"Roundabout Rambles" was so very well told a collection of stories that it was natural to suspect Mr. Stockton's heaven-born mission to be writing for children. That suspicion became a fixed belief after reading his volume for this year. It is one of the funniest, most entertaining, and otherwise best-considered little books we have seen for a long time."—Nation, xix, 335.

"The story . . . is quite amusing, not too violently extravagant, and not vulgar at all."—Nation, xxix, 30.

"The charm which lies behind the drollery of 'Rindler Grange' . . . is in its sweetness and uncoiled simplicity. It stops just short, too, of the extravagance which makes much of our tin heavy,—or would stop short if the author would only omit the last two chapters. . . . The faithfulness with which the characters are drawn gives the book a position much above that of most contemporaneous fun."—Atlantic Monthly, xxi, 417.

"The Lady, or the Tiger?" leaves a question to be answered by the reader as he pleases. . . . The case is put so well that it is impossible not to tense oneself about the solution, and not to think that whichever way one decides one must be wrong. . . . In the other stories Mr. Stockton gets fun out of everything, whether he is giving a tale of sport or adventure, or of domestic life drolly mixed up with business."—Ibid., No. 276.

"Mr. Stockton's originality consists in arranging a literary puzzle, elaborating it through a series of whimsical situations, finally solving it or not at his pleasure. . . .

Every telling situation in 'The Late Mrs. Null' is either whimsical or grotesque, so is almost every character. The secret of the beginning is soon an open one: then absurd, very like in kind, follow each other to a farcical conclusion."—Nation, xliii, 407.

"In following . . . the simious stream of pleasantly-flowing fiction we seldom come to a downright cascade of irresistible and resounding laughter. But with a gentle, if assured and unassailable absurdity, its logical and indisputable impossibility. There is nothing in the world more sweetly reasonable than the narrator's tone. By the absence of merely superficial eccentricities in the deeply eccentric persons he chooses to depict, and the lucid simplicity of style with which he reports their doings, he produces a perfect illusion."—Critic, viii, 23.

"The pieces that seem to us to be the best, as being most distinctly the poet's own, are some which express, with a reserve or vagueness of suggestion which is taking some evanescent mood of mind, or, perhaps we might better say, some moodiness of feeling. . . . They are not for all times, perhaps, any more than for all time; but now and then, when the reader's mood helps the author, they serve and will be welcome. . . . Mr. Stoddard occasionally makes a lyric which is gay with a sort of gaiety which we should guess to be not immediately his own, but his secondarily rather, and reflexively."—Nation, xlii, 341.

Stoker, Bram, M.A., business manager of Henry Irving's theatrical company. 1. Under the Sunset; with Illustrations by W. Fitzgerald and W. V. Cockburn, Lon., 1881, fp. 4to.

"Pure and beautiful are the beings with whom the Country under the Sunset is peopled, odd and humorous, too; and the tale of their loves and their deeds is in the best style of imaginative narrative, with charming little touches of nature and reference to every-day things, so that the loftiness of its meaning (which is also quite simple) shall not be too sustained a strain upon the small reader, nor his attention be fatigued or puzzled."—Spectator, liv, 140.

"Modestly disclaiming for himself all credit as an original investigator in the field of Celtic philology and antiquities, Prof. Stokes professes to be 'simply a diligent student of the results skilled inquirers have attained,' which he, in turn, would endeavour to weave into a connected and interesting narrative. . . . The chief charm of the book lies in its graphic and picturesque descriptions."—Acad., xxxi, 87.

(This is a reprint, with considerable alterations in matter and form, of the "Notes on Irish Architecture," contributed by Miss Stokes to Lord Danraven's work.)

"Penis with the architecture proper of ancient Ireland in a lucid and logical way, and clears obscurities which had been introduced by imperfectly-informed writers, who retailed as gospel the wildest and crudest fancies. . . . Miss Stokes's chapter on ecclesiastical towers, and that on the uses of these towers, are peculiarly valuable."—Ath., No. 288.

"He has crowded his stage, laid his hand upon every incident and detail that seemed characteristic, and painted a goodly picture. . . . There is no dramatic pivot, as it were, on which the action may turn and show us its diverse faces."—Nation, xxi., 315.

"There is little room for detailed criticism: there is only the general consciousness that this is the laudable work of a good and even excellent ability, though here, as it seems to us, expended on ungrateful matter, and that genius would have done it otherwise, or done something different."—Sat. Rev., xlii., 119.

3. Castle St. Angelo and the Evil Eye: being Additional Chapters to "Roba di Roma," Phila., 1877, 12mo. 4. "Throughout the whole work Dr. Stoughton exhibits great impartiality and candour, and his criticisms are distinguished by their freedom from the bias of party; but, notwithstanding, it is sufficiently apparent that, beyond the mere investigation of facts, he aims at the illustration of a principle. Consistently opposed to the connection between Church and State, he selects for special prominence whatever would seem to show the disadvantages and evils resulting from such a connection."—J. Bass MULLINGHAM, Acad., vii., 57.

"There is, of course, here much biography, often with the charm of personal reminiscence, as the author had a large acquaintance among the characters he describes, and was on terms of friendship with many of them. . . . On the whole, it may be safely said that the present book will long be the standard authority on the important subject of which it treats, and that it will be read with pleasure and instruction not only by those who may sympathize with all the views of the author, but by many who regard the history of religion from a very different stand-point."—Acad., xxvi., 318.

 "It forms the most trustworthy record which has been given to the public of the momentous administrative changes by which the old India of the Company has slowly, skilfully, and securely remodelled into the new India of the Queen. In that deliberate revolution, probably the two most powerful, and certainly the two most permic-hent, human factors have been the brothers Strachey. . . .

 In less than four hundred pages Sir John Strachey has . . .
 sketched an account at once comprehensive and exact of the India which he has seen, and of the measures in which he has played so important a part. His impressions regarding provinces and races which lay beyond his own observation are not always quite accurate, nor does he seem to have perfectly gauged the significance of certain movements and changes which have taken place since he might not be reckoned deficiently by others, and they do not interfere with the value of the great storehouse of personal experience and personal knowledge which he has thrown open to the reader."—W. W. HESTER, ibid., xxxi,

 "The most intricate problems of Indian administration are discussed in the simplest methods and language, and as the reader passes from chapter to chapter he begins to comprehend the greatness of that empire which Englishmen have won in the East, the benevolence, wisdom, and success with which it is governed, and the intimate manner in which the very existence of the United Kingdom as a leading commercial power is bound up with the peace and prosperity of India."—ibid., No. 283.

"There is a ring about this little volume which has not been heard often of late in the speech of English clergymen,—scarcely, indeed, since 'Baron Lot' was delivering his soul in 'Policies for the People' and the 'Christian Socialist,' in the crisis of the Chartist agitation thirty years ago. . . . The strength and worth of the book lie in its hopefulness, that most democratic and yet most Christian virtue; and the ground of all his hopes for the rural poor lies in association. That is his last word, as it is fast coming to be the last word of all those who can look the signs of their time squarely in the face."—Spectator, II. 1369.

entry: Edited from the MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; vols. I. and II., Lon., 1872-73, 8vo. 4. The Constitutional History of England in its Origin and Development, Oxf., 1874-78, 3 vols., 8vo; new ed., 1880.

"The work of Mr. Stubbs is the first Constitutional History of England, at once minute and continuous, which has been undertaken since a wholly new light has been thrown upon matters of this kind by the researches of the great German writers, Wailz, the two Manners, and others. . . . It shows the millenniums through which we seem to have lived in point of historical insight within a very few generations, if we compare the fulness, the scientific precision, the wide comparative grasp, of the opening chapters of Mr. Stubbs's History with the childish talk of Blackstone or even with the meagreness of Hallam. . . . The book is, in short, a masterpiece. . . . It is fruitful of all the knowledge on the subject scientifically treated and orderly arranged."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii. 211.

"The central and dominant idea of the book may be said to be that English constitutional history is the history of an evolution, and an evolution mainly from Teutonic elements. . . . Neither in blood nor in institution does Mr. Stubbs trace anything English either to British or to Roman sources. . . . His dominant idea on this point leads Mr. Stubbs to undertake, we think, a somewhat unnecessary, and, for example, to attach scarcely sufficient importance to the part of the church or the clergy in shaping the English polity and institutions during the centuries between the introduction of Christianity and the Norman Conquest."—Ath., No. 2422.

"Though his subject formally ends before the beginning of the sixteenth century, yet he gives us incidental sketches both of the sixteenth century and of the seventeenth. He has an estimate both of the Tudor and of the Stuart reigns; and the hand which has painted the early Angevins in full has drawn life-like miniatures of Charles the First and of the later Cromwell. In these short sketches Mr. Stubbs shows the same keen insight and amazing impartiality which he shows everywhere. He contrives to be the partisan, he certainly can be the spokesman, of all sides at once. So fit is with institutions. He thoroughly sees that there is no fitly set list of institutions, but that any form of government which deserves the name may be best or worst, according to the diversities of countries, times, and men's manners. . . . As it now stands, Mr. Stubbs's Constitutional History, even if it stood by itself, without the other great, though less systematic, writings which have come from the same pen, would be the worthy work of a life."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 602, 730.

"Mr. Stubbs might certainly have done more to dissipate some prevalent delusions. Unfortunately, as I cannot help thinking, he has not quite succeeded in even emancipating his own mind from them. But what he has done is invaluable. He is at least thoroughly surveyed the whole ground. There is absolutely nothing material to the subject that he has not investigated, and investigated with perfect candour. Whatever may be said of his generalizations, his facts are perfectly trustworthy, and even one who differs from his point of view may really be content to rest the whole controversy on statements made by himself. There is no fear, certainly, that the work will be superseded for many a long day—if, indeed, it ever can be superseded—as a perfect magazine of facts relating to constitutional history in the Middle Ages."—JAMES GARDNER: Acad., xlii. 291.

History together with an Account of the Growth and Reception of the Sermon on the Faith, commonly called "The Creed of St. Athanasius." Lon., 1875, 8vo.

"The work of Canon Swainson must take a high place in the department of literature to which it belongs. It will be considered the book on the Athanasian Creed,—breathing a fair and catholic spirit, evidencing patient and long-continued study, it commends itself to the student and the dissentor, to the ecclesiastical historian and the theologian, as a compendium of facts and documents, a well-written text-book with which they cannot dispense."—ibid., No. 2189.

Sweets, William, 1823-1884, b. at Hensiker, N. H.; is throughout fine, and it need hardly be said that many passages are striking and in every way worthy of their author; but they are, on the whole, outweighed by the mass of mere talk, which is indeed framed in words that are fine in the best sense, but which nevertheless have the defective quality of character and action is concerned."—Sat. Rev., III, 702.

17. Tristram of Lyonesse, and other Poems, Lon., 1882, p. 8vo.

"This is the most varied and important volume of verse that Mr. Swinburne has yet published, and in all probability it will be the most popular. Wider in its appeal than any previous book of his,—more romantic, too, and more interesting, it yet retains the rhythmical power and prophetic passion which have hitherto been the most noticeable characteristics of his work."—Ath., No. 2836.

"Tristram of Lyonesse is full of genius,—too full of passion, because the passion is not the higher imaginative passion, but an imaginative expression of the lowest, physical passion,—but in its elements confused and sadly wanting in clearness of outline. There are glorious flashes of sunlight in it, but not unfrequently, for pages together, the words, fine as they are, are more like the lavish spray of a waterfall flashing in the sunlight or glimmering in the shade, than the interceptors to the mind of any definite and specific meaning."—Spectator, IV, 1055.

18. A Century of Roundels, Lon., 1883, 4to.

"The restraint imposed on him by the vehicle he has chosen is obvious in an advance in the respect. His great faults, diffuseness of expression and looseness of thought, are here held in check by the chains to which he has subjected himself; on the other hand, his greatest merits, his rush of emotion and verbal movement, cannot find vent here."—Ath., No. 2803.

19. A Midsummer Holiday, and other Poems, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.

"Altogether, this volume shows a vigour of hand, a brilliant mastery over artistic means towards artistic ends, such as Mr. Swinburne has never surpassed and rarely equaled."—Ath., No. 2978.

20. Marino Faliero: a Tragedy, Lon., 1885, p. 8vo.

"Though neither Mr. Swinburne nor any one else could make such a motive as that of Marino Faliero's revenge strong enough to support a five-act play,—especially a play full of such magnificent writing as Mr. Swinburne was sure to put into it,—he has, by the importation of other issues,—love and patriotism,—produced a tragedy of a noble and, in many respects, of a unique kind."—Ath., No. 3007.

21. Miscellanies, Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"Of the judicial faculty—which is, in other words, the faculty of seeing things as they are, despite any temptation to see them as they are not—Mr. Swinburne has not even a trace. . . . When, . . . his enthusiastic love of literature has free play. . . . then, and very often, he writes admirable sense, and puts it in language which is more than admirable."—Sat. Rev., XIII, 100.

22. A Study of Victor Hugo, Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"Not for a moment does Mr. Swinburne hesitate or quail to place the object of his adoration alongside the very greatest names in the literature of the world. . . . Apart altogether from the critic's own comments, the facts of Hugo's literary life are focussed with so much knowledge and so much skill, the selections from Hugo's poetry are so admirably made, . . . that to the French as well as to the English student the book is quite indispensable."—Ath., No. 3046.

23. Loerine: a Tragedy, Lon., 1887, p. 8vo.

"That under such artistic restrictions as he has chosen for himself, Mr. Swinburne should have produced a poem so full of dramatic life as Loerine is really wonderful. Gwendolen is one of the strongest characters in nineteenth-century drama. In her we get not so much love turned to hate as love at war with hate,—a much more subtle conception. Loerine, too, is a living man, and Loerine is exceedingly winsome. Altogether the book must add to Mr. Swinburne's reputation. Of beauties of a purely poetic kind the play is more full than anything Mr. Swinburne has before given the public in dramatic form."—Ath., No. 3139.

21. Selections from his Poetical Works, Lon., 1887, 12mo. (Selections understood to have been made by the author.)

GENERAL CRITICISM:

"The high claims of his political and philosophical poetry rest upon the swing and rush of versification, the vigour and vehemence of diction, the grand musical effect, the clinging and chiming like some great cataract, far more than upon the reiteration of a few unfruitful and unoriginal ideas."—J. GARNETT: art. Literature, in The Reign of Queen Victoria, II, 187.

"No one of his faults happens to be of those which are fatal to a great poet; and all his merits are those which are to a great poet necessary. Above all, he has the one thing needful,—he sings."—GEORGE SAINTSBURY: Acad., XII, 25.

"Before the advent of Swinburne we did not realize the full scope of English verse. In his hands it is like the violin of Paganini. The range of his fantasias, rondels, arias, new effects of measure and sound is incomparable with anything hitherto known."—E. C. STEEDMAN: Victorian Poets, 380.

"No living English poet is in certain ways more brilliant or powerful than Mr. Swinburne, and it would be difficult to name any who is so unequal to himself. . . . He plays on the English language as a musical instrument, and is never weary of producing new studies and variations of its tones. Many of his slighter pieces must be regarded purely as such studies. . . . It would be perverse to demand a serious meaning in them."—Sat. Rev., XLIV, 85.

"His nature is essentially yielding and receptive, with stormy gusts of passion and indiscriminating impulses of emotion. There is no strong masculine formative quality about him, which explains why he uses so many adjectives and suggests so few thoughts. . . . The total impression left on us by Swinburne's prose is the same as that of his verse. Brilliantly gifted, profusely voluble, passionately rhetorical, it puts before us too often phrases instead of thoughts, verbal contentions instead of conceptions. . . . Mr. Swinburne is, however artistic, yet not an artist, and however cultured, yet still an amateur: for he is not creative, not original in the best and largest sense of the word, because not instinct with illuminating ideas."—*W. "It is, unfortunately, deficient in the clear judgment and logical analysis which the subjects discussed require for their proper elucidation. Yet readers of very different tastes may find the work interesting and instructive. The naturalist will appreciate the close observation of insect life displayed by the writer, and will find the large assemblage of facts which he has industriously brought together of considerable value; while to the less scientific the picturesque descriptions of scenery and insect life, the wealth of literary quotation and allusion, the eccentric style and the enigmatical philosophy, will have a greater attraction."—*ALFRED R. "Recollections of a Commissary" would be a more suitable title. . . . The book throws valuable side-lights upon some important questions of history."—Nation, xlviii, 198.

Symonds, John Addington, M.D., F.R.C.P., [ante, vol. ii, add.] 1807-1871, b. at Aston, Oxfordshire, and educated at Edinburgh; practised medicine at Bristol, where he was physician to the hospital. In 1851 he removed to Clifton. Miscellanies: Selected and Edited, with an Introductory Memoir, by his Son, Lon. and Bristol, 1871, 8vo. Also, single lectures.

Symonds, John Addington, son of the preceding, b. 1840, at Bristol, Eng.; was educated at Harrow School, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained the Newdegate prize and a first class in Classics in 1862 and was elected to a Fellowship at Magdalen College. He has for many years been obliged on account of ill health to reside at Davos-Platz in Switzerland. 1. An Introduction to the Study of Dante, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo.

"It is rather a series of criticisms on Dante than an introduction to his poems."—Ath., No. 2533.

2. Studies of the Greek Poets, Lon., 1873-76, 2 vols. P. 8vo.

"They popularize the results of scholarship with great ability. They are neither very profound nor flimsily superficial. They hit the right level of pleasurable reading; and, while they demand an educated mind for their full appreciation, they speak much which will inform and interest those who know merely the broader faces of ancient history and a few of the greater literary names. . . . It would not be difficult to cite a good many passages in which we feel carried off our legs by the risk of prophetic imagery; but this is readily condoned by a reader of any generosity, as a result perhaps inseparable from the enthusiasm for his subject without which the book would lose all its fascination and much of its solid value."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi, 379.

"While we have careful and scholarly analyses of the books and their contents, Mr. Symonds never forgets to show us how these contents are fitted up and made really and completely intelligible only in so far as we enter into the mental and social conditions of the writers and of their original readers, and verify thereby the thoughts and feelings which they have still power to edify forth in themselves."—Spectator, xlix, 984.

3. Sketches in Italy and Greece, Lon., 1874, p. 8vo.

"Sketches is perhaps scarcely the right word for pictures of travel so careful in composition, so finished and elaborate, as these by Mr. Symonds. . . . He brings before the reader the very secret of the charm of Perugia or Grentini; he grasps and expresses the personality, as it were, of Ravenna or of Orvieto; he conveys the sentiment of Syracuse or Athens. . . . Sometimes we may think that the colour and beauty of mere words becomes a temptation to him, that his style has a southern fragrance as heavy as that of the lemons, lemons, and a glitter in Asiatic taste."—A. LANG; Acad., v, 505.

4. Renaissance in Italy: the Age of the Despots, Lon., 1875, 8vo; 2d ed., 1880.

"The present volume. . . is historical, and shows us the political and social conditions in and out of which Italy and then the rest of Europe awoke to new life. Yet it is not. . . a history proper, but rather a light by which to read all Italian histories."—Spectator, xlviii, 353.

5. Renaissance in Italy: the Revival of Learning, Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"He has waded through amazing expanses of the dustiest, the driest, the most tedious literature, . . . and has compressed the result of his search into a goodly, but still a handy, volume. . . . Excellent as it is by itself as an addition to general culture, the volume will probably gain when read in its proper place, in connection with the author's works on Italian art and Italian literature."—Sat. Rev., xliii, 584.

6. Renaissance in Italy: the Fine Arts, Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"He tells us that he 'does not pretend to retrieve the history of the Italian arts, but rather to define their relations to the main movement of Renaissance culture.' In this how much there is not to say would appear to be much less seen. . . . The most rigid critic must pronounce the book a good and useful one, containing not only much sound criticism, but a general view of literature which is very well worth viewing, and which few readers are likely to . . . His descriptions show quick perceptions, and kindle into eloquence under a diction which sometimes has less of the sobriety of the historian than of the ardour of the rhapsodist."—Sat. Rev., xlv, 181.

"To the subjects which he treats in this volume Mr. Symonds brings an insight both intelligent and sympathetic; in expression he is copious and facile; but the exact and final phrase, I think, he does not often hit."—Sixty Years; Acad., xii, 122.

7. Renaissance in Italy: Italian Literature. In Two Parts, Lon., 1881, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The two volumes give the completest account of the subject yet published in English; and they include, besides what belongs strictly to the period of the Renaissance, introductory chapters of great interest, tracing the earlier growth of the Italian language and literature. Of the whole series they form probably the most practically useful part."—Sat. Rev., lli, 236.

8. Renaissance in Italy: the Catholic Reaction, Lon., 1886, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Symonds's two volumes form a very necessary supplement to his history of the Renaissance. . . . It is perhaps to be regretted that the author has not cast it more in the form of a regular history, instead of a series of essays. . . . As it stands, it is calculated rather to stimulate than to satisfy the serious student of the Renaissance. . . . Must certainly rank among the considerable literary monuments of our time. It is learned, a thoughtful, and a brilliant book. The author knows a great deal about his subject, weighs carefully what he has to say regarding it, and expresses himself with precision and strength, and often with eloquence. . . . Mr. Symonds is not dogmatic or programmatic, but he is confident in his own views; and as these are founded upon extensive and minute studies, his confidence is in the main a benefit to the reader, who is thus furnished with distinct results rather than suggestions, suppositions, or notions still in process of formation."—Ath., No. 2811.

9. The Sonnets of Michael Angelo Buonarroti and Tommaso Campanella, now for the First Time Translated into Rhymed English, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

"The translator has made a real, a definite, and I think, an enduring addition to the spiritual wealth of English readers."—E. DOWDEN; Acad., xviii, 247.

10. Many Meeds: a Volume of Verse, Lon., 1878, P. 8vo.

"As a descriptive poet Mr. Symonds cannot take a high rank, but as a poet of emotion and speculation, and a finished sonneteer, he can certainly hold his own."—Ath., No. 2644.

"He tells us modestly in his preface that he does not claim 'the sacred name of a poet,' but this volume assuredly entitles him to a place, and to a place of distinction, among living poets."—Spectator, li, 1185.

11. Shelley, ("English Men of Letters,") Lon., 1878, P. 8vo.

"It is written with knowledge, grace, and tact."—Ath., No. 2562.

"Mr. Symonds is a refined and enthusiastic writer, and enters into the transcendent beauties of Shelley's genius with an ardent and a thoughtful admiration. But he takes no intelligible standard with him by which to try Shelley's curiously tainted nobility of nature."—Spectator, li, 1101.

12. Sketches and Studies in Italy, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo.

"Consists in part of sketches of Italian life and landscape, in part of critical studies, written perhaps in Italy, and dealing with Italian or old Roman topics. . . . Where it answers to the first part of its title. . . it is thoroughly good. The 'Studies' are of less equal value."—Sat. Rev., xlvii, 624.

13. New and Old: a Volume of Verse, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"To some extent the poetry of Mr. Symonds evinces the self-reliant boldness which is one element of originality, yet his best efforts are so far less stirring than those which belong to verse of mere taste and sentiment that it may be doubted whether the former will make their due impression."—Ath., No. 2672.

14. Animi Figura, Lon., 1882, 12mo.

"This interesting volume is made up of a series of somewhat-sequence, each sequence being the soul's dialogue with itself concerning some problem or mystery of life, or some special experience of the lover of beauty who is at the same time a lover of truth."—E. DOWDEN; Acad., xxii, 3.

15. Italian Byways, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"Though the author's account of what he has seen, and of the associations which it awakes in his mind, is given in language too exuberant for the taste of persons brought up on plain English, the intelligence and learning of the book, as of all Mr. Symonds's, must give it considerable value."—Sat. Rev., lvi, 52.

16. Shakespeare's Predecessors in the English Drama, Lon., 1884, 8vo.

"Goes down only to the death of Marlowe. . . . He is always conscious that there is a great deal to say, and lamely anxious to say it well; but his consciousness of how much there is not to say would appear to be much less seen. . . . The most rigid critic must pronounce the book a good and useful one, containing not only much sound criticism, but a general view of literature which is very well worth viewing, and which few readers are likely to have the opportunity of examining at first hand."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 481.

17. Wine, Woman, and Song: Medieval Songs in English Verse, Lon., 1884, 12mo.

"The title of the book might lead the hasty bibliographer to treat it as a frivolous performance with no particular purpose; but it is, in fact, a serious contribution to literary history in the shape of an admirably written critical essay on the Latin songs of twelfth-century students, freely interspersed with spirited English translations."—Ath., No. 2941.

18. Vagabundi Libellus, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo.

"Even those who appreciate the sonnet most highly may well feel disheartened, and almost appalled, when they open a volume of over 200 pages which has a sonnet on every page. . . . Many of Mr. Symonds's sonnets lack only one thing, but it happens to be the one thing needful,—an interesting and sufficing theme."—Spectator, lviii. 292.

19. Sir Philip Sidney, ("English Men of Letters,") Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"There are plenty of readers who will doubtless be fascinated by Mr. Symonds's well-written narrative, which richly treats Sidney as something more than a man of letters, and the critical expositions of Sidney's writings will certainly be of service to those who do not possess Sidney's books. But the biography is little more than a résumé of Mr. Fox Bourne's well-known work."—Ath., No. 3069.

20. Ben Jonson, ("English Worthies,") Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"It is a work that the student of to-day cannot so safely neglect as he may the writings which it lauds and analyzes so well."—Spectator, lx. 770.

Taylor, Bayard, [ante, vol. iii, add.] 1825-1878.

(He was named after James A. Bayard, and sometimes used the signature "J. Bayard Taylor" in early life, which led to the erroneous form in which his name appeared on the title-page of his first book.) His life continued to be one of alternate travel, lecturing, and newspaper work in the office of the New York Tribune until he was appointed U.S. minister to Germany, less than a year before his death. He had been long collecting materials for a Life of Goethe, but the composition of the work was never begun. For biog., see TAYLOR, MARIE HANSEN, and SEVEND, HONAC E., infra. 1. Faust: a Tragedy. By Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. Translated in the Original Metres. Bost., 1870-71, 2 vols. 4to; Lon., 1871, 2 vols. p. 8vo; Leipzig, 1871-76, 2 vols.; later editions in America, 2 vols. 12mo.

"Fully to appreciate the success with which he has triumphed over many of the difficulties in rhythm and sense which a poem like 'Faust' presents to a translator, one must make a careful comparison of his translation with previous efforts. . . . We find for the most part in the language selected a delicacy of ear and a justness of perception which leave little to be desired. . . . Altogether we think it can be safely maintained that the rich and varied music of 'Faust' has never before been so faithfully represented to English ears. In single passages we should still prefer the utterances of some of Mr. Taylor's models; but for general high average of excellence we think his work will have many advantages over its competitors."—Sat. Rev., xxxii, 371. (Notice of the First Part.)

"To our mind he had a better success than any metrical professor of his who has attempted the 'Faust' as a whole. With Hayward's prose translation for the sense, and Mr. Taylor's for the metres, and for collateral light on numerous passages, the reader who knows no German may get as good an idea of the poem as is perhaps possible."—Nation, xii, 201.

3. The Masque of the Gods, Bost., 1872, 16mo.

"The Masque of the Gods" is not exactly inspired,—it is no cup of new wine from fresh-pressed grapes; but it is a poem to read more than once, and a poem for which, in these days of Mr. Tupper and others, we ought to be grateful."—Ath., No. 2327.

7. School History of Germany to 1871. Illust. N. York, 1874, 12mo. 8. Egypt and Iceland in the Year 1871, N. York, 1874, 12mo.

"This might be called Iceland visited and Egypt re-visited, for two distant countries are brought together in one book, because they formed the scene of Mr. Taylor's travels in one year. . . . The individuality which the writer possesses gives an interest to many of his descriptions of scenes familiar enough."—Ath., No. 2464.

9. The Prophet: a Tragedy, Bost., 1874, 16mo.

"He has written the tragedy of Mormonism, and taken Joe Smith and Brigham Young for his heroes. . . . He has changed the names of his personages, elaborated his plot, left certain details gracefully vague, and, for the most part, steered clear of local color. But his desire has been to adhere to reality as much as was practically convenient, and to enjoy whatever benefit there might be in leaving to his drama the savor of the soil. . . . It is impossible to deny that 'The Prophet' does not lack hold of the imagination. It is the reverse of vulgar in conception, it is careful in execution, it has a dozen commendable qualities. . . . But it wants style, it lacks heat, it misses the nameless something which Sir Joshua Reynolds, in the anecdote, indicated by a snap of his fingers."—North American Review, (Henry James), cxx, 188.

"An allegoric sketch of the spiritual history of mankind from the time when the pagan was passing into the Christian age. . . . In attempting thus to write of the highest spiritual result in the past and the highest spiritual hope of the future, Mr. Taylor has won the success which a man of talent could obtain by a vigorous tout de force."—Nat'm., xxvii, 327.

Taylor, Miss Elizabeth. 1. Blindpits: a Novel, Edin., 1868, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Anon.

"Decidedly 'Blindpits' is not a commonplace novel. Not only does its writer exhibit delicacy as well as power, but the story is characterized by tenderness and pathos, and enlivened by the perhaps rarer quality of humour."—Sat. Rev., xxvi. 607.

2. Quixstar: a Novel. By the Author of "Blindpits." Lon., 1873, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"The author has the same faculty which Mrs. Oliphant possesses of making a small circle engrossingly interesting, so that one does not mind the narrowness and the dullness of the horizon, but she does not resemble any other writer in her peculiar form of humour, or the neatness with which she puts a situation or a problem."—Spectator, xvi. 188.

"The excellent volume, 'Madelra: Its Climate and Scenery,' by (the late) Robert White and (the living) James Y. Johnson, has long been out of print. . . . It has been proposed, I am told, more than once to reprint it, with information brought up to date. This has virtually been done by Miss Taylor, who, belonging to a family well known in Madelra, and not unknown in England, has had a life-long acquaintance with the beautiful island she describes."—*R. "As a record, not without pathos, and, when regarded by modern eyes, a tinge of quaintness, of a lengthened, chequered, and industrious career, this book may well deserve, notwithstanding its length, a considerable share of the attention of those who, basking in the autumn sun of their lives, may care to take a sad but intensely real pleasure in reviewing portions of their own probably parallel careers in life."—Ibid., No. 2288.

Taylor, Sir Henry, K.C.M.G., D.C.L., [ante, vol. iii., add.] 1800-1886, b. at Bishop Middleham, Durham, Eng.; settled in London in 1823, and was for forty-eight years a clerk in the Colonial Office, declining in 1817 the post of permanent under-secretary, and retiring in 1872. In 1860 he was made a knight commander of the order of St. Michael and St. George for his distinguished services to the state and to literature. A collected edition of his works was published in 1878, 5 vols. 8vo. Add: 1. Autobiography of Henry Taylor, 1809-1878. Lon., 1885, 2 vols. 8vo. (Previously printed for private circulation, 1874-77.)

"There can be little doubt that Sir Henry Taylor's volumes will take a permanent place among similar contributions to a most interesting department of literature. They possess all the qualities which should entitle such a work to claim a lasting reputation."—Sat. Rev., lix. 478.

"It presents a series of studies in character drawn from the most eminent men and women of the last sixty years, the most stirring and cosmopolitan half of his contemporaries are not hastily thrown off; though sometimes achieved in comparatively few lines, they are the result of careful and exact observation."—E. HOWDEN: Acad., xxvii. 297.

"The more stirring and cosmopolitan half of Sir Henry Taylor's career is dealt with in the first of his two volumes, which is, on that account, far more interesting than the second."—Ibid., No. 2907.

2. Correspondence of Henry Taylor. Edited by Edward Dowden. Lon., 1888, 8vo.

"About two-thirds of the letters are from Taylor's own pen, and of the remainder about half were written by such friends of the inner circle as Miss Fenwick, Sir James Stephen, James Spedding, and Mr. Aubrey de Vere. The roll includes, besides, many of widely various pursuits, such as Mr. Gladstone, Earl Grey, the Poet-Laureate, Mr. Swinburne, and Mr. Venables among the living; and of the departed, Mrs. Austin, Mrs. Norton, Wordsworth, and Macaulay. Taylor's own letters are addressed to a still longer list of friends, and, while they do not exhibit him in any conspicuously new phase, they deepen the impression produced by the 'Autobiography,' and serve not a little to illustrate his character, tastes, and limitations, and their limitations; especially, perhaps, their powers."—Ibid., No. 3155.

Taylor, Rev. Isaac. Litt. D., LL.D., [ante, vol. iii., add.] b. 1829, at Stamford Rivers, Eng.; son of Isaac Taylor, LL.D., (q. v., ante, vol. iii.); graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1853; ordained 1857; vicar of St. Matthias, Bethnal Green, 1855-69, and of Holy Trinity, Twickenham, 1869-75; since then rector of Settrington, Yorkshire; canon and prebendary of York Cathedral since 1855. The following list of his publications includes the only one mentioned ante, vol. iii.; 1. (Ed.) Charles: Illustrations of the Private Life of the Ancient Greeks. By W. A. Becker. Lon., 1854, 8vo. 2.

5. The Burden of the Poor: a Slight Sketch of a Poor District in the East End of London. Lon., 1867.

6. Etruscan Researches. Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"Mr. Taylor believes that Etruscan is a member of that Ahtic (or, as he calls it, Ugric) class of Turanian which includes and Siberia, of the Turks and their kinsmen of Central Asia, of the Hungarians, and others. . . . The strongest argument is that drawn from the tomb-building. . . . We do not think Mr. Taylor's linguistic evidence at present strong enough to confirm it. . . . If Corssen's philological evidence for an Italian origin will stand examination, the Etruscan hypothesis must fall. But it is too much possible that no satisfactory linguistic proof will ever be drawn from such unsatisfactory materials."—Ibid., No. 4228.

"From first to last its interest never declines; and the reader, as he closes the book will feel that, even if Mr. Taylor's conclusions cannot in every instance be sustained, the conditions of the controversy have at the least been materially changed."—Sat. Rev., xxxviii. 416.

"As both the Semitic and Aryan keys have failed, he has tried a Turanian key. He has certainly turned his key once or twice, but the lock is not opened, and the reason why the key turned round at all was simply because it is very smooth and small and has very few wards. . . . Mr. Taylor, before attempting a task that has baffled the best scholars, has not even made himself acquainted with the simplest rules of Comparative Philology."—MAX MÜLLER: Acad., v. 372, 403.

See letter from Dr. Taylor in reply to this article, in Acad., v. 431.

"Mr. Taylor has fallen over and over again, into the strange mistake of citing as Turkish (Turanian) words which are really either Arabic (Semitic) or Persian (Iranian). Every Orientalist knows that the Turkish of Constantinople is a composite language, like Hindustani, and that it has adopted a host of Arabic and Persian vocabularies of all kinds. Hence those who are not familiar with these other tongues mix Turkish vocabularies for philological purposes with great caution. How far Mr. Taylor's arguments are affected by this pervading error, it is easy to see."—WILLIAM WHIGHT: Ibid., No. 2422.

See, also, the letter of Richard F. B. Hoyle in the same number of the Athenaeum; that of Hyde Clarke in No. 2423; that of Lord Crawford and Balcanes in No. 2424; the reply to all these of Mr. Taylor in No. 2427; the rejoinder of Lord Crawford in No. 2430, and of Capt. Burton and Mr. Clarke in No. 2431, (Capt. Burton writes, "I hold the Mongoloid theory to be the book's one (ethnological) virtue, linked with a thousand (anthropological and linguistic) crimes;") the sur-rejoinder of Mr. Taylor, and a fresh attack on him by James S. Reid, in No. 2432; a letter in No. 2434 from S. Birch, (who writes, "Without disparaging the researches of Lord Crawford and Mr. Taylor, it may be premised that they have treated the subject as comparative philologists, and not approached it as archaeologists or decipherers. The two persons most eminently qualified for this task, the late Mr. Edwin Norris and Dr. Hincks, are no more;") another letter from Mr. Taylor in No. 2436; a final note from Capt. Burton in No. 2438; and a letter from Mr. Taylor on Prof. Corssen's interpretation of the Etruscan epitaphs in No. 2495. 7. Greeks and Goths: a Study on the Runes. Lon., 1870, 8vo.

"His purpose is to show that the runic alphabets . . . must be traced to the alphabets of the Greek of the Egean Sea in the sixth and seventh centuries before the Christian era. . . . It must, we think, be allowed that the evidence, so far as it goes, is most cogent."—Sat. Rev., xlviii. 470.

"In no case does he critically refute any of the arguments of Dr. Wimmer, but he condemns them all most cavalierly. . . . On the whole, therefore, the question of the origin of the Runes remains where it was. The valuable portion of the book is the discourse on the Oghams."—Ibid., No. 2630.

"Dr. Taylor has spared no pains to make his work as thorough as possible. He has devoted many years to its composition, and has consulted innumerable monographs by specialists in every department of palaeography, though he uses a few eminent names and cardinal works. He has had the advice and assistance of such scholars as Friedrich Müller, Euting, Burnell, Lenormant, and Stal-lebraus, and especially of Professor Sayce, whose palae-

"Canon Taylor went to Egypt to see how good the Egyptians were, and behold they were very good. The Egyptians would really imagine in reading these enthusiastic pages that the writer had rediscovered the available "Ptolemaic or had scornfully among the countless Ethiopians. . .
His liberal views deserve consideration and will do good."

[ante, vol. iii, TAYLOR, COL. MEADOWS, ad.] 1808-1876, b. in Liverpool, Eng.; went to India in 1824, and became an officer in the military service of the Nizam, but was afterwards transferred to civil duty, and in 1850 appointed administrator, during the minority of the Nizam, of the principality of Shornore, which he governed with entire success during the difficult period of the Mutiny. He was afterwards appointed by the 1421

British government deputy commissioner of the western ceded districts of the Deccan. He retired in 1866. 1. Scota, Lon., 1873, 3 vols., p. 8vo.

"Though harmonizing with its predecessors, it is far more complex, a higher flight of imagination, a more romantic study, and a more impressive comparison of history to the novelist's purposes, because the history [that of the Mutiny] so compelled is near, solemn, and suggestive to us all."—Spectator, xlv, 441.

2. The Story of my Life. Edited by his Daughter, Edin. and Lon., 1877, 2 vols.; new ed., 1878, 1 vol., p. 8vo.

"If anybody wants to know the arts by which a European can obtain ascendancy over the native mind, let him study this autobiography and be informed."—Spectator, l, 152.

"The leading facts of Colonel Taylor's life may be condensed into a small space. How these simple materials can be turned into an attractive biography, the interest of which does not flag for two volumes, it may not be very easy for a critic to show. One reason, perhaps, is that clear, manly, and simple style in which the author tells the story of his life. Another may be found in the intimate familiarity with native manners, the generally sound estimate of native character, and the proofs of a legitimate and kindly ascendancy over alien and alien races, which every page attests. In fact, there are some touches which remind us of the chivalry of Outram, and others which suggest the generosity and benevolence of Henry Lawrence. . . . Other men in the Indian services have written or edited readable books; others, who have never taken pen in hand, except to initiate an official report, have civilized great kingdoms; but very few have exhibited the same combination of literary and military talent, and serious duty, except in the earliest days of the Company, has, from such slender beginnings, made for himself a more enduring and honourable name."—Sat. Rev., xlv, 775.

3. A Noble Queen: a Romance of the Eastern Mutiny, Lon., 1878, 3 vols., p. 8vo; new ed., 1881, 1 vol.

"The late Colonel Meadows Taylor had one surpassing gift as a writer of Indian romances. His intense sympathy with the people enables him to place their lives before the English reader in a familiar, human way that does more to dispel the common ignorance and arrogant assumption regarding the natives of India than all the formal histories that ever were written."—Spectator, li, 501.

"It is the great merit of his works that though they all convey instruction of no little educational value and a moral of incalculable importance, neither instruction nor moral is permitted to overlay the interest of the story."—Ath., No. 2360.

"It merely aims at gathering up from divers sources and authorities what is known of past labour organizations, and tracing their influence upon the present."—Acad., xxx, 252.

"The importance of the book is largely as a contribution towards the solution of the great problems of the day."—Nation, xlv, 85.

Taylor, Richard, 1826-1879, only son of President Zachary Taylor, b. at New Orleans; graduated at Yale 1845; served in the Confederate army during the civil war, attaining the rank of lieutenant-general. Destruction and Reconstruction: Personal Experiences of the Late War, N. York, 1879, 8vo.

"This book is both useful and mischievous: useful, because every such contribution to the history of the time by an actor in it will be of more or less help in reaching just conclusions; and mischievous, because the writer has used to the utmost his influence with the people of the Southern States to teach contempt for popular government, worship for aristocracy, whether of rank or wealth, false notions of Northern society, dislike for all occupations except 'planting,' and a general belief that the triumph of the Government in the late war was the ruin of civilization on the continent. . . . His sketches of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, Stonewall Jackson, and of several subordinate officers of different grades are discriminating, and seem to catch the salient outlines of character in a way to give liveliness and vitality to the picture."—Nation, xxviii, 287.

"This volume is a handsome and generous tribute to a memory not unworthy of it. It will tend to rescue from an unmerited martyrdom of ridicule and obloquy a man of strong and cultivated piety, of pure and blameless morals, of acute and grave mind, of jealous and delicate humour, a man of many faults, of violent and angry passions, implacable and resentful, degraded in performance by the work he had to do, but doing that work and meeting the dangers of it with manly fortitude and philosophy."—Acad., xxvii. 73.

2. Gareth and Lynette, [and The Last Tournament], Lon., 1872, 12mo.
 "The regret which may be justly felt at Mr. Tennyson's temporary abandonment of the metrical forms which delight the students of his earlier poems is faintly tempered by the inclusion in each of the lyrics of one short and finished lyric."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv, 368.

 "The fashion in which Mr. Tennyson has wrought the legends into a form suited to his purpose is a masterpiece of ingenuity. To attain a success of this kind is within the range of powers much less than his. There is, however, a way of doing commonplace work which elevates it into art."—ibid., No. 2348.
 4. Queen Mary in a Drama, 1875-77, 12mo.
 "Despite the many beauties which could hardly be absent in any work of Mr. Tennyson, the whole effect of "Queen Mary" is disappointing, and the depression which it leaves upon the reader's mind is one of a dreary and bitter harshness."—Sat. Rev., xl, 19.

 "The poet has again fallen into what must be called the mistake of confounding the dramatic expression of tragic emotion with the mere relation of gloomy events."—Sat. Rev., xliii, 21.
 6. The Lover's Tale, 1879, 12mo. (Written about 1828, and printed in 1833, but withdrawn from the press; subsequently "pirated" from imperfect proofs, and now published, with a third part, not previously printed, and a fourth, which had been published in 1869 under the title of "The Golden Sapper.")
 "The whole tone of the poem is pitched in that high key which the Elizabethan dramatists loved to select for their queens and tragedy-lovers. There is a fine extravagance and excess whose fading is the first sign to us that we are no longer young."—E. W. TISSOT; Acad., xv, 489.
 7. Ballads and other Poems, 1880, 12mo. (Includes "Rizpah," "The Northern Collier," "The Defence of Lucknow," "The Voyage of Melchidee," &c.)
 "The realistic element which gives so much of its force to Mr. Tennyson's genius is better represented in this little volume than the idealism which has hitherto been at least as powerful and at least as large a constituent of his greatest work."—Spectator, liii, 162.
 "In one of the poems of this volume Mr. Tennyson has, in our judgment, attained his highest reach as a poet dealing with the large issues of human life. It is called "Rizpah," and although the heroine is an English peasant of the last century whose son had been gibbeted, the motif is identical with that of the beautiful Bible story. . . . It is impossible to read it without, as the poem goes on, being overwhelmed by a pity that is almost intolerable for the heroine of the poem. Having read it, it is impossible to regard it without a feeling of reverence for the great poet whose genius and deep heart called her into dramatic life."—ibid., No. 2771.
 8. The Cup and The Falcon, Lon., 1884, 12mo. (Two short dramas, which were acted, the first in 1881, and the second in 1882.)
 "Despite several admirable passages of splendid rhetoric and glowing declamation, both "The Cup" and "The Falcon" are strangely deficient in vitality, in actuality, and in animation. It is unnecessary to add that they contain much poetic beauty, an exquisite felicity of language, and striking imagery."—Sat. Rev., lviii, 351.
 9. Decket, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.
 "Though "Decket" falls of the aim which its author would reach, it is a work which will sustain his fame as a writer of pure and nervous English, as a fine thinker, with a grand perception of what is noblest in character."—Sat. Rev., lviii, 757.
 10. Tiresias, and other Poems, Lon., 1885, 12mo.
 "One-half of "Tiresias" is new; the other half was written, we believe, just fifty years ago. . . . Altogether the volume is laden with every kind of poetic wealth; but when it is considered that, with the exception of "The Dead Prophet" (written some twelve years ago,) "Harold All Bound," and one-half of "Tiresias," these poems were composed during the last two or three years by a poet considerably over seventy years of age, it becomes a marvel of literature."—ibid., No. 2825.
 11. Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, and The Promise of May, Lon., 1886, 12mo. ("The Promise of May" was acted in 1882.)
 "The Locksley Hall of to-day is not inferior in workmanship to the poem of forty years ago. There is the same ringing rhythm, the same strength and swing, the same ease and variety, that delighted our fathers."—ibid., xxxi, 1.
 12. Demeter, and other Poems, Lon., 1800, 12mo. Of collective editions, later than those mentioned ante, vol. iii., the most complete are one in 8 vols. er. 8vo, 1888, and another in 1 vol. er. 8vo, 1890. An edition of his songs set to music by various composers, edited by W. G. Casins, was published in London, 1880, 4to.

GENERAL CRITICISM:

"Despite superficial appearances to the contrary, Mr. Tennyson has more real variety of mood than any of his contemporaries, English or foreign. It is astonishing that the man who wrote the Morte d'Arthur and Ulysses wrote also The Northern Farmer, and that he wrote The Lotus-Eaters, and again such a lyric as Tears, Idle Tears. Who could have believed before the publication of The Northern Farmer that the poet of Locksley Hall, as he once used to be called, was all the while one of the first humourists that England can boast of? For it must always be remembered that the humour of The Northern Farmer is the deep humour of Cervantes, Shakespeare, Sterne, and not the humour of satire, or whim, or caricature, and that consequently it is, though so small in quantity, to be placed in the same class as the humour of Cervantes, Shakespeare, Sterne, and the creator of Sir Roger de Coverley."—Id., No. 271.

"Whatever . . . is most truly characteristic of the culture and thought of the first Victorian period is impersonated in Lord Tennyson, and the posterity that may wish to learn the maturest judgment of the most refined circles in his day will find no sources of information comparable to his poems."—R. GARRETT, in The Reign of Queen Victoria, li. 469.

"Dr. Terrica de Lacomperie does more than register the traces left by the primitive tribes in China: he follows them into their new homes and environments, and gives us an ethnological panorama of their migrations. That his record is incomplete he is the first to acknowledge; but those who understand the difficulties of his task will fully appreciate the success which he has achieved. We most cordially congratulate him on his present work, which is a monument of scholarly instinct and patient research."—ROBERT K. JONES, Acad., xxxi. 271. 'of the most scanty description, are altogether too meagre to support the elaborate systems he has constructed with them. . . . The volume may be regarded as a kind of extended bibliography, which future inquirers into the philology of the total monosyllabic language will find extremely useful.'—Nat. Rev., lxiv. 531.

King's College, Aberdeen, in 1860; professor of natural history at Queen's College, Cork, 1853; professor of natural ontology and zoology in Queen's College, Belfast, 1854; professor of natural history in the University of Edinburgh 1876, an appointment which he resigned in 1881.
He took part in the dredging expeditions of the "Lightning" and "Porcupine" in 1868 and 1869, and in 1872 was appointed the scientific chief of the "Challenger" expedition; knighted 1876. The publication of the series of volumes giving the Report on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of the Challenger was begun, in 1880, under his superintendence, and has been continued under that of John Murray, F.R.S. Edin. 1. The Depths over which he has now gone forth in supreme control."

raphy and general set-up of these volumes, and the delicacy of the exquisite wood engravings, and the delicacy of Mr. Wild, the extreme and conscientious accuracy of which we have seen, exceeds anything of the kind

Thomson, James, 1834-1882, b. at Port Glasgow, Scotland; lost both parents at an early age, and was brought up at the Caledonian Orphan Asylum. He entered the British army as regimental school-master, and was stationed for some time in Ireland, where he became engaged to a young girl, whose sudden death made a peculiarly lonely and cheerless one. His first published poem, "A Loveless Bower," appeared in July, 1858, in 'Ain's Edinburgh Magazine, under the signature
"Crepusculus." In his army life he made the acquaintance of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, (q. v.) then a private soldier, who in 1860 established the National Reformer, to which Thomson became a contributor. In 1862 he left the army and entered a solicitor's office in London, residing with Mr. Bradlaugh. In 1875 he seceded from the National Reformer and became a regular contributor to a periodical called Cope's Tobacco Plant. He suffered from depression and insomnia, and during his latter years gave way to habits of intemperance. His poems had already excited great admiration and obtained a high reputation through their publication in periodicals before any publisher could be found to bring them out in book form. 1. The City of Dreadful Night, and other Poems, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

"The City of Dreadful Night" is, as may be readily apprehended, the abode of those who, seeing no hereafter, fret themselves at the prospect, or, rather, the lack of it. . . . It is exceedingly rare to find a volume in which so large a number of the pieces contained have a distinct and individual poetic attractiveness."—G. SAINTSBURY: Acad., xvii. 432.

2. Vane's Story, Weddall and Om-El-Bonain, and other Poems, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo.
"It is a pity that Vane's Story stands first in Mr. Thomson's volume. We have only to turn to Weddall and Om-El-Bonain to see what a true poet he is, after all. As a piece of solid, vigorous, and masculine narrative, it would be difficult to find its superior among the writings of contemporary poets."—Atk., No. 275.

"The poem on Shelley is a well-conceived invention for the purpose of symbolizing that poet's typical position, and, though not, on the whole, of high importance in point of writing or development, it has throughout a large measure of beauty. . . . Of the prose writings on Shelley the majority deserve some attention even now."—Atk., No. 3024.

"This is, on the whole, a pleasant book of travel. . . . Mr. Thomson is not a literary artist, so that the condensation and classifying which his materials needed have not been sufficiently done. . . . He went on his travels as a photographer. . . . It is somewhat hindered in these ways from producing a book of high value. Mr. Thomson has given ample compensation in the pictures with which his books are most beautifully illustrated."—Spectator, xlviii. 506.

"The plan of the work is sound. The best authorities have been consulted; the illustrations are of great assistance; the descriptions are full and complete; the contributions of old prints and views, and many scarce maps pecially in the first two volumes."—Ath., No. 2677.

"In considering the book as a whole, it is impossible not to be struck with the improvement it has undergone as its publication has proceeded. The first volume contains several highly imaginative representations of scenes that do not appear in the later volumes, and in their place are genuine views, many of which are taken from unique originals."—Acad., xv, 279.

1876, 2 vols. 8vo. (The first ten chapters of the work were prepared by G. S. Hillard, and the remainder by Mrs. and Miss Tieknor; but the bulk of it is mainly
Mr. Tieknor's own writing.)

"Probably no American has led a life richer in that class of associations and interests which belong properly to literary biography, and the two volumes in which his history is told afford such varied literary entertainment, such pleasant personal anecdotes and reminiscences of so many of the most distinguished people of the time, as to form a substantial addition to the books on the shelf that hold the memoirs of Johnson, of Scott, of Mackintosh, and they may find a place, perhaps, close to the life of Southey and the Diary of Crabbe Robinson."—Nation, xxii, 148.

"The list of statesmen, of authors, and of persons of social and intellectual distinction, who are mentioned in Mr. Ticknor's journals and letters, would alone fill several pages of his book. Little account is given by his biographer of the personal qualities which seem to have secured for him universal esteem and good will. His letters uniformly display good sense and good feeling, but they contain no trace of a brilliancy which would perhaps not have contributed to his universal popularity. . . . In every capital of Europe he had not only acquaintances but friends, and at home he seems to have known every eminent contemporary. . . . Negative or receptive qualities have a value of their own if they are combined with intelligence, knowledge, and power of appreciation. . . . Sydney Smith's stories or Macaulay's monologues probably produced on Mr. Ticknor's mind exactly the proper impression. . . . Of the uprightness and soundness of his moral and political judgments his letters contain ample proof. In the series extending over more than fifty years there is neither a silly nor a humorous sentence, and there is scarcely any original remark; yet the collection is extremely interesting as a record of intercourse with conspicuous and celebrated persons."—Sat. Rev., xiii, 678.

"The two volumes are, no doubt, long, but they are so full of interest that we hardly know whether anything could have been spared. On the whole, we are inclined to think that this is the very best book of its class that has ever come over to us from America."—Ath., No. 2320.

"We find little stories and remarks about hundreds of celebrated people in these two long volumes, but in hardly one case do we find that Mr. Ticknor really understood the nature of the person he was describing. Regarded as the experiences of a clear-sighted man, endowed with an unmarvellous faculty for work, this book possesses an interest of its own; but regarded in any way as a life, or as having any interest beyond that which arises from the number of celebrated people Mr. Ticknor met, and with many of whom he was intimate, the book is a failure."—Spectator, xix, 160.

Timcker, Miss Mary Agnes, b. 1832 at Ellsworth, Me.; became a convert to the Roman Catholic Church in 1863; acted as a nurse in a military hospital at Washington during the latter part of the civil war; resided in Italy 1873-87. She has contributed short stories, sketches, and serials to American magazines. 1. Grapes and Thorns; 4th ed., N. York, 1872, 8vo. 2. The House of York: a Story of American Life, N. Signor Mondalini's Niece, ("No Name" Sur.), Boston, 1879, 16mo; London, 1880, p. 8vo.

"Signor Monaldini's Niece" is full of the charm of Rome. The author feels, and can reproduce, the loveliness of form and color which makes it an enchanted place: its glowing light, its soft air, its profuse succession of flowers, the steadfast beauty of the hills, the infinite variety of the Campagna, the power of its architecture, affecting the mind almost as the work of natural forces, the varied beauty and abundance of its fountains,—all these rise like visions before the reader who chances to be its surroundings are familiar to his writer: the writhing olive-trees, the stately neglected buildings, the wide purple distance, the hill-sides steeped in varying light and shadow, are all used in the setting and background of the story.

"The mise en scène being so good, what are the actors? . . . We take it to be the writer's intention to protest against the usual conventional restrictions on women's freedom of action, but elle s'y prend mal, and almost all her characters turn out as her opponents might desire. . . . We believe, from internal evidence, that this book is written by an American woman; it is very clever, but its atmosphere is rather what we expect in the work of certain clever Frenchmen."—Nation, xxviii, 187.

"It is throughout of unequal merit, but it abounds in admirable touches. . . . Perhaps the best that can be said of it is that it makes hackneyed scenes and situations interesting, and that Roman life, about which so many caricatures of folly have been written, is presented in it with exceptional liveliness and fidelity."—Sat. Rev., i, 122.

6. By the Tiber, Bost., 1881, 16mo.
"It is utterly formless. . . . Nevertheless there is a good deal of the power and much of the cleverness which marked Signor Monaldini's Niece" in "By the Tiber."—Nation, xxxii, 40.

"From the first to the last page the book is full of imaginative fire. . . . The pictures of society at Rome are bright and humorous, the sketches of Italian scenery vivid and true, and there is a chapter describing the flight of Bruno after the murder of Vittorio which shows that power of conceiving situations and sensations completely novel from personal experience which is the severe test of the imaginative faculty."—Cosmo Mosknois, i, Acad., xx, 325.

"It confines itself entirely to a narration of proceedings in Rome and the neighbourhood; these are related in such a manner as to convey a great impression of reality."—Spectator, iv, 169.

7. The Jewel in the Lotus, Phila. and Lon., 1883, 12mo.

"There is really good work in this book, better even than the writer's clever tale, 'Signor Monaldini's Niece,' had led us to expect from her. The figures of the two girls in whom the interest of the story centres are brilliantly drawn, and represent with singular distinctness two very diverse types of womanhood."—Spectator, lvii, 319.

"Miss Tinker is an idealist who in these days of realism is not afraid to conceive according to the inspiration of her own poetic genius. . . . The novel is full of beautiful pictures."—Literary World, xiv, 455.

8. Aurora, Illust. Phila., 1885, 12mo.

"It is unique among the novels daily turned out by the press in being full of the local color of a locality not too familiar, and in being a story without a purpose, ideal rather than realistic, aiming at little but being a reproduction, at once faithful and picturesque, of life under picturesque conditions as it may still be lived and seen in Italy and Spain."—Critic, v, 16.

"It is impossible to feel that any passion of sympathy rides the marvellous genius as a critic, warm admiration of his poetry, strong disapproval of his weakness, and sincere commiseration for his helplessness, but no pervading feeling of the deep tragedy of that strangely infantine, strangely fætid, and yet strangely sublime nature."—Spectator, liv, 1374.

"Whenever the religious history of England in the nineteenth century is written, more than one paragraph must be devoted to the life and labours of Charles Lowder. . . It is impossible to read this most interesting biography without seeing that Mr. Lowder's success was due almost entirely to the daily spectacle of congenial zeal and self-sacrificing devotion which his life displayed."—Acad., xxi, 188.

"This is the record of a very noble life. . . It is for his work among the poor and outcasts of the East of London that Mr. Lowder is best known. . . By his self-sacrificing devotion he has done, and to a large extent civilized, one of the roughest and most lawless and vicious districts in the metropolis."—Spectator, lv, 93.

Richard Chenevix Trench, Archbishop: Letters and Memorials, Lon., 1888, 2 vols. 8vo.

"As Archbishop Trench desired that no life of him should be written, the editor of these volumes has been placed in difficult circumstances. To print the correspondence without some biographical details would have been to destroy its value; to relate many incidents of Trench's career would be to disregard his wishes. A middle course has therefore been pursued, and the result, as in most compromises of the kind, is not satisfactory. The reader of the book will find himself frequently asking questions to which he gains no answer, and, when the volumes are closed, his impression of the central character will be somewhat vague and misty. Some of the features stand out prominently; but all that is not seen in his letters, and, while we listen to his opinions, we are seldom brought into his presence."—Spectator, lxi, 889.

"terse" is an effort to account for the continuance of agrarian troubles in Ireland when Parliament has done all it can in the way of just legislation. . . The ostensible evenness and candour of Mr. Trevelyan's . . . The ostensible evenness agreeable to a thoughtful observer of Ulsterian phenomena than the rough violence and egotism of his "Realities of Irish Life."—Sat. Rev., xxxi, 504.

"It is racy of the soil when it derives its inspiration; fresh, genial, healthy; somewhat fanciful, indeed, but giving out, on the whole, the true ring of conscientious narrative. . . Under the form of a story Mr. Trevelyan treats again the mystery of agrarian crime in a just, unevangelized, and unromantic, . . . and prescribes his method of cure."—Spectator, xlii, 193.

Trevelyan, Sir George Otto, Bart., M.A., [ante, vol. iii, TREVELYAN, G. O., and.] b. 1838, at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire; educated at Harrow, and at Trinity College, Cambridge; spent some years in India; M.P. for Tynemouth 1865-68, for Hawick Burghs 1868-86, and for Glasgow since 1887; civil lord of the Admiralty 1869-70; secretary to the Admiralty 1880-82; chief secretary for Ireland 1882-84; chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster 1884-85; secretary for Scotland 1886, 1. Honore at the University of Athens; 2d ed., Cambridge, 1892, 8vo. "Mr. Trevelyan has produced from very rich and attractive materials a very delightful book, and no one who knows how difficult it is to make out of very rich and attractive materials a book at all as good as this will fail to rate highly the judgment, the spirit, the self-narrative before us. . . A more perfect picture of the great Whig essayist could hardly have been produced than the picture which Mr. Trevelyan has painted with so good a good taste, and yet with so much delicacy of perception."—Spectator, xlix, 433, 466.

"The interest of Mr. Trevelyan's biography begins with Macaulay's infancy and sustains itself to his death."—Sat. Rev., xli, 521.

"Although Macaulay gains little or nothing from a literary point of view by these two volumes, he gains immensely as a man of warm emotions, simple tastes, perfect uprightness, and a high sense of duty."—J. C. Morrison: Macmillan's Magazine, xxxiv, 85.

"It is genial, as biography should be, and it is congenial to the subject. Mr. Trevelyan is proud of his relative with a pride that has no desire but to show him as he was, and no vulgar wish to make him in other or more. In the selection of letters of so private a nature some discretion must have been required, for there was in Macaulay's character utterances, often trivial, and sometimes unjust."—LORD Houghton: Acad., lx, 427.

5. The Early History of Charles James Fox, Lon., 1880, 8vo; 2d ed., same year.

"After the lapse of more than seventy years, and the failure of several previous attempts, Fox is at last fortunate in a biographer. . . Mr. Trevelyan had already rapid, invariably clear, and on all occasions humorous or eloquent, he is one of the most readable of modern writers. A mannerism into which he still sometimes lapses always seems to be a lingering echo of Macaulay. Mr. Trevelyan, when he is not subject to foreign influences, is too fresh and too full of life to adjust his thought and language to an artificial model. . . Fox's exploits in private and in public subject-matter for a volume of more than five hundred pages. Mr. Trevelyan has taken the opportunity to relate much of the political history of the time, and to describe with not unsympathetic sarcasm a state of society which shared its advantages."—Sat. Rev., l, 880.

"He understands men. . . he can indicate manners, he knows facts, and he can describe them all in a style which, though it compels a comparison with Lord Macaulay's, is his own, and is, in a long volume, more attractive."—Spectator, liii, 1380.

Trolope, Anthony, [ante, vol. iii, add.] 1815-1882. After his retirement from the post-office in 1867, he undertook the editorship of St. Paul's, a new magazine, which was discontinued after an existence of three years and a half. In 1868 he visited the United States on a postal mission, being also commissioned by the Foreign Office to make an effort in behalf of international copyright. In 1871 he paid a visit to Australia, returning by way of America in 1872, and from 1873 he made his permanent home in London. His habits of literary labor were in the highest degree regular and methodical. The time which he gave to it was three hours daily. "It was my practice," he says, "to be at my table every morning at 5.30; and it was also my practice to allow myself no merey. . . . It had at this time become my custom—and it still is my custom, though of late I have become a little lenient to myself—to write with my watch before me, and to require from myself 250 words every quarter of an hour. I have found that the 250 words have been forthcoming as regularly as my watch went. But my three hours were not devoted entirely to writing. I always began my task by reading the work of the day before, an operation which would take me half an hour, and which consisted chiefly in weighing with my ear the sound of the words and phrases. . . . I have never written three novels in a year; but by following the plan above described I have written more than as much as three novels. . . . It may interest some if I state that during the last twenty years I have made by literature something near £70,000. . . . I look upon the result as comfortable, but not splendid." ("Autobiography," written in 1875-76, with some additions made in 1879.) His son adds, "Every day until his last illness [a month before his death] my father continued his work. He would not otherwise have been happy. He demanded from himself less than he had done ten years previously, but his daily task was always done." The number of his works, including thirty which are entered ante, vol. iii, amounts to sixty-nine. "He is a fine specimen of the true John Bull in politics. . . . The misfortune is that he has carried into another province of literature the habits which are certainly excusable, and perhaps meritorious, in his peculiar style of fiction. . . . "As regards the public, 'The Prime Minister' was a failure. It was worse spoken of by the press than any novel I had written. . . . The American Senator and 'Popenjoy' have appeared, each with fair success. Neither of them has encountered that reproach which, in regard to 'The Prime Minister,' seemed to tell me that my work as a novelist should be brought to a close. "While he does not enter into much biographical detail, Mr. Trollope has succeeded, without telling anything absolutely new, in weaving his materials into a most truthful and complete likeness. . . . GENERAL CRITICISM:

"There is no modern novelist who has more clearly defined to his own apprehension his literary capabilities and limitations than Mr. Trollope. He is thoroughly acquainted with both his fortes and his foibles, and so sound in his good sense that he very seldom is beguiled into toiling with futile ambition after effects that are beyond him. His proper domain is a wide and sufficiently diversified one: he is limberly at home there; and when he invites wholesome entertainment. . . . Mr. Trollope's realism is applied to events, not to personalities. We have none of those minute suggestive touches which seem to bring the personage bodily before us; we have the scene described, server in the sense that Tourgenieff, for instance, is an observer. The latter, by describing the peculiar features as the characteristic manner in which they said this or did that, artfully and insensibly brings us into intimate acquaintance with them. . . . Mr. Trollope's characters if we met them; but if we were told Mr. who they were, we should know, from Mr. Trollope's test-act under general circumstances, and how they would occur: occurrences are carefully maintained; no one does or says of him or her might not lead us to expect, and nothing befall under the dispensations of a Providence we more unjust and no more far-sighted than Mr. Trollope himself.—Spectator, liii, 754.

"He has drawn sketches, such as the portrait of Mrs. Proudie, which may stand as representatives of a class; but throughout the whole of his works there is not to be found a single character, such as Colonel Newcome, or Becky Sharp, or Jane Eyre, or Dorothea, which is a permanent addition to the world of English fiction. . . . Mr. Trollope is essentially a superficial writer and delights to describe the working of feeling, but he has never successfully attempted to depict strong passion, he has always, in fact, ward signs of feeling. . . . The source, in fact, of Mr. Trollope's success is to be found in the satisfaction which he gives to the almost universal liking for accurate sketches of every-day life, and to the equally universal admiration for the easy optimism which sees in English society, as best of all possible worlds.—A. V. DICKEY: Nation, xviii, 174.

"Altogether, these volumes, as jointly produced by two persons who know Italy, its literature, its scenery, and its cities, thoroughly well, and who are familiar with Italian life and manners, deserve to be generally read."—Sat. Rev., liii, 831.

Trollope, Thomas Adolphus, [ante, vol. iii., add.] In 1875 he removed from Florence to Rome, where he was for some years the correspondent of the London Standard; and in 1888 he returned to England, and has since fixed his abode in Devonshire. He has contributed an immense number of articles to periodicals. 1. A Siren, Lon., 1870, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 2. Durton Abbey: a Novel, Lon., 1871, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 3. The Papal Conclaves, as they were and as they are, Lon., 1876, 8vo.

"What he wishes to bring before his readers is a collection of the piquant gossip which gathered round the proceedings of some of the conclaves. These are valuable in a detailed history of the Papacy, for they illustrate contemporary opinion and monify. . . . But to isolate these history and to unjustly throws ridicule on a subject which it professes to illustrate.—M. CROFTON: Acad., xi, 66.

5. A Peep behind the Scenes at Rome, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo. 6. The Story of the Life of Pius the Ninth, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Those who turn to this volume, not for theology, but for facts, will find a very readable narrative, which throws a good deal of light incidentally on matters of more ephemeral importance."—Sat. Rev., xiv, 681.

7. A Family Party in the Piazza of St. Peter, &c., Lon., 1877, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 8. Sketches from French History, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo. 9. What I Remember, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"These volumes consist of the most delightful pot-pourri that we could desire of the time just anterior to our own. . . . Figures flit across the stage and are gone, and Mr. Trollope stands by and chronicles them. . . . We shall remember the altered tempora et mores when 'liveried foot- Evangelicalism' and 'Low-Churchism' were a note of when he preserves for us the delightful, racy stories of or worshipped faces which vanished before our time."—Acad., xxxii, 383.

Trotter, Capt. Lionel James, [ante, vol. iii, add.] b. 1827, at Calcutta; educated at the Charter-house, and at Merton College, Oxford; went to India as an ensign in 1847; served through the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, receiving a medal and two clasps; in the second Burmese war, 1853, &c.; retired on half-pay 1862. He edited the Indian Mail 1867-78, and has contributed to periodicals in India and England. Besides the works mentioned ante, vol. iii, he has published: 1. East and West, and other Poems, Edin., 1859. 2. (Trans.) La Sorcière, by J. Michelet, Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. 3. History of India, Lon., 1874, 8vo. 4. Warren Hastings: a Biography, Lon., 1879, 8vo.

Regarded as a defence or a summary, his intelligibility is necessarily dependent on other and fuller records; as a separate biography the volume has a high claim to favour from the general carefulness it exhibits.—Ath., No. 2678.

"The bulk of Captain Trotter's book is taken up with war, finance, famine, and pestilence. . . . Gathering together, with equal tact and labour, the complicated elements of his vast and arduous problem, he shows forth concurring where he thinks cause que; and does not doubt the portraits of his more favoured characters with flattering colours of fulsome panegyric."—Acad., xxxi, 54.

"The doctrine which Dr. Tulloch defends as 'Christi-anly' and 'as itself' is the personality and Fatherhood of God and the existence of an immortal spirit in man, which has a conscious recollection of the 'Deism' of Shaftesbury's Characteristics and 1798's 'Universal Prayer.'"—*Edin-

2. Collected Sonnets, Old and New, Lon., 1880, 12mo.

"The reader will find in these sonnets not only the true song of a poet, but the record of a beautiful and harmonious life. The earliest poems in the volume were published fifty years ago. . . . The latest series of sonnets appeared in 1873, and these are followed in the present collection by fifty sonnets 'now first published, except four or five, which have appeared in magazines.' The book contains three hundred and forty-two sonnets—a number which has been surpassed by Wordsworth, and, we believe, by Wordsworth alone."—Spectator, iv. 154.

"Dr. Turner is not a theorist. He has not written his book to support notions of Henotheism, nor Totemism, or hypotheses that T. idolism or the sense of the Infinite is the germ of religion. Dr. Turner gives a straightforward unvarnished account of the beliefs of a people whom he has known intimately for more than forty years. . . . - "The thoroughness with which he does his work, and the painstaking diligence he has carried even into subordinate parts of it, are qualities so rare and valuable that they won our prepossession on his behalf from the first. If he utterly lacks the graces of Southey's style, and the genial kindness of Southey's heart, he has the priceless advantage of a thorough knowledge of the history and spirit of Methodism; his whole life as an itinerant preacher must have been educating him for the task he has undertaken in the full maturity, it would seem, of his years and experience. Yet, with all this to tell in his favour, we will not do him the injustice of assuming so grievous a wrong as to assume that he fairly represents its tone and temper towards those who think they may be good Christians enough without taking out their quarterly ticket, or assenting to every proposition set forth as gospel in the published sermons of glorious John."—*Sat. - "To how many does the name of Methodist suggest the Oxford Ritualist of the eighteenth century? Yet it was men like Clayton and Ingham and Hervey who, despite their Ritualism, really scattered broadcast up and down the land the principles the vitality of which Wesley had, as it were, rediscovered. In the volume before us Mr. Tyerman has given us an able and, as it seems to us, very important history of five or six of these men."—Spectator, xlvii. 1127.
4. Life of the Rev. George Whitefield, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.
- "Mr. Tyerman boasts that he has made use of a large amount of biographical material, much of which seems to have been unknown to previous biographers. The result is two large volumes, containing about twelve hundred pages, over which the reader will at times we fear be inclined to slumber. There is no diversity of tones in or taste, he deserves, we think, very high praise indeed for the scrupulously careful manner in which he has collected his materials."—Spectator, i. 635.

mead, Va., 1882-83; and has since then president of William and Mary College. The Letters and Times of the Tylers, Richmond, Va., 1884-85, 2 vols. 8vo. A history of our Government from the beginning of the Revolution to the year 1830, from the point of view of a single Virginia family. Mr. Tyler deserves the credit of having not only added a great deal of new and valuable material to American history, but of having (we think) successfully vindicated the reputation of his grandfather for honesty and statesmanship.—Nation, xl. 287, and xli. 361.

Tyndall, John, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.G.S., [ante, vol. iii.], add.] b. 1820, at the village of Leighlin-bridge, near Carlow, Ireland; was educated partly by his father, an Irish constable, partly at a school near his birthplace. In 1839 he joined the Irish Ordnance Survey; in 1844-47 he was employed by a firm of engineers; in 1847 he became a teacher at Queen's College, Hampshire, where he devoted himself to chemical research, and in the following year he went to Germany and studied at Marburg under Bunsen and at Berlin under Magnus. In 1853 he was appointed professor of natural philosophy in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, and succeeded Faraday as professor in 1856.

In 1856 he visited Switzerland with Professor Huxley to study the structure and motions of glaciers, continuing his researches in the succeeding years. In 1872 he visited the United States on a lecture-tour. He was president of the meeting of the British Association at Belfast in 1874, and delivered an address which excited much discussion and called forth many replies. He was for some years scientific adviser to the Board of Trade and to the light-house authorities, but resigned in 1883.

He has contributed to leading periodicals, 1. Faraday as a Discoverer, Lon., 1868, p. 8vo; new ed., 1870. 2. Researches on Diamagnetism and Magneto-Crystalline Action, 1870, cr. 8vo; new ed., 1888. 3. Notes of a Course of Nine Lectures on Light delivered at the Royal Institution, 1869, Lon., 1870, 12mo. 4. "The public on this side of the Atlantic will doubtless welcome Professor Tyndall's Lectures on Light with some less than that with which they were greeted on their delivery in America. Nothing, of course, can make up for the absence of the living charm and the tridita vis which won the hearts and minds of the audience, and carried the speaker on a wave of popular excitement from one American city to another. These, however, who are familiar with the spell exercised by eloquence and scientific warmth such as Professor Tyndall's can realize the effect hears (we naturally susceptible of such impressions. . . . supplemented by new matter which invests them with more of method and completeness, are marked throughout with Dr. Tyndall's well-known freshness of thought, clearness of exposition, and firm grasp of physical truth."—Sud.  vols. ii, iii, and iv., Bost., 1873, 8vo. (Vol. i. published in 1867, was written by Octavius Pickering. See PICKERING, TIMOTHY, ante, vol. ii.)
 "The completion of the work could not have been put in better hands, for Mr. Upham is at once an intimate friend of the family, and has done his work con amore; an accomplished writer, who has given these volumes a much more varied and lively character than the first; and a man of literary and political experience, well fitted to describe a life so varied and striking. The ability with which the work has been performed gives it an eminent place among biographies, and secures the author a permanent literary reputation."—Nation, xviii, 93.
 "Mr. Upham, acting as he doubtless supposed, in the interests of peace and good feeling, calmly suppressed a most important chapter of our history. This is not altogether surprising, since the papers, if published, must have shown Pickering in the light of a most indefatigable and successful plottor against the Union; but the suppression renders the book nearly worthless."—Review of Lodge's Life

- "Careful perusal of this work suggests the doubt whether very much was gained by the author's personal examination in the localities visited. . . The merit of General Upton's work does not consist in exhibiting the results of original investigation, or in such a full description as might have been desired for from his actual inspection, but he presents in one well-arranged volume what before to the American reader could only be culled from numerous reports, lists, and treatises in several languages. The compilations in their several divisions and in their summation, are accompanied by reflections and suggestions which, from the author's distinction in the studies of his profession, should and doubtless will be attentively considered."—Nation, xxvii, 376.

"Many faults might be found with this book on the score of style, and we think good taste also; . . . but, when every objection (that can reasonably be made has been raised, justice compels us to say that we do not remember ever to have come upon a book which shows signs of more painstaking research, and, we may add, as far as we have been able to test it, of greater accuracy of statement. . . . For the area which it covers, it is the best book on Nonconformity that has been written."—Id., No.

Peasant Properties, and other Selected Essays, Lon., 1885, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Those of the essays which deal with peasant properties are likely to receive the exclusive attention of readers and reviewers alike. . . . They form little more than a fourth of the volumes. . . . They are well described by the authoress herself as 'jottings during autumn rambles.' . . . She has rendered good service to the discussion of what Mill declared to be 'one of the most disputed questions in the range of political economy.'"—Sat. Rev., ix. 93.

"So strongly is she prejudiced against the system of peasant proprietorship that she does not even recognize the immense satisfaction derivable from a sense of possession, which is so clearly marked by the prevalence of land-hunger amongst so large a portion of civilized populations. Go where she will in France or Germany, Lady Verney sees nothing but the objects of pity and compassion, as well as waste of time, of labour, and of money, where others find admirable examples of thrift, of industry, and of self-denial; and most especially is she indignant at the idea that the introduction of a similar system can possibly prove advantageous either to our or Irish neighbours."—Spectator, ix. 22.

Victoria Alexandrina, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India, [ante, vol. iii., add.], was proclaimed Empress of India year of her reign, 1857, was commemorated by public ceremonies and rejoicings under the designation of "The Queen's Jubilee." More Leaves from the Journal of a Life in the Highlands, from 1862 to 1882, Lon., 1884, 8vo; 4th ed. same year.

"From a purely literary point of view there is not a great deal to say of the Queen's new book. Its style is the simplest, and it has the charm of naturalness which belongs to simplicity. The story is told without effort or affectation of any kind, and produces its effect entirely by the force of sincerity. Her Majesty is probably a sympathetic rather than an acute and dispassionate observer. That the sentiment itself is always pure and often elevated is a reason why these records of home life in the royal circles will find a responsive echo. Otherwise the experiences recorded are not altogether such as would of themselves impart to this interesting volume a distinctive character. The book tells the story of the widowed life of a queen."—Ath., No. 2938.

Collection of the Late Theobald Cleasby; Enlarged and Completed. With an Introduction and a Life of Richard Cleasby, by G. W. Dasent, D.C.L. Lon., 1869-73, 3 parts, 4to.

"The courage of the Delegates of the Oxford Press in undertaking this work, and the care and time bestowed on it that they have not only given to the world one of the greatest helps to comparative philology that has ever appeared, but that this Dictionary is peculiarly a work to be published in England and by a great English University."—Extract from Dr. Dasent's Introduction.

"We have never been led to make use of a dictionary that equalled this in fulness of detail and clearness of plan, and many of the individual articles contain a wealth of suggestive allusion and interesting reference that make the book, as a whole, far more readable than most novels."—Spectator, xlvii, 1067.

"No more splendid gift has ever been laid before the lovers of Northern literature than this treasury of the greatest poetry of Scandinavia. Here we find collected for the first time, with a justified and intelligible text, and with exact and luminous commentaries, the security remains of primeval Teutonic mythology, the security remains of the half-Christians of Creation and Judgment, and the eponyms of the kings whose descent they trace from the deluges of war, invest, and sunshine."—CHARLES I. "It deals partly with the rudimentary generalities of artistic criticism, and in part with such archaeological minutæ as are usually welcome only to the special student. . . . Mr. Waldstein lays emphasis on the application to his studies of the comparative method, distinguished from the examination of records; that is, by comparison of the works of art themselves, by tracing from one to another the peculiarities of artist and school. . . . The pointe de départ by which Mr. Waldstein lays out his discussions are naturally in most cases the identifications and discrepancies which his own independent study has been turned . . .

With evident desire to argue his propositions fairly and state his cases evenly, he is possessed by his enthusiastic persuasion they lead him to a positiveness in details which savors of over-statement and lends an ex-parte color to his arguments."—Nation, xlii. 282.

"In this large and important work Dr. Waldstein has not only carefully studied and collected the great mass of existing literature on the subject, . . . but he has also studied the subject for himself with a closeness of observation and a scientific accuracy of method which give to his views, even when they merely endorse those of previous writers, some value and originality of their own. . . . Dr. Waldstein will be the last to expect complete assent to all he enlists the reader along with him, and presents well-contrived, strong, and sensible reasons, marshalled in orderly array, in support of his various views and theories."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 232, 233.

"Dr. Waldstein is no friend of the philologist, treatment of archeological subjects, and does not set a high value on the reading of ancient authors and the study of texts. He aims exclusively at training the eyes for stylistic investigation. Indeed, the book brings abundant evidence of his talent in this direction,—the more welcome as he does not confine himself to stating general impressions, but endeavours by a special analysis to give an exact account of the peculiarities of style. . . . But stylistic analysis is not the only method of archeological study."—A. METZGER'S, Arch., xviii, 65.

- Wallace, Alfred Russell, F.R.S., F.R.G.S., D.C.L., [ante, vol. iii., add.] b. at Usk, Monmouthshire; was educated as an architect and surveyor, but gave up this profession in order to devote himself to scientific research. He has made several extensive tours with the view of studying the flora and fauna of different regions, including South America, the Malay Archipelago, Australia, &c. The course of these investigations led him to abandon the belief in an original creation of distinct species of animals, and to formulate a theory of evolution substantially the same as that which Darwin was then engaged in working out but had not yet announced.

(See DARWIN, C. R., supra.) He differs, however, from Darwin in ascribing the development of the mental and moral faculties of man to a process distinct from that of physical evolution. Like Professor Crookes and some other scientists, he is a believer in "Spiritualism." In recent years he has advocated a scheme for the nationalization of land and become the president of a society for the promotion of this object. He was awarded the royal medal of the Royal Society in 1868, and the gold medal of the Geographical Society of Paris in 1870. He is an occasional contributor to leading periodicals. 1. The Scientific Aspects of the Supernatural: indicating the Desirableness of an Experimental Inquiry by Men of Science into the Alleged Powers of Clairvoyants and Mediums, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 2. Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection: a Series of Essays, Lon., 1870, p. 8vo; 2d ed., with corrections and additions, 1871. 3. On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism: Three Essays, Lon., 1875, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1881.

"Mr. Wallace by no means confines himself to the spiritualistic phenomena which have occurred under his own observation or in our own time, but stretches his hypothesis in a most classic fashion to all the occurrences in ancient and mediæval history which have ever been reported to be supernatural. Mr. Crookes' ["Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism,"] confines himself to the recital of phenomena to which his own eyes and ears have borne witness, but equally puzzles the uninitiated reader by the suddenness of the leap which he takes from the simple phenomena of mediumship to the most advanced instances of what is called in the spiritual jargon "materialization," pressing at the same time from the attitude of a scientific sceptic to that of a religious enthusiast."—Acad., viii. 522.

4. The Geographical Distribution of Animals: with a Study of the Relations of Living and Extinct Fauna, as elucidating the Past Changes of the Earth's Surface, Lon., 1876, 2 vols. 8vo.

"It has been the aim of Mr. Wallace, in this important work of scientific description and classification, to set forth a scheme of 'geographical zoology' with reference to the origin of species, as affected by past or present conditions of the different terrestrial regions. A corresponding study is that of 'zoological geography,' which is here previously treated of. . . . He finds reason to believe that the mainland of Europe and Asia, and likewise of North America, existing as land from before the earliest of the Tertiary periods, constituted the area in which alone the successive types of vertebrate animal structure were originally produced. . . . We are gratified by the mastery skill with which Mr. Wallace has marshalled an immense number of complex variety of facts into a clear exposition of a threefold argument, dealing with classified zoology, with paleontology, and with physical geography, in support of his ideas. . . . Mr. Wallace's labours cannot fail to be highly useful, and what he shows us is not less delightful apart from its value as a contribution to the 'Darwinian' theory."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 172.

5. Tropical Nature, and other Essays, Lon., 1878, 8vo.

"The first four [essays] contain vivid descriptions of the principal aspects of tropical Nature, while the remainder are more or less devoted to the theory of evolution, and to the explanations which it offers of the causes and origin of the said phenomena."—Acad., xiv. 91.

"The original German work has supplied only a tenth of the matter of the volume. For the majority of the rest it is indebted to Mr. Wallace. Mr. A. H. Keane has, however, supplied a valuable ethnographical appendix."—Sat. Rev., xviii. 806.

7. Island Life; or, The Phenomena and Causes of Insular Fauna and Floras, including a Revision and Attempted Solution of the Problem of Geological Climates, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"Mr. Wallace has entitled himself to be called the father of the new science of zoological geography, showing that we have in the present distribution of living things over the earth's surface a key to the problem of the most ancient relations of land and water. . . . For this study islands possess, as he points out, special advantages, since they have a restricted area, and definite boundaries, and their geographical and geological limits, as a rule, coincide."—Sat. Rev., i. 676.

"The work throughout abounds with interest, and even the facts themselves with which it is richly stored would be of high value without the theories which they enforce and illustrate. . . . It may be read with equal interest by those who are already acquainted with the general principles of distribution, and by those who wish for the first time to learn something about modern biological geography."—Ath., No. 2797.

He is a member of the Russian Imperial Geographical Society. 1. Russia, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo; 9th ed., 1883.

"The author has neither crammed for his work, nor did he undertake a journey to Russia for the express purpose. He visited the country before the Franco-German war, and found so many things to interest him that he spent nearly six years in acquiring a knowledge of the language and the condition of the people. . . . He has made a capital use of his time and materials. . . . It is difficult to condense or analyze nine hundred pages treating, with ministration, the emancipation of the serfs, the rise of local institutions, and the character of the clergy. . . . Mr. Wallace . . . has given to the world a description of the most important half of a huge Empire, which is excellent in conception, scholarly in arrangement, and unexceptionable in style."—*Nat. Wallace, Lewis, h. 1827, at Brookville, Franklin Co., Ind.; while a law student served as a volunteer in the Mexican war; admitted to the bar 1848; served in the civil war, and was promoted major-general in the volunteer army; mustered out in 1865, and resumed the practice of his profession; governor of Utah 1878-81; U.S. minister to Turkey 1881-85. His two novels have had an enormous circulation. 1. The Fair God; or, The Last of the Tains: a Tale of the Conquest of Mexico, Boston, 1875, 12mo.

"That a great deal of pains has been expended on the setting of the story is evident: Mexican palaces are described at great length, and a general familiarity is shown from the life of that early time. . . . The work is all done from the outside, and the result is a clever book which falls far short of being a good novel."—Nation, xvii, 372.

"He has taken bits of fact, as Professor Owen took the such scientific accuracy, but yet with great skill, a consistency in that great drama of the sixteenth century, so that the veriest school-boy will turn from his tale to the pages of Prescott or of Helms with fresh comprehension of the subject of which they treat."—Spectator, xlvii, 146.

"One of the most powerful historical novels that we have ever read. . . . The elaboration here and there is almost painful; the opening, like that of most archaeological novels, is dull, but the scene where, in the sunrise, Montezuma reads his fate; the dance-scene; and the entry of the Spaniards to the capital, are drawn in a style of which we think few living writers capable."—Ath., No. 2460.

"The greater portion of his book is devoted to cattle, as it is on cattle that agriculture in India mainly depends. . . . Prof. Wallace claims to have discovered a peculiarity in Indian cattle, which, though known to the natives, seems to have been unrecognized by the European residents. However white the hair of the Indian cattle, he says, the skins of all but a very small percentage are black underneath. . . . Prof. Huxley, with whom the author has been in communication on this subject, has recognized the importance of this discovery as bearing on the question of the relation of colour and climate. . . . We can fully commend Prof. Wallace's thoughtful and well-written book."—Ath., No. 3186.

"Of Sir Joshua Walmesley himself we seem to have little, except as an ambitious and hard-working politician, who threw all his weight into the scale of the Liberal party. His life—if we are to call it a life—will interest all politicians, especially Liverpool people, who remember the stirring years in the earlier part of the century, from 1826 to 1846. . . . It is one of the book's merits that we hear almost as much of Hume and Colclough as of Sir Joshua himself."—Spectator, llii, 49.

Novel, Lon.,

Walpole, Spencer, B. 1839; eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Horatio Walpole (q. v., ante, vol. iii.) was educated at Eton; entered the War Office in 1858; appointed an inspector of fisheries in 1867; lieutenant-governor of the Isle of Man since 1882. He has contributed to periodicals. 1. The Life of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval: including his Correspondence with Numerous Distinguished Persons. By his Grandson. Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"As a contribution to political and Parliamentary history, Mr. Spencer Walpole's work possesses considerable interest."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 30.

2. A Manual of the Law of Salmon-Fisheries in England and Wales, Lon., 1877, 8vo. 3. A History of England, from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1815, Lon., 1878-80, 5 vols. 8vo.

"All records of those astonishing years of social, political, and material development which elapsed between the and imperfectly they may be set out, interest us, however badly supreme importance of the events with which they are concerned. When it is, however, the story of those times is alike into personal character and national growth, and history demands, . . . the result is indeed inspiring and attractive."—Spectator, lx, 115.

"If Mr. Walpole's history is wanting in dignity and breadth, and hardly rises in its general survey above good journalism; if, the neither much enlightens, much interests, nor even much amuses us; if he shows no signs of the common sense, good judgment, and almost a sufficient stock of firmness, to his task."—Atk., No. 3079.

4. The Electorate and the Legislature, ("English Citizen" Ser.) Lon., 1881, p. 8vo. 5. Foreign Relations, ("English Citizen" Ser.) Lon., 1882, p. 8vo. 6. The Hand-Books Trade, (International Fisheries Exhibition Series), Lon., 1883.

Walrod, Rev. Francis Frederick, M.A., graduated at University College, Durham, 1851; ordained 1853; vicar of Dalton-le-Dale 1868-70, of Throwley, Kent, 1870-71, and since then of Rushall, 1. Christian Missions before the Reformation, Lon., 1873, 12mo. 2. Confessional and Absolution: Five Sermons, Lon., 1877, 12mo.

Walrod, Theodore, C.B., M.A., 1821-1887, graduated at Balliol College, Oxford, 1846; Fellow 1850-57; an examiner in the civil service 1856-63; secretary 1863-75, and from then on commissioner. (Ed.) Letters and Journals of James, Eighth Earl of Elgin, Governor of Jamaica, Governor-General of Canada, Envoy to China, Viceroy of India: with a Preface by Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., Dean of Westminster, Lon., 1872, 8vo; 2d ed., 1873.

"Lord Elgin's nature was in the highest and finest sense of a much-abused term exemplary; and whilst rich in instruction for his followers in official service, and full of interest for all readers for a taste for biographic narrative, the story of his life makes us the personal associates of a sympathetic and high-minded man, who causes his them to his own moral level."—Atk., No. 2322.

"Mr. Walrod's part in the work is a model to be held up for imitation."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 636.

"Mr. Ward's two large volumes supply with remarkable completeness and detail a want which has long existed.
Indeed, if we were inclined to find fault with the general method of the book, we might say that the author had carried the thoroughness of his work too far."—Sat. Rev., like the drama, the writer irritates by civil when he should be conquered by the beauty around him. . . . Mr. Ward suits. He has given analyses of a great many plays and a criticism upon most of them. The history of dramatic literature is, however, still to write."—Atm., No. 2508.

him,—the power of multiplying the humorous aspects of human life in the wonderful moral kaleidoscope of his own mind; till he made the English world almost a new one, so full has it become of the magic of his whimsical extravagance."—Spectator, lv. 797.

"A study of the extent to which ignorance may soothe even true dramatic genius, and of the power of that genius when allowed to break through the cloying and suffocating medium. Mrs. Humphrey Ward writes admirably, though she errs a little in the direction of over-description. . . . The tale, though it hardly gives evidence of creative power, and though it does not make even Miss Bretherton herself a very living character, is full of interest, and new and then of true pathos."—Spectator, lvii, 1377.

3. (Trans.) Amiel's Journal: the "Journal Intime" of Henri-Frédéric Amiel: with Introduction and Notes, Lon., 1885, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 4. Robert Elsmere, Lon., 1888, 3 vols. or. 8vo; 13th ed. same year. (The 5th to the 13th ed. in 1 vol.)

"In 'Robert Elsmere' the burning questions between old-fashioned and new Christianity are discussed and presented and worked out in the lives of the characters with a fulness of knowledge, a breadth of appreciation, and a critical talent which shows a rare combination of the very highest order. . . . The critical spirit is strong in her, and it is as a critic that she makes a powerful impression. Her book does not prove her to be a novelist. The art of telling a story does not come by nature, nor marks of almost painful toil, shows, unfortunately, that a natural inaptitude for the novelist's art has not been overcome."—Ath., No. 3153.

"All that the critic of fiction commonly looks to—incident, evolution of plot, artistic sequence of events, and so forth—seems secondary when compared with the startlingly vivid presentation of a human soul in the storm and stress incidental to the renunciation of past spiritual domination and the acceptance of new hopes and aspirations. . . . Merely as a tale of contemporary English life, a fictitious record of the joys and sorrows, loves and antagonisms, fortune and misfortune, of men and women more or less like individuals whom most of us know, it is keenly interesting. . . . Mrs. Ward's literary method is that of George Eliot. Indeed, there is a curious affinity in 'Robert Elsmere' to 'Adam Bede,'—though there is perhaps not an incident, possibly no play of character or acute side-light or vivifying suggestion, that could be found in both, while the plot and general scheme are entirely dissimilar. In scope 'Robert Elsmere' is ampler, in human sympathy it is broader, in insight it is as deep, if not so keen; on the other hand, it has little of the other 'woman's dramatic' intensity, and it has one ominous flaw which 'Adam Bede' has not,—though 'Middlemarch' and 'Daniel Deronda' has not,—though 'Middlemarch' and 'Daniel Deronda' are not void of the blight,—it suffers from diffuseness."—W. SHARP, Acad., xxxiii, 183.

"This would not be the remarkable book it is by virtue either of its few very striking characters or of the keen humour and insight it evinces, without the passionate interest which it betrays in the main subject of the book, the dwindling theological belief of a mind which is intended to gain in first to last in religious development and in depth of faith. That is the real subject of this imaginary biography, and that is treated with a power, and often with a passion, which it is impossible to ignore."—Spectator, lxi, 479.

"'Robert Elsmere' is hard reading, and requires toll and effort. Yet, if it be difficult to persist, it is impossible to stop. The prisoner on the treadmill must work severely to perform his task; but if he stops he at once recovers a liberty which brings him to his senses. Here, as there, it is human infirmity which shrinks; but here, as not there, the compelling motive is within. Deliberate judgment and deep interest alike rebuke a faltering reader. The strength of the book, overlooking every obstacle, seems to lie in an extraordinary wealth of diction, never separated from thought; in a close and searching faculty of social observation; in generous appreciation of what is morally good, impartially exhibited in all directions; above all, in the sense of mission with which the writer is evidently possessed, and in the earnestness and persistency with which with which through an oblong of the time, and will probably make a deep or at least a very sensible impression; not, however, among mere novel-readers, but among those who adhere, in whatever sense, the deeper thought of the period."—*W. Essays on the Philosophy of Theism: reprinted from the "Dublin Review," and edited, with an Introduction, by Wilfrid Ward, Lon., 1884, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The introduction is an extremely clear and interesting summary of Dr. Ward's chief positions. . . . What makes these essays of Dr. Ward's so very valuable, and indeed so unique, was the remarkable robustness of Dr. Ward as a metaphysician. . . . It is impossible to exaggerate the value of this strength, clearness, and precision in dealing with such matters as are here discussed."—Spectator, lvii. 486.

"It shows us that an amusing, humorous book—one, too, that is filled with what it is the fashion to call American humor—can be written which shall not reek with vulgarity. . . . This is not a great book on Europe, nor does it pretend to be. It is entertaining, and that in itself is a good deal."—Nation, xiv. 408.

(Another chapter from the work next mentioned.)

"Mr. Waters . . . has a peculiar gift of making his reminiscences attractive to the million, and by his almost unvarnished skill in setting off his materials to the best advantage he somehow contrives to raise the study of genealogy to the level of the fine arts."—AUGUSTUS JESSOP: Acad., xiv. 231.

3. Genealogical Memoirs of the Extinct Family of Chester of Chicheley: their Ancestors and Descendants, Lon., 1878, 2 vols. 4to.

"It is the merit of Mr. Waters' volumes that they never let us feel that we are dealing with mere names; his people are alive, or at any rate we are carried back to the times when they were living; the author has that rare gift of historical imagination which enables him to sympathize with the past, and so to present us with vivid sketches of a state of things which has gone forever. Perhaps it can be said of no book in the language extending over 800 quarto pages, and reviewing more or less carefully the lives of some thousands of people, some of whom played a very inconspicuous part in their day,—a book, too, which does not even profess to be more than genealogical Memoirs of an extinct family of English gentry of the second rank,—that it is not only a readable book but an eminently valuable contribution to the history of the country. We have nothing like it on our side of the Channel, and it may be doubted whether even the old French genealogist ABRAHAM JESSOP: Acad., xv. 533.

"Mr. Waters occupies quite a unique position among genealogists. . . . Here is a genealogical monograph upon half a dozen families extinct in the male line, no more of which ever produced a greater notable than a Lord Mayor of London; and, by some unaccountable witchery, the author is able to actually read one hundred pages about these people, and makes us more than half believe that they were great and good."—AUGUSTUS JESSOP: Acad., xx. 271.

"There is in Canada, northwest from the Georgian Bay, and between it and the Ottawa River, a vast tract of wild country filled with streams and lakes and abounding in fish and game. This has been the scene of Mr. Watson's exploits, and his description of it is interesting and trustworthy. . . . Dr. Watson is to be thanked for an important contribution to the sporting literature of the country."—Natlon, xlv. 489.

Webster, Mrs. Augusta, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] b.
 1840, at Poole, Dorsetshire; daughter of Vice-Admiral George Davies; married in 1863 to Thomas Webster, law lecturer and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
 She became a member of the London school board in 1870. 1. Blanche Lisle, and other Poems, by Ceell in Five Acts, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo.

 "She has caught Mr. Browning's style with an accuracy that at times makes us almost believe that she has borrowed his words."—ibid., No. 216.
 By A. W. Lon., 1874. 8. A Housewife's Opinions, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo. (Comprises forty-eight short essays, reprinted from the Examiner, and a review of two translations of the Agamemnon,—those of Mr. Browning and Mr. Morshenson.)
 "A number of pleasantly written articles upon a variety of social subjects, which are treated at the same time with sportive play of fancy and admirable good sense."—Spectator, iii. 369.
 9. Disguises: a Drama, Lon., 1870, 12mo.
 "The type of drama (the "romantic") to which we have assigned this work is relatively low; the artificial and the law; surprises and disguises, however, in art to simplicity and below the sheer sincerity of the structure of the highest drama. But relatively to this comparatively low type it has considerable excellences: the colouring, if not very rich, is picturesque; the character-painting is sometimes the grand style of drama, that indispensible excellence of the lighter kind, it is "written in very choice" English."
Spectator, liii. 144.

 Day: a Drama, Lon., 1882. 12. Daffodil and the Crox-axions: a Romance of History, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo. 13.
 "Mrs. Augusta Webster comes second to Robert Browning as a dramatic poet, among living writers. From her earliest book down to her latest, the very beautiful "In a Day," she has shown a mental vigour—a poetic power and insight—to which it may be doubted if justice has been ever fully done, notwithstanding the high reputation in which Mrs. Webster is undoubtedly held."—WILLIAM

 She has contributed numerous articles to periodicals. 1.
 An Old Debt. By Florence Dawson, [pseud.] Lon., 1858, 2 vols. p. 8vo.
 "Its terse vigour sometimes recalls Miss Brontë, but in some respects Miss Florence Dawson is decidedly superior to the author of 'Jane Eyre.'"—Sat. Rev., vii. 278.
 2. Framleigh Hall, Lon., 1858, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

 rence Dawson. Lon., 1864, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 4. John Wesley and the Evangelical Reaction of the Eighteenth Century, Lon., 1870.
 "It fits to a certain extent in vividness, and, as it seems to us, for a certain reason. Miss Wedgwood does not sympathize with fanaticism, and in a certain sense Wesley was a fanatic, because of a one-ided man. Her quiet, thoughtful style of writing contrasts oddly with the mental tension of the man with whom she is occupied."—Spectator, xlv. 18.
 "Her characters are drawn with great fairness and discrimination."—Sat. Rev., xxx. 719.
 5. The Moral Education: a Historic Study, Lon., 1888, 8vo. (The author describes her work as "an effort to illustrate from the history of moral thought the belief that man can strive towards no virtue in which he does not feel the sympathy of God.")
 "It seems to us hardly so much a picture of the chief types of human aspiration, . . . as of the types of character which have aided and obstructed the progress of the world in their attempts to grasp the divine purpose."—*Spec-

5. Pastoral of France, [short stories,] Lon., 1877, p. 8vo.

"In their tenderness, their simplicity, their truthfulness to the slow and remote life which they picture, in the quaint accuracy of their slight touches, in the atmosphere of them, these 'Pastorals' are almost perfect."—Spectator, 1, 1310.

Weiss, Rev. John. [ante, vol. iii., add.] 1818-1859-70. 1. American Religion. Boston, 1871, 16mo. 1876, 12mo.

"Mr. Weiss is too intellectual for mirth, and there is no mirth in the book. . . . The Shakespeare part of the book is woman. . . . Aside from the style, the art and Shakespeare's good orthodox views."—Nation, xxiv. 225.

Weisse, John Adam, M.D. [ante, vol. iii., add.] 1810-1888, b. at Roppenville, Lorraine; educated at the college at Bitche and the seminary at Metz; removed to the United States 1810; graduated in medicine at Brussels 1850. 1. Origin, Progress, and Destiny of the English Language and Literature. N. York, 1878, 8vo.

"Dr. Weisse's book is on one side a sort of 'epitome encyclopedia' of everything of everything interesting which almost everything. . . . Students of science, art, theology, law, medicine, or mechanics; teachers, pulpit orators, scientists, legislators, journalists, historians, poets, dramatists, and novelists, may here find something about the growth of their respective vocabularies. . . . The reader is led through a vista of fourteen centuries of linguistic history, and not three thousand years of it. . . . But, after all, he is not a specialist in linguistics, and he cannot be trusted in the more difficult niceties of English etymology."—Nation, xxviii. 136, [F. A. Michx.]

10. Learning and thought ruin eloquence more frequently than they did it; but all (save Westcott's learning and all his thoughtfulness) cannot prevent the fire of his Christian enthusiasm, the energy of his Christian love, from bursting forth and illuminating his style, so that he is a preacher as well as a critic and a philosopher."—Ibid., xxx, 311.

"Dr. Westcott is a spiritual optimist: in the shattering of the moral degradation rather than the moral progress of society, he sees only discipline which should quicken reverence, discords resolving into harmonies. . . . The book is a model of rhetorical beauty, a storehouse of devotional aspirations. As a contribution to scientific theology it is disappointing."—Spectator, ix, 74.

"This text, on which the labour of nearly thirty years has been spent, whatever exceptions it may be open to in particular instances, has every claim to be regarded as the final result of those methods of criticism which began with the proposals of Bentley in 1720, and have been pursued by a line of distinguished scholars down to our own day. . . . "It would be difficult to overestimate the usefulness of the task which Mr. Wheeler has lately undertaken to accomplish,—the indication, namely, of 'the political status of those countries which lie between Persia on the one side and Khyber, Bokhara, and Afghanistan on the other.' But Mr. Wheeler's 'political status' turns out to be something little short of chaos. The 'Memorandum' reveals a state of things in which boundaries, principalities, and powers change and interchange in a manner suggestive of the doctrine of transmutation of energy."—*Sat. 7. India under British Rule, from the Foundation of the East India Company, Lon., 1885, 8vo.

Into three hundred pages of goodly type he has now condensed the whole story of British rule in India, with the skill of one who has thoroughly mastered his subject and knows how to make the most judicious selection of matter in the smallest space. And even more than this; he has produced a readable as well as an accurate work."—ibid., No. 3070.

There are some parts of Mr. White's book which we should cut out, and there are other parts which are spoiled by a needless striving after popularity; but there is a great deal which bears the marks of sound sense and keen observation. — Sat. Rev., xxxi, 374.

"The faults of this well-known book are due to the author's dogmatism and to his lack of a sound knowledge of English in its Anglo-Saxon period; but the book is decidedly useful as a stimulus to habits of intelligent speaking and writing." — Critic, v. 156.

Whitman, Walter. (commonly WHI.) [ante, vol. iii., add.] has resided in Camden, N.J., since 1873, having been obliged by a paralytic attack, which left his physical powers permanently weakened, to resign his clerkship in Washington. In 1880, on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, he was present at a public dinner attended by a large number of his friends and admirers. Besides the editions of "Leaves of Grass" mentioned ante, vol. iii., one (the fourth) was published in Washington in 1872, another in Camden in 1876, and another in Boston in 1882, the last especially being much enlarged and the matter differently arranged. Copies of the first edition are now very scarce, and command high prices; of the third edition, (1860,) many copies fraudulently obtained were disseminated in America. 1. Memoirs during the War, 1867, 12mo. 2. Democratic Vistas, [prose essays], Wash., 1870, 12mo; republicated, with a preface by the author addressed mainly to his English readers, in the "Camelot" Series, Lon., 1888, 16mo. 3. After All, not to Create only. (Containing an introductory chapter, many short poems written between 1850 and 1880, estimates of Burns and Tennyson, and a portrait of the author.)

"In him we meet a man not shaped out of old-world clay, not cast in any old-world mould, and hard to name by any old-world name. In his self-assertion there is a manner of powerful nonchalance which is not assumed; he does not peep timidly from behind his works to glean our suffrages, but seems to say, 'Take me or leave me, here I am, a solid and not an inconsiderable fact of the universe.' He disturbs our classifications. He attracts us; he repels us; he excites our curiosity, wonder, admiration, love; or our extreme repugnance. He does anything except leave us indifferent. However we feel toward him, we cannot despise him. He is a summons and a challenge! He must be understood, and so accepted, or must be got rid of. Passed by he cannot be. . . . He is the first representative democrat in art of the American continent. Not that he is to be regarded as a model or a guide; great principles and great passions which must play their part in the future are to be found in his writings; but these have not yet cleared themselves from their amorphous surroundings. At the same time he is before all else a living man, and must not be compelled to appear as mere official representative of anything. He will not be comprehended in a formula. No view of him can impute the substance, the life and movement of his manhood, which contracts and dilates, and is all over sensitive and vital. . . . As in all else, so with regard to the form of what he writes, what Whitman can find no authority superior to himself, or rather to the rights of the subject which engages him. There is, as Mr. Rossetti has observed, 'a very powerful and majestic rhythmic sense' throughout his writings, prose and verse. (If we consent to apply the term verse to any of them,) and this rhythmic sense, as with every great poet, is original and inborn. His works, it may be, exhibit no perfect crystal of artistic form, but each is a man's spirit saturated with form in solution. He fears to lose the instinctive in any process of elaboration, the vital in anything which looks like mechanism. . . . One feels, as it has been well said, that although no counting of syllables will reveal the mechanism of the music, the music is there, and that 'one would not for something change ears with those who cannot hear it.' . . . Nevertheless, when we read not the lyrical portions of Whitman's poetry, but what may be called the prosaic, the prosaic of thoughts and things, a suspicion arises that if the form be suitable here to the matter, it must be because the matter belongs rather to the chaos than the kosmos of the new-created world of art."—E. DOWDEN: Studies in Literature, 43-87.

"One great anomaly of Whitman's case has been, that while he is an aggressive champion of democracy and of the working-man, in a broad sense of the term working-man, his admirers have been almost exclusively of a class the furthest possibly removed from that which labors for daily bread by manual work. Whitman has always been truly cavalere to the multitude. It was only those who knew much of poetry, and loved it greatly, who penetrated the singular shell of his verses and got to the rich, pulpy kernel. Even with connoisseurs, Whitman has been somewhat of an acquired taste. . . . A cardinal sin in the eyes of most critics is the use of French, Spanish, and American-Spanish words, which are scattered here and there, as if Whitman had picked them up, sometimes slightly inaccurately, from wandering minstrels, vagabonds, or fugitives from one of Walker's raids. He shows crudely the American way of incorporating into the language a definition of its original meaning, just as we absorb the different nationalities that crowd over from Europe. His thought and his mode of expression are immense, often flat, very often monotonous, like our great sprawling cities with their endless scattering of suburbs. Yet when one gets the 'hang' of it, there is a colossal grandeur in conception and execution that must finally convince whoever will be patient enough to look for it. His rhythm, so much burlesqued, is all of a part with the man and his ideas. It is apparently confined, really most carefully schemed, certainly to a high degree original. It has withal the present writer is the finest thing in the music of Wagner, — a great booming movement or undertone, like the noise of heavy surf. . . . He certainly represents, as no other writer in the world, the struggling, blundering, sound-hearted, somewhat coarse, but still manly and the invulnerable of western civilization that is cramped in the United States."—Essays from The Critic, 177 et seq.

"In spite of an uneven and emphatic key of expression, something trenchant and straightforward, something simple and surprising, distinguishes his poems. He has sayings that come home to one like the Bible. We fall upon Whitman, after the works of so many men who write better, with a sense of relief from strain, with a sense of touchy nature, as when one passes out of the flaring, noisy thoroughfares of a great city into what he himself has called, with unexcelled imaginative justice of language, 'the huge and thoughtful night.'"—H. L. STEVENSON: Familiar Studies of Men and Books, 116.

Whitney, William Dwight, Ph.D., LL.D., J.U.D., [ante, vol. iii., add.], brother of J. D. Whitney, supra; professor of comparative philology, in conjunction with Sanskrit, at Yale since 1870. He is a corresponding member of the French Institute, and has received the order of merit from the Prussian government, and has contributed to leading American periodicals and to the journals of scientific societies of which he is a member. 1. (Ed.) The Taittiriya-Pratigakhyā: Translation and Notes, (American Oriental Soc. Pub.), New Haven, 1872, 8vo. (For this work the author was awarded the Bopp medal by the Berlin Academy.) 2. Oriental and Linguistic Studies: the Veda, the Avesta, the Science of Language, N. York, 1872, cr. 8vo.; new ed., 1875.

"First published in the Journal of the American Oriental Society and our heavy reviews, they are now col-lected in one volume, and thousands who will read them gladly. . . . Thoroughness is his most marked characteristic. Then pressed with as much simplicity. And compression never fails. In a wonderfully small space we get a sufficient Vedic study of the Vedas themselves, and their relations to modern mind and life. Now and then the author rises with his thought to rhythm and eloquence. The essay on the Avesta has the same merits. . . . In two articles on Max Müller's Lectures on Language, (in which Professor Whitney is very exacting, and in those which follow, . . . Professor Whitney sets forth his views of the nature of language against Müller, Bleek, Schliecher, and Stenhal, own views, we often dissent; but when we read his assails on others, we often assent. The fact seems to be that this region of language is under the concurrent jurisdiction of those who would exclude the will from it, and those who would make the will sole cause in it, alike err."—Nation, xvi, 96, H. A. Murrie.

"The general reader will hardly be much interested in the earlier essays, which are mainly occupied with the severe censures on other scholars. But the essays on 'Language' will interest a far wider circle of readers, for the author is always clear and vigorous, and his very often track to the student."—ibid., xv, 722.

"He is the veteran of an epoch that can never recur; that scarcely can be equalled, however significant future periods may seem from the artist's point of view. The primitive life, the old struggle for liberty, are idealized in his strains. Much of both his strength and incompleteness is due to his Hebrew nature; for he is the incarnation of Biblical heroism, of the moral energy that breathed alike through a cycle of change from dogma to reason, in Hooker, Edwards, Parker, Garrison, and Emerson."—E. C. STRIDMAN, Index of America, 130.

"The implied contempt of the author for that unhappy, but comparatively unimportant, section of the community who were educated elsewhere than at Eton may perhaps annoy sensitive outsiders. But it is perfectly certain that the book could not have been written but for the exuberant Eton animus of the author, and we should not wish to deal harshly with feelings which have procured us the pleasure of reading some excellent and excellently told new Eton stories, and of having from an eye-witness the exact facts concerning a number of already celebrated episodes in the history of the school."—*Sat. "He has lucidly expounded the main characteristics of each successive phase of religious thought. He has given here endeavoured to recall their fellow-religionists from their slumbering indolence to a purer conception of the godhead. He has carefully compared all the minute ceremonies now performed at the birth, tonsure, marriage, and death of an orthodox Hindu with the ritual of Menu or the dictates of ancient sages. The more ponderous portions of the work are succeeded by anecdotes, which are well chosen and appropriate."—Sat. Rev., lvii, 488.

Wilson, Andrew, [ante, vol. iii., WILSON, A., third of the name, add.] 1831-1881, son of Rev. John Wilson, D.D., of Bombay, infra; was educated at Edinburgh University, and at Tübingen, Germany; began his literary career as a writer for the Bombay Times, and soon afterwards became connected with Blackwood's Magazine, to which he contributed during the remainder of his life. About 1860 he became editor of the China Mail, and accompanied the Peking expedition to Tientsin.

For a number of years before his death his health, owing to an affection of the heart, was very feeble. His journey into the upper valleys of the Himalayas in 1874 was undertaken at a time when he was unable to walk or to mount a horse. He had himself carried in a druid; by a party of native bearers, and, unaccompanied by any European, made his way from Simla to Chinese Tibet, and thence along the whole line of the Western Himalayas, sometimes travelling at an altitude of 18,000 feet above the sea. The Abode of Snow: Observations on a Journey from Chinese Tibet to the Indian Caucasus, through the Upper Valleys of the Himalaya, Edin. and Lon., 1875, 8vo; 2d ed., 1876.

"After a distinguished literary career in China, Mr. Wilson has latterly made Western India his home. . . . There is an airy freshness about Mr. Wilson's style, which seems to hint to the reader that passage after passage was really composed and written down whilst the explorer was at his favourite height—12,000 feet—above the level of the sea, with the immeasurable expanses of snowy peaks before him, and beneath his feet the shimmering glaciers which are the cradle of the mightiest rivers in India. . . His travels are not very remarkable ones, but he describes all he meets with on his way with luminous spirit. —Ath., No. 2466.

The Vale of Kashmir produced on this traveller its never-fading effect; and the accounts of the ruins of the lakes, and of the summer capital of Srinagar, though to be found in the works of other travellers, are full of interesting details. . . It is another record of untried and unexplored regions; and while it reveals new life and unknown regions; and while it thinks Mont Blanc lame and Elbruz overrated, it affords some help to the comprehension of strange races and the solution of topics which are constantly being pressed on the notice of the Viceroy of India or the Secretary of State. —Sat. Rev., xl. 367.

Wilson, Charles Heath, d. 1832; b. in Edinburgh; son of Andrew Wilson, a distinguished Scotch landscape-painter; studied art in Edinburgh, and in 1826 removed with his father to Italy, but afterwards returned to Edinburgh, where he practised as an architect. About 1846 he was appointed master of the New Art School in Glasgow, and retained that position till 1864, when he retired, and during the remainder of his life resided in Italy, chiefly in Florence, where he was the centre of a large literary and artistic circle. Life and Works of Michelangelo Buonarroti: the Life partly compiled from that by Aurelio Gotti. Illust. Lond., 1876, Svo.; 2d ed., 1881.

"Mr. Wilson has aimed at producing a true history, disavowing most of the more romantic and psychological analyses of the critics, and seeking to give to his subject readers. The success has been commensurate to his advantages, his diligence, learning, and taste. . . The book will mark an epoch in English studies of the great master." —Ath., No. 2266.

"The work of Mr. Wilson has not any more than that and scope of a sufficient or ideal biography. But . . . it is to be applauded for some merits of its own; it establishes one or two special points for good, and in general gives English readers an intelligible view of the new materials and their bearing." —SIDNEY COLVIN: Acad., x.

"The narrative virtually consists of two independent stories: for, whilst Mr. Wilson describes the route from Zanzibar to the Victoria Nyanza and his five journeys across that lake, as well as Uganda, where he resided for many months, his fellow-worker is content to deal with the regions to the north." —Ath., No. 2829.

"A most instructive and valuable book of travel, written in a style which is a happy combination of sprightliness and modesty, by two representatives of the Church Missionary Society, who were sent to Uganda, expressly because Mr. Stanley had said that the realm of King Mtesa—the singular potentate whom 'discovered' in his travels—offered an admirable field for evangelization." —Spectator, lv. 472.

Wilson, Lieut.-Col. Charles Townshend. 1. James the Second and the Duke of Berwick, Lond., 1876, Svo.

"A much better title than that given to the work before us would be the annals of James the Second, with some contribution to the early history of standing armies, and deserves to be studied by every soldier who takes an interest in his profession." —Ath., No. 2809.

"He has given abundant proofs that he can upon occasion write neatly and well, but, as a rule, his style may be described as Carlyle-and-water, with a very large infusion of water. . . If Carlyle's battle-pieces are as superior to Macaulay's as Veruc's are to Barker's, Col. Wilson's battle-pieces are more sign-boards, compared with the brilliant and highly-lit-up, if somewhat artificial, battle-pieces of Macaulay." —Spectator, xlix. 105.

"Military readers will find in Colonel Wilson a critic who justly holds that the courage of his opinions, and something from generals who lived before Count Moltke.

It is the more to be regretted that its author should not have confined himself more closely to his subject and which no biography could have better spared." —Sat. Rev., xlv. 113.

- "Dr. Daniel Wilson... having studied with some care the doctrine of evolution as taught by Mr. Darwin and his disciples, finds, as many have found before him, a gap in the chain which ought continuously to connect the highest with the lowest organization. In his mind the very worst savage doubtfully refuses to be looked on as the very best monkey. . . . Mr. Wilson fails to discover the 'missing link' in the realm of reality. He wants a being superior to the very wisest ape in every reasoning power short of rationality, but inferior to the most (least?) unskilled, defenceless savage rellis. This being, not appearing in the realm of reality, Mr. Wilson discovers in the Calliban of Shakespeare, who, in company with the Calliban of Mr. Robert Browning, is carefully considered as a Monster, a Metaphysician, and a Theologian."—*Sat. meet admirably one conspicuous want of the church and time. . . Mr. Wilson is clear-sighted enough to perceive, and courageous enough to avow, that Christianity must share, to a certain extent, the evolution which is the con-

Wilson, Sir William James Erasmus, LL.D., F.R.S., [ante, vol. iii., add.], 1809-1884. He had taken up the study of dermatology, then very little understood, in the first instance to alleviate the sufferings of the London poor. Of his labors in it he himself said late in life, "I found it a quackery; I left it a science."
He founded the chair of dermatology in the College of Surgeons in 1869, and that of pathology in the College of University in 1881, and made other munificent gifts to medical institutions. About eight years before his death he became deeply interested in Egyptology. He was president of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, had Cleopatra's Needle transported at his own expense from Alexandria to London, and spent much of his time in the study of Egyptian history. 1. Lectures on Dermatol-

"One of the most important books, dealing with political subjects, which have ever issued from the American press. . . . His book is evidently modelled on Mr. Bage-set's English Constitution, and it will, though the praise is so high as to be almost extravagant, bear comparison with that inestimable work."—NATION, xl. 115.

"This volume is a Centennial throes. . . Lives of thirteen worthy women from the old thirteen States, written by women belonging in each case to the same state as the subject of the biography,—such was the scheme of the Women's Department of the Centennial Commission. . . The result is five individual biographies and one collective. ('Women of New Hampshire.'). . . The least substantial chapter in this book is the sketch of Rebecca Motte, of South Carolina; the best, as a literary performance, is Mrs. Sarah Butler Wister's notice of Deborah Logan. . . This collection of biographies fully justifies the pains taken to gather it, and will long be read with interest and profit."—Nation, xxv. 200.

"Mrs. Henry Wood has certain qualities which should have made her one of our best novel-writers; popular is another word. No one lays out the plan of a story better than she does, and even Mr. Wilkie Collins himself, to whom ingenuity is the Alpha and Omega of his craft, is not greater than she is in the cleverness with which she devises her puzzles and fits the parts together. But Mrs. Wood loses herself in certain besetting sins, which are apparently beyond her power to overcome. She is petty, commonplace, and incalculably vulgar. . . . We do not find in her books a trace of that professional pride and thoroughness with which she desires to make a thing good all through without reference to publishers or profit."—*Sat. *Mr. Wood's special power never comes out more remarkably than when tracing the resemblance between the modern contrivances of man to supply, not necessities, but comforts, and even luxuries, and he compares these with the habits of some of the queer little things in which he takes such delight. The subject of Insect-architecture has been well-nigh exhausted. Mr. Wood has entered upon a much wider field of research, and what he has to tell will find eager listeners."—Spectator, 1, 699.

"It would perhaps be too much to say that the late Mr. J. G. Wood ever occupied a prominent place in the literature of his country; but we should think there had been few more successful workers in his own particular line. The gift of popular exposition was his to a marked degree, and the art of conveying knowledge in a simple and attractive form. The knowledge, too, was of an extremely varied and comprehensive kind. The man who had a thorough acquaintance with Mr. Wood's works would become a kind of walking dictionary of useful information acquired through the study of literature far lighter than nineteenth-century novels published in these days."—Spectator, July 12, 1890, 37.

"Undoubtedly my father's great distinction was that of being the pioneer in the work of popularizing natural history and presenting it to the general public in the form of an alluring and deeply interesting study. He had many subsequent imitators, but he himself imitated no one. He found zoology a dull and dry study, open to none but the favoured few who enjoyed special aptitude, special opportunities, and special circumstances for its pursuit. He left it an open book of world-wide interest, needing no scholar to read or interpret it, no unusual zeal or persistence in order to decipher its secrets. His was the pen that united a dogged perseverance which enabled him to accomplish a work which, even so far as its mere extent is concerned, very few men have excelled."—*The Rev. J. G. "Here is a record of honest hard work, carried on for a long time in the teeth of difficulties of every kind, and rewarded with discoveries of real and high moment. It is something to be able to draw a picture of the famous temple which passed for one of the wonders of the world. And, brought to light the precious store of inscriptions which Mr. Wood puts together at the end of his sumptuous volume."—Sat. Rev., XIII, 339.

"Henceforth the record of Poe's life may be regarded as being, for the first time, established. . . . So far as the biography is concerned, he has perhaps given us the final word; so far as criticism goes, there is nothing in the book so admirable as Mr. Stedman's remark that Poe's place is, after all, rather with Dore than with the masters of the art."—Nation, xl, 157.

Pygmalion, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo.

"The poem contains some very striking passages, and every now and then one finds an eminently picturesque image or a sounding and excellent line. . . . Pygmalion is hardly, on the whole, an advance on 'My Beautiful Lady.' The earlier poem has a spontaneity and a tender grace of sentiment which are less conspicuous in the present work; while Mr. Woolner seems to find a greater barter of expression in lyrical measures than in blank verse."—Ath., No. 2826.

"Dr. Woolsey's book . . . is divided into two parts, the speculative and the historical or descriptive, or, as he himself calls it, the practical. The two parts are not distinctly separated, however, as a good deal of speculation, and not unnecessarily or improperly, runs through the description. The work, taken altogether, is a very important contribution to the literature of the subject.—indeed, the most important American contribution to it since Calhoun's. . . The portion of the work which we have called the speculative portion . . . impresses us, however, as less clear and instructive than the historical and descriptive portion."—Nation, xxvi, 238.

"It was a rare opportunity to have discovered so new a field in the little lonely military station on the far island of the North. . . It suggests combinations and possibilities quite beyond the common routine of American novels. Miss Woolson has unfortunately given it to us only in a few fragmentary sketches."—Nation, xxxv, 182.

"Bishop Wordsworth would relieve Shakespeare of his obscurities, his redundancies, his bombast, his slipshod diction, his far-fetched images, his quibbles devoid of wit, and present him 'as a model of literary excellence.' He would do for Shakespeare what Shakespeare might be expected to do for himself if he were now alive and were a bishop of the Scottish Episcopal Church. . . Though marred by some serious faults, it is an excellent book."—E. Dowden's Acad., xxiii, 30.

"The general significance of the subject is perhaps one which it requires the hand of a master to do justice to, and which a treatment like that adopted in the present volume is—half perfunctory, half discursive, is certainly ill adapted for making clear to English readers."—Sat. Rev., xliii, 189.

"The book is the history of a short episode in the life of a good man and brave soldier—Colonel Durnford—between the sad affair of the Bushman's River Pass and the fatal fate of Isandhwana, where . . . Colonel Durnford fell. The historian is an enthusiastic young friend, . . . whose simple, if sometimes too detailed, narrative leaves behind a very vivid picture of the object of his devotion."—Spectator, lili, 278.

"On no reasonable principle can we think it necessary to have given twelve hundred pages even to the life of such a man as Bishop Patteson. A biography is not a cairn whose builders show their reverence for the dead by the number of stones which they accumulate. . . . Having indulged in these complaints, let us add that even a less skilful biographer than Miss Yonge could hardly have failed, with the materials available, to produce a book of no common interest. . . . Such a life, with its grand lessons of usefulness, is a blessing and an honour to the age in which it is lived. The biography which we have here reviewed cannot be studied without pleasure and profit."—Sat. Rev., xxvii. 818.

- "The authors of the work before us has undertaken a task of some difficulty,—to give, in English and for general readers, a concise account of Schopenhauer and his writings. The book has, of course, the defects of its class, but bears evidence of honest care to present a true representation of the man and his teaching."—Ath., No. 2543.
4. Gotthold Ephraim Lessing: his Life and Works, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.
- "Of these two biographies that by Mr. Sime [see SIME, JAMES, supra] is the more elaborate. He assumes in his reader an entire ignorance of who Lessing was and what he wrote. . . . Miss Zimmern, on the other hand, presupposes too general an acquaintance with subjects in which she is profoundly versed. . . . Both biographers draw their material from the same sources; the difference in treatment consists in the lady principally confining herself to a sketch of Lessing's life, and the gentleman superadding a minute analysis of all his writings, and giving lengthened comments upon them. The concisions in either case are almost identical, and are substantially just. What the reader will miss in both are those biographical details which impart interest and vividness to a narrative."—Ath., No. 2623.
- "Mr. Sime's book must be admitted to be the better of the two, and indeed Miss Zimmern's is so much marred by her imperfect knowledge of English that it will need much careful revision by a competent English scholar to make it worthy of the welcome which it otherwise deserves to meet. . . . Were it not for the sad defect which we have mentioned, and even, perhaps, in spite of that defect, the general reader would gain, we think, a clearer view of the Lessing from Miss Zimmern than from her rival and predecessor."—Spectator, II. 672.

- "Miss Zimmern has . . . mastered a pure, simple English which fits the antiquity of her subject, and the stories are told in a manner which must provoke the envy and admiration of all who have attempted this singularly difficult style of composition."—Sat. Rev., IV. 219.
7. Maria Edgeworth, ("Eminent Women" Ser.), Lon., 1883, cr. 8vo.
- "Miss Helen Zimmern . . . has been able to justify herself as a biographical cook by collecting a mass of material so copious and varied as to make her task easy and her work original. . . . She possesses a just sense of proportion, and great skill in the arrangement and treatment of materials. Her knowledge is seldom defective, and her critical judgments are temperate and sound. . . . Her style . . . lacks animation, character, sparkle."—Sat. Rev., IV. 11, 552.
