beans at seven cents a pound ?

Mr. WM. ROCHE. I do not know about that, but I know that the cost of supplies generally has greatly increased. My hon. friend, with his experience on raging canals and rivers must know that there is a certain scale recognized by ship owners as fit and proper for the victualling of vessels. Now, in the tramp steamers on the Atlantic, which are the lowest class of vessels, and are frequently found by the captain, the regular scale allowed by the owners to the captain for large crews is 60 cents per day per man, and they allow from $1.25 to $1.50 per day for vitualling the captain and officers. If the hon. gentleman would apply that scale to the government ships he would find that the charge actually made is not extravagant. It must be remembered also that a government ship cannot be run as cheaply as a merchant ship. A man aboard a government ship wishes to correspond, as much as possible, with one in the British navy. The government ships are supposed to be better found, the officers better paid, and all the details on a more costly and more efficient scale than in the ordinary merchant ship. I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) wished to be fair, but I think that in making the comparison between the cost of ships under the old regime—presumably under the control of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) —he should have allowed for necessary differences and should not merely have compared figures, and at once suggested the conclusion that there must now be extravagance or misappropriation. If a comparison is to be made, it ought to be under similar conditions, with a similar quality of ships and an equal scale of charges. It ought to be on the basis of the same cost for provisions, and of all similar details. Probably my hon. friend knows the ships on the lakes, but I do not think he knows the ships on the coast of the maritime provinces. Under the regime of my hon. friend from North Toronto, there was the old 'Lady Head,' a very small steamer, with old type of engines and a small crew. The best steamer they had was the old 'Newfield.' I believe she had been an old cargo boat, purchased in Sunderland or Newcastle, with engines of about 90 horse-power, and a small crew, very narrowly fitted up, and with everything on a small scale. Now, the government has modern double-screw ships, with modern, compound engines and requiring a large staff of engineers, and capable of going at a great rate of speed. One of the vessels, the 'Canada,' is a man of war, with a crew of 80—probably a larger number than the Marine and Fisheries Department had in all the government vessels under the old regime. She has to be fitted up like a man of war, her crew has to present a uniform appearance and have everything in first-class style. The 'Canada' has to compare with ships of the Royal Navy. She went to the West Indies, and, of course, as being the sole representative of the navy of the government of Canada, she was subject to minute inspection. Everything had to be new and in good style, otherwise it would have been discreditable to Canada. Now, can my hon. friend compare the ships of this class—modern, costly, highly efficient ships, able to do, and actually doing, a great amount of duty day and night on the coast of the maritime provinces—with vessels of the old type ? And could he expect these vessels to go to sea insufficiently provided where so much may result from any temporary lack of what is necessary for efficient service ? And can he make a fair comparison between ships of this kind and ships of the old regime ? He has made that comparison this afternoon, and it is upon this scale of figuring that all his charges of extravagance and his covert insinuations of misappropriation of funds are based. But where are the elements of fair comparison ? I would like my hon. friend to be specific. I do not think it is fair to those whose names have been mentioned to make general statements or general comparisons. Now, on the subject of clothing, for the seamen—would he like the seamen to go to sea without clothing ? Or would he like them to furnish their own clothing ? Or should not the government keep in mind its own reputation as that of a government of a growing nation and send its ships to sea properly fitted out so that the seamen may be given every opportunity to perform in the best possible manner the arduous duties expected of them ? I must say that one of the firms that supply this clothing is that of W. and C. Silver, of Halifax. This was an old and respectable firm when I was a boy, and it is a large and extensive house to-day. These men are merchants of reputation. They would not do anything dishonourable or charge any higher price than would be an adequate price for the articles supplied. The firm of W. and C. Silver, of Halifax, is the equal, for integrity and reputation, of any firm in Canada. They would do nothing disreputable nothing discreditable, nothing for which any man should blush. The hon. gentleman referred also to James Halliday, who is an extensive merchant tailor, and, if he is not so long established in Halifax as Messrs. Silver, he has been an alderman of the city of Halifax, and an alderman of the city of Halifax is equal to a member of the legislature of Ontario anyway. We know that the kind of clothing prescribed by the government is of the best possible character. It has to be selected cloth, well made, and finished in the best manner; for men in seafaring employment must have clothing of the very best kind, otherwise it may fail them at a critical time. The service performed by those who man the ships in our lighthouse service is very arduous. They have to go out, day and night, to visit the lights and perform the other work of the service. They have to be on deck day and night, exposed to snow storms, ice, gales of wind and other discomforts, and anything which the government can provide to make these ships more efficient is money well expended. The merchants, such as those to whom I have referred, would not present extravagant bills, and we may be sure that the articles supplied were of the best possible quality as prescribed by the government. When my hon. friend makes allusions such as he has made, he should be specific, and, if there is anything wrong in these bills, he should show where the wrong is, instead of making general charges of extravagance or misappropriation against respectable firms. I do not think my hon. friend is familiar with the coast of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, as he is with the waters of his own province. He evidently thinks that the buoys, lighthouses and other services of the government bear comparison with those which existed under the regime of my hon. friend from North Toronto. No such thing. The lights have altogether altered in character. They are ten times more expensive than they used to be.

They are lighted in a different way, they are more powerful, their machinery is more complicated, and all these details ought to enter into a comparison. Then again the buoys are much more numerous and expensive. They are often in danger of going adrift, and must be pursued by one of these ships and captured before they get into deep water, and either towed back again or put upon the decks of one of those vessels, services that cost immensely. The whole shore is now lighted up so that you can go from one end to the other without losing sight of one of these lights. The service is very much more complicated, very much more expensive, very much more arduous, very much more scientific and very much more efficient than ever before, and is equal to any service in any other part of the world. My hon. friend ought to have been better informed on these points when he made this elaborate comparison, he should have given us these details which would have shown that any numerical comparison cannot give us a just idea of the amount required to be expended by the present government to make the lighthouse service effective. And who would grudge to the officers of ships like that, working day and night in most exposed situations, and under a most severe climate, any little comfort they may have after they have stood upon the ship's deck all day and all night in order to do this very arduous and effective work?

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. gentleman where the 'Maisonneuve' performs her work?

Mr. WM. ROCHE. That is probably upon the lakes. But I can tell you the names of the vessels down on the coast of Nova Scotia: The 'Aberdeen,' the 'Lady Laurier,' the 'Canada,' and there is one on the coast of New Brunswick. These are all very efficient vessels. The 'Lady Laurier,' the 'Canada' and the 'Aberdeen' are fitted out in most modern style.

Mr. BOYCE. It is regrettable that the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Wm. Roche) is not always as charitable as he is to this government in regard to the defects and extravagances which have been pointed out by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor). His argument is that in recent years things have changed, and I fancy that we on this side of the House can agree with him in that respect, we agree that things have changed in the past years, and especially with regard to the administration of the Marine and Fisheries Department as well as other departments. But my hon. friend refers to the terrible perils to which the sailors are exposed, and says that the vessels should be thoroughly outfitted. He says that the vessels of to-day are much stauncher than they were years ago, and that therefore it must be more expensive to man them. I might, if I desired, animadvert upon the hon. gentleman's position in this House, and refer to the remarkable nautical skill he has exhibited in avoiding the political reefs and rocks whereon he might have been stranded. I have on one or two occasions referred to that subject before, and it is surprising to see that the hon. gentleman bobs up serenely again at this stage. This is the fourth time he has skillfully avoided, sighted, taken the soundings of and avoided all the political derelicts such as troublous election trials, election subpœnas and examinations for discovery, appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada, and so on. And here he sits session after session while there is piled up against him, as everybody knows, a record of probably the most damning evidence that was ever piled up against any gentleman in the election courts of this country. One might even speak of the hon. gentleman from Halifax himself as being a political derelict, but his concern for others who have to fight the perils of the deep—not the political deep that my hon. friend himself has so sucessfully navigated, but the real deep—it almost brings tears to one's eyes. What an outrage it is, exclaims the hon. gentleman in his eloquent style, to compel seamen on one of our government boats to go to sea without proper equipment. What an outrage it would be for the sailors on one of these steamers to go to sea without a dickey on, what an outrage if they were to go to sea without having proper table linen, proper table napkins at $2.50 each, proper table cloths at $30 each, proper silver, proper cut glass vessels to drink out of, and Radnor water to be served up with their whisky! That sort of thing would be a great outrage, which would justly be resented by the very generous Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Now in dealing with the question, for instance, of finding the men, the hon. member for Leeds has drawn attention to the fact that it costs to-day $25 per man per month to find these men; whereas under the old government it cost infinitely less,, something like $10 or $12 per man per month. Can the hon. gentleman explain the discrepancy except upon the plea the member for Halifax makes, namely, that without mahogany tables, without Radnor water and Laurier cigars——

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Does my hon. friend mean to say that I mentioned any of these things?

Mr. BOYCE. What things?

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Such as Radnor water?

Mr. BOYCE. No, he did not.

Mr. WM. ROCHE. Then why intimate that I did mention them?

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Chairman, Radnor water, Laurier cigars, and dickeys tied on with strings are some of the things that the hon. member for Halifax left unsaid. I was hoping that possibly we might have some enlightenment from a gentleman of such great experience upon these subjects, but unfortunately the House is left in ignorance. What I was referring to was this, that verily times have changed, and there is now a different measure according to which the wants of our seagoing men are provided for. I wonder whether my hon. friend from Halifax knows the firm of Peter Judge & Son of his city. That firm was paid by this company $1,300.20 for supplying the 'Aberdeen' with water.

An hon. MEMBER. With what?

Mr. BOYCE. With water. They call it water.

Mr. BENNETT. They were launching her.

Mr. BOYCE. Evidently. Anyhow it cost $1,300.20 to supply her with water.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it was not Radnor water either.

Mr. BOYCE. No, the Radnor water is extra. It cost this country the same amount the previous year, and evidently this firm is an annual pensioner of the government to the extent of $1,300.20 for supplying water. Then again we have our old friend Merwin cropping up on the steamer 'Aberdeen,' and he figures in the Underfeed Stoker Company to the extent of $4,360.25. I need not go further into details because my hon. friend from Leeds has given details of various items of gross extravagance.

Mr. TAYLOR. Only a few of them.

Mr. BOYCE. And those he gave are only a few samples, but when an hon. member gets up, as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) has done, and disposes of these charges in a general way——

Mr. TAYLOR. He knows he is not coming back again.

Mr. BOYCE. Why, he knows he has no right to be here. That hon. gentleman has tried to throw dust in the eyes of the people and prevent their seeing one of the worst features of the administration of this government in these general expenditures. I had no intention of being personally offensive when I said that the hon. member for Halifax should not be here; and possibly if he were to give the matter the consideration it deserves and which it has deserved these long years, he would possibly not come back any more, but would really take the suggestion which the court has made and resign his seat. As I was pointing out, this extravagance by the departments, especially the Department of Marine and Fisheries, has got to be explained, and such explanations as the general one given by the hon. member for Halifax will not do at all. There has to be some explanation why this tremendous expenditure, in excess of what formerly used to be expended, is fastened on the country; and that explanation will have to be something more definite than the general one given by the hon. member for Halifax as to the difference in cost of clothing and ships, husbandry and so on.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Before this committee rises, I think I am entitled to make an explanation, in view of the attack just made upon me, and it is this. I do not know why my hon friend (Mr. Boyce) takes it upon himself to rise, after I made some observations of a very proper character, and make a personal attack upon me.

Mr. BOYCE. It was not personal.

Mr. ROCHE. Why should he rise and say that I have no business here and that I am charged with crimes of the most heinous character? Why should this gentleman, who has not a particle of knowledge on the subject, make charges of that kind?

Mr. BOYCE. When the hon. gentleman says that I have not a particle of knowledge of the matter, possibly he will reconsider his statement in view of the fact that I have read the evidence given in court. If that does not give me some knowledge of the case, of course I have none.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I believe that the gentleman is a legal gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Why should he take advantage of statements made by one or two witnesses, which could be refuted, when there was no opportunity given on the trial to disprove that evidence. Why should he take advantage of this to charge me with being guilty of the greatest crimes ? I have been twenty years in the legislature ; I have served twice in this parliament ; and I have never insulted any one personally. I came here with a majority of 600 of good electors.

An hon. MEMBER. Noble six hundred.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I received 7,000 votes of the city and county of Halifax, the largest constituency in Canada I have been elected five times to represent that constituency and can be elected five times more if I come forward. I am not afraid of the courts. I have been in the courts. I summoned eighty-five witnesses of the opposite party into court and I went there myself ready for the trial. My lawyers were there and they, the Tories, allowed the case to come up here on the appeal. I had eighty-five witnesses who would have proved conclusively that the opposite party were guilty of all the misdemeanours which they charged against me, and I have in my desk a statement made by the man on whom the opposite party relies, that he was besought by the lawyers and by the Conservative party and promised a situation if he would convict me and turn me out of parliament. I am not afraid of the courts. I have been in them all my life——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. W. ROCHE. And when I require an attorney to defend me, I shall not call upon my hon. friend opposite. But I am more afraid of him than I am of the courts or anybody else, because when he rises to expound some knotty legal problem and bobs his head, I am afraid his head will come off his body and come over here and assault me. I would give my hon. friend this bit of advice. He has crossed the Atlantic—it may be at the expense of some charity or I do not know how—but he should not come into the Dominion and insult people who are much better than himself or than he ever will be.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. W. ROCHE. He has no right to rise and make a personal attack on me when I have said nothing against him. I have made no ungentlemanly attacks on any hon. gentleman opposite. I merely referred to their statements and put the best construction upon them I could. If these gentlemen opposite put up a person like my hon. friend to attack me, I will reply to him, and I have material at hand which will bring shame on any one who makes use of such statements as he has made against me. I have a reputation to maintain and intend to maintain it; but I may say for the satisfaction of the House that what the gentleman has said to-night is entirely deceptive—I shall not call it false—he does not know it is false ; but I have material in my desk, and at the proper time will produce it, and I beg of him not to make insinuations or personal attacks on me. If he cannot answer my arguments, he should not make personal attacks, or if he does I shall reply in a manner that will make him regret he ever entered into this contest.

Mr. BOYCE. Pardon me, that I should attempt in any way to say anything of the hon. gentleman or to the hon. gentleman in the nature of an insult, but when one has upon the records of this House, as we have in reference to himself, the records of a case which commenced on December 13, 1904, in the shape of an election petition charging corrupt practices, many of which, as I see by the evidence, which I have carefully purused——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This question is altogether irrelevant. I allowed personal explanations, but the hon. gentleman will understand that we cannot discuss the Halifax election case under this item. Any personal explanation is permissible. I want to be fair to both sides, but the hon. gentleman will understand that this discussion should not continue.

Mr. BOYCE. I bow in deference to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I am simply making a personal explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If you have any personal explanation to make it is permissible, but otherwise you cannot discuss that election case now.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) has been threatened.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. W. Roche) has threatened that under certain conditions he will bring his fulminations against me. I want to see him do so. I can only remind the committee that the hon. gentleman brought the remarks I had to make upon this occasion upon himself by the attitude he took not very long ago when the appointment of a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia was under consideration——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BOYCE. One moment please—and when he said speaking of litigation in Nova Scotia, that he thought that litigation was too easily and too speedily settled. That was the remark which occurred to me when the hon. gentleman was speaking here tonight and making suggestions and explanations.

Mr. W. ROCHE. Will my hon. friend permit me? I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I think my hon. friend has a mental habit of quoting people as saying things which they never said. I deny his statement distinctly and I will tell you what I did say. I said that there were many people who thought that with respect to litigation; I did not say that I did.

Mr. BOYCE. I think my hon. friend's statement is correct.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Did I understand the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) correctly to say that meats were dearer now than they were during the time of the late Conservative government?

Mr. W. ROCHE. Yes, I think they are.

Mr. W. JACKSON. I understood him to make that statement.

Mr. W. ROCHE. I think they are.

Mr. W. JACKSON. The hon. gentleman accused my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) of being at sea when he was talking about ships. I can apply that same criticism to the hon. member for Halifax. I claim that while he may know something about ships, when it comes to beef and all classes of meats he is absolutely incorrect. As a matter of fact I have here the market reports from the largest meat centre in Canada for 1895 and I find export beef cattle quoted at 5½ cents a pound. During 1907-8 the quotations from the same market show that the price of beef did not exceed 5 cents a pound. We who have been in that business as long as the hon. member for Halifax has been in the shipping business are in a better position to know whether his statement is right or not. I say that meats of all kind are cheaper to-day than they were under the Conservative government.

Mr. W. ROCHE. No.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Yes, from one to two cents a pound cheaper. Compare five years under this government with the last five years of the Conservative government. Is sugar dearer to-day? Is not that one of the things that are greatly used? Is it not a fact that teas and coffees are cheaper to-day than they were ten or twelve years ago? I would not have arisen, Mr. Chairman, to-night had not the hon. member for Halifax undertaken to quote the prices of meat stuffs in Canada. I say that his statements are not borne out by the facts. I have quoted to-night from the Toronto 'Globe,' and if he had looked up the market reports, as I have done, and followed them, as it has been my business during the last 25 years, he would have found that the statements that he has made are not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am very glad to have been given an opportunity to explain the vote that I am asking the House to grant. I am asking this year for $535,000 for the maintenance of and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers. As compared with the vote of last year there is a decrease of $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister is speaking of the total vote of last year?

Mr. BRODEUR. The corresponding vote of last year.

Mr. FOSTER. This is only the main estimate for this year.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there no supplementary estimates?

Mr. BRODEUR. No supplementary estimates because I am making provision in this vote for everything to be expended on the government steamers and I am sure there will be no supplementary estimates in connection with them unless some accident, which is not provided for, should happen. I had thought, before the criticism was made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), that I would have been given an opportunity of explaining the nature of this vote. My hon. friend has thought fit to criticise not only the expenditures in connection with this vote, but also in connection with some other votes in the department. I am very willing that we should confine ourselves as far as possible to the items under discussion, because it would be fairer, and if we want to make comparisons we will be in a much better position to judge as to these comparisons. The boats which are included in this vote are the following: 'Minto,' 'Stanley,' 'Champlain,' 'Montcalm,' 'Druid,' 'Quadra,' 'Lady Laurier,' 'Aberdeen' and 'Lansdowne,' making nine ships. My hon. friend, in the course of his remarks, stated that there were in the Auditor General's Report for 1895-6 the accounts for nine ships—the same number of ships—and he tried to make a comparison between the ships of 1895-6 and the ships which are included in this vote. Instead of confining his comparison purely and simply to those nine ships in 1895-6 and those in 1907-8, or 1908-9, in order to criticise the government or to make a comparison he took some expenditures in connection with uniforms, and he took some other expenditures made on other boats. I would ask whether this is a fair way of discussing a question like this, whether it is just and fair to try and make a comparison between the nine boats of 1895-6 and not only the nine boats of 1908-9, but the 32 boats of 1908-9. I am simply asking him this and I am sure that he will realize that the comparison which he has tried to make is not at all a fair one. What were the boats in 1895-6? There were amongst others the 'Alert.'

The sum of $4.25 is given as having been spent during the whole year on that boat. Does my hon. friend want the House to believe that this boat was run on an expenditure of $4.25 ? Does he claim that this boat could be run for this sum ? Evidently not. My hon. friend thought that he was making a big case against the department in stating that there were nine boats then and nine boats to-day and this difference in expenditure. On the 'Druid' the expenditure for that year is given at $251.78. My hon. friend will not pretend that a boat can be run for that sum. There was the 'Sir James Douglas,' a little boat on which the expenditure is given as $115.93. He will not pretend again that this boat could be run for that amount. Thus you see that the comparisons which my hon. friend has tried to make between the nine boats of 1895 and those of to-day are absolutely incorrect. I go further and make this statement—and I defy any contradiction on the part of my hon. friend—that in two of our steamers, the 'Montcalm' and the 'Lady Laurier,' there is more tonnage than in the nine boats mentioned by my hon. friend. In making such a comparison my hon. friend should consider the tonnage of the vessels. He must know that a vessel with large tonnage costs very much more than one with small tonnage. He knows that a boat with 2,000 or 3,000 horse-power consumes much more coal and costs more to run than a smaller boat.

Mr. TAYLOR. What boat of the government has 3,000 horse-power ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Montcalm,' she has 3,400 horse-power, to be very accurate.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is an ice-breaker.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is all the same, it is one of those included in the expenditure. It consumes more coal. Six engineers are required to run this boat. My hon. friend should have taken these facts into consideration and should not have tried to make a comparison between the large and important steamers we have to-day, which are now required for the service of the country, with the small steamers in use in 1895-6. The country has progressed since. We have been obliged to make some further expenditures. Will my hon. friend believe me when I say that the insurance rates—and this is a very important factor—have been reduced by 50 per cent owing to the improvements that we have made in the lighting of the channel, the service of these boats and the improvements in our water route system ?

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister say that insurance rates on the upper lakes have been reduced 50 per cent within ten years ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am speaking of the St. Lawrence route and the Atlantic ocean in which these boats are working. I can produce the exact figures later. We have improved our water system, we have given better lighting, we are establishing fog alarm stations and have been placing buoys. The St. Lawrence is now navigable from Montreal to Belle Isle even during the night. Formerly this was not possible as it was not properly lighted. This improvement alone has saved one-half of the delay that formerly occurred, a delay which is particularly important as the route is open for only a portion of the year. We have adopted a policy of progress, a policy of improving our route.

Perhaps in the case of some small items there may be expenditures which are not absolutely justified ; there may be small items over which the minister, for example, has absolutely no control ; these things are in the hands of officers who certify to them and it may be that in some instances, such as those cited by my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), teapots, for example, a dollar or two dollars too much may be spent. But even on this question of teapots, since it has come up in the discussion of this important vote, my hon. friend has in his speech spoken as if the seamen were called on to use silver teapots, &c. My hon. friend knows very well that on these boats we sometimes receive very important people.

Mr. TAYLOR. Charge it all up to the Governor General.

Mr. BRODEUR. I hope one of these days to have my hon. friend down there and I suppose he would not object to being served with a cup of tea from a teapot that was absolutely good ? It is often economy to get good things; in fact we might lose money by buying goods of inferior quality. I am strongly of opinion that the best way to equip a boat is to put in first-class articles. It is often a saving, because if you put in inferior articles, they will last only a few years, and there is a loss to the country. This is one of the reasons why we supply our boats with articles of first-class quality. As to the prices which have been mentioned, I am not now in a position to state whether the prices of the teapots were too high or too low, but I will investigate the matter and I invite my hon. friend to investigate the matter before the Public Accounts Committee, and if it is found that some officers of the department have been derelict in their duty in connection with these matters, they will have to suffer. My hon. friend knows my generosity with regard to the officers of the department. Most of them were appointed by the old government and of course I had confidence that the old government appointed men who were good officers. If some of them are not good officers, I am as anxious as my hon. friend to discover that and I invite him to make an inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee. If it is shown that officers have been derelict in their duty in certifying to accounts in a proper way I will make it my business to have them properly punished. My hon. friend has been making comparisons between the expenditures on some boats in 1895 and on some boats in 1907. Now, it happens that we have one boat, the 'Lansdowne,' which was in existence in 1895-6. In that year the expenditure for maintenance of that boat was $26,546.94, as shown by the Auditor General's Report of 1896, at page K—6, whereas the expenditure last year for the same boat, with the same tonnage and the same crew, was $22,277.40, or over $4,000 less than was spent by the economical government to which the hon. gentleman referred a few minutes ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the hon. gentleman giving the expenditure for nine months or for a full year?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am giving the expenditure of last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was only for nine months.

Mr. BRODEUR. The season is always the same.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, no, it was only to the 31st of March; but my hon. friend heard me give the expenditure to the 30th of June last year.

Mr. BRODEUR. Now, these things happened ten or twelve years ago, when living expenses were very much less than they are to-day, and when we had to pay less for the crew than we pay to-day. Taking these facts into consideration, I ask my hon. friend, who is a fair-minded man, if he will repeat the comparison which he made in regard to the nine boats mentioned in the Auditor General's Report of 1895-96?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will answer the hon. gentleman. I made the statement that in 1896 the government owned nine boats; I gave the names of the boats and the total expenditure for the full year. Then I gave the names of nine boats which the hon. gentleman is controlling, and the expenditure on them for nine months. And now the hon. gentleman is trying to make out that I made an unfair comparison.

Mr. BRODEUR. Now take the question of food. My hon. friend has been finding fault with the department because we have paid in some instances seventy-five cents a day for food for the men. He does not seem to have much respect or consideration for the poor sailors.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the hon. minister to be fair.

Mr. BRODEUR. I hope my hon. friend will allow me to make my statement, as I allowed him to make his statement without interrupting him. If he had waited until I had made my explanation, he would not have made the statements he has made. I ask the hon. gentleman, is it fair to try to diminish the consideration which is due to the poor sailors who are working on these boats? Is it because these men are poor working men that they should not have any consideration from members of this House? Is it because they have not the good fortune of being wealthy that they should be dealt with as they have been in the remarks of the hon. gentleman, who accused the government of being extravagant because it was treating these men fairly and paying seventy-five cents a day to feed them?

Mr. TAYLOR. I never said a word of the kind, and the minister knows it. I never said a word about the sailors' wages or anything of the kind.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then my hon. friend agrees that it is not too much that we pay for the sailors. My hon. friend must have some respect and consideration for these poor men.

Mr. TAYLOR. So I have.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that my hon. friend has shown that he has. He does not wish to see them properly fed. But we are going to feed them all right, and we are going to give them good wages, in spite of the criticism of my hon. friend. He spoke of elections. I am speaking of elections now—I do not know whether he made his speech for Stanstead or for South Huron, and that is why he did not wait for my explanation. But he will not go into some constituencies where there are sailors and repeat the statements he made here about sailors.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the hon. gentleman to name the place and I will go at any time he likes.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend found fault also with the cost of the dickeys. Does he know exactly what a dickey is? I am afraid he does not. I may give him the definition: it is the correct term for the white flannel front that is part of the uniform of a sailor. He does not want those sailors to be fed or properly clothed, but the government is going to properly feed and clothe them; and whether we be charged by my hon. friend with extravagance or not, we shall do our duty to these men.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. minister in what way he disposes of the condemned stores of the various vessels. I believe that the practice of the Royal Navy is to have them condemned by a board and then sold at auction, but I understand that the mode followed in the Marine Department is to allow the masters of the government steamers to condemn them on their own motion and then sell them to any one to whom they are instructed to go. I understand they are not sold at public auction at all and are not condemned by a regular board. I am not making any charge of irregularities in the system, but I say that it is a system which is provocative of irregularity and which might much better be changed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am told by the officers of my department that the stores are sold by auction, after they are condemned on the authority of the master of the vessel.

Mr. DANIEL. I may tell the hon. minister that they are not so disposed of in the port of St. John.

Mr. BRODEUR. On the 'Lansdowne.'

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, or any other vessel that may happen to be there. So I have been informed by those interested in that business and who ought to know.

Mr. BRODEUR. The instructions of the department are that these condemned stores should be sold by auction, but in view of the statement by my hon. friend I shall have inquiry made and find out whether these instructions have been in any case disregarded.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to the steamer 'Lansdowne,' she is an old wooden boat, too small to do the business for which she is used at present. That is not the expression of my own opinion but the opinion of those who are experienced in these matters and it is also the opinion of the commissioner of lights. In the minister's report he will find this statement:

In the New Brunswick agency, the 'Lansdowne' has not sufficient power and is too small for the amount of work to be carried out, and it is necessary that some steps should be taken by the department to provide a new steamer for this work. If this is done, it will be possible to sell the 'Lansdowne' out of the service.

The work which the 'Lansdowne' has to do is very important. The Bay of Fundy is becoming more and more a highway for an increasing number of steamers and vessels, and in the winter time we are subject of course to bad weather and heavy seas. I would like therefore to have the minister say what he proposes to do and whether he intends to replace the 'Lansdowne' by a larger and more suitable boat, and if so, when?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am very glad to find that the hon. gentleman is discussing this important question in so practical a manner. He has been following the discussion which has taken place since five o'clock this afternoon and must be aware that I was charged with all sorts of extravagance in connection with these boats. I am glad therefore to find that he has taken a more sensible view of the situation as regards the 'Lansdowne.' Time and again the agent at St. John has reported that this boat is not large enough for the work and has been urging on the department to the construction of a new one. This matter is engaging the most serious attention of the department.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask one more question and that is with regard to the 'Lurcher' lightship. I believe that a relief lightship was promised down there. Is that relief light up ready to go out to service?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was intended to send the 'Anticosti' there for the winter to take the place of the 'Lurcher.' But that was found impossible because some repairs had to be made to the 'Anticosti.' We have been making in the harbour and bay of Anticosti very important improvements lately in order to ensure the safety of navigation. We are doing our best for that habrour, but it will not be possible to send the 'Anticosti' there for the reason I have given.

Mr. DANIEL. When will the relief lightship be ready to sail? I understand that the present 'Lurcher' lightship has had to be taken off once or twice lately.

Mr. BRODEUR. Only because she broke her anchor. In a few days that will be made right.

Mr. BENNETT. On page P—49 I find this item:

MacKay, R. O. and A. B., charter of steamer 'Golspie' for 1906, $7,500.

What is this for? What is the nature of the duties which the 'Golspie' performs? and what arrangement was made?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Golspie' was a supply boat for the great lakes. We have no supply boat there. We have a vote for the construction of a boat there, which is absolutely needed, and in the meantime we have to charter a boat to go on the great lakes and supply all the light stations.

Mr. BENNETT. How long was she employed and how was the arrangement made? Were tenders called for?

Mr. BRODEUR. My deputy tells me that he is under the impression that tenders were called for, and that the 'Golspie' was the only tender we got.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the size of the boat and how long was she employed? Does the minister say she was employed for the whole season of navigation?

Mr. BRODEUR. For the delivery of supplies on the great lakes.

Mr. BENNETT. How long was that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it would take two or three months.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely somebody alongside the minister can tell, within a month, how long the vessel was employed.

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy minister informs me that it was about two months.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, that is not three months.

Mr. BRODEUR. About two months and a half.

Mr. BENNETT. Now we have it two months and a half. Is the minister aware that these lighthouse supply boats usually carry passengers ? They do not carry passengers around the lakes for two months and a half.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the first I have heard of their carrying passengers, and I should be surprised to learn that during the time she was employed for us she carried passengers unless some special agreement were made to that effect.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not say that the 'Golspie' carried passengers. I say it is the usual thing for these lighthouse supply vessels to advertise to take passengers for the trip. But people are not making a trip of two and a half months on the lakes. Now, let us have another guess. We had it three months, then two months, then two and a half months. What was it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy minister informs me that it was two and a half months.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister will tell me the size of the vessel, we should have some idea of the value of the services paid for.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will get the information in a few minutes.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). After all the minister has said, we have not the information to which the committee is entitled. It seems to me the first question is what these boats are doing, and, so far as I know, these facts have not been given. Another point is this : the minister says he is going to decrease this vote by $50,000, but he does not tell us in what way he is going to retrench. Is this retrenchment a mere matter of guess work ? Is he going to retrench on the price of teapots and these other articles mentioned here ? I would like to ask also if the seamen on all these vessels are furnished with clothing. I find in the Auditor General's Report large expenditures for outfits and uniforms for the men on the 'Montcalm.' These have already been referred to. But when I come to the 'Stanley,' the Prince Edward Island winter boat, I see only two uniforms charged. The minister tells us that he wants these men to be well clothed, but what is the explanation of the apparent difference in treatment of the employees on the 'Stanley' and those on the 'Montcalm?' I see also that the supplies for these vessels are not on the same basis. The 'Montcalm' is supplied as if for sailor gentlemen, while the 'Stanley' is supplied as if for sailors. I wish the minister would explain these matters, and how he expects to retrench to the extent of $50,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman wants to know where the vessels are to be employed. The 'Minto' and 'Stanley' are engaged in the winter ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The 'Champlain' is used for ice-breaking service between Riviere Ouelle and Murray Bay. The 'Montcalm' is used for breaking the ice in the St. Lawrence. In the spring and fall she accompanies the sea-going vessels down the St. Lawrence to make sure that they do not take any route that may be detrimental to them. The 'Druid' is in the lighthouse service in the Quebec district down to the strait of Belle Isle. The 'Quadra' is in the lighthouse service in British Columbia. The 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen' are engaged in the lighthouse and buoy service at Halifax, and the 'Lansdowne' is in a similar service at St. John.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not quite understand the summer service of the 'Montcalm.'

Mr. BRODEUR. She is generally in the lighthouse and buoy service in the St. Lawrence, down to the strait of Belle Isle. In the spring she goes down into the Gulf, learns where the icebergs are and notifies vessels, by Marconi messages, what course to take to avoid them.

Mr. FOSTER. And do the vessels rely on her ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They rely upon the 'Montcalm' because she is an ice-breaker and can pass through the channel more easily than the other boats. She clears the way for the other boats.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). What is the difference in horse power between the 'Montcalm' and the 'Minto ?'

Mr. BRODEUR. 3,400; the 'Minto,' I think is 2,300.

Mr. A. MARTIN. How does the minister explain the fact that the expenditure of running the 'Montcalm' is $85,000, and the 'Minto' the small sum of $45,000 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Montcalm' is an ice-breaker of 1,433 tons, and requires a much larger number of seamen and engineers and uses more coal than the other boat.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is the same allowance of clothing, man for man, allowed to the 'Stanley' and the 'Montcalm'?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. The price to be paid for the clothing of the officers is $25 each. I do not think that is a high price.

Mr. BERGERON. How many men on the 'Stanley' and the 'Montcalm'?

Mr. BRODEUR. Thirty-four on the 'Stanley,' and fifty-nine, exclusive of officers, on the 'Montcalm.'

Mr. BENNETT. Can the minister tell me the tonnage of the 'Golspie'?

Mr. BRODEUR. About 1,200 tons.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems rather odd that the minister cannot tell us for certain whether tenders were called for. During the summer months he must have been paying $100 a day for that vessel. Who paid for the coaling of the vessel?

Mr. BRODEUR. The owners did the coaling.

Mr. BENNETT. Is 1,200 tons her registered tonnage? I think she is a much smaller craft than that.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman can find her tonnage in the register.

Mr. BENNETT. Is she a passenger vessel, a grain carrier or a freighter? I understood this was a small steamer plying somewhere around Port Arthur, which came into prominence last year through a shipwreck, and a number of sailors were frozen.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether she is a passenger boat or a freight boat. She suits the department very well, and was used for that service the year before. It was the only boat we could secure.

Mr. BENNETT. Were tenders called for the work?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy informs me that tenders were called for two years ago. Tenders were not called for last year, because the boat was under the same commission.

Mr. BENNETT. Now the minister is pretty accurate as a rule. He says this vessel is about 1,200 tons; would he be surprised to know that she was not half that tonnage?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am surprised that my hon. friend thinks I can keep all this information in my head.

Mr. BENNETT. It is over half of 1,200; but it is not by any means 1,200. From the debate that took place last year, I understood it was about 800 or 900 tons. It is extraordinary that this department cannot secure a vessel of that style for less than $100 a day.

Mr. PARDEE. Does the hon. gentleman think that for a vessel of the 'Golspie' size $100 a day is an overcharge for men, supplies, coaling, furnishing, and so forth?

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is an enormous price. The hon. gentleman, living at Sarnia, knows that vessels carrying 100,000 bushels in the summer months do not earn $100 a day on their trips when grain rates are low. No vessel of this class can earn $100 when vessels nearly double the size cannot earn that much.

Mr. PARDEE. It is not a question of what the vessel earns. No boat of that size would charter for less than $100 a day. You cannot get the smallest tug boat for less than $25 to $30 an hour.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has run away with himself. A tug boat cannot be hired for less than $25 an hour?

Mr. PARDEE. Not when she is chartered in the way of making a special trip.

Mr. BENNETT. It depends on the size of the tug. There are large wrecking tugs and small harbour tugs. My hon. friend must have in his eye tugs that can be hired for less than $600 a day. Surely the hon. gentleman will not stake his reputation for a knowledge of shipping matters on the statement that you cannot get vessels for less than $600 a day on a charter for 45 days. The hon. gentleman said $25 per hour. They pay for night work as well as for day work, I assume, and that is $600 per day. I think this year the minister had better call for tenders. Now the minister must know that he has a lot of political friends in the province of Ontario who own tugs, and these tugs are not confined to members of parliament. All these matters do not leak out simply through myself and other gentlemen scanning these books. It is on the same principle that other hon. gentlemen from Ontario who have seats in this House can be fortified with information. If I were to read to the House the names of some of the members of the Libral party in Ontario who give me information in regard to scandals as to dredging, the ministers would sit up in their seats. Attention is called to these matters by the hon. gentleman's own friends who know how friends of the government are favoured in this particular and in other particulars. I do not profess to be conversant with all the dredging operations from one end of the province to the other, but my attention is called to them from time to time by rival companies who are not able to get in on the ground floor, who have not the advantage of being backed up and fortified by the presence among their stockholders of members of parliament, and it is these gentlemen who call my attention to such matters as the one I have pointed out. Information does not come by inspiration. Information does not come to myself, or others on this side, by reading thousands and thousands of pages of these blue books. It comes to us by means of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite who are not getting a fair deal, as they consider, on the question of contracts awarded for vessels, or dredging, or whatever it may be. Perhaps now, the minister having seen where he is at with the 'Golspie,' will call for tenders.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not see why the hon. gentleman should criticise the action of the government in connection with the 'Golspie.' We called for tenders and a contract was given to that vessel. Now, he claims that some friends of the government have been complaining about that. When they had a chance to tender I do not know why they should not have tendered. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to give me the names of those friends and I shall ask them to submit tenders?

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask what the 'Seguin' was paid for a similar service the year before?

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to give me the names of those friends ?

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend knows very well that certain friends of the Liberal party who are not now within that narrow circle in which all these contracts are being given do not wish to have their names disclosed, because although they have been excluded they do not wish for further exclusion.

Mr. BRODEUR. I promise the hon. gentleman that if he will be kind enough to give me their names I will ask for prices from them. That is fair.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the 'Seguin' paid for a similar service a year or so before?

Mr. BRODEUR. She was not employed on the great lakes, I understand, last year.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the 'Seguin' employed for? She belongs to the Parry Sound Lumber Company. I thought she was employed as a lighthouse boat.

Mr. BRODEUR. She was employed on the lower part of the St. Lawrence conveying material for lighthouses.

Mr. BENNETT. It is all very well for the minister to talk about giving names, remembering as we do the way he has of calling for tenders. This is a little like calling for tenders at Port Arthur when it was provided that no person could tender for the work unless he had his dredges in there when the harbour was frozen up. The reason for that was that the only dredges in the harbour of Port Arthur belonged to the son-in-law of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), and in that way they excluded all others from tendering.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not in the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the minister will bring down this advertisement calling for tenders for a lighthouse supply boat.

Mr. BRODEUR. With pleasure.

Mr. BENNETT. We will see what it was and how long tenders were asked for.

Mr. BRODEUR. With pleasure. I hope my hon. friend will also give the names of those friends whom he mentioned.

Mr. BENNETT. These gentlemen are sufficiently boycotted already.

Mr. TALBOT. The question of feeding the sailors has been brought up this evening and in connection with that point I would like to offer the minister a suggestion. I think that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has continued a somewhat vicious system in the way of providing food for the sailors.

Mr. BERGERON. They must have liked it as they have continued it for eleven years.

Mr. TALBOT. I think the same individuals are there. I think it is a bad system and one which should be remedied. It has been the system in connection with the majority of the steamers and dredges both under the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Public Works that the captain gets so much a day per head and furnishes the food. I think this is a most important matter, because I am aware that in many cases complaint has been made, and I think it would be far better for the department to at least try the experiment of purchasing the food and serving it to the sailors in proper proportion and in proper condition. I think the department would find it more economical and everybody concerned would be the better for it. I merely make the suggestion. I think it is worth while trying the experiment, because we know that human nature is such that some of these old captains who were accustomed to be very lavish ten or twelve years ago have retained their old habits. Therefore, I think the department should try the experiment and find if everybody would not be better satisfied—the department as well as the sailors.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have been following, in most of the cases, the system which my hon. friend has just described; that is to say, the captain feeds the men and we pay him a certain amount of money. He has to follow a certain bill of fare which has been prepared by the department.

Mr. TALBOT. But he does not do it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, if he does not fulfil his contract it will be cancelled right away. We have provided for him a bill of fare which he is obliged to follow for each meal during the day and if he does not do it his contract will be cancelled. I must say also that the other system was very much more expensive than this one. It has been found that this system is giving better satisfaction than the other one.

Mr. FOSTER. How far is that system adopted?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is adopted on the St. Lawrence ship channel, on all the boats which are employed in dredging there and on the 'Druid' and 'Montcalm.'

Mr. BERGERON. I think that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) must have some other idea in bringing up that question than that of the public good. The system which is followed to-day is the same as that which was followed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries years ago and it is the same system which is adopted by navigation companies.

Mr. TALBOT. There it is the company who gets the benefit and not the captain.

Mr. BERGERON. I am talking about the system. I know that in my district the captains are charged with buying all the food for the crews. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) sitting behind my hon. friend will corroborate what I am saying. All the barge companies' captains buy the food for the crews.

Mr. HARTY. That is right.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. The Department of Marine and Fisheries following that system are adopting the most economical method of feeding the crews of these boats. There may be abuses in that just as well as anything else. The hon. member for Bellechasse has heard the discussion and he knows we are paying about half a million dollars more for the same number of vessels than we were paying eleven years ago.

Mr. TALBOT. That has nothing to do with the system.

Mr. BERGERON. It has nothing to do with the system? I can give the hon. gentleman an example. I see in the Auditor General's Report the name of Mr. Alfred Arcand, of Quebec.

Mr. TALBOT. What about Arcand?

Mr. BERGERON. Page P—91.

Arcand, A. Alfred, board of labourers, 695½ days at 75 cents; hauling materials, $27.65. There are no details at all. Sundry grocery and hardware supplies, $207.03; 10 per cent commission on supplies, $20.71.

Mr. TALBOT. In connection with what?

Mr. BERGERON. Buying supplies.

Mr. TALBOT. For what department?

Mr. BERGERON. It does not say. I am reading the Auditor General's Report. This man Arcand not only furnished the goods, but he charged a commission of $20.71. The remarks made by the hon. member for Bellechasse would not apply to that at all. He says that the system is bad.

Mr. TALBOT. I am speaking about the purchase of supplies and the feeding of the sailors by the captain. I am not discussing the quantities that are given. The bill of fare means that they get so much food, meat, bread, butter, &c. It is not so much the quantity as the quality and the captain, when he knows he can make a profit out of the sailor, does it nearly every time. That is what I say and I stand by it.

Mr. BERGERON. The lamentations of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries over the poor sailors will come in line. We on this side contend that all these immense sums of money spent on those boats do not give any benefit to the sailors.

Mr. TALBOT. That is not the fault of the department if the captain is a thief.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not saying where the fault lies. There is something wrong here. We have to add one-third of this amount, which is the expenditure for nine months, to get the expenditure for the year. That would make one-half million dollars.

Mr. BUREAU. There is the report for the year.

Mr. BERGERON. We have to go by something and the Auditor General's Report says that for these nine vessels in 1895-6 the cost of maintenance for the year was $150,519.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend include in that the 'Alert' which apparently spent only $4.25 ?

Mr. BERGERON. I shall grant that to my hon. friend later on.

Mr. BRODEUR. He should deduct immediately three-fourths of that.

Mr. BERGERON. I am talking now in a broad way. We spent for the same number of steamers in 1896, $150,000. In 1907, for nine steamers, we spent over half a million dollars.

Mr. TALBOT. Is my hon. friend aware that the tonnage and size of the present steamer is greater than that of the steamers in 1896 ?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is in too great a hurry. Where is the difference in the steamers ? We had the 'Aberdeen' in 1896 and we have her in 1907.

Mr. TALBOT. Not doing the same service.

Mr. BERGERON. Wait a moment.

Mr. TALBOT. Not doing the same service.

Mr. BERGERON. It does not make any difference ; she ran on water then, not on land. She is the same boat to-day. In 1896 she cost the country $22,134. She was on water at that time.

Mr. BUREAU. Not running.

Mr. BERGERON. How do you know? That is no argument. The same boat to-day cost over $50,000.

Mr. TALBOT. Nothing allowed for repairs?

Mr. BERGERON. That will come in another place, not here.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is my hon. friend sure that it is the same boat?

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to know.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed this is not the same boat; it is another boat under the same name.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to be informed. I want the minister to be sure of that before we carry the vote; we want to know the tonnage of the 'Aberdeen' of 1896 and the 'Aberdeen' of 1907. Is the 'Druid' the same boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that is not the same boat either.

Mr. BERGERON. How many 'Druids' have we had? We had one about 40 years ago.

Mr. BRODEUR. We had the old 'Druid' which has been replaced by the new one.

Mr. BERGERON. We had the old 'Druid,' the younger 'Druid,' and the baby 'Druid.' Will my hon. friend give the tonnage of the old 'Druid' of 1896 and the 'Druid' of 1907?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not the information for 1896; the existing one is 503 tons.

Mr. BERGERON. If I am not mistaken the 'Aberdeen' is a steamer of 1894?

Mr. BRODEUR. 1895.

Mr. BERGERON. It must be the same one. Let us be straight about that.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a new boat which has been in commission since 1896.

Mr. BERGERON. What I read in the Auditor General's Report of 1897 with reference to the 'Aberdeen' refers to the same boat as we have to-day. She cost $22,000 in 1896 and $50,000 last year. Take the 'Druid.' I do not know the tonnage. In 1896 she cost $15,000 and last year she cost about $40,000. These are two of the same vessels that they had in 1896.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no, the 'Druid' of 1896 was a different vessel.

Mr. TALBOT. She was a side-wheeler and this is a twin screw.

Mr. BERGERON. The side-wheeler is the old, old one. The one we have to-day is the one that followed the side-wheeler. This must be the one we had in 1896.

Mr. BUREAU. Oh, no.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am answering my hon friend, it is not the same boat at all; the one of 1896 is a different vessel from the one of to-day. We bought the present boat from Fleming & Ferguson about five years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the 'Lansdowne' the same one?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. There is not so much difference there. She cost $26,000 in 1896 and last year, adding one-third, about $29,000. She is only $3,000 more; that is not so much as the others.

Mr. DEVLIN. Why add one-third?

Mr. BERGERON. Because this is for only nine months and we have to take one-third of the amount mentioned to get the whole year. The 'Stanley' is the same boat, is she not?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. She cost $29,000 in 1896 and last year she cost over $50,000 if you add one-third. What has become of the old boats? Where is the 'Alert'?

Mr. BRODEUR. She was sold for junk about 1895.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is 'La Canadienne?'

Mr. BRODEUR. She is engaged in the hydrographic survey, but she is an old boat and will have to be replaced very soon.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the 'Newfield'?

Mr. BRODEUR. She was lost, and became a total wreck.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there another boat called the 'Alert?'

Mr. BRODEUR. Not in the department.

Mr. BERGERON. I find one called the 'Alert' belonging to the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is another boat.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the 'Sir James Douglas?'

Mr. BRODEUR. She was an old tug in British Columbia and was sold many years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. How many boats are there belonging to the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think thirty-two.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the minister give their names and the purposes for which they are being used?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Aberdeen,' in lighthouse and buoy service; the 'Arctic,' for service in northern Hudson bay.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the 'Arctic' now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the St. Louis basin.

Mr. BERGERON. Being prepared for another expedition ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. The 'Bayfield,' in the hydrographic service ; the 'Brant,' in lighthouse and buoy service; the 'Canada,' in fisheries protection service; the 'Champlain,' in the River Ouelle, Murray bay ferry; the 'Constance,' in Customs Department work under the control of the Marine Department; the 'Curlew,' in fisheries protection service in New Brunswick, the 'Druid' in lighthouse and buoy service ; the 'Eureka,' a pilot tender at Father Point ; the 'Falcon,' in fisheries protection service at Vancouver ; the 'Frontenac,' in the St. Lawrence ship channel service; the 'Galveston,' a dredge; the 'Gulnare,' in tidal survey work on the Atlantic coast and in the River St. Lawrence; the 'James Howden,' in the St. Lawrence ship channel; the 'Kestrel,' in fisheries protection service; 'La Canadienne,' in hydrographic work; the 'Lady Grey,' in the St. Lawrence ship channel; the 'Lady Laurier,' in lighthouse and buoy service; the 'Lansdowne,' in lighthouse and buoy service; the 'Maisonneuve,' in patrolling the ship channel from Quebec to Kingston; the 'Minto,' in winter mail service to Prince Edward Island ; the 'Montcalm,' steel ice-breaker ; the 'Osprey,' in fisheries protection service; the 'Petrel,' in fisheries protection service ; the 'Princess,' in fisheries protection service, the 'Quadra,' in lighthouse and buoy service; the 'Reserve,' in lighthouse and buoy service from Montreal to Kingston; the 'Scout,' in the same service; the 'Shamrock,' in buoy service from Quebec to Montreal; the 'Stanley,' in the winter mail service to Prince Edward Island; and the 'Vigilant,' in fisheries protection service.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the boat called the 'Lady Evelyn'?

Mr. BRODEUR. She belongs to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BERGERON. At page P—12 of the Auditor General's Report I find the name of Thos. McConkey. Who is he and what is his occupation ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is an officer of the department. He inspects the hulls of government boats.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to make any reflection upon the gentleman; I do not know him at all; but his travelling and living expenses for two trips from Halifax to Quebec and return appear to be pretty high amounting to $114.81. Who checks these expenditures in the department ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The accountant of the department, Mr. Owen.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he certify the account ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is certified first by the agent under whom the officer works, and then it is sent to the department here, and the cheque issued on the certificate of the accountant.

Mr. TALBOT. How long has this been done ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Twenty-six years.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the minister to say, in answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), that so far as the ship channel was concerned, an arrangement had been made with the captains of vessels there to board the men, the government furnishing the cooks and making out a good substantial bill of fare for the men, with which the captains had to comply, and that he had adopted the same system on the 'Montcalm.' I would like the minister, when he makes replies, to make them correctly. I find by the Auditor General's Report, beginning at page P—21, that thousands of dollars are charged for provisions for the 'Montcalm,' so that it cannot be under that system.

Mr. BRODEUR. Those expenditures were for 1906-7. The arrangement was made last fall.

Mr. TAYLOR. And on the same terms as the other boats in the ship channel ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The other boats in the ship channel—Yes ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister and his deputy confirm my statement as to the proper charges for the 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen.' I gave the statement of the total cost of provisions for these boats, and divided the total by the number of the crew, showing that it amounted to $25 per month per man. And here we find the captains of the 'Montcalm' and other vessels taking the contract at very much less, the government merely furnishing the cooks. For instance, there is the 'Camelia,' on which board is allowed for at $12 per month, $456 and at $14 per month, $14—this latter amount, I suppose, for the captain. I made the statement that $12.50 was a good price. And when I made that statement the minister and others on that side laughed. Yet the minister had in his hand the information that the captain of the 'Montcalm' had taken the contract at $12 and $14 per month. Then we have the 'Cartier' at the same rate, the 'Champlain' at the same rate, the 'Jessie Hume' at the same rate. We have the 'Lac St. Pierre' at $10.50 and $12. These figures show that the charges for the supplies for these other vessels were enormously extravagant.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did the difference go ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is what I would like to know—who gets this difference between $12 and $14 a month for which these captains are ready to take the contract and the $25 a month which is paid for the 'Lady Laurier' and the 'Aberdeen' ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On the dredges we are paying a little less than on the other boats, because the work is not the same. As to the boats, we paid 50 cents and 60 cents.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked the minister, and he answered me correctly, after inquiring of his officials, that the same prices prevailed on the 'Montcalm' as for the other boats.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said the same as the 'Druid.'

Mr. TAYLOR. Nothing was said about the 'Druid.'

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure I said it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked the minister to give us information with reference to the detailed statements laid before the House, every one of them verified by the Auditor General's Report. He did not come down with any facts, but simply abused me for making a political speech.

Mr. BERGERON. And he talked about 'Those poor sailors.'

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, and said that I wanted to have them badly fed. I did not say a word about the feeding of the sailors, but about the extravagant manner in which these purchases of supplies were made.

Mr. BERGERON. The sailors do not get it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister said that I named nine boats, some of which did very little work. I gave the names of the boats and the expenditures, pointing out that on these nine boats $505 was paid for the uniforms in 1896-7, that last year the amount paid for uniforms was over $12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman say that $505 was paid for the uniforms for these nine boats?

Mr. TAYLOR. I gave the detailed expenditures.

Mr. BRODEUR. There were boats that were not, properly speaking, employed. There was the 'Alert,' for instance, on which $4.25 was spent ; on another boat $115 and on another $254.25. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) undertake to say that $4.25 was paid for the uniforms on one of these boats for a year. If he says that, I can only say it is the worst administration that I have ever known.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister wants to get the thing crooked—he could not do otherwise if he tried. Put these three boats out of the question, and assume that $505 was spent for uniforms on the six boats. As against that, we have expenditures for uniforms on the present to government steamers amounting to $12,673.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) wishes to stand by that statement, I can only say that he supported a government in the old days that was not doing its duty to the country. It is no wonder that so many wrecks happened.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman must expect me to apply the same rule to him that he applied to me. He has tried to make it appear that I was opposed to having these seamen fed properly. That statement is made merely for effect, and he will go down into his own section of the country, and, in campaign speeches, will say that Taylor did not want to have these men properly fed. He knows that that was not the point, but that I was showing that the expenditures for supplies were extravagant, and I gave the official figures for every one of my statements. Then, as to travelling expenses, I have asked him to explain how it is, that whereas in 1896 the minister and all the officials of the department ran up bills for travel of $9,769, last year travelling expenses for himself and the officers of his department amounted to $51,-661.

Mr. DEVLIN. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) will allow me to ask him a question : How many uniforms were purchased for these boats mentioned by the hon. gentleman in the total he gave for 1896 ?

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Devlin) will turn to the Auditor General's Report of that year, page K-13 and K-18, he will learn the total number.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how much is paid for these uniforms ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The amount was $505.35.

Mr. DEVLIN. I mean for each uniform. I want to be able to compare the prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have given the hon. gentleman the pages in the Auditor General's Report, and he can look up the figures and make a speech about them. My hon. friend wanted to know if I knew what dickeys were. Well, I have been in the mercantile business and sold many a dickey, but not at a dollar apiece. Then I gave a lot of other items, about which the minister has not vouchsafed a word of explanation. He did not say a word about the increase of the salaries of the light keepers, although the government promised when they went into these expenditures, which have reached $10,-000,000, that the result would be a large reduction in the salaries. Instead of this reduction we have an increase of over $6,000 as compared with 1895-6. I spoke about the extravagant prices paid for fire extinguishers and the minister did not say a word about them. All he did was charge me with not wanting to have the poor sailors properly fed, although I never said a word about that. Every figure I mentioned I took from the Auditor General's Report or from the minister's statements to this House. Just fancy paying $18 for a butcher's block for one of these steamers, in order that they might cut up their meat on it. I am entitled to have from the minister an explanation of these expenditures, none of which he ventured to explain, but simply confined himself to making the statement that I was drawing attention to these extravagances for the purpose of making political issue and influencing the people of the province of Quebec.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). A remark was made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries about the yearly expenses of the 'Alert' in 1895, but the 'Alert' was not in service in 1895 at all. I find in last year's report that she was taken out of commission on the 10th of December, 1894.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right and his statement just shows how unfair he has been. He has been trying for hours to show that the 'Alert' was still in commission in 1895-6.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). The hon. minister has told us what the expenditures of these boats are. Is there any revenue derived from any of them ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, from the 'Minto,' the 'Stanley' and the 'Champlain.' I shall get the information for the hon. gentleman. A few minutes ago the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) said I was trying to deceive the House concerning the tonnage of the 'Golspie.' I find that its tonnage was 1,122 gross. I said 1,200.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the minister's attention to page P—21, in order to see whether we cannot go a little more closely into this matter of costs and some of the arguments founded upon it. The minister has told us that the 'Montcalm' is one of the vessels in which the system was changed of boarding the men and that the men are now boarded by the captain. On page P—21 we see the operation of both systems. The board of the officers and crew at 60 cents or 50 cents per day, $5.813.90 less inventory of stores on board September 1, 1906, $400, making net $5,413.90. Am I right in supposing that the system of boarding by the captain commenced the 1st of September, 1906, and that from that date to the end of the fiscal year the board bill was $5,413 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose that would be right.

Mr. FOSTER. Take the rest of the items under the heading 'Montcalm,' and we find the amount of provisions bought under the old system for that steamer or, as it really is, for the first part of the fiscal year. I have added them up and they made a total of about $5,187. That is, the minister paid for two months of the fiscal year for food for the crew and officers of the 'Montcalm' $5,187 and had $400 worth of that in store on December 1, which was taken over by the captain and for which he was paid its value of $400. If I am correct, the account stands this way. Under the board system, where the captain does it and is paid 50 cents or 60 cents per day, seven months cost $5,413, and two months, under the old system, cost $5,100, less $400, which is $4,700. That is under the wasteful, the extravagant, the over-priced system, two months costing the government $4,700 ; whilst under the other system at fifty or sixty cents, for seven months, costing $4,513. Now there is where the comparison is absolutely correct —the same vessel, the same men, the same mouths to feed, and you have the contrast. There cannot be anything else included in the fiscal year but what was bought in the fiscal year.

Mr. BRODEUR. There have been some accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. If there were, it would be rather to the advantage of the comparison I am making.

Mr. BRODEUR. Would the hon. gentleman give me the details?

Mr. FOSTER. You will find them scattered all through the two pages. Without pretending to be absolutely accurate, they are just about $5,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), in the first place is absolutely vindicated in his calculations by the facts developed in the case of the 'Montcalm,' where it is done for 50 to 60 cents per day, which amounts to about $14 or $15 per month. When that statement was made some gentleman on the other side of the House at once declared that it was impossible, that $25 was as little as it could be done for. Yet the minister's own experiment on one of his best vessels, the 'Montcalm,' shows that it is being done for about $15 per man per month. There is no doubt that with any fair method of economy the best of food can be given to men for that amount of money. Statistics are in evidence everywhere showing that men can be fed and well taken care of from 10 to 12 cents per meal or less.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Volunteers for 25 to 30 cents per day.

Mr. FOSTER. Take the King's navy, or the navy of the United States, and you will find that the average cost for food under the best conditions runs somewhere around 25 to 30 cents per man per day. It is all very well for the hon. member for Belle-chasse (Mr. Talbot) to pretend that somebody did not want the poor man to get enough to eat, and I was sorry to see the minister greedily grasp that device to justify himself. The minister cannot justify the high prices that have been paid for material put on board of these ships. Is that in the interest of the poor sailor. Does the sailor get his coffee out of these urns chased in solid silver? Does the sailor put his legs under mahogany tables which cost from $50 to $100? Does he drink his tea and coffee out of cups and saucers which cost $2 each? Not at all. What you are doing is to give the sailor on the ship, I hope, plenty of good, nourishing food, but all this extravagant equipment is one in which the sailor gets no benefit at all. Now the minister must not think that the opposition are attacking the sailor when they bring out these things. It seems to be absolutely necessary to take hours, or perhaps days, in order to impress upon the House and the country the extravagance in what may be called small ways as in large ways in which this department is being run. What does the minister say about the Merwin transaction? He sat in the committee, heard the evidence, and knows that the people of this country were absolutely robbed, robbed to the advantage of Merwin and whoever had a coadvantage with him. The hon. gentleman knows that he can get on the streets of Montreal or Toronto engines for $500 less than was paid for these. The minister knows that the very men who got Merwin paid for these engines more than the current price are the very men who certified that that was a true and reasonable price. The very men that certified to this have certified to the accounts to-day. The very men that certified that the tobacco was purchased at a reasonable price when it could be bought for less than half of what it cost, the very men who certified that the pemmican was purchased at a reasonable price at a sum three or four times as much as it could be got for, of the same quantity and quality, these men are to-day in that department. When the minister cannot find men in the department who will certify to what he wants to certify he has a habit of creating them and of getting men in positions who will certify to what he wants. He has a man there to-day that I warn him is not working in the best interests of the people of this country whether he may be working in his own best interest or not. The existence of this system is due very largely, I believe, through the minister's own good will, and the work of some of his officers. What confidence can we have that the country is not being cheated in the purchases of to-day when the same men who certified to double prices a few years ago are the certifying officers of the present time? Has the minister taken any steps at all to recover from Merwin what was taken from the coffers of the people through the negligence or collusion of his own department? It makes no matter which in so far as the people are concerned; the people lose in either case. Is the minister putting any system into practice of public tenders and of purchasing articles at fair current prices obtained by means of public tender? Is he doing it to-day? Two years ago he answered question after question of mine touching purchases running up into millions of dollars, Merwin's amongst them for $500,000 or so and Brook's for a very large amount, acknowledging that these purchases were not made by tender and when we were able to get eighteen articles out of the thousands that were bought from Merwin we found that on these eighteen articles $7,000 of a rake-off—nearly 50 per cent, if not more—had gone into Merwin's pocket, that might have been saved. If, in regard to these eighteen articles, there was a rake-off of $7,000 and if the same proportion, or anything like the same proportion obtained with respect to the purchase of millions of dollars worth of articles how much have the people been robbed of? Yet the minister has never taken the least step to cause Mr. Merwin to give back to the people the inordinate profit or rake-off that he made on supplies to his own advantage some way or another. My hon. friend is dealing with him to-day. He dealt with him within the last fiscal year, he is dealing with him during this present year, he is dealing with him without contract, without tender and in so far as we know under the same officers he is dealing to the same disadvantage to the people. I rose particularly to show the minister and the House that by his own books and his own work, detailed in the Auditor General's Report, he has convicted his department of paying two prices for the keep of the sailors and giving them no better than the sailors got under the proper provision in my mind as regards the captains victualling the crews. I think that is the proper system. Make your bill of fare, your general menu, what you think it ought to be, adopt the system, keep the proper officer up to it and you get rid of a vast amount of trouble and annoyance for the department itself and, what is better still, you get back to a basis where the people are not paying two prices. If all of the departments were under the system that now prevails on the 'Montcalm' you would feed all your men for fifty cents a day while to-day it is costing you at least $25 per month for each man. Spread it over all the boats and you waste a large sum of money.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I notice that the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) is present. Perhaps he can tell us what it costs to ration the soldiers. I remember that in the old days in our military camps the contractor for providing the rations for the men got 25 cents a day where the rations had to be drawn a long distance and kept in very expensive storage, and I notice in the Auditor General's Report here that the rations are charged for at the rate of 20 cents a day.

An hon. MEMBER. How long ago?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. To-day. This year's Auditor General's Report. I think that is about the figure.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the volunteers starved?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At the Russell House in Ottawa and at the King Edward in Toronto it does not cost them $1 a day for rations. If you take the attendance and extra service into account there is no hotel in the city of Ottawa which begins to expend a dollar a day per man for rations.

Mr. TALBOT. The proprietor of the Russell House told me that it cost $1.18 a day.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is nonsense.

Mr. TALBOT. You had better settle that with him.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister should be a little more careful when he quotes from books. I gave the minister credit for making a candid statement when he said the 'Golspie' had a registered tonnage of 900 tons? She has only 709 tons.

An hon. MEMBER. That is a big steamer.

Mr. BENNETT. Some hon. gentleman says that she is a big steamer. If he will come to the upper lakes he will see what a big boat is.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is that the registered or gross tonnage?

Mr. BENNETT. The registered tonnage.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the gross tonnage?

Mr. BENNETT. 1,122 tons. The registered tonnage is what tells. I have in my mind a vessel which has double the registered tonnage of this vessel and consequently if we take the figures that the hon. gentleman was giving us that vessel should be making $200 a day. I think the owners would be tickled to death to run the vessel for $200 a day during the summer months when trade is dull. Perhaps we will see if the minister will call for tenders for this service.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the system which is in force now in regard to the maintenance of these vessels? We have been talking to-night about captains buying the food for the sailors and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has suggested another plan. What is really the system? I have been reading over some of these items and as my hon. friend will see this cannot be carried on very much longer because the people will not stand it. At page P—10 of the Auditor General's Report, I find one item which seems to require some explanation.

Derome, H., Quebec, potatoes, fish, eggs and onions, $51.86.

There is no price given, you do not know whether they got two dozen eggs, two or three bushels of onions or a bag of potatoes but all you do know is that they paid $51.86. I do not want to blame anybody, but I say the system is bad.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is mistaken. The Auditor General does not give the exact details of these accounts. There is one thing in regard to the Auditor General's Report. There are too many details and there are not enough. There are too many in this respect that sometimes the statements which are made may be misleading. If the hon. gentleman undertakes to publish the accounts I think they should be published in full. It would make a very big volume, but it would give us a correct idea of how matters stand. In regard to that account to which my hon. friend refers I am pretty sure that on the voucher which is presented to the department, the details, the absence of which my hon. friend has noticed, must have been given.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the system? Are the captains in charge of everything in connection with the boats as the hon. member for Bellechasse suggested a few moments ago? I understand that these captains are charged with the buying of all that is necessary for the feeding of their men. If so are they told where to buy their provisions and how much to pay for them?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Cowie succeeded, on the St. Lawrence ship channel, in establishing this system of giving the feeding of the men by contract to the captain or some other officer on the boat. We have been trying to establish it on some of the boats. I myself, when making my first inspection in 1906 tried to induce the captain of the 'Montcalm' and tried to induce him to accept it at 50 cents or 60 cents. At last he yielded and was willing to undertake it. We can get all the men to agree to that. A comparison has been made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) with regard to the expenses of the 'Montcalm' and he finds that for two months we have been spending much more than for five months. I am not in a position to state whether or not the comparison is right. We might be able to see that by the accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. I was going to ask the minister to have such a comparison by months made as it would be one that we could not gainsay. Some of the expenditures might have been given to a previous year and some not. Might I ask the minister what his policy in this matter is going to be? According to the Auditor General's Report the cost of provisions is about $25 a man and the captain of the 'Montcalm' feeds his men for about 60 cents a day, showing a saving of about $10 per month per man.

Mr. BRODEUR. My policy would be to extend this system.

Mr. FOSTER. I would support the minister most heartily.

Mr. BRODEUR. I myself induced the captain of the 'Montcalm' to make a contract. I may say there is an objection which might or might not be serious in some case to having the captain the contractor. He is the absolute master on the boat; he may feed the men well or he may not, there might be ground for complaint in that respect. Would it then be advisable that the contract should be made with the captain? It might be made with the steward as the steward would be under the captain and if there was ground for a complaint the men could complain to the captain. There are of course difficulties in the way but I for my part believe in that system. It has been put in force on the St. Lawrence ship channel and I have been trying to put it in force on other boats. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) was speaking a few minutes ago against the province of Quebec but it is in Quebec that this is done.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not say a word against the province of Quebec. I would like the minister when he makes statements to make them in accordance with the facts.

Mr BRODEUR. I thought he would like to know——

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman made that statement on purpose in order to have it go through the French press to-morrow.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would not charge my hon. friend with bringing in the province of Quebec——

Mr. TAYLOR. You have done it half a dozen times to-day.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would not charge my hon. friend with bringing in the province of Quebec as he did a minute ago for the Ontario papers. For that reason I think it is better not to mention the provinces in these matters.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister has fed the Quebec people on half what he does the others; he is starving the poor people of Quebec?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have pointed out one of the defects in regard to these contracts that when the captain is the contractor the men have no one to whom to complain.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister could easily consult the Minister of Militia and ascertain how the rationing of the permanent corps is done. They are fed all over the country for 20 cents per day per man, and there is no complaint.

Mr. TALBOT. I maintain that the system of giving a contract to the captain, the steward or any one else in connection with the crew is a vicious one and I am perpared to prove it in every case. I do not care what bill of fare you have if there is no one on the steamer to see that that bill of fare is properly lived up to. It is left to the men to complain but sometimes the ships are out for three or four months and they could not make a complaint until their return and then the season is over.

Mr. TAYLOR. What steamer is out three or four months?

Mr. TALBOT. The steamer that starts from Quebec to supply the lighthouses down to the Straits of Belle Isle is out for three or four months. When a captain is given so much to feed the men he is there on business, he is there to make as much as he can. He may give the quantity but who is to control the quality? No department has a man to supervise all these things The officials of the department know how much a man will consume in a month and they can purchase the necessary supplies, store them on the ship and they can be distributed to the cook as required. The cook is paid by the department, but not by the captain, and everything can be checked and controlled. I am quite satisfied that with the same amount of money the sailors will be better fed without the contract. I live in a shipping district and I am in touch with nearly all the crews of the government boats and I know what is said. Almost every captain who has a contract with the government to feed his men does not feed them properly. I understand that it is easier for the department to control the returns when there is a contract, but the captain is there to see that he makes as much money as he can and I know that in a majority of cases the captain makes from $10 to $15 a day in the quality of the food he gives the men.

Mr. BERGERON. What would my hon. friend propose?

Mr. TALBOT. What I said a minute ago, that it is easy to know the quantity of food required for a crew of twelve or fifteen men for a cruise of two or three months. That can be bought, stored in the ship and distributed as required for cooking or anything else. I am satisfied that with that system not only will the department save money but they will give the crews better satisfaction than they have now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the hon. member to say that where the captains took contracts at the prices stated, they made a profit of $10 or $12 per month per man.

Mr. TALBOT. Not per man, for the whole crew. With a crew of 20 men if there is only 6 cents a day profit on each man he will make a substantial profit.

Mr. TAYLOR. What my hon. friend says confirms my estimate.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend hear any complaints about the 'Montcalm'?

Mr. TALBOT. No, I have not heard any complaints about the 'Montcalm' in particular.

Mr. BRODEUR. Because this and the 'Druid' are the only boats in Quebec on which the system has been tried. We are going to make a comparison to see which system is the best. My hon. friend from Queens, P.E.I., asked me a few minutes ago the revenue of the 'Minto' and the 'Stanley.' The revenue of the 'Minto' is $12,000, and that of the 'Stanley', $9,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the minister where he got those figures?

Mr. BRODEUR. They were given to me by the accountant of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report shows the revenue of the 'Stanley' to have been $7,000 and the revenue of the 'Minto' $9,000. If the minister's statement is right, the Auditor General's Report is wrong.

Mr. FIELDING. The Auditor's statement is for the nine months. Perhaps the minister's is for the year.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will call the attention of the accountant to the matter.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Minister of Finance give me any idea as to when the Insurance Bill will be taken up?

Mr. FIELDING. At the first reading of the Bill I offered the suggestion that we should pass the second reading 'pro forma' without discussion, and that the Bill should then go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I do not know how far that suggestion is acceptable. I shall be glad to move the second reading at any moment for that purpose; but if there is likely to be a protracted debate, I would have to delay it. I am advised that the companies wish to get together and make their representations. Is my hon. friend aware whether the suggestion I made is acceptable?

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not like to pledge this side of the House without speaking to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. FIELDING. Very well, I will let it stand until that is ascertained.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the budget debate will not be brought on until after the French treaty is taken up?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire about some returns that I moved for early in the session. There were two immigration agents in my riding and I asked for a report as to what they had done. Then there were the reports of the commercial agents sent to the old country—twenty-five of them. Their reports were promised to be brought down. There was also a report about the expenditure at government house which was promised. I would like to know when we may expect these.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The report in regard to the agents sent to Great Britain is being prepared and will be brought down very shortly.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH MAINLAND.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) desires to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, being withdrawal of the winter steamers from Charlottetown. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman has permission to do so ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Will my hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin) postpone that until to-morrow. I understood that the hon. gentleman wanted simply to ask a question but I see that he wants to discuss the matter of the transfer of the boats from Charlottetown to Georgetown. Will he be kind enough to postpone the discussion until to-morrow ?

Mr. A. MARTIN. The only objection is that time is passing. These boats have been taken from Charlottetown and there are no facilities for the transportation of passengers and goods at that point. It is a serious matter but if it will not entail delay I will consent to the postponement that the hon. gentleman asks for.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter will stand until to-morrow.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.—Mr. Monk.

MEDALS FOR THIRD SOUTH AFRICAN CONTINGENT.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. During the past year, has the government sought to have medals issued to the members of the third South African contingent, who sailed from Canada and arrived within the three-mile limit in South African territory before the conclusion of the war?

2. Is it the intention of the government to further endeavour to secure medals for the men concerned?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. The government has not taken any steps in the direction indicated, during the past year.

2. On November 11, 1902, a despatch was received from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in reply to a memorandum from the Dominion government, dated August 22, 1902, making application for the South African war medal on behalf of the members of the Third South African Contingent, to the effect that the Secretary of State for War had, after careful consideration, decided that no relaxation could be made of the date limiting the grant of the medal. A further despatch was received on April 4, 1906, in reply to an application forwarded by the Dominion government on February 24, 1906, from certain officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 3rd Regiment who had previously served in South Africa, that they might be granted the South African clasp, 1902, to the effect that as these officers and men had not disembarked on a date prior to June 1, 1902, they were not entitled to the clasp.

It is not the intention of the government to take any further steps in the matter.

SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS—LAND SCRIP.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government, this year, to issue scrip to each volunteer who enlisted for South Africa from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

2. Is one who enlisted from the Yukon or other Canadian territory, beyond the three provinces named, eligible for the scrip?

3. Is it the intention of the government to issue scrip to each volunteer from any part of Canada who went to South Africa?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. A Bill is at present being prepared in order to set apart lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in accordance with the terms of the resolution of parliament passed last session, as a grant to those who were resident in the above named provinces at the time of their enlistment, and served during the South African War.

2 and 3. The resolution did not propose to provide for the issue of scrip to other than those who were resident in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta at the time of their enlistment, and the Bill will not do so.

PEACE RIVER VALLEY LANDS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. What lands have been sold, leased, given as homesteads, transferred or set apart in any way by the government to each, individuals, companies, syndicates, or other organizations in the Peace River valley, or along or near tributaries thereof, in the Northwest of Canada?

3. What are the terms between the government and the various parties or organizations concerned?
4. What prices per acre have been realized from these transactions?
5. With whom did the government conduct negotiations in each case?
6. What are the regulations governing the securing of land in the Peace River valley?
7. How far is it from Edmonton to Dunvegan?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I would ask the question to stand as a motion for a return; the answer is voluminous.

LINDSAY RIFLE RANGE AND DRILL SHED.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to construct a drill shed in Lindsay at an early date?
2. Is it the intention of the government to secure a site for and establish a rifle range at Lindsay, to be ready for practice the coming summer?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. There is a lump sum for the construction of armouries generally, in the Public Works' estimates; but the disposal of this vote has not yet been fully determined. The claims of Lindsay will be considered.

2. Steps have recently been taken with a view to securing a site for a rifle range at Lindsay.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Mr. SHEPLEY, K.C.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What are the various services on which Mr. Shepley, K.C., has been engaged by the government since 1896, and what amount has been paid him for salary and expenses for each?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The information required by this question covers so long a period of time and would require reference to so many departments that it had better be the subject of a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for a return.

CONTRACTORS' SECURITIES.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

What amount of contractors' securities were in the hands of the government on December 31, 1907?

MAINTENANCE OF TRENT CANAL WORKS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr Sproule—asked:

1. Will the government observe the terms of agreement between the province of Ontario and Canada re maintaining in proper condition the works already existing, and constructing such necessary new ones as the needs of the localities require upon the tributary waters of the Trent canal in Victoria and Haliburton?

2. When will the new locks and dam at Lindsay be (a) begun, and (b) completed?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. It is the intention of the government to maintain all the necessary works required for the Trent canal.

2. (a) It is hoped that next session the work will be let.

(b) Should be completed in one season.

BOBCAYGEON DAM.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. In the new dam at Bobcaygeon has the government made provision for placing in position the power plant and machinery of the corporation now installed in the old dam?

2. Under the custom in other similar circumstances will the government, and not the municipality, bear the expense of the transfer of the plant and machinery?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The government is putting in three sluices in the dam, so that the municipality of Bobcaygeon can get the water for their power, through them. The government has no agreement or understanding with the municipality as to what kind of power house they are going to build or how they are going to equip it.

2. It is not the custom of the government to bear any expense in connection with power plant in any manner whatsoever.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

PAY-LISTS FOR ST. FULGENCE PIER.

Mr. BERGEON asked:

On March 1, 1898, the Auditor General sent the following letter to the secretary of the Public Works Department:—

Office of the Auditor General,
Ottawa, March 1, 1898.

Sir,—The paymaster of Chicoutimi, Doctor Edmond Savard, seems to have written at least fourteen of the twenty-four signatures in the receipt column of pay-list 26359 for work on the St. Fulgence pier in September, 1897.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Please send me a copy of the instructions that you may have given the paymaster regarding the validity of the receipts.

The pay-lists in question should be replaced.

I am, dear sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

Were the pay-lists in question replaced? If so, when?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The pay-list in question bears the declaration signed by Alphonse Pedenault, foreman of the work, that all the persons on the list were paid in his presence. In the case of an employee who is unable to write, it is customary for the paymaster to write the name for him in the receipt column of the pay-list and for the employee himself to make his mark with a cross. In this instance, the crosses had been omitted, but, as the foreman had attested to the actual fact of payment, it was not thought necessary to have a fresh pay-list executed.

DUTIES ON MATERIALS, DETROIT RIVER TUNNEL.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked:

1. Has the Department of Customs made arrangements whereby the duty on all or any part of the material, &c., used in the construction of the new caisson-tunnel under the Detroit river from the water's edge to the international boundary line is to be waived or remitted?

2. If so, to whom are the special concessions made?

3. What would be the probable loss to the department by such waiver or remission if made?

4. Has any correspondence on this matter passed between the department and the Michigan Central Railway, or Butler Bros. & Hoff, contractors, or between the department and any other persons or corporations.

5. What is the exact situation with respect to the collection or remission of customs duties on the said material and other dutiable articles required and used in connection with the work on the said tunnel?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs).

1, 2, 3, 4. There is no waiver or remission of duty on materials used in the construction of the new caisson-tunnel under the Detroit river.

5. Item 596 of the Customs Tariff, 1907, provides for free entry of 'materials to be used in Canada for the construction of bridges and tunnels crossing the boundary between the United States and Canada, when similar materials are admitted free under similar circumstances into the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Minister of Customs.' Under this provision of the law materials to be used in Canada for the construction of the tunnel under the Detroit river from the tunnel entrance on the Canadian side to the international boundary line are entered free of customs duty.

MAINTENANCE OF ESQUIMALT NAVAL STATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What action, if any, has the government taken to secure the continued maintenance of the naval station at Esquimalt, B.C.?

2. What is the situation with regard to the present maintenance of that naval station and what is the expectation of the government as to its continued future maintenance?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. As the correspondence between the British and the Canadian government is confidential, it is not possible to answer these questions at the present time.

2. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN NAVAL STATIONS.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

1. Does the arrangement between the government of Great Britain and Canada as to the transfer of the dockyards and other property recently occupied by the British government as naval bases at Esquimalt and Halifax to the Canadian government include a condition that Canada shall maintain these dockyards and naval stations in a state of efficiency so that the same may be available for use by the British fleet in the event of war or other necessity?

2. If so, what moneys have been expended for this purpose since these stations have been so taken over?

3. What sums have been included in the estimates for the coming year for a like purpose?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The correspondence between the British government and the Canadian government being confidential, it is not possible to answer this question at the present time. The imperial government has given us, pending negotiations, the use of the Halifax dockyard on the first of January, 1907.

2. $24,069.35 in Halifax dockyard.

3. $40,000 have been put in the estimates for the maintenance and upkeep of dockyards.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

Having regard to the increase of size in vessels, both naval and mercantile, is it the intention of the government to increase the docking facilities on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts either by adding to the number of the present docks or by increasing the size of those already in existence?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

The matter is under consideration.

IMPERIAL NAVAL DEFENCE.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

Does the Canadian government intend to adhere to the policy laid down by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he said at the recent Colonial Conference in connection with the part taken by Canada in imperial naval defence, on page 542 of the reported proceedings, 'We could not contribute or undertake to do more than we are doing in that way'?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

FISHERIES PROTECTION.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

1. Is the statement, as it appears in the Colonial Conference proceedings, at page 139 of the report, by the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, to the effect that since the year 1885, the date of the abrogation of the Washington treaty, Canada has spent $3,147,990 in connection with the protection of the Canadian fisheries, correct?

2. If so, what are the details of the said expenditure, showing how much was spent each year?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes, it is practically correct; but the statement includes, however, an amount of the $323,786 expended on the fisheries protection vessel employed in the Lower Gulf Division from 1867 to 1885, which was erroneously embraced in the cablegram conveyed by the department to the minister.

NAVAL INSTRUCTION.

Mr. MACDONELL asked :

1. Is the statement as it appears in the Colonial Conference proceedings at page 140 of the report, by the Hon. Mr. Brodeur to the effect that the government of Canada claimed credit for drilling Canadian seamen on a Canadian cruiser, correct?

2. If so, where were such Canadian seamen taking exercises and being drilled?

3. How many men were thus drilled and exercised, and how many are being so drilled and exercised at the present time, giving the stations and places at which such exercises or drill takes place?

4. What qualifications do their instructors possess?

5. How much money has been expended during the past five years, in each year, in this connection by the Canadian government?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR, (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.

2. On board all the Canadian cruisers during the summer and on board the cruiser 'Canada' and in Halifax dockyard during the winter.

3. Approximately 200 each year. During time ships are in commission on board the various cruisers. The 'Canada' is kept in commission all the year around, and her crew are under drill instruction during the whole period.

4. On board the 'Canada' there is a gunnery instructor, who was a seaman gunner in the Royal Navy. On board the other ships the instructors have received certificates from the school of instruction at the citadel in Quebec.

5. No special account for the drill has been kept, but it is included in the annual cost of the cruisers, which is as follows :

1902	$ 152,825 07
1903	145,137 99
1904	204,654 66
1905	462,082 12
1906	250,099 37

The amount in 1905 includes the cost of building the 'Canada.'

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC SUPPLIES.

Mr. WHITE asked :

1. Who has the contract for furnishing supplies for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, to be delivered via Grand lake, on the Du Moine river?

2. What section does this contract cover?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Mr. Thomas E. McCool, of Fort William P.Q., has the contract for the transport of ten tons of supplies from Moore Lake or McKay's Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Grand Lake Victoria.

2. These supplies are for the use of engineering parties in District Number Three.

PARTRIDGE ISLAND STORES.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

Who is employed to carry or ferry government stores from the city of St. John to Partridge island, in the harbour of St. John, N.B., and at what rate per round trip?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR, (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

Mr. John Abbott, of St. John, N.B. is employed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, when a boatman is required to convey stores from the city of St. John to Partridge Island. He receives $1.40 per round trip.

MR. VICTOR GAUDETTE.

Mr. R. N. WALSH—by Mr. Bergeron—asked :

1. Has Mr. Victor Gaudette, barrister, of Montreal, been employed during this parliament in any manner by the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Sorel or elsewhere?

2. If so, what is the nature of his work?

3. Is he still in the employ of the government?

4. Has he made any reports to the government?

5. What amount of money has been paid for his services by the government?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Mr. Gaudette was appointed to investigate alleged irregularities on the part of a foreman of works on Lake St. Peter.

2. His duties were as indicated.

3. Answered by Nos. 1 and 2.

4. No report has yet been received.

5. Two advances amounting to $600 have been made to him.

MR. GONZALVE DESAULNIERS.

Mr. R. N. WALSH—by Mr. Bergeron—asked :

1. Has Mr. Gonzalve Desaulniers, barrister, of the city of Montreal, been employed as translator or in any other position or work by the government during the present parliament, or since 1896?
2. Has the said Gonzalve Desaulniers during the present parliament or at any time since 1896 been employed by the government to represent them as counsel in any court of justice, or in any other capacity?
3. In how many of these cases have his services been required?
4. What amounts of money have been paid him by the government, at what time were they paid, and for what services, since the year 1896?
5. How much was paid him for the work of translation, and how much for his professional services?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I can answer the second paragraph of this question. Mr. Gonzalve Desaulniers has been employed by the Post Office Department in two cases. One was an action taken by the Postmaster General against the postmaster of Chambly for some irregularities in the postal service. Another was a case of assault committed on a letter carrier in Montreal. The amount paid to him I have not yet been able to ascertain, as I understand from the Department of Justice that the account has not yet been adjusted.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, I suppose, the other part of the question may stand?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The whole had better stand.

Question allowed to stand.

ST. LAURENT WHARF.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. How much money was voted for the enlargement of the wharf at St. Laurent, Island of Orleans?
2. How much of that sum has been expended?
3. Were the works done by contract after tender, or by day work?
4. How many overseers and timekeepers were employed, and what are their names?
5. What was the salary paid to overseers, timekeepers, carters and labourers?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. $10,150 in 1907-8.
2. Amount expended, $10,260.34.
3. Day labour.
4. Mr. Napoleon Pouliot was overseer. Mr. Joseph Bouthilette, an assistant in the office of the resident engineer at Quebec, was also superintending the work for a considerable portion of the time. The time was kept by the foreman.
5. Mr. Pouliot was paid $2.50 per day and Mr. Bouthilette $3. The wages paid to carters was $2.50 and to labourers $1.50 per day.

THE PEAT INDUSTRY.

Mr. DESJARDINS—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Did the government send Mr. Erik Nystrom, a mining engineer, or any other person, to Europe to study the peat industry?
2. If so, has a report been made thereon and will such report be distributed to the members?
3. If so, when will such distribution take place?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Yes. Mr. Nystrom last summer investigated the peat industries of Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Holland and Ireland.
2. The report is now in course of preparation.
3. It is hoped that it will be ready for distribution in about two months.

CLAIM OF FRANK MARCOUN.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

Has a commission been issued by the Department of Inland Revenue to Dr. John A. Smith, collector of customs, Windsor, to deal with the settlement of the claim of Frank Marcoun, formerly a clerk in the Walkerville inland revenue office?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN. No.

RUSCOMB RIVER WORKS.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Has the Department of Public Works entered into the project or contract of deepening the Ruscomb river for the purpose of navigation?
2. What is the estimated cost of the work?
3. What was the engineer's report on the project, and who was the engineer?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. No contract has yet been entered into.
2. Work will probably cost $6,000.
3. Mr. Lamb, engineer in charge, reports that if the river from its mouth to St. Joachim was dredged to a depth sufficient to permit navigation with large draught scows, a large amount of materials would be brought in, principally lumber, stone, fuel and different building materials, and that owing to St. Joachim being off the railway line, such an improvement would also be of particular benefit to the shipping of the products of the surrounding districts. The engineer in charge suggests that the dredging at the mouth of the river be not begun until the clearing of the river between its mouth and St. Joachim is proceeded with, as otherwise the channel would be practically of no service.

PURCHASE OF RIFLES, OTHER THAN ROSS RIFLES.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked :

1. How many rifles of military pattern, other than the Ross rifle, have been purchased by the Department of Militia and Defence since the signing of the contract with the Ross Rifle Company?

2. Where were these rifles purchased and at what cost?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia) :

1. Lee-Enfield rifles.

2. (a) From the war department, made in the Royal Small Arms factory. (b) These rifles (short Lee-Enfield) cost, approximately, $24 each, laid down in the department here, duty free. Ordnance factory cost does not include rent of land, interest on capital, or other trade charges and risks, not incurred in government manufacture.

Rifles purchased from the trade would cost, according to an estimate of the British government, about 44 per cent more in England than those made in the Royal Small Arms factory. About half the rifles for the War Department and India are purchased from the trade.

P. E. I. RAILWAY—COMPLAINTS MADE.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens) asked :

1. What demands were made upon the Department of Railways and Canals by a conference of the Board of Trade of Prince Edward Island last spring at which Deputy Minister Butler and the Intercolonial officials assisted?

2. Was any encouragement given by the Deputy Minister of redress from excessive charges and conditions on the Prince Edward Island Railway and its outlets and inlets?

3. Has anything been done to remedy the grievances exposed and admitted?

4. If so, what?

5. If not, why not?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. A memorial was submitted setting forth a number of things which the board of trade desired.

2. The deputy minister promised to report the facts to the government and this was done.

3. A number of the difficulties complained of have been remedied.

4. Too voluminous to answer in the form of a question.

5. Answered by No. 4.

P. E. I. RAILWAY—TIME-TABLE.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens) asked :

1. Does the Minister of Railways and Canals know that a time-table, against which the whole province of Prince Edward Island has protested, and which is considered entirely unsatisfactory, was operated last winter in that province and is advertised to be operated again this winter?

2. Does the minister intend, in the face of this general opposition, to force such winter time-table on the province, or remove it as was asked for last winter by an indignation meeting at the capital?

3. How does any such treatment of an isolated province of the confederation square with the recently announced policy of the minister, promising efficiency of public service, as well as economic administration?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). My hon. friend (Mr. A. Martin, Queens) can hardly expect me to answer this question in the form in which it is—a mass of allegations and arguments rather than a plain question.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). Well, leave the argument out.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is for the hon. gentleman to do in asking the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is really out of order in its present form.

IMPORTS FROM FRANCE.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. What is the value of imports from France for each year during the past five years?

2. Of this amount, what proportion has been imported direct from France to Canada?

3. What proportion has been brought to Canada through British or continental ports?

4. What proportion has been brought to Canada through United States ports?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. The value of imports (for consumption) from France to Canada is :

$6,580,029 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903 ; $6,206,525 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1904 ; $7,059,139 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905 ; $7,667,987 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906 ; $6,699,412 for nine months ended March 31, 1907.

2. These imports have all been consigned direct from France to Canada as through shipments, but a portion of them has been carried 'in transitu' through other countries.

3 and 4. The tables of trade and navigation do not show what proportion of these imports have been brought into Canada through British, Continental or United States ports. We could not get this information without going back to the original documents, which would involve a large amount of labour, which, I think, perhaps, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) would not ask us to undertake. But, if he feels that the information is really necessary, we will try to get it for him, but it will take time.

Mr. DANIEL. Could the minister furnish the amounts brought in each year directly by the Canadian-France line, since that line went into operation ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

TOWN SITE PROPERTY, SECTION 32, TOWNSHIP 10, RANGE 4, EAST OF FIRST.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

1. Has the government had any application from, or negotiation with, any person or persons respecting the construction of a post office or other public buildings at a town site in section 32, township 10, range 4, east of the first meridian, province of Manitoba?
2. If so, who are such persons?
3. Has there been correspondence on such subject, and with whom?
4. Has there been application to the government to do any drainage or other work at such town site? If so, by whom, and what was the nature of the work?
5. Has the government made any inquiry as to the probable cost of such drainage, or other work and with what result?
6. Has the government given any and what answer or promise, on the subject or is it still under the government's consideration?
7. So far as the government is aware, who are the persons interested in the town site property?

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The subject-matter of this question would properly belong to the Public Works Department, but there are no applications or correspondence relating thereto in the department.

RIFLE ACCIDENT AT EASTMAN, QUEBEC.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Crocket—asked :

1. Did an accident occur at Eastman, Quebec, in October, 1907, during a rifle match between exponents of the Lee-Enfield and the Ross rifles?
2. If so, what was the nature of the accident?
3. By what rifle was the accident caused, and who was the party injured?
4. Was a board of inquiry held? If so, what was the finding of the board?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Yes, on the 2nd October, 1907. The evidence does not say anything about a comparison between Lee-Enfield and Ross rifles.
2. Firing of the cartridge on closing of breech and explosion of receiver.
3. Mark 1, No. E. 923 (Ross rifle). Mr. Peabody and Captain J. T. Scale.
4. Yes. The board reports that, from the evidence so far adduced, it is impossible to arrive at a definite conclusion as to the immediate cause of the accident, and recommends that all the broken parts, exhibits and proceedings be sent to experts for their examination and report.

Since this answer was prepared, the Master General of Ordnance, Brig. General Cotton, has informed me that the rifle to which the accident occurred had undoubtedly been tampered with by filing the cocking piece, &c. He also handed me a telegram just received from Major Pym, inspector of small arms, which reads as follows :—

Quebec, January 11, 1908.

Master General of the Ordnance, Militia Department, Ottawa, Ontario.

Investigation by Mr. Barnes and myself in the Eastman accident shows that the cooking piece has been rendered defective and could have fired the cartridge on closing the bolt. This has been repeated in other rifles using the same bolt. There is not a sign of obstruction in barrel having caused the explosion. Experiments to test strength of material not yet complete. Hope in a week.

MAJOR PYM.

SHIPMENTS OF DOG-FISH SCRAP.

Mr. BLAIN—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. Did the government make any shipments of 'Dog-fish scrap' from their works at Canso to parties in the United States? If so, when and to whom?
2. Was the shipment sold by the ton or by the proportion of fertilizing matter, or how otherwise?
3. What amount was received by the government from the shipment?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes. To Messrs. Harvey & Outerbridge, 11 Broadway, New York, in September and October, 1907, who make the best offer which the department could obtain at the time from either the United States or Canada.
2. On the proportion of fertilizing matter.
3. $9,587.43 net.

MR. W. A. TEMPLE.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What appointment is held by W. A. Temple, Yukon, when was he appointed, what is his salary and expenses yearly, and what are the duties he is supposed to perform?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. W. A. Temple is not an employee of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Temple entered the service of the department in August, 1903, being placed in charge of certain machinery, including diamond drills, acquired for the purpose of encouraging prospecting operations in the Yukon Territory. Up to the first of July, 1904, he received a salary of $350 per month, which included living allowance. From the first of July, 1904, to the 17th of December following, he received a salary of the rate of $200 per month and $1,000 a year living allowance. From the first of January, 1905, to the 30th of June following, when his services terminated, he received a salary at the rate of $200 per month and a living allowance of $100 per month.

YUKON—WHISKY PERMIT AGENTS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

Who are the whisky permit agents for the various districts of the Yukon, and what is the salary attached in each case?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Section 6 of an ordinance enacted by His Excellency in Council dated the 22nd of June, 1904, provides that the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory may appoint, prescribe the duties, and fix the salary of a chief preventive officer, and of such other officers and assistants as he considers necessary for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the ordinance, but the salaries and expenses of such chief preventive officer and other officers and assistants shall be paid from the local revenue of the said territory. As the agents referred to are employees of the territorial government the information asked for is not of record in the Department of the Interior, but the Commissioner of the Territory has been asked to furnish this information at an early date.

MR. W. C. YOUNG.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What were the charges preferred against W. C. Young, mining inspector, of Clear Creek, Yukon?
2. What inquiry was made therein, and with what result?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Mr. W. C. Young was charged with having, while mining inspector for the Clear Creek mining district in the Yukon Territory, acquired large mining interests in that district.

2. An investigation into the charges preferred against Mr. Young was held by Mr. F. X. Gosselin, assistant gold commissioner, under instructions from the Minister of the Interior, and the conclusion arrived at was these charges must be dismissed and Mr. Young reinstated in his office of mining recorder for the district mentioned. Mr. Young subsequently tendered his resignation which was accepted.

TIMBER LICENSES IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. How many timber licenses are in force now in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?
2. How many of the current licenses are renewals of licenses issued originally prior to July, 1896?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. 367.
2. 56.

Mr. OLIVER.

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEYS.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

How much money has been expended by the Canadian government up to the present time in connection with hydrographic surveys, and the amounts so spent each year, with details?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The last part of the hon. gentleman's question would require a notice of motion, but I am ready to give information as to the first part.

Mr. MACDONELL. Answer the question as far as you can.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount expended up to the present time is $1,154,352.

EXPENDITURES IN THE YUKON.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER. When this question was asked:

What was the total Dominion revenue and consolidated fund expenses, and capital expenses in the Yukon, from March 31, to June 30, 1907——

I was not in the House, but I understood the question stood as a notice of motion. That would not serve my purpose. I only ask for information down to the 30th of June, just three sets of figures.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am informed that the information would probably have to be obtained from several departments; therefore, it will be more convenient if the hon. gentleman will allow the question to stand at present, and I will make further inquiry.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the names of Mr. P. D. McLean and Mr. Stanfield be added to the following committees: Public Accounts, Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, and Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

NAVAL STATION AT ESQUIMALT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and papers since January 1, 1900, touching the continued maintenance of the naval station at Esquimalt, B.C., or relating to any efforts of the government of Canada to secure the continued maintenance of that naval station?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I have no objection to this motion passing; but as I said a few minutes ago, this may be the subject of confidential negotiations for correspondence between the British government and the Canadian government. But it is probable that the contract will soon pass, and then the correspondence will be brought down. I may say to the hon. gentleman that it will not be possible to bring down this correspondence before the contract is signed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. The contract between the imperial government and the Canadian government for taking over these dock yards.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman will of course use his own judgment with regard to that. This motion, as well as the question stated on the Order Paper, relate to the British North America Act as amended by the conditions and stipulations under which British Columbia came into the union. That is the reason I am asking the question.

Motion agreed to.

ACCESS TO ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine) moved :

For a return laying upon the table of this House the original applications and tenders in respect of timber berths 1107, 1108 and 1171.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that any objection whatever should be raised to the passage of this resolution, the subject of which has been referred to on frequent occasions in this House. The principle involved is a very simple one. It is simply that we contend that there are certain occasions when we are entitled to access to original documents. I think it is an accepted principle of parliamentary practice that members are entitled to the fullest information upon matters which are of public concern. We who wish to investigate matters are dependent upon the government for this information. A typewritten copy of a document does not always carry the information that is desired. There are occasions, such as have occurred several times in bringing down documents to this House, where the documents do not contain all the information which we are entitled to have. Now, I think that the government can hardly take the ground that they are entitled to withhold certain documents without assuming that there is some state interest which can be invoked as a justification for denying us the privilege of access to these documents. In this case it therefore seems to me that if the government wish to refuse to members of the opposition the opportunity of examining these documents that I mention they must allege that there are grave interests at stake which make it inadvisable that these documents should be seen by members of the opposition. Last year, when a debate was about to take place in this House, a return was laid on the table of the House and several members of the opposition had an opportunity of examining it. There were certain features about that return that led them to think that it would be advisable to see the original. I, for one, called at the Department of the Interior and was shown, without the slightest hesitation by the deputy minister, the originals of the returns which had been copied. By having access to these originals I obtained certain information which was of great value in discussing the question in the House. Since that time I understand that strict orders have been given that no member of this House shall be permitted by the Deputy Minister of the Interior to see any original documents. Therefore, the only method open to us is to ask that these original documents be laid on the table of the House in order that we may see them in that way. The members of the opposition have introduced some four or five resolutions asking for information regarding certain leases of timber areas in the Canadian Northwest. We could not secure the passing of these orders until all reference to original documents was struck out of them. We contend that we have a perfect right to ask for the originals and the government must allege very good reasons to justify them in refusing us access to such papers. This motion has been drafted purely and simply to test that one question, because we consider that we have sufficient reasons for desiring to see the original applications and tenders in respect to timber berths Nos. 1107, 1108 and 1171.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). As my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) who has just sat down, mentioned at an earlier stage of the session there appeared on the order paper certain notices for the production of original documents. When I saw those notices on the paper I referred the matter to the deputy of the department as to the practice in such cases and I beg to read to the House a report that he made to me:

Ottawa, December 6, 1907.

Memorandum.

I beg to call your attention to the fact that in the order papers of the House of Commons of the 4th instant notices of motion appear from Messrs. Lake, White and Boyce, for returns of papers respecting the granting of certain timber berths, including the original applications and tenders received and of record in the department. A notice also is given in the order paper of the 5th instant of a motion by Mr. Ames for a return of the papers respecting timber berth No. 1279, including memoranda of any description. As the production of official papers appears to be a departure from the practice which has been generally followed in the past I took occasion to make a very careful inquiry throughout the records of the department and find that original files have never been produced in the House, except on one occasion, during last session, when some of our original documents were sent over to the House and were never returned. I presume that the same have now become a part of the record of the House, instead of this department. I also consulted on the subject some of the older deputy ministers of other departments including Mr. Newcombe, the deputy minister of Justice, who has held that office since the year 1893, Mr. Parmalee, the deputy minister of Trade and Commerce, who has also held his office for the same length of time, Lieut.-Col. White, the comptroller of the Northwest Mounted Police, who has been in office since 1883, and Mr. W. J. Gerald, whose connection with the government dates back to before confederation. I may say that they none of them remember a single instance where parliament has ordered the production of original official records, and all of them expressed a strong objection to such a precedent being established.

While it has been customary in some cases, in answer to an order from special or standing committees of the House, to submit original documents for examination, such documents have never been left with committees of the House, except in the case of this department, when on one or two occasions original files were left with committees of the House, and were not returned until after considerable delay, which caused great inconvenience to the officers of the department dealing with the matter to which these papers related.

In the case of other departments I learned that while in some cases they have been required to produce original documents, such documents, as a matter of fact, never left the hands of the officers of the department submitting the same, and under the circumstances I am strongly of the opinion that this practice should be followed in future. I need not point out that, if in answer to an order of this kind, original papers were submitted to the House they would therefore become a part of its own official record, and would for ever after remain in its custody. This, in so far as the general transaction of public business is concerned, would lead to serious complications, and if the practice of calling for original documents were thereafter indulged in the result would be that the records of the department would soon be depleted.

As regards the production of memoranda or statements of facts passing between the heads of branches and the minister or deputy minister of a department, the deputy ministers whom I consulted have expresed the opinion, in which I fully concur, that these do not as a matter of fact form part of the official record, but are merely written communications which otherwise if time permitted could be conveyed verbally as between the officers concerned, and that the same can have no direct bearing upon the consideration or settlement of the cases to which they may refer. With regard to these papers, therefore, I would strongly urge that any attempt to compel the department to produce the same should be resisted.

In my opinion these notices of motion should be amended by providing for returns of copies of the documents which constitute the official record of the transaction under notice.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is that signed by?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. W. W. Cory. My hon. friend and his colleagues on the other side have seen fit to attempt to establish a precedent, which, on the best evidence I can offer to the House would absolutely prevent the proper transaction of the public business which the department concerned exists for the purpose of transacting. Under these circumstances it seems to me necessary in the public interest—the very public interest that my hon. friend alluded to; the interest of the State—that this request should not be granted. If it is necessary and in the public interest that this document should be produced in the original, as this memorandum says, what has been done in the past may be done again. The files may be called for by a special committee, an officer of the department may bring these files before the committee, they may be examined by members of the committee in the custody and under the responsibility of the officers of the department and then be returned to the department. But to transfer the original documents from the department whose business they form an essential part of, to this House where they will only constitute a record, as has been set out very fully in this memorandum, is an infringement upon business methods which it is impossible for the department to consent to. I may say that the matter became urgent because of the fact alluded to in this memorandum, that without regard to precedent, during last session certain original documents were brought into the House and we find the department and the business of the country suffering because of the absence of these papers to-day. That was done to satisfy to the fullest extent the demand for the fullest information in regard to the matters in question. It would seem to me that when that precedent was being used to practically deplete the department of its original documents it was necessary to place the matter before the House as I have done.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The question that has been brought up in this resolution is a rather important one and the way it has been met by the Minister of the Interior does not at all take away from the importance which it has intrinsically. I suppose after all, the business of the country is the concern of the people's representatives who are the only workable mechanism that the people have at hand to transact their business. A million of voters scattered among six millions of people throughout Canada is a machinery which is too complex, too much scattered, and altogether unfitted to transact public business in an effective way. In order to get over that difficulty the machinery of elections is introduced and instead of one million or more of electors being here to transact business, it is done by 214 or 215 members. So that when we come down to this House of Commons, there is really the body that is governing this country, there is the body which votes every dollar, there is the body which directs how it is to be expended, there is the body which must know in the last analysis how every dollar has been expended and how its business has been conducted. And when the representatives of the people of this country ask to know even to the minutest detail what business has been done and how it has been done and to make examination into it, it seems to me that that, in the last analysis, must over-ride any theory or any convenience of an employee of the 214 representatives who carry on the business of the people in this House of Commons.

Mr. OLIVER.

Therefore when the minister says point blank that on the recommendation of his deputy he has come to the conclusion to refuse the demand of this House, to refuse the demands of the representatives of the people in this House for the original documents, I think he has taken a position, in which, as a minor part of the system, he throws himself athwart the real governing and determining body of the country. So that if it is the wish of the parliament or the wish of the House of Commons, to see just exactly how a document stands which came into the hands of a department by way of tender which went through by way of contract, to see the name that wrote it, to see the amount that was put within it, to scan the paper to know whether the amount of money that was stated there was ever changed in the matter of the colouring of the ink or in the matter of the figures, to see exactly what was there as it originally came in and what may have been placed there after it came in by way of interpolation or the like of that ; it seems to me that when the people demand that, the convenience of a deputy minister must step aside and he must in some way or other find means of obviating a little inconvenience or else of submitting to it in order that the people's wish should be complied with. Now, an hon. gentleman may rise and say : That is all very well but you have not yet demonstrated that the representatives of the people in parliament want it ; there are two parties in this House and you may not get this voted, and if you cannot get a majority you cannot say the House of Commons has demanded it, and therefore your reasoning falls to the ground. But if my reasoning is right on the question of principle, any one representative of the people has the right to go as far as all the representatives of the people in this House have with reference to a view of, and an examination of the documents. If not you will have an intolerable tyranny. A body of men by being in the majority might repress all examination and keep from the people every document in all the departments. It has always been recognized in this House that unless there are reasons of state that intervene the information is brought down on the call and the wish of any member of parliament who has a reasonable claim and makes it known to this House.

Now, as to the inconveniences, mountains may be easily made out of mole-hills, and I think the deputy minister has constructed such a mountain in this case. He cited one or two instances where important papers have been brought down in the original and in some way or other have been lost. But how many hundreds of thousands of original documents have passed through the hands of deputy ministers, have been used in the way of business by the House and its committees and how infinitesimally small a proportion of them have been lost. It has even happened that in the departments themselves parts of documents have been lost, frequently important parts. Thus I think the objection urged is not an insuperable one. All proper care should be taken to see that the original documents brought down should be returned; you might even go so far as to demand that when original documents are brought to the House and laid on the table they should be inspected on the table or under the supervision of the clerk. If there is danger of loss then every precaution to prevent it should be taken. But the minister gave away the whole claim of a principle when he admitted that the committees appointed by the House have had from the time that we have had government, the undoubted right to the original documents; have exercised that right, and have carried on their investigations under the exercise of that right almost without cavil. Since I have been a member of the Public Accounts Committee, I have never heard the question raised; I have never yet seen that committee refuse to pass a motion for an order for the original documents. That is the practice, and hon. gentlemen will see in a moment that if it were not the practice it would be almost impossible for that committee to carry on its work. Unfortunately we live under a system of vicious patronage under which clerks often get and keep their offices by taking off their hats and by being sweet to those who are the dispensers of offices, and think that their future promotion and increase in salary depends on their making themselves agreeable to the people in power. It may always have been the case, it is undoubtedly so now, that many civil servants feel that the royal path to promotion and increased salary is to see that nothing is allowed to get out which would be at all a danger or menace or disagreeable to their party. Under such a system it becomes doubly necessary that the people's representatives should see the departmental files in their original form if this becomes necessary to the transaction of public business. On what ground has the minister the right to step in at this late day and say to the parliament of Canada: My deputy will be somewhat inconvenienced if these papers are brought down in the original form, and he asked me to refuse and I say to the House that I do refuse, and that the members shall not have these papers. Surely the Prime Minister will never subscribe to such a doctrine.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to have to say that not only have I no hesitation in endorsing the doctrine laid down by my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), but if the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) permits me to say so, I am very much scandalized by the argument he has just put forward. There is no doubt whatever that every member of this House is entitled to reasonable information as to every transaction which goes on in the government offices. But, Sir, this is not a right which can be exercised simply at the caprice of any hon. member; there must be some reason for that, and the authorities in this matter are perfectly clear. I have only to quote that standard authority, recognized not only in this parliament but in every parliament where British institutions prevail, Dr. Todd, who, in his 'Parliamentary Government in England,' says:

> It is 'the rule of parliament that no papers shall be laid on the table of either House unless some sufficient reasons have been stated for their production.'

In this House members have always been given the latitude to move for papers without being asked for their reasons, it being assumed that since members move for papers they have good reason for doing so and the information is always brought down; it is never refused except upon very good reasons, which reasons it is the duty of the government to state to the House. Such a motion is never refused when it is made in the manner recognized in every parliament, that is to say that copies and not the originals are asked for. I have only again on this point to cite the authority I have just quoted. Dr. Todd says:

> When 'copies' of correspondence, &c., are moved for by private members it is customary to add 'or extracts'; leaving to ministers a discretion as to despatches which it may be advisable to lay before parliament and as to those which it may be expedient, in whole or in part, to withhold.

My hon. friend is, like myself, an old parliamentarian, and I appeal to his memory that such a motion as has been made today by my hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) is absolutely unprecedented. I have no recollection in my experience, until last year, of original documents ever being asked for. The hon. gentleman has stated that a contingency might arise which would call for the production of an original, but surely a reason for such a motion should be stated. The hon. gentleman said that if a document had been tampered with, if a signature had been altered or an erasure and substitution made, the original would be required. If the hon. gentleman were to allege that he has reason to believe, as a member of this House, and alleges that a certain document has been tampered with that would be a very different proposition. That is not the position of the hon. gentleman, he simply asks that the original be moved for. Why? There is an implication that something wrong has been done under such circumstances. The government is not prepared to admit that there has been anything wrong or to presume that a fraud has been committed in any department of the government or by any party who has dealings with the government. Therefore the hon. gentleman is entitled in this, as in every other question, to have the information in the form that has always been followed in parliament. My hon. friend says that the inconvenience or convenience of any officers of the departments of the government should not stand in the way of information being given. I agree to that entirely; the convenience or inconvenience of any department is not to stand in the way of any legitimate information that is asked for being supplied. But the hon. gentleman realizes that although the inconvenience of any department is not an argument against any motion, after all there are rules and regulations that have been followed in this House as in every other public body. The departments are the custodians of the records of the government, and the hon. gentleman realizes fully that if it is competent for the hon. member for St. Antoine Division of Montreal (Mr. Ames) to move for an original document without advancing any substantial reason, it is competent for any other member to do so, and in this way the records of the department might be transferred from the departments to this House. The hon. gentleman will realize that under such circumstances it would not be possible to carry on the business of the country as it must be carried on.

The hon. gentleman realizes that under such circumstances it would not be possible to carry on the business of the country as it must be carried on. The hon. gentleman cited examples from the committees. The hon. gentleman knows that there is no parity whatever between what takes place in committees of this House and what takes place here. In committees of the House, which are appointed to investigate, the Public Accounts Committee especially, it may become necessary to have the original documents produced; it may be impossible to carry on the investigation without them. Under such circumstances it is for the committee to decide whether or not the original records should be produced. A motion for them has to be made, and the gentleman seeking information may very properly say to the committee, I cannot get the information I am seeking unless I have the original records. Under such circumstances they are not denied; but under the rule, the committee would have the same power as this House to deny such an application It is not denied, because generally the committee perceive that it is advisable in order to obtain the full information which the hon. member making the motion desires, to have the original records brought before it. But the practice is, whenever original records are moved for in a committee and are ordered to be brought down, to have them brought down by an officer of the department, who remains the custodian of them, and who takes them back to the department when the committee is done with them. But the hon. gentleman must agree with me that it is advisable—nay, it is necessary to the proper discharge of the duties which are entrusted to the departments of the government—that each department should be the custodian of its own records. These seem to me to be peremptory reasons why the motion of my hon. friend from Montreal should not be allowed, and why we should adhere to the practice which has been invariable in this House, as my hon. friend knows, that copies of documents are brought down and not original documents, unless cause is shown for bringing them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says that information is always afforded to any member of this House who moves for a return, upon the theory that there is some good reason for the motion, although it need not be stated. A legitimate extension of that principle would entitle any member of this House who moves for original documents to have them. I see no distinction between the one case and the other. No reasons are required to be assigned in the one case; why should reasons be required to be assigned in the other case? The Prime Minister is taking an entirely different ground, in the first instance at least, from that taken by the Minister of the Interior. The Minister of the Interior puts the refusal of original documents entirely on the ground of inconvenience and danger of loss. The inconvenience and danger of loss can be entirely minimized by providing that these documents, when they come into the possession of the clerk of the House, shall not leave his possession until they are returned to the department.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I was explicit in saying that we could not carry on the business of the department if there were a general demand made for original documents and that demand were complied with.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many of the demand for original documents.

Mr. OLIVER. It seems to me that the demand was becoming general, from the number of motions made for them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many of the files of the department have been asked for? I venture to say not one-tenth of one per cent, and if you look at the circumstances for one moment, you will see that there is no ground whatever for the minister's suggestion of inconvenience or danger of loss. A file is asked for by a member of this House on his responsibility as a member of this House; and, on the principle acceded to by the Prime Minister, that request should be granted unless there is some good reason set forth by the Minister of the Interior to the contrary. So far as danger or loss is concerned, that can be obviated by providing that an original document shall not leave the possession of the clerk of this House, that any member of this House who is desirous to inspect it can go to the clerk and examine it, but that neither he nor any other person shall be permitted to take that file from the possession of the clerk of this House, and at the conclusion of the session or at some earlier convenient time, it may be sent back to the department. So much for the supposed danger of loss. So far as inconvenience is concerned, if there were a general demand for all the files of the department, I could understand that it might be inconvenient, just as a general demand for copies of all the files of the department would be. The absolute impossibility of complying with such a demand would be a sufficient answer to it. But no such demand is made. The only thing asked for is that some half dozen documents from the files of the department should be brought to this House, in order that hon. members who believe that they have a perfect right to examine those documents should have an opportunity of doing so. What is the present position of affairs ? Every member on the other side of the House is permitted by the Minister of the Interior and the officers of the department to examine these files, while members on this side are refused that opportunity. Therefore one-half or two-thirds of the members of parliament have a right to inspect the public records of this country, while those who are not in sympathy with the government of the day have no such opportunity, either by having the documents brought here and placed in the possession of the clerk of the House, or by going to the department and examining the files.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him ? I wish to say that the order applies to all members of this House, whether on one side or the other

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. Minister of the Interior must regard us as extremely credulous if he expects us to believe that any such practice as that is carried out. Why, even the man Lazarus, or Leopold, or whatever his name is, had the right to go into the immigration offices in London and examine the files of this country which members of parliament, under the ruling of the Prime Minister, are not allowed to examine.

Mr. OLIVER. Since when ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was stated in evidence in 1905 or 1906, before one of the committees of this House that Mr. Lazarus not only had his office in the same building as the immigration offices in the city of London, but had the run of the files of those offices and used frequently to examine those files for the purpose of ascertaining what demands there were for immigrants to this country. That evidence was given, either orally or in a letter, I do not at present member which, before a committee of this House.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend know whether Mr. Lazarus is able to examine these files now or not ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the minister has been constrained into making a change in that regard or not. I do know that the man who permitted that to be done, and whose conduct the Minister of the Interior promised to investigate—promised to one of his supporters in this House—has been retained in the service of this government and promoted to another department, although the evidence was plain and distinct and clear, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that he had been carrying on a propaganda in the city of London against the express public orders of this government, although we do not know how far it may have had the sanction of this government by private instructions. The result is that under the practice, which at one time at least was carried on in the immigration offices in the city of London, this man conducting a private business enterprise, with the assent of Mr. Preston, although against the public policy of the government as expressed over and over again in this country, was permitted to examine the original public files of this government, which no member of parliament is permitted to do, under the ruling of the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior. And it seems a remarkable condition of affairs, under a Liberal administration, that to this man Lazarus is conceded greater power than the representatives of the people of Canada in parliament assembled. For that is the real issue that has been placed before the House by the Prime Minister. There is no inconvenience in carrying out what has been advocated by the hon. member for St. Antoine—no more inconvenience than is entailed by the demand upon the government for the production of copies of documents. There is no danger of loss under the conditions to which I have alluded. The action of the government in refusing the motion can be attributed to only one reason, that there are upon the orginal files of the public documents of this country entries which these gentlemen do not wish disclosed. There is no doubt about that. It would never have been known to the parliament of this country that a certain report had been altered by one of the departments of this government, that clauses not very favourable to the administration had been deliberately struck out of that report, unless we had happened to procure, before a committee of the House, the production of one of the original files of the department. When the Prime Minister declares that before these original documents can be produced it must be stated, upon the knowledge of some member, that there is good reason to suspect something wrong, does not he understand the position which he is taking? He is taking the position that we ought to know that which we cannot possibly know until these files are brought down. If there is nothing to withhold, why is there any reluctance to produce these files? It can only be attributed to one reason—that there are on the public files of this country and in the public documents entries which the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior and the cabinet as a whole do not want disclosed to the people. I for one do not for a moment subscribe to the doctrine enunciated by the Prime Minister. He declares that a committee of this House should and does possess greater powers than this House as a whole—that a committee may send to any department and ask for the production of the original documents in any particular case, but that this House may not do so. The committee derives the only authority it possesses from this House, and it is a new doctrine to me that the agent, the delegate, the servant of this House—which that committee is, subject at all times to the jurisdiction and superintendence of the House—possesses powers in this regard that are not possessed by the House itself. There can be no good reason assigned for that, and I venture to think that the right hon. gentleman is departing from the principles of our government, departing altogether from the principle of affording to the people's representatives in parliament every possible information respecting public affairs, when he sees fit to assent, as he has done, to the doctrine laid down by the Minister of the Interior. His action will bring suspicion into the minds of all classes of people in this country and into the minds of the people's representatives in parliament that this department, the administration of which has excited a good deal of criticism of recent years, is connected with matters which the right hon. gentleman, for reasons best known to himself, desires to conceal from the people. For my part, I think the motion of my hon. friend from St. Antoine is a proper motion, and one which, within a reasonable limit, should be conceded by the government. And this motion is so far within reasonable limits that I am prepared for my part, to give it my support.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). One would think from the address of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that he was discussing some resolution asking for papers in regard to which there was some suspicion or charge of wrong doing. But, as I understand the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), he moved this resolution as an academic resolution pure and simple. He made no charges of suspicion ; he did not say that he had any suspicion in regard to the documents—

Mr. BERGERON. Why should he ?

Mr. LANCASTER. How could he tell until he sees the documents?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Suspicions are roused, charges are made, and if it were not for that there would be no trials in courts of justice and no call for documents, which, frequently, are not seen before you go into the trial in the court. And to speak of the action of this man Lazarus is merely to attempt to draw a red herring across the scent; it is an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of the people. What have we to do in relation to this matter with what a man named Lazarus in London may or may not have done? The question is not whether Lazarus did right or did wrong. The question is a mere academic discussion whether original state papers should be placed on the table of the House of Commons. Surely the leader of the opposition does not mean—

Mr. FOSTER. Are these state papers?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I certainly say they are.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Undoubtedly so. Everything in the possession of the government is a state paper.

Some hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Hon. gentlemen opposite may shake their heads as much as they like. They will find if ever they go into a court of justice and ask for the production of documents in charge of the government, and a minister of the Crown chooses to say I refuse to produce these papers for state reasons, no court of justice will order those documents to be produced.

Mr. SPROULE. It is different with the high court of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no such general rule as the hon. gentleman (Mr. L. G. McCarthy) has laid down.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I say there is. I have heard that rule laid down by eminent judges.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It must be grounded upon reasons of state, and not merely upon the fact that these are state papers.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Exactly what I said, and the hon. gentleman knows it full well. And again he is trying to draw a red herring across the scent, or else he did not listen to my words. I said that if in court a minister of the Crown states that he refuses to produce papers for State reasons——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman did not listen, or he would have heard what I said. My words are on record in 'Hansard.' I said that if in a court a minister of the Crown says that for State reasons he refuses to produce public documents called for, no court would order him to produce them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understoood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Leighton McCarthy) to state that the mere fact that these were papers in charge of a department of government was sufficient reason for withholding them.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) misunderstood me. He did not catch my words.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the argument has no relevancy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to like what I am saying. I quite understand that, because my argument is a complete answer to the position they are taking here to-day. Now, as I was saying, what a man named Lazarus, in London, may or may not have done, and whether he had or had not the right to do what he did, has nothing to do with the resolution before the House, and can only have been introduced into the argument for the purpose of throwing dust into the eyes of the people, and blinding the real issue involved in this motion. It is said that this resolution asks for only three, or four, or five, or six, files of the department, an infinitesimal number as compared with those in the possession of the department. But admit the principle that these papers, upon a resolution—a mere academic discussion—are to be placed upon the table of this House, and what is to prevent any member from asking for a dozen or a hundred files from various departments? And if the argument of the hon. gentleman is correct, how could such a demand be refused? There would be no right to refuse it. Grant the principle and the conclusion is so obvious that it is not necessary to argue it. Unless some suspicion is alleged to exist that documents have been altered, or that there is something wrong, there is no reason for asking for original documents. Surely the copies should be sufficient. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) alleges that by allowing these documents to be produced in committee we concede to the committee power to do that which the House cannot do. Why, that occurs frequently. The House, for instance, never thinks of taking up the trial of matters pertaining to elections—that is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SPROULE. By what authority ?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The House of Commons gives the authority, it delegates the committee to summon witnesses to bring documents. The House has done it and the House does it, deeming it a more convenient mode and a better system for getting original documents. Take almost any committee, take the Public Accounts Committee ; there this House has created a certain machinery, power is given by this House to that committee. It does not order those original papers to be produced, but it orders and subpœnas witnesses with those original papers, the depositary of the papers generally being a deputy head. I suppose the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has been a member of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I have, and if you take the motions as there recorded you will find that in five cases out of ten the orders for papers are not accompanied with subpœnas to witnesses to produce them.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I think the hon. gentleman will find that my experience is correct until, possibly, up to this session, at all events, that the motions have been for copies, that if you want to see the originals you order direct or summon the deputy head or some member of the department to bring the originals. I know one or two instances where that was done. Anyway, that is the machinery adopted, and I submit to this House that it is the practice that ought to be adopted. It has reason in it and sound common sense. If you want original documents, subpœna the officer having custody of these documens, and he brings them here, lets you inspect them. You have the fullest right of inspection, and that officer is responsible for those documents and must take care of them. I say that is the machinery this House has created, and it is the practice that has been adopted. If that is so, why should we reverse the practice ? No doubt, originals of State papers are not produced as a rule. The originals can be refused production by the minister simply stating that for State reasons he will not produce them. Now are we going to reverse that practice in an academic discussion of this question ? The hon. gentleman says he has no charges to make in regard to those documents but he wants a test question decided whether we should order the production of original documents in all cases or not. If you pass this resolution you would give the right to any member to ask for the production of as many files as he pleases.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not ?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Suppose you brought all thr files from the various departments and laid them on the table—why the notion is ridiculous, it is absurd, and only needs to be stated to refute itself. You could not carry on the business of the country if that practice prevailed.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is evident that the hon. member (Mr. L. G. McCarthy) has not been as long in this House as some other members of it, or else his memory of the recent past is very poor. If he had been here longer or had been a reader of the public press he would be aware of the fact that an almost similar question was debated at great length by supporters of the party whom the hon. gentleman supports to-day. In the long inquiry in 1891 over the Connolly-McGreevy case, a refusal was made to bring documents and put them in possession of the committee because they were personal to the witness, and every decision of that committee was that they be produced. When that committee required more authority they applied to the House of Commons and got it. I remember seeing these accounts being brought in to the committee, they were in a strong box bound with a logging chain. The answer of the witness was, I am advised by my solicitor that these things are private matters and cannot be put before the Committee. What was Sir John Thompson's reply? The order of the House is that these documents be placed before this committee—and they were immediately placed before that committee. There was no refusal after that. Now, whenever the committee wanted authority, from what source did it get its authority? it got it from this House. Therefore the authority of this House must be greater than that of any committee. Then by the same reasoning, when you go into that Public Accounts Committee you order these documents, not by subpœna, but by the mere order of the committee that the officials be ordered to appear before that committee and bring with them the original documents. These are placed in the possession of the committee, and any member has a right to examine them. Is there any objection to that? The documents remain in possession of that committee sometimes for months. It is true, they are under the care of the clerk of the committee, but any member of this House has access to them at any time. Now would it not be a very inconvenient practice if, as we have found it to be the case, some of the members of this House can go into the department here and examine original documents while members of the other side of the House, when they go there, are refused by the officials? That has happened over and over again. It is not only inconvenient but is improper. What is available to one member of this House ought to be available to every member. All parliamentary procedure and practice support that contention. That has been the practice from time immemorial, as long as I have had any remembrance of what has taken place in this House. In Bourinot there are certain things stated that members of this House cannot expect to see. Here are some of them: When an investigation is going on, or State negotiations are going on, these may be kept private until they are completed, or for State reasons they may be refused. But the responsible minister of the Crown who answers the questions says that for state reasons, not for private reasons, he cannot produce them. Another answer is that they are confidential, and when a minister of the Crown declares they are confidential then the House has no right to inspect those documents. Another case is in regard to engineers' estimates; it is not considered desirable that they should be made public because other parties may desire to tender on the same contract, and the government does not wish to give out the information in its possession with regard to the cost until the contract is made. Or there may be considerations of public policy. The government may regard the production an interference with public policy, and for State reasons may refuse the documents. In that case they are bound to assume the responsibility of the refusal, and every member of this House must accept the refusal, so far as it is not inconsistent with the practice of this House or of the British parliament. But on the other hand, after a contract is given, the original tenders may be produced, and any letters in connection therewith. The correspondence or the originals thereof are always produced, and so far as I remember the House has never refused to produce them. All accounts are produced from year to year before the Public Accounts Committee and other committees, not copies of the accounts, but the originals themselves, and the original correspondence in connection with them. We have found in some cases that accounts were mutilated, and how could we know that unless we had a right to examine the originals? Now, Mr. Bourinot has set out certain things that should be refused. He goes on to say:

> The right of a member to obtain every information from the government within the limits previously described, is so undoubted that it seems almost beyond the power of a minister to keep the practice within narrow bounds

It is so undoubted it is accepted by common consent by the English parliament and by the parliament of Canada, that if a minister refuses he gives grounds for his refusal and these grounds must be not his own mere whim but they must be in accordance with the practice in the British or Canadian parliament and he must justify it on these grounds. Every member of this House, in the interest of his country and for the purpose of discharging the duty he owes to his country and to the constituents that sent him here, has the right to see all these documents if they are not refused him for the reasons that I have given as well as others which are set forth at length and if they are not refused on these grounds the government has the right to produce the originals of all documents for the perusal of any member of this House, because, unless this is done, he cannot discharge his duty to his constituents and his duty to the country as it was expected he would do when he was elected a member of this parliament.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR, (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker, the question which is now before the House is certainly a very important one and deserves a great deal of consideration because the proposal involves a departure from the practice which has been followed so far not only by this parliament, but by the British parliament also. It has always been the practice here that members of the House had the right to ask for papers and documents in connection with the public administration. In England as well as here the practice has been that copies of these papers and documents in connection with public administration should be brought down before the House, but I think this is the first time the question has been brought before parliament as to whether not only the copies, but also the originals should be brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I can point to several instances where the original documents were produced and not copies.

Mr. BRODEUR. Before the House

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware of any such documents having been brought down. I know that the parliamentary practice which has always been followed here and in England is that all copies of papers concerning the public administration have to be brought down. What is the reason for that? It is a question not only of convenience, but it is a question of public interest. The administration of a department requires that all papers in connection with the administration should be in the hands of the department. Once you depart from that rule you are exposed to having your papers which you require in the administration of the department in the hands of some other party over whom you have no control. It has been stated by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that these papers could be returned. Of course, if that were correct it would be a very strong argument, but these papers cannot be returned. Once papers have been brought before parliament they become part of the records of the House. There are the records of the department and there are the records of the House. The records of the House are composed mostly of documents of which the originals are in the department. Once these papers are brought before the House, what becomes of them? I have the right to-day to go to the clerk of the House and ask him what papers have been brought before parliament since 1867. He has no right to part with those records or files.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think there is a very simple answer to my hon. friend's argument and it is that the House which has power to order the papers has also power to send them back.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, once the papers are brought down here they are in possession of the clerk and they are parts of our records. You could not depart from that principle. I do not say that there are not exceptional cases where papers could not be brought down. Suppose a copy of a document has been brought before the House; it is alleged that the document is not correct, it is alleged that the signature or the certificate which is at the bottom of this document is not correct. Then, what would happen. It would be a question for the Privileges and Election Committee to inquire into. It would be an infringement of one of the privileges of the House if it were found that a paper produced were not a true copy of a document which lies in the department. In that case the matter could be referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee and there it could be properly investigated. Now, reference has been made to the fact that in the Public Accounts Committee the originals of documents have been brought down. It is true. But, how are they brought down? They are brought down by officers of the department who come with the documents and lay them before the Public Accounts Committee. The regular procedure would be that they would take back these documents with them and simply leave copies. If these copies were not genuine then the originals might be ordered to be brought down. In order to expedite business the originals are sometimes brought down by a clerk or the deputy minister of the department who is responsible for the safe-keeping of these documents. He might leave them in the hands of the committee, but he does not dispossess himself of the documents. The great objection that there is to the proposal which is made is that the department could dispossess itself of these documents and it would be a very serious difficulty in the administration of the department. I remember some years ago, that a file connected with my department was placed before the Public Accounts Committee. One of these documents was lost and we have not been able so far to find that document. It is a very serious thing in the administration of the department to be deprived of a file in regard to which the policy of the department has been established. It is the right of the House to have copies of documents in connection with the public administration and if it is alleged in some cases or if it is suspected that the copies are not proper copies of the originals the matter can be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in order to be investigated and in order that witnesses may be summoned to produce those documents before that committee. The same thing is being done before the Public Accounts Committee. I think, for these reasons, it would be a very serious departure from the practice which has been followed so far if we were to take upon ourselves to order that the originals should be brought down before the House and be handed over to the clerk of the House instead of being kept in the hands of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the motion in the Public Accounts Committee usually that the originals be placed before the committee and they are placed before the committee ? They remain there sometimes for weeks.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend fairly stated the case a few minutes ago when he said that an officer of the department was ordered to bring down these documents.

Mr. SPROULE. No, no.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the way the hon. gentleman stated the case a few minutes ago and that is the way it is generally done. But, I say it is a very dangerous practice and if it is dangerous in the Public Accounts Committee when the papers are simply placed in the hands of one person, it is still more dangerous that these papers should be handed over to a person who is obliged to keep these records not only for one month, not only for one year, but for all time.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding the danger it is done all the same.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Were this a question where the expenditure of public moneys was involved there might perhaps not be any necessity for the motion, because where it is a question of the expenditure of public moneys we have the Public Accounts Committee to go to: But, this is a case where you have not that opportunity. There is no public expenditure of money here at all. For that reason you can never ask for the production of these documents before such committee. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) just now said: Take this case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. What in the name of all that is good has this got to do with the Committee on Privileges and Elections? If the Minister of Marine can explain even to his own satisfaction how such a matter as this could be brought before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I will give him an opportunity to do so at once, but I think I am right in saying that this question has nothing whatever to do with that committee. This matter arises in connection with a department, which on the theory that a burned child dreads the fire, is anxious to suppress everything. I am not speaking personally of the present minister. He came into the department and found it reeking with wrong doing; it has not quite ceased perhaps since he has been there. When anything has been stirred up with regard to that department, what has been the result? Had not the original papers been seen in the case of the H. P. Brown lease it would have gone to the country that that was a perfectly straight deal, that a man named Brown had a lease and that he got it renewed year in and year out. But my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) saw from the original papers that the signature was not that of H. P. Brown at all, but that of the friend and old business partner of the ex-Minister of the Interior, McGregor, an ex-livery stable keeper from Brandon. The minister (Mr. Oliver) will admit that.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the return as brought down showed the signature, 'H. P. Brown, per J.D.M.'

Mr. BENNETT. But it did not say that 'J.D.M.' was the friend of the ex-Minister of the Interior, the ex-livery stable keeper from Brandon, and anyway how many 'J.D. Macs.' are there in Canada? No one would think, that clever and skilled as Mr. McGregor was in the machinations and internal workings of the Interior Department, he had gone to work and signed, without authority, I will be bound to say were the truth known, the name of H. P. Brown. But the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has been a sinner in this respect. I remember that one night I was discussing a question in reference to the Indian Department, and the political head 'pro tem' of that department, Mr. Pedley, resurrected a communication of mine which was nearly twenty years old, and with a great flourish of trumpets the minister produced the original in this House and wanted to know if I would dare deny my signature. When it suits the minister he can produce original documents. And again, when there was a question of liquor permits going into the Northwest, his predecessor in office flourished some original applications before the House from members of parliament who had asked for some trifling liquor permits where large bodies of men were going into the Yukon. The minister now tells us that in future he will not allow any gentleman on his side of the House to see original papers.

Mr. FOSTER. On that side?

Mr. BENNETT. Or on this side either. The public will take the statement of the minister for what it is worth and some will believe it but some will not. Why, the very essence of a trial is the production of original papers. Who is to know that the clerk makes an honest copy; often the very dates are important in the chain of evidence, and let advice be given to a clerk to change a date and the whole chain of evidence would be interrupted. As was pointed out, by the leader of the opposition, if this House has the power to have a document produced, it has the power to order its return. Why, I have seen plans laid on the table and specifications and all sorts of things and they have never been placed in the custody of the House; the minister has displayed them on the table, and when the House was done with them the minister took them away. There is another case that might be suggested and that is with reference to the North Atlantic Trading Company. There was an expenditure of public money in that case and we were able to get the original papers before the Public Accounts Committee, and we saw that the signatures to a certain document had been torn off and we were able to show to the people of the country that this was a fact. But if a faithful political henchman were asked to make a copy of that document he could have added names on the copies as well. The trouble with the Minister of the Interior is that he is commencing to find out the slumbering lions of that department; he knows he cannot get them out of the road. Look at what has been done in that department to suppress the truth and keep the public from knowing what is going on. There was a deputy minister in that department who was paid a salary of $3,500 a year by by the people of the country, and with a promise of superannuation ahead of him at the end of ten years of office. And in the case of books bought by the people of Canada, in the case of letter books owned by the people of Canada, when these letter books containing information valuable to the public were asked for, Mr. Smart blandly told the committee that he destroyed them before he left the office.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he destroy State papers?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, State papers as the member for North Simcoe would say. He burned up the State papers of the country, and I have no doubt that when Mr. Smart came outside hon. gentlemen opposite congratulated him and said: That was clever of you to burn up the documents so that the opposition cannot see what may have happened. Look at the dilemma the Minister of the Interior is in. Suppose we ask for letter books from that department it will never do to burn up these letter books now because they may contain a number of other letters as well as those we want, and letters cannot be torn out because the pages are numbered, and the crime would be detected at once. The minister can only tackle the bull by the horns; he cannot repeat what Mr. Smart did, it won't do to burn up letter books because these books contain other letters, and it won't do to tear out sheets because that would be detected and be prima facie evidence of wrong doing. And so the only thing left to do is to call on the majority to vote down this resolution and prevent inquiry. I hope my hon. friend will divide the House on this question. The government may call on its majority to vote it down, but the people of Canada will take these gentlemen at their own measure and they will award just punishment to those who refuse information to the representatives of the people. I believe that in the Department of the Interior, from some little things I have known, there are many cases more infamous than the so-called Brown lease case. These gentlemen opposite know full well that we cannot get these papers before the Public Accounts Committee because there has been no expenditure of money in connection therewith.

We are asking no favours in the Public Accounts Committee; we want none, we have rights there. In that committee we can go into every dollar of expenditure. Talk about original bills being brought there as a matter of favour! they are brought there as a matter of right Only last session, in an inquiry about the Collingwood dry docks, one of the most important documents was an innocent little half sheet of note paper which was placed in between two other communications and I believe that had its presence been known it would have been torn off the file as many other documents had been. It was evident that letters had been removed from the file as the corner through which the brad had gone had not been removed with the body of the letter. This is the case in all the committees. The government can only suppress or refuse the production of documents where the expenditure of public money is not involved, by means of a vote in this House, and that a vote in this House will prevent it in this instance I am perfectly sure. Had the minister known that H. P. Brown had never signed that document, but that it had been signed by McGregor who had no right to sign it, it would never have been seen by my hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames). The minister will have it voted down but the public will have their suspicions. When they see that the majority in this House prevent the minority from seeing public documents the public will suspect that such permission would not be refused without some reason. This will engender suspicion in the public mind. The Prime Minister cited Todd to the effect that papers should not be brought down unless sufficient reasons are given. Is any hon. gentleman going to ask for the production of a document in the department on the ground that he believes it bears a forged signature? He will have no authority to make such a statement as the information will have been given to him from some outside party, and no one on this side would make the statement that the signature was forged and that that was why he wished to see the document. In any court of law such documents can be seen not only at the trial but before the trial and yet the highest court, parliament, is by virtue of the might of the majority to say that the opposition in the House of Commons shall never be allowed to see the documents unless they can show that there is something in connection with them necessitating the expenditure of public money. Once again, we ask no favours where the expenditure of public money is concerned, because we have the Public Accounts Committee but in a case of this kind where granting of millions of acres of land is involved, as the grant to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company or the granting of tens of thousands of acres of timber lands as has been done in many cases, the public will justly wonder why the government by the force of their majority say that the minority in parliament must never see these documents.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, as has been stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) this is an important question. But it is not, as was intimated by him, exactly a new question. The difficulty seems to me to begin in the refusal of some departments of the government to allow members of the House to have access, for the purposes of examination, to the papers on the departmental files. I lay it down as a fundamental principle, subject to no exception except good state reasons, that it is an absolute privilege and right of every member of this House to go into the departments of the government and without any allegation of wrong doing or any suspicion that any wrong doing has taken place, to examine the papers on file. It is an undoubted privilege in all public matters, that the people of the country have the right, subject to the ordinary convenience of carrying on the departments, to go in as a matter of course and examine these documents and see that they are correct. It is not necessary that we should allege that there has been wrong doing; it is not necessary even to suspect that there has been some wrongdoing. One hon. gentleman suggests that virtually we should lay an information and institute a prosecution, alleging upon suspicion that the government has been guilty of fraud, before we can see the papers. I do not say that we might not be justified to some extent in believing that from things that have taken place. I contend that, just as an auditor about to audit public accounts has a right to call for the original documents and satisfy himself that all is regular and honest, so we, as representing the people of Canada, have the right to go individually into all the departments of the government when we have occasion and ask to see the public documents on record, and these documents should not be refused us unless there are good state reasons that can be alleged for their non-production. If this had been done, there would be no trouble here to-day. My hon. friend who moved this motion, (Mr. Ames) last year had the right and was accorded the privilege of going into this very department and examining at his will all the public documents he wanted, to see whether they were regular or not. He found, unfortunately for the government, that everything was not regular, that everything was not right. He came upon wrongdoing of the government or its officials and so this year a new order of things prevails and for good reasons —I am not giving the reasons, but they are good reasons known to the government—they see fit now to say: We will not again run the risk of allowing that hon. gentleman to come into the department and see the papers.

Mr. FOSTER. They banged the door to.

Mr. LENNOX. They banged the door to, but some of the horses had got out last year. For that reason I take the liberty of reading a letter——

Mr. AMES. I think I would ask the permission of the Minister of the Interior before reading the letter, as it is addressed to me. Has the minister any objection to it being read?

Mr. OLIVER. What is that Mr. Speaker?

Mr. LENNOX. It is a letter from the Department of the Interior in reference to an application to see these original papers It is addressed to my hon. friend who moved this motion, (Mr. Ames) and is the reason, as I understand, for his having to make the motion.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection.

Mr. LENNOX (reading):

Ottawa, December 6, 1907.

Dear sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, in whch you state that you are desirous of examining the original applications and tenders in connection with timber berths 824, 1062, 1107, 1108, 1171 and 1212.

In reply I beg to say that it is a rule of the department not to allow the examination of the files by others than officials of the department whose duty it is. The reasons for this rule are that if the privilege of examination of the files were permitted to one person, it could not fairly be refused to another, and if all who might wish to so examine were permitted, the business of the department would be unduly hampered and the public interest would suffer.

By an order of the House for the production of papers the responsibility is taken off the shoulders of the department and is assumed by the House, I would suggest this means of obtaining what you want.

I understand that this is signed by Frank Oliver, as Minister of the Interior. We are told by the hon. minister that if all the members of parliament wanted to examine these files for the purpose of seeing that the public business was fairly carried on, in the interest of the people, great inconvenience would result. I guarantee that half the House at least will not want to examine them for that purpose at all; so that fact relieves him of one-half the responsibility and one-half the inconvenience. But the hon. minister says that if there were an order of the House for the production of the papers, the responsibility would be taken off the shoulders of the department and be assumed by the House. That is just what we want. We want this House of 214 members to say whether they are in favour of the people's representatives, as they formerly did, going into the departments from time to time, as occasion requires, seeing the public documents there on file, and satisfying themselves, if the evidence should be of such a nature as to satisfy them, that the government is carrying on the affairs of this country honestly and fairly, or discovering, as my hon. friend who moved this motion discovered, that they were not in all cases acting regularly; or is it the desire of this House that the people are not to know, that the administration is to carry on its affairs in the dark, and refuse members of this House the right to go into the departments and see the public documents belonging to the people of this country? I hope we will have a vote on that question. Now, I want to submit to the people of Canada, as far as it can go, that it is the right of every member of parliament, and his duty, as far as time will avail him, to examine the original records in every case in which there is any desire to know that everything is carried on regularly and fairly, in the interests of the public. Instead of this being a new question, we had it before us last session or the session before. I had occasion to go to several departments of the government. To one department in particular, the Department of Justice, I went on many occasions and examined original documents with the concurrence and approval of the Minister of Justice, the hon. gentleman who now presides as the head of the Supreme Court. But a session or so ago the hon. Minister of Agriculture, acting on that occasion in his dual capacity as Minister of War, I think, said that he would not allow it in his department, and I think that was the first intimation that we had that we would not be allowed that privilege. I claim as a member of this House the right, not for myself, but on behalf of the people I represent and on behalf of the people of Canada, to go to any department of the government and examine the public records, and I say that the government has no right to refuse them to me unless it can give good and sufficient reasons of State for withholding them for the time being. I think it is an outrage on the rights of the people of this country for the head of any department to say that members of parliament shall not be allowed to examine the public records. I was going to say a word or two about my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Leighton McCarthy), but I have matters of more importance to deal with now. I was amused at the manifest confusion in which he wound himself up in regard to reasons of State and State documents, two entirely different matters. Every public document is a document of the people, but the government has a right to allege, if it does so honestly, a reason of State for withholding a document for the time being.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Either from parliament or the courts.

Mr. LENNOX. Either from parliament or the courts; but prima facie it is the right of parliament or the courts to have possession of the document, and it is because the government alleges, presumably with honesty, and on their faith as members of parliament and cabinet ministers, that for good and sufficient reasons of State the document should not be produced, that it is refused in some instances. It is a little amusing to see the hon. member for North Simcoe come to the rescue. The coming cabinet minister always comes to the rescue of the government when it is in a tight place. I say my hon. friend is a coming cabinet minister; but I do not know whether he is even a coming re-elected member of parliament for that matter. I have been watching his course to some extent, and the evolutionary process he has gone through is rather interesting. At first he was an Independent Conservative—very independent of Conservative principles, I admit; then he became an Independent without the Conservative; and now he becomes a full-fledged Liberal without either the Independent or the Conservative. For years he stood aloof, and dared not subscribe to the Liberal platform. So long as a shred of respectability attached to the government my hon. friend stood aloof; but when all the scandas culminated around their heads, when there was hardly a shred of respectability attaching to the government's action, then he says, these are just the kind of people I like. Well, I will not waste any time over that. I want to say a word about the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He says that if the papers were brought down to the House, they would get out of the hands of the people that the ministry could control and get into the hands of people they could not control, that is, members of parliament. Is that undesirable ? The trouble is, as was suggested this afternoon by the hon. member for North Toronto, that there is too much control over the men who have control of the papers, and not enough control over the papers by the people themselves. The papers get into the hands of the members of parliament, the representatives of the people, and surely they could be in no better hands, speaking for this side of the House; I will not attempt to speak for the other side. And I want to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to the fact that the department need not lose control of the documents. It is perfectly absurd—if he will allow me the use of that expression; certainly it is perfectly unreasonable—to talk of the documents as though once they were in this House they would always be in this House, and never go back to the department. Where is the letter that was produced, written by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett)? Is it in some gentleman's pocket? Or is it in the department from which it was extracted for the purpose of making political capital at the time? Where are the papers that are placed upon the table of this House from time to time. Why, of course, they go back to the department from which they came——

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will permit me, original documents brought down by the minister to assist in the discussion of his estimates are not entered in the Votes and Proceedings. But, when papers are entered in the Votes and Proceedings, they become sessional papers and cannot be removed.

Mr. LENNOX. We will not draw that red herring across the trail—nor any red lines either. What I am talking about, is plain enough. Suppose we are going to put up a public building somewhere. The plans, or at least the elevations, and specifications are brought down and laid on the table for the information of hon. members. They are not kept in this House by reason of the fact that they have been brought here to be examined.

Mr BRODEUR. They are not sessional papers.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not talking about whether they are sessional papers or not. Hon. gentlemen opposite who are going to use their majority to vote down this resolution have a right to say—and nobody would object—We will bring down these documents but will stipulate that they are brought down only for the purpose of inspection and shall go back to the department from which they came. Let us face this thing as men who desire to do what is fair and square to the people of this country. We want no quibbling about the question whether these are sessional papers or not. No one wants them to be made sessional papers. This House has full control of the situation. Let it meet the situation honestly and squarely and vote that the papers be brought down with such conditions as the government sees fit to make with regard to their custody, as suggested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). Take the case suggested by my hon friend behind me, that of a divorce Bill. The moment we are done with the Bill, we pass a resolution that the evidence shou'd be returned to the Senate. We are all-powerful ; let us be all-powerful for the purpose of doing right, and not for the purpose of denying the people that for which they are fairly entitled.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) and hon. gentlemen who preceded him have stated a number of times that the country would be suspicious. The statement that these hon. gentlemen have tried to arouse suspicion is about the only reason they can give for their arguments. These hon. gentlemen belong to a party which was in power for eighteen years. When the government of that party was in power, and documents were moved for in this House, they brought down copies and only copies—not originals The point which should be distinctly understood is, that from 1867 down to the present day, the practice of parliament, when a return is moved for, is to bring down copies of the papers.

Mr. BOYCE. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) cite a case in which originals were asked for and were refused ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) is very good at asking questions. If he knows any case in which originals were asked for, and either refused or granted by his friends when in office, he can tell us about it when I get through. I want to make it clear that the one object of hon gentlemen opposite, who have tried so assiduously to make it appear that the public would be suspicious is to do what they can to arouse suspicion, as proven by the fact that they are asking for something unknown in the practice of this parliament. But my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is not satisfied with the practice of this parliament. He is not satisfied with what his friends did when in office. It has been enough for every other member of this House, from Confederation to this time, that copies of papers should be brought down. But the hon. gentleman moves for the original papers because he wants to see them. Copies will not do the hon. gentleman. He is a gentleman high and mighty, above every person else, a gentleman whose sense of propriety is so keen that he can detect things in copies of documents that nobody else can detect. That is the only reason, I fancy, that can be given for his making this motion. Hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted from Bourinot. I think it was the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who discussed fully what Bourinot said as to limitations of the rights of the House in regard to the production of papers. Here is what Bourinot says at page 371, after dealing with the point that the House has an undoubted right to order the production of papers :

It is quite obvious, however, that no member should move for papers except on sufficient grounds. It is clearly laid down by the most eminent of English parliamentarians that it is incumbent upon the mover to state the reasons upon which his motion is founded, that the House may judge of the necessity, importance and expediency of calling for the papers which are the subject of that motion.

Now, does the minister here refuse to bring down these papers in accordance with the practice of this House ? On the contrary, he states that he is willing to bring them down. But the hon. member for St. Antoine wants to do something which the practice of this House does not warrant, and which is contrary to the dictum of the eminent authority I have just quoted. It is incumbent upon the hon. gentleman first to present a motion for papers only on sufficient grounds, and next to show the necessity, importance and expediency of this House making the order that the papers should be produced. But the hon. gentleman does not do that. He does not state that, in regard to this application or tender, there is anything to excite suspicion. He does not venture to give this House or the minister any particular reason why these applications should be produced. It is to be noticed that these are not governmental productions ; they are not orders in council or anything of that kind involving any responsibility on the part of the minister in the way of a departmental act. What the hon. gentleman asks for is that certain original applications shall be brought down. These documents do not emanate from the department; they are not made by the department. They are made by persons who come and ask that something should be done by the department. An application is made and a tender submitted ; there cannot possibly be an imputation as against the department in regard to these matters, in any respect whatever. So, all the hon. gentleman's rhetoric upon this subject is entirely beside the question. The hon. member for St. Antoine, even in regard to these original applications and tenders to which he has referred, has not ventured to suggest to the House one single reason of necessity, importance or expediency, within the rule laid down by Bourinot, why the rule of this House, which has been in force for the last forty years, should be violated to suit his own particular will. I submit, without going into arguments on the score of expediency, that the public records of this country, more especially in relation to titles to land, should be kept absolutely in the department. Let me point out, however, that where you have public records dealing with titles to timber berths, or lands, or timber in any province where titles are kept, all you get when you go to the registrar of deeds is the copy of that document as recorded.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is the original ?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend knows that except under special systems of registration the original document is not on file.

Mr. BENNETT. In Ontario it is.

Mr. LENNOX. You ask for the original in the registry office, and by paying five cents it is produced.

Mr. MACDONALD. I speak of the maritime provinces more particularly. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition can verify what I say, because he learned his practice in legal matters in that province. I say if you have to deal with that question in the province of Nova Scotia as it relates to land titles, and you go to the registry office to get information, all you can get is a copy of the document that is recorded in the books.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That depends upon what kind of a document it is. If it is a bill of sale, the original is kept on file, and you can see that at once. You cannot see the other documents because they are not there.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend refers to bills of sale. I was speaking in regard to land titles. The leader of the opposition knows that he cannot see the original deed in a registry office in the province of Nova Scotia, he can only see the copy that is recorded.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Because the original is not there.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend says because the original is not there, but that is not material, I was dealing simply with the practice and endeavouring to point out that the public interest is there fully served by providing for the production and inspection of copies and not originals of documents of title.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the observations which have been made on the other side of the House, especially the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), indicating as they do an evident intention on the part of the supporters of the government to extend further the restriction that is sought to be upheld here. At the last meeting of the Public Accounts Committee we had one or two hon. gentlemen who usually take the position of representing the government on that committee giving us warning that they were not going to submit in future to the production of original papers, and after some discussion amongst those who were present another gentleman came in—the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston)—who carefully announced to the committee, or warned it, that he intended to bring the question up and that he was not going to submit to orders for the production of original documents. He probably had heard of the preliminary action of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and wishing to go one better, he played the autocrat, or attempted to do so, or gave warning that he would do so in the Public Accounts Committee. It behooves us, under these circumstances, to take great care that the government does not steal a march upon the people of the country by such methods as these. I listened with, as I say, a very considerable interest to the remarks of the right hon. First Minister and really, while I always listen with great pleasure to him when he is laying down what, from his experience may be considered parliamentary procedure, I fail on this occasion to see much force in what he has said. Some stress has been laid upon Bourinot and one expression there, but the expression has been, I think, entirely drawn away from its real meaning. At page 371 of Bourinot this sentence was quoted :

It is quite obvious, however, that no member should move for papers except on sufficient grounds.

Well, I think we can all agree upon that. I should doubt that any hon. gentleman in the House would question that for a moment. I do not think any member should make any motion, however trifling it may be, without sufficient grounds. If you read the context, that is all that Bourinot means. He goes at some length into this question as to asking for papers. At page 364 he says :

Occasions may arise when the government will feel constrained to refuse certain papers on the ground that their production would be inconvenient or injurious to the public interests.

Is there anything here to show that the production of these two papers asked for by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) would be inconvenient or injurious to the public interest? There is no pretense of anything of the kind.

Consequently there are frequent cases——

He says.

——in which the ministers refuse information, especially at some stage of an investigation or negotiation; and in such instances the House will always acquiesce when sufficient reasons are given for the refusal.

Of course, the House will always acquiesce under such circumstances while the matter is under negotiation, while it is pending and the public interest requires it, and when, mark you, Mr. Speaker, sufficient reasons are given for the refusal. Who has given any sufficient reason for the refusal to produce these papers? Nobody has pretended to do so. Then he goes on :

On this account, members will sometimes consent to withdraw their motions; or in case only a part of the information sought for can be brought down, they will agree to such alterations as the minister may show to be advisable in the public interests.

Who has shown that in any degree whatever that motion should be modified in the public interest? There is no pretension of anything of the kind.

Sometimes the government may be obliged to withhold all information at the time, or they may be able to put the House in possession of only a part of the correspondence.

Is there any pretense that that applies to the case before us?

If the government objects to the production of documents on the ground that they are of a confidential nature, it is not usual to insist upon their being furnished, except under peculiar or imperative circumstances, on the ground that it would be absolutely without precedent to produce them.

Is there any reason here of that kind?

Estimates and reports of the engineers of public works, in many cases, are considered confidential.

No pretense of anything of the kind here.

The opinions of the law officers of the Crown. * * * *

The same rule applies to communications between the law officers of the Crown and respecting particular trials; or the judge's notes, taken at a trial, or to coroner's notes.

As to 'confidential documents' passing between officers of a department, Mr. Speaker Peel observes that:

'They are not necessarily laid on the table of the House, especially if the minister declares that they are of a confidential character.'

Does the Minister of the Interior say that these papers are of a confidential character? I have not heard any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House profess that they are of that character. Mr. Bourinot adds :

If a minister stated in his place that a document was of that class, the House should take his word, and he would not be bound to lay it on the table.

Will the hon. minister stand up in his place and say that the documents asked for here are of a confidential character? If so, perhaps the House will be disposed to follow what Bourinot says here. These are the cases he cites except cases that I need not go into particularly with reference to what are called State papers which have been referred to by the hon. member from North Simcoe (Mr. L. G. McCarthy). Then he goes on to say:

The right of a member to obtain every information from the government within the limits previously described is so undoubted that it seems almost beyond the power of a minister to keep the practice within narrower bounds, and thereby save much public money.

Even if these words applied, will the minister tell us how much public money he is going to save by making copies of these documents instead of producing the originals?

It is quite obvious, however,——

These were the words that were so much relied upon in this instance—— ——that no member should move for papers except on sufficient grounds.

I think we may assume that that is correct. No member in this House should stand up and ask for anything which he cannot justify asking for. There is no question at all about that. But the right hon. gentleman apparently contends that a member should stand up and on his own responsibility state that he has suspicions which require the production of original papers. Who ever heard of such a thing? Has the House, when it wants the government to produce the paper, to go to work as a man does in the prosecution of a criminal; must a member in solemn form lay an information against a minister; must he stand up and state as a person would in prosecuting criminals, that he has just cause to believe, &c., and then ask for production by the minister as if he were asking a magistrate for a search-warrant to examine the premises of a den of thieves? We are told that we must on our responsibility say we have suspicion before we will get papers. Who finds authority anywhere to say that when a representative of the people asks in parliament on behalf of the people for the production of a public document he must say: I suspect you of some rascality, or he won't get the papers. While the hon. gentleman for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is not taking that course, I would say for myself that if the minister at the head of a department of this or any government were to refuse to allow me as a representative of the people to see a public document relating to the people's affairs, and if the government were to back him up and refuse the production of the papers, I would say that was sufficient ground for me to suspect some wrong doing on the part of the government or concealment of wrong doing by others—if not wrong doing in the particular case, I would suspect that the minister in question desired to create a precedent in his favour so that in other cases where wrong doing occurred he would not be obliged to produce the papers. I would not hesitate on my own responsibility to make such a statement in this House. But the hon. member for St. Antoine stands upon his rights; he denies the right or the power of this government to call upon him to make any such statement; he is here as a representative of the people performing a duty he owes to the people. As a member of the Opposition he believes it is his duty to look into and investigate certain matters and he has asked for the production of the papers, and hon. gentlemen opposite say: We will not give you the originals, but we will make copies for you. Can they find authority to say they will only give copies to parliament and keep locked up the original papers? I have not heard one person pretend to-day that he has such an authority. May has been quoted—let me read a few words from May and see whether he draws the distinction, that the government may withhold and keep secret the original documents and furnish copies. At page 507 May says:

Parliament is invested with the power of ordering that all documents be laid before it——

Documents; not copies of the documents but the document itself.

—which are necessary for its information. Each House enjoys this authority separately, but not in all cases independently of the Crown. Accounts and papers relating to trade, finance and general or local matters, are ordered directly and are returned in obedience to the order of the House.

Ordered directly; mark the words. Why, the Minister of the Interior is getting ready for months ahead; he has been issuing orders by which members cannot see papers as has been the practice in the past, and when the hon. member (Mr. Ames) after being told by the Minister of the Interior to apply in the House for the papers, does so, than he is told here that he cannot get them. That is a most extraordinary thing. May says:

Accounts and papers relating to trade, finance and general or local matters, are ordered directly.

Under that authority one would suppose there would not be a question raised. May further says, and here is the only qualification:—

But returns of matters connected with the exercise of the royal prerogative are obtained by motions of address to the Crown.

May lays down in a very few words the principle upon which we are acting and which to-night the government are trying to break down. The right hon. gentleman stated it was the duty of the member moving this motion to declare his suspicions, and he was followed by the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) who endorsed his leader and even went a little further. He said the same rule applies to the Public Accounts Committee, and original papers should not be asked or obtained there unless an assertion of suspicion is made.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. What I said was that in the Public Accounts Committee, when the committee orders production, the papers are brought in the custody of the officer in charge of them and in that sense they do not leave the custody of the department.

Mr. BARKER. I understood the hon. gentleman was supporting the contention of the Prime Minister, and I think he was. The hon. gentleman also said, apparently thinking he had a very strong point against the leader of the opposition, that he did not see what the case of Lazarus alias Leopold had to do with the matter. My impression is that that case was used by way of illustration of the case before the House, and I shall attempt to show, also by way of illustration, how appropriate the comparison is. At that time the Public Accounts Committee were investigating the expenditure of this Department of the Interior (which now refuses papers) with regard to immigration and especially with regard to the expenditure of that particular pet of this government, Mr. Preston. In the course of their examination it turned out that money for enormous sums had been paid which Mr. Preston had been certifying, and among others, large sums of money for printing professed to have been done by what was called the Arundel Printing Company which was a mere fiction and pretense to cover the name of a man named Somerville, a friend of Mr. Preston. As one of the last items in a very large account, Mr. Preston had certified for something like £2,500 for the Arundel Printing Company, and in the investigation of that some time was occupied. The receipts were produced, the accounts were there ; there was not a figure in the papers produced which indicated the slightest suspicion or connection with this Mr. Lazarus or Mr. Leopold as you choose to call him. There was not a word that would indicate to any member of the committee a suspicion that Mr. Lazarus had anything to do with the account. Well, some member of the committee asked that the original cheque should be produced, and it was produced by the Auditor General, and what do you suppose we found ? Not one cheque for £2,500 but four cheques about equally divided for the total amount of £2,500, and the four cheques were issued at the same time.

When we got the original documents these facts were disclosed. One of these cheques for six hundred and odd pounds, payable to the Arundel Printing Company, was endorsed by a secretary of that company who, when we got the cheque, we found to be the wife of Mr. Somerville. and that cheque for £600 had been deposited in the bank where Mr. Somerville kept his account. A second cheque for £600 was payable to a man in Hamburg, who undoubtedly was a member of the North Atlantic Trading Company. Cheque No. 3 went to a bank in which Mr. Preston kept his account ; but who got the money we could not find out. The fourth cheque was endorsed to this Mr. Lazarus. Mr. Lazarus received one-fourth of that money paid out by the government for printing in the interest of immigration. Suppose that the member of that committee had been told that the original cheques would not be produced until he declared a suspicion that Mr. Lazarus had something to do with it. No one supposed for a minute that there was anything of that kind, but the moment the original papers were put into our hands, we found that the secretary of the Arundel Printing Company was Mrs. Somerville who was signing at her husband's request, and that the other cheques went to the parties I have indicated. If the rule which it is now sought to apply had been applied to that committee we would never have ascertained the facts, and yet no hon. gentleman will deny that it was important in the interest of the public of this country that these facts should be known.

Another transaction occurred in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department. A Mr. Strubbe sold a quantity of French files to the Marine and Fisheries Department ; a witness from the department stated that there were as many files as the department would use in about nine years. He was paid for them and we asked Mr. Strubbe what he did with the money. He said he took the money to Montreal and deposited it with his bank, but he could not say which bank as he had several accounts. We obtained the original cheque from the Auditor General and found on the back of it little pencil marks made by a bank teller which showed that about one half the money had been paid in Ottawa, and Mr. Strubbe, being confronted with that fact, admitted that he had taken one half the money in cash in Ottawa and took the other half to Montreal in a draft. He had cashed the cheque in Ottawa at another bank than the one on which the cheque was drawn. He could not explain why he did that and of course he did not say that he had used one-half of the money in Ottawa. I mention that as a second instance of the necessity for the production of original documents.

Then, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L Borden) has intimated, we all know that reports are made by officers of the department on different matters which come under their care. An officer who is efficient will set forth in his report the pros and cons of any transaction on which he has to report; and I venture to say that you will find frequently on such documents here, as in all public offices, the head of the department would draw his pen through paragraphs of which he did not approve and initial those of which he did approve. If you asked for the production of a copy of such a report a clerk would copy only what had not been cancelled and thus we would be deprived of the information of what the officer who reported had set forth against the proposition. But we are entitled to know what he had to say on each side of the question, and a government that endeavours to prevent a member of parliament from obtaining that information is concealing what the country is entitled to know.

I do not intend to elaborate that argument; it seems to me so clear that it is hardly necessary to argue. Why the Minister of the Interior should wish to conceal such things I cannot understand. What object has he in concealing them? Is he serious in telling us that he is afraid that if he places them on the table of this House some body will steal them? That is too ridiculous an argument for him to pretend to support; he cannot do it. He says cases have occurred where documents have been lost in this way but he has not cited a case. I doubt if he could. In the Public Accounts Committee the other day a minister said that last session his department had submitted documents to the committee and they never came back. The matter was explained by a word from the secretary who said that the inquiry had not been concluded. The minister apologized and said: All right, I did not know that. I venture to say that it was something very like that of which this minister was speaking. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) advanced a still more extraordinary argument; he asked how he or another minister could be expected to let out of his hands into the hands of the people of this country or their representatives, a paper which he wanted in his office —why he would never see it again. He said that it would belong to the records of this parliament because a note of its production would appear on the Votes and Proceedings of this House. He must know that on the conclusion of the inquiry here the document could be returned to his department and another note of its return could appear in the Votes and Proceedings. He could not have been more serious in advancing this argument than was the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) when he talked about the registry office in Nova Scotia. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have to give up his argument as these documents could be returned to the department in the way I have suggested.

I will not detain the House any longer. I only say that I have seen the government again and again, without any specific order, lay original documents on the table when they found it ocnvenient to do so. The hon. Minister of the Interior surely was not actuated by a desire to save public money by copying those two or three little documents. By laying the papers on the table he could save even the expense of having them copied. There is nothing in it except a desire to prevent people knowing what is going on; there cannot be anything else. Why does the hon. gentleman, when he has papers in his office, in the hands of himself or his deputy, refuse to allow a member of this House to look at them? Will he give any explanation of that? He cannot give it, nor can the right hon. leader of the government suggest a reason for it, except—I do not use the word offensively—a pig-headed obstinacy in saying, I will not let you see them anyhow. That is the only way in which one can account for it. There is not even the objection that a member might take up a little of his valuable time by asking to be allowed to see the papers in the departmental office, because all he has to do is to have a clerk in his department collect the papers and be present while the member examines them; and he could thus in many cases do away with any need to lay them on the table of the House.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER. Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this resolution is a request for a return laying upon the table of this House the original applications and tenders in respect of certain timber berths —numbers 1107, 1108 and 1171. I have listened to the discussion of this matter on both sides of the House, and while it is asserted by the Prime Minister and others on this side that the invariable practice of this parliament has been not to lay the original documents on the table, but copies of those documents, I have not heard that position successfully refuted by any member who has spoken on the opposition side. So that if we are to vote on this question, I take it that we are voting on the question whether the government shall be obliged to lay on the table of the House the original documents, or whether we shall follow the practice that has always been the practice of this parliament heretofore, of laying on the table of the House copies of those documents. Now, according to the authorities that have been cited, Bourinot and May, it appears that a member moving for the production of original documents must move upon good grounds. While it may not be necessary for him to assert that there is anything wrong or anything dishonest in connnection with the papers; still he should present to the House some good grounds why we should depart from the ordinary parliamentary practice, and adopt what is practically a new practice.

Mr. HAGGART. Where did the hon. gentleman learn that the parliamentary practice is to refuse to place original dodocuments on the table of the House ? I have never heard of that before.

Mr. GALLIHER. I said that I had listened to-day to the arguments on both sides of the House—I do not pretend to say that I am an authority on parliamentary practice—and I have heard no reason urged why these papers should be brought down at all, unless it is the broad and general principle that every member of parliament has a right to call for original documents and have them produced and laid on the table of the House. That is altogether too broad and general to be urged as a reason for asking for any particular document relating to any particular transaction in any department. There must be something more than that. Even if the member does not go to the length of imputing wrong, he has to assert something more substantial than that as a member of parliament, no matter what his reasons are, he has a right to ask for the production of the original documents. That is not giving a reason; it is assuming a principle. If he is correct in that, and if that is the practice that has been followed in this parliament, I do not think he will be refused; but what do we hear some hon. members of the opposition say ? They say that if the minister or the government refuse to bring down the originals of these papers, the country will naturally think there is something suspicious behind that refusal ? Now, why should the country think there is anything suspicious about that? My hon. friends opposite smile, and I am pleased to see their smile; I would rather see it than their frown. But I ask, why should the country think that there is anything suspicious behind that ? Simply because this government says that the practice of parliament has been so and so, we are satisfied to follow that practice, and we are not going to depart from it simply because a member of this House may request original documents, thinking he has the right to them.

Speaking of the people being suspicious and believing that there is something behind this, perhaps I may be excused if, while listening to hon. gentlemen opposite, a dim suspicion entered my mind, a doubt whether these hon. gentlemen were really so anxious that the people should know what was in these documents, or whether this was the anxiety of some politicians to have the opportunity to examine documents with the bare hope that there might be some flaw in them or something out of which campaign material could be made. Now, I hope I am too fair in debate to say that any hon. member would do that sort of thing. But when we are told that suspicion attaches to the government, because it refuses to depart from the old and recognized practice of this House, surely I shall not be found fault with if I find it impossible to resist a slight suspicion that there is something behind this motion that does not appear on the surface.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why not bring in the documents and get rid of the suspicion?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think the people are so suspicious as that. Speaking for myself, I do not think that the people I represent will find fault with the position I take and the vote I shall give in support of the government in its maintenance of the established practice of this House. Lest this matter should be misrepresented in the country, and there might be an idea that the government were trying to conceal anything, I think this motion can be met honestly and for the purpose of giving absolutely all the information that can be reasonably asked for, by moving an amendment. That amendment would be along the lines of the procedure and practice in this House by inserting the words 'copies of' so as to make the motion read:—

Order of the House for a return laying upon the table of this House copies of the original application and tenders in respect of timber berths 1107, 1108 and 1171.

Mr. HAGGART. They are already furnished to the House.

Mr. AMES. I have the copies here.

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) has the copies, he should be satisfied. There is no ground whatever for asking for the originals.

Mr. D. ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). I am afraid I am out of order in discussing this question, for, if the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has copies ordered by resolution of this House, then, as I understand the rules, I do not know how he can bring the matter up again. I would ask your ruling on that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. AMES. I got them last session.

Mr. D. ROSS. Then the hon. member is very hard to satisfy. If he got what he wanted last session, why is he asking now for something he already has. The hon. member and those with him are endeavouring to create a new precedent in this House. After forty years of unbroken practice, he declares that now, for the first time, this House must establish a new precedent and order the production of original documents. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) is very insistent on this new order being established. I would like to ask him whether, while he had charge of a department of government, he ever brought down original documents and laid them on the table of this House.

Mr. HAGGART. Often. Some of them are obligatory under statute.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. D. ROSS. I venture to say that the ex-Minister of Railways cannot point to a single instance in which, when he had charge of a department of government, he consented to the bringing down of original documents in response to a motion by a private member of this House. A good deal has been said about original documents being brought before committees of parliament. We all remember what happened last year. The Superintendent of Immigration was asked to bring down documents in connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company. He brought down original documents and placed them in charge of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization——

Mr. SPROULE. Except what he burned.

Mr. D. ROSS. That is more of the suspicion of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to know the foundation of the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. SPROULE. The statement made in the committee by the witness, that he had taken the documents and burned them—that statement made under oath.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand the hon. gentleman from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) to have spoken of the Commissioner of Immigration. I say that there is no foundation for the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey in regard to the Commissioner of Immigration.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not speaking of the Commissioner of Immigration but of Mr. Smart, who was before the committee, and I repeat the statement.

Mr. D. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I direct your attention to the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey, and ask you if he is within his rights as a member of this House, in making such a charge against the Superintendent of Immigration. Has the hon. member any right to say that the Superintendent of Immigration burned certain documents, though he has no evidence for such a statement?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that of the Superintendent of Immigration. I said it of Mr. Smart, who was then deputy minister.

Mr. D. ROSS. When I was interrupted by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) I was pointing out that the Superintendent of Immigration, Mr. Scott, had been asked to bring certain files of his department to the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. He did so. The committee kept that file several weeks with the result that the whole work in connection with Mr. Scott's department was tied up, and when he came and asked for the return of the file he was not treated any too courteously by these very gentlemen who are raising objections to-day, and he had to come and plead for that file before he could get it back and continue the ordinary routine of his department. We have heard here something about stolen documents; the minister is asked if he is afraid that these documents will be stolen. Well, that has happened before—original documents brought down before certain of the committees have never been returned to the departments from which they came and that might happen again.

What are these documents? As I understand, they are applications in connection with certain timber limits. They are legitimate applications for timber lands, they are the titles of the gentlemen who are asking for these timber limits, probably the only thing they have to show until their title is completed. Put them on the table of this House? Hon. gentlemen opposite—if you admit suspicions which have been thrown around here—are also interested in timber limits, and these documents might surreptitiously disappear, and the only title these gentlemen had to the timber they are legitimately asking for would vanish and they would have nothing to show they had a title to this timber. Why, it would be a very poor department indeed that would allow its business to be transacted that way. These people who are doing business with the Department of the Interior, whose documents are in that department, who have paid their good money to the department, naturally expect that the department would take ordinary business precautions to have their interest protected. What right has the Minister of the Interior to delegate to this House the custody of documents that are in the nature of titles of these gentlemen who have paid their money to the department? He has no such right, the House should not demand it. Now hon. gentlemen have been reading out of Bourinot to bolster up their case. Let us read something further out of Bourinot. On page 399 you will find this:

From the discussions in the English parliament it appears that the document of which it is proposed to order a copy must be official in its character.

And so on. Bourinot implies, at least, in this rule that it is a copy of the document which is ordered, not the document itself. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to read Bourinot from cover to cover and to find in it one suggestion that the original document is to be brought down in response to a motion of this House. In this quotation Bourinot lays down the principle that the document of which it is proposed to order a copy must be official in its character, and you cannot find in Bourinot a single instance saying that this document should not be a copy but the original. Bourinot also speaks of the method of preparing these documents; he speaks of the care that ought to be exercised in making the copy conform to the resolution. He does not say anything about the original. He says that care ought to be exercised by the officer whose duty it is to prepare the return, to see that it conforms with the resolution of parliament—another instance to show the clear intention to be that it is to be a copy of the papers asked for. Now, hon. gentlemen opposite are surely endeavouring, after forty years of practice, which has worked very successfully, which worked successfully when they were in power—they are endeavouring to establish a new method of getting documents in this House. And for what reason? For absolutely no other reason in the world than to enable them to go to the country and say to the people: We have asked for information and this government would not give it to us. It is no such thing. The hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames) acknowledges to-night that he has got the information he wanted, that he got it last year; that he had been cogitating over it for twelve months. Now he comes to this House and wants to make a little political capital and takes up the time of the House in a pretense that he wants to get what he got twelve months ago. If that is not playing politics, I do not know what it is.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). My hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames) last year introduced a motion asking for copies of all corespondence and everything else in reference to the purchase of certain limits in the Northwest. Upon getting the information which was furnished to the House, thinking perhaps that the correspondence was too lengthy, he wrote a letter in accordance with the direction of all the writers on parliamentary practice; he wrote a letter to the Minister of the Interior stating that the information produced in the copies was not such as he required, and that it might be furnished in the originals. He was suspicious in relation to some of the transaction that the original papers would disclose further facts. So he wrote a letter to the Minister of the Interior stating the facts and asking to see the original documents, as he had a right to do. The Minister of the Interior refused him the right of access to the documents, and suggested the plan which the hon. gentleman proposed today. When he now proposes a plan suggested by the Minister of the Interior, he is met with the whole force of the government urging that the practice is irregular. Who ever heard of it being irregular? I have been in this House a great number of years and I never knew a motion of this kind refused. Original papers have again and again been produced and laid upon the table upon a motion of the House.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Can the hon. gentleman give the House another instance of a motion of this kind asking for the original papers?

Mr. HAGGART. Let me get through my argument and I will deal with the question of the hon. gentleman. We know that everything in reference to public accounts, everything that is found in the Auditor General's Report, all the correspondence, all the original documents, are by order of this House sent to the Public Accounts Committee—not copies of the papers at all, but the original documents. The hon. gentleman says that this would be a deplorable practice, that perhaps the officers of the department might lose them. Cannot the Minister of the Interior send an officer to the Public Accounts Committee with these original documents whose duty it is to look after them? In this case where the order is for the original document to be placed on the table, if there is any danger of its disappearing, surely you, Mr. Speaker, with all the myrmidons at your disposal, could detail one or two of them to see that the documents was not filched. But what I insist upon is the right of parliament to see every original document. What is the rule laid down ?

Transactions of state are necessarily official, and no public officer would be justified in withholding access to any document emanating from himself in his official capacity in relation to public affairs.

The rule extends to private correspondence between members of parliament and a minister of the crown on public affairs. Private correspondence may be seen. This parliament, or any member of it, has a right to see any official document. Fancy a refusal made by the government of Canada to a demand to see the tenders that have been received by the Department of the Interior in relation to timber limits ? There may be something wrong about them. There may be something wrong which the original correspondence will show to the public. We have the right to see it. I suspect from the refusal given by the government that there is something wrong in reference to the awarding of these timber licenses, that the government are aware of that fact and that there can be no other justification for the statement made by them refusing to the parliament of Canada the right to see the original documents. I have the right to draw that inference from the refusal, but what I insist upon is the right of every member of parliament to have access to the documents, not merely to copies, but to the originals and that an order of the House shall issue as a matter of course for the original documents ? What are the exceptions ? The exceptions are in reference to the negotiation of a public treaty and in reference to the expenditure of funds for the secret service, but, there is nothing as to the management of a big department in reference to the awarding of contracts, or the awarding licenses to cut timber, or anything of that kind. Surely this House would be abrogating its privileges and its rights it it were to say to the government of this country : You have the power not to show the originals upon which these contracts are founded. I never heard of a position of this kind before being taken by any government. I venture to say, in answer to the hon. gentleman who asked me the question that if he will give me the time I will go to the library and show to him dozens of cases in which the original papers have been placed on the table of the House and cases in which, for the convenience of the department instead of bringing down copies, the originals have been placed on the table. What is the excuse ? The excuse offered by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was that papers had disappeared or might disappear from the table of the House—that they might be stolen. Surely precautions could be taken by you, Sir, and by your officers to see that nothing of the kind happens. But supposing that even it possibly might happen, do not deprive the grand inquest of the country of one of the greatest rights of examining all accounts and correspondence of the government and especially all original documents upon which they issue timber licenses and other privileges.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be placed on record as having been a party to the refusal of the production of any public documents before this parliament. I believe that where it is in the interest of the country that a document should be produced that document ought to be produced, but, Sir, I also believe in following up the procedure that has been followed by all tribunals and which should be followed by this the greatest of all tribunals in the land. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) who has just resumed his seat, stated that there was no case when his party was in power of a refusal to produce any documents before this House. Perhaps my hon. friend has forgotten that in 1870 Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Public Works, refused to lay on the table of the House certain documents in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Speaker, several authorities have been quoted for and against the proposition before the House and I would like to quote May. It appears to be that Sir Erskine May is very explicit in the matter which we are now considering. He says, at page 539, 11th edition :

> But however ample the power of each House to enforce the production of papers, a sufficient cause must be shown for the exercise of that power.

If the hon. member for St. Antoine had shown to the House that there was a sufficient cause for the production of the papers in this case I have no doubt the government would readily have assented to his motion, but he stands up in the House and simply asks that the old rule of procedure followed by this House be set aside and that a new rule shall be established for his purpose. That, Mr. Speaker, seems to be asking of the government a little too much. The hon. member for St. Antoine has had in his possession, for nearly a year, certain papers relating to some question or other in which he is interested. He tells us that these papers are not sufficient for the purpose for which he intends them. I put it to the hon. gentleman opposite if the rule which is followed out in the courts of justice should not be a rule proper to be followed out by this House in the matter of the production of documents. Let me refer you to the rule that is followed under 'The Canada Evidence Act.' In section 24 I find that :

> In every case in which the original record could be received in evidence,—
> (a) A copy of any official or public document of Canada, or of any province, purporting to be certified under the hand of the proper officer or person in whose custody such official or public document is placed——

——is receivable in evidence. Again, in section 26 :

> —A copy of any entry in any book kept in any department of the government of Canada shall be received as evidence of such entry and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, if it is proved by the oath or affidavit of an officer of such department that such book was, at the time of the making of the entry, one of the ordinary books kept in such department, that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business of such department, and that such copy is a true copy thereof.

For all purposes is not this rule a sufficient rule to be followed out by this House? Will the people of Canada exact that a rule other than that which has been followed for many years, in this parliament shall be made to suit the hon. member for St. Antoine or any proposition he may have ? It seems to me that the statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) is sufficient to satisfy the public of Canada. There is no concealment of any evidence, there is no concealment of any papers, it is not a case where the originals cannot be produced, but if the hon. member for St. Antoine follows the proper course goes to a committee of the House and makes some charge or gives, at least, to the government, some sufficient cause for the production of these papers then, I have no doubt, that the rule laid down by May and all other authorities on parliamentary practice will be followed and that there will be an immediate production of these papers.

Mr. HAGGART. What committee will he go to ?

Mr. BERGERON. The committee on expectation.

Mr. BENNETT. The committee on contingencies.

Mr. DEVLIN. If the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is not satisfied that there is a committee at the present time which the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, may go before—I do not agree with him—but if he is not satisfied this parliament has power to institute such a committee.

Mr. HAGGART. But if they refuse it ?

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not think the government has been in the habit of refusing anything which is just.

Mr. BERGERON. What are they doing now ?

Mr. DEVLIN. They are not making any refusal. The government are simply trying to follow out the rule of procedure that is laid down by all constitutional authorities, and which has been laid down as a matter of practice in this parliament. Therefore I have no hesitation in supporting the position taken by the government, and I do not think any injustice is done to the member for St. Antoine or to the people of Canada.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that in his opinion a committee of the House has at the present moment jurisdiction to make this demand?

Mr. DEVLIN. Most assuredly.

Mr. AMES. Will the hon. gentleman state what committee has that jurisdiction?

Mr. DEVLIN. I would say to the hon. member in answer to that, that if he finds there is any extravagance in any application for these timber limits——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Oh, there is no extravagance!

Mr. DEVLIN. I am glad to hear the leader of the opposition admit that in one case at least there is no extravagance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The very opposite.

Mr. DEVLIN. If the hon. member for St. Antoine has any charge to make as to the falsification of papers, or if he has absolutely any cause to give to the government as to why the papers should be produced, there will be no difficulty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Devlin) has referred to the Canadian Evidence Act ; does he say these papers are certified in compliance with the Canadian Evidence Act?

Mr. DEVLIN. The original papers are now in the department and they may be produced in the ordinary way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Surely the hon. gentleman knows enough to understand that if an officer of the department improperly certifies papers under the Canadian Evidence Act, he may be subject to punishment under the criminal law.

Mr. DEVLIN. I have no doubt that if the hon. member (Mr. Ames) finds that these papers are improperly certified he can make a charge and that officer will be liable.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). This is another instance of how far party feeling can carry a man, when we hear the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) an Irishman, and who would be a Nationalist member if he were in the Imperial House of Commons as his brother was; get up in this House to defend his party in an attempt to curtail the privileges of parliament. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Devlin) tried everything in his power to defend the government; he spoke of the Canadian Evidence Act as if we had anything to do with it here; he tries to prevent the members of this House obtaining information from the government which as representatives of the people they have the right to obtain. The people of Canada are represented in the persons of the members of this House; they are demanding their privileges and their rights here, and the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) is in the forefront in an attempt to deny these rights. It has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side that the copies which were furnished last year are sufficient, but if my hon. friend from St. Antoine thinks they are not sufficient; if he has reason to believe—and he is not obliged to give his reasons to anybody—as a representative of the people if he has reason to believe (and I think he has reason) that those copies are not according to the originals, it is his right to have the originals brought down to the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Let him say so.

Mr. BERGERON. He does not need to say so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He does.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. My right hon. friend knows very well that last year or the year before original documents were brought down from the Department of the Interior, and they were found to have been mutilated. There was a contract entered into by the Dominion of Canada with a company which never had any existence, and when that contract was submitted to the House the signatures were torn off. And after the refusal of the government to bring down the original documents to-day, and after seeing the manner in which their supporters have stood up to uphold that refusal, I am myself convinced that the government is afraid to bring down this original document. They know what it contains; we don't know; they are afraid to bring it down. Is it not a most extraordinary thing to see a Liberal government attempting to curtail the liberties and rights of the people? All have admitted that they are obliged to bring down original documents before a committee of the House; it is done every day. But the committee only has the power to demand these originals by an order of the House of Commons, which is paramount over all committees. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has cited the only cases where originals of public documents of official correspondence may not be brought down, but the present case does not come within the purview of these exceptions. Everything bearing on the administration of departments belongs to the House of Commons, and the ministers are obliged to submit them to parliament, and they should do so unless there is something that the government wants to hide, as I think there is in this case.

Mr. DEVLIN. What about Sir Charles Tupper refusing to lay papers before the House in 1879?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know what my hon. friend refers to, but that may have been in reference to a case where negotiations were pending between Canada and some foreign country. I challenge any man on that side of the House to say that during the eighteen years the Conservatives were in power the Conservative government ever refused to bring down an original document when it was asked for by the opposition.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say without any hesitation that no such demand was ever made unless cause was shown for it, and if there is cause shown for it now these papers will be brought down.

Mr. BERGERON. That is no proof because if the opposition in those days never asked for them the government could not have refused them. We know that the custom is to ask for a copy of a document.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, because it is more convenient to send a copy to the House, but that does not mean that in principle the members of this House have not the right to exact the original document.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all. In this case the copies have already been brought down in the ordinary manner, and if the hon. gentleman who makes this motion will say that he has reason to believe and does believe that the copy is not correct; that it has been tampered with, the papers will be brought down immediately, but they will not be brought down until that is stated.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very sorry to see my right hon. friend, a Liberal and a French Canadian taking that position. I admit that in the case of pending negotiations between Canada and a foreign nation the papers need not be brought down, but that rule does not apply to the present case. This has reference to a purely departmental matter and the member for St. Antoine is not obliged to say that he thinks these copies have been tampered with. My hon. friend does not ask the government for a favour; he demands a right. He speaks in the name of the people of Canada and he says: I want to see the original documents in such a case, and the government knowing what is in the originals, refuse, because they know that the member for St. Antoine is right in not saying openly——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. He does not need to say it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. When the hon. member for St. Antoine spoke at first, I myself did not know whether there was any difference between the originals and the copies which were brought down.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Do you know now ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am convinced, after this discussion, that the copies are not the same as the originals, because if they had been the same they would have been brought down, and anybody in Canada who reads to-morrow this discussion will be convinced of the same thing. I am sorry to see the position taken by the government on this question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that these papers are not a correct copy of the originals ; does he take that position ?

Mr. BERGERON. I believe they are not, and that is why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) wants to see the originals.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is altogether wrong.

Mr. BERGERON. Then let the right hon. gentleman bring the papers down and we will have proof.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend believes that and makes a charge he will have the evidence he wants.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think it is necessary to make a charge in order to get the information that it is the right of this House to have.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in this discussion, but I think one of the strongest features of this case has been brought out by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in connection with the letter of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) in answer to Mr. Ames' request for permission to see the original tenders. It has been said that Mr. Ames had all the information he required in respect to his motion of last session by having copies of those documents brought down. That hon. member thinks otherwise, and this session desires to see the originals; one reason for this being his experience in connection with original document last session and the session before. It is remarkable that a member in search of information should be directed by the head of a department to take certain steps to secure it, and that having followed implicitly these directions, contained in a letter written only a month ago by the Minister of the Interior himself, he should be met in this House by that minister with an attempt to thwart him in his effort to secure the original documents. Here is the minister's reply to the request for access to these documents:

Dear sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, in which you state that you are desirous of examining the original applications and tenders in connection with timber berths 824, 1062, 1107, 1108, 1171 and 1212.

In reply I beg to say that it is a rule of the department not to allow the examination of the files by others than officials of the department whose duty it is.

It is a rule of the department, says the minister. How long has that rule been in vogue? Why was that rule not brought into operation to prevent gentlemen obtaining the same information last session? The rule was not observed then and it is because of the disclosures at that time that the Minister of the Interior has now refused the request. He says in effect that the people's representatives in parliament assembled are not to be permitted to inspect public documents. State documents if you choose, because an official of his department might be inconvenienced by such examination. He says:

The reasons for this rule are that if the privilege of examination of the files were permitted to one person it could not fairly be refused to another, and if all who might wish to so examine were permitted, the business of the department would be unduly hampered and the public interest would suffer.

In what manner would the public interest suffer if a private member of this House went into the Department of the Interior and asked for certain original tenders? If the file is required in the meantime for any other purpose by an official, no member is so unreasonable that he would refuse to hand over the file and wait his turn until it would again be free for his use. They put up a suppositious case creating all imaginable difficulties that would never occur and on these grounds refuse the request of this member. Here is the important part of this letter:

By an order of the House for the production of papers the responsibility is taken off the shoulders of the department and is assumed by the House.

The very thing the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is trying to do, to relieve the Minister of the Interior and the department of any responsibility in connection with this matter and to place the responsibility upon parliament as a whole, upon the people's representatives here. This is the suggestive point in the minister's letter:

I would suggest this means of obtaining what you want.

Why did the minister give such advice as that if he was not sincere in giving it? When he was giving it, did he intend to throw obstacles in the way of the hon. member when attempting to follow out the advice he had given? I never heard of a parallel case, a minister given advice to a member, the member acting on the advice and the minister then calling on his humble and servile followers to prevent the carrying out of the course he had suggested. The minister no doubt looks on it as a piece of very sharp practice, and it is, but I do not think the people of the country will view the matter as leniently as does the hon. gentleman. We have been asked to give reasons. The experience of members in past sessions should be sufficient reason for our being somewhat suspicious in regard to original documents differing somewhat from the copies produced.

We have had authorities quoted. The Prime Minister himself has delved down into the misty shadows of the past to resurrect authorities to bolster up his argument. The people of this country will not bother much about Bourinot, May or any other authority; they will ask whether people are entitled to information on the public files in connection with the public affairs in this country, and will not care to excuse the hon. member and his colleagues by reason of ancient precedents. When the argument was advanced that anything brought down by the minister becomes the property of parliament and therefore could not be handed back to the department. while I am not a lawyer, it struck me how easy it would be to follow out that argument to its conclusion, and to see that parliament who ordered the production of a document could as easily order its return. Parliament is supreme in these things. But one instance after another has been quoted to show that that practice has been followed without an order of the House. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) referred to a letter produced by the Minister of the Interior in order to make some political capital against him, not by order of the House, but of his own volition. Where is that letter to-day? Is it the property of parliament? I venture to say it is on the files of the Department of Interior, probably to be resurrected by the minister at some future day in order to again make capital against the hon. member.

References have been made by a number of speakers to the formal printed reports of the Department of the Interior. How simple these gentlemen must take the opposition members of the House to be. They say : If there is anything wrong, if there are any erasures in the copies, any names omitted or alterations, there would be an excuse and a sufficient reason for the production of the originals. How are the members to know whether these copies are genuine or not until they see the originals? Take the reports of the departments submitted to parliament a session or two ago. We could not tell anything from the printed copies, nothing on the face of the report disclosed anything wrong or suspicious. A member moved for the originals and then it was discovered that there had been emasculation of some of the reports; the reports of the land agents at Battleford and Swan river were not given in their entirety in the official printed report. It was only then that we saw there had been some tampering with the reports lest they might reflect on the department and the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. Would my hon. friend permit me to correct him? I think in the case he mentions the documents which were produced in the House was a copy and not the original.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) Did the hon. member refuse the original because he thought it would become the property of parliament and could not go back to the department?

Mr. OLIVER. He was not asked for the original he was asked for a copy and produced a copy.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). He is asked to-day for the original but he takes a different stand and refuses the original.

Mr. OLIVER. He would have taken the same stand then.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I believe the original was brought down to the Public Accounts Committee by order of this House. I do not know whether the documents quoted by the Minister of the Interior the other day were originals or no. I refer to his quoting from a letter written by the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). Was that a copy or an original?

Mr. OLIVER. A copy.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And the minister would not bring the original because he was afraid it would become the property of parliament and would not be returned to the department.

Mr. OLIVER. I presume every one knows that if a paper is read in the House and a demand is made it becomes the property of the House unquestionably.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Well, the demand is made to-day, and the hon. minister has no excuse to-day, whatever he may have had in the past. The hon. member for East Simcoe referred to another case, the celebrated case of the H. B. Brown lease. The copy may have contained the initials J.D.M. This was only a suspicious circumstance; but the probability is that some one acquainted with the handwriting of Mr. J. D. McGregor might have known, after inspecting the original, not only that the document had never been signed by Brown, but that the letter was written by McGregor only one day previous to its being received by the department, and not by H. P. Brown, who lived in the State of Montana, so that it was an absolute impossibility for a letter written by him to be received by the department within that time, and it was written by McGregor, who had no authority from Brown to write it.

Mr. OLIVER. All that was shown in the copy brought down, except the handwriting of the signature. I might ask the hon. gentleman to be fair enough to say that the copy brought down was an exact copy of the original.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Was the date of the receipt of the letter on the copy brought down ?

Mr. OLIVER. Whatever was on the original was on the copy.

Mr. AMES. The date that was stamped on the letter as received by the department was May 27th. The letter was dated Great Forks, Montana, May 26th, and if it had not received the stamp of the department, you would never have known what a rapid trip it made.

Mr. OLIVER. I would ask the House to take notice of the absolute unfairness of the idea that is tried to be conveyed. What I said was that the copy that was sent down was an exact copy of the original.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Without that stamp.

Mr. OLIVER. Without that stamp, which was not a part of the original.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The important point is that not only the signature, but the date of the letter, bears very strongly on its authenticity.

Mr. OLIVER. Not the date of the letter, but the date of the receipt in the department, which was not a part of the letter, but a part of the record of the department.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Which shows that the letter was not written by H. B. Brown, in Montana, but by J. D. McGregor, in Ottawa. No longer ago than last session, at the time the Minister of the Interior was refusing to bring down promptly, in response to motions of hon. members on this side of the House, returns from his department, and declaring that the hon. member for St. Antoine was a special sinner in this regard, loading down the Order Paper with motions, and overloading his officials with work in preparing documents, we saw hon. members opposite getting up in their places and quoting from briefs which had been prepared by those very officials. I remember one gentleman from the west quoting a long list of names of gentlemen who had applied for timber limits during the Conservative regime, and he distinctly stated: 'I hold in my hand a document prepared by an official of the Department of the Interior.' This official had not time to prepare returns which had been ordered by this House for members on this side of the House, but he could prepare a brief without an order of the House for the assistance of a gentleman on his own side of politics. The Minister of the Interior declares that it is his intention in the future not to allow members on either side of the House to have the opportunity of inspecting original documents. Well, our experience in the past, such an experienec as I have just referred to, makes us rather sceptical about that rule being enforced either by the minister or by his officials against his own political associates, and we believe it will be more honoured in the breach than in the observance. I am somewhat surprised at the First Minister, a gentleman who in the past has represented himself with a great deal of pride to be a democrat to the hilt, and claiming to lead the party of the masses, getting up in his place in parliament and taking the autocratic position which he has taken on this question to-day. But surprised as I am at the attitude of the First Minister, I am more than surprised at the attitude of the western representative in the cabinet, who, if he had been blown in here by the chinook wind as a member of the opposition while the Conservative government was in power, would not have taken the position he has taken to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member, I think, is wandering a little from the question.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I do not wish to transgress, but I thought there had been a good deal of latitude allowed to other members.

Mr. SPEAKER. There has been no particular latitude allowed. A number of illustrations have been given, which were referable to the matter under discussion; but this is surely wandering from the question.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). That is exactly what I was going to do. I was going to say, as an illustration, that the Minister of the Interior, had he been on this side of the House, would have condemned the Conservative government for doing what he is doing to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. That was not the remark of the hon. gentleman to which I took exception.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Well, I will just say that I am rather surprised that a gentleman coming from the western plains, where we are not supposed to be tied down by so much red tape or so many restrictions, should take the autocratic position taken by the Minister of the Interior to-day. He and the First Minister are very strong on parliamentary practices. They say it has been the practice of parliament for forty years to retain original documents in the possession of the government, and the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Galliher) challenged the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) to specify any original documents that had been brought down. The hon. member for South Lanark accepted that challenge, and mentioned dozens of cases in which original documents had been brought down, by a Conservative government, and no cases have been cited where some in response to motions and some without motions, documents had been refused to members on the opposition side of the House on the same grounds as they are refused to-day. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not anxious to follow past practice in other respects. What about the practice of opening tenders for timber limits? In years gone by, when the Conservative government was in power, these tenders were opened, not in the presence of one official only, but in the presence of two or more; but since the present government has been in power, one official goes into a private room and opens these tenders and creates the suspicion in parliament and in the public that there has been certain manipulation of these tenders; and you cannot get that suspicion out of the minds of the people.

The head of the department has admitted on the floor of this House that there is only one official opening tenders at the present day. There is nothing in their practice in this regard to show that they are anxious to follow the course of their predecessors when that course was the right one. Then, the hon. gentleman claimed that it would not do to have those originals brought down, not only because of the inconvenience involved, but on other grounds as well. Are they afraid that, if the original documents are brought down in every instance, we shall have more gentlemen threatening the procedure that was threatened by certain members of the North Atlantic Trading Company, and that we shall find suicides taking place among those connected with the departments ? The members of the North Atlantic Trading Company hid themselves behind that threat that, if their names were divulged to the public, they would take the short cut to eternity, I would not advocate that by any means, but if they are bound to take that course, as I said before, it would have been better for the people of Canada had they taken it before delving into the public treasury of this country for some $300,000 or more. There is another case of original contracts, having been brought down even by this government. This was done in the case of the Davis lighting contract, which was discussed in this House. The present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, was then Minister of Justice, and had charge of that work. He said: We will bring down the original documents. He did not even wait for a motion to be made in this House, if I remember well. He brought down those original documents and laid them on the table. They were in the private members rooms for weeks, and members were allowed to take copies of them as they desired. There was no inconvenience in the matter, and where are the original documents to-day, in possession of this House? No, Sir, they will be found on the files in the department as usual. If this can be allowed in one case, why not in another? The action of the government will do more to create suspicion in the minds of those who had no suspicion up to this time that all is not correct than any other course they could have taken. Had the government been wise in their generation they would have acceded to this request without hesitation, and would have brought down the original documents. And, in conclusion, I would like to say to the Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, not as a threat, but as a piece of judicious advice, that he will greatly facilitate the work of this House by acceding to this and similar requests and bring down the documents required to enable us to form a correct judgment as to what is going on in connection with the affairs of this country. The right hon. gentleman will get his supply through very much more quickly in this way than by taking the autocratic position of denying to the representatives of the people the information that properly belongs to them.

Mr. WM. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). There is one point that we must not lose sight of in this discussion, and that is that the documents referred to must belong to somebody. Two points only have arisen, as I recollect, in this connection. The first is : Who is the owner of these documents and the second is : Who is entitled to the right of possession ? The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. D. Ross) defined his views very clearly. He has no doubt about how he is going to vote, and he is perfectly right to vote as he says he will if his conception of the right of possession be correct. That hon. gentleman asks : What right would the Minister of the Interior have, on a demand of parliament, to bring down these documents and part with their possession? On what meat do these our masters feed that they have grown so great? No member of this House will dispute that the ownership of these documents is in the people of Canada. I suppose that no member will dispute that the hon. member for St. Antoine is not a representative of St. Antoine merely but a representative of all the people of Canada. And the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the House will not dispute the fact that members of the government, though they seem to look with such utter contempt upon hon. members on this side, are after all only members of a committee of parliament, dependent on the suffrage of this House, and that this House could turn himself and his colleagues out of office as readily as they put them in. And I suppose he will admit that members on one side of the House must have equal rights with those on the other side. That being the case, the House has authority to say what shall be done with documents belonging to the people we represent, and it is a monstrous thing for any member to say : What right has the minister to part with possession of documents in response to an order of this House ? for these are the deeds of A, B or C. Imagine a representative trying to do his duty to the people of this country in this House, having his vote killed on such an important question as this by an hon. gentleman who honestly believes such a doctrine—for he would not have said it had he not believed it—as that these are the title deeds of one who got his patent long ago. Another hon. member—the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) I think it was—sees a noteworthy parallel in the case of the law courts, because in 'The Canada Evidence Act' it is provided that certified copies of public documents may be used in evidence. Certainly they may be used in evidence. But why ? Simply and merely because this House and the other House, which together constitute parliament, decreed that they may be used in evidence. And, if we can provide that copies may be used in courts where they could not be used without our permission, surely we can allow the originals to be used in this, the highest court of the whole country. In one sense, it is a small matter whether these documents are brought down or not. I do not suppose that any hon. member thinks that one scandal more or less is going to affect the result of the next election in any constituency. But it is most important, in this, which is expected to be the last session, of the parliament, and may naturally be expected to be a fighting session—I say it is a tremendously important thing, and will be fought out for months if necessary, if we are not allowed to see original documents. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that we should have grounds of suspicion. Can he have forgottten all that has occurred ? Can he have forgotten the cases in which the original documents, when produced, proved what no copies could have proven ? Those who have been obliged to work in the Public Accounts Committee know that we have before that committee original documents by the dozen. I am sure that I have handled hundreds of such documents from different departments in the last few years. There were several cases that are worthy of being referred to in this connection. There was, for instance, the case of Strubbe. I happened first upon the cheque with certain significant figures on the back of it which led to an explanation of that transaction. This man bought certain property for the government and received a cheque in the western block for $4,700. He swore that he had taken it to Montreal and deposited it in his own bank. Yet, on further investigation, he had to admit that he had gone past the Bank of Montreal here, where he could have cashed the cheque, to another, to him a strange bank, the Ontario Bank. There, in the presence of somebody, he cashed his cheque for $4,700, took $2,500 back to Montreal and deposited it—and he produced his book to show it—and put $2,200 in his pocket. And he swore that he did not know what he had done with that money—did not know what had become of it. The only thing that he did know—because we proved it—was that it had never gone into his bank account. Then, there was the case of the steamers 'Champlain' and 'Montcalm,' in which the country was bled—I say it advisedly—for luxuries in the way of silverware and so on for the furnishing of the these vessels. We could never have discovered the rascalities in connection with the 'Montcalm' except for the original invoices. We had what was supposed to be a copy, but the opposition secured the original, and the result of what was shown thereby was that Mr. Coghlin paid back between $1,100 and $1,200 to the people of this country. We have the Galway horse deal, the cattle company deal that has been referred to, one of the most suspicious transactions that has ever occurred in this country, and in the very department of the minister who now refuses the production of documents; and had it not been for the production of the original application, not in the handwriting of the lessee this country would never have known why it was that when other people could not get leases this unknown man Brown was allowed to have it thrown at him again and again by the department, and after the rules had been changed governing the granting of leases, when he was offered it on the lower terms or on the higher, and he took it on the lower, and the bargain was then closed, and he was afterwards given the right to get a lease with provisions that no other man could get one on, and it turned out that a member of parliament had been for years the Brown referred to, and had it not been for the significance of the initials, this House would never have understood the meaning of that transaction.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman say if the owner of these initials was the beneficiary of the lease?

Mr. NORTHRUP. If the members of this side of the House could find out who were the beneficiaries of all the leases granted in the department, we would not have the slightest anxiety about the election coming on this present year.

Mr. OLIVER. Did not the hon. gentleman say a minute ago that a member of parliament was the beneficiary of the lease?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. Was that member of parliament the owner of these initials?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Certainly not. He may or may not have been the owner of the initials. If you ask me if these were his initials, I would say no; if you ask me if he was the owner of the initials I would say I do not know. That is another story, as Kipling says.

Mr. OLIVER. Then what have the initials to do with a member of parliament?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Well, there again is one of the inquiries that I would like to have made into the Interior Department. The initials represented a gentleman whom we know must have had extraordinary influence of some kind, we know those initials were there, we know it was an extraordinary transaction, and the country never would have understood the transaction had it not been for the production of the original documents, and all this took place in the very department whose minister now refuses the production of another original document. Then we had another case in this minister's department, which was referred to by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), certain reports were published, and it turned out they were only copies of the reports. They were published by his department, by his knowledge and approval, and although the reports were there with apparently the name of the writer at the bottom, the writer never wrote such reports, because important clauses were omitted from them. And that also occurred in the department of the minister whose action is being criticised to-day. Then we had another case of a similar nature, one of the most important that ever came before this House, the Grand Trunk Pacific deal which probably will cost this country more than any other transaction in which it ever engaged. The right hon. gentleman will remember when he declined to bring down a certain letter, saying that he had brought down all the letters on the subject. Again and again and again he refused to bring down this letter, and he will remember that his colleague now sitting on his left a year later, in order to meet another point altogether, did bring down that letter, and when it was produced, the original this time, then we found that the Grand Trunk had offered to give to the Intercolonial all the traffic that would reach the city of Quebec, a fact which if it had been known to the people of this country, would have prevented what I consider the most extravagant bargain ever entered into by this government. Again the production of the original document would have made all the difference in the world to the members of this House and the people of this country. Well, without enumerating any further cases, when we find in the very department presided over by the Minister of the Interior that we have the Galway horse deal, where the production of the original did give us valuable information; when we had the North Atlantic Trading Company contract where the production of the original did give us valuable information, when we had originals of reports of engineers which showed that the original had not been properly copied, and when we find an hon. gentleman no longer than ten minutes ago saying in this House that he had brought down all the papers in connection with a certain transaction, when one of the principal points, the stamp on the letter, showed that the document was not what it professed to be, this letter written in Montana, I ask the right hon. the premier if he can be surprised when I make the statement that I believe there is not a single gentleman on the Conservative benches of this House who is not suspicious of this transaction. These original papers are not thrown on the street, the custodians do not lose control of them, they never pass from the hands of the officials of the government from the time they leave the pigeon holes until they get back. I would just as soon trust an official of this House with the custody of such documents as any official of the Department of the Interior, and I say that without the slightest disrespect of the officials of that department. Why then is such an extraordinary risk to be run? Documents are brought before parliament, and laid on the table, and placed in the custody of officials of this House. Surely we have reason to suspect that there is some stronger reason than the trouble of carrying those documents over, that prompts hon. gentlemen to refuse their production. And this is altogether aside from the question as to whether there has been any wrong done or not. We cannot tell until we see the documents whether there is anything wrong. The hon. gentleman knows that we have not seen them, they have taken care that we should not see them. But while we cannot make a distinct charge, hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that we have every reason to be suspicious, and we believe this country will be suspicious at this new doctrine now laid down for the first time. It is idle to say that copies are generally brought down. In the olden days perhaps there was not any reason to produce anything more than the copies; perhaps there was no Galway horse deal, no North Atlantic Trading Company, no Strubbe case, no 'Montcalm' and 'Champlain' cases, perhaps the circumstances were so different that hon. gentlemen opposite were not suspicious and were satisfied with the copies brought down. But if a different view prevails now, in consequence of these cases I have referred to, hon. gentlemen have only themselves to thank; and perhaps it would be better in their interest, and surely it would be better in the interest of the country, if all such suspicions were removed, and if it were understood that it is not merely hon. gentlemen opposite but that every member of this House is determined to do his duty by the people, and see whether their money is honestly, fairly and economically expended.

Mr. SPROULE. I think this motion ought to be pressed, because we have departed from the well understood practice of parliament for years. It has always been customary in the past, if you required to get information in the Department of the Interior, to go down there and ask for a file of the papers, and they were presented to you and you went over them. This I have done myself over and over again, and I never knew of the privilege being refused until the present government took possession of the treasury benches. Now for the first time, to my knowledge, they deny the well understood right of parliament to go into any department and examine the papers for themselves.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member I think has already spoken.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is an amendment introduced then I have a perfect right to speak.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who moved the amendment?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Galliher) moved the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Galliher) did not press the matter when he ascertained that the——

Mr. SPROULE. He did not withdraw it with the consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment was not read by me nor was it handed to the chair. I understand that the hon. member who moved it, when he ascertained from the hon. member (Mr. Ames), who moved the original motion, that the copies which his amendment proposed to substitute for the original had been supplied to the hon. mover of the main motion, dropped the amendment. That was the impression that he left on the chair and the amendment was not handed up to me and was not read.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware of that fact, otherwise I would not have spoken. I did not think the hon. member was playing a burlesque in regard to the rights of the House.

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. member has referred to me as playing a burlesque in the House. I am not in the habit of playing a burlesque in the House or out of it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GALLIHER. I rise for the purpose of making a personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member rises for the purpose of making a personal explanation that is a different matter.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do, Sir. I was not aware that the hon. member who moved the resolution received the copies, otherwise I would not have attempted to move the amendment which I did. When I ascertained that he had, the object of my amendment was gone, and I at once ceased to press it or put it forward as an amendment. I do not think that is acting a burlesque in the House.

Mr. AMES. As the mover of the substantive motion I believe I have the right to say one word.

Mr. SPEAKER. If any other hon. member desires to speak who has not spoken he may do so now before the hon. mover replies.

Mr. SPROULE

Mr. AMES. We are accustomed throughout this country, whenever we go upon the platform and enter into a debate, to be told that the opposition has every possible facility for examining all documents and for discovering every possible sin the government might commit and that we do not discover more is often times hurled upon us as a charge of impotency or as a declaration that the government is spotless. But we sometimes find in this House and in the committees that it is not by any means as easy to get information as we might wish. We are very jealous of our rights in this respect and on this particular occasion it is not so much the brief resolution, comparatively unimportant in itself, that is here opposite to my name on the Order Paper, as it is the principle involved that brings us to our feet and leads to this prolonged discussion. For my part I feel that it is very important that I should know what are my rights as a member of parliament; what are my privileges as the representative of 60,000 people in the city of Montreal and whether I have rights in respect to the examination of documents which I presume belong to the people of Canada and which I presume belong to all of us who are to-night members of this parliament. These documents are open to the Minister of the Interior and I have no doubt if any friend of his asks that he might be permitted to see him there would be no obstacle raised officially, but if a member of the House——

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say that the hon. member has no warrant for the statement he has made to the House at this moment.

Mr. AMES. When, however, we members of the opposition, who, I consider, are performing a function to the country just as important as the function of governing the country, in the exercise of the right to which we are elected at the present time, are endeavouring to criticise the government in order that they may do better, or in order that the government may be replaced by a government that will do better, I think we should be given every possible facility in making our investigations and in studying the material. It is because of the principle involved that this resolution has been placed upon the orders of the day and that this discussion has taken the form that it has. The simple question is this: Is a member of parliament entitled, if he so desires, to see an original document when no reason of state can be alleged why it should not be displayed? It makes little difference to us as to the methods by which that document is to be disclosed. It makes no difference to me as to whether I am permitted access to this document by the method I have followed here, but I have simply taken this step because the Minister of the Interior himself, in a letter to me, advised me to do so. In the innocency of my heart I imagined that he was giving me friendly advice and that he was not buncoeing me.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that the reference to buncoeing is parliamentary.

Mr. AMES. May I substitute 'goldbricking'?

Mr. SPEAKER. That would be just repeating the offence.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not object because it is what I have learned to expect from my hon. friend.

Mr. AMES. I did not imagine when I received that letter that I was being invited to ask the House to do something that the minister himself would declare could not be done. I did not know that it was courteous treatment on the part of the minister to ask another member to take a course of action which he intended to oppose when the opportunity came. I followed exactly the course which the minister laid down. When I came first to this House and asked for some rather voluminous returns I was remonstrated with by the minister on the ground that I gave the department a great deal of work. Word was sent to me: Why did I ask for such voluminous returns. It would be so easy to come down to the department and indicate the letters which might be desired.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the hon. member say that I ever made any such communication to him?

Mr. AMES. I do not. I say that that word came from the department.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the hon. gentleman give me the name of the officer who made that communication to him ?

Mr. FOSTER. What are you going to do with him?

Mr. OLIVER. I want to know.

Mr. AMES. Not in this particular instance.

Mr. OLIVER. I have every assurance that no such statement ever came from any officer in the department, but I would remind the House that the suggestion was made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R L. Borden) on the floor of the House and that it was not accepted by me.

Mr. AMES. Very well. Then just let me say Mr. Speaker—and it will serve the purpose just as well—that a return in connection with the Galway Horse and Cattle Company was prepared and copies were laid on the table of the House. I wrote the deputy minister asking whether there would be any objection to my seeing the originals. I received a very courteous reply from him saying that there would be no objections whatever and that I might call at his department some morning whenever convenient and he would go over them with me. This he did. I spent an hour with the deputy minister and examined the entire file of the originals of the H. P. Brown transaction. In the presence of the deputy minister we discussed the stamps, we discussed the writing, we discussed everything which the originals brought out and which no copies would bring out. I was perfectly satisfied and I felt that there was no necessity for asking for the production of any original documents after that. I had presumed that such was the custom of the department, knowing that it is the custom of other departments. I had been permitted to do the same thing in the Department of Finance and when this matter came up I dropped a note to the Deputy Minister of the Interior and asked him whether he would have any objection to my looking at the file in connection with these timber limits. To my surprise I received a letter saying no ; that the departmental attitude had been changed and that no member of parliament would be allowed to examine original documents. Then it was that the minister advised me to ask the permission of the House. Now the minister tells me that the House will not grant me that permission. What method is open to any member who wishes to see original documents? Have I a right to see original documents? If I have that right what is the constitutional method by which I can exercise it? Up to 1908 it seemed to be the simplest matter in the world to step into the Department of the Interior and, as a matter of courtesy, examine these documents. Now that privilege is denied to members of the House and we are told that even in the House we cannot get that privilege. Will the Minister of the Interior or the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) tell us what is the proper or constitutional method, or are we to understand that no original document is ever to be seen by a member of the opposition? Does the government want to go on record in that regard?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has alluded to a letter I wrote him as to the course he might take if he wanted to see the original document; he has been informed by the leader of the House of the course for him to take to get the sanction of the House to see these documents. All in the world he has to do is to allege that he has not been furnished with proper copies of the documents.

Mr. NORTHRUP. How can he make that statement without seeing the original?

Mr. OLIVER. If he does not dare to make that statement, I ask him to act as a gentleman and not make an insinuation.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) should not make a statement of that kind.

Mr. OLIVER. I will withdraw my allusion to the gentleman; I seem to be under a misunderstanding as to what constitutes a gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. That is worse still.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the explanation of the hon. gentleman is not satisfactory.

Mr. OLIVER. I will withdraw the explanation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is nothing left.

Mr. AMES. Now that my character as a gentleman has been rehabilitated by the Minister of the Interior, I will continue to call the attention of the House to the important point at issue. If the old privilege is to be taken away what new privilege are we to have in its place? If the right or privilege, whichever it may be, which we have so freely enjoyed in the past is now denied us what other avenue is there whereby we may enjoy the same? That is the simple question I wish to ask. It is not necessary for us to make allegations. Some of us prefer not to make allegations in the dark; there are reputations involved; we do not wish to make promiscuous allegations. If anything comes up which leads us to believe there has been wrong doing, I for one am prepared to state in this House specifically every allegation I have to make. But I am going to make no insinuation without substantial proof, nor am I going to urge that there is anything about these documents which is improper so long as I am denied an opportunity to see these documents myself. How can I know whether they are forgeries? I do not allege that they are. How do I know that there is anything in connection with these documents which would lead one to believe that there was any intentional suppression of truth? It is not that at all. But every man knows that a typewritten copy of a letter does not always contain everything that that letter conveys. Every man knows that the actual letter, the stamp of its receipt, the handwriting, oftentimes tells between the lines far more than a cold typewritten copy will tell. And I claim that everything that a letter discloses directly or indirectly is information to which this House is entitled, and if we are to be denied the originals we are denied a large portion of the information which the correspondence contains and which it is our right to have. We are dealing with the great national assets of this country; the land and the timber and the grazing leases of the Canadian Northwest have been given away, many of them to favourites and many of them in a manner which we have previously condemned. We believe (and the Minister of the Interior admits that we are right) that the method whereby the granting of timber leases has been for the last few years carried on is a method which is in itself defective. The minister admits it because he has completely altered the regulations within the last few days.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg to say that the alteration of the regulations does not at all admit that the system formerly in force was defective.

Mr. AMES. Then why were they altered? If the system in vogue before was a better system why not maintain it?

Mr. OLIVER. It only means, if my hon. friend does not understand, that the time has arrived for a change owing to the change in conditions.

Mr. AMES. I can understand, as can a good many others, that after the horse has been stolen it is high time to close the door. But it is a fact, that thousands of square miles of timber limits have been alienated; that many thousand square miles of timber limits are to-day in the hands of speculators; that a thousand square miles of timber limits are here on sale in Ottawa, and the minister knows it. I want to see the applications and the tenders in connection with certain timber limits; I am not going to allege what I believe with reference to these timber limits at this particular time. It is my right in the House to ask this information to be placed where I can see it, and in due time I will give all the information I have with reference to these limits in a form that will quite satisfy the Minister of the Interior. Here is the return we have been speaking about; it contains 453 pages. I have read that return from cover to cover. Now, there are nine pages of that return which can be illumined if I may see the originals. As to all the other pages the copies are all I want. But there are nine pages there with respect to which the copy does not tell me all I want to know or which I have the right to know if I understand my rights in this House of Commons.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend say that these nine pages differ from the original.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How could he tell unless he sees the original?

Mr. AMES. I say that these nine pages will in all probability clear up certain doubts which I have regarding peculiar features in connection with some of these transactions; I say that the handwriting of some of these nine pages may have a very important bearing on the case. The hon. gentleman for Yale-Cariboo made an argument in this House to the effect that a man's title to his timber limits might be involved because these papers might be lost. In the first place the minister can take any precaution he likes to see that these papers when they are laid before this House are properly safeguarded ; ten minutes will suffice me to look them through; he can have them back in ten minutes in his department if he wants them. What I am asking for is not the original lease which has been passed between the various owners of these timber limits and the government; that is the official document in which the rights of the lessees have been set forth. What I am asking for are three applications made for timber limits and six tenders in connection with timber limits, in all nine documents, nine pages. It is a very enormous amount of work for the department to produce these nine pages ? Is it running an enormous risk to leave these nine pages here for half an hour, so that I and possibly one or two other members may see them ? Is there any great hardship entailed upon the department or any one else to gratify my right to see these papers as a member of this House ? The argument which the minister has made falls to the ground in this respect. Adopt any method you like, move any amendment you want, but establish the principle that when we on this side of the House have what we consider good and sufficient reason we may have the right to see an original document, or else, be prepared to take the odium throughout the country that you do not wish an original document to come to light. That is all I have to say. I simply wish that the question be brought to a vote in order to ascertain whether the government shall take upon themselves to declare, that when a member of this House has what he considers to be a good and sufficient reason, there is no way open for him to see an original document such as this.

House divided on motion (Mr. Ames.)

MAIL SERVICE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) moved :

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports and memoranda, in possession of the government, or any member or official thereof, respecting the establishment of daily mails and improvement of the mail service in Queens county, Prince Edward Island.

He said: During the early part of this session the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) announced his intention to perfect the mail service of this country, and I do not know that there is any section of Canada where improvement is more required than in the county which I have the honour to represent. In this twentieth century bi-weekly and tri-weekly mails in this country should be a thing of the past. No section of Canada ought to be satisfied to-day with either a bi-weekly or a tri-weekly mail. In the early part of the session, I put a question on the Order Paper, asking for the number of post offices in my county and the service accorded to each, and I must say that I was astonished to find that the account stands much worse than I expected. I found that in my county there were altogether 143 post offices, and of these fifty-two received only tri-weekly mails. Twelve of them received only bi-weekly mails, and eleven were served daily in summer and tri-weekly in winter. I do not think that this is a service of which the Postmaster General should boast. He claims that he has been doing a great deal for the post office service of this country; he has been boasting that he has been hoarding up money, but he has been hoarding it at the expense of the people of this country, the people of my riding. In some sections of Canada we see the mail delivered three or four times a day and those who receive this service pay no more taxes than those who receive their mail only twice or three times a week. The people of this country are a reading people, an intelligent people, and I may say for the province I represent that they are second in this respect to no other province in Canada. We have something else to our credit, we are the most thickly populated province in Canada and the county of Queens is the most thickly populated section of Prince Edward Island. We are a reading people, our people desire to read the daily newspapers, but of what use is a daily newspaper in a section which receives only a tri-weekly or a bi-weekly mail? We desire to keep our people posted in the news of the day, but when a section of country receives only a bi-weekly or a tri-weekly mail any one can see that the dissemination of information must be greatly hampered. It may be said that we are perhaps a little better off than ten years ago, but ten years ago the people of this country and of my province and county were paying only their share of a very small amount of taxes compared with to-day; they were paying their share of about $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year. Now they are paying their full share of a taxation of nearly $100,000,000 a year and when they are paying that they are entitled to some accommodation. I am within the judgment of this House when I say that this government, which claims to be a progressive government, should do its utmost to see that every section of our country has at least a daily mail. If you can do anything further after giving them a daily mail, I shall be most happy. There is a large surplus of revenue. This government some years ago imposed a tax on newspapers which is an additional source of revenue ; let them remit that tax also and give the people of this country a free newspaper; let the people get information as cheaply as they can.

I do hope that the minister, who I am sorry is not in his place, will take this question of improving the mail service and giving these sections in my province which embrace many important places, places where a great deal of business is done, a daily service. In some of these sections where there is only a tri-weekly or bi-weekly mail, there is no return mail so that actually a letter and reply require a week to get from one end of the province to another. That is not a satisfactory state of affairs. I have been asked during the holiday by many of my constituents to bring this before the House. I am doing only my duty in bringing it up, and it now only remains for the Postmaster General to fulfil the promise he made in the early part of the session that he was ready to meet all the wants of the people of this country in regard to mail accommodation. There is not a section in Canada in which a daily service is more imperatively required than in the province of Prince Edward Island, and would here suggest that the members of the government might take a leaf out of the policy of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and establish free rural mail delivery. If the premier, who has been acting Postmaster General during the absence of the Postmaster General, were to inaugurate that policy first in Prince Edward Island, the smallest province in Canada, where it could be fairly tested, he would be doing the first favour he has ever done to that province, and would be adopting in this respect, as he has always done in other respects, the policy of the opposition. I do not think it would be derogatory to the dignity of the leader of the government to adopt the views of the opposition in this respect. The great objection urged against free rural mail delivery has been the sparseness of our population and the great distances from point to point. There would be no such difficulty in my province. In the meantime, while I do not anticipate that the leader of the government or the Postmaster General will act on my suggestion, I stand here to claim that every section in my county and in the province should have a daily mail service. If the government wish this country to be progressive, as they profess, the first thing they will do will be to place in the hands of the people of this country every morning the news of the day. The people are hungering for it. In some sections we have a daily mail in the summer, but in the winter we go back to a tri-weekly mail. The premier knows that the winter is the time when in the long evenings the people read; and to give them a daily mail for a few short months in summer and to withdraw it in the winter, appears to me to be the height of cruelty. I hope the Postmaster General, when these facts are placed before him, will fulfil the promise he made to improve the mail service in my province. One of the answers to the question I asked concludes in this way: 'Postal car service established in October, 1906, and no complaints received since that date.' This is very astonishing to me, because I have been, by questions on the Order Paper and otherwise, bringing this matter to the attention of the Postmaster General every year since I have sat in this House. 'There is only one train daily except Sunday each way on this branch, and these trains are used by the department. It is already as satisfactory as the department can make it with the present train service.' Here is a dispute between the Railway Department and the Post Office Department. Are the people of Prince Edward Island to suffer because the Railway Department and the Post Office Department cannot come to any terms in regard to the train service? If in the southern section of Prince Edward Island there is only one train a day, is that any reason why the people of that section should be punished in that way? I asked the Minister of Railways why there should not be two trains a day on the Murray Harbour branch: I asked besides if the traffic on that branch would not warrant it. He fell back on the statement that he had kept no account of that particular branch. His predecessor told me in this House that that branch was the best paying branch of the road; yet that branch has only one train a day, while other sections which are not as lucrative in traffic get two trains a day.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Perhaps that is the reason they do not pay so well. It costs double as much to run two trains as one, and perhaps that branch pays better because it has only one train a day instead of two.

Mr. MARTIN. It would be as well for the Minister of Railways to make the experiment, and then there would be no perhaps about it. That section of the country wants just as good railway accommodation as any other section, especially when the postal arrangements are contingent on the train service. I hope the Railway Department and the Post Office Department will act in unison and give that whole section of Queens county the mail accommodation to which it is entitled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry that my colleague the Postmaster General has not been present to hear the observations of my hon. friend. I shall not fail to report to him what he has stated, and moreover, I am sure he will peruse 'Hansard,' and learn of the complaint of my hon. friend, I do not know whether well founded or not, and will, if it is well founded, try to remedy it. But I am afraid that it will be hard to please my hon. friend. It is a difficult task to give him all he wants, because the more we give him the more he wants.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that the government will take up Bills to-morrow, then Supply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Supply in what departments?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Marine and Fisheries and Public Works.

Mr. FIELDING. I may add that I expected to go on with the French Treaty to-morrow, but as the information asked for by hon. gentlemen opposite is not ready, I would like to fix it for Thursday, when the information will be ready in manuscript, if not in printed form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for North Toronto made certain engagements with the understanding that the French Treaty would be taken up to-morrow. He expects to leave for Toronto on Wednesday, and will be away for the remainder of the week.

Mr. FIELDING. I might take it up to-morrow with the understanding that I cannot produce the information desired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am rather inclined to think that the hon. member for North Toronto would prefer to go on to-morrow, even if the balance of the discussion should be postponed to another day.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not anticipate that, but I think I can be ready to make the statement to-morrow. I will endeavour to do so.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WINTER COMMUNICATION.

Mr. ALEX. MARTIN (Queens). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask leave to refer to a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the withdrawal of the steamer from the Charlottetown route.

Leave having been granted,

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I suppose the question will not be considered very urgent when I say that I have received this morning a telegram from the agent which states that the 'Minto' and the 'Stanley' have been on the Pictou-Charlottetown route since the 11th instant.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. MARTIN. I have only to say that I am very glad I brought this matter up yesterday.

Mr. BRODEUR. They had to come back to Charlottetown before.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. minister consulted me about the matter at the beginning of the session, and I advised him to send boats to Charlottetown and I am sorry he was by some one so ill-advised as to remove them.

Mr. LEFURGEY. May I inquire why the boats were taken from the Charlottetown route while navigation was open ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The matter is left entirely in the discretion of the captains—Captains Finlayson and Brown who are very experienced sailors. Of course, the department could not undertake to decide from here whether the boats should go from Georgetown or from Charlottetown; so the matter was left to the discretion of these captains. Last week, owing to the fall in the temperature, it was thought necessary that the boats should go to Georgetown, and they went there ; but since that time the weather has become more moderate, and they have gone back to Charlottetown.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the minister mean to say that the officers of those boats have no instructions from Ottawa ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The matter is left entirely to the discretion of the captains.

Mr. MARTIN. That is not the way I understand it. That is a matter of dispute in the province.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the Prime Minister when we may expect any announcement of the result of the visit of the Postmaster General and Minister of Labour to Japan ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that before the end of this week the Postmaster General may be able to fix a day for his announcement.

THE HALIFAX GARRISON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire whether or not there is any foundation for a newspaper report which I saw some time ago that the Canadian garrison at Halifax is to be disbanded and to be replaced by men from the British Islands, the expenses of the garrison to be paid by the Canadian government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Militia is not in his seat to answer this question, but I can say that there is not the slightest foundation for that rumour.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to call the attention of the government to the fact that a return ordered by the House on March 11 last in reference to claims of several people for damages caused by a fire at Alberton has not yet been brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would my hon. friend kindly send me a note about this ?

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I desire to call your attention to correspondence in 'Le Soleil' of Quebec from the press gallery of this House under date of Friday, January 10.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is this a matter of privilege ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. A matter of privilege. This correspondence appears to have been written by the correspondent of 'Le Soleil.' As my attention has only just been called to it by one of the electors of my county, I have not had time to translate it; but I will give a translation of it into English as well as I can. It is as follows :

Mr. Bourassa is no longer in the House of Commons, yet French is spoken there more than ever. No one can say now that he is the only defender of the French language, and that without him it is condemned to disappear. In leaving the House, a little against his will, he has left two disciples, one of whom has hastened to proclaim his disappearance by calling him his ex-leader.

One who has proclaimed his lack of allegiance under his ex-leader.

These two pupils have shown their attachment to their language by both speaking in English. Mr. Lavergne and Mr. Robitaille, these 'two specimens of an extinct species,' that is the nationalism of Mr. Bourassa, have both spoken but not one of them has yet said a word of French. Even in the debate on Canadian tobacco inaugurated by Mr. Dubeau last Wednesday, a great part of which was carried on in French, Mr. Robitaille thought it was more chic to speak English.

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. It is idiotic but it is in 'Le Soleil,' I cannot help it. The article continues :

If the French language is to maintain its influence and prestige at Ottawa, if practically it is to continue to exist, it will surely not be the nationalists who can claim this result. They may go on the hustings and try to cater to racial prejudices by saying that Sir Wilfrid Laurier sacrifices his language, that the French deputation are cowardly and without any national pride, as Mr. Bourassa used to assert; but these same nationalists when they are in the House give us the first example of abandoning their language; when all their French Canadian colleagues speak French they are the only ones to forget their language and speak only English.

The fact is worth noticing. Mr. Bourassa is no longer in the House of Commons and it is some time since Mr. Fisher, replying in French to a member of the House declared that he had given orders for the simultaneous printing of the French and English versions of the report of his department, saying that he greatly desired to see all the ministers follow his example. Men may be judged by actions and not by words. Mr. Bourassa protested and thundered. Outside of the House he was the only true French Canadian in the House, but he almost never spoke French in the House. He is gone and his two partisans who are in the House refuse to speak their own language.

Then the article goes on to say that those who speak French in this House do more for their language than those who speak English. First of all I did not think it was a crime for a member of this House to speak in either of the two official languages, and I would not have noticed what 'Le Soleil,' said, if it had not been in time which is in keeping with its reputation of beng the biggest liar among the newspapers not only in Quebec but in the Dominion.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Shame.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friend says shame, because he writes for that paper himself. I was about to say that I would not have noticed this article except that the report is entirely incorrect and untrue. Those who have been in this House know that I generally speak in the language of the majority and I have given my reasons for doing so in this House. There is no crime in using either the French or the English language. I use French when I feel I ought to ; at the beginning of this session I used it and at other times during the session. The correspondent of 'Le Soleil' ought not to forget that he is in the press gallery only by tolerance. I am in favour of having the representatives of the press in the gallery. It is good for the House and good for the country to have reports of the proceedings in this House published, but at the same time I do not think it is fair to have in the press gallery members of the press who are there to lie about the members of the House ; and that is what the gentleman who represents 'Le Soleil' has done. He has done it deliberately, he has stated an untruth in his paper in order to injure if that paper can do so, the member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) and the member for Quebec (Mr. Robitaille).

Mr. TALBOT. Where is the lie ?

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The lie is in the statement that these two members had not spoken in French since the beginning of this session.

Mr. TALBOT. He did not say it then.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. My hon. friend should read 'Le Soleil,' which he serves so generously to the electors in Bellechasse.

Mr. TALBOT. You were there a little while ago.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Yes, and I did not see my hon. friend ; he was hiding himself. A press correspondent has no right to state an untruth and even if the whole report were true, the argument based on it would not be correct. That is the kind of argument that 'Le Soleil' has been serving to the people of the province of Quebec since it came into existence, and that is the kind of catering to racial prejudices which does more harm to the welfare of this country than any claims we have made in this House, even in the English language, for the rights of French as an official language. I do not want to boast and would not have noticed the article except that the correspondent says that those who occasionally speak French in this House—and I would be one of them—have done more to preserve the rights of the French language as an official language, than those who claim the rights of the French language, speaking in English in this House. That is not the fact as I shall show by a few examples. Last year I moved a resolution calling on the government to give greater attention to the rights of the French language. The credit for what has been done since has been received by others ; with that I have nothing to do, I am not here for compliments, but to do what is my duty. After that resolution was brought before the House and after the right hon. the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had spoken on it, the French language received better treatment from the government. On the Intercolonial we have seen French time-tables introduced and French has received that consideration to which it was entitled in the post office service in the province of Quebec. In every department there has been shown greater consideration for the rights of the French language. I do not claim all of this as my work, I do not say that I brought all of this about by myself, I do not even say that all is now perfect, but I claim to have had my share in it, and although the compliments of the ministers or the ministerial servile press of the province of Quebec have been given to other members, I care not ; I have nothing to ask for and I do not wish for those compliments, I am satisfied to see that a change has been made. Therefore the article is untrue. Its more dangerous aspect and that which I especially deprecate, is that it is fanning racial prejudices by attacking two members of this House for having spoken in one of the two official languages of this country. Solely in order to hurt a political adversary untrue statements have been sent from the press gallery by the official correspondent of a paper which is represented in this House. I hope Mr. Speaker, that that correspondent will go against the custom of his paper and will take back the untruth which he has published.

Mr. LORENZO ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the question of privilege which has been raised to-day. I have to complain of the reports of 'Le Soleil' on two different occasions. In the riding which I represent there is a majority of French speaking Canadians. I must say it was my intention to address the House in French upon the occasion of the debate on tobacco, had it not been for the suggestion—I might even say the pressure brought upon me by the member for Joliette (Mr. Dubeau) to address the House in English, it being immaterial to me which language I used. He even stated that it would be courtesy to the English members in this House who would like to take part in the debate and who would better understand the discussion if the speeches were delivered in English. I find that after I had spoken in French few members on the Conservative or Liberal side continued the discussion in English.

My intention in speaking English was to impress my views on the Minister of Inland Revenue, who I feel sure is not familiar with the French language. I claim to be a supporter of the administration although perhaps I am not as strong a supporter of the government as my friends would expect me to be, yet I claim the Liberal party as my party. And so I think it is very wrong that a newspaper which is supposed to favour the government should make an unjust attack on me in this manner and endeavour to stir up racial prejudices. In the ordinary commercial relations of life it is held to be common courtesy to address any person to whom you are speaking in the language which he understands, and so it was that I spoke English when addressing the Minister of Inland Revenue. I make this explanation so that it may be recorded, and if that newspaper does not endeavour to retract the false impression it has created amongst my constituents and amongst its readers in the city of Quebec it shall be my duty to send this my vindication broadcast through the mails. There is another question to which I wish to call the attention of the House and that is with reference to the statement I made the other day in the discussion on the Inland Revenue vote with reference to methylated spirits. The reporter of 'Le Soleil' whose time is so occupied in teaching Latin to young girls that he has not time to devote to a comprehension of the English language, seems to have mixed up methylated spirits with ethylated spirits or grain alcohol, and in his notes from Ottawa he makes this statement:

Mr. Robitaille, who had not yet said a word, made a speech to boast up the superiority of the products of his father's manufacture at Beauport, and asked that the duty on wood alcohol be raised in order to enhance the price and thereby increase his profits. Once more Mr. Robitaille has shown that if public matters which he does not understand, do not interest him, he is very much awake to his own personal affairs. That is his appreciation of a mandate obtained by fraud. The members of the House of Commons do not intend to take part in that interested game, and if he hopes thereby to promote his business, he is labouring under a great delusion. Let this be well understood.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a gross insult to any member of this House that a newspaper man should so forget his position as to state without any justification whatever that there are some members in this House who utilize their position in parliament to advance their own private interests. I think I have the right to express my views upon any subject in this House which concerns the public interest, and I may fairly claim that I have expressed my views without any personal object in view. I am quite sure that this newspaper man was not influenced by the Liberal party in writing as he has done, but no doubt he was influenced by some members of the party who seem to have the control of a few of these newspapers, and who are ready to publish any kind of libel on a man who will not support their little schemes. I shall always be prepared, now or at any future time to defend my position in this House and to advocate the interests of the people I represent.

THE FRANCO CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It was understood in a conversation I had a few days ago with one of my hon. friends opposite, that we should pass this resolution through committee pro forma, and that the explanation which I may offer should accompany the introduction of the Bill. With that understanding I beg to move that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resoved, that it is expedient to provide as follows:—

1. That the convention of the nineteenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and seven, entered into at Paris by plenipotentiaries appointed by His Majesty and by the President of the French Republic be approved.

2. That there shall be levied, collected and paid after the said convention is brought into force, and so long as the same remains in force, upon all natural and manufactured products enumerated in schedule B to the said convention originating in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, imported into Canada in the manner provided in the said convention, the several rates of duties of customs set forth in column 2, Intermediate Tariff, of the Customs Tariff, 1907, and in any amendment of the same; and that there shall be levied, collected and paid, during the time aforesaid, upon all natural and manufactured products enumerated in schedule C of the said convention, originating and imported as aforesaid, the several rates of duties of customs set opposite to each item respectively in the said schedule C.

3. That whenever in the manner provided in the said convention the terms thereof are extended to Tunis, the provisions of the last preceding clause of these resolutions shall apply to Tunis and the products thereof, to the same extent and as completely as said provisions apply to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China and the products thereof.

4. That the Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such orders and regulations as are deemed necessary to carry out the said convention and the intent thereof.

5. That the advantages granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, with respect to the commerce of said countries with Canada, shall extend to any and every other foreign power which by reason of the operation of such convention is, under the provisions of a treaty or convention with His Majesty, entitled, in whole or in part, to the same or to the like advantages with respect to its commerce with Canada, to the extent to which in manner aforesaid such other foreign power is entitled thereto; and that such advantages shall continue to so extend to such other foreign power as long as the said convention remains in force, or until the right of such other foreign power to such advantages under its treaty or convention with His Majesty is sooner determined.

6. That the advantages so granted to France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China by the said convention, shall extend to the United Kingdom and the several British colonies and possessions with respect to their commerce with Canada, so long as France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the said territories continue to be entitled to such advantages; and that during the period for which France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the said territories are so entitled to such advantages, all laws inconsistent with the enjoyment thereof by the United Kingdom, and such British colonies and possessions shall be suspended to the extent to which they are so inconsistent; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be held to diminish any advantage which the United Kingdom and British colonies and possessions now enjoy under the British Preference Tariff.

7. That from the date of the coming into force of the said convention as provided in article xx. thereof, The French Treaty Act, 1894, and chapter 3, 58-59 Victoria, an Act respecting commercial treaties affecting Canada, shall thereupon be repealed.

8. That the operation of all laws inconsistent with giving to the provisions of the said convention and of this Act their full effect shall from time to time be suspended to the extent of such inconsistency.—Mr. Fielding.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. HENDERSON. Before you leave the chair, I would like to say that it shall be understood that no charge must be made against the opposition hereafter because of not having thoroughly discussed this resolution in committee. The Minister of Finance, not long ago, made a very serious charge against the opposition in a matter of a similar character and claimed that we on this side had assented to a certain resolution simply because we had not risen to criticise it or oppose it by vote. I want it to be understood so far as I am concerned that that charge must not be laid against us as regards this matter, but that we consent to the proposal of the government on the distinct understanding that no such reflection shall be cast upon us.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know what was the former occasion to which my hon. friend refers, and I am sure there must be some explanation of the incident. However, I do not hesitate to say that in this instance I am acting upon the suggestion of an hon. gentleman opposite as to the most convenient method, and I would be quite content to reverse the proceedings and address the committee at once if that should be deemed the convenient course. I will undertake to say to my respected friend from Haldimand that I will not hold him responsible for this particular vote, whatever I may do as to his later action in the matter.

Resolution reported, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 57) respecting a certain convention between His Majesty and the President of the French Republic. He said: This Bill embodies the substance of the resolution which we have already agreed to pro forma. It is designed to accomplish three purposes. The first purpose is to give to our recent convention with France that formal approval which is contemplated by article 20 of the convention. The second purpose is to extend the benefits of this treaty to such portions of the British Empire as may not already be in the enjoyment of equal or greater privileges, it being a cardinal principle of our policy—and I will take it for granted, of the policy of every British colony—that we shall not propose to extend to any foreign country any commercial privilege without at the same time extending it to all parts of the British Empire. Most of the British Empire is already in the enjoyment of the British preferential tariff, which is a more favourable tariff than the project now presented to the House in the form of the French treaty; but there are some portions of the British Empire, notably the Commonwealth of Australia, which are not in the enjoyment of the British preferential tariff. The purpose therefore in this resolution will be to extend to Australia and to any other portion of the empire which may not already enjoy the British preferential tariff—in a word, to extend to the British Empire generally the full benefit of the concessions which we propose to grant to France. The third purpose is to extend the benefits of the convention to such foreign nations as may be entitled to receive those benefits by virtue of any treaty with His Majesty. As to the question of what these foreign nations are, and what is the effect of this treaty upon them. I shall have something to say before I conclude.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are they enumerated ?

Mr. FIELDING. They will be. But not in the Bill. It has not been customary to enumerate them in an Act, but to declare the principle involved and to leave to the customs authorities the proper application of it. That, I say, has been the rule, and we do not depart from it in this instance. I will give a list of the countries and our impression as to their relations to Canada under the treaty.

The home market of Canada, one can easily see, is one of the utmost importance and of ever-increasing importance. As the field of our industrial activities has broadened, we are producing a larger quantity and a greater variety of the things our people need; and, with the great increase of population that has come to us in recent years, there is a larger home market for the products of Canada. But, while we recognize the great value of the home market, it is unquestionably true that the prosperity of Canada is dependent, in very considerable degree, upon the prosecution of an oversea trade. In that oversea trade, of course, Great Britain must take the principal part. Our greatest market for exports is Great Britain, and no doubt, it will continue to be so. That we are not unmindful of the value of that market, I think, is abundantly evident. By the cultivation of better methods at home ; by the improvement of our inspection laws, by the appointment of officials at the port of shipment, and at the ports where our goods are landed, in order that goods may receive the best treatment; by improved methods of transportation and increased cold storage facilities; by the appointment of additional trade commissioners in Great Britain ; and last, though not least, by the adoption of the British preferential tariff, we think, a great deal has been done for the development of our great British market. And, when we recall the fact that, in 1897, the exports of the products of Canada to Great Britain amounted to only about $69,500 000, whilst last year those exports amounted to $119,843,000, we may regard that as evidence that the exports of Canada are receiving every possible consideration in the markets of Great Britain. If we turn to the total trade,—and by that I mean the exports to Great Britain of the products of Canada and the imports from Great Britain for home consumption, and not including goods in transit—we find that, in 1897, this total trade amounted to $98,935,000 and in the last year, 1907, it amounted to no less than $208,745,000. So, I think it will be admitted that we are keeping our eye upon our great market, the market of Great Britain, and that no effort on our part shall be neglected to do whatever is necessary to command that market for the produce of Canada. But, important as the home market is, and important as the British market is, they are not sufficient to satisfy the ambition of the Canadian producers. They desire, in these growing times for Canadian affairs, to reach out for their share of the trade of the wide world. That desire exists, I am sure, on both sides of this House. Our predecessors in the government, some years ago, realizing, as they naturally would, the desirability of extending trade with foreign countries, entered into negotiations for establishing a treaty with France. The result of these negotiations will be found in what is commonly called the French treaty, to be found in the Acts of this parliament of 1894. The treaty was negotiated in 1893 and enacted the following year. It is not too much to say that this treaty, at the time, was received with some hesitation and doubt even by the gentlemen who were responsible for it. It was held over for one session for further consideration, but, in the end, it was thought well to adopt the treaty. In some respects, the conditions of the treaty seem to be open to criticism and objection. Perhaps the House will pardon me if I call attention to its provisions to show how far it dealt with the trade question of that day. Article 1 of the treaty reads as follows :—

ARTICLE I.

Wines, sparkling and non-sparkling, common soaps, savons de Marseille (castile soaps) and nuts, almonds, prunes and plums of French origin entering Canada should enjoy the following advantages:—

1. Non-sparkling wines, gauging 15° by the centesimal alcoholometer or less, or according to the Canadian system of testing, containing 26 per cent or less of alcohol, and all sparkling wines should be exempted from the surtax or ad valorem duty of 30 per cent.

2. The present duty charged on common soaps, savons de Marseille (castile soaps) shall be reduced by one-half.

3. The present duty charged on nuts, almonds, prunes and plums should be reduced by one-third.

That gives the list of articles upon which Canada granted concessions to the products of France. Under article 3 is a list of the articles upon which France granted the concession of her minimum tariff to the products of Canada :—

ARTICLE III.

The following articles of Canadian origin imported direct from that country accompanied by certificates of origin shall receive the advantage of the minimum tariff on entering France, Algeria or the French colonies:—

Canned meats; condensed milk, pure; fresh water fish, eels; fish preserved in their natural form; lobsters and crayfish preserved in their natural form; apples and pears, fresh, dried or pressed; fruits preserved, others; building timber in rough or sawn; wood pavement; staves; wood pulp (cellulose); extract of chestnut and other tanning extracts; common paper, machine made; prepared skins, others, whole; boots and shoes; furniture of common wood; furniture other than chairs, of solid wood, common; flooring in pine or soft wood; wooden sea-going ships.

It is understood that the advantage of any reduction of duty granted to any other power on any of the articles enumerated above shall be extended fully to Canada.

That is the list of articles upon which Canada obtained the concession of the French minimum tariff. I think it may fairly be said that the treaty, although not in all respects satisfactory, was a step in the right direction, as indicating the desire of Canada to establish friendly relations with that great country, France. There were, however, one or two conditions to which exception was taken at the time, and which seems unfair to Canada. The first disadvantage was with respect to what is called the favoured nation rule. France, by the terms of this treaty, received favoured nation advantages to a larger degree than she granted to Canada. Canada received assurance of favoured nation treatment—which is the best treatment accorded to any foreign country, as respects the list of articles mentioned in the treaty, and which I have read. But France, on the other hand, received favoured nation treatment in all commercial matters without limitation. The concession of favoured nation treatment to Canada was limited to the specific list of articles mentioned. Article 2 reads as follows :—

ARTICLE II.

Any commercial advantage granted by Canada to any third power, especially in tariff matters, shall be enjoyed fully by France, Algeria and the French colonies.

So, as I have said, France received the advantages of favoured nation treatment in all commercial matters in Canada, while we in return received it only on a limited list of articles mentioned in the treaty. That is a disadvantage which has been frankly recognized from time to time. There is another point in which the old treaty seemed to be open to objection. Hon. gentlemen will have noticed that when I read the list of articles mentioned by article 3 of the convention it provides :

That the following articles of Canadian origin imported directly into France shall receive the benefit of the treaty.

In order to receive benefit on this list of articles the goods had to be sent directly from Canada to France. But when we come to the other side of the case as respects the French articles which were entitled to be admitted to the benefit of this treaty in Canada, there is no such limitation. France had the right to send her goods into Canada by any channel that might be desirable or convenient on her part, while Canada, on the other side, was limited as respects the benefit of the treaty to goods exported directly to France. So in these two particulars the treaty seemed to be somewhat unfair and inequitable. Nevertheless, if I may repeat what I said a moment ago, the treaty on the whole was regarded, I think, with considerable favour, not because it was extensive, but because it was a manifestation on the part of Canada of our desire to have commercial relations with that great country.

In the last session of pariament we adopted a somewhat new tariff policy, though in its general character it was substantially the same as before. But the new feature was the adoption of what was called the intermediate tariff. We recognized the fact that in dealing with foreign nations it is always well to have something to offer them. What that should be is some times a vexed question in the discussion of tariff matters. Of course, the English free trader would claim that it is not necessary to have anything to offer, but that you can get along without any such concessions. Whether that be right or wrong, most of the world runs to the other view, and finds that if you can make some discrimination in what you may have to give one country for a consideration from what you may be giving others, it is always helpful in negotiations. We adopted the intermediate tariff, stating that we desired it to be understood as an instrument of negotiation, as an indication of a willingness to make a general measure of reduction of our tariff to any country which wished to give us concessions in return. An intermediate tariff, as its name implies, stands between the rates of the British preferential tariff and the higher rates of the general tariff.

We had to recognize that in dealing with this question we might find some embarrassment from what is called the favoured nation clause in certain commercial treaties. These favoured nation treaties, many of them, are of olden times. In bygone years the imperial government made commercial treaties for the empire; the colonies were not specially consulted, but the treaties applied to the empire at large, and some of these old treaties still remain. In the development of Britain's colonial system a different policy has been adopted, and now it is the well understood policy of all governments in Great Britain that no commercial treaty will be made affecting any of the self-governing colonies without the consent of the colony itself. So if to-day any commercial treaty were undertaken by Great Britain, a clause would be put in stating that the treaty should not apply to Canada unless Canada desired by her own act to adhere to the treaty. Now the embarrassment that did sometimes arise from the existence of these old treaties is this, that if you wanted to make some arrangements with a country where you will receive some concession and give something in return, whatever you give to that country you will be obliged to give to all countries having these favoured nation treaties, though you may receive no special consideration from them in return. There are embarrassments in the matter, although it is not, I may say, without its compensation. But we found ourselves particularly embarrassed by the favoured nation terms of our own treaty with France, the treaty from which I have recently quoted. As I have pointed out, we were obliged by the terms of that treaty to give France every consideration that we might grant to any other foreign country. As a rule if we give the benefit of a given concession to a favoured nation country we would at least get the benefit of the favoured nation treatment in return. But in the case of our relations with France it was not so. We were obliged to give France favoured nation treatment in all commercial matters and especially in tariffs without getting any further concession than that which was contained in the treaty of 1893, which as I have explained, is a very limited one. For illustration: Suppose we had desired to make a treaty with Germany. Suppose Germany removed some of the disabilities under which we think our trade has laboured in that country. Suppose we in return were to agree to admit the products of Germany at favoured rates, we would get in that case some return from Germany. But we would be obliged to give the concession to France and receive no return whatever; because by the terms of the treaty of 1893 we are obliged to give France favoured nation treatment, not on a limited list of articles, but in all commercial matters. So it seems obvious that if we were to do any business with foreign nations generally, one of our first steps should be, if possible, to dispose of this French treaty of 1893. Of course we could have disposed of that by simply asking the imperial authorities to denounce the treaty. But I am sure I voice the sentiments of every member of the House irrespective of party affiliations when I say that such a course would have been regarded as most regrettable and unjustifiable. There are many reasons why Canada should desire to establish the most friendly commercial relations with France; these reasons will occur to us on reflection. It seemed, therefore, that the proper course to pursue was, as a first step, to approach the French government and see if we could not make some more satisfactory arrangement with them. That course was determined upon, and a few months ago steps were taken to deal with the French government in the matter. I need hardly say that the making of a treaty is the work of the Sovereign, and that only those who are authorized by the Sovereign can undertake negotiations of that character. Our next step therefore, was to open communication with the imperial authorities in order that we might have the benefit of their co-operation and approval. I rejoice to be able to say, although it is only what one might expect, that from all in authority in the imperial government we received every assistance and every consideration and every courtesy. As we approached the French government we came into contact with two or three different departments of the British government. Lord Elgin, as head of the Colonial Office, would naturally be consulted; Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Minister, would naturally be consulted in a matter concerning negotiations with a foreign nation, and Mr. Lloyd-George, as head of the Board of Trade, would naturally come into the matter in the examination of commercial question. No one of those gentlemen was obliged to give the matter much time or attention, but at all events it is my duty and pleasure to say that each one of those distinguished members of the imperial government, and all the officials in the several departments, gave us their most hearty and most cordial co-operation. We can say the same for His Majesty's ambassador in France, Sir Francis Bertie, and Sir Henry Austin Lee, the commercial councillor of the embassy. We were not obliged to call upon them very often, but we had the gratification to know that any assistance we desired or any co-operation they could give us were cordially offered to us and freely given.

We were brought into communication, through the good offices of His Majesty's ambassador, with Mr. Pichon, the Minister of Foreign Affairs. After a preliminary discussion of the matter with the Foreign Minister the details of the transaction, on the part of France, were committed to certain high officers of the several departments who would naturally be called upon to deal with a commercial matter—high officers of the Foreign Office, the Departments of Finance, Commerce and Agriculture. These gentlemen entered into a discussion with us as to the details of the proposed arrangement. Our first suggestion, as is disclosed by the correspondence which has been placed on the table of the House, was to offer them, as a basis for opening the negotiations, our intermediate tariff for their minimum tariff, and we suggested that we should make a treaty for a term of at least ten years. The reply of the French authorities was, first, that they were not able to entertain the proposal for an exchange of our intermediate tariff for their minimum tariff, because under the French law, they were only at liberty to grant their full minimum tariff to a country which was prepared to give them the very lowest rate of duties that was accorded to anybody. Now, the very lowest rate of duties under our tariff, of course, was the British preferential, and as we were not prepared to grant the rates of the British preferential the French authorities felt that our proposition did not fall within the intention of their law. Another point upon which they were not able to agree with us was as respecting the fixing of rates for a period of ten years. They thought it more desirable that their legislature should be free to change these rates from time to time. They were willing to consider a list of articles as respects which they would give us the benefits of their minimum tariff, whatever they might be from time to time, but they did not wish to fix, or as they expressed it, to consolidate their duties for a period of ten years.

Mr. FOSTER. What would happen supposing that at the next session of the French chambers one of the items of their tariff which is now at the minimum rate and for which we are giving an equivalent should be placed on the general list—should be revised upward?

Mr. FIELDING. They would undoubtedly have the right to do that and we would get only the benefit of the revised rate, but on the other hand, the same thing would happen as respects us. We grant them on certain articles, the rates of our intermediate tariff. We do not grant a particular rate, we do not say the rate on this thing shall be 20 per cent and never anything more, we say the rate shall be the rate of the intermediate tariff, and if we see fit to change that rate and make a higher one we have a perfect right to do so, just as they have a perfect right to change the rate under the minimum tariff. But it is only fair to say that in both cases they can only do that if they do it at the same time as respects all foreign nations. If we change our intermediate tariff and place a higher rate of duty on any article we could not give a lower rate to any other nation. We are obliged to give France the best we give to any foreign nation, and in like manner, if France should propose to change her rate, take some item from the minimum tariff and place it under the general tariff, she has a right to do that, but she can only do it for Canada by doing it at the same time for the whole foreign world.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the difficulty about the preferential tariff of England ? Did they look upon England as a foreign country ?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, it has taken our European friends some years to understand the true relation which Canada bears to the empire at large, and there has been a strong disposition on the part of European nations to insist that we must give to them whatever we give to Great Britain. My hon. friend will remember that this was the great trouble in regard to the German and Belgian treaties a few years ago. A favoured nation treaty simply admits a country enjoying the benefits of that treaty to the treatment that we give to any foreign country, but the Belgian and German treaties required that we should give Germany and Belgium, not only what we might give to any foreign nation, but what we might give to any part of the British Empire. It was against these treaties that we protested and ultimately these old treaties—Lord Salisbury called them these 'unlucky treaties'—were denounced. Thus the right was established for Canada to make any arrangement that we thought fit and proper either with the mother country or with any portion of the British Empire. However, I am bound to say that our French friends did realize that position. We claimed that we must have the right to grant to any portion of the British Empire any tariff arrangement which, in the judgment of the parliament of Canada, might be wise, and in like manner we recognize the right of the French authorities to grant any tariff preference that they might desire to any part of the French possessions, whether they were distant or not. France is an immense country. Including her possessions she has a populaion of 93,000,000, and a territory of nearly 4,000,000 square miles. We recognize that that consitutes the French family and that they should have the right to make any tariff arrangement they might think proper within that circle. But if they should grant a concession to a foreign nation as respects any article in our treaty that concession must be given to Canada. In like manner we say that within the British Empire we have the right to make any arrangement we please. I hope I have made that point clear to my hon. friend from Beauharnois. In approaching our negotiations with the French authorities we tried to keep in view several purposes :

First, to remove the inequalities—I do not think any hon. gentleman will object to my calling them that—of the old treaty and make the conditions fairly reciprocal.

Second, to guard against the granting of concessions which would injure any large Canadian interest.

Third, to keep, as far as possible, for British trade the degree of preference established by the tariff policy of last session

Fourth, to grant to France to a reasonable extent of favoured nation treatment—the best treatment which is accorded to any foreign country—and to reserve to Canada the right to make any tariff arrangement which we may see fit with Great Britain or with any British colony.

Fifth, in the granting of any special rates which might be thought desirable we desired to confine them as far as possible to French specialties which would not be likely to come into competition in any large degree with our industries or with British industries.

Sixth, to secure favoured nation treatment as far as possible for the chief articles of export which we might hope to send abroad.

And lastly, to seek the favoured nation treatment on some things which, though we may not now export them, we may reasonably hope to export in the future.

Our first duty should be to give consideration to the lines of goods in which Canada is now engaged in the export trade, but we thought at the same time that we should have some regard to the articles in which Canada might at no distant day desire to obtain an export trade abroad.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What were the articles of the present export to which attention was chiefly directed in that regard ?

Mr. FIELDING. I shall be glad to call my hon. friend's attention to them as I proceed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Later on ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Now, I want to read article 1 of the treaty which hon. gentlemen probably have in their hands, because it will properly fit into this part of my statement.

The natural and manufactured products of Canadian origin enumerated in schedule A to this convention shall enjoy, on their importation into France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, the benefit of the minimum tariff and of the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to like products of other foreign origin.

I desire to call attention to the word 'foreign' there because it deals with a point to which I referred a moment ago. We only asked to receive the best terms that are granted to a foreign country. We did not ask the best terms that are accorded by France to her colonies and we do not propose to give France the best terms that we give to Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. Non-British would be the meaning of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. The word 'foreign' in diplomacy has a definite meaning.

Mr. FOSTER. But as far as we are concerned ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we reserved our freedom of action as respects British countries, but guaranteed to each other the best treatment that is accorded to a foreign nation. This article 1 deals with Canadian products which are entitled to the benefits of the minimum tariff. That, as I have already explained, does not fix the rates as respects the articles mentioned in the schedule—a very long list as my hon. friend will see—but France guarantees to us the benefits of her minimum tariff. She has undoubtedly the right to change that minimum tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. Upwards or downwards ?

Mr. FIELDING. Upwards or downwards, but whatever change she makes must apply to the world at large, and she must give us the best treatment she accords to any foreign nation. Article II emphasises that although I am not quite sure that the emphasis was necessary :

> Every reduction of customs duty granted by France to any foreign country whatever on any of the products enumerated in schedule A shall apply to the fullest extent to similar Canadian products.

So it is beyond all question that we shall receive under this arrangement the best rates that France may grant to any country. Now, if we turn to schedule A to which reference is made, we will find a long list of products. I remember that when the treaty of 1893 was being considered the criticism then offered was that we were receiving no concession upon the various products of the farm, and the answer that was made and justly made, was that it seemed hopeless at that time to expect from the French government any concession whatever upon farm products. Undoubtedly the policy of France has been towards the protection of its agriculture, and so strongly was that policy manifested at that time that the gentlemen connected with the negotiation of that treaty thought it was useless to attempt to obtain any concession in that respect whatever. Well, the situation is a little better to-day. We have not obtained concessions upon all the agricultural products that we should perhaps desire to have favoured, but we have obtained concessions on a considerable number. We have obtained the concession of the French minimum tariff on, animals, fresh meats, salted meats, tinned meats, eggs, cheese, salted butter, honey, apples, pears, peaches, canned or preserved fruits, vegetables, fodder including hay. These are the principal agricultural products upon which we have received the benefits, so far as they may be benefits, of the French minimum tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has left out pine apples.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, pine apples would probably square with eels which were in the old treaty. Then, among the other natural products which are mentioned in the treaty are, fish fresh and salted, fish oils, wood pulp, lumber; some of these articles are in the old treaty of course and are carried forward.

Mr. BERGERON. How do our goods compare with American goods going into France ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Americans have a very limited tariff with France but they are trying to get a new one now. They have some few articles on the minimum tariff, a list of which I read to the House the other day.

Mr. BERGERON. Do Canadian goods stand on a better footing than United States goods entering France ?

Mr. FIELDING. On some of the articles in this treaty they unquestionably do. I do not say that always will be the case, I do not wish to put forward that view.

Mr. BERGERON. What about agricultural implements ?

Mr. FIELDING. I will be happy to discuss that a moment later with my hon. friend. As I stated, these are the principal articles of Canadian export. There are a number of agricultural items upon which we receive no concession and yet these items are set forth in the treaty. The items of grains, wheat, oats, every thing of that kind, will be found to be set forth in the treaty, but if you examine carefully you will discover that the minimum tariff which they are kind enough to give us amounts to the same as the general tariff. I would not be surprised if some hon. gentlemen would say : Well, if the rates are the same what is your concession, why do you put it in the treaty ? There is no immediate value we frankly admit, but the reason we put these items into the treaty is that France may at any time make treaties with other countries in which concessions may be granted on these items, and if we have no reference to them in this treaty, it may be that a year hence France will make a treaty with the United States and give reduced rates upon wheat and flour and such things, and she would then, were these articles not mentioned, be under no obligation to give the same reduced rates to Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. That is an important point which my hon. friend has touched and I would like to be clear on that. I would judge that with reference to these articles just mentioned France has no minimum tariff ; she only has a general tariff and if that be so and we are not getting the minimum tariff on these articles I do not see how we could benefit from the contingency that the hon. minister has spoken of. Would he be a little more definite about that ?

Mr. FIELDING. We certainly get no concession now because where the rates are mentioned at all in the French tariff they are the same, and if they are left blank in one column and the rates are mentioned in the other that amounts to the same thing ; there is no minimum rate. But if at any time France were to grant to our neighbours in the United States—I take the United States for the sake of illustration—a minimum rate upon these articles, she is obliged to give us that minimum rate at the same time, and that is why we put in the tariff a rather numerous list of items as to which at present there is no concession at all. Have I made it clear ?

Mr. FOSTER. Where has my hon. friend the authority in the treaty for that ; will he point it to us ?

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend reads more carefully article 1 :—

> The natural and manufactured products of Canadian origin enumerated in schedule A to this convention shall enjoy, on their importation into France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, the benefit of the minimum tariff and of the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to like products of other foreign origin.

And to remove any possible doubt and to make assurance doubly sure, article 2 says :—

> Every reduction of customs duty granted by France to any foreign country whatever on any of the products enumerated in schedule A shall apply to the fullest extent to similar Canadian products.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to me to meet it.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that is quite clear and it was for that purpose it was inserted. I can well understand that without explanation it might seem to be a waste of time to put into that treaty a long list of items with respect to which there is actually for the moment no concession at all. But in the light of interchange of observations between my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and myself, I think it will be seen that it is of the greatest importance to place in that list our chief articles of export, so that, though we may not receive any concession at the moment, we shall be sure that if at any time hereafter France should grant a concession upon these articles to any foreign country, then she will give that concession to these similar products of Canada. I think that in that respect this provision of the treaty is very important indeed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of the blanks in the French minimum tariff ; is it that there is no minimum tariff with respect to these articles ?

Mr. FIELDING. The structure of the French tariff is somewhat peculiar in that respect. In some cases they put in the two columns the same rate and in some cases they put a rate in only the general column. The result is the same; if there is a general rate given and no rate mentioned in the minimum column then certainly we have to pay the general rate for the present, and there is no minimum in that case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a little confusing.

Mr. FIELDING. It is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Sometimes, for example as in the case of seed grain, we find the same figures in both columns and sometimes you find no figures at all in the first column ; that I did not understand.

Mr. FIELDING. Like my hon. friend I find it a bit confusing, but there can be no doubt that in these cases there is no minimum rate and only the general rate can apply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They have two tariffs, as we have?

Mr. FIELDING. They have two columns.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know how many countries approximately have the same advantages that France is offering to us under this treaty?

Mr. FIELDING. I gave a list of the countries the other day; it is quite numerous. No great country to-day is going to give to any one country a monopoly of its tariff privileges. Even if Canada were a very much greater and bigger country than it is, no country would give us a monopoly of any concession. It might give us a concession for the time being, as France does, but it would hold itself free to grant the same concession to any other country that would satisfy it. France has given the advantage of its minimum tariff to quite a number of countries. Of course, our chief competitor, to speak frankly, is to the south of us. Our enterprising brethren in the United States produce the same things that we do, and in the world's trade they are going to be our chief competitors.

In all our transactions with foreign countries it should be our aim to see that we are put on even terms with them as respects our chief articles of export. I have said that we have endeavoured to secure under this treaty, first, such concessions as we could get as respects the articles which we are now exporting; and we have thought it well also to put into the treaty a list of articles which we do not now export. Canada not many years ago, in the negotiation of a commercial treaty, would have hardly thought it necessary to do more than seek consideration for her natural products. The reciprocity treaty of 1854 was a treaty in natural products almost entirely. But Canada since that time has grown immensely. We are no longer relying on natural products alone. Our manufactures have made considerable progress; and even if in some lines we are not exporting to-day, I ask hon. gentlemen, was it not the part of wisdom in the ministers who were negotiating with the French government to look ahead and consider whether some things which we have not exported in the past are not likely to be the subject of export at no distant day? We are not making a treaty merely for a day or for a year. We hope that this treaty will prove so beneficial to both countries—because a good treaty can only be good when it is beneficial to both parties—that it will last for a long period of years. Therefore we have to look ahead and consider not only the things which we export to-day, but the things which we may wish to export in the early future. Take a glance, for instance, at the condition of manufactures in Canada to-day and at the progress that has been made. It is not many years since Canada imported all her cement from Europe—from Great Britain or Belgium. During the last ten or fifteen years Canada has made enormous progress in the manufacture of cement. We now produce a first class article, equal to the best that can be produced in the old world. Up to the present, large as has been the development of our cement industry, our home market has been able to absorb the whole product; but any gentleman acquainted with that industry will agree with me when I say that the time is not far distant when our production will exceed the requirements of our home market and we shall be sending cement to Europe instead of looking to Europe for it. I ask my hon. friends if it was not the part of wisdom to put cement on the list on the chance of by and by finding the concession as to that article useful.

Apply the same rule to articles of iron. We have of course been importers of iron for generations, but of late years we have made very great progress in the iron industries of our own country. True, they have only been built up by means of great encouragement; we have not been able to hold our home market even with the assistance of bounties, and that is the condition at the present moment. We are not able to export iron at present. We made the attempt a few years ago, but it was only experimental and was not treated as a serious proposition. But who will say that with the expansion of that industry, five or ten years hence we may not send iron to the European market? It is at any rate within the bounds of possibility.

So you may go through the various lines of Canadian manufactures. We have always imported most of our locomotives. We have made a few in Canada, and of late years there has been a great improvement in that branch of trade. It is not many years since we had a single factory at Kingston, which has been expanded into a great industry, and we also manufacture locomotives at Montreal and Toronto, and in a few years we may be able to send some abroad. At any rate, no harm will result from placing locomotives in the list of articles on which we wish to get the best terms going. Take sewing-machines. Some years ago we had a considerable trade in sewing-machines. Since then there has been a change in the methods of the industry; but we have to-day a large sewing machine factory at Guelph, and recently another large factory has been built at St. John's, P.Q. We are not sending sewing machines at present to the European market, but as that industry is growing, we thought it wise to put them on the list. Going through this list, I can well understand that hon. gentlemen might find a few articles on which there might be doubt and criticism. They might say, we are not exporting these articles. The answer is that we are an iron, copper, nickel and lead-producing country; we have made enormous expansion in our manufactures in the last few years; and I hope I have the sympathy of the House when I say that we hope for a much greater expansion in the future; and it is in order that we may avail ourselves of that expansion and be in a position to send our productions to the European market on fair terms that we have placed these articles on the list. Instead of making a treaty with reference merely to the common natural products of the country, we are making a treaty which anticipates that Canada will take her place among the manufacturing countries of the world.

The hon. member for Beauharnois asked a question about agricultural implements. That is another illustration of what we may hope to do in manufactures. We have already done something in the way of exporting agricultural implements. Last year, in addition to supplying our home market, we exported them to the value of $3,248,000, and of these we sent over half a million dollars worth to France. Now, France is a magnificent agricultural country, but her methods have been old-fashioned and backward. She is beginning now to use agricultural implements very freely, and although some classes of agricultural machinery used in France are manufactured at home and some in England, there is a great demand for the modern kinds of agricultural implements manufactured in Canada and the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. What kinds, for instance?

Mr. FIELDING. Mowers and reapers, I believe, though I cannot answer my hon. friend's question as fully as I would like to do. We learned that there was a growing demand for the kind made in America, and we thought it was of very considerable importance that we should obtain favourable terms as respects agricultural implements, and we have been able to place them on the list. My hon. friend asked, what about the United States? The United States at this moment have no arrangement by which the minimum tariff shall be extended to them on agricultural implements.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know the value of agricultural implements sent by the United States to France?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not. No doubt there is a large export of American agricultural implements. That is an industry in which the United States have been somewhat ahead of us, but we have been doing a lot of catching up in the last few years. At all events, agricultural implements are one of the lines of manufacture in which Canada has made great progress. It is the boast of one of the great manufacturing concerns in Toronto that they are selling agricultural implements under every flag in the world, and selling them at a profit.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount exported from the United States to France in 1895—I have not the figures for 1896—was $2,750,764.

Mr. FOSTER. Can my hon. friend state how the duty works out on the average binder or mower?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I could not; but I think for our purpose if I give my hon. friend the general and minimum duty on agricultural machinery he will see comparatively the advantage we get. In France of course their method of levying duty is different from ours; they levy there largely by weight and on each 100 kilograms of agricultural machinery, under general tariff, the duty is 15 francs, and under the minimum tariff it is only 9 francs. There is an illustration of a substantial advantage which we obtain. At this moment should the treaty be adopted, the American agricultural implement maker must pay a duty of 15 francs per 100 kilograms on his machines while on the same article the Canadian pays only 9 francs per kilogram. It is a very material advantage. But while we get that concession for the moment, I do not anticipate that we can hold it for ever. I think it is something to have got a start, to be able to say to-day that the duty on Canadian agricultural implements under this treaty will be materially lower than that on American; but we know that at this moment our American friends are in Paris trying to make a treaty. Their methods of treaty-making are somewhat slow and it may take them some time. I have no doubt that in the end these two great nations will come together and make a treaty and that agricultural implements may be included in the arrangement. Just how soon that will come I can hardly say. I have seen statements in the press that it is likely a Franco-American arrangement may be made at a very early date. On the other hand, as I have said, the methods of making treaties in the United States are somewhat slow and even after they have made up their minds what they want it may take some time to perfect an arrangement. However that may be, I do not want to hold out the hope that this concession will continue for Canada. But suppose that we did not have that concession and that then our American friends obtained the concession of 9 francs and we had to pay the 5 francs, what would then be our position? No matter what may be given to the United States we have the guarantee and the advantage of that concession. We cannot claim to have this concession permanently but if France makes a treaty with the United States they must give us the benefit of whatever arrangement they make with the United States with regard to agricultural implements. And so with other things.

If we have regard to statistics as respects our present exports, I am quite prepared to receive the criticism that there are many items mentioned in the treaty which are of little or no importance to Canada, but I beg hon. gentlemen when giving the subject their consideration to look ahead and have that abiding faith that we have that Canada, in making treaty arrangements to-day, should no longer confine herself to the products of agriculture, the forest and the fisheries, but should have regard to the increasing production of the workshops of our country.

Another article upon which we have asked a concession is spirits. There has been a little misunderstanding in the House on that subject; the impression seems to have got abroad that we are reducing the duties in Canada on French brandies, gins and spirits of all sorts. I can understand how one might fall into that error on hastily reading the treaty and finding these articles on the list, but the explanation is of course that at present there is no change in these duties. On both sides of this treaty will be found a number of items printed in italics, articles of Canadian production which we hope to export to France and articles of French production which they may hope to send to Canada ; these articles printed in italics indicate that for the time being there is no reduction in rate, but each country gives the other a guarantee that if at any time it makes a reduction on these articles, France or Canada, as the case may be, shall benefit by the reduction. There is therefore no reduction whatever upon spirits coming into Canada. There is, however, a reduction on spirits going into France, amounting to about one-eighth of the duty on spirits as between the general tariff and the minimum tariff. I am quite prepared to have some good friend say we are not very much concerned in this spirit matter, that it would be a good thing if we did not have any spirits. But next to not having spirits produced in the country, it would surely be well instead of drinking them ourselves to send them abroad, and have some one else drink them. Last year we sent abroad $1,326,000 worth of Canadian whiskies, so you see it is a very considerable article of export. We exported to France only $3,674 worth of Canadian whisky, but I can bear testimony to the fact —not by actual drinking of course,——

An hon. MEMBER. Quite sure of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I prefer other beverages. I can testify that the manufacturers of Canadian whisky are very enterprising and one of the best advertised articles of Canadian origin on the continent of Europe, is one of the Canadian whiskies, I am not going to say which.

Mr. BERGERON. Was it good to drink ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know, but the Frenchmen seemed to think it was. If we can send abroad this Canadian whisky, which is strong—although many people think it is excellent, others believe it is not—and bring back the light wines of France, in addition to exchanging trade, may we not be advancing the great cause of temperance ?

Mr. FOSTER. What does the Minister of Agriculture think of that ?

Mr. FIELDING. He is not here to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. You are taking advantage of him.

Mr. FIELDING. I rather think he would prefer to send the whisky abroad and if he had to drink anything he would prefer the wines mentioned.

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean he would prefer the wines ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think of the two, if he had to take either he would take the wine. I have mentioned a number of articles of manufacture, that we have placed on the list, I do not know if it is necessary to enlarge on them.

Mr. FOSTER. Item 174 seems to be the item of which the minister is now speaking; is that the only item in which spirits enter ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, I think that covers all forms of spirits. The word 'other' at the bottom of the item covers whiskies as they are not specifically qualified; they come under the general head of spirits.

Coming now to the articles in the line of manufactures in which we may hope some day to do business, although we are not doing much in them to-day, I may mention as examples mineral waters, cement, iron and steel rails, lead in various forms, nickel, antimony, skins and hides, boots and shoes (these are in the old treaty), leather belting locomotives, sewing machines, gas-buoys pianos, organs, carriages and carts, manufactures of india rubber, asbestos and mica. All these are things which are being produced in Canada; some we are already exporting and others we may reasonably hope to export in the future, and for that reason, we think it is important that they should be included. Schedule A gives a list of articles upon which Canada receives concessions. This list includes 152 articles. If we turn to the schedule B, we find that Canada gives concessions to France on 98 articles. I am not trying to suggest that a mere comparison of the number of articles necessarily means a great deal, but they happen to be respectively of these numbers. The rates we grant upon these 98 items are the rates contained in the intermediate tariff as adopted last year. There is nothing new in them—they are the rates that parliament has already approved of. Then, we come to schedule C. France claimed that the difference between her general tariff and minimum tariff was greater than the difference between our general tariff and intermediate tariff. It must be admitted that there is some force in that connection. Take for illustration a few items. The difference in most cases, in our tariffs, is 2½ per cent. In some cases it is 5 per cent. Some illustrations from the French tariffs will show that the difference between their tariffs is greater. For instance, take the following list of articles showing the duty for a given quantity under the French general tariff and also under the French minimum tariff, and it will be seen what a very considerable difference there is :

	French general tariff. Fr.	French minimum tariff. Fr.
Agricultural implements. . .	15	9
Salted meats, per 100 kilos (220 lbs.)..	50	30
Butchers produce..	100	50
Codfish, dried..	60	48
Fresh lobsters..	40	15
Fresh apples..	5	2
Dried apples..	15	10

The differences in these cases range from 20 per cent to 60 per cent of the duty. So, our French brethren were correct when they claimed that the measure of reduction which they were able to give, item for item, as between their two tariffs, was greater than the reduction that we were able to give, item by item, under the tariffs adopted by this parliament. They gave this as a reason why they should receive consideration by way of special reductions. We felt that that was a fair claim and were willing to grant them concessions upon a few items which might almost be called French specialties. That is done by schedule C, which sets forth the special rates of duties in the cases there given. In most cases, these are the rates of the British preferential tariff, but as the goods, are not, to any extent, produced in England, the British trade is not affected by these reductions.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the relations of France and England in that matter?

Mr. FIELDING. England has the benefit of the French minimum tariff. England has only one tariff, which gives to France as low duties as are given to any other country in the world. We do not give to other countries as low a tariff as we give to England.

Mr. BERGERON. England, then, is on the same plane that we are on ?

Mr. FIELDING. England is better placed. We get the benefit of the minimum tariff on a long list of articles, while England gets the benefit of it on the full list. Of course the things that we have to sell over there are not the things that England has to sell, and we are not competitors as a rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there not a pretty large importation under article 220 of schedule C ?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) refers to liquid medicines. I am glad he called attention to that. Liquid medicines appear in our existing tariff under a general classification at 50 per cent. The French representatives desired to have a reduction on this item. We came to the conclusion that we would not reduce the duties on liquid medicines which contained alcohol. We divided this item into two parts, and while the rate stands as to medicines containing alcohol, on those not containing alcohol it will be reduced to 25 per cent. That and the duty on light wines, to which I shall refer presently, are the only duties that are lower than the preferential tariff. Wines, of course, Britain does not produce to any great extent; but in the case of liquid medicines, we realize that these are exported from Britain, and we propose to reduce the duties on these goods from Britain at the same time. The same rate will apply to the whole British Empire. In embroideries, velvets, silk fabrics, ribbons and manufactures of silk, we fixed rates below those of the intermediate tariff, but in all such cases still leaving a margin of preference to the British manufacturer. The margin of preference is somewhat reduced, but in most cases the British manufacturers are not serious competitors in these lines of goods.

Mr. BERGERON. Britain imports these goods.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, she imports them largely from France.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the item of embroideries, laces and so on, there is a large English manufacture.

Mr. FIELDING. Laces are made in Nottingham. But I was advised by a gentleman in the trade, interested in the trade with Canada, that the French laces and the English laces are really different articles. His judgment was that this would not seriously affect the export of English laces to Canada. That is one item as to which it may perhaps be said that there will be some competition on the part of England. But there is only a reduction of the margin of preference. I think that is the one item in the line of French specialties in which there is a possibility of the position of the English manufacturer being weakened.

Mr. DANIEL. With regard to medicines, I notice that under article 316, page 15, it says that those medicines not mentioned in any pharmacopœia are entirely prohibited. Does that mean that the ordinary proprietary medicines manufactured in Canada, unless they are mentioned in the British or other pharmacopœia are entirely prohibited from being imported into France? Item 316 says 'Compound medicines, not specified.' Then it says :

Mentioned in an official pharmacopœia, specific duties to be fixed by the superior school of pharmacy

Then it says that those not mentioned in any such pharmacopoeia are prohibited.

Mr. FIELDING. These are prohibited by the law of France ; it is not a new feature in the treaty.

Mr. DANIEL. No proprietary medicines made in Canada can be imported into France except those that are officinal.

Mr. FIELDING. That I believe to be the law of France to-day. I now come to the duties on champagnes and wines. Our French friends are makers of a large variety of things, but like every other country they have their specialties. Silks, ribbons, embroideries, laces, wines, champagnes and brandies are the specialties of France. I have stated that so far as brandies and strong liquors are concerned, there is no reduction whatever. With regard to champagne it was very natural that our French friends should wish for a reduction on our part. It is a great article of commerce with them, and they would have been very much gratified if we could have given them some decrease. But we felt that champagne was an article of luxury and a legitimate object of high taxation, and that the reduction on champagne which was made by the existing treaty of 1893 was about as far as Canada ought to go. At that time Canada had a specific and an ad valorem duty. The duty on champagne was $3.30, the ordinary case, with an addition of 30 per cent ad valorem. By the treaty of 1893 the 30 per cent ad valorem was removed, leaving only the specific duty. We make no change in that. We had to tell our French friends frankly that we regarded champagne as an article of luxury and a proper subject for taxation, and we thought that in striking off the 30 per cent ad valorem by the treaty of 1893 we had gone quite far enough, and we had to refuse to make any further concessions on champagne. By the treaty of 1893 light wines having not more than 26 per cent of proof spirit are made dutiable at a reduced rate of 25 cents per gallon. Our French friends wanted a reduction on wine generally; we had to refuse reductions on spirits and champagne, but we said we were willing to consider some changes on the lighter wines. We realized that in making a bargain with a country we must recognize the things that they wanted especially to sell and try to meet them. So we entered into a discussion with them to see what we might do in the way of some reduction on wines, and the conclusion we reached was that we would graduate the duties in proportion to the strength of the wine. So we say that a wine which has not more than 20 per cent of proof spirit shall be admitted at the rate of 15 cents per gallon; if it has more than 20 per cent and not more than 23, it shall be admitted at 20 cents per gallon; 15 cents per gallon up to 20 per cent and 20 cents per gallon up to 23 per cent, all above 23 to remain as at present at 25 per cent. 23 to 26 remains as at present.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. When wines are imported in bulk, is the gallon mentioned imperial or wine measure?

Mr. FIELDING. Our Customs Act defines the gallons as an imperial gallon. We have a small wine industry in Canada, but though it is small it should receive our full consideration. I am inclined to think that it is not an increasing industry. I have been told by the fruit growing people that they hardly found it profitable to sell their grapes for wine purposes, and that they did not look forward to any great extension of the Canadian wine industry. However that may be, I know that in one or two counties of our Dominion there is a wine industry, and when the duty of 1893 was considered, gentlemen interested in that industry were somewhat anxious as to the effect upon it. I think statistics will show that the importation of these light wines in Canada has not increased much. I do not think that it can be argued that the present treaty has been the means of preventing the Canadian industry from flourishing. However, I can well understand that gentlemen interested in that industry look upon the present treaty with some anxiety. I have been asked to meet some of them, and I will be glad to do so. But it must be remembered that we cannot make omelets without breaking eggs, and you cannot make a treaty with France or any other country without giving some concession to the special industries in which that country is engaged, and if we can make a treaty which does not effect any large industry in Canada then probably we ought to make it. However, I shall be glad to make further inquiry into the position of these gentlemen interested in the native wine trade, and if they have any grievances, there may be some means of finding a remedy.

Mr. BERGERON. The Canadian wine growers are to provide the omelet.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not say that they should not receive full consideration, if we are going to affect a very wide industry we should have to go slow about it. But if we had to affect a small industry in order to build up trade with a foreign country, it would be a fair question as to the balance of advantage to be gained. However, I have not met the Canadian wine growers yet, but I shall be glad to do so. At all events what we are doing is to make some concessions to France along the line of things in which France is particularly interested.

Mr. FOSTER. It would help us to understand the wine question if the hon. gentleman would give us a comparative statement which would enable us to understand what this reduction amounts to. Instead of being so much on all below 26, it is now graded with varying duties. Now on the importation of last year, what would be the lowering of duties under these rates as compared with the duties paid last year?

Mr. FIELDING. At a later stage I will be able to give my hon. friend that information.

Mr. FOSTER. It is important to find out what reduction we are really giving.

Mr. FIELDING. That is an important matter, and I will get the information for my hon. friend at a later stage.

MR. T. CHISHOLM. In regard to native wines, have not the French manufacturers of wines an advantage in getting alcohol without any duty to fortify their wines and bring them up to a certain strength ? Have the Canadian manufacturers of wines the same privilege ?

Mr. FIELDING. I find in reading the debates of 1893 that the same question came up and it was held that in view of the concession to imported wines then made, something of that kind should be done, but I find that nothing was done and that the Canadian wine grower does not receive his alcohol free. Whether the case is exactly as it was then, and whether the reasons then advanced for granting free alcohol to the Canadian wine growers still remain, or whether the conditions have changed or whether they should receive some consideration of that character, is a proper matter for the inquiry upon which I could not say anything definite now. But, the hon. gentleman is right in saying that the concession is not granted to the manufacturer of Canadian wines.

It may be said that we will be obliged to give the benefits of this treaty to what are called the favoured nation countries. That is correct. There may occasionally arise circumstances under which these favoured nation treaties prove somewhat embarrassing to us as they restrict our freedom of action. Still it is only fair to say that there are some compensations. If we grant to any one of these countries the benefits of this tariff by reason of favoured nation treaties which these countries made years ago with Great Britain, they cannot give us any special concession in return but they are obliged to give us favoured nation treatment, and therefore we get from these countries the best that they will give to anybody. But, as I stated a little while ago, no country is going to give, in these days a monopoly of its trade to anybody. A country may negotiate with us and give us some concession, but it will reserve its right to give the same concession to any other country with which it wishes to deal ; so that all that Canada can hope to get is what is called favoured nation treatment, or the best treatment that is going. We shall have to give the benefits of this treaty to a number of countries and I shall be happy to give the House now a list of these countries. I think I mentioned on a previous day that the application of these old treaties to Canada is sometimes debatable and I have known occasions when members differed as to whether a treaty of this class did or did not apply to Canada. But, I think I would be justified in saying that the favoured nation countries, in addition to the British empire, which will receive the benefit of this French treaty are the Argentine Republic, Austro-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Venezuela, Switzerland, Norway and Persia.

Mr. BERGERON. These are the countries which will benefit?

Mr. FIELDING. These are the countries which many years ago made treaties with Great Britain which included a clause to the effect that any privilege granted to any other foreign country should be given to them, and these treaties, made years ago before the colonies had attained their present strength as self-governing bodies, are still applicable to Canada. Under these old treaties we will be obliged to give to every one of these countries whatever privilege we grant to France. When we come to look over that list very carefully we will find that is not a very alarming one. In the first place as I have already said, we get from every one of these countries favoured nation treatment, we get the best that anybody has got, and therefore we are protected against the idea that at any time any country mentioned in this list might give to our competitors some favour and refuse it to us. That is our compensation for being parties to these favoured nation treaties.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to understand this clearly. France has favoured nation treaties with other countries. Any minimum tariff that is given to any country these favoured nations get the full benefit of ?

Mr. FIELDING. Given by France ?

Mr. HAGGART. Given by France.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. We only get the benefit under our arrangement with the French government of the minimum tariff on the articles mentioned in the schedule ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is correct.

Mr. HAGGART. We are not then in the position at all of those countries which have favoured nation treaties with France ?

Mr. FIELDING. We are in the position of those countries as respects every one of those articles on the list.

Mr. HAGGART. On the list ?

Mr. FIELDING. And these articles include all the things that Canada is likely to have to sell and some, you may tell me, she is not likely to have to sell. So practically, there is no difference. If my hon. friend would add a great many other things to the list that we would have no chance of sending to them it would be of no great advantage, and I admit the possibility of the criticism being offered that as respects some of the things on the list they are of debatable advantage. However, as I have said before, France could only grant the full benefit of her minimum tariff, under the law, to the countries that gave her the very lowest rate of duty and they said to us :

You do not give us the very lowest rate of duty ; you are giving a lower rate to England and therefore, under the terms of the French law, we cannot give you the full benefit of the French minimum tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. It was England which was making the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. But, for commercial purposes England and Canada are not quite the same, for while these old time treaties do include Canada we are free now in our negotiations with France. As respects these favoured nations generally, when we give them the benefit of this tariff we do not give it to them for nothing. We get in return no special concession, but we get a guarantee that they will not do anything better for anybody else than they do for us.

Mr. BERGERON. How many are there that fall under that head ?

Mr. FIELDING. I will read them again.

Mr. BERGERON. No, how many are there ?

Mr. FIELDING. Thirteen—the unlucky number.

Mr. BERGERON. All the advantages given to us by France are shared by thirty other nations ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know ; I gave the list the other day but I have forgotten it. It is the policy of France to give her minimum tariff wherever she can get something in return.

Mr. BERGERON. To how many nations will our general tariff now apply ?

Mr. FIELDING. Our general tariff applies to all nations, subject to this qualification.

Mr. BERGERON. If you strike out sixty-three how many are there left ?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter of geography that my hon. friend and I will have to study up. If you look over this list of favoured nation countries you will find that with a few exceptions they have no considerable trade with us and that the granting of the concessions of this treaty to them is a matter of small importance. Austro-Hungary has a considerable trade. She will get the benefits of this treaty, but she will never allow any competitor of ours into her market on any better terms than we are entitled to.

Mr. FOSTER. We have already that guarantee ?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly, and we are continuing it by this treaty. By the favoured nation treaty she becomes entitled to this and we get a continuance of the guarantee which she has already given us. Austro-Hungary is a country of some considerable trade, Japan is a country with a growing trade and Spain sends us some wines. Really among all the other countries, there are few of them that have a very extensive trade and therefore the concession that we are granting to these countries are not of the very greatest importance ; so that, I do not think the fact that we are obliged to give these concessions to favoured nations is of very great importance.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the minister whether this favoured nation treatment will extend only to those countries whose products would come and to which our products would go directly. This treaty only affects goods which are brought direct from France into Canada and which are sent from Canada to France ? Now, does that particular feature of it apply to these other countries which will come in under the favoured nation clause ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, any favoured nation country which claims and receives the benefit of this treaty must accept these benefits upon the same terms and conditions as France receives them; they can only get that which the treaty gives to France and that does include the matter of direct shipment. I think that makes it clear

Now, there are some other conditions of the treaty which are of a general character, not of the greatest importance. In both the French tariff and the Canadian intermediate tariff there are items which are at present exempt from duty, and you may say that so long as they are free of duty that is the best that any of us can get, and there is no use stipulating with regard to them. But we thought that there was a possibility that some of these items which are now exempt from duty in the French tariff might be placed upon the dutiable list in the future, and therefore we stipulate that if France shall at any time transfer any of these free items to the dutiable list then she must guarantee not to discriminate against Canada, but shall give Canada as respects these items the lowest rate of duty she grants to any foreign nation. And in like manner we stipulate that if we at any time shall transfer from our free list to the dutiable list any article, we guarantee to give on that article, to France, the lowest rate of duty that shall be given to any foreign country.

Mr. MARSHALL. If any Canadian goods on this list are being shipped from Canada to France and en route they are transferred at any foreign port, will there be any extra tariff on them over and above the minimum tariff?

Mr. FIELDING. In some cases, yes. I shall be glad to take up now the question of the direct shipment.

Mr. FOSTER. Item 711 in schedule B seems to be a very general item.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the general unenumerated item of goods in the Canadian tariff which pay under the general tariff 20 per cent and under the intermediate 17½ per cent, and this simply gives them the benefit of the intermediate rate of 17½ per cent on the unenumerated articles.

Mr. FOSTER. Which are how many?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot say. My hon. friend knows in his own experience of making a tariff that having put in everything in the world one can think of, for fear of leaving anything out you put in these unenumerated goods. Whatever comes under 'enumerated' would pay 20 per cent under the general tariff, and it is reduced now to 17½ per cent the intermediate tariff rate on these unenumerated goods, or 15 per cent if they come from Great Britain. We simply give France the intermediate tariff rate on these articles which are not mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister compare the extent of the free list in France with the extent of the free list in Canada; how do they compare as to items and importations?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not the figures at hand, but I will take a note of the question. There is a considerable free list in both countries.

Mr. FOSTER. My impression is that the free list in France is comparatively small.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever it is, my hon. friend will agree that although we had not any special items in mind, it is a general provision that if at any time they take anything from the free list and make it dutiable they shall not discriminate against us, and we cheerfully agree that if we take anything from our free list we shall not discriminate against France. We can put whatever duty we like upon such an article, but we must treat France the same with regard to it as we treat any other foreign country.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that it depends a great deal on the relative size of the free list in each case.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not quite see how that affects the question. We certainly do not want in any of these things to discriminate against France; we need not take an item from our free list if we do not wish to, but if we take it from the free list we can put whatever rate of duty on it we see fit, and all we bargain for is that we shall not discriminate against France with respect to the duty on that article. There cannot be anything wrong in that; I do not think my hon. friend could suggest anything else on reflection. France could not ask anything better from us and we could not ask anything better from them.

Now, with regard to the direct shipment. In the treaty of 1893, the old treaty which is in force to-day, the treaty negotiated by Lord Dufferin and Sir Charles Tupper, in that treaty article 3 gives a list of articles upon which reductions of duty are established, but it says:—

The following articles of Canadian origin imported direct from that country.

This means that they must be imported direct from Canada. The treaty stipulates that in order to get the benefit of the reduced rates on these goods, Canada had to send these goods direct to France, but France had the right to send her goods into Canada by any channel that is found to be convenient. Now, the French government attach great importance to that question of direct trade. They have made it their policy to build up their ports, and when the question has been discussed from time to time as to any modification of that if it were desirable, they have always said: It is no use to talk like that, that is our national policy in France and we cannot change it. Then we said: If it is not desirable that you should change, and we are not making a proposal on the subject, you should make it reciprocal, and you should only claim from us the same benefits that you are willing to give us; if we are only to receive the benefits of this treaty when we send the goods direct to you, then you can only in reason claim our benefits when you send the goods direct to us. So that whereas in former years this provision was one-sided and inequitable, it is now made reciprocal and they must send their goods either directly or by certain routes which are mentioned in article 8:—

To enjoy the benefits of the aforementioned tariff advantages, products originating in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China, shall be conveyed without shipment from a port of those territories or from a port of a territory enjoying the preferential tariff or intermediate tariff into a sea or river of Canada.

French goods therefore would have to come to us direct or by way of a country which enjoys the preferential tariff (as Great Britain or any of the colonies having that preference) or the intermediate tariff. Now, no country has the benefit of the intermediate tariff and therefore at present that is not applicable. This clearly means then—and this answers the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall)—that the French goods coming into Canada would have to come direct or by way of Great Britain at present. If we should give the benefit of our intermediate tariff to some other country, then the French goods could come by way of that country, but that contingency has not yet arisen.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend says there is no country which when this treaty is ratified will enjoy the intermediate tariff —every most favoured nation country will have the intermediate tariff so far as the goods mentioned in this treaty are concerned, and will get them in under that intermediate tariff just the same as France and on the same conditions of shipment. The point that arises here is whether or not one of the most-favoured nation treaty countries in Europe becomes entitled to the entry of goods from that country to this country on the same terms as France, and enjoys thereby the intermediate tariff so far as these goods are concerned, and whether France can ship them through her ports, even by an indirect shipment. For instance, the United States enjoys a portion of France's minimum tariff. Does that entitle her to tranship goods through a United States port?

Mr. FIELDING. I should think the proper interpretation would be that the whole intermediate tariff must apply and not a portion of it. The whole intermediate tariff has not been granted to any country. It will not be granted to France by this treaty, and therefore will not be granted to any favoured nation country. If the other interpretation can be sustained, I do not think that will have any adverse effect on us; so we need not dwell very much on that. Let us turn to the other side:

To enjoy the benefits of the aforesaid mentioned tariff advantages, Canadian products shall be conveyed without transhipment from a Canadian port or from a port of a country enjoying the French minimum tariff to a port in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions, and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China.

Provided, however, that nothing in this article shall exempt the products of either country from any surtaxe d'entrepot that is now or hereafter may be, imposed on products imported indirectly.

As I have stated, the French government attach great importance to this matter of direct shipment. We are paying $120,000 per annum for the encouragement of direct trade between Canada and France. If we send goods by our direct line to France, they of course get the benefit of this treaty without any surtaxe d'entrepot being imposed upon them. If a ship goes with goods partly for France and partly for England she can go to England, discharge her goods for England and then proceed to France and discharge her goods for France, and these goods will be entitled to the benefit of the treaty. That would be a direct trade.

Mr. BERGERON. Could the same thing be done the other way? Could a ship leave France, touch at England and then come to Canada?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; but I am dealing now with Canadian products in answer to a question which my hon. friend put to me. Now, suppose we send goods to London or Liverpool, tranship them there and send them by another ship to France, they will get the benefit of the minimum tariff rather than the higher general tariff, but will have to pay the surtaxe d'entrepot. The French government will make no concession on that point.

Mr. MARSHALL. How much will that be?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not uniform, but varies considerably on different articles. It is set forth in the printed memoranda. Now, I hope I have made myself clear. Inasmuch as the French government insist on the right to impose the surtax on indirect shipments, we have reserved the right at any time, if we see fit—whether parliament will do so or not is another question—to impose a similar tax on indirect shipments to this country.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does that appear?

Mr. FIELDING. In article 8.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister stated a few moments ago that we paid $120,000 a year to subsidize direct shipments between Canada and France. Does France contribute anything towards these direct shipments?

Mr. FIELDING. No. There was at one time a hope that an arrangement might be made for mutual adjustment of the subsidy, but it has not succeeded, and Canada has had for two or three years her independent line. I am in hope that under this treaty our trade with France will develop so much as to increase the trade of that line and develop other lines.

Mr. BERGERON. The policy of France is to subsidize steamships.

Mr. FIELDING. Not to subsidize trade in that way. She pays her ship subsidies on the basis of mileage.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister giving this as his own opinion of the interpretation of these clauses, or does he know officially how they will be interpreted by France? For instance, if I should make a shipment of goods to France through the port of New York, the United States having the advantage of the minimum French tariff on certain articles, and send them through in bond without transhipment, does my hon. friend know officially that they would be subject to the surtaxe d'entrepot?

Mr. FIELDING. That is our understanding. The treaty must speak for itself; a treaty is like a statute and can only mean what is in it; but that is our interpretation. The other provisions of the treaty hardly call for much remark. They are such clauses as usually appear in treaties of this character. For instance, we require certificates of origin to accompany the articles claiming the benefit of this treaty; that is, in order that the articles going to France or coming to Canada shall be what they profess to be; and if it be deemed expedient that those certificates of origin shall be certified or approved by an official in France or in Canada—for example, a French consul in Canada or a Canadian agent in France as the case may be—such certificate shall be given free of charge.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the French practice with countries enjoying the minimum tariff ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not quite sure. However, the French government were quite willing to agree that the conditions should be reciprocal, and it was agreed that that provision might reasonably be left to the intelligence of the Customs Departments of the two countries.

Articles 10 and 11 deal with the granting of ordinary privileges. We reserve our independence on tariff matters wherein we insist that we may do what we wish as respects British imports, but all other matters such as warehousing, &c., we guarantee to give France all reasonable privileges.

Article 12 deals with internal taxation. We have no such system of taxation here, but in France they have the system of the octrol, whereby goods after paying their duty on arrival, say at Havre, have to pay a local municipal duty on entering Paris and goods passing from Paris to other cities in France have to pay a similar duty.

Mr. FOSTER. As a matter of fact are those duties imposed only on foreign goods or on local and foreign goods equally ?

Mr. FIELDING. They are imposed on certain classes of goods, chiefly provisions. The stipulation is that no taxes of that character shall be imposed except such as are imposed upon their own subjects. Of course we cannot ask any better treatment than they give to their own subjects.

Mr. BERGERON. They would not give it.

Mr. FIELDING. It would not be reasonable. Then there is a provision that drawbacks which are granted on exports shall not exceed the duties paid. That is another form of saying there shall be no bounty on exports. We, like most countries have a system whereby if articles are manufactured out of materials which have paid duty, and these articles are then exported, the exporter may collect all but a small percentage of the duty he has paid on the materials entering into their manufacture. Under this provision we may still do that, but the drawback must be limited to the actual amount of duty paid, so that we shall not, under the guise of drawback, pay a bounty. That is a legitimate proposal and it is of course mutual.

To encourage trade it is proposed that patterns and samples sent out, possibly not with the intention of being sold in the country, but simply to assist in procuring business must pay duty when they enter the country, but if they are re-exported in 12 months the amount of the duty may be refunded. That is also mutual.

There is a clause with reference to certificates issued by French Chambre de Commerce. The French Chambre de Commerce is somewhat different from our Boards of Trade : it is a semi-official body and it is called on to do certain official duties. The French government ask us to allow the French Chambers of Commerce to certify to the values of goods being shipped to Canada. We say that we admit that a certificate of that character, given by a responsible body, in some respects almost a branch of the government, is entitled to great respect and would probably be accepted, but we are not willing to guarantee that in every case we will accept it ; if we have reason to believe in any case the certificate is wrong we have still the right to inquire into the matter. The meaning of the clause is that we would treat a certificate of that character with great respect, but the Minister of Customs would still have in the last resort his right to inquire into the matter. There is a somewhat similar arrangement with regard to the certificates as to the character and quality of French wines. They have officials of the French Department of Agriculture whose business it is to examine and certify to the quality of wine. An hon. gentleman expressed fear that adulterated wines would be brought in. The French policy to-day is very largely in the direction of securing pure wines. Hon. gentlemen will remember the wine troubles in the south of France in the early part of the summer ; those troubles arose largely from the adulteration of wines which prevented the wine growers from selling their pure wines, and the French government are most anxious to prevent the adulteration of wines. They have established officers to certify as to the quality. Inasmuch as the wines are to be taxed in proportion to their alcoholic strength it becomes important that the test shall be accurate. All we say is that we will pay great respect to any certificate given by a French government officer but we will still reserve, in the final stage, the right of the Minister of Customs to make inquiry if he has any reason to doubt the correctness of the certificate.

Then we agree to grant favoured nation treatment with respect to trade marks, patents, industrial names, industrial designs,

&c. We would do that anyway as we have no desire to treat France differently from other countries ; in matters of that character we do not discriminate. There is a provision that the treaty may be extended to Tunis if France desires to do so. The government of Tunis is somewhat different from the others I have mentioned, and France simply desires the right to extend the treaty to Tunis if she so wishes.

The old treaty is to be superseded by this, and upon this treaty going into force the old treaty of course will cease to exist. The treaty in its form seems to contemplate a period of ten years, but on careful examination it will be found that there is no guarantee of ten years. That arises from the fact that, as will be seen from the correspondence, we first proposed a clause providing for a ten year treaty at least. The French authorities were not willing to bind themselves to such a length of time, but in the drafting they left the words 'ten years' in. They are there as a sort of moral obligation, but if the clause is read closely it will be seen there is no limit to the power of either country to bring the treaty to a termination on giving 12 months' notice.

Mr. FOSTER. Ten years unless terminated by notice ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, my hon friend might assume that from the first glance, but on careful reading he will see that while they did not strike out the ten years the clause is so constructed that the ten years is not binding, as either party has the right to bring the treaty to a termination on 12 months' notice. I think the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) will see that that is the legal significance of the clause. That clause is mutual and if either party does not wish to continue the treaty they give notice.

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of the words seems to be pretty plain.

—after the completion of that formality and shall remain in force for a period of ten years——

Mr. FIELDING. Read on.

Mr. FOSTER (reading) :

—unless, however, one of the contracting parties shall within such period signify to the other party its intention to terminate this convention.

That is unless it is terminated by notice.

Mr. FIELDING. But it can be terminated by notice.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. FIELDING (reading) :

In case neither of the contracting parties shall have signified before the expiry of such term the intention of terminating this convention, it shall remain binding until expiry of twelve months from the day on which either of the two parties shall have denounced it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is after the ten years ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, before the ten years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or after the ten years ; it is exactly the same before as after ; it remains in force apparently, although extraordinary language is used to bring about the result, until one party or the other gives the 12 months' notice. But two clauses and about 150 words are employed to express what could have been expressed in about one dozen words.

Mr. FIELDING. We had proposed, as the correspondence shows, to have the treaty made for at least 10 years. France not being willing to agree to that, suggested a drafting which left in the ten years and my colleague and I did not see any reason to strike the words out, because it seems to imply a moral claim that the treaty should last for 10 years, although I am inclined to think, as a matter of law, either party has the right to terminate it before the 10 years.

Mr. FOSTER. The first part of clause 10 provides :

Canada and France undertake not to establish one against the other any prohibition or restriction of importation, exportation or transit which shall not at the same time be applicable to other countries.

It has been said that preferential goods coming from Great Britain may become subject to the conditions about direct and indirect shipment which apply to French importations.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see where the preferential goods come in at all in this.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Canada and France undertake not to establish, one against the other, any prohibition or restriction,' and so on. This would appear to be a restriction as against France with regard to the method of shipment 'Other countries' includes Great Britain. You can deduce from that that in order to give France equal treatment with 'other countries' these 'other countries' including Great Britain, must be submitted to the same condition. It says 'other countries,' not 'foreign countries.'

Mr. FIELDING. Except that, in the matter of tariff, we reserve our right to give preference to Great Britain, but we do not desire to reserve our right as respects ordinary commercial purposes. I think the clause is quite understood to mean that, except in the matter of tariffs, France and Canada agree to grant each other mutual consideration without limitation.

I have endeavoured to present, not all the details of this treaty, for that would have wearied the House—and I have occupied much more time than I had intended —but enough to show the lines upon which we approach this question and the results of our negotiations. We submit this treaty —or convention, as it is technically called —with the strong hope and the strong confidence that it will have a considerable effect in the expansion of trade between Canada and France. It is not to be expected that that expansion will be brought about immediately, but we hope and believe that, even within a short period, the effects of this treaty will be observed in the larger volume of trade between these two countries. We feel that the arrangements we have made are, in the main, such as will secure for Canada all the advantages that any country has in France in respect of the lines of goods which Canada exports or hopes to export in the near future. As I have said, I am prepared to admit that some items are there as to which the advantages are only prospective; but I can say also, and say with confidence, that there is no important article in which Canada is engaged in export trade, or is likely to be so engaged in the near future, that is not covered by the treaty, giving us assurance of the most favoured nation treatment which is all that we could hope for. And, while we hope that the result will be an expansion of trade, we believe it is not too much to express a modest hope that. in taking this step, we are doing something to supplement the splendid efforts of His Majesty the King to bring about the good relations which now exist between Great Britain and the Republic of France.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked a question touching a subject to which the hon. gentleman said he would refer before concluding his remarks, but I did not notice that he dealt with it. I asked as to the exact articles of export in respect of which the government expect that there will be an expansion of trade between Canada and France.

Mr. FIELDING. I read the list. There are certain articles imported from France, which we hope in the early future to export. I said frankly that, in respect of many of the articles, we expect that it will take time to build up an export trade. But all our natural products, which we export to any part of the world, are covered by this treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course, there are many articles in which we cannot reasonably expect a very great increase, in the immediate or, perhaps, even in the distant future. But I should imagine that the government had in mind some particular articles upon which we might anticipate some immediate expansion of our exports to France, under the concessions made by that treaty, and it was in regard to these that I asked.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FIELDING. Our view was not to prophesy with regard to any particular articles, but to secure the most favoured nation treatment for the classes of goods that Canada exports or might hope to export.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not expect the minister to prophesy exactly, but I supposed that some estimate of the kind I suggested had been made before the consent of the government was given to the treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. No. If we never increased our trade by a single dollar, it would still be desirable, that, as far as possible, we should open the way.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister any information to give us with reference to the loss of revenue that will accrue to Canada as a result of this treaty? That certainly is a most important consideration.

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) mentioned it. I have not the information in detail. Of course, it is right that we should regard this as a reduction of duty, a reduction of the burdens of the people, in the taxes on goods, not only from France, but from other countries that will receive the benefit of the treaty. Our estimate is—and it can only be an estimate—that the reduction of duty will not exceed $400,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, the hon. gentleman has divided that between direct and indirect. Would he give us the figures?

Mr. FIELDING. It is difficult to work them out in detail.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. I desire to make a fuller statement with regard to one point that I mentioned this afternoon. I said with regard to the duties on champagnes and wines of the various classes that there was no reduction as compared with the old treaty except in the matter of wines of 23 per cent strength and below. It would have been more accurate if I had said that there is no reduction as compared with the rates fixed in the intermediate tariff. I find in that respect that I was not exact. In the old treaty 30 per cent ad valorem was retained on wines of 26 per cent and upwards, but when we arranged the intermediate tariff a year ago, we struck off the 30 per cent and let it stand with the specific duty only, that being one of the inducements of the intermediate tariff. Therefore as respects a comparison between the intermediate tariff and the rates in the French treaty, there is no reduction. But as compared with the old treaty and the new—and I think it was in that connection that I used the figures—there is a reduction, because in the old treaty there was 30 per cent ad valorem on that higher class of wines; that we dropped out when we adopted the intermediate tariff, and the rate in the intermediate tariff is the rate in the French treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On how many items ?

Mr. FIELDING. On non-sparkling wines of the strength of 26 and upwards. The old treaty took off the ad valorem rate of 30 per cent on the lower class, but retained it on the higher class. The reason which influenced us in fixing that reduced rate in the intermediate tariff was this : The rate on wines of 26 per cent, and on the additional 14 degrees required to bring it up to 40, at 3 cents per degree, would make it 67 cents per gallon. We had fixed the rate on wines up to 40 per cent from South Africa, 25 cents per gallon, and we thought the difference between the 25 cents on wines from South Africa and the rate of 67 cents from other countries was a sufficient difference. However, the main point I wish to make is that while my statement was correct in a comparison between the rates of the intermediate tariff and the rates of the present treaty, it would not be correct to say that there was no difference between the old treaty and the new treaty in that item.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is No. 165 in schedule C ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is part of item 163 schedule C. Wines containing more than 26 per cent and not more than 26 per cent, 25 cents per gallon ; for each degree above that, it is 3 cents. But in the old treaty there was that 3 cents difference between each degree and the 30 per cent ad valorem. As I have explained, we dropped the 30 per cent ad valorem when we fixed the intermediate tariff and we carried the intermediate tariff rate into the treaty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No change between the old treaty in item 165 ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, champagne remains the same.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not propose to go very particularly into the details of the measure that the Finance Minister has introduced, for reasons that I will state afterwards. A treaty purporting to provide for an extension of trade between Canada and any other country ought to command the sympathy of all classes in Canada, and certainly ought not to be made a party measure. Personally I am sympathetic with any reasonable arrangement that can be made with any foreign country, and particularly with any arrangement that can be made with France, for an extension of trade between the two countries on a reasonable basis. That is more accentuated by the fact that I was a member of a government who, in 1893, made the first treaty that was concluded between France and Canada, and had something to do myself with the negotiations. For that reason as well as for the general reasons, I should be very glad indeed if, upon a thorough examination of this treaty, we can find that it would be fairly beneficial to Canada as well as to France. What the Finance Minister said is absolutely true, that a good treaty is one which is advantageous to the two countries who are making it, and there can be no grounds for the permanency of a treaty between two countries where there is a glaring inequality; for sooner or later that will become known, and the treaty will either be abrogated or a move will be made for its amendment.

So much with reference to the general question. But it becomes the duty of this House and this country to give very serious consideration to a treaty of this kind, because in its operation it goes beyond the two countries which are at first interested, in consequence of the favoured nation treaties by which Canada is bound. Therefore we have to extend our view beyond the simple exchange between France and Canada and ask how it may affect us in the wider area. On that point, and just at this time, I make a well founded claim for a grievance against the Minister of Finance and the government, in that they have been particularly careful to make this treaty in its promulgation to parliament as blind and obscure as it possibly could be. I do not see how they could have clouded the proposed information in any more effective way than they have done, I do not see how they could have given less information to the members of this House than they have given. So far as the country generally, the boards of trade, the associations of people who take great interest in active trade, are concerned, it is even more blind, more obscure than it is to members of parliament, who have some facility in deriving information which is absolutely necessary to show the trend of this treaty.

Now in the first place when we come to the consideration of this treaty, even after the Minister of Finance has given us the long and somewhat laboured explanations of it this afternoon, we find ourselves in a position in which we require more information to give us any adequate idea of the trend and effect of this treaty. What have we? We have, in the first place, the articles of the treaty and we have the attendant schedules. These tell us nothing but the articles, which, in the first place, from Canada may go into France and the articles which, from France, may come into Canada and they give us the number of francs per kilogram or per hectolitre that will be charged when they enter a port of France. The units of comparison are essentially different between Canada and France and what the Canadian, what even we who are members of parliament want in order to understand this treaty is a calculation brought down to our own units of weight, measurement and value, and unless we have this we are not in a position to understand the incidence of taxation, to understand the relative value of the schedules, or to understand the relative advantages as between the two countries. What in the world was there that prevented the hon. Finance Minister, or the hon. Minister of Customs, or some one who had the clerks, the figures and the documents all at his disposal, from putting a plain statement of the case before this House and, if it were thought necessary to have the units of the French nation, to put alongside of these the units of Canada as well so that we might understand the incidence and the averages and the rates of duty computed in language that is plain to us and in units with which we are familiar. Why could not this be done? The Minister of Finance was asked to have it done and he seemed to think it would take a great deal of time and involve a great deal of trouble, but if the treaty is at all an important treaty it is worth all the time and trouble which are necessary to make it plain to the House and the country.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman permit me? Some of the information that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) sought was difficult to get, and some, in my judgment was not necessary. But, never mind that; I stated to my hon. friend that as far as possible I would get it and some of the information was being prepared. I did not anticipate going on with the treaty today but an intimation was given to me last night that it would suit my hon. friend's convenience better to proceed now than to wait for the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I should have supposed that all this would have been done during the time that the treaty was being negotiated.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I should have supposed that there was plenty of time since the hon. gentleman came back early in September to have had these schedules drawn up in a plain and distinct form so that the members of the House, when they came to deal with it, would have plain and definite information to go upon. I do not really think that there is any excuse for the government or the minister not having this matter clearly and definitely figured out. What else would be of importance in judging of this treaty? It would be of importance for us to have some certain tables of trade; it would be of importance to have the imports from France for the last eight or ten years of the articles which were included in the treaty of 1893. Here we have in this treaty some twenty-three or twenty-six articles which have been, since 1893, upon the favoured list as between France and ourselves and under this treaty no more favourable terms are got. Why should we not have had the tables of imports from France into Canada of those articles which have been part of the treaty of 1893 so that we could have had some basis for judging what had been the course of trade with respect to the articles admitted under the treaty of 1893 and which are continued under this present treaty? Surely we might have had that. Again, Canada received minimum treatment on a certain range of articles which went from this country to France. Why should not we have had a table of exports from Canada into France of the articles which went in at the minimum treaty rate, and which have been going in for the last fourteen years? These two tables put together would have given us some basis of measuring what were the probabilities of trade between France and this country. But up to this moment no such table of trade and navigation figures between these two countries has been put before the country or before this House. One can go to work and go over all these years, studying out the tables, and getting that information for himself. I have not done it, I do not propose to do it, and I do propose that the government shall give us that before we get this treaty through. It is their business to do that work for us, and they should have had the information ready for us when they laid the treaty on the table of the House.

Well, but there is more than that. We are not getting any special favour from France. We are getting the minimum tariff; on a partial list. We are not placed in as good a position as thirty-four nations of the world, we are not being put in a better position than some thirty other nations of the world so far as we know. We are getting minimum treatment on a partial list of imports into France. Now, it is well to know, if you are going to get into a country what competition you are to meet with when you get there. Who are our competitors? We have the names of nations but that is not worth a flip of your fingers. What kind of competitors are these? Have they been entering the market of France in increasing ratio, extending their trade, getting their connections and have they become large exporters to France? If so, we find that when we get into that country we meet competitors of a certain calibre. We meet competitors who have a certain standing and certain connections in the markets of France. Why could not we have and why ought we not to have the exports from all these countries which have had minimum treatment by France for a series of years, four, or five, or ten, so that we might know what it is they are exporting into France and therefore what competition we shall meet. We ought to have this if we are to understand what advantages we may possibly get out of that treaty. But, we need something more. The Minister of Finance, in the statement which he made some weeks ago and which he has in part repeated to-day, expressed the opinion that all this House and the country need is to have the figures of France's general tariff and then the figures of the minimum tariff and if they can show that there is a diminution, greater or less, between these two lines of figures, that is Canada's advantage and that is all that Canada needs to know. It appears to me that that does not amount to anything. You have to take the relative height of the tariffs of the two countries. Does not my hon. friend know that in 1893 France revised her tariffs, that she placed as a minimum what had practically been before that the general tariff and then mounted the general tariff above that. In consequence the minimum tariff of France which we have to meet is a very high protective tariff and the general tariff is still higher as a protective tariff. We want to know what is the height of the wall we have to climb over to get into France at all. But, as far as the information has been given us by the government, we have not a single ray of light thrown upon that. It would also be of help to understand this question if we knew what was the average tariff put by France upon goods coming into her country under the minimum tariff as a whole. Is it 10 per cent, is it 17½ per cent, is it 22½ per cent, is it 25 per cent, or is it 40, or 50 per cent? What is it? Does the Minister of Finance think that it does not make an essential difference to us and to all our prospects of trade with France, as to the relative height of the tariff wall we have to get over to get into France through the minimum gate, and the tariff wall they have to get over to get into Canada by our intermediate gate. I should like to know what is the comparison between the importations under the minimum tariff in France, and its relation to the schedules to which we are admitted, particularly in order that we might compare it with the average that France has to contend with when she brings her goods to this country. That is the essence of the information you absolutely need before you can judge of the comparative advantages resulting from a treaty on these lines, between Canada and France. But not a single one of these things has been given to us, not a table has been laid before us as giving information to this committee or to the public.

Mr. PATERSON. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten the column of the imports into France?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not forgotten, and will my hon. friend tell me what that column is.

Mr. PATERSON. It is a column which shows that France imports a certain quantity of goods, and therefore the tariff wall of France must be sufficiently low to enable that amount of goods to go in from other countries, and if we get into as good a position as any other country will we not be in a better position than we are at present?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend should look at his tariff column and he will see it is a column of the total importations into France.

Mr. PATERSON. Exactly.

Mr. FOSTER It does not give us what we need as to the importations into France under the minimum tariff, and which is what we have to grapple with in so far as we are looking into the arrangement which has been made between France and Canada. That gives us no information at all except simply that in the matter of grain, or in the matter of iron, or in the matter of alcohol, there are certain total importations into France. How much of that is under the minimum and how much under the maximum tariff? These are the important things we want to know, and not so much the total importations of all goods into France. So that I do not think the Minister of Customs has made the matter much better by calling attention to this. But, he says, we will be in a better position than now if we get in on the same basis as others. Granted. But the point for this parliament to decide is whether it is worth the cost we have to pay to get in over a very high tariff even though it is a minimum tariff, and I submit to my hon. friend that we cannot decide that question unless we have the information I have been asking for. This information we ought to have had when the treaty was laid on the table. When I look at what occurred in connection with the treaty of 1893 I find there was quite a complete set of tables as to the interchange of trade placed before the House with the treaty itself, and this information was there for the members of this House.

Another peculiar thing—if I had not happened to have asked the question: What do we sacrifice in the way of revenue under this proposed arrangement? This House would not have had to this moment any idea at all of the total amount Canada has to pay in sacrifice of revenue for this treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. As reduction of taxation.

Mr. FOSTER My hon friend may call it reduction of taxation or whatever else he pleases, if it is $400,000 or $500,000 or $1,000,000 it is so much of the present revenue of the country which is given up in order to get the advantages, whatever they may be, of this arrangement with France, it does seem strange to me that the Minister of Finance and his coadjutor who underook the negotiations in Paris with keen witted and long headed negotiators as the French are, with a system behind them to which they are wedded and into which they will allow, naturally enough, as few breaches as possible ; it does seem strange that these gentlemen should enter on these negotiations without having every bit of this information which I have just asked for. Is it possible that these gentlemen, without having that special and detailed information, could have gone on with the negotiations of this treaty, and if they had it, why should they not have made a present of it to parliament? So much with reference to that.

Now, the next point I want to take up, after having detailed my fault-finding—I think I have done it in a fair way, and I think it was necessary to call attention to these things—the next point I want to take up is the part that Canada played in this treaty. I commenced with saying that a treaty of amity and commerce between two countries ought never to be looked upon as the peculiar property of a party, to be used for the glorification of a party or for any ulterior and unworthy party ends. I think my right hon. friend and all gentlemen in this House will agree with me in that statement. A treaty between countries is on the basis of international relations in a certain way, and in a very large way, and it is best always to carry it on as though the whole country was behind the negotiation and not simply a party—to carry it through parliament, to carry it into operation as if the whole country were behind it and not simply as if a party were behind it. But, Sir, from the very moment of the inception of the negotiations until to-day—we may mark to-day off as being a little different from what preceded—from the inception of the negotiations until to-day there has been a persistent effort to in some way or other identify the present government and the present party with this treaty, and glorify them because of some extraordinary thing that has happened under their management and which never happened before. I find fault with that. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) mentioned this already and I thought he mentioned it very definitely and called it down in very appropriate terms. Let us see what took place. One of the very first things was an attempt by my right hon. friend who leads the government—I do not say that his attempt was a deliberate attempt to misrepresent. I should not like to make that accusation—but I say without any shadow of reserve that it had the effect of misrepresentation and that my right hon. friend never took any means to mitigate that effect. And following the cue of my right hon. friend, the party press and some of the ministers, all through Canada began to boast of what had been done, before a single mother's son of them knew a single line of the treaty, or what would be its effects, or what were its contents. It was as though a boy who never had a toy before suddenly got one and decided to parade it as far as he could to his own glorification and great joy. These hon. gentlemen headed by the Prime Minister himself, conducted that kind of campaign. I was startled somewhat on reading in the papers in Toronto on a certain morning a speech delivered by my right hon. friend at the manufacturers' annual banquet. Here is an extract from it. He said :

> It has long been the desire, if I mistake not, of the Canadian people that we should be entrusted with the negotiation of our own treaties, especially in regard to commerce. Well, this looked-for reform has come to be a living reality. Without revolution, without any breaking of old traditions, without any impairment of our allegiance, the time has come when Canadian interests are entrusted to Canadians, and just within the last week a treaty has been concluded with France—a treaty which appeals to Canadians alone and which has been negotiated by Canadians alone.

That was the statement made by the Premier of Canada. As I said before, I do not charge him with a deliberate desire to misrepresent, but I do certainly affirm that it had the effect of a misrepresentation, and that it was mischievous in proportion as it had that effect. Following that view, the ministers themselves came back, and they had their glorification number one in the old historic city of Quebec. My right hon. friend was there and several other ministers. Following the cue of the right hon. gentleman himself, when the address from the oldest board of trade in the Dominion of Canada was read, it congratulated those two gentlemen on the conclusion of the first Canadian treaty of commerce by Canadian statesmen, and those two gentlemen had to listen to a great deal of laudation of their force and of their great victory in marking an epoch in the history of Canada's development when, not by revolution, not by force of arms, not by any weakening of our allegiance, as my right hon. friend said, but suddenly, a great thing had dawned into life and broken into splendour—to wit, the right and might of Canada as a treaty maker. Well, this thing went on and has been current until the present time, and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was very anxious the other day to make the assertion, and he did succeed in making it without getting on his feet, that this had been practically carried out, and that Canada had done what Canada had never done before, and in a way in which it had never been done before.

That is the general statement of the case. Let us see how true it is to history and to fact. As gentlemen around me know, the commercial relations which were treated of in 1893 were commercial relations between Canada and France in which England had no special or individual interest. In the very same way what were treated of in the recent negotiations were the commercial relations between France and Canada in which Great Britain had no special or individual interest. The very same set of circumstances existed, the very same subjects were about, and I am going to show that they were treated about in exactly the same way. I take up this present convention and what is it? It is a convention between the King of Great Britain and Ireland and of His Majesty's Dominions beyond the Seas and the President of France. I take up the treaty of 1893, and I read in the protocols and in the designation of the agreement that that was also a convention between Great Britain on one hand and France on the other. The two are precisely alike. They had to do with commercial relations between France and Canada then ; they have to do with commercial relations between France and Canada now. The King of England, or the Queen of England at that time, appointed her plenipotentiaries ; the King of England at this time appointed his plenipotentiaries. The plenipotentiaries in 1893 were British plenipotentiaries ; those appointed in 1907 were British plenipotentiaries. Those appointed in 1893 were the British ambassador in Paris and Sir Charles Tupper, the representative of Canada ; those appointed in 1907 were the British ambassador in Paris and two representatives of Canada. I take the two treaties, as they appear in the French copies, side by side, and there is absolutely no difference at all in the enabling language from beginning to end, except that in 1893 the thing was called an 'arrangement' and this treaty is called a 'convention' ; but there is no difference between the two words ; they are used interchangeably. That there is no difference is shown by the letter of the French plenipotentiaries in the present negotiations, in which they refer to the arrangement of 1893 as 'une convention.' There is no difference between the two ; from beginning to end they are absolutely the same. They were originated in the same way, carried on in the same way, completed in the same way, signed in the same way, ratified in the same way, and there is not a single shade of difference between the two, except this, that there were three plenipotentiaries this time and there were two before. But the essential thing about both of these treaties is this, that in 1893 the treaty was negotiated entirely by Sir Charles Tupper, the plenipotentiary of the Queen, not of Canada, in conjunction with Lord Dufferin, the British ambassador in Paris at that time ; and this treaty was negotiated entirely, as I believe, by the two plenipotentiaries of the King appointed from Canada, although, just as before, the other plenipotentiary, the British ambassador in Paris, was associated with them, made the initial arrangements, and was there for consultation and help all the way through.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend permit me ? He states that in 1893 the negotiations were carried on entirely by Sir Charles Tupper. Will he be kind enough to tell me on what authority he relies in making that statement ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I will do it with the greatest good will and with a promptness which ought to incite my hon. friend to give this House information with reference to this matter with equal readiness.

In the first place I give him as an authority my own statement to which he may attach much or little importance as he pleases. I was present in Paris whilst the negotiations were in progress, not all the time but for a considerable time, and I absolutely know, of my own knowledge, that Lord Dufferin did nothing more in the carrying out of those negotiations than to appoint the meetings, introduce Sir Charles Tupper and consult with him whenever Sir Charles wished. On more than one occasion I myself accompanied Sir Charles Tupper to conferences with Lord Dufferin at his own residence with reference to the treaty itself. I do not know whether my hon. friend will regard that as being sufficient testimony, but if not I shall give him more. On page 47 of the blue-book of 1893, which deals with this subject, I find a part of Sir Charles Tupper's final communication to the Canadian government reading :

> I cannot conclude this communication without saying that while the negotiations have been carried on entirely by myself on the part of Canada, and by M. Gabriel Hanotaux, Minister Plenipotentiary and Director of Consulates and of Commercial Affairs in the Foreign Office, M. G. Pallin, Councillor of State, Director General of Customs, and M. E. Roume, Director of Foreign Commerce in the Department of Commerce and Industry, on the part of France——

That is the testimony of the negotiator himself. That, backed up by my own personal knowledge, ought to satisfy any gentleman with reasonable credulity; whether it satisfies my hon. friend or not I do not know.

I suppose my hon. friend will say what about Sir Joseph Crowe ? Sir Joseph Crowe was not a plenipotentiary, he had no lot or part in the negotiations, he was the commercial attaché of the British embassy in Paris and he rendered invaluable assistance to Sir Charles Tupper during the negotiations, but he rendered it just as any specialist would to the principal negotiator, just as I myself or any member of the Dominion government or any officer of the Dominion government down at Washington would when Mr. Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper met with negotiatiors of the United States in 1887, when we stood by to give them all the information that they needed and that we possibly could gather for them. We were adjuncts to the negotiations but we had no lot, part or matter in conducting the negotiations; only the Sovereign's plenipotentiaries conduct these negotiations. I hope I have satisfied my hon. friend with reference to that matter.

But in one thing there is a radical difference. I know that Sir Charles Tupper did not, in the papers which he gave to the Canadian government in 1893 nor did the Canadian government in the papers they laid on the table of the House, attempt to reproduce the somewhat archaic language in which the British government makes out its form of instructions to its plenipotentiaries. But I find that these hon. gentlemen have deployed upon page 10 of their correspondence the absolute wording of the power of plenipotentiary given to them by the British government and have done it in such a way that you would think there were no plenipotentiaries but the two men from Canada; while the document itself declares at the beginning that the plenipotentiaries appointed by King Edward to represent the empire are Sir Francis Bertie the British Ambassador and his loyal subject the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur)—loyal if not generous—and his loyal and generous subject the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). Those are the plenipotentiaries. Is other evidence necessary? If this were a Canadian treaty and were negotiated simply by two gentlemen from Canada, why all this correspondence? I find on pages 5, 6, 7 and 8 letters from Mr. Fielding, letters to the Rt. Hon. Edward Grey and to others in which in almost every line he calls for the assistance or refers to the knowledge or desires the cooperation or asks for the necessary steps to be taken by the British government in order to have this treaty negotiated, signed and carried out. I find that it was submitted to the board of trade and to the colonial office as well as to Sir Edward Grey and that it went through every step necessary for it to go through before it could become a treaty under the powers that Great Britain possesses, a treaty with reference to Canada but yet a treaty made between Great Britain and France. So that in all these things there is not the least semblance or an approach to anything in anyway intrinsically different in policy or in practice from that which obtained in 1893.

But let us consider for a moment what the British policy has been. At first Great Britain made her treaties without any reference to her colonies and included them under the operation of these treaties whether they wished it or not. That policy was abandoned as better methods came into use. The next step was for Great Britain to include no colony in a treaty unless with the assent of that colony; and that has been the rule for nigh on to forty years or perhaps more. A step was taken beyond that, the appointment of representatives of the Sovereign as negotiators from the colonies interested in the case of treaties dealing with commercial or territorial affairs. So from an early period, from 1871 to go no further back, until the present day the policy of Great Britain with reference to her great colonies has been to associate as her plenipotentiary some able and competent representative of the colony to take part in the negotiations with reference to commercial or territorial matters in which that colony is interested. Sir John Macdonald was a co-plenipotentiary in Washington in 1871; Sir Charles Tupper was a co-plenipotentiary in Washington in 1887; members of the Canadian government were plenipotentiaries and agents of Great Britain in association with Sir Julian Pauncefote in Washington in 1892. Sir Charles Tupper occupied the same position in case after case in reference to Spain, in reference to France, and so the policy of broadening, which is distinctive of the march of the British Empire in the world, has gone on from year to year and decade to decade until the period has arrived when this full liberty of action in so far as the circumstances of the empire permit, has been accorded to the great colonies of the empire. But this last stage which has been exemplified in 1893 and now in 1907, is a matter of history.

In 1879, Sir A. T. Galt was trying to negotiate with Spain in connection with trade matters in the West Indies. The United States had a modus vivendi with Spain giving them privileges that were denied to Canada. The object of the Canadian representative, acting through the British government, and by advice and instructions of the Canadian government, was to bring about a better state of matters commercially with Spain and to have Canada put upon an equal footing with the United States. But Sir A. T. Galt complained that the method of negotiation was too tedious to be effective, that everything had to go through the British minister, and that he himself was simply an attaché or commercial agent, and that therefore he was unable to succeed. That complaint was made to the Canadian government and was carried to the British foreign office, where it was duly considered. In 1884, the British foreign office sent its instructions to the colonial office, which instructions inaugurated the present system of things. Those instructions are given in a letter of July 26, 1884, of which the following is an extract:—

If the Spanish government are favourably disposed, the full power for these negotiations will be given to Sir Robert Morier and Sir Charles Tupper jointly. The actual negotiations would probably be conducted by Sir Charles Tupper, but the convention, if concluded, must be signed by both plenipotentiaries, and must be entered into between Her Majesty and the King of Spain for the special object of regulating Canadian trade with the Spanish territories specified in the convention.

That is the basis upon which this later and latest policy has been founded. On the basis of these instructions, Sir Charles Tupper was appointed, both to carry on the negotiations which resulted in the French treaty of 1893 and also with Sir Clare Forde, to carry on negotiations with the Spanish government, which were carried on but did not result in a treaty. I do not think there is more to be said on this subject. I have treated it somewhat in detail and with particularity, because I thought it right that a sufficient answer should be given to the vapourings of those hon. gentlemen opposite who would fain, for political and party reasons, convince this country that they had wrenched some great privilege from a tyrant authority and were to be worshipped because of the victory they had gained. If this is simply an attempt to make party capital, it is supremely silly. But if it is a serious attempt and goes further than that, it is not only silly but mischievous and wrong. We are a part of the British Empire and are bound by the constitution of the British Empire. It is silly and mischievous for any man or any government to teach the people of Canada that they have powers which they have not and cannot have without disintegration and separation taking place. And I would recommend hon. gentlemen opposite either to take the open and manly course of carrying on a propaganda in this country for absolute independence in treaty-making power on the part of Canada—and of consequent separation from the British Empire—or else to remain quiet; but above all, not to go about in this surreptitious way to seek an object of their own with the effect of causing discontent and a demand on the part of their followers for something which, under the empire, never can be given.

Now, I go a step further: I stated the other day that I thought the intermediate tariff, of which so much was made by the Minister of Finance, had broken down at the very point where he thought it was going to be a success. I was not supported by the Minister of Finance in that statement, and I beg to return to it just for a moment. On page 23 of the Budget speech of last year, the Minister of Finance says:—

> We propose to adopt this intermediate tariff as an instrument by which we may conduct negotiations from time to time with any country which is willing to give Canada favourable conditions. We want to extend our markets, and we want to have some tariff condition which we can afford to offer countries as an inducement to them to give us favourable terms, in order that we may find new and larger markets for the products of Canada.

Now, I need not multiply quotations. But it is clear that the government asked for power to put this arrangement—which, it was supposed, could be made by the device of the intermediate tariff schedule—into instant operation by proclamation of the Governor in Council. The granting of that authority was opposed on this side of the House, but it was ultimately carried by the government on the plea that if they made what were tantamount to treaties with foreign countries they wanted to have power to put them into operation. But the first time my hon. friend tried his intermediate tariff it did not succeed. He still sticks to it however. For, just the other day, he told us that we never should have had the French treaty if we had not had the intermediate tariff. Some one on this side asked him why? The answer did not come—and yet it was a pertinent inquiry. Was it impossible, before this, and without the intermediate tariff, to negotiate a treaty? You have the negotiators, you have the terms, you have the items—why can you not negotiate the treaty without the intermediate tariff? But let us come to the testimony itself. My hon. friends who represented Canada as plenipotentiaries of the Crown of Great Britain made a preliminary proposition. It starts out by asking that the reduced rates of duty on certain articles of French origin covered by article 1 of the treaty of 6th of February, 1893, shall be continued, and, the same with regard to articles of Canadian origin. Well, it is something worth knowing that these gentlemen approved of the treaty of 1893, after it had been in operation for fourteen years. They proposed that these articles, mutually admitted by the two countries, should remain at the same rates of duty. Then, they went on and asked the benefit of the French minimum tariff for all articles in the Canadian tariff and offered to give the French people admission of articles from France under Canada's intermediate tariff.

That is where my hon. friend tested the virtue of his intermediate tariff. He had his instrument, and therefore he said to these gentlemen who were negotiating on the part of France, here is what we will do. You give us the minimum tariff in France and we will give you the intermediate tariff in Canada. Well, Sir, what did these gentlemen say? They replied to him at once, away with your intermediate tariff, we dont recognize it at all; we recognize nothing but the lowest duties, and we give our minimum only in exchange for the lowest duties of any country with which we make the exchange. We propose that, instead of your intermediate tariff, with other devices, we settle down on the treaty of 1893 as a principle, and we will try and see whether we can enlarge the scope of the treaty of 1893. Now was I not perfectly right in saying that my hon. friend's device did not work with the French negotiations ? They threw it aside, and substituted for it the treaty of 1893, in principle, and said, come gentlemen, sit down at this table and see whether we can enlarge the scope of this, both for France and for Canada.

Whilst I am on that point, I wish to mention another thing. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-day criticised somewhat the treaty of 1893 with reference to direct and indirect shipments. He said with regard to shipments, that we were tied up to direct shipments for Canadian products going to France, but that we allowed the French products to come in here in any way they could come. Suppose we take the memorandum of these two gentlemen, and what was its proposition. The proposition was this :

The reduction of duties on Canadian articles imported into France shall apply only to direct imports, and the reduction on duties on articles imported into Canada from France shall apply only when the articles are imported directly from France, or by way of Great Britain and landed at a Canadian port.

Their first proposition to the French plenipotentiaries was this : We will bind ourselves to nothing but direct shipment to your country, and we will allow you an indirect shipment as well as a direct shipment.

Mr. FIELDING. What is a direct shipment ?

Mr. FOSTER. A direct shipment is one direct through from one country to the other without any intervening port. That is all that you propose Canadian goods shall get. As we are now, the one method we would have of putting our goods into France would be on vessels that run from here direct to French ports. But you stated with reference to French goods coming into Canada that they could come on a direct line from the French port to Canadian ports, or you could tranship them by a British port.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the exact terms in our intermediate tariff when we were desirous of encouraging trade by way of Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, when my hon. friend criticised as he did to-day the treaty of 1893, by saying that we allowed indirect shipments from France whilst we confined the Canadian article to direct shipment, I am pointing out that in their proposition to the French plenipotentiaries they proposed to do the very same thing. But it goes still further :

If, in the case of any article which, when imported into France, is now subject to the duty of the general tariff, there being no minimum tariff rate, France should hereafter place such article on the minimum tariff list, then such article when imported direct from Canada into France shall receive the benefit of the minimum rate so established.

That is, there is no limit put in the case of articles from France, they can come any way and in any direction from France ; but with reference to Canadian goods going to France they must go by direct shipment. So they have violated the rule of their criticism of the treaty of 1893 in the very first memorandum they placed before the French plenipotentiaries, and which they were willing to carry out. For my own part, I would think that the intermediate tariff has rather militated against the negotiators on behalf of the Canadian government. Naturally enough, if you lay your whole hand open to the people with whom you propose to negotiate by giving a reduced rate on all the range of articles which you have in your tariff, and publish it to them beforehand that you are willing to do that for concessions, naturally enough the party with whom you undertake to negotiate, seeing your whole hand laid bare, will be more insistent in his demands and will have greater success than if you had not given the whole list of articles upon which you were prepared to make a reduction. But even that was not sufficient. They had to go below the intermediate tariff, and they had to make a reduction in a separate schedule over and above these in order to get the treaty with France. So I think the intermediate tariff has not done much good. On the contrary, I am satisfied it has been rather harmful than otherwise in the negotiations of this treaty.

Now let me for a moment come to the actual resultant of these negotiations. As my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said, there are 152 items in schedule A which, in whole or in part, are allowed into France under certain conditions. Now I am quite sure that the average member of parliament, and certainly the average man outside of parliament, taking up this printed schedule, would say to himself: All these things are gained by us in this treaty of 1907 ; that is what we get for Canada as an entrance into the French market. Why, at first sight I thought so myself, until I came to examine them. When we look into it closely what do we find ? Of these 152 items, 21 are not minimum tariff items at all, they are general tariff items. They were open to the commerce of Canada ever since 1892, as they are open to-day, and they are no more open to Canada to-day or after this treaty shall have been ratified, than they were before the treaty was commenced to be negotiated. They are general tariff items. The Minister of Finance has explained with reference to them why they were put in, and his explanation is a reasonable one. But they do not bulk as any thing gained; they may be possibilities, they may be long deferred contingencies, but they are not actual gains, and they bring no advantage at the present time as counting in this treaty between France and Canada.

Well then twenty-three of these same items are exactly as they were in the treaty of 1893, exactly the same schedules and exactly the same rates. That is not the result of the negotiations of this year; that is the position taken by the French government, taking 1893 as the basis and enlarging the scope. Three of the items are in part those that were established by the treaty of 1893. You have altogether forty-seven items which count as nothing to the advantage or benefit of the present negotiations over and above what we had under the treaty of 1893. That leaves 105 new items or sections of items. Let us look into them and see what we have. In the first place we must carry this idea with us always that France is an ultra protectionist country, and that the tariff that exists at the present time, minimum and maximum, is a very strong protective tariff and designed to do as little damage as possible to the principle and operation of protection in France—just as little harm as it possibly can do. We must also take into account that we do not get a single special favour in all this schedule. I do not say that the minister said we did, but the schedule as it is put out rather carries to the average mind the idea that it is a favour that we are getting because, within the pages and the covers of that schedule, there is nowhere a distinct intimation of the competition that we are to get from the favours that other countries get equal or superior to our own. We have to take these two things into consideration. Taking these two things into consideration and reading through the items I do not see that we have very much cause for congratulation as to the trade arrangement that has been made and which we are asked to ratify. Let us look at some of these advantages. Horses are put into this schedule but horses can only go into France, if they are five years old and over, at a taxation of $30; under five years of age at a taxation of $20 and colts at a taxation of $10. It is for commercial men and exporters of live stock to say whether or not there will be very much trade between Canada and France in horses where you have to take the exceedingly long transit into account and meet at the end a tariff of $30 upon the kind of horse which we would probably export from this country to France. Then you have cattle, oxen, cows, and the like and before they can go into France under the tariff they have to pay 1⅘ cents per pound live weight. If the live weight is 1,000 pounds the duty upon the cow or ox will be $18, if it runs up to 1,200 pounds it will be $21.60, and if it is 1,500 pounds it will be $27. Now, when Canada is looking for markets abroad for her cattle, will she be likely to secure the trade of a market to which she has not very ready access, where she is bound up to direct shipment and where, when she gets there through all these difficulties, she meets a competition which she can only enter into after she has paid from $18 to $27 per head for every head that she proposes to get into that market. Therefore, it is a matter for experienced men and a matter for the experience of the country to find out how much trade is open in that country. When we come to poultry it is exactly the same as it was under the treaty of 1893. What do we find in reference to poultry? For fourteen years it has been on the tariff of 1893, and I turn up last year's record of our trade and I find that there is not a single dollar's worth exported to France. You come next to fresh meats, but before you can get fresh mutton into France, after a long and tedious method, you have to pay 3 cents for every pound; pork, 2⅖ cents; beef and other meats, 3⅕ cents; salted meats, pork, ham and bacon, 2 3-5 cents, and pork butchers' produce, 5 cents; dead poultry, 2 cents; and so on for other articles of meat. When you look up the exports under the treaty of 1893 in most of these articles they are almost nothing or are so small as to be insignificant items in the trade. When you come to eggs of poultry or game you have to pay half a cent a pound for eggs going in. You have the long distance but there is another consideration that comes afterwards, and we have to take that into account before we conclude as to how much of an egg trade we will do with France, and that is the condition of this competition which we have to meet. Condensed milk pure goes in and has gone in since 1893, but there was no export of condensed milk pure last year to France although that item has been in the tariff treaty of 1893 for fourteen years. Well, if you want to get this in you have to pay a very large duty. If there is sugar in it you have to pay a much larger duty. Cheese is an item which is included in the present tariff, but every pound of cheese which goes into France will have to pay from 2 to 3⅕ cents. Salted butter has to pay 2 cents per pound to get into the market under the minimum tariff. If you go through other articles of the farmer you get down to the long flour and grain schedule and that is no minimum tariff at all. That is the general, the high tariff that has been open to Canada ever since 1892, and when you come to look into it what do you find? Of wheat grain $60,000 worth was all that went into France last year after all these years of trade between the two countries. Six-tenths of a cent per pound has to be paid on it when it goes in. Of flour $6,348 worth was all that entered into France last year. When you come to oats, $435 worth were exported to France; oatmeal, nothing; barley, grain, nothing; barley, meal, nothing; rye, grain, nothing; rye, meal, nothing; maize, nothing; buckwheat, nothing; meal—I have not the figures for meal; beans, $72,000 worth. Chickpeas have been free since the tariff of 1893, and all the chickpeas that went into France were $102,125 worth. The other cereals that went from Canada to France under the treaty schedule amounted to $9,092.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the tariff remains the same.

Mr. FOSTER. The tariff remains absolutely the same. Take table fruits which have been on the favourable tariff ; apples and pears for table use, cider and perry amounted altogether to $209,131. And when you come to pineapples which are on the list, it does not appear that that product of Canada has found entrance into France to any extent at all. Take coal, coke, and cinders ; these have exactly the same minimum and general tariff, but although a great deal of coal has been taken into France I find that our exports of coal and coke, and cinders to France last year amounted altogether to $1,712. These articles which have been in the treaty of 1893 and as to which we have fourteen years experience, I find amount to very little in our trade with France. Can we expect more from the other articles which are now put in the schedule. The Minister of Finance says : we place them there because some time in the future there may be a diminution of the duty on these articles and then Canada will have the benefit. I do not quarrel with that at all ; I think that was fair foresight ; it was the part of prudence and of good negotiation to place these articles in the tariff, provided you did not pay too heavily for it. But the Minister of Finance knows full well that for every single item that was put into schedule A he had to pay an equivalent to the French plenipotentiaries in giving ingress for French products to Canada. This has to be taken into account, and there is no doubt about it that by the padding of the list in that way, that for a large number of articles with regard to which there is at present no prospect of exporting to France you have had to allow the French negotiators to get a still larger number than they otherwise would of their products into this country, almost every one of which has a more or less established trade and a market at present here. I think the discount has been pretty heavy in that respect, and that we have paid possibly a good deal more than it is worth. For instance, when shall we export 'cast-iron, foundry iron and forged pig, containing less than 25 per cent of manganese,' to France, if we have to pay a duty of $2.60 per ton upon it. It will take us a long time to create a trade in wrought iron when we have to pay from $12 to $18 a ton duty upon it when it enters France. Under this tariff sheets and plate iron will have to pay from $12 to $18 per ton and I do not think there is much prospect for trade in these articles. Iron and steel wire will have to pay from $12 to $36 per ton and iron rails $10 per ton; it does not seem much of a prospect that in the near future we will make iron rails and send them three or four thousand miles across the Atlantic and pay $10 per ton duty and make much profit upon them in the French market. Steel in bars will have to pay a duty of from $9 to $14 per ton, steel in sheets from $12 to $16, and $19, and $26, and $27 per ton; there is not a very alluring prospect of trade with France in these articles under these conditions. Of course there is a grand opening in copper ore which is on this schedule, but when we look into the tariff we find that copper ore is admitted free into France. It is the policy of France to let it in free and they take in 98,000,000 francs worth of it, but when we come down to the first item where a tariff of $18 per ton is placed upon 'rolled or hammered copper in bars or plates' we find that the import into France is almost infinitesimal. Who supposes that there is any immediate market for us in France for these sizes and makes of copper which have to pay a duty of from $18 to $180 per ton ? In the same way with lead, the ore and the matts of a certain kind of lead go into France free and they do import quite a quantity of it, but when you come into the higher manufacture of lead products, then there is a heavy duty. The same with nickel, the same with all the metals. So that I do not think there is much chance for doing a trade speedily with France in any of these metal products. Now, with reference to individual items, there is starch which is placed in this list as a prospective article of commerce. But it will have to pay a duty of one and a half cents per pound, and when you get it over there you find that 40,000,000 of people only import about $60,000 worth of starch from all countries in the world. Then there is 'isinglass and glue manufactured from the tendon of whales.' Now, there is something for Captain Bernier and the 'Arctic.' Perhaps it was in prospect of something like this that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knowing that he had been frightfully extravagant in fitting up the 'Arctic' and running it for three years, proposed to get the benefit of manufacturing isinglass and glue from whales tendons which this model and swift vessel will probably gather up in quantities in these frozen seas and bring down here to be put through a process of manufacture. But when you have got them to France in the shape of glue you have to pay a duty of three and a half cents for every pound. Then, incandescent electric lamps are included in the list, but you have to pay from 31 cents to 62 cents per pound for everything connected with them and the importation into France is exceedingly small. Then you have on this list: 'Yarns of phormium, tenax, abaca, and other vegetable fibres ,' which grow on our hillsides and pastures in Canada, and when you get them manufactured into yarn they can get into France when you pay a very large duty per pound on them. For the present we may relegate these to the category of the products of Canada which include 'capers, and olives, and pineapples,' which we are fortunate enough to have been able to get in this tariff list. But when you come to paper you get it into France at a cent and a cent and quarter per pound ; and certain qualities of paper have been on the favoured tariff list of France for years, and if you look up the trade reports you will find there was not one dollar's worth of these exported to France last year.

Well, top-boots and shoes for men and women have been in the treaty since 1893, and last year, after fourteen years of existence of that favoured tariff, the same exactly as is provided for in this treaty, the enormous export of $1,473 worth of boots and shoes was made into France from Canada, so far as I can gather from the returns. Gloves and mits are in much the same category. And so, if we go through all these articles, outside of what I have mentioned, we shal find that the tariff upon them is very large, and that it does not seem possible under that tariff to do very much business in the future, in the near future at least.

I leave that part of the subject and call attention to this fact, that after you get into France with these articles, you meet competitors. There are thirty-four countries which possess the advantage of the full minimum tariff of France, and these comprise all the great trading countries of the world. So that when you get into France, you find that before you get in, with a partial list on the minimum tariff, thirty-four countries are in there, with the advantage of the full minimum tariff, and have been there, many of them, since 1892. Over and above that, you find that thirty other countries outside of these thirty-four have a partial minimum advantage in France, some of them more than we have, others less. That is what you have to compete with after you get there, and under what conditions? Many of those countries that have the advantage of the full minimum tariff lie alongside of or are not very far distant from France itself.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Thirty-four countries alongside of France ?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that. My right hon. friend is too swift; he sometimes goes too slow and sometimes too fast. Thirty-four countries have the minimum tariff, and many of these countries, not all, —because I am aware that Asia is not in Europe—lie contiguous to France itself. What does that mean ? It means that when we have to pack our goods from three thousand to four thousand miles by routes which are not very diversified to get into France, we find that we are in competition with the great countries of the world having the minimum tariff and having to pack their goods only from ten to three hundred miles, and with the best possible communications by rail and water in constant operation between those countries. It was in 1893 considered a great thing if we could get an entrance into the French market for our cheese—why? Because at that time Switzerland was not on the minimum list. There was a trade difficulty between France and Switzerland. Switzerland had to pay 15 francs, we will say, whereas the minimum tariff would be only five francs, and Sir Charles Tupper did his best to get our cheese into France under the minimum tariff, because it would have been a great advantage to us inasmuch as Switzerland was practically shut out. But to-day Switzerland is in the enjoyment of the full minimum tariff, and she and Italy are the great providers of cheese for the French market. So that propinquity has to be taken into account, and we must remember that our greatest competitors here are those who lie very close to the French market and have varied and diversified means of direct communication, both by rail and water.

Mr. PATERSON. Are you for or against the treaty ?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not making my speech.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Sir Charles Tupper tried to get the minimum tariff on cheese. Is it not correct that the French government was willing to grant it, and it was the hon. gentleman who refused it ?

Mr. FOSTER. What a wonderful thing my hon. friend has unearthed. If he were a little more correct and looked after this matter as carefully as he does his travelling expenses, he would not have made the statement he has made here to-night. He would have found that the French government was willing to let Canadian cheese into France at the minimum provided Canada would give a quid pro quo, and Canada did not give the quid pro quo.

Mr. BRODEUR. What was the quid pro quo ?

Mr. FOSTER. Does that help my hon. friend's statement ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is the master of quibbling, but he made a statement, and he made it on insufficient information.

Mr. BRODEUR. What was the quid pro quo ?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will not bring me down any information; he can go and hunt his information for himself. There is also this to be taken into account: the country that has the full minimum tariff of France will be in a much better position to compete in that country against the country that goes into the market with a partial minimum list. That is apparent to any man who does business or is acquainted with business. A large range of goods is at his disposal for export to the French market; he can afford to go to greater expense to push his trade and put greater enterprise into it; and we meet, as I have said, thirty-four countries that have the advantage of the full minimum tariff of France, many of them the foremost countries of the world in matters of trade.

There is something else: we have to give more than mere schedules of possible articles. There is this difference, and I commend it to members of the House. Take the list of goods selected by France for entrance into the Canadian market, and you will find it an exceedingly well-selected list. I doubt very much if you will find any padding at all in that list. I have gone over it carefully and have looked into the trade returns, and there are very few of the ninety-nine items for which France obtains entrance into this market in which she cannot do a present trade; I may go further and say in which she is not at present doing a trade with Canada or in which, under this treaty, she will not do a fairly good trade in this market. There are a large number of items in the Canadian schedule 'A' but of these three-fourths you will find have no present entrance into the French market. The difference between the two schedules is that the Canadian articles are largely articles in which the best that can be expected is to do some trade in the distant future, as the Minister of Finance has himself acknowledged, but of the articles selected by the French plenipotentiaries, nearly every one is a French specialty, which has already made its way or will very easily make its way into this market. This I think is an important distinction. Then there is this other distinction. Read the list of duties on the French articles coming into Canada and the highest duty is about 32½ per cent, and the lowest 5 or 10 per cent. the average being somewhere between 20 per cent and 25 per cent. That is a very important point: French products entering Canada under this treaty are subject to an average tariff of between 20 per cent and 25 per cent. I cannot say positively what the average on the articles in the Canadian schedules having an entrance into France will be, I wanted to get the information from the minister but have not been able to do so. I venture to say it is very much higher on the average than the duty on goods entering this market under the treaty. More than that, as I have said before, most of these articles of French export are specialties of France. France is a wonderful country in more respects than one. Of all the manufacturing countries in the world, she has the most artistic and complete manufactures. Whilst many other countries manufacture rougher articles up to a less degree of excellence, if you want to find the most finished of manufactures produced in the most artistic and perfect manner you find them in France, and so she builds up not only her brawn and her muscle in her manufactures, but her skill and makes these artistic specialties; these appeal to the world and bring their price and these specialties will find an entrance into every great market in the world, no matter how high the tariff, because they are matters of art and high taste and great skill in the completion of manufactures. Examine the list and you will see that it is made up largely of those things that will find an entrance here and become more and more firmly established in proportion as Canada grows more wealthy and more artistic and is better able to spend money upon the gratification of her artistic tastes. Thus you have these goods coming into Canada at a low rate fortified by the fact that they are largely specialties, which create a demand for themselves. Therefore the way is opened for a future large trade by France in Canada whilst the future does not seem to be so well opened to Canada for her manufactures in France under these schedules.

Then there are twelve items in schedule C on which, as the minister said and the schedule shows there has been a very great reduction from the last treaty, so that there is a very small tariff rate. Some of the items in schedule C, the French imports, embroideries, ribbons of all kinds, manufactures of silk or of which silk is the component part of chief value, etc., will be articles which under the exceedingly small rates that have been placed upon them will find a large market in this country, and their competition will be most pronounced. But, Sir, we have given more than this. We have to count in estimating the cost of this treaty, not only the advantages we give to France and the revenue which we lose, but also what we pay to other countries for the sake of getting this arrangement with France. The Minister of Finance has spoken of that to-night. He seemed to think that we got an advantage from these other countries. We get no advantage so far as I can see from these other most-favoured nation countries because of the negotiation of this treaty; we have all the advantages that we can get from the most-favoured nation countries now.

Mr. FIELDING. What more can we get.

Mr. FOSTER. What more can we get? There is just the point. There seems to be little chance of getting more, but what more do we give? We give to every one of these most-favoured nation countries all the advantages and diminutions of tariff rates that we give to France in this arrangement that has been negotiated. That is you have to let in similar articles from all most-favoured nation countries; you have to add all of this to the price you are paying for the treaty arrangement with France. My hon. friend said: But we get compensation. I want to make it clear that there is no compensation at all because of this treaty arrangement; we have got all the compensation now. If you do not ratify the treaty you will have just the same benefit from these countries as if you do ratify it and every country gets entrance into Canada without any compensation for all the goods of the schedules B and C. This is a matter of some moment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance thought it was a matter of some moment and last year, when explaining this, he thought it necessary to advance an argument on this point. What was the gist of his argument? We know there are most-favoured nation treaties; we know that if we make a treaty with one country we have to give all the advantages of that treaty to another; therefore he said it is well for us to make a lot of these arrangements together and get favours from as many countries as possible, in order that we may not have to compensate one at our own expense for what we get from the other. But the minister did not carry out this theory. He made this treaty with France whilst with all the other most-favoured nations he has made no treaties. He has, so far as I know, undertaken no negotiations or if he has they have not come to anything. Therefore we are mulcted in this and so the people in Canada, manufacturers, traders, business men, the industrial section of Canada, taking capital and labour into account, is to submit to the added competition from every most-favoured nation country and other countries who give nothing in return for this. That seems to be unfair.

For my part, I have very little faith in or desire for most favoured nation clauses. I think that a bargain that I make in a business matter between myself and another had better be made between us two and not on the ground that a third, or a fourth, or a fifth party shall be able to share the advantage of our arrangement. I think the position of the United States is far more logical and businesslike—no entanglement of most favoured nation treaties, but simply saying to the other party to the proposed agreement: We will sit down and make our own bargain and enjoy the benefit of it, and if we want to extend it to other parties, we will make bargains with those other parties. In times past, most favoured nation treaties were made for other than commercial reasons. The most favoured nation clause now is really an entanglement of commercial relations between countries. We are getting deeper and deeper into this complex system. The Minister of Finance, another year, may go to Italy and make an arrangement with that country, and it will contain a clause that every thing that he gives to Italy, and for which he gets a bare equivalent, will have to be paid for further by whatever advantage France, Japan and every most favoured nation gets in our market because of the negotiation with Italy. And, with our general tariff, and our intermediate tariff, and our preferential tariff, and our tariff that is neither intermediate nor preferential but special, and all our most favoured nation clauses, we are getting into a muddle with reference to our tariff and fiscal relations which may cause us a great deal of trouble in the future. Just now we are having some trouble with Japan—I hope not any thing which will result in worse than temporary discontent and disagreement. But there is no particular reason why, because we want an arrangement with France and are ready to allow, as a quid pro quo, French silks and fabrics to come into this country at a reduced rate, that we shall make a present of that advantage to Japan while Japan gives us nothing in return. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) slid very easily over that part. But if he will take up the trade returns, he will find that Japan exported to this country pretty nearly as much silks as did France. I think that France sent us about $650,000 worth and Japan about $470,000 worth. The moment this treaty goes into force the silk trade of Japan benefits, but Japan gives Canada not a single yen of advantage in return for the benefit she receives from us. All these conditions should be taken into account when we are considering this treaty.

Now, let me sum up. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) wished to know where I stood on this treaty, I stand as an examiner of this treaty, examining it under great difficulties, because of the laziness, or inability, or indisposition of hon. gentlemen opposite to give information that they properly ought to give. If my health suffers under the strain to which it has been put in my efforts to gain this information, I will lay it to these hon. gentlemen. I say, I stand as an examiner of this treaty. I would rather that the treaty should be made between France and Canada than not. I would be willing to go a good long way for any thing like a reasonable exchange. But, when, before a single line of that treaty can be known to any one in Canada, hon. gentlemen opposite and their press begin to jubilate in thunder tones from one end of this country to the other over the mighty thing which these gentlemen are supposed to have done, I think it requires a little coolness and a little of the critical faculty to examine this treaty, in order to bring us to a proper frame of mind to cause us regard it from a business point of view. My view is, so far, that we are paying pretty dearly for what we get. We are paying, in the first place, in revenue. The Minister of Finance says that we shall lose about $400,000. He does not know, but, he makes a sort of haphazard jump at the conclusion that the loss will be $400,000. We are given no elements of a calculation to enable us to judge whether that is the right amount or not. It may be difficult to make an exact calculation. At any rate we stand to lose a considerable portion of the revenue we have at present. And revenue is what the Minister of Finance dearly loves. It is revenue that keeps these hon. gentlemen where they are. It is the immense expenditures they make from immense revenue which they get from immense taxation imposed which keeps them where they are; that pays the grafter and the middleman and the person who charges extravagant prices; that pays for the silver pitchers on the icebreakers and all that kind of thing. Revenue is important to these hon. gentlemen as well as to the country, and, first, we must face a loss of revenue. But more than that, you sacrifice what you have called one of your foremost principles since you gave up the worship of the unrestricted reciprocity god and became fervent worshippers of preference to Great Britain. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), before the election of 1896, was a great preferentialist. During the canvass, when he was in London looking for votes, he pledged himself, as leader of the opposition, and as a public man of character and standing, that when he went to England, he would try to arrange for a mutual preference between Great Britain and Canada. He got the votes and got the position by making that pledge. But when he went to England and mounted the platform at Liverpool, the first thing he told the British people was that he did not want any preference and neither did Canada ; that it was a bad thing to have a protective tariff and that he hoped Great Britain would never fall into that error ; that every thing that Canada gave in the way of preference was given because of her love and devotion to the mother country. And in the tariff of 1897 he went right back on mutual preference, as he has gone back on every other pledge he has ever made in this country on the political platform. I have a string of them several feet long. They are in store for the right hon. gentleman and some day I propose to have a little comment on them, but I merely mention this one for the present time. Having gone back on mutual preference, he took the one sided preference and put it into his tariff, 12½ per cent and the year afterwards 25 per cent, and shortly afterwards 33⅓ per cent. See how I love the mother country, how I love this British preferential tariff. Well, Sir, was it saner methods, or what ? In a little while, individual items in this British preference were cut out. Last year we had a final ?—no, but we had the last paring down until this one, and when the last paring was done, I doubt if the British preference was more than 10 per cent on the average all the way through. If it was more, will these gentlemen tell us what it is? Now take up this schedule and look it through, and you you find that your intermediate and your special have brought down the British preference to an equality in many cases,and not more than 2½ per cent upon nine-tenths of the articles therein mentioned, and to as high as 7½ per cent on some. I doubt if, when this goes into force, the preference will be worth 6 per cent instead of 33⅓ per cent.

Yet we have the right hon. gentleman himself standing up in the great council of the empire, in the Imperial Conference, and telling them there that we have resolved here in Canada to give up the fetish, the worship of reciprocity and all that kind of thing. He says:

> There was one time that we wanted reciprocity with the United States, but our offers were negatived, and we have said good-bye to any more offers, we have put our hopes upon British trade now.

That is what he told the assembled magnates of the empire under the shadow of imperial London. We have put all our hopes on British trade now. He goes on:

> But there are other nations—France is one and Italy another, with which we could have better trade. . . . France has a minimum tariff and we are prepared to exchange our intermediate tariff, if they will exchange their minimum tariff with us.

That is the principle on which he was going, a minimum tariff, for an intermediate tariff. That is exactly what the Finance Minister did when he brought in his machinery of the intermediate tariff.

> France has a minimum tariff and we are prepared to exchange our intermediate tariff, if they will exchange their minimum tariff with us. But while giving this intermediate preference, we maintain a system of lower tariff to the mother country, and to all our fellow British subjects all over the world.

They do, but instead of being 33⅓ per cent, instead of being 25 per cent, instead of being 12½ per cent, it is pared down now to an equality or in some instances to a very small percentage of preference, taking the average of the articles that are mentioned in these schedules, and a very small percentage taken on the whole. The right hon. gentleman went on to say :

Dr. Jameson made the point that if we were to enter into such an agreement with foreign nations, we would debar the possibility of giving a preference to the mother country. Nothing of this kind. Our tariff is not so constructed, and cannot be so held. If we were to make an agreement with France, which I doubt whether we could, France would understand the position; she would take our intermediate tariff, knowing at the same time there was a lower differential tariff under all circumstances for the mother country and the British dominions.

But the right hon. gentleman was not frank in telling what this preference would be shaved down to after the treaty with France was made. Perhaps he did not know at the time. He spoke as though no other tariff arrangement could be made with France except by an interchange of the minimum for the preferential tariff. But Mr. Moor asked :

I would like the premier of Canada to assure us on this point. By that amount which you reduce it to any foreign power, you would reduce your preference with the home land?

Mr. Deakin. And with us.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I do not admit that we would reduce it, it would remain as it is.

There is another promise of the right hon. gentleman.

I do not admit that we would reduce it, it would remain as it is, but the man who trades with us in Great Britain knows that he may have a competitor, not upon the same lines, but upon reduced lines from our general tariff.

Not upon the same lines, and yet there is item after item in these schedules where competition will bear, and bear heavily, upon Great Britain herself. Now what are we doing by further diminution of the British preference? There is the country to which these gentlemen have been saying we must look for our sales in this country, it is the great market of Canada. What was another article of faith of these gentlemen ? That if you wanted a country to buy from you, you must buy from that country as well. Now what is happening with regard to Great Britain? That the balance of trade, so far as traffic between this country and Great Britain is concerned, is absolutely adverse to Great Britain, whilst with foreign nations the balance of trade is with the foreigner, and we have to take the money balance from Great Britain and pay it to the foreigner to liquidate our bills. Yet you are accentuating that, you are accentuating what to-day is a danger that is menacing Canadian trade and Canadian stability. Nothing is more impressive than the extreme and rapid rise of the adverse balance of trade against Canada in the last five years. It is remarkable, and it is being commented upon, and you may refine upon it as you like, it is a distinct menace. And yet, Sir, you are proposing a treaty which, though it may have little advantage in itself, will have this absolute trend and consequence, that it is giving to countries whose balance of trade is already adverse to Canada, greater ease of entry into this country to increase that adverse balance and to pile up the debit against you. Look at Japan. Japan to-day sends in here more than a million dollars worth of goods. How much do you send out ? And yet the next year, you are going to add to the exports from Japan, and to the advantage of the exporters of Japan, on silks and fancy goods to a large amount by giving them the advantage of this treaty. Are we following up with equal diligence our exports to those countries? It must stop somewhere. We must find exports somewhere to balance our imports. The result of this treaty, and of giving the most favoured nation treatment, will be to accentuate this menace and not to diminish it.

You are also paying for this treaty by valuable favours given to most-favoured nations without receiving any compensation therefor.

You are giving for a largely unimportant and impossible list in schedule A, two lists in schedules B and C, which are very valuable; and you are subjecting the industries of this country to increased competition in certain products that will tell hardly on lines of business already hard pressed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already taken up more time than I should. But somehow or other, both with the Minister of Finance and myself, this seems to be a question which takes a good while to get over. I have endeavoured to examine this as far as I possibly could in a cool and critical way. I want this House to see exactly what it is doing before it does it ; and when we come to the Bill and to examine the different items, I hope we shall have information from the members of the government that will enable us to get a little further into the treaty than we have been able to do heretofore.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To reach a conclusion.

Mr. FOSTER. At least to reach a conclusion. Let us in this House examine this treaty with particularity, diligence and information enough to know just exactly what it means and not go into it from wrong ideas or insufficient information. If, when we have got through that examination, this treaty commends itself to me as being good as between Canada and France I shall vote for it. If it does not, I shall not.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker, as it is getting rather late and as any remarks I may have to make may be somewhat lengthy I will move that the debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, January 15, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of Gustave A. Turcotte, Esq., for the electoral district of Nicolet.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Ashcroft, Barkerville and Fort George Railway Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Chartered Bank of British Columbia.—Mr. Macpherson.

Bill (No. 60) respecting patents of the Goodwin Car Company.—Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 61) respecting patents of Montague Moore and Thomas James Haskett. —Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. G. PORTER (West Hastings) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act. He said: The Bill is identical with a Bill which I introduced last session. Its object is to make the law of the Dominion similar to the law of the province of Ontario with reference to the sale of deteriorated milk to cheese factories. Under the Ontario law, if the milk arrives at the factory in a deteriorated condition, and the seller of the milk can prove to the satisfaction of the court that the deterioration was without his knowledge or connivance, that is a good defence; under the Dominion law that is no defence, and the object of the Bill is to make the two laws similar.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

IMMIGRANTS WITH CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to amend the Immigration Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill relates to a matter which I had the honour to bring before the House at the opening of the session, namely, the carrying of knives and other concealed weapons by Italians and other foreigners. I have in the hands of the law clerk of this House a Bill to amend the Criminal Code in reference to the same matter; but this Bill is based on the principle that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. Its purpose is to make provision for stopping at the port of entry all immigrants who may be undesirable from the point of view of carrying concealed weapons and also for deporting all foreigners who are committed of criminal assault in Canada. The first clause says:

> It shall be the duty of some suitable person to be appointed by the medical officer for that purpose, in the course of the examination hereinbefore provided, to search the person, clothing and baggage of each immigrant for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is in possession of any of the following weapons, namely: a weapon commonly known as a dirk or bowie knife, or any weapon resembling it or which is not of a character or kind calculated to be solely used for an inoffensive purpose; or any weapon known as a pistol or revolver, and to take possession of any such weapon, and transmit it to the minister, with a report of the name of the immigrant, his occupation, the name of the country from which he came, and his address there, together with the name of the ship, and place of embarkation and port of entry; and if, upon investigation, the minister is satisfied that the immigrant is not a person of good character he may order the deportation of such immigrant, and the provisions of section 33 of this Act shall apply to the case.

A number of the weapons included in this Bill are not included in the Act for preventing people carrying concealed weapons. The second clause provides:

> It shall be the duty of every peace officer to search any person whom he has reason to believe to be possessed of any such weapon; and if any such weapon is found in his possession, the peace officer shall forthwith take him before the nearest justice of the peace or magistrate, who shall proceed to investigate the facts and make a report to the minister in the matter together with the evidence; and, if the minister is satisfied that such person was an immigrant to Canada within two years previously and had in his possession any such weapon, or if any such immigrant is found within two years of his arrival in Canada in possession of any such weapon, the minister may order the deportation of such immigrant and section 33 of this Act shall apply to the case.

In reference to the Bill I wish to say only a few words. I would like hon. members to think over this matter, which is becoming more serious every day. On the day I spoke in this House on this subject there were three columns in the daily papers of the city of Montreal in regard to a request from the chief of police for sixty more detectives in plain clothes because of the number of people who had recently been knifed by Italians. Only the other day a Glengarry man was stabbed to death by Italians near Whitestone, Ontario. And here is a much graver case; on December 23 last, the daily papers in Toronto and Montreal had despatches giving an account of a fight on a train. I read the headings as given in one paper:

Bloody battle occurs on a train—Forty Italians on Montreal train fight with razors and revolvers.

The despatch shows that the row continued while the train was passing from Vaudreuil to St. Henri, that a number of shots were fired and knives and razors freely used. All the rioters but three escaped when the train slowed down at St. Henri. The three who remained aboard were arrested on reaching Montreal. One of them was taken to the hospital critically wounded. The other passengers were in a state of terror and danger. The train crew were, of course, utterly helpless. It is to prevent this kind of thing that this Bill is moved. The difficulty arises from a condition of our law which allows these weapons to be displayed for sale. A man sees exposed for sale in the second-hand stores, hardware stores and others, rows of revolvers. Our law prohibits a man from going into a drug store and buying poison unless he is a good character, known to the druggist, and unless he signs a receipt for the same. I think that this Bill, if I am fortunate enough to have it go to committee, might be amended by having some such clause inserted. I am open to conviction on the subject, and I think a discussion will lead to a remedy for the bad conditions now existing. Certainly, the use of the stiletto, so common in Italy should be prevented on Canadian soil. I find an Associated Press despatch in the newspapers of December 9 last, saying that the Italian government, under the influence of the King himself, is making efforts to put down the use of the knife in that country. The article goes on to say that not less than 10 per cent of Italians lose their lives by the stiletto. And Greece is in as bad a condition. I commend to hon. members the following editorial utterance from two of our leading daily newspapers concerning this growing evil. The 'Globe' says:—

41½

The moral of such a situation for other places is the necessity of making the administration of justice thorough and of keeping it so all the time. There is no virtue at all in spasmodic activity. Crime should never be allowed to become rampant. Every criminal should be run to earth as speedily and as certainly as possible. If he is convicted of murder he should be capitally punished; if he is convicted of some crime of violence short of murder he should be flogged. For such people imprisonment has no terrors. They easily accommodate themselves to the penal conditions, and when their term of confinement is over they emerge more skillful and more hardened criminals than before.

The only punishment they really dread is intense physical pain, and the safest way to inflict this is by flogging. This kind of punishment is not necessarily inhuman. It should be spread out over a considerable time, administered in comparatively small doses, and graded to suit the physical strength and temperament of the convict. It is of the nature of poetic justice in cases of brutal injuries to the criminal's victim, and it is peculiarly effective as a deterrent. If crimes of violence are to be stamped out, pain-producing punishments will have to be inflicted.

The Montreal 'Star' of January 14, says:—

The trouble is, of course, that the first things which the unarmed immigrant will see, when he gets to shore in Canada are shop windows full of weapons for sale. From this, if he be a discerning man, with a deductive mind, he will infer that he had better buy a knife or a gun at once; for it is plain that he is in a savage country where the inhabitants go armed. Obviously, it would be no more than fair play to the immigrant to remove from his sight these signs of our 'savagery,' which the police will subsequently tell him are very much exaggerated. If he comes to the country unarmed, we ought not to insist in this way that he arm himself, only to punish him later for having taken our advice.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIOINS.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO LITERATURE.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked—(Translation)—

1. Is the government aware of the following article which appeared in 'La Patrie,' of the 24th December, 1907:—

For Literature.

The Prime Minister of Australia has just obtained from the government of that country a subsidy of $2,500 that will form the nucleus of a public fund intended to give aid to poor literary people. It is quite probable that such subsidy will be voted yearly.

In that connection, the 'Canada,' that excellent review which defends so well Canadian interests, both in London and all through England, suggests that our government should imitate this example.

In truth it is a fact so far we have grovelled in the narrowest materialism. We build railways and wharfs, which is all very well; but what have 'the powers that be' ever done for literature and art? All countries have their subsidies for the encouragement and development of the fine arts. Now Canada is a nation, so it is often stated, and it is high time that she should begin to think of the idealistic phase of her constitution.

The small sum of $2,000 would scarcely add a straw's weight to our national burden, but it might be very useful for some one who, instead of running after a fortune along the highway of business, would wish to immortalize his country with some masterpiece. This is more true of Canada than perhaps of any other country. We have no literature yet, simply because we do not encourage those who write. The government would certainly be doing a useful work were it to create a substantial fund for this purpose.

2. If so, does the government purpose, this very year, to set aside an amount from the public funds for the purpose of creating a fund for the assistance and encouragement —either by means of purses, or prizes, or voyages for study—of the poor literary persons in this country?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister)—(Translation). The question has not yet been brought to the attention of the government.

PREMIUMS ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked—(Translation) :

1. Does the government of Canada still give premiums on immigration?
2. If so, in what countries does the government offer premiums on immigration?
3. To whom are such premiums paid?
4. What amounts are paid in premiums, and how much per head?
5. How much money has the government paid out in premiums on immigration since 1900?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.
2. Provision is made for the granting of bonus with respect to immigrants from the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Russia, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Austro-Hungary, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland.
3. To the steamship booking agents in the United Kingdom, to certain selected booking agents in continental countries, to specially appointed agents in the United States who work on commission, and in the case of juvenile immigrants from Great Britain to the philanthropic societies and persons bringing them out.
4. In the case of immigrants of prescribed classes from the British Isles, France and other European countries the premium of bonus which the department is authorized to pay is £1 per head for adults and ten shillings for children. In the case of immigrants of the farming class from the United States, $3 per male, $2 per female adult, and $1 per child. In the case of certain juveniles from the United Kingdom $2 per head.
5. $690,609.11.

WHARFS AT MONTMAGNY BASIN AND CAP ST. IGNACE.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked—(Translation) :

1. When does the Minister of Public Works intend commencing the construction of the wharfs, the money for which has been voted, at Montmagny basin and Cap St. Ignace?
2. Have tenders been called for?
3. If so, to whom have they been accorded?

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1, 2, and 3. Contract for wharf at Montmagny basin has been awarded to Elzear Boulanger & Fils; time set for completion is December 30, 1908. Plans and specifications for proposed wharf at Cap St. Ignace are being prepared and the work will be advertised for tender as soon as possible.

TO REPLACE THE GARRISON AT HALIFAX.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked—(Translation) :

1. Is it true that the Canadian regiments garrisoned at Halifax are to be replaced by troops from Great Britain?
2. If so, will such troops be paid by the Canadian government?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). The rumour referred to in the question has not the slightest ground.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE—DISTRICT OF QUEBEC.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE asked—(Translation) :

1. Is the Minister of Justice aware that the government of the province of Quebec has passed an Act permitting the appointment of an additional puisne judge for the Superior Court of the district of Quebec?
2. If so, does the government intend making such appointment, and when?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

An Act such as is described has been passed by the Quebec legislature, but has not been brought into force.

MANITOBA LANDS IN HANDS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SCHAFFNER—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. How many acres of odd numbered sections in the province of Manitoba are there still in the hands of the government?
2. How many acres of even numbered section in the province of Manitoba are there still in the hands of the government?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. About 9,642,500 acres.

2. About 9,354,500 acres.

The lands comprising the areas given above are chiefly unsurveyed. All Crown lands in Manitoba are subject to the provisions of the third section of Chapter 99, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, under which the Provincial Government of Manitoba becomes entitled to the lands which may be classed as swamp upon survey and examination.

INSPECTION OF IMMIGRANT SHIPS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked:

1. Have any complaints been made to the government concerning the treatment of immigrants by shipping companies bringing people to Canada?

2. Has the government any inspectors or supervision of any kind to protect the health, safety, and supplies of wholesome food, with proper sleeping accommodation of immigrants on ships sailing to Canadian ports?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.

2. Yes, except with respect to food supplies; these being under the control of the Imperial Board of Trade. Canadian government officers inspect sanitary and other conditions of all steamships carrying emigrants and sailing to Canada from British ports. Canadian government medical officers inspect all ships carrying immigrants, on arrival at Canadian ports. Further than this the steamship companies are required by the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act to give bonds for the due fulfilment of the provisions of that Act in respect of air space and other sanitary conditions as well as supplies of wholesome food, water, etc.

CANADA-AUSTRALIA SUBSIDIZED STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. RALPH SMITH asked:

1. How long did the government subsidize the Canadian Australian Steamship Company doing service between Australia and Vancouver?

2. What yearly subsidy did the government contribute?

3. Is the government providing for the service in the estimates 1908-1909?

4. If not, for what reason?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. A subsidy has been granted to a line of steamships between Australia and Vancouver since 1893.

2. The annual subsidies paid by the Canadian government have been as follows:—

1893-94	$121,666.67

3 and 4. A contract was forwarded to the contractors for signature which has not yet been accepted, nor has the Australian government come to terms with the contractors.

MR. GONZALVE DESAULNIERS.

Mr. ROBT. N. WALSH asked:

1. Has Mr. Gonzalve Desaulniers, barrister, of the city of Montreal, been employed as translator or in any other position or work by the government during the present parliament, or since 1896?

2. Has the said Gonzalve Desaulniers during the present parliament or at any time since 1896 been employed by the government to represent them as counsel in any court of justice, or in any other capacity?

3. In how many of these cases have his services been required?

4. What amounts of money have been paid him by the government, at what time were they paid, and for what services, since the year 1896?

5. How much was paid him for the work of translation, and how much for his professional services?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

THEFT FROM BONANZA POST OFFICE.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What investigation was made, and by whom, into the theft of common and registered letters from the post office at Bonanza, Yukon?

2. How many letters were stolen or concealed, and how many ultimately recovered?

3. What was the result of the investigation?

4. Who was then, and who is now, the postmaster at Bonanza?

5. Will the Postmaster General lay the report of the investigation on the table of the House?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1, 2, 3 and 4. An investigation into the case referred to was made by the postmaster of Dawson, Yukon, under date December 10, 1903, and it was ascertained that the postmaster of Bonanza, having reason to be dissatisfied with what appeared to be negligence on the part of his assistant, J. S. Burpee, dismissed him on July 27, 1903. After his dismissal Burpee removed from the room where he lodged and a Rev. Mr. Wyatt, who took possession of the room, discovered four sacks filled with mail matter. Upon a warrant being obtained, Burpee's trunk was searched and it was found to be filled with more letters.

Eighty-six registered and 3,318 ordinary letters were found to be in Burpee's possession but none of these had been opened or tampered with.

Burpee was arrested and given a preliminary hearing. He was then committed for trial before the territorial court. Burpee's counsel asked for and received a grant to have him tried for insanity, and he was declared insane, and handed over by the court to his brother for safe keeping.

Mr. W. M. Woodburn was the postmaster at Bonanza at the time and he has since been replaced by Mr. A. J. Peck.

There is no objection to the report of the investigation being brought down to the House.

EMPLOYMENT OF HENRY C. HUNTER.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. Is one Henry C. Hunter an employee on the government system of railways?

2. What are his duties?

3. What is the date of his entrance into the service of the government?

4. What is his salary?

IMMIGRATION BONUSES.

Mr. WM. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford) moved :

That in consideration of the great congestion that at present prevails in the labour market in many of the industrial centres throughout the country, it is highly expedient that assisted immigration, excepting only the agricultural and domestic servant classes, should immediately cease, and that no further bonuses shall be paid to individual agents or companies for sending or bringing in such immigrants. Further, that the time has come for the strict enforcement of the law that requires that only the financially, morally and physically fit shall be allowed to enter this Dominion as settlers.

Mr. OLIVER.

He said : I look upon the question dealt with in this resolution as one of the most important that is before the Canadian public at the present time. There is no question that is more discussed by thoughtful men than the present position of our immigration matters. Before entering upon this discussion, I desire, as a personal matter, to refer to what took place in the House I think on December 17, when I was unavoidably absent. On that occasion the Minister of the Interior saw fit to make use of my name very frequently, and seems to have made a personal attack upon myself and my utterances. At the same time, he read a private letter that was never intended for publication, and also a letter that was inclosed in the private letter. Now I am not as old a parliamentarian as the hon. gentleman, but I think when he reflects on the course he took on that occasion he will not be very well satisfied with himself. The letter was written some two and a half years ago, it was written as a confidential letter to the hon. gentleman, inclosing one that had been sent to me by a constituent who asked me to place it before the department. Now I may have been too confiding in the hon. gentleman on that occasion. It is true, he had not been in the position very long, not quite a month. The hon. gentleman was known at that time as the independent Mr. Oliver of the west, who was free to criticise the government when they were wrong and to support them only when he thought they were right. It was with this confidence that I addressed the letter to the hon. gentleman shortly after he assumed office. I have nothing to hide and nothing to regret with regard to that letter. The hon. gentleman was pleased to place upon it a construction that it does not bear upon its face, that never was intended, and he has wrenched its plain meaning to suit his own purposes. After doing that, he proceeds to hold me accountable also for the letter that was inclosed therein. I may say Mr. Speaker, that I am accustomed to do business with the various departments of this government, and whether I have been too confiding or not with those departments, I have frequently inclosed to almost every one of them letters that I have been asked to forward by my constituents, with a view to negotiations, with a view to discussing with the ministers certain matters ; and I think, without exception, until this occurred with the Minister of the Interior, those letters have been returned to me with the reply, as this one should have been, and I supposed it had been, until the hon. gentleman placed it in the 'Hansard.' Whether the hon. gentleman thinks he was warranted in placing a private letter of mine in the 'Hansard,' and also the inclosure, which was not addressed, mind you, to the hon. gentleman himself, but addressed to me, I leave to the hon. gentleman's sense of honour ; and I here and now ask the hon. gentleman to return me that letter that he wrongfully holds. That letter is not his property, it belongs to me, was addressed to me, but for purposes of his own he suppressed that fact in giving it to this House. He does not say that that letter was addressed to the member for South Brant, no, he makes the House believe that it was addressed to himself, and he proceeds to hold me responsible both for my own letter and the inclosure. That may seem to be good politics to the hon. gentleman, but I think he will see before long that it will get him into trouble, even taking his own speech and his own policy as the basis of it.

Then there are statements in the letter that must be met. Not the statements of the hon. gentleman, for I was falsely interpreted by the minister, the interpretation he places upon it is absurd upon its face, because he proceeds to say that I proposed to empty the tenements of Europe into the city of Brantford and into the surrounding country. This hon. gentleman does not find any such words, either in my letter or in the inclosure, they are not there. My letter simply gives a very qualified endorsation of the statements—if the minister will look at it. I said: 'In my opinion they are fairly reliable.' That is as far as I would go. 'Fairly' is a qualifying word, it means that the statements are not entirely reliable, or else the word 'fairly' would not have been used. Then the minister proceeds to interpret this other letter that was inclosed, and he puts his own construction upon that, as he told me quietly afterwards himself when I complained of the manner in which he had treated me. In the first place, this letter was from an information and employment bureau which existed at that time in the city of Brantford, on Colborne street, and had a placard in front of it to that effect. An information and employment bureau is surely not an unusual thing in a town or city of any size. It is as much in the interest of labour as it is of capital, and was for the purpose of securing employment for men and women who were out of employment, just as much as it was to find labour for the manufacturer.

It was not there in the interest of the manufacturer, as the hon. gentleman tried to make the House believe. It was there in the interest of all classes in this country, in the interest of the unemployed, in the interest of those who are seeking work and if a man wanted a hand he could apply there also. I repeat that it was in the interest of all classes and I do not know that I have anything to apologize for. But, the hon. gentleman proceeds and says that I propose to open this country to the tenements of Europe because the letter states that they could handle a few from the congested districts. The word 'few' is there. A few could be handled, a few could be placed in the city of Brantford. I was requested by my constituents to forward that letter to the government, or to the proper authority. I considered that the Minister of the Interior was the proper authority and I forwarded that letter to him in a moment of confidence. The hon. gentleman, up to the present time, has retained that letter. It was submitted to him simply as a basis of negotiation. It was not until he placed it on 'Hansard' that I recollected that I had not received it back and I ask the hon. gentleman to return that letter as he certainly should do. I saw the other day that he laid down the proposition that letters produced here are the property of the House and he probably produced it so that it could be claimed as the property of the House and not returned to me, I being the proper owner. The hon. gentleman was unfair in that when he had read a few lines he changed the word 'information' bureau into 'immigration' bureau. How does he account for that ? He misrepresented me as advocating an immigrant bureau when it was only an information and employment bureau that was concerned. How does the hon. gentleman explain that part of it ? He puts the word down there and then he proceeds with his argument. I do not profess to be a parliamentarian ; I am only a newcomer in this House, but I think it was a very unusual course for the hon. gentleman to place in 'Hansard' a resolution that I am moving for the first time to-day. Although it was not called for at the time the hon. gentleman undertook to foreshadow what was coming. On what ground did the hon. gentleman take that course ? I think that this attack was inspired from outside of the House. It was coincident with the visit of a certain gentleman to this city and he was inspired to make that attack, but he has exploded the bomb prematurely and this letter will prove a boomerang before we get through to-day.

Mr. D. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) can discuss a speech made by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) on some previous day in this House in connection with this resolution ? The speech made by the Minister of the Interior was not in connection with this resolution at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman's point of order is a little late. It should have been taken when the Minister of the Interior was discussing a resolution which was on the order paper.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, what the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) has to do with the point of order that has been raised ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has to do with it exactly what it purports to have to do with it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am asking Mr. Speaker if it has any connection with it ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not gather exactly the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross).

Mr. D. ROSS. As I understand it the Minister of the Interior, in discussing some matters in reference to immigration, made some reference to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). In connection with an entirely different matter—with a resolution on the Order Paper—he immediately begins to discuss a previous debate. I do not think that is in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Before you rule, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it seems to me that the difficulty is that the Minister of the Interior anticipated this motion and dealt with it at the wrong time. Now, the hon. gentleman who has the motion on the paper and who is obliged to deal with it and discuss it is answering the arguments which were improperly addressed to this House on that motion before we reached it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask you your ruling on the point stated by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that I had no right to place before the House the facts I did on a previous occasion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is perfectly clear you had not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I can hardly rule the matter out of order.

Mr. OLIVER. My action in placing before the House certain facts and arguments on a certain point——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this a point of order ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am answering a question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member is speaking to a point of order he has a perfect right to proceed.

Mr. FOSTER. That point of order has been decided.

Mr. SPEAKER. If he is seeking to rise to another point of order he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. He gets somebody to do that for him.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, he does not need to. He does not have to take refuge behind the privilege of parliament.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The resolution I am discussing was placed in 'Hansard' by the hon. Minister of the Interior. Surely that cannot be attributed to myself and the hon. gentleman should not complain if I proceed to discuss a resolution placed by himself in 'Hansard' ahead of time.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire now to rise to a point of order as to whether the remarks I made on the occasion alluded to were or were not ahead of time or out of order as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. FOSTER. That has all passed into oblivion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that that point of order cannot be raised at this time.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have no desire to make a personal attack upon any hon. gentleman opposite, but I am here to state my views on a question that I deem of the utmost importance. In so far as this personal letter is concerned I have said all I have to say except this much that these are matters which are between the minister, myself and my constituents and I, here and now, in order to save the time of the House, invite the hon. gentleman to come to the city of Brantford where we will have a union meeting, he will bring the private letter with him, I will pay all expenses and provide a good hall and I think I can assure him of a fairly good sized crowd and a warm reception. I want now to pursue the difficulty that the hon. gentleman has got himself into in holding me responsible for the inclosure. If you look at the utterances of the hon. gentleman opposite you will find that he had other inclosures upon that occasion and that he submitted amongst other things a resolution of the Manufacturers' Association. I think I should be privileged to say for myself in regard to the Manufacturers' Association that I have spoken of them in this House on more than one occasion and that I have been most grossly misrepresented. The hon. gentleman submitted, when he was discussing this resolution of mine, an inclosure from the Manufacturers' Association. It went a good deal further in the direction of bringing out skilled immigrants to this country than anything I have said. It was inclosed to him by Mr. J. M. Stewart. Perhaps some of you will ask : Who is Mr. J. M. Stewart? He was at one time secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, to-day he is the chief organizer of the Liberal party in the city of Toronto. The hon. gentleman holds me responsible for my inclosures. Does he hold Mr. Stewart and the Liberal organization of the city of Toronto responsible for their inclosures ? The hon. gentleman does not know that he is applying one thing to me and another thing to his friends. I am not and I have never been a member of the Manufacturers' Association. I have repeated this on the floor of this House on several occasions, but when I take up a copy of the press in the city of Ottawa what do I find in relation to the attack the minister made upon me on that particular date ? Look at the 'Free Press' Ottawa, of December 19, and see what it says in regard to the hon. minister's attack upon myself :

Mr. Oliver did not have to travel far afield to prove at whose door lies the responsibility for the presence in Canada of these unemployed. He was able, without any difficulty, to place that responsibility where it belongs, namely, upon the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, of which Mr. W. F. Cockshutt, the member for Brantford, who is now showing such energy in sympathizing with the unemployed, is so prominent a member. Indeed, the minister was able to put upon record a letter from Mr. Cockshutt himself, written two years ago, endorsing a scheme to flood the city of Brantford with mechanics and other labourers.

I have three times upon the floor of this House contradicted the statement, (and I now repeat the contradiction), that I am not now or ever have been a member of the Manufacturers' Association, but notwithstanding my repeated denial the Ottawa 'Free Press' in this and other articles persists in attempting to hold me up to ridicule because I am now taking a course antagonistic to that which was taken by the Manufacturers' Association. I am not responsible and have never been responsible for any of their acts. I stand here to represent my constituents and to endeavour to do my duty by those who returned me to parliament. I think I can truthfully say, that so far as I know since my entry into public life or before that, I have not been a party to bringing one single skilled mechanic into the Dominion of Canada. I have always stood for the interests of labour, and when the Minister of the Interior and his press endeavour to hold me responsible for the congestion in the labour market that now exists, I tell him to his face that he must find some other shoulders on which to place that responsibility ; he will have to look to Mr. J. M. Stewart and others of the Manufacturers' Association. I am not here to condemn the manufacturers, they are a respectable body of Canadians. But perhaps I had better remind the Minister of the Interior that the members of the Manufacturers' Association are not all my political friends ; perhaps I might as well remind him that there is a gentleman in that association who knew that document was in the minister's office because he helped to put it there, and that gentleman is my political opponent Mr. Harris, of Brantford, who was vice-president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at the very time this document was sent out, and who as a member of the executive was responsible for what that document contained. Now then, which does the Minister of the Interior believe is responsible for having flooded the Dominion of Canada with unemployed persons ; is it his political friend Mr. Harris or is it I ? Mr. Harris as a member of the executive knew what was in this document and when he backed Mr. Stewart in sending it to the minister he became responsible—according to the minister's dictum at any rate—for its contents. However, I do not think it is at all likely that the congestion of the labour market is to be attributed to that document, because I saw a recent statement by the secretary of the association to the effect that only some 500 men had been brought in under their auspices. I do not think the labour market has been flooded by either the action of the Manufacturers' Association or by that of private individuals. Mr. Speaker, it has been the policy of this government to increase our population rapidly and to look to the quantity rather than to the quality of the immigrants. The minister told us it was against the policy of the government to bring skilled mechanics into Canada, that the government did not do it and that they did not propose to do it. However reluctant I may be to do so, this is I think an opportune time to place on record a document from one of the officers of the Interior Department, and which was addressed to me, without any solicitation and without any knowledge on my part. It was evidently sent to me because this official had seen certain newspaper statements. I am suppressing for the present the date, and the address, but the hon. gentlemen can have those if he wishes to. The communication is addressed to W. F. Cockshutt Esq., Brantford, Ontario, Canada, and reads :

Dear sir,—I see by reports of various newspapers that numerous members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are in need of skilled and unskilled help. As representatives of the government here we have many inquiries from skilled mechanics in nearly all branches of the trade desiring information about opportunities for their line in Canada, and having no specific information we must be governed in our replies by general terms and conditions. I believe that if the secretary of your association would supply the government offices from time to time (of which the inclosed is a list) of the needs of your association, that it will be of great practical assistance in securing some of the needed help. Say for instance in this form: That there are so many carriage blacksmiths, so many boilermakers, lathe men, moulders, carriage builders, and so forth wanted. If we had such a list as that in our hands we could give definite assurance to men that they could get work and then refer them to the headquarters of your association in Toronto or Montreal or other large centres for distribution. I make this as a suggestion as we are quite often at a loss what to say, not having any definite information respecting the needs in numerous lines of work for which we have inquiries here. I am directing this communication to you as I believe that you are the president of the association.

There it is again :

Or was, the last information I had. I know in any event that you will forward it to the proper authority in the event that you are not at present the active executive of the association. I will be glad in any event to hear from you your opinion respecting this suggestion.

This is duly signed by one of the agents of the Minister of the Interior in Europe.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to tell us from what place that letter is sent, the date, and who signed it ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I might reply in the words of the Minister of the Interior the other day, that for state reasons I prefer not to give it. There is no objection to giving the date ; it is quite as recent as the communication of mine which the Minister of the Interior used ; it is dated June 5, 1907 ; not quite six months old.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. From what city was it sent ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. If the Minister of the Interior makes a request I shall give him the full information ; if he wishes to see it privately—

An hon. MEMBER. Send him a copy.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is a copy I am using just as the Minister of the Interior uses copies, but I have the original and if he wishes to place the name and the address and all the rest of it on 'Hansard' I am prepared to do. It is for him to say.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman is making his own speech ; if he wishes to place the name and address on 'Hansard' I have no objection. If he does not choose to do so I have no objection either.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. If the minister wishes me to place it on 'Hansard' I shall do so; if not I prefer for reasons of state as well as for personal reasons that the name shall not be given. I leave it to the minister to say whether I shall publish the name or not.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure that to the department, or to the House, or to myself, it is absolutely of no consequence whether the hon. gentleman does or does not place it on 'Hansard.'

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The Minister of the Interior is very brave about it. I am to understand that he takes my word for it that this letter is from an accredited agent of the government and that he is offering to flood Canada with mechanics skilled and unskilled.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Would my hon. friend permit me to say that it is in the public interest that we should ascertain what is the policy of the government on this question which is a most important question in the politics of to-day; and I think the House has a right to know whence and from whom that letter came.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I will be very glad to accommodate my hon. friend and I have no objection to show him the letter personally. But I do not wish to get the signer of it into trouble with the department and that is my principle reason for not publishing the name. I have no personal interest either one way or the other to suppress anything with regard to it. The minister apparently does not want the name published and I judge that he takes my word that I have read a true copy of the original which, in the words of the minister when he was accusing me, is an offer to flood the country with mechanics skilled and unskilled, and suggests that a list of the mechanics required in Canada should be hung in every government office in Great Britain. So much for the letter incident which I regret and which I hope the Minister of the Interior regrets, and when I have sufficient confidence in him to address a private letter to him in future we will have another set to if he makes it public, but I promise that won't be for a long time to come.

The resolution which I have placed on the Order Paper sets out with what I think will be acknowledged by all to be a self evident fact, that is, that congestion exists in this country in the industrial centres. The same 'Free Press' from which I read a few moments ago, contained an editorial in the month of December in which it attacked the hon. member for North Toronto and myself, and had on its front page glaring articles in regard to the congestion of labour in the city of Toronto. One of them was headed, 'The Black Flag May Fly'; another was that food was being distributed ; another was that there were many unemployed. And in the city of Toronto to-day, and to a less extent in every other city and town of an industrial character in Canada, there is and has been for many months a condition of congestion. I think I was justified in placing this resolution on the order paper in the early days of the session, because from what we find in the speech from the Throne, it is evident that the government were not taking notice of what was going on in the country. Here is what they say in the speech from the Throne in a tone of rejoicing :

The stream of immigrants coming to Canada continues to increase in volume, the year now drawing to a close showing a larger number than any preceding year, and it is gratifying to observe the many coming from the British Isles.

In the face of that statement the hon. gentleman knew or should have known that in every town and city of Ontario there was congestion in the labour market. It was known to myself away back in the last summer, and I wrote to a booking agent in the old country who was sending people to my district warning him that he had sent all that it was desirable to send. But this government made no attempt to prevent the congestion. They are now beginning to put in motion the law which requires that a man coming to Canada should have $50 in his pocket. Why did they not exact that condition long ago? I understand that the law originally provided that an immigrant should have $25, but even that was not enforced. Men landed in our town last summer who had not enough money on them when they arrived to pay for the first meal. That was no uncommon occurrence. I believe it occurred in many towns and cities in Canada. In some cases these men had wives and families, and were thrown upon charity even in good times. The proper precaution for the minister to have taken was to have enforced the regulation which called for the immigrant having in his possession a certain amount of money. I have copies of all the literature sent out by the Immigration Department, and I think the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Armand Lavergne) was quite correct the other day when he said that it was like advertising patent medicines. While the government have threatened prosecution for misrepresentation with regard to the conditions in this country, the government is itself an offender in this respect, because it sends out documents with glowing pictures and descriptions of what has been done in this country, but which cannot be realized once in a thousand times. I do not mean to say that a case cannot be found equal to the one suggested, but I do say that the department should only cite the fairly average case, and not attempt to deceive British or European people with the idea that money can be picked up in the streets of Canada, and that all a man has to do to get rich is to come here. The man who gets ahead in Canada, even in fairly good times, has to put his hand and brain to work, and do his daily work in a thrifty, methodical and persevering way. Our climate does not lend itself to getting on with too little work. We have a hardy climate, and many immigrants cannot labour at their calling throughout our winter. But the government have so extended their immigration policy that it now embraces not only those classes that I have referred to in my resolution, domestic servants and farm labourers, but also gardeners, stablemen, carters, railway surface men, navvies and miners. I wonder who cannot qualify under that regulation. Some of those who are brought into this country by the hon. gentleman as agriculturists are like the one I heard of recently out west, who was sent out to hitch a horse up to a cart, and he put him in the shafts with his head towards the cart, so that when he went forward he backed up, and when he backed up he went forward, this is of course, an exaggerated case. Many of the so-called farm labourers brought to Canada have scarcely any knowledge of agriculture, and come to this country totally unqualified for the work for which they were sent out. They have no knowledge of how to drive a plough or a mowing-machine or a reaper. For this reason there is much discontent on the part of our farmers with the help they have on the farm. Many of these so-called agriculturists who are brought from Europe never saw a large farm in their life. They perhaps worked a garden on a small scale, but they are perfectly unable to handle the ordinary agricultural implements used in this country. But almost any man can qualify under the extended list which I have read; and the minister pays for these people at the rate of $5 per head, and I believe a similar amount is allowed to the booking agent, so that about $10 a head is paid for every man, woman and child brought into Canada, and I am informed that $2 a head is paid to every man who locates in this country. We learn from the Minister of the Interior, in answer to a question put to him to-day, that nearly $700,000 of the money of the people of this country has been paid out in bonuses alone for bringing in immigrants. Now, this policy is not a new one, but it is one that has caused and is going to cause this country a great deal of anxiety. The hon. minister charged me the other day with endeavouring to flood this country with skilled and unskilled mechanics. I want to call his attention to the fact that over two years ago, when I pointed out to him that he paid too much attention to numbers and too little to quality, he retorted that I stood for a small Canada, and, like a great many men on our side of the House, for an undeveloped and nongrowing country. I do not now and never did stand for a small Canada; but I say that Canada can grow fast enough without growing at the expense of all that is true and best in citizenship, in religion, in morality, and in commercial enterprise and success. And this government, with the same recklessness which has characterized their financial policy, has entered upon an immigration policy that will hand down a legacy to posterity the harmful effects of which three generations will not be sufficient to overcome. I do not hold the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) himself wholly responsible for that. He entered upon a department after a gentleman even more unscrupulous than himself in this respect, one guided——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) should not use the word 'unscrupulous' with reference to any member of this House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I did not use the word in a disrespectful sense or with any intention of offending; but, as the word itself is regarded as objectionable, I take it back. I wish to point out that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) is the successor of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) who had established in this country what had become known as the Siftonian policy. That policy had two guiding principles. The first was: grow rapidly; and the other was 'Have regard to political results.' The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) keeping in mind these two principles, proceeded to plant in our Northwest—and I have studied this question at close quarters in the Northwest—colonies in every constituency where they could do the most good. And when I say 'good' I mean the most political good for the government. The hon. gentleman placed these colonies throughout the Northwest, and they are there to-day, doing good work for the government. The more uneducated, and the lower in the scale of civilization in some instances, the more they were appreciated and desired. But this country has its eye upon those who have been carrying out that policy, and they have called a halt, and called it in tones which cannot be disregarded. The effects of that policy have been seen within the last six or eight years in the Northwest, but they are now spreading rapidly throughout Canada. There is not a town or city throughout the Dominion that is not feeling the effect of this policy of bringing in immigrants regardless of their quality and fitness to become citizens of this country. When we speak about this, hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that they stand for a growing Canada; that 300,000 immigrants have been brought to our shores. Mr. Speaker, it is not a good policy to bring to this land, men, women and children who cannot be placed in suitable conditions and will not become fused and assimilated in one Canadian citizenship. But such considerations as these have been thrown to the winds by this government. To-day, in the Northwest, the British and Foreign Bible society are selling the old book in forty-five languages, and still the field is not covered. And this policy has been pursued until within the last week or two; but now the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has called a sudden halt and has provided that immigrants shall come only from the countries that have direct communication by steamship with Canada. He sees the evil of the policy that has been pursued. What is the cry in every church meeting in Canada to-day? Money for missions. For what missions? For home missions. We do not need to send money abroad to carry on foreign mission work, for the foreign missions are at our door. Under the policy of this government there is work for the foreign missionary in every town and city in Canada. The cry in every Christian church, regardless of denomination is for money to keep up with the work that this government has loaded upon us. The cry is Money! Money! to send in men to keep pace with this foreign mission work within our own boundaries. And if this country succeeds in fusing and assimilating the people that the hon. gentleman has been instrumental in bringing here into one great and sound citizenship, it will be owing to the devotion, energy and perseverance of the Christian church, and not to the wisdom of this government's policy.

This is not merely a question of capital and labour, as hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe. It is not merely a question of whether the labour market is fully supplied or not; it goes a great deal further than that. It is a question that goes to the very fountain of our citizenship, of our social and moral and religious life as a people. The government embarked upon a policy involving the very greatest danger, and now we are face to face with the perils which might have been foreseen from the first. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Lewis) brought a certain evil to the attention of the House this afternoon. But this is only one phase of this great question, the practice of many of those brought in by the government of unlawfully carrying concealed weapons. The hon. minister may dispute my statement that there are undesirables in every community. But let him ask the people of any town or city in Canada, if they are not undesirables amongst them who have lately come in. There is not one of these places but can name these undesirables that have appeared only within the last year or two. Many of these undesirables are carrying concealed weapons as the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Lewis) has said. Attacks with the long knife are matters of daily occurrence in Canada—an offence that was almost unknown here ten years ago. The way to deal with these people is on their entering the country, and not after they have come here. These weapons should be taken from them before they are allowed to come within our borders and partake of the privilege of residence in this Canadian community. And none should be allowed that privilege unless they are such as can become good citizens of Canada. Have any such precautions been taken? None. Consider, for instance, the 'farm labourers' whom the minister brings in. The history of many of these men is that they go on a farm for a month or two, prove themselves unsatisfactory, are discharged and drift into the towns and cities. And there you can see them by the hundred, yes, by the thousand to-day. They are not qualified for the work of the farm, and, instead of driving the plough, mower or reaper, or even using the pitchfork and smaller implements of the farm, they are wholly unfit for any part of the work, and so drift into the cities to become a burden upon our people. In many cases they are displacing our good old-time workmen. Men who have held positions for twenty years have been supplanted by the people introduced by the hon. gentleman. And why? Simply because they will work cheaper than our own workmen will. Should the standard of life in this country be lowered, or should it be maintained? I say we are entitled to keep it at the highest notch. Therefore, I sympathize with our friends from British Columbia when they stand for holding that as a white man's country.

We had a law which called for the possession by each immigrant of at least $25, and that requirement, I understand, has been raised to $50. It is stated in the press, however, that many of the Japanese coming into British Columbia were furnished, just before arriving, with $25 in crisp Canadian bills in order that they might pass the inspection at the port, but as soon as they landed they returned it to the man who had lent it to them. Whether that statement is true or not I do not know, but it has been made in the press and I have reason to believe from what I have seen that that part of the law has not been satisfactorily carried out. I further believe that the requirements of the law respecting the moral character of the immigrants to this country have not been enforced. Crimes of violence are increasing in Canada. That is a very regrettable thing. We have been for years noted as a law-abiding, God-fearing country where crimes of great cruelty, of great violence, were very rare, but if you look at almost any paper now you will find that crimes of a serious nature are being committed by newcomers. What does that mean? That many men are entering our gates who are not morally fit to be allowed to enter. They have been the outcasts of the communities from which they came and have reverted to crime almost the moment of their arrival here. We have that case at Brampton the other day when a man who had not been in the employment of a farmer a month, committed one of the most serious crimes it is possible to commit. Thus it goes on throughout the country, especially in some of the larger cities; crime is multiplying at a tremendous rate. Men are being held up in the streets of cities where such a thing was formerly unheard of, and the long knife comes out on small provocation. Our courts are filled with many serious cases. This is a very regrettable condition and it has been caused in large measure by the laxity of this department in allowing to come into this country those who were morally unfit to enter.

There is the further case of physical unfitness to enter, men who never could do a day's work, who are not strongly enough built, who have been accustomed to the slums and dark places of the earth and have not had a fair chance in life. We are sorry for them, but can we afford to open our gates to every one of this kind and admit them, to the danger of a citizenship that it has taken a hundred years to build up? There is something more than numerical increases to be considered. We want to go in the right direction and I wish to emphasize as my policy to-day, and it is the same policy that I have advocated since I came into this House: Grow slower and grow better, lay a foundation that we will have no cause to regret; bring in such citizens as can be assimilated into one common, general people and will make now and hereafter the very best class that can be brought into any free country. We have 160 acres of land to give to every settler. Is that not enough to induce them to come in? Is that not enough to justify us in asking that they be qualified to take up that land, occupy it and cultivate it in a skilful and proper way? But this government has not done that; they have gone beyond all that was reasonable and their whole course has shown that they desire to grow, regardless of the results; they wish to count heads so that at the end of the year they can make a great showing on paper. Just in the same way in their trade policy they have recklessly sought to make a showing regardless of the disasters they have caused and of the foundation on which their policy stands. I do not wish to hold this government responsible for anything but what they have done, but I would quote a line from a great English authority, Lord Bolingbroke, who once said:

> No man suffers by bad fortune but he who has been deceived by good.

So I say to this government, you do not suffer by the bad fortune which has come upon you now, in reference to your immigration or trade policy, except in so far as you have been deceived by the good luck you have had in the past; you have had good luck; you have prospered nominally and on paper, but your fortune has been not nearly so good as you supposed.

The government have become kind enough to say now that they will divide with the opposition the honours of the present financial stringency, and the Minister of the Interior showed a like regard when he said that they were willing to divide with the opposition the honour of bringing in more skilled and unskilled mechanics than are required. Up to the present time all immigration has been due to the policy of the government, but now, when there is a cry that the wrong kind of immigrants are coming in, that there are too many of them and that they are living on public charity, when many serious phases have presented themselves, the minister generously says: You are responsible; you helped to bring them in and we are ready to hand over part of the honour to you. That is very kind and generous, but we accept only that part of it for which we are responsible, and so far as I am concerned from the time I entered the House I have endeavoured to enjoin upon the minister the necessity of bringing in only the kind of immigrant who will become a moral, law-abiding, God-fearing citizen of this country. When I say that, do not take it that I stand for a small country or wish to keep out any nationality who will become proper citizens. I trust I have enough Christian charity in my heart to wish to have the doors of this country open to all those who are worthy by their past life and records to come in—and when I say worthy I mean that they have implanted in their hearts those instincts that will make a man of any nationality, colour or creed a true man in the true sense, a man ready to do an honest day's work for an honest day's pay. Such men will succeed in Canada. But this government have thrown all this policy to the winds; they have shown a disposition to sacrifice everything that is best in our citizenship in order that the end of each year they may make a glowing showing on paper—and this they have been able to do.

I, therefore, think it is high time that the Minister of the Interior should inaugurate a policy of retrenchment, in so far as immigration into this country is concerned. It is too late to remedy a very great evil that has taken place in Canada and which it will take us years to overcome, but it is not too late to see to it that in future only those who will make desirable citizens and will be finally fused into one great common people, should be admitted to the citizenship of this country. I therefore have much pleasure in moving:

That in consideration of the great congestion that at present prevails in the labour market in many of the industrial centres throughout the country, it is highly expedient that assisted immigration, excepting only the agricultural and domestic servant classes, should immediately cease, and that no further bonuses shall be paid to individual agents or companies for sending or bringing in such immigrants. Further, that the time has come for the strict enforcement of the law that requires that only the financially, morally and physically fit shall be allowed to enter this Dominion as settlers.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sure the House is very much indebted to my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) for having placed before the House and the country the views of the opposition in regard to immigration. I think that on that point it is desirable that there should be a clear-cut statement; and as it appears that my friend has been delegated to make that statement on behalf of our friends of the opposition, we can very well deal with it and we are quite willing to have the country judge as between his policy and ours. My hon. friend occupied some little time at the beginning of his discourse in discussing a letter which he had written some years ago and which I had read to the House, when I made some remarks a few days ago. It struck me at the time that it was rather unfortunate for us on this side of the House that my hon. friend was not here on Monday, because had he been here I am sure, judging by the tenor of his remarks to-day, that he would have voted with the government on that question. The question was as to access by members of the House to original documents. The government took the position that being in custody of original documents referring to the titles and securities of private individuals, it was necessary to maintain that custody, and the government could not place them at the disposal of the House. But my hon. friend was not here, and he now takes the position very strongly, not only that original documents should not be placed before the House, but that even copies of documents should not be placed before the House. He goes further, and takes the ground that a document which was in all particulars a public document should not be disclosed to the House by reading a copy of it. I am sure my hon. friend would have voted with the government on Monday had he been here.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman is misquoting me. I made no objection to showing the letter to the House, if the hon. gentleman wishes I am prepared to show it yet. But the hon. gentleman did not want it, and that is the reason it was not shown.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman and myself are at cross purposes on this point, as upon others. He is alluding to a letter which he read to the House, I am alluding to a letter which I read to the House and to the reading of which he objected as being the disclosure of a private letter. It was not the disclosure of a private letter, it was placing before the House knowledge of the contents of an essentially public letter which the House was entitled to know. The House was entitled to know that my hon. friend was in accord with the policy of the government to a great extent two years ago, just as I pointed out that he was in accord with the policy of the government to-day by the resolution which he has placed on the Order Paper. It seems to me that he is carrying his opposition too far when he objects to evidence of his own consistency being placed before the House. Now in regard to this letter, I do not know that it is wise to take up much time in discussing it again. But I think it is only fair that it should be demonstrated that the document was absolutely public, that it was proper to place it before the House, and that when my hon. friend says that he wrote and addressed that document to me confidentially and personally, he was to some extent aside from the fact. In order to refresh the memories of the members of the House in regard to the contents of this document——

Mr. HAGGART. Is it marked private and confidential ?

Mr. OLIVER. Absolutely not. So that they may know how far my hon. friend has travelled.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that the original ?

Mr. OLIVER. This is a copy, it is such a document as we are always prepared to place before the House. If the hon. gentleman should say that it is not a correct copy, let him bring in the original. I wish to read the document to the House for the purpose of showing that my hon. friend is not warranted in the statements he has made in connection with it. The letter was written on House of Commons paper, and was dated at Ottawa, May 9, 1905. It was addressed to the Hon. Wm. Oliver, M.I., Ottawa. Now my hon. friend may claim that this document is not in my possession by right, inasmuch as it is addressed to the Hon. Wm. Oliver; but inasmuch as it is further addressed to the Minister of the Interior and as I was Minister of the Interior at that time, I think the House will admit that I am warranted in saying it was addressed to me in my capacity as Minister of the Interior.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That is not the letter I referred to as being wrongfully retained by the Minister of the Interior, the letter I said was wrongfully retained by him was the one from the information bureau addressed to myself.

Mr. OLIVER. I will deal with that point in a moment. The letter reads :

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of the inclosed correspondence from the proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau of Brantford——

My hon. friend accused me of using the word 'immigration' in the place of 'information.' I wish to inform the House that the word that appears in this letter is 'information,' and in reading that letter as it appears in the 'Hansard' the word is 'information.'

—in which he makes a special request to me to endeavour to forward to our city the various classes of help that are at present urgently needed in that city and district. Would you oblige me by kindly noting the matter and advising me at your earliest convenience as to what method, if any, we can pursue to attain the required ends.

I ask the House, Do these words bear out the statements my hon. friend made a moment ago that he merely transmitted that to me privately, informally, and without endorsation of its purport ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Read it all.

Mr. OLIVER. (reading) :

The letter, I believe, contains fairly correct information, and Mr. Hall, the proprietor, furnishes several letters of reference as to his standing and ability to place the various classes of labour required.

'The various classes of labour required,'

Hoping to receive an answer from you at an early date, or if convenient to wait upon you in connection with the matter, I beg to remain yours very truly.

This is a perfectly proper letter to address to the Minister of the Interior on such a subject; but I submit with all due deference, provided I am within the rules of the House in saying it, that the wording of the letter does not bear out the position which my hon. friend took a few minutes ago in regard to it. I may say further that my hon. friend does not suggest in this letter that the inclosure be returned.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I asked for an interview, which was never granted. I expected that my hon. friend would grant the interview, and it was overlooked on my part that the letter was not returned, because the interview was not granted.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, that is my hon. friend's apology to the House for his action and I do not think it is an adequate explanation of the statements which he placed before the House a few minutes ago. Now, in regard to this letter which my hon. friend says is in my possession improperly, I have here a copy of the letter and again I must ask the indulgence of the House while I refresh the memory of hon. members with regard to the contents of this letter as having a bearing upon what my hon. friend said a few minutes ago. The letter is dated May 5, 1905, and is addressed to W. F. Cockshutt, Esq., M.P., Ottawa, Ontario, and is as follows :

Dear sir,—Referring to conversation with you some days ago regarding the immigration question as in connection with Brantford, I beg to advise, as proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau, in this city, I have experienced considerable difficulty in supplying the demand for men, boys and girls.

Mr. Cockshutt, in his letter to me, asked me :

What method, if any, we can pursue to attain the required ends.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in the hearing of the members of this House if I could, with a knowledge of the English language, place any other construction upon Mr. Cockshutt's letter than that he desired to forward the views and interests of the Information and Employment Bureau of Brantford by supplying the demand for men, boys and girls in that city. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the English language does not admit of any other construction. The writer goes on :

Help in all the various branches is scarce, and I have many applications for mechanics, moulders, farm hands, servants, factory hands, &c., &c., which have remained unfilled for the reason that labourers are not to be had.

At present, the call for men, especially, is greater than we can commence to meet. We have openings every day, for which, had we but the available material, we could furnish men with.

Then follows a list of wages paid in different employments and as my hon. friend is anxious to have the original of this letter in his possession I will trespass upon the time of this House in order to place it in full upon 'Hansard' :

Skilled labour at from $2 to $4.50 a day; common labour, $1.25 to $2 a day; farm work, $15 to $30 a month, board and washing included. The wages we would offer to boys are as follows: clerks, $2.50 to $10 a week; factory work, $2.25 to $7.50 a week; farm work, $5 to $15 a month, board and washing included. For girls there are always places as clerks at from $2 to $7 a week; factory hands, $2.50 to $6 a week; servants, $7 to $15 a month.

The above is by no means an exhaustive list, but will serve to give you a fair idea of the class of people we could accommodate.

You will note the calls for help are many and varied, and with our present limited facilities, cannot be adequately answered. But, could we fall back on and rely upon the Immigration Department, for help, we could not only supply the wants of many who now suffer inconvenience owing to vacancies which cannot be filled, but an avenue might be opened whereby we could aid a few of our less fortunate fellows, and thus in a measure help to relieve the congestion of some of the overcrowded tenements in the great centres from whence come many of our immigrants.

You will, I am sure, agree with me that an immigration agency would be a good thing in this city. Brantford, as you know, is a growing city, whose watchword is 'forward,' and with the onrush of business and the ever increasing prosperity of the citizens now here, the class of people required, as above enumerated, is lessened, and Toronto the seat of the nearest immigration office, being some seventy-five miles distant, there is a wide radius of country round Brantford, which could be better reached from here.

I hope the above may elicit from you some interest; failing, however, in securing your approval and support, I would be glad if at least some arrangement might be entertained whereby I could obtain from the immigration agency help needed, as mentioned.

I might add that I have written too, to the Hon. Wm. Paterson, who should also be interested in the matter, being himself, practically a Brantford man, and I trust the same may warrant both his and your approval and support, which I shall greatly appreciate.

Hoping the above may receive your usual thoughtful attention,

Yours very respectfully,
(Sgd.) PROPRIETOR,
Employment and Information Bureau,
Brantford, Ontario.

There are a few points that I would like to notice in regard to this letter. When I read the letter to the House on a previous occasion I took the liberty of saying that in so far as this letter disclosed in itself there was no more information as to who was the Brantford Employment and Information Bureau than as to who composed the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is that so ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is so, I have read the whole of the letter and there is nothing within it to show.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. May I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the name of Mr. Hall is given in the letter which I inclosed and his name is stated as being the only proprietor. He says so himself.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely, but my hon. friend gave me the name of the proprietor of this Information Bureau.

Mr. TAYLOR. And you would not give the names of the North Atlantic Trading Company.

Mr. OLIVER. No, what I said to the House and what I say again is that in so far as the letter which my hon. friend inclosed to the department is concerned, it discloses no more who are the members of that Employment and Information Bureau than do the records as to who are the North Atlantic Trading Company. Now, I will carry the parallel just one step further and I will say that there is just as much warrant for suggesting that my hon. friend is a member of that Employment Bureau as that this, that or the other man is a member of the North Atlantic Trading Company. My hon. friend has taken exception, in his recent remarks, to my further allusions, in the remarks I placed before the House a few days ago, to his attempt in regard to the emptying of the overcrowded tenements of the great centres of Europe into the city of Brantford. He took exception to that. I have read his letter. I have read his correspondent's letter. It is for any person who chooses to read both letters to judge whether my hon. friend is responsible or assumes responsibility for the suggestion or not. I receive a letter from my hon. friend. He is a member of this House of parliament. On Monday we were told that a member of the House of Commons had a right practically to do as he pleased, that everything that was at the disposal of the government was at his disposal. I received a letter from the gentleman inclosing another letter to me, urging upon me that I shall give it immediate attention, stating that the matters contained in it are pressing and urgent and declaring that I will oblige him by noting at my earliest convenience what steps we may take to attain the required end. He vouches for the standing and ability of this immigration bureau, and then he says he is not responsible in any way for the statements contained in that letter which he forwarded under these circumstances.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister uses the term 'immigration bureau'; I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that it is described as an 'information and employment bureau,' and that only.

Mr. OLIVER. That is right, if I used the word 'immigration bureau' I ask 'Hansard' to correct it, because it is called the information and employment bureau. Now that my hon. friend has drawn my attention to it I want to point out that part of the purport of the letter which he inclosed to me, and which letter he endorsed as well as the writer thereof, was a request that the writer of the letter should be made an immigration agent and that an immigration agency should be established in the city of Brantford. That was one of the subjects with regard to which my hon. friend suggested an interview. I regret it was not possible for me to hold an interview with my hon. friend, but if I did not hold an interview with him it was not because of any lack of attention to his letter. His letter was a strictly departmental letter and on the 20th of May, 1905, it was answered as a departmental letter as follows:—

Sir,—I have had referred to me your letter of the 9th instant to the minister inclosing correspondence from the proprietor of the Employment and Information Bureau, of Brantford, in which he makes special request to you to endeavour to forward to Brantford various classes of help that are at present urgently needed in the city and district.

My office will not fail to do what it can to make known the need that exists at Brantford for various kinds of help, but I may tell you that the great majority of our immigrants make up their mind before leaving Europe or the United States that they will go to the Northwest and settle on the farm lands offered by the government there, or in the towns which are springing up as a consequence of the growth of the farming community in western Canada, and that it is difficult to dissuade them from this intention and to avail themselves of the openings in various employments such as are referred to in the present correspondence. The Immigration Department of the province of Ontario might do something in the matter, and I think it would be well for the proprietor of the employment and information bureau of Brantford, to write as fully as he has written to you to Mr. Thomas Southworth, director of colonization, Toronto.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. D. SCOTT,
Superintendent of Immigration.

W. F. Cockshutt, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

In view of the position taken by the department on the face of this letter, there was no object to be gained by granting to my hon. friend the interview suggested. He received his answer and it states the policy of the department, which then and before and since has been to secure settlement of the western lands. In that reply it is suggested that if the hon. gentleman wants to relieve the congestion of the overcrowded tenements in the great centres whence come many of our immigrants he should apply to Mr. Southworth, Ontario immigration agent in Toronto, when probably he will learn of something to his advantage. Nothing can be clearer than the policy of the department, and nothing can be clearer than the policy of my hon. friend. I said a few moments ago that my hon. friend objected to being consistent. He was consistent in that he wanted immigrants. I did accuse him of being to some extent at one with the government in that he wanted immigrants and the government wanted immigrants.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a serious offence to be accused of agreeing with the government.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman objects to it.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a pretty serious offence.

Mr. OLIVER. I know it is, but it is my hon. friend, and not I, who is finding fault. He was at that time with the policy of the government so far as the need of immigrants was concerned, but his policy differed from the policy of the government in that he wanted to empty the overcrowded tenements of Europe into the city of Brantford and the other cities of Ontario, when the policy of the Dominion government as stated to him in black and white over the signature of an officer of the department was, to settle the Northwest, to cultivate the prairies, to fill up that western country in order that there might be employment and business for the commercial and financial interests of Eastern Canada.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Does the minister think it is fair to say that I wished to empty the over-crowded tenements of Europe into Brantford in the face of the fact that the letter distinctly says that 'a few' of these could be handled ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think my hon. friend likes this letter and I must say that I failed to find the words in the letter which he refers to.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. May I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to them.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is in the last paragraph but one, beginning:—

We could aid a few of our less fortunate fellows and thus in a measure help to relieve the congestion.

Perhaps the minister has left that out of his copy.

Mr. OLIVER. Does my hon. friend stand by his present position, that he is responsible for these words he read?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman has placed the record on 'Hansard' and I am prepared to stand by the letters and meet them as I have done.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I am very glad we have found where the hon. gentleman does stand, and we find he does endorse——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I did not say I did endorse; I said I stood by the letters as they were.

Mr. OLIVER. Then we have not found out where he does stand yet.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. He certainly does not endorse and never did.

Mr. OLIVER. It is surprising that my hon. friend should have sent such a letter, and should have taken so much trouble discussing it before the House, and have taken the opportunity of correcting me, as he says, in regard to the terms of the letter, and yet he says he does not assume any responsibility for it. He is willing to use such words in the letter as he may to relieve him of the unfortunate position he is in, but he is not willing to be held responsible for the words in the letter. Now, he must accept the letter or he must refuse to accept it. He must accept the letter as he did a few moments ago, and he must be held responsible for the words he quoted: that he was willing to assist 'a few' of our less fortunate brethren and thereby relieve the congestion in these European centres. I ask how are we to construe the word 'few' when it is applied to the teeming millions of these European cities. It was to be a few, but it was to relieve the congestion. The few that would relieve the congestion would be a great many if dumped into the city of Brantford. I have spent so much time in discussing this letter for the purpose of showing that my hon. friend, who at one stage of his remarks might have been supposed to be addressing a prayer-meeting, was not keeping within the limits of fact—that he was denying before the House the words written over his own signature and was using that denial as an attack upon the policy of the government.

Mr. OLIVER.

Another word I would like to have, in regard to a Mr. J. F. M. Stewart, who wrote to the department on the 25th of June, 1906, and signed himself as secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The hon. member for Brantford has informed the House that Mr. Stewart is a prominent Liberal and is now engaged in active Liberal work. He probably is; I am quite willing to accept the word of the hon. member for Brantford when given across the floor of the House, in which I differ from a great many of my hon. friend's colleagues when asked to accept the word of members on this side. But I will draw the attention of the House to the difference between the letter of Mr. Stewart and the letter of the hon. member for Brantford. Mr. Stewart writes:

I beg to inclose you herewith a resolution passed by the executive council of this association at its meeting held on the 21st instant, having reference to the importation of skilled workmen.

Mr. Stewart was the paid secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and as such he transmitted a certain document to this government; but he did not say that it was pressing and urgent; he did not suggest advice at my earliest convenience as to what method, if any, we can pursue to attain the required end; he did not suggest an interview so that the matter might be forwarded more quickly; and perhaps it is for that reason—I do not know—that he is not now secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Perhaps our friends of the Manufacturers' Association did not find that enthusiastic support for their policy from Mr. Stewart that was given them by the hon. member for Brantford in the letter which he wrote.

In regard to the letter which my hon. friend read, as he said, from an officer of the Immigration Department in England, and as to the responsibility for that letter

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I said in Britain, I think, not England.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, Great Britain. We are not asking the hon. gentleman to divulge any confidence; we are not asking him to lay on the table original documents that should not be placed there; we are not asking him to disclose private information. But he has had the opportunity of laying that information on the table of the House; he has had the opportunity of stating to the House who the writer of that letter was, so that the House and the government might judge whether he was an employee or not. The hon. gentleman has not seen fit to take that opportunity; but he has seen fit to read a letter to the House, and to put a construction upon that letter which I am bound to say is not warranted in any particular; and he has declined to place the House or the government in possession of the name of the writer.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I offer for the third time to give the hon. gentleman the name and address if he wishes it.

Mr. OLIVER. Why does not the hon. gentleman give it ? If he has it, let him give it. But I do not ask him to divulge private confidences. I do not take the position of a detective looking into his pockets or using a microscope to see whether the signature is genuine or not. It is for the hon. gentleman himself, on his own sense of responsibility, according to his own knowledge of the fact, to give or withhold the information. Let him do it now, or let him say that he has no warrant in the letter for the inference he drew from it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman has now gone so far that it becomes necessary for me to give the name of the writer. I withhold the name simply to shield an employee who perhaps went beyond his duties. This is the original letter. It is written on the letter paper of the Department of the Interior of Canada Immigration Branch, and it is dated 26 Guild St., Aberdeen, June 5, 1907, and is signed by the agent of the government, John McLennan.

Mr. OLIVER. We have now the information which the hon. gentleman seemed to think it was undesirable to give. There is no reason why that information should not be before the House or before the government. Mr. McLennan has certainly been unfortunate in his statement. He evidently does not understand the position of the government as he should understand it. It is a pity it should be so. As the head of the department I am very glad to be informed that such a letter has been written, as the matter can be dealt with. There is no fault to be found. But I want to call attention again to the fact that there is not in that letter one word to indicate that Mr. McLennan was in any shape or manner going to use his position to advocate or suggest the removal of skilled mechanics from Great Britain to Canada. All he did was to give a civil answer to a civil question, and, as an officer placed in Great Britain to encourage immigration to Canada, to allow that information to pass through his hands.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This is not a civil answer to a civil question. There was no question asked. In the letter the agent says : 'I see by reports in various newspapers.' That was his statement. I never wrote to the man ; I do not know him from Adam. He wrote to me, taking his cue from the newspapers.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has the advantage of having the letter, which I would be very sorry to ask him for or to place before the House.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is in 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. Not knowing the correspondence which led up to it——

Mr. COCKSHUTT. There was no correspondence leading up to it.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say again that Mr. McLennan exceeded his authority in going even so far as he did, in writing that letter. At the same time, I want to point out that his letter, although indiscreet, is not a letter in any degree placing the department in the position of suggesting, or inducing, or advising, skilled mechanics to come from Scotland or England to this country. It is a letter merely offering the facilities of the office for the people who want the labour and the people who have it to sell to come together; that is all. Now, that is going further than the department desires its officials to go; but, at the same time, there is no warrant for what my hon. friend has suggested, that Mr. McLennan has been in any degree aiding or advancing the movement of mechanics to this country. I could read to the House correspondence that has passed between the department and booking agents in the old country illustrating cases in which we have compelled these booking agents to change the nature of their advertisements on threat of cutting them off of the bonus list. The correspondence can be brought before the House at any time—that is, copies of the correspondence can be brought before the House at any time—and by it the House will be fully informed concerning the position of the department in this connection.

Now, as regards the general question, I said in the beginning that I assumed my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) to speak for the party to which he belongs. He declared vociferously against immigration. He wants Canada to grow slowly. In taking that position, he is certainly voicing the best traditions of the party of which he is a member. There is no doubt that, under the more or less able administration of that party, there was very little immigration, and Canada certainly did grow very slowly. Not only the government of that party did not achieve success in connection with its immigration policy—although it had an immigration policy—but also, owing to its policy, while people did not come into Canada, people went out of Canada. The United States census which was taken shortly before this government came into power showed that there were, approximately, one million native born Canadians then resident in the United States. If these figures meant anything, they meant practically that all these people had gone to the United States, at any rate within the previous thirty years ; that there had been a drain on the life blood of Canada of its people—and of those who were amongst the best of its people—of 30,000 native born Canadians a year for a period of thirty years, under the able adminstration and the immigration policy, during the greater part of that period, of our friends of the party to which my hon. friend belongs and whose policy again he has voiced on the floor of the House to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. minister state, according to the mixed census statistics of 1901, the number of native born Canadians in the United States ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not that information available.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the minister a question—I do not often interrupt him. Would a period of thirty years to which he has referred not include the entire period when the liberals were in power, from 1874 to 1878 ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly that is where the mischief is done.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a comforting reflection for my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) and no doubt, goes all right in the school houses in Halton; but it is hardly acceptable in this House. Not only did Canada lose 30,000 native born Canadians a year, but, besides that, she must have lost approximately an equal number of people who came from the British Islands and, after residing some time in Canada, left for the United States. This one million native-born Canadians mentioned in the United States census did not include the progeny born in the United States of these people. Under the policy and administration of our friends on the other side during their long terms of office, Canada was bled white of its people. It is not a wonder that we had stagnation ; it is a wonder we were able to retain existence. And, when this government came into power, the great question they had to face was the question of immigration.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. minister tell us what is the difference of the emigration of native-born Canadians now as compared with what it was in the period he has mentioned ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am absolutely unable to give my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) that information.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. But, if the hon. gentleman will wait until the next United States census is out, he will then know. But I want him to take a trip out to the Northwest and through British Columbia, and he will find there, in the towns, in the cities and on the farms, the Canadians who have left this eastern country within the last ten years; as, if he goes into the cities of Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Washington, Oregon and many other states, he will find the Canadians who left eastern Canada during the years I have mentioned. How is it that western Canada is represented here in parliament almost entirely by native-born Canadians. It is because the people of western Canada, to a very great extent, are native born Canadians; it is because the exodus to the United States has been turned into our own Northwest; and we have the proof of it right here in this House to-day. That was not immigration, but it was a part of the result of the policy of the government in regard to immigration. It was a great question which this government had to face and which it succeeded in settling. The first thing to do was to prove that the Northwest was a good country, to get our own people satisfied with the Northwest through a proper and reasonable administration of that country. And, after that was done, the next step was to look for people to go into that country and fill it up. And to-day, the prairie country which lay, I might say, almost vacant when this government came into power is filling up. The production of that country in those days did not affect the markets of the world in any degree—it was a matter of merely academic interest whether there was a crop in that country or not at that time. To-day, owing to the increase of population and the increase of production because of immigration stimulated and directed by the policy of this government, a telegram announcing a drop of the temperature in the Northwest during the wheat-growing season affects the market prices of wheat throughout the world. We have the people, and we have the production. And the production is what has made this country rich, has doubled its revenues and doubled its trade. It is the success of the immigration policy of the government in filling up that western country that has created a demand for the manufactures and the products of these eastern cities, which has made openings for employment here, openings which our native population, up to the present time, have not been able to fill.

With factories running night and day, wages higher than ever before in the history of Canada, with a demand for men such as never was known in Canada before, still the demand for products created by the increase of that western country could not be met and there was, as I read to the House the other night, not only the demand made by the hon. member from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), who by his letter is my witness as to the truth of what I am saying, but the letters of hundreds of others, including a long list of municipalities and agricultural societies, all declaring that they wanted men, that they must have men, and calling upon the government, as my friend's friend called upon the government, to institute an immigration policy for this eastern country. In response to that demand the efforts of the department have, during recent years, been turned towards supplying the demand in the east, as they were formerly turned towards supplying the demand in the west, and I think I may say with a fair measure of success. We have this year an immigration of upwards of 300,000 people; 300,000 people added to the population of the Dominion in one year! It is true that owing to the financial conditions, owing to an enormous number of people coming late in the year, there was, in the early part of the winter—we may say that there is yet—a certain over presence of labour in certain centres here in this eastern country. But I say that this is not the fault of the policy of the government. A policy which induces upwards of 300,000 people to seek homes in this country, of whom certainly four-fifths have found homes and are to-day prosperous themselves and adding to the prosperity of this country by their labour and their intelligence—I say that policy is a successful policy, and this government is prepared to stand on that policy, to take issue with our friends on the other side when they decry that policy and call attention to disadvantages which arise under it.

My friend (Mr. Cockshutt) has seen fit to object to the class and character of people who have come, particularly this year. Who are the people who have come this year? Two or three years ago, I remember, our friends on the other side complained about the people who were going to the Northwest. My friend complained of them to-day. Why, he said, they had to print the bible in 45 different languages for the use of the immigrants in that western country. Well, they do not have to print the Bible in 45 languages in order that it may be read by the immigrants who have come to eastern Canada during the past year, but he objects to them just the same. The large majority of the people who have come into eastern Canada this year are of what nationality, of what country, of what race and of what language? My friend took occasion to be funny this afternoon and told a story about the lack of adaptability of one of these settlers in the matter of hitching a horse. Who are these settlers whom my friend laughs at in this House, whom he called upon his friends on the other side to scorn and exclude. Who are they? They are the people of the race that stands at the head of civilized humanity to-day. These people whom my friend scorns are not Hungarians, Roumanians or Slavs, they are English.

Mr. WARD. Not all of them.

Mr. OLIVER. Not all of them, but the majority are English.

Mr. WARD. No.

Mr. OLIVER. The majority are English.

Mr. WARD. Show your reports.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and if I caught my friend's remarks correctly it is to the English especially that he objects to-day.

Mr. WARD. No.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. minister is quite misconstruing me. I have always stood for a special amount of immigration from the British Islands. No such statement has ever passed my lips nor did I confine my remarks to this year. I said there are in every community a certain number of undesirables. I did not say this year ; I said they are there.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I beg to say it has been the effort of this department to secure from the British Islands a fair proportion of their emigrating people. These islands are productive of people and there is necessarily a large movement of people from their shores every year. They go to all parts of the world. From year to year thousands and tens of thousands of them have gone to the neighbouring republic ; they have added to the wealth and to the intelligence of the republic to a very great degree. It has been our ambition to secure from these islands a fair share of their emigrating people so that at any rate we might get as many of them to seek homes under their own flag, in what I might call their own country, as seek homes in the country to the south. After years of labour we have, if not actually, approximately succeeded. I say it is an effort which is entitled to the endorsation of this House; yet because there happens at this moment to be a slightly unfortunate condition of affairs, for which we are not responsible, which we could not foresee, and the labour market is slightly overcrowded, my hon. friend, like the politician he is, forthwith seizes upon his supposed opportunity, drags in every allusion that he can possibly make to the discredit of the immigrant in order to discredit the government—and his words to-morrow will be spread all over the British Isles and used by our opponents to hinder the immigration of those people to Canada. My friend is welcome to the the kudos which he will get from the speech he has made to-day. I wish his party luck of the assistance that it will be to them, not politically, but in the credit they will receive because of one of them having given expression to such sentiments on the floor of this parliament in this Canada of ours.

I wish to inform the House a little with regard to the responsibility for the presence in Canada of some of those who for one reason or another are not at the moment able to find place and employment here. I have said to the House on a former occasion, and I repeat it now, that this department has had only one policy, the policy that will induce the coming to Canada of the people who were suited for the conditions in Canada. I do not mean to say that other people are not just as good in their own way, but it is necessary, in order that they should be a success, that they should be suited for the condition which await them and, recognizing that certain conditions exist here, we have addressed ourselves absolutely and solely to people when they met those conditions. We felt that there was a need of men to occupy our vacant lands; there was need of men to assist in working the lands already occupied. In view of the stupendous railway construction now going on, it was necessary that we should have railway labour, and besides getting railway labour, many a deserving man would be placed in a position to occupy some of our vacant lands and become an independent land owner himself. There is besides a continual demand for domestic servants. We have addressed ourselves solely to the securing of this class of persons. It is in order to induce these classes of employees that we pay a bonus ; we only pay it on tickets which are taken by people of those classes.

My hon. friend has suggested to the House that we are responsible for the presence here as he said, of people who carry knives. Now I defy my hon. friend to show where we have paid a bonus of afforded inducements in any way to people of the class he mentions. We pay bonuses for the purpose of stimulating the energy of the booking and advertising agencies in the old country to get the classes we want. There is nothing to hinder undesirable people from coming here except our immigration laws. Thousands of pounds are subscribed in Great Britain in order to send people out here, and my hon. friend's suggestion is that we should lie quiet here and accept the undesirables who might be sent out by charity, and use no efforts of our own to bring out desirable people. That is not the policy of the government. The policy of the government is set out in our bonus regulations as an offer and inducement for special exertions to bring out the class of people we want. Then our policy as set out in the terms of our immigration law, is to exclude people that we do not want, within certain limits, and if they do come into the country, to deport them if they are subject to our deportation law. The one policy accompanies the other. It is not possible to carry on an aggressive immigration plan of campaign, without drawing along with it some undesirable immigrants. When we entered upon that particularly aggressive campaign we made provisions for checking the undesirable element, and we are checking them to a considerable extent. We have taken power, and are acting upon it, to check such undesirable elements, and we have the approval of the people of Canada in doing so.

Mr. OLIVER.

In conclusion, I want to place before the House some evidence, evidence that my hon. friends opposite will not deny, as to who are responsible for bringing out to this country people on misrepresentation. I will read an advertisement that appeared in the 'British Emigrant and Colonial News,' of the 13th of December, 1907. That was nearly a month after my hon. friend had announced to the world by his notice on the order paper that hereafter he was going to control the immigration policy of Canada. The advertisement reads :

The future for skilled mechanics lies in eastern Canada. Manufacturers are crying out for skilled help in all trade. Have vacancies for hundreds of skilled workers in all trades. This week's vacancies are: fitters, turners, joiners, labourers, tinsmiths, toolmakers, coatmakers, brushmakers, hammersmiths, chairmakers, cottonweavers, brassworkers, cabinetmakers, paper mill engineers, wood working machinists. Fresh vacancies from Canada by each mail. Girls ! Girls ! Girls ! Also families, high wages, assisted passages. Experienced and inexperienced machinists for straw hats, caps, whitewear, tailoring. Millhands for knitting, woollen and cotton mills. Chocolate dippers, &c., &c.

Apply with references to Louis Leopold, official labour representative, Canadian Manufacturers' Association, 15 Strand, London, W.C.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). The Minister of the Interior omitted to add the interesting corollary that the gentleman who was secretary of the association carrying on that propaganda has been selected by the hon. gentleman's friends as organizer of the Liberal Association in the city of Toronto.

Mr. OLIVER. The present secretary of the Manufacturer's Association is G. M. Murray.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know their policy had altered in that regard; has there been any change ? It is even more of a quibble than the hon. gentleman has been indulging in all through his speech. It would be impossible for any other man to succeed in collecting the same number of quibbles in the same length of time as he has done this afternoon. He tells us that the government are not responsible for the conditions under which immigrants into this country have been coming into many of the large cities of Canada, receiving aid from charitable associations, notably the city of Toronto. It is rather a new doctrine out of the mouth of a cabinet minister that the Liberal party are not responsible for conditions in this country. I have understood from the minister himself and from every cabinet minister, from every member on the other side of the House who has spoken in the Budget debates during the last eight or ten years, that the financial conditions in Canada are wholly due to this government that is, if we are in prosperous times ; but these very same gentlemen who in days gone by wrote articles to British magazines in order to run down and discredit the financial condition of this country, are the first, when any temporary check occurs in our prosperity, to announce that they are responsible for all prosperity but they are not at all responsible for any adversity. There is about as much sense in that as there is in a great many other statements the Minister of the Interior made this afternoon.

He was good enough to sneer at the tone of my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), and referred to his remarks as being more suitable for a prayer meeting than for the House of Commons. Well, if I were my hon. friend from Brantford I would retort that, if all reports are true, a good many remarks made by the Minister of the Interior are not very suitable for a prayer meeting, now so far as the letter is concerned, which occupied about two-thirds of the impressive and statesmanlike speech of the Minister of the Interior, dealing as a cabinet minister with a great question such as this, let me say that the letter was simply an ordinary letter from a constituent of my hon. friend from Brantford which he forwarded to the Minister of the Interior under a letter that has been read to the House, and the Minister of the Interior saw fit, when he knew the member for Brantford was not in the House, to use it for a personal attack upon that hon. gentleman, without having the courtesy to give him notice in advance that he proposed to make that attack. Possibly the best excuse that can be made for the minister is that he did not know any better, and with that I leave him

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to his remarks about originals, and his endeavour to bring up a previous debate in this House as to the production of originals, they constitute about as trivial a performance as I think I ever heard from the mouth of a cabinet minister. Why, the hon. member for Brantford offered to produce the letter. He offered to read the letter to the House and this hon. Minister of the Interior, who knew the purport of the letter to which I shall refer a little more in detail later on, had not interest enough in the policy of his own department to say that he wanted the name of the man who wrote that letter. He practically accepted it as the policy of the Minister of the Interior because he said that it did not make the slightest difference either to the House or to the country or to the department whether or not he knew the name of the officer who had written that letter. I will ask the House, I will ask the sober judgment of this House, whether under the circumstances it is not a fair conclusion that he regarded it as of no moment who had written that letter because he accepted that letter as expressing the policy of the department over which he presides. There could be no other reason why he should not be interested in the name of this official. If the letter were according to the policy which his department is carrying out then it would be a matter of no moment to this House or the department as to who wrote that letter. But if, as he afterwards endeavoured to make it appear, that letter does not carry out the true policy of his department, it would have been a matter of the utmost possible importance to him at least and to other members of this House as well to know who was the writer of that letter.

Let use see for a moment whether or not the letter bears the construction which he declares it to bear. The letter simply carries out the policy of his friend's friend, if I may use his own expression, Mr. Lazarus, and of his friend Mr. Preston. That gentleman, according to a statement of an officer of this government, has been retained in the service of the government, who is still receiving public money, was interested in the Canadian Labour Bureau which was bringing men into Canada by a secret propaganda absolutely opposed to the public propaganda which the government were placing before the people. The Minister of the Interior made the most solemn pledges to one of his supporters in this House within my hearing that there would be a thorough and complete investigation into the connection of Mr. Preston with the so-called Labour Bureau, into his connection with the Arundel Printing Company, and into his connection with many other matters which were debated in this House last session. The Minister of the Interior has not, up to the present time, made any investigation worthy of the name in regard to this matter, although we have good reason to believe—if we have good reason to believe the evidence of Mr. Jury—that Mr. Preston was a conspirator with Mr. Leopold, to carry on a secret propaganda absolutely opposed to the open policy of the government. The government, by refusing any investigation into the action of Mr. Preston in that regard, have made themselves co-conspirators with Mr. Preston in carrying out a secret propaganda opposed to their public policy. That is the only legitimate and proper conclusion that can be drawn from the action of the government in retaining both Mr. Preston and Mr. Jury after the revelations of a few years ago. This letter to which the minister attached some little importance in the end, although, in the first instance, he was ready to regard it as stating the policy of his department, presents precisely the same case. This letter is not in answer to a letter from my hon. friend from Brantford, but is an unsolicited letter from an officer of the department—not marked 'confidental'—hundreds of them may have been written by officers of the department in Great Britain to men throughout this country—written to Mr. Cockshutt under the belief that he was president of the Manufacturers' Association. I shall read the whole of it:—

Interior Department of the government of Canada.
Immigration branch,
Agent, John McLellan,
26 Guild Street,
Aberdeen, June 5, 1907.

W. F. Cockshutt, Esq.,
Brantford, Ont., Can.

Dear Sir,—I see by reports of various newspapers, that numerous members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are in need of skilled and unskilled help. As representatives of the government here, we have many inquiries from skilled mechanics in nearly all branches of the trade, desiring information about opportunities for their line in Canada and having no specific information we must be governed in our replies by general terms and conditions.

What was the declaration of the policy of the government in regard to immigrants of that class as evidenced in reply to my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) who brought the matter of this Canadian Labour Bureau to the attention of the House two or three years ago? The reply of the government—I am not quoting exactly; I am quoting from recollection—was that they desired to offer no encouragement to immigration of that kind, and they proposed to confine their efforts to encouraging agricultural labourers, domestic servants and people of that class. Well, if this gentleman was carrying out the policy of the government what should he have said in continuing his letter? He should have said, if he was called upon to say anything, that in so far as these people were concerned the government saw fit to take no part in encouraging immigration of that kind to this country. The Minister of the Interior says in effect that this letter is the policy of the department. It is the secret policy of the department, I suppose. How does it continue:

I believe that if the secretary of your association would supply the government offices from time to time, of which the inclosed is a list; of the needs of your association, that it will be of great practical assistance in securing some of the needed help, say for instance, in this form, that there are so many carriage blacksmiths, so many boilermakers, lathe men, moulders, carriage builders and so forth wanted. If we had such a list as that in our hands we could give definite assurance to men that they could get work, and then refer them to the headquarters of your association in Toronto, Montreal or other large centres, for distribution.

Thus, the government of Canada, through its immigration offices in London, would refer these men to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association which is the object of violent denunciation by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior every time he sees fit to rise in this House. This is only the old story over again of the Minister of the Interior desiring to cater to the labour interest of the country who are opposed in that regard to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. He denounces vigorously the Canadian Manufacturers' Association whenever he arises in this House and then, through his officers in Great Britain, he is co-operating with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, that same hated and despised association, in bringing skilled mechanics to Canada by a secret propaganda against the open and declared policy of this government. That is the policy as revealed by this letter of which he makes so light. How does the letter continue:

I make this as a suggestion, as we are quite often at a loss what to say, not having any definite information respecting the needs of numerous lines of work, for which we have inquiries here.

We the government of Canada, through our immigration agents in the British Islands, are desirous of obtaining all this information in order that we may carry out this secret propaganda absolutely opposed to our open declaration of policy. That is the meaning of that sentence if it means anything.

I am directing this communication to you, as I believe that you are the president of the association or was, the last information that I had. I know in any event that you will forward it to the proper authorities, in the event that you are not at present the active executive of the association I will be glad in any event to hear from you, your opinion respecting this suggestion.

Very truly yours,
JOHN McLENNAN,
Canadian government agent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so much for that. I might refer to some of the hon. gentleman's extraordinary statements respecting the production of public documents, but there will no doubt be an opportunity before the close of the session of discussing that subject in a more fitting manner.

Let us look for a moment at the general subject of immigration. The Minister of the Interior cannot rise in this House to discuss any subject whatever without making what may fairly be called a stump speech. His former independence, because I am bound to say I never saw much of it, although he was elected as an independent—his former independence has so absolutely disappeared and political partisanship has so absolutely taken possession of every vein and fibre of his being that it seems absolutely impossible for him to speak for five minutes in this House without introducing partisan politics. And so he was good enough to-day to go over the old story of the past when there was not much immigration to Canada, and when there was a good deal of emigration to the United States, and when he was asked the very simple question by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), a question which a Minister of the Interior acquainted with his department ought to have been able to answer, he displayed his amazing ignorance. Well, let me tell him that the emigration from Canada to the United States during the last fiscal year was very little below the figures he quoted for past years, because last year within two or three hundred of twenty thousand emigrants crossed our borders into the neighbouring republic. And that, mark you, after the great west of Canada had been discovered, after there had been bounteous crops; crops for which hon. gentlemen on the other side had claimed the credit as well as for the weather conditions which created them. Even the Postmaster General, speaking at Aurora, in the summer of 1907, claimed credit to the government for the good crops, for he said:—

While it is unnecessary for me to dwell at length on the causes of this prosperity it is but fair to remind you that the fiscal policy of the Liberal administration has given the farming community of Canada the good times which it is your happy lot to enjoy.

The Minister of the Interior was ready to make the absurd suggestion, that even the crops and the weather conditions are due to the men now on the treasury benches, and when they are not able to produce good weather they even spend from $3,000 to $5,000 of the country's money to secure the services of a United States rain maker in the Yukon. So far as emigration from Canada to the United States is concerned, there is not that improvement which we might reasonably expect, having regard to the advancement which the country has made and to the fact that bounteous harvests in the west have done ten thousand times more than all the efforts of the immigration department and of ministers to bring immigrants to Canada and keep them here.

Let us see whether there is not room for careful consideration of the problems that confront us in regard to immigration, and to this phase of the question the Minister of the Interior gave no consideration whatever. The people of the United States have had these problems in the past and they have them to-day. And notwithstanding the splendid system of the strictest possible supervision over immigrants which they have in the United States, by an Act of the last session of the congress, it is proposed to create a great commission to consider how the assimilation of one and a quarter millions of immigrants a year may be dealt with upon even more perfect lines than at present prevail. During last fiscal year 1,287,000 people entered the United States without any bonus and without any expense to the country. Not only that, but the head tax of $4 per head levied in the United States for the purpose of defraying the cost of examination and other costs attendant on the advent of these immigrants has resulted up to the present time in a surplus of $3,079,515.20; and the receipts for the fiscal year 1907 from this head tax amounted to not less than $2,782,-103. I am not prepared to say that we should adopt exactly a similar policy in every respect to the policy of the United States, and I am not prepared to say that the time has come in Canada when we should impose a head tax of $4 per head, but I do think the subject is one for grave consideration, and I do think its consideration leads one irresistibly to the conclusion that the time has come in Canada when we should cease to pay out enormous sums of the public money for immigration. We have in Canada at least as good a country as they have in the United States, and we can offer to the colonizing races in Europe just as great advantages as the nation to the south of us can offer. The United States has a remarkably complete supervision of these immigrants, and I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior now —he can answer later on if need be, because we cannot expect a minister to carry every detail of his department in his memory—I would ask: In connection with immigrants who come to Canada on steamship passenger lines, has the Department of the Interior the same full description in the manifest of these steamers which is insisted upon in the United States?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the information on the manifest is the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You think it is.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not absolutely sure but I think it is the same because in checking immigrants coming through Portland we use the same manifest as they do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the United States they have these data : The number of the man on the list, his name in full, his family name, his given name, his age, the sex, married or single, occupation or calling, whether he is able to read and to write, the country of which he is a citizen or subject, the race of people to which he belongs, his last permanent residence, giving both the country and the city or town, the name and complete address of the nearest relative or friends in the country whence the alien comes, his final destination, giving both state and city or town, whether he has a ticket to such final destination, by whom was his passage paid, whether the alien has paid his own passage, whether paid by any other person or by any corporation, society, municipality or government, whether he is in possession of $50, and if less how much? Whether he was ever before in the United States, and if so, when and where? If that is answered in the affirmative, then the year or period of years, where, and the date of his last departure from the United States; whether he is going to join a relative or friend, and if so what relative or friend, and his name and complete address; whether he was ever in prison or almshouse or institutions for the care and treatment of the insane, or supported by charity? If so, which? Whether he is a polygamist; whether he is an anarchist; whether he is coming by reason of any offer, solicitation, promise or agreement, express or implied, to labour in the United States; his condition of health, mental and physical; whether he is deformed or crippled, and the nature, length of time and cause; his height, complexion, colour of hair and eyes, and complete description; his place of birth, giving the country and city or town; seaport of landing; date of landing; name of steamship; date of examination. That is all to be filled in on the manifest, so that you have a very complete statement as to the immigrant on the manifest itself. More than that, the steamship company is required to put the immigrant through an examination, physical and mental, to ascertain whether there is any infirmity of his mind, whether he is an idiot or imbecile. In addition to that, the United States medical officer at the port of landing examines him and gets from him the report which has been made upon him by the surgeon of the steamship. But these are not to my mind the most important examinations which are made in the United States. They take these examinations as a matter of course, as examinations which are absolutely indispensable. Every immigrant, unless it is apparent at the very first blush that he should be allowed to land, is subjected to an examination by a board of United States inspectors, who go over all the details which I have alluded to in the manifest and obtain further details, keep a complete list of the questions and answers, and tabulate those statements. So that in respect of any immigrant who has been allowed to land in the United States, there is in the Immigration Department of that country, and without any cost to the country whatever, a complete and detailed history of each immigrant, not only in respect of his physical and mental condition, but in respect of all his previous employments and associations. It is manifest that a strict investigation of that kind must be of the greatest possible advantage in determining whether or not the immigrant in question is a man who will make a good citizen. We do not desire that this country shall grow slowly, but we desire that as it grows fast it shall grow along the proper lines, and we believe it would be better to grow more slowly than to grow fast along lines which will create difficult problems for this country in the future. Every country in the world is looking into considerations of this kind to-day, and the question of fitness for citizenship in every man who enters Canada is one that should be dealt with by the Department of the Interior. In that regard we have examples in the history of the United States from which we will do well to profit.

It must be manifest to every hon. gentleman in this House who has given the subject a moment's consideration that the problems of democratic government in any country cannot be successfully solved, that representative institutions cannot be carried out as they ought to be, if we are anticipating for Canada the great future which we are entitled to expect, unless the people entering this country are mentally capable of understanding the spirit of its institutions, of assimilating their life to those institutions, and of forming a progressive part of the community, and not being a drag on the advancement of the whole. That is what we must safeguard in selecting our immigrants, and it is for that reason that we should in the future look more to the quality than to the quantity of our immigrants. We need not fear for the future of this country. We have too great a country to have any apprehensions on that score. There is no doubt that not only the great west of Canada, but Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces will fill up with a fine population. But we do want to see that the men who come into this country are fit for our citizenship and our representative institutions, and that is a more important consideration in my belief than the consideration of inducing an enormous immigration into this country who might possibly in the early future give us problems which we have not now, and which we certainly should not desire to have.

Under these circumstances, I would like to inquire of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior whether it is the intention of the government to accept this resolution. I did not exactly understand from him, at the conclusion of his remarks, whether he assented to it or did not assent to it. He did speak somewhat vaguely of my hon. friend from Brantford having adopted the policy of the government. Well, we will let that pass. Whether the government have adopted our policy or we have adopted theirs is not a very important consideration. It is an important consideration that we in this House, having the responsibility of considering a great question like this, should endeavour to unite on some policy which will be carried out, and which will give to this country the best possible class of immigrants which we can expect. As far as I am concerned, I think my hon. friend from Brantford is entitled to the thanks of the House for having brought this question to its attention, and I sincerely trust that the views he has so eloquently expressed will receive more consideration from my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior than that hon. gentleman seemed inclined to give this afternoon.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, there are just a few observations which I desire to make before the subject under the consideration of this House is disposed of. We have it on very excellent authority that 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh,' and as a few minutes ago we listened to the old familiar sentence, 'I have no fear for the future of this country,' I did not wonder, and I am sure that no member of this House wonders, that in the mouth of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat the word stump speech should have been used so frequently in the earlier part of his address. It was not all in keeping with the position the hon. gentleman occupies in this House that he should have referred to the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior as a stump speech. If it was a stump speech, it was a good speech, so good that it has not only visibly disturbed my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, but even more the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) who precipitated this discussion this afternoon. I have every reason to believe that there has been a searching of hearts among hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and that searching of hearts has resulted in unkind looks being directed at my hon. friend from Brantford. However, so far as that is concerned, we will leave that for themselves to settle. Before passing to the observations of my hon. friend from Brantford, who introduced this resolution, I want to refer for a short time to the observations made by the hon. leader of the opposition. He laid special stress upon the letter read to the House this afternoon as coming from an agent of this government in Great Britain, addressed to the president of the Manufacturers' Association. That letter clearly was not intended for the hon. member for Brantford. Am I right in assuming that it was not?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have no objection to answering the question. The letter was addressed to me. But it went on to ask me, if I were not one of the executive of the association, or did not belong to it, to hand it over to the proper authority. I handed it over to the proper authority; and, after they had circulated it among the members, they returned it to me.

Mr. JOHNSTON. And my hon. friend produces here a letter which was not intended for him and to which he had no right. However, that apart, I wish to point out to this House and to the people of this country that, if my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) had wished to relieve the situation concerning which he expressed such anxiety, he would not have kept this letter in his pocket since about 6th June last. Had he desired to assist the workmen of this country and to prevent the inflow of people that would endanger the employment of skilled workmen here, he would not have kept this letter in his pocket for eight months, but would have promptly called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that an officer of his department in Great Britain was carrying on work entirely beyond his duties and should be disciplined for it. I would ask my hon. friend if he has, even at this date, any excuse for keeping that letter in his pocket since June last without calling the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the facts. Or let me ask him whether he has ever, before to-day directed the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the receipt of this letter? I ask him to answer this question now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not blame my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) for laughing at my hon. friend from Brantford. I know the hon. member for Brantford is a little sore at the situation he occupies. Still, these two hon. gentlemen sit on the same side of the House and are members of the same party, and, notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend from Brantford has been caught in an awkward position, I do not think his colleagues should laugh at him in open House. At the very worst, he should leave that for room No. 6. I would like to know whether my hon. friend from Brantford has an answer to my question. He has not. Then, I call the attention of this House and this country to the fact that this hon. member kept in his pocket for seven or eight months a letter which it would have been in the interest of the workmen of Canada that he should have brought to the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the end that the wrong complained of might be righted. Why did not he do it? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. It is for the reason that the hon. member for Brantford cared absolutely nothing about what happened to the skilled workers of this country but was particularly anxious about what should happen to the political party to which he belongs. It was the game of the professional politician, rather than the game of the friend of the skilled workmen, that the hon. member has been playing for the last eight months by keeping this document in his pocket.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I rise to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Johnston), not to answer his question. He says that I have been carrying this letter in my pocket. I do not know on what he bases that statement ; he certainly has no knowledge of the facts. His statement is not correct. I have already said the letter was turned over—and I may say immediately turned over—to the Manufacturers' Association and it was returned to me only within the last few days ; and I have lost no time, practically, in giving it to this House.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The case of my hon. friend from Brantford is even worse than I had supposed it to be. He was willing that the information should be in the possession of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in order that they might take some steps to carry out the views expressed in the letter. But he carefully concealed from the Department of the Interior the fact that such a letter had been written by an officer of the department. Let me repeat—and it cannot be too carefully noted or too well understood by the people of this country—that my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt), while professing to be the friend of the skilled workmen, had it in his power to help the interests of the skilled workman and absolutely refused to do so.

Now, the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), who is not in his seat at the moment, has stated his position on this question. He undertook to say that this letter, written by a subordinate official of the Department of the Interior without authority from the minister or from any responsible official, embodied the policy of the government. I have only to say that if such a statement is not cheap stump-speech politics, I do not know how to characterize it. The hon. gentleman certainly knows that a letter so written did not and could not convey the policy of the department. The policy of the department in this matter on more than one occasion, has been laid before this House and this country by the Minister of the Interior ; and when the fact was brought to the attention of the department that representations of the kind referred to by my hon. friend from Brantford were being made by officers of the government they promptly corrected the error. The department has taken care at all times that representations of this kind, when made, should be set right as promptly as possible. Now, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, during recent months, has been doing something in the way of inducing skilled workmen to come to this country. How is it that the hon. member for Brantford did not include the Canadian Pacific Railway in his denunciations this afternoon ? He knows that that company has been making efforts to induce skilled workmen to come to Canada, yet he says nothing about it. I am not going to find special fault with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for what they have done. But I point out that they were called to account by the Department of the Interior the moment they were discovered to be making these efforts. The department put them right, as the department would have put Mr. McLennan right, if my hon. friend from Brantford had had sufficient interest in the matter to direct the attention of the minister to what was going on.

I wish now to come to certain statements made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). He made a certain statement in this connection which convinces me that he, too, is amongst those who are ranged against the conduct of my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). My hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) addressing himself to the Minister of the Interior and through him to the government says: You are responsible for bringing the people into this country and for this you ought to be condemned. But the leader of the opposition says in effect to my hon. friend from Brantford: You are entirely wrong, the government is not bringing these people into the country, and when you made the statement this afternoon that the government was responsible for bringing people into this country, you were entirely mistaken. My hon. friend need not shake his head, I am sure, if the leader of the opposition were present, he would confirm my statement that that is exactly the meaning he intended to convey. The leader of the opposition said that the government were not bringing these people into the country but, on the contrary, the good crops had induced them to come. This is a matter which will have to be settled by my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) and the leader of the opposition. I would like to inquire whether my hon. friend from Brantford is going to support his leader or is his leader going to support him. They will have a nice time of it if it ever comes to a vote on this question. One must necessarily be against the other because their views as expressed this afternoon are exactly opposite. Of course I suppose we should not hold them strictly to account, and that it is perfectly legitimate for a party such as is now in opposition to have one view here and another view there, as I shall take occasion to point out. It will be within the memory of a few people in this country that the leader of the opposition conducted a great cross-country tour during the last summer. I say a few advisedly, because there are a few of us who must necessarily keep track of these things. Speaking at Valleyfield in the province of Quebec, the leader of the opposition criticised certain peoples that were coming into the great Northwest. On the 2nd of September last, as reported, not in any Grit paper, but by his own organ—sometimes—the Montreal 'Gazette,' he said:—

Between the east and the west there is a vast stretch of territory that could not be peopled, and there was danger of the two sections of the country becoming antagonistic to each other. Under these circumstances he thought it most unwise to crowd into the west as the government was doing a class of undesirable immigrants, Galicians, Bohemians, Doukhobors, &c., who did not understand our customs and did not readily assimilate either with the French or English elements of Canada.

It may be argued in defence of the leader of the opposition that on that occasion he was delivering a stump speech, but the leader of a great party should be careful even when delivering a stump speech, as very evidently my hon. friend was, because we remember that in this House, when pressed up against the lines on various occasions by some of my friends from the west, he was obliged to admit that the people coming into the western country were, after all, a rather desirable lot, and he did not feel that, standing face to face with these members in the House, he could take the position he so cheerfully took at Valleyfield in the province of Quebec. Perhaps he thought the people in the west would not find out what he really did say in Valleyfield, but the people in the west, like those in the east, are a reading people, and a man who sets himself up as leader of a political party in this country cannot undertake to say things in the east that he would not be prepared to say in the west. My hon. friend, if he were here, would immediately say: I have never made these statements. As to whether or not he has made them, he must settle with his friends; he is so reported by his friends. I heard him, I think the next night in Montreal, after I had read this report of his speech and I listened attentively to see whether or not he would correct the report of his speech in the 'Gazette' of that day; but he did not, on the contrary he went on to address himself to the people in Montreal in very nearly the same way. My hon. friend continued his series of meetings in Quebec and Ontario and then continued his pilgrimage to the west. Having arrived at Winnipeg, it is stated on what is fairly good authority, that there was a still further searching of hearts which resulted in some plain speaking, if report be correct—and I have no doubt whatever that it was plain speaking to the leader of the opposition, so plain indeed that he was obliged on the day after his arrival in Winnipeg to make a statement. I have no doubt whatever but that the leading members of the Conservative Association in Winnipeg drew his attention to certain statements that he had been making in Quebec. The next day Mr. Borden made a statement in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' as follows—and I want the House to pay particular attention to his words:—

While I am in the west——

He had left the east and had still hope that what he said in the west would not be read in the east.

While I am in the west I wish to say that in respect to the question of immigration, the report which represents me as referring to certain nationalities as undesirable is quite inaccurate.

That is, he says: While I am in the west. No doubt it is a reasonable inference that this declaration was only good during the time he was in the west, but when he returned to the east the same old declaration would hold good. I think that is a reasonable construction to put upon this interview which is published, not in a Grit newspaper, but in the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' a paper which is friendly to him, so that he cannot claim to have been misrepresented.

The interview was reported by the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of the 18th of September last, and it is exactly in the words I have placed before the House. It is worth while calling the attention of the country once more to these words:—

While I am in the west I wish to say that in respect to the question of immigration, the report which represents me as referring to certain nationalities as undesirable, is quite inaccurate.

This afternoon the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) said that a large number of people are really undesirable, and we are justified in assuming that his observations apply to all the people who went into the Northwest. I would like to hear from him as to whether or not he agrees with the statement made by his leader 'while he was in the west,' as to whether these people are a desirable people or not. I think it would be interesting to this House to hear him rise and state what his opinions are of the statement made by his leader in the city of Winnipeg, in view of the statement he has himself made to the House this afternoon. Now, I want the people of this country to be able to judge between these two gentlemen.

Mr. A. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman is reading an extract from a speech of the leader of the opposition. The sentence he quotes may or may not be complete, I do not know. But from that sentence we cannot judge what the leader of the opposition says, and as the hon. gentleman has got the article in his possession, he might read a little more of it to show us exactly what the leader of the opposition meant.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend from Queens (Mr. A. Martin) shows a commendable spirit in coming to the rescue of the leader of the opposition. Let me assure him that the sentence I have read taken from the interview with the leader of the opposition, is absolutely complete. I am not speaking very loud, and it may be that the hon. member for Queens has not heard it, and for his benefit I will read it again.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is this a quotation?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is a quotation. I suppose if I were to say to the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson) that I was quoting from the 'Gazette,' he would say that the 'Gazette' does not on all occasions represent Mr. Borden correctly, and that on this particular occasion——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Did the hon. gentleman make a quotation from the 'Gazette'?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did make a quotation from the Montreal 'Gazette,' from a speech delivered by the leader of the opposition at Valleyfield; but the statement I am quoting now is not from the Montreal 'Gazette,' but from another excellent organ of the Conservative party, the Winnipeg 'Telegram.' Now I want again to draw the attention of the House to the letter written by the hon. member for Brantford to the Minister of the Interior. It is worth while spending an afternoon to consider this letter. We were greatly entertained at watching the contortions of the hon. member for Brantford as he tried to escape responsibility for writing this letter. First, he said it was a private letter. Well, as a matter of fact it was not a private letter; so statement No. 1 is hurled through the window. Then he institutes a comparison between the letter written by himself and a letter written by a certain Mr. Stewart as secretary of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to the Minister of the Interior. Now, the Minister of the Interior has pointed out the difference between the letter written by the member for Brantford and the letter written by Mr. Stewart. Mr. Stewart is content to write a note to the effect that he is inclosing certain resolutions passed by the organization of which he was then secretary. He was discharging a duty which he was paid to discharge. Was my hon. friend from Brantford in the same position? He was paid to discharge a certain duty. What was that duty? Was it the duty of urging upon the Minister of the Interior the desirability of emptying the over-crowded cities of Europe into the towns and hamlets of this country? But that is what he was doing. And I am justified in assuming that he was voicing the opinion of the Conservative party, inasmuch as the leader of the opposition came to the rescue of the member for Brantford, and declared in effect that it was the proper policy for the Conservative party to impress upon the Minister of the Interior the desirability of adopting such a policy as would empty into the cities and towns of this country the population of the over-crowded cities of Europe? He does not follow the example of Mr. Stewart, or rather, Mr. Stewart does not follow his example. It is worth while, for the information of the hon. member for Queens, P.E.I. (Mr. Martin) in case he did not hear this letter, to direct his attention to it once more.

Dear Sir:—

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman as I understand, is reading from the 'Hansard' report of a previous debate.

Mr. BRODEUR. The point of order is not well taken because it is always permitted to refer to a document without referring to a debate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection to his referring to a document, but he has 'Hansard' in his hand and he is reading from it. An hon. gentleman on the other side of the House rose to a point of order, he had no point of order, but I think that the point of order that I have raised is well taken.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think a letter can be referred to but a past debate cannot.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I cheerfully accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order but as I have the document here my hon. friend's objection is removed. I can very well understand the anxiety of my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that the original or a copy?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Well, it is a certified copy.

Mr. TAYLOR. As my hon. friend is only trying to kill time until six o'clock I thought I would help him.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the hon. member for Brantford was asked this afternoon as to whether he had any fault to find with this copy of a letter from himself and so satisfied was he of the correctness of the copy that he admitted that it was all right. I have this copy here. It has been referred to on several occasions. But, what I desire to point out in all seriousness is that this question is really an important question and should be discussed as such by every hon. member of this House. The question of immigration, as everybody will admit, is one of the most important questions that this country is called upon to consider. The policy of the Department of the Interior and of this government, during the years that they have been in office, has done much to people not only the western but the eastern part of the country with a good population. Here and there, it is quite true, there may be some undesirable people come in, but that is absolutely and teetotally unavoidable. I take it that the statement made by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) this afternoon is absolutely correct, and it is that the people who have been assisted to come to this country during the last ten or eleven years are a good class of people and are to-day citizens that this country might well be proud of and who will do their part in the upbuilding of this country and in making it a desirable country in which to live. Every member on this side of the House cheerfully re-echoed the words of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) when he said this afternoon that we have no fear as to the future of this country. On this side of the House we have no fear of the future so long particularly as the Department of the Interior pursue the same policy and exercise such care over matters of immigration as they have done in the past. They have adjusted themselves to various situations as these situations arose and I take it that that is the true policy for any government to pursue. Governments, like individuals, must be prepared to adjust themselves to situations as they arise from day to day, and if the conditions of five years ago do not obtain to-day the department, unlike the departments that this country was accustomed to fifteen or sixteen years ago, are alive to the situation. Previous to 1896 there was stagnation all over this land and why?—because ministers in those days were not attending to the business of their departments. They were too busy resigning from the cabinet and getting back again, they had no time to devote to the interest of the country, and is it any wonder, when the fact is known that the ministers in those days were so busy resigning and bolting and plotting for the destruction one of the other, that there was stagnation all over the land? But, a change has come about. There are live departments now-a-days and if I have any advice to submit to the government or to the Department of the Interior it is to be ever on the alert as to the character and quality as well as the quantity of immigration that comes to this country. I would say further that if five years hence different conditions obtain in this country from those which obtain to-day let the department be alive to the situation and adjust itself to the conditions which obtain then. If they do that and be careful, as they have in the past, I am quite sure that this country will continue to progress as it has during the last ten or eleven years. The resolution of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is in effect what the policy of the government has been during the past number of years, and it is comforting to those who sit on this side of the House, it is comforting to every man whether Conservative or Liberal from one end of this country to the other who supports this government, to find hon. gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House coming down, even at this late date, and declaring that they too, as well as those who sit on this side of the House, are satisfied with this policy pursued by this government in the matter of immigration. That being so, I desire to place an amendment in your hands, Mr. Speaker, to the following effect:—

That all the words after 'that' to the end of the resolution be struck out and the following be inserted instead: The House approves the policy of the Department of Interior in confining its immigration operations to the encouragement of the coming to Canada of farmers, farm labourers, railway labourers and female domestic servants.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

SEED GRAIN FOR THE NORTHWEST.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Brandon). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask leave to refer to a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the question of the desirability of some steps being taken towards the supply of seed grain in the Northwest provinces.

Leave having been granted.

Mr. SIFTON. I have moved for leave to move the adjournment for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the government the question of seed grain in the Northwest provinces. I have done so not for the purpose of expressing any positive opinion on the subject myself, for I am not sure that I am competent to give a reliable opinion as to the position, nor do I feel disposed to recommend any particular course. I have rather brought the matter up for the purpose of calling the attention of the government to it, and for the purpose of enabling the members who represent the Northwest provinces and who are more familiar with the facts of the case than I am to express themselves and give the government the benefit of their views. I received some correspondence, a short time ago, which led me to suppose that the question of supply of seed grain in the Northwest provinces, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan, was a serious and urgent question. I had occasion to be in the city of Winnipeg a short time ago, and, regarding the question as of great importance, I asked a couple of gentlemen to meet me there who, I thought, would be well versed in the situation. The result of that conference would lead me to the conclusion that the subject is of very great and very urgent public importance. I do not wish to be understood as expressing the opinion that the position of the people in those provinces at the present time is a needy one, or that they are under the necessity of asking for charitable assistance. That is not the position which I desire to bring before the government at all. On the contrary, all things considered, I think the position of the people there is an excellent one, especially in view of the extremely unfavourable nature of last season. I think the position in which they find themselves is a great tribute to the agricultural capabilities of the country. But the position seems to be this, that in considerable sections of the country, the grain suffered from the frost, and the result is that in those sections there is no grain at all which is fit for seed. In other sections of the country, there was a considerable portion of first-class grain, where the shipping arrangements were favourable, and from many of those places the grain has been shipped out, so that even in those districts, there is not a sufficient supply of first-class grain for seed. I am told that the fall season was extremely favourable, and that a large quantity of land, much larger than in any previous year, is in a condition for seeding when the season opens. I am further told that unless some steps are taken to assist the farmers in securing the necessary seed wheat, the probability is that a considerable portion of the acreage, perhaps running into some hundreds of thousands of acres, will not be seeded at all, and that as to a considerable portion of the remainder, the probability is that it will be seeded with inferior seed.

Now as I understand the position, it is not that the people need or desire anything in the nature of charitable assistance. If matters were as they ordinarily are, that is to say, if ordinary channels for securing financial accommodation were open as they have been in previous seasons, I do not think any assistance would be required. But the position at the present time is that a farmer in a remote portion of the country may be in a good financial position, he may have assets and very few liabilities, and yet it may be entirely impossible for him to secure the necessary amount of cash to buy the seed grain which he requires. Generally speaking, he might get it at the bank or on a temporary advance from a loan company, but under present financial conditions it is impossible for him to secure advances in that way. Neither the banks, as I understand it, nor loan companies, are in a position to tie up a large amount of cash in transactions of that kind; and I have been assured that the position is such that some arrangement will have to be made, not for furnishing charitable assistance, but for financing the operations necessary to secure the seed grain requisite to seed the land that is ready for crop.

It has been suggested that the provincial government would be willing to assume the responsibility of disbursing and securing repayment of the necessary fund by providing the necessary legislation and local machinery, if the federal government would advance the money, the provincial government making itself responsible for the repayment of the money. I do not know whether that is correct or not. I am informed that members at least of one of the provincial governments will shortly be in Ottawa for the purpose of discussing the question. For myself, I do not suggest that under any arrangement the assistance should be anything less than a loan, repayable at a convenient period, with interest sufficient to prevent the government from suffering any loss in the transaction. But I am quite sure from what I have heard that the situation is one that demands the urgent and immediate attention of the government. I do not need to say to the members of this House what it would mean to the Dominion of Canada if half a million acres of land ready for crop should be left idle during the next season for lack of seed. It would be equivalent to the uncompensated destruction of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 of capital. It will be seen at once that the peculiar circumstances of the case, the occurrence of a season in which the grain is damaged and at the same time the occurrence of a period of financial stringency when ordinary small financial operations in remote parts cannot be carried on, these circumstances create a situation that is altogether unusual. I do not know that I need say anything further. I would like if members from the Northwest who are familiar with the facts would express themselves and I close with the hope that the government will give the matter its early consideration.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). I have already called the attention of the House to the fact that the crop has been badly damaged by frost in certain portions of the Northwest. In some respects the damage was such as to render the grain which was threshed totally unfit for seed. Now it is well known that frozen wheat which has not been badly frosted will grow, and will give good results provided that all the conditions are favourable for the first two or three weeks after seeding. But the risks are very great, and the sowing of frozen grain should be discouraged in every way, not merely frozen wheat which has been specially referred to by the hon. gentleman, but frozen oats as well—I think they are less liable to germinate than wheat. But frozen grain is not to be encouraged, because the fact that some of it will grow may induce many settlers who have not had much experience to sow grain which is of no use at all. All are now agreed on the advantage of using only the best seed that can be obtained. As the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has just said, if the financial conditions had been normal I do not think that any intervention by this government would have been called for. The local merchants and banks would, as they have done in the past, in all probability have been able to see to it that no land went uncropped for want of seed, and that the seed which was available was of a good quality. But the financial stringency has created conditions which demand some assistance in order to ensure that good seed is sown, and that the crop has a fair chance from the outset, and that all the land which is prepared for seed should be sown the coming season. It will be in the memory of the House that the Minister of the Interior in reply to a question which I put to him on the 16th of December last regarding seed grain, stated that the government had the matter under consideration with the government of Saskatchewan, and that applications which he had already received for seed were being investigated by the Commissioner of Immigration. I trust that he will give the results of that investigation to this House, and I have little doubt that he will find them sufficient to justify him in asking this House to put him in a position to see that sufficient seed grain of good quality is placed in the hands of settlers in the Northwest. It was my intention if the government had not shown a disposition to move in this matter as early as possible, to have proposed a resolution that the government should make advances of money for this purpose, the amount to be based upon the acreage ready for cropping, suitable precautions being taken by the government that the money would be used for the purpose for which it was being advanced. Such advances should be certified as necessary, not only by the officers of the government, but also by the councils of municipalities or of local improvement districts which have jurisdiction in the districts concerned, or possibly the executives of the agricultural societies might be utilized, because they are men who have the agricultural interest of their communities especially at heart.

Advances might be made, repayable in equal annual instalments to be collected by the local authorities. In my opinion the money required for this purpose should most certainly come from the exchequer of the Dominion, no matter how it should be decided later on to expend it for the purpose for which it is intended. The course I have suggested, of advancing the money itself instead of distributing the grain has many advantages. The distribution of the grain in itself sounds badly, because in other parts of the world it conveys the idea of something in the nature of a charity. It would not be understood in other countries, as we understand it here, that the distribution of grain is merely an advance given against the security of the land which land in itself has already been a free gift to the settler. As the value of the grain becomes a charge against the land, so the advance of money would amount to exactly the same thing, because in either case the lien would stand against the land. If the money be advanced it can be spoken of simply as a business proposition for the purpose of enabling the owner to carry on his operations, the advance being justified by the improvements he has placed upon the land. The advance of money would also have the great advantage that each individual farmer could satisfy himself as to the price and quality of the seed, which cannot be done if the government undertakes the distribution of the seed; he can make his own purchase of seed grain and deal through persons in whom he has confidence. The endorsation in each case of the municipal councils or agricultural societies would ensure that these cases were dealt with on their merits, and that the party in power did not make political capital out of the distribution. This endorsation would also ensure in any case where money was advanced that the money would only be used for the purpose of securing seed grain.

Mr. E. L. CASH (Mackenzie). Coming as I do from a section of the country which is amongst the best agricultural districts in the west, I am deeply interested in the question now before the House. Heretofore the district which I represent has produced probably the best grade of oats that has been raised in any part of Canada. This year when the grain was first harvested our oats began to be shipped out as No. 2, then they graded it to No. 3, and then to No. 4, and I think that finally all these grades were rejected. There is one peculiar thing in connection with this, and that is that since our district has been graded as a frozen district and our grain rejected, a party who shipped out a carload of No. 2 oats of the season before had them also rejected. When I was at home recently a meeting was held in my town in which this question was discussed, and the majority of the opinion at that meeting was that the seed which we needed the most was oats. This, however, refers more particularly to the district immediately surrounding Yorkton in which reside larger farmers than we have further out in the country. The fact is that the small farmer in the country, the new people who have not their homesteads for any length of time, grow wheat, and while it is true that frost does not destroy the germ of wheat as it does that of oats, the wheat has been so badly injured that there has not been any wheat to speak of shipped out of that district this year. That remark would apply to the district extending from Yorkton clear through to the extreme north. There is practically no wheat for seed in that country. The consequence is that the small farmer, the man who really requires help more than the large farmer, has not any seed grain. Now, we will need an immense amount of oats in that country, and as the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) stated, the financial conditions at present are such that even a prosperous and well-to-do former is not able to procure a dollar at the bank. I do not know whether it is any better since I left home; I know they were promised that after the New Year money would be easier, but that did not turn out to be the case and whether or not the conditions have improved very recently I do not know. I will give an instance to illustrate what I mean when I say that even a prosperous farmer cannot borrow money at the bank. A farmer came to me and wanted to borrow $700 and I told him I had no money to lend, and I was surprised that one in his condition should have to ask for a loan. He told me he would be perfectly willing to pay 12 per cent on the money, and I said to him: I do not know where you can get it, but why do you need it? He said: I owe the bank $700; I own three-quarter sections of land, the land in that country is worth $25 an acre, I have improvements upon one-quarter section in the shape of buildings and my house is worth $3,000; I have the best horses in the district sufficient to cultivate my land, and my total debts, including what I owe on the land, as well as the $700 to the bank, do not amount to over $1,500, and yet the bank is crowding me for this loan of $700. Hon. gentlemen, you will understand that the banks prior to this time have held out inducements to the leading farmers of the district offering to loan them money at a small rate of interest; money was plentiful and they wanted to get it out among the farmers and many of the farmers were induced to borrow under these conditions thinking they could repay the bank at most any time. Then, last fall the grain was frozen, the farmers were not able to sell their grain for anything worth while; they could not sell their horses for more than half their value and then the banks came down on them for what they already owed and refused to advance them any more money. I cite this in order to show that even a farmer who is in good fair circumstances is not able to raise any money to buy seed grain, so that many of our best farmers even will be compelled to ask the assistance of the government to supply them with grain this year. It is not that the farmers are in a bad way financially, but it is that they cannot realize on what they have got to sell. Now, the mode of supplying this seed grain will, I think, have to be left to the government, or rather to the federal government and to the local government jointly. I think of necessity the money would have to come from the Dominion government, but that its distribution and management should be regulated by the local government which is in close touch with the people. I think this is a question which should be thoroughly discussed in the House. I feel quite satisfied that this government has already taken up the matter and that they are debating it in their councils. I have had some correspondence with the Dominion government and also with the local government on this question, and I find that both governments are alive to the issue and are taking necessary precautions to have a sufficient amount of seed grain furnished for the west. As the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) stated, it would be a great calamity, not alone for the west, but for the whole of Canada, if by any neglect on our part now we had two seasons' crops ruined instead of one. It is sad enough to have one season's crop destroyed. We have suffered enough already, but our people are not discouraged; they know such things are liable to happen and they are prepared to go on and put in a much larger crop next year and try to make up for the failure they have experienced this year.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWAY (Lisgar). I realize the importance of this subject which my hon. friend has brought before the House, and the necessity for doing something to assist people who cannot get good seed even if they had the money as well as others perhaps who have not the money and will doubly require the assistance. But, Sir, my hon. friend speaking referred to the 'western provinces,' and if he will permit me I would like to stand here to-day representing a western province that it is not necessary to include in this resolution or in this suggestion. I had occasion the other day to read the proceedings of a meeting that was held in Winnipeg which was attended by the Premier of Manitoba who has charge of the Agricultural Department and who knows whereof he speaks in the matter of agricultural statistics. Mr. Roblin laid before that meeting the results of the agricultural operation of less than 50,000 farmers in Manitoba last year and I will, as I remember them, give you the figures he presented. He stated that the grain that was to be sold amounted to 30,000,000 bushels of wheat at an average of 80 cents per bushel making $24,000,000; 40,000,000 bushels of oats which I think he valued at something like $12,000,000, a quantity of barley the exact amount of which I do not remember, and in addition there was about $1,000,000 for dairy products and stock.

Mr. TAYLOR. And flax.

Mr. GREENWAY. I do not think he included flax; I think he referred only to the three cereals, wheat, oats and barley. The net result was that these farmers produced last year and had to sell—because he was careful to deduct what was necessary for seed and for feed—the net result was that they had produced last year and had for sale, grain stock and dairy products to the amount of $40,000,000. Now, Sir, I do not think that is a bad showing, and I wish to make this announcement in parliament in the interest of Manitoba which I like so well. There may be small areas in the province of Manitoba where the crops have been injured by the early frost and the seed in these districts may not be very good, but speaking in a general way I do not think that any assistance is needed in the province of Manitoba. Having had some experience in former years of what we did go through in Manitoba under conditions similar to those which present themselves now in the other provinces, I am heartily in sympathy with the statements which have been made in the House to the effect that something should be done for Saskatchewan and also for Alberta if need be. The gentlemen who represent these provinces can speak as to their necessities, but, Sir, I am quite sure—and I believe my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie will agree with me—that at the present time we have in the province of Manitoba plenty of seed. Of course I do not know what future prices may do to induce people to send it out, but, there is at the present time in Manitoba plenty of seed to supply the wants of our western neighbours. It might therefore be well that the question should be taken up soon, because prices may advance and the seed wheat that is needed in Saskatchewan and perhaps in Alberta may be shipped out. I want to say to the House that the province of Manitoba is in a good position; her farmers are in a good position; I have no doubt that some of them feel the stringency of the times, but on the whole the results of last year were very satisfactory and the assistance required in this respect in any part of the province would be very small indeed.

Mr. WM. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). I think perhaps it would be just as well not to debate this question in the House at any great length, or to dilate upon the need for assistance to the farmers in the western provinces. However, as the hon. member for Brandon has seen fit to call the attention of the House to the matter, I may be permitted to say a word or two. I am pleased to see the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) once again in his seat in this House. Since this session opened the hon. member has been absent a great deal of the time and so it is a pleasure to hear his voice once again. There was a time when the hon. gentleman was always boosting up the western country, telling us of its great possibilities and what it was capable of doing, and it is perhaps a matter for regret that he should now thus publicly declare that the conditions of that great western country are not so prosperous as they once were. I fear his statement will not have the effect that we westerners would desire. However, if the conditions be such as he has mentioned, and if the people are in need of seed grain of any kind I for one am only too anxious that their wants should be provided for. The manner in which that can be best done is a thing that should be carefully considered. As to the province of Manitoba from which I have the honour to come, I agree with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) that there is no great need for financial assistance to procure seed wheat for the farmers. In the southern portion of the province of Manitoba we never had a better quality of grain than we had this year, but I am told that in the northern part of the province the wheat has suffered in some degree from frost. If the government are going to provide seed grain I hope they will not overlook the needs of the farmers of Manitoba, as they have done on other occasions, but that they will place in the hands of the government of Manitoba the money necessary to provide for the wants of the farmers in the northern part of the province. I believe that this matter could be better dealt with by the provinces themselves. They are in a better position than the federal authorities to ascertain what the people really are in want of. The legislature of Manitoba is composed of 42 members as compared with 10 federal members; the local members are scattered all over the province and 42 of them there are better qualified to know what is really required than 10 of us who have to be in Otttawa a great part of our time. I think also that had the provinces taken this matter up it would not have been advertised all the world over that there was any necessity for such a course being taken. However, if this government is going to deal with the matter at all they should not overlook the province of Manitoba, and they should consult with the local government of that province as to what is best to be done. The member for Lisgar has said that he feels sure that the province of Manitoba does not require any assistance in this respect, but be that as it may the Dominion government should make careful inquiries before jumping at such a conclusion. There is one peculiar thing about this discussion, and that is that some gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to have changed their opinions. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) speaking a few days ago in the House made the broad statement that there was not the financial stringency in the west that members on this side of the House thought existed. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Cash) has to-day told us of some cases which were much worse than those I felt called upon to mention to the House and which called for the contradiction of my hon. friend (Mr. Crawford). I merely rose to say that if the government deals with the matter, all the western provinces should be treated alike. I am also of the opinion that it is probably a little premature to touch on the question so publicly because we have not got the exact data before us to enable us to intelligently discuss it. The Minister of the Interior will be able to tell us whether the governments of the various provinces have made any representations to the federal government on this question, and if they have, then when we are made acquainted with them we will be better able to decide as to which is the best machinery through which this aid can reach the different farmers who need it in the western provinces.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). I appreciate the importance of the subject which the hon. member for Brandon has brought to the attention of the House. I feel however that one is apt to be misled concerning the conditions of the west if he be not personally familiar with them. Speaking more particularly of my own locality I should say that what might be called the financial yield to the farmers this year, is just about the average. It is true that we have suffered materially because of frost, but it is also true that the prices have been much better than in former years. However, the fact that the frost has injured the grain has rendered necessary some such movement as that referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Sifton). The settler may be divided into two classes : the man who has his patent and the man who has not. The men who have not their patents may be again divided into two classes. First there is the man who has come in on the land this last summer and has simply done breaking and is prepared next year to put in the seed grain. He will not find himself in any way in great difficulty for the simple reason that he has gone homesteading prepared to buy his seed grain at some season, and having taken the money with him in the first place, he is as well prepared to buy his seed next year as he ever was. The man in the second class of homesteader who has not his patent, is the man who will this year really represent the third year settler, and he is in a more unfortunate position. He has spent practically two years on his homestead; in the second year he has probably used up all his money getting various agricultural implements and securing his seed grain, having sown that grain possibly late in the season it has been injured by frost, and it would be very unwise that he should use that grain as seed.

The quantity of grain that he has raised is not very great, and consequently, if he does market it, its marketable value is not very great. Then, he is in the unfortunate position of being without means and without seed grain. That to my mind is the man who requires some such provision as this. As he has no means whereby the provincial government, if you will, could get any lien from him as security for a loan, he being practically worth nothing from a legal standpoint, and his property being protected from seizure or lien, the only party, it seems to me, that could deal with him and make itself secure in loaning him money is the Dominion government; and the only reasonable course for this or any other government to take is simply to make him a loan at a reasonable rate of interest, and at some future time collect the loan from him. The settler who has secured his patent has gone beyond the reach of the Dominion government, if you will, and it would have to go into the collection business on a rather difficult scale if it loaned money to him. If the course suggested should be taken, some arrangements could be made between this government and the provincial government whereby the provincial government would guarantee to the Dominion government the repayment of the money loaned. As regards the quantity of grain spoiled in that country by frost, it is difficult to estimate. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) will agree with me that in southern Alberta this question has not arisen at all, as the farmers there have had a better year than usual; but in northern Alberta, where we grow vast quantities of oats, this has been injured by frost. The early oats escaped entirely. There was a certain percentage quite as good as in other years, and a certain percentage, the damaged, fairly good to market. But this class of oats is not satisfactory for seed. We had an experience three years ago of sowing oats that seemed to be up to the standard, though slightly damaged by frost, and the result was that a crop was spoiled. Consequently the farmers this year will not take any risk, but must be absolutely assured that the oats they sow are immune from frost. Then there have been the late oats, which were practically ruined by the frost. We have these three classes of grain in northern Alberta. With us wheat is a minor crop. If this government undertakes to supply seed grain to the farmers in northern Alberta, oats will be required in greater quantity than wheat. I trust that something will be done to relieve the condition. The financial condition is not so terrible to the ordinary farmer. The farmer who has been there for years and is holding grain has good seed grain. But the homesteader who has not his patent, particularly the man in his third year, is in a position that requires the attention of this government.

Mr. J. A. HERRON (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, my district has been alluded to as being fortunate this year in its crop. I agree with the hon. member for Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) that we have been very fortunate in the southern part of Alberta this year. I think our grain crop has been very nearly up to the average, in some parts even a little above the average, though there may be isolated cases which should be taken into consideration by the government and where assistance of the kind proposed might perhaps be given with advantage. In the northern part of the province the crop this year was light, particularly the oat crop; I understand that if oats are the least bit frozen, they are not fit for seed. Wheat, on the other hand, even if considerably touched by frost, will give a very fair yield. As to the classes of men to whom assistance should be given, I do not think we should single them out, whether they have been there one year, two years or three years, or even got their patents. I think, if assistance is given, it should be given to those who require it, no matter how long they have been in the country. It might be given on the recommendation of local associations such as the agricultural societies or the local improvement commissioners, who are representative farmers in the different localities. As this assistance is urgently needed in many instances, I am prepared to give my support to the resolution.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, last fall I had the privilege of addressing the Canadian Club in Winnipeg soon after the frosts had visited certain parts of the Canadian Northwest, and on that occasion I made some reference to the desirability of some authority, whether the Dominion government, the provincial governments, or the agricultural societies, taking the matter up and seeing that the farmers of the Northwest, especially the small farmers whose grain was unfit for seed, should be provided with seed on some fair basis. To my mind the federal authority is the proper authority to act in the matter. A great many farmers who went in last year and had five or ten acres broken up—and unfortunately they usually select the low, flat lands instead of the hills—lost their seed, and therefore have nothing to sow next spring. I do not know that there is much to be said about the matter. It is simply a matter of this government coming to the assistance of the people who are unable to get grain for seed next spring. They have not the ready money with which to purchase seed, and neither they nor their neighbours have grain fit for seed, and the only solution that occurs to me is for the federal government to step in and supply them with seed through some properly constituted authority. A great many farmers whom I saw said to me that their oats were only a little nipped by the frost and would be all right for seed, not knowing that oats which are merely touched with frost will not germinate and under no circumstances should be sown. I presume that the province of Manitoba, which has got beyond the frost period, could supply ample quantities of grain for seed. In the two new provinces, where the ground has been broken up to any great extent, especially on the east side or the south side of the lakes or on the hills, the grain has not been frozen. In the latter part of September last I saw excellent grain on the hills, while in the hollows immediately below, wheat and beans had been frozen two or three weeks earlier. I merely wish to add my word of commendation to the proposal that has been made, in the hope that those farmers in the Northwest who are found to be in need of seed grain should be supplied with it on some fair and proper basis.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Because of some experience of almost similar conditions in Ontario, I would like to say a few words on this question, for I think there are more things to be done than simply providing the grain. The next question is where the grain is to come from. I imagine that the country itself could supply a large portion of the grain that is needed. We have heard it said by some of the hon. gentlemen coming from that country that in their districts the frost did not do much damage, and I apprehend that the grain in that locality would be all right. We noticed from the government test that about 40 per cent of the oats will not grow, and about 60 per cent will grow. I presume some of it would be so bad that it would not grow. This indicates the necessity, when you use grain that is partially frozen, of sowing a double quantity of seed. I recollect that was done in the locality where I was raised many years ago. The grain was frozen year after year, much of the grain was not viable, but if you increased the quantity of seed you had a fairly good crop. I think it is necessary that the government or some one else should see to it that the grain that is needed to be used for seed should be tested, and a certificate given as to the percentage that will grow. It is a fact that oats seem to suffer more from frost than wheat. I remember seeing frozen wheat sown frequently and producing a fairly good crop, but oats will not do so well. However, as oats in Manitoba are not frozen, they could be supplied from that province. I think the farmers ought to be assisted, and that the government should provide parties to test the grain all over that country that is intended to be used for seed, and whatever grain is supplied by the government it should be tested and a certificate given along with it.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), that this is a matter of great importance, not only to the Northwest but to all Canada. I think the general opinion of those acquainted with the facts is that there will be a great shortage of suitable seed grain in the coming year. There is also difficulty in procuring a high quality of grain in Manitoba and the Northwest this year. Millers are buying up that grain as fast as they can get it, and within a month or two there will probably be no grain fit for seed except what the millers hold. It is important that steps should be taken at once to secure a sufficient quantity of grain for seed, and to have that grain distributed at points where the farmers can get it. That is more important than the question of advancing money. It is quite likely that a good many farmers will require assistance if they are to sow their land this year. The first thing to be done is to see that there is a sufficient quantity of suitable seed grain. I have heard it stated within the last few days by men who ought to know, that seed grain will have to be brought from the south of the line if we are to have sufficient good seed to satisfy the wants of the farmers this coming season. If that is the case, it is all the more important that what grain we have in our own Northwest suitable for seed should be secured. As regards the government advancing money to the settlers, I object to any class of people being spoon fed. If the government advances money directly to these farmers, we know that whatever government is in power will be beset by similar claims for assistance in the future. I think if the government decides, as they should in some way or another, to advance money to enable seed to be bought, they can find in Winnipeg and other western towns trust companies whose managers have a thorough knowledge of the country, and with sufficient resources, and I would suggest that the money be advanced through some such source and be treated simply as a business proposition. Let these companies advance the money on security of the grain and crops, and let them do the collecting so as to make it purely and simply a matter of business.

Mr. G. E. McCRANEY (Saskatchewan). Within the last week I have returned from a trip to the west, and while I was there I took some pains to ascertain if there was any necessity for additional seed grain in my own riding. I saw quite a number of persons whom I regard as representative, and I can bear testimony that as far as my own riding is concerned there is no considerable demand for seed grain. I am not in a position to state that there will be none, I am not giving the result of my observation. There is danger, of course, of magnifying the situation as to the lack of seed grain, and there is also danger that some parties might endeavour to boost the reputation of their own district for good crops. I have received a copy of a resolution passed by the Battleford Board of Trade which points out the necessity for the distribution of seed grain amongst the farmers. But the object of the resolution is to call the attention of the government to the fact that in the district of Battleford there is plenty of good seed grain available for purchase. When the Minister of the Interior was in the west this summer he visited the districts south and west of Saskatoon, which are known as the Goose Lake country, and I accompanied him. He will bear me out in saying that in a journey of some fifty miles during which we got samples from nearly every farmer who was bringing grain into town, we saw what appeared to be first-class grain, very little indeed of which was frosted. If it is the intention of the government to purchase seed grain, I would recommend the Goose Lake district as being a favourable one for that purpose. I only mention this to show that it is a good district, not as being better than many others in the west. The fact is that in that district there is a great quantity of first-class seed grain for sale to-day. There are no railway facilities in the district, and the farmers for a distance of over a hundred miles southwest of Saskatoon are without railway facilities, and as they have had very good crops last year, they have a good deal of grain on hand. I am sure that if it becomes known that there is a demand for seed grain, the higher prices which may be paid for the special article will induce them to bring the grain in. I am impressed with the necessity of putting tested seed grain into the hands of the farmers, and not any kind of grain which the farmers may think will be good enough. That is a reason why the money should not be given to the farmer himself. No matter by what authority the distribution is made, care should be taken that the proper kind of seed is distributed. Unfortunately in some of the districts where there is need of seed grain, some of those who need it are not experienced farmers, and those who need it most are liable to buy almost any old stuff. I think I may say that in the district I have the honour to represent there is no demand at the present time which would necessitate the government coming to the assistance of the farmers. The government may have to deal with individual cases. I am glad attention has been called to the matter, and I think this discussion will do good in acquainting the members of the House generally with the facts of the situation.

Mr. J. CRAWFORD (Portage la Prairie). This is a matter of great importance to the whole of Canada. I am safe in saying that I have grown more crops in the Northwest country than any other person in this House. I have before me a copy of the report of the tests made by the seed grain department. This report covers the tests of some 641 samples. So far as wheat is concerned, the tests for practically the whole country where wheat is grown average pretty high. Wheat must be pretty badly frozen to prevent it from germinating when planted. My own experience is that I have planted wheat even when it was black, and have produced good crops from it. In the tests to which I have referred I notice that Manitoba is very high—almost 100 per cent. In the western provinces, of course, it varies more, but, where good results are not gained, I think it is often because the seed is not well cleaned. My experience is that where wheat is reasonably well cleaned, where the lighter grains are fairly well fanned out of it, almost any kind of wheat will grow. In that western country, wheat tests fairly high even in the frozen districts. That concerning which the people should be most particularly warned in relation to seed is not to sow frozen oats. Great care should be taken in the choice of oats. I have known farmers sow oats that were first-class for milling purposes, but that would not germinate. Oats will not grow if at all touched with the frost. Barley is not so much affected by the frost. I fancy there is not the danger from the want of seed in the western country that may now appear. Of course, I would not recommend farmers of the west to sow frozen wheat if they can get sound wheat. It is always preferable to sow the best seed you can get. But it may not be handy to get sound wheat, and I fancy that there will be little difficulty in getting a reasonable sample of frozen wheat. As to frozen wheat, there is one point that must be carefully guarded against. Frozen wheat, under almost any conditions is very liable to heat, and grain that is heated the least bit is practically destroyed for seed purposes. Farmers may have a fairly good quality of grain in their granaries, but, if it is heated at all it will not grow. I know the case of a farmer in my locality who bought seed wheat for 150 acres. The sample looked all right. He waited until it should have come up and found that practically none of it had germinated. He had to resow with oats. In that case the wheat was heated. I think it would be well if those who engage in the purchasing of seed grain would look over the tests made by the seed grain department. If the government is taking a hand in buying seed grain, I can only repeat that if they want grain of good quality they should come to Manitoba, and particularly to the district from which I come. We have quite a quantity of very good wheat yet. But the situation will soon change. The millers and grain men are buying up the grain as fast as they can get it, and in a very short time there will be very little grain of first-class quality available for seed purposes. As to the financial situation to which reference has been made, I can only say that so far as the locality from which I come is concerned, the banking institutions have been quite liberal and reasonable in acceding to the demands made upon them. I need not repeat what I said on this subject the other day.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON (Selkirk). I am pleased to be able to say that in the Northeast portion of Manitoba we had very good crops last year—wheat all the way from 20 to 40 bushels per acre and oats from 30 to 50 bushels per acre. Still, I am aware that west of Dauphin there have been some failures. I was told of a farmer who had the threshers in to thresh his oats. When he took the first load down to the elevator, it weighed out only 9 bushels. He went back and stopped the work of the threshers. I can understand that there will be a large demand for seed oats. I agree with the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) that frozen wheat will yield as good results as sound wheat, the only difference being that more seed should be sown to the acre. I understand that in certain portions of Saskatchewan some of the farmers will be in want of seed. I do not know that I would advise the government to advance money direct to the farmers. Thirty-two years ago the Dominion government advanced $100,000 to the farmers of Manitoba for seed grain, the year after the crops were destroyed by the grasshoppers. Three years ago, I asked for a return showing the condition of those loans and found that about $30,000 of the money was still owing This shows the difficulty in the way of the Dominion government securing repayment of money thus advanced. If money is found to be necessary, the Dominion government should advance it to the provinces, and the provincial governments will take special care, by distributing through the municipalities, to safeguard the loans. This was the course pursued in Manitoba ten or twelve years ago. I know that Manitoba does not require assistance, but if the provinces to the west require it I would suggest that the advances be made to the provincial governments.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). I agree entirely with the suggestion made by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that, if this matter is to be dealt with at all, it ought to be dealt with in a business way. I have no doubt that there is a necessity for something being done, but I am quite sure it can be done on a business basis. The government should make some arrangement with a bank to lend to the grain buyers of the Northwest money to purchase the quantity of seed grain required. In every district there are grain buyers, men of responsibility and standing. These men know what seed will be required in their districts, and, if they could go to a bank and get money to purchase the grain and put it in elevator at their several points, then the farmers, of whom they are customers in the grain buying season, could come and get from the buyers the grain required for seed. The farmer would ask for ten, twenty, one hundred bushels as he might require and would agree to pay it back out of the first loads in the Fall. The businesslike way is to deal through the grain men, because they know the needs of the several localities, and besides it is to their interest to supply seed wheat, for otherwise they will not have business in the Fall. I was in the grain business for twenty-five years and supplied seed wheat to all parts of my own county. Farmers would come to me who were unable to sow their fields for want of seed, and I would supply it to them and they would pay me back in the Fall. I never lost a dollar through these transactions. The same thing could be done everywhere in the Northwest. The only difficulty is that the grain buyers may not have money enough to purchase the necessary grain for seed. Let the government make arrangements with a bank or banking firm to provide the capital necessary and the grain men will do the business and the farmers can repay the advances in the Fall. The government will run no risk for, though they guarantee the bank, they will be dealing with responsible grain men who are doing business at every point in the Northwest where seed grain is needed. And the grain men will be glad to do this business, because it is to their interest to have every farm in their districts yield a crop. All over the older provinces, the grain men have made these advances on their own responsibility and as a matter of business policy. They are all responsible men who are in the business out there ; many of them whom I know are responsible men, and they could make arrangements with their banks to advance money for this purpose.

Mr. F. C. SHAFFNER (Souris). I have no doubt that everything that is necessary has been said on this question. The point that most impressed me this afternoon is the absence of data in the speeches delivered. I am surprised that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), an old parliamentarian, in introducing this question gave so few data on which to base an intelligent discussion. I have listened very carefully to every speaker who has addressed the House and so far as I could learn there has not been one demand made upon any member of this House for seed grain. Personally I have had demands for post offices, I have had great demands for cars to move the wheat, great demands for the extension of homesteads; but I have had no demands that this government should take some action to protect the farmers in the matter of seed grain for next year. I know very well that there has been no demand from the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion; in fact I quite agree with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) that there is no demand in the province of Manitoba that seed wheat should be supplied. I feel, however, that our sympathy should not be local, and if there is a demand in Alberta and Saskatchewan, I am prepared to support any measure that may be required. But I consider the method of distributing this seed wheat an exceedingly important question. I do not believe it will be wise to grant cash to the individual farmers, expecting them to secure the best possible seed wheat; I am of opinion that if we do that a great number of farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan will want seed wheat—and so will many people who are not farmers. I think that if the Dominion government would supply the money, its distribution should be left to the jurisdiction of the local governments and perhaps, coming lower down, the municipalities should ascertain what farmers are in need of seed wheat, and that seed wheat should then be procured for them. One gentleman said that if the money was given to the farmers they could satisfy themselves as to the quality and perhaps the quantity of wheat they required. The quality is an exceedingly important question, and even if you placed the money in that way the tendency no doubt would be in some districts to sow wheat that is perhaps not suitable to procure a good crop under all conditions. As has been said here to-day in certain seasons we can sow wheat that is not up to the standard; that is when we have warm moist springs that wheat will germinate and produce a crop, but if we have a dry season it is not likely to. I agree with the gentleman who said that the wheat should be properly tested and given to the farmers rather than that the money should be given to the farmers. I think if the money were given the temptation would be for many farmers and many who are not farmers to buy more wheat than they required, and no doubt many would get wheat not up to the standard. Whilst the farmers of Manitoba will not benefit from this action, still I am in sympathy with the movement. I am sorry the gentleman who introduced the motion did not give us sufficient data to properly judge of the matter. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) is surely not tired of speaking in this House; we hardly ever hear him, and he is an old parliamentarian. This is an important question and he should have had better data to put before this House to-day; if he had not some members from that western country whose constituencies are affected, should have had better data to put before us, in order that we might know to what extent this demand is being made upon parliament. I have not heard that any one member has had any demand from his constituents that seed grain should be supplied to the farmers. However, the tendency is for all of us to speak well of our own country a very laudable thing. I may be permitted to repeat that Manitoba needs none of that help. I do not know why Manitoba has got off so well. A gentleman speaking on the other side of the House the other day said that Providence had nothing to do with these matters and perhaps, after all, Providence has had something to do with it and the Northwest is now getting some of the condemnation and this government is getting some of the condemnation that it deserves for the legislation they passed for that country three years ago. I am pleased to say that the only part of that territory which has not received that condemnation is that part represented by my hon. friend from Southern Alberta, whose district has escaped the frost, and who opposed the legislation referred to, so I cannot help thinking that, after all, perhaps Providence has had something to do with this.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) does not represent all the southern part of Alberta; I have the honour to represent many hundreds of thousands of square miles in that province myself.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You are all right too.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no frozen wheat in your district?

Mr. KNOWLES. In that part of my district which is in Alberta, they grow excellent wheat and oats and there is no frozen wheat that I ever heard of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Tories are frozen there.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, that frost occurred about the time the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was making his tour of the west.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. There was a frost about two weeks before we arrived, but from our advent in Manitoba on the 16th of December, until we left the west, there was never a sign of frost nor even a drop of rain; there was brilliant sunshine throughout the whole time.

Mr. KNOWLES. I withdraw my statement; I got the two frosts mixed up, the political and the weather.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Members of the government were there a few days before.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of the Interior was there two weeks before we were, and the hon. member accompanied him in his trip to the frozen district.

Mr. KNOWLES. I might take the same exception to that statement as the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) took to mine, that it is not in accordance with facts, although it is said in good humour and is not of importance. The Minister of the Interior and myself went through a portion of my constituency which is 350 by 204 miles in extent, and there was very little frost in the districts which we traversed. In fact the Moosejaw and Swift Current and Maple Creek districts escaped the frost generally speaking and had excellent crops.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You could not have gone very far into Northern Alberta.

Mr. KNOWLES. We went far enough to find that no harm, but rather good, had been done to us by the trip of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was two weeks later.

Mr. KNOWLES. Since that has been brought up, the Minister of the Interior and myself were on different occasions in the same towns as the leader of the opposition. We went to hear him and heard the statements he made 'while in the west.'

Mr. J. D. REID. And did not dispute them, said they were correct.

Mr. KNOWLES. If the Minister of the Interior said they were correct he certainly made a statement in which I could not agree.

Mr. J. D. REID. He did not deny them when the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked any gentleman in the audience to deny them.

Mr. KNOWLES. That would have kept him too busy. I was going to reply to the suggestion of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) whose plan was that the money should be given to the grain buyers and they should handle this matter in a commercial way arguing that the grain buyers were men of such probity and commercial honesty that no man should take exception to their being entrusted with this great sum of money—because it will be a vast sum that will relieve the condition of affairs which has been brought to the attention of the House this afternoon. With all respect to the hon. members I think that is a suggestion which should not be entertained. The farmers have not that confidence in the grain buyers which my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) indicates. My hon. friend states that for thirty years he has been supplying people in his county with seed grain. We must remember that the grain buyers are not members of parliament, they are not in politics, they are not living in that intimate and friendly relationship which exists between a member and his constituents, and without saying anything abusive of grain buyers I might say there is the very gravest and most serious suspicion in the minds of many of the farmers with regard to the commercial honesty of the grain buyers. So I would raise my voice in protest against this proposal. The trouble will be to find a feasible, practicable and economical way of dealing with the very serious condition of affairs of which we have spoken this afternoon. One great point of difficulty will be to tell just how we are going to draw the line. I think it would be easy to say that the homesteader, being in a sense a ward of the government, having been encouraged by the government to come there, being on land which still belongs to the Dominion should receive encouragement and assistance from the government without question, and that such aid should be administered by the Dominion government. But what are you to do in such a case as that mentioned by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) who tells of a constituent of his with three quarter-sections of land, 480 acres, worth $25 an acre, figuring to a very large sum, $12,000, who cannot secure enough money from the financial institutions to go into the market to buy grain. The fault there seems to lie with the financial institutions. The problem is largely a financial one, how to finance the great industry of that country. It is a problem in which the Minister of Finance might help us by taking into consideration whether it would not be possible in some way to have control, by commission or otherwise, over the financial institutions, so that they shall not pursue the course they pursued last year. I know that banking is an intricate science, and I hesitate to make any charges against them, but two years ago, the banks were literally inviting people to go to them and take money and leave their notes. But recently, just as suddenly as you could right about turn, if the notes were not paid at maturity—and they were drawn by the banks on short terms—the banks took the position that the farmer must first of all make payment of these notes, instead of continuing their former policy of allowing the loan to be continued in accordance with the understanding when the notes were made. They say the farmers must immediately meet the obligations. During the last few years, the banks were dotting the prairies with their branches. They went to almost every town ; when there were one or two elevators there they established their branches opposite to them, and would invite people to come and borrow money as well as to make their deposits; but they no longer do that, they took advantage of the confidence that the people had placed in them, they took advantage of the readiness of the people to do business with them, according to their invitation, and have got them into that position to-day where they can dictate what terms they like. I believe that the Bank of Commerce—and I do not wish to say anything against any bank, if anything my desire would be to be friendly to this bank—declared a dividend at their annual meeting of some seventeen and a half per cent on a capital of——

Mr. SPROULE. That was their net earnings.

Mr. KNOWLES. I did not understand it that way, I thought it was their dividend. In any event a bank which effects net earnings of 17½ per cent is surely doing an extremely profitable business and should be slow to unduly press the farmer. Anyway there is very little question that the banks are in very intimate association with these very grain buyers to whom my hon. friend from Leeds has referred, and the influence that has been brought to bear on the banks is not in the interest of the farmers but of the grain exchange, the railway companies, and similar highly financed concerns. It has been suggested that the money should be advanced to the homesteader. That gives an illustration of the many difficulties which this case presents. Are all homesteaders in such a relationship towards our country that they are sure, after receiving that money, to stay in the country ? I am not saying that in my riding there is a man who would do what is not right, but there are a great many homesteaders, say in Alberta who might take that money and not spend it for the purpose for which it was given by the Dominion government. Then would they be always sure to procure a perfect kind of grain when buying on the open market, perhaps from a friend or under pressure or in connection with a deal, because there is nearly always a deal out there when anything is purchased. Is there not a chance that they would thus procure wheat, and especially oats, of inferior quality ? Where will you draw the line ? Will you give assistance to the man with a farm worth $12,000 ? Will you appropriate out of the Dominion treasury money that belongs equally to the fishermen in Nova Scotia, the lumberman in British Columbia, the miner and agriculturist in Ontario, and every other province, money which belongs to many poor struggling people. Is it right that a man worth $12,000 should have money given to him that he may go out and buy wheat when that money belongs not to him or to the province of Manitoba, but to the Dominion of Canada ? Again there are no men in my county worth $12,000 who would want to borrow money, they would get along themselves. Is it reasonable to expect the hard-working people of the other provinces to finance men who are worth $12,000? Surely we can find some other egress from the difficulty than that. The railways have every motive to assist. I am sorry to say that a great deal of the good wheat has left the country, many of the good oats have come east. It may be possible to draw some of them west again, a most inconvenient and costly way of doing business. Might not the request be made by the railways of the government to contribute towards the relief of the situation by free freight on such grain, in placing at the railway station, free of freight charges, the grain necessary for seed? It must be remembered that the railways have every reason to assist in relieving this situation, as it is as much to their interest as to the interest of the government or the country at large.

Mr. TAYLOR. So it is to the grain buyers.

Mr. KNOWLES. That would mean that the interests of the grain buyers and the settlers are identical. I repeat that it may perhaps not be in order to discuss that as it would come up more regularly in discussing the report of the Royal Grain Commission ; but I think their interests instead of being identical are diametrically opposed. Thus I say, representing as I do, a very large wheat growing district, some very few parts of which may need aid, I see the vastness of the problem and the many millions required. While I am alive to these difficulties I am heartily in sympathy with the spirit of the proposition to grant assistance.

I understand the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) to say that it should not be administered through the provincial governments and if I heard my hon. friend from Macdonald aright (Mr. Staples) he was of the opinion that it should be done through the provincial governments.

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said that the money should be supplied by the Dominion government.

Mr. KNOWLES. Exactly. I think the hon. member expressed his view as being against the administration of this matter by the provincial government.

Mr. LAKE. I did not express any opinion on the subject.

Mr. KNOWLES. Very good. I understood the hon. gentleman otherwise. In any event with regard to the dealing with the homesteader, who, I think, is the ward of the government, whose necessities are the most pressing. I am convinced that aid should be given, and if assistance can be given to those having title to their farms, I think this should be done through the provincial governments. I believe, in any event, I could in that respect agree with my hon. friend for Qu'Appelle if he had expressed the same opinion as my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples).

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would have preferred had some less public means been adopted to afford the relief that members from the west state it is necessary to be afforded to certain numbers of people in the west who are troubled by lack of good grain for seed than to have it discussed in the Dominion parliament. While it will draw the attention of the government to the matter, it will also attract the attention of a great many people not only in our own country but beyond the confines of Canada and possibly serious injury may be done from an immigration point of view. Sometimes speeches of this character which have been made by certain hon. gentleman in this House, have been utilized in the immigration literature of the United States very much to our own detriment and for that reason I would have preferred had some less conspicuous measure been used for the purpose of securing relief, possibly by quiet negotiations between the officials of this government and the provincial governments in order that money for seed grain might be provided for settlers who are in need of it. I do not think that this is the time or the place to enter into a discussion about banks or to enter into a tirade against the grain men. Some hon. gentlemen opposite, the other day, expressed their sentiments in a rather contrary manner to that which is expressed here to-day. They referred to the Canadian banks as the bulwarks of our country which have prevented the financial stringency from bearing as heavily on us as on the country to the south, owing to the superiority of our methods of banking. However this is not an occasion to criticise the banks for any remissness in regard to this financial stringency nor is it the occasion for adverse criticism of the grain men of Canada. I think it was a serious reflection on my hon. friend's colleague from Portage la Prairie, who was engaged for many years in the purchase of grain, to refer to them in such uncomplimentary terms. My hon. friend (Mr. Knowles) seemed to think that the tour of the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to the west had not caused much trouble to the Liberals ; but I notice that as soon as the leader of the opposition arrived in the east a great cry went up from the western members of the Liberal party that the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) accompanied by his colleagues, must next year make a tour of the west to counteract the effect of the tour of the leader of the opposition. Speaking as my colleagues have spoken, of my own province, I am pleased to say is in a very favourable position so far as last years' crop has been concerned. Southern Manitoba, as one of my colleagues has rightly said, has had a splendid crop this year, although the quantity has not been as great as we have known in some years. But so far as quality and prices are concerned, it has been very remunerative to the majority of the farmers. The part of the province of Manitoba that has suffered the most has been the northwest part. In fact, one locality in my own constituency has, I think, been as hard hit as any other portion of the province. I heard the local representative of that district state in a speech in the local legislature last week that the farmers there were so hard hit that some of them would have to import their seed grain. But that did not necessarily mean that they were not in a position to purchase their seed grain. On the contrary, I think that nearly all the farmers in that constituency who were hardest hit by the frost are in a position to purchase their seed grain, although a considerable number of foreigners are located in that constituency, people who would probably be not in as good condition to purchase seed grain as many of the other settlers. In the province of Manitoba there is no great outcry on this subject. I have not received a single appeal or letter urging the question to be brought up in this House. Still I do not wish to take a merely provincial view of the matter. I wish to consider the interest of the other provinces where the people have been less fortunate. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) has been on a visit to Winnipeg where certain of his friends whom he met brought this matter to his attention. He was not among the farmers who could have spoken authoritatively on the subject. I am going to give the hon. member credit of being animated by the most philanthropic motives in bringing this matter up. It may be, however, that some of his advisers were not animated solely by motives of that character, because we are led by past experience to believe that if seed grain is distributed according to certain methods, through immigration agents for instance, it may be used not only for relieving the distress of the farmers, but also as a political lever in the next general election. If my information is correct, another member who has recently being touring his constituency, the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), has made pledges to the farmers there that he was going to secure for them seed grain. Whether or not he had authority from the government to make that pledge I am unaware. At any rate, some of his friends are making that a lever to advance his political interests, and I can see how the distribution of seed grain would be open to this objection if it were done by certain methods. I understand that in the province of Manitoba the municipalities have authority to sell seed grain and to take a lien on the first crop as security for payment. It is true there are many localities in the Northwest which are not formed into municipalities and they have not this advantage. But wherever it can be done, I think the distribution should be done through the municipal authorities, as they are in the best position to judge to whom the grain should be distributed. It would prevent the government being imposed upon by those who are well able to purchase their own seed grain, and it would avoid the distribution being used to the advantage of either political party. I think the government would be in a better position to furnish the seed grain than to allow individuals to purchase it indiscriminately wherever they pleased, and it cannot be too strongly impressed upon those supplying it that all kinds of seed grain should be thoroughly tested. It is known that grain, though frosted, will germinate; still the risk is too serious to sow inferior grain. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat objects to money being granted instead of grain, because the people might use it for other purposes than the purchase of seed grain. I agree with him that it is open to that objection unless it is hedged around with certain safeguards, such as requiring from the recipient a certificate that seed grain has been purchased to represent the amount of money received. I might also point out that the other system is also open to objection. I understand that in some instances seed grain that has been given in the past has actually been sold by unscrupulous farmers who wanted money more than the grain. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) has suggested the possibility, in the event of money being granted, of it being given to a man who might be worth $10,000 or $12,000. There is no necessity of giving such a man either money or seed grain, as he is in a position to buy his own seed grain, and the authorities who have the distribution in hand should see that no man who is rated as worth $10,000 or $12,000 should be given seed grain. I am very glad that the question, having been brought up, has been discussed with such moderation, and I trust that whatever grain may be distributed may be given to parties who are really in need of it. So far as my own province is concerned, I am glad to say that no great quantity is required, although I do see that the distribution may be made so as to be of advantage to the country at large.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY (Calgary). Mr. Speaker, I had not the privilege of listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) this afternoon. I was not aware that this question was coming up, as there is no notice of it on the Order Paper or that any demand had come from the west for seed grain. However, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches which have been made by various hon. members from western constituencies. I agree with them that this is a very important question. Any question which can induce the hon. member for Brandon to spend an hour a month with us in this House must be an important question. However, I find myself in very much the same position as the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner). I have heard of no demand for seed grain from the section of country which I have the honour to represent and I think it is to be regretted that this question has been brought up in the House with so little information before the House upon it. Surely there has been ample time for the government to have made a thorough investigation in the different localities and to have ascertained what localities required assistance of this kind. This matter was brought up in this House on Dec. 16 by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in a question put to the Minister of the Interior, and he was informed that the government had taken this matter up with the government of the province of Saskatchewan. I think it is the duty of the government, in view of what has transpired through the press and in view of the correspondence they have received, to make a full investigation in order to ascertain in what localities in the Northwest there is need for seed grain. For my part I have received no information from Southern Alberta to lead me to believe that the crop in that district has been a failure, and I have received no demand for seed grain from the constituency of Calgary. In answer to the hon. member for West Assiniboia, who has seen fit to introduce into this discussion something entirely foreign to it, I wish to assure him that he need not worry about the success of the tour of the hon. leader of the opposition in the west. I would recommend him to wait until the harvest comes, and then it will be time enough for him to make his boastful remarks.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would recommend my hon. friend to wait until our hon. leader visits the west next summer and then we will show him what a reception to a leader is.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The hon. member introduced this question in the discussion, and if it is worrying him it is not worrying us. He had better wait till after the results are seen, and then he may criticise the results. The leader of the opposition had no sooner left the boundaries of Alberta than Liberal candidates were placed in every constituency, and a canvass was entered upon all over the constituencies by Liberal speakers brought in from the outside. He suggests also that difficulties may arise in the administration of the scheme which has been suggested by the hon. member for Brandon. I think he had better consult his own friends, who were in power between 1874 and 1878 and learn how they handled the soup kitchens in those days. I would suggest that in the administration of this scheme there should be absolutely no discrimination. You ought not to discriminate between the man who has only just got his homestead, and the man who has only served one or two years for his patent. It is a well known fact that the nearer a man is to getting his patent, the greater are his borrowing powers. I would object therefore to the proposal to furnish seed grain to a man because he has been there for one or two years, and refuse it to a man who has been there longer, but who has had some opportunity of fortifying himself against the occurrence of this misfortune, if any. The test should be, does he need it, the date of his arrival there is immaterial.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Everybody regrets that there should be any occasion for such a discussion as this in the House, but since the occasion exists, it is perhaps just as well that we should meet it and discuss it fully. Everybody will agree that it is of the highest importance that every acre of land that can be seeded in the Northwest next year, should be seeded. The year has not been altogether favourable, and it will be doubly unfortunate if, for lack of good seed, there should be a partial failure during the coming year. This matter has been receiving the attention of the government for some time. It is well known that ever since last spring there was a prospect of a failure in certain parts of the west, and the possibilities were exploited in the newspapers of this and other countries to an unfortunate extent. But though the spring was late, the season progressed favourably, and up to a certain point there was an appearance—I say it advisedly—of the best crop that was ever harvested in that western country. But unfortunately the result did not justify the hopes that had been inspired by the favourable appearance, and owing to unexpected changes in the climatic conditions, there has been a partial failure. I spent a considerable part of the summer in the west, and believe, I am fairly familiar with the circumstances. It has been said by some hon. members that so far as Manitoba is concerned there is no need of any assistance, although there may be small areas or individual cases where there has been a loss of crop. There is no doubt that the provincial government, with the aid of its municipal institutions, is amply able to cope with any difficulty of that kind. I have no doubt that the government of Manitoba, and the members of parliament in this House who represent Manitoba, would much prefer under these circumstances that the province should deal with the conditions as they exist within its boundary. But in the province of Saskatchewan, a small area has been perhaps the most unfortunate of any part of the west. In the eastern part of Saskatchewan considerable damage has been done, there was a considerable loss of crop, and consequently there is a considerable need of assistance or of some measures being taken by the proper authorities to ensure that the land may all be seeded next year. In southern Alberta the crop of last year was all that could be reasonably expected or desired. In Northern Alberta there was damage done somewhat to the same extent as in the eastern part of Saskatchewan. Therefore we have to deal with the circumstances in eastern Saskatchewan particularly and in northern Alberta. The remainder of the country has yielded a fairly good crop, and with the enhanced prices is I think in a fairly good financial condition, possibly as good as it was last year. The returns of the crops grown show that while there is not as large a yield as last year, the prices received give an equal value with the crop of last year. That would indicate that if there was as much money received for the crop this last season as the season before there would be no special conditions to be dealt with on that ground. But unfortunately the lightning struck in certain places. In some places there is a total destruction, and in other places there is a serious partial destruction, and in still other places the crop is either normal or above normal. It is, as we say, 'patchy;' and while on the whole, the crop return was not discouraging, in individual cases and by districts there are conditions which require to be met. The man who has reaped a good crop does not give of his abundance to his needy neighbour, or the fortunate district to the neighbouring district where there is a lack. It is the business either of the individuals who are injured to care for themselves, or of the authority which represents them either municipal, provincial or federal to care for themselves. It is much to be desired that Saskatchewan and Alberta should be able to deal with the situation as well as Manitoba is. If these two provinces could deal with the question provincially, it would be very much better than that the Dominion should deal with it. But in Saskatchewan there are two serious differences from the conditions that prevail in Manitoba. There is a much greater area of damage to be provided for, and at the same time there is no municipal organization to deal with the question. I think in the whole province of Saskatchewan there is only one, or possibly two, organized rural municipalities, the remainder of the country is organized into what is called local improvement districts, where taxes are levied for the purpose of improvement of roads, and for that purpose only. There is no such organization as pertains to a municipality that could undertake to raise money to provide for the purchase of grain and its distribution to those needing it. The same remark applies to Alberta, except that in Alberta I think there is no rural municipality at all. But in Alberta the damage has not been nearly so great. While this government has taken cognizance of the conditions, it was desirable in the first place to show that it was not the wish or the will of the provinces to deal with the matter as a provincial question. Everybody will agree that if that could be done, it would be very much better. Therefore we have discussed this matter with the provincial governments and I may say that up to this moment we have not arrived at a definite conclusion as to the measure of responsibility to be assumed respectively by the provinces and by the Dominion. Whether the responsibility should be apportioned in lesser or greater degree in any case, there will have to be co-operation between the Dominion government and the provincial government. As a result of negotiations that have been in progress for some time, the representative of the provincial government of Saskatchewan will be in Ottawa within a day or two, and the matter will be discussed, and, I hope, a conclusion will be reached.

In the case of Alberta, we are dealing with the government, and there is a possibility that, owing to the lesser area of damage and the lesser degree of damage, there may be a different arrangement arrived at than that made in the case of the province of Saskatchewan. But, while we are discussing with the provincial government the arrangement as to responsibility, we have been taking cognizance of the conditions in other ways. The commissioner of immigration has been in the west for some time with a view to inquiring on the ground into the conditions and familiarizing himself with the best means of meeting the conditions as he finds them. As has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) the seed testing branch of the Department of Agriculture has had this matter under consideration since harvest and has made a very large number of tests of grain. The results are available for use, in fact, they are published in the press, and they give, at any rate, a foundation of information that, I am sorry to say, in other respects, up to the present time, is, to a great extent, lacking. That is to say, we receive abundance of suggestion and advice, but very little accurate information; and it is information that we find most necessary and are most anxious to receive. However, the information is in process of being gathered; the arrangements with the provinces are being made; the railway companies are being communicated with, with a view to securing their best assistance in meeting the difficulty; and we hope that in due time, measures will be taken to that end.

One of the speakers on the other side of the House has suggested that there is a possibility of political advantage in the handling of this question. So far as my knowledge of the matter has gone, I am afraid that the political advantage is all with our friends on the other side. The question is so intricate and difficult, there is such a demand for satisfying everybody and such an almost absolute assurance of pleasing nobody, that, aside altogether from the fact that conditions are in themselves unfortunate, I look upon the necessity for action as being politically unfortunate as well. However, the government exists to govern and to meet conditions as they arise according to ability and judgment. We hope, measurably at any rate, to meet the conditions which exist. And we hope, after all, to get fair criticism from our friends on the other side for our efforts in meeting these conditions. I do not think our friends opposite are as biassed politically as they sometimes lead the House to suppose. I hope that, if we deal with this matter according to the circumstances and possibilities, we shall receive credit for having done so. If we can measurably meet the conditions with a measurable degree of satisfaction, I think we shall be doing, very, very well.

In regard to the financial and other questions that have been raised, I do not know that it is necessary that I should go into that side of the question particularly. But in connection with the supply of seed oats, the question is very different from that connected with the supply of seed wheat. Although there is a possibility of wheat which appears good not being good for seed, that is rather an extraordinary condition; and, in view of the very fine weather which prevailed during last fall, is not a condition we are likely to find difficulty with in the case of securing seed for the coming year. Therefore, so far as the wheat question is concerned, it is very largely a matter of finance and of detail.

But, in regard to the oats, it is quite a different affair. In the first place, the oat crop, although it was to a great extent damaged for seed purposes, was not damaged so seriously as a marketable commodity,—that is to say that there are thousands of acres that produced oats that were marketed at fair prices without there being a bushel of oats on all those thousands of acres fit for seed. But, of course, the farmers who grew the oats received the price of those oats, and are, or ought to be, in a position to procure seed in the place of what they sold, provided they can find the seed. In regard to oats, it is not so much a question of finance as it is a question of seed-testing and of securing the seed that will grow and placing it where it is required. In many cases where oats are required, the people who need the oats are able to buy them ; but in very few cases where seed wheat is required will the person who requires it be able to pay for it. It has been said that the man living on land which he owned, or to which he had a title, or which he had purchased, should be, or was necessarily, in a financial position to buy his own seed. Unfortunately, there has been a great deal of exchange of land in the west during the last two years. The rise in values has caused a great many purchases and changes of ownership to take place; and the man who has bought an improved farm, in many cases has bought it on time payments against which there stands a mortgage for perhaps almost the full value of the farm ; that man is in very little better position to pay for his seed grain than is the man on a homestead who has not the title to his land. Still, it is in the public interest, it is in the interest of every part of the Dominion, it is in the interest of every financial institution, of every commercial organization and every industrial enterprise in Canada—particularly in eastern Canada—that every acre of that western country that can be put in seed next year shall be put in seed. The welfare of these financial, commercial and industrial enterprises of this eastern Canada depends in very marked degree upon the continued increase in production of the western country. A falling off in production there would certainly be felt throughout this country very seriously. Therefore, without questioning who should do this or how it should be done—that is, without questioning too much who should do this or how it should be done—all I would ask the House to accept is that the government is aware of the conditions, that it is taking means to apportion the responsibility and to provide organization to deal with the case, and that it is to the interest of every part of the Dominion that that responsibility should be adequately met or as adequately met as possible. At the same time I ask the House to consider also the difficulties of the situation, the absolute impossibility of satisfactorily carrying out such an enterprise. I ask them to remember that it is a stupendous enterprise and I ask fair consideration in carrying it out.

I might say that this is not by any means the first occasion of such a difficulty as we are now confronted with. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) mentioned that thirty years ago there was a necessity for the supply of seed grain. That same necessity has arisen from time to time since in certain years and certain localities so that there is nothing new in the principle; but what is new is that since the last occasion when it was necessary to furnish seed grain, cultivation, production and settlement have extended so far and wide over that country that now, although the conditions are no worse proportionately than they were on previous occasions, yet owing to the expansion of the country and the extension of settlement, what was a moderate task on previous occasions is a colossal task to-day. I do not wish the House to think that there is any desire on the part of the government not to give its full confidence to the House in this connection, but I think I may trust to the members of the House to believe that while negotiations are in progress and matters are still in what I might call a formative condition, it is not desirable that the question should be gone into in too great detail.

Mr. STAPLES. Has there been any application from the farming community of the province of Manitoba for seed grain?

Mr. OLIVER. Not that has come to me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has made a very fair statement of the case, and I am sure that every member in the House would be impressed with the very great importance of having no part of the western country which is fit for seeding lie barren next year for want of a supply of proper seed. I agree entirely with what he has said as to that. There is one aspect of the case which has not been very much emphasized and which I would like to mention lest it should be forgotten, that is that the conditions which have brought about this difficulty in the western country have been of a very exceptional nature and we believe that they are not likely to occur again in the near future. There was a very late spring and a very early and severe frost. While we have had occasions like this in the past it is gratifying to know that as the years have rolled on these occasions have become less and less frequent and perhaps we may enjoy the expectation that that infrequency may become more and more marked. I entirely agree in what has been said as to the principle on which this relief should be afforded. It should not be given, and it is not asked as a matter of charity; it is asked as a matter of necessary aid, under exceptional conditions. I was impressed as one gentleman opposite was impressed with the absolute necessity that the aid which may be given shall be given in an effective way so that there may be an assurance that the seed which shall be supplied in necessary cases shall be proper seed which the farmers can receive with a full assurance that it will be suitable for producing a crop next year.

I am glad to hear from the minister the assurance that there is not in the minds of the government any desire or intention whatever to make the occasion of any distribution of seed or assistance subserve party purposes. I would only like to say in conclusion that it had occurred to me before the Minister of the Interior spoke that possibly the aid which has been given by the government to certain banks, under circumstances the details of which we have not had up to the present time, but which we are to have later on, might have been made available for that class of farmers who have been mentioned in this debate, to whom that aid would be useful; I mean those who are in a position to buy the seed where the seed is available or can be made available. The Minister of the Interior did not allude to that aid in any way so that we are still somewhat in ignorance as to whether or not it is of a character which can be made useful for that purpose. We all recognize that the conditions must create two classes of farmers, a class who, owing to good crops in the past, are able notwithstanding the partial failure of this year's crops to provide themselves with seed for next year if it can be purchased, and secondly a class who have gone into the country in recent years and who have not yet obtained that status which would enable them to buy it, particularly in view of the money stringency which would prevent them from obtaining money although they might have obtained it in other years and under other circumstances.

So far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we would desire to cooperate with the government in furnishing, under any reasonable conditions, such aid as under a fair review of the circumstances may be found necessary to provide seed for next year's sowing.

Motion (Mr. Sifton) to adjourn, negatived.

PRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS IN COMMITTEES.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom in the Public Accounts Committee for original papers to be produced and left with the clerk of the committee. Yesterday certain papers were produced by the Department of Public Works and the gentleman who brought them over told me that he had instructions from the minister to take them back immediately after the committee rose. I appeal to the government and ask them if this is to be the practice in that committee? Surely it cannot be said that where one is to examine witnesses as to the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars, the papers will be placed in his hands at the moment the meeting commences and he must then proceed to conduct the investigation. Such a condition will not permit any examination of either witnesses or papers. The practice has been, so far as I can remember, and certainly of late years, to leave all the documents there in the hands of the clerk. Members can then examine them, if necessary under his eye. Saturday is a day of which we like to take advantage to look over the papers, and if this practice is to be insisted on, it would result in any member who wishes to examine a witness being obliged to ask for a postponement in order to review the papers and then to recall the witnesses on a future day. In this case a gentleman is to be examined on Wednesday in connection with some hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of dredging. The motion is one of my own, and if on Wednesday next I am handed the papers, I will have to say I shall consume my hour in looking over the papers and ask the witness to come back another day. I ask the government what is to be the policy in that regard?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My attention has not been called to this matter; the Minister of Public Works is not in his seat, but I shall confer with him and let the hon. gentleman have his answer tomorrow.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

THE FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TREATY.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding for the first reading of Bill No. 57 respecting a certain convention between His Majesty and the President of the French republic.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Mr. Speaker, I know that it is not customary on the motion of the first reading of a Bill to discuss the merits of the Bill, but in view of an understanding that was arrived at the other day between members of the opposition and members on this side of the House, the discussion may take place in this case on the first reading of the Bill, and especially in view of a resolution which was presented the other day and which was passed on the understanding that the discussion should take place on the first or second reading of the Bill. In the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) I notice that there is one point upon which there is no difference of opinion between both sides of the House, namely, that it was absolutely necessary for us to negotiate a treaty with France, or at all events, it was advisable that such a treaty should be made. The production of Canada has been increasing so largely within the last few years that it becomes absolutely necessary that we should provide for the extension of our trade by creating new markets. It becomes then a matter of necessity for us not only to look to the markets which exist to-day, but to provide for the opening of new markets and the creation of new avenues of trade in order that our surplus production may be exported to different countries.

I may say in regard to that, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of creating new markets has been adopted by all the countries of the world. Take, for example, Germany ; at one time Germany looked only to her own market for the consumption of her products, but now the policy, well established, of the great German empire is to find, in different parts of the world, new markets for the consumption of her products. We know very well that Great Britain, by her energy and by her shipping especially, has established business connections throughout the whole world and that France, which was at one time a very pronounced protectionist country, is now looking for new markets and I may say that the masters of thought on economical questions are advising France strongly not only to look to her own markets but to make extensions elsewhere. The United States, also, is doing the same thing, is not only looking to her own market, but is creating new markets by extending her territory in different parts of the world. The policy of endeavouring to create new avenues of trade was certainly a policy which Canada could very well pursue and that is one of the reasons which induced this government last year to bring in a tariff in which an intermediate column was mentioned, the object being to to enable us to open negotiations with different countries. We could, at the beginning, have extended this intermediate tariff to some low tariff countries, like Belgium or Holland, but we found it would be absolutely impossible to do so on account of the treaty of 1893 with France. There is a clause in the treaty of 1893—clause 2—which provides that any commercial advantage granted by Canada to any third power, especially in tariff matters, should be enjoyed by France, Algeria and the French colonies. A condition was put in the treaty of 1893 providing that any advantage that we should give to any foreign country should also be given to France. I may say, although I will discuss this question later on, that no reciprocity was provided in the case of negotiations by France with other foreign powers. On the one side we had a provision that Canada was obliged to give to France all the advantages that could be given to any foreign country, but it was not provided at the same time in this treaty that France would be obliged to give Canada the same treatment that would be given to foreign countries. There was this inequality of treatment in so far as the most favoured nation clause was concerned. It was a situation most unfair to Canada because it prevented Canada entering into negotiations with any foreign country and it put us under the necessity of negotiating a new treaty with France or of cancelling or denouncing the treaty of 1893. Was it possible, under the circumstances, to denounce that treaty ? Would it have been advisable to do it? Every hon. member of this House knows that the denunciation of a treaty always creates friction, and that it would certainly have brought about friction not only between Canada and France but it would probably have brought about friction also between Great Britain and France. In view of the good relations which exist to-day between France and Great Britain, in view of the entente cordiale which was established some years ago between the president of France and our King, I say it would have been a most serious thing for Canada to have taken the step of denouncing that treaty because it would probably have contributed to a certain extent to preventing the good relations which to-day exist between Great Britain and Canada. Then, for the general reasons which I have just given and for the special reason of the treaty which existed between France and Canada, it became absolutely necessary for this government, if we wanted to do something with the intermediate tariff, to enter into negotiations with France for the arrangement of a treaty. That is the policy which was decided upon by the government and I am glad to see, by the remarks which have fallen from the lips of the hon. member for North Toronto in the speech which he made on this question, that the negotiations which have been carried on must be considered as being acceptable since, although the treaty has been in his hands for nearly two months, he has not felt justified in saying that the treaty should not be approved by the members of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the first questions that I would like to discuss before this House is the question which was raised by the hon. member for North Toronto concerning the part which Canada played in the negotiations of the treaty which was made in 1907. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has stated that the negotiations with respect to this treaty were carried on in the same way as the negotiations in relation to former treaties, but I am obliged to dissent from that view and I am pleased to be able to assert here that contrary to the precedent established in former negotiations, the representatives of the Canadian government were empowered to negotiate the present treaty without the interference of any one. It is the first time that such a thing has happened, and I am glad to say that the government of Great Britain on this occasion assented to that policy. There are some old treaties affecting Canada which are extant to-day and in which the most favoured nation treatment clause is embodied. I call them old treaties, indeed I find there was a treaty negotiated between Denmark and Great Britain in A.D. 1670 under which Great Britain agreed that the most favoured nation clause should apply not only to Great Britain but to all her possessions. There are altogether thirteen of these treaties and the last to be negotiated containing that clause was the treaty with Austria of 1876, which was a renewal of a treaty originally made many years before. There were other treaties made before 1876 providing that the most favoured nation treatment should apply not only with regard to foreign powers but also to Great Britain. These treaties are well known, they have been several times discussed in this parliament. In 1892 and 1893 we petitioned the British government to denounce the Belgian and German treaties which were in this category. These treaties were denounced, and the only treaties outstanding to-day in which the most favoured nation treatment is incorporated are the treaties entered into between the year 1670 and 1876. We are therefore pretty safe in describing these as old treaties. Since 1876 what has been the history of the negotiation of commercial treaties affecting the Dominion of Canada? Some have been negotiated by British ambassadors and some by British plenipotentiaries and representatives of Canada conjointly. In this latter class I might mention the Washington treaty of 1871, the negotiations with France in 1880 and 1882, the negotiations with the United States in 1887 and 1892, and the negotiations again with France in 1893. Now, let us inquire into the question, whether it is of importance that our commercial treaties should be negotiated exclusively by representatives of Canada. On a question of such moment I would be timorous to express my own personal view, and had I not the lessons of history before me I would hesitate to express as strong views in that regard as have been expressed by Canadian statesmen who in former years, have been engaged in these negotiations. In the light of the negotiations in respect of the Washington treaty of 1871, and of the Behring Sea treaty, and of the negotiations with regard to the Alaskan boundary, we have, I think, very good ground for claiming that the negotiation of Canadian commercial treaties should be conducted exclusively by Canadians. Canada enjoys to-day complete fiscal autonomy; we have the right to legislate to impose any tariff we like; we have the right to place whatever duties it may please us, on goods imported into Canada. Is it not advisable then that our commercial treaties should be entirely under the control, so far as negotiations are concerned, of the representatives of Canada? I have said that had I only my own opinion in support of that assertion it might perhaps not carry much weight, but I have before me the words of a man whose opinion will certainly carry great weight with gentlemen on the other side of the House. I refer to Sir John A. Macdonald who was one of the plenipotentiaries in the negotiation of the Washington treaty in 1871. Sir John Macdonald had associated with him on that occasion certain representatives of Great Britain and if we are to judge by the letters of Sir John Macdonald which are published in Pope's life of that statesman, then we may safely conclude that it is of the utmost importance that such negotiations should be carried on by Canadian representatives alone. At page 44, volume 2 (Pope's life of Sir John A. Macdonald) there is a letter written by Sir John Macdonald to Doctor Tupper, now Sir Charles Tupper, on the 29th of March, 1871, from which I quote:

> You may imagine that my position was exceedingly embarrassing. In our separate caucuses my colleagues were continually pressing me to yield; in fact I had no backers, and I was obliged to stand out and I am afraid, to make myself extremely disagreeable to them.

Writing to Sir Charles Tupper a few days later, Sir John Macdonald said (Pope's life of Sir John Macdonald, page 96):

> The British commissioners had a meeting after the adjournment and I find they were in favour of conceding the fisheries for ten years with two years notice, that is to say for twelve years certainly, in exchange for coal, salt, fish and lumber.

Another opinion expressed by Sir John Macdonald is I think very much more serious, and it is to be found at page 105 of the work to which I refer. Sir John Macdonald says:

> I must say that I am greatly disappointed at the course taken by the British commissioners, they seem to have only one thing in their minds, that is to go home to England with a treaty in their pockets settling everything, no matter at what cost to Canada.

I think there could be no stronger language than that used by Sir John Macdonald in which he stated in this letter to Sir Charles Tupper that any negotiations concerning the commercial relations of Canada alone should be carried on exclusively by Canadian representatives. Now, Mr. Speaker, we find that in 1878 the British government was asked by the Canadian government through Sir Leonard Tilley to have Sir A. T. Galt look into negotiations with France, as the policy of the Canadian government of that day seemed to be that the negotiations should be carried on exclusively by the Canadian representative. Sir Leonard Tilley's letter to the Colonial Secretary concluded as follows:—

I have therefore the honour to request that you will move the Foreign Office to put Sir Alexander Galt through Her Majesty's ambassador in Paris in such communication with the French government as will best attain the objects of the Canadian government.

Could it be expected, Mr. Speaker, that the British government would refuse to grant this request so formally made by Sir Leonard Tilley? But we find that Lord Salisbury gave instructions to Lord Lyons, who was then British ambassador in Paris, that the negotiations between the government of this country and France should be conducted by the British Ambassador, Lord Lyons. In 1874 negotiations were carried on with the United States government by Mr. Geo. Brown associated with Sir Edward Thornton, the British ambassador at Washington, with no result. I may say that in the negotiations with France which were carried on by Lord Lyons, Sir A. T. Galt assisted the British ambassador, but unfortunately those negotiations reached no result; and if you read carefully the correspondence which was laid before parliament, you will find that the reason why they were not successful was mainly that Lord Lyons asked the French authorities to grant a reduction of duties on razors and cutlery. Was it because the French authorities expected that these articles would at some time be exported from Canada to France? Certainly not; but their fear was that such a reduction of duties would give to the Sheffield cutlers a considerable advantage, and refused to negotiate any further, and the negotiations fell through. Which shows, Mr. Speaker, that it is of the utmost importance that negotiations of this kind should always as far as possible be conducted by Canadian representatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other night asserted that the negotiations with regard to the treaty of 1893 were carried on exclusively by Sir Charles Tupper. It is true that Sir Charles Tupper so stated in a letter which he sent to the Canadian government, and which is to be found at page 47 of the documents which were laid before this House in 1893. Sir Charles Tupper, in his report to Sir John Thompson, stated:—

I cannot conclude this communication without saying that while the negotiations have been carried on entirely by myself on the part of Canada, &c.

We are obliged, of course, to a certain extent to accept that statement; but I am sorry to find that the statement of Sir Charles Tupper is not substantiated by the report made by Lord Dufferin to Sir Edward Grey, then Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, nor by the Marquis of Ripon, then Secretary of State for the Colonies. These gentlemen state in the most distinct way that the negotiations were carried on not by Sir Charles Tupper alone, but by Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Joseph Crowe, who was the Commercial Attaché of the British embassy at Paris at that time. Here is what Lord Dufferin wrote to Lord Rosebery on the 6th of February, 1893:

I think it is incumbent upon me to call your Lordship's attention to the skill displayed by Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Joseph Crowe in the long and difficult negotiations which they have carried on with the delegates of the French government.

The same statement is to be found in letters written by Sir Edward Grey on the 10th of February, 1893, to the Marquis of Ripon, and by the Marquis of Ripon on the 16th of February, 1893, to the Governor General of Canada. The letter is as follows:—

Downing Street, February 16, 1893.

My Lord,—I have the honour to transmit to you, for the information of Your Lordship's government, a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office inclosing a despatch from the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, reporting the successful termination of the negotiations with France in regard to Canadian trade and expressing his sense of the able manner in which these negotiations were conducted by Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Joseph Crowe.

Here is the statement of Sir Charles Tupper that the negotiations were carried on exclusively by himself, and on the next page the statement of three eminent gentlemen connected with the British government, that the negotiations were carried on by Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Joseph Crowe. It may be said: while these statements are evidently contradictory, where is the evidence that Sir Charles Tupper did not state what was absolutely correct? I have only to read the various letters which were sent by Sir Charles Tupper to members of the Canadian government to see that the statement which he made in his last letter is not supported by the letters which he had written previously.

Let us see what was done. Take this letter of Sir Charles Tupper of October 28, 1892.

In this letter to Sir John Abbott he says that he had an interview with Lord Dufferin and with him went fully into the question of Canada's trade relations with France. That was the result of the first day that Sir Charles Tupper passed in Paris. He called at the British embassy and met Lord Dufferin and Sir Joseph Crowe called upon Sir Charles Tupper at the Grand Union Hotel and went over the whole question with him. In his letter of 7th November, Sir Charles Tupper states that Sir Joseph Crowe called upon him that morning and they discussed fully the line to be taken in opening the negotiations, and a little before 4 o'clock they proceeded together to the Foreign Office where they were shortly afterwards joined by the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, who presented him to His Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs. Let me quote Sir Charles Tupper's words:

Sir Joseph Crowe and I were then placed in communication with Mr. Hanotaux and some others, and we discussed with them the question at issue.

Here is a formal statement by Sir Charles Tupper himself, admitting that the negotiations were carried on by Sir Joseph Crowe and himself. On the 21st January we find Sir Charles Tupper saying again:

Sir Joseph Crowe and I met the French negotiators.

On the 25th of January we find him saying:

I sent our draft of the treaty, after consulting Sir Joseph Crowe, to Mr. Hanotaux.

On the 26th of January he says:

In continuation of my letter of yesterday, I may say that Sir Joseph Crowe and I met the French negotiators at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think in view of this evidence nobody can claim that the negotiations for the treaty of 1893 were conducted exclusively by Sir Charles Tupper. We have not only this affirmation in one of his letters, but we have his affirmation in several letters, and finally we have the statement of the Marquis of Dufferin who says that the negotiations were carried on not only by Sir Charles Tupper, but also by Sir Joseph Crowe. Now, Mr. Speaker, what has become of that question since? In 1895 the Marquis of Ripon sent a despatch to the governors of the British colonies in which he stated that the commercial negotiations of this nature between His Majesty and a sovereign of a foreign state should be conducted by His Majesty's representative at the court of the foreign power. This despatch was signed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, directing that in the future as in the past the negotiations for commercial treaties should be conducted by the British ambassador.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date?

Mr. BRODEUR. June 28, 1895. Let me add that in the negotiation of the treaty of 1907 it was not thought necessary to adhere to the letter of these regulations which were laid down in the despatch of 1895, and in this case, the negotiations were left entirely to the Canadian ministers, with the understanding that if it were brought to a conclusion the British ambassador should sign the agreement jointly with the Canadian representatives. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that in view of all this evidence we find, first, that some treaties were negotiated formerly in which Canada had absolutely nothing to do; later on some treaties were negotiated by representatives of Canada with the British ambassador, and this last year for the first time in the history of Canada negotiations for a commercial treaty were carried on exclusively by Canadian representatives of this government. Canada has reached in its autonomous development a stage where the British government is generous enough to recognize that she should be entrusted entirely with negotiations for commercial treaties. It is well for me now to quote the imperial order in council which was passed on the 8th of August, 1907:

Whereas for the better treating of and arranging certain matters which are now in discussion or which may come into discussion between Us and our good friend the President of the French Republic respecting commercial relations between France and Canada, We have judged it expedient to invest fit persons with full power to conduct the said discussion on our part: Know ye therefore that we, reposing especial trust and confidence in the wisdom, loyalty, diligence and circumspection of our trusty and well beloved the Honourable William Stevens Fielding, member of the parliament of Canada, member of our Privy Council for Canada, Minister of Finance and Receiver General of the Dominion of Canada, and our trusty and well beloved the Honourable Louis Philippe Brodeur, member of our Privy Council for Canada, one of our counsel learned in the law, Minister of Marine and Fisheries of the Dominion of Canada, have named, made, constituted and appointed, as we do by these presents name, make, constitute and appoint them our undoubted commissioners, procurators and plenipotentiaries: giving to them all manner of power and authority to treat, adjust, and conclude, with such minister or ministers as may be vested with similar power and authority on the part of our good friend the President of the French Republic, any treaty, convention, or agreement that may tend to the attainment of the abovementioned end, and to sign for us, and in our name everything so agreed upon and concluded, and to do and transact all such other matters as may appertain thereto, in as ample manner and form and with equal force and efficiency as we ourselves could do if personally present: engaging and promising upon our royal word that whatever things shall be so transacted and concluded by our said commissioners, procurators and plenipotentiaries shall, subject if necessary to our ratification, be agreed to, acknowledged and accepted by us in the fullest manner, and that we will never suffer, either in the whole or in part, any person whatsoever to infringe the same, or act contrary thereto, as far as it lies in our power. In witness thereof we have caused the great seal of our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to be affixed to these presents, which we have signed with our royal hand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the date of that?

Mr. BRODEUR. 8th of August.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the negotiations begin?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the month of July.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. About two weeks before?

Mr. BRODEUR. Two weeks before, and it was understood when we began the negotions that such an order in council would be passed, and I may say that instructions to that effect had been given to the British ambassador to allow the negotiations to be carried on entirely by the Canadian representatives.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The distinction between this case and Sir Charles Tupper's case, as I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) is that Sir Joseph Crowe went with Sir Charles Tupper. Was he a plenipotentiary ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was attaché d'ambassade, and had the same powers, in the absence of the Marquis of Dufferin, as the British ambassador.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On what does the hon. gentleman depend for that statement ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It appears in the correspondence that he was attaché d'ambassade, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows that, in the absence of the ambassador, the attaché d'ambassade replaces him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But he never had power to sign the treaty ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The treaty was signed by Sir Charles Tupper and the Marquis of Dufferin, but the negotiations were carried on by the British ambassador and Sir Charles Tupper, the representative of the Canadian government. But, in the present instance, all the negotiations were carried on exclusively by the Canadian representatives, and the treaty was signed by the Canadian representatives and the British ambassador. I think this disposes of the question whether the negotiations for this treaty were or were not carried on exclusively by the Canadian representatives. I think that, as I have just said, we should be glad to acknowledge what the British government did in this instance in giving to Canada more extensive freedom in the negotiation of her own treaties.

Now, I shall refer briefly to the treaty of 1893, examining the scope of the treaty and the nature of the negotiations which led up to it. This treaty of 1893 covered only seven French articles and twenty-two Canadian articles. And I think it is not too much to say that the treaty was exclusively to the advantage of France. I have already stated that it was provided in this treaty that all the advantages we should give to any foreign power, not only in relation to the articles covered by the treaty, but in relation to anything else—we should be obliged to extend to France also ; and on the other hand, it was stipulated that most favoured nation treatment should be extended by France to Canada only in relation to the articles mentioned in the treaty. I may quote the articles of the treaty in order to make myself perfectly clear to the House. Article 1 gives the list of articles which are to enjoy the reduced Canadian duty. Article 2 then goes on as follows :

> Any commercial advantage granted by Canada to any third power, especially in tariff matters, shall be enjoyed fully in France, Algeria and the French colonies.

Article 3 gives the list of Canadian goods that were to enjoy the benefit of the French minimum tariff and then goes on to say :

> It is understood that the advantage of any reduction of duty granted to any other power on any of the articles enumerated above shall be extended fully to Canada.

So we have most favoured nation treatment general on one side and closely limited on the other—a clear inequality of treatment. But that is not the only point of inequality. It was provided in this treaty that all Canadian goods, to receive the benefit of the French minimum tariff should be shipped to some port in France But the same clause was not provided with regard to goods imported from France into Canada. France wanted to encourage her own ports and her own shipping. But we were then spending large sums in the creation of our own ports ; why, then, did not we provide for the same direct shipment that France provided for the benefit of her own ports ? Here was another clear case of inequality of treatment. There was still another point of the same kind. It was provided that Canada should never raise the duties beyond the rates fixed in the treaty. But, on the other hand, France could raise the tariff on the goods, which, under the treaty, were given the benefits of her minimum tariff. Here, then, are three points which show conclusively that this treaty of 1893 was far from being favourable to Canada.

Now, let me call attention to the articles mentioned in the treaty. Among the Canadian articles to be given the benefit of the French minimum tariff was fresh water fish ? Eels, also, were in this list. But was it possible for us to export eels ? Have we ever had a trade in exporting eels ? Other articles were extract of chestnut, common furniture and wooden sea-going ships—all of them articles which have never been exported from Canada to France. On the other hand, among the articles excluded were salmon, cod and all our important fishes, also agricultural implements, agricultural products and minerals. But, in this treaty of 1907, which we are now discussing, we find all these articles included. We have provided for all our agricultural products, our products of the mines and of the fisheries and several manufactured products which we export or may reasonably hope to export in the future.

During the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the other night, I asked him why the French government had not been ready to give us a reduction of duty on our cheese. As everybody knows, cheese is one of our greatest articles of production and export and, consequently, is one on which we should try to secure from European countries all possible concessions. It was not included under the treaty of 1893. The French government was ready to grant the concession of the French minimum tariff on Canadian cheese, but they asked what the hon. member for North Toronto called a quid pro quo. What was that quid pro quo? If the Canadian government would give a small reduction of duty on French books they were ready to give us a reduction on cheese. Was that a thing which should have been refused by Canada ? The reduction on French books, I think, instead of being a detriment would have been a benefit to our country. A large section of the people of this country are constantly using French books ; in order to complete their education they have to resort to French books, and it is advisable that education should be given as freely as possible. However, that reduction was refused by the Canadian government of that day, and I see by the correspondence which I have before me, that it was refused by Sir Charles Tupper. I may say that Sir Charles himself was anxious to give that concession; he was ready to give a reduction on French books, and obtain in return the reduction on cheese. But the matter was referred to the Canadian government, to the then Minister of Finance and the answer came that the concession would not be given, that it was impossible to grant a reduction of duty on French books, and consequently Canada had to abandon the prospect of a reduction of the French treaty on cheese. I was surprised that my hon. friend the other night was not ready to make the admission that he had practically refused an offer of the admission of cheese to the French market.

Coming to the treaty which is now before this House, I think my first duty is to express to the British authorities my appreciation of the freedom they have granted to us for the conducting of these negotiations. We were also received by the French government in the most courteous way. We arrived in France in the month of July, near the end of a very arduous session, and I was under the impression that the members of the French administration would not be very anxious to negotiate a treaty with us after a long session like that; but they were kind enough to stay there for three months in order to carry out the negotiations which have resulted in the treaty which is now submitted to the consideration of this House. I may say also that they have been kind enough to recognize not only during the negotiations but also in the exposé des motifs which has been placed before the French chamber, the sympathy which exists between Canada and France. They have been kind enough to mention in different places the bonds of sympathy which exist between Canada and France, and it is probably due to that fact that we were successful in making a treaty which is, I think, very advantageous to Canada. We have also been greatly assisted by the Chambre de Commerce of Paris, and especially by a report which has been made by Mr. Le Grand, one of the officers of the Chambre de Commerce, who has prepared and submitted to his chambre a very elaborate report on our commercial relations with France. I must mention also as persons to whom we are greatly indebted for the successful issue of our negotiations, the British Chamber of Commerce, and especially the Canadian section, who made special studies of our relations with France and made reports which helped us to a great extent to conduct the negotiations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is going to be the effect of this treaty, what is the result of the negotiations which were carried on? Our first object was certainly to provide that all the goods that we manufacture and produce in Canada should receive the most favoured-nation treatment in France. It is not surprising that our commercial relations with France have not been very extensive in the past. There is a great difference between the maximum and minimum French tariff. For most of the goods that we could export to that country we were obliged to pay the high rate of duty imposed by the maximum tariff. On the other hand, there were thirty-five countries producing about the same articles as we ourselves produced or could produce, which were enjoying on the French market the minimum tariff which is, as I shall show in a few minutes, very much lower than the general tariff. It was no wonder then that we could not be successful in our exports to France. But we have provided in this treaty that, practically speaking, all goods which we export from this country to-day will enjoy in the future the benefit of the French minimum tariff. During 1906 we exported $235,000,000 worth of goods. We have obtained the benefit of the French minimum tariff for $212,000,000 of these goods, practically covering the whole amount of our exports. Agricultural products are certainly the articles which most interest Canada. They were not included in the treaty of 1893, but in this case, if you take a list of the articles for which we have obtained the French minimum tariff, you will find that almost all our agricultural products are henceforth to enjoy the benefit of the French minimum tariff, and will be consequently on a par with the agricultural products of the other countries of Europe, and some of America. This is of some importance as France imports a large quantity of agricultural products, for instance, she imported in 1905, the following quantities of agri cultural products:—

	Francs.
Horses	11,000,000
Cattle	9,000,000
Poultry	3,000,000
Meat	2,000,000
Meats (salted)	9,000,000
Eggs	1,000,000
Tallow	4,000,000
Lard	4,000,000
Condensed milk	8,000,000
Wheat	186,000,000
Cheese	48,000,000

Cheese is an article of some importance which was refused in 1893 because the Canadian government of that day was not ready to give a reduction on French books. Then take wheat, 186,000,000 francs. It might be stated that France has no minimum tariff on wheat. But, I have been led to believe that within a very short time there will be a minimum tariff put upon wheat, and then, if there is a minimum tariff, we will have occasion to enjoy the benefit of this minimum tariff as a result of section 1 of the treaty providing that all articles which are mentioned in schedule A shall enjoy the most reduced rates imposed upon these articles.

Mr. MONK. Did my hon. friend read what Mr. Pichon said about when he presented the treaty to the French chamber ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Does he think it probable the tariff is going to be lowered in France on wheat when they are exporting wheat ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think that the duty can be lowered, but the duty cannot be increased because in virtue of the treaty which exists with Russia, there is a consolidation, as they call it, and the French government have agreed never to increase the duty on wheat.

Mr. MONK. But the hon. gentleman said it was going to be lowered.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, so much the better then. If it is going to be lowered then it will be for the advantage of Canada.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Pichon said the other day in the French chamber that it would not be. Does the hon. gentleman know Mr. Pichon ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He said that it was not going to be lowered ? At all events we will enjoy the benefit of the most reduced rate in regard to wheat.

Mr. MONK. What does my hon. friend mean by the most reduced rate ? We are on the high tariff.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, there is only one duty. There may be to-morrow two duties imposed that of the general tariff and that of the minimum tariff. As I have already explained the minimum tariff can never be greater than the duty which exists to-day. Now, my hon. friend will say, perhaps, that that is of no advantage. I will quote him a case in which we succeeded in creating a large trade in the exportation of hams. This trade was killed by a change in the French tariff. How did it occur ? In 1903 the French government decided to retain the high rate of duty under the general tariff and to also make provision for a minimum tariff. On the day when this provision of the French tariff came into force in what position were the Canadian exporters put ? They were put in this position that they had to go on the French market and compete there with the exports of meats and hams from countries enjoying the French minimum tariff, and as there was a great deal of difference between the general and minimum tariff the result was that the trade which had been established for that class of goods was simply killed. I had the pleasure of meeting several times, a gentleman who was carrying on that business and he said that the interference with it was due to the creation of the maximum and minimum rate. Now, we have thought of guarding ourselves against that and we have provided that if, at any time, the French government decide to put some of these articles referred to not only on the general tariff but to put them on the minimum tariff they shall give us the most reduced rate and will not expose our trade to be killed as it was in the case of the ham trade.

Mr. MONK. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that there was every expectation that the tariff on wheat would be lowered in France.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I asked my hon. friend if he had read the speech made the other day by Mr. Pichon in which Mr. Pichon said, in the French chamber, that he had carefully guarded the agricultural interest in France and that in so far as wheat was concerned it remained on the general tariff from whence he intimated it would not be taken.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was mentioned several times, not during the negotiations, but it was mentioned in the papers, and my hon. friend must have seen it himself also, that 'La Commission du Budget' is now examining the question of the tariff and is preparing a new tariff. My hon. friend knows that there is every probability that in the drafting of this tariff there will be provision for a general and a minimum tariff.

Mr. MONK. On wheat ?

Mr. BRODEUR. On articles which are to-day simply on the general tariff. I will not say that it will be done. I do not give that information from the members of the government but it was current rumour. If my hon. friend will consult the different changes that have been made in the tariff since 1892 he will find that the list of articles on which there was only one tariff was very extensive, but that gradually—almost every year—changes have been made in the list of goods to which formerly only the general tariff applied and which now enjoy the minimum tariff. It is to be expected that the same thing will be done with respect to these agricultural products which still remain on the general list. Then, I say, it would be of the utmost importance for Canada, for a country which is exporting such a large quantity of wheat, that we should provide that if at any time France decided to have a general tariff and a minimum tariff we should enjoy the minimum tariff. Will my hon. friend say that we were not wise in acting the way we did ? Will he take the responsibility of stating before this House that we should not have made that provision ? If we had not made that provision we would have killed our trade in wheat the same as our trade in ham has been killed. I think it was a wise provision to put in the treaty, as I see in article 1, that

> The natural and manufactured products of Canadian origin . . . shall enjoy on their importation into France . . . the benefits of the minimum tariff and of the lowest rates of customs duty applicable to like products of other foreign origin.

We have done it to meet a case like that in regard to ham and we have done it to meet the case of the creation of a maximum and a minimum tariff on agricultural products.

Now, we are largely interested in minerals. Canada has become a mineral country. Is it not advisable that we should obtain from the French government the French minimum tariff on minerals ? What about the fisheries ? Of course some products of our fisheries are provided for in the treaty of 1893. I have already mentioned the nature of the fish products which enjoy the most favoured nation treatment under that treaty. They are eels, and fresh water fish—articles that we were not exporting at all—and which there was no probability of our exporting. Now, let my hon. friend consult schedule A and he will find that all the fish products of this country—the $13,000,000 worth of fish that we produced last year—may enter the French market at the most reduced rates. The treaty is applicable to any fish which may be exported to that country. Then, take our forests. My hon. friend knows that we could do with France a large business in lumber. France is not a lumber country. France has to import her lumber. She has to import her pulpwood. Why should not this provision be made in regard to the enjoyment of the French minimum tariff on the products of the forest ? In regard to manufactured products, I may say that we do not export to-day a very large quantity. Our industries were just started a few years ago and they can hardly suffice for the Canadian market. But, extensions are being made every day ; every day in the year new factories are being started.

Canada is becoming more and more an industrial country, and that fact impelled us to endeavour to provide for our manufactured products a more favourable entrance into a large consuming market like that of France. For example we export to France at the present time some agricultural implements of which France is a large consumer. France herself manufactures a certain quantity of these implements, not a large quantity, not sufficient for her needs. Canada and the United States are countries which manufacture agricultural implements extensively and there is to-day a large exportation from the United States to France. In France there is a difference of forty per cent between the general and the minimum tariff on agricultural implements, and if this treaty is ratified, then when it comes into force next spring Canadian agricultural implements will have an advantage of forty per cent in the duty over the United States agricultural implements in the French market. Should there be no treaty made between France and the United States then the United States manufacturers will have to pay forty per cent more duty than do the Canadians. I may say that I am informed on reliable authority that the American manufacturers of agricultural implements are contemplating establishing factories in Canada in order to enjoy the benefit of the minimum tariff with France which this treaty gives us. If that were the sole result of the treaty it would be worth our while to negotiate it, because it is needless to point out that the establishment of those industries in Canada will afford more employment for our people. It has been said that the duties in France are very high and it has been asserted in certain newspapers that the general tariff imposed by France was much higher than the Canadian tariff. I may state for the information of the House that the total imports into France in 1906 amounted to 5,627,000,000 francs and the duty on these goods was 448,000,000 francs which gives an average duty of 8 per cent.

Mr. AMES. What amount of this total importation into France was free of duty ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are a less number of articles on the free list in France than there are on the free list in Canada. I am endeavouring to show that the statement that the duties in France are higher than the duties in Canada is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. AMES. Are you not including in your statement all the articles imported into France which are on the free list ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly. I say that the average duty levied upon importations into France is 8 per cent while the average duty on foreign goods entering Canada is 16 per cent.

Mr. AMES. On the goods upon which duty is paid ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, on all goods.

Mr. MONK. Does the minister say that the average duty on goods admitted into France is 8 per cent?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I would like to know where he gets authority for that statement ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just given the figures and the hon. gentleman can make his own calculation if he thinks I have made a mistake. The total importations into France last year amounted to 5,627,000,000 francs and the duty levied was 448,000,000 francs.

Mr. MONK. That includes all free goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. That includes all the goods. I am simply stating that the duties imposed in France are not as high as the duties imposed in Canada.

Mr. MONK. Well that is a mistake.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not a mistake.

Mr. MONK. You are including the free goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am including the free goods in Canada also ; I am comparing the free and dutiable goods in France with the free and dutiable goods in Canada. If my hon. friend refers to the Trade and Navigation Returns he will find that so far as Canada is concerned the average duty is 16·03 per cent and in France it is 8 per cent, so that the duties levied in France on dutiable and free goods is less than the duty levied in Canada on dutiable and free goods.

Mr. AMES. Can you state the value of the goods imported free of duty into France ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will complete my argument on that point. My hon. friend may say : Oh, the quantity of free goods in France is much larger than in Canada. But if my hon. friend looks at the French tariff he will find that there are 221 items on the free list whereas on the Canadian free list there are 238 items or 17 more.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Will the minister give the value of these ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am simply giving the number of articles.

Mr. AMES. That is of no value in a comparison.

Mr. BRODEUR. The figures show that the duty imposed by France is less than the duty imposed by Canada on the total importations.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I submit that the argument is no good unless you give the value of the free goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the argument is very fair because there is nothing like taking the tariff as a whole. There is nothing which will give us a better idea of the rate of duty than the percentage of duties levied. I do not want to insist more on that point but I think it is shown conclusively that the percentage of duty on imported goods in France is less than it is in Canada. I might now perhaps state to the House the advantage that we get in the reductions which have been made. In making a comparison of the difference between the French general and minimum tariffs in respect to the articles which are mentioned in the treaty, and the difference between the Canadian intermediate and the general tariff reference to the goods mentioned in the treaty, my hon. friend will be perhaps surprised to know that there is a great deal of difference. We have obtained the minimum tariff on 152 articles. My hon. friend may perhaps say that that does not tell for much unless we know the value of the importations of these articles, but if he goes further he will see that the difference in duty between the French maximum and the minimum tariff on the articles mentioned in the treaty is 25 per cent, and the difference between the Canadian intermediate and general tariff, including the articles subsequently mentioned in clause C, is 7 per cent. That shows that we get from France the benefit of reduced rates to the extent of 25 per cent on 152 articles and give reduced rates to the extent of 7 per cent on 110 articles. I think this shows conclusively that this treaty is for the great benefit of Canada. Of course, there is a reduction of taxation, and my hon. friends might perhaps dwell on that; but is it not advisable to have a reduction of taxation? My hon. friends have been going through the country complaining that our taxation is very large. Therefore, when we have secured a reduction of taxation to the extent of $400,000, they surely ought to approve of the negotiation of this treaty.

I have stated that there are many manufactured and other articles which we are not exporting to-day to France but which we might export later on. For example, we are producing many articles of the same kind as the American people are producing, and they have been able to export these articles in large quantities to France. Why should not we be able to do the same? The French people having become accustomed to take these American goods, why should they not take Canadian goods of the same classes? My hon. friends may ask what are the exports of the United States to France? I might mention some of these articles. Here is a list of the principal articles exported from the United States to France in 1905:

Agricultural implements	$ 2,750,000
Wheat	1,874,000
Corn	1,400,000
Carriages	39,000
Copper	11,000,000
Bicycles	72,000
Fruits	384,000
Furs	189,000
Sewing machines	100,000
Typewriters	445,000
Leather	935,000
Tallow	817,000
Phosphate	655,000
Ham	3,000,000
Lard	444,000
Clover seed	200,000
Lumber	1,200,000
Electrical machinery	400,000
Total	$25,904,000

We could export many of the same classes of goods to France with great advantage to this country. We could export, for instance, apples in very large quantities. Practically speaking, there are no apples grown in France.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the duty on apples?

Mr. BRODEUR. Apples and pears, for table use, the minimum is two francs, the maximum five francs; apples, for cider and perry, minimum, 1f. 50; general 2f. per 100 kilograms, that is 220 pounds.

Mr. MONK. Did my hon. friend say that there were no apples grown in France?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said that practically speaking there were no apples raised in France, and they are one of the articles which we might export with the greatest advantage.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. What is to be the duty under the new treaty on apples going into France and what is the duty under the old treaty?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are the same.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Can the hon. minister tell us the quantity of apples we export to France now?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year it was not very large, but I understand that a large quantity has been exported this fall. There were exported in 1905 286,000 francs worth.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) Is there much reduction of duty on pork and hams?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, there is a considerable reduction. The duty on fresh beef is 35 francs in the minimum tariff and 50 francs in the general tariff; pork, minimum, 25 francs; maximum, 40 francs. The reduction is very large and should be of great advantage to us, especially against our American competitors.

Mr. MONK. Is it not a fact that the Americans enjoy the French minimum tariff for salt meat and hams?

Mr. FIELDING. They do, and there is the more reason why we should get the same.

Mr. MONK. But they are on the same basis?

Mr. BRODEUR. Precisely, but the United States, having that advantage killed the trade that was growing up between Canada and France, so that it was very desirable to make this treaty. Now, one of the great advantages we get by this treaty is an equality of treatment with regard to shipments. I have already explained that in the treaty of 1893 direct shipment was required for Canadian goods exported to France, but similar treatment was not required for goods imported into Canada. Now I have heard that in some parts of the country there may be some objection to that clause. I believe that an hon. member of this House has been interviewing the importers of Montreal to see whether they were opposed to this direct shipment. I do not know whether he got much consolation from the importers generally, I do not think he did in Montreal, because if there is any place in Canada which will benefit to a large extent by the direct shipment of French goods it is certainly Montreal. I was sorry to find that some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were trying to obtain opinion in Montreal against this policy, one which was calculated to benefit Montreal especially, and all our river and ocean ports.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the hon. gentleman alluding to some one on this side of the House?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I say that some hon. gentleman has been inquiring of the importers whether they were opposed to this clause providing for direct shipment.

Mr. AMES. I am quite willing to plead guilty to the soft impeachment, and if the hon. minister will read the correspondence, I think he will be greatly surprised to find that at least five-sixths of those importers in Montreal are opposed to this clause.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then I take it that my hon. friend has been trying to discover objections, and I am surprised that a representative of Montreal should endeavour to make a case against a provision which was designed to benefit Montreal especially.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman think that an inquiry from business men as to their opinion of the effect of this clause, is anything improper?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly I do not think it is in the interest of Canada, much less of Montreal, to try to discover opinions hostile to this provision.

Mr. AMES. The hon. gentleman—if he will allow me—seems to be under the impression that I was endeavouring to get the people of Montreal to express themselves in a manner hostile to the treaty. I asked the importers of Montreal to write me their views with absolute impartiality upon this matter, and I was surprised to find that at least 75 or 80 per cent of those who did write condemned it, as I will show when I have an opportunity to deal with this matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, I am interested to learn that my hon. friend has been trying to get the people in Montreal to pronounce themselves against this treaty, or that clause of it which is designed to be so beneficial to Montreal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But they seem to think not.

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, we will see later on what their opinion is. I know that some of those gentlemen who have been approached by my hon. friend have stated that they did not exactly understand the question that was put to them, and that is the reason why they gave at first an unfavourable answer. They did not know that there was going to be established between Canada and France a service more complete and extensive than the one we have to-day. There will soon be a service every fortnight, and it was feared by some that it was going to injure their present facilities with regard to importations. But now they have found—because I have seen some of them—that there is a disposition on the part of the Allan line to establish a more regular service, one more prompt and efficient. So there is no reason why they should not have direct shipment provided for in the treaty. Now, why should we not get these importations direct? Last year the parliament of Canada decided that whenever the Governor in Council saw fit to put such a regulation in force, British goods should enjoy the benefit of the preferential tariff only when they are imported directly into Canada. It is true, this clause of the Customs Act has not yet been put into force, but we expect that it will be put into force before long. I think a statement to that effect was made in the House last year when that question was discussed. Now take this supposed case for an illustration. Suppose that four years from now goods imported from Great Britain were made subject to direct shipment before they could enjoy the benefit of the preferential rate, what would be the result? The result would be that if these goods were imported through New York, they would have to pay not only the intermediate tariff, but they would not enjoy the benefit of the preferential rates, they would have to pay the general tariff; while at the same time goods which were imported from France, if we had not inserted that provision in the treaty, would be enjoying the benefit of the minimum tariff. Now, would that have been fair to British goods? We had to take one position or the other. This treaty was going to be made, not for one year only but for several years, and if we had not provided for the direct shipment of French goods, then they would have enjoyed the benefit of the minimum tariff while British goods would not have enjoyed the same privilege. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the provisions of this treaty upon which this government ought to be commended, because without that provision not only would we have injured British trade, but we would have largely injured our own Canadian ports. Why should we work for the benefit of American ports? We have been spending millions for the improvement of our St. Lawrence route and of our ocean and river ports in order that we might get some advantages from increased trade in those ports by bringing imports directly through our own ports. I say it would have been a very great mistake if the Canadian government had not provided for the protection of our own ports. That is the object we had in view, and I am sure when these circumstances are understood by the people, when they understand that we are going to have a better service, that we are going to build up our ports and bring Canadian trade through Canadian channels, they will applaud this provision in the French treaty.

Reference has been made to the fact that the countries to enjoy favoured nation treatment are very numerous. I have already explained that some of these treaties were made many years ago, some even as long ago as the sixties. Would it have been advisable to refuse to negotiate this treaty because these most favoured nation clauses affecting these different nations were in our way? But we must not forget that, if we are to give most favoured nation treatment to these countries, we ourselves enjoy the benefit of the most favoured nation clause. Take, for instance, Austria-Hungary. Our goods which now come under the maximum tariff of that country will come under the minimum tariff. Surely it was better to extend most favoured nation treatment to these countries as Canada was to enjoy most favoured nation treatment from them. It must be remembered also that our imports from these countries are not large and no important interest can suffer much by the operation of this part of the treaty.

This treaty will be a great benefit to Canada—I have no doubt about that. I have already given figures to show that there is every reason to believe that, under the treaty, there will be a considerable expansion of our trade. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is anxious to know whether an extension of trade is likely to take place. I think the fact that our goods exported to France had to pay 25 per cent more than the goods of thirty-five other countries was certainly enough to prevent any extensive business from being carried on by Canada with France. This treaty will relieve us from the clause of the treaty of 1893 under which we extended in all things most favoured nation treatment to France while France confined most favoured nation treatment in our case to a small list of articles. I have already shown that this treaty will benefit our Canadian ports. I have proven also that the negotiations were carried on by Canadian representatives, a thing of which we should be proud, and for which we should show our gratitude to Great Britain as recognizing our right to negotiate our own treaties. Another great point in favour of the treaty is that it will help to cement the entente cordiale between Great Britain and France. It is advisable that the best commercial relations should exist between Great Britain and France. But it is also important that these relations should exist between all parts of the British Empire and France. This treaty will also contribute to make our country known throughout the world. There was a time when Canada was practically unknown in the countries of Europe. This was the case even fifteen or twenty years ago. And why? Because we had not taken means, by advertising and otherwise, to make Canada known in these countries. Since 1896 efforts have been made in the direction of extending the knowledge of Canada in these countries of Europe. The negotiation of this treaty will help to make Canada better known not only in France, and not only in the countries of Europe, but also in the countries of Asia and Africa. For these reasons, I hope that this House will vote unanimously in favour of the ratification of this treaty.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House yield not a whit to the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur), who has just sat down, or to those who are associated with him, in admitting the desirability of maintaining the friendliest commercial relations possible with that country of the old world with which so many Canadians have ties of blood and affection. Whether success has or has not attended the efforts of the minister in seeking that object, we all agree that the object is one which should be sought. And we would all be willing, I think, to congratulate the minister and the government in so far as success may have attended their efforts. There was no need of the minister, it seems to me, attempting to excuse—almost apoligize for—the government in having turned first to France in an attempt to bring into effect this intermediate tariff, which was adopted last session, we understand, for purposes of negotiation. It was natural and right that France should be the first country selected with which to endeavour to make a treaty. The sentimental considerations which bind a large part of the people of this country to old France are, I think, respected by all Canadians, even those who may not have the same reasons for sharing them.

But this treaty now comes before us, the completed work of our representatives, for examination and criticism. The treaty requires the ratification of this parliament, and parliament should not give that sanction without minute examination or without satisfying itself that the treaty is in the public interest and that unforeseen complications are not likely to arise therefrom. So, I take it, it is the duty of a member of His Majesty's loyal opposition to examine this treaty from the opposite point of view to that which has been taken by the minister and to endeavour to show wherein it lacks or might have been better. In that respect we shall come to a conclusion as to whether, in the whole it had better be accepted and ratified and we may perhaps in future avoid some mistakes that may be found in this convention.

I do not see that this treaty marks any great or special epoch in Caandian history or diplomacy. It differs from the treaty of 1893, not in character but rather in degree. It is an ampler and fuller treaty, it covers a wider scope of articles on both sides. It is quite natural that after fifteen years the treaty of 1893 should have been found to have outworn its usefulness to some extent and that the time has arrived when it should be amplified, enlarged and made to fit the changed conditions of this country, and of the other country with which it was made. There is one feature, however, of this treaty making in which we have made very rapid progress, and that is the éclat and the expense with which our negotiations are now conducted. In the good old days when Sir Charles Tupper went to Paris and undertook to negotiate a treaty for Canada it was not such an expensive undertaking as it to-day. We find that the commercial treaty with France which we have been discussing as a precursor of this treaty, cost Sir Charles Tupper for travel $73 ; for typewriting for Sir Charles, $17.19 ; for documents and other papers, $100 ; a total of $190.19. Compare that with the many thousands of dollars which will probably be found in the Auditor General's Report when those of us who appear here at the next session of parliament have the privilege of seeing that interesting publication, and I think there will be a general belief that at least in our methods of expenditure Canada has made great progress and expansion in the last fifteen years.

We must consider in discussing this treaty what we give and what we receive. We give on certain specified articles the Canadian intermediate tariff and we give a special tariff on a few more ; we receive on certain specified articles the French minimum tariff. I do not think that Canada, in being given by France a treaty of this character, has been selected from the nations of the world for remarkably favoured treatment. If we glance through the list of nations enjoying what we enjoy and more, we find that there are thirty-five nations which have the full minimum French tariff and about thirty which have the minimum French tariff in part ; and while our pride is flattered that we have succeeded in securing this treaty, after all it is no very great matter of congratulation that what Montenegro and Turkey, Nicaragua and Honduras and the black republic of Hayti can secure from France, we, through our plenipotentiaries, at great expense have been able to secure for Canada. Many a fourth-rate country has secured the benefit of the French minimum tariff, and that we should be included is a subject of course for congratulation, but it seems to me that to be omitted from that list would be of the nature of a surtax, while to be included is simply to be placed on a par with nearly every other commercial country in the world, so it gives us but little advantage over our competitors. I must take exception to the argument which the minister who has just preceded me (Mr. Brodeur) used when he was endeavouring to show how much more we had obtained from France than we had given. I think it was rather poor judgment to claim that the treaty was at all one sided. It is supposed to be a mutually advantageous arrangement in which both countries profit to about the same degree, and I will leave it to you Mr. Speaker whether it is an eminently fair comparison to say that we receive favoured treatment on 153 articles while we give favoured treatment on 110 articles, and therefore we are 43 articles to the good. It is not the number of items that gives the concession value. The imports into Canada from France of three items alone on which we give France favoured treatment, woollen goods, silk goods and gloves, aggregate as much as the entire exports from Canada to France of every article we produce, and the leaving out of one of these three would cut down the importations to a very considerable extent. It is not the number of articles, it is the rate of duty that is of importance. So again when the minister says : Look at the difference between the reductions ; here we have a reduction of 25 per cent on an average on the whole line of goods which we are permitted to send into France while on the intermediate tariff which we have given to France there is an average reduction of only 7 per cent. The minister must admit that that argument is fallacious. It makes little difference to the prisoner whether the wall is 60 or 40 feet high if he has no ladder and it is too steep and smooth for him to climb over. For example, what difference does it make that the duty on salt cod is reduced from 60 francs to 48 francs, though 20 per cent is a great reduction. A duty of 48 francs on salt cod means $4.25 per hundred, which is equal to the value of the fish, so there is no doubt that even a 20 per cent reduction still leaves an absolutely prohibitive tariff against us. On the other hand, take our intermediate tariff for example on window glass, you reduce the rate from 15 per cent to 12½ per cent. That is a reduction of only 2½ per cent, but when you have an industry protected by only 15 per cent and take off even 2½ per cent you have pared pretty close to the quick, and a percentage of 2½ per cent reduction in that case means far more towards stimulating import trade than 20 per cent reduction in the case of the salt fish. So it seems to me that to claim that the difference between the French general and minimum tariff, in so far as Canada is concerned, is 25 per cent while the difference between the general and the intermediate tariff on French goods entering Canada is only 7 per cent, and that therefore the bargain we have made is very decidedly in favour of Canada, is a line of argument hardly worthy to be seriously laid before the members of this House.

I wish now to discuss schedule 'A' which contains the articles in which we expect to build up a larger export trade to France. If you analyse that schedule of 153 articles, you will find that they are divided into three classes. First of all there are those which were in the treaty of 1893. Twenty-three articles are supulated in the treaty of 1893 and that may be expanded to cover about twenty-six of the items that are contained in the treaty of 1907. As they were in the treaty of 1893 and are in the treaty of 1907 at an unchanged rate, the probabilities are that there will be no effect in the matter of an expansion of trade upon these items. Next, take those articles where the French maximum and the French minimum tariffs are the same; it stands to reason that we have obtained, for the present at least, no advantage there. So, we can expect no immediate stimulation of trade among such items, and that enables us to take another sixteen or seventeen additional items from the list. Of the remaining items, about 100 in number, which are to be found in schedule 'A,' which are not in the treaty of 1893, and upon which there is a substantial reduction, I have searched in vain to find many which will be of any service to us at the present time in the expansion of trade. I am willing to admit that on agricultural implements it seems probable that an advantage has been gained, that also possibly upon asbestos and the manufactures of asbestos there seems to be a hope that our trade will increase, but the great bulk of the items which are newly inserted in the treaty of 1907 and which do not appear in the treaty of 1893 are still quoted at such a high rate as to be, I think, prohibitive except under very exceptional circumstances in the trade from Canada going into France. Horses and cattle; you will see that a tax of $30 apiece upon horses over five years of age is not likely to be a barrier which we can surmount. At least, that is the opinion of the export dealers of my city. The same may be said of cattle. Where the rate of $1.75 per hundredweight places the duty required upon the average steer going into France at $25, it is hardly to be expected that there will be a great exportation from Canada at that figure; in fact, Canada probably will not export either horses or cattle to France under the present arrangement. Salted and mild cured meats have been referred to. Every one knows that the success of that trade depends upon quick transportation, that at the present time the facilities afforded for quick transportation going from Canada are by no means satisfactory, and that our merchants who are engaged in that trade having already suffered on several occasions are not likely to venture a further loss unless a better service is established than that at present existing. Cheese and butter have been referred to. The minister's experience in France must teach him that that is not a country into which Canadian cheese is likely to enter and be consumed in any considerable quantity. The English market consumes a food cheese; the French market as a rule consumes a cheese which serves as a relish. It is the Gruyeres, the Gorgonzolas and cheeses of that character that are manufactured and imported into France and we can, I think, not expect that the ordinary Canadian cheese will find a market there; at least that is the opinion of the cheese exporters of this part of the country. The same may be said of butter for France is an exporting and not an importing country as far as butter is concerned, and is one of our chief competitors in London with the butter which goes from Canada to that market. Fresh fish of the salmon family; there have been one or two experimental shipments from Montreal of fresh fish of the salmon family, but we really have no very considerable quantity of that class of fish to export as there are markets nearer which will take all we have to offer. As for dried fish, would that we could put our salted cod on the French market at a reasonable rate, but we cannot expect to build up any trade with France in salted fish at 48 francs per 100 kilos or $4.25 per hundredweight. The duty is prohibitive. The duty on cod fish and herrings is about equal to the cost of the fish in Canada, so that it is practically 100 per cent. It is not necessary that I should refer to lobsters because they were in the tariff of 1893 as they are at present. Nor is it necessary that I should refer to grains because the French minimum and general tariffs are the same. As to fruits, we know that apples already enjoy the minimum tariff, and although peaches, pears and plums are now placed upon the privileged list, we know full well that these fruits are so delicate that they can hardly be exported to advantage, and, further, France itself is a country which raises large quantities of fruit and supplies the markets of England. Clover seed is an item of Canadian export, but we can never expect to build up a trade in clover seed at 2½ cents per pound duty. It would only be when the French crop was a failure or when the Canadian crop showed a superabundance that we might send a few hundred pounds of clover seed. As for pine and spruce lumber we have a rate, which, figured out, comes to about $6.70 per thousand feet B.M. which lumber dealers will tell you is prohibitive. It is only the rough kinds of lumber that were in the treaty of 1893 in which we may continue to do some business. Hay is one of the items of Canadian export, but if we have to pay a duty of $1 per ton with the freight across the ocean and compete with the French haymaker we are likely to have a sorry time of it in building up a business with France, herself an exporting country of hay, and only in case of famine would she look outside and would the consumers be willing to pay the $1 a ton which is mentioned here.

Wood pulp, an item in both the treaty of 1893 and the treaty of 1907, is an article which we, in Canada, export to a very considerable extent. We should like to build up a trade with France in this article. We already ship to France a considerable quantity, but wood pulp exporters will tell you that it is very desirable that they should have a regular weekly service in sending out their goods and the inability of Canadian pulp to secure the benefit of the French minimum tariff when shipped on through bills of lading through American ports, and particularly Portland and Boston, will be a very considerable disadvantage to pulp exporters. Cement; we know that Canada cannot produce enough cement for her own demand much less overtake the requirements of an export trade. There are a number of items that are placed in this schedule 'A' of iron and steel and manufactures thereof. One only has to analyse these items, difficult though it is, to see that what appears to be a benefit to Canada is really a prohibition in so far as our exporting to France is concerned. Take, for example, cast iron; you cannot expect to export cast iron and to have it received into France with a duty of $2.64 per ton. Ferro-Manganese and spiegel iron, we are importers, not exporters of these articles and we cannot expect to do a large trade in them. Wrought iron crude, in blooms, prisms or bars; the French minimum tariff equals nearly $8 per ton, as against a Canadian rate of $2.25 per ton. If the minister who is so fond of making comparisons between the schedules of his treaty would make a comparison between the actual French duty against us and the actual duty that we have against France he would find that our tariff wall is very considerably lower than the tariff wall which France presents towards us.

On iron bars and 'T' iron the French minimum tariff is $8.80 a ton at which rate it is impossible to do any business with France. On sheet and plate iron the duty on the thicker sheets is $12.28 per ton and on the thiner sheets $17.54 per ton, so that the French minimum tariffs would be prohibitive here. On iron and steel wire, tin, copper, zinc, galvanized or not, the duty is $35 per ton, again a prohibitive duty. On iron and steel rails the French duty is $10.46 per ton. We cannot expect to send any steel rails to France at that rate. Our intermediate tariff on steel rails is only $6 a ton and our British preference is only $4.50, but France expects $10.46 to be paid on Canadian rails if they enter her market. On steel in bars the duty is $8.80 per ton, on axles and tires of steel in rough $14, on steel in sheets or bands the duty is from $19.20 to $21 so that in these instances you will see it is absolutely prohibitive. We therefore cannot expect to do any trade with France even under this treaty, in iron or in the manufactures thereof except as I have said in the case of agricultural implements. We manufacture cardboard and cardboard boxes in Canada, but these we manufacture are quite unfit for the French market; France uses a finer wood board than we can get here and they would not receive our board as a gift. We cannot expect to have any trade with France on these items. Fine papers; we are importers from rather than exporters to France in these. In hides and furs and other skins Canada is an importer from France. Boots and shoes have been in the treaty of 1893 as we know, and no trade has been developed in them. Gloves and mitts we import from France, not export to France. In leather belting there might possibly be some trade built up under the duty of 5¼ cents per pound but the belting manufacturers in Canada are already as busy as they can be keeping pace with the home demand and are not looking for any export trade. The minister was rather pleased with himself when he referred to the item of eels in the tariff of 1893 and he intimated that the Canadian trade with France in eels during the interval of 15 years had not grown, and he said that this did not reflect credit on the sagacity of those who drew the treaty of 15 years ago. I might ask the minister what trade he expects to build up under item 493 of his treaty; does he expect we will export to France the pelts of sea lions and sea otters, and seals and blue backs, not one of which is to be found in Canada either on sea or land. Does he expect we are to export to France, 'furs of grey squirrels and pouches of grey squirrels, astrakans and toulopes, white hares and pouches of white hares,' all of which are Russian. Does he intend we should import into Canada the live Russian animals and undertake to build up an export trade in their furs by the propagation of these animals in our unpopulated areas. We certainly should be delighted when we find that 'goats and sheep and mouflons of the Caucasus' are to be exported from Canada and are placed on the privileged list. It is more ridiculous to include furs, none of which are raised in Canada, in this list than it is to have eels included; at least we do have eels in Canada even if a taste has not yet been cultivated for them in France. But all these go to make up the 153 items upon which the minister prides himself. Sewing machines have been referred to but it is not probable that we will develop much trade with France in sewing machines on account of the nickle plated parts, because they come under a different ruling and a complication arises with the French customs in that respect. Dynamos and electrical apparatus; there is no chance of our developing trade with France in these lines. In fact we could not compete with France in a neutral market in these goods because France is a far larger and more skilful manufacturer of electrical apparatus than Canada and would beat us in our own market were it not for our protective duty. On railway chairs or castings the duty is $4.38 per ton and that is prohibitive; iron castings for machinery or ornament, those are largely made by pattern and our patterns would not suit the French trade, and then a duty of $10.50 per ton is prohibitive. Wire nails, the duty runs from $14 to $42 a ton and that is again prohibitive. On iron and steel tubing the French tariff runs from $15.80 to $31.60 per ton, which is prohibitive. Then as to carriages, it is hardly to be expected that a large trade will be developed in them. And so I have gone through one half of the hundred articles which are new in the list, and with the exception of agricultural implements and asbestos I fail to find any in which there is liable to be new trade with France.

Now, what have we conceded to France in return? We have secured the privilege of sending to France probably one hundred articles that we will be unable to send, and what have we given in exchange? Schedule 'B' contains a well chosen list evidently selected by people who understood well the export trade of France. There is no padding in it; they expect to do trade in all these items with us. The volume of business on these 110 items will greatly exceed the volume of the 153 items in the Canadian side of the treaty which the minister has referred to. In 1906 our imports from France amounted to $7,698,000 and in the same year our exports to France amounted to $2,150,000. Our imports are nearly four times as great as our exports, and the balance of trade is likely now to go still greater against us under this treaty. But in granting this intermediate tariff as contained in schedule 'B' the government has run the danger of seriously interfering with some Canadian industries and of reducing the protection on Canadian manufactures to an extent that may injure Canadian business. I have not time to go through the whole list. From 2½ per cent to 5 per cent does not seem a great reduction, but when an industry is only protected by from 15 to 25 per cent, if you reduce that protection by 5 per cent it may mean a serious thing for the life of that industry. Let me take one example. Item 604 in schedule 'B' refers to Dongola and Cordovan and other glazed leathers. I happen to be somewhat familar with that class of goods. It has been a difficult matter for the manufacturers of glazed leather for shoes in Montreal and elsewhere to compete with the Americans. The present Canadian protection is 17½ per cent but now the Canadian leather manufacturers are to have French competition with only 15 per cent protection on French kids. That will place the Dongola manufacturer in Canada in a very difficult position for he will have competition from both the Americans and the French, competition which will cut very seriously into his business. A 15 per cent tariff only against France would be a very serious menace to that particular industry and might cripple it entirely. One of these gentlemen writes to me and I quite believe he is right:

> We cannot perhaps tell the full effects for some time of granting the intermediate tariff on a large number of articles which are accustomed to be manufactured in Canada, articles in respect of which a great deal of capital is invested and many men are employed. But it appears to me that we shall shortly have reason to feel that the intermediate tariff is not sufficient protection for some of these articles.

I understand, however—and perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance will set me right in this matter—that we retain the right to alter our intermediate tariff when we see fit.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. AMES. With regard to schedule 'C,' where the rate is distinctly specified, have we that same privilege?

Mr. FIELDING. No. In that respect this treaty is the same as the old treaty, in which the duties on goods going into France were fixed and these special duties will remain fixed.

Mr. AMES. There is then no hope?

Mr. FIELDING. Except by way of a reduction of taxation.

Mr. AMES. It may have been inevitable, but it is to be regretted that we were not able to make an arrangement with France whereby their minimum tariff could have been given in exchange for our intermediate tariff, because it became necessary to create arbitrarily a third list, and in some cases the rates on that list are very low. In making this bargain we have the French minimum as against the Canadian intermediate, and it was evidently necessary for the ministers, or they conceived it to be so, to add at least a dozen items at lower rates than the intermediate tariff in order to make the bargain and complete the balance Now, schedule 'C' removes the protection which has hitherto been enjoyed in one important industry at least, and the serious part of it is that this cannot be altered, because the rate of duty now fixed is specific. It cannot be changed to a more protective rate on any future date without alteration of the whole treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. It can be reduced, but not increased.

Mr. AMES. The rate of protection cannot be increased. Let us take one item, ribbons of all kinds. There is a very considerable ribbon industry in Canada. It represents a large amount of money and the employment of a great many people. It has hitherto been protected by 35 per cent. Now it is to be protected, not by the intermediate rate of 32½ per cent as might have been expected, but only to the extent of 25 per cent, and with that reduced protection, French competition will be a very serious thing for the ribbon industry of Canada. And that is not the worst of it, because although France exports ribbons to a very large extent, she is not the worst competitor we can have. Our ribbon industry has been in fear and trembling to know what were the most favoured nations, and when they find that Austria-Hungary, Switzerland and Japan are also on the list, they will realize that the silk ribbon industry of Canada has to face a very serious crisis. We cannot make these ribbons in this country as cheaply as they can in France and Switzerland. The European workmen perform the different operations in different places; the yarn is made in one building, it is coloured in another, it is spun in another, and so on. Here we endeavour to perform all these operations in one factory with high-priced help. Now that our ribbon industry is to be exposed to the competition of France, Austria, Switzerland and Japan, a serious situation will certainly have to be met. That is only one instance of what happens through this most favoured nation clause. The negotiators, when dealing with France, probably did not have Switzerland in mind, and yet Switzerland is a worse competitor to our silk trade than France and the people engaged in that trade have to meet their competition with a protection of only 25 per cent.

I do not intend to speak at length on this question as the hour is late, but there is one feature of this treaty which I must refer to before taking my seat. It is that clause with reference to direct importations through a Canadian port. If I understand it, the French have hitherto understood that when Canadian goods enter France they must go through a French port, while we have been able to import into Canada through American ports. Our importers are to be henceforth deprived of that privilege. While I agree that it is a natural and laudable desire to build up our ports, still I cannot help feeling that as far as importers at interior points are concerned, you are placing upon them a rather serious handicap. I approve of the establishment of the direct line between Canada and France; I believe I have voted each successive year for the continuation of the bonus of $120,000. The bulk of our imports will, I trust, come by the direct line which we have subsidized. All things being equal, our importers will probably give that direct line every preference, but to compel every dollar's worth of goods imported not only from France, but from the trirteen countries included under the most favoured nation arrangement, to come in by a Canadian port and to allow not one ounce to come any other way without forfeiting the benefit of the reduced rates of duty, will, it appears to me, interfere with the liberty of trade, obstruct the channels of communication and nullify to a large degree the benefit which we are supposed to be giving to France and our own consumers in respect to schedules 'B' and 'C' of this treaty. The only party that I can see who will really benefit from it is the steamship company which has already established the line. It appears to me that it will defeat to a very large degree the very object of this treaty, and our French friends might naturally wonder whether we are absolutely sincere when we place such a handicap on their exports to Canada. For example, take one item to illustrate the thought I have in mind, that is, dried fruits and nuts. At the present time the Canadian trade is trembling in the balance as to whether it will be given to Europe or to California. It seems as if this treaty might turn the balance in favour of France, but to make it absolutely necessary at all seasons of the year that these goods should come through a Canadian port will to a very great extent, as I am informed by an importer of these articles, cause the trade to turn to California and purchase there instead of in France. This clause, as I understand it, was not inserted in the treaty at the request of France. It could be omitted even now, when we are called on to ratify the treaty, without any disapproval from the French Chamber. As I understand it, we have voluntarily fettered ourselves so far as these importations are concerned.

The hon. minister a few moments ago spoke of some one having been in communication with Montreal importers in an endeavour to pledge them to opposition to this clause in the treaty. I had not intended to read the letter which I sent to some thirty or forty Montreal importers, but inasmuch as the minister seems to be of the opinion that I endeavoured to snatch an adverse verdict from them, I would like to read the letter that he may see how impartial I was, and that he may realize that the replies were sent in food faith:

Dear Sir,—In the draft copy of the so-called French treaty respecting the commercial relations between Canada and France, now before the Canadian parliament, there is a provision to the effect that goods, coming from France or vice versa, in order to have the benefit of the reduced rate of duty, must arrive by way of a Canadian seaport, otherwise the higher rate of duty will be charged. As the principle involved is a new one, to which the government may later be inclined to give wider scope, I would be obliged if you would, as an importer, give me your views in this matter. Would it benefit or would it injure your importing business were this principle to be generally applied? As representing the largest importing community in the Dominion, I naturally wish to understand the situation and will be greatly obliged if, at your convenience, I may be permitted to hear from you.

I remain yours truly,

Now I entered into this discussion with an absolutely open mind, and I think the minister will see that in that letter there is nothing that indicates which way my sympathies run. I received, I think, about thirty replies, and fully three-quarters of those replies were opposed to this provision which is to be found in the treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see that in his letter the hon. gentleman only mentions seaports, whereas the treaty refers to rivers and seaports. It may be that the expression in the hon. gentleman's letter gave the Montreal people the impression that their city was not included.

Mr. AMES. Well, our Montreal people I think would consider themselves included in the expression 'Canadian seaports.' I do not think they would put a different interpretation upon it. I certainly consider Montreal and Quebec were included as Canadian seaports.

Mr. BRODEUR. In the treaty we have used the two expressions.

Mr. AMES. Yes, for greater exactness I presume. Permit me to say in this connection that the general verdict of those with whom I have been in communication is made up of the following objections, which I will enumerate.

The proposal in the first place is at least premature. The United States might do something of this kind. They have a large volume of trade, and they have several competing steamship lines. We should not yet do so, although I hope we may some day be in a position to do it without any objection being raised. But that time has not yet come, it will not come until we have reasonable competition, and a sufficient volume of trade to attract competing lines.

We will create by this clause, at least in winter, a trade monopoly. Our importers oftentimes contract twice a year with the European shipping agencies. They arrange to get a summer rate and a winter rate. They can get better terms in that way; they can always get better terms when the shipping agency on the other side has the option of a number of lines. When there is a number of routes there is competition, and competition means a reduced rate on freight. To be tied up to one steamship line, to be handed over, bound body and soul, to a monopoly, at least six months in the year, will have this result unless the men who operate that steamship line are more than human, that they will charge in freight rates all that the traffic will bear. They will take up by the additional rate which they will charge, practically all the benefit that would be given by the reduction of duty. It may be so arranged that there will be a slight reduction in their favour. But you can trust the steamship company, and the railway company operating with them, to see to it that the advantage is pared down to the very minimum; and so the benefit which we expected to give to our importers and to our consumers will be given to the steamship and railway lines. I am glad to learn that the hon. minister assures us that there is to be a better service than that which we enjoy to-day. That to some extent lessens the force of my argument as respecting the present service. But we have no service at the present time to be very proud of. I think there are two boats in seven weeks.

Now a great deal of the export trade from France is in articles of high value. They are bought in comparatively small quantities, they are shipped promptly, they are oftentimes shipped by express. It is possible for example for a kid glove merchant in Montreal to wire an order over to Grenoble, France, that the kid gloves should come by express, and they can be brought over in fourteen days if it is permitted to ship from Havre to New York and from New York to Montreal. But supposing you were bound to take one of these three and a half week service boats, there would be nothing else going from Havre direct to a Canadian port for over three weeks.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but there will be a line from Liverpool.

Mr. AMES. Then you have to pay the extra freight to Liverpool. So that for the express business it is going to be a very considerable handicap to be deprived of the accustomed way of shipment via New York. In the case of delicate dress goods, they are required at once, and transshipment to a considerable extent causes deterioration. They have been accustomed to come frequently by express, they can do so no more via the port of New York.

Then allow me to point out to the minister another very serious objection which I suppose has occurred to him but which did not occur to me until I came into communication with the importers themselves. The only line that comes from France to Canada is from the Northwest of France. That may well serve the contiguous country, which naturally finds an outlet from the port of Havre. But a very large share of the exports from France to Canada are grown in the southern and eastern parts of France. We know that the silks, and ribbons, and millinery come from St. Etienne and from Lyons; we know that the olive oil, castile soap, dried fruits and groceries are generally sent from Marseilles. Now we have hitherto had the privilege of importing via Marseilles to New York and thence to Montreal for the southern portion and southeastern portions of France, and the freight rate consequently is cheaper from the port of Marseilles to New York, and then to Montreal, than it is if you have to send the goods from the south country all the way across France to Havre, and then send them from that port. Let me give you an instance. Take the case of mineral water. It costs as much to send a case of Perrier mineral water from Marseilles to Havre as from Marseilles to New York; it has to go all the way across France by rail, and you will readily see that the extra freight is going to take up the greater portion of your supposed reduction in duty.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) allow me a suggestion? He is making a fair criticism, I admit. But is he not now answering his argument of a few minutes ago when he said that the condition was altogether too much to the benefit of France in allowing her goods to enter freely? Now he is proving that they cannot enter freely. I think that the proprietors of Radnor water, for instance, will be content with the difficulties of sending in Perrier. And, from the hon. gentleman's own point of view, ought he not to regard this as an advantage?

Mr. AMES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) will admit that the clause was placed in the treaty as a clog on trade, we would be willing to allow——

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a question of the object sought, but of what will happen. If the hon. gentleman thinks that this will be a drag on imports, which operates as increased protection, from his point of view, that is to be regarded with favour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But it is a question of the object, is it not?

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever the object, it speaks for itself.

Mr. AMES. I thought the whole treaty was based upon the object of improving commercial relations.

Mr. FIELDING. Take the clauses as they are.

Mr. AMES. Some time ago there was an agitation among the importers of Montreal against the holding of goods in transit in New York and from that point flooding the Canadian market. It was customary for the merchant to buy, for example, 5,000 bags of nuts to be held in bond in New York, sell 4,500 bags in the United States, and dump the remaining 500 bags in Canada. It was because of this sort of thing that the Montreal importers, and Canadian importers generally, began an agitation. Then the idea was broached that if these imports came by a Canadian port the difficulty would be overcome. Many importers were induced to give their adhesion to this idea in order to remedy the unfair competition of goods from New York. But that could be remedied in a much easier way. It is only necessary that the goods should come on a through bill of lading, shipped by a person in France to a person in Canada, and come through without breaking bulk. If that were the arrangement, if it were possible to import on a through bill of lading, all our importers would be favourable to it. But, instead, no goods can come by Portland, Boston or New York, no matter what the urgency, but must come by Halifax and St. John in winter, and by Quebec and Montreal in summer. This puts a real burden upon the import trade.

There is another feature that, I am sure, has not escaped the ministers. We in this House were, at one time, counselled to build a great national transcontinental railroad and to build an extension from Quebec to Moncton, largely by raising the bugaboo that we might lose the bonding privilege with the United States—and at that time we were willing to make great expenditures in order to make such a course absolutely impossible. Have the right hon. leader of the government and the ministers for a moment thought that it might be possible that offence would be given to the American government by the insertion of a clause such as I have spoken of? Suppose, for example, the people who have been accustomed to do some business in Canadian goods, shipping by Portland, Boston or New York, should say: Canadians have deprived us of the privilege of handling their goods, and we will place a surtax on all goods that come to the United States except by direct ports. And where should we be if the United States —very reasonably—should follow our example and take this course? What would it mean to the silk and tea trade that comes across the Pacific—the long lines of trains that travel from Vancouver to Boston and New York? It would mean that business would go to an American Pacific port and that we should have to abandon the Canadian Pacific Railway service on the Pacific ocean. This is not altogether an idle supposition; it is not impossible that the United States, seeing themselves discriminated against, as they are in this case, may say that this is a game that two can play, and may make provision to take from Canada what Canada has taken from them. So, it seems to me, that this clause has a tendency to close the natural channels of trade, and that it is unwise to attempt to artificially force traffic along unnatural lines; that it cannot but hamper trade and defeat the very object which the government has in view. I regret that the government has inserted that provision, and hope that, even now, the government may see that it would be wise to abandon it. I do not think that the French would object in the slightest degree, and I do think that the importers of Canada and the consumers of Canada will both have good reason to object to that provision. So far as the city of Montreal is concerned, I do not think that it will make much difference one way or the other. For six months in the year, we shall have plenty of competitive lines, and for the other six months we shall not. It will force traffic our way for half the year, but it will take traffic away from us for the other half of the year, and, on the whole, our position will be about the same. But, through the western portions of the country, this will be a handicap on trade, and the consumer will, by that much, fail to receive the benefit of the French treaty.

So, summarizing what I have endeavoured to say, permit me to repeat: To my mind, and to the mind of members of His Majesty's loyal opposition, it is desirable that there should be a treaty. But, on examination of this treaty, we do not find cause for that effusive congratulation with which the ministers were welcomed on their return home. The treaty has its good points; it also has its bad points. But, long before either its good points or its bad points were known, we had the paean of triumph raised in all parts of Canada because, it was said, a great advance had been gained for Canada. The flotilla of boats up the St. Lawrence, the yacht that carried the Minister of Marine and Fisheries up the Richelieu in triumph to his summer home were not altogether necessary, nor, when we come to look the treaty in the face, were they altogether in keeping with the results attained.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business does the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) propose to take up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Public Works estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

Mr. AMES.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, January 17, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Bill (No. 68) respecting the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Ruthenian Catholic Mission of the Order of Saint Basil the Great in Canada.—Mr. A. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Peace River and Dawson Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 71) respecting the Standard Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and to change its name to 'The Standard Fire Insurance Company'—Mr. W. F. Maclean.

Bill (No. 72) respecting patents of the Windsor Pump and Foundry Company, Limited.—Mr. Clarke.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Gustave Turcotte, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Nicolet; introduced by right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. L. P. Brodeur.

FRENCH TREATY—CORRECTION—SIR CHARLES TUPPER'S EXPENSES.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to offer a word of explanation and correction of a statement which I made last night and which I find to be not absolutely correct. In speaking of the expenses of Sir Charles Tupper in connection with the negotiation of the French treaty of 1893, I referred to the Auditor General's Report of 1894, page S—3, and there found the amount charged, $190.19. I find in the previous year also a charge under the same head $1,640.21, making a total of $1,830.40, and as I desire, that my statement should be absolutely correct, I take this opportunity of making the explanation.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I would like to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether or not he desires to make any communication to the House as to the day on which a statement will be made respecting the mission of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to Japan. The Prime Minister promised that an announcement should be made some time this week.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It is the intention of the Postmaster General to make his statement on Tuesday.

THROWING OFF MAIL AT PAKENHAM, ONT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) whether or not his attention has been called to any complaints as to the manner in which the mail is thrown off at Pakenham, in the county of Lanark. The mail bags are occasionally thrown off in such a way that they roll under the wheels of the cars and the mail matter they contain is torn and ground to pieces. This occurred last Christmas time when the mail bag was filled with Christmas letters and gifts. The people are very much annoyed that this should occur, and they ask that either the train should stop—which it does not at present—or that there should be the usual equipment which, especially in the country, is made use of for this purpose, so that the mail can be taken off and placed on the cars without any danger of this destruction. If the attention of the Postmaster General has not been called to this matter, may I ask him kindly to make a note of it and to have inquiry made, and the necessary instructions given.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). To the best of my recollection, this is the first time that this matter has been brought to my notice. I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) has called my attention to the state of affairs, and I will see to it that it is remedied at once.

ALIENATION OF MAJOR'S HILL PARK.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). May I ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether any portion of what is known as Major's Hill Park has been alienated. We have seen rumours of it in the newspapers, but no official statement has been made to parliament as to the intention of the government on the subject. If the land has been alienated, or if it is proposed to alienate it, will any statement be made on the subject ? I have just had my attention called to the fact that a notice on this subject has been placed on the Order Paper. I suppose that the motion will be moved at an early day and that we shall have some statement from the government on the subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The land referred to has been alienated, so far as the government can do it ; but the action is not complete until we have the sanction of parliament. The whole matter will be brought before the House by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) at an early day.

PRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS IN COMMITTEE.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). The Prime Minister said that an announcement would be made to-day as to the policy of the government with reference to the production of original papers before the Public Accounts Committee.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I think that the interest of all parties, and the views of all parties, will best be served if these papers are brought to the Committee on Public Accounts by a clerk of the department from which they are called, with the intention, of course, that they should be put at the disposal of the committee, and kept as long as needed, but returned to the custody of the clerk as soon as done with.

Mr. BENNETT. We evidently misunderstand the position—the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) and myself, and, perhaps the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What I called the attention of the House to the other day, was that, upon the production of original documents, it has been the custom to leave them in the custody of the clerk of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not intended to depart from that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps it would be well for me to make a statement as to the instructions which I gave to the official of my department. I instructed him to take the original papers which were called for to the committee room and remain there in attendance until the committee was through with the papers, and at the close of the session of the committee to return the papers to my department. I also told him that if there was an intimation from the chairman that they were required again for the consideration of the committee, he was to take them back to the committee and so on from day to day, to keep them there just as long as the committee desired them. It seemed to me that was the better course, and I will tell my hon. friend why. I find that in my department there are several important papers which are missing from the files. The only explanation that the deputy minister can give me is that some of those papers were taken to the committee room and left there, and have never been returned. My hon. friend will remember that at the first meeting of the committee the clerk made a statement that there were papers which had been lying in the closet attached to the committee room, which had never been returned to the department, which had been kept there apparently in the charge, or custody, of nobody. It does seem to me that in taking this course I have done every thing that the committee could properly desire. Of course, if the committee say that they want the papers left there all through the session, whether the committee is dealing with the subject matter of the papers or not, I will consider the request. But I did think that in making this other order I was facilitating the work of the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, we may as well understand where we are on this question.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question is not a proper subject of discussion; it can only be discussed on a motion to go into supply.

SUPPLY — ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS IN THE COMMITTEES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). As I understand the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), the proposition he has outlined is that when the Committee of Public Accounts are to meet and any question is to be investigated, a clerk from that department will produce the papers before the committee. Now let us understand where that will lead us. Next Wednesday there is to be an inquiry relative to the expenditure of some hundreds of thousands of dollars in dredging, in the province of Ontario. As I understand the Minister of Public Works, I, or any other gentleman who may be concerned in that examination, will, when the clock strikes eleven and the committee meets, be handed a whole sheaf of papers a foot in height, and I will be told: You may go on with your examination. Then as soon as the examination is concluded those papers are to be handed back to the clerk, and we are not to see them again until next day. I think such a proposition is preposterous. Apart from the question of precedent, it is an outrage on the rights of hon. gentleman on this side of the House. Why should the government seek to override a precedent that has existed in the committee, I will be bound to say, from the beginning of confederation? Take the celebrated Connolly and McGreevy case. Whoever heard of the Department of Public Works going over there with some papers in their hands and saying to Mr. Lister, or any other gentleman who conducted the examination, There are the papers, you may look at them now and go on with your questioning; but the moment you are through with them, we will take them away again. That was never done as hon. gentlemen here know who were then members of the House. An officer of the department produced the papers, they were laid on the table of the committee, and week in and week out, hon. gentlemen of that committee on either side had access to them, and with the closing of each day's inquiry the committee knew exactly what was done. This was done last year, and in the preceding session. Then the clerk of the committee gathered them up and carefully placed them, either in a trunk or in one of the closets there, provided with keys, and kept them there. The Minister of Public Works says there are papers missing. Well, of course, he does not mean any insinuation that they were taken away by the parties interested.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT. One thing is certain, no member of the opposition will take away any papers that are the subject of an inquiry, because if there is any thing of an incriminating nature in them the opposition will want the papers to remain on file. Now who is going to take away the papers from the committee? There is not an original paper in that committee room to-day that either of the departments cannot have back any moment they ask for them. All the department has to do is to ask for that particular paper, or those particular papers, and they can have them back. May I ask the minister now what files are absent from the Public Works Department that are causing so much inconvenience? If I am concerned in them personally, I will tell the minister whether or not they can be returned. Does the minister recollect the name of the particular file?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works.) I think my hon. friend has misunderstood the statement I made. What I intended to say was that an official of my department should be in charge of the papers instead of the clerk of the committee. That official can stay there during the whole session of the committee, he can remain for any length of time after the session, if any part of the papers is needed for examination. All I mean to say is that when the committee, or any member of it got through with the papers, then the official of my department would return them to the department, and bring them back again whenever they were desired. It is only a question of who shall have custody of the papers after the committee is through with them, from day to day. But I will say this to my hon. friend. I am quite willing the matter should be considered by the committee, and I have no desire to depart from the practice of the past. All I want is that some official of my department shall keep a record of the papers. He can make a list of the papers, and if the clerk prefers to keep them in his custody, well and good. But if at the close of the session, when every body is through with them, the clerk would prefer to hand them back to my official, all right, and they will be available for the committee whenever desired.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have only to add to what has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, that the practice has been lax. But we have no intention at all to depart from the practice as regards the rights of hon. gentlemen on either side of the House to examine the papers, and make the fullest scrutiny of them. I would insist upon a little more care being taken of the documents, but they will remain in the committee room for inspection.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I make the request of the Minister of Public Works, Will he be good enough to have left this afternoon, with either one of the two clerks who are in the Public Accounts Committee room, all the papers that were produced the other day relative to the dredging contracts referred to, so that I may have access to them to-morrow ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman desire them to be left this afternoon or to-morrow morning ?

Mr. BENNETT. To-morrow.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have them left to-morrow morning.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We understand from the First Minister that these papers are to be left in charge of the clerk of the House of Commons.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, not of the House of Commons but of the Committee on Public Accounts.

RAILWAY CONNECTIONS AT BROCKVILLE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Before you leave the chair, I wish again to refer to the matter of railway connection at Brockville, both for passengers and mail. I am sorry the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals is not in his place. I went to his department this morning to inform him that I purposed bringing this matter up to-day, and his deputy told me that he was absent from the city. But the First Minister is here, and the Postmaster General is here, who is as much interested in the question as the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to go away also. Will the hon. gentleman address his remarks to the Postmaster General ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will do so, and the right hon. gentleman can read in the 'Hansard' to-morrow the charges I make against the Railway Commission. I want to charge the Railway Commission, first, with inaction, and secondly with action. I first brought this matter to the attention of the Railway Commission, and made a complaint shortly after the close of last session. Shortly after the close of last session the connection at Brockville, both for passengers and mail, was broken up. The numbers of the trains on the Grand Trunk are 4 and 6. No. 4 is the fast train and No. 6 is the passenger or mail train. During last session this No. 6 was due to arrive at Brockville at 2.05 p.m. The Canadian Pacific Railway train left Brockville at 2.30 p.m. During last session the time of the arrival of No. 4 train at Brockville was 2.30, the same time as the departure of the Canadian Pacific Railway train from Ottawa, and passengers from the west arriving by No. 4 generally caught the Canadian Pacific Railway train. I made a complaint to the Railway Commission as soon as this arrangement was broken up. I got a letter from the secretary, Mr. Cartwright, acknowledging the receipt of the complaint and saying that the matter would be dealt with shortly. But, all summer the same state of affairs existed. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) are both conversant with the matter because I talked it over with them. I do not think that either of them can hear me now although I am speaking in a pretty good tone of voice, but I met them on the platform at Brockville, and they both complained of the state of affairs and said that it should be remedied. Nothing was done by this Railway Commission until after the House met. Then, I brought the matter up in the House and a few days afterwards I got this letter from the secretary of the commission :

December 20, 1907.

File 5320 re Brockville train connection.

Dear sir,—I inclose herewith certified copy of order No. 4124 dated the 10th instant in connection with this matter.

That was after I had referred to the matter in the House. That is the complaint I have to make of their inaction in not moving in the matter before, but I am going to complain before I sit down of the action which they did take. This, in so far as it went, was all right if they had carried it out.

The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada meeting at Montreal.
Tuesday, December 10
Tuesday, December 10, A.D. 1907.

Present:—A. C. Killam, chief commissioner; Hon. M. E. Bernier, deputy chief commissioner; James Mills, commissioner.

In the matter of the transfer of passengers and mails between the trains of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Brockville, in the province of Ontario:

Upon reading the communication addressed to the board by Charles Drinkwater, Esq., assistant to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, dated respectively the 22nd day of August, 1907, and the 29th day of November, 1907, and by W. H. Biggar, Esq., K.C., general solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, dated the 16th day of September, 1907, and the report of the chief traffic officer of the board dated the 20th day of November, 1907.

Upon the powers conferred by sections 269 and 284 of the Railway Act and such other powers as the board possesses;

The board doth order:

1. That the said railway companies so regulate the running of their trains carrying passengers and mails to and from Brockville, in the province of Ontario, and the places and times of stopping them, as to afford reasonable opportunity for the transfer of passengers and mails between the railways of the said companies at Brockville aforesaid, and furnish reasonable facilities and accommodation thereat for such purpose; and that, until some other system or arrangement satisfactory to the board shall have been adopted by the said——

That is the fast train.

—companies for the said purpose, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall daily at or before two o'clock in the afternoon notify the station agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Brockville whether train No. 4——

That is the fast train.

—of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of that day is carrying passengers desiring to transfer to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's passenger train No. 80 of that date at Brockville, and whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company's train No. 4 is expected to reach Brockville at its scheduled time; and that in the event of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's station agent at Brockville receiving, on any day, before twenty minutes past two o'clock of the afternoon of that day, notice from the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada that passenger train No. 4 of the said last mentioned company is expected to reach Brockville on that day at its scheduled time and that there are passengers on that train desirous of being transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's passenger train No. 80, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's said train shall not leave Brockville until after the lapse of a reasonable time after half past two o'clock on the afternoon of that day, to enable such passengers and their baggage to be transferred from one train to the other.

Then, here is the second order :

2. That, on or before the 1st day of January next, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall so change the times of the arrival of its passenger trains No. 4 and No. 6 daily at Brockville, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall so change the time of the departure of its passenger train No. 80 daily from Brockville as to restore any agreements and train schedules which, next before the adoption of the present existing schedules for the arrival and departure of the said trains respectively, existed, under which a period of time elapsed after the arrival of said passenger trains of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada or one of them, and the departure of the said passenger train of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or that, on or before the said first day of January, each of the said companies submit to the board some other schedule or schedules for the running of said trains under which reasonable opportunity will be allowed for the transfer of passengers and mails for the said passenger train of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, respectively, or one of them, to the said passenger train of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company train at Brockville aforesaid.

(Sgd.) A. C. KILLAM,
Chief Commissioner,
Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

The first of January arrived and the only action taken was that the Grand Trunk, pretending to comply with this order, gave instructions that train No. 6, on arriving at Kingston, must hand over its mails to the baggageman of No. 4 and he would carry these to Brockville and transfer them to the Ottawa train. The postmaster at Gananoque had instructions to make up a mail bag containing Ottawa matter only, take it to the station and put it on No. 4. If any person in Gananoque wanted to send a letter to Smith's Falls or Carleton Place it was put in a special bag that was carried on No. 6, thrown out on the platform at Brockville and allowed to remain there until next day. Now, here is where the complaint of inaction comes in. I received the following letter dated January 3, 1908 :

File 5320, Brockville train connection.

Dear sir,—I inclose certified copy of order of the board No. 4197 dated the 28th ultimo in this matter.

The order is as follows :

In the matter of the transfer of passengers and mails between the trains of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Brockville, in the province of Ontario:

Whereas, section 2 of the order of the board, No. 4124, dated the 10th December, 1907, provides that:

Then it goes on to give the provision which I have just read, and after reciting that it proceeds :

And whereas application has been made to the board, under section 50 of the Railway Act, for an order extending the time within which the said railway companies were directed under the said order of December 10, 1907, to put in operation at Brockville the proposed schedule:

Upon reading the communications addressed to the board by Charles Drinkwater, assistant to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, dated the 21st December, 1907, and a copy of a communication addressed to the said Charles Drinkwater by D. McNicoll, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, dated December 20, 1907—

The board doth order:

That the time specified in section 2 of the said order, No. 4124, dated December 10, be, and the same is hereby extended until the 15th day of January, 1908.

I waited quietly until the 15th of January before I raised the point and I should have raised it last week as I intended, but I thought that I would let the time run out and see what would happen. Last night I got another document but not signed by Mr. Killam :

January 16, 1908.

Re File 5320, Brockville connection.

Dear sir,—I inclose certified copy of order No. 4233, dated the 15th instant. This extension has been given on the understanding that the board will hear the parties on or before the 1st prox.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. D. CARTWRIGHT,

(Sgd.) M. E. BERNIER,
Deputy Chief Commissioner,
Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada

Notwithstanding the delays experienced by the mails and passengers, that is the action that is now taken by the railway board. I left home last Monday morning, came out on the train to the Grand Trunk line expecting that No. 4 would be on time, and when I got there I was informed she was 55 minutes late, but that No. 6 carrying the passengers and mails had arrived at Kingston on time and was going to be sent out ahead of No. 4. But they held the train at Kingston for 36 minutes as they have been doing every day. This mail train leaves Toronto at 7.45 a.m., but she remains at Kingston 36 minutes to allow No. 4 to pass her and go on to Brockville. The railway board ordered that on the 1st of January the same conditions should be put in force as existed before this change was made, and under the previous conditions No. 6 arrived at Brockville at 2.05 with the mails and passengers. But on Monday last the train was held at Kingston and she arrived at Brockville only at three o'clock. On board No. 4 and the train that followed it were my hon. friend from Belleville, my hon. friend from Brantford, and my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), besides some eight or ten other passengers. When we arrived at Brockville at three o'clock we found that the Canadian Pacific Railway train had left on its schedule time, although they had been telegraphed to hold their train. The Canadian Pacific Railway arrangement is to hold the train until 2.40, but knowing that our train would not arrive at 2.40, the Canadian Pacific Railway train left, and when our train got to Brockville the mails were thrown out on the platform as usual and left there to be brought to Ottawa next morning. On our train was a friend of the member for Kingston, I refer to Mr. Sullivan, who had a return ticket to Ottawa via Brockville. When he got to Brockville he asked the station master how he could get to Ottawa and he was told they were making arrangements for No. 4 to leave Brockville and connect for Ottawa at Cornwall Junction. Mr. Sullivan bought his ticket to Cornwall Junction, but the engine of No. 4 train which we were on broke down near Prescott and we stayed on the track for an hour until No. 6 came along and shunted us into Morrisburg. I telegraphed from Morrisburg to Cornwall to know if the train would be held as there were twelve passengers on board, but I got a reply that they would not wait for us. The engine of No. 6 was put on No. 4 and we started for Cornwall and when the conductor came along the gentleman from Kingston told him he had a ticket for Cornwall Junction to go to Ottawa, but the conductor said he would have to buy another ticket from Cornwall to Coteau. This gentleman then had to pay 90 cents for another ticket, and when he got to Coteau he had to pay $2.10 for his passage to Ottawa, thus purchasing three sets of tickets to reach here. Those who were on board that train arrived in Ottawa at 10.30 p.m. that night. I say that is a gross injustice. I spoke with the ex-Minister of the Interior Mr. (Sifton) on the matter, and as that hon. gentleman also experienced this inconvenience he said he would speak to the chairman of the Railway Commission as it was an awful state of affairs. I say it is time that the government took this commission by the throat. The Postmaster General should tell them that he is not going to allow the mails to be handled in this way. There is an easy remedy for all this. The board did issue an order that the remedy should commence on the 1st of January then they extended the order to the 15th of January, and now they say they will extend the delay again until the 1st of February when the railways can be heard. The Railway Commission seems to want to accommodate the railways and not the travelling public on the carriage of the mails. Formerly the mail train left Toronto at 7:45 a.m., it only stopped at Kingston a few minutes, and it remained at Brockville until No. 4 passed it. Then the mails from all the way stations between Toronto and Brockville were handed over to the Ottawa train and delivered at Ottawa, Smith's Falls, Carleton Place and all these other towns on the same day. The passengers were also accommodated and had direct connections under the former system. The Railway Board ordered that state of affairs to be restored, but the railways say they will do as they like, and they have been doing as they like, and these railway commissioners extend the time until they hear from them. I think it is the duty of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Railways to tell these gentlemen that they must enforce the law and make these railways accommodate the public to-morrow or to-day, and not on the 1st of February next. I brought this matter up at the opening of the session, and the Minister of Railways said that he would bring it to the attention of the Railway Board. The ex-Minister of the Interior with whom I discussed the matter at Brockville said it was a shameful state of affairs and that he also would bring it to the notice of the Railway Board and have it stopped. Surely it is high time that some one should stop it. It appears to be simply stubbornness on the part of the railways as neither one nor the other want to give way. I trust the Railway Commission will interfere even at this late date and promptly put an end to this inconvenience to the public.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Brandon). My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has mentioned my name in connection with the matter, and I desire to say a word or two. I have experienced the inconvenience he has referred to, and I have no hesitation in saying that the existing conditions are absolutely ridiculous and inexcusable. There is no reason at all why the railroads should make such an arrangement as is asked for. It actually seems as if the railway had figured out the time table in such a way as to prevent the passengers making the train connection they desire. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) spoke to me with regard to it once or twice, and I suggested to him that he should bring the matter before the Railway Commission, he being a representative of the constituency directly interested. It appears that the matter has been brought before the Railway Commission and that the Railway Commission has made the necessary order, but has been induced to extend the time. It may be that the railway companies have through their counsel made representations of a more or less one-sided character, and I would join with my hon. friend in suggesting that the Minister of Railways and the Postmaster General should send their representative to the Railway Commission and see that the necessary order is made to put an end to this grievance at once. It is in a sense a small grievance, but it is a very annoying one, and affects a great number of people who have necessarily to travel on these lines.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I am informed that this is the second time that this matter has been brought before the House this session by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor). On the first occasion I was not here. Last session also he brought the matter before the House. Then his grievance was not against my department but against the Railway Department or the Railway Commission. I understand that the necessary order has been made by the Railway Commission, but that the delay has continued, which makes the grievance of my hon. friend still greater. I would not like such a good-natured gentleman as my hon. friend to suffer from such a grievance any longer, and if he will do me the honour of calling at my office, I will call up the chief superintendent of the mail service, Mr. Armstrong, and we shall discuss the matter together, and I feel confident that we can settle it from the Post Office point of view. Then, as we are largely dependent on the Railway Commission for the connections of trains, I will accompany my hon. friend to the Railway Commission and see that the orders given formally are respected and enforced immediately. I cannot do more than that. I feel that there is a grievance and one which is very annoying. In such a settled district as that to which reference has been made, I feel that the postal service should be as perfect as it is in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). Some time ago, I brought to the attention of the Minister of Railways a matter similar to that which has been brought up by the hon. member for Leeds, in regard to the train running from Halifax to Montreal. Four miles east of Levis there is a junction called Harlaka Junction, where two trains pass within about five minutes of each other. The Halifax train, if on time, passes five minutes before the train of the Quebec Central. Therefore the Quebec Central train has to stop at Harlaka to let the Halifax train pass on to Levis, and does not leave Harlaka until the Halifax train has left Levis for Montreal. If passengers on the Quebec Central could make connection with the Halifax train, they could leave Levis at 12.55 p.m., and reach Ottawa at 10 p.m., on the same day; but as we cannot make the connection, we are obliged to wait until nine o'clock in the evening for a train for Montreal which reaches Montreal in the morning between three and five or six; so that we do not reach Ottawa till the next day at noon. The same thing happens to the mails. I spoke to the Minister of Railways some time ago, and he told me that he would have the matter attended to, but nothing was done. I went to see the Railway Commissioners the other day about it. They said that they had never heard a word of it, and that until the minister would give them the power to settle the question they could do nothing.

Mr. TALBOT. Might I ask the hon. member for Dorchester if it is not a fact that he reaches Levis by the Quebec Central in time to cross over to Quebec and take the Canadian Pacific Railway 1.45 train leaving Quebec every day ?

Mr. MORIN. Well, we will see about that. The Quebec Central train arrives at Levis, if on time, about one o'clock. Then one has to wait to cross the river at 1.30.

Mr. TALBOT. There is a boat at one o'clock.

Mr. MORIN. Well, the boat leaves Levis at one o'clock sharp, and if the train is two minutes late, you miss the boat. Then you have to take the ferry at half-past one. It takes ten or twelve minutes to cross. Then you have to get a hack to take you to the Canadian Pacific Railway station in a hurry, and when you do that, you are likely to have the same experience as I did once. I paid $2, and when I got there the train was gone. How does that suit you ? I want a reply from you now.

Mr. TALBOT. I suggest that the hon. gentleman travel in a four-in-hand then it will cost only a quarter.

Mr. MORIN. Well, you are sharper than I am.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course the railway service for passengers does not come within the purview of my department except incidentally, in connection with the railway mail service. But if the hon. member for Dorchester and the hon. member for Leeds will do me the honour of a visit to my office after Tuesday next—until then I shall be very much occupied with the Japanese question—I will do my very best to meet their wishes.

Mr. E. G. PORTER (West Hastings). I am very glad that the hon. member for Leeds has brought this matter to the attention of the House, as it is one of considerable importance at this particular time of the year, when the House is in session. It is a notorious fact that the Grand Trunk Railway west of Brockville passes through a section of the country that is very thickly populated, while the Canadian Pacific Railway passes through a section of country which is not so densely populated. The result is that there are a great many more people living along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway who require to travel by that route than there are along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, particularly between Toronto and Ottawa. If this were a matter affecting only members of parliament, I would not perhaps feel like urging so strongly that the train service of either of these railways should be changed; but it is a matter that affects the public generally. The large number of people who have business, and business of some importance, as well as members of parliament during the session of parliament, requiring to come to Ottawa, ought to be accommodated with the very best service, apart altogether from the transmission of the mails. What has been said by the hon. member for Leeds I can verify, having had the displeasure of travelling by that train on Monday last, and I do sincerely hope that the government will see that the Railway Commission take prompt action in this matter and that a suitable remedy is afforded.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE. SPEECH BY MR. CLAUDE MACDONELL, M.P.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (West Assiniboia). As a matter of privilege, I wish to refer to an item which appears in this morning's issue of the Ottawa 'Citizen', which is the Conservative organ in Ottawa. It is a report of an address made by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) before the Borden club in this city last night. The sentences to which I object are :

> As an example of how the government does things, the speaker——
> That is the hon. member for South Toronto—
> —went on to say that the Liberals have suddenly found out that there was a great frost in the Northwest, which had destroyed the seed wheat in that portion of the Dominion. The members from the west knew nothing about it, but the Liberals wanted a chance to corrupt the electors of the west, and so had passed a resolution on this plea, providing for the settlers out there free seed wheat or money. I think it will be given in money, and will be used for no other purpose than to win the votes of the less intelligent electors of the west, he said.

Mr. Speaker, there are in this two charges to which I wish to take exception. The first charge is that the members from the west knew nothing about this matter. While speaking yesterday I did not ventilate my own connection with it, but I wish to say that while in the west, less than a fortnight ago, I had interviews regarding this matter with different members of the government there. I had two interviews each of two hours' duration with the Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture, during one of which his deputy was present all the time, and the Deputy Attorney General was also present to advise in respect of the jurisdiction and powers of the local and Dominion governments. I also had an interview of two hours with the Hon. James A. Calder, the acting premier, and I object to this gentleman coming with the aroma of Toronto club life about him—and he is a gentleman for whom I have a great respect—I object to his coming from the great metropolis and without giving us an opportunity to say what we from the west knew about the matter, making a public anouncement that we knew nothing about it. I think that I may say my colleagues from the west have also full knowledge of this matter.

I take exception also to the charge that the motive of this suggestion is to corrupt the electors of the west, and to the statement that money will be paid to them for no other purpose than to influence them to vote Liberal. I shall not dwell on that, I regard that as a grave, a serious, and a savage charge. I know not whether the hon. gentleman has been correctly reported and whether my quarrel is with him or with the 'Citizen,' but as a matter of privilege I wish to say that that statement as far as I know, is absolutely incorect.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why did not my hon. friend read it from 'Hansard' and get a correct report instead of reading from a newspaper ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was at a public meeting and there was no 'Hansard.'

MEETINGS OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the adjourned meeting of the Public Accounts Committee which was to have been held to-day at eleven o'clock did not take place, and only a few moments ago I received a notice that a meeting would be held on Monday next. Monday is a most inconvenient time for such a meeting as many members do not arrive until the afternoon so that they cannot do some work that was intended. I inquired as to the reason for the adjournment and the only explanation I could find was from my friend Mr. Northrup, who tells me that he was asked by Sir Charles Ross if he would consent to an adjournment of this Friday meeting for some two weeks, Mr. Northrup stated to Sir Charles Ross that he had no right whatever to decide that the committee should adjourn. He was then further asked if he would raise any objection himself, and as I understood him he said that, so far as he was concerned, he would not raise any objection, that it was a matter for the committee to decide ; and I think my friend Mr. Northrup said that the chairman of the committee asked him the same question and he replied in the same way except that he insisted that if the chairman did assume the responsibility of adjourning the committee, his case must come first when it was called again. As I understand, the chairman, on these grounds, adjourned the committee until Monday. My grievance is that the meeting should have been called to-day as arranged. There was other business to be done in addition to the special matter that was to come up. Some members have motions to move, that could have been taken up and the result is that these matters are delayed. If Sir Charles Ross wished an adjournment the committee should decide whether it was necessary to make a further adjournment in so far as that matter is concerned. I do not think the chairman or any member of the committee should, without the committee being called together, assume the responsibility of adjourning the committee to a date which suits the convenience of others who are not members of the committee.

I would say further, that in that committee the other day the members of the government almost decided that there should be only two meetings per week for the balance of the session. That means about sixteen hours per month, or about forty-eight hours during the session, is all the time that will be allowed that committee to investigate an expenditure of $100,000,000. When we consider that about one-half of that time is taken up by lawyers on each side discussing whether a witness should be allowed to answer questions or not, little time is left to obtain answers from witnesses, and I figure that if the government insists on only two days per week we will have only about forty-eight hours to investigate the whole accounts of the past year. I hope this will not be insisted on, but that we will have the same number of meetings that we have had in the past. Of course the question has been raised that this interferes with other committee meetings. I quite realize that, but still this is an important matter and I hope the government will see that the decision arrived at will not be adhered to, and that we shall have as many meetings as possible during the present session.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). With regard to the meeting to-day which was not held, I thought there would have been a meeting, as the committee formally adjourned on Wednesday until Friday. I went to the committee room at 11 o'clock expecting a meeting of the committee, but found no quorum present, not even my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid).

Apparently, however, there had been some misunderstanding, because the clerk did not send out notices for a meeting to-day. I do not know whether it is customary to send out notices where there has been an adjournment to a definite time. But certainly the committee had adjourned from Wednesday until to-day and I expected a meeting and the transaction of business. But, as there was no quorum, of course, nothing was done. Regarding the Ross rifle matter, of which the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has charge, that hon. gentleman was consulted by Mr. Nesbitt, acting as counsel for the Ross rifle people and Sir Charles Ross, and was willing, in view of the inconvenience involved in going on with the matter to-day, to postpone it, but he did not wish to lose his right of way. It was found that the evidence on the Ross rifle matter could not be completed to-day, but that, with the number of witnesses called, it would require at least two days to finish. So the hon. member (Mr. Northrup) was willing to fix it for Monday, but the expectation was that it would go on Tuesday also. On Wednesday the committee takes up another matter, and Friday is fixed for still another. So for the convenience of all it was arranged to hear the witnesses on the Ross rifle matter on Monday and Tuesday. That is, so far, the committee has arranged for meetings for four days of next week. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) is justified in suggesting that the committee is not making pretty good progress. We met once this week and have arranged to meet four times next week. I would not undertake to adjourn the committee of my own motion, but I think that under the circumstances it can hardly be said that the chairman is to be blamed.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. H. Clarke) hardly puts the matter quite fairly to hon. members when he speaks of a want of a quorum. I was in the committee room before eleven o'clock, before the chairman himself got there, and was told, before the chairman arrived, that the meeting had been put off. Several other gentlemen who came were told the same thing. I met several at the door on leaving the room and told them the same. But for this belief that the meeting had been put off, there would have been a quorum.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke) a question. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) told me last night that the chairman had agreed that the meeting should be postponed until Monday is that true or is it not ?

Mr. CLARKE. I did not understand so, but evidently the clerk of the committee did understand so. When I left the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) I understood that the committee would meet for other business, but not for the Ross rifle business.

Mr. BRISTOL. I understand that no notice was sent out of the meeting for to-day?

Mr. CLARKE. No.

Mr. BRISTOL. I may say that I heard in a casual way that there would be no meeting of the committee. I think that notice should have been sent out in the usual way that the committee was going to go on with business.

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, I think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was a member of the committee for a number of years, and my recollection is that, even when the meeting was adjourned to a specified day, it was the invariable practice to send out notices to remind members of the meeting. The fact that no notices were sent out in this case would lead me to believe that it must have been understood by the chairman or some one else that the meeting was postponed. Under the circumstances I think it was hardly fair to reproach my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid)——

Mr. CLARKE. I was not reproaching him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It sounded very much like it.

Mr. CLARKE. I was only chaffing him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought that such was the case, but perhaps it would be better not to have too much chaff in these serious matters. I think it would be very desirable indeed to persevere in any meetings of that committee that have been arranged. Neither Sir Charles Ross, nor counsel for Sir Charles Ross, nor any member of the committee has the slightest right to postpone the meetings of the committee by arrangement between themselves. I think that is a proposition in which every hon. member will fully concur. If that committee has decided to meet on a particuar day there is only one power that can change that decision and that power rests in the committee. And notices should be sent out in the usual way without regard to private understandings between a few members of the committee, or between members of the committee and the counsel who may have some interests to be considered. If that rule is persevered in, there will be no difficulty. But if not, we are likely to have a little friction with regard to these matters, and that, of course, is undesirable.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I meant to rise after my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles) had spoken, but was forestalled by my hon. colleague from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). I think it is only just to the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell), who is not here to speak for himself, to say that the report given of his remarks at the meeting referred to does not convey the meaning of those remarks, but that he——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. A. Johnston) seems somewhat skeptical. He would like to make a little political capital out of this incident. I was at the meeting, and as a matter of fact I was informed by the chairman of the meeting that no 'Citizen' reporter was present. Of course, I do not know that such was the case. But I can say that the statement made by the hon. member for South Toronto was much the same as that made by hon. members who spoke on the subject yesterday afternoon, and that was, not that the money was going to be used for no other purpose than to corrupt the electorate, but he said it was a remarkable discussion inasmuch as it created the impression that there was a great necessity for seed grain and yet so many hon. members who spoke expressed ignorance of there being any such need. And he said, as was said here yesterday, that most likely the government would use this as a political lever to secure votes as well as to purchase grain. That was stated on the floor of the House, and no more was stated by the hon. member for South Toronto. I think it is only right that in the absence of the hon. gentleman I should make that explanation.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL—PURCHASE OF TIES IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter that has been laid before me in correspondence with respect to the operation of contractors on one division of the Grand Trunk Pacific in the northwestern part of this province. I think I can best introduce what I wish to say by reading an extract from the Beaudette 'Regime.' The town of Beaudette is on the Minnesota side of the Rainy river, directly opposite the town of Rainy River, on the Canadian Northern Railway. This newspaper says:

Tamarack against wheat.—Figures talk.

Would it not surprise you that a stretch of territory along the Rainy river and the Canadian Northern Railway in Minnesota, will sell more than $500,000 worth of timber this winter? Out of this, one firm alone will buy stuff to the extent of $250,000. Talk about your farm lands ranging in price from $50 to $100 per acre. They never yield a proportionately bountiful crop. Frost, water, drought and hail do not seem to 'phase' the hardly tamarack and cedar. Speaking of the Grand Trunk Pacific contractors, Crocket & Tharle, of Port Arthur, and Lewis Foss, their local agent, we submit the following facts:

Including the territory around Beaudette and Warroad, and all the stations of Roosevelt, Williams, Cedar Spur, Graceton and Pitt, they will have nearly 300,000 tamarack and cedar ties, and about 350,000 posts. On the American side of the Rainy they have contracts for 75,000 ties, and half a million railway fence posts. Hence in the territory previously referred to they will have about 365,000 ties, and about 825,000 posts, representing a value of a quarter million dollars turned loose among our settlers and local population. This, from the firm of Crocket & Tharle alone. The lumber industry is a great factor in producing revenue in this country, but we are not dependent on it alone. The figures just submitted, together with what is sold outside of this firm, eclipses anything the lumber interests can produce during a season.

Beaudette alone will ship timber, such as ties, posts, poles and cordwood, which will have a market value of at least $50,000. There have been threats of hard times, but with such an influx of money, and such comparatively heavy exports, it is bound to leave a heavy trade balance in favour of the border territory of Minnesota. We are not ashamed to hold these facts and figures up for public inspection. They can easily be verified. We are proud of the results obtained by the people living up on the oft despised frontier, and are pleased to compare notes with the good farmers who have secured excellent results from farming, and especially diversified farming and dairying. But our settlers should bear in mind that the timber will soon be cut away, and they must look to the soil for support. So it would be well to tuck away a handsome bunch of money to tide you over the transitory period between the times you are timber farmers, and grain and grass farmers.

That is what the Beaudette 'Region,' published in Minnesota said about the matter. My attention has also been called to an extract from the same paper which appeared in the Fort Frances 'Times' on December 26th, 1907, which I will read:

Last Tuesday the largest timber deal that has been put through in this part of the country was consummated at Roosevelt some 18 miles west of this village. As is well known, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is buying large quantities of ties and fence posts in this state on which to lay their rails and fence their way on their onward march across the Canadian plains to the far west Pacific. There must be some reason for their coming into this little neck of Minnesota to do their shipping. The contract for this material calls for 125,000 ties of standard sizes, and 150,000 fence posts 8 feet long with at least a five-inch top. This contract was assumed by Norquist Brothers & Cones, and Maloney Brothers who will furnish Messrs. Crockett & Tharle, Grand Trunk Pacific contractors, with this material. Their agent here is Lewis Foss, formerly of Wisconsin, and he has been letting several large contracts around here. The people who agree to furnish this material are good substantial business men at Williams and Roosevelt. They have sent to Roseau and Stephen for fifty teams, and will employ about 200 men. They are expected to deliver this material at Williams and Roosevelt before June 1, 1908.

It is well to remember this is no small undertaking, as it will require 700 freight cars and about 15 large freight trains to haul this material, and that the timber represents the snug value of about $65,000. These men now have 27,000 ties and 25,000 posts cut, which will be moved with the first snowfall.

It is not expected that strangers would know the shipping extent of these oft despised 'jerkwater' towns along the Canadian Northern in Minnesota, but it will make their eyes bulge with surprise when they learn authoritatively that several million dollars worth of stuff have been shipped from them into Canada and points in the states since the construction of the railroad. Few people realize there is more stuff shipped into Beaudette every year than into any other town between Winnipeg and Port Arthur, with the possible exception of Fort Frances, Ontario.

This article also is an extract from the Beaudette paper in Minnesota. Now it does seem to me that in the construction of the National Continental Railway through the Dominion of Canada, a railway every foot of which the Prime Minister declared was to be built through Canadian territory, regard should be had to the country in which those materials are purchased. All this material in Northwestern Ontario is peculiarly capable of providing for the construction of that railway. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) knows very well that all this material grows most bountifully in that part of the country. Cedar, tamarack and spruce timber are very abundant in Northwestern Ontario, and if there was a great demand for that class of timber for the construction of this road, surely it should have been purchased from Canadians who own timber along the shores of the Rainy River, just as accessible as the Minnesota timber, and that timber should have been used by the contractors, and their money should have been spent in Canada instead of in Minnesota. I have only the facts which are contained in the two clippings from the Minnesota paper which I have just read; and if the facts are as there stated, it seems to me that it is incumbent upon the Railway Commission to look into the matter, and see that Canadian resources and Canadian men are being employed in the construction of this road. I think also that the contractors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway are not permitted by the terms of their contract to purchase in the United States material which can be got in Canada upon the same terms. I think in future some restrictions should be placed upon the making of contracts for the supply of materials, as well as for the engagement of men, so that Canadians may get the benefit in both respects.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I regret I have not a personal knowledge of the matter which would enable me to add much to what my hon. friend has said. It is clearly a case in which further information is required before we can make up our minds. I learned from what the hon. gentleman said that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, in their efforts to obtain ties, are purchasing them in the country along the line of the Canadian Northern. A portion of the Canadian Northern runs through the State of Minnesota. I suppose what has happened is that they are buying ties on both sides of the line. Now, if there is an abundant supply of ties on the Canadian side, and they can be obtained at reasonable prices, unquestionably they should be bought in Canada. I know in a general way that the price of ties has advanced very much during the last two or three years, and great difficulty has been experienced by railway companies in obtaining the ties. Though I have no knowledge of this matter, I almost venture to surmise that the fact probably is that the contractors have bought all the Canadian ties they could get and now have to look elsewhere. Now, it is desirable that the ties should be purchased in Canada, but what is more important and more desirable is that the ties should be obtained, and that quickly, and if they cannot be obtained in sufficient quantity in Canada, nobody can object if the contractors purchase ties along the line of the Canadian Northern where that line runs in the United States. I hope the facts will show that ties which are available in Canada are being purchased in Canada, and that only those which are not available in Canada have been bought from the United States. That ought to be the condition. But if that is not the fact, if there is an abundant supply on the Canadian side and contractors are importing from the United States, there certainly would be good cause for complaint.

Mr. J. CONMEE (Thunder Bay). If my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) would use his influence with the Ontario government, with whom he is very friendly, I think he would probably do more good than by appealing to this government. Let him use his influence to persuade the Ontario government to change their policy and to give better facilities to the Canadian settler on the Canadian side of the line to furnish those materials, instead of putting them beyond their reach. If he will do this, he will have accomplished something for the settlers in the Rainy River district. The conditions are most favourable to the Canadian settler, he is closer to the point where these supplies are needed. The natural interest of the contractor will be to buy his ties in the cheapest market and buy them in Canada if he can.

Mr. BOYCE. The contractors themselves are Americans.

Mr. CONMEE. Some of them are. I suppose that Americans may be engaged sometimes in this line of contracts, but they are sub-contractors and not original contractors and my information is that there are some ties—I regret it very much—being purchased on the American side. The Rainy river is the boundary between the state of Minnesota and the province of Ontario in that section. The railway skirts the river on the Canadian side and crosses it at a certain point in the state of Minnesota, and crosses back again into the province of Manitoba before it reaches Winnipeg so that they have considerable mileage in that state. No doubt a good many ties are being purchased there but Canadians are placed at no disadvantage in regard to the supply of timber and of lumber or in regard to facilities for shipment. The only difference is that on the American side of the boundary ties can be obtained cheaper because the stumpage is less there than it is on this side.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the difference in the stumpage between Ontario and the state of Minnesota ?

Mr. CONMEE. As I understand it it is about ten cents a tie. In the province of Ontario the government charge from 10 to 15 cents a tie, if I am not mistaken. I am not certain as to the price but I know it is ten cents per tie. When the change of government took place they refused to grant permits at all, and therefore a lot of the Canadian contractors were thrown out because they could not obtain ties at all. That sort of thing continued for over a year. Later, I believe, the government issued some permits but they have still kept the price up. I am not quarrelling with them; I am not criticising them; that is their business. If they choose to put up the price I am not particularly criticising the action, but I am pointing out that this is the cause of what has taken place.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend know that that is the case ?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I quite understand the whole question. I know all about handling ties and know something of the conditions on the American side. The American government do not charge stumpage. The settler may take off the ties. Under the Ontario regulations he is not allowed to take off except where he is clearing until he gets his patent. I am not quarrelling with that at all but I am pointing out the difference between the Canadian and American regulations as the reason for the condition to which my hon. friend refers. We have had manufactured every year fifty or seventy-five million feet of lumber from logs got from American territory. That was not done because the lumbermen, who are all Canadians, desired to operate on the American side but because they could get these logs cheaper.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether this timber has been purchased from the American government or from individuals ?

Mr. CONMEE. I think it is nearly all purchased from individuals.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. CONMEE. But their law gives the settler the right to the timber. When he settles upon the land he becomes the owner of the timber and everything belonging to the land. In the case of the Ontario settler he has not that right; merchantable pine is reserved even after he gets his patent.

Mr. BOYCE. Would the hon. gentleman tell me whether there is not as much timber to be acquired on the Canadian side, leaving aside the question of stumpage, as there is on the American side?

Mr. CONMEE. I think there is an ample supply on the Canadian side. There is this condition, however, these ties are not going to be used in the construction of a railway in Ontario, and I doubt if they are going into the construction of a railway even in Manitoba. They are going into the construction of a railway on the prairies of the west. There is ample timber in Ontario not only to supply the road through the province, but through the west as well if the same facility existed for getting it out. We have not got all the transportation facilities that will enable us to utilize that timber, but nevertheless there is no doubt that there does exist on the Canadian side sufficient timber within reach if the regulations of one government were as liberal as those of another.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the same conditions exist to-day under the Whitney government as those which existed when my hon. friend's friends were in power and which he supported then?

Mr. CONMEE. No, my hon. friend is not quite right in that assumption.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think so.

Mr. CONMEE. No. The stumpage on ties has gone up, under the present administration, to more than double. When in opposition they were opposed to the granting of permits and when they came into power they tried earnestly to carry out that policy. I am not criticising them. This is not the place for me to quarrel with their policy, but they tried to carry it out. Their friends broke them down in that and they had to issue permits notwithstanding their supposed policy. But, they have kept the stumpage up, I am not going to argue whether they are right or wrong, but I tell my hon. friend that that is the main reason for the purchasing of these ties on the other side, and if he wants to help the settlers in Rainy River he should interview his friends at Toronto and persuade them that their policy is wrong and that they should reduce the stumpage so that their Canadian timber can be utilized for this purpose. I hope my hon. friend will do that.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman says that he is familiar with the facts. Does he know that these contractors have applied to the Ontario government for permits to cut ties and that they have been met with these adverse conditions of which he complains ?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I have quite a knowledge of that. I have had a considerable correspondence with some of the settlers in Rainy River and in other places; in fact, I have had a good deal to do with advising these men because they used to correspond with me when I happened to represent that district in the legislature and for some reason they write to me still. They are not doing so much of it now as they did last year, but I have a number of letters in regard to these matters now. These letters, amongst other things, have reference to the regulations of the Ontario government in regard to the cutting of the timber and which I have stated correctly. There is no doubt but that is the reason coupled with the further reason of the better facilities which are afforded for the transportation of these ties.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like to correct a statement that my hon. friend has made with regard to the rate of stumpage on railway ties. Did he not say that the rate was from ten to twelve cents ?

Mr. CONMEE. I said it was ten cents and over. I think on tamarack and some other classes it is as high as fifteen cents.

Mr. BOYCE. That is cut on Crown lands?

Mr. CONMEE. Cut on Crown lands.

Mr. BOYCE. In order to correct the hon. gentleman I will read the following notification issued by the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines :

Department of Lands, Forests and Mines,
Woods and Forests Branch,
Toronto, May 7, 1906.

Notice is hereby given that by authority of order in council of this date, the dues on railway ties cut upon licensed lands of the Crown have been increased from two to five cents per tie, said increase to take effect from the first day of May, 1906.

F. COCHRANE, Minister.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is referring to a regulation which is not in force in Thunder bay and Rainy River. That applies to some eastern point.

Mr. BOYCE. It is applicable to the whole of Ontario.

Mr. CONMEE. No, a line is drawn at the boundary between the districts of Nipissing and Algoma. That was always the case. That was the case with the previous government. They charged about double in the west because the ties were going not into the construction of railways in the province of Ontario; they were going into the construction of railways in Manitoba and other western districts. You will not get them at as low a rate in the west as you will in the east.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not understand it in that way.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, that is correct.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Astronomical Observatory, $15,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The appropriation last year was $13,000 and I am asking for a revote of $12,000, the additional amount being only $3,000. The amount is required for the erection of a building for the accommodation of the cœlostat, one of the most important instruments in the observatory ; and for some other buildings. When the improvements are completed they will embrace a residence for Dr. King, director of the observatory. However, that will not be proceeded with at present, or if it is an amount will have to be taken in the supplementary estimates. The present vote is probably all that will be expended in the coming year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. O'Leary and Mr. Whalen, of Ottawa. It was let by contract after public advertisement ; the total of the contract was $13,900.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does that include the whole work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was for the cœlostat house and standardizing building and amounted to $13,900. Then there was heating apparatus $1,000, and electric wiring $500.

Mr. J. D. REID. What was paid to date ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the exact amount paid to date but it has not been very large.

Mr. J. D. REID. The item had better stand then.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect will be here shortly and he will have that information.

Mr. TAYLOR. When this item is again taken up I would like the minister to be able to give me some information. Yesterday I asked if Mr. J. M. Menzies was employed in connection with the Dominion observatory, and if so, had he made a report of the work done for 1907, and the reply was that he had made reports. I would like to have these reports.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The administration of the observatory does not come under my department.

Mr. FIELDING. You are a builder.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All my department has to do is to erect and furnish the buildings, and then the management is under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR. At page 1405 of the unrevised 'Hansard' the minister will find the statement that four towers had been erected in connection with Mr. Menzie's reconnaissance, and I want to get his report.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will repeat the question when the chief architect is here I will endeavour to get the information.

Ottawa Royal Mint, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who were the contractors for this building and what was the original estimate of the government as to the total cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The original estimate was made two or three years ago and my hon. friend would hardly expect that I should have it here now.

Mr. J. D. REID. Oh, yes; that information is always given; there is no question but that we should have it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend does not understand that I have refused to give the information.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get it from the chief architect. I can give my hon. friend some information in regard to the matter while we are waiting for the chief architect. The total expenditure to the 30th November, 1907, is $403,052.76.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the building completed, or is there any more work to be done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will take about $30,000 to finish the work.

Mr. DANIEL. What will be the total cost when all the bills are in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including the fence, guard-houses, furniture, machinery, site and everything, the total cost will be $509,701.76.

Mr. DANIEL. Does that include all machinery that is used in connection with coining?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is my information.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I ask the hon. minister where he gets the information, and who is now acting as his deputy or assistant deputy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information I am now giving has been furnished to me by the officer of the department whose duty it is to make up the statements. This would be obtained from the Chief Architect, Mr. Ewart.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is acting as Deputy Minister in the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. James B. Hunter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then there is a change of Minister and Deputy Minister at the same time. What has become of Mr. Gobeil?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is still Deputy, but has leave of absence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has he been or is he going to be superannuated at an early date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has applied for superannuation and the request has been acceded to.

Mr. TAYLOR. A man in the prime of life.

Mr. BARR. What is his age?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not quite sure, but I think something under sixty.

Mr. BOYCE. Is the application made on the ground of failing health?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the ground of ill health, accompanied by a medical certificate which made out a strong case for superannuation.

Mr. BARR. Has Mr. Hunter been permanently appointed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is appointed Acting Deputy Minister.

Mr. BARR. How long has he occupied that position?

Mr. PUGSLEY. His appointment dates from the 1st January, 1908.

Mr. BARR. How long has he been in the service?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Since the fall of 1899.

Mr. BARR. Has he passed the Civil Service examination?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As he is a graduate of the University of Toronto, the law does not require him to pass the Civil Service examination. But he has passed the usual promotion examinations.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister has not made it clear whether the $30,000 required to finish the work is in addition to this vote of $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that it will take an additional grant of $30,000 to complete the building, and in that $30,000 is included the $25,000 we are now asking for.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you not take the other $5,000 ?

Mr. BOYCE. I cannot make out how $403,000 and $30,000 added together will make $509,000, which the hon. gentleman says is to be the total cost. The hon. gentleman had better look at his arithmetic again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman will take all the figures, he will see that my arithmetic is quite correct. The total expenditure up to the 30th of November, 1907, was $403,052.76 ; the assumed expenditure for the current year to the 31st March, 1908, will be $51,649. Add to that the revote applied for in the main estimates, $25,000, making $479,701.76. In addition to that there will be $30,000 required. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was right in the suggestion that we should add the $30,000 to the $25,000 we are now asking for.

Mr.. HAGGART. Why have you not a vote for that $30,000 in the main estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not thought it necessary to ask for it for the present, but no doubt we will have to ask for it a little later on in accordance with the usual practice.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why could not the correct amount have been asked for in the first place ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the main estimates are made up, going through a great many hundreds of items, care is used to ask for what it is supposed will be required. After the main estimates are made up it may appear that a further amount is necessary, and in this case it is supposed that it will require $30,000 more than is provided for in the main estimates.

Mr. PERLEY. Are the estimates so inaccurate that a few weeks after they are made up the officers of the department find that $25,000 more will be required ?

Mr. FIELDING. These estimates, although recently brought down, have been prepared more than a few weeks ago. The preparation of estimates begins in the departments a considerable time before parliament meets. The department is only too anxious to ask for the full amount required and it is the business of the Finance Minister, if he can, to carve it down. Very often the minister in charge of the department would be glad to have the whole amount but sometimes the Minister of Finance puts on the brakes and it has to be voted later.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Finance has put the brakes on pretty early on the Minister of Public Works who is a new minister.

Mr. FIELDING. This applies to all the ministers.

Mr. J. D. REID. My claim is that the main estimates should state the whole amount that will be required, instead of having this later estimate of $30,000. These estimates are deceiving both to the House and to the public generally.

Mr. FIELDING. Then every estimate submitted to parliament is open to the same criticism.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Finance Minister knows that $55,000 has to be spent. Did the Minister of Public Works say to the Minister of Finance that $55,000 had to be spent ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember, I know that they all said they would be glad to have more.

Mr. J. D. REID. Would the minister let us know the estimate of the officers of his department when the contract was let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not it with me, but I shall furnish it the next day we go into Committee of Supply. My hon. friend I think, is a little unfair to me when he says I was deceiving the House.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not say that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the contrary I took the utmost precaution that neither the committee nor the country would be deceived, because I stated we would probably require $30,000 more to entirely complete the building. This iron fence is entirely new, something never contemplated at all and it is only comparatively recently that it was found that the imperial authorities required it should be constructed.

Mr. HAGGART. If the minister has not the original estimate, the item should stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have brought the usual information that has been given year after year. It has not been customary to have in the memorandum furnished to the minister a statement of the originally estimated cost. That information has been given and will be found in the 'Hansard.'

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister may be speaking on information furnished to him, but he is entirely incorrect. On every occasion, the estimate of cost is furnished to the House. It may be furnished again and again in consecutive years, and he ought to have it in his memoranda.

Mr. BRISTOL. As far as I am concerned, I should like more light on this item than the minister appears able to afford us. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) told us that he had to put the brakes on the Minister of Public Works and other ministers——

Mr. FIELDING. On the whole of them.

Mr. BRISTOL. Considering that the Minister of Public Works is a new minister and that his estimates are $1,700,000 more than similar estimates of last year the Finance Minister appears to have been justified in the action in this instance.

Mr. FIELDING. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) who sits next to my hon. friend (Mr. Bristol) says that I put the brakes on too severely.

Mr. BRISTOL. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) beside me has said nothing of the kind.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, he said that I was unkind.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not say that. I said that the minister should not deceive the public by not publishing the full amount.

Mr. BRISTOL. All I can say is that if this statement that $55,000 is really needed, is correct, we can only wonder what would have been the expenditure had not the Minister of Finance put on the brakes. And what would have been the general result had not the Finance Minister put on the brakes when $1,700,000 more is asked for by the new Minister of Public Works than we asked for last year on the same estimates? At all events, the hon. minister is able to say that he leads the whole administration, in that he asks more money proportionately than any other member of the government. I suppose it is a desirable thing in itself that Canada should coin its own money. But, if I am correctly informed—and I would like to know the facts—it cost Canada about $30,000 a year to get her money coined in England. But we have spent about $500,000 or more on this building, and we are told that it will cost $100,000 a year to run the establishment. So it will cost us about $130,000 a year to enjoy the luxury of coining our money in Canada. A thing may be desirable in itself, but it may be a question whether it is well to go ahead under existing conditions and complete and outfit a building the result of which will be a loss of $100,000 a year, in order that the Finance Minister and the government may say that we are coining our own money. It looks as if they might better hand the building over to be used as a public museum for the benefit of the public, instead of saddling upon the people this method of coining money at a cost of $100,000 over what it costs us to get our money coined to-day.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bristol) wants to raise the question of the desirability of having our coins minted in Canada, he must go back a few years. We have many measures of a controversial nature, but I am glad to say that the legislation for the establishment of this branch of the Royal Mint was passed unanimously in this House; and the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bristol) leader approved it from time to time, and hon. members on both sides have joined the government in taking credit for this important step in our national life. Now, the hon. member (Mr. Bristol) seems to be seized with a desire for cheapness. I must say I am surprised at that, for we are accustomed to hear hon. gentleman on the other side accuse us of mistaken efforts at cheapness. We could get our currency notes made for less in England than we have to pay to have them printed here in Ottawa. But years ago, the predecessors of the present government, for good reasons, and with the full assent of this House, determined that the notes should be printed in Ottawa. I hope that, even from the point of view of economy, it will be shown that the establishing here of a branch of the Royal Mint is a satisfactory transaction. In any case, it is too late to raise that point, for parliament unanimously decided that this should be done. I am glad to say that we have the best equipped mint, I believe, in the world. It is not the largest, of course. But I rejoice to be able to say that, by arrangement with the imperial authorities, and by co-operation with men of experience and knowledge and skill in this branch of work, we have as perfect a machine for our coinage as can be found in the wide world to-day. And, even though we may not save money as by sending orders to have our coinage made in England, the government is ready to take the responsibility and to say that this is one of the things of which this government and this parliament may speak with pride.

Mr. BRISTOL. I do not think I had the honour to be a member of the House when this matter was discussed. Of course, we are talking about a business matter in a business way. I raised the question mainly that we might have the pleasure of hearing the Minister of Finance explain, as he has done, why we should spend $100,000 more than we formerly spent, for the luxury of coining our own money. I think it is fair to say that if the estimates brought in for the mint were only about half of the actual cost, and the leader of the opposition and other hon. members of this House thought it worth while to agree with the government on this particular question, I assume that it was on the basis of the statement of the government that it would not cost more than a certain amount named. But we find that it has cost twice as much.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not remember the estimate——

Mr. BRISTOL. We will get it.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. Of course, it is a perfectly proper subject of discussion. But, even if the cost were greater than the estimate, I cannot see that that would make any difference. Every body knows that all public works, in recent years, have cost a great deal more than before. And it is so in the affairs of private life as well. The cost of material, the cost of labour, the cost of every thing that entered into the construction of a building has greatly increased within the last five years. And, if an estimate were brought here of the cost, brought here in good faith, an estimate made by skilled officers, approved by the veteran chief architect of the Public Works Department, whose competence and integrity no man on either side of the House will question, and if afterwards we find that the increased cost of labour and material causes the expenditure to be increased, the only thing that we can do is frankly acknowledge the fact and give the reason.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the hon. minister knows that a contract was given for that building, and yet he will find that the amount spent is far in excess of the original contract. Surely there are officers of the government who are qualified to make an estimate of what any building will cost, and surely they follow the usual custom in these matters of adding a percentage to cover unforeseen charges. In my experience in listening to the explanation of estimates and expenditures in this committee, it is quite the common thing to find that the expenditure has been double the amount of the original contract. And it is in the Public Works Department, apparently that this occurrs more often than in any other. There is no question that, if the estimate given by the Minister of Finance, the hon. gentleman who first mentioned this matter of a mint, had been the amount which we are now told will be necessary, no question could have been raised about it. But when he comes here two or three years after the original estimate was communicated to us, and says that double the amount has been spent on this item, I think we have good reason to complain, and so have the public good reason to complain.

Mr. BRISTOL. The criticism of the Minister of Finance would be reasonable if the work had been done by day labour during the last five or six years. But I understand that it was done by contract, and therefore it is immaterial to this House how much the prices paid by the contractor may have gone up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a matter of fact the cost has not been more than was estimated by the chief architect, in fact not as much. He informs me that the estimate for the building and fence around it was $350,000. As a matter of fact, the contract price was, for the building $263,194, and for the fence $43,529, or a total of $306,723. The additional cost has been made up of other items of which, the chief architect says, he did not make an estimate. The amount paid for the site was $21,250.

Other amounts were paid out as follows:—To contractors, $259,520. Then for wiring, electric motors, transformers, switchboards, &c., $49,461; for machinery, tools, oil, furnaces, tanks, $28,802; elevators, $4,143; bolt doors, $3,050; materials and labour, $10,537; steam heating, $9,139; valuation of site, printing, contract for fencing and guard house, $43,529; concrete foundation and gates, $6,471; advertising, travelling expenses, $17,148. The total amount expended is $403,052. There are some balances due on various accounts, which bring the total up to $509,701.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the area of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is nearly 300 feet square.

Mr. BENNETT. And the fence is to cost $40,000 to inclose it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes the guard houses.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the respective cost of the fence and the guard house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is all one contract. The chief architect tells me that as near as may be, he estimates the guard houses at about $14,000, and the rest for the fence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has a stone foundation, with an iron superstructure.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. I noticed in a paper some time ago that the mint could not be opened at the time it was first suggested owing to the fact that the imperial authorities demanded that a fence be put around it. Is that the case?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that is the case.

Mr. BENNETT. How high is the fence?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a twelve-foot fence, and is permanent in character, and one which the imperial authorities required should be constructed before the mint could be opened.

Mr. BENNETT. As the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) comes from a part of the country where there is considerable stone, he can tell his constituents when he goes back that this economical government has constructed a fence which costs in round figures $250 a running foot.

Mr. FIELDING. As it was constructed according to public tender and contract, I do not see how the hon. gentleman can complain, unless he may say that it was not necessary to have so substantial a fence. It has been constructed under arrangements made with the imperial authorities, who desired that it should conform in some respects to their practice with regard to their mint. They regard the mint as an institution that can hardly be considered as an ordinary factory. I suppose they would have been content if we had put a high stone wall around it, with a row of broken glass bottles on top of it, as we sometimes see in England. But we have some sense of beauty over here, and we thought that if we could give a substantial fence and at the same time make it an ornament to the city, it was a legitimate thing to do. The whole thing was managed by the Public Works Department, and I have no reason to doubt that the work was well done, and at a reasonable price. If it is of a substantial character, it is to be remembered that mints everywhere are of a substantial character.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who were the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sullivan and Langdon, of Kingston. They are the contractors for the fence as well. With regard to the site, I may say that the land was bought from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We asked them to name the price and they wanted something more than what was finally paid, I think $23,000. But after examining the matter carefully we thought it better to make them an offer of $21,500, instead of going to the trouble of expropriating the land.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who prepared the plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ewart, the chief architect.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to get the details of the item for printing, advertising, and clerk of construction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not mind getting the details.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the minister should have something to say with regard to the retirement of Mr. Gobeil, the past deputy head of the Public Works Department. Now, Mr. Gobeil is only 54 years of age, and I am sure that any gentleman who sees Mr. Gobeil walking around the city with such a sprightly step, will wonder why he was retired. They will wonder to think that a young man—because, at 54 years of age Mr. Gobeil is still a young man—will be walking around the city of Ottawa and elsewhere and will be costing this country, I hope, for a good many years to come, $2,800 a year for superannuation. I think the hon. Minister of Finance will agree that after 35 years in the service he will receive 70 per cent of his present salary which will amount to $2,800 a year. How is the government going to justify the fact that a man in the prime of life is discarded and cast to one side in order to meet, what?—political exigencies. The trouble has been that the government had three vacancies from the province of Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As we are discussing a gentleman who is not here to speak for himself I would like to ask, does the hon. gentleman claim to speak with any authority when he says that Mr. Gobeil was discarded or retired against his will and in the prime of life ?

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I will use the word 'retired' instead of 'discarded' if that will suit the minister better. I sympathize with the minister. He is the victim of circumstances. There were three vacancies from the province of Ontario. Of the senatorships, the vacancy left by the death of Dr. Casgrain was given to Mr. Belcourt on the ground of nationality. Then there were two other places to be dealt with. Mr. Daniel Derbyshire had a seat to sell in Brockville and he made an arrangement——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the point of order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think that language should be used ; it is wanting in respect to the other House.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, you will have to take some other hon. gentlemen to task in this House who wish to obliterate the Senate altogether as do my two hon. friends, the member from South Perth (Mr. McIntyre) and the member from South Grey (Mr. Miller).

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. That is not quite correct in my case.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, they want to make great improvements on them at all events. I do not think that will be considered very hard to do in regard to the Senate. I do not say that they are a useless body. It is true that there are some gentlemen who go in there at the prime of life, like Mr. Carmichael, who entered the Senate at about 90 years of age, and like Mr. Ross, the former member for Cape Breton, who was appointed after he had seen some eighty odd summers. This was the dilemma that the government found themselves in; they wanted a minister. The present hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) had to get a seat and it was a case of, presto Mr. Derbyshire who was formerly the member for Brockville in this House, went into the Senate and the Hon. Mr. Graham came into this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend if he is making this speech deliberately, but I fail to see what it has to do with the item before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. There was another vacancy to deal with. Our old friend from Centre York, Mr. Archibald Campbell had sat on the threshold rapping and tapping for many years, and he was promised in season and out of season that he was to be made a minister. He had to have a senatorship. There were three vacancies and there were three gentlemen who stood in the front rank. Then there was a gentleman from the riding which I have the honour to represent who exhibited a letter from the Premier himself, written in 1892, pledging him that he should have a senatorship. Surely it is about time to redeem a pledge of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. I do wish my hon. friend would show us the connection between these matters and the item before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. I am coming to that.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend says he is coming to it, but the way is so long that we may fail to see the point. I do not quite see the connection between these things and the Royal Mint.

Mr. BENNETT. Now then, there was another gentleman knocking for admission to the government—the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert), whose name had been prominently mentioned.

Mr. FIELDING. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, as to whether this is in order ?

Mr. BENNETT. I am only referring to what is stated in the public press.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend knows as well as I do the rules, and if this has any connection with the Public Works Department I do not object to it at all. I recognize that in Committee of Supply there must be a large measure of freedom, but I ask my my hon. friend not to wander too far away.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for West Middlesex could not be accommodated with a seat in the cabinet or a senatorship. He had strong claims on his party ; nobody will gainsay that.

Mr. FIELDING. Order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think this is in order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Before you rule, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the point of order. I have every reason to believe that my hon. friend is keeping within the rules in discussing this matter. The point of order taken is that he is not discussing matters germane to the question. Here we have a gentleman appointed Deputy Minister of Public Works and we are inquiring into the reason why he is appointed to that position.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, it is the deputy minister, is it ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The deputy minister.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order that I have considered has reference to the remarks made in regard to the hon. member for West Middlesex.

Mr. BENNETT. If I am out of order in stating that the hon. member for West Middlesex was looked upon as a desirable applicant for the office of cabinet minister, I will withdraw the statement.

Mr. FIELDING. I understood the hon. gentleman to state that he was an applicant for a seat in the Senate.

Mr. BENNETT. I am simply stating what was in the newspapers.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend has reached the point now.

Mr. BENNETT. And Mr. Hunter, the present deputy minister, has the good fortune to be the son-in-law of Mr. Calvert, the hon. member for West Middlesex.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No wonder you took so long to get it out.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman got out one thing in this House that raised more trouble than I will ever raise in twenty years. He raised more trouble than ever was raised in this House in twenty years, so that he had better be careful. The muzzle is not off him yet on that subject. What happened then ? We had Mr. Gobeil retired at a cost to this country, for I hope and trust the next thirty or forty years to come, of $2,800 per annum, and we have Mr. Hunter placed in that position of deputy minister at a salary of $4,000 a year. I am not objecting to Mr. Hunter's fitness, and I cannot object to Mr. Hunter's courtesy, because nobody who knows Mr. Hunter will complain of his courtesy. As to his fitness for the position, it may be a question whether a gentleman who has only been seven years in the service and who has been enjoying a salary of $2,450 should be placed over the heads of many other gentlemen. This gentleman had a salary of $1,950 as first-class clerk and as private secretary he had a salary of $600 per annum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As chief clerk ?

Mr. BENNETT. Well, he is called a first-class clerk in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I should appeal to the hon. gentleman that if he wishes to discuss this question of Mr. Gobeil's withdrawal and Mr. Hunter's appointment he should do it in the regular way, because, if he discusses that question now, the item in regard to the Royal Mint will be lost sight of entirely.

Mr. BENNETT. Your good nature, Mr. Chairman, is proverbial and your indulgence is remarkable, and I do not know why you should not allow me to conclude, as I intend to conclude in five minutes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. But there will be a reply from the minister and the item will be lost sight of entirely.

Mr. BENNETT. But the minister introduced it. The minister spoke first and I am simply answering him. I see a gentleman here, Mr. R. C. Desrochers, who entered the service many years before Mr. Hunter did, who has had the advantage of being a chief clerk and who was for many years private secretary to Mr. Ouimet when he was Minister of Public Works. Why is it that Mr. Desrochers, who is well known to hon. gentlemen in this House, is passed over and Mr. Hunter is placed over and beyond him. Let us understand the question at once. Political exigencies had to be met and as a consequence Mr. Hunter had to be appointed to this very high position. Let it be understood that the rule of the Civil Service is to be, that no matter how fit a man may be, no matter how long he may be in the service, if political exigencies arise, all his aspirations and hopes and rights must be placed under foot, and a man who is fortunate enough to have a political pull must be put above him. So far as Mr. Hunter is concerned I hope and trust he will be deputy minister for a great many years to come, but I think it is unfair to these other gentlemen that he should be placed above them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I must confess that I am somewhat surprised—perhaps more surprised than I ought to be—that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), apparently without the slightest information as to the circumstances under which Mr. Gobeil is to retire, should have made the statement to this committee that Mr. Gobeil has been retired by the government and without his consent. That is the information which the hon. gentleman desires to give to the people of this country.

Mr. BENNETT. 'Hansard' will not bear out the minister's statement that I said Mr. Gobeil was being retired against his own wishes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Gobeil was being retired in the prime of life and while in perfect health, and he expressed the hope that for forty years Mr. Gobeil would live to draw his superannuation allowance.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Don't you wish that too ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that when I became Minister of Public Works, Mr. Gobeil was the first man to speak to me on the subject and he told me his health was such that he could not any longer in justice to himself continue to discharge the onerous duties which devolved upon the deputy minister of the department. He told me that for a number of years he had asked the Prime Minister to retire him, but that the Prime Minister did not wish to dispense with his services. I expressed my very deep regret that Mr. Gobeil should wish to retire and I asked him if he would continue. He persisted in his request that he be allowed to retire and not very long ago he submitted to me his own application made voluntarily accompanied by a very strong certificate from his medical adviser, who stated that if he desired that his life be preserved to him he must get relaxation from the duties of his position. I then felt it my duty to submit to my colleagues, with a good deal of reluctance, Mr. Gobeil's application and it was complied with. In view of the fact that Mr. Gobeil had been for thirty-five years in the service of the department, rising by long years of service and efficiency from the position of an inferior clerk to deputy head ; I ask this committee if in view of Mr. Gobeil's request to be allowed to retire on the ground of ill-health, I could have properly done anything else than accede to his desire and make the recommendation to my colleagues which I did. With regard to Mr. Hunter, my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has thought proper to mention that he is the son-in-law of one of the hon. members of this House. Let me say that when Mr. Hunter became attached to the Public Works deparment he was not allied by marriage to the hon. member who has been referred to.

Mr. FIELDING. That attachment came later.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Mr. Hunter was appointed private secretary to the Minister of Public Works and owing to the state of Mr. Gobeil's health more important duties were assigned to Mr. Hunter than ordinarily devolve upon a private secretary. For a number of years, under Mr. Sutherland and under Mr. Hyman, Mr. Hunter has been discharging duties which ordinarily devolve upon the deputy minister. After I became head of the department I had an opportunity of observing how well qualified Mr. Hunter was for the performance of his duties, and how faithful he was, and I desire to bear public testimony to the fact that I believe it would have been impossible for me to have recommended the appointment of any one who would give greater satisfaction to the public or who would more honestly and more efficiently discharge the duties of the office. Let me say further, that the hon. gentleman who—may I not properly say can be proud that he has Mr. Hunter as a son-in-law—let me say that he never mentioned to me the subject of Mr. Hunter's promotion ; never asked me to favourably consider his application, and neither did any one else. Except this, that my predecessor (Mr. Hyman) and those who have acted temporarily as Ministers of Public Works, have spoken to me in the highest terms of praise with regard to Mr. Hunter.

I have promoted him to the position he occupies solely upon his merits. It is not every one who is qualified for the position of deputy minister; a man may be a long time in the department without having the qualification necessary to enable him to fill satisfactorily that important position. Let me say in conclusion, that Mr. Gobeil's retirement has not been made at my suggestion or at the suggestion of any member of the government; he has applied voluntarily for retirement basing his application solely upon the ground of ill-health. So far as Mr. Hunter is concerned he will be promoted entirely upon his merits and because I believe he will honestly, faithfully, and satisfactorily discharge the duties of this position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BRISTOL. When the Minister of Finance stated a moment ago that this large expenditure for the mint had been approved of by both sides of the House, I raised the point that when the Minister of Finance and those associated with him were first asking for a vote, they represented to the House that the total cost of this remarkable mint would probably be about one-half of what it has actually cost. The minister went on to tell us that the cost of labour, and lumber and other things had gone up, and I then pointed out that if the work was done by contract, as we were told, that could not affect the position. I have before me the speech of the Minister of Finance delivered in this House on May 17, 1901, and upon the faith of which he got the vote for this mint, and here is what he says, 'Hansard' 1901, page 5378?:

Taking that outline plan and placing it in the hands of the architect of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, I have obtained from him an estimate that the building itself will cost about $200,000, not more. We hope that on a review he may be able to reduce these figures, but, I am giving the House his estimate. Then it will be expedient to have that surrounded by a high fence or wall, surmounted by iron railings, which will make it substantially safe, not altogether lacking in ornament. That we expect will cost $14,400.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What did it cost?

Mr. BRISTOL. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Then for fitting up vaults and strong rooms the estimate is $45,000, making a total cost of the building, with inclosure and vaults, $259,400. These are the architect's figures. As I say, I hope it will be found they are outside estimates. Then there is the cost of machinery to be considered, which we are advised will be something less than £13,000 sterling, say $64,000. In round numbers, the cost of the building, with the inclosures and wall, and machinery, the whole outfit will be, as stated by the Minister of Public Works, about $300,000.

To-day we are told that the total cost will probably be $509,000. So that when I say that no proper consideration was given to the cost of this project to the country, I think I am making a perfectly fair and reasonable criticism under the circumstances. But the hon. gentleman further said:

I estimate that the cost of maintenance will be something between $50,000 and $75,000, say $65,000 for maintenance. Then if it is to cost us $300,000 for building and equipping the mint, that represents an annual charge of roughly $9,000 a year. So if we add the interest on the plant and equipment to the cost of maintenance, I think we may say that the actual outlay of the Dominion will be about $74,000 as near as we can make it. That, of course, includes not only the cost of maintenance but the interest on construction.

If I am correctly informed, instead of costing $74,000, it will cost something like $130,000 a year, or nearly double the hon. minister's estimate for construction and maintenance.

Mr. FIELDING. Admitting that everything that my hon. friend says is absolutely correct, I do not see that there is very much ground for criticism. I need not say, like the proverbial boy, that the estimates I gave were taken out of my own head. We do not presume to estimate the cost of building or anything else except on the best advice we can obtain. My remembrance is that the building was not commenced for a long time after that estimate was made.

Mr. BRISTOL. My hon. friend repeated it in 1902.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no doubt that I repeated it in all good faith on information furnished in good faith by officers of the department. If anything improper in construction or otherwise can be pointed out, that is a proper criticism; but if the mint has been constructed according to good plans, even at a cost something more than the original estimate, I still maintain that it is a good thing.

Mr. J. D. REID. What I object to, not only in this case, but in every other case brought before this House by the Department of Public Works, is this. The government come down with the statement that they will require a certain amount to complete a certain work. $300,000 was to be the total cost of this mint, including machinery and everything else. The Minister of Public Works told us a moment ago that the cost had not exceeded the estimate of his department. If that was the estimate of his department at that time, it could not have been furnished to the Minister of Finance, otherwise he would not have made the statement to this House. There was something wrong when the public was not informed correctly what the mint was going to cost. The Minister of Public Works says that he expects that the total cost will be $509,000; but he does not even guarantee that that will be the total cost. He may come next year for another vote of $30,000 or $40,000, and the total cost may reach $600,000. This is like many other cases under the Public Works Department. I do not hesitate to say that as we go into the estimates of that department we shall find, under every item for work under contract, that the cost has exceeded the amount of the original estimates by at least fifty per cent, and in some cases by 100 per cent. That is not fair to the members of this House or to the country, and, as far as I am concerned, unless the government give us proper estimates and fuller information, I will certainly criticise them.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I do not think we on this side of the House should be surprised at the state of affairs revealed in this case. The government have kept very well within their limit, being only about $200,000 beyond their original estimate. I can recall a much worse case—the case of the Hillsboro bridge in Prince Edward Island, for which the original estimate was $500,000, the next estimate brought down by the late Mr. Blair was about $750,000, another was over $800,000, and finally the bridge cost nearly $1,500,000. So that in this instance the government have kept very well within the mark. The Minister of Finance tries to shield himself with the remark that the mint was unanimously approved by this House; but we must remember that when the House votes on questions of this kind, it has to rely to a certain extent on the statements of the government as to the amount it will cost and the advantages the country will gain from the outlay proposed. We find that the cost of having our money minted here is going to be twenty per cent as against a cost of three per cent when minted in the old country, which shows that is a pretty expensive luxury even in the prosperous times we are now having.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must be borne in mind that the statement made by the Minister of Finance in 1901, and repeated in 1902, was based on the outline plans, as the detailed plans under which the construction of the building was proceeded with were not made until 1904. There is no doubt that he had information from the chief architect on which he relied. But since that time wages have increased and the cost of materials has increased; and when the chief architect prepared the plans in detail, he may possibly have elaborated and enlarged the building somewhat beyond the original plan. The chief architect tells me that, even after the plans were completed in 1904, the estimated cost of the building was $350,000. The Finance Minister, in his estimate did not include the cost of the land. Of course, it would be quite impossible for the chief architect, entering upon the construction of a building so entirely different from any constructed in this country before, and to be equipped with machinery entirely different from any used in this country before, to estimate with perfect accuracy what would be the cost of this mint. It would be impossible for him to estimate with accuracy what would be the cost of the equipment of this mint, and the question really seems to me to be, as the Finance Minister puts it, has there been, is it pretended there has been, any extravagance in the construction of this building? Has it been built upon a more costly design than might reasonably be expected in a building of this character? I submit not, and I am quite sure that it will be found that the department has acted with prudence. The building was constructed under public tender, tenders were called for and all the machinery has been bought at as low a price as it was possible to purchase it at. I may say too that tenders were called for for all the large items of machinery contained in the building and my information is that the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer.

PRIVATE BILLS.

NORTHWESTERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Northwestern Pacific Railway Company. He said: Although this Bill appears in my name, I desire to state that my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. McCraney), who is not present at the moment, has charge of it. I may explain that at the request of the solicitor who had the Bill in hand, I introduced the petition on the last day before the House rose for the Christmas recess, forgetting, for the moment, that it would be dealt with by the examiner and that the Bill would be automatically brought into the House and get its first and second reading with my name connected with it. I state this in order that I may not be in an undesirable position in the event of my wishing to oppose the Bill in committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. SLOAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the chartered Bank of British Columbia.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I do not take exception to the Bill, which I presume is in the usual form, but I suggest that there may be objection to the title of the Bill. In the first place, the name 'Chartered Bank of British Columbia' would convey the impression that the other banks are not chartered. Perhaps that is a far-fetched criticism. The second point is that the former Bank of British Columbia is the property, I think, of the Bank of Commerce, which amalgamated with the old Bank of British Columbia, and I fancy that the name and good will of the old bank have some value. I have not had any representation made by the Bank of Commerce, but I would suggest to the promoters of the Bill that they consider whether they cannot find some title less objectionable. Meanwhile the Bill may go to the committee.

Mr. BARKER. I suggest further that there has in recent years been an objection to any bank taking a name implying a Dominion or provincial status. I suppose a bank like the Dominion Bank would not receive that name to-day, and any bank that has the name of a province might be objectionable for the same reason.

Mr. FIELDING. Not to the same extent. We have the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BARKER. The present Dominion Bank is an old bank. But I doubt whether either of them would receive the approval of the Minister of Finance to-day.

Mr. FIELDING. We have not taken that general line heretofore as respects the names of provinces. However I think the other objection is quite strong.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Royal Mint, $25,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. In discussing this item this afternoon, I called attention to the fact that in 1901, when the first appropriation was asked for, the Minister of Finance gave as the outside estimate the sum of $300,000, which he thought would be the total cost, and a sum of $65,000 as the total cost of running the mint. The matter was a new one, and naturally this side of the House, at all events, had to take the minister's statement and the first amount was voted. If you read the statement of the Minister of Finance at that time, you will see that he was desirous of proceeding, apparently, in a very modest way. I find in looking at the debates of the following year, that the Minister of Public Works, in discussing the item of $50,000 for the Royal Mint, is reported as saying in 'Hansard,' page 559 :

> The chief architect visited England, France and Belgium in order to obtain data for the preparation of plans. He has come back and prepared plans which have been sent to England, and have not yet been returned. We are ready to begin the work now, and are waiting the return of the plans. The site chosen is on Nepean Point. The cost will be about $300,000

When the Minister of Public Works to-day was endeavouring to explain this enormous increase from $300,000 to $509,000, he told us that before these plans had been decided upon they had gone to the expense of sending their chief architect to Europe. Therefore it is presumed that in 1902 they had all reasonable knowledge that was to be obtained on the subject of mints. However, apparently, they did not stop at that, for I find that as late as March, 1904, Dr.

Sproule, when another item came up in respect to this mint, asked :

What is the mint expected to cost when completed?

And the late Minister of Public Works, Mr. Sutherland, answered : From $250,000 to $275,000. So up to March, 1904, we find the government stating to parliament that the total cost of the mint, as to which they had been getting information for over three years, would be $275,000. Now I venture to submit to the Finance Minister that if any body of men are prepared to go into a proposition on the basis of $275,000, it does not follow that the same body of men would be prepared to go into it if they thought it was going to cost $509,000, and for the obvious reason, that on the cost of $275,000 there would be a loss of about $30,000 a year, whereas on the basis of $509,000 there is a loss of $75,000 a year, if not more. Now among other items which were particularly referred to by the Minister of Finance in 1901, was the fence, which was discussed to-day, and which was estimated to cost $14,400. If the chief architect and all the staff of the department are not able to get any nearer the cost than the difference between $14,400 and $30,000, I think it is time this matter should be more fully considered before it is submitted to parliament for action. And when the Minister of Finance asks us again to vote money in respect to this matter, it is reasonable that we should have a full statement of how this proposition has grown from $275,000 in 1904 to $509,000 at the present time. It would also be interesting to know how the cost of this particular fence has grown from $14,400 to $30,000. If there is no desire on the part of the government to conduct the affairs of the country on a business basis, it would be reasonable that we should have the fullest possible light in respect of this matter before we vote any further money. If I am correctly informed, the Minister of Finance at one time was very much opposed to this mint project, he thought it was a great waste of public money. At that time there was an election coming on in Vancouver, and the question was very popular there, and whether the Finance Minister of the government changed their views that the mint was to remain at Vancouver, a change did come over the views of the minister in contrast to his views as expressed when this matter was first discussed. They, however, concluded after the election in Vancouver that it was more advisable—and certainly it does seem more reasonable—that the mint should be established in Ottawa. So, I, for one, would like to have a complete statement of the original cost of this work and of the growth that has taken place from $300,000 to $509,000, and I would like the particulars of this item of $17,000 or $18,000 which remains. I think we should have a full and complete statement of this whole matter, of the original contract, how the contract has grown, whether by way of extras or by the discovery that other things were needed that were not originally estimated for.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am surprised at the statement which the hon. gentleman makes in view of all the proceedings in regard to the building of the mint. He has gone away back to 1901, but there was nothing asked of this House until 1904 when $50,000 was asked towards the building of this mint.

Mr. BRISTOL. I think an item of $5,000 was passed in 1901.

Mr. FIELDING. There was an item for maintenance in 1901.

Mr. BRISTOL. Before it was built?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, under an arrangement with the imperial government and for reasons which were set forth.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The whole discussion of this item has been with reference to a statement that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made some years ago which was just a rough estimate. There was no word of objection to the building of this mint when the item was, on February 6, 1905, first placed before the House. I will quote from 'Hansard,' page 606. The item was:

Ottawa—Royal Mint, $200,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How far has that building gone?

Mr. HYMAN. The contract was signed on January 5, 1905. The date for the completion of the contract is January 5, 1907. It has been let to Messrs. Sullivan & Langdon, of Kingston. The amount of the contract is $263,194. It was let after public tenders were advertised for, they being the lowest tenderers.

Then, there is some discussion which is of very little practical moment not on the cost of the mint, but on the utility of building the mint.

Mr. BARKER. What is expected to be the total expenditure on this building? The amount of the contract is in excess of the sum here voted, therefore it is quite clear that further expenditure is contemplated.

Mr. HYMAN. There is, in the first place, the contract that has been let, amounting to $263,194; the estimate for heating is $15,000; for electric wiring and fittings, $6,000; for fittings and furnishings, $10,000; for vault doors and fittings, $15,000. The suggestion would naturally arise that a building of that character, in which would be stored large quantities of coin and gold dust, would require to be well fenced, and no doubt a very expensive fence will have to be erected for the purpose of protecting that building. It is estimated that such a fence will cost about $25,000.

We all know that the cost of buildings of all descriptions has increased at least 25 per cent in the last three years.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not take the fence around Major's Hill park, which is of no use there?

Mr. HYMAN. I shall take that into consideration. Adding contingencies, &c., $13,000, the total probable cost estimated by the department is $350,000. In addition to that there is the land which cost $21,250.

Then he speaks of the cost of the land. Some hon. gentleman took exception to the high price paid for the land, and Mr. Hyman said:

The department asked the Canadian Pacific Railway to name a price. The company wanted $43,000. That seemed beyond the ideas of the department and we made them an offer of $19,000. On their refusal we took proceedings in expropriation. Shortly afterwards they approached the department and said they would accept $21,250.

Then, there was some discussion as to why a mint should be established in Ottawa, &c., but it was not very pertinent to the question. Then hon. members on the other side of the House came to the conclusion that the government had been very remiss in not building this mint before.

Mr. BERGERON. Why is it that the government have waited four or five years to come to this decision and to build this institution, while our gold has been allowed to go over to the other side?

The hon. member for Beauharnois goes on further and says:

If the building were to be erected in Vancouver or even in Dawson City there might be some reason for it, but being located here in Ottawa it will serve no useful purpose because it will be a great deal shorter for a man coming from Dawson City to go to the United States than to come here. My hon. friend talks about patriotism being stimulated by the establishment of this institution. If there were more patriotism there would not be nine million dollars of American coin in circulation in Canada to-day.

So you see that the hon. member for Beauharnois was quite agreeable to the building of that mint and he maintained that the government were remiss in their duties in not having built it before. We have a statement here from the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) of his understanding of what the cost of the mint would be. Here is that hon. gentleman's opinion:

Here is an institution which, when built and manned, will cost at least $450,000.

Now, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) comes here and expresses great surprise that this building is going to cost about $500,000. None of these estimates included machinery in any shape or form, and it is quite evident that at the time this vote went through there was no adverse discussion on this question. It went through and all were agreed that the mint was a good thing and that the government were remiss in not building it up to that time.

Mr. J. D. REID. What the hon. gentleman has just said only confirms what I stated before six o'clock, that the cost, as estimated by the government even when the contract was given, has been exceeded by at least 40 per cent. According to what the hon. gentleman has just stated, even with the cost of the land and everything else included, it would amount to about $370,000 or $375,000, and to-day the Minister of Public Works states that so far some $470,000 have been expended, and that $30,000 more, he estimates, will be needed for next year; so that, in other words, about $509,000, so far as he estimates, will be the expenditure upon this mint. He will not pledge himself that this will be sufficient to complete the whole work even. After having had the matter in hand from 1901 to 1905, making estimates, going to the old country and getting the cost of material, plant and everything else, the government came down with estimates which any one would think would be sufficiently large to cover everything. With all these estimates they asked for a good deal less than $400,000. But the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman) says that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stated that this building would cost more than $450,000. Mr. Foster was trying to show that the government did not know what they were saying and that they did not believe it would cost so little as they estimated.

Mr. FIELDING. Did you believe it?

Mr. J. D. REID. I believed then as I believe now that in this case as in every other case, the actual cost of government works is far greater than that estimated. The contract price was $263,000, then $110,000 expenses were added, and the land cost $5,000, so that the whole cost should amount to about $375,000.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. You are not including the machinery.

Mr. BOYCE. Was the contract for the construction of the building alone?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOL. My argument is based on the statements made before the contract was entered into. What was said after the contract was made cannot have any bearing on that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the estimate was made in 1901, as in 1902, it was based upon an outline plan. Later on plans were prepared and sent to England for examination by the imperial authorities. After they were returned approved, which was later than 1902, the chief architect went into the matter in the ordinary course with a view of asking for tenders. In 1905, when Mr. Hyman, as Minister of Public Works, was asking for a vote of $200,000, he is reported as having stated that the contract was let for $263,194. That was the contract for the building alone. The estimate for heating was $15,000 and for electric wiring and fitting $6,000. These figures are below the figures which I have stated here, but let me say this. I went through the mint with the master of the mint and he explained that after very careful consideration a very great change had been made which involved the more general use of electricity for the running of the machinery. That was not originally contemplated at all. In the statement which I read there is $49,461.36, the cost of wiring, electric motors, transformers, switchboards, &c., and Mr. Hyman evidently was not calculating upon that. It was originally intended that the machinery should be run by steam and Mr. Hyman's calculattion did not include electricity as a motive power. There are a great many items to be added therefore to the original estimate and the increase can be very easily explained by taking these various items. There is $104,000 for machinery and motors, which Mr. Hyman did not take into account at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. Add that to the $263,000 and you have $375,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Add the price of the land to that.

Mr. J. D. REID. That makes $395,000.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. That does not take in the doors and fittings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nor the fence, nor the guard houses. I am quite sure that when Mr. Foster made the statement that the mint was going to cost $450,000 he did not take into account some $50,000 for the machinery which was added.

Mr. BRISTOL. My point is simple and plain, and it is this : that prior to January, 1905, three ministers assured this House that the outside cost of this mint, including everything, would be $300,000 or less, and the machinery and this wonderful fence were estimated in that. That was the estimate the House had before it, and I challenge my hon. friend to show any further or different estimate given before this contract was let by the government prior to January, 1905. After they let the contract they saw the thin end of the increase going in, and which has continued until the estimate of $300,000 becomes a cost of $500,000 in reality. The government placed before the House and the people the assurance that this entire mint, everything included, would only cost $300,000. Would it not have been just as simple and easy, and fairer to the people of Canada and to the House to have stated in January, 1905, before the contract was made, that it would cost $509,000.

Mr. FIELDING. What the public are most concerned in is to know that this mint has been well built and without extravagance. If we are to have a mint at all in Canada I think all will agree with me that we should have a good one.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did you not expect to have a good one when you gave your estimate of $300,000 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Certainly. But we are not all as wise as my hon. friend ; we could not see into the future.

Mr. J. D. REID. You were not wise at all.

Mr. FIELDING. We certainly could not be as wise as my hon. friend seems to be when he is discussing these estimates. What I understand the hon. gentleman's position to be is this : we want a mint, we agree that it shall be had if it costs about $300,000, which was an estimate based on an outline plan, and given in good faith.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman thought that it would cost less than the estimate.

Mr. FIELDING. In these cases, while I assume the responsibility for the estimates given, I have to rely on the advice of experts. The hon. gentleman's position is that he would have a mint costing $300,000 and built on an outline plan, but after a more detailed plan is made, and it goes to the officials in London and they say, we would like to enlarge that, the hon. gentleman says, we will not have a mint unless it is built on the original plan and at a cost of $300,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. Pardon me. I say it was the duty of the government, before they entered into this larger expenditure, to call the attention of the House to the change ; but they enlarged their plan and entered into a contract with their favourite contractor without informing the House.

Mr. FIELDING. Then, at the time, the mint was first proposed, it was contemplated to place it on Nepean Point. Objection was taken to that on various grounds. The Militia Department complained that it was going to interfere with their work, and many people thought that it would destroy a very beautiful point ; and we found that instead of building there, it would be necessary to buy a site. Then, I understand the hon. gentleman's position to be : we are willing to have a mint if we can build it on our own land, perhaps on parliament grounds, but if we have to buy a site we will not build it. Then, it appears that the fence is built more substantially than at one time was contemplated. Well, we might have put up a cheaper fence, a pole fence or a board fence, which would have cost a great deal less money; but we think that when the government of Canada undertakes a work of this character, it should do it substantially and well. I would rather come before parliament and justify a work which is done substantially and well, if it is done honestly, even if it costs a little more money, and we think that is a policy the public will approve of. The great object of the public is to have work well done and honestly done.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Did the hon. gentleman not intend to have it well done in the beginning?

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so. Did my hon. friend never start to build a house and afterwards decide to make it better than he had intended at the beginning? Then there came another stage. My hon. friend quotes estimates made in 1901; that is six years ago, and during those six years there have been great changes. In those six years there has been a very great increase in the cost of labour, and a large amount of that increase in the cost of the mint has gone into the pockets of the workingmen of this country. I understand that my hon. friend's position is this: we are willing to have the mint so long as the labour is done at a dollar a day, but if we have to pay the workingmen of Ottawa a dollar and a half a day, we won't hve it.

Mr. BRISTOL. Is the hon. minister making a stump speech?

Mr. FIELDING. What has my hon. friend been doing the whole afternoon but making stump speeches? We must have a shy at it too. Unconsciously my hon. friend is taking this position. But he must know that the estimates made in 1901 were honestly made by good and capable men, and every man who has anything to do with building or mechanical labour of any kind within the last six years knows that work has cost more than was anticipated when it was started. All sides having agreed that we should have a mint, the question for the people of Canada is, has it been built substantially, honestly and well and is the machinery the best that can be had for the purpose? if these questions can be answered properly, the public will be satisfied.

Mr. BARKER. The Finance Minister has taken this question up by stages, and I think it is well to reply to him by stages. We were first told that the whole of this work would cost from $250,000 to $275,000 or, as the minister put it, striking an average, $265,000. We will not dispute what the minister says, that when this work is done we want it well done. The first estimates and all the estimates have been for work well done, nobody thought of anything else. But what we complain of is the stage system which the hon. gentleman relies so much upon. Having got the approval of parliament for a mint on the assertion that it was going to cost about $265,000, the hon. gentleman talks as if that was based on a rough estimate. But what does the next estimate show? In January, 1905, they had let their contract. Does the hon. minister mean to tell the House that they entered into that contract on a rough estimate? In January, 1905, did they not know practically what they know to-day? And how was it that a month afterwards they met parliament and did not say a word about the increased cost of the mint?

Mr. FIELDING. They stated the amount of the contract?

Mr. BARKER. They stated that $262,194 was the amount of the contract, which was on its face a confirmation of what Mr. Sutherland had said, namely, that the mint would cost about $265,000. That was for the building alone. But that was a small portion of the obligation incurred. They knew then that they had to spend far more money to complete the work, and why did they enter into that contract within a month of the meeting of parliament?

Mr. FIELDING. Parliament was advised and did not object.

Mr. BARKER. Parliament was not advised of anything more than that they had entered into a contract for $263,000, which was practically in accordance with their first statement. Why did they not come before parliament with their revised estimates and detailed plans and inform parliament that they would have to spend a great deal more money? What is the next stage? We now know that the government jumped from $263,000 to $390,000, and they are now up to $509,000. The Minister of Public Works has been good enough to tell us how we got up to $390,000. I would like him now to tell us how he gets from $390,000 to $509,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) take down the items, which are as follow:

Amount paid for site	$21,250 00
Amount paid contractor to November 30, 1907	259,520 00
Wiring, electric motors, transformers, switchboards, &c.	49,461 36

This makes a total of $509,701.76. My hon. friend has asked for an assurance that this would be all that will have to be paid in connection with this mint. I may say that the chief architect tells me there is no reason whatever to suppose there will be any additional expenditure.

Mr. BARKER. I am afraid we cannot trust too much to that, judging by our experience. I want the minister to give us the details of that $17,000 item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will undertake to get that, and when we are in further consideration of these estimates I will submit it to my hon. friend and give it to the committee.

Mr. BARKER. I would like also to have the details of that $5,400 for superintendence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to get both of these.

Mr. BRISTOL. The Minister of Finance has followed the custom of some of his distinguished colleagues, and instead of answering an argument from this side of the House, he has attributed arguments to us, and then he proceeds to knock these arguments which he himself is the author of, into all kinds of formations that please his fancy. In 1901 this great government of great men on the advice of their greatest architect gave the House an estimate of the total cost of this building. They sent their great architect to the old country in 1902 and he came back full of learning, and in March, 1904 three years after they gave their first estimate and during which interval they had time to think of it, they told the people of this country that the total cost was not going to be more than $300,000, and the then Minister of Public Works believed it would only be $275,000. All that is recorded in 'Hansard' as the result of their three years of cogitation. The Minister of Finance now talks about the workingman; it is delightful to hear him so solicitous of the interests of the working man now. He was not so careful about the interests of the working man, when in the days that he was in opposition he was trying to tear down the national policy.

Mr. FIELDING. Did the national policy make the workingman rich?

Mr. BRISTOL. You held on to enough of it to give employment to the working men of Canada. The Minister of Finance told us that between 1901 and 1907 things had changed, that labour was dearer and that the cost of material had advanced. In May, 1904, this great government with all the machinery they have at their disposal gave the total estimated cost of this building as $275,000, and it was only nine months after, that they let the contract. There were only nine months therefore for this twenty-five per cent increase in the cost of labour to take place. After having given this statement to the House in 1904, nine months later in January, 1905, they entered into this contract which I venture to submit is an extravagant contract and not a contract with regard to which reasonable and proper disclosures were made to the House. The government is face to face with this position: that they had three full years and more to find out what this building would cost, and after thinking over it during these three years they told parliament and the country that it would cost $275,000. Now we find it has cost $509,000. They can spend all the time they like in explanation, but these are the facts so far as this opposition and the people of Canada are concerned.

Mr. FIELDING. All right, let it go at that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Let us look at the record of the Minister of Finance with regard to this mint. When the mint was first spoken of he was entirely opposed to it, but a little later on when an agitation was raised in British Columbia he came to the conclusion that we should have a mint. Then he came down and told parliament that the total cost would be $300,000, and when he got the department to go fully into the matter he finally assured the House that the cost would not be more than $375,000. Now we have it that the building has cost $509,000, and it does not take a very wise man to see that there must be something wrong. From start to finish the Minister of Finance seems to have used bad judgment in the matter. I have been told, and I think there is a good deal in it, that the expenditure on the mint is like a good many other items of expenditure by this government; I am informed that there are certain parts of that machinery that the government have paid from $75,000 to $80,000 for and that they could have bought for $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to state what items of machinery?

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot go into the details now but I think I can get the information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman should give the information.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Finance has referred to the opposition criticising the amount paid for a site for this building, but there are other occasions upon which he is not so particular about using the government property, for I would like to remind him that he gave part of this beautiful park in Ottawa to the Grand Trunk Pacific for a hotel.

Now, would it not be much better if we had a fine government building on that point instead of placing a hotel between these parliament buildings and the new proposed buildings on Sussex Street? The whole thing is merely one of the many cases in which the Department of Public Works has given estimate to this House only to have it proven afterwards that the cost exceeded the estimate from fifty to one hundred per cent. In as many of these cases as have been investigated, it has been found that the money has gone to middlemen. And the Minister of Finance and Public Accounts Committee have upheld that action.

Mr. BARR. We have heard here, for the first time, from the Minister of Finance, the extraordinary doctrine that hon. members on this side must not depend on estimates brought down by the government, but must add from fifty to one hundred per cent in counting upon what the actual cost will be. No doubt the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as an old parliamentarian, knew that this was the practice, and that was the reason why he estimated that this mint would cost from fifty to one hundred per cent more than the estimate.

Mr. FIELDING. He was thinking of his own day.

Mr. BARR. No, but of the record of this government. I venture to say that there is not a contract under this government which does not show payments far beyond the estimate. The Minister of Finance tells us that the money has gone into the pockets of the workingman. I think that no member of this House, nor anybody in this country, will accept that view. Everybody knows that the money has gone into the hands of fat contractors and middlemen; and I venture to say that a large percentage of it will find its way back into the election funds;—we certainly have every reason to suspect something of that kind. The Minister of Finance knew that, from 1901 to 1904, wages were high; and if he had taken this House into his confidence and stated that an extra amount would be necessary to complete the work on the mint, the House would have accepted his explanation. But, since 1905, wages have not gone up, and, to-day, they are lower than when the contract was made. But we are living in a different condition of affairs from that which existed in former times. For instance, at present, this government is paying seven per cent on temporary loans in England, whilst four years ago it paid two per cent. And, in this case of the mint, we are going to spend $100,000 a year more than if we had our coins minted in England. The government must call a halt or it will drive the country into bankruptcy. The only hope, however, is in a change of government.

Mr. J. D. REID. As to the cost of minting silver and copper coins up to the present time, I have here the figures since the present government came into power, showing what this service has cost us.

Paid for coining.

	Silver.	Copper.	Total.
1897-8	$ 6,510	$3,985	$ 10,495
1898-9	5,366	1,200	7,566
1899-1900	15,570	1,200	16,770
1900-1	15,300	300	18,300
1901-2	6,000	1,500	7,500
1902-3	22,884	3,000	25,884
1903-4	26,399	5,000	31,399
1904-5	3,000	2,487	7,487
1905-6	25,917	1,500	27,417
1906-7	29,520	1,625	31,145
Total for 10 years	.....	.....	$183,963
Average	.....	.....	18,396

Now, we find that the annual cost to this country will be $135,000. That is, there will be a permanent yearly addition to our expenditure of no less than $117,000. This is one of the items in which the government are adding to the expenditure and raising it to over $100,000,000 as against $40,000,000 when they came into power.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know the authority for the figures which the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) has given. But to the extent that they go to show that the minting of coins is an expense, they are misleading. As a matter of fact, we make a large profit on our coinage. If the hon. gentleman means to contend that we would have even a greater profit by having our coining done in England, I quite admit the correctness of that statement. But the fact should be known—and many people are not aware of it—that there is a very large profit on this work. I admit that, as a mere question of dollars and cents, we could get the coins more cheaply if they were made in England, but on that basis we could get our Dominion notes printed more cheaply in England than in Ottawa. But parliament years ago deliberately decided that it was better that our paper currency should not be printed in London, but in Ottawa under the inspection of the Finance Department. We have simply taken a step further by arranging to have our coins made in Ottawa, though, as in the case of the notes, we could save money by having the work done in England. There may be a method of computation which justifies the hon. gentleman's figures. But it should be known that there is a large profit instead of a loss on our coinage. So far as the minting of coin goes, the profit made on the coinage in a year would pay for the mint twice over.

Mr. J. D. REID. But there would be a saving of $117,000 a year if the work were done in England.

Mr. FIELDING. There would be a saving, but the figures the hon. gentleman mentions may be too large.

Mr. DANIEL. I feel a little doubtful whether this $509,000 is really going to complete all that is required in connection with the mint. I read in the newspapers not very long ago that the Master of the Mint would be unable to carry on the minting of gold coins, because he would require refined gold and he had not the plant for that work, and it was intimated that a smelter and other refining plant would need to be provided. Is that included by the Minister of Public Works in this amount of $509,000 ? If not, how much more will this extra plant cost ?

Mr. FIELDING. There are two items which may possibly have to be added later to this amount. One is for a refinery. Several proposals have been made with respect to refining the metal, which, if adopted, would make the construction of a refinery unnecessary. I think the mint officials would prefer that we should have a small building constructed there for the purpose of refining. We have not determined that, but are inclined to entertain the proposal.

There is another point that has escaped the notice of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. In the estimates we have made hitherto, we have not contemplated that there should be a residence for the mint officials. The Imperial authorities prefer that the chief officer of the mint should live on the ground. I have endeavoured to persuade them that it is not necessary, that we would prefer not to construct a residence for the master, and that if he is to have a residence let it be elsewhere. But the Imperial authorities are anxious, in conformity with the practice elsewhere, that we should give the master a residence. At present he is residing in a private house in the city. I think these are the only two possible additional charges, if they should be decided on, the refinery and the residence. These are but approximate estimates, $20,000 and $25,000. There would have to be a small piece of land adjoining the mint ground purchased for the refinery and for the residence, if it be determined to build one. The chief architect says it will cost about $17,000. I allow a margin on each of these things, because experience shows that it is necessary. If we were to say 20,000 for the residence and $25,000 for the refinery, they would seem to be outside estimates. The land would have to be taken by expropriation from the piece adjoining the mint. Then we would have to put up a modest residence for the master, if the British authorities insist upon it, and construct a refinery, unless some of the various suggestions are adopted that have been offered as to independent refiners supplying the metal, if we could make a satisfactory arrangement for supplying the metal; we are not anxious to do otherwise. These are the two features of the question which are under consideration. There is a possibility of these two things being added to the cost.

Mr. BARKER. Is it only the master of the mint who expects a house for himself?

Mr. FIELDING. On the grounds, yes. I think the deputy master, who is the chief officer, is the only officer for whom they ask a residence. The master of the mint is the title of the officer at headquarters in London; all the branch mints are presided over by gentlemen who bear the title of deputy master.

Mr. BARKER. Then the deputy master may expect a house costing about $20,000, and the refinery is expected to cost about $25,000?

Mr. FIELDING. With regard to the refinery, there are suggestions that private parties will be able to supply us the metal, and perhaps we will not require a refinery. But we will have to pay for the services they render.

Mr. BARKER. That is $45,000. Then there is the land, and we may expect a stone fence and everything else.

Mr. FIELDING. There would have to be a fence.

Mr. BARKER. Then we are well on towards $600,000.

Mr. FIELDING. I would prefer to err on the right side now.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is a question I would like to ask the Finance Minister, though it may not come under this item. We had a refinery in British Columbia for silver, gold and copper, though on a small scale. Now, has the government considered whether they will pay the face value of the metal there, and provide for its transportation here? Perhaps the minister may not be able to answer that question at present, but I would like him to consider it. Now, we are to have a mint in Canada, and we should endeavour to mint as much as possible of the refined article that is produced in Canada. In doing so I think the holders of the gold to be refined should receive the full face value of their product, although it has to be minted in Ottawa, they should receive as much as the same could be purchased in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter of detail that has not yet been worked out. I think we should certainly refine the metal in Canada, for every reason, whether we have a refinery ourselves or make use of some private refinery.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this mint absolutely under the control of the British government?

Mr. FIELDING. The mint authorities would have the absolute right, if they wished to exercise it, of controlling it altogether, because it is a branch of the Royal Mint. One effect of that understanding has been that in the construction and equipment of the mint we have had the benefit of skilled men whom we could not obtain in any other way. But the British authorities have asked the deputy master to make his local appointments subject to the approval of the government. The chief officer and the experts are taken from the Royal Mint and sent over here from England, or from the colonies where they have had branch mints. The deputy master has been instructed to make his nominations from this country.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the Finance Minister to say that the minting of gold, silver and copper coins here would result in an absolute profit, that the country would make a profit out of it?

Mr. FIELDING. Not as respects gold, there would be no profit in the coinage of gold. But as between the metallic value and the coin value there is a considerable profit both on silver and bronze. But there is no profit on gold, whether you have it in coin or bullion makes no difference as to its intrinsic value.

Ottawa—Astronomical Observatory—additional buildings, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am now able to give to the committee the information which was desired before recess. The revote is $12,000, and the new vote $3,000. The total ependiture is estimated at $17,000. The additional buildings consist of one eleven by nineteen to accommodate the staff and contain the instruments to make solar observations. Then two smaller buildings are required.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who were the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. O'Leary and Whelan. The contract price is $13,900, the original estimate was $14,000. The building is nearly all concrete. The difference between the contract price of $13,900 and the $17,000, is made up of $1,000 for heating apparatus, $500 for electric wiring, $1,000 for superintendence and contingencies.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then I understand that $14,000 is the estimate of the engineer for everything?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only for the building.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will this $17,000 finish the whole thing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will complete the whole matter.

Mr. J. D. REID. There will be no more asked for next year or in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Parliament buildings—additions and alterations, $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The note which I have from the officers of my department is that this vote of $150,000 is asked to make provision for continuing the works placed under contract in connection with the additions and alterations to the parliament buildings, which consist in extending the northwest wing northward and the residence of the Speaker of the House of Commons westward, the construction of a new upper story and roof on the tower which forms a portion of the residence, the cubic contents being 745,000 cubic feet; also for alterations to the parliament buildings in accordance with the sub-joined estimate submitted by the chief architect. The amount paid to the contractors is $76,970; renewal of windows, furniture, carpets, matting, lumber, paints, labour, $7,300.30; alterations and improvements to ventilation system, speed motor, switchboard, Nernst lamps, &c., $21,567.75; contingencies, printing, advertising and salary of clerk of works, $1,939.92, making a total expenditure up to the 31st March, 1907, of $107,777.97. Then I have further information. The amount due on the contract work is $160,463; heating and boilers, $5,000; electrical wiring and fixtures, $5,000; furniture, $10,000, &c. The total probable cost of the additions and alterations to the parliament buildings is $322,247.97.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who are the contractors of this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. W. H. McGillivray and T. Labelle of Ottawa.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many tenders were received and were uney the lowest tenderers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were five tenders received; they ranged from $237,437 to $263,000. The lowest was that of Messrs. McGillivray and Labelle.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now it is estimated that it will cost $322,247.97.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But that includes many other things.

Mr. J. D. REID. What did the contract include?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would rather say what it did not include; it did not include heating and boilers, electrical wiring, fixtures, fittings, furniture and some work in connection with sidewalks, roads, &c., superintendence and contingencies.

Mr. DANIEL. What furniture would there be in a building that is not finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The furniture will be put in when the building is ready for it.

Mr. DANIEL. You have bought furniture before the building is finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is the estimated cost.

Mr. DANIEL. When does the minister expect to have this building finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The date of completion is 15th March, 1909.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then it will not be ready for the next session of parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected that certain necessary rooms will be ready in time for next session.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then it is possible we may not have the use of any of that building next session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman mean that unless he uses the rooms next session he will not have an opportunity of using those rooms at all?

Mr. J. D. REID. I stand as good a chance as the hon. minister of being here after next session. I will take chances on that.

Mr. BENNETT. Remember Ross.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perheps we will both be here.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister will remember my mentioning to the House today that we were short of rooms and there is the possibility of our being in the same position next session because the contractor need not give up the building until his contract is completed unless we pay him a bonus for the use of those rooms. If we are likely to be in that position I renew my request that the Minister of Public Works make some arrangement with the housekeeper who has eight or ten rooms down here in this building by which these rooms can be obtained for the use of the members of this House. I am quite satisfied that if a reasonable amount were paid to this man for being obliged to vacate these rooms he would do so. Is it right that all the members of this House should be inconvenienced as they are simply because the housekeeper is occupying seven or eight rooms in this building. As long as he is satisfied to vacate these rooms I think there should be no hesitation in every member of this House agreeing to recompense him to the extent of a reasonable amount for doing so. If seven or eight more rooms were used for the really legitimate business of this House it would be a great convenience. I will ask the minister if it is a proper thing to see all the corridors of this House piled up with blue books that are here for the members. Nobody knows where to find them. It is impossible to know where to get your bluebooks. Up to the present session they were in the post office, and we knew where to get them. But the postmaster throws them out into the lobby and they are left there. I really think the minister should take steps to get the use of these rooms for the members of the House. I mentioned the matter several times, but the Minister of Public Works does not seem to pay any attention to it. The members of the opposition should have a couple of rooms immediately; they should certainly have at least one extra room placed at their disposal if nothing better can be done. The chances are, if the contractor does not give up the work without being paid a large bonus, that we shall be in the same position next session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From what the chief architect tells me there is no question whatever but there will be a number of rooms fitted and ready for the use of hon. gentlemen when parliament assembles again. As to the arrangement for the present session I shall be very glad to do what I can to accommodate hon. gentlemen. But to-day is the first time I have heard the hon. gentleman speak on this subject. I see him frequently, he and I are friendly, and I think he might have come to me and told me of the inconvenience he is put to. I shall be very glad to take the matter up with him or with a committee of gentlemen opposite, and if it is possible to do anything I shall be very happy to do it.

Mr. J. D. REID. To-day is the first time I knew that the Minister of Public Works was in charge of these rooms.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then why did the hon. gentleman say that the Minister of Public Works paid no attention to these complaints.

Mr. J. D. REID. I brought it up in the House two or three times.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not when I was present.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not know whether the hon. gentleman was present or not, but it certainly was discussed this session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, please see me tomorrow about it.

Mr. J. D. REID. I will see you early next week.

Ottawa—Victoria Memorial Museum, $300,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this is included a revote of $50,000. This for the Victoria Memorial Museum which was placed under contract on the 20th of December, 1904. It is a very large building which is being erected at Appin Place at the foot of Metcalfe street, between McLeod and Argyle avenue. If hon. gentlemen have not seen this building it would be well worth their while to go and see what a magnificent structure it is. It is being built very cheaply, under contract. Tenders were called publicly and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, Mr. George Goodwin, of Ottawa. There were five tenders received ranging from $950,000 to $1,349,000 and the lowest tender was accepted. The estimate of the chief architect was $1,250,000, so that Mr. Goodwin's tender is $300,000 less than the estimate. He is doing exceedingly good work, is carrying out his contract and we will have a very fine building.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Patrick Canty clerk of works on the Victoria Memorial Museum, the same gentleman who was clerk of works on the Laurier Tower when it collapsed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is not the same.

Mr. BENNETT. Who was clerk of works when that so-called Laurier Tower collapsed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Taylor.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Taylor was one of the architectural staff. Will the minister ask Mr. Ewart if Mr. Canty was not engaged in some capacity on the Laurier Tower ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that Mr. Canty was not employed upon the tower in any capacity.

Mr. BENNETT. It was stated in the House at the time that he was, and the statement was not contradicted by Mr. Hyman, then Minister of Public Works. A gentleman named J. A. Ewart was paid for preparing working drawings, &c., in reference to the iron work on the Victoria Museum, the sum of $1,250. Who is Mr. Ewart and where does he reside ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ewart is an architect in Ottawa and is a specialist in iron work.

Mr. BENNETT. I see from the Auditor General's Report that Mr. Ewart was paid $131 for professional services, and at page 319, Auditor General's Report, I see that a firm named Band, Burrit & Meredith were paid $6,000 for plans of the archives building. How many firms are employed outside of the staff of the department in the preparation of plans and work of that kind ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Outside architects are only employed when there is a good deal of work on hand, and which cannot be attended to by the staff of the department. I am informed that some four or five are employed outside of the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. What are their names ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no outside architect employed in connection with the museum ; I can give the names later when we come to another vote.

Mr. BENNETT. What did this firm of Band, Burrit & Meredith do ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were given the work of preparing all the plans of the Archives building.

Mr. BENNETT. Where do they live ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Ottawa.

Mr. BENNETT. Upon whose recommendation are these various outsiders employed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister employs them, of course after consultation with the chief architect as to their special qualifications for the particular work.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this Mr. Ewart a son of the Chief Architect of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have any outside architects made the plans for the Victoria Memorial Museum ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, those plans were prepared by the chief architect of the department, and the work is done under his direct supervision. Mr. Canty is the clerk of works under him.

Mr. REID. Then I understand that the only payment to outsiders for making plans is this amount for Mr. Ewart ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is all.

Mr. REID. I see that this firm of Band, Burritt & Meredith get five per cent for overseeing the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That includes the preparation of the plans.

Mr. REID. On this Victoria Memorial Museum is there any item of that kind?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because the plans were prepared by the chief Architect of the department.

Mr. BENNETT. On page V—20, I find this item : 'A. G. Ewart, draughtsman, services and travel, Ottawa to London, England and return, $950.06.' Is he on the permanent staff ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Ewart is on the staff of the mint, as assistant of the superintendent of the mint.

Mr. BENNETT. He is a gentleman from England, is he ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, he is a Canadian.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he related to the J. A. Ewart who is designing ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, he is a brother.

Mr. BENNETT. And a son of the Chief Architect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Are there others ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose these outside people are not employed in the department except in special cases of this kind ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they are not on the staff of the department, and are only employed in these special cases.

Mr. J. D. REID. It seems rather hard on the gentlemen who are on the permanent staff that when there is a trip from Ottawa to London, with all expenses paid, none of them are capable of going and transacting the work. What is the special nature of the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a matter that rests entirely with the superintendent of the mint. He took Mr. Ewart with him, I suppose with a view to looking over the mint in London to obtain the necessary information to enable him to give valuable service in connection with the mint here.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there not an officer in the department capable of preparing similar to those prepared by Mr. J. A. Ewart ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Chief Architect tells me that we have at the present time in the department a gentleman who would be able to do that class of work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was he not in the department at that time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. J. D. REID Then there was not at that time in the department a man qualified to do that work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Qualified is a strong word. There was no man with the special knowledge which it was considered desirable the architect should have for that class of work. The hon. gentleman knows that there are various classes of architectural work, as there are of engineering work, and it was thought advisable to employ a man who was a specialist in this class of work.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the gentleman in the department paid who is qualified to do this class of work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,500 a year.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is he ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. John Bain. He is a graduate of the Toronto School of Science.

Mr. J. D. REID. How long did it take Mr. Ewart to do this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Chief Architect tells me that there were a large number of drawings. He designed the whole of the structural iron work of the building, which took him a good many months.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not wish to find any particular fault with Mr. Ewart because he is a son of the Chief Architect; but there are probably in the department men who are qualified, to do this work, and when they see it given outside, and to a son of the Chief Architect of the department, they are likely to be very much discontented. There is no doubt that it did not take Mr. Ewart more than two or three months to do all this work, though he is perhaps not getting too large an amount for it, not being an officer of the department; but it is going to cause discontent, and it is not fair to the other officers of the department. I am satisfied that there are men in that department qualified to do work equal to what this gentleman has done. I for one think that if any relative of any chief officer of the government is employed, it would be much better to put him on the permanent staff than to give him special work by which he is going to make two or three times as much as any regular officer of the department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that it is not often that special work of this kind is required. He should also remember that the staff of the architectural branch of the department is not a large one, and that the members of that staff are constantly engaged in the work of the department. There are buildings to be erected all over Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the staff has to be kept constantly at work getting out plans for buildings for which parliament provides. Occasionally there is special work to be done, and even if members of the regular staff are qualified to do it, instead of taking them from the regular work of the department, which requires all their time, it has been considered advisable to engage outside persons possessing the necessary qualifications for this special work.

Mr. BARKER. Has the hon. minister ever considered that, if he follows the policy of bringing in these outsiders he will never have an experienced staff of his own? He deprives the men of his staff of opportunities to learn. And, as has been said, it is most embarrassing for the staff to have outsiders brought in to do special work while the regular hands are merely employed as copyists on plans, never learning, never improving.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This work is not merely copying, but designing buildings, such as post offices, custom houses, drill sheds, armouries and others of that kind. But there is something in the view expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker). That view has impressed itself upon the department, and now a gentleman has been employed on the staff who is qualified to do this special work.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to call attention to another case, for which I would refer to page V—328 of the Auditor General's Report. It would appear that Mr. Vautelet has been employed to prepare plans for a harbour shed at Quebec, and the country has to pay $12,250 for his work. Will the minister tell us what were the striking peculiarities of this freight shed that made it necessary for the department to go outside for this service and pay $12,250 for the preparation of the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad to give the information asked for. In employing Mr. Vautelet in this connection, the minister was following the practice which has prevailed, I think, ever since confederation under all governments, that of employing specialists for this special work. This gentleman, Mr. Vautelet, was employed by the Dominion government for the first time in 1889, and at times thereafter, to design bridges and supervise the construction of steel bridgs.

Mr. J. D. REID. Under salary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On a percentage basis. This was done from 1889 to 1896 when this government came into power. Mr. Vautelet has been employed under this government to design these sheds at Quebec, and also to design the structural steel work of the dam to be constructed to the north of the city of Winnipeg, as well as designs for expensive sheds which it was proposed to erect at Montreal. The information furnished me concerning this shed at Quebec shows that it was a very extensive building. It was an immigration building to be constructed in the harbour of Quebec. It was to have a total length of 1,260 feet and a width of 80 feet and was to be two stories high. The foundation was to be of piles cut off five feet below high water spring tide, and on these were to be concrete piers to support the building. The frame of the structure was to be of steel work and the walls of brick, and floors partly of concrete and partly of asphalt. The lower floor was intended to provide accommodation for first and second-class passengers, with ample space for baggage and freight. The upper story was for the accommodation of immigrants, and to be divided up into the necessary rooms. The towers were to contain large water reservoirs for sanitary purposes. The estimated cost of the building was $375,000. The work done by Mr. Vautelet in designing the plans was very special work. The plans consist of 23 sheets, approximately 3 by 4 feet, containing all details of construction. These, hon. gentlemen will see, represent a large amount of work. And the information I have received from the assistant engineer of the department is that the copying alone of the original plans, which consist of 23 sheets, would occupy a mechanical draughtsman for three months. It may be said that this is work which ought to have been done in the department. But let me tell hon. gentlemen that the ordinary work of the engineers—for this is engineering work—is not of that character. A large steel building of this character must be designed with the greatest care, and the work should be given to those who have made a study of it. Mr. Vautelet was employed because it was felt that he possessed the qualifications necessary.

With regard to the other work on which he has been employed, the work at St. Andrew's rapids, this also was work of a very special character. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) knows, Winnipeg is a city of 100,000 inhabitants. It is hoped, by the construction of these works, the lock and dam, to make Winnipeg a port of Lake Winnipeg. Owing to the peculiar conditions there, the greatest care has to be exercised. The Red river rises to the south and runs northward. It happens almost every spring that, while the river at these locks would still be icebound, further south the ice would be melted and the water would be running with a free course. It was necessary to design the dam of a most special character in order to prevent the possibility of flooding, as that would result disastrously to the city. Mr. Vautelet was employed for this work. He went to Europe for the purpose of studying a lock and dam built to meet similar conditions. I may say frankly to my hon. friend, that in the opinion of engineers of my department, no one on the staff was capable of designing a work of this character.

Mr. J. D. REID. What was paid to Mr. Vautelet for the work at Winnipeg ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Auditor General's Report would show. The contract was that Mr. Vautelet was to receive a percentage on the expenditure. I believe he was to receive five per cent on the cost of the work which he designed. That is my recollection of the arrangement, but I speak subject to correction. I may say that the work in making the designs for this work were of a most elaborate character. They consist of 42 sheets. I have looked over them very carefully, and I can say that there is an enormous amount of work on them. I am told that it took Mr. Vautelet at least twelve months to complete the designs and plans of this work. I do not know whether that included the time occupied by his trip to Europe or not. In addition, he had to employ several additional draughtsmen at high wages, paying those draughtsmen out of the amount he received.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now, as to Quebec.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost of the building at Quebec was $375,000 and Mr. Vautelet was to receive 3½ per cent. In 1889, when Mr. Vautelet was employed on work for the department, my information is his commission ranged from 3 to 5 per cent upon the cost of the work which he designed.

Mr. BARKER. Was this gentleman employed on behalf of the government ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Did the department advise the minister that such an expert was necessary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. They would not undertake this themselves ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They would not.

Mr. BARKER. They considered that an expert in the construction of metal frames and that sort of thing was necessary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. More especially in connection with the St. Andrew's Rapids works. I may say that the works designed there are the only works of their kind on the continent of America.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Vautelet in no way acted for the contractor ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BARKER. Absolutely for the government ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. MORIN. The St. Andrew's dam is on the Red river near Winnipeg, I understand. It is a dam right across the river ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MORIN. Is it made in order to provide water-power, or to extend navigation ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To extend navigation. The hon. gentleman may not be aware that the present head of navigation is at a point about twenty miles north of Winnipeg. By the construction of this dam and lock it is expected that vessels navigating Lake Winnipeg will be able to steam right up to the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. MORIN. I heard a gentleman say, speaking of this work, that he was afraid that the ice coming down in the spring would stop at the dam and flood the country. Is the minister afraid of that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not with dam and lock of the present design. My information is that there is absolutely no danger.

Mr. MORIN. Is there a design to melt the ice ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) is really serious in his question, I may say that the design of the dam is such that a portion of the work can be removed at the close of navigation, leaving the ice a free run. He will see, as a practical man, that that can be done.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that this shed at Quebec is 1,260 feet long, 80 feet wide and 30 feet high

Mr. PUGSLEY. Two stories high.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is just a plain shed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a steel shed.

Mr. J. D. REID. Now, for making plans for this shed, the government are paying $12,500. There was not an officer in the department, it appears, who was qualified to make the plans for a plain shed in Quebec. It seems to me that this is altogether too large a sum of money to pay for such a service. It seems only another instance of the extravagance of the Public Works Department, of course, the agreement was made before the present minister took charge, therefore, perhaps, he is not responsible for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) a member of this House before 1896 ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did he ever criticise the employment of Mr. Vautelet for the designing of the steel bridges, as for instance right here in the city of Ottawa ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not remember the item. But the minister compares the design for a bridge with that of a common, ordinary shed. There is no trouble to find a draughtsman to make plans for a shed, but it is quite a different proposition to get a man who is qualified to make plans for a bridge. Does the minister wish to compare the architect or draughtsman who made the plans and specifications of the Quebec bridge with the one who made the designs for a steel shed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not speak of the Quebec bridge, but of a bridge here in Ottawa.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, take even the bridge here in Ottawa, does the minister believe that it takes a man with qualifications for the designing of a bridge to make the plans and specifications for a shed of this kind? Does he, in all seriousness, state that $12,500 is a reasonable amount to pay for making plans, for a common, ordinary, everyday shed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not a common, ordinary, everyday shed, but a very large building, two stories high, the lower part to provide accommodation for freight and baggage, and the upper part to be divided into living apartments for immigrants to enable them to be cared for comfortably. The building contains also a large dining room. The design had to be of a special character. I do not profess to know much about the construction of steel bridges or steel sheds; but I do claim that a shed of 1,260 feet long and two stories high, and with accommodation for freight and baggage, and containing living rooms and all that sort of thing, is not a common shed. I should say it was a very extraordinary shed.

Mr. DANIEL. The framework is of steel. What is the outside cover?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume, sheet iron. The chief engineer is not here at the moment, and we are now dealing with the engineering branch. In the first place, the question would be whether or not Mr. Hyman, when minister, was justified in employing Mr. Vautelet. In doing so he was acting on the advice of the engineering staff of the department and doing the very same thing that had been done as long ago as 1889, when the previous government was in power and employed Mr. Vautelet. So far as remuneration is concerned we allowed him exactly the same remuneration as was allowed him in 1889 when he was employed on special work. It must be borne in mind that the engineers of my department are not ordinarily engaged in the construction of steel buildings or steel bridges. The ordinary work they have to do is looking after the dredging of harbours, building armouries, drill halls, post offices, custom-houses, wharfs, and wooden sheds as warehouses upon these wharfs. Now, if it is admitted that it was not unreasonable for the minister, having been advised by the chief engineer, to follow the practice which had been pursued by his predecessors, and employ Mr. Vautelet, then I think it would not be regarded as unreasonable that the same remuneration should be paid him. We know there is a scale of remuneration for architects and engineers, and I am told this was the usual and ordinary commission to allow for designing plans of this character.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not think the minister is doing justice to himself when he argues that because a shed was particularly long it required great mechanical skill. The question of the length was much less difficult than that of the width. The point to be ascertained was what would be the retaining strength of an iron girder thrown across a space 80 feet in width. I can take the minister to dozens of towns in Ontario where there are skating rinks constructed with timber trusses seventy and eighty feet in width. I was building myself this fall one with sixty feet trusses.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Without an architect?

Mr. BENNETT. Only a practical carpenter at $3 a day. There was a rink at Simcoe with a width of some seventy feet. It is not the question of length that is important but the width. It seems strange that in a department where there are men paid $3,500 a year and upwards, there was not one gentleman who could give an estimate of what would be the sustaining strength of an iron girder carried across a width of 80 feet, and what should be the size of the iron girder to span eighty feet in width.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I think we ought to have a little more information about the Victoria Museum and what is the estimated cost of this building. I understand the contract was let at $900,000, and the architect's estimate is more than a million and a quarter to complete. It strikes me that does not reflect much credit upon the skill of the architect. But leaving that aside, what is the estimated cost of the remainder?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will understand that the contract price is for the building alone, and there has to be some additional expenditure, for instance, for heating apparatus, boilers, electric wiring and fixtures, fittings, furniture, contingencies, superintendence, &c., all of which it is estimated will increase the cost of the building, fittings and furniture when completed, to $1,300,000.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. When do you expect it will be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About two years from the present time.

Mr. DANIEL. How much will it cost to heat the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $75,000.

Mr. ALCORN. What did the land cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $75,000. It formerly belonged to the Stewart estate. I am informed the property was purchased through the court, that it was put up to public auction by the Master in Chancery.

Mr. BOYCE. We would like a little more information in regard to the actual cost of this building. The minister's statement that it will be about $1,300,000, is somewhat vague.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman's experience should teach him that in estimating the cost of fitting up a great building, the cost of the furniture, heating, electric wiring and so forth, it is impossible to come within a few dollars of the actual cost. As I have said, the contract price of the building is $950,000, which is about $300,000 less than the chief architect's estimate. I am satisfied that Mr. Goodwin the contractor will not make a dollar out of his contract, in all probability he will lose money. In giving the additional amount for fittings and furniture, heating apparatus, boilers, electrical wiring, fixtures, contingencies and superintendence, the most I can do is to take the estimate of the chief architect of my department, and he tells me he thinks that I am safely within the mark in putting all these at $350,000 which makes $1,300,000 altogether.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is in charge of this work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The overseer is, Mr. Canty. Mr. Canty is clerk of the works who is acting directly under the chief architect.

Mr. BOYCE. But he has charge of all the public buildings in Otttawa ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BOYCE. Are his services confined to this building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. Are they liable to be transferred at any time to any other building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. He is devoting all his time to this building.

Mr. BOYCE. Who has the contract for the wiring ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is not let yet.

Mr. BOYCE. Are the tenders in ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BOYCE. How will they be let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders will be called for.

Mr. BOYCE. And the plumbing in the same way ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, all these will be let by contract.

Mr. BOYCE. All those items which are the subject of the minister's estimate ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders will be called for and contracts will be let to the lowest tenderers.

Mr. BOYCE. Tenders will be invited by public advertisement ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be some small contracts which will be let without tender, but under the law appertaining to my department all contracts involving an expenditure of over $5,000 must be let by tender.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is this Pat Canty ? What did he do before his appointment ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Canty is by trade a mason and builder, an experienced man well qualified for his work.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand, here is a building costing $1,300,000. It is a most important building, it is a building that should have a first class, reliable man to superintend the work—an architect to see that the work is done and yet the government employ a mason to see the whole work done properly. He has to look after the other work as well as the masonry. This man is not qualified to be superintendent of that work. Does the minister think that a man getting $3.50 a day is qualified to see that that work is done properly ? The government employed such a man as that to look after this tower which fell down a short time ago.

Mr. BOYCE. This is the same man.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not the same man. That was Mr. Taylor.

Mr. J. D. REID. But he was a man of similar qualifications. A man who will take that position at $3.50 a day to oversee a work of that magnitude is not qualified for the work especially when the minister states that his only qualification is that of a mason.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And builder.

Mr. J. D. REID. He is not a contractor; he is a mason.

Mr. BENNETT. And a prominent politician.

Mr. J. D. REID. Put there probably by the Liberal organization of this city.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Do you expect a Tory organization to put him there ?

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I do not, but if the minister would take a lesson from the Postmaster (Mr. Lemieux) and get good men like the Postmaster General does to fill vacancies he would secure better results. In the Postmaster General's Department, when they want to get a man for a post office, they advertise for the Liberals to meet together and select a good man.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is that sarcastic ?

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I mean it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is very difficult to satisfy the hon gentleman. I am sure if we had given Mr. Canty $10 a day the hon. gentleman would have complained of our extravagance.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I would not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because we are able to get a man of experience and of excellent judgment at $3.50 a day in the person of Mr. Canty my hon. friend complains, but I may say that Mr. Canty has done so well that we have advanced his wages to $4.50 a day. Now, let me ask my hon. friend to go down and examine that building and see what splendid work is being done. It is a credit to Canada. Mr. Goodwin the contractor, is doing a magnificent piece of work there and Mr. Canty is most zealous in discharging his duties. He is there early in the morning and late at night seeing that the work is properly done. In addition to that Mr. Ewart, who has taken a special pride in this work is giving it his special attention. I have every confidence that through the supervision which the Chief Architect gives to the work and with Mr. Canty on the spot the work is being properly supervised.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards the Post Office Department I hope my hon. friend is only ironical, because he has asked me for some post offices in his own county and he should not complain if I have appointed some good honest Grits as postmasters. Surely he did not expect me to appoint opponents when good Grits could be found to fill the positions. I have received his thanks since then and I suppose that to-night he is only jocular in his remarks.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did expect that Liberals would be appointed but what I was referring to was this. Here is a post office to which a postmaster was to be appointed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. May I ask what the appointment of postmasters has to do with my estimates ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I am just answering the hon. Postmaster General.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Cannot you do that after we get through ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I will read you this :

A meeting of the Liberals of the Village of Kemptville will be held in the Town Hall on the evening of Monday, July 22,
at 8 o'clock.
The object of the meeting is to select a fit and proper person to recommend to the Postmaster General for Postmaster for Kemptville.
R. D. McMASTER, E. L. B. CORNELL,
President. Secretary.

Mr. BENNETT. Before we leave that item, I have a strong recollection that Mr. Canty was a gentleman whose name was brought in at the time of the collapse of the so-called Laurier Tower. On April 6th, 1906——

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Mr. BENNETT. 'Hansard' of April 6, 1906. All through the discussion Mr. Canty is referred to and Mr. Hyman, the then Minister of Public Works, says this :

I understand that Mr. Canty, the gentleman mentioned, is inspector of the Museum building, but Mr. Taylor is the gentleman in the department who is responsible for the inspection of the building now under consideration, and Mr. Canty is only called in at certain times.

Now, the minister must have had in his recollection that discussion which was a matter of public discussion at the time. The newspapers were filled with it. There was a long discussion in the House the afternoon the accident happened. The House was agog with excitement on that day on account of the collapse of that famous tower. They felt as if there was going to be an earthquake. It was a fortunate thing that a number of men did not happen to be in the building at the time as it was about the noon hour and their lives were saved. On further discussion it was alleged that Mr. Canty was the responsible man, and Mr. Hyman did not deny it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My statement was made on the information given me by the chief architect and he still tells me that he has no recollection of Mr. Canty having had anything to do with that building. It may be Mr. Hyman was mistaken, I do not know as to that.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Hyman was speaking from the papers brought down.

Mr. TALBOT. I do not recollect whether it was the day afterwards or the second day afterwards, but I think I recollect that Mr. Hyman's statement as to Mr. Canty was withdrawn by him.

Mr. BENNETT. No. He made a mistake about the architect in Toronto and Mr. Hyman made that correction.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Even if you take Mr. Hyman's statement, all he says is that Mr. Canty was called in occasionally and that Mr. Taylor was the gentleman who had charge of the work.

Mr. BOYCE. What experience has Mr. Canty had in the construction of buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that Mr. Canty has been engaged in his trade as mason and builder ever since boyhood and as he is about fifty years old I suppose he would have thirty or thirty-five years experience. He is regarded, at all events by the chief architect, as being an exceedingly good man for this work.

Mr BOYCE. And he is working now for $4.50 a day ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. The chief architect is taking great risks when he recommends this man as superintendent after the experience he has had with him on this tower. He has cost the country thousands and thousands of dollars and I do not believe there is any private citizen in this country who would employ that man for such work again after the experience we have had.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should state to the committee that in addition to Mr. Canty being there as clerk of works, Mr. Sutherland, a member of the architect's staff of the department, is there every day devoting his time to the supervision of the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. It does not make any difference if there were a dozen men with him. After what happened when Mr. Canty was in charge of the tower it is a disgrace to the government to keep him in their employ. No private individual would do it It all goes to show that this man was put there and is retained by some influence which the government cannot overcome. It is necessary you should have such an officer, but there must be plenty of good Liberals in the country who have the necessary qualification. He was responsible for the fall of the Laurier tower which cost this country a great deal of money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The report says he was in charge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Hyman's statement was that Mr. Taylor was in charge but that Mr. Canty was called in occasionally.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want the country to know that this Mr. Canty is the same man who had charge of the work on the Laurier tower.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surely the hon. gentleman would not want to injure a hard working man in Mr. Canty's position. Even if you give the fullest weight to the statement of Mr. Hyman, he says that Mr. Taylor and not Mr. Canty was responsible for the Laurier tower. Mr. Taylor is no longer in the department.

Mr. McCOOL. There was a full investigation after the fall of the Laurier tower and it was proven that Mr. Canty had nothing whatever to do with it in any way, shape or form. If you search the debate in connection with the fall of the tower you will find that the minister took back his statement regarding Mr. Canty and declared he had made a mistake. I know positively that Mr. Canty had nothing whatever to do with it, and as to his ability to look after a work of this kind there is no better qualified man in this city or out of it. Mr. Canty is a well known man in this city, born and bred here and one of the most reliable builders that can be found.

Mr. BENNETT. It is unfortunate that the member for Nippissing (Mr. McCool) jumped in here, because he contradicts the statement made by the senior member for Ottawa in the course of that debate. I quote :

Mr. FOWLER. I see one of the members for Ottawa present and I would like to ask him if he would give the name of the clerk of works of this building.

Mr. STEWART. If the hon. gentleman is referring to me I may say that I have been given to understand that the inspector in this case was appointed by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and also the contractor is or was a friend of these hon. gentlemen.

Then, in the course of the debate, Mr. Fowler said :

I understand that this officer named Canty, if rumour speaks true, receives $5 a day and pays no attention whatever to the building.

There was no denial made by Mr. Stewart or anybody else.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Stewart does not say that Mr. Canty was in charge of the building.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Taylor was a draughtsman in the office as Mr. Ewart knows. Mr. Taylor was not supposed to stand there from early morning until dewy eve to watch the mixing of cement; it was the duty of the clerk of works to do that and there is no question but that the clerk of works was Mr. Canty.

Mr. McCOOL. It seems very hard to convince the hon. gentleman that Mr. Canty had nothing whatever to do with it. If he will take the trouble to look up the evidence that was taken at the inquiry he will find my statement to be absolutely true, namely, that Mr. Canty had nothing whatever to do with the construction of the tower in one way or the other.

Mr. BENNETT. I find from 'Hansard' that the correction made by Mr. Hyman was with reference to another officer altogether, and not Mr. Canty.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool) makes the positive statement that he was a witness in the investigation and that it was proved there that Mr. Canty had nothing to do with the erection of the Laurier tower.

Ottawa—addition to eastern departmental block, $75,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is simply a revote. The work of construction has not been commenced, but it is thought desirable to give this additional accommodation, more especially for the Finance Department.

Ottawa—new departmental buildings, $250,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was proposed some time ago, as hon. gentlemen are aware, to construct new departmental buildings which would face upon Sussex street, occupying the space between Sussex street and Major Hill Park. The reason for that was that the rentals now being paid by the government amount to a very large sum. The land has all been purchased, with the exception of eight properties, upon valuations made by an experienced land valuator. Hon. gentlemen will see that I am only asking for a vote of $250,000, of which $200,000 is a revote. My own view is that perhaps it is well not to proceed too rapidly with the construction of these buildings, but to acquire all the land first, and later on to take the necessary steps for the commencement of the work. The buildings are going to cost a very large sum of money, and it has been thought well not to embark on so large an undertaking in the present financial stringency. Therefore I am only asking for an additional vote of $50,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is likely to be considerable discussion on this matter, and I would suggest to the minister that we let the item pass on condition that we can discuss it on some other vote later on, so that we may now adjourn.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite willing to do that.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). The resolution which I propose seconded by Mr. Schell, of South Oxford, is as follows:

That this House deems it expedient to invite the honourable the Senate to co-operate with it by means of conferences or joint committee, in giving consideration to the advantages to be gained by changes in the composition of the Senate, looking to:—

1. An age limit for retirement and a shortened term of service for future senators.
2. An extension to other authorities than the present one, of power to select persons for the filling of a portion of future vacancies in the Senate.
3. A rearrangement of some of the duties and work of the two Houses.
4. And in making recommendations in regard to these and other changes calculated to place the Senate in a position of increased usefulness and of increased responsibility to the people.

There are, Sir, also two other resolutions bearing upon the Senate which appear on the Order Paper, and with the consent of the House it is proposed that the principle involved in each of these three resolutions shall be discussed at the same time. The resolution proposed by Mr. Miller is :

That this Canadian Senate, as an institution has not proved to be of any decided benefit to Canada, and cannot be regarded as a necessity. That the disadvantages connected with and resulting from the maintaining of the Senate greatly outweigh the advantages and benefits derived therefrom, and that the Senate may with advantage and gain be abolished.

The resolution moved by Mr. Lewis is :

That in the opinion of this House it will be advisable at the next general election for the House of Commons for Canada to submit the following questions for the votes of the people:—

1. Shall the Senate of Canada be abolished?
2. Shall the method of appointment of the Senators of Canada be altered?

In moving a resolution of this character, Sir, I realize that I am not treading on entirely new ground. The question is one that has been discussed in many forms for a considerable number of years. It is a question of great importance, as naturally any question is that involves a change in the constitution of our country. It would be very natural that in proposing such a change, I should be called upon first to prove my case. Some two years ago I moved a resolution in this House in regard to the Senate. At that time I quoted a number of authorities and a number of instances showing dissatisfaction, disappointment and disapproval with the Senate. I quoted resolutions of the Liberal convention of 1893. I mentioned the dissatisfaction and trouble of the Mackenzie administration. I quoted statements of well-known Liberal statesmen, some of them of a former day. I quoted a resolution of the Ontario legislature passed in 1899. All of these went to show a very grave feeling of dissatisfaction with the Senate and a very strong desire that there should be some remedy. I might have mentioned some other evidences of dissatisfaction. The resolution which my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has put on the Order Paper evidences very serious dissatisfaction indeed. I might also mention the plank in the Halifax platform of the hon. leader of the opposition, showing dissatisfaction in some respects with the Senate as at present constituted. In criticising the Senate or its acts, one realizes that a member of this body may perhaps be treading on tender ground, and may be charged with presumption in doing so. But in criticising the Senate I do not wish you by any means to infer that I consider the House of Commons to be without faults. I realize very clearly indeed the many faults and weaknesses of this body. But there is this very great difference between the two bodies, that we go back frequently to the people to have our record examined and for criticism and perhaps punishment. It is not so with the Senate. My criticism of the Senate is not the criticism of the individual members of the Senate; it is a criticism of the conditions surrounding those members. Now, Sir, faultfinding and criticism are not on the whole a pleasant or gracious task; it is not one that I take kindly to. It is necessary at times, but I do not as a rule indulge in it. So that with the quotations that I have made, with the instances mentioned from time to time in our party press and by our party leaders, I will ask this House to take the dissatisfaction and disapprobation of the Senate as something proved, as a postulate. If I cannot do that, the resolution of my hon. friend from South Grey calls for proof along that line, and if he but half proves his case, he will abundantly supply all the justification I desire to have for mine. If our constitution were not a written constitution, we might perhaps make all the changes necessary without any appeal to the Imperial authorities. But we are under a written constitution which largely limits us. We may make changes in procedure, but even there we are limited to some extent.

We must, then, I believe, seek for a remedy for the present condition of things. The dissatisfaction is so widespread, and the danger of continuing in the present condition is so great, and would be so much greater in a time of crisis, that I believe we are forced to seek some remedy. The nature of your remedy will naturally depend upon your diagnosis of the disease, and upon your ideal or standard for a second chamber. So that it may be well to look at what are the usually accepted reasons for a second chamber. I will state them: first, as a legislative body. Some people would desire that it should be a fully co-ordinate body with the first chamber. That view, however, is seldom held. It is regarded as a corrective of hasty or ill-considered legislation; it is intended to reconsider cases in which there is doubt of the popular will; it is intended to represent the sober second thought of the people; it is intended to ascertain and enforce the permanent and not merely the transient ideas of the people; it is intended to insure stability, permanence, and continuity in government, rather than mere activity; it is intended to protect the rights of certain minorities; it is intended to represent the people as a whole rather than certain local majorities; it is intended frequently to protect provincial rights; it is intended to represent certain ideals of the people not easily attained by our ordinary form of general election. When we read a list of reasons of this kind for a second chamber, we realize their importance. I believe that every one of these reasons exists in Canada and did exist at the time the second chamber was made a part of our form of government. Not that they all exist in equal force, but all do exist. It will depend, then, upon the extent to which you believe any one of these reasons to be predominant what form of remedy you will desire to have applied to the Senate to make it correspond to what you think it should be.

Among the remedies proposed, the first one that should be mentioned is that referred to in the motion of my hon. friend from South Grey, that is, abolition. It is true that removal can hardly be considered a remedy. But taking it as a remedy, one must recognize that it has some advantages. It has the merit of simplicity; involves but few details; it comes quite readily to the tongue. I conceive that it is the view of numbers of thinking people, including my hon. friend from South Grey. But I think I may ask him to concede that in many cases it is the remedy rather of impatience and irritation than of sober thought.

Many of the people who now complain of the inactivity of the Senate would be just as bitter in their complaints if the Senate, as at present constituted, were suddenly to break into vigorous activity. Nevertheless the dissatisfaction with the Senate is really so great, that the question is forced upon us: Shall it be mended or ended? Before, however, considering the merits of such a suggestion as abolition, it is absolutely necessary that we should consider its practicability. Is abolition practicable? We know that before abolition can be accomplished, we must have an Act of the Imperial parliament. To obtain such an Act, it will be absolutely necessary, not only that this House should be willing but that the Senate itself should be a consenting party. It will be further necessary that the various provinces should consent to the change—certainly the provinces which were parties to confederation or which came in under any compact. When we consider that the consent of all these parties will be needed and when we consider what the expression of some of these provinces has been in the past, we cannot fail but come to the conclusion that abolition, however desirable we might consider it, is not practicable. Then we are met by this other fact. We do not always terminate immediately any institution that is not entirely satisfactory. We are too young as a country to jump so hastily at conclusions. We are only forty years of age, which is but a short time in the history of any country, and we are asked in our youth and with so little experience, to absolutely abrogate the Senate without once even trying a remedy. That is certainly not the line of action we would take in any ordinary proceeding of life. But passing from that view and taking up the general argument regarding abolition I might almost say that the general argument would not be necessary owing to the impracticability of abolition. But when I recollect the ability and the power of my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller), I realize that even the impossible may perhaps be rather endangered by his attack. So that on that account and for the advantage that may accrue from a moment's examination of what abolition might effect, I propose to enter a little on the general argument.

What would abolition mean in Canada? The abolition of the Senate would remove all the good that is in that body, and I presume there is some good in it. It would remove all the ability and experience that is in the Senate, and we must acknowledge there is some there. It would put the business of Canada in the absolute control of the House of Commons, and not only that, but in the absolute control of the majority of that House, or a caucus of that majority, or the leader of that majority. Would that be wise? That is a possibility indeed well worth considering. We have to consider the possibilities of the future. The abolition of the Senate would mean leaving the destinies of this country under the control of an absolute democracy rather than a limited one. It would mean very much increased work for this House and much greater care in all the legislation brought before it. It would mean that the minority of this country would be at the mercy of the absolute will of the majority. It would mean that the minority must submit to the most rigid enforcement of everything the majority might desire. Under such circumstances, can we not imagine how arbitrary the majority of a House of this kind would be. Free from the restriction of the Senate, might not the majority of this House become arbitrary or unjust? Examples may not be very numerous ; but if I can do so without offence, I might quote one within my own memory. A very distinguished member of this House, feeling that he had been unjustly dealt with by a newspaper correspondent, took the somewhat unusual and rather antiquated course of calling that correspondent to the bar of this House. Without discussing the merits of the case, may I not ask you to recall whether the majority at that moment, embittered at what it thought was an unfair attack on a distinguished member, was prepared to act dispassionately. It remained for one man, who has more especially the honour and dignity of the House under his care, to see that justice was done, and he showed himself strong enough and fair enough to have justice done. But who can guarantee that, under other circumstances, a man equally just and resolute would hold that position? Who can guarantee that an irritated majority might not crush out entirely the rights of the minority—not merely the rights of the individual but of the entire minority? There would be nobody to protect the minority or see that in some way justice was done. I fear that a House, left entirely to itself, would assume an arbitrary attitude. We have known, in other hon. chambers, of an arbitrary speaker and an arbitrary interpretation of the rules accomplishing injustice. When the conditions are such that any one man can make his mere will prevail, he no longer needs to appeal to reason in order to accomplish his ends; he no longer listens readily to reason in others; and we know that uncontrolled power is not apt to be scrupulous in its regard for the rights of others. So I fear that a House of Commons, supreme and unrestricted, might, through an arbitrary majority, create great injustice to the minority. And besides the majority in the House of Commons might not represent the majority of the Canadian people. I need not enter into any question of gerrymander, but we know that with the possibility of a change in the distribution of the seats now existing, the majority elected in this House might not represent the majority of the people. Yet full arbitrary power would be placed in the hands of that majority, whose election was obtained by distributing the seats in such a manner as to favour one particular party.

Mr. HAGGART. How could the Senate remedy that?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. The Senate could not come in and do justice to the individual. The Senate could not change the rules of this House; but where the interests of the country at large are affected by the arbitrary action of this House, the Senate could act in such a way as would enable justice to be done, not to the individual, but to the country. It could restrain, and I believe, if the acts of this House were shown to be arbitrary, it would restrain. This House is elected by the people, and in that respect is established on the proper foundation, but just consider for a moment all that is involved in an election. Consider the steps taken. In the first place, there is the primary meeting for the election of delegates to the convention, and then there is the meeting of the convention to choose a candidate. Probably not more than 200 electors on either side take part in these primary meetings and conventions which decide on the two candidates, and the choice of the electorate is limited to the two men so chosen. No matter what different views a man may hold, he can only express them through one or other of these two men ; and let any man remember his own election contest. Let him recall the misrepresentations, the appeals to prejudices and sectionalism, and all the devices used to influence the people, charged by each party on the other, and he will realize that in many cases the members of this House are rather the elected supporters of the one party or the other than representatives of the people in the true sense. It depends largely on our own sense of honour whether we are the representatives the people hope we may be, and which they endeavour to make us by this form of selection.
