Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Did she tell you how the bracelet came to be lying in the Lady's Walk?" asked the countess.

"No," replied her son; "she seemed so ill and unlike herself that I did not mention it. I am sure it is all right, mother," he continued, seeing the expression of her face; "we shall find it no mystery after all. My wife can make all clear in a few words."

Despite his assertion, the morning wore on heavily for Lord Bayneham. Two things weighed upon his mind—the notes he had heard his wife received, and the fact of finding her bracelet in the Lady's Walk. It might be all nonsense—the notes nothing more than a memorandum; but the bracelet. There he paused; there were but two solutions to the mystery—either she, his sweet and gentle young wife, had been there—for what motive he could not imagine—or some one had carried it from the room. Either alternative he felt to be unpleasant. Still she was far from being of a suspicious nature, and would have rested perfectly satisfied with one word of excuse but for the deadly fear which blanched his wife's face when she saw the bracelet in his hand. There was no explanation for that; to feel fear she must be conscious of wrong; yet what wrong could he imagine her capable of—that gentle, guileless girl, whose mind and soul were as pure as an unstained lily?

He tried to make himself feel sure that Hilda would clear away all the unpleasant mystery by a few simple words. Twice he went to the door of her room and heard with half-patient satisfaction that she still slept; and it was long after mid-day when Pauline told him her lady was awake, but seemed very ill. He looked very ill. He looked with unutterable astonishment upon the change in the fair young face, wrought in these few hours. Could it be mere illness or fatigue that had blanched even the lips, and darkened the violet eyes with so deep a shadow? Was it illness that caused her to clasp her hands when she saw him, as one does who prays in mortal agony?

"Hilda," he said, "you look as though you suffered terribly. What is it? No trouble can have come to you without my knowing it. What makes you ill? Why you look so strangely at me? What has come between us?" He waited, but she spoke not a word.

"You would never keep any secret from me, I know," he continued, "or I should fancy that something terrible weighed upon your mind. Do not look so sad. Raise your eyes to mine, love, and if aught troubles you, tell me—let me share it."

He clasped one arm round her and drew her golden head close to him.

"Has any one insulted or annoyed you?" he asked gently.

"No," she replied—"what could make you think of such a thing?"

"Are you sure, Hilda," he asked, "that you have not been subject to annoyance from any of our guests?"

"No," she said again; but he saw her face flush with pain. "Why do you ask me so strange a question, Claude?"

"My mother thought that on two occasions Mr. Fulton had annoyed you by slipping nonsensical little notes into your hand," he repeated. "Is it true, Hilda?"

He saw her pause before replying to his question.

"It is true he gave me two little notes," she said in a faltering voice, "but they did not cause me any annoyance, Claude."

"May I see them?" he asked.

"They are destroyed," she answered in the same low, constrained voice.

"Will you tell me their contents?" he asked again.

"I cannot!" she gasped.

He knew not what to say; never once had the eyes wherein truth and love shone so brightly been raised to his. The long, dark lashes drooped on the white cheek, and she spoke as one under compulsion.

"Perhaps," he said, "it was nothing that concerned you—some little affair of his own. Was it so?"

"I am no jealous husband, Hilda, interfering and prying into your concerns. Since we have been married I have never sought to know anything of your letters. I have trusted you implicitly in all things, as real and loyal men do trust. I should not interfere now, but that I have been told those notes were almost forced upon you—that you received them unwillingly; and it has caused me to wonder much what they contained."

She raised her eyes to his face, and their worn, wild expression struck him painfully.

"I cannot tell you, Claude," she replied; "I would if it were possible."

"Do you know, Hilda," he said gravely, "that nothing can justify you in keeping secrets from me? We should have but one mind and one heart between us. You have no right to withhold anything from me. My idea of married life is one of perfect confidence, trust, and unity. I cannot imagine separate interests."

He saw a look of intense pain steal over her gentle face, but she made no effort to answer him.

"I suppose it is useless for me to repeat my wish," he added. "I cannot force your confidence, if you will not give it to me. I must be content to know there are depths in my wife's heart hidden from me."

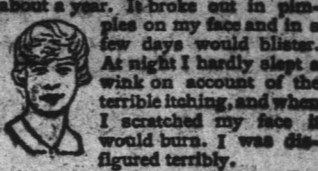

Lady Hilda shuddered as she remembered what those depths were. He noted her gesture, and said, "I am not angry, Hilda; I am grieved, wounded more deeply than I can tell you. What secret can my little wife be keeping from me?"

She made some slight movement, as though longing to throw herself at his feet and tell him.

On her lips the words trembled, "I am an impostor—a convict's daughter. I have no right to be here—send me away." Once she began them, but the sound of her own voice frightened her, and she stopped—with a scared, wild look on her pale face that grieved and amazed her husband.

Lord Bayneham sat for some minutes in silence, gazing wistfully at the beautiful, trembling girl by his side. He was sadly grieved. His young wife had ever seemed to him pure, gentle, and truthful as a child. Now, with a woman's sorrow on her brow, with her averted eyes and trembling words, she was like a stranger to him; and it was a deep sigh at the unpleasant task before him that he recommended his inquiries.

"We will discuss that subject, then, Hilda—the first secret ever kept between us," said he. "Now explain for me this mystery—how came your

ECZEMA ON FACE ITCHED TERRIBLY
 In Pimples For About A Year, Hardly Slept, Cuticura Heals.

 "I was troubled with eczema for about a year, it broke out in pimples on my face and in a few days would blister. At night I hardly sleep a wink on account of the terrible itching, and when I scratched my face it would burn. I was disfigured terribly.
 "I saw an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a fine sample. I bought more, and after using two cakes of Soap and one box of Ointment I was healed."

bracelet, the one you should have valued for my sake, to be lying in the Lady's Walk?"

Then the calm of that sorrowful young face was broken; a quiver of pain passed over each feature; a look of despair shadowed the violet eyes; but Lady Hilda allowed the anxious, eager man to repeat his question before she seemed to understand it.

"Spare me, Claude," she said, holding out her hands to him.

"Spare you, Hilda!" he cried. "What can you mean?—spare you! What have I ever done that you should speak so to me? Would I not spare you every sorrow if I could? I only ask to shield you from all care, to make you happy, and make you love me as I love you. What am I to spare you?"

"Any questions," she replied, weeping bitterly, "I cannot answer them, and they torture me."

"You cannot think they are pleasant for me," he said. "Hilda, my mother was with me when I found that bracelet. I read a doubt of you in her eyes; it made me indignant. I cannot explain it. Plainly as eyes could speak, here said to me there was something wrong. I brought her with me to see how mistaken she was, and you fainted with fear at the question which should have cleared away all silly mystery. That was how you cleared her doubt; can you satisfy my love in no better manner? Am I not quite right in saying that you wore that bracelet on your arm when I bade you good-night last evening? It was there, was it not?"

"Yes," she replied despairingly, "it was there."

"And the first thing this morning I found it in the Lady's Walk," he continued; "yet you have never left your room. Can you not explain how it came to be there?"

"I might tell you a falsehood," she cried—"I might invent false stories that would satisfy you—but I will not do so; let Fate do her worst. No untrue words shall stain my lips. I cannot tell you the truth, and I scorn all evasion."

Lord Bayneham's face grew dark as he listened.

"More mysteries!" he said bitterly. "You acknowledge, then, you could explain it if you would, but will not."

Lady Hilda bowed her head, and he turned from the sight of that white, despairing face.

"Are you trying to shield any one who has robbed you?" he asked, his eyes growing bright at the thought.

"No," she replied, "no one has tried to rob me."

"Did you drop the bracelet yourself?" he inquired.

"Do not ask me, Claude!" she cried, with clasped hands, her face streaming with tears.

MONTREAL SAUSAGES

We have just received a fresh supply of Montreal Pork Sausages which we recommend to those of our customers who want all Pork Sausages without adulteration or filler. As these Sausages are preserved in brine, people who wish to have them fresh are advised to place the Sausages in running water over-night to draw out the salt pickle. One pound of all Pork Sausage contains as much meat as two pounds of 50/50 filled sausage. The Montreal sausages which we sell, are therefore worth double the price of 50/50 filled sausages; besides they are guaranteed by Canadian Government Inspector to be made with clean fresh pork and are wholesome food. The French Attitude.

Yesterday's foreign dispatches contained the startling intelligence that France was ready to seize the Ruhr district of Germany to-day. Whether or not that extreme event will take place current news will apprise us. So far has France gone in this matter that even the very hour of the seizure has been determined upon, and the army of invasion is being held in readiness to march at a moment's notice. Every last bit of equipment has been perfected and every detail arranged. But it must not be supposed that Germany will view such aggressiveness with equanimity. There is some fight left in the Teuton yet, and it will be surprising indeed if any French advance is not resisted by equally armed forces, unless the German is playing for sympathy. It is idle to suppose that France with her thirty-eight millions of population, can overcome Germany with over sixty millions of people. And there are arms and ammunition in Germany yet. The help offered by the Belgians may or may not mean much. The Belgian is a notoriously poor fighter and has not much stomach for being in the van of battle. Past history furnishes ample proof of that. The trouble with France is that her amour propre has been wounded, and that country sees only the national side of things. That she has been deeply wronged by Germany, her country shattered and crippled, many of her chief historic and industrial centres laid in ruins, all will admit. Also the war laid enormous burdens of debt upon her, and she visualizes an unrepentant Germany refusing or evading the duty of making reparation. When France was under the thumb of the German at the close of the Franco-Prussian war in 1871, the conqueror dictated his terms in Paris, and the last German bayonet did not disappear over the border until the last franc of the enormous war indemnity imposed by the victors had been paid. Now naturally France wants her own back, and if Germany will not pay, an attempt is to be made to compel reimbursement. But is it wise to assist resort to force of arms? Germany alleges that she cannot pay if not given time for reconstruction. At the same time no such plea on the part of France was accepted by the man of blood and iron, Bismarck. France had to find the money and France found it. The French do not forget this, and in their hour of revenge are not likely to. The move to occupy and seize upon the Rhineland has been born of German shiftiness. "Leave them their eyes to cry with" was all the sympathy French men and women received from the German after the peace of Paris, and France remembers. Hence her attitude of inflexibility toward Germany. "No international situation," says one commentator, "could be more pathetic, more difficult or fraught with greater danger. It is easier to pray than to hope for an easy or satisfactory solution of the problems involved. However, things may turn out, or whatever the ultimate outcome may be, there is no need to entertain bitter, much less hostile, feelings toward France. Her difficulties are at least as great as those of Britain. They are certainly more immediately and painfully pressing."

Governor Visits Museum

Yesterday afternoon, His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by his private secretary, visited the Museum, being received by Hon. Dr. Campbell and Mr. J. W. McNelly of the Agriculture and Mines Department. Sir William was shown through the building and the various exhibits were pointed out by Mr. Wm. Dugan, in all of which his Excellency exhibited a lively interest, afterwards expressing himself as well pleased with the visit and all that he saw. He promised to pay another and more extended visit ere long.

The above club opened the season's debates last night, with the subject: Resolved—"That Sectional Government of a country ultimately terminates in disaster to that country." The affirmative was led by Rev. J. Brinton, supported by H. Cullen. The negative by H. G. Ford, supported by J. Jacobs. Other speakers were Harold Smith, Hubert Smith, J. Adams, E. Morgan and R. Ewing. The debate proved both interesting and profitable, and was enjoyed by all, notwithstanding the discomfort of going and returning in such inclement weather. The affirmative won by a majority of eight votes.

Waste of Water.

PRESSURE REDUCED BY OPEN TAPS.

Taking into consideration the mild weather of yesterday, there was a big wastage of water in the city. The Water Inspector has been given strict orders by the St. John's Municipal Council to search carefully where water is being wasted, to this end he has been successful in a great many cases, and the owners of the houses have been summoned to appear in Court. Open taps last night caused a reduction of 15 pounds pressure by test.

CAPT. EDWARD ENGLISH.

(H. F. SHORTS.)

By the death of Capt. Edward English, which occurred at his residence, 14 Queen's Road at one o'clock yesterday afternoon, fortified by the rites of Holy Church, one of our most prominent and best known citizens and experienced master mariners has been removed from amongst us. Capt. English was born in St. John's 76 years ago, and up to his demise was one of the few of the remaining early pupils of St. Bonaventure's College in the days of the illustrious prelate, Rt. Rev. Dr. Mullock. He was of the old stock in the best and truest sense of the word. He did not believe in frills, nor did he chase after show— in a word he may well be styled a rough diamond. But it was amongst seafaring men that his true character shone forth in all its splendour, being ever ready to assist the youth of our country in their ambition to become masters and mates in our mercantile marine, and there are very many of our countrymen to-day, both at home and abroad, who owe their success in life, in no small degree, to the great interest taken in their welfare by the veteran mariner during the past thirty years or more. Nor were his efforts for the bettering of his fellow-countrymen confined to those in his own walk of life—the noble avocation of following the sea—because he always took an active interest in all charitable and patriotic movements, and contributed to the full extent of his ability. As a Catholic his ardent faith manifested itself in virile devotion. The prominent position which he held in this city as Harbor Master and Examiner-in-Chief for masters and mates made no difference in his intercourse with his less fortunate countrymen, and the labors in which his career abounded tell of the greatness and versatility of his talents, and the integrity of his life, free alike from the taint of avarice or the insouciance of pride. He was a man who was universally esteemed for his many fine traits of character, and which he exhibited not only to those who knew him, but to those having merely a casual acquaintance. His death is regretted by all classes of the community. He took the deepest interest in the many sports of the city, but more particularly in our great National Day of the Regatta on the waters of historic Quidi Vidé Lake, at which for over a quarter of a century he was one of the most energetic and enthusiastic members of the Committee, and for many years, in conjunction with the late James H. Monroe, Esq., and others, held the responsible position of judge, in which his clear and impartial decisions and life-long experience were never questioned. His familiar figure on the scene of so many famous contests will be sadly missed from the "Judges' boat" by the thousands who will in future visit the historic waters during our annual Derby Day. He was a member of the Terra Nova Council of the Knights of Columbus, Hon. Agent for the English Mercantile Marine Service Association, and Secretary to the Pilots' Commissioners' Board. Like his father, who was a well-known master mariner and sealing master in his day, having been first arrival in 1858 in the "Witch of the Wave," with a full load of prime whaloose. The deceased entered upon a seafaring life at the age of 17 years, and was for many years sailing out of the United States, Canada, England, Scotland and other countries. He received a master's certificate in Glasgow. For some years he was in command of the brigantine "Chedabucto," and also had a vessel of his own. In 1884 he retired from seafaring life, and opened a commission business on the premises occupied by R. O'Dwyer, where the Bank of Nova Scotia and A. H. Murray now conduct business. The deceased is survived by a wife (nee Miss Anne Whelan), three sons, Capt. Edward, who succeeded him as Harbor Master, Thomas and Frank in the United States; two daughters, Mrs. Brendan Scanlan of New York, and Annie at home, to whom the Telegram extends sincere sympathy in their hour of great sorrow. Funeral at 2.30 p.m. to-morrow (Friday) from his late residence, 14 Queen's Road, and interment will be in Belvidere. Requiescat in pace.

MCGUIRE-O'FLAHERTY.
A very quiet but pretty wedding took place on Tuesday morning last at the Chapel of Our Lady of Mercy, Military Road, when Miss Christine McGuire, daughter of J. B. McGuire, Henry St., was united in the sacred bonds of matrimony to Mr. John S. O'Flaherty, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. O'Flaherty, LeMar Road. The ceremony was performed by His Grace Archbishop Roche, assisted by Rev. W. O'Flaherty, pastor of the groom. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss McGuire, and the groom was ably supported by P. Meehan. After the ceremony a bridal party drove to the home of the bride's parents where luncheon was served and the health of the happy couple duly honored. Mr. and Mrs. O'Flaherty left by the express for Wood where the honeymoon is being spent. ### Notable Supporting Cast

WITH 'O'BRIEN IN 'THE LAST DOOR'

Martha Mansfield, Katherine Perry and Nita Naldi Head the List.

In these days of big special productions it is not uncommon to see a photoplay production billed as an "all-star" attraction, but it is not often that a picture that is known as a "star production" can boast a supporting cast that borders on the verge of an "all-star" assemblage. That, however, is the case with Eugene O'Brien's latest starring vehicle, "The Last Door," which comes to the Majestic Theatre to-day. In this picture Mr. O'Brien is supported by a cast of players all of whom have won their spurs on the screen with lovely Martha Mansfield at the head of the list. In this picture she plays the difficult role of a society girl who for a lark masquerades as an escaped convict.

Katherine Perry, famous as a Zigfeld Follies beauty and more recently successful as Owen Moore's leading lady, has an important part while Nita Naldi, one of the most distinctive types of beauty on the screen, plays the part of a designing young widow.

Other members of the cast are Charles Craig, Helen Pillsbury, Warren Cook, George Lassey, Helen Lindroth, Frank Wunderlee and G. F. McPeck.

Faked?

CARPENTIER—SIKI FIGHT SCANDAL—SENEGAL'S ADMIRSION.

The Executive of the French Boxing Federation consider that an attack on their honour has been made by M. Diagne, the Senegal Deputy, over the Carpentier-Siki contest, and they have decided to ask him to furnish proof of his allegations. If this proof is not forthcoming within a fortnight, they will ask the Chamber to withdraw the Parliamentary immunity which Deputies enjoy.

M. Diagne, interviewed after the meeting of the Executive, said that his attitude was peevish and that the immunity clause did not operate in a case such as he had brought forward. Speaking with great warmth, he said he wished to uphold the cause of a man who had been unjustly condemned without even a hearing. He would bring the matter before the Courts and will ask the Chamber to withdraw the Parliamentary immunity which Deputies enjoy.

The Life History of H.M.S. "Victory."

And What She Means to The Empire.

By Admiral of the Fleet SIR F. C. DOVETON STURDEE, Bart, G.C.B., K.C.M.G., C.V.O., LL.D.

The Victory! Nelson's famous flagship. An Imperial treasure and a living inspiration to all sons and daughters of the Empire. The story of her fame needs no recapitulation to older generations, but the magic and glory of her life history, the part she and others played in the days when the Empire was in the making, and the glorious lessons to be learned from her, are of more than academic interest to the generations of to-day and those as yet unborn, and it is impossible to over-emphasize their importance.

Every one knows how, at the battle of Trafalgar, she proclaimed the deathless message: "England expects that every man will do his Duty"; and then, with the signal "Closest Action" called to her masthead, broke with resistless power and majesty through the inflexible Franco-Spanish lines. Magic word "Duty"—the watchword of Nelsons the world over, and for which countless thousands have laid down their lives in the service of the Empire.

The honours of Trafalgar were sufficient in themselves to make the Victory famous, and yet she was famous before ever Trafalgar was fought. It was in her that Nelson pursued, over the Atlantic to the West Indies and back again, the fleet which Napoleon believed would carry him across the Channel to conquer the Empire as a homogeneous whole can be maintained. That is a truth which the Victory, since Trafalgar, has never allowed us to forget, and the lessons of the Great War, still fresh in the minds of all, are before us to emphasize the value of the Nelsonian traditions and all that they imply.

It is clear, then, that we cannot do without the Victory. And yet, like one of her own seamen in the olden days, she rests on crutches, a helpless cripple, unable to move without danger. It is difficult in untechnical language to explain why this is so. For all the world knows, oak furniture, such as chests, and chairs, and coffers, will last and endure for centuries, even when neglected; and the Victory has not been neglected. She has been tended with loving care. The true comparison, however, is not between the Victory and an oak chest, but between the Victory and an oak gatepost in the fields. A century-old gatepost which on Monday stood erect, on Tuesday may be lying prostrate; for the portion under ground may have rotted away. So with the Victory. The keel, the keelson, and those parts of the vessel's ribs below the water-line, serve the ship as foundations serve a house. But they have been immersed in water for more than a century and are in places as decayed as the planking with which they are sheathed. Yet they are expected to support five storeys above them, the Orlop, the Gun Deck, the Middle Deck, the Main Deck, the Quarter Deck (with Forecastle and Poop), besides the guns and masts and spars.

Resort cannot be had to any process analogous to underpinning, because a wooden ship is all of one piece; and, having no rock like a church, on which to base its foundations, alters shape through length and breadth, if any integral part be removed. There is no remedy but (in homely phrase) to unpick from the top. This process explains, however, why it is that any steps for the preservation of the Victory must be accompanied by a restoration of the ship to the appearance she wore at Trafalgar. During the nineteenth century, when the "under water timbers were good and sound, changes were introduced into the upper works, and fashions which Nelson never knew were inadvertently added. By the agreement of all who have examined her history, there is no case for the retention of these structural innovations. The building plans of the ship are still extant, and while every plank that Nelson trod will be religiously preserved, intruding timbers will be replaced by such as conform to the original design.

There are two reasons why the Admiralty can do no more. In the first place, by immemorial British custom, the rebuilding of a battleship which is still in commission can only be carried out with money specifically raised for the purpose; and there are obvious reasons why the Victory should not be put upon the Estimates. She is not to be weighed, like a newly voted ironclad, in the scale of immediate necessities. Her value is no transitory thing; and the patriotism, which she magically stirs, would evaporate in an Act of Parliament. And secondly the age of wooden battleships is gone, and from the Dockyards the men who built them. The knowledge of what the Victory requires is confined to the body of specialists in the Society for Nautical Research, whom the Admiralty has appointed to conduct the Victory's restoration.

At present there is no proposal to put the vessel, when restored, into the water again, for that would mean the repetition a century hence of the problem that confronts us to-day; neither is it intended to remove Nelson's flagship from the Active List, for the upkeep of the ship must be provided for, and to whom could she be confided more appropriately than to the sailors who have preserved her from Nelson's day to our own, and in whose heart the spirit of Nelson burns with undiminished brightness? The preservation of this priceless relic, the visible embodiment of the soul of an Imperial Duty, should be regarded as an Imperial Duty, and I am sure I shall not appeal in vain to the citizens of the Empire for assistance in carrying out the trust which has been confided to me as President of the Society for Nautical Research by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

The smallest subscription will give each member of the Empire a personal interest in a work of Imperial importance; a work which will preserve for posterity an emblem of all that is noblest in the past chapters of the Empire's history, and which will enable our children and our children's children to draw the same inspiration from this noble ship that we have drawn ourselves, and our fathers before us.

Note.—The sum of £150,000 is needed. It is proposed thoroughly to overhaul the Victory, to refit her in the rig in which she fought at Trafalgar, to remove nineteenth century anachronisms, and to replace the beautiful bow, foremast, and stern, which were altered out of recognition in the early part of the last century. Subscriptions may be sent direct to Admiral of the Fleet, Sir F. C. Doveton Sturdee, Bart, G.C.B., K.C.M.G., C.V.O., LL.D., at the Victory Offices, 233 High Holborn, London, W.C.1. or may be paid into all Branches and Agencies at home and abroad of the London Joint City and Midland Bank, Ltd.—United Empire.

City Named by Flip of a Coin.

The death of Francis W. Pettygrove, a former Portland, Me., resident, which occurred recently in Portland, Ore., has brought to light the story of how the city on the Pacific coast almost was named Boston instead of Portland.

A flip of a coin fixed the name of Portland, Ore., on what was then but a tiny settlement.

The coin was flipped in the autumn of 1843. A man named A. L. Lovejoy of Boston, and a second named F. W. Pettygrove of Portland, Me., were new settlers in Oregon and were joint owners of a small store, one of a few buildings in a settlement on the Willamette river.

The settlement was called everything from "the village to 'Stumptown,'" and the partners determined to dignify it with a real name. Lovejoy wanted to call it Boston; Pettygrove preferred Portland.

Finally they agreed to toss a coin. The Portland man called the turn over the Boston man, and the village forthwith was named Portland, Ore.

Woodsmen For Maine Scarce.

BANGOR, Dec. 30.—There is little need for woodsmen to linger around the streets of cities this winter, idle and destitute, for according to labor agents, there are more jobs in that line of work than can be filled, the large operators being especially in need of help.

"Wages are a little lower this season than last year, but there are plenty of jobs that pay $1.50 a day, with board, and good for a long stretch," says a Bangor employment agent. "Times have changed in the labor agency business in Bangor, for while once there were crowds of men hanging around the offices, awaiting for a job, and an order of almost any size could be promptly filled, to-day the agents have difficulty in getting even 50 good men together.

Hate to Leave Cities.
"In old times men were glad to go into the woods in the fall or early winter, being sure of at least moderate pay, good board and a comfortable home through the cold winter, but to-day we have a different class, mostly foreigners, who hate to get away from the cities and the movies, and take almost any kind of a job in town in preference to spending the winter in the bush. Maine goes on cutting her 1,000,000,000 feet of timber every year and men must be had from somewhere.

"The holiday season makes all sorts of trouble for the woods operator who finds it hard to keep his crew on the job. The men will go along until about the middle of December, but then they begin to long for a lay-off and just before Christmas they quit and hurry back to the bright lights with their pay check, eager to celebrate. In the days when Bangor was wide open the men came here to spend their money, but now they cross the border and have their merry time in some Canadian oasis where they can get what they want.

"Woodsmen's wages have ranged within my recollection from 50 cents a day to $3.50. Ten years ago men were lucky to get 75 cents a day, while in 1920 the day scale was $3.50 for pulpwood cutters, without board. Last season we were paying $1.65 a day on an average, and this winter it is $1.50. There was a time when the 'beet' of native loggers worked from daylight to dark for as little as $16 a month, with a diet of 'beans 21 times a week.' Try to get a crew on those terms to-day!"

Investiture of the Caliph.

PICTURESQUE CEREMONY.

LONDON (By Canadian Press.)—A picturesque survival of the ancient form of investiture of the Caliph at Constantinople is the Girding of the sword, though the Caliphate has been separated from the Sultanate for the first time since A.D. 1517, and no longer does one man combine secular sovereignty over the Turks and their subject peoples with the religious headship. The new Caliph Abdul Medjid, whom the Grand National Assembly of Turkey, sitting at Ankara elected in the place of Mahomed VI., was recently invested at Constantinople, the city known to all good Moslems as "Dar-ul-Khalifat," the abode of the Caliphate, and was girt with the sword of Osman, just as if he really possessed the "right of the sword" and were the secular Sovereign, as was his immediate predecessor. With the abolition of the Sultanate has gone much of the enthusiasm that used to be evoked among the Moslem masses of Constantinople, when they watched their new chief cross the golden Horn on the State barge Seydud, to the mausoleum of Eyub, Mahomed's comrade and standard bearer, for the ceremonious investiture, according to the Near East correspondent of the London Times. Eyub fell in his old age at the first siege of Constantinople. One thing missing from the investiture of the new Caliph was the old-time cry, "Radishahimiz chok yasha." Long Live Our Emperor. Abdul Medjid is Caliph but not emperor.

GIRDING THE SWORD.

The service of girding the sword was as brief as it was impressive. The sword, a long Damascus blade, somewhat less curved than many medieval scimitars, was carried before the Caliph on a jewelled stool. It is a famous blade, for Mahomed the conqueror last bore it in battle when Constantinople fell. On his death it was placed in the mausoleum which he had raised on the spot where one of his preachers fortunately discovered the tomb of Eyub in time to inspire the janissaries with fanatic courage for their last victorious assault on the walls of the city. The Chelebi first read the short opening chapter of the Koran and invoked the Divine blessing on the Caliph. Then he lifted the sword from the stool and girt it on, with a brief prayer that he on whom it was girt might bear it to the glory of God and the advantage of Islam. Thereupon the notables departed, and the Caliph was left alone in prayer before the tomb. When his prayer was concluded he appeared at the door of the mausoleum and gave orders to the procession of court carriages and outriders to start, state troops following in the wake of the procession. A RELIC OF THE PROPHET. The cortege went first to the Adrianople gate, and then to the Mosque of Mahomed the Conqueror, where the Caliph prayed at the tomb of his great ancestor. Next he went in procession to the palace of Topkapu-Seral, (also known as the Old Seraglio), where he visited the Noble Relics. These are a fragment of a camel's hair mantle which is said to have been worn by the Prophet of Islam, and a few hairs which are said to have come from his beard. There is also the Sanjak-i-Sherif or Sacred Banner which the vulgar aver to be that which was carried before the Prophet himself, but which undoubtedly dates from the Middle Ages. These relics are kept in times of peace in a glass case at the Baghdad Kioque of this Palace, but they have frequently been removed in recent years owing to fear that they might fall into the hands of infidel enemies. In the past, when the Caliph was also Sultan, the visit to these relics was the only observance which the Sultan could be said to have fulfilled purely in his capacity of Caliph.

Just Like That.

Mr. George Robey, the English actor and raconteur, tells the story of a gilded youth of effeminate tendencies who by some fluke of luck found himself stony broke. Deciding that his best bet was America, he tried for a job on one of the boats crossing the Atlantic. After being down by ship after ship he almost despaired of ever getting out of England. Finally his luck changed. He struck a boat on the point of sailing and found that a stoker had failed to turn up. Joyfully he signed on, went aboard and was directed below by the captain. Then he disappeared. Nothing was seen or heard of him for three days. But on the fourth day the skipper suddenly came upon a resplendent figure in full yachting kit, glasses slung over his shoulder, promenading. "What the hell are you doing here?" he demanded. "I thought I told you to go below." The regilded youth gazed at the mate officer, tapped him lightly on the shoulder, and pleasantly enquired, "Oh haven't you heard? I've left."—The Argonaut (San Francisco).

The Oil of Life.

BE CONSIDERATE; IT WILL BENEFIT YOU AND EVERYONE ELSE.

If the tremendous chance were given you of being permitted to name just one virtue, one quality, which when, by some process of magic, would become the possession of every living person, what would your chance be? Honestly would not be a bad choice; nor would ruthfulness. But there is another virtue, a rare one which, if it were universal, would oil the wheels of life, lessen the friction, the clash, the envy, the discord and the hatred, and transform this old world from what it now is into an earthly heaven. The virtue is consideration—consideration for the feelings of others. A kindness of heart which would refuse to hurt the feelings of man, woman or child.

Picture the world if each and all of us were considerate! The jostling, the pushing, the crowding, the hurt that is done daily and hourly to hearts, to try to make their way in life's press of work and business, would cease. If duty demanded that we should tell the truth we should do it considerately.

TEMPERING THE BLOW.
If we had to condemn work, manual or mental, that was not of the best quality, but the best that the worker could do, we should do it considerately.

If we were always considerate we could never be discourteous. If, for a reason approved by conscience we had to say "No" to one who begged, we should do it considerately.

We shouldn't push the weak, or snub the learner, if we were considerate. We could not be selfish if one rule in life was that we would always be considerate.

We should never be impatient of slower minds if we had learned this lesson. The human and kindly touch would be established between "all sorts and conditions of men," between "high and low, rich and poor," if the virtue of consideration were in every heart. The oil of life is consideration for others. Get it and use it. You, the world, and humanity, will thereby greatly gain. Be considerate!

Three Big Attractions at The Nickel To-Day.

VAUDEVILLE AND PICTURES IN GALORE. A GREAT SHOW.

Clinton and McNamara are giving a change of bill, which they say is going to be the best so far. Patrons are certainly in for a bumper show the remaining three days of this week. They will present a new comedy skit with all new jokes and songs and catchy dances.

The moving picture side of the bill consists of two big features, entitled "His Pyjama Girl" with Billie Rhodes and a Paramount picture "Passing Thru", starring Douglas MacLean. "His Pyjama Girl" is a play that will keep you guessing. The jilted lover knew his old sweetheart was married to another that day. Can you imagine his surprise when, at night in his own home, he opens a folding bed and finds therein the bride of his successful rival asleep. This is a story with a careful blending of adventure and comedy. "Passing Thru" is the humorous tale of a young man whose willingness to assume the troubles of others involves him in serious difficulties. Madge Bellamy is the leading feminine role. On Monday Jackie Coogan's greatest picture will be shown. It is entitled, "My Boy." Everybody thought "Peck's Bad Boy" was a great picture—but wait till you see "My Boy"—it's miles ahead.

Temple Seven Thousand Years Old.

Many antiquarians have regarded Stonehenge, in Wiltshire, England, as the most venerable relic in Europe, says a London paper. Its period has been estimated at 3,000 or 3,500 years B.C., and some assert that it represents Sun-worship rather than Druidism. Miss Margaret Murray told the Royal Anthropological Society in London that she had discovered a temple in Malta 5,000 years old. Miss Murray, who has been an earnest worker for many years with Professor Flinders Petrie, the famous Egyptologist, told a newspaper representative she spent her two months' summer holiday with Dr. Edith Guest, excavating at the temple of Borg en Nadur.

They worked on the remains of the most primitive of temples left by an unknown race of people, the period of structure being put at 3,000 B.C. "We found Neolithic pottery and pottery of the Bronze Age," she said, "and, what is most important, we found pottery of the transitional period between these two well-defined periods. This has not been found before."

"The temple proved to be very small and consisted of two apses with an altar at one end of the furthermost apse. The three stones forming the altar were still standing upright, but although the whole area was thick with bones no human burial remains or evidences of sacrifice were found. "This temple is older than Stonehenge. There are others on Malta Island, and they are all built towards the south-east, so that whatever this principle means it is not Sun-worship. "The origin of this race is a mystery. Anthropologists now hold that there was a race which inhabited the Mediterranean basin and possibly they were that race. They worked with crude flint implements, many of which I have brought back, and they had a crude art. "From an archaeological point of view the discovery I have made of certain painted pottery on the site is important, as it shows at that very early period (equivalent in Egypt to about the 12th Dynasty) there was trade between Malta and Crete. "This is the first occasion on which we have found any connection between prehistoric Malta and any other ancient civilization."

Whatever the card that I played and whatever the bid I declared My aim of omission that night were frequently, thoroughly aired; They argued and wrangled it o'er, they talked and discussed and explained, No two from the lecture they had heard the self-same opinion had gained. They told what they thought he had said, and what he had told them to do. They'd been to a lecture on bridge and all that's worth knowing they knew. And at last I rose up in despair and said: "Mr. Whitehead I hate. He has changed what was once just a game to an endless and bitter debate."

Rome Invites to International Tennis.
ROME—Italian tennis circles are awaiting with interest the replies of Allied Tennis Federations to invitations extended to them by the Italian Lawn Tennis Federation to send teams to participate in the International Hardcourt Tournament to be held in Rome next May. The reply of Germany already has been received, and is in the affirmative. Kleinfroh, who is playing in his best form just now will captain the German team. He is regarded by experts as the best singles player in Europe at the present time. Count Salm, of Austria, is expected to lead the Austrians. The feeling here is that Belgium, England and France will abstain, but that Spain will send over its Davis Cup team, the Alonzo brothers, Flaquer and Count de Gomar.

A COMMON FAILING.

On foot James Kicksaw is polite, a Chesterfield is he; he always treats his neighbors right, he's thoughtful as can be. If he should step upon your corn, by some unhappy chance, his breast by bitter pangs is torn, remorse is in his glance. I've seen him chase for half a mile, upon a redhot day, to capture some old fellow's tile the wind had blown away. He has his gracious bows and becks on tap for young and old, his courtesy to either sex is something to behold. But when he climbs aboard his bus, and steps upon the gas, he is another sort of cuss, his charms of manner pass. He knows the traffic rules by heart, he knows they're safe and sane, and yet he seems to think it smart to treat them with disdain. He cares no boot for others' rights, he owns the right of way; he runs without his lamps o' nights, he hogs the road by day. He travels like a house afire, and as he crosses town he seems to have a strong desire to run the voters down. And when he's parked his deadly van, and left it for the night, he is again the smiling man, most thoughtful and polite. He gives assistance to "the lame, helps out the human wreck, and bows to girl and withered dame until he sprains his neck.

It is reported that the gulpmen will be worn more than the waistcoat with spring suits.

AFTER THE BRIDGE LECTURE.

They'd been to a lecture on bridge; they'd heard Mr. Whitehead at length. Do claim on the value of trumps and the purpose of leading through strength. So they talked of the value of tricks as I shuffled the cards for the deal. And they talked of declaring a club suit and what such a bid should reveal. They'd been to a lecture on bridge, and I knew in my heart I was doomed to suffer and fall by the way. But I tossed out a heart my lead— I'd four from the king—and they said: "If you'd heard Mr. Whitehead last night a different suit you'd have led."

Whatever the card that I played and whatever the bid I declared My aim of omission that night were frequently, thoroughly aired; They argued and wrangled it o'er, they talked and discussed and explained, No two from the lecture they had heard the self-same opinion had gained. They told what they thought he had said, and what he had told them to do. They'd been to a lecture on bridge and all that's worth knowing they knew. And at last I rose up in despair and said: "Mr. Whitehead I hate. He has changed what was once just a game to an endless and bitter debate."
