Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

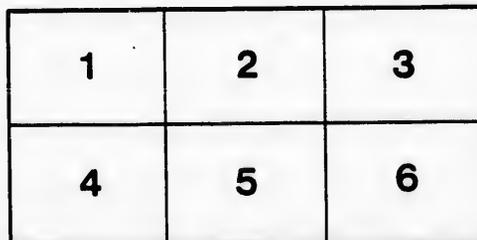

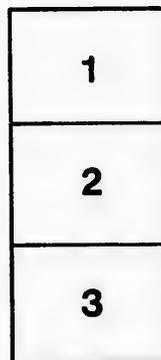

McLennan Library
McGill University
Montreal

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

McLennan Library
McGill University
Montreal

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

Haddon, John, M.D. Notes from Private Practice, Edin., 1887, 8vo.

Haden, Francis Seymour, F.R.C.S., b. 1818, in London; educated at University College, London, and at the Sorbonne, Paris; became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1842 and a Fellow in 1857. He is distinguished as no etcher, and is president of the Society of Painter-Etchers. 1. Earth to Earth: an Answer to a Pamphlet on "Cremation," Lon., 1875, 12mo; new ed., enl., same year. 2. About Etching: Part I, Notes on a Collection of Etchings by the Great Masters; Part II, An Annotated Catalogue of the Examples exhibited of Etchers' and Painter-Engravers' Work. Illust. Lon., 1879, 4to; 3d ed., 1881, 8vo.

"He is an indomitable special pleader, and would fain persuade us by force of eloquence that the moment the early painters discovered that it was possible to act upon the plate by an implement wielded like a pencil they ceased at once to use the burin, and became painters. . . . The slight critical notes on etchers and painter-engravers among the old masters are piquant and often valuable."—Sat. Rev., xlviii, 426.

"This work contains the notes of Mr. Haden upon a recent exhibition of etched work by the great masters from his own collection, to which was added a series of examples of his own handwork. But, in addition to these notes, he gives us sixteen fac-similes of some of the finest of these examples, (extending, perhaps, one or two of the number); and these reproductions are practically as fine in effect as the originals themselves."—Spectator, III, 1650.

Hadley, James, 1821-1872, b. at Fairfield, N.Y.; graduated at Yale in 1842, and entered the Theological Seminary, but left that institution to become tutor in mathematics at Middlebury College; tutor in classical history at Yale 1845-48; assistant professor of Greek 1848-51, and from then professor. 1. A Greek Grammar for Schools and Colleges, N. York, 1861, p. 8vo; new ed., rev. and re-written by F. de F. Allen, Lon., 1884. 2. Elements of the Greek Language: taken from the Greek Grammar, N. York, 1870, 8vo. 3. Introduction to Roman Law: in Twelve Academic Lectures, N. York, 1873, 8vo. Posth.

"Admirable Introduction: the Roman law as these lectures are, it was inevitable in their plan that they should convey to the students who heard them or who may read them an exceedingly erroneous impression upon many important points, and that without any actual errors of statement. . . . In such an outline covering so much ground the element of time is practically left out. . . . But, with all these defects, or rather omissions, the book is most admirable."—Nation, xvii, 170.

4. Essays, Philological and Critical, selected from the Papers of James Hadley. [Edited by W. D. Whitney.] N. York, 1873. Posth.

"The scholar who is competent to judge will be impressed, as he reads one after another, with the wide range of reading and reflection and the sound sense and comprehensive judgment which are everywhere shown in them. . . . Most of these essays were prepared for some learned society or periodical; but they are, if not exactly popular, certainly very pleasant and easy reading."—Nation, xvii, 388.

"A volume of papers of a very high order."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii, 314.

"Recruits once more from the point of view of an eyewitness the melancholy story of English irresolution and disgrace."—Sat. Rev., iv. 213.

2. Dawn, Lon., 1884, 3 vols. or 8vo.

"Dawn" (a somewhat obscure title) bears many of the familiar marks of inexperience in novel-writing. It is characterised by no considerable interest of plot, and the incidents are not borrowed, and show not a little ability of the character-drawing. But there is altogether too much of it. . . . He [Mr. Haggard] must 'train down' if he is to write a really good novel."—G. SAINTSBURY: Aead., xxv. 200.

3. The Witeh's Head, Lon., 1884, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 4. King Solomon's Mines, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo; new ed., 1888.

"The success of Mr. Haggard's wonderful story, 'King Solomon's Mines,' is not due exclusively to its merits, exciting of its kind ever published in a modern language. It makes to a hungry desire or hope which is probably latent in all men, and certainly crops out in the minds of all civilized men—the desire that the lust of wonder that man will discover some day, something which he should be fully entitled to speak, honestly satiated; the hope that men will discover something, or it may be permanently astonished."—Spectator, lviii. 1365.

5. She: a History of Adventure: with Fac-Similes, Lon., 1887; 6th ed., (31st to 35th thousand,) 1887, or 8vo. "Mr. Haggard's practical knowledge and experience of savage life and wild lands, his sense of the mystery and charm of ruined civilizations, his appreciation of sport, (especially with his game,) his adventurous imagination, and a certain raisonnement, which makes the most impossible adventures appear true, (to a reader of sympathetic fancy,) these are the qualities a man admires in 'She,' if he chance to admire it at all."—ANDREW LANG: Aead., xxxl. 34.

"Although he is often subtle and original in his conceptions, and felicitously daring in his epithets when seeking to present some true but delicate touch of nature or feeling, an obscurity of narrative . . . arrests his readers in the midst of their enjoyment. . . . Many of the present poems celebrate the delights of virginial love, while the burden of others is rather one of despair."—Ath., No. 2741.

9. The Serpent Play: a Divine Pastoral, Lon., 1883, cr. 8vo.

"Dr. Hake is one of the most earnest and original of poets. He has taken nothing from his contemporaries, but has hatched a message for himself, and has chosen to deliver it in terms that are wholly his own. . . . He concerns himself with absolute things, the eternal elements of human life, and the immutable courses of human destiny. . . . That this is so is a reason why his work should be always interesting, as it is also a reason why it should be more or less unpopular. He loves to symbolize; he does not always care that the symbol shall be appropriate and plain."—Nat. Rev., iv. 315.

"It owes much of its interest and authority to the learned notes supplied by Mr. Prendergast: while his memoir of the author enables us to appreciate the ample and little known materials which Mr. Haliday had collected for his purpose, and the judgment with which he has used them. . . The value of the work is in its witness to the great extent of the Danish power from the ninth to the eleventh centuries."—Spectator, iv, 297.

8. Modern English, Lon., 1873, p. 8vo.

"An attempt to show how the English of to-day differs from that of our grandfathers, and to vindicate the change as proper growth. . . . It is a hard pressed pack of facts.

"When it is added that the facts are selected with clear-headedness and sound judgment. . . . and that the matter is in great part new and either supplements in important particulars or contradicts our best dictionaries about the history of familiar words, every student of English will see that he needs the book and owes the author no stilted thanks."—Nation, xviii, 158.

"He does not criticize; he reviles. He seems to be in a passion from one end of his book to the other. . . . The book has its use in one way, as any collection of obsolete, uncommon, or novel words and meanings of words has its use."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 25.

"Mr. Hall shows that our language, like every other language that possesses any vitality at all, is in a state of constant flux and change and perpetually endeavors to renew its youth. . . . It [the book] abounds with a rich store of quotations such as has seldom been equalled. For every word that is discussed there are crowds of reference."—WALTER W. SKRAT: Acad., v, 97.

"He is a complete master of the complex economic history of the time; and it is not the least of the various merits of his book that it follows out such familiar but abstract facts as the competition for land or the general rise of prices in all the graphic detail of individual lives. . . . The lives of Gresham, Popham, 'Wild' Darrell, Bishop Cox, of Ely, and several minor figures, are illuminated by a host of details in great part new. 'Wild' Darrell is in some sort, as Mr. Hall confesses, the hero of a book otherwise devoted to marrying, rather than making, reputations."—Acad., xxxi. 29.

University College, Oxford, 1859; called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn 1861. 1. The Rights and Duties of Neutrals, Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"It is slight, and might with advantage be expanded, but the plan and the execution are both admirable."—Sat.
Rev., xxxviii, 181.

"An adequate work," said Sir William Harcourt, in the preface to his well-known "Historical" letters, "on the Rights and Duties of Neutrals, founded on a sound basis of historical investigation and judicial decision, has yet to be written." . . . Mr. Hall has, we think, filled the void, and his work is a valuable and masterly contribution to legal literature."—Spectator, xviii, 1237.

2. International Law, Oxf., 1880, 8vo; 2d ed., entitled
"A Treatise on International Law," 1884.

"Mr. Hall's exposition of international law divides itself into three main branches, relating to (1) the law governing states in their normal relations; (2) the law governing states in the relation of war; (3) the law governing states in the relation of neutrality." Exception may be taken to a proposition or an argument here and there, but the treatise as a whole fulfils its purpose meritoriously."—ibid.,
No. 2577.

"With his book in hand, an English lawyer need no longer be afraid to speak in the gate with any of the American or Continental authorities."—Sat. Rev., li, 31.

"The present work, in which the former one ("Rights and Duties of Neutrals") is incorporated, with some additions and modifications of form, is a complete treatise on public international law, ranking in extent and thoroughness by the side of Wheaton, Phillimore, or Twiss."—Acad.,

For biog., see HALLEY, ROBERT, JR., Lancashire; its Puritanism and Nonconformity, Manchester, 1869, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1872.

He is an industrious and moderate writer, and on the whole, when Popery and bishops are not too tempting for flings of rhetoric, a sound one. —Sat. Rev., xxxi. 501.

Halley's work lacks that minuteness of local information which characterizes David's Essex (1868), Browne's Norfolk and Suffolk (1877), or Urwick's Hert's (1884), but he alone rises above the nonconformist apostle, and deserves a place among church historians. —Dict. of Nat. Biog., xxiv. 110.

Laying the Foundation-Stone of the Queen's Statue, Sydney, 1881. 2. Poems, Odes, Songs, Sydney, 1887.

Hallowell, Mrs. Anna Davis. James and Lucretia Mott's Life and Letters. Edited by their Granddaughter. With Portraits. Boston, 1884, 12mo.

"Mrs. Hallowell's editing is eminently sober, modest, discreet, successful in generalization, happy in descriptions, and full of insight into the underpinnings of her grandparents' characters. . . The result is an important contribution to the history of the Society of Friends, and of the leading reforms of the century."—Nation, xxxviii, 431.

- Hamerton, Philip Gilbert, b. 1834, at Laneside, near Shaw, Lancashire; educated at Burnley and Doncaster Grammar-Schools; went to Paris in 1855 to study painting. In 1857 he settled at Loch Awe, but in 1861 returned to France, living first at Sens and afterwards near Autun, and acquiring that intimate knowledge of French life which appears in his writings. He had begun early to contribute to periodicals, and in 1866 he became art-critic to the Saturday Review, but resigned that post two years later, retaining his connection with the paper as an occasional contributor. In 1869 he established a new art review, the Portfolio, devoted chiefly to etching. He has also contributed to the fortnightly the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, and other periodicals. He is an honorary member of the Society of Painter-Etchers, and in 1882 received from the French government the university decoration of an Officier d'Académie. 1. - "It is seldom that a writer on art approaches his subject in so scientific a spirit of inquiry. He first weighs the capabilities of this particular method of finishing separately and in expression, and, having ascertained what special classes of effects can be better produced by it than by any other process, he fairly argues that the artist who applies it with success to these is entitled, as an etcher, to a distinctly higher rank than that of him who only obtains from it such effects as can be produced equally well or twofold, its object being not to determine the position of an etcher among etchers, but also that of etching itself among the graphic arts."—Spectator, xlix, 210.

"The body of the book is chiefly made up of notes on trees which are in leaf, and the varieties of green and make the most show in the foreground, and the flowers which by their number give a general finish to the landscape. But the author makes no attempt to furnish a systematic calendar of vegetation, nor, on the other hand, does he confine himself to mere description of the external aspects less literary, artistic, or didactic. He branches off into mat- ters of the spelling of the 'd'iable, sentimentalizing with Chan- cerworth over the lesser evidence, or moralizing on his own account on the nest-building of birds and other rural pur- suits."—Spectator, xlix, 435.

"He does not take a sufficiently comprehensive view, nor consider enough the subject of graphic art in general, to convey an entirely right conception of the normal characteristics of design in the various processes of painting, drawing, and engraving. . . . Nevertheless, what Mr. Hamerton says of the various graphic processes contains a great deal that is highly interesting and instructive."—Nation, xxvii, 618. 20. Human Intercourse, Lon., 1884, 8vo.

"It is in new speculation that the book falls so lamenta- bly short. We look in vain for subtle analysis of thought and feeling, for fresh distinction between friendship and love, or between the friendship of persons of the same and those thousand points in human intercourse which modern life and modern culture have made increasingly difficult to manage successfully."—Spectator, lviii, 519.

21. Paris in Old and Present Times: with Especial Reference to Changes in its Architecture and Topography, Lon., 1884, fol. 22. Landscape, Illust., Lon., 1885, fol.

"Its 'dominant idea,' as the author tells us in his pre- face, is 'the influence of natural landscape upon man,' and although art (and especially the arts of 19) is com- bled to the fact and the assertion of its power and beauty is sent mainly to the illustrations."—Sat. Rev., lx, 360.

"The author of 'The Graphic Arts' is Etching and Etchers has been blessed with extraordinary genius in some producing this magnus opus. He has chosen a noble subject, he has treated all his energies and indomitable patience to its treatment, and he has been seconded by his publishers with such unwearied courage, and taste that the superb volume before us may be said to represent, so far as this country is concerned, illustration, decoration, typography, and taste in binding at their best."—Ibid., No. 2269.

23. Imagination in Landscape Painting, Illust., Lon., 1886, fol., 2d ed., 1887. (Reprinted from 'The Port- folio,' with additional illustrations.)

"Mr. Hamerton divides the imagination of the land- scape painter into two kinds,—the first of which is simple and using remembered images into the pictorial whole. . . . Scattered here and there in this book, sometimes where it is least expected, we come upon notes and hints of intermediate kinds of imagination; and we hope that some day he will work upon this field in a more systematic manner."—Cosmo Monkhouse's Acad., xxxi, 18.

"His plan is to omit as far as possible all technical terms, and, passing by all matters of secondary importance, to confine himself to those leading features by which the battle or campaign is distinguished. Comprehensive without being sketchy, he disregards numbers and events, except so far as they are necessary to the establishment of principles. These principles he takes one by one, first gives a simple narration,—afterwards commenting on the pointing out where the usual rules may, under certain circumstances, be deviated from."—Ath., No. 2918.

Hampden, Hon. Augustus Charles Hobart, 1822-1884, known as Hobart Pasha, third son of the Earl of Buckinghamshire; entered the royal navy in 1836; retired from active service in 1860; commanded a blockade-runner on the coast of North Carolina in the civil war, and afterwards entered the Turkish service, and was commander-in-chief of the Black Sea fleet of Turkey in the Russo-Turkish war. His name had been struck off the navy-list in 1867, but he was reinstated, with the rank of vice-admiral, in 1885. 1.

"The anecdotes and reminiscences are put together in a haphazard way that amply justifies the title. There doubt, that his adventures needed no literary setting to recommend them, and had but to be told in a straightforward manner to chain the most indifferent reader's attention."—Ath., No. 3081.

"The part of his book which Americans will read with the liveliest interest is his account of blockade-running during the war of secession. . . Nowhere does the interest of the narrative flag; and the facts and anecdotes recorded are so many side-lights thrown on the main current of great historical events."—Nation, xlv, 19.

Hardy, Thomas, b. 1840, at a village in Dorsetshire, Eng., of the same family to which Nelson's captain, Thomas Hardy, belonged. He went to school in his native county, and was apprenticed at sixteen to an ecclesiastical architect in the county town. On coming of age he went to London, where he entered as a student of modern languages at King's College, and became a pupil in architecture of Mr. Arthur Blomfield, F.S.A. He received the prize and medal of the Institute of British Architects in 1863 for his essay on Coloured Brick and Terra-Cotta Architecture, winning also in the same year a prize for design. He also wrote art criticisms.

At about the age of thirty he found his true vein in the writing of fiction, to which he has since mainly devoted himself. He resides at Max Gate, near Dorchester, Dorsetshire, on a hill which overlooks many of the scenes of his Wessex tales. Some of his novels have been translated into French and Dutch, and "Far from the Madding Crowd" was dramatized by the author in 1879 and produced in a modified form in 1882. 1. Desperate Remedies, Lon., 1871, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Anon.

We cannot decide, satisfactorily to our own mind, on the sex found in the occasional coarse language of the book will purge himself of this. . . finished. They show power also of probing and analyzing the deeper shades of character. . . . The English Boasian has never been so idealized through the microscope of fiction as has been the Athenians in æneid. . . . Under his hand there is a philosophical speculation, and Parisians in castrated agricultural classes, and that Mr. Hardy has put his child agricultural classes of that Mr. Hardy has put his own thoughts and words into their mouths. And this sup-pletion necessarily shakes our confidence in the truthfulness of many of the æsthetic incidents of rustic life which are so plentifully scattered through those volumes. . . .
But perhaps it does not very much matter. . . .
the labourer, whether either the conversations or the descripof the novel to this extent, that they are making, when they are so fitted in, an effective whole."

poor performance. It has a fatal lack of magic. . . .

5. The Hand of Ethelberta: a Comedy in Chapters.
Illustr. Lon., 1876, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"While the whole story is a most elaborate and lively satire on the social falseness of our fashionable world, and the rapidness of its life, the hollowness of its sentiment, and the whims which sway between it and the honest world, how widely built is the edifice of its luxury, we do not find it that it takes us as if it ever had happened or stories in a humorous fable illustrating the vices and weaknesses of the upper ten thousand, rather than as a picture of the most characteristic figures in the intellectual society of modern London."—Spectator, lxi. 531.

"We cannot but think that 'The Hand of Ethelberta,' amusing as it is, is hardly worthy of its author's powers."
Sat. Rev., xli. 332.

6. The Return of the Native, Lon., 1878, 3 vols. p.
8vo.

"We maintain that the primary object of a story is to amuse; and in the attempt to amuse Mr. Hardy is to explain, breaks down. . . . He would seem to be studying subordinating interest to the rules by which he regulates his art. . . . In the present case, an studied simplicity of subject the story strikes us as intensely artificial. . . . We need not say that Mr. Hardy's descriptions are always vivid and often most picturesque. But he weakens rather than increases their effect by going out of his way for eccentric forms of expression which are far less suggestive of his meanings than the every-day words he carefully avoids."—Sat. Rev., xliii. 23.

est place he occupies among novelists of our time."—Sat. Rev., modern. It is a departure in the right direction is another question."—Sat. Rev., liii. 53.

"In previous works Mr. Hardy has shown a talent for depicting heroines the reverse of commonplace, and belonging to a class of their own. . . . In the work before us this talent is displayed in the picture of Paula Power.
The study of this curious, anonymous, but by no means insensate middle-class young lady is very interesting."

GENERAL CRITICISM:
"Mr. Hardy has rare qualities,—a keen observation of nature, a knowledge of country life and its ways that few writers possess."—Sat. Rev., xli. 79. "a tragic force which Mr. Hardy seems, after a preliminary trial of several kinds, to have finally chosen as his branch of fiction that which, for want of a better name, may be called the modern romance. That is, he takes the present for his time and such people as move among it at the present for his characters; but he makes his drama" . . . and things and puts them into positions, which, if not possible, would at least be thought very remarkable, and worthy of a leading article in every daily paper, if they had really been reported by a living writer. This must be called the second point of view, to that which produces its effects solely with the materials of every-day life; but in the hands of a master, who is capable of seeing how people might probably do and speak in improbable circumstances, it is by no means unsatisfactory."—Id., No. 329.

"While Mr. Hardy has enough superficial knowledge of human nature to give an air of plausibility and life to all he paints, he has not enough,—or, at least, seldom shows enough,—to engrave individual figures on our mind as figures which take leave to live in our memories, and which so actively engage the sphere of our expectations."
Spectator, lxix. 539.

"He has a telling instinct for the value of sex: his heroes are profoundly feminine, his heroines though; and at times comically masculine. . . . He never misses the comic aspect of a situation or episode, and yet he never ignores it by a coarse or unsympathetic touch; the light falls gently and sweetly upon it, and passes on. A great many modern novelists would never be humorous days. . . . but Mr. Hardy is humorous inevitably and inadvertently. . . . On the other hand, genius of Mr. Hardy's efforts of tragedy; its rollick and more powerful should be limited by the pathetic, and this involves never altogether losing sight of the humorous. Now, in truth pathos Sir, Hardy has no living superior, but his attempts in the way of tragedy have not been satisfactory. . . .
When Othello kills Desdemona, that he never makes him more Othello than he was before; but when he kills Eustacia drowns himself on Egdon Heath, she leaves the Eustacia that we believe in safe on the bank."—Spectator, liii. 1627.

"He has never risen much above the level of his own level of his 'under the Greenwood' in all his succeeding novels we have had the same degree of observation, the same curious combination of felicity with indefiniteness of expression, the same success in getting what other equally important matters."—Nation, xxxv. 16.

- "Here is the ideal book of travel in Spain: the book which exactly anticipates the requirements of everybody who is fortunate enough to be going to that enchanted land; the book which ably consoles those who are not so happy, by supplying the imagination from the daintiest and most delicious of its stores. . . . The book seizes upon one's mind with a fascination like that of the Far East, with its mingled delight in grand nature, and its subtle, distant human sympathy with a past and a present quite unlike the past and present of our own race and country."—Spectator, xvi, 111.
- "One of the charms of his volume is the number of legends and anecdotes that the traveller will seek in vain in the guide-books. . . . It is a book that will bear reading repeatedly when one is moving among the scenes it describes."—Sat. Rev., xxxv, 154.
6. Days near Rome. Illust. Lon., 1875, 2 vols. er. 8vo; 3d ed., 1884.
- "It treats specially of Rome's surroundings, and of the quite endless excursions which may be undertaken with large profit of refreshment and information by any one possessed of moderate health, moderate means, and a moderate spirit of adventure."—Spectator, xviii, 437.
7. Memorials of a Quiet Life. Supplementary Volume. With Fifty-Seven Photographs. Lon., 1876, p. 8vo.
- "This volume is given in accordance with the earnest request from many distant quarters for the actual and accurate representation of the places and of the persons mentioned in 'Memorials of a Quiet Life.' . . . The additional letter-press given consists of further selections from the unpublished letters and journal of Mrs. Augustus Hare, and a few of the letters of Archbishop Hare."—Ath., No. 2548.
- "The last volume which he has given to his peculiar audience is chiefly made up of copies of the portraits of all the Hares and all their connections and all the houses in which they ever lived, notwithstanding that there is nothing at all remarkable either in the faces or the houses of this alarmingly well-known family."—Spectator, xlix, 866.
8. Cities of Northern and Central Italy, Lon., 1876, 3 vols. p. 8vo.
- "With one or two exceptions, . . . we have scarcely read a single piece of description or information (and we have collated a good many) with which a student of the world not yet fully as well acquainted as Mr. Hare himself."—Ath., No. 2552.
- "His accounts of scenery and travelling are obviously inspired, in the majority of instances, by a personal and even intimate acquaintance with the localities described. He gives us information and guidance not to be obtained at all elsewhere, or, at least, to be collected with difficulty."—Spectator, xlix, 1280.
9. Walks in London, Lon., 1878, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 5th ed., rev., 1883.
- "So much of late years has been written about London that a new work on the subject is not likely to contain much original matter; but the author has gone over the ground himself, in addition to a careful study of authorities, and personal observation has enabled him to use his book-knowledge effectively. . . . 'Walks in London' is a book for perusal as well as for reference."—Spectator, li, 153.
10. The Life and Letters of Frances, Baroness Dunsen, Lon., 1878, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1882.
- "Mr. Hare has, on the whole, exercised a wise discretion in allowing the letters to tell their own story, but he might with advantage have curtailed a little both at the beginning and the end of the book."—Ath., No. 2672.
11. Cities of Southern Italy and Sicily, Lon., 1883, er. 8vo.
- "It is pleasant to have set before us, by means of Mr. Hare's excellent word-painting, the many classic and medieval buildings with which these districts abound, especially as these antiquarian subjects are every now and then suggested by sketches of romantic scenery and curious aspects of ancient and modern life."—Spectator, lviii, 417.
12. Cities of Central Italy, Lon., 1881, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 13. Venice, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo. 14. Florence, Lon., 1874, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1887. 15. Sketches in Holland and Scandinavia, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo.
- "The author says truly that these Sketches are slight; but they are vivid and picturesque, and convey a more distinct impression of Holland and Scandinavia than many larger works."—Spectator, lviii, 1009.
16. Studies in Russia. Illust. Lon., 1885, p. 8vo.
- "A volume which may be read with pleasure, and may prove useful to travellers who intend to visit the scenes he has described. . . . Regarded as a hand-book, his work deserves to be commended."—Ath., No. 3000.

- "There seems to be no reason to doubt that this is a very complete collection of the songs of Lancashire. . . The editors are rather insatiable, and all seems to be grieved that is brought to their song and ballad mill. It is so with the songs of the Cotton Famille. . . Nevertheless it is in these and the other ballads and songs in the dialect of the country that the true force and pathos of the volume lie."—Spectator, xlvii. 373.

Harris, Joel Chandler, b. 1848, at Eatonton, Ga.; was apprenticed to a printer, and afterwards studied law, and practised at Forsyth, Ga.; editor of the Atlanta Constitution, 1890. 1. Uncle Remus: his Songs and his Sayings; the Folk-Lore of the Old Plantation; with Illustrations by Frederick S. Church and James H. Moses, N. York, 1880, 12mo.

"Mr. Harris . . . is literary artist, and his thirty-four tales . . . are ingeniously and charmingly set in an episodical narrative, in which 'Uncle Remus' figures as the colorist and a little boy as the rapt auditor. . . . The work has five divisions: the fables, plantation proverbs, Uncle Remus's songs, a true story of the war, and Uncle Remus's sayings."—Nation, xxxi. 898.

"Deserves to be placed on a level with 'Reinecke Fuchs' for its quaint humour, without reference to the ethnological interest possessed by these stories, as indicating, perhaps, a common origin for very widely-severed races."— Spectator, liv. 445.

2. Nights with Uncle Remus: Myths and Legends of the Old Plantation, Bost., 1883, 12mo.

"The mine of which he first fully revealed the richness has, meantime, been still further opened up. . . . In addition to the thirty-four of the former series we have seventy-one new tales placed before us."—Nation, xxxvii.
422.

3. Mingo, and other Sketches in Black and White, Bost., 1884, 12mo.

"His perception is subtler and more truthful than Bret Harte's. . . . Both authors have keen instincts and insights, but Harris's are the finer and deeper. Harris's characters thrilling, but Harte's people wind themselves about our hearts and owe little to circumstance."—Nation, xxxix. 115.

4. Free Joe, and other Georgian Sketches, N. York, 1887; new ed., 1888, 12mo.

Harris, John, F.R.H.S., 1820-1884, b. near Camborne, Cornwall; was a working miner for nearly twenty years, and afterwards resided at Falmouth. Besides the works mentioned below, he wrote a large number of tracts in verse and prose, and contributed to religious periodicals poems and records of his experiences in the mines and among the Cornish poet, and was awarded medals known as "the Cornish poet," and was awarded pensions from the Literary Fund and the Royal Bounty Fund. For biog., see Harris, John Howard, in/ra.

Harte, Francis Bret, b. 1839, at Albany, N.Y.; removed to California in 1854; became a compositor in a printing-office, a contributor to newspapers, and in 1868 the first editor of the Overland Monthly, in which he published "The Luck of Hoop Camp" and other delineations of Californian life. In 1870 he was made professor of recent literature in the University of California, but in the following year he resigned this position, as well as the editorship of the Overland, and removed to New York, becoming a contributor to the Atlantic Monthly and to Scribner's Magazine. He was U.S. consul at Cremona, Germany, 1878-80, and at Glasgow 1880-85, and has since then resided in England. 1. Condensed Novels, and other Papers, N. York, 1870, 12mo. 2. "We cannot safely infer that a man who can throw off these vigorous sketches is capable of composing more ambitious pictures with equal success. . . . At the same time, we have noticed that we cannot but hope that he will turn his powers to some account in future, and that we may have to congratulate California on producing a genuine teller of stories with a strong local flavour."—*Sat. shows true literary feeling; but we can but feel that the author is wasting his forces in the service of an outworn literary fashion. — Nation, xxxvii, 255.

"No living writer has struck so powerful and original a note as he has sounded throughout the six tales which make up his reputation. In these he forgets all other literature, and sees and is possessed solely by the life which he portrays. So vigorous and veracious is the conception that all extraneous and reflected matter is left behind, as the impurities of a solution are rejected when it crystallizes." — Spectator, lli, 1194.

"He has plenty of humour, both artificial and real, and plenty of true dramatic wit; he has a sure eye for character of a certain sort, an excellent faculty of description, both didactic and dramatic, and a very masterful apprehension of effect; he is capable of pathos and he is capably; he is an adept in imitation of the right romantic style of drama; he has an imagination of the right kind, and he has abundant knowledge of certain classes of motive. He is hardly ever fanciful; for even when he is at his best and highest it is never clear that a touch of unveracity, a trace of the practised stage manager, a blunder in fact, a discord in sentiment, will not spoil all. But he now and then goes straight to the heart for all that, and within his limits there is no living writer who can improve upon him." — Ath., No. 278.

"Perhaps the most eminently distinctive feature of Mr. Bret Hartie's manner is suggestiveness, a quality in which, we think, his writing is hardly to be surpassed. By this we mean the power of suggesting definite, not indefinite, ideas. . . . With a few touches, thrown as it were by accident, he describes remote or trivial consequences so as to carry our thought at once to the centre of the action. Nor do we come to resent this as a trick of manner; partly because Mr. Bret Hartie knows how to apply it with implicit variety, partly because it is really not artificial, but founded on the truth of human nature. . . . The purely humorous aspect of Mr. Bret Hartie's writings is both the most familiar and the most difficult to write an account of. . . . The curious irony—using the word in its original sense of under-statement—which runs through the whole is genuine in quiet, easy flow of verse peculiar to himself which sets it off admirably. . . . His Californian tales, beyond their interest as works of fiction, have a truth which, if not exactly literal, is better than much that passes for historical truth. . . . They give us a picture, everywhere so striking and consistent that even without confirmation—which, however, is not wanting—it must be accepted as faithful of a strange transitory phase of civilization which already belongs to the past." — *Sat. "Mr. Hartley is a writer of real power, both dramatic and humorous. He is not devoid, either, of pathos. . . . The permanent value of the book consists in its pictures of working-men's life and thought in the Yorkshire of the nineteenth century. Where, without straining after fun, Mr. Hartley confines himself to tracing such pictures and letting the humour flow naturally out of them, his workmanship is of its kind simply perfect, and reminds one of nothing so much as of a first-rate Tennyson."—Spectator, III. 1225.

"We have seldom read through a modern novel which left a worse taste behind it than this. At the same time, we cannot but admit that the author shows considerable power in handling his materials. His canvas, indeed, is crowded to such an extent that the sketches are of the slightest; but each character stands on its own feet, and is not merely a lay figure, and the story, such as it is, never flags. Our objection is not to the handling of them, but to the materials themselves."—Spectator, XLIX. 1013.

"Among the contemporary chroniclers of the realities of Irish life the author of 'Hogan, M.P.' occupies a prominent place, and her latest venture will greatly enhance a deservedly high reputation. 'Ismy's Children' opens admirably, and improves on closer acquaintance, being marked to a singular extent by a combination of qualities rare in female writers,—strength, breadth of humour, and the impartiality. . . . No one who is anxious to fathom the enigma of the Irish character will be deterred by such considerations ('Ibericisms' in the style, &c.) from the careful study of what we have no hesitation in pronouncing to be the most valuable and dispassionate contribution towards the solution of that problem which has been put forth in this generation in the domain of fiction."—Ath., No. 3123.

"He accepts democracy as partly present with us and still more as coming upon us, and proceeds in a comfortable and best-of-it mood to inquire what it will do. His volume divides itself into three books. 'The Democracy and Foreign Politics,' 'The Democracy and Home Politics,' (further partitioned into 'constitutional' and 'social') and 'The Democracy and Religion.'"—Sat. Rev., liv. 477.

"The subject . . . is more than an exposition of philosophical idealism. It is idealism considered as an evidence of revelation. . . . It is dealt with by Mr. Harwood in a peculiarly fresh and vivid manner."—Acad., xxxiv. 221.

Harwood, Isabella, ("Ross Neil," pseud.) d. 1888; daughter of Philip Harwood, editor of the London Saturday Review 1868-83. She published dramas under the above pseudonym, two of which, Inez, the Bride of Portugal, and Rifinella, were played at London theatres. Her novels were published anonymously. 1. Abbot's Clove: a Novel, Lon., 1864, 8vo. 2. Carleton Grange: a Novel, By the Author of "Abbot's Clove," Lon., 1866, 3 vols. 8vo. 3. Raymond's Heroine, Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. 4. Kathleen, Lon., 1869, 8vo. 5. The Heir Expectant, Lon., 1870, p. 8vo. 6. Lady Jane Grey; Inez; or, The Bride of Portugal, Lon., 1871, p. 8vo.

"If the choice of really dramatic subject-matter, and a treatment as sound and delicate as it is completely free from affectation, are worth appreciation, these two plays deserve a sincere welcome. Their literary place is in the class to which the dramas of Sir Henry Taylor belong. . . . Both are so written as to illustrate history, and to intensify with excellent effect the light that falls on a catastrophe or a period."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 782.

Lon., 1873, 3 vols.; new ed., 1877, 1 vol. 11. Clytie: a Novel of Modern Life, Lon., 1874, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"By dint of being the subject of a lawsuit . . . the novel called 'Clytie' has attracted an amount of attention which its merits assuredly do not warrant. . . . Those who are already acquainted with the nature and the main facts of a peculiarly disagreeable slander case which created much scandal not very long ago will hardly wish to refresh their memory by reference to Mr. Hatton's novel. Those who are not acquainted with these facts will scarcely care to learn them in the form into which the author of 'Clytie' has put them."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii. 25.

"It is a weary book, a book which should not have been written; its conclusions ring like the echoes of commonplace talk; it tells us nothing new."—Sat. Rev., lii. 58.

"The whole work is . . . brightly and lucidly written; and though a considerable portion of the two slender volumes might have been omitted without depriving the reader of anything really valuable, the digressions and amplifications are harmless and entertaining."—Spectator, iv. 22.

Henry Irving's Impressions of America, narrated in a Series of Sketches, Chronicles, and Conversations, Lon., 1884, 2 vols. cr. 8vo; new ed. same year, 1 vol.

"In the five hundred and seventy pages of Mr. Hatton's two volumes a diligent search would perhaps reveal ten pages which might fairly be described as Mr. Irving's Impressions of America. The remainder is the most heterogeneous collection that it has ever been our fortune to meet in the shape of a book. . . . Mr. Hatton's descriptions of places and incidents are often graphic and racy."—Spectator, lvi. 955.

Illust. Lon., 1868, 2 vols. demy 8vo.

"The greater part of the contents are cast in the form of conversations or interviews, for the accuracy of which Mr. Toole has gone bail. . . . Mr. Hatton has qualified his peculiar and not very dignified undertaking very creditably. . . . He has put together in a readable form a great mass of anecdotes—some of them quite excellent—bearing on the life of a popular actor on and off the stage; and he has certainly contrived to give us a clear notion of the individuality of the central figure."—Spectator, lxi. 1645.

- M.A., D.D., 1880; graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1881; perpetual curate of St. James's, Marylebone, since 1881. He was musical critic and writer of leading articles on the staff of the Echo, and in 1883 became editor of Cassell's Magazine. 1. Music and Morals, Lon., 1871, p. 8vo. 13th ed., 1885.
- "A somewhat heterogeneous and unequal book. It is full of pleasant reading, and contains many good criticisms able, and its survey of fæets omits much that is essential."—Spectator, xlv. 1467.
- "Music and Morals" is a comprehensive term; and it is made here to convey an elaborate analysis of the connections on its position with reference to individual morality, and to its influence and significance in society at large. We cannot comment too highly Mr. Haweis's general exposition of the theory of music as the most profound and subtle artistic instrument for expressing emotion."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 726.
2. Thoughts for the Times, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo; 10th ed., 1877.
- "Mr. Haweis writes not only fearlessly, but with remarkable freshness and vigour. He is occasionally eloquent, and even pathetic. In all that he says we perceive a transcripts with the assertion that there ought to be no fixed dogmas in religion. Doctrine, faith, and morals are all to be progressive."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 478.

"Contemplation of nature, and an ear alive to legend and tradition, have apparently fitted him to be the balladist of Cornwall. . . . Had his name and all local data been wanting, . . . we should have known the author for one who dwelt where rock and river, buskycombe, and rade, wild ocean are not far apart, in a land full of ancient towers and shrines, cults, holy wells, and the like, the nurses of poetic fancy."—*Sat. Hawthorne, Julian, b. 1846, in Boston, Mass.; son of Nathaniel Hawthorne, infra; went to Europe with his parents in 1863, and after their return entered Harvard in 1863, but did not graduate. He began the study of civil engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard, and was a student in Dresden, Germany, in 1868-70. From 1870 to 1872 he was employed as a hydrographic engineer in the department of docks in New York. In 1872 he went abroad, spent two years in Dresden, and from 1874 till 1881 resided in London, where he was for two years on the staff of the Spectator and contributed to reviews and magazines. In 1882 he returned to New York. 1. Bressant: a Romance, Lon., 1873, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"We are glad to find that Mr. Julian Hawthorne's first work has a sufficient character of its own to mark it off from the writings of that most original of American authors, his father. . . . While we freely concede great merit to 'Bressant,' we must at the same time admit that its faults are still greater. The admirable promise of the first volume is not fulfilled in the second."—*Sat. 3. Saxon Studies, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo.

"Saxon Studies' are just one string of impertinences, four hundred pages long, against the people who, with greater kindness than wisdom, allowed the author to live among them for some years."—Sat. Rev., xii, 780.

"It is hardly to be wondered at that 'Saxon Studies' have caused great offence in Dresden, but they might be entitled 'Siberian Studies' for any likeness they bear to the people therein described."—M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Acad., ix, 505.

4. Garth: a Novel, Lon., 1877, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"Garth strikes us as a decided improvement upon 'Bressant' and 'Idolatry': it is a very much riper, a wiser work. We must add that we use these terms in a strictly relative sense; for Mr. Hawthorne's staid fault seems to be a certain incurable humaridity and crudity."—Nation, x, iv, 369.

"By the help of his father's very copious notes of the sayings and doings and looks of the children, . . . and with his own recollections of boyhood to draw upon besides for the later period, he has taken us into the intimacy of the household, and confided the charm and dignity and wisdom of Hawthorne's fatherhood. . . . The biography is like Mr. James's 'Hawthorne' in that it fails to give any history of that immortal part of the man in which the world takes interest."—Nation, xxxix, 523.

Hawthorne, Nathaniel, [ante, vol. 1, add.] 1804-1864. In 1837, after retiring from the consular post at Liverpool, Hawthorne travelled on the Continent, making a long stay in Italy. He returned to England in 1850, and in 1861 (1860?) to America, where he again took up his residence at Concord. He died at Plymouth, N.H., while on a trip to the White Mountains with ex-President Pierce. For biog., see HAWTHORNE, JULIAN, supra, and JAMES, HENRY, infra. 1. The Marble Faun, Bost., 1860, 12mo; Eng. ed., entitled "Transformation; or, The Romance of Monte Beni," Lon., 1860, 3 vols.

"It has a great deal of beauty of interest and grace; but it has, in my sense, a slighter value than his companions, and I am far from regarding it as the masterpiece of the author, a position to which we sometimes hear it assigned. The subject is admirable, and so are many of the details; but the whole thing is less simple and complete than either of the three tales of American life."—HENRY JAMES: Hawthorne, ("English Men of Letters") Amer. ed., p. 169.

[Edited by his Widow.] Bost., 1870, 2 vols. 12mo.

"There remains to be noted the occasional shrewdness of observation; some anecdote of an Italian, like Isaac Thackeray, Jerrold, and Lord Houghton; a few good descriptions of show-places in England and Scotland, and, finally, the general readability, in virtue of the writer's celebrity, as well as of the skill with which he does the work in hand, and the intrinsic interest of the things he writes about."—Nation, xi, 69.

6. Passages from the French and Italian Note-Books of Nathaniel Hawthorne, Lon., 1871, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The journals throw but very little light on his personal feelings, and even less on his genius per se. . . . They deepen our sense of that genius, while they singularly diminish our impression of his general intellectual power."

"These volumes of Italian notes, charming as they are, are on the whole less rich and substantial than those of England. The theme in this case is evidently less congenial. . . . We seem to see him strolling through churches and galleries as the last pure American, attesting by his shy responses to dark canvases and cold marble his loyalty to a simpler and less encumbered civilization."—H. JAMES, Jr., Nation, xiv, 172.

7. Septimius Felton; or the Ellixir of Life, Bost., 1872, 12mo. Eng. ed., entitled "Septimius: a Romance," Lon., 1872. (This was edited by Una Hawthorne.)

"Of course it cannot take rank with Hawthorne's finished works, but no other author of our time could have written it."—Ath., No. 2369.

"After making allowance for the incomplete state of the story, we must confess that to our taste Hawthorne appears to have in this case ventured rather too far into the dim dreamland of the grotesque and unnatural. The story, however, is powerful and interesting as it stands. . . . The art is admirable, but we can hardly call it healthy. It will commend itself, however, to the lover of the rarer literary essences, though it may probably remain carrere to the vulgar."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv, 89.

(A fragment.) "The publication of 'Dr. Grimshawe's Secret,' though it contains detached passages which are Hawthorne's thought and style, cannot add to Hawthorne's reputation."—Sat. Rev., iv, 25.

"While it abounds in passages marked by all the beauties of Hawthorne's best writing, it is as a whole crude and raw. . . . The lover of Hawthorne will be glad to find in the fact that the book required 'editing' a justification for declining to become interested in it, at least until he knows more precisely what the limits of the editor's labors were."—Nation, xxxv, 66.

He also acted as Lincoln's adjutant and aide-de-camp, served for several months under Gen. Hunter and Gilmora, and was brevetted colonel. He was first secretary of legation and secretary of legation at Madrid 1868-70; assistant secretary of state 1870-81. He was an editorial writer on the New York Tribune between 1870 and 1875, and is joint-author with J. G. Nicolay of an elaborate Life of Abraham Lincoln, published as a serial in the Century Magazine, 1887, &c. 1. Castilian Days, Boston, 1871, 12mo. "In spite of some interferences with the reader's pleasurable "Castilian Days" is a very readable book—so trustworthy is Mr. Hay's sense of what will agreeably engage the attention of the general reader without jailing it. So interesting is the nation which he describes, so good were his opportunities of close observation of the political much more clear and lively than is common is his way of expressing himself."—Nation, xiv, 93.

"Mr. Hayward's Essays . . . rather gain than lose by reproduction in a collective form; for the reader becomes accustomed to Mr. Hayward's mode of treatment, which is characteristic, though it is exempt from mannerism."—Sat. Rev., xxxv. 184.

"A master of the processes by which half a score of huge Looks may be boiled down into a single article, he puts his facts into the concise language, and, having made a point, leaves it to commend itself. Hence comes the defect of some of his pipers: a redundancy of anecdotes which fail to produce a satisfactory effect, because they thrust one another out of the reader's memory."—Ibid., No. 2368.

"He is popular because he overflows with anecdote and personal story. It would be unjust to say that he is nothing if not anecdotal. . . . But, were it not for their redundancy of gossip about comfortable persons, his volumes would offer few attractions to ordinary readers."—Ibid., No. 2408.

"An inexhaustible knowledge of good stories, combined with the rarer power of telling them well, and a great familiarity with the lighter literature of modern times, make these essays very enjoyable reading for an idle hour. Whether they have cost Mr. Hayward much thought, or whether that which has not cost the author much thought can be of any real service, are questions which it perhaps as ridiculous to ask as it would be to ask whether a mossrose were good to eat."—SAMUEL R. GARDNER: Acad., v. 250.

9. Selected Essays, Lon., 1878, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"There is no better or more pleasant way of describing people than by recording their best sayings and most characteristic actions, and there is nobody in our generation who has shown such a power as Mr. Hayward of extracting bits from biographical memoirs, stringing them in a natural order and supplementing them from his own sources."—Acad., xv. 91.

We have, on the strength of this reform, made a second attempt to read through Mr. Hazlitt's history, and we have a second time broken down. . . . He knows what the chroniclers tell him, but to try those chroniclers by the received laws of historical criticism is a thought which never occurred to him. . . . Head, Barclay Vincent, Ph.D., D.C.L., b. 1844, at Ipswich, Eng.; educated at Queen Elizabeth's Grammar-School in that town; entered the British Museum as assistant in the department of coins and medals 1864, and was appointed assistant keeper 1871. His honorary degrees were conferred upon him by the Universities of Heidelberg and Durham in recognition of his services to the science of numismatics, he having been the first to methodize the classification of Greek and Phœnician coins according to their chronology and styles of art. He is a corresponding member of the Imperial German Archaeological Institute, honorary secretary of the Numismatic Society of London, and joint editor of the Numismatic Chronicle. 3. The English Peasantry, Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"Mr. Heath's book, while it is very interesting and very only—as did his little book entitled the "Romance of Peasantry" —of that part of the West of England which comprises Somerset and an adjacent portion of Devonshire. No doubt this is the part of England where reform in the condition of the peasantry is most urgent."—Spectator, xlv. 1569.

4. The Fern Paradise: a Plan for the Culture of Ferns, Lon., 1875, p. 8vo; 4th ed., illust., 1878.

"First he stimulates . . . a taste for fernery by vivid descriptions of fern-land and its unfowering botanic inhabitants; and, this done, he introduces us to a dozen typical 'single ferns,' the only species of their respective genera, after all this stumpy and clearly."—Sat. Rev. xl. 782.

5. The Fern World, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo.

"The book may . . . be said to comprise, in a compact and at any rate 'knapsack-fitting' form, the whole grammar and dictionary of the fern world. A delightful addition to the naturalist's library."—Sat. Rev. xlv. 275.

6. Our Woodland Trees. Illust. Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

"The book, as a whole, meets a distinct need; its engravings are excellent, its coloured leaves and leaflets singularly accurate, and both author and engravers seem to have been animated by a kindred love of their subject."—Sat. Rev. xlv. 664.

 Lore of the Northern Counties of England and the Borders:
 with an Appendix on Household Stories by S.
 Baring-Gould, M. A., Lon., 1866, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1879.

"A pleasant collection of stories of various kinds, mainly from the bishopric of Durham and other parts of old Northumberland, but illustrated by kindred tales from other parts. . . Mr. Henderson simply tells his stories; he makes no attempt to enter on the scientific side of his subject. This he leaves to Mr. Baring-Gould."—Sat.

"The second edition is 'so much enlarged and improved that, except in a library catalogue, it may well be treated as a new book. We have no hesitation in saying that it is the most important contribution to the branch of knowledge which it illustrates that has appeared since Sir Henry Brand's 'Popular Antiquities.'—Acad., xix. 21.

"By far the most important contribution of late years to angling literature."—4th., No. 2711.

"Independently of the interest which the book derives from its descriptions or suggestions of river scenery, is that which we gain from the natural history with which the angling details are interspersed."—Spectator, li. 1416.

Henry, James, M.D., d. 1876, æt. 78; b. at Dublin; graduated with the classical gold medal at Trinity College in 1818; attained eminence as a large practice as a physician in spite of his unorthodox religious opinions, and of the enmity of the profession incurred by his sarcastic tracts and his habit of charging only five shillings a visit, on the ground that "no doctor's opinion was worth a guinea." Having been ennobled by a large legacy, he gave up medicine and devoted himself to scholastic pursuits, chiefly with the object of obtaining the materials for a complete commentary on the Æneid of Virgil, and, with this end in view, began, about 1848, a series of journeys throughout Europe, accompanied by his wife, and, after her death, by his daughter, wandering for the most part on foot, searching for every rare edition and ill-collated MS. of his favorite author, and becoming acquainted with scholars and librarians in all the principal cities and seats of learning. After a full quarter of a century thus employed, he returned to Dublin, where he spent his few remaining years, diligently prosecuting his researches in the Library of Trinity College. See an article by J. P. Mahaffy, Academy, vol. x, p. 162. The following list of Dr. Henry's works is chiefly derived from Mr. Mahaffy's article. They were all, or nearly all, printed for private circulation, except the second volume of the last mentioned, which was a posthumous publication. 1. *Alpharia accuratus descripta: Thesis habita in Univ. (Vol. 1. printed at Leipzig.)

"It is like the work of a sixteenth-century scholar, of a man who studied and thought and wrote without hurry or care, who loved his subject and scorned the applause of the vulgar crowd. As such, and as the fullest and best exegesis ever attempted of Virgil, Dr. Henry's commentary cannot fail to take a permanent and unapproachable place."—J. P. MAHAFFY.

"Mr. Hessels wants neither ingenuity nor erudition; he has collected and arranged with great skill all that was accessible in regard to Coster and the works attributed to him. More than ever the singular position and real importance of these works, the unthought mystery which surrounds their origin, are impressed upon us as we read Mr. Hessels's chapters. But he did not force upon us Mr. Hessels's dogmatic conclusion as to the claims of Harenet."—Ath., No. 3155.

"Miss Hickson has examined the truth of the matter . . . with the accuracy, acumen, and patient impartiality of an ideal historian. Mr. Frome, who submits that we have on former occasions smarted under her criticisms, acknowledges that there exists the strongest inducement to bias her to the Irish view. "She has no English prejudices, she is the descendant of some oakle exiled and transported Irish and Anglo-Irish of 1649, she is keenly alive to the wrongs which her country has suffered at English hands, and on some points she is in full sympathy with Irish Nationalism." Yet, in the face of such influences, Miss Hickson finds herself compelled to give judgment in favour of the English contention."—Spectator, lviii, 1011.

"It is not possible to read this biography of Mr. Matthew Davenport Hill without seeing how really he made a part of the history of his time, and how truly his biography is the record of that history. . . . Mr. Hill's daughters and biographers habitually assisted him—as we know, though they nowhere mention it—in his great and unintermitting work. . . . and the mastery way in which they have given the whole story of each social movement down to the present time, and not merely their father's share in it, shows us a character of a more intelligent and sympathetic character than those which Milton's daughters lightened his labours. . . . We cannot, indeed, praise too highly the execution of this worthy memorial of a worthy father."—Spectator, li, 768.

"The views of Mr. Hilton may be fairly taken to represent those of a school which has done very much of late years to make medicine and surgery something better than a mystery and an art, and to place them among the most noble of the physical sciences. . . . The means which he has taken to work out his purpose tell of a deep-rooted faith that Nature gave us at once, and in the same frame, a perfect machinery for the purposes of life and for the repair of mischief caused by injury or disease."—*Sat. Hinton, James, M.R.C.S., 1822-1875, b. at Reading, Eng.; son of Rev. John Howard Hinton, infra; was educated at private schools, and in 1838 was apprenticed to a clothier in London; a year later he entered an insurance office, but gave up that situation in consequence of a decline of health; entered St. Bartholomew's Hospital to study medicine, and became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1847. In 1848 he went as surgeon of a ship from Sierra Leone to Jamaica, where he remained for two years, afterwards visiting the United States. In 1850 he began medical practice in London, and gradually confined himself to aural surgery, in which he gained large practice and reputation. He was lecturer on aural surgery at Guy's Hospital from 1863 to 1874, when he gave up his profession to devote himself to philosophical studies. For his biog., see HOPKINS, JANE ELLICE, infra. 1. "Mr. Hinton was apparently too much in earnest to be critical; we should say, though it may sound paradoxical, too much in earnest to walk safely in philosophical inquiries. The satisfaction he went forth in philosophical inquiry, not intellectual. Disinterested even in excess in special interest in another. His writing shows hardly a trace of the pure curiosity of speculation, and little, if anything, of delight in dialectics as a fine art. Least of all does he seem to think of forcing conviction on the reader. His essays are in very truth what many thinkers writing for effect have professed to be,—solitary meditations."—Sat. Rev. xvii. 279.

"One's first reflection on reading these short stimulating papers, which are like so many beams of light glancing here and there on widely removed objects and everywhere illuminating and beautifying, was that of the great and stirring forces in an intellect which ought to be on the great so frankly avows that he seeks to satisfy at once our intellects and our emotions is best viewed perhaps as a kind of poet."—JAMES SULLY: Acad., xv. 500.

11. Philosophy and Religion: Selections from the Manuscripts of the Late James Hinton. Edited by Caroline Haddon. Lon., 1881, 8vo. (The selections are from the earlier series of MESS., belonging to the period from 1856 to about 1861.)

"This is a valuable book; philosophically speaking, perhaps the most valuable book written in England since Coleridge. First, for the deep insight of the thoughts which compose its philosophy of Actualism; and secondly, on account of the particular philosophical ground which it occupies, and from which it speaks."—SHARPE: Westminster Rev., xli. 29.

12. The Law-Breaker and the Coming of the Law. Edited by M. Hinton. Lon., 1881, p. 8vo.

"The position of 'The Law-Breaker' is briefly that laws, duties, virtues, fixed rights and wrongs, are not to become obsolete, dead, and mischievous, and that it is a pernicious mistake to regard them as of permanent obligation; since, as circumstances change, duties change also for individuals; there is no absolute morality binding on all and forever."—Acad., xxvi. 395.

GENERAL CRITICISM:

"He was a born metaphysician, and the 'art of thinking' was to him what music was to Beethoven or dramatic dialogue to Shakespeare. But he was no mere thinker in the ordinary sense of the word. He was rather a prophet, a seer. His thinking was a spiritual, not an intellectual, process, and the visions he saw revolved round the profoundest themes—God, the man, and above all, the tragedy of woman."—JAMES A. Hodgets, J. Frederick. 1. Older England: Illustrated by the Anglo-Saxon Antiquities in the British Museum, Lon., 1884, two series, 8vo.

"The book consists of a collection of six lectures delivered by the author in the Anglo-Saxon room of the British Museum, and a most interesting book it is, full of out-of-the-way learning and of facts which it behoves all who love this English land, and are curious about the beginnings of its history, to know. Mr. Ruskin, who was one of the select few who listened to these lectures, said that he had no idea of the wealth and beauty of ancient English teachings until he heard them from Mr. Hodgets' lips; that the latter had overturned some of his most cherished opinions, but had given him a new field of thought instead."—Spectator, viii. 418.

"Eccentric speculations are made the text for moralizing discourses, which together take up the greater part of the volume. We should be glad if we could assent to the high praise which the author quotes from Prof. Ruskin and other eminent persons who were among his hearers; but the fact that such praise could be given only shows how greatly the educated public stands in need of enlightenment respecting Older England."—Acad., xxv. 201.

2. Italy and her Invaders: vols. i., ii., 376-476, Oxf., 1880, 8vo.

"The idea of the book is to describe the process by which the old government and civilization of Italy were destroyed, and the foundations laid for the new development of her medieval life. . . . The conception is a fine one, worthy of the long and serious study which Mr. Hodgkin has evidently given it. . . . He has been driven to depart pretty widely from his original scheme, and has finally nations that invaded her as series of pictures from the fourth and fifth centuries. . . . The book is one of great and uncommon merits. . . . There is a freshness and heartiness about it which makes it pleasant reading from the first page to the last. The author has lived so long among the men of whom he writes that they have become quite real and living to him, and his interest communicates itself to his readers. . . . His style is always simple, lively, graphic; and if his treatment, and the occasional reflections and illustrations which he throws in, become occasionally somewhat more familiar than the last generation would have thought compatible with the dignity of history, this is, after all, an error on the right side, an error which one is disposed to praise when the subject is so remote and little known that a dry and pragmatic handling of it is more than usually certain to repel most people. . . . It is long since we have come across a book more likely to make history popular by true and honest methods."—Sat. Rev., l. 311.

Vols. iii. and iv. The Ostrogothic Invasion; the Lullipian Restoration, 1885.

"Mr. Hodgkin has a story to tell which is in all ways one of the most fascinating which history affords. . . . He has an excellent author's expansion in Procopius's De Bello Gothico, and he spares no pains to extract his author's meaning. Mr. Hodgkin has clearly rambled, with his Procopius in his hand, along the whole line of the march of Belisarius. He has identified all the places which Procopius mentions; he has examined every battle-field. His account of the glories of ancient Rome is the most vivid and the most intelligible that we have ever read. Not only does he reproduce the Forum and the Capitol, but he walks the gates, and the aqueducts are made the subjects of animated description."—Sat. Rev., ix. 679.

"His standard of historical performance has steadily risen as he has gone forward with his task; he has learnt how to assess and grade his subject, and to restrain that tendency to rash analogy and picturesque comparison which is one of the greatest snarcs of the historian. . . . The book . . . has not quite the grip of the great historians, but Mr. Hodgkin's history, imagination, and an attractive style."—Ath., No. 3024.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, M.D., [ante, vol. 1, add.], resigned his professorship in the medical school at Harvard in 1882, and was appointed professor emeritus. In 1886 he paid a visit to England, meeting with a reception that testified to his popularity with readers of every class. His literary activity has diminished under the weight of fourscore years, but he still contributes occasionally to the Atlantic Monthly, and his little productions, whether in prose or verse, have shown little diminution of the exuberant fancy and wit and edginess of expression in which he is generally acknowledged to have no rival among American poets and essayists. For biog., see BROWN, EMMA E., supra, and fact-table, Bost., 1860, 12mo. 2. Currents and Counter-Currents in Medical Science: with other Essays, Bost., 1861, 16mo; new ed., 1882, 3. 9. When he had written the Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, Dr. Holmes would have done well, as it has since appeared, had he ceased from satire. That series of papers won for him a brilliant reputation, which from that time forward he has gone on damaging, diminishing it by each new book. . . . On the whole, "The Guardian Angel" is far from being unreadable, unless one is too fastidious."—Nation, v. 30.

10. Mechanism in Thought and Morals: an Address delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard University, June 29, 1870: with Notes and After-thoughts, Bost., 1870, 16mo.

"Dr. Holmes's position is substantially Huxley's, that man is a machine, only a machine which is partly self-regulated; or Du Bois-Reymond's, that, were it not for the living beings, up to the problem of personal freedom, would be a matter of analytical mechanics."—Nation, xii. 145.

10. The Poet at the Breakfast-Table, Bost., 1872, 12mo.

"The vein which Dr. Holmes has worked so long gives no signs of exhaustion. Whether he has brought to light as much sterling ore as on former occasions need not be decided; but at any rate he writes with his old buoyancy, and does not make upon us the unpleasant impression of a writer logging a tired horse and producing a wretched jog-trot in place of the old lively pace."—*Sat. "Viewing the book merely as a memoir, the reader is disappointed; but taking it for what it is, a detailed review of the opera omnia of one man of genius by another, it becomes both valuable and attractive."—Nation, xl. 99.

17. A Mortal Antipathy: First Opening of the New Portfolio, Bost., 1885, 16mo.

"Our Hundred Days in Europe, Bost., 1887, 12mo. "A volume that offers nothing but pleasure to the reader and a well-diffused contentment."—Sat. Rev., lxxv. 638.

19. Before the Curfew, and other Poems, chiefly Occasional, Bost., 1888, 16mo.

"Dr. Holmes is, of all living American writers, the one who may most truly be said to have won the hearts of English readers. Longfellow and Emerson, who have so lately passed away, have had, the former wider, and the latter deeper, influence on the feelings and thoughts of Englishmen. But there is no American poet now living whose works are more often read, and (which is the best test of their value) more often taken up again, than those of Dr. Holmes."—Sat. Rev., lxxv. 638.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, son of the preceding, b. 1841, in Boston; educated at Harvard College; served in the civil war; admitted to the bar 1866; served as professor in the law school of Harvard 1866, and in the same year appointed a justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. The Common Law, Bost., 1881, 8vo. "It can best be described as an historical essay describing the influence of the primitive conceptions of the childhood of the Teutonic races upon the common law of to-day. . . . It shows careful consideration and unusually profound discussions of intent and the like, which . . . give a tidily historical value."—Nation, xxxii. 464.

"A history which, though not likely to remain an authority, has at least done something towards digesting the vast literature of the Mutiny."—Spectator, lvi. 1110.

"The object of Mr. Holmes is to supplement the works of Kaye and Malletson, and to complete the solution of the real historical problems connected with the Mutiny. In this attempt Mr. Holmes has been successful. He has thrown new light on many debated subjects, he has led the reader through a maze of events, and he has shown the drama to the whole."—Ath., No. 2957.

Holyoake, George Jacob, b. 1817, at Birmingham, Eng., and educated at the Mechanics' Institution in that town, with which he was afterwards connected as teacher of mathematics; has lectured and written on political and speculative questions, and taken an active part in promoting schemes for co-operation and for the education of the working-classes. His writings advocate a system which he has called secularism. He was the last person imprisoned in England for alleged atheism, having been committed for six months in 1841 for a lecture. 1. The Logic of Death; or, Why should the Atheist fear to Die? 2mo. 2. The Logic of Life: deduced from the Principle of Freethought, 12mo. 3. Rudiments of Public Speaking and Debate, 12mo. 4. Rudiments of the History of Co-Operation in England: its Literature and Advantages, Lon., 1875-78, 2 vols. p. svo. 5. The Trial of Theolom, accused of obstructing Secular Life, Lon., 1877, p. svo. 6. Reasoning from Facts: a Method of Every-Day Logic, Lon., 1877, p. svo. 7. *Life of Joseph Rayner Stephens, Preacher and Political Orator: with an Introduction by J. (The author writes, "I have given to this lecture this title, because words are lamps, are pitchers, and are trumpets. Preaching to the intellect . . . is as a lamp; . . . preaching to the conscience is as a trumpet; . . . preaching to the experience is as a pitcher.")

"It was evidently begun as an answer to the strictures on General Hood's campaign of 1864 in Georgia and Tennessee which General Joseph E. Johnston had made in his 'Narrative,' and probably grew into larger proportions than the author had first intended. . . . He vehemently insists that he deserved victory, if he did not achieve it. . . . His book must be judged for what it is,—a very sincere but controversial defence of his policy as an army commander, and not as a systematic contribution to exact history. It will have a permanent value of its own, and will (as we think it should) modify favorably the judgment of the world upon his last important campaign."—Nation, xxx, 296, 297.

"There are historians more capable than Dr. Hook of dressing up a pretty picture, or tracing out a novelty in a taking shape. . . . But we believe that there is none who has written history or biography with a more single eye to the main object of historical and biographical writing, the setting forth of truth."—Sat. Rev., xxx. 338, 339.

"It is painful to be obliged to say that the book is not only unworthy of Dean Hook's well-earned reputation, but that it is almost entirely destitute of any historical or biographical value. It is full of mistakes, small and great, full of random accusations against persons and parties, which no attempt is made to substantiate."—SAMUEL R. "She is just a little too indiscriminate in her admiration; and, while she evidently means to do them justice, she often really waters down the characters of those whom she describes by terms of undistinguishing eulogy. . . . Mrs. Hookham has collected her materials with considerable assiduity; but she would have added greatly to their value had she but shown some critical discernment worthy of so much industry. . . . Few biographies, however, are more interesting than those of René and Margaret of Anjou, and Mrs. Hookham has made a readable book by merely telling the story of these two remarkable lives together."—ibid., No. 233.

"Miss Ellice Hopkins was Hinton's personal friend, and was able, by virtue of thorough congeniality of disposition, to know what he knew, to feel what he felt, to get exactly into his point of view, and to act as interpreter between him and the world. . . . she writes well,—not only clearly, but with an eloquence which sometimes rises almost into poetry. . . . sir William Gull also was the right man to supply the introduction to James Hinton's biography. The life and letters are an illustrative and corroborative comment upon Sir William's estimate of his friend. The book is full of interest, and by its means void of instruction."—Spectator, li. 444.

an intimate knowledge of the Italian language and literature. On returning to the United States he was for a time an editorial writer on the New York Tribune and a married contributor to the Nation. In 1866 he became assistant editor of the Atlantic Monthly, and in 1872 to 1881 was its editor, resigning that position in the latter year to gain more time for original writing. Since 1881 he has contributed exclusively to Harper's Monthly, where he has charge of a critical department called "The Editor's Study," in which he expounds and develops the literary convictions that underlie all his later work in fiction.

"Mr. Howells has not only the best qualities of a pleasurable travelling companion, but those also which are most readily mentioned, the penetrative insight which we have all-pardonably together with good common sense and sound judgment, for in its degree, partly to the fact that delightful work of the rarest kind, it does for Venice what England—presents a picture of it as it appears to the American of the present day whose nature is receptive of the true impressions of the external and material aspects of Venice."—Nation, lii, 189.

"The reader makes pilgrimage in Mr. Howells's company and many places near Ferrara and Genoa and Naples, a sort of loving disengagement which belongs partly to Mr. nineteenth century in Italy. . . . He overflows with the fun and humor of a delightfully quiet sort. . . . "He has described with the accuracy almost of self-conscious life prodigies. The modern inherited burlesque has not found so fine an illustration before. . . . Mr. Howells realized it with the faithfulness of portraiture, just as he to the life the goal, the stupid Danmum, commonplace stuff, and the Venetian aim. . . . It is less strong as a whole than in its details. "In 'The Rise of Silas Lapham' Mr. Howells depicts one character distinctively of his time, aggressively of his nation, with a vividness and completeness unapproached in contemporary English fiction, apparently unapproachable. With the representation is blended a English comedy. . . . It is a quick, subtle, mocking spirit of the author, fastidious in its phrasing or comparison, gleaming in a jest at the sober truthfulness of the subject who provides the opportunity. . . . The cleverness of Lapham as literary work it is impossible to detract as it is to dispute the anti-personality excites in a people of good taste, or to deny his practical virtues. His almost unqualified inferiority, it has, of course, no beauty. . . . Except in literary ignoring of beauty, this expenditure of power on the every-day falls short of high or good art. There is no inspiration for any one in the character of Silas Lapham, sympathy, suggests no ideal of conduct, stir no thrill of pain. If it is to be conceded that Mr. Howells and his school are great artists in the highest reaches of their art, then the language is in some need of words to define Sir Walter Scott and Thackeray."—Nation, xli, 347.

particular, America and the average American of to-day are not to be found in the heterogeneous pages of Mr. Bret Harte or of Mr. George W. They are here—in the pages of Mr. Howells—they are to be found nowhere else, except in real life. Mr. Howells has seen and he has understood and he has recorded, and his record is true. . . .  "These two reservations one is forced to make, on final consideration: one is dissatisfied with the lack of discrimination [in the choice of subjects] and with a too exclusive novelty. . . . When the author leaves his note-books and breathes the air of the Italy that is dear to him, we are at once transported by his imagination. There are many of these traveller makes one for himself, and that of Italy; each traveller makes one for himself, and that of Italy; each traveller makes one for himself, and faintly touched with the sentiment of the past. . . .  "Mr. Howells always chooses to avoid drama and deep feeling; he has a right to select, but the novelist who persistently ignores both or mocks at both in as false to life in a broad way as the novelist who is always in hysterics. "The interweaving of plan and counterplan, the continual play in the minds of people feeling a good deal, but unpossessed of the grace not to tell all they feel, makes the little plot really intricate and full to the brim of human interest."—Critic, v, 154.

30. The Minister's Charge; or, The Apprenticeship of Lemuel Barker, Bost., 1887, 12mo.
 "In this novel, as in 'A Modern Instance' and 'Silas Lapham,' he shows himself a masterly realist, laboring under obvious restrictions in his selection and view of character. . . . From Mr. Howells's later works, the inference is justified that he desires impartially and fearlessly to record New England life both in its broad tendencies and its detail. So far he has shown us that there is little variety in the people,—that their prominent characteristics are of a mean order and strikingly disagreeable."—Nation, xlv, 121.

"There is nothing anywhere in the book that is not realistic, but the first half,—that which deals with Lemuel's mild aspirations and his keen disappointments, his first experiences in city life, his delusions and his awakening and his falling back into apathy,—all this is touched with sympathy, the sympathy which means insight as well as photography, the sympathy which creates the kind of imagery that simply sees behind a veil and describes things that are real though invisible to the average man."—Critic, vii, 63.

"If the modern period is to be treated as something absolutely disconnected from the earlier age, no one could do it more felicitously than Mr. Howells. . . . He has this sure merit, that he makes his book attractive; and his ventures into the field of translation have a peculiar charm."—Nation, xlii, 18.

32. April Hopes, Bost., 1887, 12mo.
 "The pleasure it gives is almost entirely dependent on the possession by the reader of what may be called the so delicate sense of literature, which is conduced by the accurate expression of habits of manner and speech, of secret thought, and even of the haziest intellectual perception. The gain to fiction from the author's allegiance to that division of literature is not so great as the loss to metaphysics. All his exceptional qualities, not excluding his wit, would shine more brilliantly in abstract exposition. . . . If human beings were nothing but machines for ever rattling off superficially certain formulas, Mr. Howells could draw them with absolute perfection."—Nation, xlii, 142.

GENERAL CRITICISM:
 "As an observer of his fellow-creatures Mr. Howells stands very high; as a student of the great enigmas—woman—he is quite unrivalled."—Acad., xxiv, 327.

"In the work of Mr. W. D. Howells no thoughtful reader can have failed to observe a continuous descent; and an order of development in his prose is not unlike the order of development in Lord Tennyson's verse. Both the American novelist and the English poet were artists from the first; but at first neither was anything more than an artist: the gift of finished graceful expression preceded the acquisition of anything very substantial to express. . . . The first books of Mr. Howells have in their recognizable flesh and blood; his people do not elude us, as was their wont in the old days; we know them, and can, as it were, grasp their hands. He has, moreover, developed a remarkable gift of empathy not merely as an individual, but as a member of society. In spite of his attention to detail,—to what often seems even triviality of detail,—he is often singularly successful in his suggestion of moral, intellectual, and emotional atmosphere."—Spectator, lxxi, 371.

"He has many admirable qualities, not the least of which is that he draws from models and not out of his own head; the result is that his people, whether we like them or not, have always the great merit of absolute reality. Next, he is true to his characters; they go whither they are bound to go, up or down, taking the natural course of their actions and their lives. This recognition of the queerness of their actions and their lives in fiction is almost as rare as its perception by ordinary people in real life. If we add that he is the possessor of a style which is always pleasing and unstudied, though not without a certain assured success. He has certain defects; he lacks gaieté de cœur, the natural liveliness which goes far to redeem almost every other fault. Yet he is not cynical; he does not laugh much; he never says his stories have no plot, no situations to speak of, and not many incidents, yet they interest; his conversations are sometimes lippant and sometimes in bad taste, yet they are natural."—*Sat. Hucifer, Franz, (or Francis), Ph.D., 1815-1889, b. at Mirter, Germany; removed to England in 1869, and established himself as a musical critic, in which capacity he succeeded J. W. Davison on the Times in 1878, and was the first to advocate Wagner's music in England. He contributed to periodicals, wrote the librettos of two operas by A. C. Muenkenzie, and edited a series of biographies entitled "The Great Musicians." 1. Richard Wagner and the Music of the Future: History and Aesthetics, Lon., 1874, p. 8vo.

"Dr. Müller treats of Wagner as representing the dramatic, and Schubert, Schumann, Franz, and Liszt as illustrating the various shades of the lyrical, phase of modern music. . . . "In spite of all the innate popularity of the theme, and its importance in the history of culture, no trustworthy volume on the Troubadours has hitherto been published in England. It is now needed to give the name of a very worthless book that essayed to fill this gap a few years ago; slightly better than this was a later American publication, by Miss Harriet Preston. Both are entirely superseded by the work now under review, by a scholar who has done thoroughly good work in the same line before, and whose critical edition of the works of Guillem de Cabestani is enough to prove his competence and learning."—Spectator, II. 739.

"The staple of the Letters is made up of purely family matters, . . . varied chiefly by lively and slightly mischievous descriptions of de proclama. It is in this last particular that the main interest and the main value of the letters lie. They contain, if the phrase may be permitted, the matter of the novels in solution—in a very alluded and not always a very unalloyed solution—but still there. . . . The fault of the book simply is that it puts before the reader, in a not over-well edited form, a great deal of matter which is simply trivial."—Sat., Rev. lviii. 637.

Hughes, Thomas, F.S.A., Q.C., b. 1823, at Uppingham, Berkshire; educated at Rugby, under Dr. Arnold, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated 1845; called to the bar at the Inner Temple 1848; M.P. for Lambeth 1868-69, and for Frome 1868-71; judge of county courts since 1882. He was associated with Charles Kingsley and F. D. Maurice in the movement for the improvement of the condition of the London poor which was known as "Christian Socialism." In 1870 he visited the United States and delivered lectures, and in 1880 he founded the "Rugby Colony" in Tennessee. 1. Tom Brown's School Days. By an Old Boy. Cambridge, 1857, p. 8vo; 2d ed. same year; several later eds.

"The book is a thoroughly English book, heartily acquiescing in English ways and tastes, especially in the English system of public school education. . . . Whether the system be perfect or not the 'Old Boy' does not trouble himself to inquire. He takes it as he finds it. He neither apologizes for it nor tries to idealize it. . . . Many a boy, who has been allured from page to page by the racy school adventures of Tom Brown, will pause, soothed and soothed, over the really noble pathos of the last chapter, in which Tom Brown, now an Oxford man, discovers all that Arnold has been to him, but discovers it above his grave."—*Sat. By the Author of "Tom Brown's School Days." Cambridge, 1861, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"The book is not only a failure, but is evidently written by an author who knew that it was a failure. . . . There are many passages in the description of Oxford which are excellent. . . . They are life-like and, without an affectation of over-accuracy, are, in substance, very effective representations of the thing to be described. . . . But there are many subjects into which the career of his hero takes Mr. Hughes for which he has no forte about which he does not trouble himself, and through which he drifts in a hopeless, aimless way, which is very trying to his readers."—*Sat. "Such a work as this has been long needed, and it would be hard to find any one better qualified to prepare it than Mr. Hughes. . . . His usual method is to begin an article with the texts in the Koran relating to the subject, then to add the traditions bearing upon it, and to conclude with the comments of the Muhammadan scholars and the criticisms of Western scholars. . . . "It describes the geography of its history as it proceeds, but. . . it is too general, and, in battles or instances, it is rather that of the locality than of the battle. . . . "A repository of data of the greatest value. The narrative is very clear, concise, and fair in spirit. It is too crowded, and written too much, perhaps, in the style of an official report, to be essential to the casual reader; but its interest to the student of the great campaign of 1861-63 can hardly be exaggerated."—Nation, xxxvi, 362.

"In 1859 I began a course of reading with the object of inquiring into the nature of revelation and the evidences by which it is supported. At the end of four years I had formed a plan of something like a complete history of theology, which would set forth the special character of Christianity and its relation to other religions. In the spring of 1863 I showed the outlines of my work to the late Professor Maurice, who had gone over larger portions of the same field, and whose writings had been of great service to me. The professor looked over the paper, and, returning it, said, with an incredulous smile, "You have twenty years' work before you." He advised me to try one part first, and to go on with the rest if that succeeded. I took his advice, and in 1866 the first chapter, which was on Pantheism, had become a large volume. Ten years have passed since that conversation with Professor Maurice. The present work is only the completion of the second chapter, and the first will have to be rewritten."—Extract from the Author's Preface.

"Who does not, or at least should not, feel grateful to the laborious author who gives us, in a series of successive, brief statements, the results of long and careful processes of inquiry, involving an amount of toil which he alone knows the extent of? Of such careful work the book before us gives ample proof; and what is at least as important it is the work of a man of judicial mind."—Spectator, xviii, 60.

The Encyclopedic Dictionary: a New and Original Work of the Reference to All the Words in the English Language: with a Full Account of their Origin, Meaning, Pronunciation, and Use. Illust. Lon., 1879-88, 7 vols. r. 8vo. (Dr. Hunter, whose name does not appear on the title-page as it has since been printed, collected the material which served as the original basis of the work, and contributed a large majority of the articles which are distinctly of an encyclopedic character, the general editor being Mr. John Williams, of the literary staff of Cassell & Co.)

"The publishers tell us that they have felt the need of a work combining the ordinary features of a dictionary with something of the exhaustiveness adopted in an encyclopedic." . . . It must be confessed that, on the encyclopedic side, Mr. Hunter has (without being exhaustive) brought together a mass of useful information on a variety of subjects. . . . A valuable feature, in which Mr. Hunter has made a great advance upon other English dictionaries published, is the inclusion of a vast number of words now obsolete or rarely in use. The want of dates, or of any indication even of periods however, inflicts all these portions of the work with an element of uncertainty which greatly detracts from their value. . . . The work would form a useful adjunct to every town library.—Acad., xxiv, 207.

He distinguished himself by his successful superintendence in Orissa and the southwestern division of Bengal during the famine of 1866, and received the thanks of the government. 2. The Annals of Rural Bengal, Lon., 1868, 8vo; 5th ed., 1872.

"The account we have given of his opening chapters will show how comprehensive have been the preliminary researches by which he has prepared himself for his task. The narrative to which these researches serve as the indispensable introduction hardly begins in the present volume. All that Mr. Hunter attempts to do is to paint the state of affairs in the frontier district during the years that immediately followed the change of government. With this view he shows us the country as a rural administrator and a rural manufacturer; he relates its dealings with the currency, and its essays towards an improved administration of civil and criminal justice."—*Sat. 11. The Imperial Gazetteer of India, Lon., 1881, 9 vols. 8vo; new ed., 1885-87, 14 vols.

"Dr. Hunter has rendered to the Indian Government and to English people generally the highest service a public servant could achieve, and one deserving of the highest distinctions a grateful nation can bestow, in at last making a census of India, and presenting in its true light a dependent empire, which for the most of us has hitherto been but a name associated with a vague idea of distant and barbaric splendour."—Ath., No. 2848.

"More than satisfies all the requirements of the gazetteer, at the same time that it gives a complete account of the history and political institutions of the country."—Spectator, liv, 1292.

"The volume devoted to India, No. VI. in the series, is perhaps the most remarkable. It has some of the best features of guide book, blue-book, philosophical treatise, administrative report, sportsman's directory, and historical essay. An experienced administrator fresh from work in the East has characterized it as a volume which enables the intelligent reader to dispense with several tomes of the usual Anglo-Indian library."—*Sat. "Excellent as this little book is in some ways, its title is misleading, and the work itself is disappointing as coming from one who can do and has done so much for Indian history as Dr. Hunter. . . . The present book, on examination, proves to be decidedly more than a condensation of the articles on India in the 'Imperial Gazetteer of India,' which has already been reproduced under the title of 'The Indian Empire.'"—Ath., No. 2860.

"It is not easy to say what is Mr. Buckle's precise standing as a philosopher. Twenty years ago he was considered Mr. Buckle at once too bold and too cold. We have become accustomed to far greater boldness. The doctrine of evolution has left him far behind, for his Bathypolus. As to Mr. Buckle's coldness, it was a statistical defect unaddressed letters, and he drew depressing inferences. . . . Mr. Huth's book, which seems to be written with rare sincerity, shows us the man as he was, not the philosopher as he was supposed to be."—Sat. Rev., xlix, 120.

Huxley, Thomas Henry, M.D., Ph.D., J.L.D., F.R.S., b. 1825, at Ealing, Middlesex; was educated partly at the school in that town, of which his father was one of the masters; studied medicine at the Charter Cross Hospital in London; passed the first examination for M.B. at the University of London in 1845, with honors in physiology, and in 1846 took the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons and entered the royal navy as assistant surgeon. In 1847 he was appointed to the "Rattlesnake," commissioned for the survey of the barrier reef of Australia, New Guinea, and the Louisiade Archipelago. In 1855 he was appointed professor of natural history at the Royal School of Mines, and in the same year Fullener professor of physiology to the Royal Institution, and examiner in physiology and comparative anatomy at the University of London. On the promulgation of the Darwinian theory he became at once its strongest supporter; his influence both in bringing about its acceptance in the highest scientific circles and in making it popularly known has been very great. In 1863 he was elected professor of comparative anatomy to the Royal College of Surgeons, an office which he held till 1870. In 1872 he was elected lord rector of the University of Aberdeen for three years. He succeeded Mr. Buckland in 1880 as inspector of fisheries, became dean in the Normal School of Science at South Kensington a little later, and was elected president of the Royal Society in 1883. In 1885 he was compelled by overwork to resign that appointment together with his other offices, retaining only his position at the School of Science. He has contributed largely to the Transactions of various scientific societies and to leading English reviews. 1. On the Educational Value of the Natural History Sciences. Lon., 1854, 8vo. 2. "In this interesting and instructive volume thirteen essays are collected, originally published between 1869 and 1871, but each certainly of permanent value. They include, as their accomplished author says, 'the high-water mark of the various times of occupation by which he has been carried along since the beginning of 1850.' . . . The opening essays are ethical in their subject-matter, the body of the work treats of various biological and paleontological, or as we should rather say, ontogenetic, questions, and the closing essay, on the Berkeleyan Metaphysics."—Ath., No. 237.

"A very charming book. . . . The subject is introduced by an imaginary visit to London Bridge, the observation of the flowing of the stream and the rise and fall of the tides, and from this starting-point the natural phenomena connected with rivers are traced. Many subjects are introduced which seem to have so little to do with the tides, but on first turning over its pages, it appears like a collection of detached treatises having little relation to one another—chemical experiments, meteorological charts, solar protuberances, deep-sea soundings, are all included,—but on reading the book from the beginning, (and most who begin will continue to the end,) it is evident that all these matters are necessary to a thorough appreciation of the subject. . . . The book will be invaluable in producing in young people an interest in the phenomena of nature."—Spectator, li. 123.

21. Science and Culture, and other Essays, Lon., 1881, 8vo.

"What is the function of science in modern culture? That is, in the main, the subject for discussion in this volume, so far as it can be said to deal with any one subject. The first four essays deal directly with it in relation to education, science, university, technical, and domestic. Essays v., viii., xi., and xii. deal with episodes in the history of science connected with the names of Priestley, Aristotle, Descartes, the early evolutionists, and Mr. Darwin. The sixth essay deals with scientific method, and is founded on a text given by Voltaire; the seventh and tenth discuss problems of biology and psychology as examples of the scientific method. Thus the volume is an account of the connection between the scientific method and the progress of civilization."—ibid.

"The Kirk was for three centuries the one successful and unchanging embodiment of Calvinistic Puritanism. It was a national establishment, as popular in its creed and as high in its spiritual liberty as any voluntary sect, yet as permanent in its doctrine and as able to wield public power as the Roman Catholic Church of France. So at least it seemed (ill recent changes. To trace distinctly and accurately the course and effects of the silent legal revolutions which have brought about those changes is the object of Mr. Innes's book, and he has done his work admirably."—*Sat. James, Major-Gen. Sir Henry, F.R.S., 1803-1877, b. in Cornwall; educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; entered the engineer corps 1825; director of the Geological Survey, director-general of the Ordnance Survey, &c. He discovered the art of photo-zincography, and employed it in producing fac-similes of many manuscript documents, including Domesday Book. 1. Photo-Zincography, Lon., 1860, 8vo. 2. James, Henry, [ante, vol. i., add.] 1811-1882, b. at Albany, N.Y.; graduated at Union College 1830; studied theology at Princeton and afterwards in Scotland, and adopted Swedenborgian views without becoming a member of the New Jerusalem Church. The Secret of Swedenborg; being an Elucidation of his Doctrine of the Divine Natural Humanity, Bost., 1869, 8vo.

"We regard this as one of the more remarkable books of the day. It is an elaborate, earnest essay, endeavoring to reconcile philosophy and theology, in which the same line of thought which the author follows in his books entitled 'Christianity the Logic of Creation,' and 'Substance and Shadow,' but, as it seems to us, is much more clear and satisfactory."—Nation, ix. 426. The Secret of Swedenborg; being an Elucidation of his Doctrine of the Divine Natural Humanity, Bost., 1869, 8vo.

"The substance of this volume is metaphysical in thought and mystical in religion. . . . In his life, as well as in his works, Mr. James was engaged with the riddle of evil."—Nation, xl. 90.

James, Henry, b. 1843, in New York City; son of the preceding; was educated under his father's supervision, for the most part in Europe, where he spent the years 1855-59. In 1862 he entered the Harvard Law School, and in 1865 began to contribute sketches to periodicals. During the next ten years he published in the Atlantic Monthly a number of short stories, which gained him a definite, though not extensive, reputation before he entered upon his career as a novelist. Since 1869 he has passed most of his time in Europe, and of late has taken up his residence in England. He has contributed articles, sketches, and stories to many periodicals, including the Revue des Deux Mondes, and most of his novels appeared originally as serials in the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines. 1. "The serious intention to do the author's best is everywhere felt in this story, and the result is most excellent results. The simplicity and directness and quietness of the plot make the interest of its gradual development a matter of very considerable artistic skill, since it relies wholly on the phases and transformation of the characters involved."—Nation, xxiii. 164.

It is the best thing that Mr. James has ever done, — i.e., the completed and the least touched by his pen, — i.e., unaccommodated, but it is a perfect study of a type not always known alive, are clothed, the joints do not rattle; the dry bones are not separate against a dark background, the smaller colors are not in a human fashion. It is true that Daisy Miller is sacrificed to Mr. James's incapacity to get his feet out of the stage in any way except by killing his like life, and in other respects we have Mr. James at his very best. — Nation, xxvii, 387.

"Mr. James tells us that 'American intellectual standards are vague, and that 'Hawthorne's countrymen are somewhat agitated consciences. In this respect, at least, he has completely avoided the faults of his compatriots, every sign of perfect tranquillity in that inner sanctuary which in him may be supposed to correspond to the toss and troubled region of his fellow-countrymen's nature. James does substantial justice to Hawthorne, in attitude, Mr. Sights exceptions." — Spectator, lili, 18.

"He has made a careful, careful, and even vivid literary portrait. . . . We are helped thinking that if he had had a quicker sympathy with Hawthorne's provincialism and the blank writings. . . . It is a portrait of the poet's qualities of his we believe to be the truth about him." — Nation, xxx, 80.

"Essentially unlike as the two writers are, Mr. James is imaginative enough to render Hawthorne's moods for us in a way that commands our assent to his rendering; he knows New England down to its very roots, the European; and he is master of a style of exceptional fitness and elasticity." — *Sat. "An important work, the most important Mr. James has thus far written, and worthy of far more than he merits a little too important, — to express by a paradox the chief criticism to be made upon it, — or, at all events, the only impression left by it which is not altogether agreeable. For the first two or three hundred pages one is beguiled by a kind of entertainment always of a high order, — the dispassionate demonstration. After that, though it would be misleading to say that the interest flags, — the interest throughout the book being remarkable for its evenness, — a happy aptitude for most serious and 'intellectual' detection. . . . The Portrait of a Lady' is the most eminent example we have thus far had of realistic art in fiction, profoundly, real, and at the same time its presentation is imaginative." — Nation, xxvii, 102.

"This novel, which is one of the most careful and elaborate that the author has hitherto published, . . . is not to be noticed as merely all that he has written. There is the same minute and accurate observation, the same address in keeping the reader's curiosity, if not always a superficial feeling and motive. But in the Portrait of a Lady, as in so much of the same time its presentation is cannot help remarking the care which the writer takes of his characters and of the situations in which he places them. . . . And in those cases where he cannot escape himself, so, he seems at once to lose hold of the characters whose outward and superficial qualities he depicts with so much ability. . . . Till the time for net comes, Mr. James's men and women are admirable imitations of human beings; but the moment the hourarries for decision and deeds, they reveal themselves as mere simulacra." — Sat. Rev., lli, 708.

"If Mr. Henry James had called this book 'The Portrait of Two Gentlemen,' we might have admitted the aptness of the designation, for the real power of the book consists in the wonderful pictures given of Ralph Touchet and Mr. Osmond, who have never been equalled in fiction for the skill and delicacy of the painting. . . . But as for Isabel who is the lady of whom the portrait is taken, we venture to say that the reader never sees her, or realizes what she is, from the beginning of the book to the close. She is one lady of whom no portrait is given, though she is liv. 1504.

23. The Bostonians: a Novel, Lon., 1886, 3 vols. p. 8vo; N. York, 1 vol.

"It is apparently designed to bring out a number of contrasts, — the contrast between the ladies who are filled with the enthusiasm of the 'woman's rights' movement and the ladies who are not filled with anything of the kind; between the somewhat antique chivalrous young man and the brusque, progressive, Northern young woman, with a redundancy of ideas, and whose suggestions would say, all that, between the Bostonians and the story drags in places, and the conversations betray that want of naturalness into which the author's passion for a sort of dramatic retort leads him. Nevertheless, the criticism and observation are so good that we cannot refrain from admiration even when we do not always enjoy it." — Nation, xlii, 407.

"The Bostonians' is a wonderfully clever book, so clever in many parts even in execution, and so original in conception, that one can almost pardon the unobjectionable tediousness of a large part of the second and third volumes, from which we get the impression that a comparatively slight study has been put under a microscope and rendered in all the extended dimensions of an artificially magnified image." — Spectator, lix, 388.

24. The Princess Casanoviana: a Novel, Lon., 1886, 3 vols. cr. 8vo; N. York, 1 vol.

"One hardly stretches in drawing a parallel of his Princess and the adventures of Alcibiades with of Soho, with his Princess, the most wonderful woman in Europe." Let it not be supposed that Mr. James has gone over to romance and magic; he has only selected people in circumstances best suited to develop them, placed them in a great question, the whole truth about them. . . . In this series of studies of exceptions, Mr. James shows a versatility and power hardly hinted at in his former work. Such complex and high-strung natures as Hyacinth and the Princess call out reserves of keenness and intellectual refinement unexpected even in him; and in the score of uncommon people temporarily met, they common interest in a great question, his wit and sarcasm are agreeably tempered by a tenderness and even intensity of feeling which he has hitherto carefully repressed." — Nation, xlv, 123.

GENERAL CRITICISM:

"Mr. Henry James is certainly a very remarkable illustration of the tendency of our day to divide in the finest way the already rather extreme division of labour, till a very high perfection is attained in producing articles of the most curiously specialized kind, though apparently without the power of producing anything outside of the very great perfection in his own line, seems not to aim at anything quite so considerable as a story of human life of any sort. He sketches a story. What he loves is an 'episode,'—i.e., something which by the nature of the case is rather a fragment cut out of a life, and not a fair or average specimen of it, nor even such a part as would give you the best essence of the whole, but rather an eddy in it, which takes you for an interval out of its main current, and only ends when you get back into the main current again, or at least at the point at which you might get back into the main current again, if some event (accidental in relation to the art of the story) did not occur to cut off abruptly the thread of the narrative. No doubt there is a wonderful skill in the writer who, avowedly refusing to tell you what can properly be called a story,—loving above all things to depict excursions of the heart and mind which fade away and end in being lost,—yet interests you so deeply as he does in his delineation of these unfulfilled intentions of men, these manqué and tentative deviations into regions not adapted for embodiment into the substance of life. One might perhaps say that Mr. James has discovered in relation to literature what has long been known in relation to art,—that with artists of any genius 'sketches' are apt to be more satisfying than finished pictures. But then the sketches we like so much in artists' studios are, though unfinished pictures, still pictures of what the painter has been most struck with, pictures in which he has given all that struck him most, and left only what did not strike him to be filled in by the fancy of the public. Now, Mr. Henry James does not give us sketches of the striking features in what he sees of human life and passion, so much as finished pictures of the little nooks and bays into which human caprice occasionally drifts, when the main current of life's deeper interests has left us for a moment on one side and rushed past us. He does not half-patent what is striking; he prefers rather to paint with wonderful care and precision what is not striking, or only striking by its contrast with what is usually thought so. Mr. Henry James is not so much a novelist as an episodist, if such a term be allowable. But he is a wonderful episodist."—Spectator, lli. 277.

"If Mr. James be not incapable of describing passion, at all events he has skill to show that he is capable of it. . . . He has introduced us to many characters who seemed to have in them capacities for the highest passion, . . . and yet he has never allowed them to bring these capacities to evision is managed with so much ingenuity and plausibility that, although we may be disappointed, or even irritated, we are deprived of the right of giving those emotions satisfactory expression."—Spectator, li. 48.

"The style in which he has succeeded is adapted well enough for gentle satire on human weaknesses, for tender analysis of such elements of interest as exist in commonplace characters; it falls altogether when it has to deal with the really dark pieces of human nature."—Ibid., No. 389.

"In Jefferies' later books the whole of the country life of the nineteenth century will be found displaced down to every detail. The life of the farmer is there; the life of the labourer; the life of the gamekeeper; the life of the woman who work in the fields, and of those who work at the flowers and the fields; the wild English creatures; the hedges and the streams; the wood and coppice. . . . But this is not all. For next he took the step—the vast step—across the chasm which separates the poetic from the vulgar mind, and began to clothe the real with the colours and glamour of the unreal; to write down the response of the soul to the phenomena of nature; to interpret the voice of Nature speaking to the soul. Unto this last. And then he died; his work, which might have gone on forever, cut off almost at the commencement."—W. BESANT: The Ecology of Richard Jefferies, 228.

Jenkin, Henry Charles Fleeming, F.R.S., 1833-1885, b. in Kent, Eng.; son of the preceding; was educated at Edinburgh, in Germany, and in France, where he began his career as a civil engineer. Returning to England in 1851, he advanced so rapidly in his profession that the testing of the first Atlantic cable, in 1858, was put under his charge. In 1865 he became professor of engineering in University College, London, and in 1868 was called to the newly-founded chair of engineering in the University of Edinburgh. His criticism on The Origin of Species in the North British Review for 1867 led to a modification of certain views on the part of its author. In 1877 he delivered two lectures before the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution on sanitary houses, which gave rise to the formation of sanitary protection associations in Edinburgh and in other cities of Great Britain. Jennings, Mrs. Kate Vynghan. Rahel: her Life and Letters, Lon., 1876, 8vo.

"A book, not adequate indeed, but sympathetically written by a person so well versed in the German life of the time that her knowledge is almost a trial to the reader, whom she perpetually supposes to know as much as herself. We have, to thank Mrs. Jennings for giving us . . . a full and yet concise account of so interesting a figure."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 666.

Jennings, Louis John, b. 1837, in London; acted as special correspondent of the London Times in 1863-68 in India and in the United States, and was afterwards for some years editor of the New York Times and made through its columns a successful attack upon the Tammany Ring. In 1876 he returned to England, and was elected M.P. for Stockport in 1885 and again in 1886. He is a regular contributor to the Quarterly Review. 1. Eighty Years of Republican Government in the United States, Lon., 1867, 8vo.

"All the narrative parts—all parts, in short, for which Mr. Jennings could draw his materials from books, are admirable, and the tone is throughout kindly. The author, too, writes like a gentleman, and evidently tries—as well as strong conservative prejudices and a too great eagerness for generalization will let him—to do justice. We, however, regret the success of the book in England, as influenced by the sale of two editions. We are satisfied it will only thicken the fog through which most Englishmen look at the United States."—Nation, vi. 133.

"It is a temperate, impartial, and thoughtful estimate of parties, principles, and social character."—Sat. Rev., xxiv. 823.

3. Rambles among the Hills, in the Peak of Derbyshire and the South Downs. Illust. Lon., 1880, cr. 8vo.

"Mr. Jennings notes all that is best worth seeing. . . . But he entitles his pages by recording his gossip with all manner of acquaintances whom he has made promiscuously; and he introduces delicate touches in his pictures of cottage interiors which, though seemingly slight, are often telling."—Sat. Rev., lii. 307.

4. (Ed.) The Creker Papers: Correspondence and Diaries of the Late Right Hon. John Wilson Creker, Secretary to the Admiralty from 1809 to 1830, Lon., 1884, 3 vols. 8vo.

"Altogether these volumes must be regarded as among the most valuable and readable contributions which have yet been made towards an elucidation of the political history of this country during the first fifty years of the present century."—Sat. Rev., liii. 64.

"We do not in any way blame Mr. Jennings for making the best of his hero. It is far better that a biographer should act like a fair and reasonable advocate than that he should attempt to play the part of a judge. The manner, also, in which the letters and extracts from the diary are threaded together is most satisfactory. Just enough of the current history is told to remind readers of the course of events: but otherwise the Papers are left to themselves.

"The three large volumes of 8vo. which the book consists of are full of matter, and that of the most interesting kind."—Spectator, lvii. 1483.

Jevons, William Stanley, LL.D., F.R.S., 1833-1882, b. in Liverpool, Eng.; was the son of an iron-merchant of that city, and grandson of William Roscoe, (q. v., ante, vol. I.) He was educated at the High School of the Mechanics' Institute, Liverpool, and at the Royal Mint, London; held an appointment in the Royal M.A. at London University 1862, winning the gold medal for logic, philosophy, and political economy, and being elected a Fellow in 1864. In 1866 he was appointed professor of logic and mental and moral philosophy, and Cobden lecturer on political economy, in Owens College, Manchester, and resigned that position in 1876 to accept the chair of political economy in University College, London, which he held till 1881, when he gave up academic work to devote himself to literature. 18. Investigations in Currency and Finance. Edited, with an Introduction, by H. S. Foxwell. Lon., 1884, 8vo.

"Mr. Jewons's investigations are divided into two classes,—Commercial Fluctuations and Currency. There is a tide in the affairs of business men which the statistic resolves into distinct fluctuations. . . . These and minor oscillations are exhibited in the book before us by means of beautiful diagrams containing the returns of the Bank of England averaged over periods of several years. . . . From "Commercial Fluctuations" we pass to Currency,—the burning question of bimetallicism and technical questions relating to the age, weight, and cost of the gold metallic currency. . . . Prof. Foxwell has caught the spirit of the work which he edits and describes. The introduction is worthy of the author introduced. It is congenial to the work of Mr. Jewons. And yet it is substantive and individual."—F. Y. EDGEWORTH; Acad., xxvi. 38.

19. Letters and Journals. Edited by his Wife. Lon., 1886, 8vo.

"A singularly full and rich record of a memorable mental history. . . . Perhaps Stanley Jewons hardly offers the conditions of a striking and picturesque biography. . . . All that is given us is the record of a calm, uninterrupted flow of activity towards a well-conceived and worthy end."—Spectator, lxx. 783.

The quaintest conceit in the 'Comedy' illustrates this, when, during an interlude of labiaux, the scene being India, Pluto calls Thiers, and giving him a pair of pliers and a hammer, bids him undo the chains which still bind Napoleon I. to the pillory, and substitute for him the monster [Bismarck] who is now ravaging the earth."—Spectator, lili, 919.

"The easy and graceful style of which Prof. Johnson's master work makes almost any subject attractive in his hands, and the subject that he has chosen is well fitted to be treated in such a style. . . . The dominant idea of the book is the spontaneous generation, so to speak, of democracy upon Connecticut soil. There and nowhere else, according to Prof. Johnson, did it originate. . . . Matter so, and we do not find that Prof. Johnson's proofs are altogether convincing."—Nation, xiv. 15.

Narrative of Military Operations directed, during the Late War between the States, by Joseph E. Johnston, General C.S.A., N. York, 1874, imp. 8vo.

"He has simply written an earnest, almost passionate defence of himself before the Southern people from the charge of having caused or contributed to their defeat.

We have therefore a contribution to controversial polemics rather than to military history, although much light is incidentally thrown upon some important phases of the conflict."—Nation, xviii, 333.

"His book is truly a most valuable contribution to the history of the war." We regret only that it is marred by a controversial and carping spirit, which, while showing the more prepossessed against him than the same story would do if told by any other hand than that of the able commander who seems so over-careful of his own reputation."—*Sat. "The last sentence of the Preface to this rather ponderous book gives the key-note to it and to its author:—'The book is sent forth to the world, with full confidence, as one of the best contributions ever made to the great cause of education, certain ultimately, if not immediately, to take an eminent place in educational literature, and to do the highest service in what is of paramount importance to children. . . . From innumerable volumes, lectures, magazines, articles, newspaper leaders, he has collected materials for this body of Combe divinity. . . . There is no guide more complete to the various educational problems and controversies of this generation and the last.'—Ath., No. 2697.

B., 1839; was Fellow 1838-70, and tutor 1842-70, and was then elected master; ordained 1842, vice-chancellor of the university 1882-83; Regius professor of Greek since 1856. He contributed to the celebrated "Essays and Reviews" an essay on the Interpretation of Scripture. 1. (Trans.) The Dialogues of Plato: with Analyses and Introductions, Lon., 1871, 4 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1875, 5 vols. (An index to the works, forming a separate volume, was compiled by Evelyn Abbott, q. v. supra.)

"The present work is mainly, though not wholly, of a popular character. It is addressed to a wide, but not the widest circle of readers. The more general reader will hardly think it within his horizon to differentiate Plato from Plotinus, but will put both aside as 'too learned' for them. But there still remain among the millions of English-speaking men a few whose education has been carried far enough to make them reasonably curious about Plato, though they have not acquired classical knowledge enough to read him in the original. Even the clerical and the who reads Greek, but not fluently, may be glad to have a competent and trustworthy guide and closet companion. The elaborately written introductions with which each dialogue is prefaced are skillfully contrived to meet the requirements of both these classes of readers."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 471.

3. (Trans.) The Politics of Aristotle: with Introduction, Marginal Analysis, Essays, Notes, and Indices, Oxf., 1885, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Certainly those who think, and whose Greek enables them to use an independent judgment, may safely obtain many a lesson in style from this as from all the translator's writings, if they can conquer the irritation of incessant correcting and the fatigue of a perpetual watch. And the other reader, if he must read something called Aristotle and is wishing, in spite of all, to surprise himself to the ears of the Professor, by all means let him begin. . . . He will most likely go on to the end, and rise with a pleasant sense of having achieved the 'Politics.' The only drawback is that he will be mistaken."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 69.

Path and Goal: a Discussion on the Elements of Civilization and the Conditions on the Elements of Civilization and the Conditions of Happiness, Lon., 1880, 8vo. (The discussion is carried on in the form of dialogues between a great number of interlocutors representing many different views on philosophical and religious subjects.)

"Most people would regard this treatise, popular and fascinating as it is in form and style, as a work not merely of the highest erudition, (which it is,) but of the most laborious research, which only a writer in the fullest command of his faculties could have carried out with such spirit and so much accuracy of detail. Yet Dr. Kallisch is unable to prosecute his own special studies. We venture to think that the volume will do more for his fame than any of the volumes yet published of his Commentary."—Sat. Rev., l. 155.

"It would be scarcely possible for any one man to give a clearer or fairer summary and statement—it would be difficult for any one to give a more temperate or more judicious estimate—of the various forms in which the thought of the present day is cast."—Acad., xvii. 335.

away from the Royal Naval School, Newcastle, when twelve years old, and went to sea, and has since been mate of many vessels, chiefly in the East India trade.
He acquired a knowledge of Hindustani and Arabic, served in the Turkish army in 1877, made a pilgrimage to Mecca and Medina in 1878, afterwards studied medicine at the University of Edinburgh, but has since returned to his original profession. He has contributed to the Pall Mall Gazette and other papers. 1. Six Months in Meccah: an Account of the Mohammedan Pilgrimage to Meccah recently accomplished by an Englishman professing Mohammedanism, Lon., 1881, 8vo; new ed., 1887, p. 8vo.
"The descriptions of Meccah itself, the holy shrine of the Kaabah and its precincts, and of the people the author came across during his sojourn, are very graphic. . . . The pilgrimage was very bold and adventurous undertaking."

Meccah or the vast confusion of the journey to Arafat—there is no falling off in elevations, which perhaps is even more conspicuously shown in the success with which he has treated the ordinary details and adventures of a caravan march."—Ath., No. 2818.

"His wanderings are not of a commonplace order. They are mostly by sea; but he has tried every capacity, from first-class passenger on board a well-found liner to that of sailor out of work on the tramp from Liverpool to London.
In every capacity he appears to preserve his good humour, while his powers of observation and narration are such as interest the reader in every phase of his career. In fact, this is a thoroughly readable book, though some of the adventures narrated may require to be taken with a grain of salt."—Spectator, ix, 189.

Kemble, Mrs. Frances Anne, [ante, vol. 1, add.]

 Lenox, Mass., but since 1877 has resided in London. 1.
 Journal of a Residence on a Georgian Plantation in 1838-1839, Lon., 1863, p. 8vo.

"The whole book tends to strengthen the conviction that the slavery question is one which cannot, either as a matter of principle or of results, be treated apart from the great question of civil or religious liberty, as it concerns the individual members of every form of human society throughout the world."—Sat. Rev., xv. 768.

 Mary Stuart; translated from the German of Schiller, Mademoiselle de Belle Isle; translated from the French of A. Dumas, Lon., 1863, p. 8vo. 3. Record of a girlhood, Lon., 1878, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"The book is so charming, so entertaining, so stamped with the impress of a strong, remarkable, various nature, that we feel almost tormented in being treated to a view only of the youthful phases of the character."—Nation, xxvii. 368.

4. Memorials of Later Life, Lon., 1882, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"Mrs. Kemble has almost every gift as a correspondent that a letter-writer of the letter-writing sex can have,—a capacity for distinguishing style; a love of detail, and a capacity in detail; a knowledge of character, the knack of telling a story, a keen sense of humor and sensitive imagination, and in everything perfect naturalness and freedom accompanied by a good deal of explanatory comment, makes a very charming addition to the literature of 'reminis-cences.'"—Nation, xxx. 370.

"The greater part of the matter consists of letters written by Mrs. Kemble to friends, . . . with occasional explanations and additional matter introduced so as to maintain a consecutive narrative, when the letters would fall to do so. . . The book owes a good deal of its attraction to the singular contrast of the two modes of existence exhibited in it. The solitude, the discomforts, and the ungenial surroundings of the American life described alternate with the life of the England and the London of fifty years since which the England and the London of fifty years since was capable of affording. . . For their excellent matter, these volumes must be welcomed as a great accession to the existing stores of autobiography."—Sat. Rev., lv. 56.

5. Notes upon some of Shakespeare's Plays, Lon. and N. York, 1832, or. 8vo.

"Almost as desultory as its predecessors, and quite as delightful. . . The most important of the Shakespearean essays are the two dealing with 'Macbeth,' and containing a subtle analysis of the character of 'Lady Macbeth.' . . .
 But more important . . . is the essay 'On the stage,' which should be read and pondered by every one who takes an intelligent interest in the drama and in the theatre."— Nation, xxxvi. 175.

"We close the book, thankful to Mrs. Kemble even for her verbal criticisms, which are the least attractive part of her work,) inasmuch as they have helped us to realize more fully the marvellous imaginative power of 'Shakespeare.'"—Spectator, lvi. 53.

6. Poems, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"In the unforced spontaneity of her song and sudden bursts of poetic inspiration she offers a curious contrast to the esthetic school of poetry of our own day. . . . Fairy while art lins done next to nothing in her ease to give it that perfection of force which we often find in the verses of temporary poets, who seem on the other hand wanting in that organic impulse without which the most beautiful arrangement of words seems doomed to remain but a barren blossom."—Ath., No. 2933.

"Without affectation or pretension, he has written a book which is so true and life-like that Sir Federico Murchison calls it the pick of recent books of travel. . . . "Mr. Kenyon, . . . a feeble writer, seems to have fair intentions; but a relative is necessarily biased and there are parts of Lord Kenyon's character—his parsimony, his strong temper, and his blundering in English and in Latin, which he was foolishly fond of inappropriately quoting on the bench—on which Lord Campbell, following Mr. Townsend, amply expatiates, and on which Mr. Kenyon is naturally reserved."—*Sat. "A thoroughly delightful book of its kind."—Sat. Rev., xli, 587.

"It would be strange, indeed, if the man who was the friend of the Princess Charlotte, who had fought at Waterloo, and who had met in the course of a long lifetime the celebrated in almost every capital of Europe, could not have written an interesting biography. But our author has done something more than merely record and remember; he has opinions of his own which have their weight, he can tell a story well, and he is good enough when he has to be instructive to be as light and agreeable as possible."—Acad., ix, 452.

"This is one of the most charming books of travel that we ever remember to have read. It is full of incident and adventure, described in the pleasantest of sub-humorous styles. The author travelled through regions in the wilds of Central Africa where no white man had ever been before, blowing of trumpets by scientific or religious societies, and with little more paraphernalia or preparation than a man going out on an ordinary driving-tour in a settled country. It carried his journey through according to his predetermined plan, without violence, fuss, bluster, or a vast expenditure."—Spectator, lix, 1862.

"It is too prolix. . . . There is a considerable amount of fine writing, which might have been judiciously omitted, and a somewhat wearisome reticence of trivial incidents, important only to the narrator. Otherwise it is a spirited record of what may be fairly described as a brilliant episode in the history of African exploration."—A. H. KEANE: Journ., xxx, 310.

3. Systematic Geology. Illustrated by Twenty-Eight Plates and Twelve Analytical Geological Maps, and accompanied by a Geological and Topographical Atlas. (Report. &c., vol. i.) Wash., 1878, 8vo.

"After more than ten years' labor, Mr. King sums up the results of his own and his associates' work in this volume on the systematic geology of the region they have surveyed. . . . The present volume, last in order of time, but numbered as first in the series, is devoted to a general view of the scientific results and conclusions of the survey. . . . The most satisfactory part [sic] of Mr. King's work, next to its scientific thoroughness, is the breadth of view which embraces in one field the correlation of such extended forces, and the vigor of grasp with which the author handles so large a subject without allowing himself to be crushed by details."—Nation, xxviii, 73.

"It is a very remarkable poem. The writer does not seem so much to compose it as to breathe it forth: it is the fruit of intense personal feeling; it glows with the fires of an absolute conviction. . . . The 'Disciples' whose sufferings are recorded are some of those Italians who looked to Mazzini as their chief. . . . As a rule, the poetry lies more in the thing thought than in the thing said. There is, too, a conspicuous want of poetical art."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 181.

"The manner in which Mr. Kinglake has treated the subject dealt with in the fifth volume is admirable. Under his hand order is educed out of chaos, and the under-fused battle in history becomes comparatively easy to understand."—Ath., No. 2466.

"No exception can . . . be fairly taken to the amount of space which Mr. Kinglake has devoted to his description of the battle: whether he has turned it to the best use in which such an event may be described; there is the critical method, which points out the mistakes made on both sides, and teaches how they should be avoided in the future; and there is the sort of writing known as word-painting, with the object of making a picture which shall be readable to the reader, to realize the scene, without distracting his attention by drawing inferences. This last is the mode adopted by special war correspondents, who, however, sometimes interpolate criticism in their narrative very freely; and it is the plan adopted by Mr. Kinglake, except that the criticism has been omitted. No one would fault him from his account of Inkermann whether or not it was fought in the best possible way, although no doubt every reader will draw the moral for himself."—G. CHENEY, ibid., vii. 21.

Vol. vi., 1880; vols. vii. and viii., 1887. New ed. (the 6th) of the whole work, 1877-88.

"The last volumes of Mr. Kinglake's history are marked by the excellencies and the defects conspicuous in those which have appeared before them. We admire the industrious toil of the writer. We admire the industry with extreme care. . . . His narrative has as its chief merit that, though it enters as its rate into military details, it is easily understood by the general reader. . . . Mr. Kinglake, moreover, has a good deal of a right-minded critic. If he is not a careful reader of the creative and artistic faculty, he is not a careless one of the right-minded critic. It is wanting in impartiality and sound discretion; it often conveys a false impression of the events which it professes to describe; and even as a composition it is not successful."—W. G. MORRIS, ibid., xxxii. 433.

"He has given us a work, irregular in some ways, of a composite or even barbaresque order of historic architecture, but singularly original and varied in design, singularly bright and imposing in appearance, and yet built with such an inimitable solidity of inquiry into fact that it is hardly possible to conceive its foundations being shaken."—*Sat. "If somewhat lacking in the minute local descriptions which give such a charm to Mr. Parkman's volumes, Mr. Kingsford deserves especial commendation for the pains he has taken to lay before his readers in a few lines the previous history and character of each individual who appears in his pages. The broad outlines of the history of Canadian settlement are clearly laid down; the policy which governed it is plainly indicated, and the proportion and importance."—Sat. Rev., lxx. 355.

Kingsley, Rev. Charles, F.R.S., F.G.S., [ante, vol. i. add.] 1819-1875; was Legation professor of modern history at Cambridge 1859-69, canon of Chester 1869-73, and from then canon of Westminster. In 1864 he became engaged in a controversy with Dr. — afterwards Cardinal—Newman, which gave rise to the production by the latter of the Apologia pro Vita Sua. "Mr. Kingsley is a clever man, a warm-hearted man, and an honest man; but of all men living he is the least qualified to undertake the work of an historian or an historical professor. He confesses that his lectures are 'not in the popular sense, history at all, and it is beyond our power to find out any more esthetic or record-like sense in which they deserve the name.'—*Sat. "Better than a novel, even when it comes from such a masterly hand as Mr. Kingsley's, is this fresh and vigorous description of life, the life of nature and of men, as it is seen under singularly favourable conditions by an observer who has eyes keenly appreciative of beauty, and that happy art, seemingly so easy, really so difficult, of attainment, of giving to others clearly intelligible pictures of what he sees. Such word-pictures Mr. Kingsley paints better than almost any man—and not so gorgeous, if the comparison may be allowed, as Mr. Ruskin's. But to our fancy at least, clearer and more definite."—Spectator, xlv, 1571.

"The critic of these volumes is tempted, by a suggestion as illusory as it is obvious, to lament in them the loss of a great literary opportunity. It is obvious that the biography of so striking a representative of the third party in the Church might have set before his readers a well-centred picture of an important group, a picture of consequence attempted here, and indeed rendered impossible by a point of view too close to allow of a background."—Spectator, l, 81.
