KINCARDINE FAIR.

A Capital Show Illustrating the Progress of the Colony.

How the Kincardine Settlers Enjoy Themselves in the Autumn.

The Kincardine Agricultural Society held their annual Show on their show grounds, Wednesday Oct. 15th. The exhibition consisted of farm stock, crops, dairy produce, poultry, domestic manufactures, etc. Excepting the cold weather was as propitious as could be expected at this season. A fine still morning with a good breeze from the west was succeeded by a cold blinding wind all day, the upland reaches had a day or two previously been covered with their first mantle of snow. By 1 o'clock most of the exhibits were on the ground, and shortly after the judges commenced a very arduous task, the stock department especially calling for the exercise of the most critical judgement, the awards going in several instances by the narrowest of margins. The judges of stock were Messrs. Lyons, Haysler, Price and Bodel. The judges of crops and seeds were Messrs. G. F. Baird, M. P. D. Fraser and G. Milberry. It is said that this show excels any former one in regard to the quality of stock shown. The 2-year-olds, both horses and steers, were excellent, and would not disgrace a competition of the same class in Old Kincardine. The quality of the yearlings and calves shown augurs well for the future of the colony. The coveted prize of the day was that for the best fat beef, carried off by Jas. Farquhar. The animal winning this prize was certainly not a bony beast in regard to symmetry of form, gaining the prize simply from access of flesh. Much attention seems to be given to horse breeding also. Some very good colts were shown, Mr. T. Cummings showing two.

The Success of the Colonists

In stock raising deserves the warmest praise. There were but few entries of pure bred cattle, most of these being by Mrs. Stewart who is on the river side. The only entries of pure bred from Kincardine proper were by Mr. Wm. Patterson and Jas. Aitken. Most of the cattle in the settlement are crosses of pure shorthorn and native stock, or crosses of shorthorn and Ayrshire, such crosses and second crosses being considered by many equal in milking and beefing qualities with pure bred. From the qualities and also the number of entries of sheep, and from the manifest favor which this branch of agriculture seems to receive, it is probable that in the future the chief exports of the colony in the future. The breeds are confined mostly to Cotswolds and Leicesters. Of a large exportation to a southern market this fall, one dealer asserted the colony sheep were the best he had collected in this district. Of ewes there were but few entries, but these were good specimens. One of the exhibitors confidently asserted that he can make 2 lbs. of pork for every day of his pigs' age. Of poultry there was a fair show. Some good birds graced this department. Dairy produce was an excellent exhibit and would have satisfied the daintiest epicure. In this department Mr. McNeil holds to the front as her skill has enabled her to do for several years past. Of seeds, timothy and spring wheat were spoken highly of by the judges. Unfortunately there was no steelyard by which to compare weights. Of roots there was a very creditable display. It will be remembered that Mr. Findlay, of Kintore, had the honor of carrying off the prize for turnips at the Centennial. He still maintains his credit in that department. The show of fruit was small as regards entries, but quite tempting as to appearance. Of domestic manufactures there were comparatively few entries. Some of these, quilts and mats, displayed considerably.

Taste and Skill.

When the judges had finished their respective tasks and the prizes had been declared, His Honor Judge Stevens, who was present, gave a most excellent and appropriate address to the colonists and the visitors present on the subject of agriculture. He spoke briefly of the importance of agriculture as a profession, of its precedence of other professions, as the basis of a nation's wealth and greatness, of the necessity of maintaining its superiority by devotedness and intelligence, and of the efforts he had noticed in the colony of the better husbanding of manures, thereby answering the fertilizing elements, and bringing about the best results—the shape of crops. He spoke very touchingly and opportunely of the falling autumn leaves reminding of the necessity of preparing for coming winter. In analogy to this were the grey hairs of many present warning of another winter, and he hoped they were concerned not merely with the acquisition of material wealth, but in the pursuit of higher wisdom and better riches than earthly. A hearty vote of thanks to His Honor for his address concluded the proceedings. A number of the young people celebrated the occasion by having a dance in the evening at the home of Mr. Mayor, Lower Kintore. The strains of a local Orpheus kept them on their feet until among the "wee sma' aires" of the morning, when they took their several ways determined no doubt to meet "some other day." The settlement on the whole seems to be a substantial success. No greater percentage of failures have occurred than in any other similar locality.

THE ST. JOHN.

Commander Cheyne's Trip from St. Francis to Fredericton.

The Beautiful Scenery which Enchanted him—A Little-known Cataract.

Commander Cheyne arrived in Fredericton on Saturday by canoe from the Upper St. John and he intends to remain in the city for a day or two. The Commander has come by canoe from St. Francis to this city a distance of about 215 miles. He is greatly pleased with his trip and says that as he sailed along between the river banks, bedecked with the many-hued autumn foliage, it seemed as though he were sailing on a river in some new planet so indifferently beautiful was the ever changing scenery. He began his voyage on a part of the St. John little visited by tourists, but it is perhaps the most picturesque along the whole 450 miles of the river's course. The river is more winding, the hills bolder, the scenery more rugged between St. Francis and Edmundston than it is further down. At Baker Brook the scenery is charming and there is no finer bend in the whole river than that at Chat-aucou, Coln, or about five miles above the shiretown of Madawaska. From Edmundston, looking down over the scenery is strikingly beautiful, from the Block House just below the Madawaska there is a very fine view up river. From the Cross in Lower St. Basil, the view looking up was pronounced by no less an authority than Hon. Joseph Howe, to be the finest in Canada. The broad intervals of St. Basil on the one side, and St. David on the other, the chapels on either shore, the long rows of white farm houses, the smooth, tiled fields crowning the hill tops and here and there broken by a patch of forest, Edmundston in the distance, nestled under the highlands, and the river winding around free fringed islands, make up a charming scene. This is the spot where who came up the St. John first established themselves. They received grants of land here from the New Brunswick government in 1785. Between St. Basil and Grand Falls there are numerous points which present attractive views and none perhaps are more beautiful than that just below the thriving little American village of Van Buren. The magnificent scenery at Grand Falls was seen under very favorable circumstances by Commander Cheyne, and he succeeded in getting over thirty five photographic views of the falls and gorge. He ascended the gorge in his canoe as far as the "Cul-de-sac" Mill, which is the farthest limit of navigation, and can only be reached by a canoe and a very good pilot. Comparatively few people know anything about the eighteen miles of the St. John below Grand Falls, but for a canoe voyage it is one of the most delightful parts of the river. At White Rapids, Rapides des Femmes, the Black Rapids and other points the canoe gets a magnificent view of the scenery all along is rugged and dissimilar to what it is elsewhere on the St. John. The mouth of the Aroostook is an attractive and interesting spot.

Pass in the Corner.

The Meeting of the Waters of the tributary with the parent stream being clearly defined. The Mouth of the Tropic with its Indian village in the church yard of the settlement is a curious representation of the Crucifixion, is another point worth visiting. Coasting along by Andover one sees a succession of pretty landscapes, which continue somewhat bold until Munias is passed. Through Carleton County the shores of the river are lower than they are through Victoria and settlement is more advanced. It would be an easy matter to specify points of view of great beauty, but it is quite correct to say that the fifty miles until Woodstock is a long panorama of the most beautiful scenery. The same holds good until the Melville Falls are reached and here the scene is wilder. Commander Cheyne was fortunate in seeing an instantaneous view of a canoe running the falls, and also of a loaded towboat, drawn by two span of horses, ascending the stream, thus illustrating the method of river navigation. On the Melville stream, about a mile from the St. John, in a deep ravine the Commander visited a waterfall but little known. It is called Hayes' Falls and the water makes a nearly of ninety feet. It is well worth a visit. In its general features the fall resembles that of Montmorency, near Quebec. It is the intention of Commander Cheyne to use the numerous photographs he has taken to illustrate a lecture on the St. John, and it is not improbable that he may publish them. He is a close observer and has travelled extensively, and when he says that the St. John is the most beautiful river he has ever sailed upon he gives high praise indeed. If he visits England and delivers his illustrated lecture upon our river, we may be sure that he will excite much interest in it, and that the province will derive much benefit from his self-imposed labor.

Bears and Apples.

One day last week, as Mr. Josiah Lawrence, of Prince William, happened to visit his orchard, which is situated at some distance from any house, near the river, and adjoining a fence of woods, he discovered a bear quietly helping himself to apples. Bruin, seeing that he was discovered, and feeling ashamed of his boldness no doubt, hastily beat a retreat to the adjoining wood. Upon examination, it was plain to be seen, that the bear had been frequent visitors to the orchard, if not actual residents of it, and had helped themselves to the fruit apparently without compunction. A party of men assembled and scoured the woods to bring the thieves to justice, but failed to find them. Mr. Lawrence hopes, however, by means of a trap to compel the culprits yet to make some reparation for his loss.

Minor Matters.

While Norman McDonald, clerk in Mr. John B. Grier's grocery store, Regent street, was attempting to open an oyster can with a jack knife, a few days ago, the knife accidentally slipped and was thrust through the palm of his hand. He suffers great pain from his wound.

Personnel.

Mr. G. G. King, M. P., is at the Queen. Prof. Rivet was absent from the University during last week attending the Presbyterian Synod at Pictou, N. S. He returned to the city on Saturday.

CHIT-CHAT.

Principally about the Governor General's Reception and something about the Supreme Court.

Most people I talk with don't like the idea of the Drawing Room reception at Government House at 9 o'clock. They say that the Marquis ought to come down to the city and receive business men in business hours and in their business clothes, that is if he wants any large number of them to pay their respects to him. When the President of the United States holds his levees they are open to the people. The head of the Canadian government draws the line at those who own or can borrow a dress coat. I don't imagine that the Marquis cares particularly about keeping up a semi-state. To your British Aristocrat the difference between one man and another in Canada seems no greater than it really is; but there is a lot of people in this country who affect to be "society," people who fill Edul's definition of "point-position" but no magnitude, and these draw as many imaginary lines in the social world as geographers conceive as existing upon old mother earth. If the Governor General would be popular he would do well to remember that the great body of the people, that is the great majority of those who make the country worth living in, are not "in society" and don't want to be.

It takes only a small joke to enliven a court. Yesterday when Judge King remarked "That Mr. Smith, is your right bowler?" the judge replied, "It is better still. It is the joke." "Spoke in a nautical sense," said the judge, who began to think that his reputation was in jeopardy. But Mr. Smith is from Westmorland, and it goes without saying, that he replied, "I live in an inland town, your Honor, and though I don't know much about ships, I can play cards." "Be careful, Mr. Smith, you may get euchred," remarked Judge Wetmore, and then the wheels of justice moved on without a squeak.

Temperance Matters in Margerville.

At the last regular meeting of the Margerville Lodge of Royal Templars of Temperance the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Arch. Harrison, Chaplain; W. M. Tharrott, Worthing Counselor; Miss Alice Harrison, Vice; A. A. Treadwell, Recording Secretary; Miss Annie Harrison, Financial Secretary; F. E. Banks, Treasurer; H. Harrison, Herald; Miss Bella Miles, Deputy Herald; Ashley Harrison, Guard; Phair Shields, Sentinel; A. J. Sterling, Librarian; A. R. Miles, Past Commodore. This Lodge has been in existence for seventeen years, during which period it has served as a valuable institution in the community, and has greatly tended to inculcate temperance principles in the place as there is not to-day a single place in the parish where liquor is sold. Mr. J. R. Pidgeon is to deliver a lecture on temperance in the hall, Lower Margerville, under the auspices of the Lodge.

SUPREME COURT.

Yesterday's Proceedings.—In the case of ex parte Rand, which occupied all day yesterday, Court considers. Court also considers in the case of Knapp vs. Knapp.

Today's Doings.

APPEAL CASE.—Hanson, appellant, vs. Gert, respondent.—Appeal from the County Court. Mr. A. B. Knapp supports appeal; Mr. A. B. Knapp contra. This case occupied the attention of the Court part of this morning and is still going on.

University L. and D. Society.

The College students discussed the question whether or not classics should be abolished in the curriculum of the University, at their weekly meeting on Saturday night last. The debate was a very interesting one, and was conducted on both sides. The champion, Mr. H. G. Fenety, gave his decision in favor of the classical studies. The subject for the next debate is, "Resolved, That the Scott Act be repealed."

Notes from the Pokok.

Mr. John Moores, of Bear Island, who recently purchased the stock in trade of Mr. J. Scott of Pokok, is now doing a general business at the latter place. Mr. Moores sold his store in Bear Island. There are about 8,000 cords of bark about the Extract Factory at Pokok. Preparations are being made for further operations in the bark business during the coming winter.

Footling with Powder.

As some boys were tampering with powder at Gibson last evening, one of the named Enoch Bradley, son of William Bradley, thirteenth of that name, a lad about twenty years old, while in the act of discharging a squib, had his face badly burnt by the squib exploding and it is feared that his eye sight will be badly injured. Dr. Coleman is attending him.

For the Woods.

Mr. Walter Stevens, lumberman, was hiring men for the woods yesterday, at the Queen Hotel and judging from the number that collected around him it would appear to be an easy matter to get up a crew.

Hard on the Boys.

A new gate is being erected across the entrance of the alley just above the store of Dever Brothers, and the loafers will now have to pass in the evenings on to the next hiding place.

She Fell on the Steps.

Mrs. Patrick Cahn, of Lower St. Mary's, accidentally stumbled, at the steps of St. Daniel's Church, on Sunday, and falling on the stone steps inflicted a severe wound on her forehead. Dr. Coulthard dressed the wound, and the lady is doing well.

The Scott Act.

Rev. J. E. Reid will keep in the field until the vote is taken in this county on the 30th inst. He speaks in the following places:—Williamsburg, Wednesday evening, 22nd; Bloomfield, Friday evening, 23rd; Jay Creek, Friday evening, 24th; Stanley Village, Saturday evening, 25th.

Donation.

Rev. W. O'Leary, of French Village, recently received a well-filled purse as a token of esteem from some of his former parishioners in Portland, St. John.

Municipal Elections.

There is quite an excitement at Gibson to-day over the parish election for St. Mary's. There are three candidates in the field, viz: Luther Goodspeed, Alfred Rowley, and Wm. White. The voting commenced at 10 o'clock.

WHAT IS DOING AT MARYSVILLE.

The New Buildings Going up, a Splendid Water Supply, Excellent Sanitary Conditions.—Five excellent wooden dwellings have been erected on the western side of the Nashwaak at Marysville. One of them is a large building in the latest style of cottage architecture, and presents a very pretty appearance. It is intended as the residence of the manager of the cotton mill. Above this are four cottages, built on a design of Mr. Gibson's own, for convenience and roominess they are models. These houses are all supplied by an excellent water system, which has been extended to the five dwellings above. On the western side of the river, on the hill in the rear of the cotton mill six brick houses are being erected and several of them are nearing completion. These houses have ten rooms each and each is intended to be the residence of one family, who will take boarders. These houses are also supplied with water. In short in a few days every house in the village will either have water pipes laid into it or will have a hydrant pipe connected with the convenient of the door. In all its appointments Marysville is exceptionally favored. For fire protection a force pump at the cotton mill will give ample force for all parts of the village. It may be mentioned as showing the healthy character of the location, and the general excellent sanitary condition of the people that although over one thousand people have been resident about the village for the last twelve months only two funerals have occurred there during that time.

WHAT CAN SHE DO?

By E. F. Roe.

"And I can't get any work," said Edith despondingly. "People have got to know how to do things before anybody wants them, and we haven't time to learn."

"Ten dollars won't last long," said Zell recklessly. "I will go down to the village and make further inquiries to-morrow." Edith continued in a weary tone. "It seems strange how people stand aloof from us. No one calls and everybody wants what we owe them right away. Are there not any good kind people in Pushton? I wish we had not offended the Lacey. They might have advised and helped us, but nothing would tempt me to go to them after treating them as we did."

The next day Edith started on another unsuccessful expedition to the village, and while she was gone, Zell went to the post office to which she had told Van Dam to direct his reply. She found the plausible lie we have already placed before the reader.

At first she experienced a sensation of anger that he had not complied with her wish. It was a new experience to have gentlemen, especially Van Dam, so long her obsequious slave, think of anything contrary to her wishes. She also feared that Edith might be right, and that Van Dam designed evil against her. She would not openly admit, even to herself, that this was her purpose, and yet Edith's words had been so clear and strong, and Van Dam's conditions placed her so entirely at his mercy, that she shrank from him and was fascinated at the same time.

But instead of indignantly casting the letter from her, she read it again and again. Her foolish heart pleaded for him.

"He couldn't be so false to me, so false to his written word," she said, and the letter was hidden away, and she passed into the dangerous stage of irresolution, where temptation is secretly dwelt upon. She hesitated and according to the proverb, the woman who does this is lost. Instead of indignantly casting temptation from her, she left her course open, to be decided somewhat by circumstances. She willfully shut her eyes to the danger, and tried to believe, and did almost believe that her lover meant honestly by her.

And so the days passed, Edith vainly trying to find something to do, and working hard in her garden, which at present brought no return. She was often very irritable and despondent and again very irritable. Laura's apathy only deepened, and she seemed like one not yet awakened from a dream of the past. Zell made some show of work, but after all left most everything for Hannibal as before, and when Edith sharply chided her she laughed recklessly and said,—"What's the use? If we are going to starve we might as well do so at once and its over with."

"I won't starve," said Edith, almost fiercely. "There must be honest work somewhere in the world for one willing to do it, and I'm going to find it. At any rate, I can raise food in my garden before long."

"I'm afraid we'll starve before your cabbages and carrots come to maturity, and we might as well as try and live on such garbage. Supplies are running low, and as you say, the money is nearly gone."

"Yes, and people won't trust us any more. Two or three declined to in the village to-day, and I feel too discouraged and ashamed to ask any further. For some people seem afraid of us. I see persons turn and look after me, and yet they avoid me. Two or three impudent clerks tried to make my acquaintance, but I snubbed them in such a way that they will let me alone hereafter. I wonder if any stories could have got around about us? Country towns are such places for gossip."

"Have you heard of any scholars?" said Laura languidly. "No, not one," was Edith's despondent answer. "If nothing turns up before I'll go to New York next Monday and sell some more things, and I'll go where I'm known this time."

Nothing turned up, and by Sunday they had nothing in the house save a little dry bread, which they ate moistened with wine and water. Mrs. Allen sighed and cried all day. Laura had the strange manner of one waking up to something unrealized before. Restlessness began to take the place of apathy, and her eyes often sought the face of Edith in a questioning manner. Finding her alone in the garden, she said,—"Why, Edith, I'm hungry. I never remember being hungry before. Is it possible we have come to this?"

Edith burst into tears, and said brokenly,—"Come with me to the arbor."

"I'm sure I'm willing to do anything," said Laura pitiously, "but I never realized we would come to this."

"Oh, how can the birds sing?" said Edith bitterly. "This beautiful spring weather, with its promise and hopefulness, seems a mockery. The sun is shining brightly, flowers are budding and blooming, and all the world seems so happy, but my heart aches as if it would burst. I'm hungry, too, and I know poor old Hannibal is faint, though he tries to keep up whenever I am around."

"But Edith, if people knew how we are situated they would not let us want. Our old acquaintances in New York, or our relations even, though not very friendly, would surely keep us."

"Oh, yes, I suppose so for a little while, but I can't bring myself to ask for charity, and no one would undertake to support us. What discourages me most is that I can't get work that will bring in money. Between people wishing to have nothing to do with us, on one hand, and my ignorance on the other, there seems no resource. Some of those whom we owe seem inclined to press us. I'm so afraid of losing this place and being out on the street. If I could only get a chance somewhere, or get time to learn to do something well!"

Then after a moment she asked suddenly, "Where's Zell?"

"In her room, I think."

"I don't like Zell's manner," said Edith, after a brief, painful reverie. "It's so hard and reckless. Something about her mind. She has long fits of abstraction as if she was thinking of something, or weighing some plan. Could she have had any communication with that villain, Van Dam? Oh, that would be the bitterest drop of all in our cup of sorrow. I would rather see her dead than that."

"Oh dear," said Laura, "it seems as if I had been in a trance and had just awakened. Why Edith, I must do something. It is not right to let you bear all these things alone. But don't trouble about Zell, not one of George Allen's daughters will sink to that."

CHAPTER XIX.
A FALLING STAR.

Zell slept most of the day. She had reached that point where she did not want to think. On hearing Edith say that she would go to New York on Monday, a sudden and strong temptation assailed her. Impulsive, but not courageous, abounding in energy, but having little fortitude, she found the conditions of her country life growing unbearable. Van Dam seemed her only refuge, her only means of escape. She soon felt all hope of their sustaining themselves by work in Pushton. Her uncured nature could wait patiently for nothing, and as the long, idle days passed, she doubted, and then despaired, on any success from Edith's plans. She harbored Van Dam's temptation, and the consciousness of doing this hurt her womanly nature, and her hard, reckless tone and manner was the natural consequence. Though she said to herself, and tried to believe,

"He will marry me—he has promised again and again."

But to satisfy her conscience, which she could not still, and to provide some excuse for her action, and still more, to brace the hope she tried to cherish that he really meant truly by her, she wrote, "If I will meet you at the boat Monday evening, will you surely marry me? Promise me on your sacred honor."

Van Dam muttered, with a low laugh, as he read the note, "That's a rich joke, for her to accept such a proposition as mine, especially after all that has happened, and still prate of 'sacred honor.'"

But he unhesitatingly, promptly, and with many protestations, assured her that he would, and at once prepared to carry out his part of the promise.

"What's the use of half-way lies?" he said, carelessly.

On Monday Edith again took the early train with the valuable she designed disposing of. Zell had said indifferently, "You may take anything I have left except my watch and chain."

But Laura had insisted on sending her watch, saying, "I really wish to do something, Edith. I've left all the burden on you too long."

Mrs. Allen sighed, and said, "Take anything you please."

So Edith carried away with her the means of fighting the wolf, hunger, from their doors a little longer. But if she had known that a more cruel enemy would despoil her home in her absence, she could have rather starved than gone.

Laura was reading to her mother when Zell put her head in at the door, saying, "I am going for a short walk, and will be back soon."

She hastened to the office at which she told Van Dam to address her, and found his reply. With feverish cheeks, and eyes in which glowed excitement rather than happiness, she read it as soon as alone on the road, and returned as quickly as possible. Her mind was in a mild tumult, but she would not allow herself one connected thought. She spent most of the day in her room preparing for her flight. But when she came down to see Hannibal about their meagre lunch, he said in some surprise and alarm,

"Oh, Miss Zell, how burnin' red your cheeks be! You've got a ragin' fever, sure 'nuff. Go and lie right straight down, and I see to every ting. I've been to de village and got some tea. A man gave it to me as a sample, and I telled him we're like our tea mighty strong, so you've all hab a cup of tea to-day, and to-night Miss Edie'll come back with a heap of money."

"Poor old Hannibal," said Zell, with a sudden rush of tenderness. "I wish I were as good as you are."

"For bless you, Miss Zell, I isn't good. I've kind of a heathen. But somehow I feels dat the Lord will bless me when I steals for you all."

"Oh, Hannibal, I wish I was dead and out of the way! Then there would be one less to provide for."

"Dead and out of de way!" said Hannibal, half indignantly, "dat's jest how to get into de way. I'd be afeard of seein your spook whenever I was alone. I had no comfort in New York arter Massa Allen died, and was mighty glad to get away even to Pushton. And den Miss Edie and all would cry dar eyes out, and couldn't do nothin'. Folks is often more in de way arter dey's dead and gone 'an when libin. Seen your sweet face around every day, honey, is a great help to de Hannibal. It seems only yesterday it was a little baby face, and we was all pretty nigh crazy over you."

"I wish I had died then!" said Zell, passionately, and hurrying away.

"Poor child, poor child!" she takes it mighty hard," said innocent Hannibal. (To be Continued.)
