Success

Success is somebody else's opinion of one. It is the foam on the beer of life, the window of the world's opinion.

Success today means leadership, the bridging of present desire. It calls for grinding work, steady concentration and real resolve.

It is the pawn of ambition and the top rung of self-satisfaction. It runs in the lead of health, risks old man conscience on the back, and wanders home at night tired, but purposeful.

Success is a combination of importance, fear of the future, self-indulgence, and a by-product of the modern system of tipping.

The opinion of the neighbor is mightier than real happiness.

"EUROPE TODAY" PASTOR'S TOPIC

Existing Conditions in East Outlined by Rev. D. C. MacGregor, D.D.

European conditions as they exist today and the relation of the church thereto formed the subject of an intensely earnest message delivered in Knox Presbyterian church last night.

The message was delivered by Rev. D. C. MacGregor, D.D., of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, on the eve of his return from the meeting of the western section of the Pan-Presbyterian alliance held last week at Richmond, Va.

There was, indeed, little of reassurance in the picture of present-day Europe as drawn by Dr. MacGregor from the impressions he received at the meeting of the alliance from representatives who had just returned from an exhaustive tour of the continent.

"Schemes, treaties, covenants and programs are of no avail as long as the spirit of hate and distrust remains in the hearts of men... The great war intensified the spirit of national hate and mistrust, of greed, of fear and of class."

Some bright features, however, were also referred to by Dr. MacGregor in concluding his address...

CHURCH OBSERVES ITS 47TH BIRTHDAY

Special Services Are Held in Wellington Street Methodist Church.

Rev. H. A. Graham, B.A., Brantford, was the special preacher in Wellington Street Methodist church yesterday on the occasion of the 47th anniversary of that congregation.

"The need of the present day," declared Mr. Graham at the morning service, "is a fresh consciousness of the quickening presence and power of God, and that consciousness will come only when the people, both in and out of the church, bow before God in acknowledgment of their sins and transgressions."

"We must realize our utmost dependence upon God, at the same time remembering that He has always made Himself known through people separated from the world unto Himself. Too many people in the church are getting mightily tangled up with the world. Church people must be better and must become more concerned about the people of the world."

LENTEN APPEAL MADE TO PEOPLE

Bishops of Huron and London Urge Proper Observance of Season.

With the coming of Lent, Lenten messages have been issued by the bishops of the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches in this district. The Lenten pastoral of Rt. Rev. David Williams, Bishop of Huron, will be read in the Anglican churches next Sunday, and the Lenten registration issued by Rt. Rev. M. P. Fallon, Bishop of London, was read yesterday in the Catholic churches.

In his Lenten pastoral, Bishop Williams issues a plea for a spiritual introspection on the part of his people, and for a more serious observance of the Lenten season and its meaning. He asks for a realization that Lent is more than merely a season of the year, with no more inspiration than any of the four common seasons, and suggests that this is the appropriate time for turning over a new leaf in the spiritual life.

WOMEN and THE HOME

ENSEMBLE SUITS FEATURE COMING STYLES FOR SPRING

Major Ingram and A. Trick of Smallman Firm Submit to Interview.

JUST BACK FROM N. Y. Cross-Stripe Shirts For Men—Bow-Wow Belts and Balbriggans for Women.

If you're a woman the chief thing that's worrying you now is clothes. Not so much whether you can pay for them. It's a little too early for that. But rather which way the styles are going to jump. And whether there's any chance of making last season's costume "do."

The best way to stop the worry is to take a trip to New York. The next best thing is to have a heart to heart talk with someone who's been there. That's just what I did.

I heard (no matter how) that Major Gordon Ingram and Albert Trick of the Smallman & Ingram firm had just returned from the American home of the styles. So I pattered down to the shop as fast as my goshes and the wet, icy streets would let me.

They weren't going to know a thing I didn't. Not if I could help it. Even though I didn't have the price of a New York ticket in my stocking. They were awfully decent and told me everything they could.

Ensemble Madness. I gathered, first of all, that ensemble suits are to be the "whole thing." Indeed, New York city appears to have gone mad for them.

The most intriguing of ensembles are the bow-wow belts—just narrow leather belts with matching leather wristlets which buckle over the sleeves to hold them snugly in place at the cuffs.

Ensemble jewelry sets consist of choker necklace, bracelets and earrings, usually of pretty colored pearl beads. Bracelets go in threes, and so on.

The ensemble costumes, a long coat and dress, are fashioned of all the beautiful materials of spring, the coat material often trimming the dress of a lighter texture.

Colors for the most part tone in with each other. Spring will find women appearing in the lovely Indian reds, morocco, fez, talavera, kote and copper shades. Among the new colors is one called pueblo, which looks like nothing so much as a pretty plate of tomato soup.

Balbrigan for Gowns. Among the materials, which range through all the checked, striped and plain wool materials, is a novelty—balbrigan. You may have reason to be shocked. It is just the same old material from which men's underwear is made, and it appears in colors as well as the natural shade.

And here's just a word of warning to friend husband. He'd better keep a close watch over his personal belongings. She who could make off with his ties and shirts last season is perfectly capable of achieving a spring costume from his supply of balbrigans.

Kasha cloth with its finish of goat hair is a popular material, while printed silks are still being shown largely.

The suspender skirt is again making its appearance and indicates that the tucked-in blouse will return. Dresses, still fashioned on straight lines, are trimmed with laces, ribbons and pleatings worked in panel effects. All have a slight flare at the bottom.

Flowers appear everywhere on hats, on fur neck-pieces and on the shoulders of frocks. Camellias are best with gardenias, violets and all the other

Sacred Day

I have marked this day in my calendar. As sacred and set apart. For I held in my fumbling hand a woman's heart.

I shall never know by what magic touch. Of undreamed and blundering power. Her soul was charmed to such perfect trust. For one white hour.

But of all days in my calendar. This shall have sacred place. For I looked through a woman's heart today. And saw God's face. —Peter McArthur.

A Word For the Men. There are several novelties among the styles for men. For example, bloused flannel trousers will take the place of white for the man who wishes to be up to the minute this summer.

WOMEN and THE HOME

DRESS By MARY MARSHALL

Corsets Are Now Reduced to a Minimum for Anyone Whose Figure Will Stand That Treatment.

Doesn't it seem as if we'd have to scold that old-fashioned word corset? Doesn't it strike you strongly of the Victorian encasement of whalebone, steel, metal clasps and lacings to be carried over to this day when fashion needs no such foundations?

Every few months someone comes forth with the prediction that small waists, and hour-glass silhouettes are coming back. That would mean a return of the Victorian corset, no doubt. But fashions don't seem to be evolving along those lines at all.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

THE VOGUE OF THE SHIP.

There is a great vogue for the ship as a decorative feature in interiors. Lamp shades are made with designs sailing their wide expanses, either painted on or pasted on, in the case of interesting prints or engravings.

And the small model ship, either antique or modern, is another decidedly valued bit of decoration nowadays. Moreover, ships are made for book ends and for the door stops, and china ships even are made in the shape of boats or flowers or fruit!

Reddy Fox Takes Peter Rabbit's Dare and Follows Into Buster's Bedroom

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Peter Rabbit had dared Reddy Fox. He had told Reddy that he dared go where Reddy didn't dare go. Then with Reddy almost at his heels he had dodged into Buster Bear's bedroom.

"So that's it," said Reddy to himself. "So that's Peter Rabbit's secret."

He could smell Buster Bear, and in spite of himself it made him uneasy. But it wouldn't do to have it known that Peter Rabbit had dared go where he didn't dare go. Reddy poked his head inside the entrance.

Now Peter Rabbit had been waiting just inside that entrance. It hadn't entered his funny little head that Reddy would ever think of following him in there. So when Reddy's sharp nose was thrust inside, Peter had one of the most scary surprises of his whole life.

"Well, to be honest, I wouldn't have dared to go in there if I hadn't seen him go in there. But that makes a difference. Yes, sir, that makes a difference. If Peter Rabbit can go in there safely I can go in there just as safely. If there is no danger for Peter there is no danger for me. Of course, Buster Bear is sound asleep, I know just how Johnny Chuck sleeps and I suspect that Buster sleeps just as soundly. Probably I couldn't waken him if I tried. I'll just give Peter a little surprise party. I'll take his ears, his ears, that's what I'll do. I'll take his ears."

Reddy uncurled his big, soft tail from around his feet. Then, for all the world as if he were afraid of making a noise, he stole up to the entrance of Buster Bear's bedroom. For a moment or two he hesitated.

The Astonishing Adventure of Jane Smith

By PATRICIA WENTWORTH.

INSTALLMENT II. Jane Smith sat on a bench in Kensington gardens. Her entire consisted of two shillings and eleven pence. She had already counted the pennies four times, because there really should have been three shillings.

Jane had a passion for making lists. Years and years and years ago Mr. Carruthers had said to her: "My dear, you must learn to be businesslike. I have never been businesslike myself, and it has always been a great trouble to me."

Jane stopped writing, and began to think about all those other lists. She had always showed them to Mr. Carruthers, and he had always gazed at them with the same vague benediction, and said how businesslike she was getting.

Dear Cousin James—Jane was rich instead of poor when she thought about him. She looked across at the trees in their new mist of green, and then suddenly she him April Christmas tree. Since then she had made lists of her books, lists of her clothes, shopping lists, and an annual list of good gardeners to employ.

She opened and shut her eyes very quickly once or twice, and fixed her attention on the list in her hand. At the top of the list Jane had written "Cousin Louisa," and the reason against asking Cousin Louisa's assistance was set down as, "Because she was a perfect beast to my darling Jimmy, and a worse beast to me, and anyone else."

In moments of irreverence the late Mr. Carruthers—the Mr. Carruthers, author of five monumental volumes on ethnographical differentiations—had been addressed by his young ward and cousin as "darling Jimmy."

It will be observed that Miss Smith's association with the world of science had not succeeded in chastening her imagination. Jane's pencil travelled down the list.

"Mr. Bruce Murray. In Thibet during the winter of 1912, I have solemnly put two thick black lines through Henry's name. One cannot lose from a headed reticule from a young man whose hand one has refused in marriage—even if it was three years ago, and he's probably long since married, and at least fifteen girls since then."

"Henry's mamma—well, the only time she ever loved me in her life was when I was a baby. I should think she was an absolute wash-out—and that's the lot."

Jane folded up the list and put it in her handbag. Two silver shillings and eleven copper pennies, and then the workhouse!

It was at this moment that a stout lady in a ginger-colored pug sat heavily down upon the far end of Jane's bench. The ginger-colored pug was on a scarlet leather lead, and after seating herself the stout lady bent forward creaking, and lifted him to a place beside her.

Jane wondered vaguely why a red face and a white necktie should go with a passion for bugled bonnets and pugs.

do you want me to do?" she asked. All the time that Mr. Todhunter had been glooming and growling, running his fingers through his hair and depicting Renata's appalling position, the great idea had been slowly forming itself in his mind. Every time that he looked at Jane her likeness to Renata made him feel quite ghiddy. The great idea, it occurred to him, was to desert!

"Miss Smith, if you would—you see, if we could only get a clear start—what I mean to say is, South America's a long way off—"

"Quite a distance," Jane agreed. "And if they thought that you were Renata, they wouldn't look for her—and once we were clear away."

"My dear Mr. Todhunter!" said Jane. "It could take you up the fire-escape," said Mr. Todhunter, in low, thrilling accents. "It would be quite easy. They would never know that this sister—"

"Of course," said Jane, speaking to herself in her own mind. "I might try to be a housemaid, but one has to have a character, and I don't believe Cousin Louisa would give me one."

"Let's talk," she said briefly. To Be Continued.

Dorothy Dix

The Young Bride Who Has to Do All the Wooming—The Woman Who Fleed From Temptation Instead of Breaking Up Two Homes.

Dear Miss Dix—I married fifteen years ago to escape an unhappy home life. I made a mistake and have always been miserable, for I am married to a clod. But he loves me. A few years ago I was thrown into the company of a brilliant married man. The call and answer of our souls, each for the other, was uncanny. I was almost swept away by our love, but I put 3,000 miles between us and am trying to make the best of life. All I was trying to do was to live the life that spells happiness to my clod and the wife of my lover?—THIRTY-FIVE.

Answer: No, you are fine, and brave, and honorable, and are doing the straight thing, that in the end will bring you a peace and joy that will be more enduring than any happiness you could have.

Answer: Of course, if you treated him as he deserves to be treated you would give your husband a dose of his own medicine. You would refrain from kissing him or caressing him, and showing him any tenderness, and let him do his share of the courting, if there was any biding and cooing in your love nest.

But if you treated your husband this way, and gave him back coldness for coldness, the chances are that you would freeze your love to death, and very soon you and he would become one of those estranged couples who seem to be perfectly indifferent to each other and have no tie that binds them together, except the matrimonial yoke.

You will find, as you journey further along the matrimonial pathway, little bride, that justice has no place in married life, and that husbands and wives cannot be dealt with as they deserve to be dealt with. You cannot measure the patience and forbearance, the tenderness and love, the carresses and endearments that you get, and say that you will give back only so much as you have received. You must give all that is in you without counting the cost or asking for a return.

Answer: You certainly have your mother is very much at fault. Many mothers have this jealousy, and break up every match that their sons contemplate making, until finally they are forced into old bachelorhood. Thereby she does them a great wrong, for a man is not only happier, but he makes a better man and a better citizen if he marries and has children.

the men operating them. His bill also asks that editorials and reading matter for which money is paid shall be marked as advertisements.

The public as a general thing know who owns and operates the newspapers which they read. In nearly every case this information is published with each edition of the paper.

When Mr. Church comes to the point of requesting that editorials for which money is paid shall be marked as advertising, he shows that he is either entirely ignorant of facts or is seeking to heap a gratuitous insult on the head of Canadian journalism.

No editorial page can be right all the time; such a condition would be humanly impossible. It is on this page that the paper seeks to view the events of the day, tries to interpret the happenings, and draw its deductions.

The editorial page of a paper, were it on the auction block daily, as suggested by Mr. Church, would cease to exist because people would not read it.

Mr. Church must know this, and if he does not it is because he has given no thought to the matter. His inference that it is possible to purchase editorial opinion is as unkind as it is thoughtless.

The Peterborough Examiner has the idea that cats ought to be taxed. And if cats, why not canary birds? Yes, tax everything and be done with it.

One correspondent writes that "we must take a clear, legal, disinterested view of the matter of reimbursing Home Bank depositors."

The Chesley Enterprise refers to "The London Advertiser, which takes a sound, common-sense view of social as well as other problems."

A London businessman, discussing the question of selecting the proper person for a position by some of the rules generally followed, such as his appearance, ability to meet people, his previous record, etc., admitted that none of these rules could be counted on to work all the time.

The answer to it is, the London man added, that a few months ago there was a good appointment open, and we gave it to the second man without any hesitation.

The reason was that the second man realized his shortcomings, his need of more knowledge, and felt that if he was going to make good he would have to work for it.

The reason was that the second man realized his shortcomings, his need of more knowledge, and felt that if he was going to make good he would have to work for it.

It only goes to show how foolish it is to refer to any man as a dud or a second-rater.

Editor of The Advertiser: Sir,—On the surface of an expansive body of water of great depth a ripple may be seen when the water is untroubled and calm.

If one claimed to be the successor of Wesley or Knox, no perceptible disturbance would be observed in the great religious denominations which are the outgrowth of their inspiration and teaching.

Stratford Correspondent Believes We Need Men of Conviction, and Should Give Them Encouragement.

Editor of The Advertiser: Sir,—I presume many of your readers noticed a week or so ago an item that appeared in several places, that a minister not far from London had decided that he wanted no one in his choir who was a card-player or a dancer.

The one thing that strikes men in this case is the way in which a certain element of the public always resent having their pet corners trampled on. We may pride ourselves that we are far enough advanced to stand for criticism of the things we do, but I wonder how far we are prepared to go in this direction.

I believe it would be a good thing for us if we were quite honest with ourselves at times. We are quite willing to admit that one of the needs of the present day is conviction on the part of men, but have you ever noticed how quick people are to take steps to interfere with any of our own pet desires or theories?

We certainly do need men of conviction in the pulpit, in our newspapers, and in places of public responsibility, and if we were wise we would encourage men of this calibre in the work they are trying to do, even if we had to school them, and let them know that we are with them in their own feelings in the matter.

VOTING THEMSELVES MORE PAY.

THIS voting oneself an increased indemnity is the most wonderful thing in self-government. It is to be hoped this increase will not open the flood-gates of extravagance in provincial spending.

Sanitary Cafeteria for University Students

Lunch and Informal Chats Mark Noon in 'U' Cafeteria

Big Family Gathers in Bright New Dining-Room For Midday Relaxation—Students Mingle Freely.

GIVES SPLENDID VIEW OF LONDON

While the university students have enjoyed many social events since the opening of the new buildings last fall, there is one daily gathering that is not confined to any one year or department. It is the daily meeting of the students at dinner in the bright dining-room of the science building. There, students mingle freely with one another in the informal atmosphere of the cafeteria. From 11 o'clock until 2 the students meet at lunch to enjoy a conversation of those topics of school and the world at large, while having a splendid dinner and an unexcelled service. The cafeteria is one of the attractions of the university. It runs the length of the top floor of the science building, overlooking the city. There is a freedom there that is unknown in other parts of the college. It is a restful place where the students may relax after a strenuous morning of classes.

Interesting Feature.

The university cafeteria is one of the most novel and most interesting features of the new university buildings. It occupies the major part of the top floor of the science building and six days a week it provides dinner for from 150 to 200 members of the staff and the student body. When the plans for moving into the new buildings were being rounded out it was realized that there would have to be some provision for students to secure their noon meal on account of the distance of the buildings from the business part of the city and because many students would have but one hour between lectures or laboratory periods in which to secure something to eat. Had there been dormitories for students, the problem of providing meals would have been solved thereby, but as dormitories are something hoped for but not yet realized, it was necessary to make a temporary provision, which was done by taking over that portion of the science building which will ultimately house the geological museum. The building of temporary partitions separated off the kitchen and pantries and the remainder became a great dining-room, which for its present purpose could hardly be excelled.

The dining-room fronts out on the broad lawns and driveways leading to the buildings. From these windows on the opposite side of the room may be seen the hills and valleys of the London Hunt and Country club property and the farms of London township extending away beyond. At all times of the year there is a beautiful panorama of the finest Western Ontario scenery, and in the warmer months balmy breezes sweep in through the tall windows.

Self-Serve Scheme.
The cafeteria is operated on the self-serve plan. Entering at the west end, a visitor first notices the racks of hats and coats and then the green-topped tables, each accommodating six people and in all providing for about 100 to sit down at once. Across the far end of the big room is the serving counter. As the diner approaches this he silver which is wrapped in a paper napkin. He then orders whatever he may wish from the bill-of-fare for the day and, passing at the other end of the serving table, pays his check to the cashier situated there.

What is there on the menu to tempt a hungry student? One thing very noticeable is that the menu contains good food values and that the vast majority of the students are hearty eaters, judging by what they have on the trays that they carry to the tables. There is always a soup, choice of two or three hot meats and of as many cold meats, potatoes and other vegetables, salads, jellies, pies, ice cream, fruit, pickles, tea, coffee, milk, bread and butter or rolls. The menu varies from day to day, of course, but there are always plenty of good substantial items from which to make choice.

Prices Reasonable.
The price at which the various items are offered strikes a visitor as exceedingly reasonable. Soup is five cents; a meat order, usually 15 cents; vegetables, five cents each; pie, salads, ice cream, bread rolls, tea, coffee, milk, all five cents each. An average student's dinner would probably cost 30 or 35 cents, although many do not spend this much, and a few, of course, spend five or ten cents more if their appetite is particularly keen. A sort of club dinner at 35 cents, made up of specially designated items, is also sometimes popular. Occasionally some very special item is put on the menu as a variation.

GRAHAM SCORES GLOOM PROPHETS

Declares Any Politician Who Preaches Pessimism Is Unworthy of Office.

Special to The Advertiser.

Toronto, Feb. 22.—Representative Liberals from every part of the federal riding of West York, meeting at Weston Saturday selected Alexander MacGregor, K.C., Toronto, as the Liberal candidate at the next election. Hon. George P. Graham, minister of railways, who was the chief speaker, reviewed the work of the King administration, and declared that "it has been doing the practical things to put Canada on her feet."

Referring to the "pessimism" of the opponents of the government, Hon. Dr. Graham declared that the men, who for political purposes would condemn his own country was not worthy of Canada's highest office. He replied to criticism of the administration with regard to its policy on the tariff and unemployment, and denied that it was responsible for industrial depression, and should shoulder the task of giving relief to the unemployed. He wished to remind the critics that the federal government and not the province or the municipalities was bearing the burden of war taxes. It was not fair that the province and the municipalities should seek to pass along obligations such as unemployment—problems properly belonging to themselves—to the already over-strained federal government. It was time that the provinces took up their own burdens. The government's attitude on the tariff, he said, was intended to lessen the cost of production in the basic industries, agriculture, mining and lumbering, etc., so that prosperity in these lines could be reflected throughout the country.

HOLD EUCHRE PARTY.
Special to The Advertiser.
Dublin, Feb. 22.—The C.W.I. gave a progressive euchre party on Thursday night. Thirty-five tables accommodated those present. The Dantzer orchestra supplied the music. Mrs. E. B. An honest man's word

MORE than three hundred years ago, Miguel de Cervantes said: "An honest man's word is as good as his bond." Advertisers must be honest men, if they would remain advertisers. Their announcements are signed. They must tell the truth in their advertising. For their own protection, as well as yours.

What would it profit a man to advertise "Pure, virgin-wool suits," only to have you discover they were shoddy? You would soon separate the sheep from the cotton. And you would never deal with that man again. And, further, you would tell all your acquaintances what a skinflint he was.

As a matter of business, if not of personal principle, an advertiser must tell the truth in his signed announcements. That's what makes the advertising columns of this paper such reliable guides to honest merchandise. The printed announcements are bonds between you and the advertiser.

Read the advertisements. Read them regularly. To be informed on the newest and best in everything. To save hours of shopping. To make the family purse do a bigger, better job. To get goods of known quality at the most attractive price.

You would not plan a motor trip without first consulting road-maps and guide-books. Is it logical to plan a shopping trip without first consulting the advertisements? Read the advertisements. Then go to the stores with your mind more than half made up.

A signed advertisement is, in effect, a sealed bond between you and the advertiser.
