THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS GOVERNING INCOME TAXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas jobs and payrolls depend on a stable economic environment, and whereas a stable taxation environment is essential to the work force of the nation, and whereas resolutions No. 9, accrued investment income, No. 23, restricted interest expense, and No. 31, capital gains and other reserves, in the November 12 budget attack the fundamental principle of a fair taxation policy, namely, the ability to pay, and whereas these stated resolutions impose the unfair principle of retroactivity on taxpayers in Canada thus doing irreparable damage to a fair and reasonable taxation environment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Finance withdraw resolutions Nos. 9, 23 and 31 of the November 12 budget in order to avoid a major economic calamity that will affect every single Canadian.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING SMALL BUSINESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the November 12 budget presented by the government has deeply angered small business men and business women across the country. As the details of the budget are more closely examined, there is a growing fury as these Canadians realize that many of the measures outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will, in the long run, result in even further financial pressure.

In light of the fact that the budget, while offering minimal relief only to those in extreme financial straits, is a pronounced step backward for the remainder of the business community and has been described, in the words of John Bulloch, president of the 62,000-member Canadian Federation of Independent Business, as a "bag of snakes", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Minister of Finance admit to the retrogressive and punitive measures directed at small business and either withdraw his budget or take immediate action to change its terms of reference.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

HEALTH HAZARDS POSED BY USE OF RESEARCH CENTRE BUILDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That the government, and particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Public Works, be condemned for authorizing the use of the Sir Frederick Banting Building as a research centre where hazardous chemicals would be handled to the knowledge of the government, when they knew the building was unfit for that purpose, and for allowing the condition to persist for three years, thereby endangering the health and safety of public servants; and so that the full extent of their neglect be public, that the government forthwith table in the House of Commons all reports, minutes, memoranda and other documents relating to this deplorable situation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS FOR REFUGEE STATUS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has announced that he hopes to improve his government's policy on determination of refugee status, and whereas many Canadians have expressed the gravest concern that injustice may have been done to applicants for refugee status who were deported by Canada to likely imprisonment, torture, or even death, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

S.O. 43

That the minister take the necessary steps to ensure that all applicants for refugee status have no less rights than Canada affords to one accused of crime, namely, the right to counsel at every step, the right to oral hearing at every step, and the right to benefit of the doubt.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS—PETITION TO SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that has perhaps never been more urgent in the life of this nation. In this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail, it was reported that the Premier of Saskatchewan was preventing Canadian women from having full equality of rights which would be guaranteed in the Canadian Charter of Rights.

Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

That this House calls upon the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Vancouver East, as well as the following NDP members from Saskatchewan; the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, the hon. member for Prince Albert, the hon. member for Regina East, the hon. member for Regina West, the hon. member for Saskatoon East, and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, to petition their fellow New Democrat, the Premier of Saskatchewan, to change his current position so that provisions to ensure guaranteed rights for women will be included in the resolution now before Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1410)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise to debate the matter very briefly, Madam Speaker, by adding an amendment that the name of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), be added to the list that was presented in the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise, too, to speak briefly to the motion. Your Honour heard no "nays" from this corner, and I would simply add, as a footnote, that I would like to see a similar motion put, with the same unanimous endorsation, including the entrenchment of aboriginal rights for the native people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just want to express my sympathy for the hon. members from Saskatchewan who did not want to support the charter in the first place because the premier of that province did not accept the resolution which was before the House for many months. Now they are in a terrible position. I just want to express my sympathy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): I would like to add one further remark, and that is to ask the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) to apologize to the Premier of B.C. for blaming him for having been the stumbling block in this negotiation, now realizing that it is the Premier of Saskatchewan who has stopped it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the reason British Columbia and Alberta came around was because people like me named them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I certainly support the intent of the motion. I would like to move an amendment to the motion that we further call upon all premiers to restore Section 34, granting aboriginal rights, to the constitutional resolution.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am afraid that all amendments are out of order. I had not yet put the motion to the House. However, I guess what I must do—the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): I just want to add a few words, that if the members of the New Democratic Party from Saskatchewan are not able to convince the Premier of Saskatchewan, I will certainly try to do my level best.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I want to support the motion to reinsert the equality of men and women in the Constitution. It is a position I have taken at the committee, a position I have supported all the way along, and it is a position for which I am continuing to lobby.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't talk it out.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, it seems that all of a sudden everyone in this House would like to take credit for what has happened in the last week, but the credit really belongs to the women of this country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Erola: —who have worked seven days to change these minds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question, question!

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I would just like to add the comment that the people of Manitoba removed one obstacle to the inclusion of the rights of women and native people, on Tuesday night of this week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Being a bachelor, I do not know much about women—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: —but I am quite willing to learn—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: —and Premier Lougheed is strongly behind every one of them!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am afraid everything that has just happened has been quite out of order because the motion has not been put to the House. At this hour I must interrupt to go to oral questions.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Put the motion! Put the motion!

Madam Speaker: Very well. I can take time to put the original motion to the House, because I cannot accept the amendment.

The House had heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. During this year the economic noose tightened around the necks of thousands of businessmen and women in this country. On November 12 the minister sprang the trap door with respect to the Small Business Development Bond, an instrument which was established by this party for the purposes of creating jobs through expansion and development of business. It is my understanding that the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia have issued instructions to all of their branches to impose a moratorium on the Small Business Development Bond. Would the minister please confirm this and tell us whether or not any negotiations have ensued between his office and the banks, and could he tell us exactly what is the current status?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have absolutely no information that would justify the hon. member's claim. I will, however, check the situation, because I think it would be very regrettable if any moratorium were declared on this bond by any bank, because of its benefits for small business men.

The hon. member talked about the general economic situation. I am pleased to advise him that the bank rate has again dropped today. That means the bank rate is at its lowest level for this year. It has dropped almost six points since August, and that is extremely good news.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Six points from where to what?

IMPACT OF TAX MEASURES ON INSURANCE INDUSTRY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. It pertains to the taxation of policyholders of life insurance contracts. Some 60,000 Canadians are employed in the life insurance business, many thousands in the Cambridge and Kitchener-Waterloo area. Some 83 per cent of all policyholders make less than $25,000 a year. In light of the fact that there is going to be a tremendous drying up of long-term capital and that the jobs of thousands of Canadians in this industry are going to be imperilled, how can the minister possibly justify this tax grab?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will not attempt to justify every detailed tax measure in answer to questions on orders of the day, because we will be discussing in detail all of these measures in committee of the whole and I will be pleased at that time to answer all the hon. member's detailed questions with respect to this matter and others. But I would simply say to the hon. member that, upon examination of the situation, maybe he would justify to me why a portion of this particular kind of income should be exempt from tax when the average worker, who receives employment income, is fully taxed on all of his income. Maybe the hon. member would justify to me why there should be this inequitable treatment among various categories of income.

Mr. Speyer: Because the income isn't received.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON LONG-TERM INVESTMENT AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, does the minister agree with my assertions that there is going to be a drying up of long-term investment from the insurance industry as a result of these tax measures? Does the minister agree that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are imperilled as a result of his measures?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Absolutely not, Madam Speaker. The hon. member is speaking complete nonsense.

EFFECT OF PROVISIONS ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is a matter involving the budget which simply has to be changed. No doubt the Prime Minister is aware that there are about 330,000 farmers in the country and that the average-size farm is less than 200 acres in Ontario. The tax measure around which my question evolves applies equally to small business men. The Prime Minister knows that those small farmers pass their farms on to the next generation and have a pension for themselves either by selling their farms for cash and taking an income-averaging annuity, or if they sell by term they use capital gain reserves. The Minister of Finance has abolished both of these legitimate and honest financing mechanisms. Can the Prime Minister tell me whether that is government policy at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously anything that is in the budget is government policy.

MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF EFFECT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance drew up the election platform in 1980 which promised substantial relief from capital gains for the farm community. Was the minister consciously aware of the effect that these two provisions in the budget, namely, income-averaging annuities and the capital gains reserve, would have on the small farmers and small businessmen in Canada when he put them in his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously I examined each of these items very carefully. I would ask the hon. member whether he has considered the forward averaging system, which is put forth in the budget, as a very adequate and more fair substitution for the income-averaging annuity contracts which were used in large part by high income earners to avoid tax.

INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The minister no doubt will know that after he has closed all the loopholes which he has said he is going to close, apart from the ones he has changed his mind about in the last two days, .1 per cent of those earning less than $15,000 will have a basic reduction in taxes, and 70 per cent of those earning over $50,000 will have a basic reduction in tax. In light of those shocking figures in terms of the discrepancy in the benefits of the budget to the rich and the poor, I would like to ask the minister how he can possibly talk about equity in his budget.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the last time the hon. member cited a tax item from the budget he made a mistake, as I discovered in going back to the budget documents. If he wants to ask statistical questions in the House of Commons there is a proper way to do it, namely, to put them on the order paper, and I will deal with them in that way.

DEFINITION OF "NEW KEYNESIANISM"

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the minister can be as condescending and as inaccurate as he chooses to be. This is not a statistical question. This is a question about the basic impact of the budget on working people, on poor people, on women and on pensioners. If the minister wants to make it simply a question of statistics, that is his problem, but unfortunately it becomes the problem of millions of Canadians when they see how callous the government is in face of the hard economic facts of life.

If the minister has a correction to make to something I said, there are ways and means by which he can do that, and I will be glad to debate it with him at the appropriate time. The minister spoke the other day about a "new Keynesianism". If the minister refuses to answer the first question, let me ask him whether by this "new Keynesianism" he means a dramatic shift in job-creation programs, because I would point out to the minister that in 1971 when unemployment was far lower than it is today, the government was spending almost three times as much money on direct job creation than it is today. Is that a definition of the "new Keynesianism"?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have never talked about "new Keynesianism." Maybe the hon. member could tell me what he means by that.

TAXATION OF PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am simply relying on a report of what the minister had to say about his economic policies which came during that famous lunch held across the river in Quebec the other day. Perhaps the minister cannot remember exactly what he said as a result of the lunch.

● (1425)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: However, this is the only report on which we can rely in terms of what he said.

An hon. Member: That was a cheap shot.

Mr. Rae: It was neither a cheap shot nor a cheap lunch, Madam Speaker.

My final supplementary question has to do with the banks. I would like to ask the minister how he can possibly justify his failure to take action on the profits of the banks when it has been clearly established that, of the five most profitable banks in the western world, four of them are Canadian banks, and the most profitable bank, the Royal Bank of Canada, has a return on capital which is three times greater than the most profitable Swiss bank. How can the minister possibly justify his refusal to take action against the banks when he has those kinds of profitability figures available to him?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has once again raised the question of taxing the banks. Perhaps he would examine the role of the Small Business Development Bond and the role of term preferred shares and income debentures in financing investment in this country. And has he reflected on the fact that at this time a tax which he put forward would obviously have the effect of closing off, for example, the use of the Small Business Development Bond which depends upon the after tax financing system which flows from that bond? Has he reflected on how is it possible for the banks, through the bond, to offer small business men rates of interest about half the effective market rate of interest? What he is proposing would have the effect of raising the effective rates of interest to small business men in this country. Like all his other rhetorical questions, they have very little substance and very little analysis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER GAS INCREASE IN QUEBEC WILL AFFECT PAYMENTS TO EASTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Following the substantial increase in the price of gas announced this week by the Quebec Minister of Finance, an increase of 35 cents per gallon—which is certainly the highest ever in Canadian history—could the minister tell the House whether this unusual increase will in any way affect payments to eastern provinces during the last few years in order to prevent too great a disparity in the price of gas across Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this quite substantial price increase has created a situation where the average driver in Montreal, for instance, will be paying more than those in Newfoundland, who, traditionally, have been paying higher prices than anywhere else in Canada. At the present time, the people in Quebec are being taxed more heavily than anywhere else by their provincial government, not only in the area of income tax but even at the gas pump. I can assure my hon. colleague that the Government of Canada will maintain its policy of a standard base price throughout the country, so that all Canadians can benefit from a base price for oil that is reasonable and acceptable. Unfortunately, the Government of Canada has no control over taxes levied by provincial governments, including the PQ government in Quebec City.

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his budget last week the minister attempted to point out a myth whereby the rich would suffer while middle class Canadians and small business would benefit, in other words, his Robin Hood approach to tax reform.

Now a number of nationally recognized accounting firms, including Dunwoody & Company, have in fact determined that the majority of small business men, who are already in dire straits, are saddled with considerably higher income taxes, some 20 times higher than last year, while the wealthy in the $200,000 and $300,000 bracket will in fact enjoy a reduced rate, as indicated in detail by this paper from Dunwoody & Company. It is not exactly the picture the minister tried to paint last Thursday. I therefore would like the minister to justify to this House, and particularly to the small business men who are already suffering as a consequence of the government's economic policies, this absolute reverse, contradictory and negative effect his budget is now having on the small business sector.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will welcome at a later date the opportunity to outline in detail the impact of the budget on small business in the country and, in particular, to answer point by point the unjustified allegations made by Mr. Bulloch as to the impact of the budget on small businesses. The fact of the matter is that, over all, the budget measures have complied, as well as we could, to the representations Mr. Bulloch made to us prior to the budget.

Over all, the budget flows considerable benefits into the small business community and, if the hon. member wants me to take the time later I will be happy to go into great detail to demonstrate to the small business men of this country that the budget is a very positive help to them in the current circumstances. Indeed, if I may say so, budget policies have already had the impact of reducing the bank rate substantially.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: That in itself will have a beneficial effect on small business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, anyone who believes that small business has not been hurt by this minister's budget is either a fool or a Liberal.

An hon. Member: Both.

Mr. Jelinek: It was not just John Bulloch who came out with these statistics. Dunwoody, Clarkson Gordon and most other chartered accounting firms in this country know that the minister's policies are hurting the small business sector.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF MINI BUDGET

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, now that the minister has admitted two mistakes in the last two days which, to his credit, he has corrected, will he now assure this House that he will either introduce a mini-budget in the very near future or make a new economic statement in order to rectify the inequities which have resulted from last Thursday's budget which are damaging the small business sector and hurting low and middle-income Canadians? Will he do that, and will he give that assurance to this House today?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, but what I will do at the first opportunity is discuss in detail with hon. members in the House of Commons the impact of the budget which, in the main, is to establish within the tax system more justice, and to ensure that those in lower-income brackets and middle-income brackets are not carrying a disproportionate share of the tax burden in this country, and that those workers who depend entirely on employment income and who must pay fully on their employment income through the tax system are not, when compared with other taxpayers, put into a situation of inequity. That is the broad thrust of the budget, and that is the budget I will defend. If hon. members can make proposals to me in Committee of the Whole which would improve the operation of any of these measures, obviously I will consider them.

With respect to certain corporate organizations I issued yesterday transitional rules or grandfather clauses which are often the result of tax changes, and I will continue to make such adjustments as required. But I assure the hon. member that I will not withdraw from the basic thrust of this budget, which is to establish a long needed reform in the direction of social justice in the tax system.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON INTRODUCTION OF BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Last Monday I was prepared to welcome the minister home from Rome and the FAO meetings, but today I think it is much more important to welcome him home to the extremely serious and critical situation in Canada's total beef cattle industry. That situation is so critical that I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that today our cattle situation is more serious than it was 40 years ago when we had ten years of depression, drought and despair, throughout the thirties. I say that very sincerely because today—

Madam Speaker: Order. I can see that the hon. member has a few pages to read. I ask him, please, to put his question now.

Mr. Hargrave: Madam Speaker, is the minister now prepared to indicate what progress he is making to establish a national harmonized beef stabilization program for the total year of 1981—when it is concluded, of course—which would involve the governments of the cattle provinces, the cattle producers themselves, the federal department and the minister's staff, and has he arranged to meet with the cattle producers to plan this stabilization program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that I recently mailed letters to all the beef producers in Canada. I believe there was a total of 140,000 letters. Included with them were questionnaires asking producers their personal opinions on what they think I should do. I believe there were five questions asking what I should do about the condition the red meat industry is in at present.

I agree to some extent with what the hon. member said about the economic condition of the industry, but many of the leaders in that industry have said that we should follow the system of marketing which has existed for years, and that we should not change it in any fashion or form. As far as I am concerned, producers have not been led down a golden path; it has been a bad economic path. We are trying to come up with some kind of plan which will make their economic return what it should be. I know that is what the hon. member wants. I want that and, for the good of the whole nation, we all want it.

Mr. Hargrave: Madam Speaker, those same leaders of the cattle industry will be very disappointed today that the minister did not respond to my question about a specific date for a meeting with the cattle producers.

REQUEST THAT SURVEY RESULTS BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question refers to that questionnaire the minister sent out over his signature to 140,000 cattle producers in Canada, and that includes 53,000 dairy producers. Will the minister's response, when it comes out, be made public? Will the totals be given for each sector within the cattle industry? For example, will he give the figures for the dairy industry, and the total response to that questionnaire?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks about what kind of plan I was proposing. I had the authority of the government to propose, and we did propose to producers in 1977, a 100 per cent harmonization not only for beef products but also for pork products and all other agricultural products. The cattlemen's association turned that down at that time saying that it was too rich, that it would cause overproduction and so forth. The hon. member should not say I have never offered them anything. I offered that to them on behalf of the Government of Canada, and they turned it down. Now they are asking me to come up with a plan. We had a plan for them over four years ago, but they did not accept it. That was one of the best plans ever proposed by any country in the world.

We are trying to make sure we do the right thing and, naturally, the facts we obtain from that questionnaire will be made public just as soon as they can be tabulated. The dairy industry provides about 25 per cent of the beef for the consumers of Canada and provides some of our meat exports to the United States of America, so that industry ought to be consulted too, and it is being consulted. The names of dairy producers are being kept separate in the computers because those names were taken from the dairy records we keep. It may not be a perfect mailing list, but it is as good as we can make it.

FISHERIES

REPORTED OFFER OF OFFSHORE QUOTAS—EAST COAST COMPANIES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the seatmate of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Canadians have long believed that the fishing industry is a common property of all Canadians, but the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is drastically changing that concept of the fishing industry, particularly at the moment on the east coast. There are meetings currently going on which will turn the common property of that resource offshore over to a consortium of four companies—Nickerson's, National Sea, the Lake Group and Fishery Products—in terms of a transfer of a property right which they will be able to trade, barter, borrow or sell.

I would like to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans if he can confirm that an offer has been made to those companies to take company quotas. If that is the case, will the minister advise how he is going to ensure jobs in the offshore fisheries if those companies have that right and develop a monopoly of offshore fisheries to the exclusion of any other companies?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question underlines the difficulty of consultation where proposals are made, debated, and then judgments reached. This suggestion was put forward and discussed quite seriously by all segments of the industry. It was put forward at a meeting where fishermen, companies big and small, provincial governments and, of course, the federal government, were represented. I have not had a report on the reaction to this suggestion. When and if I receive that report, I will obviously have to assume my responsibility. I want to make it clear to the hon. member that, if this suggestion is adopted, it will be on a trial basis. No one intends to give away the resources of the people of Canada.

MANAGEMENT OF RESOURCES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, in view of conditions in the east coast offshore industry and the Atlantic groundfish plan whereby the companies obtain their quota in a very short period of time, overstocking their warehouses and running into financial difficulties because of the interest rate policy of the government, does the minister feel he and his department are more competent than those companies which overfished last year at managing that offshore fishery?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member looks at the figures of the fishery for January and February, he will see that what happened was a race for the fish and a lack of discipline. If we were able on a trial basis to allocate a fair share to the four major companies which run the offshore trawlers without affecting the inshore fishermen, the responsibility would be on their shoulders to ensure the best utilization of the resource for the markets that are available, rather than this mad race to catch fish because of the belief that, if they do not catch the fish today, somebody else will.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CUT IN FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On November 16 the minister ordered CN Marine to reduce by one the two ferry service operations they currently have as a summer operation between eastern Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. That decision was taken at a time when the government should be considering restoring that service to a year-round operation. Why did the minister take one of those ferries off that very important service?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the main reason, and the obvious one, is the optimization of the use of federal money for transportation in Newfoundland, which amounts to almost $200 million at this time. The Marine Cruiser had more or less come to the end of its useful days. It would have had to be replaced with one that would have cost $50 million or more. The degree of subsidization for this service is very high, 80 per cent. For example, it is estimated that a trip made on that route by a family of two adults, two children in one car, costs the Government of Canada more than $1,000. We also considered the fact that there was capacity available at Port aux Basques going to North Sydney. Looking at all these factors, we made the decision we did.

I want to underline the fact that the $4.5 million which will be saved will be kept in the Newfoundland envelope and used in the best way in the future. This was all to be part of a package to be announced jointly by the federal government and the provincial government. However, as the hon. member knows, at the last moment the government of Newfoundland decided not to be associated with the less interesting aspects of this package deal. In the coming days we will make more pleasant announcements.

Madam Speaker: That's quite an answer.

FUTURE OF FERRY SERVICES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister in his reply is invoking the Otto Lang user-pay concept. That is disturbing. I want to ask this question. If the minister is using the Otto Lang user-pay concept to cancel this very important service at a time when it should be extended year-round, will he advise what other Atlantic provinces marine ferry services will be cut back now that he has resurrected the Otto Lang user-pay concept?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know to what extent I look like the former minister of transport. I am trying to make the best possible use of the money that is now available for Newfoundland in terms of existing assistance, and in terms of new money that the federal government is willing to put on the table. That is what I am trying to do. As my hon. friend knows, I have been in discussion with Newfoundland on that subject for the best part of nine months. We developed a package deal which is advantageous to Newfoundland. That package will be announced in the coming days. The government of Newfoundland, and I regret it very much because it is a regressive move, refused to be associated with some of the announcements, but is very keen to be associated with those that are coming which, I repeat, will be more interesting than the one referred to by the hon. member.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEW ZINC SMELTER PLANT IN RESTIGOUCHE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Further to the statement made by the Minister of Finance last week concerning economic expansion on the north shore of New Brunswick, to announce confirmation by Noranda that a new factory would be built, could the minister inform the House how this will benefit the people of the area, considering the capital investment of over $300 million and the 50 per cent tax credit contained in the 1980 budget?

[English]

Can he inform the House of the direct benefits to the citizens as a result of the tax credit contained in the budget of 1980, and the other benefits—

Madam Speaker: Order. I think the question has been translated.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the hon. member on his tireless efforts in connection with this project, which has been qualified by the Premier of New Brunswick himself, and I quote:

[English]

"—one of the best pieces of news for New Brunswick in many years."

[Translation]

And I agree! During the construction phase, this project which is worth over $360 million, will provide work for 1,500 person-years. Subsequently, there will be permanent jobs for over 400 people. After years of hard work, this project has come through today because of the Minister of Finance's decision to grant a 50 per cent tax credit to a region that is among the most disadvantaged in Canada. I can say that in the past year, thanks to that decision we have been able to announce projects worth about $1 billion altogether in the northeastern part of New Brunswick.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

ACTIONS OF CZECHOSLOVAK GOVERNMENT AFFECTING CANADIAN CITIZENS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister knows, the Czechoslovak Association of Canada has made repeated submissions since 1977 to the Minister of External Affairs, and even to the Prime Minister, asking for an end to the actions by which the Czechoslovak government intimidates Canadian citizens, collects personal information for possible use in espionage and blackmail, and extorts considerable sums of money. Will the minister tell the House, and concerned Canadians of Czech and Slovak origin, whether the government has taken any effective steps to end these despicable and dangerous practices or whether the government, while engaging in unproductive negotiations, has in fact allowed the Prague communist regime to perpetuate its activities in Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any such activities by the Czechoslovakian government in Canada at the present time. My hon. friend may be referring to the fact that the government of Czechoslovakia so far has not been prepared to sign an agreement with Canada concerning the problem of dual nationality. It does have such an agreement with the United States, but dating from pre-communist days, not one that was entered into by the communist government. The government is continuing its efforts to negotiate such an agreement at the present time.

PROCEDURES SURROUNDING ISSUANCE OF CZECHOSLOVAKIAN PASSPORTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): The minister is aware, of course, that they have been negotiating with this government for a long time, as far back as 1979. Is the minister aware that Czechoslovak passports are issued to Canadian residents of Czech and Slovak origin for travel to eastern Europe; and that this process involves the completion of a lengthy and intimate questionnaire, a personal interview by an officer of the Czechoslovak diplomatic service, and the signing of a statement of allegiance to the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic? Why was the provision in the Canadian Citizenship Act, which had a very salutary effect on this sort of thing and protected Canadian citizens of Czechoslovak origin and other nationalities from this kind of treatment undermining our country's sovereignty taken out of the Canadian Citizenship Act in 1976?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman and I have approximately the same knowledge as Members of Parliament had about what happened in the Canadian Citizenship Act at that time. As I recall, I was the only member of the committee at that time who objected to those changes. All of the other hon. members of his party and of mine agreed with them. I am not sure that the hon. member should be addressing that question to me. I can assure the hon. member that we are doing our best to protect Canadian citizens in a trying situation.

TRAVEL BY PUBLIC SERVANTS USING NON-CANADIAN PASSPORTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am not sure whether the Prime Minister listened to the earlier questions; however, I am addressing my question to him in his capacity as Prime Minister and as chairman of the cabinet committee on security and intelligence. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether it is the policy of the government to allow federal public servants and employees of Crown corporations, as well as employees of industries with defence contracts, to travel to eastern Europe not using their Canadian passports, because presumably they are all Canadians, but passports issued by a communist country which declare them to be citizens of that country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is right. I had not been listening to the previous questions. I will look into the matter.

LEGAL CONSEQUENCES OF TRAVELLING WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIAN PASSPORTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): If the Prime Minister was not listening, I will direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. I am wondering whether he is aware of these practices and whether he considers such behaviour compatible with continuing employment in these sensitive positions? Finally, does the Solicitor General intend to make it clear, for the benefit of those who may be tempted to submit to the Czechoslovak regime's blackmail, that they may be undermining the sovereignty of this country, and the Public Service Employment Act, and also running the risk of contravention of Section 3 of the Official Secrets Act?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, obviously we maintain in the security service a continuing interest in the national security question that the hon. member has raised. I am aware of particular cases where Canadians of dual nationality have been pressured by foreign governments in one way or another. I take this opportunity to indicate to hon. members, as I have in the past outside this House, that the Canadian government does take an interest with regard to that problem.

I would hope that any holders of Canadian citizenship papers or passports who are also holders of passports of eastern European countries or other countries would want to bring to the attention of the government any kind of pressure that is being exerted on them by agents of foreign governments.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister will be aware that as the details of his budget become known and understood by Canadians, it will result in growing confusion and a growing negative response. If the minister has confidence in his budget, as he says he does, would he be prepared to refer the budget immediately to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for study, and to allow witnesses to appear and react to his budget so that its implications may be clearly understood and that its benefits may be clearly identified?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thought that hon. members would much prefer to have the budget discussion held in the Committee of the Whole House. That provides members with an opportunity to raise the points they have in mind. For the last budget I did agree to have certain tax measures sent to the committee. In these circumstances I believe that the Committee of the Whole is preferable. However, I will keep the hon. member's suggestion in mind.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET WITH LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In light of an unprecedented move by the Northwest Territorial Legislative Assembly to travel en masse to Ottawa in protest against the absence of aboriginal rights in the November 5 accord, as well as other concerns, will the Prime Minister acknowledge the significance of that move by meeting with the Territorial Council before the end of this week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROCEEDINGS IN MONTREAL COURT CASE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I may get his attention. It relates to the intervention by two lawyers in a court case in Montreal yesterday, allegedly on the instructions of the Government of Canada, in which they attempted to restrict testimony of two ex-RCMP security officials. Whom do lawyers Joseph Nuss and Michel Robert represent? What are their instructions? Why are they engaging in heated and vigorous arguments to restrict testimony in a criminal prosecution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has some knowledge of law and of court practice whereby he would know that it would not be appropriate for me to comment on the proceedings. As to who the people are and what their positions are, I will inquire, Madam Speaker.

NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will appreciate that I was not talking about the substance of the argument, nor of the evidence. I was asking what the instructions were to the two lawyers. Of course the main testimony of yesterday related to evidence from prime ministerial aide of 14 years ago, with no foreign involvement, no cabinet order, and no prime ministerial directive; therefore, no cabinet secrecy was involved. I ask the Prime Minister again, and he should know, why is there this continuing attempt to gag a court from inquiring into the same circumstances as this Parliament has been gagged and a royal commission has been gagged?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the substance of the question is evidence itself that the hon. member is engaging in the substance of the matter being discussed there. He is asking me why lawyers are pleading certain things in front of the court. Madam Speaker, if that is not intervening in the court, if that is not an intervention by a member of Parliament in a due process of law, I wonder what is.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON INCOME DERIVED FROM LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the interest of furthering equity in the tax reform contained in the budget, would the minister consider restructuring the closure of the tax expenditure relating to tax of unrealized income from life insurance policies?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Madam Speaker, over 80 per cent of these life insurance policies are held by individuals earning less than $25,000 a year. The purpose of their purchasing these policies is to take financial responsibility in looking after their dependants. I wonder if the minister would consider refining his closure of this tax expenditure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for supporting the budget measures last night. In view of that support I would be happy to consider any refinements that can be possible in these measures.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, November 18, 1981, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I should like to direct the usual question to the government House leader, although in view of the fact that we will be having a House leaders' meeting this afternoon, he might not be able to enlighten members too much.

Presumably the first day of debate on the new Constitution will be tomorrow. Could I ask him if we will be going on with that debate next week or whether we will be finalizing the last two days of the budget debate on Monday and Tuesday?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm that we shall start the debate on the new constitutional resolution tomorrow, Friday, and that the debate will continue next Monday and the days following. We shall interrupt the debate very briefly—if it has not yet ended—next Wednesday to complete the fifth day of debate on the budget. Thursday, if necessary, we shall resume debate on the constitutional resolution. Next Thursday I shall be in a better position to advise my colleagues on what the business of the House will be for the subsequent days and weeks.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if the government House leader would mind explaining why we do not complete the remaining two days of budget debate, rather than having one day next week and leaving the other day hanging?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 18(2), the government has the right to determine the order of business in the House, and since we shall be having a meeting later on today, perhaps this could be discussed at that meeting.

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question relates to government business. I should again like to ask the President of the Privy Council when he intends to bring forward Bill C-53, the long overdue legislation respecting sexual offences. As he will know, we on this side of the House in the New Democratic Party have agreed to a very short debate in order that the bill can go to committee. It is my understanding that the government is similarly in agreement. Will the President of the Privy Council indicate what the status of this important legislation is and why it is that Canadian women have to continue to wait for legislation which will redefine rape as a violent assault as opposed to a crime of passion?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the committee concerned already has a bill under consideration namely the access to information bill, and I have been told that work is progressing slowly but surely. In any case, regarding the bill to which the hon. member is referring, I should like to say once more what I have stated publicly in the House during previous weeks and months, namely that as far as the government is concerned, we are prepared to proceed with the second reading of this bill as soon as possible, that is, we are prepared to arrange with the opposition parties to limit the debate to one day, before sending the bill to committee. The House is aware of this, and I am prepared, whenever I have the opportunity again, to put forward this proposal to my colleagues. But it is not up to the government alone to give its agreement. I need the co-operation of the hon. member's party and of the Progressive Conservative Party. Now, we have several bills which should not be too controversial, which are to be considered at the appropriate time, preferably on Fridays, and I can assure the hon. member that this bill is included on the list.

[English]

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader if he can give us any indication when we could expect to see the amendments to the Human Rights Act to prohibit discrimination against disabled Canadians other than in the area of employment. As he may know, the Minister of Justice assured representatives of COPOH several weeks ago that the legislation was about to be brought into the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall consult my colleague, the Minister of Justice and I hope to be able to report on this to the hon. member within a reasonable period of time.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, in order to enable us to prepare for tomorrow, I wonder whether the government House leader can enlighten us on whether the Prime Minister, who presumably will take part in the debate, or whoever leads off for the government, will introduce any amendments to the resolution that is now on the Order Paper and, if so, could we have copies of them?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the resolution has been tabled, it is on the Order Paper and we are supposed to meet this afternoon to discuss procedures for the debate. The amendments issue is on the agenda, and I shall be happy to discuss this item at the meeting. I cannot confirm whether the Right Hon. Prime Minister will speak or when he will speak. At this point I am not in a position to confirm whether the government is to introduce one or several amendments. This will all be discussed at our next meeting, and I cannot further enlighten the member for Yukon at this time.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what happened to Bill C-48. Has it slid into welcome oblivion, or is it still with us and when are we going to vote on it?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as we are concerned, if there is unanimous consent in the House, we are willing to vote immediately on the third reading of Bill C-48.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, on a matter of House business, I want to ask the government House leader to report to the House with respect to legislation that was promised in the Speech from the Throne relating to the inclusion of disabled persons in the Canadian Human Rights Act, in view of the fact that this is the International Year of the Disabled. The minister's parliamentary secretary was chairman of the task force on this matter and I know he will have advised him. Is the minister prepared to indicate whether the government will at least table the proposed amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act on the basis of the Speech from the Throne in this International Year of the Disabled?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I believe the Minister of Justice met with the people concerned on or about November 10. I feel it would be in order for me to consult him before answering the hon. member's question.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,841, 1,932, 3,150, 3,191, 3,247 and 3,250.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PUBLIC ATTITUDE TO FOREIGN AID

Question No. 1,841—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the Department of External Affairs information Service Study No. T0061 (a) on what date was the questionnaire prepared and (i) were recipients given more than six days to respond to the questionnaire and, if not, for what reason (ii) how were the recipients selected (b) what is the information to be used for (c) for what reason does the minister feel that such a study was necessary (d) will the information gathered be used in designing an advertising campaign?

2. What was the total cost of the study?

3. Will the results be made public and, if so, on what date?

4. Has the department undertaken other studies and, if so (a) what was the subject in each case (b) what was the estimated total cost?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The questionnaire was prepared in October, 1980, at the request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. (i) Respondents were asked to reply by November 12, 1980. In some cases, this was not more than six days. It was felt that a deadline was required to urge as quick a response as possible. Nevertheless, responses received after the November 12 deadline were accepted. (ii) Recipients were selected as representative public opinion leaders across the country.

(b) and (c) The information gathered will serve to increase and broaden the Secretary of State for External Affairs' and the department's awareness of public attitudes and ideas on foreign aid. The SSEA feels it is important to consult with the public about this at a time when relations with developing countries are gaining increased importance in Canadian foreign policy as well as in world affairs.

(d) The intention was not to use the results of this survey to design an advertising campaign.

2. $4,500.

3. The results will be made available to the public upon request after November 12, 1981.

4. Yes. The department undertook in 1978-79, a study entitled: "Canadian Public Awareness of World Affairs and Foreign Policy Issues". The report was published in 1980. The estimated cost was $20,000. In addition, CIDA has undertaken in 1980 a related study on "Canadian Attitude Towards Foreign Aid".

TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDIES ON NEWFOUNDLAND TRAFFIC

Question No. 1,932—Mr. Herbert:

1. What was the cost in the last year for which information is available, of government transportation subsidies on Newfoundland traffic?

2. Do the costs include losses incurred by the Canadian National Railway and, if not, what was the cost to the Railway?

3. What are the estimated costs for the current fiscal year?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In so far as the Canadian Transport Commission is concerned, the following information is provided in relation to payments under the Atlantic region freight assistance program.

1. Payments certified for fiscal year 1979-80: (a) motor vehicles and water carriers domiciled in the province of Newfoundland $3.2 million, (b) Canadian National during the same period received $19.2 million. However, such amount relates to total movements performed within the entire Atlantic region and cannot be segregated for Newfoundland traffic only.

2. See part 1(b).

3. Payments for fiscal year 1980-81: (a) Motor vehicle and water carriers domiciled in the province of Newfoundland received $3.6 million, (b) Canadian National Railways received $17 million for movements performed within the entire Atlantic region. This amount cannot be segregated for Newfoundland traffic only.

In so far as Transport Canada is concerned, the following information is provided in relation to water transportation subsidies on Newfoundland traffic:

1. Payments for the 1979-80 fiscal year:

CN Marine	1979-1980
North Sydney to Port aux Basques	$32,877,577
Newfoundland coastal service	26,405,962
North Sydney to Argentia	6,752,687
CNR
North Sydney to Port aux Basques	23,407,000
	$89,443,226
Newfoundland Steamships Ltd.
St. John's–Corner Brook to Montreal	4,029,750
Northern Cruiser Ltd.
St. Barbe to Blanc Sablon	569,831
	$94,042,807
Province of Newfoundland—grant	$ 1,400,000

2. Yes. As illustrated the subsidies include payments to the Canadian National Railway Company pursuant to contracts with Her Majesty to pay the costs of rail/water and narrow gauge/standard gauge interface, ferries and terminals. In addition, we are informed that for the year 1979-80 CNR absorbed losses of its Newfoundland division, TerraTransport, of approximately $28 million for which no government subsidy was available.

3. The estimated costs for the 1980-81 fiscal year are:

CN Marine	1980-1981
North Sydney to Port aux Basques	$36,386,000
Newfoundland Coastal Service	30,172,000
North Sydney to Argentia	9,011,000
CNR
North Sydney to Port aux Basques	20,412,000
	$95,981,000
Newfoundland Steamships Ltd.
St. John's & Corner Brook to Montreal	4,000,000
Northern Cruiser Ltd.
St. Barbe to Blanc Sablon	603,500
	$100,584,500
Province of Newfoundland—grant	$ 1,544,625

In addition, we are informed that for the year 1980-81 CNR expects its Newfoundland division, TerraTransport, to lose approximately $30 million for which no government subsidy will be available.

INSURANCE ON BANK ACCOUNTS AND TERM DEPOSITS

Question No. 3,150—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,628 which stated that the government is considering raising the limit of insurance on bank accounts and term deposits from the present limit of $20,000 and that a government policy will be announced "in due course", what is a definition of the phrase "in due course" and what is the target date, if any, for the government to make known whether such a change will be made in order to protect depositors more adequately, due to larger deposits brought about by the sinking value of the dollar?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, I have been advised by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation that I am not in a position to indicate at this time what action, if any, will be proposed to Parliament with regard to changing the present $20,000 deposit insurance limit. However, the government plans to introduce revisions to the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act in the not too distant future and it would seem appropriate that any discussion by Parliament of the adequacy of the present limit should take place at that time.

SSEA—ENTERTAINMENT EXPENSES

Question No. 3,191—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past four years, what was the total amount spent by the Department of External Affairs on receptions, including entertainment, liquor and wine (a) outside (b) inside Canada?

2. In each case (a) what was the total for the four years (b) were only Canadian beverages served and, if not, for what reason (c) is it government policy to serve only beer, liquor, wines and liqueurs that are produced in Canada at our foreign establishments and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

		Outside	Inside
1.	1977-78	3,535,841	833,439
	1978-79	3,981,483	723,957
	1979-80	4,009,374	340,876
	1980-81	4,655,445	1,029,977
2. (a)	1977-78	4,369,280
	1978-79	4,705,440
	1979-80	4,350,250

(b) and (c) During hospitality extended in Canada, the department serves as far as possible, Canadian beverages such as rye whisky, gin, and Canadian wine and beer. However, there are times when the demands of the menu or the tastes of the foreign guests predominate and on those occasions, foreign wines are served. Canadian Heads of Missions abroad are encouraged to become acquainted with Canadian wines in order that they may use them as part of their regular representational programs. As the quality and quantity of Canadian wines increase, it is anticipated that many of Canada's missions will wish to give this serious consideration. However, there are constraints of quality and economies which do not always make this a feasible proposition.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

Question No. 3,247—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, how many applications were (a) approved (b) not approved?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

	Acquisitions (April 9, 1974—Sept. 30, 1981)	New Businesses (Oct. 15, 1975—Sept. 30, 1981)	Total
Allowed	1,504	1,461	2,965
Disallowed	171	117	288
Withdrawn	166	160	326

Question No. 3,250—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the Foreign Investment Review Agency refuse to give information to Members of Parliament who are making legitimate inquiries about the status of applications when such inquiries are made with the approval and at the request of both the applicant and the Canadian counterpart and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned, it is the policy of the agency to be as co-operative as possible with all Members of Parliament who seek information about the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act. However, under the confidentiality provisions which are set out in section 14 of the act, information about an application may not be disclosed without the express written approval of the applicant authorizing the agency to discuss the application with the Member of Parliament involved, and then only information submitted by the applicant may be discussed.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions as enumerated in French by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to look into what is causing the delay in answering question No. 1,795 which I placed on the Order Paper a year ago. It is a question regarding private organizations receiving federal grants for research and development. There are some other related questions which are quite routine. I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would find out why it has taken a year to answer this question.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take note of that representation.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the usual question about when we will get an answer to questions Nos. 2,035 and 2,519. These concern the cost of operating government aircraft for the benefit of cabinet ministers.

● (1510)

If they are never going to be answered, I wish that the House leader for the government might make a statement on motions as to why the taxpayers of Canada are apparently not to be given the information showing what they are paying for and how much it costs them to have these ministers flying wherever they are flying.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take due note of that representation, as well.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONDEMNATION OF LACK OF BUDGETARY JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain) moved:

That this House condemns the government's budget for (a) not introducing new job-creation measures in the light of the largest number of pre-Christmas lay-offs experienced since the depression (b) the complete rejection of an effective industrial strategy to provide long-term jobs and thus a cynical reversal of the government's election promises.

He said: Madam Speaker, this morning, along with a number of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, I met the people who travelled from various parts of the country to bring to our attention and, as I understand it, to the attention of other hon. members of the House of Commons, the plight they are facing in terms of trying to maintain any semblance of economic order in their lives. I met with people who had lost or were about to lose their homes, and with people who have lost or are about to lose their jobs, those who are faced with the bleakest of prospects. I heard them explain the impact of the economic dislocation which has been brought about by this government's policies.

I heard one young man explain how, after months and months of inadequate income levels as a result of only receiving unemployment insurance benefits having been laid off from his job of five years, and struggling to make ends meet, the inevitable happened. He and his wife, having gone through all of the human emotions which are allied with the problem of not having a job or an income, finally decided that they could no longer survive together. They separated, she and the children going to live in one place and he going to live in another place.

I heard a young man explain how someone in his plant who had been laid off and who had been faced with renewing his mortgage finally threw up his hands and committed suicide. I say to the government, although I do not want to overstate it, which is very difficult, that the result of the economic policies of this government is that not only are sane people being driven insane, but a situation is also being created in this country which makes life virtually impossible for large numbers of people.

I want to suggest to the government members who are here today that the responsibility for this policy is not only that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The responsibility for this policy is not only that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the cabinet. It is the responsibility of every single Liberal backbencher who does not bring to this government's attention the fact that the policies it is now following are leading to the ruination of the very citizens of the constituencies they represent.

I said to those people this morning that what galls me is that, while they suffer so terribly, there are some in our society who are living off the fat of the land and enjoying a return on their investments which is unprecedented in Canadian history. There are some who are enjoying so much at the expense of so many others, and that seems to be the direction this government is bent on following. I suggested to them that while I would obviously like to be in government, and that is probably the aspiration of any Member of Parliament or, for that matter, anyone involved in politics, at this point in time I would much rather see this government do something useful for those people than pursue the goal of defeating it. Quite frankly, I would much rather accept that it was doing something and leave it there than run the risk of further economic chaos.

I told them I thought there was only one way for them to deal with the situation confronting them, and that was that in every single community across this country they should identify the closest Liberal Member of Parliament. They should walk, go by car, car pool or bus, or if there is still a train running they should catch the train, and go to the closest Liberal Member of Parliament's constituency office or, for that matter, to his or her home. They should explain to those of you, who do not seem to realize the economic ruin they are causing many people in this country, that your policies are no longer acceptable and that you must change the direction you are following.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Job Creation

Mr. Deans: There is only one way to get through the heads of the members of the Liberal Party the fact that the country is facing economic ruination. It is to let you know, face to face, that come the next election these people will not have forgotten. These people will not be sucked in again by your promises on the election eve.

Mr. Lalonde: Stop making the children cry.

Mr. Deans: Listen—me making the children cry? If that child—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I call to the attention of the hon. member that remarks are to be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Deans: I am terribly sorry. I did not realize I was not addressing them to the Chair. I am addressing every remark I made through the Chair, believe me. I said to them that it is time they bring to the attention of this government the fact that there will be no forgiveness two years down the road when you bring in your giveaway programs in an effort to bribe people to vote for you again, hoping that their memories are short. They should make it clear that never again will any one of you return to the House of Commons unless they see some action now on their behalf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I listened to that child cry and it was no wonder. If the child is old enough to understand what faces him or her in the future, it is no wonder—

Mr. Lalonde: Two years old.

Mr. Deans: —that the child cries.

I want to talk about certain places in Canada because two of my colleagues will talk about eastern and western Canada and the impact of this government's insane policy upon them. It seems as though the policy of the government is to create economic dislocation. It seems as though the policy of the government is to accept high levels of unemployment and high interest rates, to allow people to lose everything for which they have worked, to destroy communities, and to do little, if anything, to bring about any redirection of the economy in general.

My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), during the question period earlier, raised with the Minister of Finance probably the best example of this government's wrong-headedness. In 1971, 6 per cent of the work force was unemployed, and the government spent $339 million in direct job-creation programs in an effort to alleviate the problems for that 6 per cent. Ten years later, in 1981, 8.3 per cent of the work force is unemployed. The government has committed $143 million to direct job creation.

I put the following question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who is sitting and watching, obviously interested in what I am saying. How can it be that, with 6 per cent of the population unemployed, with over one million people looking for work, we are spending less than half what we spent ten years ago in direct job-creation programs? How can it be that we are not involved in a direct subsidization of the economy now in an effort to give people an opportunity to work, to earn a living and so meet their commitments? How can it be that all across the country, perhaps with one exception, we find plants closing down? The very heart of British Columbia and its forest industry, about which my colleague will speak later, is facing the bleakest future it has ever faced. Why is it that the fishermen and those who work in the plants on the east coast of this land are faced with unemployment levels they have never seen since the depression?

Why can the government not see the necessity to develop an over-all program to get those people back to work and provide them with assistance? There are people who were unable to earn enough in the summer time, their normal time to do it, to give them an income during the winter to sustain themselves. We hear from the government that it is worried about the situation, but it is not working on a program to assist those people. My colleague will speak about that a little later.

I want to tell the minister that the frustration of trying to come to grips with what it is that motivates this government is almost beyond anyone's capacity to absorb. I have tried over the last few months to think of reasons why the government would sit back and allow this kind of chaos to continue across our land. I have tried to imagine what goes on in the minds of those in the cabinet when they learn of town after town having major industries close down, laying off workers and with people having to move away. I have tried to picture what kind of response the ministers of the Crown might put forward to answer those situations. I must confess that in thinking about a response and then trying to visualize it in terms of the direction the government announced the other day through its budget, I can only come to the conclusion that the government does not understand.

Mr. Young: The government is mindless.

Mr. Deans: The government does not understand that it is dealing with the lives of individuals all across the country. I have come to the conclusion that the government thinks that somehow or another things can be expressed by way of statistics. It seems the government thinks that things are either up a fraction or down a fraction, and fractions are not real people. But people are represented by figures. The government talks about batches of computerized figures that come spewing from government ministries, but in fact there is no background, no depth or substance to that.

There is not a single community that I have visited where I have not run into the human misery people are facing as a result of what can only be described as the callous attitude of this government. I was in Newfoundland two weeks ago and I was in New Brunswick last week. I travel through Ontario regularly. I have seen that human misery everywhere.

The minister, or whoever it may be who wants to answer for all of this, must agree that it makes sense to recognize, first, that the major problem confronting the people of Canada today is the detrimental effect being felt as a result of high interest rates. The reason so many people are being laid off in the auto industry, the appliance manufacturing industry, the building industry, the shoe and apparel industry and the food industry is that friends and neighbours are unable to afford to pruchase the products manufactured because of the high interest rate policy being pursued by this government. There is no other single factor which has had such a devastating effect on our economy and on people's lives.

Let me ask hon. members, why are people not buying cars? They are not buying cars because they cannot afford to carry the interest. Why are people not buying houses? They are not buying houses because they cannot afford the payments. Today I listened to people who are about to walk away from their homes. Not only will those people lose their investment, but in some cases they will have to borrow money to pay to the mortgage holder the difference between the level of the mortgage and what the house is worth. These people will be in debt. They will be walking away from their homes. They will have lost their equity and, in addition to that, they will owe at some usurious level of interest $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000. These people will have absolutely nothing to show for their investment.

I suggest that the minister take a look at the number of plant closings and the number of lay-offs that have occurred in this country. One can draw no other conclusion than that there is insanity over interest rates.

If the government were prepared to act on behalf of Canadians using a Canadian monetary and fiscal system to create stability rather than doing what it is doing, which is following blindly in the wake of the United States government, then most of the industries that are now in the process of laying off people would no longer have to lay off people.

I spoke in the House about a week and a half ago regarding the problem in the agricultural industry. I made mention of the fact that the difficulty being faced would only become compounded in the fairly near future. Already that has come to pass. My colleague, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), has been struggling daily in an attempt to get some action from the government regarding the recent announcements by Massey-Ferguson. The reason that Massey-Ferguson is in such difficulty—and I do not think this is any revelation, aside from the fact the company was rather badly managed for some period of time—is because farmers cannot afford to buy the equipment Massey-Ferguson manufactures. The difficulty there is that farmers have to carry the interest rate. The rate of interest is so high that the rate of return to the farmer from the sale of his produce, or from the sale of whatever is his main source of livelihood, is not enough to carry that burden. I pointed out that over the course of the next five years if the industry does not produce it would gradually disappear. In time farmers need to replace machinery, but there would be no Canadian industry to turn to.

Again, we would have lost a major part of the economic fabric of this nation.

I suggested that concurrent with that is another very serious problem. If farmers cannot replace machinery when it is necessary to replace it, we would be facing a gradually diminishing production level. Along with that, the farmer would not be able to maintain the competitive nature of his operation. Gradually the price of food would rise. The farmer would not be able to keep his operation going in the way it should, and inevitably that would cause even further economic dislocation somewhere down the road. The lay-offs at Massey-Ferguson are the beginning of an end to an industry unless this government is prepared to take immediate action to offset it. But I do not see any evidence of this government being prepared to do that.

Let me talk about people for a moment. When 1,750 people are laid off in a place like Brantford, that is serious. The spin-off is devastating. The agriculture implement industry alone has lost some 3,500 jobs in the last year. Those jobs have just disappeared from the marketplace in Brantford. There is nothing to replace them. Those people still have to pay their bills and their taxes. They still have to feed their families.

You might ask me, Mr. Speaker, why do they not go and find jobs some place else? Where are they going to find those jobs? Are they going to go to Chatham, perhaps, where International Harvester has just laid off 600 people, where Motor Wheel has just laid off 149, and where Rockwell laid off 500? They can just go down the street a way and they will find that the very same situation which exists in the community they live in exists in the community beside them. Will they go to Hamilton and attempt to get a job there, where plants are laying off large numbers every day? Where do they go? Perhaps they should go to Toronto and apply at McDonnell Douglas, or maybe they will drop into Windsor and see if they can get jobs with Chrysler. Maybe they will come to Oakville and knock on the door of Ford. All these companies have been laying off by the thousands. Maybe they will decide to uproot their families and travel to the opposite end of the country, British Columbia, and try to find jobs in the forest industry, only to find that the forest industry is not working.

What kind of insanity is it when the government cannot see that there is a serious and tragic problem all across this country? If this problem was isolated to one geographic area I would say there perhaps could be an excuse for the government not dealing with it. But the fact of the matter is that it exists in every single community; it is at the very core of the community, and generally speaking in the small communities it is the major employer who is on the way out.

I want to say to the minister and the government that there is a way that we can bring some sense to this lunacy. Let me suggest, to begin with, that this government should now undertake an inventory of every single project that has any social value in every community across this country. The government should take a look at how one could reasonably fund those projects at this time, to move them forward in time and begin them now rather than two years from now in order to initiate that economic stimulation which would take place.

I am not talking about pouring dollars into useless things, but when there are undertakings that obviously will have to be proceeded with over the course of the next two or three years I would urge the government to compile a listing and begin now to make available the necessary capital to start those projects.

I want further to suggest that there are sufficient numbers of people who are unemployed in this land and looking for work that we could begin, in an effort to meet what is now becoming a housing crisis with vacancy rates down below 1 per cent in most metropolitan areas, to build the homes that those people need, using the products of this country and the productive capacity of those people who are unemployed.

I want to suggest to the government that if we were to elevate our expectation level and produce in this country the number of homes that by any calculation we are going to need over the next five years, on a systematic year by year basis, not only would we create employment for the people who would build the homes, those people who work on the job sites, but we would create employment for the people in the forest industry, at Weldwood and other places, and we would create employment for those people who used to make the bathroom fixtures at Wabco Standard. We would also create employment for the people who make the tiles that go on roofs, the tiles that go on floors and the piping that goes into the infrastructure. We would create employment for people who make wallboard and for people all across this country in numbers that would not only bring down the employment level but would help to ease the terrible problems so many families are facing today.

This is an investment. We are not talking about give-aways, we are talking about investment. We are talking about investing capital now in the future of the country. We are talking about investing money that will ultimately be invested in any event. We are suggesting that if ever there was a time to commit money, that time is now. We have to make sure we meet the basic requirements of people, and we are not meeting them. If the private sector cannot or will not meet their obligations, particularly in things like shelter—and I suspect will not is more likely the case than cannot—then the government has an obligation as an investment in the future to make available the capital necessary to proceed with the building of the homes and apartments that must be built in order to meet the need.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, and I know you understand this being a student of economics, that if we were to start there is no question at all that the close to 8 per cent level of unemployment we now have—the million people who are at home looking for work today—might be cut in half. We could create jobs for half of those peole who are not all on the public payroll. In fact, most of them are not on the public payroll. This would revitalize communities which range all the way from Vancouver to St. John's. It would revitalize the areas of this country that desperately need some injection of hope. It would give the people a sense that the government understood what it was doing, that it understood the problems of the people and that it had a plan of action.

I admit this is not the most sophisticated plan of action. It does not get into all of those newfangled terms everybody uses when they think about industrial strategy. What this plan involves is simply the utilizing of the power of the government to mobilize the unemployed, the capital of this country and all of the industrial capacity that is sitting idle, in order to create what is desperately needed, employment on the one hand and housing on the other, with all of the related benefits that would flow from it. It is the simplest approach. But, you know, there is something about it—it works, strange though it may seem. I realize there are those in this House who might wonder about this, but it works.

If you engage in that kind of job creation, the two things I have mentioned—the undertaking in the public sector of moving ahead with projects that are going to go ahead anyway, doing them now rather than later, and meeting just the immediate demand for accommodation—the effect will be sufficient to turn around the economic malaise that exists from coast to coast, with two or three exceptions.

I make a plea to the government. To berate the government makes no sense. I have tried and it does not work. I have tried to appeal to you. I have tried to appeal to your conscience and decency.

● (1540)

An hon. Member: They have none.

Mr. Deans: I have tried to appeal to your understanding of the—

Mr. Lalonde: Have some respect for the Chair.

Mr. Deans: —feeling that people have for the problems that confront them and their families. I hear the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) babbling on again.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to remind the hon. member he should not berate the Chair as he does.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Lalonde: He is referring to the lack of understanding of the Chair and—

An hon. Member: Sit down and be quiet.

Mr. Lalonde: He has been in this House long enough to know the rules of the House as far as respect for the Chair is concerned.

Mr. Deans: That will certainly set the minds of those people who are in to see me at ease. I know they will be very impressed by that interjection.

An hon. Member: That was his best one this year.

Mr. Deans: What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, through you, even to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as hard hearted as he may be, is that there is no excuse for what he is doing to the people of this country. There is no excuse. There can be none given and none accepted.

The budget which came in on Thursday last is a national disgrace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It is a fraud. It should have and could have recognized the problems of this country and dealt with them in a way which would have been of benefit in both the long term and the short term. But it has failed.

This is the same government, you may recall, Mr. Speaker, which was berating the Tories when they were in power for not coming to grips with high interest rates, high unemployment levels or high energy prices. This is the same government that seems to have gone completely off track.

An hon. Member: You are sorry you supported them.

Mr. Deans: I have never supported them in my life. The problem is so serious that the difficulty now is that it cannot be left any longer. There has to be a solution to these problems and the solution does not have to be so complex as to be incomprehensible. It can be a solution similar to what I have suggested today.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the New Democratic Party has brought this motion forward because it gives us an opportunity to make a few remarks which we might not have been able to do in time for introduction through the budget debate. I commend the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for moving this motion.

It is not just the New Democratic Party which is concerned about the rank and file of Canada. I may disagree strongly with their approach, but I believe the aims and goals of our parties are the same. I think what we are looking for, as the budget, the Speech from the Throne and the 1971 budget said, is a fair shake, a fair share and more equity in the system. I think we agree in that area. Our disagreement is in how we arrive at that situation. There is a fundamental difference in political and philosophical views.

Turning to this motion, the papers are full of reports, which are increasing by the hour, of tragic situations in terms of payrolls and take home pay. Manufacturing plants are laying off people because the economic environment in Canada is so unstable that the normal economic forces are not working. I am in agreement with those members in the New Democratic Party who are genuinely concerned about the inability of the business cycle to break the boom-bust syndrome. I think that members in my own party have perhaps not spent enough money in research and effort to try to break that cycle. I think that inability, by those of us who support capitalist market system, to break that syndrome is what gives great fodder and opportunity to the socialist movement to come upon us.

I say to the few who are listening to my remarks here today that this is a challenge to all of us who want to see some freedom survive in our economic climate and market. I believe there has to be more effort by some to work as hard as some of us here work on that issue.

It is true that the workers of Canada are probably facing the most serious situation we have had since 1929 and 1930. There are a few of us here, including Mr. Speaker, who have lived through those days and years. At that time we were right back down to basics and we saw the tragedies of those times in terms of the human condition. We came out of a war and restructured a bright and beautiful vision in this country of Canada.

I was talking yesterday to a son of a Portuguese immigrant whose father arrived here penniless and worked through menial labour on farms and other jobs, probably worked six months a year and sweated and saved. He had a dream for his children whom he left behind in Portugal, and eventually he was able to bring his family to Canada through his sweat, labour and tears.

The family of that Portuguese immigrant have the same work ethic today as their father had and they have the same basic values. They are successful and well established in Canada today. They saw Canada as a dream, they came here and worked hard and created jobs and were always able to meet the payrolls they created.

Last night, the son of that Portuguese immigrant said: "Mr. Huntington, what is happening in this country today is what happened to my father in his homeland". The lack of incentive to work and produce, to grow a crop and the ability to take it to market, even a market in which the government was the receiver of the produce, caused that family to sell their farm and move, in poverty, to this new land where they had a dream. It was a dream which at least gave them the chance to break out of the chains of uniformity and egalitarianism.

We are dealing with that again today. What I find difficult about this situation is that the government, supported by the New Democratic Party, is doing everything it can to inhibit and stop a work-creating environment in Canada. One of the worst tragedies which I think has happened since I have been in this House is the attitude the government had toward an issue such as the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. It has interfered, and the New Democratic Party forces have actively interfered in all the megaprojects we have had before us. If it is going to speak of an industrial strategy, it should not want to create massive shortages which would cause massive inflation. If it is going to talk about an industrial strategy, it has to talk about a plan for the use of human resources, capital and industrial resources which we have for the delivery of goods and services to the world marketplace as well as our own domestic marketplace.

By being energy self-sufficient by the year 1990, we had an opportunity to have full employment in this country. Instead, government policies have led this country to have almost a million, and perhaps over a million, if we can understand these statistics, unemployed. This is a national shame and a national tragedy. It hangs heavy on my head that my efforts in this House have failed to bring about a conscious realization of what the government has been doing to this country during the last decade.

Full employment cannot be created unless there is a stable taxation environment. It is only through a stable taxation environment that a decision-making base can be created at large in this country. The innovators, the risk takers, the engineers, the architects and the tradesmen all depend on a stable taxation environment. The labour forces which are being laid off—according to newspaper articles of today and yesterday—also depend on a stable taxation environment in order to deliver a stable decision-making base for the industry and the marketplace in Canada.

Too much of our effort has been directed away from addressing the economic requirements of this era. We are wasting very valuable time around this place because of our refusal to get down to the things that count and that will protect and create jobs. The other day in this House—after some considerable thought because I do not like to be guilty of overstatements—I had to open up and say that, because of government policies which interfere with the heritage we in this country have in terms of work and fulfilling our dreams about our own homes and being constructively and effectively employed, we have deliberately created impediments to the population which has been coming out of our schools, trade schools and universities.

You cannot impose a socialist state from the top down. History has told us that. There has been death, carnage and revolution of the worst type whenever that has been tried. Some such empires have lived for a short time but, if we are to create a socialist state—and that is what we are doing in this country—

Mr. Nielsen: "They" are.

Mr. Huntington: Yes, they are, not me. The government is. If we are to create a socialist state in this country, we cannot do it by having people fully and gainfully employed and working, achieving, buying, creating property and serving their dreams and goals. Because a people at work achieving goals and dreams is a happy and contented people. The opportunities have been too obvious for that to be our rightful aim and goal and our rightful heritage. The opportunities have been there, but this Liberal government has done everything it could to interfere with that progress.

We have massive unemployment today and it will accumulate. It is like a pack of dominoes tipping over and falling all the way to the end. Things are triggering other things today. Inventories are not moving. Retail sales are down. High interest costs have sucked the profits out of industries all across Canada, from manufacturing to secondary and tertiary distribution. Hundreds of retail clerks are being laid off. Retail stores are reducing inventories. Those who serve retail strores are caught in the trap of having to supply; their inventories are not moving and all their profits are being drained off by high interest rates. The tragedies among the working people, the manufacturers and the creators of this country are all too real.

My tax dollars, $50 million of them—not that all $50 million are mine—are being spent on an advertising program. Every time I open up the newspaper I see people's money wasted on feeding propaganda to the press and controlling the press of this nation. The media of this nation are being controlled through tax dollars.

Mr. Kelly: What paper is that?

Mr. Huntington: The government is controlling the media. People are terrified about publishing a report against the government; they fear they will lose their money. They fear they will lose Canada Council grants.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: Hon. members opposite can laugh, but they should not get themselves locked in. That is the situation today in this country. The minister opposite should not laugh about this. He should cry in shame because, like mine, his freedom is threatened. The only difference is that he sits on the government side of the fence.

In 1968 we heard about a just society. There was a great call for a just society. In 1971 we were going to have a new taxation base which would allow equity and fairness across the country. The Carter principle was finally delivered to the land. We have had a decade of high legal costs, accounting costs and economic costs trying to adjust to that taxation base. We were just beginning to come out of the woods, but this Liberal government did not want that stability. Otherwise it would not have presented the budget it did on November 12. That budget removes stability. The hon. member opposite can shake his head—I think it is a head—but that budget in fact changes the taxation philosophy of this country.

Mr. Chénier: It is fair. That is what you do not like.

Mr. Huntington: Let us talk about fairness. The budget violates and offends the basic ability to pay tax. Is that fairness? Let the hon. member wait until we get into Committee of the Whole; he will find out that this government's twisted and perverted use of the words "fairness" and "equity" in this budget will fall down around his head. Never has an instrument been put to this House which has caused such overnight anguish and concern in the country. The Canadian Labour Congress is up in arms. Every single chartered accountant who is a tax expert in this country is up in arms and furious. Lawyers are furious. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has a list of grievances which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) wanted to wipe off the slate today as being inconsequential.

I have been in the small business game all my life.

An hon. Member: So what? You are a millionaire.

Mr. Huntington: So what? Millionaires usually work two shifts a day and go without holidays for the first 15 or 20 years of their working lives. They are entitled to be millionaires. They are the ones who create capital and jobs. They are the ones who buy the machines that improve the productivity of the land. How many times have we heard the Minister of Finance tell us in this session that the only way to address the problem of inflation is by increasing productivity? That is the essential element today, but there is not one single item in the budget which addresses the national productivity problem.

In 1980 the economic performance of this nation was one of the worst in the western world after a decade of this government. There was 0.1 per cent economic growth in Canada compared with an OECD average of 1.2 per cent. Our economic performance last year ranked 21 among that of 24 OECD nations. We used to be third. We are now twenty-first out of 24. Our standard of living used to be third only to that of Sweden and the United States. Now our standard of living is thirteenth, behind The Netherlands and Finland. That is the decade of inheritance we have had since 1971. We had finally begun to adjust to the last budget, but where in this one has the problem of productivity or the problem of inflation been addressed? Nowhere. This budget has ripped out from under the Canadian industrial community its decision-making base.

There are two central themes in the MacEachen budget which are causing great concern. One is the retroactive effect of Resolution No. 9, which is the accrued investment income resolution, and the other is Resolution No. 23, which is the restricted interest expense resolution. That delivers retroactivity back on people who were law-abiding citizens under the laws prior to November 12, and they have been trapped, raped and crucified by this budget.

This budget removes one of the fundamental cornerstones of a fair and equitable tax system. It has removed the ability to pay one's tax. Just wait until the hours of debate come out on this across the nation. That is what the government has done to the nation as a result of its November 12 budget.

The government has created a terrible illusion with the top rate of tax being limited to 50 per cent. That reduces the tax rate of the wealthy. However, it has ballooned up all the other expenses that employers paid the cost of for employees across Canada. It ballooned up their gross income and their taxable income. The government is playing a very deceitful game with half-truths in this area.

When the government says the top rate is 50 per cent, all it is doing is shifting the burden on to the provinces. On budget night my province said it will have to find another $95 million. Over five years the federal government, through this budget, is taking $600 million from my province.

How many minutes do I have left, Mr. Speaker? None. I am only half-way through.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is allowed 20 minutes on an opposition motion. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been many times in this House when the clear light of knowledge and information has been brought to bear on matters of some importance. I regret to say that this, unfortunately, is not one of those times. What we have listened to for the past hour or so is a replay of that time-honoured Japanese wrestling match where the two parties on the other side, trapped in their own dogmas, have locked themselves once again into immovable positions of ideology, without trying to bear with any new sense of insight, assessment or analysis upon the realities of the economic situation, which is serious and should be treated seriously.

It is regrettable that so much time and effort of this House is taken up simply having to listen once again to the purplish prose of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who seems to believe he is the only one in the world who cares, or the laissez-faire diatribes of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who seems to feel we can solve all the economic problems of the world by repeating the liturgy of Ayn Rand who ran out of ideas 40 years ago.

We are dealing with an important issue in this resolution. We are looking at the question of how to tackle some very significant and critical economic issues that face every country in the industrialized world, every country that is being affected by the turbulence of increased energy prices, changes in monetary flows, changes in the industrial structure and new introductions of technologies.

These are all problems which are part and parcel of our world. They are not something that is a product of Liberal government policy. We are not responsible for bringing Ronald Reagan into the White House. We are not responsible for the high interest policies of the Federal Reserve Board. We are not responsible for the exaggerated changes in oil prices of OPEC. However, they are problems we have to live with. They are issues we are trying to cope with.

The prescriptions put forward in the budget of a week ago, we believe, indicate the best kind of guidelines by which the Canadian economy can adjust to those difficulties. They indicate to us the kinds of policies and programs that will facilitate private activity and at the same time provide proper priorities for public expenditures at the federal level.

There is a basic thesis to the budget. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain rants and raves about economic chaos. In one of his more lucid moments, which were rare indeed in that speech, he said that the problem is high interest rates. We agree. That is why the thrust of the budget is to address itself to the central issue of how to bring down inflation in this country. How do we tackle the insidious erosion of income of people to deal with the inflationary problem and thereby provide for a facilitation of interest rate policy to bring it down?

It is no accident that once again today interest rates fell, this time to a low of 15.4 per cent. They are coming down. It is not purely by capriciousness that they are there. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was clearly trying to send forward signals in the economy by which this government would apply a policy of restraint in its expenditure and fiscal program, providing a signal to the entire capital market and therefore provide for an easing of rates.

The lay-offs that we face and the kinds of problems that are endemic in some of our manufacturing and resource areas are a product of high interest rates. The automobile industry has had a decline of 35 per cent of its sales in the United States because of the high interest rates in that country. If they cannot sell cars in the United States, workers are laid off in Canada. It is a fairly obvious proposition. We do not like it any better than anybody else. We are not relishing that fact, but we say we have to adopt a policy to try to ease the situation.

What would happen if we adopted the propositions put forward by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain? All he talked about was taking great gobs of government money, throwing it in lumps on the problems and saying that that will solve them. When he said it was a simple proposition, he was wrong. It is a simplistic proposition. It does not answer the problem. It simply provides a thumb-sucking issue, some basis for his rhetorical outburst. However, it does not tackle the central issue, which is to deal with the inflationary problem we face in Canada. That is what we are trying to say in this budget.

As the Minister of Finance said, we have to provide a restraint policy, reducing the deficit by $2.5 billion in order to provide for a reduction in the pressure on money markets and ease the pressure on interest rates. That is a well-stated proposition. Members opposite who have spent so much time gnashing their teeth and wailing at the wall might be able to understand that they would gain the credit of the Canadian people if they endorsed such a policy rather than simply engaged in mental gymnastics, or the economics of fandangle which they are now engaged in, which make absolutely no economic sense. We have a policy related to the creation of long-term employment in this country. That is unlike the hon. member for Capilano who likes to see things through a dark mirror, and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain who has a prophetic mission. He has missed his calling. He should be an evangelical prophet. All he sees in the world is the chaos.

We on this side of the House have confidence in this country. We see that it has tremendous potential. It has ability to grow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Aside from the boos that are echoing in this chamber, the fact is there is tremendous growth potential. Of the last 15 months, 13 have shown a productive growth in employment, better than any country in the OECD. We have demonstrated that we can create jobs. In 1980 alone we created 330,000 jobs, the best record of any country. The only credit we get from those opposite is "do more".

We realize we are facing problems at this time. The difference between this side of the House and that side of the House is that we are prepared to take hard decisions to face those problems and not fool ourselves with dogmatic fantasies pulled out of text books that were obsolete thirty years ago. That is the difference between members on this side of the House and that side.

Our approach to creating jobs is not to say there is a simplistic answer, as proposed by the NDP or Conservative party. We believe that one has to take a multiplicity approach and to engage government in a variety of investments. We have said in the budget papers set forward on economic development strategy that we will invest approximately $65 billion into economic development initiatives in this country in the next five years. This government has developed a wide variety of new technology investment in the economic development envelope so that we can help the Canadian economy to develop sectors of industrial resource activity with growth potential. The government has committed $1.5 billion this year alone to research and development so that it may provide for greater productivity.

The government is developing a new network of microelectronic centres across Canada so that it may engage in new product development in that critical area of the economy. Across Canada the government has established a number of investments. For example, Mitel Corporation, New Brunswick, is one of the most significant achievements where we moved a new industry into a high unemployment area. This is the government's ambition, Mr. Speaker. It is not simply to throw money away, as the NDP would like us to do, but to be careful, cautious and relevant in our investments and put the money where it will do the most good. That is the position of this government.

We do have a basic plan contained in our industrial strategy. There are potentials that must be unlocked and unleashed so that they create the kind of growth that the country is capable of. But we will not do this simply by banging a drum and beating it loudly; it must be done by careful planning and management. The government is putting in place the kind of management that will ensure that there is an allocation of those major industrial benefits across Canada.

The budget contains $1.4 billion for the modernization of the transportation system in western Canada. How often have we heard the rhetoric of the other parties saying that we must modernize the railway system? The difference between the parties opposite and our party is that they talk about it but we do it. Our money is on the table.

An hon. Member: Is that an ironclad guarantee?

Mr. Axworthy: The money is on the table, ready to modernize the transportation system in western Canada. Furthermore, we also see that that growth potential must be broadly shared by all members of the community. The money must be used by those who have been on the sidelines of the economic game. That is why we have included the sum of $345 million in the budget for the economic development of native people across Canada. It will give them the opportunity to develop their own enterprise; to develop their own business activity; to give them the capacity and ability to take advantage of the new resource wealth of western Canada.

It seems to me that is a major achievement of this government. We are putting the money where it will do the most good. We are allocating it where the need is greatest. We are putting it where those who can invest it carefully will benefit the most.

When members opposite broadbrush the strokes and say that there is nothing in the budget for anyone, it simply means that they are incapable of reading or comprehending what is contained therein; and it could be a combination of both. I think it is a form of ideological blindness. Hon. members simply do not want to see what is before them. That is the real problem. As long as that ideological blindness continues, then we will not see any kind of enlightened economic debate in this House. What we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, is coming to grips with real problems.

For example, let me point out the condemnation raised by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), the once and future king of the Ontario NDP, who said, "Why are they doing direct employment jobs?" He says that is a piffle, a nothing. In this fiscal year we will invest $378 million of direct government funds into direct job creation, creating jobs for 80,000 Canadians in this fiscal year alone by direct employment means. That is a record worth talking about.

I do not know why it is that the member for Hamilton Mountain is so incapable of understanding or comprehending that that kind of investment will be allocated particularly in those areas where the needs are greatest. The hon. member talks about the fishermen in Newfoundland. We have allocated a special fund to the fishermen's union in Newfoundland to develop work projects, some 30 or 40 additional work projects, so that the fishermen remain employed and engaged in useful enterprises in that province. We allocated additional funds to the construction workers in Winnipeg, to the fishermen in British Columbia and the unemployed workers in Windsor. In other words, the government is allocating and targeting its direct employment funds and not throwing them around. The government is trying to use the money as we believe the taxpayers want us to use it, which is wisely and well and where the need is greatest. Those programs are in place.

Furthermore, the hon. member tends to neglect the other kinds of programs that this government has introduced. The ILAP program is designed to deal with communities that are experiencing major industrial problems and will provide grants to new industries and to workers for retraining so that they may move to other jobs and develop new skills and capacities. It seems to me that that is a useful enterprise. The government is not saying it is perfect. But rather than standing at their desks and pounding them with wild abandon, what we would look to the NDP for are constructive alternatives, useful solutions and ideas as to how that program can perform more efficiently. All we receive from them is their rhetorical flourishes that add up to nothing when you look at the content for substance.

The government has put in place the industrial renewal board to deal with the major adjustments in the textile industry that will affect tens of thousands of workers. This is a new initiative designed to work in co-operation with private industry. The government is able to recruit some of the top flight business community to work with government to develop ways of helping those communities and workers adjust to their problems. The government is trying to tackle those issues, Mr. Speaker. We are concerned about those issues and attempting to apply innovative solutions. We are not simply standing on the floor of the House of Commons saying, "Why don't you practice our theories?" We are trying to proceed in a pragmatic, useful and effective way.

This resolution before us refers to the lack of an industrial strategy. An industrial strategy is not just pasting a bunch of principles on the wall. Again, it is putting something into play, putting something to work.

The hon. member for Capilano asks: "Why isn't the government doing something about the problem of skilled workers?" I say to the hon. member: Why doesn't he read the budget documents? Why isn't the hon. member aware of what is going on in this House? Why isn't he aware of this government's initiative last year of a major study of the manpower human resource needs of this country? Why isn't the hon. member aware that the government has signed a number of agreements with the coal mining industry, the forest industry and the ship-building industry to develop manpower plans in each of those industrial sectors? Why isn't he aware that presently the government is spending over $800 million in training 250,000 Canadians in new skills at the present moment?

Is the member from Capilano so unfeeling, so unseeing, that he is not prepared to recognize what is in front of him, that 250,000 Canadians will benefit from federal government training programs? Is the hon. member not aware of the new program that was introduced last year to bring women into non-traditional trades which this year alone has helped to recruit 2,500 women in non-traditional trades, 2,500 women who were not there before, to give them a chance in those trades? Is the hon. member not aware of the new training programs for the native people of this country which will give them a chance to gain new skills in those areas?

I stand sometimes in amazement at the unwillingness of members opposite to deal with these problems in a rational way and say that they accept and give credit for what is being done, but here are some ways of improving and changing it. Instead, hon. members opposite paint this picture of horrid chaos around them to try to frighten and stampede Canadians. Their only purpose is for some minuscule political ambition.

Let us have a serious debate on economic problems.

An hon. Member: Why did you close down the native school in Hay River?

Mr. Axworthy: Let us look at what is in place. If the hon. member wants to talk about that, I will mention the additional $6 million put into the community employment program to provide for special requirements for native people moving to large towns and communities in western Canada. The government is developing the kind of ability to work with those groups, whether they are native people or women, so that we may tailor and harness government resources to their needs.

• (1620)

What we have in place now is the process by which we will put forward, in a matter of weeks, a serious and well-established program for national training across Canada. It was not designed unilaterally or arbitrarily, but after we listened to and received recommendations from the parliamentary committee, our own task force, the trade unions, business leaders and the social community. We have tackled our job in a careful and responsible manner and have arrived at a training program to fit the needs of the eighties.

When the hon. member opposite asks where the industrial strategy is, there it is, Mr. Speaker. It is being developed. It is being worked on.

Mr. Huntington: It is pitiful.

Mr. Axworthy: The hon. member says that it is pitiful. What a sad, pitiful comment that is. The hon. member is so incapable of understanding the world around him that it is not possible for him to engage in what is taking place.

Mr. Huntington: Do you really believe that?

Mr. Axworthy: I always believe what I say, unlike the hon. member who obviously, by the nature of his speeches, lives in a world of fantasy.

We have in place in the budget and in a range of government programs a variety of measures to deal with the issues. But we are not satisfied with that. We do not believe that is sufficient. We believe we must put in place a program that will enable us to come to grips with the potential that this country has. What we put forward in the budget was a number of documents dealing with fiscal relations between the federal and the provincial governments to try to realign the balance of the resources in this country, to provide for a far more effective strategy in dealing with the problems of higher education so that we could begin to target the places where training and education can be most relevant to the economic, social and cultural objectives of the country.

We have put in place a basic reform of the tax system to bring about equity. The hon. member for Capilano stood on his haunches and said that what we have in front of us is a tax measure that is making the accountants and lawyers—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the minister would permit a brief question on his last point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to accept a question when I finish my remarks, if time is available.

The hon. member for Capilano, who is here defending the interests of the tax accountants and tax lawyers, was decrying one of the most important and probably one of the most liberal measures to be introduced in this country in years, and that is to make taxes equal for all Canadians and to eliminate advantage. When the hon. member says that this tax system is going to cause great injustices, I must ask, to whom? To his wealthy friends, his corporate partners? Is that who is going to be disadvantaged?

As the Minister of Finance pointed out, something like $47 billion in revenue was lost last year through special advantages and tax loopholes. One would think, considering all the posturing and parading that the New Democratic Party does daily about equity and justice in this society, that it might have a good word for that very fundamental reform that is contained in the budget speech. Did we hear a word about that from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans)? No, not a peep. That makes members on this side of the House wonder whether their interest really is in equity and justice. Are they really on the side of the small taxpayer with a family of four, who, as a result of the measures introduced by the Minister of Finance, will not have to pay taxes on an income which is under $15,000? That budget measure contains a basic and fundamental thesis, and that is that the best way to ensure fairness in our system is to ensure fairness in the tax system.

We would accept the support of other parties. When they sit down and study these measures, they will realize that this principle is important and that far too many people in this country have for far too long gained an unfair advantage through the tax system. We are prepared to put that right.

I believe the budget document sets forward effective guidelines for the management of the economy in the 1980s. There is a series of proposals designed to bring down inflation and, therefore, unleash productivity in this country. There are measures to bring forward better equity and fairness in the tax system so that individual Canadians will know that they are equal one to another.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, there is a broad commitment to the issue of renewal, and to understanding that this country has tremendous growth potential. What we have to do is target in on different structural problems such as research and development, manpower and planning, industrial investment and sector analysis. All this is contained in the budget document. It is the kind of document that will provide a basis for discussion and consultation with the private sector in the months and years to come. In this way we can arrive at mutually acceptable strategies and development programs. That is the reason for the budget. It makes good sense in this time of turmoil because it is based upon pragmatics, not upon outdated philosophies.

I hope that Canadians will realize that, the budget resolution provides that the most effective way to create jobs in Canada is through proper economic management and not simply by relying upon the outworn, ideological, textbook positions put forward in the introductory remarks of the previous speaker.

I hope that hon. members dealing with the resolution now before the House will realize that it seems to be simply an exercise in common room philosophy rather than pragmatic policy. That is probably one reason why we are on this side of the House and they are perpetually on that side of the House!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister indicated his willingness to clarify his concept of fairness and equity. As he will know, the indirect taxes which apply to all Canadians, senior citizens, people below the poverty line and so on, have doubled in the brief term of office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). When he took over, those taxes represented $100 per month per household. Today they represent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not been recognized for a speech. If he wants to put a question to the minister, a question is in order, but he appears to be engaging in a speech at this point.

Mr. Hawkes: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I will put my question directly. The minister tried to show to the House that hidden taxes had not gone up. Is he trying to say that they have not doubled and are not now $200 per month per household? Does he believe that hidden taxes are equitable—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: I am pleased to answer the hon. member by pointing out to him that the government and the Minister of Finance have provided for substantial increases in the income supplement for old people. We were able to reduce the price for energy proposed by the previous government so that the consumer has a better deal. We have reduced unemployment insurance premiums by about 15 per cent in this year alone. So I would say that we had allocated our scarce resources to helping those who need help most. Whatever particular fantasy the hon. member believes about hidden taxes, I suggest that rather than looking in his crystal ball, he should look at the budget instead of whatever peculiar figures he seems to be drawing out of the hat.

• (1630)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, having heard the hon. minister, I think that all hon. members of this House would surely agree that this government just has no shame. For instance, in response to the question put by my colleague as to whether the minister would not agree that there is a substantial increase in indirect taxation, the minister, in effect, talked about certain other things and then said, "Well, instead of looking into a crystal ball, look into the budget." I will take the minister up on that.

This is what is stated in the budget document entitled "The Budget in More Detail", at page 71. I hope the minister is listening, because he says that this is the proper information. The sentence to which I refer states:

> The gross petroleum compensation charge and Canadian ownership charge revenues are largely responsible for the 54.1 per cent growth in indirect taxes in 1981-82.

If one looks at the table on the next page, based on the national accounts table, Table 9.3, what the government is talking about is a growth in indirect taxes from $13.3 billion to $20.5 billion. There will be an increase of more than $7 billion in indirect taxes, the most regressive tax any government can inflict on the public. This government has the colossal audacity, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), to tell us that we are looking into crystal balls when we hint that, somehow or other, there is an increase in indirect taxation in this country.

Mr. Crosby: Shame, shame!

Mr. Stevens: I notice that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is in his place. Your Honour will recall that during question period he had those crocodile tears about what he called that "unfortunate, regressive tax" that the provincial government in Quebec has imposed on those who use gasoline in that province. I am not defending the Quebec government, but let me point out that if the Quebec government has imposed such a regressive tax, it was set the example by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He was the one who, through his energy approach, lifted more money in a shorter space of time through one tax measure than any minister or government has ever done before in the history of Canada. In short—

An hon. Member: How much was yours?

Mr. Stevens: —we find that every time a litre of gasoline is sold today at an estimated price of 36.7 cents per litre, the total amount going into the federal coffers is 12.4 cents. That is the truth.

Mr. Chénier: Where was your tax going?

Mr. Stevens: In truth, the government has set upon a policy where, through indirect taxation and various other tax means, it is lifting billions of dollars of taxpayers' money, not to reduce the deficit, but simply to swell its spending even further than the projected line of spending for the government, which was revealed to us when we took office in 1979 and we were exposed, for the first time, to the trend lines of the former Liberal government.

One of the backbenchers on the Liberal side has questioned our spending level. I am very surprised he raised that because he must have checked those figures out himself.

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Stevens: He will know that on a national accounts basis, the budget which was brought in by our party anticipated a spending level which would have been $17.25 billion less by 1984 than the budget which was brought into this House on November 12.

Mr. Evans: You never could have lived within those estimates and you know it!

Mr. Stevens: In short, we have a government here which is so shameless that, notwithstanding the fact that it has totally distorted the spending and revenue picture in Canada at the federal government level, it has the audacity to start saying that this is a budget of restraint.

The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration stood up and said, "You cannot blame us for various things. We cannot be blamed for Ronald Reagan's election to the White House, we cannot be blamed for the federal reserve board's decisions, and we cannot be blamed for the OPEC decisions and this type of thing". The truth is that the government surely takes the credit when it goes the other way. The minister referred to interest rates without clarifying, incidentally, that the Canadian rates are 3 per cent to 4 per cent higher, across the board, than the American rates. Within a minute of the minister saying that, he turned around and took credit for falling interest rates. If he had nothing to do with rising interest rates, why should he then get some credit for falling interest rates?

Mr. Evans: Which way do you want it?

Mr. Stevens: That partly bearded member over there has asked, "Which way do we want it"? It is not which way we want it. It is what is fair for the Canadian public.

Mr. Chénier: I know, but you blame everybody and never give credit, so what's the difference?

Mr. Stevens: When the Minister of Employment and Immigration says that the interest rate is falling, he forgets to point out that it is still more than one percentage point higher than at any time in previous Canadian history. That is what he fails to make clear to the Canadian public.

Having said that, the minister then turns around, without even blushing, and says that the central issue is inflation and that this government is really doing something about it. He says, "We have brought the deficit down by $2.5 billion." What does he mean by that? This is what he apparently means. In fiscal year 1981, the decifit was $12.6 billion. In the year we are just going into the deficit will be $13.3 billion. Most public school children would say that that looks as though the government will go into the hole about $700 million more.

Mr. Chénier: "Sinc" misses everything, misses the point all the time.

Mr. Stevens: However, that is not what these fellows are talking about. When they say there will be a $2.5 billion reduction, they are talking about 1986. They are talking about some type of projection that they say will mean a deficit of $10.2 billion by 1986, compared to $13.3 billion at the present time. In short, it is just a dream, because we know that the one thing one can count on concerning this government is that its projected expenditure levels are the floor. Those projected levels will surely be attained; it is only a question of how much more the government will add to those levels and how big its deficit will be.

When we were introduced to Liberal economics upon being elected to power, I was absolutely stunned when the Treasury Board showed me that the ongoing anticipated deficit if the Liberals had been left in power would be $18 billion by 1984. If one looks at the present figures, one will see that if the government had not grabbed $9 billion further from the Canadian public, that is exactly the deficit figure it would be living with by 1984. That is this government in action; yet the Minister of Employment and Immigration says that to ensure jobs in the future we need, to use his words, proper economic management. If he believes that and if he has any heart for the people who are now being thrown out of work and are without jobs, largely due to his inaction, he had better resign tonight and show his protest against a government which has shown it does not know the meaning of the words "proper economic management".

When I say that, let us not forget that the federal gross national debt, as a result of this government's actions, will be about $119 billion. That represents for every taxpayer in the country a debt load of $12,500. It means, if one likes, that with interest rates at their present level it will cost taxpayers $14.5 billion this year, amounting to another $750 per taxpayer.

To put that into perspective, you can assume that at least half of that debt is not necessary, which is a fair assumption bearing in mind that when the emperor first took power the total debt in this country was only $20 billion. This budget indicates that by next year an additional $100 billion of new debt will be on the shoulders of Canadians. Surely it is not unreasonable to say that at least half of that was totally unnecessary, and if that is so, that means approximately $900 of unnecessary burden is being placed year in and year out on every taxpayer in Canada.

Think what that $900 would do to help the poor of this country. Think what it would do if it were not being spent on yesterday's debt for interest charges. Think what it would do to help the unemployed, the senior citizens and those in need of better health care. That is the insidious thing which this government is doing. In short, it is squandering public money day in and day out. The government is squandering it to the point of going further and further into debt to pay yesterday's grocery bills, at the same time loading more and more debt not only on the people of today but on future generations to come.

Having said that, I noticed that the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated that somehow there was an industrial strategy in place and that productivity was somehow a desirable thing. Let me point out that when the Liberals are asked to explain their high unemployment statistics, as a rule they like to respond by talking about job creation. For example, we hear the Liberals say that in 1980 job creation went up 2.9 per cent as far as total employment is concerned. Although they say that, they then admit in the next sentence that there was zero growth as far as Canada's economy was concerned in 1980. Therefore, what the Liberals are saying is that their economic measures were so improperly placed that it took 286,000 more people working in Canada to produce exactly the same gross national product that we produced in 1979. In fact, as a result of the government's mismanagement we find that for the last four years on a per worker basis an actual deterioration in Canadian workers' real income has occurred because of the government's actions.

In short, how can we have this minister somehow or other attempting to take credit for what he feels is a good job-creation record while at the same time we know that, with 891,000 Canadians out of work, we have continued to post the worst record for unemployment among the major OECD countries? That is this government in action.

Again using OECD figures, we find that between 1973 and 1980 Canada had an average productivity growth of 0.2 per cent. That is one-third of the productivity growth in the United States. During that same period productivity growth in the United Kingdom was 1.5 per cent, Germany 3.1 per cent, France 2.7 per cent, Italy 2.2 per cent and Japan 3.4 per cent. Surely most members would agree that a government with that kind of a record, one that attempts to justify its budget brought in here on November 12, in truth has no shame when it starts to pretend that its record entitles it to the confidence of this House.

Perhaps when we deal with statistics we lose sight of the human element. We forget about the people who are actually being thrown out of work. I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is in the House. I hope that before today's end he will stand up and explain a few things. I hope he will explain to the people of Kitchener why it was necessary for Budd Canada Ltd. to give indefinite lay-off notices on Monday, November 16, to 826 of its 1,100 employees. We should bear in mind that Budd Canada Ltd. employed 3,100 workers two and a half years ago and this latest lay-off will reduce that number to a mere 700 employees. Surely some minister on that side of the House must feel that he has to give an explanation why that kind of situation is occurring.

Perhaps some minister can tell us about Canadian Admiral Corporation, an appliance manufacturer which has shut down its operations in Mississauga, Cambridge and Montmagny, Quebec. On November 13 that company issued dismissal notices to 2,450 employees. The key reason for this, the company said, was the high interest rate structure and lack of sales because of the international competition the company has had to face.

Perhaps the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce can tell us why he takes great pride, as the minister responsible for FIRA, in the sad tale of Irwin-Dorsey Ltd. of Canada, a subsidiary of an Illinois Company. For those who are not familiar with the situation, this company employed 25 people in the Georgetown area of Ontario. It was doing about $5 million worth of sales largely in the texbook field, but Irwin-Dorsey had the misfortune of having its parent taken over by Dow Jones of New York.

As a result of Dow Jones of New York taking over the American parent, FIRA was triggered and was asked to pass on whether there should be a divestment of the Canadian subsidiary as a result of the change of ownership from one American to another American. In brief, FIRA was asked to find that there was a bad American coming in to control this company and presumably replace a good American. The American company fought the FIRA decision triggered by the then secretary of state. I see the secretary of state who made the decision is here in the House. He said that he did not think it was right to have a foreign ownership component in that company.

The decision was fought all the way to the Supreme Court. The FIRA decision was upheld and guess what is happening. The factory will be closed by December 31. The books will be shipped into Canada with no customs paid from Illinois. Through that minister's absolute bungling he has told 25 Canadians that they are no longer entitled to work in Canada because he prefers to have Americans doing their job instead of them.

To make matters worse, the minister is telling companies such as Mitsui, which is the thirty-ninth largest company in Canada doing $1.5 billion worth of business here and employing 140 people, that if they want to open up factories or other facilities in Canada, a lot of red tape has to be gone through, but if they want to continue producing their goods in foreign countries and shipping them to Canada, they are welcome.

To put $1.5 billion into perspective, Dofasco does exactly the same amount of business in Canada and employs 14,100 people compared to the 140 employed by Mitsui. In spite of this, we have a minister telling us that we have an industrial strategy in place. If it is an industrial strategy, it is a tragedy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Canadian Armed Forces—Possible participation in Sinai Desert peacekeeping operation. (b) Request for details of proposed participation; the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Railways—Pensions of retired workers. (b) Reported purchase of Gulf Oil stock by Canadian National Railways pension fund; the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis)—The Constitution—Provision respecting mandatory retirement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—CONDEMNATION OF LACK OF BUDGETARY JOB-CREATION MEASURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Deans:

That this House condemns the government's budget for (a) not introducing new job-creation measures in the light of the largest number of pre-Christmas lay-offs experienced since the Depression (b) the complete rejection of an effective industrial stragegy to provide long-term jobs and thus a cynical reversal of the government's election promises.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate today, but I would first like to point out that I am the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and that you probably took me for another of my colleagues whom I must look like.

Before getting to the heart of the matter, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to some of the comments made by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I think that even though he was here on the evening of the budget, his mind was probably somewhere else. Since he spoke about the deficits of the Liberal government which he predicted will be enormous and near disastrous, I urge him to go back and read the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12. I can even tell him what page of Hansard to look up, page 12726, and he will find that during the 1980-81 fiscal year, we effectively reduced the budgetary deficit by about $2 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I simply do not understand why our friends opposite take pleasure in trying to exaggerate the present economic crisis by quoting figures that are often unfounded and by attempting to ridicule the very significant proposals made by this government to create employment in the have-not regions and to take very concrete measures to counter our current difficulties. I would go even further, Mr. Speaker, regarding the figures quoted by the hon. member when he said, if I did not misunderstand him, that in 1984-85, we would have a deficit of approximately $18 billion, unlike what we have forecast.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would ask him to come back to this excellent budget speech which shows that the government is anxious to solve the economic problems of Canada, to this budget speech in which the Minister of Finance stated that, because the government wants to reduce inflation on the one hand, and the budgetary deficit on the other, our deficit would probably drop to $6.6 billion in 1982-83 and to $5.5 billion in 1983-84, thanks to our policies. I believe that the Minister of Finance and his government really want to show that they are taking vigorous action to reduce inflation and our budgetary deficit. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of the motion now before the House is suggesting that the government is not doing anything to create jobs, that it is unable to realize that the entire country is going through difficult times and that unemployment affects some regions more than others.

In the few minutes allotted to me, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to show that the government, more particularly the Department of Employment and Immigration, sponsors various programs which indeed counter the criticisms levelled at us by the opposition parties and directly come to grips with this job-creation problem. Our department offers a series of programs to meet those problems and the time has come indeed to speak about the community employment programs. We have the Local Employment Assistance Programs—LEAP for short.

A new program has also been implemented during the last fiscal year by the Department of Employment and Immigration in co-operation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, here again to solve the lasting problems peculiar to certain regions. Those extremely important and worthy programs are the LEDA programs. We have also set up other programs on which I will comment in more detail later on.

I simply want to point out that those community employment programs have enabled us to create tens of thousands of jobs over the last fiscal year. If those are not concrete measures taken by our government to reduce unemployment and face trying conditions, I wonder how our friends opposite consider the action of the government in those fields. I might add that when the government created those jobs, it paid very particular attention to our younger people. Our government and the minister who heads the department are greatly concerned about them.

During the summer of last year, we created 49,200 jobs for our young people across Canada, 13,924 in Quebec alone. That means an investment of $100 million in job creation for our youth. We must realize that we live in a free enterprise system where it is especially up to the private sector to generate jobs. While recognizing this principle, our government, through these various programs, also wants to help and support the private enterprise in its job-creation function. This is how in every province, and in every region, in co-operation with private enterprise, we did manage to create jobs. Obviously, some of these jobs are temporary. But even these temporary jobs help thousands of young Canadians acquire the necessary experience to guide them in one direction and will reveal an ability for certain types of work, and this will allow them to get into the job market and find a permanent job.

We should also note, Mr. Speaker, that these temporary programs are aimed at various groups in our society. They will help women, and other groups such as the handicapped and people with social and economic problems to find work. Perhaps I could start by explaining in greater detail some community development projects. May I remind members of the official opposition, who blame us for not creating jobs in Canada, that during the short time that we were in opposition and their party was in power it was they who decided to do away with these community development projects. If they had stayed in power, what would have happened to all our job creation programs? Fortunately, the Canadian people saw the light and nine months later re-elected a government that is sensitive to and able to understand the economic problems of the country and can act in such a way as to create and maintain these programs which our regions desperately need to create new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, early this summer the minister announced that $113,400,000 would be spent on phase two of the Community Development Projects, $38 million of which—34 per cent—was earmarked for the Province of Quebec. This, Mr. Speaker, helped to create 6,560 jobs in Quebec. I also feel, Mr. Speaker, that I am in a position to speak with some authority on these Community Development Projects, since I represent the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, where the unemployment rate during the winter is between 25 per cent and 30 per cent. These community development programs, Mr. Speaker, have helped to create jobs during the past few years in my riding and in our region. These job-creation programs have been in existence since 1973, and have helped us not only to create the usual temporary jobs, but also to establish infrastructures, which subsequently made it possible for most of the 45 municipalities within the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine to hire employees on a permanent basis.

This year again, Mr. Speaker, my riding will receive $2.5 million for job creation. I can assure the House that these funds are spent wisely, and that on the strength of several years' experience, we shall be successful in creating permanent jobs. We are repairing facilities in small fishing ports and establishing small industries which subsequently become going concerns—that is how we can create permanent jobs, Mr. Speaker. It is to be hoped, and in fact I am sure, that the government will continue to use such programs to relieve unemployment and fight joblessness in areas such as eastern Quebec, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and some part of western Canada, and so provide work for more people.

There is another program, Mr. Speaker, to which I referred earlier, and which I feel is one government program precisely to promote the development of as many industries as possible in our region. I am referring to the LEDA program, that is, Local Economic Development Assistance. Last year, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to be involved in announcing one of these projects in eastern Quebec, namely on the Magdalen Islands which are part of my riding, because with unemployment rates as high as the ones I mentioned earlier, we need this kind of program.

In our area, Mr. Speaker, the problem is that although we do have entrepreneurs and people who have a certain amount of capital and ideas to contribute to the development of our economy, the stumbling block is always either a lack of technical assistance or some risk capital. With the program created by the Department of Employment and Immigration, in co-operation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, we will now be able to help these people through the critical phase of installing or establishing a factory or a company, until they can operate on a permanent basis. Obviously, requests for these programs are received from areas throughout Canada.

Indeed, 13 projects are now under way or on trial, and I am sure that others will be forthcoming. Mr. Speaker, it must also be added that such programs, especially this one, are not intended to replace banks, credit unions and other lending institutions. It merely supplements those lending institutions, and the groups interested in that project must apply first to a lending institution or to the Federal Business Development Bank. Now, as can be seen, this very important program could assist rural and semi-rural areas where permanent jobs could he created. We are accused of failing to create permanent jobs throughout the country. Mr. Speaker, I have just pointed out a very important program which will enable us to create permanent jobs in various areas.

There is also another program, Mr. Speaker, that has a low profile but is extremely important, the Local Employment Assistance Program commonly known as LEAP. As I said, the program is aimed at people in difficulty, because in high unemployment areas or areas with special problems, some individuals have difficulty first finding a job and secondly keeping it. I think there are specific problems in that respect in a number of areas, but our goal with LEAP is indeed to address that problem. It enables individuals to work on a three-year basis in a given field in order that they may acquire the skills needed to find and keep a job. These programs are on a 12-month basis at first, with an adjustment or program development phase, and $100,000 grants are allotted for their inception.

Then in the operational phase, that extends over a three-year period, as I said, $275,000 is paid in grants to cover up to 50 per cent of salaries within a given industry. Again I can state, Mr. Speaker, that my constituency has benefited from the program. Our friends opposite might be interested to know that in the constituency of Bonaventure we succeeded in creating five industries that are extremely important and will give permanent employment to local people. This is the main thing, Mr. Speaker, to be able to work on a permanent basis. That is why these programs are extremely important and must be maintained.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to another program that is also most important, the Community Development Projects program. It is also a program that is aimed at a group of people that otherwise could not progress any further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

• (1710)

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, this motion is a New Democratic Party motion, and I am certain this is the first time in a very long time that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is not in his seat. I do not know whether the hon. member is watching this debate today, but I am certain that he will be reading Hansard and I want to express my best wishes to him for a very speedy recovery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The motion put forward today uses such phraseology as "the largest number of pre-Christmas lay-offs", and that brings to my mind lay-offs in automotive industry, and also the farm equipment industry which has been dealt with previously. The motion also uses the word "depression", and that obviously reflects the state of the Canadian agricultural industry today. The motion uses the words "a cynical reversal of the government's election promises", and that is nothing new.

I want to make it perfectly clear that I have equal regard and equal compassion and concern for all the citizens of this country who are fighting, but failing, to maintain their homes, their businesses or their farms. My desire would be to deal equally with all these groups. However, because of the lack of time and my special responsibility in this House, I must deal with the latter group, the Canadian food producers and farmers. In doing so I refer to this country's basic and most vital industry, the food production industry. I will not be speaking just about the 5 per cent of Canadians who produce food nor just the 25 per cent of Canadians who are employed either directly or indirectly in the total food chain, nor just the 23 million or 24 million people in this country, but, indeed, the many human beings who reside throughout what could be described, without any stretch of the imagination, as the hungry world.

As I indicated earlier, seldom, with the possible exception of certain isolated cases in the great depression of 1929, can one recall when Canadian agriculture experienced such severe and, in many instances, completely devastating financial conditions.

Some might ask why farmers are different, and that is a fair question which deserves an answer. The best answer I can find is one which has been given by Mr. Donald Shaughnessy, a chartered accountant, in his article entitled "Dollars sense". Under the byline "farmers may not survive high cost of borrowing", the first case Mr. Shaughnessy makes indicates that almost all independent farmers are at least in part debt financed. They borrow heavily by necessity to start, they borrow heavily by necessity to operate, and general operating costs are fixed and therefore unavoidable. It is impossible through management to lower those costs significantly. What he means is that a farmer cannot rationally starve or reduce his livestock in numbers or ruin his land.

The second point Shaughnessy makes deals again with an important difference. In farming the revenue-to-asset ratio is extremely low compared with other businesses. This revenue-to-asset ratio is normally as low as one to five or one to ten in farming. In other words, $1 million worth of assets may only produce $100,000 to $200,000 in revenue. In other businesses such as retailing this same ratio normally is two to one or perhaps even three to one. Shaughnessy concludes by indicating that this wide difference in revenue-to-asset ratio means at the bottom line that a general interest rate increase of from 10 per cent to 20 per cent is at least ten times more damaging to farmers than to retailers.

Generally speaking, four problems have contributed to the current financial dilemma in the agricultural industry. The first is the inability for most, if not all, producers to secure adequate returns for their produce in the marketplace. That really should be the fair approach. I had a conversation with one of my constituents last evening, a chap by the name of Jessie Dennis from the east end of my riding, and he indicated to me that if we could only achieve the goal of a fair return—after all, that is where most businesses derive the majority of their incomes—then we would not need a dollar of public money.

The second problem is the ever-increasing costs of farm inputs and particularly petroleum-based products. The third problem is low commodity prices, particularly today, but this has been a problem for quite some time. This is concentrated primarily in the red meat sector. The fourth problem is insidious and astronomic floating interest rates. In far too many cases the latter problem puts the ice cube into the fuel line.

Although a greater degree of financial stability does exist today in certain sectors which are under supply management—that does provide a marketing tool—they are not in any way fully protected against these problems or fully compensated. If these problems continue, producers will continue to lose substantial amounts of equity. In cases of high debt-to-equity ratio operations, financial distress will occur and they eventually will be forced out of business. What I am saying is that given today's conditions it is really only a matter of time.

The operating input cost picture might best be illustrated by providing the following examples, and this is a cost increase comparison between 1970 and 1980 given in percentage terms. The cost of petroleum products went up 166 per cent; mixed fertilizers, up 197 per cent; pesticides, up 243 per cent; feed and seed, up 160 per cent; and—listen to this one—interest, 360 per cent.

It should be noted that these increases do not contain the rapidly escalating increases in 1981 of energy and interest costs. Indeed, if interest costs remain high, and when energy costs double over the next couple of years, these costs will show like increases in about half the time. Total debt on Canadian farms in 1960 was as low as $1.6 billion. In 1970 it had increased to $4.2 billion. In 1979 it increased to $13 billion. It is estimated that in 1981 the total farm debt in Canada could be as high as $15 billion.

The cost of servicing this debt at a 10 per cent interest rate with improved market conditions could be described as manageable, but the cost of servicing this debt at depressed market prices and at a 20 per cent interest rate is obviously impossible to meet. Interest paid by Ontario farmers in 1979 amounted to $373 million, up from some $95 million in the five-year average period from 1970 to 1974. In 1981 the calculated interest paid by Ontario farmers is expected to be about $621 million. That amount surpasses the total income of Ontario farmers.

I had a conversation a couple of days ago with Mr. Henry Epp, who is the president of the Ontario Greenhouse Vegetable Producers Marketing Board, and he expressed concern not only about interest rates but also about energy costs. He indicated to me that about five years ago it required less than $10,000 to heat one acre of greenhouse. Today that figure has increased to $40,000 per acre and, when one projects the requirement for 1985, that $40,000 figure could easily be doubled.

Reference has been made to the fact that farmers buy retail and sell wholesale and that farmers have been under a wage and price control policy for years. That is accurate and true. The example I want to use has been prepared by a chap who farms in Victoria county, a Mr. Seldon Parker. He quite appropriately has used corn as an example. The following clearly demonstrates the loss in purchasing power of that commodity. Incidentally, we hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) talking day after day about the number of programs in effect. One of his favourite themes is the advantages of advance payments, but corn does not qualify. Ontario's largest cash crop does not qualify for advance payments.

Mr. Parker has used January, 1973, for his example, and he has used one bushel of corn. In 1973 a bushel of corn sold for $1.68. In the other column he shows the price in the fall of 1981. Today corn is selling at $2.96 a bushel. He has taken his purchasing power in 1973 and the number of items he has to purchase, converted that to bushels and compared it in bushel terms to what would be required today.

In 1973 a repair job on his combine required 92 bushels of grain. Incidentally, at that time in dollar terms the job cost him $155. He had the same repair job done last fall at a cost of $1,176. In terms of corn, it required 434 bushels.

A tonne of ammonium nitrate in 1973 required 43 bushels of corn. It now requires 94 bushels. In 1973 a bushel of corn purchased six gallons of diesel fuel. This fall it required 2.7 bushels of corn.

In 1973 he paid his property taxes by marketing 293 bushels of corn. This fall he required 405 bushels of corn to pay those same property taxes. In 1973 he required 818 bushels to pay those expenses for a cost of $1,300. This fall, 1981, he required twice as many bushels, 1,595 bushels, with a dollar value of $4,709.

Simply to get parity with 1973 costs, corn would have to sell at $5.75 a bushel. That would require an increase of $2.80. The difference is exactly what corn is selling for now. To break even and get back to where he was in 1973, corn would have to double in price.

I mentioned earlier that the situation was more severe for the red meat industry. I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), who is very concerned about this, will speak on this subject in the days ahead. I would like to cite a survey of some 93 beef farmers in three Ontario counties, Bruce, Grey and Wellington, which showed that 42 of the 93 had debts worth more than 75 per cent of what they owned and 23 had debts that exceeded their assets. It would appear that most of these producers whose debts exceeded 75 per cent of their assets are in serious financial difficulty at the present time. Most of those farmers will not likely be able to finance their cattle operation in 1982. The average debt of those 93 farmers was $405,000. Nine of them had liabilities of more than $1 million and one had a debt of $2.2 million. Most of the debt is at floating interest rates which have doubled in the past year while beef prices have remained low.

The survey also showed that only seven of the farmers answering the questionnaire showed a profit of more than $5,000, while 22 of them said they lost more than $75,000 in 1981. To cope with interest rates of more than 20 per cent, 12 farmers sold off land or machinery, four of them liquidated their assets, six got an off-farm job and 23 of them, for whatever good it might do, took out another mortgage. That survey looked at only three Ontario counties. It is interesting to note that Senator Harry Hays, a former minister of agriculture, now in the other place, reportedly said that this problem is general across Canada.

Let us look at the stress, strain, frustration and depression that financial situations like these cause in a rural county. I want to refer to Mrs. Giselle Ireland, a spokesperson for the 250-member Concerned Farm Wives. She said her group studied 100 farm families in Bruce and Grey counties and found them constantly worried about bank payments, with high interest rates and beef prices that have led to huge losses and leaves many farmers merely working for the bank. She said that farmers are traditionally peace-loving people and that they would rather stay on the farm and do what they do best instead of going out and raising hell; but the feeling of being choked over a period of time leaves a sense of hostility and the urge to fight back.

Problems show up in the doctor's office as well. Alan Abelson, a doctor at the Chesley Medical Clinic, said an increasing number of patients are complaining of domestic and financial problems when they come for what he described as routine physical examinations. Dr. W. Knox, a medical doctor from Kincardine, Ontario has stated publicly that, as a result of the economic stress on the rural community, there is a growing awareness among the physicians of his area that there are indeed stresses in many forms appearing in the family unit. He further stated it was the over-all impression that if the current economic stress continues, more serious medical problems will follow.

It is obvious that floating interest rates are sinking many Canadian farmers. The red flags are up. Many farmers and business people have already thrown in the towel. Farm bankruptcies do not tell the whole story. They are only the tip of the iceberg. Farm bankruptcies do, however, indicate the trend.

By the use of the government's own statistical information, we see that farm bankruptcies ahave increased by 147 per cent when we compare the first half of 1979 to the same half of 1981; 147 per cent against 25 per cent over the same period compared to manufacturing, construction, transportation, trade and service industries. If we look at the number of bankruptcies from January 1 to September of this year, we find that there were 191. If we extend that period by one month from January 1 to October 1, we see an increase to 230. Only a fool or an idiot would suggest that all is well in the farm community.

Understandably, this financial crisis has not stopped at the farm gate. Rural commercial business centres are reporting 50 per cent declines in sales and service. Farm service industries are reporting not only declines in sales, but alarming increases in accounts receivable and bad debts.

For example, Robert Laning of Norfolk county, and owner and manager of a very large and diversified farm implement agency, indicates that nobody is buying, and he cannot blame them. I have known Mr. Laning for at least 20 years. He is a very progressive and industrious businessman. He operates a farm dealership and services some 500 machinery and equipment dealer outlets throughout Canada, primarily in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes.

He has indicated that interest costs to service his inventory have increased by 230 per cent over the past 24 months. His accounts receivable over 60 days have increased by 200 per cent in the last 20 months. He predicts that 30 per cent or more of the dealerships will not survive beyond 1982 if present financial conditions continue. This results in the decline of service and repairs for farmers. This in itself is costly, particularly during the planting and harvesting period. We sometimes run into the ridiculous situation where a $50,000 or $100,000 piece of equipment can remain idle during harvest time while waiting for a $5 part.

I recognize that the budget did provide a one-shot $50 million to the Farm Credit Corporation and a commitment to extend the Small Business Development Bond. The Small Business Development Bond has been completely gutted. It is not a long-term source of capital. My colleague for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) indicated today a memo had been circulating from head office through the banks instructing them to place a moratorium on the use of the Small Business Development Bond.

● (1730)

The $50 million to the Farm Credit Corporation again is in the right direction but is not an adequate source of long-term capital. In fact, $45 million of that $50 million will be paid back with principal and interest at 11¾ per cent for the first two years and at the full interest rate beyond that period of time.

In this state of emergency then, only $5 million and not $50 million can be designated for special assistance. The Farm Credit Corporation officials admit it will assist only—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) may continue his speech only with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wise: I can assure the Chair that I will not abuse that privilege.

The Farm Credit Corporation officials have expressed some disappointment. They have indicated that such a measure will assist only about 350 farmers. Duncan Allan, the newly appointed deputy minister for agriculture and food in Ontario indicated that it might assist one in 15 Ontario farmers. I indicated before, in all fairness, that the direction of course is positive, but the degree of support is disgraceful. This kind of assistance, given the state of the industry, is nothing short of an insult to Canadian farmers. The present condition of Canadian agriculture demands that the government take action now in a number of areas.

First, a moratorium must be imposed on farm bankruptcies, foreclosures and forced sales. Some people have questioned this. Why? It is to prevent 24-hour auction sales, to prevent the sale of productive assets, to eliminate the sale of valuable livestock at slaughterhouse prices and to give the necessary time for governments to put into place programs and policies for the survival and recovery of this industry. That is the wisdom behind such a moratorium.

Second, the Farm Credit Corporation must receive at least $500 million immediately. The required funds could be used exclusively to subsidize interest rates and the remainder could be used to provide the necessary funds to allow the corporation to continue its necessary function.

The Christian Farmers Federation has called for an FCC fund increase of 25 per cent. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has called for an increase of $1 billion. Fifty million dollars would subsidize an interest rate by 5 per cent for $1 billion worth of debt. Farm Credit Corporation funds are not grants, nor are they handouts. These funds are repaid with principal and interest. Funds of this magnitude would lower a significant number of debts from 20 per cent down to a more manageable level. That is the wisdom of such requests, Mr. Speaker.

Third, the Small Business Development Bond will be administered solely by the banks, if indeed they will participate in it. In order to ensure a reasonable degree of equity and fairness in the decision, an independent review agency should be established with representation from the AGRA community.

Fourth, this government has missed a golden opportunity to implement the AGRA bond concept. The timing is almost perfect. The cost to the public treasury would be extremely small. The benefit to the farming community would be immense. We know that a dollar invested in the agricultural industry generates $7 to $10 in terms of the general economy.

Fifth, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has proposed a market risk insurance plan. This plan involves a three-way participation between the two levels of government and the producers. This plan has been ignored.

Sixth, the Christian Farmers Federation has carefully studied this financial crisis and has recommended a selected interest rate subsidy of over 12 per cent on short-term and medium-term loans. I am certain that the members of that federation will find little comfort, if any, in the $5 million subsidy contained in the recent budget.

Seventh, what has happened to the government's election promise to update the V-day values? This promise has been completely forgotten. The government has yet to match our offer to double the exemption, to say nothing of a once in a lifetime exemption from this inflationary tax. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) today indicated there were only a couple of provisions left of which farmers could take advantage to cushion to a small degree the effects of the capital gains tax. One of those provisions has been removed; the other one has been seriously cut.

Eighth, no measures were offered for further rebates on fuels used for food production. Given the increase in cost of this source of energy in the next few years, a total exemption of tax would be appropriate and would benefit all segments of the AGRA food industry, from the producers to the consumers. The hon. member for Medicine Hat indicated, because of the serious state of the beef industry, the red meat industry today, that it is simply imperative for the government to move on to a rational and national stabilization plan. If the beef industry is to survive the crisis it faces today, I believe an emergency payment is essential.

We are losing farmers day by day. The farmers we are losing are among our better farmers. I recall asking a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on the first day of this session. The minister's answer received a lot of press coverage. He was firm in asserting that he would take on the banks. In fact, he said, "I want to see the banks bleed a little". The blood is still flowing out there today. I want to remind the Minister of Finance, although he is not present in the House, that the blood we see flowing out there is not from the bankers but rather from the farmers themselves.

We need these good young farmers now in the industry. We will need them more in the future. As we know this industry, it may not even survive if those conditions last three to five years longer. That is extremely bad news for the Canadian farmers, the consumers, the businessmen, labour and the country as a whole.

This government, and the hon. members opposite, are completely and entirely to blame.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate. Before I begin my remarks, I want to say how pleased I am that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has introduced this resolution.

I believe it is important that Members of Parliament from time to time debate subject matters that are of great concern to Canadians, whether it is in the form of legislation or a motion debated on an opposition day. I also want to point out that the party to my right, the pink rump as I call it, have no monopoly whatsoever on compassion.

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) quoted a lot and indulged in a lot of phraseology. What could be more despicable than this rich kid, more condescending than this moralizing professor—I do not know what the hon. member is a professor of—trying to tell the Canadian people what to do? I suggest that his intention is to confuse and to cause more hardship. That is the only way the hon. member gets elected. I would like to state clearly for the record—and I have to agree with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise)—that the hon. member and the NDP party are not the only ones to have some degree of compassion.

The budget that was introduced to the House on November 12, contained three main thrusts that somehow the opposition members, particularly the New Democratic Party, would like to distort. They did not check the facts, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of facts that ought to be placed before Parliament so that the Canadian people may know exactly what is taking place.

There are three points in the budget that I wish to deal with: restraint, renewal and equity. Restraint is aimed at reducing the deficit, which in part has an effect on inflation as well as on interest rates and on employment. Equity is dealt with in the measures which were tabled, such as the taxable loopholes which were closed. And, of course, assistance has been given to small-business men, farmers and home owners. I suggest to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain that assistance for small-business men will create jobs and ensure jobs for the future.

In his opening remarks the hon. member said that the policy of the government will lead to the dislocation of workers. What could be more untrue or inaccurate? That statement is not factual. We all know the position of his party on nuclear energy, and I should like to cite two examples in that area. There is a heavy water plant in my riding. If the government's aim were the dislocation of workers, perhaps it would have closed that plant. But the plant has not been closed; it continues to get subsidies and has provided 400 or 450 jobs.

The other inaccurate statement concerned another corporation in my area, namely, the Cape Breton Development Corporation. If the government wanted to dislocate workers, it would have shifted to British Columbia the 4,000 coalminers employed there. That is what the NDP has been talking about. The corporation continues to get subsidies, however, although it is a losing proposition. But it has created 4,500 jobs. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker, and those facts play on the nerves of hon. members opposite.

There are a number of other points which I wish to deal with later but I know I speak for my colleagues when I say we have the deepest sympathy for Canadians facing uncertain employment, especially as the Christmas season draws near. Sympathy is never enough for people in trouble. The government has always relied upon action rather than hollow words to help those in need.

Our compassion for workers is shown in the most generous and the best unemployment insurance package in the world. That is not to suggest that it is perfect. The program needs revisions, and those will come about because I have confidence in the ability and integrity of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Hon. members opposite often create confusion when they speak of lay-offs because they do not differentiate between temporary lay-offs and long term or even permanent lay-offs. It is certainly regrettable, but nevertheless it is a fact of life, that workers will have to be unemployed during the time a plant re-tools, for example, or experiences a disruption in the flow of material. Unemployment insurance can provide stability to the labour market in such times through its maintenance income mechanism.

The UI program was designed to give those who had been laid off temporary financial assistance to tide them over until they become re-employed. Unemployment insurance helps people pay their bills between jobs. Workers pay premiums to insure themselves against the unexpected loss of jobs. UI gives financial protection against this loss.

As hon. members know, at the present time there is a task force whose report has been made public. It is a working document which contains some recommendations with which I personally do not agree, but nevertheless I hope that with the co-operation of all Members of Parliament, when the package is introduced some time in the new year, those injustices will be corrected.

There are many examples of the way in which the Department of Manpower and Immigration has designed programs to help unemployed workers. I should like to describe two of them. The firm making Blue Bell jeans had two locations, one in Renfrew and one in Carleton Place, Ontario. When these two factories closed down, it meant that over 100 people were without jobs. UI agents from the Canada Employment Centre went to work immediately. Using standard departmental procedures they interviewed all the employees who were affected by the lay-offs. I can see that hon. members in the New Democratic Party do not care about the unemployed because they laugh and chuckle.

These interviews accomplished several things. The first concern of most people is how they are going to pay the rent next month. At the work site, UI agents complete the initial paper work for the UI claims so that the workers can get financial help as quickly as possible and get on with the business of finding other jobs.

Finding jobs for the workers is the other part of these interviews, Mr. Speaker. Some workers are not willing to move. It must be determined what work experience and qualifications they have and whether training could help. The answers to such questions allow employment counsellors to help those who have been laid off to find jobs. The department and this government do more than merely give someone a few dollars, saying "good luck". The government takes seriously its responsibility to help them maintain their productive place in society. Providing UI does this temporarily and helping them to secure a new job does it permanently.

A more dramatic example occurred in Stephenville, Newfoundland, when the liner board company was in difficulty in 1977 and had to be baled out. The loss of the American air force base meant a loss of business, and for the community it also meant that over 500 people were thrown out of work. Again, the Canada Employment Centre moved in using standard procedures, every employee affected was interviewed to see if he or she qualified for unemployment insurance and employment programs such as mobility and training aid. This information was used to blitz the various employment centres and large employers. As a result, most people found new work, and the community survived.

A footnote to this shows that the community now has an opportunity to prosper. Abitibi-Price has bought the old liner board company and is opening a paper mill. Undoubtedly, lay-offs are inevitable and hon. members across the floor must face that reality as we do.

The record of this government shows its use of complex unemployment insurance and employment programs to help individuals with the social impact of lay-offs.

Another response to temporary lay-offs is special job-creation measures. For a moment I should like to refer to a number of decisions made by the government as they relate to job creation. Direct decisions taken by cabinet will mean jobs and prosperity for many communities throughout Canada. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain did not refer to those decisions, however. He wishes to put them aside because he is the communicator of gloom and doom. Michelin Tire in Nova Scotia was provided with money by the Government of Canada. At the completion of this program it will have created some 1,850 jobs, and that is a fact, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Michelin will employ 5,200 people in Nova Scotia, thus becoming the largest manufacturing employer in Atlantic Canada. Production at this plant is scheduled to begin in July, 1982.

Another decision taken by the Government of Canada relates to the Sydney Steel Corporation. It is not in my riding but it is adjacent to it. A sizeable sum of money, $96.2 million was provided to the Sydney Steel Corporation for modernization. That creates jobs and despite what the NDP might allude to, despite all their rhetoric, that is a fact, and they should acknowledge it. But the NDP is the communicator of gloom and doom.

There are other decisions that I wish to refer to very briefly because I think that it is important that all members of Parliament, not just the pink rump on that side, be made aware of them.

• (1750)

The Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, a very good program, in the amount of $350 million. It involves four communities which are suffering from high unemployment and are receiving special assistance directly from the Government of Canada. Four departments of the Government of Canada are involved: DREE, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Employment and Immigration and Finance. I think that this information should be made known to Members of Parliament, it should be tabled, and all Members of Parliament should acknowledge that fact.

Of course, the Strait of Canso development is another initiative in the province of Nova Scotia. There are a couple of hundred across the country, but I am just referring to the ones for the province of Nova Scotia. The government provided an additional $3.2 million for the Canada-Nova Scotia subsidiary agreement for the Strait of Canso area development. That too will create jobs.

An hon. Member: Is private enterprise producing any jobs?

Mr. Dingwall: Of course, we all know where the NDP sit concerning nuclear energy, but they do not go down and tell the workers of the heavy water plant what they think. The NDP will not communicate that. However, in February, 1981, a decision was made to transfer the title of the Government of Canada's $300 million general uranium stockpile to Eldorado Nuclear Limited. The committee agreed in January, 1981, to seek parliamentary approval to lighten the debt load of Atomic Energy of Canada by $822.7 million. That creates jobs, and has created 450 in one location, in my own constituency. That is very important. That is another fact.

Of course, nothing is mentioned by the New Democratic Party concerning the money which was provided under the Nova Scotia Ocean Industries Agreement. In July of 1981, a five-year subsidy agreement to spur the ocean industry in Nova Scotia was announced. A federal contribution of $23 million will go, in part, toward the creation of a federal government ocean industry office in Nova Scotia to assist those industries which are closely tied to the ocean so that jobs will be created and prosperity brought to those areas of Atlantic Canada.

There are numerous other examples. I briefly referred to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. That, too, received additional moneys from the Government of Canada to create jobs. I hope we will continue to do that in the future. I must underline another fact not accepted and then swept under the rug by the NDP because they want to communicate to the Canadian people doom and gloom and predictions that everything will fall.

It should be kept in mind that an extremely high percentage of lay-offs are temporary. Thus we must look beyond the bald figures to assess the real seriousness of the problem. Superficial comments on lay-offs are no better than the scare tactics which serve no purpose other than to embarrass the government. In fact, this government has long recognized that so-called permanent lay-offs can be prevented through careful planning. For a number of years, the government has been quietly working behind the scenes with management and labour in searching out ways to prevent lay-offs from taking place because of technological or economic changes.

Hon. members should underline the name of the program, manpower consultative services, because it is a most effective way to stabilize the labour market. I mention this program because I do not believe it has been receiving all that much fanfare. Long before the bleak reality of lay-offs occur, this service moves in, bringing management and labour together through a special committee which examines the situation in detail. Experts are made available to the committee and the federal government picks up the tab for 50 per cent of the financial outlays.

Here are two examples of how this approach has prevented lay-offs. Continental Kitchens of Concord, Ontario, was forced into receivership and 50 workers are in imminent danger of losing their jobs. This service brought in outside experts who were able to show that the long-range prospects of the firm were bright. Thus today that firm is no longer in receivership and not one person lost his or her job. A similar situation existed for the Toronto manufacturing firm of Shiffer-Hillman, and this time some 130 jobs were saved thanks to this particular service.

Let it not be said by opposition members, and particularly by that group down there, that the government is just sitting back. We know where those hon. members sit on a variety of issues—

An hon. Member: The NDP.

Mr. Dingwall: —whether it be the Constitution, nuclear energy or whatever. Those hon. members are talking out of both sides of their mouths. It should be noted that the Government of Canada is not just sitting back. We are taking bold initiatives. Some of them are new and some are initiatives which we have revamped from previous years. Nevertheless, we are attempting to address this particular issue.

A great deal can be accomplished, I believe, merely by providing a framework to enable the private sector to absorb laid-off workers. Naturally, the government is also willing and eager to help place the workers in immediate employment. In recent years, great strides have been made in improving the job-matching performance of the government. Through the use of regional and national computer systems, job matching can be done in a matter of minutes. As I understand it, an unemployed welder in Moncton, for example, can visit the Canada Employment Centre there and request a national job search. Within minutes, he should have a number from which to choose and can even make his own job interview and arrangements on the spot. For laid-off workers willing to relocate, the government's generous mobility assistance is vital in getting them re-established as soon as possible. I believe there are several types of mobility assistance available, from helping to defray the costs of trips to look for new jobs to generous relocation allowances.

Whenever efforts to find jobs locally fail and mobility is not a viable alternative, the government can help laid-off workers, as I said before, through its massive expenditures in training which amount, I believe, to approximately $750 million annually. Nevertheless, many of those workers probably need to upgrade their skills to secure more permanent jobs. As I said, the government offers very generous financial aid to firms in the private sector which take on unemployed workers for on-the-job training. I am sure that many hon. members will agree with me that this is the most effective way to get the unemployed working again.

Before I conclude my remarks, I wish to reiterate that when subject matters of job creation and unemployment are raised in the House, I, as one Member of Parliament, will listen very carefully to what hon. members opposite have to say about the causes of unemployment and what they have to say in terms of job creation. However, I will not stand in my place and listen to hon. members opposite, particularly those from that group down there, quote facts which are inaccurate. I sincerely believe that it adds nothing to the process because we are involved here in a very serious process, one of trying to assist the unemployed, to create jobs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. With the permission of the House, the hon. member may continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Be nice!

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you very much. Hon. members are requesting that I be nice. I am always nice. However, I want to assure the House that it is my intention and desire to listen to their concerns and to listen to what they want to suggest on how we can improve upon our programs. However, again, I will not sit here and listen to their facts which are totally inaccurate. I believe that all hon. members should approach this debate very seriously. When one approaches this debate on the unemployed and job creation, one must put all the facts on the table, both the good and the bad. I hope that in the ensuing months, all of us on all sides of this House will hear some good music in the sense that job creation will be heightened and that the unemployment rate will be substantially reduced. I think that is the wish of us all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is just prior to six o'clock. I would recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller); however, it being six o'clock, I will leave the Chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House recessed for the dinner hour, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) was to be given the floor.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on this opposition day motion. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) gave the New Democratic Party a compliment. He also complimented those people in Canada who have been protesting government policies over a year and a half. On this side of the House we were beginning to feel that our arguments on the economy and interest rates were not being listened to. Obviously from the kind of reaction we had from the hon. member and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) some impact has been felt by the government because it has become fairly sensitive to what it feels is becoming known in the land as an uncaring government. We have heard a lot about caring from the members of the government side today. Government members profess to be as caring as the New Democratic Party. This is quite hard to believe. If that is what the government members wish to believe, that is fine.

Perhaps the message from those people who come from Mississauga and Toronto about the housing crisis, did get through to the government, although that did not appear to be the case at the time. Perhaps the message from those people who came to protest the curtailment of VIA Rail, got through to this government. Perhaps the telegrams had some impact. Perhaps the message which the native people brought to Parliament Hill this afternoon got through to this government. I would like to ask those members on the Liberal side who are caring whether they are caring enough to carry a message to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). I am concerned about this afternoon's demonstration by our native people in front of the Parliament buildings. As a Member of Parliament, I thought it quite disgraceful that our native people were greeted in front of the Parliament of Canada by a line of RCMP officers. If we are sensitive to the feelings of Canadians, whether they are native Canadians, Canadian women or the population as a whole, we should greet the Canadian public in front of our Parliament buildings without having a line of RCMP officers there, especially when the demonstration is peaceful or just a demonstration for recognition as Canadians. I hope the members who are here will take that message to their colleagues who are not. What happened this afternoon was a disgraceful exhibition.

I am sure that the people in my constituency are as amazed as I am each time we have an election, because the Liberal Party seems to confound the public into believing that everything is new and that it has no responsibility for what happened in Canada previously. Today we have heard all about wonderful Liberal programs the government is introducing to create jobs and to protect the income of Canadians. We hear about an industrial strategy. But this government has been in power since 1963, with the exception of nine short months. I am sure those months seemed very short to the Tory party, but they were very long months for many Canadians. The government on the other side of the House has not lived up to the campaign promises which it has made to the Canadian public for years. I hope that Canadians in Ontario and in Quebec in particular will wake up to the fact that campaign promises we hear from this government are really just campaign promises.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond condemned the New Democratic Party for being purveyors of doom and gloom. It is not the New Democratic Party and it is not the Tory party who are the purveyors of doom and gloom, it is the economic conditions of this country. The Canadian public know what the Canadian economy is all about. A recent Gallup poll showed that 65 per cent of Canadians surveyed expect our economy to get worse this winter. In British Columbia, 72 per cent of those polled have lost confidence in the Canadian economy and in our federal government. In Atlantic Canada 77 per cent of those polled feel that unemployment and economic conditions will get worse instead of better. The poll was taken before the introduction of the budget.

It would be interesting to find out now what the attitude of the people living in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere in Canada is after having a budget presented which does nothing to put people back to work. This budget is the most dismal budget ever delivered by a minister of finance for years and years, especially in a period when Canadians are facing crisis situations in home ownership, business, fishing and farming. It is no wonder that the people in Atlantic Canada are pessimistic about the government's willingness to improve the situation.

The disastrous unemployment statistics published earlier this year show 989,000 people unemployed and probably another half a million so-called hidden unemployed, at least hidden from the minds of this uncaring Liberal government.

In Nova Scotia the figures indicate that 11 per cent of the labour force is unemployed. That figure is now probably closer to 14 per cent. In Prince Edward Island there are over 12 per cent unemployed, and in New Brunswick well over 13 per cent. In Newfoundland, according to official statistics, at least 15.2 per cent of the work force are unemployed. In all, over 300,000 people are unemployed in the four Atlantic provinces. That is a disgraceful situation in a country with the wealth and human resources we have.

As we follow this monetarist economic policy which is laid down for us by the United States, we are not only getting higher unemployment, we are also experiencing higher inflation, instead of the lower inflation promised by this policy of high interest rates. Inflation is not being reduced. This is evidenced by the massive increase in the cost of living in Atlantic Canada. In Prince Edward Island the consumer price index increased by 13.4 per cent between October, 1980, and October, 1981. In the same period, inflation went up 8 per cent in St. John's, Newfoundland, 12.1 per cent in Saint John, New Brunswick, and 11.4 per cent in Halifax. This compares with a national average of 9.1 per cent.

• (2010)

There seems to be no plan for stimulating the industry or investment in Atlantic Canada even though the major employer, particularly in Newfoundland, has seen a drastic reduction in investment in the fishing industry, from $91 million in 1979 to $53.4 million this year. While we do not like to dwell on the negative, I think it is worth while once again to remind the government, which has some ability to change economic conditions in this country, that it has some responsibility to Atlantic Canada as well as to the rest of the nation.

An hon. Member: This government has no ability.

Mr. Miller: It lacks ability but we hope it will develop some ability soon.

An estimated one-half of the 6,000 students graduating from Nova Scotia universities each year have to go elsewhere for employment, not because they want to leave the Atlantic provinces but because they must. They have been doing that for generations.

The federal government recently reduced the number of civil servants in Prince Edward Island by 138. This again is a blow to that economy caused by this budget. VIA Rail cutbacks will result in the loss of 280 jobs in Atlantic Canada, and will create more difficulty for employees and passengers.

Consolidated Rambler Mines is planning to shut down its copper mine at Baie Verte, Newfoundland, resulting in some 900 workers being laid off. This is a direct result of the high interest rate policy followed by the federal government and, I might say, followed by the Reagan government in the United States.

The unemployment picture in Atlantic Canada is disgraceful, and we have a government which seems unable to do anything to improve a situation that has been continuing for many years. While there are more statistics that could be quoted, I think, as my colleague the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) indicated earlier in the day, we really do not often put a face on the picture of unemployment. Today the NDP caucus met with representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress. Its representatives will be here on the weekend to add, hopefully, a very loud and strong voice to the protest of government economic policy as well as the government's interest rate policy. Regardless of the number of people who show up for the demonstration in front of Parliament on Saturday, you can be sure that tens of thousands of other people wish they could be in Ottawa to pass a message on to the government but who cannot afford to travel being on unemployment insurance or on human resources welfare.

Let me recount some of the stories we heard from members of the delegation who met with us today. A member from the Newfoundland Federation of Labour indicated that from 37 per cent to 40 per cent of the people belonging to that federation are unemployed. We were told that two mines were to be closed down, throwing many more people out of work. Probably compounding the problem extensively is the fact that the pension plan, to which the employees of one of those mines had contributed $1.5 million, was going to be lost to those members and there is no money with which to pay the pensions.

We were told that another mine was to be closed down because the company could make more money by putting its capital in the bank. That company was prepared to do that even though it meant throwing people out of work and on unemployment insurance. In this way the company can make more profit through bank interest, instead of putting the capital to work.

The fishing industry this year in Newfoundland was the worst it has ever been because of a combination of poor inshore and offshore fisheries stocks and federal government mismanagement. If Fonse Faour were part of the NDP now we would probably have very good representation from Newfoundland. That industry, which is the backbone of the Newfoundland economy, experienced a disastrous year, and the answer of the government to that loss of revenue was a $1.5 million make-work project so that people would have enough weeks of work to be eligible for unemployment insurance. That was inadequate but the best this government could do.

An hon. Member: A band-aid.

Mr. Miller: As my colleague points out, it was band-aid treatment for the economy.

Not only are the fishing and mining industries in trouble, the forestry industry in this country is facing difficulties. Our forest industry is the main exporter of this nation and the main revenue producer for provincial and federal governments.

Because of high interest rates woodworkers right across the country are unemployed. In my own riding of Nanaimo-Alberni there is a town which has 6,000 woodworkers with 1,500 of them now unemployed. The town itself is hurting, the businessmen are losing money and home owners are losing their houses because of this government's high interest rate policy.

A young fellow from Nova Scotia who came with the CLC to meet with us made representations to our caucus this morning. He put a human face to this picture of high interest rates and unemployment. His story could be applied to all kinds of woodworkers across this nation. There are some 11,300 unemployed in British Columbia. Some 47 per cent of the B.C. plywood industry is inactive because of the slowdown in home construction. About 85 per cent of the plywood manufactured in this nation goes to the construction of Canadian homes. We have unemployed plywood workers and at the same time we have people looking for homes and apartments who cannot afford them and we have many families losing their homes. Bob from Nova Scotia, who has five children, has to pay 60 per cent of his income toward his mortgage because of the 22 per cent interest rate. He represents 14,000 home owners in Atlantic Canada, 30 per cent to 40 per cent of whom are facing mortgage renewals in the next three months with interest rates fluctuating.

We in the NDP have some suggestions for this government. We have been hearing for years and years from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) about an industrial strategy. We want to know why we cannot employ more people in Atlantic Canada in the shipbuilding industry and establish a merchant marine. We have too many people in Atlantic Canada trying to make a living with a limited resource. The fishing industry just cannot support the number of people who are presently trying to make a living from fisheries. These people have no other employment opportunities. We want to know why this government does not move toward an industrial strategy which would enable the manufacture of more goods in Canada. We want to know why we in the maritimes cannot have our own shipbuilding industry.

Through Bill C-48 we are not going to produce the jobs and equipment necessary for offshore and northern development of oil and gas. We should be doing this and we should be insisting that the spin-off jobs go to Atlantic Canada, central and western Canada to produce income and a strong social fabric so that families can afford to purchase homes and feed their children as well as give them access to community facilities, thus encouraging families to remain together.

There is a dilemma facing families in Canada in that both parents have to work and often their children are placed in inadequate day care facilities. In some of the worst cases, families of the unemployed have to split up to enable the wife and children to apply for welfare because they can get more from welfare than if they were living together as a family. I have had that very example in Ottawa from the CLC.

When we talk about caring, we talk about caring for people in this country. This government has made many objections to our accusations that it is not a caring government. Our party is not the one who is sending this message to the government. It is our constituents who are sending it through us.

It is time that the government woke up to the real facts of life in this great nation which could be greater without a Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, today's motion claims that this government has rejected its commitments to stimulate long-term job creation through a comprehensive approach to economic policy planning. I believe that the facts are precisely the opposite to what these hon. members from the New Democratic Party would have this House and the Canadian public believe.

In the Speech from the Throne delivered on April 14, 1980, the government set out in clear and definite terms the nature of our industrial policy commitment. It said that the government would "promote a national development policy that would provide jobs, stimulate growth, build on regional strength and increase Canadian ownership and control of the economy".

With the budget last week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) published a paper entitled, "Economic Development for the 1980s" which brings together in a single document the policies and priorities of the Government of Canada for national economic development. The opposition members would have the public believe that what this document says about the role of the federal government in economic development falls short of the commitment which we have made in industrial policy. I think they are very wrong in this idea. I believe the principles and priorities set out in that document reflect a consistent adherence to the commitments on industrial and economic development policy which the government made at the beginning of its mandate and which have since guided its extensive work on industrial development policy.

The role we have set for the national government in facilitating economic growth and industrial renewal is a vigorous one. The government is and will remain an active player in the industrial development of this country.

The government believes that in the future, as in the past, private sector responses to market signals must map the essential direction of economic growth where markets function effectively.

Nevertheless, there is, in our view, a continuing need for government action to support private entrepreneurial activity, to promote the maximum competitive industrial performance and bring about a fair sharing of the benefits of growth in every region of Canada.

As the economic development document states:

> The Government of Canada must assume a leadership role in the field of economic development. Harnessing the resources of the economy is a national enterprise which includes but extends beyond the interests of particular regions or sectors. The policies and programs of the national government represent major instruments for managing and exploiting the development opportunities and ensuring that the benefits are shared fairly.

That is an important extract from the economic development document. These are not empty words, as is demonstrated in the many actions we have taken over the past 20 months.

There is the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program with more than $300 million for this year and the next two years. There is the funding of $250 million over the next five years for the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. Both these programs are in place to create, over the coming months, long term jobs in areas and industries that are presently undergoing substantial restructuring.

I can also point out other examples, such as the agreement made pursuant to discussions with the Ford Motor Company to provide 1,000 jobs in the Oakville assembly plant of that company and to ensure that new front wheel Ford cars—

Mr. Stevens: What about the lay-offs?

Mr. Gray: —will be built in Canada. There is the duty remission program for front-end loaders in Canada implemented for the purpose of creating 800 direct and 400 indirect long-term jobs.

Mr. Stevens: How about the lay-offs?

Mr. Gray: There is the direct action taken to restructure and Canadianize White Farm in Brantford to restore hundreds of jobs to that company. There is the $54 million in financial support extended to Michelin Tire to build a third tire plant in Nova Scotia, which will provide approximately 1,836 long-term jobs.

An hon. Member: What about Massey-Ferguson?

Mr. Gray: And there are the federal government's other basic commitments on industrial policy which are also brought forward in the central themes of the economic development strategy document, as they have been in the major economic policy initiatives—

Mr. Stevens: Why don't you tell us about the lay-offs?

Mr. Gray: —taken since this government took office. For example, Canada's rich resource base—

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. minister would accept a question now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. minister accept a question from the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo)?

M. Gray: Mr. Speaker, time is strictly limited in this debate, so if there is time after I conclude my remarks I would be delighted to accept questions.

An hon. Member: You are scared.

Mr. Gray: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, Canada's rich resource base, as said in the April 14 throne speech, is "a basic building block" for a great deal of our future industrial development.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that speech for you?

Mr. Gray: The economic development paper brings this commitment forward by highlighting a number of new government measures to enhance industrial activity in relation to our natural resources, such as hydrocarbons, agriculture, mining and forestry. But, perhaps even more important, these initiatives follow the introduction of the comprehensive National Energy Program which embarked the country on a great new national effort to realize the full potential for the development of our oil and gas resources and to ensure fair sharing of the benefits to Canadians across the country from that development.

Most recently, we have established in my department the office of regional and industrial benefits, and I stated, in announcing that program last August, the objectives and guidelines of the federal government for industrial benefits from the megaprojects.

All this was to promote competitive access by Canadian businesses and workers to oil and gas development on the Canada lands as well as major resource and other developments elsewhere in our country.

An hon. Member: It is not worth it.

Mr. Gray: The motion before this House accuses the government of having industrial policies which fail to create long-term jobs.

Mr. Stevens: True, true.

Mr. Gray: But inherent in the major project activities anticipated over the next 20 years are tens of thousands—

An hon. Member: How about today?

Mr. Gray: —of long-term jobs in construction, machinery handling, drilling as well as high technology areas. Indeed, the major projects task force predicted that between now and the year 2,000, major projects would generate about 20,000 new jobs in the high technology area.

An hon. Member: We have a million unemployed now.

Mr. Gray: The industrial benefits measures we have announced are designed to ensure that these job opportunities, as well as the other potential industrial benefits to Canada for major project activities, are realized for companies in Canada and for Canadian workers.

We are also strengthening Canada's research and development capacity through such actions as those taken in recent months, for example, to support the development by Pratt & Whitney of the PT-7 aircraft engine and by de Havilland of the Dash-8 commuter airplane. Although these companies have, in recent weeks, experienced lay-offs as a result of a severe downturn in the foreign markets that account for 80 per cent of the sales of products, the federal support for development of the new product lines, the Dash-8 and PT-7, is expected to create approximately 4,000 new and long-term jobs by 1983.

• (2030)

Federal government funding has also made possible the establishment of microelectronics centres of technology at six Canadian universities. We are taking steps, for example, to ensure for the various regions of Canada the benefit of the CF-18 fighter aircraft contract. There is the creation, by way of example, of the General Aluminium Forgings plant in Winnipeg through $3.1 million of federal government support. Another example is the hundreds of long-term jobs expected to flow from the signing of our memorandum of understanding with Bayly Engineering respecting that company's future activities in Canada.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister is not sticking to the motion put by the New Democratic Party. I wonder if he would mention the lay-offs at Massey-Ferguson and in the auto industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has the floor. The hon. member has not made a point of order.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, there would be no Massey-Ferguson today, no people working there and no jobs for laid-off workers to come back to had we on this side of the House not done what we did to ensure the restructuring and continuance of the company. I am certainly sticking to the motion. I am responding to the unjustified charge that our policies are not working to create long-term jobs.

One of our basic election commitments on industrial policy as stated in the economic development document is to work in the area of research and development. That document stated that exclusive of tax expenditures, the government is spending some $1.5 billion on research and development this year. The document also announced the establishment of a new industrial opportunities program to improve and make more effective the government's support of industrial innovation and development. It commits the government to put in place new measures to support high risk innovative activity by Canadian entrepreneurs; this in addition to the wide range of existing tax related and funded programs that support this highly productive and vitally important part of economic activity in Canada.

Another central element of our approach to industrial policy, to which we committed ourselves during the last federal election campaign, is to encourage independent Canadian-owned enterprise. Here several important steps have already been taken to support small and medium-sized businesses which are largely Canadian owned.

Last year my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), sponsored amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act and the legislation governing the Federal Business Development Bank to expand significantly the federal programs operated under these laws aimed at assisting Canadian small business. Following this government's extension of the Small Business Development Bond program, it is estimated that by the end of this year at least $2 billion in loans will have been committed to small business under this program. I was pleased recently to be able to announce the establishment of the first company, with several others about to follow, under the federal government's credit reinsurance program, and this program has the potential to make up to $1 billion of long-term loan funds available to small and medium-sized businesses.

Last week's budget itself and the economic development strategy document build vigorously on the already very significant measures which the government has introduced since taking office to encourage independent small and medium-sized businesses. In the budget, the government has responded to representations we had received from the small business community by raising significantly the limits of small business eligibility for the special tax rate afforded to small businesses and by eliminating the corporate surtax for small businesses.

The budget also extended the reach of the Small Business Development Bond program to include unincorporated businesses. These tax measures are complemented by the commitments made in the industrial development document to enhance, as I said earlier, venture capital assistance for small and medium-sized Canadian businesses as well as to broaden the role of the Federal Business Development Bank to strengthen its capacity to support small business in this country.

Mr. Deans: How many unemployed are there?

Mr. Gray: Finally, there was the commitment to expand Canadian control of the economy while increasing the benefits for Canadians from the foreign investment already here, a commitment about which there has been a lot of talk in the last six days in terms of an alleged back-off by the government. I want to say that that allegation, like so many others we have heard from hon. members opposite in the past week, is not accurate. In the first place, it was only a year ago that this government put in place the specific mechanisms that will permit us to achieve 50 per cent ownership within ten years by Canadians of the vital oil and gas industry. In the short time since then the progress on Canadianizing oil and gas, a sector which accounts for approximately 5 per cent of the entire gross national product of Canada, has been such that in 12 months the percentage of revenues from the oil and gas producing sector going to Canadian-controlled companies has climbed from 28 per cent to 34 per cent, again in only one year.

In the economic development document published with the budget the government made a strong endorsation of the operations of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the principle underlying it that "foreign investment must be of significant benefit to Canada." While it says two relatively limited new actions respecting foreign investment policy will not be introduced for the time being, the document does announce the government's intention to implement a new process of dialogue with large foreign and Canadian-controlled corporations operating in Canada. This process will aim to ensure that, in the words of the document:

> Foreign-controlled corporations and their Canadian counterparts alike contribute fully to the development of an innovative and internationally competitive industrial structure, pursuing Canadian objectives in areas such as research and development and international marketing with equal vigour.

This initiative will be an important addition to the many policy instruments already in place to improve the over-all performance of the Canadian economy and, in particular, its capacity to create permanent jobs in every one of Canada's regions.

In what I have said about the government's major and diverse activities in creating jobs, our record of effort in meeting specific commitments on national economic development policy and our continuing adherence to the principles and priorities of government activism in support of economic growth across the country there are, I believe, convincing answers to the empty motion of the New Democratic Party. Of course, no one could fail to recognize that at the present time the economy in Canada, as in the rest of the world, is experiencing particular difficulties—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a matter of good order I wonder if the minister would indicate whether he is informed by Senator Olson, before important economic decisions are made, or does he simply hear of the decisions after they are made?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will tell us the inside story of the Bank of Western Canada, perhaps some day I will tell him about how we on this side of the House work together in the interests of the Canadian people, the Canadian economy and Canadian workers.

Mr. Deans: I would like to hear both those stories.

Mr. Gray: As I was saying, no one can fail to recognize that at the present time the economy in Canada, as in the rest of the world, is experiencing particular difficulties, the consequences of which are being felt to a greater or lesser degree by virtually every Canadian. We as the national government have to address these difficulties, particularly when for certain groups in the population they are creating genuine hardship. We are addressing them through special assistance measures—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As Your Honour will have noted, I have been asked to reveal the inside story of the Bank of Western Canada. I am very willing to do that, but can we hear the minister tell us about Senator Olson?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member does not have a point of order. The hon. member has put a question to the minister, and the minister has replied.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying must hurt. Hon. members opposite have no response to what I am saying; otherwise they would not be trying to interrupt me with frivolous and spurious points of order. What I have said demonstrates conclusively that I have the facts and they have nothing but empty drivel.

We are addressing these hardships through special assistance measures like those relating to home owners, farmers and small business announced in the budget but also through an approach to economic policy planning and strategy that ensures that the response of the government to short-term economic challenges is consistent with and makes progress by capturing the enormous long-term opportunities that are emerging in the Canadian economy. The budget does this through its emphasis on restoring stability to prices and interest rates, and our economic development strategy does this through its variety and comprehensiveness. It does this through its attention to regional as well as national economic development requirements and through its emphasis on building on the country's many strengths in meeting the challenges and opportunities of the 1980s.

● (2040)

Far from being a retreat from the commitments this government made during the campaign, the economic development document in particular moves them substantially, and a long way forward. It sets them out in a framework that in itself forms the basis for new policy initiatives, the details of which will be announced in coming weeks and months, initiatives aimed at ensuring industrial revitalization, long-term job creation and the full realization of the country's enormous economic potential.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) was earlier seeking to ask a question. The minister still has two minutes remaining.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the minister gave a lot of figures about how well the government has treated the Ford Motor Company, Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler. Can he assure us that Co-op Implements of Winnipeg will be receiving the $14 million it requires to survive?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and I have been actively working on a program aimed at responding to the difficulties and opportunities of Co-op Implements. The company would not be there now without the assistance already extended by the federal government.

We are working to see what practical program we can put forward to add to what we have already done to help ensure the continuation of this company.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, from time to time in the history of this nation serious problems have arisen that have captured the attention of the Canadian public for various time periods. National defence, largely ignored today, has occupied the centre stage, but only in times of international strife. For months this Parliament has floundered on the constitutional debate. Let us hope that parliamentary action will not create more problems than it resolves with the proposal for constitutional change.

The problem that has plagued Canada and Canadians for almost all of our history is unemployment. In fact, only in the war and post-war years has this nation enjoyed relatively full employment. What do we mean by full employment? I want to put on the record of the House the view that was expressed by the parliamentary task force in its report entitled "Work for Tomorrow". It dealt with full employment in that concept, asking if Canada would commit itself to a goal of full employment.

That parliamentary task force, which consisted of members of the House of Commons from both the government and the opposition side, reminded Canadians in its report that in 1945 in a white paper on unemployment, this statement was made:

> The government has stated unequivocally its adoption of a high and stable level of employment and income, and thereby higher standards of living, as a major aim of government policy.

In 1945 the Liberal government said that its major aim was the achievement of full employment. In the time that has transpired since, we are still faced in this country with massive and chronic unemployment. It is very difficult to take the government and its ministers seriously when they indicate in the House and elsewhere that they are committed to programs to establish full employment in Canada. That same task force on employment in Canada said in its report:

> It is ironic that 15 years after the creation of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and despite some of its successful programs, the manpower problems it was created to solve still exist. There are still shortages of skilled manpower, and the level of unemployment is now much higher than it was in the mid-sixties.

That is what a parliamentary task force said of the efforts of the then minister of manpower and immigration and his department to resolve unemployment in Canada. This criticism is valuable because it comes from friends of the government as well as opponents. We are still left with the problem, in spite of the shallow words of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), of massive unemployment in this country.

This very day representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress are meeting in Ottawa. They have gathered together some 20 persons who are victims of the high interest rate policy of the government which, in turn, is contributing to unemployment in this country. Those persons are faced with foreclosure actions on their homes. After years of spending on mortgage and interest payments, they are faced with the loss of their homes. It is in that context and at that point in our history that we have to consider some of these very serious economic problems, of which the ultimate one for a Canadian is unemployment.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) referred to the Speech from the Throne which was delivered in the House on April 14, 1980. He indicated what were the government's policies to cure the economic ills of this country. He did it in very definite terms. What the minister forgot to mention was that in that same Speech from the Throne delivered on April 14, 1980, there was this promise:

> In particular, my government recognizes the need to protect those Canadians most affected by unacceptably high interest rates. My government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

That is the hollow promise made in the Speech from the Throne. That is the promise the members of the Canadian Labour Congress and those home owners in danger of losing their homes want the government to face almost two years later. There is yet no substantial assistance for home owners other than the approximately 12,500 across Canada who meet the very strict requirement of the government test for eligibility.

An hon. Member: It is consistent.

Mr. Crosby: It is not consistent with that promise. In the same way, the utterances of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with respect to the economic proposals and programs of the government are as hollow as were the promises of assistance to home owners.

Any parliamentary consideration of job-creation measures must be given full and careful attention by all hon. members. Yet job-creation measures that are not an integrated part of an over-all industrial strategy that has full employment as its aim and purpose will be almost meaningless and, in fact, will be just another form of social welfare measure.

Let me make it clear that the current urgent state of the nation's economy justifies social welfare measures for unemployed Canadians. I support make-work programs for that very reason. What we must, however, consider and develop is an industrial plan and strategy that will result in the permanent employment of our labour force.

I want to review in some detail the whole matter of job creation, but first it is necessary to consider and review the current employment situation. I want to make that review in the context of the Atlantic area of Canada.

Mention of the Atlantic area prompts me to inform the House that when it comes to unemployment, Atlantic Canada tops the list. Here are some of the statistics. Newfoundland has an unemployment rate of 15.2 per cent, New Brunswick 11.3 per cent, Nova Scotia 10.2 per cent and Prince Edward Island 9.9 per cent. That compares with a Canadian average that is much lower than that figure. There are 37,000 people unemployed in the Province of Nova Scotia as of October; Newfoundland has 33,000 people unemployed; Prince Edward Island, 5,000; New Brunswick, 34,000. We simply cannot carry on with that level of unemployment in the Atlantic area and with that number of persons unemployed and beset with all the social and other problems that go with unemployment. It is even worse than that, as other hon. members have pointed out.

● (2050)

The method of acquiring the unemployment statistics in Canada does not take into account the thousands across this nation and the thousands in Atlantic Canada who have stopped looking for work, who have given up the search for employment, and who stay at home or find other ways to eke out a living other than seeking employment through government channels. They are not included in this group of people.

If you were to conduct a fair examination, Mr. Speaker, you would find that the employment rate in a province like Newfoundland is not really 15.2 per cent, it is more like 20 per cent. Similar figures can be extended for the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. While the statistics may be valid in a comparative and continuing sense, they are not valid as an indicator of how many people are actually out of work and suffering from lack of employment.

Even with the horrifying statistics that we have of 891,000 people unemployed across Canada, 109,000 of them being in the Atlantic area, it is even worse than that, Mr. Speaker. What will we do about this situation? It is in that context of the serious unemployment situation that we must approach the subject of job creation.

What action has Parliament taken? Last Thursday, November 12, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced his budget to the House. The minister claims that there are positive steps taken in the budget to relieve the unemployment situation. In response to questions, the minister said that the government is mounting employment programs through the community employment program and other programs and that the government will spend as much as $500 million on those programs. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce continually indicates to the House that the government will launch programs of a similar magnitude. One has to place that $500 million in line with other government expenditures. I will name you some of them.

The Government of Canada has spent at least that amount of money on Mirabel airport, and it continues to chalk up deficits at the rate of an additional $50 million each year. The Canadian Post Office in past years has accrued deficits of $500 million. The St. Lawrence Seaway wrote off a debt of $600 million. The Government of Canada has spent over $140 million relocating those groups of unfortunate people, who are generally described as the boat people, across Canada. That is the way in which the Government of Canada spends money. It spends hundreds of millions of dollars.

When the government said it would allocate $500 million for job creation in employment programs to relieve the drastic unemployment that exists in Canada, it is really accomplishing very little in comparison with its other expenditures. I am not impressed with the government's efforts.

We need positive action; we need to address the real problem of unemployment. What do we receive? We receive general statements from the Minister of Finance, as stated in the Speech from the Throne and repeated in the House by people such as the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The statements are of such a general nature as to be totally meaningless to the nearly one million Canadians unemployed, statements such as "We have to work to bring the interest rate down so as to generate industrial activity and relieve unemployment in Canada". The task is much more concise and cogent than that. We must have definite programs that attack the problem, not only to relieve the immediate situation but to expand beyond that and create solutions of a more permanent nature.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has referred, for example, to the difficulties in the auto industry. The unemployment problems in the auto industry have much to do with the auto pact that was negotiated between Canada and the United States. The terms of the auto pact did not take into account the changes in customer preferences, namely, the move to small cars because of the increased cost of energy. Why have the costs of energy increased? Because the government did not have the foresight to recognize the problems that have now arisen and, in the same way, the government did not have the foresight to recognize the types of problems that would beset the auto industry as time went by.

The government cannot simply and categorically characterize the problems of the auto industry as a problem that has to be resolved by the private sector, because the government is very much responsible for making that a problem in today's context by the kind of negotiations that it carried out. Anyone who is knowledgeable of the problems raised by the auto pact will tell you that it will be years before Canada again receives the benefits that were intended to be bestowed by the auto pact. In the meantime, we have and will have substantial unemployment in the automobile industry.

On the surface the issue may not appear to be relevant to the situation in the Atlantic area where we have other reasons for our unemployment problem, but one has to look at these problems in the national context. Indeed, the government has recognized that by stressing the importance of mobility of the Canadian labour force and stressing the issue to the point where it has been included in the constitutional proposal. The government has underlined and entrenched the rights of Canadians to travel across this country to seek and obtain employment.

When the maritime provinces become concerned about job losses in the fishing industry and in other maritime industries, we want to know that jobs will be available in other parts of Canada. We are affected by the difficulties in the auto industry. We have to realize and recognize that the unemployment problem affects all Canadians not only in that they are unable to earn income but also it affects them in social terms. It is destructive to family life. It is impossible for many people accustomed to employment and to earning an income for them to carry on a normal life without the benefit of that employment.

It is one of the most serious problems that we can have in Canada, and it is a problem that goes beyond the difficulties that are created by constitutional changes and beyond the difficulties that are created by other measures in which this government is involved. It is a problem that demands immediate attention and immediate action.

What will we do about the problem in the future? The answer is to establish job-creation programs that will relieve the problem for the present and resolve it for the future. There are a number of things the government can do. Some of them have already been described.

While I do not want to be negative about government efforts to provide jobs for Canadians, I do want to emphasize the fact that the government simply is not doing enough, and what it is doing is not effective.

First, there is a great deal of uncertainty about what amount of money and effort the government spends on job-creation activity. The budget document would have one believe that the expenditure on projects such as Canada Community Development is in the area of $500 million. However, the documents issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicate that the sum is much smaller. I have a letter from the minister that says that $113 million will be spent on the Canada community development project and then the whole program was cancelled, Mr. Speaker.

We are not always impressed with the figures released by the minister, the person now responsible for the finances of Canada, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. We also heard from the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) who lauded his government's efforts. In Cape Breton there is an expression to the effect that some people tell the truth rather carelessly, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond when he lauded the government for its efforts to cure unemployment, told the truth rather carelessly. He referred to the efforts made in the Cape Breton coal mines and the expenditure there of $100 million to create hundreds of jobs. The government has announced that program on three or four occasions, Mr. Speaker. It is similar to the situation with the Panamax Dry Dock to be installed in the shipyards in Halifax. That announcement has been made on two or three occasions. I could go on and on with the announcements, the pre-announcements—

• (2100)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Would the hon. member entertain a question at this time?

Mr. Crosby: I will be glad to entertain a question at the conclusion of my address, Mr. Speaker. As you know, and as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond knows, my time is limited.

An hon. Member: When are you going to start?

Mr. Crosby: With your permission, I will continue, Mr. Speaker. I believe that job creation in the Atlantic area has to centre on ocean related industries. Those industries in particular are fishing, energy development offshore, marine transportation, which consists of onshore facilities and shipbuilding and, of course, there has to be a general concern for the development of resources. In the fishing industry, last August two companies—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to yield to my colleague if the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) is prepared to answer a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Halifax West.

Mr. Crosby: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to conclude my remarks let me say, as I already have, that the—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I will continue with my address.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I thought the hon. member was seeking the floor on a point of order. The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak instead. I yielded some time to my colleague to answer a question, but the hon. member for Halifax West just wanted to continue with his speech.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be confusion on the government side. It was—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, that point of order made about as much sense as everything else the hon. member said in the last 15 minutes, which was not a lot. The only thing that the hon. member for Halifax West and the NDP have in common is that they are both very good at telling us that the solution to the problem in the short term is to create jobs. Despite 40 minutes of careful listening to the comments of a member from each party opposite, I did not hear one sensible, serious solution offered to the House. They have none. They are bankrupt of ideas.

I want to address myself first of all to the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax West. He told us today that he supported job-creation measures; that this was a good idea and there should be more of it. This is the party which for a few short months, Mr. Speaker, managed to cancel the CCDP, which he now supports; slashed the small craft harbour's budget—and he comes from Atlantic Canada—which he now supports; allowed freezer trawlers in the Gulf of St. Lawrence thus pushing the labour intensive inshore fishermen out of the water, whom he now supports; cancelled the summer youth program which gave jobs to college students so that they could go back to university in the fall, which he now supports—I could go on and on Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Halifax West says that he is not impressed with this government's efforts to create jobs. I want to say categorically that I am not impressed with his sudden conversion and support of the policies of the government, the policies that we restored upon returning to government in February, 1980, all of which had been slashed by his administration.

I represent the riding in Newfoundland of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe and I am proud to represent that riding. I am proud of the people and the province that I come from. I say with my head high and my chest out that in Newfoundland we have experienced, perhaps more than most Canadians, many of the hardships and social disruptions that result every time that an economy, whether it be on a national, international or western world basis, is shaken. I know the effects of high unemployment and I know the effects of an economy that is not stable.

I wanted to say in my first words tonight that I was totally amazed, astonished, perhaps even saddened, that the party in the corner which my colleague calls the pink rump, continues to find great joy—perhaps even pleasure, judging by the smiling faces that are now exhibited—whenever Canadians feel the effects of high unemployment or a disrupted economy.

Why do they find pleasure in that, Mr. Speaker? It is because that is the party which has continued to assume that Canadian people are stupid. Government has a responsibility which is not to be taken lightly. That is the party that is convinced that the way to be elected is to hold out the proverbial carrot to the Canadian people. That is the party that spends its time trying to figure out what it thinks Canadians want to hear instead of using its energies and intelligence, little as it is, to find solutions to complex and real problems.

An hon. Member: The Liberals have done a great job for Newfoundland over the last few years.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, we have done a great job for Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders have recognized it. The only NDP member we had—good man that he is, good friend that he is—has gone back to practice his original profession and I am proud to say that I had a little something to do with that!

My blood boils, Mr. Speaker. I have been here nearly two years as a Member of Parliament and I spent a couple of years as an executive assistant in Newfoundland, so I have learned just a little—and I have a lot more to learn—about the political process. One thing that I have learned is that people in this country are tired—

An hon. Member: Of Liberals.

Mr. Tobin: —of pipedreams. They are tired of politicians who are prepared to raise unrealistic expectations if there is a chance of political benefit. They are tired of that brand of simplistic solution.

The other night I had the irritation, I suppose, of watching the finance critic for the NDP speak on CBC on the program "This Week in Parliament". I sat and listened, and it was just like today. I think it lasted ten minutes. The hon. member spent ten minutes telling me, as an interested Canadian, "There is another way, ladies and gentlemen. We can all be living on the edge of a bowl of cherries. There is no problem. We have the solutions." My goodness, he had me captivated! I was almost ready—but God forbid I should even admit it—to run across to that side of the House. I was excited. However, before I knew what was happening, the program was finished, and the last words I heard echoing against the walls were, "Was there another way?" I never heard it. What is the other way? For God's sake, tell us! It is the party of empty rhetoric.

Let me tell hon. members about the ways this government has provided jobs. Let met tell hon. members to listen and learn. In my own province of Newfoundland this year, we had a very bad fishery. No doubt, hon. members opposite would tell us that the government members were out chasing away the fish.

An hon. Member: There you go!

Mr. Tobin: The people of Canada are intelligent enough, hon. members might be surprised to know, that they can recognize there could be a bad fishery from time to time. How did this government respond? Representatives of the fisheries union of Newfoundland—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: —the cabinet representative from Newfoundland—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: —and Members of Parliament from Newfoundland and interested fishermen from Newfoundland gathered in Ottawa. There was no program to offer in immediate response. There was none on the books. However, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) and the president of the fishermen's union in Newfoundland gathered together. We designed a program with $1 million in funds, and we put thousands of fishermen back to work. We helped them get their UIC benefits. That is not empty rhetoric; that is action.

Let me tell hon. members about the program which the party of the hon. member for Halifax West cancelled a short while after it formed the government. The Canada community development program is a highly targetable, cash-based program directed toward the creation of jobs in areas where high unemployment, slow economic growth and low levels of business activity are continuing problems. We have examples throughout Atlantic Canada, including my own province, of that kind of situation.

Last year, in 1981, $110 million which would have otherwise been cancelled by the Conservative party, was allocated to these programs. In this country, it created 20,000 jobs. This year that program, beginning now, has more than 8,000 applications, and the jobs this year will exceed, if not equal, those created by last year's program.

I suppose that when one talks in numbers, considering the amount of money and jobs, it is sometimes very difficult for one to stop and reflect and to put a human face, a flesh and blood and bones face, on the response that a program generates. The hon. member continues to laugh. Every time I say "flesh and bones" or talk about the problems people are experiencing, this hon. member laughs.

An hon. Member: NDP!

Mr. Tobin: He smiles with pleasure. He says, "Ah, there is a potential to go out, make a promise and pass out the carrot. They are stupid enough to believe me. Perhaps I will get a vote or two". He is a foolish man. People are not that stupid.

Let me tell Your Honour about the kind of programs we have initiated. In my own riding, in the northern peninsula of Newfoundland, there have been three or four major, small craft harvest projects. What happened? My own minister, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and the Minister for Employment and Immigration collaborated. The Minister for Employment and Immigration put up the labour dollars; the Minister for Fisheries and Oceans put up the material dollars. They built wharves perhaps costing $150,000 which would have cost at least $300,000 or $400,000 had they been contracted out. That is why the Conservative party wanted to cancel the program. It meant that one or two more of their friends would have had a contract.

An hon. Member: What have they been doing for the last 20 years?

Mr. Tobin: Those programs helped people who had a disastrous fishery. They will again survive the winter this year with dignity, with paycheques coming in with their names on them instead of social assistance. I want to tell hon. members that these are proud people.

I do not care where one goes in Canada. One could go anywhere in rural Canada. I can speak best about Atlantic Canada, whether Cape Breton, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Newfoundland. Is that not what life is about? Is it not dignity? The government has given dignity back to those people, the dignity which was taken away by the previous, short-lived Conservative administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The areas of activity under Canada Works, Canada community development programs, generally correspond closely with the priorities of federal departments. In some cases, this enables other federal departments to encourage community organizations to submit quality proposals and subsequently to provide technical advice and support to these organizations.

Let me give hon. members another example. A few days ago in my riding in the town of Stephenville, a group of people called me up and said, "Look, we are coming tomorrow. We want to meet this minister, that minister and the other guy. We have a proposal which we think can work." These are serious, sober and intelligent people. They said, "We have a proposal which we think can work and can put handicapped people to work. It will allow them the dignity of jobs, perhaps for the first time in many years". Those people came on 24 hours notice.

I am proud to say that the Minister of Employment and Immigration met with those people on 24 hours notice and the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) met those people on 24 hours notice. They left Ottawa with a program which will put some people to work in that town, people who, perhaps for years, have never had such an opportunity. These people have been lost and hidden. We have forgotten the handicapped too often in this country. They will now have an opportunity to have the dignity which comes with work. These are the kinds of people to whom these programs can reach out and respond, and these people will have an opportunity to respond as well.

Throughout the Atlantic and Pacific regions of Canada, approximately half a million dollars of CCDP funds have been devoted to the development of the salmon fishery to ensure that this fishery is enhanced, stocks are conserved and maintained and encouraged to grow.

More than $8 million of CCDP funds have been committed during the past year to projects involving tourism developments in many parts of Canada. Another $26.8 million was committed to projects which restore or develop facilities in communities.

I would like to say again, because many hon. members do not realize this, that I know of examples in all parts of Canada, and I can think of a couple in my own riding, where people in communities which are perhaps as old as 150, 160 or 200 years, aided by this program, perhaps for the first time in their lives, went out with picks and shovels, the sweat of their brows and determination to put in a water line. Perhaps every person in the House takes running water for granted. One turns on the tap, and it is there. That is the kind of—yes, almost the kind of miracle which can happen when people are allowed to help themselves. This is what can happen when one does not tell them, "We can come in with a multimillion dollar contract in any part of Canada for any construction company and give you water", and when one does not offer the unrealistic expectations of the NDP, when one says to people, "If you are willing to help yourselves, we will help you", and they do. These are quality programs. Perhaps it is even a miracle to have running water in communities which have not had it in years. I am proud to see that happen. That is the responsibility of provincial governments. In Newfoundland, it is that of the Tory provincial government. However, if these federal programs were not available, there would still not be even the basic necessity of running water.

Because I know my time is about to run out let me conclude by saying, that not one hon. member on this side of the House, not one member of this government, wants to play games. We are not interested in illusions. We recognize that today many Canadians in this country are experiencing difficulty. We must recognize that. It is a fact. However, we are determined to carry out our duty in those circumstances with a sense of responsibility. We are not prepared to be the masters of illusion or the prophets of doom and gloom. We are not prepared, as the Conservative government would have us do, to balance the books on the backs of the people of this country who can least afford it.

Mr. Jelinek: That's what you are doing.

Mr. Tobin: We have had a budget of restraint because we recognize the reality.

Mr. Jelinek: Twenty-two per cent interest.

Mr. Tobin: We have had a budget of equity which, for once, asked Canadians of every income level to pay their fair share and no more, a budget which will result in millions of taxpayers in this country getting a tax break.

• (2120)

I want to say of the motion put forward by the New Democratic Party, it is NDP, no definite policies. Sterling Lyon called it something else. I will not go that far, but I will say at least NDP, no definite policies. They change from day to day.

An hon. Member: You are showing your colours now.

Mr. Tobin: I want to assure the hon. member, in case there was ever any doubt in his mind, that I am no supporter of Sterling Lyon. And in case you have any further doubts, I am no support of yours either.

The motion put forward is a nefarious and a nonsensical one. It is one to be expected. At least it is consistent. But we in this party will continue to govern, and I suppose the key words are, with responsibility.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I shall resist the temptation to comment on the address made by the hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). If he believes he is living in an economy which is healthy and helped by this budget, I can tell him he is living in the land of Oz.

This particular motion before the House has been well drafted. It is something which concerns me since I have become an elected member as it has never before. I want to explain this to the hon. member who never contributes, who is sitting in the back and who always makes his contributions from his seat. I ask him to rise in the House and to put his views forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I see the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, this shows the incompetence and total lack of responsibility on the part of the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Dingwall: I made my speech earlier today.

Mr. Tobin: He was at the back watching cartoons.

Job Creation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) has the floor.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell members of the House what has happened in Cambridge over the last few weeks. First, 425 people have been laid off by Admiral. Those lay-offs affect approximately 1500 people. Many of them have been to my riding office. I have been to the plant. The concern and the tragedy of those people gives one a sense of desperation. In addition to that, 15 miles down the road where Massey-Ferguson is located in the city of Brantford, 1700 people have been laid off. Many of them live in Cambridge. At Budd Automotive, a plant which is close to the boundary of Cambridge, although it is actually located in the city of Kitchener, lay-offs have occurred. At the Savage shoe factory, lay-offs have occurred. I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) will be coming to this House before the end of the month to make an announcement with respect to the extension of tariffs. If the tariffs are not extended, I can tell hon. members there will be massive lay-offs in the shoe industry in Cambridge. We are looking at a desperate situation.

I had hoped this budget would give some relief to people and a justification for their belief that they have a right to work. We were looking for jobs. But there is nothing in the budget to encourage this party to believe that the budget would help with jobs.

I have a few comments of criticism respecting this budget. We know that Mr. John Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, represents 62,000 men and women in Canada. Yesterday he gave what I think is the most withering criticism as it affects small business. This is what the news release said:

> The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has declared war on the MacEachen budget, calling it the most serious threat to enterprise in Canada since Edgar Benson's White Paper on Tax Reform in 1969.

In addition to that, Mr. Bulloch accused the Department of Finance officials of demonstrating a shocking lack of practical knowledge of the business community and an unconscionable ignorance of the functioning of capital markets.

The tide is just starting to come in in terms of adverse criticism with respect to this budget. Mr. Bulloch has gone to war once before with respect to this matter. I ask all Canadians and I ask all members of the House to go to war against this insidious document.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speyer: It is not enough to speak in bald generalities. It is important to be specific. I would like to talk about five different areas as they affect small business, and I am happy to see that the minister is in the House to hear my comments.

The Small Business Development Bond has been truly gutted. The whole purpose of the bond is in its name. It is for development and for expansion. But that is no longer the case. The Small Business Development Bond is now a misnomer. It is nothing more than a bail-out provision. We know that a moratorium has been put on those bonds by the Royal Bank of Canada and by the Bank of Nova Scotia. I am concerned that it is the banks' belief that they are dealing with failures or cases of insolvency. They are not dealing with cases of expansion of business and the creation of jobs. Although I welcome the extension of this bond to unincorporated businesses and farmers, in circumstances where healthy businesses cannot expand this bond will have no impact. Healthy business which expand have the jobs. I think the bond itself has lost its effectiveness. That belief is fortified when I look at the figures in the budget papers. It says the contribution of the federal government with respect to the bond will amount to only $20 million. Last year the federal government contributed $200 million. Projections are there for the next three years.

Let me move on to the capital cost allowance. I asked the minister yesterday why there was such a massive tax grab. He said from his place in the House of Commons that the federal government would not be receiving one cent. Not one dime. That was in Hansard for yesterday.

Mr. Evans: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Speyer: I refer the parliamentary secretary to page 4 of the budget papers. In 1981-1982 the federal government will derive $110 million, but in fiscal 1982-1983 the federal government will derive $1.1 billion and in fiscal 1983-1984 the federal government will derive $840 million. This totals more than $2 billon for those three years. That is a massive tax grab. It is a transfer from the private to the public sector.

I contrast that with a budget brought in on May 8, 1972, by the Hon. John Turner. Unfortunately yesterday's incentive has become today's loophole. I shall put on the record what Mr. Turner said at that time, as reported in Hansard at page 1988. He stated:

> Mr. Speaker, my first words to this House as Minister of Finance last February were that my most urgent priority was jobs. This remains my first priority. No economy is working as well as it should if there are men and women in this country seeking work who cannot find it. The search for jobs is a human problem. The main thrust of this budget is to deal with this problem; to buttress the Canadian economy—to provide incentives for Canadian industry to grow and compete and provide jobs.

Then what did he do? He introduced a capital cost allowance provision for manufacturers. He pointed out that one out of every five people employed is employed by the manufacturing industry. That is still the case today. He gave the speedy write-off provisions. Mr. Turner did this for two reasons. First, to improve cash flow, and second because equipment was becoming obsolescent. He wanted equipment replaced so that Canada could move into using new technology which he foresaw at that time. But all of that has been gutted by the provisions in this budget.

Mr. Evans: That is nonsense.

Mr. Speyer: It is not nonsense. I tell the hon. member to read what the business community is saying. I ask him to check with the manufacturers' association.

Mr. Evans: It is still faster depreciation than in the United States.

Mr. Speyer: The next matter with which I want to deal has to do with the insurance industry. I had the opportunity of speaking to the president of Dominion Life in Kitchener.

Mr. Scott: Tell the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang).

Mr. Speyer: I have also spoken to the chief accountant for Mutual Life who is an actuary. There are 60,000 people who are employed in the insurance industry. Thousands of them are employed in the Kitchener-Waterloo-Cambridge area. This is a very legitimate concern of these people, as expressed in the House of Commons today by the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang). That Liberal member said their jobs were in peril.

● (2130)

In addition to that, what is of great concern is the drying up of long-term capital which insurance companies have always provided, whether the money was to be used for building a dam or a factory. This represented 30-year capital rather than short-term capital. I wonder if the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) even considered these matters when he introduced that measure in respect of policy holders, and I have in mind the reporting and three-year provisions. These measures will have a very, very deleterious effect, and I think the Minister of Finance should reconsider them as he has reconsidered other provisions.

A most important matter, it seems to me, is the limitation on the deduction of interest from investment. Nothing is more insidious. Imagine going to the bank for a loan that had anything to do with speculative shares, such as any type of junior mining stock. One is only able to deduct an amount up to the amount of income. I think this certainly breaches all precepts of tax law I have ever been aware of, and I believe it is totally unjustified. As Canadian independent business people have said, this will have an incredible effect on investment. All you have to do is to read the news release from Mr. Bulloch yesterday in respect of that matter.

An hon. Member: Did you read the news release today from CMA? It said it was a good budget.

Mr. Speyer: Yes, I have read the news release. The hon. member will have an opportunity to speak.

An hon. Member: Have you read the news release from the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal?

Mr. Speyer: Yes, I have.

An hon. Member: Have you read the news release of the Chamber of Commerce of Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, the total effect of this budget on jobs cannot be underestimated. I congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on the drafting of this motion. I think it is timely and I think what it says is accurate. I would ask the people of Canada to mobilize and defeat this budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Veillette (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it seems the opposition is trying to give the House a very slanted view of the employment situation in Canada. Quoting figures on lay-offs is all very well, but when such figures include both temporary and permanent lay-offs, there is a definite bias somewhere. I am not saying that lay-offs should not be taken seriously, but let's stick to the facts.

The opposition has also claimed, Mr. Speaker, that there are no job-creation programs to compensate for recent lay-offs. Has the opposition looked into all the programs available at the present time? I realize some of these programs are relatively recent. The Canada Community Services Projects—CCSP—launched about a year ago, offer the unemployed satisfying work in the area of volunteer and community services. The program is more specifically aimed at women, native people, youth and the handicapped, in other words, those who have trouble finding new jobs. In fact, during the program's first year, 70 per cent of participants were women, 50 per cent young people, 10 per cent native people and 10 per cent were physically handicapped.

The program provides projects with start-up funds to help them find other funding sources and to become self-financing. Program funds are used to pay salaries and other general expenses as required. The CCSP budget of $11 million for 1980-81 is part of the $34 million approved by cabinet for the three years the program is intended to last. During the program's first year, there were many applications for CCSP grants. People like this program because it goes to the heart of the community and supports projects that are important to our social environment. These projects range from rehabilitation centres to daycare centres for children of working mothers. One might say, Mr. Speaker, that the program simultaneously supports two entirely different social objectives: it provides the unemployed, especially those who always have trouble finding employment, with an income and training, but it also provides the necessary funds for useful and fundamentally important projects, in order to improve the quality of life of the entire community. This is important, Mr. Speaker, because many Canadians feel that the federal government is an agency that is far removed from, and not very interested in, people's daily life. This is not true, and the proof is in programs such as the CCSP. When I hear people talking about daycare centres, I notice that they never mention the federal government's involvement.

For instance, in downtown Charlottetown on Prince Edward Island, the Rochford Square Child Care Centre offers services that are not available anywhere else at the present time. The centre is adapted to the requirements of people who work on shifts, since it opens at 6.30 a.m. Furthermore, parents can have lunch with their children, and children whose parents have to work late can have their dinner at the centre. The centre has a schedule and program that meet the needs of babies, young children and their working parents, while the emphasis is on single-parent families and families on welfare. It is expected that at the end of the three-year funding period, the centre will be self-sufficient and will be able to take care of 30 children. These are important projects, Mr. Speaker, in a society where more and more women are joining the labour force. During the eighties, their participation in the labour force will be substantial, and the need for this type of centre will increase accordingly. A total of 30 projects representing $721,000 have been financed under the CCSP with a view to supporting activities related to the provision of daycare services.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that this year has been designated as the International Year of the Handicapped has made the public aware of the problems facing the handicapped. These problems are encountered at home, at work and in the community. In Saskatoon, a project called "Very Much a Part of the Picture" is at work to help the mentally retarded. This project aims at creating a pool of young volunteers to work with these people and prepare them to face life productively and positively. These people have to develop abilities which we all take for granted and which are necessary to live in society. The young people who take part in this project as teachers or counsellors will learn the art of public education. They will also acquire knowledge in the fields of organization and management.

The handicapped are not the only ones on whom attention has been focused these last few months. In our aging society, we are becoming increasingly aware of the role played by senior citizens in Canada. I have heard the French expression les gens de l'âge d'or several times recently. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I do not like this expression. It creates a false impression of wealth. I prefer the expression personnes du troisième âge. The English expression "senior citizens" is also wrong. It is as though the world belonged only to junior citizens. Unfortunately, it happens too often that older people are cast aside and left by themselves. Today, older people are active citizens who are interested in their community and willing to share their knowledge and experience.

With the help of the CCSP, the YM-YWCA in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, has developed a number of programs for older people and will make good use of their experience by hiring them once the programs are in place. Programs including swimming, fitness, information on nutrition and the prevention of crimes of which the older people are victims will be integrated in regular activities. If possible, classes will be held in old folk homes, in centres for religious groups and other organizations and led by volunteers. To this end, the workers of the CCSP will also recruit and train volunteers.

The YM-YWCA will organize a phone-a-friend service for older people living alone to give them social contact with the community and help those who are confined at home. The sound of a friendly voice on the telephone every day and the assurance that they have a friend to call in case of need is very reassuring for the older members of every community. During the first year of the project, the CCSP will provide $11,814 to employ one person full time. Since the planned activities are designed to produce revenues, the YM-YWCA expects to keep the project employee on a permanent basis. In total, 33 projects amounting to $723,000 have been financed under the CCSP to support services for older people.

Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my speech, I mentioned the need to specify whether we are speaking about temporary or permanent lay-offs. I maintain that this must be clarified because we have to look further than statistics.

Yes, it is important to obtain statistics on a sector of the economy, and figures are supposed to give a true picture of the situation, but the hard facts are, right now people are unemployed. This government has been innovative in its approach to job creation. It has become involved in the community through programs such as the Canada Community Services Projects, in order to serve Canadians in their own communities. When I hear the opposition accuse the government of lacking initiative, I realize how important it is to talk about what we are doing. What is more significant yet is the fact that although columns of figures may be useful, the people represented by these figures and their real situation in life are at least equally important. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Canada Community Services Projects are doing excellent work by going beyond the statistics.

[English]

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left to me this evening I would like to begin by replying to some of the earlier comments made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who spoke this afternoon. The minister was obviously in some anguish and very hurt that we in this corner of the House had not yet come forward to say "thank you" to the government for closing some of the loopholes in our taxation system, an action of which that minister was obviously proud.

Quite frankly, some of us may have wanted to say thank you but the government has been pulling the plug out of those loopholes so quickly, two of them in four days, that there was no time to say thank you. We are beginning to be thankful that this budget debate can only go on for six days or so because if it went on any longer, the government might manage to pull the plugs out of all of the loopholes and we would be left with that unholy mess of a taxation system with all its inequities, with which we have had to suffer for many years. It is still full of inequities and it appears that the government is determined to reintroduce some of those inequities which they attempted to remove a few days ago.

As I said, if we had time to say thank you, we might have said it, but we do not know if there will be anything left to be thankful for. Certainly there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians out of work, many as a result of permanent shutdowns, particularly in my industry, the forest industry, who have nothing to be thankful to the government for.

In a recent newspaper column in my constituency of Kootenay West, there is an article in the Kootenay Reporter called "Rest in Peace, Hadikin Lumber 1952-1981". This article does give a picture of what is happening and reflects not only on their interest rate policy and market problems but also on the devastating situation we are facing in this country because government and industry have not done a job to ensure there will be enough trees to cut to provide even continued production on past bases, let alone meet the hoped for expansion in that industry which could take place and provide additional jobs in the years to come.

The article starts off:

> Some people came in cars, pickups, chartered buses and even chartered flights to witness and take part in one of the most unusual auctions to be held in the Kootenays.
> An entire sawmill was up for bids.

This was October, 1981.

> The new owners of Hadikin's sawmill in Brilliant had put the entire contents and buildings of the mill up for public auction.
>
> It attracted the curious and the serious. The serious were easily identified by their numbered bidding cards in hand and by the orange hats passed out to each registered bidder.
>
> There was an odd almost festive atmosphere on the mill site as throngs of people, sipping coffee and munching doughnuts milled about while the engines of various trucks, skidders and loaders roared around them. Potential bidders peered under hoods and manipulated the controls as they searched for the best buy.
>
> A few steps away from this commotion, the mill sat, strangely devoid of the lumber, sawdust, and clutter normally found in a sawmill. A few people, driven by curiosity or with an eye toward an investment, clambered up and down steps and ladders, around the trim saws, the edger, the debarker and over infeed tables whose chains a very short while ago carried a steady flow of lumber.
>
> Numbered yellow tags hung from chains, motors, saws, even shelving and the building itself.
> It was hard to imagine the various integrated components of a functioning sawmill being reduced to a mere number on the auctioneer's list. It was even more difficult to comprehend the livelihood of some 75 former employees disappearing in such a piecemeal fashion.

That presents quite a picture, and I take no glee from it, in spite of the parsimonious ramblings of some of the hon. members opposite a few minutes ago. There is no glee for me in watching my neighbours, my constituents and my fellow workmates find themselves too old to work, too young to die and out at 58 after working 30 years in an operation along with many of their neighbours. Many of the people are Russian Doukhobors, and they will have a very difficult time—especially the older ones—attempting to obtain jobs anywhere because the illiteracy rate in that area is one of the highest in the country because of its ethnic make-up. The Minister of Employment and Immigration should pay some attention to this kind of thing because there is a job to be done within his department to ensure that we lift illiteracy levels, as one of my colleagues said just a few days ago in the House. That is another problem we have.

It is not just an individual problem like the problem Brother Tony Brown exemplified at our meeting this afternoon with representatives of people across the country who are having problems with interest rates. Tony works at Weldwood in its plywood division on Kent Street. He is a member of the Vancouver local of the IWA, and since August of this year that plant has been operating on a two week on-two week off basis. There is no sign of improvement for the remainder of this year and no sign into the new year.

Tony Brown has a $59,000 mortgage at 14.5 per cent. On December 16 he will have to renegotiate that mortgage. He has a wife and three young children and, in spite of what some people say in the House and outside the House, people who love to lecture other people on the sacrifices they should make, he did not go out and buy something beyond his means. His home is very modest. It is a row house condominium. It has three bedrooms, but he has three children. It is very modest accommodation. In the city of Vancouver it would have to be modest, with only a $59,000 mortgage and bought only a short time ago.

Like many others in the forest industry Tony has to renew his mortgage, and high mortgage rates have vastly reduced housing starts in North America and particularly in Canada. Tony Brown works in the plywood division. Eight-five per cent of plywood production from western Canada is sold in Canada, and the Canadian market is much worse even than the market in the United States, Reagan, his friends and his Trojan horse notwithstanding. Tony Brown's paycheque is reduced 50 per cent, and his mortgage payments are currently $732.88 per month. When he renegotiates his mortgage, as he will be doing in the next few weeks, he will be facing payments upwards of $1,200 a month.

Tony Brown faces this increase when he earns only a two-week on, two-week off paycheque. That surely is a crisis. Hon. members opposite do not like us to talk about a crisis. They seem to think we take some glee from it. There is no glee at all.

Mr. Kelly: You revel in it.

Mr. Kristiansen: There is no glee at all. This past summer I found myself the only member of my union in all of British Columbia who was able to pay his dues. Do hon. members think I got glee out of that? I did not. That is the situation we are in because of the crumbling housing market for which this government is in large part responsible. It is worse in this country than it is south of the border, again Mr. Reagan notwithstanding.

Hon. members opposite say we should give them some answers, but what are the answers they have given to people in the forest industry who are being laid off or faced with plant closures? One of their answers in the last few days has been to introduce Bill C-78, which contains the principle of unemployment sharing. The government wants to save money on unemployment insurance. Hon. members opposite want people who have been laid off to share their unemployment. That is certainly an advance to the rear, and there will not be many workers in my industry who will be thankful for it.

What have hon. members opposite done for those who are suffering because of plant closures? They have decided to plug a loophole and attack severance pay. People who have lost their livelihoods for good but have managed through their collective strength to negotiate some severance pay so that they will have something to tide them over, to get themselves re-educated or retrained or to grow old enough to get some pittance of a pension will have even that minimal amount of severance pay taxed. That is the kind of help they are getting. No, thank you very much; we can do without that kind of help. That is punishment, and surely to heaven these people are being taxed enough and punished enough already.

An hon. Member: Are they?

Mr. Kristiansen: An hon. member opposite asks, "Are they?" I can assure hon. members that they are. Over 11,000 forest industry employees in western Canada have already lost their livelihoods, as have over 8,000 spouses and over 18,000 children as a direct consequence of the interest rates which are part of the policy of the Bank of Canada, which gets its marching orders from this government and from the government to the south of us with which this government obviously shares an economic philosophy.

Mr. Keeper: And the one we defeated in Manitoba.

Mr. Kristiansen: And that one too, the "Sterling" government, in line with the sterling speech we heard from across the way a few moments ago.

Some of these people have lost their homes. Someone asked if these people are being taxed enough already. On a mortgage principal of $50,000—modest in light of B.C. housing prices—renewed on September 1, 1980, for one year, the increase alone in interest charges effective this past September absorbed $3.20 per hour of pre-tax earnings if the borrower is lucky enough to work full time. Every worker in this situation in Canada is being charged an average of $3.20 per hour to pay for the increased interest rates which have resulted from the policies of hon. members opposite. Negotiated wage increases are ranging from $1.25 to $1.90. This government has taken away an average of $3.20, and hon. members opposite have the unmitigated gall to suggest that if these people demand a little more, they will introduce some newfangled tax system to do to them what their wage controls in 1975 could not do.

Someone is benefiting from all this, and it surely is not us. It is not my friends to my right, and I do not think it is any of the individuals opposite. However, somebody is. The transfer in wealth as a result of the interest rate policy of this government works out to $10.6 billion a year from the poor to the relatively rich. Somebody is getting it. My friend, the finance critic for this party, asked a question on this the other day. He did not receive an answer. There are no answers coming from this government or from the Minister of Finance.

I want to conclude simply by saying that at a time when our national economic house is on fire, this government seems content simply to do some pre-Christmas housecleaning, and that is just not good enough.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION IN SINAI DESERT PEACEKEEPING OPERATION. (B) REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED PARTICIPATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, when I put my name down for an adjournment debate it was because of the questions I asked on November 2 to which I received what I thought were, if not unsatisfactory replies, certainly incomplete replies. The questions had to do with the proposed peacekeeping force in the Sinai Desert.

● (2200)

As reported at page 12389 of Hansard, in my question I quoted an Associated Press report which stated "Canada says it will participate but has not yet been asked". Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have your attention. If you don't mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to carry on this debate without being interrupted. Thank you.

When this question was asked, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) replied that they are talking about it. He said, "We have given it some consideration, but I have no further announcement to make at this time".

Let us look at what the newspapers have been saying since this was first raised. I quote as follows from the June 29 issue of the Montreal Gazette:

MacGuigan told reporters on Friday that Canada has not received an invitation and is not likely to.

I quote from The Globe and Mail of June 26:

In Ottawa, a spokesman for the Department of External Affairs said Canada has not been formally requested to provide troops for the peacekeeping force, but added that External Affairs Mark MacGuigan would consider such a request.

Mr. MacGuigan has recently cast doubt on Canada's participation in a project that is not sponsored by the UN. Ottawa is apparently not eager to ally itself with the Camp David accords while trying to improve relations with the Arab world.

I quote from The Globe and Mail of May 22:

—Defence Minister Gilles Lamontagne said a request for Canadian troops would be favourably considered.... The United States is certain to provide the main body of peacekeeping troops because Israel wants a U.S. role as added protection against attack.

Mr. Lamontagne's reported comments are the strongest indication yet that Canada is ready to take part. The Defence Minister is reported to have said the issue has not yet come up in cabinet.

This leaves the entire country in a state of bewilderment as to whether Canada is committing troops to the Sinai peace force or not. As members realize, it was originally thought up at the Camp David accord between Egypt, Israel and the United States. It is not a UN peacekeeping force. Among the precepts that have been clearly set out by a former Liberal secretary of state for external affairs, it is stated quite clearly that before Canada commits a peacekeeping force, it would want it to be preferably under UN Control.

I would like to read a few words by Professor John Holmes, a counsellor at the Canadian Institute of International Affairs and Bissell professor of Canadian-American relations at the University of Toronto. He said in June:

Participation, however, raises tough problems. Although the force would be for surveillance only, the main component might well be American and thus misconstrued as the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force of which all Arabs are wary... Whatever the good intentions of Washington, we would find ourselves an adjunct of their foreign and defence policy over which we would have little influence... In a crisis Canadians could be asked to act as we had never intended. Who would be in command?

I will refer to what the Hon. Mitchell Sharp set out as being the precepts that should apply if Canada is thinking about getting involved. They are:

(3) The peacekeeping force should be responsible to a political authority, preferably the United Nations.

(6) Canadian participation in the force must be acceptable to all concerned.

(8) There must be an agreement and equitable method of financing the operation.

I submit that several of these criteria have not been complied with today. John R. Walker, of Southam News, a very learned journalist in this area, wrote:

Finally the Canadian government will want to know what is happening to the two massive military air bases Israel has at Etzion and Eitam in the Sinai. The U.S. military has been eyeing both these highly sophisticated bases for some time, egged on by Israelis who hate to see the equipment lost.

The Americans would love to have these bases available for their proposed Rapid Deployment Force—

I would like now to turn to the other questions I asked. There were three questions: whether there was a commitment, whether Parliament would be consulted before any commitment was made, and how many troops were involved. Further to that, I would like to point out that in evidence given before the Senate committee looking into the state of the armed forces this year, Brigadier General P. J. Mitchell, Director general, Land Doctrine and Operations, Department of National Defence said:

● (2205)

—if the NATO deployment and augmentation plans that have been described to you already were implemented, there would remain in Canada, available for deployment to an Arctic threat such as you describe, barring any other commitments beyond the NATO commitments you have talked about, a battalion-sized unit in eastern Canada and a battalion-sized unit in western Canada that would be available for such tasks.

The other day I asked if the government will explain to our NATO allies whether, if we send a sizeable force to Sinai, we will have to welsh on some of the commitments we have made to NATO. Finally, in the way of parliamentary approval for use of Canadian forces abroad, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson who said in the House:

—if a request is made involving the use of substantial numbers of Canadians abroad, we would bring the matter before Parliament before any final decision is made.

I ask for reassurance on this point. I sincerely hope that the parliamentary secretary, who has had some three weeks to consider the matter, will assure the House that it will be brought to Parliament before any final commitment is made. I hope the government will let me know how many troops are involved and whether we will notify our NATO allies that we will be incapable of carrying out our other commitments if we carry out this commitment.

Hon. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. member is aware, the Camp David accord was signed in the fall of 1978 by Egypt, Israel and the United States, and strongly supported by Canada and many other countries. As a result of the Camp David accord, the peace treaty was signed on March 26, 1979 by Egypt and Israel. Under the terms of that treaty, Israel was to withdraw from the last third of the Sinai in April, 1982. There would be a deployment of UN forces and observers. However, failing the UN force, the U.S.A. was to establish and maintain the force itself. By May, 1981, it became obvious that the UN security council was unable to agree in providing a force; therefore, Egypt and Israel agreed to the establishment of a multinational force and observers.

We discussed Canada's position with the force with many countries. As evidenced in the past, we are always available for this type of operation, but we have not been officially asked to participate. Therefore, no commitment has been made. When questions are asked in the House as to how long the force will be there, the number of men and how much equipment will be involved, these questions are hypothetical.

The hon. member asked a very important question as to notification of the House. In the past, approval of the House has been sought when participation in a peacekeeping operation involved a substantial Canadian force. I think this has been the tradition in the House.

On the question of U.S. control, we have no agreement; but the guidelines so far are that the force commander will be a Norwegian lieutenant-general. He will report to a civilian director general who, in the first instance, will be a U.S. military citizen. Ultimately, the director-general will be under the auspices and responsible to the Egyptians and the Israelis.

As far as peacekeeping anywhere under U.S. control is concerned, the answer is no, the Canadian forces have not been under U.S. control in the recent past nor do they intend to be in the future.

● (2210)

Outside of the UN auspices, in the past we have participated in similar forces such as the International Commission for Supervision and Control in Indo-China, and also under the auspices of the UN there was the Golan Heights and the UN Truce Supervision—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

RAILWAYS—PENSIONS OF RETIRED WORKERS. (B) REPORTED PURCHASE OF GULF OIL STOCK BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS PENSION FUND

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I raised questions regarding the pensions of retired workers of both the CN and CP railways. My question was directed to the then minister of labour. Rail pensioners are amongst the lowest compensated pensioners in Canada. Some former employees are receiving such measly increases as $4 per year, and some receive pensions of only $115 per month. I asked what the minister was going to do to correct this disgraceful condition. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), as I pointed out at the time, has made his position perfectly clear: he will do absolutely nothing to assist them in their time of need, and he claims that it is up to the Minister of Labour to do something.

I have pursued this matter in standing committees and I had an exchange of letters with the Minister of Transport and with the Minister of Labour, to no avail.

I have also pointed out in motions in the House that rail pensioners have had to put up with such measly increases as $77 over 19 years. This amounts to the grand total of $4 per year or 33 cents per month, resulting in $265 per month pension rate. A 33-cent increase does not go far against the odds of new record inflation rates of 12.6 per cent, a 15.2 per cent increase in food costs and an 80 cents per gallon increase in the price of gas. We are talking about rail workers who retired prior to 1972.

Earlier this year the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) pointed out to me that the steady improvements in the fund's earnings resulting from such investments will allow CN to reduce its unfunded liability and increase its capacity to pay existing and future pensioners. He said that to reduce investments and make shortsighted pension increases is a sure way to pension bankruptcy, and that independent actuaries would confirm this.

This answer confirms that the Liberal government has no intention of assisting these CP and CN pensioners who are now in their seventies and eighties, Mr. Speaker.

I received a letter recently from the Minister of Transport in which he stated:

The published financial statements for CN's pension fund indicate that the fund first acquired oil and gas holdings in 1979 and that at the end of 1980 these holdings were valued at about $54 million. This represented about 2 per cent of the valuation of the CN pension fund at that point.

I wanted information about how pension funds would be used. Some of these moneys should have been used to increase pensions. That would have not bankrupted the pension fund.

In a letter to R. W. Worraker, chairman of the National Council of CN Pensioners' Associations Inc. Robert Bandeen, president and chief executive officer of Canadian National, stated in the final paragraph that he encouraged them to continue making representations to all the bodies which have some responsibility in solving the complex issue of retirement income.

I want to point out that these pensioners are in their seventies and eighties. They have no resources with which to solve the problem at all. They get the ministerial and bureaucratic run-around from some man being paid $150,000 per year to tell them, a group of pensioners in their seventies and eighties, to find some resource to get a little bit of a pension increase. What a national disgrace this is under the Liberals!

● (2215)

Another excuse being used in this issue is the Pension Benefits Standards Act. If this act needs to be changed, it is up to the government to bring forth legislation to make amendments so the CN and CP can implement some form of indexing in increased pensions monthly, not in a small lump sum increase at the end of the year as they are doing now.

I plead with the parliamentary secretary to give a firm commitment tonight that the government will take immediate action to contact the CN and CP and at least arrange for a partial indexing of these retired railworkers low pensions.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has again pursued the question of railway pensions in his question on May 21. I have little to add to the frequent and, in my view, quite adequate answers he has received in the House and in correspondence.

With respect to the level of pensions, I have said before that the government fully recognizes that inflation erodes the purchasing power of a pensioner's fixed income, and is committed to finding ways of improving the pensioner's situation. The National Pension Conference was part of this effort. But the hon. member conveniently forgets the real improvements that have occurred, such as the annual increases that the CN has given since 1970 to pensioners who retired before 1973 and to their surviving spouses.

A common assumption is that the pension fund of CN is designed only to pay benefits to approximately 45,000 current recipients. If this were true, one might wonder why it could not accommodate some form of indexation. But, in fact, the fund does much more than this. Apart from refunding contributions to employees terminating service, it is required by law that there be a sufficient reserve to provide for future pensions for the 75,000 employees now in service.

The hon. member has also raised the question of the fund's investments. The Minister of Transport wrote him recently on this subject and assured him that the CN pension fund is independently administered as a vehicle for financing the obligations of the pension plan toward current or retired members or their survivors. It is not established as a vehicle for the takeover of management control of other enterprises. The Pension Board is administered by ten members comprising five railway appointed members and five chairmen of unions representing various trades within the railway industry.

THE CONSTITUTION—PROVISION RESPECTING MANDATORY RETIREMENT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 40. On Monday, November 16, 1981, in the absence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), I asked the Acting Prime Minister whether one of my constituents, Captain Ross Stevenson, the Air Canada pilot who obtained an injunction against Air Canada to allow him to work past the mandatory retirement age of 60 will be allowed to do so.

This is not the first time I have raised this question in the House. On May 20 of this year I moved a motion in this chamber to the effect that the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada introduce an amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act which would end the imposition of early retirement. I made that motion then in light of the fact that Mr. Fairweather, Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, in his fourth annual report dated March 31, 1981, to the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada, recommended to Parliament that Sections 9(2) and 14(C), allowing for the imposition of mandatory retirement, be deleted from the Canadian Human Rights Act.

The same recommendation was made by Senator Croll's special Senate committee on retirement age policies on April 15, 1980. On May 23, 1981, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) whether he would intervene in the dispute between Captain Ross Stevenson and Air Canada, allowing him to work past the age of 60. The minister clearly stated that Transport Canada has no retirement age for pilots. The only age requirement is that the applicant must be not less than 21 years of age at the time the licence is issued, and that the pilot possess an airline transport pilot's licence. Once the pilot has been issued the licence, he can continue to hold and exercise the privilege of licence, provided he can continue to meet the medical standards based on those set by ICAO, and pass periodic flight testing to demonstrate his competency.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that Captain Ross Stevenson has passed the medical standards and has passed all flight tests with flying colours.

I refer you to my comments in this House on this topic on May 29 and again on June 9, 1981. I will not repeat what I said then. Hon. members listening to this debate may refer to those speeches in Hansard.

I raise this topic again today in the hope that the accord signed on November 5, 1981, by the federal government and nine premiers to patriate the Canadian Constitution with an amending formula and a charter of rights and freedoms will remove age discrimination in collective agreements between the federal government and its employees. It is my hope also that this new charter of rights and freedoms will protect my constituent, Mr. Stevenson, against age discrimination. Section 15(1) gives every Canadian equality before and under the law, and equal protection and benefit of the law.

I shall quote from Section 15(1) from the notice of motion put by the Minister of Justice yesterday, November 18, 1981. It reads:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

My question in this chamber on November 16 was whether this section of the charter, specifically concerning mandatory retirement, will come into effect immediately after the Constitution is patriated, or will there be a three-year waiting period. This is the question the acting minister did not answer, and I hope that the Minister of Justice, or his parliamentary secretary, will answer today.

A clear answer to this question today will let Captain Ross Stevenson know whether he can work for Air Canada past the age of mandatory retirement of 60.

I wish to congratulate my constituent and his wife for their commitment in attempting to remove this discriminatory policy from the collective agreement between Air Canada and the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. Canada has witnessed many heroes in its 114-year history. Hopefully, Captain Stevenson will be one of those heroes who did something positive for his country.

I am very pleased that one of my constituents, Mr. Gustow Slodkowski is here listening to the debate. Mr. Slodkowski is the editor of the Polish Alliance Press of Canada. He could have retired two years ago, but he did not. His skills were recognized. They were put to good use and he is still the editor today.

Canada is a country which recognizes the skills of people past any mandatory retirement age and puts them to good use. I hope that the parliamentary secretary has the answer that I am seeking today for Captain Ross Stevenson.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) asked earlier this week whether Section 15 of the Canadian charter of rights and freedoms when it comes into force would affect Captain Stevenson's case, an Air Canada pilot who received instruction to leave his employment at the age of 60.

The House is aware that it is improper to comment on the Stevenson case because it is currently before a human rights tribunal. I am pleased to say that Section 15 of the charter, which the hon. member has just read is now before the House.

It will be up to the courts to give a meaning to the equality rights guaranteed by the charter. These rights will not become effective until three years after the adoption of the charter in order to allow each level of government to review and amend any laws which may not conform to the non-discrimination rights. Pension laws fixing mandatory age of retirement will have to be examined closely during this process since age is one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination under Section 15.

THE ECONOMY

DEMONSTRATION ORGANIZED BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canadian Labour Congress has graphically demonstrated the plight of the victims of the government's high interest rate policy by assembling a group of Canadian home owners who face mortgage foreclosure and loss of their homes. The Congress will join with consumers and other community groups involved in the Coalition Against High Interest Rates to focus further public attention on the dire results of the government's policy in a demonstration on Parliament Hill tomorrow. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to heed the warnings of the Canadian Coalition Against High Interest Rates, and others, by revising his fiscal policies and initiating effective action to lower interest rates, particularly on residential mortgages.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

CONDITION OF LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Like a deadly germ, exorbitantly high interest rates have been injected into the economic bloodstream of Agriculture Canada by the Liberal government and the banks and, like septicemia, it is poisoning Canada with farm bankruptcies, foreclosures, bred milk cows being sold for as low as $20, farmers being advised to sell their land to stay alive, life-dreams of men, women and children being dashed to the ground, and all the federal government does is talk, talk, talk. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That Dr. Trudeau and Dr. Whelan use the medicine they have, the federal stabilization act, to inject new blood into the livestock industry before it dies of high interestitis disease. For God's sake, and I say that reverently, when will this Liberal government do something to save this industry?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The budget of November 12 has inflicted a major burden of taxation on retiring farmers for whom the sale of their farms or the sale of their cattle was the only retirement savings plan they had. This was eliminated in the budget, by taking away the income averaging annuity contract, placing the retirement of farmers in jeopardy. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Finance reverse his decision and re-introduce the provision of income averaging annuities into the budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Noting that there was unanimous consent given in this House yesterday to urge the government of Saskatchewan to accept the entrenchment of full equality for women in the constitutional accord, and noting that the two New Democratic governments in western Canada desire the entrenchment of treaty and aboriginal rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House now give unanimous consent to urging the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to contact his colleagues, Premier Lougheed and Premier Bennett, and urge them to accept entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights in the same accord.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Miller: The Tories said no.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There were noes.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

RAILWAYS

USE OF HOPPER CARS TO TRANSPORT GRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that instances have been reported on the prairies of grain hopper cars arriving at local elevators to be filled with grain, only to have it discovered that the hopper cars were already filled with grain, and through the method of placing questions on the order paper it has been established that some of these hopper cars were filled on the prairies, travelled 1,660 miles to the port of Vancouver and back to the prairies to be refilled while in fact they were still full, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

● (1110)

That all CN Crown corporation trains be equipped with automatic wheel brake locking systems set to be activated when the trains enter the port of Vancouver and which will not release until the trains have been appropriately unloaded, and that the savings from this innovative system be used to provide prairie farmers with matching grants whereby they can pay, without actual costs, those demurrage charges that accrue from other government-run grain operations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING INVESTMENT INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the right of a Canadian to deduct from taxable income, interest paid on moneys borrowed for investment in Canada, has been one of very few federal incentives to create new jobs and new wealth in Canada, and the removal of this incentive will severely damage those who have already undertaken risk investments, lead to more lay-offs and even lower growth, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the House condemn the elimination of this incentive in the budget and demand its reinstatement, so that Canada will not become virtually the only country in the free world to so discourage investment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion similar to that proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to make sure there is no misunderstanding in this House. Noting that there was unanimous consent given in this House yesterday to urge the government of Saskatchewan to accept the entrenchment of full equality for women in the constitutional accord, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House now give unanimous consent to urging the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to contact Premier Lougheed and Premier Bennett, and urge them to accept entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights in the same accord.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), as usual, is a little behind the times. Had he looked on the table when coming into the opposition lobby today he would have seen a stack of press releases put out by the office of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), dealing with this matter. A telex was sent yesterday, not just to the premiers set out in his motion but, indeed, to all premiers. The text of that telex sets forth the spirit of the motion that he has moved and which the House has unanimously accepted. I might just read that text into the record, if I have the time.

This is the telex that the Leader of the Opposition sent to all provincial premiers:

The Progressive Conservative Party in Parliament will be offering certain amendments to the government's latest constitutional proposals. The amendments would increase substantially the support in Canada for a full constitutional settlement, within the spirit of the accord of November 5.

In order to meet the stated objections of the government of Quebec, we propose to reinstate the full financial compensation provisions of the April accord. The benefits of that would naturally be available to all provinces.

Further, we believe that it is not in the national interest to exclude from the resolution the reasonable and fair assurances to the aboriginal peoples which were contained in Section 34 of the previous resolution and which were supported overwhelmingly by all parties in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1115)

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, time prevents me from reading the full text, but it deals with those matters, including equality of women, and so on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: It is now 11.15 a.m. I must interrupt the debate on this motion. However, if the House wishes, I can put the motion to the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The discussion is over. It is time for oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS INSTITUTED BY MASSEY-FERGUSON

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who undoubtedly is aware that for approximately 1,900 employees at Massey-Ferguson this is their last work day as a result of having been given notice of temporary lay-offs on Monday, for a period which will not end before February.

Would the minister indicate to the House, bearing in mind that his government has guaranteed various obligations for Massey-Ferguson to the tune of $125 million, and bearing in mind it will mean a total of 3,000 of the 6,400 work force in Canada of Massey-Ferguson will now be laid off, which is almost a 50 per cent lay-off in Canada compared with approximately an 18 per cent lay-off in the United States, and no lay-off whatsoever in Massey-Ferguson factories around the world with respect to some 20,000 other workers, why this lay-off is occurring?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the plants in Canada make combines. The market for combines is particularly weak in the United States which is the main outlet for these products. The great bulk of these products is exported to the United States and, unfortunately, economic conditions there do not permit the level of sales of these combines which we would like to see.

The same thing is happening to the principal competitors of Massey-Ferguson, such as John Deere and International Harvester. They are laying off substantial numbers of people from their combines plants in that country as well. We are not happy about these lay-offs, but they seem to be a reflection of conditions in the principal market for the products made by the Massey-Ferguson plants in Canada.

LAY-OFFS INSTITUTED BY RCA VICTOR IN MIDLAND, ONT.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is again to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who undoubtedly is well aware of the fact that in an interview this morning an official of Massey-Ferguson said that their number one problem was high interest rates—not the impact of world market conditions that the minister has indicated.

I will put this further question to the minister. He is undoubtedly aware that at the RCA Victor plant in Midland, approximately 25 per cent of its work force of 1,200 people is now laid off. It is the main employer in the town of Midland. If the minister is aware of that, would he indicate why this type of lay-off is occurring, and would he not agree that it is also due to the high interest rate structure that his government has had in place for almost the last year?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, this government has not created the high interest rate structure in the United States—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —a country whose economic policy the hon. member thinks is so tremendous, a country which provides the outlet for 80 per cent or more of the production of Massey-Ferguson plants in Canada. If I am not mistaken, Massey-Ferguson has in Canada, according to my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, a program whereby it sells combines in Canada at a particularly low rate of interest, a competitive rate. But the real problem is with respect to the economic situation in the United States.

With respect to interest rates in Canada generally, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, interest rates in this country, if one looks at the bank rate, are lower than at any time since the end of last year. They have come down approximately six points since August of this year. Certainly this is a step in the right direction in the key area of interest rates in this country. I wish there were further progress in the United States, a country whose economic policies the hon. member seems to think are so wonderful.

IMPORTATION OF PRODUCTS FROM JAPAN

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I am sure all of us would like to remind the minister that interest rates in this country are still higher than they were when he said he would resign if they were that high during a period in which he was in government.

Does the minister not feel that there is an inconsistency in the policy of the government which permits companies such as Mitsui to do $1.5 billion worth of business in Canada but to employ only 140 people in this country when, at the same time, concerns such as Admiral, RCA Victor, and many other companies are finding it extremely difficult to compete with such concerns and have to lay off thousands of Canadian workers? Why does the minister encourage the importation of goods from Japanese and other manufacturers while at the same time discouraging, through such devices as FIRA, the opening up of plants in Canada which might employ Canadians and avoid the lay-offs we are now experiencing?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is certainly showing an amazing example of trying to work both sides of the street at the same time. In other comments he complains about alleged government interference with the private sector. Today he is calling for even more interference in a system he thinks is working well.

We happen to be working with the Admiral company, with provincial governments, with workers and with potential purchasers of that company in an effort to work out a program to restore it to operation. We are pursuing efforts in that regard.

If my hon. friend is talking about unfair import practices on the part of Mitsui, I would be happy to review those practices with the Minister of National Revenue to see if they contravene our laws. However, one thing the hon. member seems to be calling for which does not seem to be consistent with his non-interventionist philosophy is a system of review of the performance of large multinationals. I thank the hon. member for supporting this very interesting concept.

THE BUDGET

PROVISIONS AFFECTING INVESTMENT INCOME

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding the ability to deduct from taxation the interest one pays on moneys borrowed for investment in Canada. I would like to raise with the minister the specific case of six young investors in Toronto who borrowed $100,000 last year to start a business. This business replaced an American business in Canada and now employs, through leverage, 200 Canadians in Montreal, Toronto, Burlington and London. They must decide in January whether to borrow the second $100,000 to which they committed themselves at the beginning. Their entire decision in the beginning was based on their ability to deduct interest costs.

Can the minister explain to me and to these investors why their desire to create wealth and jobs in Canada as of November 12 is regarded as immoral, and can he explain to the people whose jobs may be in jeopardy why that is a reasonable thing to do at this time?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be pleased to know that the measure I am proposing will not have the damaging effects he believes it will have; nor will it have the damaging effects the several individuals the hon. member mentioned might believe it will have. For that reason I would be pleased to have detailed information so that I can analyse the case.

Many people do not seem to understand that individuals will still be able to deduct borrowing costs on any investment against investment income from any asset, not just against the income from the asset to which the borrowing relates, and it seems to me that, unless I have much more information, that covers the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, it is stunning that the Minister of Finance simply does not understand that, to be successful, new businesses will not generate income in their first three to five years against which to write off interest.

REQUEST THAT IMPLEMENTATION DATE BE CHANGED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, if the minister is not prepared to consider reversing his position on this issue, as he did, with some help from us, on the MURB provisions earlier, with respect to the ability to deduct interest and the other tax incentives which have led Canadians to invest in Canada, will he at least consider grandfathering those investments so that Canadians who undertook risk in this country to try to put people back to work will not be forced to pay a tax penalty for trying to be good Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the point I have already made—which is still valid, despite the hon. member's comment—is that any excess of interest payment charges can be carried forward indefinitely and for deduction against investment income in future years. The case described by the hon. member is still covered by a feature that will permit those carrying charges to be carried forward against investment income in future years.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister made much of the phrase "fairness and equity" in his budget of November 12. Tomorrow, a large number of people will travel from all across Canada to Ottawa in order to express their concern about interest rates in particular, and the impact of high interest rates in general. Recognizing that there is a significant number of Canadians who signed mortgages at interest rate levels of 20, 21, and 22 per cent between the months of March and November of this year, will the minister take some action with the banks, or directly through government, to reduce that interest rate level to the current interest rate level that is available?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be pleased, as I am, to have observed the rather sharp drop in the bank rate recently and the drops in mortgage rates that have resulted. That is probably the best way to ensure that the burden on home owners will be reduced. I take note of the hon. member's question. It has a good deal of sense in it. Is there some way we can accommodate those persons who were in a sense caught in that period of very high interest rates? My understanding is that the financial institutions, particularly the banks, have attempted as much as possible to avoid entering into arrangements at those very high levels. I will certainly pursue that point to see whether something further can be done to ensure that those persons caught at very high levels might have their situation considered.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the sensible attitude being shown by the minister. I point out to him that, although it may be in the mind of the minister that the banks and financial institutions have attempted to help those people, I can assure him, having spoken with at least one family yesterday who are being asked to sign at 21¾ per cent today, that the banks and financial intitutions are not really doing all they could. I simply ask that the minister make a commitment that there will be some action taken directly by government to require the banks to bring mortgage interest rates into line with current levels, or that the government itself take action to relieve this terrible burden on so many families.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have already announced a measure that, in my view, will prevent any family in this country from losing a home as a result of high interest rates. I am satisfied that that measure will have that effect. I know the hon. member wants to go further. I understand very clearly the point he is making because I discussed that very matter yesterday and attempted to determine to what extent individuals were caught in that high interest rate period and had entered into contracts. I will pursue the matter further. Certainly the case which the hon. member mentions in his question is one that ought to be looked at in the light of what is now a very substantial drop in interest rates. I intend to follow up that matter.

QUERY RESPECTING STABLE INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. I want to ask the minister what will be done for those workers who face the double jeopardy of high interest mortgage rates and lay-offs from their jobs. For example, what will the minister do for workers like Tony Brown, who is one of ten thousand IWA workers who have been laid off, who earns only about $930 a month with UIC payments and working every other week, and who tries to support a family of three? This man's mortgage will increase to $1,200 per month. Even with the mortgage deferral program he still would not have enough money to feed his family. I think the minister's previous statement really is not accurate.

• (1130)

What will the minister do to introduce a policy on stable mortgage interest rates? What will he do to stimulate jobs to have more construction for workers like Tony Brown?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that it is quite impossible to examine individual cases during question period. It is impossible to do that. I had an experience earlier this week when a particular member raised a question and provided what appeared to be the details of a particular case, and when asked to provide the facts later was unable to do so in a way that would venture or provide a basis for an investigation.

I want to tell the hon. member that we did provide in the budget, first of all, for a program of assistance that will ensure that no family will lose their home as a result of high interest rates. That is the absolute fact.

The hon. member now adds a further question with respect to rental construction. We have provided in the budget very substantial sums of money to encourage rental construction in this country.

During last session and in this session the hon. member poured scorn on the existence of MURBs in the housing field. I was surprised that the hon. member, upon learning that we intend to drop MURBs at the beginning of next year, did not stand up and say, "Bravo".

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, it has been more than eleven months since the government officially banned urea formaldehyde foam insulation. In the meantime 100,000 home owners are worrying and wondering about what the government will do, and in many cases there is a sense of desperation about what has happened to their property values. Many of them are also facing serious health situations. About six different ministers in the government are handling this UFFI problem.

I want to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is responsible for CHIP, whether the Minister of State, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, was announcing government policy recently when he said that the Treasury Board had accepted the principle of evaluating dangers and compensating victims of UFFI? Since he made that statement, has he been able to convince his cabinet colleagues on the need for compensation for UFFI victims?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the minister responsible for this matter, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, was present in the House all week and would have been able to answer this question, which, in fact, he already answered last week. I therefore have nothing to add to the reply given last week on the subject by my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[English]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ADVICE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I repeat that there are six government ministers who are looking into the question of UFFI. There is nothing contained in the budget in the way of contingency plans for emergency compensation.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs says in a letter to my colleagues:

—action required will be decided upon, once the results of the national testing survey, the recommendations of the Board of Review, and the findings of the Co-ordination Centre are available.

The nation-wide testing, Madam Speaker, was completed at the end of October. The Board of Review recommendations on UFFI will not be known until sometime in mid-winter.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. What are people supposed to do until the government gets its act together with regard to this UFFI matter? What advice does the government have for people who are getting sick? Are they supposed to take it upon themselves to remove this dangerous foam insulation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, once more, I may refer my colleague to what has already been said on the subject by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister has informed the House that complaints were being investigated at the homes of people who had been particularly affected. These investigations have been or are being finalized, and whatever evidence we have gathered so far is now under scrutiny and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has indicated that he would publish this information as soon as possible and would then be in a position to indicate whether any other steps could be taken.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

MANDATE TO RETAIN BRANCH LINES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the all too comfortable looking Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the minister, by order in council, has provided for hearings to abandon more railways on the prairies that were originally secure until 1985, and in view of the fact that the mandate of the CTC allows it only two options—one, is to abandon and, two, is to retain for five years—will the minister give consideration to an extension of that mandate for abandonment to five years, fifteen years, or into the permanent network? I ask the question in view of the fact that multi-million dollar investments cannot be made on the basis of five-year projections, such as grain elevators, building up of the road bed, or any other structures requiring that kind of expenditure.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the rehabilitation of branch lines in the west has reached quite an extensive level. At the moment the system is working quite well. The other day I was pleased to announce that we now have a detailed program for a period of three years. I was also pleased to put during the summer on behalf of the government, $45 million more in the next three years into that branch line rehabilitation program. Obviously there are limitations to the number of miles of lines that can be included in that system. The process of elimination must follow its normal course if we want to have a manageable situation. I do not know precisely what my hon. friend has in mind, but maybe he can elucidate that in his next question.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF MANDATE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, what I am pointing out with respect to any abandonment of branch lines taking place in the normal course is that abandonment automatically happens at the end of a five-year extension. This means that the railway companies will not put in new ballast because of the amount of investment required, and no new grain elevators will be built because they require an investment of several millions of dollars each. Such investment will not be undertaken if only a five-year projection can be given. There must be greater security of investment provided.

Would the minister give consideration to changing the mandate of the Canadian Transport Commission so that instead of it having the option to postpone an abandonment for five years, it could postpone it for 15 years, or even transfer the branch line in question to the permanent network? In that way grain companies and railway companies could proceed with their investments, without concluding that at the end of five years, and a few hearings, abandonment would automatically take place because by that time the track would be so torn up that nothing else could happen. Would the minister consider making that kind of recommendation with respect to the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend, generally speaking, is asking how the system operates at this time. When a line is abandoned or before the line is abandoned, the elevator companies are fully consulted as to their intent. A line is not abandoned without that process of consultation. Also, after which a decision is made, there is a five-year period of time when it can be reviewed by the CTC. It is complicated enough as it presently exists. I suggest that adding more complications to it would not be in the best interests of western grain producers.

RAILWAYS

PLANS FOR FUTURE IMPROVEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. The budget outlined that there would be $1.3 billion spent over the next four years to improve western transportation. I should like to ask the minister two questions. First of all, can he assure this House that the $1.3 billion will not vanish like the $4 billion we heard in last year's budget? Will he advise the House whether he will be approaching the improvement of the transportation system on a comprehensive basis, or is it his intention to proceed on a project by project ad hoc basis? If a decision has not been made, could the minister indicate when such a decision will be taken by cabinet?

• (1140)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously I have to restrain myself in answering this question. There are two approaches. One is known as the comprehensive one which is the terminology used by the hon. member for Vegreville. It is also know as the system approach. The other approach is less pejoratively referred to as the special projects approach. I can only say for today that cabinet will very soon be seized of that choice and will have to make a decision as to the best possible use of the $1.3 billion which the distinguished Minister of Finance has made available for the maintenance of capacity in the main line in western Canada, a line that will be more and more double-tracked, as the Prime Minister indicated before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I gather from the tone of the question that my hon. friend is already favourable to the comprehensive approach. Should that be so, I have a question to ask him. How many of his colleagues are in agreement with that?

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

REFINANCING OF CO-OPERATIVE IMPLEMENTS OF WINNIPEG

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the flowering Minister of Agriculture, regarding the refinancing of the farmer-owned, Winnipeg-based, Co-operative Implements Ltd. The minister is no doubt well aware of the $35 million refinancing package which is being put together for this western farm machinery company. It includes the assistance of the three prairie provinces, the organizations within the co-operative movement, and the owners of Co-operative Implements themselves, the farmers. Will the government be announcing its participation in this package, particularly in light of the assistance which was given to companies such as Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and White?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member made comment about the flower I am wearing. This is because of the importance which Agriculture Canada places on the floral industry.

An hon. Member: Is it real or plastic?

Mr. Whelan: It is very real. It is a very important industry. The chrysanthemum show has two more days to run at the Experimental Farm in Ottawa. If the hon. member wants to learn more about what is going on, let him go and see. I am sure he realizes that it always pays to advertise.

When the hon. member talks about Co-operative Implements, he should realize that it would have been closed over three years ago if it had not been for the action of the government in providing an interest-free loan for $7 million when the other people were not doing very much about it. We had to beg the provinces to come into it. We are negotiating with them on what we think is a very good program for Co-operative Implements. I am not sure whether or not it will go ahead, but we know that over-all there are 3,000 jobs involved and that the money we provided was $7 million interest free. That money, interest free, amounts to nearly $3 million, so we have already put $10 million into that program. We are prepared to ensure, to the best of our ability, that this plant stays in operation.

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the minister's emblems extend to his speeches. By way of a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister to confirm that the amount of the federal government's support will be $14 million, which was requested, rather than the $7.5 million previously negotiated. This amount will ensure that Co-operative Implements will continue to operate. Given the support of $360 million to Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and White, this seems like a paltry amount to keep a Canadian farmer-owned western implement company going.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the first part of the hon. member's statement was rather flowery. I am glad to see that he has come into the picture late concerning Co-operative Implements. I am glad he realizes that there is a Canadian farm implement manufacturing company which is doing a very good job, as far as I am concerned. Their projections have been even above target, in what they said they would do as far as production is concerned. They need some extra financing at this time.

The hon. member made a comparison with what we have done for Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler and White. I am very proud of what the government has done for those companies. But when he makes a comparison, let him be fair. We have actually given the money interest free to Co-operative Implements, which is significantly greater than just guaranteeing a loan; we are actually putting the money there. The provinces only have to do as much as we have done, and they will have no problems.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR VACCINATION PROGRAM TO COMBAT RED MEASLES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A disease which is seriously underrated by the public and also by some health workers, as far as morbidity is concerned, and one that can and does cause significant brain damage, is red measles. This serious virus infection is preventable by vaccination. The United States is committed to a national vaccination program, with a goal of completely eliminating the disease arising within that country by 1982. Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare have any plans to stimulate and co-ordinate such a program in Canada where the responsibility for health rests with the provinces?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the jurisdiction for implementing such health policy remains with the provincial health authorities. However, the fact is that the National Advisory Committee on Immunization which prepared guidelines for the eradication of measles in Canada strongly recommended that legislation be enacted in each of the ten provinces requiring measle immunization prior to school entry. Unfortunately it has not been implemented in some parts of Canada. I do not have the direct power to do it, so I guess an occasion such as this to tell the public is of value.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will recall that a couple of days ago I asked him how many provinces have not yet given their consent to withdrawing the override provision to the equality clause, Section 28. Following question period the Prime Minister will recall that he intimated informally to me across the floor of the House of Commons that there were two such provinces. Then he intimated that, if that number were reduced to one, he might consider reinstating the clause as it was in the original, but that he could not do so if it were two or more provinces.

Seeing that there seems to be only one province now which is withholding its approval, I ask the Prime Minister most sincerely whether he would, in concert with eight provinces, agree to reinstate Section 28 to give full equality to male and female persons as it was in the original resolution?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. lady should have terminated her question by saying, "as it was in the original resolution, which the Tories did not support".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Not true.

Mr. Crombie: Be serious.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There is very little time remaining in question period, and we would like to hear from a lot of questioners.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. lady is asking me a hypothetical question because I do not know how many provinces will in the end support the amendments to restore the charter to its original form, the way it had been proposed. I do not know how many provinces, in the end, will support: maybe all, maybe not all.

I would say the same thing about aboriginal rights. Maybe all will support the restoration of aboriginal rights, and maybe they will not. However, the question remains hypothetical in the sense that I cannot say in advance what the courts would have defined as a consensus of the provinces. We know that too did not appear to be enough. We know that ten is not necessary. I do not know how many provinces we would need to go to London in order that we would have established the constitutionality in a conventional sense of the demarche. I suppose that could only be settled by the courts.

If the question does arise, we will have to make up our minds on this side of the House if "x" number of provinces is enough or not. I hope we will not have to ask ourselves that question because I am sure the house will let any changes to the accord made on Thursday, two weeks ago, be made with the consent of the provinces. I think that is important.

I fail to understand what the laughter is about on that side of the House. Maybe I could have a supplementary question and try to deal with the question.

QUERY RESPECTING NUMBER OF NON-CONSENTING PROVINCES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question. The Prime Minister will remember, of course, that Section 28 was not in the proposals brought before the House a year ago this October, and presented by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That section was added in April of this year with the consent and agreement of all parties of this House, because I think we all want to see that section carried out. Therefore, I really want to come back to the question that I posed to the Prime Minister and the information that I understood he conveyed to me the other day that, while two provinces would present some difficulty for him in undertaking to make any change to the clause as it now stands before the House, if that number were reduced to one he might consider it. I am asking him will he now consider that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes a point that Section 28 was not in the charter when it was first introduced. She is right, of course, and she is right that many other changes in the charter were made following the introduction into this House in October of last year. She should be reminded of the process which caused that to happen.

We had a pretty good charter in the month of June, 1980. The Minister of Justice attempted to get provinces on side. I now think the House realizes how hard that is on some aspects of the charter and aboriginal rights.

The Minister of Justice, in an attempt to get the provinces on side, watered down that charter in many aspects in the hope of getting a consensus in September of 1980.

We did not get the consensus. Therefore we decided to act with just the authority of Parliament. Since Parliament was going to act on its own, at least in so far as our party and most of the New Democratic Party was concerned, we could afford to improve the charter.

I remind the hon. member of what position she and her party took at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members do not like to be reminded of that, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Answer the question!

An hon. Member: You did the Canadian thing!

Mr. Trudeau: It was that we patriate the Constitution with an amending formula, and that then, after, we would write a charter in Canada.

Mr. Siddon: Let's do that after, then!

Mr. Trudeau: We are going to patriate with an amending formula, and we are going to have a pretty good charter. But let us do what that party has urged all along. Let us, when the Constitution comes back, write a charter in Canada, and then we will get into the job together and do the parts that are not completed.

Mr. Siddon: Let's do that!

Mr. Trudeau: Surely that was the position for the whole of last year, that we should write the charter in Canada. How can they now say, "Write it in this House of Commons, even if the provinces do not want to do this?" They have been saying the contrary to that for a year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: You changed your position. That's not what you said the other day.

FINANCE

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PROGRESSIVE AND REGRESSIVE TAXES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Could he give us some clear indication of what he and his cabinet consider to be the difference between a progressive tax and a regressive tax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the existence of a progressive tax is obvious to everyone in the House. What I have been attempting to do is to ensure that there be some relationship between the size of a person's income and the tax burden which that person bears. What I found rather difficult to justify was that, because of the tax system, certain tax filers could entirely escape paying tax. I do not regard that to be a progressive tax system.

QUERY RESPECTING SYSTEM

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to hear that that is what the finance minister feels. Social scientists in Canada judged the Clark government budget to be the most progressive in the decade of the seventies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: On the national accounts basis, page 73 of his supplementary document, it becomes clear to Canadians that indirect hidden taxes have doubled under his stewardship from $100 per family to over $200 per family per month, amounting to $2,500 a year in hidden taxes. Poor people, middle-income people and rich people pay the same. Is that progress, or is that the king of regression who sits in that chair across the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously the social scientists were out of touch with Parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —and out of touch with the Canadian people. Maybe that should give all of us something to think about—

Mr. Huntington: Let's have another election.

Mr. MacEachen: —when we begin to quote social scientists. I presume that the hon. member is an advocate of a progressive tax system, from listening to his questions. Perhaps he ought to have a conversation with one of his colleagues in that party who, earlier in the question period, condemned me and the government for making some changes to the deductibility of interest expenses. Would he believe, the way the deductibility of interest expenses has been applied in the tax system—

Mr. Huntington: Still don't understand it, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: —has been to permit high income earners in this country to reduce their tax to zero.

Mr. Siddon: That's nonsense. Why do you tax them on money they didn't get?

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore, I ask the hon. member whether it is a progressive and fair tax system when very high income individuals can pay no taxes whatsoever, maybe for an indefinite period of time. That is what I have been attempting to remove from the tax system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMUNICATIONS

REVIEW OF BROADCASTING POLICY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, who knows that a recent Federal Communications Commission decision in the United States liberalized trans-border satellite signal delivery, and that that decision may have far reaching effects for both the Canadian TV viewers and also for Canadian business interests. The 1972 U.S.-Canada agreement, which prohibited the reception of foreign satellite signals, as the minister knows discriminated against people living in certain regions of the country where foreign American signals were not available, either off air or through microwave by cable.

I want to know when the minister intends to announce a new broadcast policy, a global one in terms of its regulation system, which will treat TV content requirements equally, regardless of what carriage options communities in northern and remote areas of Canada choose to employ.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Whatever happened to Canadianization?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised a number of questions arising from some actions which have been taken fairly recently in matters dealing with the over-all broadcasting strategy which we are reviewing at the moment. It is quite obvious that since we have, indeed, asked a committee of eminent Canadians in the cultural field led, by Mr. Lou Applebaum from Toronto, and Mr. Jacques Hebert, to undertake a comprehensive review of federal cultural policy, that our over-all broadcasting policy review is subject to the publication of that report.

• (1200)

That group will be reporting initially within the next two weeks to give Canadians a report on what they have heard during hearings across the country. They will then be submitting a second report making specific recommendations. Those recommendations should be made public perhaps in March or April next year. We will then be reviewing broadcast policy in the light of the recommendations we will be receiving from that committee.

The hon. member also raised a question about the FCC. I should point out to the hon. member that the FCC decision to allow trans-border traffic, both television and business signals, is subject to the agreement of both governments.

TRANS-BORDER TRANSMISSION OF DATA

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the people of Canada are going to do while we wait for that cultural policy, because it is going to be a long time.

On the business side of it can the minister assure the House that he will not enter into any agreement with the Americans on trans-border data flows until he has a chance to study the footprints of the various systems, both in the U.S. and Canada, which are entirely different? The U.S. satellites hit our major population while Canadian satellite footprints do not hit the large business centres in the United States. Will he study the implications for job loss and all the other aspects of this kind of proposal coming from the satellite business system, which are immense? The American multinational corporations represent U.S. interest and not Canadian interests.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes, of course. That is one of the reasons why we are not rushing to change the 1972 agreement entered into between Canada and the United States. We want to ensure that, if there is any change in that agreement, for instance a change that would bring equalization of viewing opportunities across the country, the legitimate interests of Canada are taken into consideration, and that a good part of the revenues which flow out of the exchange of radio and television communications signals between both countries continues to accrue to Canadians, and continues to ensure a good base for jobs in the Canadian telecommunications industry.

GREY CUP GAME, 1981

CONGRATULATIONS TO PARTICIPATING TEAMS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege. On Sunday in Montreal the Edmonton Eskimos and the Ottawa Rough Riders meet in the 1981 Grey Cup Game. It has become a great spectacle when Canadians join together in spirit by kicking a football rather than each other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: Therefore, I am sure that all members of this House join with me today in congratulating members of the Ottawa Rough Riders and the Edmonton Eskimos football teams for their achievement in having won their respective divisions. We wish both teams well as they participate in this annual Grey Cup event, which has become a symbol of our sense of national unity.

I want to say that if I had not said something on this matter my son, who is attending the game, threatened that I would be used as the football!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as a representative of the national capital area in which the Ottawa Rough Riders have their home, and in the spirit of the words expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), and driving out of my soul all the partisanship I can for the moment, I want to associate myself completely with the remarks of the hon. member and to invite other hon. members to associate themselves with this sentiment in the usual way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I got the message from the House a long time ago that where sports were concerned I have to be extremely tolerant! I know the House wants to express its feelings by applauding both the Edmonton Eskimos and the Ottawa Rough Riders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MR. FULTON—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE VOTE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: The poor Hamilton Tiger Cats.

Mr. Deans: It would be a better spectacle if Hamilton were there.

At 11:15 a.m. today a debate was in progress on a motion moved by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on aboriginal rights. Could you request the unanimous consent of the House to have the vote on that matter taken immediately?

Madam Speaker: Of course, the Speaker can do anything the House asks her when it gives its unanimous consent. Does the House agree that I put this motion before it and then let the House vote on the matter without debate?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is learning the rules, albeit a little slowly.

Mr. Young: Sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: I think the rules should be adhered to. The hon. member heard me read most of the text of a telex that was sent to the Premiers. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) will be speaking about the matters which were raised as soon as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has completed his remarks. I would urge the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and all members of his party to stay in the House to listen to those words of wisdom.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member's request?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on another point of order. I would ask guidance from the Chair with regard to a motion moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 that was passed. This motion was put by a member on the government side which said, literally translated, that the Canadian Parliament recognize the rights of aboriginals in the new Constitution. How will that motion be disposed of?

Madam Speaker: The motion has been disposed of. As a matter of fact, the House should not reflect on its actions which are final. The motion has been voted on.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order concerning the motion I moved, which was seconded by my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I think it important that the native people of Canada know whether or not this House will take a vote and give unanimity to the motion that was before the House.

An hon. Member: There was a vote.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Learn your rules.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. These motions have been dealt with by the House. The House may not reflect on these motions once they have been dealt with.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have a final point of order. This relates directly to the point I have just raised. May I ask what now becomes of the motion to include aboriginal rights in the Constitution that was unanimously passed?

An hon. Member: Did you not go to your classes?

Madam Speaker: The motion has been transferred to Government Orders.

PETITION

MR. ROSE—PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by citizens from the riding of Mission-Port Moody protesting the massive increase in postal rates contemplated for January 1, 1982. My petitioners join thousands of other Canadians who can find no justification for the virtual doubling of postage charges without any guarantee of improved services or the expansion of home delivery. My petitioners pray that the government will listen and act upon their wishes.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions.

S.O. 21(2)

November 18, 1981

The Minister of Justice

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications, il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

S.O. 21(2)

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

S.O. 21(2)

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province, ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Dispositions générales

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PARTIE III

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Conférence constitutionnelle

36. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PARTIE IV

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

50. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

Idem

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,540, 3,034 and 3,145.

[Text]

CABINET COMMITTEE ON SECURITY AND INTELLIGENCE

Question No. 2,540—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister make a statement on May 26, 1981 that the security committee of the cabinet had met very few times, if any, since his government was returned to office and did he further state that he could not really recall that the committee had ever met and, if so (a) what is the purpose of having such a committee, (b) if no meetings were held, is it intended to leave the committee in existence or to abolish it, (c) will it be the policy in the future to have the committee meet on a regular basis in addition to any other special meetings that may be required?

2. What are the names of all cabinet ministers who sit on the committee and what are the names and job designations of any others who perform services for the committee?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. The relevant remarks of the Prime Minister are set out in the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for the meeting of May 26, 1981. (a) The cabinet committee on security and intelligence meets at irregular intervals as required to deal with questions relating to security and intelligence. (b) Not applicable. (c) Arrangements concerning cabinet committees are kept under continuing review.

2. As of the date of the question, the members of the cabinet committee on security and intelligence were as set out in the cabinet committee membership list tabled by the Prime Minister on July 10, 1980 and printed as an appendix to House of Commons Debates for that day. As of the date of the question, the names of the persons who performed services for the committee were as set out in the reply to question No. 2,609 answered July 7, 1981.

BETHUNE FOUNDATION

Question No. 3,034—Mr. Gamble:

1. What is the Bethune Foundation?

2. Did the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) give the Bethune Foundation a grant of $7,923 in the fiscal year 1979-80 and, if so, for what purpose?

3. Does the Bethune Foundation in any way relate to Dr. Norman Bethune?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. According to information supplied by the foundation, the Bethune Foundation/La Fondation Bethune is a registered non-profit charitable organization. It was founded in 1971 and its objectives are: (a) to perpetuate the memory of Dr. Norman Bethune and his service to humanity, self-sacrifice, and spirit of co-operative internationalism, and to expand the knowledge of his contributions to society; (b) to encourage exchanges of professors and students between Canadian and other universities and educational institutions who will give leadership in the area of health and welfare and development, particularly in outlying areas, among native peoples, mining communities, etc.; (c) to establish trust funds and a foundation in the pursuit of the above objectives.

2. CIDA made a contribution of $7,923 to the Bethune Foundation in fiscal year 1979-80 for the conference: "Bethune, His Times and Legacy". The conference was held at McGill University in Montreal. Specifically, the CIDA contribution was for the purpose of providing travel and per diem financing to bring two speakers from China who had intimate knowledge of Dr. Bethune's work in that country.

3. See answer to 1 above.

CANADA FOOD GUIDE

Question No. 3,145—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. With reference to the pamphlet "Eat Better, Feel Great" (a) how many copies were ordered to be printed and in which languages (b) what was the cost (c) at what location was it printed and by what firm or firms (d) what methods were used to distribute the pamphlet and what was the cost of each method?

2. (a) What is the "Canada Food Guide" (b) was the "Canada Food Guide" distributed at the same time as the pamphlet and, if not, for what reason was reference made to it in the pamphlet without indicating how a copy could be obtained?

3. Was the pamphlet directed to (a) the young (b) the elderly (c) the obese (d) pensioners (e) those who eat too much fat or use too much salt and, if not, to whom?

4. What was the purpose behind (a) the pamphlet "Eat Better, Feel Great" (b) the brochure "Canada Food Guide"?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Approximately 8.5 million English copies and two million French copies of the pamphlet were printed. (b) Total production costs were $218,353. (c) Printing was done in Montreal by Gazette Printing Company through Cockfield Brown Inc. (d) Eight million copies of the pamphlet are being distributed as a print insert in eight national magazines (French and English); in October, Today/Perspectives; Reader's Digest/Sélection du Reader's Digest; and in November, Chatelaine/Châtelaine and TV Guide/Hebdo. Cost of distribution is estimated at $163,000. Distribution of additional copies will be done through programs within the department and in conjunction with other federal, provincial and local agencies.

2. (a) "Canada's Food Guide" is a one-page nutrition education tool developed through collaborative federal-provincial efforts. Since 1977, over eight million copies of the Guide have been distributed largely in co-operation with provincial departments of health. In addition, information on Canada's Food Guide is expanded as needed, in teaching and information materials such as booklets, pamphlets and posters prepared by many agencies.

(b) Canada's Food Guide was not distributed at the same time as the pamphlet, since the pamphlet was designed to promote only the variety aspect of the Guide. The circle representing the four groups was included to remind the target group, young adults, of Canada's Food Guide which has been available to them for many years. In addition, distribution costs would have increased and it would have duplicated existing information.

3. The pamphlet "Eat Better, Feel Great" is directed to young adults, 18 to 34 years of age, to encourage them to look at their own eating habits and consider changes. This can aid in preventing some of the overweight and poor nutrition habits in later years. Many programs across the country deal with the younger child but few exist which are related to the young adult target group. This group serves to bring about change in the food habits of children. The pamphlet will, of course, be read by others including the older age group and will help those who eat too much salt or fat. There are nutrition programs within the department which address problems such as overweight.

4. (a) The "Eat Better, Feel Great" pamphlet is part of a national awareness program to promote health. It is designed to stimulate Canadians to examine their personal eating habits and to make positive changes. It is based on nutrition research in both scientific and applied health fields and was developed to implement the nutrition recommendations for Canadians.

(b) "Canada's Food Guide" was designed as an educational tool for working with the public or in student training. It is used by health workers, teachers, counsellors, the food industry and the media in presenting a sound and consistent message. It has been evaluated and is revised as required to best reflect recent scientific research and general eating patterns of Canadians. It is an example of successful collaborative efforts between federal and provincial governments.

GIFTS TO REPRESENTATIVES OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Question No. 2,732—Mr. Beatty:

1. Since March 1, 1980, what gifts of more than a $50 cost to the taxpayer were given by the government and its officials to representatives of foreign governments for their personal use or for the use of their families?

2. In each case (a) what was the cost of the gift to the taxpayer (b) to whom was it given (c) on what date was it given and by whom (d) for what reason was it given?

3. What is the policy of the government respecting gifts paid for by the government and given to representatives of foreign governments and how are Canadian officials informed of the policy?

Return tabled.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development) moved:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province,

ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

PART II

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PARTIE II

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PARTIE III

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Conférence constitutionnelle

36. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART IV

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

37. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or gov-

PARTIE IV

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

The Constitution

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Idem

50. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

He said: Madam Speaker, in introducing the resolution preceding confederation in the Parliament of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald stated:

> The whole scheme of confederation, as propounded by the conference, as agreed to and sanctioned by the Canadian government, and as now presented for the consideration of the people and the legislature, bears upon its face the marks of compromise. Of necessity there must have been a great deal of mutual concession. If we had not felt that we were bound to set aside our private opinions on matters of detail, if we had not felt ourselves bound to look at what was practicable, not obstinately rejecting the opinions of others nor adhering to our own; if we had not met in a spirit of conciliation, we never would have succeeded.

It is with pride that I am able today to introduce a constitutional resolution supported by all governments who believe in a strong and united Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The resolution before this House is the product of a consensus among governments; but, equally important, it reflects the values, aspirations, the hopes and dreams of an overwhelming majority of Canadians.

Before I explain the content of the resolution, I want to pay tribute to the members of my caucus and to my colleagues in the cabinet for their collaboration, their advice and their total support over the last 18 months. I want to pay a particular tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for this historic achievement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I want to thank other members of the House of Commons for their constructive advice and support. I want also to pay tribute to my colleagues in provincial governments who worked hard to achieve consensus two weeks ago. I want to thank the thousands of Canadians who contributed so much to the work of the parliamentary committee. And I want to point out to Canadians the role of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who spent a year telling us that process is more important than substance. I am sure that in this debate he will criticize the substance resulting from the process.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: In 1865, George Brown told the Parliament of Canada:

> The whole great ends of this confederation may not be realized in the lifetime of many who now hear me. We imagine not that such a structure can be built in a month or in a year. What we propose now is but to lay the foundations of the structure, to set in motion the governmental machinery that will one day, we trust, extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Today we have the opportunity to complete and expand that structure. The resolution before this House provides for the patriation of the Constitution. After 114 years, Canada will finally have achieved its full legal independence. No longer will it be necessary to go to the Parliament of another country to amend our Constitution.

[Translation]

The resolution provides as well for an amending formula, that is, a mechanism which will enable us to make future changes to our Constitution. This is extremely important because today marks the end of one stage of constitutional reform and the beginning of another. The second stage of constitutional reform will deal with changes in our national institutions so that there is better regional input in the workings of the national government; it will deal with the securing of the Canadian economic union and with the division of powers.

Of course it will deal with the constitutional recognition of the rights of our native peoples. I am anxious that this process get underway as soon as possible because it is part of our commitment not only to the people of Quebec and to native peoples but to all Canadians.

An amending formula makes that process easier. The resolution provides that in the future, amendments to the constitution will be made with the approval of seven provinces representing fifty per cent of the population. If, however, an amendment takes away provincial powers, privileges or proprietary rights, it will not apply in a province whose legislature expresses its dissent. I will speak later about the issue of fiscal compensation for those provinces which opt out.

For a few matters including the monarchy, the composition of the Supreme Court, and certain language rights, the consent of Parliament and all provincial legislatures will be required.

[English]

I want now to turn to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is important at the outset to understand that the entire Charter of Rights and Freedoms will be entrenched in the Constitution and that no province will be able to opt out of any provision of the charter. The agreement signed by the Prime Minister and nine Premiers does not emasculate the charter. Democratic rights, fundamental freedoms, mobility rights, legal rights, equality rights and language rights are all enshrined in the Constitution and apply across the land.

What the Premiers and the Prime Minister agreed to is a safety valve which is unlikely ever to be used except in non-controversial circumstances by Parliament or legislatures to override certain sections of the charter. The purpose of an override clause is to provide the flexibility that is required to ensure that legislatures rather than judges have the final say on important matters of public policy.

The override clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will require that a law state specifically that part or all of it applies, notwithstanding a particular section of the charter in the Constitution. Such an override automatically expires after five years unless specifically renewed by a legislature. The effect of this provision is, first, that it will be politically very difficult for a government to introduce without very good reason a measure which applies notwithstanding the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Constitution. Second, a sunset provision of five years provides a degree of control on the use of an override clause in allowing public debate on the desirability of continuing the deliberations further.

It is important to remember that the concept of an override clause is not new in Canada. Experience has demonstrated that such a clause is rarely used and, when used, it is usually not controversial. The Alberta bill of rights was enacted in 1972 and includes an override clause. The Saskatchewan human rights code of 1979 also has an override provision. Neither has ever been used.

The Canadian Bill of Rights, enacted in 1960 by Mr. Diefenbaker, also contains an override provision. In 20 years, it has only been used once.

The Quebec charter of rights and freedoms adopted in 1975 contains an override clause which has been used several times. However, it has never successfully been used in a controversial manner. What is interesting in the Quebec experience is that the first draft of Bill 101 would have applied notwithstanding the Quebec charter of rights and freedoms. In this controversial area public pressure forced the Quebec government to delete the clause from the bill.

It is because of the history of the use of the override clause and because of the need for a safety valve to correct absurd situations without going through the difficulty of obtaining constitutional amendments that three leading civil libertarians have welcomed its inclusion in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Allan Borovoy, general counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, was quoted in the Montreal Gazette of November 7 as saying: "Our reaction is one of great relief. They did not emasculate the charter." He went on to say:

> The process is a rather ingenious marriage of a bill of rights notion and a parliamentary democracy. The result is a strong charter with an escape valve for the legislatures. The "notwithstanding" clause will be a red flag for opposition parties and the press. That will make it politically difficult for a government to override the Charter. Political difficulty is a reasonable safeguard for the charter.

Gordon Fairweather, who is well known in this House and is the Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, said this: "I'm in no mood for nitpicking today; I'm feeling tremendously upbeat". That quote is from the Montreal Gazette, November 7, 1981. Mr. Fairweather said that the override clause will become as dead from lack of use as a clause in the British North America Act that, at least in theory, still enables Ottawa to disallow provincial legislation. Referring to long standing provincial opposition to entrenched rights, Mr. Fairweather said: "The gang of no has become the gang of yes!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Professor Walter Tarnopolsky is a past-president of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and an international expert on bills of rights. His view is that the override clause "is really not such a bad idea, and could have a great many advantages". That quote is from The Globe and Mail, November 9, 1981.

It should be clear, in conclusion, that the compromise reached by the Prime Minister with the nine Premiers maintains the principle of a full, complete and effective constitutional Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It does not exclude rights which have previously been guaranteed. In fact, the charter has been improved because unforeseen situations will be able to be corrected without the need to seek constitutional amendment. For those who remain concerned about the override clause, let me remind them that it has been said that "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance". Pressure groups must remain vigilant and we are seeing such vigilance now from women who are arguing for the removal of the override clause in Section 28 and the aboriginal people who are fighting for the reinstatement of their rights. I will say more about that in a moment.

So, what does this Charter of Rights and Freedoms do? First, it protects fundamental freedoms common to all Canadians, such as freedom of speech, of religion, of the press and freedom to vote and to hold office.

Second, it guarantees the freedom of Canadians to establish residence and seek a job anywhere in Canada without regard to provincial borders. It establishes one Canadian citizenship rather than ten provincial citizenships. But it recognizes the need for special measures to be taken to protect local residents in provinces whose rate of employment is below the national average.

Third, the charter guarantees legal rights of Canadians. It sets out protection against arbitrary arrest, against unreasonable search and seizures. It enumerates the rights of an accused to be defended by counsel, to have a fair trial, not to be forced to testify against oneself. It ensures that where evidence is obtained illegally, it shall not be used where, by doing so, the administration of justice will be brought into disrepute.

Fourth, the charter enumerates equality rights. In this area the government is taking bold steps forward in order to ensure the equality of women before and under the law. I know some would have hoped that we could do even better, and I hope we can in the next few days. The ball is now squarely in the court of Premier Blakeney. This government and the party I belong to are confident we can and must succeed. But we also know that we must not break the accord or all will be lost. I am sure that the efforts of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) who is responsible for the status of women will bring about the result that is the desire of every member of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: No one can deny that this constitutional charter marks very substantial progress. If its provisions are not perfect, they are infinitely better than the protection for women in, for example, the American constitution.

In addition, the charter specifically prohibits discrimination against those with physical or mental disabilities. This is a great achievement which makes Canada a world leader in the International Year of the Disabled. Much credit should be given to the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) and to other members of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Fifth, the charter deals with language rights and I will speak to this in a few minutes.

Finally, the charter makes specific reference to the multicultural nature of our society. At the time of confederation, our forefathers established a new country based on two great cultures, the English and the French. Over the last 114 years, Canada has been enriched by the contribution of immigrants from the four corners of the earth. Because Canada prides itself on not being a melting pot, we are establishing today that the charter "shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians". As far as the government is concerned, the multicultural heritage of Canadians is such an important fabric of our nation that it must be reflected in our Constitution.

● (1230)

I want to speak now to my fellow Quebecers, and I want to tell them that it is essential to distinguish between the interests of Quebec and the interests of the parti Quebecois. The people of Quebec, whenever they have been asked to choose, have always come out clearly for Canada, and so we have chosen to listen to those who ran as federalists and were elected to serve Quebec in this house as opposed to those members of the government of Quebec who act as separatists after they are elected, but who can only get elected when they promise not to bring about separation during their mandate.

I want to say that I regret very much that Premier Lévesque agreed to give up the Quebec veto. The loss of the veto is not recuperable, but the interests of Quebec have been protected in this resolution by the work of the 74 federal liberal members in this house and by the constructive suggestions of the Leader of the Quebec Liberal Party.

What then does the resolution do to protect the duality of Canada? First, it guarantees in the Constitution the rights of francophones to schools in the nine English-speaking provinces. This is extremely important as a protection for our minorities who for generations have fought for their rights. But it is equally important for the thousands of francophone Quebecers who each year since the Parti Québécois has come to power have moved to other parts of Canada.

Second, the resolution guarantees the rights of English-speaking Canadians to educate their children in English in Quebec. This merely enshrines in the constitution what Quebec has done of its own free will for over one hundred years. Even if the Parti Québécois opposes this constitutional guarantee being extended to the anglophone minority, the great majority of Quebecers see it as fair and just. Quebecers have never wanted to abuse the rights of the anglophone minority, and I believe that today, now that we have finally obtained education rights for francophone minorities in the nine other provinces, they will agree that it is only fair and just that we should do the same for the anglophone minority in Quebec, as we have been doing for that part 114 years.

Third, the resolution provides that where Quebec opts out of a constitutional amendment giving power to Ottawa in matters of education or other cultural matters, fiscal compensation will be paid. This was suggested by Mr. Ryan and was subsequently supported and imposed on Cabinet by the Quebec caucus.

Fourth, the resolution guarantees bilingualism at the federal level in the Parliament of Canada, in the institutions of the federal government, and in the services of the federal government. Here, I wish to point out that the manner in which bilingualism is to be entrenched in the Constitution in the future ensures that even a majority of this Parliament and of all the other provinces will not be enough to change this provision without the consent of the Province of Quebec. In fact, we have given Quebec a veto in this respect.

We have been accused of betraying Quebec, of threatening the French language, of taking away Quebec's ability to control its own economy. If there has been a betrayal, the guilty one is René Lévesque for giving up the veto. Nothing in the resolution threatens the French language. Instead the resolution strengthens French across Canada. In Quebec, it does nothing to affect the provisions of Bill 101 with respect to the language of work, the language of the professions, or other matters relating to French as the official language of Quebec. As far as the economy is concerned, the resolution cannot be blamed for Mr. Parizeau's last budget.

As Quebecers we must choose between the objectives of the Parti Québécois and the challenge of belonging to a country that spans a continent. As for me, I adopt the words of Laurier:

"We are French Canadians, but our country is not confined to the territory over-shadowed by the Citadel of Quebec; our country is Canada; it is the fertile lands bordered by the Bay of Fundy, the Valley of the St. Lawrence, the regions of the Great Lakes, the Prairies of the West, the Rocky Mountains, the lands washed by the famous ocean where breezes are said to be as sweet as the breezes of the Mediterranean, our fellow-countrymen are not only those in whose veins runs the blood of France.

They are all those, whatever their race or whatever their language, whom the fortunes of war, the chances of fate, or their own choice have brought among us. As far as I am concerned, those are my fellow countrymen. I am a Canadian. The rights of my fellow countrymen of different origins are as dear to me, as sacred to me, as the rights of my own race. What I claim for us is an equal place in the sun, an equal share of justice, of liberty; that share we have it; we have it amply, and what we claim for ourselves, we are anxious to grant to others.

[English]

I want to speak now about native peoples. No one is sorrier than I that it was not possible two weeks ago to agree to entrench in the Constitution the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights. Our failure to do so was a consequence of a process which required the making of compromises. But I would be less than honest if I did not say that the cause of the constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights was not helped by the fact that leaders of the native peoples have spent a great deal of time and energy lobbying against the section in the previous resolution which they now seem to like.

I do want to point out that there is no change in the provision of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with reference to native rights. Section 25 states that nothing in the charter shall be construed so as "to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the original peoples of Canada".

It is the old Section 34, which was not part of the charter, which is not in the resolution before the House. Many of us both on this side of the House and on the other side of the House are very sorry about that, and probably the most sorry is my friend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), who has worked so hard from the beginning to make sure we had this in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. He worked with me and with the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). However, we have succeeded in including in the resolution a provision which requires the holding of a constitutional conference within a year to deal with the subject of constitutional recognition of the rights of the native peoples. I hope native leaders will come to that conference with a well-defined position.

Some have suggested the immediate application of Section 34 to the federal government and matters under federal jurisdiction. The government is prepared to act immediately on this suggestion if the leaders of the National Indian Brotherhood, the Native Council of Canada and the Inuit Committee on National Issues indicate their support for it by Tuesday, November 24. If such support is not forthcoming by the deadline, the government will keep the same proposal on the table for the purposes of all future negotiations on the identification of the rights of the aboriginal peoples.

The government would prefer that the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights be fully reinstated in the resolution but cannot do so without the consent of the nine provinces which are parties to the accord. I know that native leaders have attempted to obtain this consent, so far without success. Many provinces have now informed us that they would agree to be bound by Section 34. I hope this means that in the next two or three days the other parties to the accord will agree to be bound so that we can have a speedy and satisfactory resolution of this issue.

Mr. Broadbent: You just need one more.

Mr. Chrétien: I was on the telephone all day yesterday, part of last night and this morning. All members of Parliament can be useful in this regard, not by trying to gain political points but by doing our duty, if we believe firmly in this. We have to put gentle pressure on all the provinces, and I am sure that with the movement there is now we can do that. If hon. members are in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario or any other provinces, they should do their homework. I think it is coming, but don't rock the boat!

● (1240)

Mr. Chrétien: They should not try to gain some political advantage. The native groups of Canada and others have been very effective. It is my view that it is the wish of all Canadians that we reinstate Section 34 in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It is the view of Canadians that having given our word when we signed the accord, we have to keep it. I want to affirm in this House that we will not impose it on the provinces if they do not want it. There is a mechanism that will permit us to do that eventually. Since the Government of Canada gave its word, it has the duty to respect that. I am sure the provinces understand the message of Canadians and are about to tell us that we will go to London with the entrenchment of both the women's rights in Section 28 and the native rights in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I know the hon. member for Nunatsiaq today must rightly be disappointed that the resolution as introduced does not enshrine aboriginal rights. I hope that we succeed in enshrining aboriginal and treaty rights in relation to federal matters immediately. I hope that the eight remaining provinces agree to be bound immediately, but if we have to wait a year to reach a consensus with the provinces for all of Canada, the wait will be less important than the fact that we intend to succeed.

I do not have time to talk about the elements of the resolution dealing with equalization or about the extension of provincial jurisdiction over national resources. Others will speak to these items during this debate. I merely want to conclude by quoting the words of George Brown in the confederation debates:

No Constitution ever framed was without defect; no amount of talent and wisdom and integrity combined in preparing such a scheme could have placed it beyond the reach of criticism. To assert, then, that our scheme is without fault, would be folly. It was necessarily the work of concession; not one of the thirty-three framers but had, on some points, to yield his opinions; and, for myself, I freely admit that I struggled earnestly, for days together, to have portions of the scheme amended. But admitting all this—admitting all the difficulties that beset us—admitting frankly that defects in the measure exists—I say that, taking the scheme as a whole, it has my cordial, enthusiastic support, without hesitation or reservation. I believe it will accomplish all, and more than all, that we, who have fought so long ever hoped to see accomplished. It will lay the foundations deep and strong of a powerful and prosperous people.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, finally, I must say, to you and to the other members of this House, that it is unfortunate that we did not obtain the agreement of the tenth province, the province of Quebec. I feel that the Premier of Quebec had a duty here to forget his party and to act as the representative of the province of Quebec. There are only three clauses that separate us. Considerable progress has been made on two of the clauses, and if misgivings still exist, we are prepared to discuss them. Considerable gains have been made in the last two days, both with respect to Section 28, which guarantees the equality of men and women in the Constitution, and in our present discussion on the entrenchment of aboriginal rights in the Constitution. In the days to come we could still find common ground for agreement, which would enable Quebec to join the rest of Canada on the day we give our country a new Constitution, the day when we shall achieve a new level of maturity in this country, when people will have equal rights and when we can be different while at the same time sharing the responsibilities and privileges of being Canadians.

[English]

Today is a great day for Canada. We will have a better country. There will be more justice, more friendship, more sharing in our land. Canada, as I have said so many times, is a great country. When we have finished our work, it will be a greater country of which we can all be proud. Today we are making sure this country will survive. It is a worthy cause. For all of us, nothing is better than Canada. Vive le Canada!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to begin with two brief remarks. I say this genuinely in respect for the parliamentary tradition. I regret that on this matter that goes so much to the heart of what Canada is about and touches so directly the concerns of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), particularly on one of those rare days when I have something good to say about him, the Prime Minister has chosen to leave this House before I have the opportunity as Leader of the Official Opposition to respond to the introduction of the resolution by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

I understand he is busy. We are all busy. This is a matter which has commanded his attention for some time. I would have hoped that his respect for the institution of Parliament would have been such that he might have been prepared to stay. Does the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the Leader of the Opposition. Rather than split his speech in two, he could postpone his speech until two o'clock. The Prime Minister could be here. It would then not be necessary to debate this problem. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will be making an important speech and we should not force him to split it in two.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am simply interested in my audience. If I will have the benefit of speaking to the Prime Minister when we come back, I will call it one o'clock.

Madam Speaker: This House stands adjourned until two o'clock.

At 12.48 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Madam Speaker: When the House adjourned the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had the floor.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me, naturally, to rise in this debate. I think in our minds over the past several months there was some doubt as to whether or not this stage of the debate would ever occur. I think all of us who have faith in Canada are pleased that we were able to force respect for the Supreme Court of Canada, for our Parliament and for the processes of Canadian legislation to the extent that it has resulted in this new, very much improved resolution before the House of Commons. It has afforded members of the House the opportunity to make further improvements to a resolution much improved over the one that was dealt with through the last several years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I do not intend this to be a partisan speech at all, Madam Speaker.

I would ask the Minister of Justice and members of Parliament not to seek partisan gain in this debate. I think that would be advice that all of us would endorse. The minister should not seek too frequently to blame others, whether they are provinces, native groups or others, for deficiencies in the resolution that is before the House of Commons. If the minister engages too much in that, I think there will be the temptation on the part of others to engage in a tone of debate that will not be helpful in advancing our processes here.

This is not another phase in the constitutional debate. This is very much a new phase. There is now a much different atmosphere in the country. Everyone taking part in the debate bears some of the scars of compromise, and there is nothing at all dishonourable about that. Compromise is the way we make Canada work. However, to end with compromise, one must start with principle.

I understand the Prime Minister will be arriving soon. I wish the Prime Minister were here when on one of those few occasions in the House I will pay tribute to him. I think the last time was when he promised to leave. I will not spend too much of my time in the debate in praise of the Prime Minister, but I would like to say that I will not soon forgive him for some of the consequences resulting from his methods with regard to the Constitution. I think it is appropriate that this House should recognize the depth of his commitment to his goals, and the skill and the passion that he exercised in pursuit of them. All of the members of this House desire that the Constitution of Canada be brought home with an amending formula.

The Prime Minister introduced the resolution that brought us this far and brought a flexibility to make that initiative acceptable to most of the other partners in confederation. I want to congratulate the Prime Minister both for his determination that we have always known him to have, and for the flexibility, which I have to confess we were surprised to find, and the flexibility, I should say, we hope will continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

As for the Conservative Party, even though the Prime Minister introduced this resolution to the House, we kept it here and allowed the Canadian system of Parliament, the Canadian system of the courts and the Canadian system of a first ministers' conference to improve significantly the document with which we began.

As the country knows, the Prime Minister and I have different views of our country. History will judge whether this resolution better reflects his view or mine. Those are questions that will be determined later.

The question for today is whether the combination of determination and compromise which brought us this far can be extended to allow us to continue to progress in this phase of the Constitution debate. While it is true we have made progress, it is also true there is much more to do and it is particularly true that the Parliament of Canada has the duty to improve this resolution.

[Translation]

While offering my congratulations, Madam Speaker, I would like to say some words in praise of the Premiers of the English-speaking provinces.

[Editor's Note: And the Prime Minister having entered the Chamber.]

Sir, you have just missed the only words of encouragement and approval I shall probably ever address to you in my career—

Mr. Trudeau: You can always repeat them!

Mr. Clark: No, never! Opportunity only knocks once! But I would like to say some words in praise of the premiers of the English-speaking provinces who voluntarily exercised their own freedom of decision in a truly Canadian spirit by recognizing minority language educational rights in their provinces. Naturally, we shall have to wait and see how this commitment is put into practice, and it will be interesting to see how generously the provincial governments will interpret the words "where the number so warrants". The premiers of the nine provinces where French is the minority language have agreed to this extremely important principle. As a Canadian who has been fortunate enough to be exposed to both languages, I wish to congratulate the premiers on their foresight.

[English]

At this stage of the debate of the resolution, there are three specific amendments which my party proposes to introduce. There may be more later after further consideration of the implications of the resolution and consideration of proposals which may come, for example, from spokesmen of the people of Quebec. It is not our intention to extend the debate unduly, but it is our hope that everyone in the House will work constructively to bring the country together.

Our first amendment, which I will move later today, will reinstate, without qualification, the guarantee in Section 28 of the equality of male and female persons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The House will not be surprised that my amendment in this case will be introduced by my good friend and colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). The present resolution will allow Parliament or a legislature to treat women as less equal than men, or men as less equal than women. We intend that the rights and freedoms set forth in all the provisions of the resolution will be guaranteed equally to male and female persons. I will elaborate on our reasons later.

The second amendment we propose would restore in the resolution the guarantees of aboriginal title which had been affirmed by Parliament, either in the language contained in Section 34 of the first resolution or in very similar language. Again I will elaborate on our reasons later, but I say to my friends in the New Democratic Party that before I came down to the House for question period this morning I received some encouragement to make a telephone call. I have made that telephone call, and I am given to understand that there may be communication between the premier of a province and the Prime Minister of Canada regarding some movement which might be made on that matter later in the day.

The third amendment would restore to the resolution the precise language accepted by Quebec and seven other provinces in the agreement signed in April known as the April Accord respecting compensation for provinces that opt out of constitutional changes which deprive them of rights those provinces have traditionally enjoyed.

[Translation]

We have been considering the resolution in detail since we received it this Wednesday, and three comments are in order. First of all, we would like to pursue our in-depth study. We would like to bear the opinions of, and consult with, people whose interests are not adequately represented in the resolution, and we want to make specific amendments to improve the resolution where possible. My second comment is that today, we are not dealing exclusively with the agreement signed by the ten first ministers on November 5, since the resolution goes further than the agreement. I am happy with the changes that have been made, with the exception of those concerning the equality of men and women, but it cannot be argued that Parliament is bound by this agreement. The government was not bound by the agreement and neither is Parliament. My third comment is, more specifically, that the Parliament of Canada has a fundamental duty to find ways of persuading Quebec to participate in this agreement. My party will introduce amendments to improve the contents of the resolution, but the absence of Quebec affects its very foundation. Aside from the question of how effective the resolution can be if Quebec does not participate, I believe we all agree that it would be far better if Quebec were also included. The government has shown the same attitude with respect to the new Sections 39 and 58. It has, in fact, been my opinion since the agreement was tabled in the House. We must all work together to make the Constitution reflect the interests of all Canadians.

[English]

The Minister of Justice spoke during his remarks of the amending formula. I will not comment upon the acts of acrobatics that he had to contemplate to speak so favourably of an amending formula which he condemned so vigorously not many months ago. Of course, the amending formula has been before the House previously, precisely on October 22 last year, when I proposed the amending formula along with patriation as a means to bring our Constitution home. I do not intend to comment on the fact that other parties are now embracing what they once rejected, but rather I want to comment quite seriously on the regrettable irony that a proposal which has been around so long was studied so little by people who pretend to be constitutional experts. Simply because the federal government expressed disapproval, respected commentators suspended their own judgment of the merits of the Vancouver amending formula.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Perhaps if they had taken this formula more seriously some time ago, its advantages would have been evident earlier and advocated earlier than was in fact the case. I raise this because there is a similar danger that normally thoughtful members of the House or of the public or normally thoughtful commentators might also accept unexamined some of the other assumptions of the government's present case. One must remember that on a constitutional matter the government's assumptions have been proven wrong consistently—proven wrong by public opinion, proven wrong by Parliament, proven wrong by the Supreme Court of Canada, and proven wrong by the provinces. At the very least their assumptions deserve careful scrutiny, and most particularly that is the case when the Constitution, the unity and perhaps the future of the country are at stake.

I suggest that one false assumption is the suggestion that initiatives by Parliament will unravel and doom the accord signed by the ten first ministers two weeks ago. There is absolutely no evidence that individual premiers or provinces are so opposed to the equality of men and women, to the concept of aboriginal title and to the idea of just compensation for the provinces, that Parliament's actions in Parliament's jurisdiction will cause any province to pull out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Indeed, many of us and many Canadians believe Parliament is here precisely for the purpose of acting in Parliament's jurisdiction. We are a deliberative and legislative body, not a rubber stamp for a prime minister or for premiers. That obligation to act is most profound in fields where Parliament is the sole or crucial custodian of vital national interests, such as the state of our aboriginal people or the unity of our divided nation.

For years my party and I have argued for a country where the provincial legislatures and the federal Parliament were both strong. Having made that case, we do not now propose to abandon our duty as the federal Parliament simply because the provinces have exercised their duty. The debt of our special obligation to Canada's original people is clear and unchallengeable.

I suggest there is also a special duty in today's circumstances to heal the division the premiers and the Prime Minister left between the rest of Canada and the province of Quebec. One could argue that the recent divisions within Quebec or about Quebec have been fought within the French Canadian family, between the francophone Premier of Quebec and the francophone Prime Minister, both from the province of Quebec. Today, however, the division is quite different. On one side is the Canadian government and the nine provinces where Francophones are a minority; on the other side, by accident or by design, is the one province where Francophones are the majority. That is the division of which separatists have dreamed. That can very easily be portrayed as the rejection of the French minority by the non-French majority in the country.

● (1420)

Madam Speaker and my colleagues in the House, only one agency can bridge that gap with authority, doing so in the name of all of Canada, and that is this Parliament, where Canadians of non-French origin constitute the majority, but where all of us, of whatever origin, are determined to build an accord large enough for the people of Quebec to feel comfortably at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If there was ever a time for the national Parliament to speak and act for the nation, now is that time. Instead of being silent and afraid to act, we should be creative, seeking to build on the progress of the last 12 months. Just as most first ministers were prepared to put down personal prejudice in the national interest, so too, I hope, might we rise above partisan, personal or regional interest to find solutions for our country, Canada.

This Parliament is one of the partners in confederation. We have acted effectively regarding the whole resolution. The other partners, the premiers, have acted creatively after the Supreme Court decision. Now it is up to us to act again, creatively and constructively, in Canada's interest.

The other assumption which requires careful and serious scrutiny is the view that the present government of Quebec wants no agreement. I will suggest a test which may make them show their true colours. However, whatever the motive of the government of Quebec, the people of Quebec may want a just Canadian solution, and may want it ardently enough to force the Parti Québécois to put the people of Quebec first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Of course, on this question we must be realists. I have been a realist concerning this matter since the day the constitutional debate began, a day when most people said the action of the Prime Minister was unstoppable. That very realism requires that we analyse and not merely blindly accept the argument that the present Quebec government will never agree to anything. As I will argue later, it has already agreed to the April accord, but it did so with seven other provinces of Canada. However, it is fair to assume that it will agree only if the people of Quebec force it to agree or support it in that agreement.

Therefore, as the Parliament of the whole country, as the Parliament which can be the last agency to bring our whole nation together, our attention should be paid to the people of Quebec—and not just the government of Quebec. Our standard, when we vote and speak in this House, should be whether provisions in this resolution or amendments to this resolution help the people of Quebec to stay comfortably within our common country, Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I indicated that the first amendment we wanted to introduce, the one which I will be introducing today, relates to the equality of male and female persons. I would like to speak about that for a moment. When representatives of the federal and provincial governments met, they agreed that certain rights set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be limited by Section 33 of the new resolution by the non obstante clause. In the accord which was tabled in this House of Commons by the Prime Minister on November 5, the non obstante clause did not apply to Section 28, which guaranteed the equality of male and female persons. I believe that is an uncontested version of what happened, both in the conference and afterward.

Indeed, what happened, to the best of our ability to reconstruct it, is that after the Prime Minister came to Parliament and the Premiers went home, the officials of both levels of government got together and decided to apply the non obstante clause to Section 28. The government, in this amendment and resolution, has unfortunately accepted the officials' amendment and has not acted on the accord which was reached by 10 of the 11 first ministers when they met here in early November. As a consequence of the change brought to this matter by officials, Section 28 is subject to Section 33. A limit is placed upon the equality of male and female persons which was not explicitly intended to be so placed by the 11 first ministers of Canada when they met in conference in November in the capital of the country.

In recent days there has apparently been some dramatic shifting of opinion on the question. In one case, we learned that at least one Premier had not been informed of the exact nature of the work being undertaken by his officials and the position being ascribed to his government by his officials. My colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), brought that matter directly to the attention of the Premier of Nova Scotia. I should say, in passing, that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands did so at her own initiative and that of her party and, without the benefit of advice from the government, brought that to the attention of the premier of the province of Nova Scotia. When he understood what was at issue, he immediately indicated his willingness to have Section 28 stand without limitation and expressed his willingness to associate himself, along with other Premiers and certainly along with his party, with the idea of the equality of treatment of male and female persons. Therefore, that changed.

We are not sure what is happening in the province of Saskatchewan. At last report, the New Democratic Premier of the province of Saskatchewan, that spokesman for rights in that party of rights, was proposing to trade rights for rights.

An hon. Member: Don't go so low.

Mr. Clark: "Do not go so low," someone suggests from the New Democratic benches. If those hon. members are interested in speaking for principle, let me suggest that they get up from the House, suffer the loss of hearing a few minutes of my speech, call Roy Romanow, call Allan Blakeney, and tell them to stop playing games with rights and to give us unanimous agreement so that male and female persons can be treated equally under the constitutional proposals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to deal with the substance of what we are proposing. The substance of our amendment guarantees that men and women will have equal access to the rights and freedoms set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms proposed in this resolution. Some of those rights and freedoms will already be limited by the application of Section 33. However, where they exist they will exist absolutely equally for women and for men. That is the purpose of the amendment I am introducing, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. That is an amendment which I hope will commend itself to this whole House, so that this whole House can go on record as supporting the guarantee of equal treatment of male and female persons in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let me elaborate briefly for a moment. Two years ago, as prime minister, when statements were still made on motions, if Your Honour can remember that far back—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —I had the opportunity to make a statement on motions marking the fiftieth anniversary of the Person's case in Canada. The Person's case, as this House will recall, was a case brought by five courageous women who, I am pleased to say, came from my province of Alberta and believed that it was absolutely unacceptable that interpretations of the Supreme Court of Canada should prevent women from being interpreted as persons in a way which would not allow them to be appointed to the Senate. One might ask why they would ever want to be appointed there; but certainly, their case was that if anyone were to be appointed there, they should have as much right to be appointed as men. They raised the case, they fought the case and they won the case. From that point in the late 1920s and early 1930s, we achieved a very significant movement forward toward equality of status of male and female persons.

• (1430)

I make the point that while the symbolic battle was won with Senator Cairine Wilson being named to the Senate, we had only begun to approach the issue. The Senate was the symbol. The issue was inequality. The symbol has been repaired. The inequality persists.

I will not spend long on this point because too many of us, to our shame, know that if we have a daughter, as I do, she will not have the opportunity in this country to play hockey if she chooses to do so in the same way that a male child might have.

We know that women are denied equal rights to use the training they acquire, whether professional training—

Miss Bégin: They can play ringette.

An hon. Member: Why don't you play hockey, Monique?

Mr. Clark: Yes, they can play ringette. That is right. They can play something else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I do not want to get into partisan debates so I will not comment on my continuing surprise at the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What I am going to say, I say also as someone who is occasionally guilty of the infraction myself. Nothing demonstrates the point I am trying to make more dramatically than matters about which this House jokes or titters most often. They usually relate in one way or another to the status of women. For instance, the dispute as to whether my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, should be called an hon. lady when I am called an hon. member. That sort of thing indicates that prejudice runs deep, even in this House where we are supposed to stand and fight against prejudice.

That, I believe, makes the case very clearly and very dramatically why, even though we have espoused the goal of equality, we need to take that step one point further. What must be put right into the Constitution of Canada is the guarantee that male and female persons will be treated equally in relation to the rights and freedoms of Canadians. That will be another step forward, as was the Person's case some 50 years ago which guaranteed in daily practice, where wages were paid and people were hired, that female persons were to be treated equally with male persons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: At this point I would like to move a motion, and I will, continue my remarks after having done so. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands:

That the proposed Constitution Act 1981 be amended

(a) by striking out clause 28 and substituting the following:

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

(b) by striking out subclause 33(1), and substituting the following:

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

What that does is remove the non obstante clause from Section 28. It restores the guarantee of equality of male and female persons to the position enjoyed when the accord was tabled in this House of Commons by the Prime Minister of Canada after his meeting with the first ministers.

There is another matter to which an hon. member of my party will be addressing himself and submitting an amendment later. It cannot be done today because we can only submit one amendment at a time if we want to have them voted on individually, as we do. This other matter of major importance has to do with the question of aboriginal rights, aboriginal title. As I say, that will be introduced later. I was given to understand by the speech made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) that there are some negotiations continuing with representatives of at least some of the status Indian groups. We will naturally want to take account of those negotiations and to keep current with them. But I make the specific point, Madam Speaker, as someone who has had the interests of the native people at heart for a long time both in this House and in this country, that the Parliament of Canada cannot wait forever for that kind of agreement. Parliament has a duty to act.

I want to speak for a moment, if I might, of the nature of that duty, the nature of our responsibility to the aboriginal people of the country. One in this nationalist age would be reluctant to quote a poet from the United States, except perhaps in the case of aboriginal title, because the aboriginals were here before the United States or Canada was, before the forty-ninth parallel meant anything more than another widening in the trees. I am struck by the words of Robert Frost when speaking of Americans, Canadians, people who came late to this continent. He said:

The land was ours before we were the lands.

Mr. Frost was speaking of the white population, not the natives. The land of this continent belonged to, was used by, the original people well before the concept of land took root as something that was possessed and parcelled out. Land, to the natives, was where you lived, where you worked and where you took your nature. It was heritage, not just territory. In a very real sense, land and people were the same.

We took that away, we who came later. We took it away as an inevitable consequence of our civilization and the compensation we offered was often meagre, often mean, sometimes nothing at all. But the original people were here before our civilization. Our treatment, our meagre, mean treatment of them, has increased our obligation, not diminished it.

We cannot reverse history, but we can take account of it. A minimum step must be for this Parliament to put in a document that deals with the rights of our people and to acknowledge at least the particular rights of our first people to draw their life and their culture from what we made our land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I would like to discuss a third amendment we want to move. It is said that under no circumstances will the present Premier of Quebec accept the constitutional agreement. Whether or not this is true, it is significant that in April, the Government of Quebec, together with the premiers of seven other provinces, signed a very important constitutional agreement, namely the April accord, which basically contained the Vancouver amending formula we are discussing in the House today. So, in April, Quebec took the extraordinary step of giving up its veto right, yes, its veto right, thereby agreeing that the constitution could be changed without its consent. Quebec did not give up its veto right for nothing. It was offered in exchange for a reasonable guarantee of fiscal compensation for provinces who choose to opt out, that is, who decide not to go along with a constitutional amendment. It is common knowledge that this guarantee of full fiscal compensation was the only reason why Quebec signed the accord. It was also common knowledge that if the guarantee were withdrawn, Quebec would reject the accord, so that taking this compensation out of the accord was tantamount to forcing Quebec to withdraw. At this point I do not care who deleted the compensation clause, but whoever is responsible did, in fact, force Quebec's hand. I do, however, want to rebuild this agreement, and it makes sense to start with the guarantee that has always been the essential condition for Quebec's participation, the full compensation guarantee. That is why I feel that compensation is the crucial factor, for all of us who hope to produce an agreement that all the provinces, including Quebec, will agree to sign. It must be said, to the federal government's credit, that it has gone part of the way; it has offered compensation with respect to certain provincial powers, namely, those concerning education and other cultural matters. However, this is only part of the guarantee, it is less than the guarantee in the April accord.

• (1440)

[English]

If we want a truly Canadian agreement with all partners participating, we must offer everything in November that was offered in April; and if the government of Quebec says no today to something it accepted in April, then it stands accused by its own actions of putting its indépendantiste ideology ahead of the interests of the people of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker and colleagues in this House of Commons, colleagues who want to have a Constitution and an accord to which all of our people can be party, let us give it the choice. Indeed, if you will, let us force the government of the province of Quebec to make that choice. Let us force it to justify rejecting in November what it accepted in April.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The present resolution does not do that. The present resolution allows the PQ government of Quebec to take an easy way out, to say it had more in April than it has in November. Why not take that argument away from Quebec? Why give it that argument which it can use, if that is its desire, to stay out of the constitutional accord? Why not force it to make the choice? The only way to force it is by making in November the same offer the government of Quebec signed in April. That seems to me to be elemental logic. That seems to me to be a very effective way of seeing exactly where the Parti Québécois government does stand, and of seeing whether there is an opportunity for this Parliament to act in a way which will bring Quebec in and serve the interests of the people of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are seized here not simply with the question of giving the government of Quebec a choice and forcing it to face it; we are also dealing here with the opportunity to give Canada the chance of an agreement in which all partners can join. To give Canada a chance, as I have indicated, we will propose an amendment to guarantee any province that opts out fully what was guaranteed in the April accord.

I want to speak for a moment about the amending formula, opting out and the compensation question. If it is accepted that in areas of jurisdiction, strictly limited by Section 37, that might be transferred from the provinces to the federal government, a province should be able to decline to opt in, it follows that such an option must be a real option.

It is worth reminding hon. members of the House of the real nature of this amending formula, because it has not yet been fully understood. It is a formula that combines the required features of flexibility and equal treatment of provinces. I commend the Premier of Ontario for his very real flexibility in agreeing to allow such a concept to be recognized by the removal of any provincial veto. The formula allows changes to be made when it is demonstrated that such changes are needed. At the same time, it ensures that changes are not made without due consideration. Seven provinces must agree to an amendment, they must have among them at least a majority of the population, and if the federal government does not want to agree it can stop it on its own.

It is a formula that recognizes the fact that in Canada there are identities and problems unique to one province or region. It allows those problems to be met and those identities to be expressed without preventing the development of a national will. In certain limited cases, a maximum of three provinces could decline to opt in to amendments that would take from them rights and powers they have held since confederation. That is what the formula means.

What our amendment means is that that right would not have to be bought; that right would be there with compensation included. It would not have to be bought by a province that wanted to exercise it. A legislature would be free to decide if the people of the province would be best served by jurisdiction being transferred to Ottawa or retained by the province.

Madam Speaker, colleagues in this House of Commons and Canadians who want to help and heal our country, let me make the point that if that is to be a free decision, no province should be forced to incur a financial penalty. That is simple justice. That is the simple justice that is denied by this proposal. That is the simple justice that was approved by the Premier of Saskatchewan when he signed the April accord. And that is the simple justice I suggest should be approved by the Parliament of Canada now so we can ensure that the right of opting out includes the right to do so freely, and not with a requirement to buy what we call a right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, that amendment will be introduced later in this debate by another of my colleagues. I would have introduced it today if the rules of the House permitted.

They allow only one amendment to be introduced today, so we will consequently introduce this and the amendment respecting aboriginal rights later.

What we are doing now in what I hope is a genuine, non-partisan way is discussing—

Mr. Benjamin: It sure sounded like it.

Mr. Clark: I hear from the NDP. I would repeat, if the NDP has things to say, particularly Mr. Benjamin from Regina, let him say them to his premier.

We are discussing the Constitution of our country in a way that most of us feel is non-partisan. Because it is our country, and because the questions are so basic to our rights, to our future, to our unity and to our vision of our country, all of us are affected personally. When I say all of us are affected personally, I am not simply speaking of members of Parliament who sit in this House or the members of the other place; I am speaking of hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens across the country, some of whom are demonstrating now around legislatures in various parts of the country.

I am speaking of people who came in hundreds and wanted to come in thousands to appear before the special committee that looked into the first resolution, Canadians from the length and breadth of the land, from sea to sea to my seatmate's northern sea, who worried, talked and thought about our Constitution during the last year. This ordeal has been wearing on all of us, but I think what this process has done, among other things, is made the Constitution much more human and much more real to many more Canadians.

If I might ask the indulgence of the House for a moment, I want to speak briefly in a personal way. This month is the beginning of my tenth year in this Parliament. Like others who are here I came to the House of Commons with certain goals and bearing certain prejudices. One of my prejudices, one of those I was fortunate to learn at home, is that there are no differences in the capacities and potential of men and women. I grew up in a farm community, and on farms men and women work equally. I grew up in a town during wartime, at a time when many of the men were away. They were not at home to run the businesses so the women ran and often ran them better. If there was a question of equality after the men came home, it was whether they were as good as their wives were at running the businesses.

The hard reality, however, that we have all encountered is that barriers do stand in the way of women, barriers that do not stand in the way of men. I personally am proud to be able to play some small role, with the introduction of the amendment today, in trying to bring those barriers down and trying to move us, in law and in thought, toward that kind of equality which exists in fact, if one regards the capacities and potential of male and female persons in this country.

I grew up, Madam Speaker, with native people, not as a legal concept but as neighbours to people like me; native people who lived not far away from my town. One of the first accomplishments that I can remember as a private member in a minority Parliament during 1972 to 1974, a time when committees were able to do something, is when I, along with my colleague from Kingston and the Islands and my colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), were able, with the help of the New Democratic Party members at the time, to have accepted for the first time a resolution by a committee, which was subsequently accepted by this whole House of Commons, which recognized the legitimacy of aboriginal title and rights in this country.

From my background of having known native people in my earliest days and having been involved in the defence of their rights since my time in Parliament, I certainly cannot be neutral on that question now, and my party does not intend to be neutral. It is for that reason that we have moved this amendment on aboriginal title.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As for Quebec—

[Translation]

—I am the most bilingual citizen of High River, Alberta, and I have had a chance to learn not only the language but also something of the nature of the people of Quebec.

[English]

I cannot think of my country without Quebec and I have to say that I believe that is the position of virtually every member of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: However, it is not good enough to be here to think good thoughts. We are here to act. That is what we were elected to do by our constituents across the country and that is our obligation.

I have the honour in this House to be the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. There is, perhaps, a special obligation on me, as there is on the Prime Minister and certain other officers of the House, to take that responsibility with a particular seriousness. But that responsibility falls upon all of us. It is, perhaps, particularly because of my disinterest in some of these questions that I can move some of the amendments and speak to them as I have today. I am obviously not a woman—one of the 52 per cent majority which women constitute in this country; I am among the minority. I am not a Canadian of Inuit, Indian or aboriginal ancestry. I am not a Quebecer, except in spirit. Perhaps I have a special capacity, a special quality, to come here to ask others who are not native, women, Quebecers—and if they are Quebecers, not supporters of the Parti Quebecois—to recognize the tremendous importance to Canada of having a Constitution which will respect the rights and equality of women, underline the rights of the aboriginal people, and be large enough to include and make the people of Quebec feel comfortably at home.

That is the purpose of our amendment and that is the purpose of our party. That, I hope, will be the result of our deliberations and our debate on this resolution which is now before us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sure members of the House will appreciate that, because of the drafting technicalities, it is important that I reserve judgment on the acceptability of this motion.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, for more than 100 years we, as a nation, have been in pursuit of a completely autonomous nationhood. For more than 100 years this goal has eluded us. In these days we are now approaching success at last. In short, the final stage of the process is under way.

Since the birth of our movement as a party in the 1930s, we, along with others, have been in the forefront in advocating the need for an independent Constitution, a charter of rights and a working amending formula to meet the needs of the future evolution of our country. We have also said that the uniqueness and grandeur of the province of Quebec must forever be a cherished and crucial consideration in constitutional change. Quebec is not and never will be a province just like the others. It adds in its vitality, its architecture, by its composers, filmmakers and poets, a richness and diversity for which all Canadians can be thankful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Finally, in recent years our party has become aware, at long last, of the moral claims of Canadian women and the native people of our land. It would be nice to be able to say that politicians, not only in our party but other parties, have been aware of the concerns of women and native people for many years and, indeed, decades. But that would do injustice to the truth. We all know that in this Parliament and in the legislatures across the country the concerns of the native people and the legitimate claims of Canadians women have been on the political agenda for all too short a time in our history.

In approaching constitutional change, then, we have these concerns and these values. When the process of constitutional change began in a serious way last fall, we said, along with others, that now is the time to act and create a fully independent Canada within a political framework that would make possible the creation of a society that is at once just and exciting, a society that is at the same time peaceful and humane.

As we all know, the process has not been an easy one. It has not been, to put it euphemistically, without tension. These tensions have revealed themselves in all our regions, in all our institutions and in all our political parties. I emphasize that this situation has occurred during every period of our history since the birth pains of nationhood were being experienced. There was no reason for Canada to have been an exception and we were not.

Earlier today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) appropriately paid tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the first ministers who met not long ago to develop a new accord. I want to join, on behalf of my colleagues, with the Minister of Justice in paying tribute to those men, representing all the parties of Canada and all the regions of Canada, for the sincere and good results, on the whole, that they produced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) alluded to the particular role members of his party played in the development of the constitutional change process which has brought us to today's debate. I think it would be understandable in this context, without doing it in any boastful sense, if I underlined a few contributions to this process which have been made by my party. I am very proud of the role we played in improving the content of the original resolution. Specifically I single out the following contributions of the New Democratic Party, without which certain provisions in the resolution would not have been included. I noted with interest that two of the key amendments to which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) referred—and which he wants put back in the resolution—were the precise amendments the New Democratic Party insisted upon and obtained in the first resolution last spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The first of these contributions I want to mention—because I think it is very important, given the regional nature of Canada—was that as a result of early discussions, broad new powers were given to the provincial governments over the development, control and management of their resources.

The second was our writing and insistence upon the acceptance of Section 28 in the original resolution which gave paramountcy to the equality of men and women. That was a product of the New Democratic Party of Canada and was finally accepted, I am pleased to say, by all parties in this House.

The third was the writing and insistence upon of Section 34 which recognized treaty and aboriginal rights. That was moved by one of my colleagues. It was written by the New Democratic Party, submitted and finally agreed to by all members in the House.

I am proud of the role my party played on those two important questions at this point in our history affecting the women of Canada and our native people. I have noted that as part of the process of the development of the Constitution the other parties went along with these suggestions.

As we all know, following the debate which took place last spring and following the decisions reached by certain courts, it became the strong view on this side of the House that the final vote on the resolution had to wait until the Supreme Court of Canada made a final judgment on the resolution. That judgment contained two messages. It said it was strictly legal but, on the other hand, it pointed out that broader consensus for constitutional change ought to be found. This process eventually took place and, as I have noted, the premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) deserve credit for what they achieved. The amending formula was changed. The absolute veto for the Senate was dropped, and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was modified to make it blend with our parliamentary tradition.

Mr. Siddon: You favoured all those things?

Mr. Broadbent: I will deal with that in a minute. I would be less than honest if I said that my colleagues and I were perfectly happy with all these things. We would have preferred that the original charter be binding universally without exception across Canada. That was our first preference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Nonetheless, as a number of civil liberties authorities have said, over-all in the context of serious compromise what we still have remains a good charter of rights. As the Minister of Justice has said, certain rights will remain absolute. Among those over which legislatures may pass laws the onus is upon those legislatures to pass specific legislation to justify such transgressions, and such negating laws would have to be renewed every five years. Thus, opposition parties and especially private interest groups in our society must remain vigilant.

In the early part of the last century a great French writer, Alexis de Tocqueville, wrote what was perhaps the most profound study of American society, and one of the distinguishing features he singled out about North American society was the vitality of interest groups and the creative input they had in making a democratic society with individual liberties possible. The kind of charter we now have before us will indeed permit legislatures on a five year renewal basis to undermine certain equalities if they wish, so it is mandatory that all of us who concern ourselves with civil liberties keep the pressure on at all times.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, there is a most notable absentee among the signatories of that constitutional resolution. One cannot ignore the absence of Quebec at those negotiations. It is most unfortunate that Quebec was unable to agree with the other governments. We must recognize the uniqueness of the province of Quebec as I said earlier. Quebec, as a distinct society, is entitled to a special place within the Canadian community. However, it must be recognized however that the constitutional resolution before us partly confirms this. It was high time! It is not necessary to prove that Quebec is different from the other provinces, it is obvious.

This resolution, for the first time in the history of Canada, is a step in that direction. It is a beginning rather than the end of a process. I was pleased and even relieved to learn that the Prime Minister had amended the constitutional resolution. Thus Quebec will be entitled to some compensation if it ever wanted to opt out of any cultural or educational programs that the other provinces wanted to entrust to Ottawa. For legitimate and reasonable reasons, Quebec must control and administer those areas.

[English]

However, in this context I want to say that the proposal which has just been made by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada is not one that is acceptable to us. The suggestion that in all domains where there is constitutional change approved by the constitutional amending process which would enable a province to opt out and obtain financial compensation in so doing would indeed create, in terms of all kinds of social programs, a checkerboard Canada. That is a view which we would not put up with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is one thing to recognize, as we ought to, the unique nature of the province of Quebec. It is one thing to recognize the unique qualities of Quebec—and I give credit to the government at last for doing this—in the cultural and educational domains require special consideration, but it is quite another thing for us to say that as a general principle for all provinces all new ideas like medicare, if proposed and accepted by constitutional amendment, could be rejected with compensation. Then the rich provinces could retain the money while the rest of the provinces would have medicare. I say to the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada that we would never have had medicare in Canada as a national program if that had been in effect at the time.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would be the last to want to interrupt the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent)—

Mr. Deans: Why are you doing it, then?

Mr. Clark: —nor would I want him to commit himself to a position without perhaps fully understanding it. The example of medicare that he has just used would not be prohibited by the amendment we have brought forward. The Leader of the New Democratic Party, naturally, may make the decisions he wishes to make. However, I would hope that before he finally and absolutely commits his party, he might provide us with an opportunity to go through with him in detail what has been proposed so if there is an opportunity to extend an amendment that would bring in Quebec, he will judge that on the basis of proper information.

• (1510)

Mr. Broadbent: We can have a longer discussion on that point in future. I stand by what I said. The agreement that has been achieved would, by amending the Constitution, enable one province to opt out of that and obtain financial compensation. I listened to the Leader of the Opposition with great care and will read with even greater care what he has had to say. Certainly the preliminary reaction would be that social programs involving constitutional change could lead to the richer provinces opting out all along the line, leaving the poorer provinces to pay.

I will continue with the main points I want to make concerning the province of Quebec at this point in my comments.

[Translation]

English schools are no longer open to one and all in Quebec. The children of immigrants will have to attend French schools. As well, only Canadians who have attended English primary schools in Canada will be allowed to send their children to English schools in Quebec. Those amendments reflect greater respect for the distinctive character of Quebec. There is still room for improvement. For instance, arrangements ought to be made with respect to mobility should migratory movements appreciably alter Quebec's population balance. Quebec is already a distinct society in fact. I have in mind here the legal system and the Quebec Pension Plan in particular. That is good for Quebec and for Canada as a whole. Finally, Madam Speaker, francophones outside Quebec will gain recognition of their rights to education in all provinces of Canada. After 114 years, there is still progress to be made so that within a relatively short time francophones outside Quebec may be able to control their educational and social institutions just as anglophones do theirs in Quebec.

[English]

I want to note in this context that I am pleased to be able to send my daughter to a French language school which opened two years ago. For the first time we have a French language public school in the province of Ontario. There were Catholic schools teaching in the French language. Finally, the province of Ontario in the city of Ottawa is making French language available in the public system. Francophones all across our land must have that right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want now to turn to two fundamental matters which must be of concern to all Canadians, namely equality of the sexes and the rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples. Before doing so, I want to say that when completed in a just form, I would like this resolution, particularly the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to hang on the wall of every classroom in every school in every region of Canada. I do not say this because I believe in propaganda. I say it because I believe constitutions are fundamentally about rights, rights are fundamentally about people and people from childhood on must be encouraged to acquire a deep understanding of their own liberties as well as an even deeper appreciation of the liberties of others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Turning now to this document, I ask in all seriousness, would we want children anywhere in Canada to read a document which says, "Men and women are equal except when a group of politicians say they are not"? That is what is in this document. It is neither good for young boys nor for young girls.

In our culture at this time, this kind of symbolism can mean only one thing. It does not mean that males can be discriminated against as well as females. Everyone in this chamber and everyone in Canada knows that it means it is acceptable to discriminate against women, against young women, against girls. We find that totally offensive in this year of 1981.

In changing the original resolution with this act, we have taken a step backward, reversing completely the progress we had made in recent years. The progress toward achieving greater equality for women has, to understate it, not been exactly exciting. However, we have made and have been making up until this document some changes. However, when we put into a constitutional document written in 1981 the principle of inequality, what are we doing? We are not simply pausing or stalling; we are turning things backwards, we are institutionalizing inequality, and we cannot accept that.

We must restore the original positive wording of Section 28 which ensures the paramountcy of the principle that men and women are equal. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned his intention of moving an amendment. We had the same proposal, so it would be totally redundant for us to do that. I simply indicate that the amendment will have our full support, if for no other reason than that in the original document we wrote it in the first place.

I want to turn now to aboriginal children in the same schools, looking at the same document. Consider the children in Old Crow, Inuvik, on the reserves or in schools in the cities of western Canada where many of our native people have come in recent years. What would those young Indian children think when looking at that document on the wall, given their heritage, especially when they know that this land was once their land? How did they lose it? They lost it by violence, treaties or trickery. They know in their bones that is what happened to them as a people in the northern part of North America, and with much more violence in the southern part. It is impossible for a white person to put himself in the skull of a young Indian child and know what is going on in his or her mind. What will happen when they hear, as they will in their schools, about this process and when they see the kind of documents we know will be sent out that will be put on the school walls in Old Crow or in Inuvik? In this context, I would like to say I was at a meeting in Alberta a week ago with Indian leaders. I heard a whole series of them. Many of them I had met previously. I agree with what the Minister of Justice and Attorney General said, because—and I want to say that in passing—some of the leadership in the Indian community is no better or worse, I suspect, than the leadership in the political parties of Canada.

● (1520)

Mr. Trudeau: And in the CLC.

Mr. Broadbent: And in the CLC, I will agree with the Prime Minister. I would also ask him to agree with me that the same is true of the Chamber of Commerce as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The point I want to make is that, having sat for an hour over breakfast and listened to the Indian leaders—and I heard the legal arguments before—I agree with them. But perhaps because I heard them before, I was not overly moved. There was an older man there who had kept silent. He was not one of the young, educated Indian lawyers nor, for all I know, was he one of the chiefs. I apologize to him through the House if he was in fact one of the chiefs of one of the bands from Alberta. Just before we broke for breakfast he spoke to me in a very low voice. He said, "I don't know what you are going to do in Ottawa. I don't know if we're going to get our rights, as I think we should have had them—"—and he was an older man—"—but I do know that my grandchildren will be very upset if we don't get our treaty rights". Then there was complete silence. That is all he had to say. He did not say it in a threatening tone, nor as a political bottom line, nor with animosity. There was almost a sense of pathos about what he did have to say, Madam Speaker. If I understood him correctly, he was saying, "My generation of Indians has had it. We have gone through it and we did not get the rights." He said to me as a white Canadian politician, "You have to think of the young Indians who are coming along."

That is my special plea today, Madam Speaker. It is a plea I am making in the House of Commons and to the premiers. I have talked to more than the majority of them during the past ten days. I know there are more than the majority of the premiers who are willing to entrench aboriginal and treaty rights. I know we are short of one or two premiers. I say that they must come forward so that we can send this document to England so that it will provide justice for our native people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I will not be moving an amendment on this subject today because one of our subsequent speakers will do that, Madam Speaker. The obvious force of the points that I have just made is that Clause 34 as written in the original resolution should be restored to the document before the House.

I want to conclude by saying that it is very rare in politics that a nation or a group of politicians is given the opportunity to make a historic decision that can be both practical and decent, that can be at once just and prudent. We in Canada are now on the threshold of such a decision. To follow through, we must now fully entrench treaty and aboriginal rights.

A number of us have already said that the resolution before us is not perfect but it is good and requires improvement. The improvement, in my judgment, would add integrity to Parliament's treatment of men and women and to our treatment of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

In the final analysis, national unity is not about federal-provincial relations, or the relations between different regions as abstract entities; it is about people. All of the people must be treated with integrity in this document. National unity, when we talk about provinces, is one thing. National unity, when we talk about the relationships of people, is what really counts.

I want to conclude by saying that national unity without integrity is not possible. I hope our goal in this debate, before the final vote is taken, is to achieve that national integrity.

[Translation]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York-East): Madam Speaker, I am very glad to speak in such a historic debate. I have been saying for years that the renewal of the Constitution is the most important question in the country, and I am deeply grateful to our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has worked without respite. Mr. Speaker, I believe that when future generations will look back they will readily acknowledge the greatness of this Prime Minister who has so firmly urged Canadians to face this challenge. So now we must answer the question as to whether we, as Canadians, have risen to the occasion.

[English]

That is my message this afternoon, that is my small, modest contribution to this great constitutional debate. Have we been equal to the challenge that has been laid before us? This is a time of joyous outpouring. We will soon forward this resolution to Her Majesty. With the passage of the enabling legislation at Westminster and the subsequent proclamation here in Canada, we will at last have our own Constitution. We will end the anomaly of being a major power in the world, a major independent country with its Constitution residing in another country. This process has a particularly relevant meaning for me because I came with my family from Great Britain some 20 to 25 years ago and I have always found it somewhat incongruous that the country that I knew and learned about in my education as a young boy was really not independent and had not really attained the last vestige of independence. It is particularly touching for me to have been a participant as a Member of Parliament at this significant time in our history, when we are at last making Canada fully and truly independent in every sense of the word.

The proclamation of these changes will finally give us in this country a way to amend our Constitution. It will also give us a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is cause for joy. However, our joy must be tempered by the knowledge of what might have been. To follow on the comments made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I must say that what was the best charter of rights, in his words, is still an excellent Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We all have reason to be proud of the charter, but improvements still must be made. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), as well as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), touched upon the need to make improvements, to go forward. By passage of this resolution constitutional change will not be over. It is but another phase in the ongoing constitutional development in the history of the nation.

There are many purists in the House. I was one who, along with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with just about everyone on this side of the House as well as many members on the opposition side, believed that fundamental rights and freedoms were so sacrosanct and so inviolate that they should be entrenched in a constitution beyond the temporal winds of legislators such as ourselves. We have heard many speeches in the debate from hon. members who have described Canadian legislatures and indeed this Parliament—of course I am thinking of the ignominious incident in the Second World War dealing with Japanese Canadians—as not having been the best guarantors of individual rights. This is why the charter which has emerged over the past year in debate in the House and through the participation of thousands of Canadians was such a noble document. It proposed that all basic freedoms and rights would be entrenched in the Constitution free of any legislative qualification.

The constitutional accord which was signed two weeks ago after much deliberation entrenches rights. However, fundamental freedoms, legal rights and equality rights are subject to a provincial or federal legislative override. In addition, as has been pointed out, our original intentions as expressed in the original resolution in the House on the question of native's and women's rights have not yet come to fruition. They were not included in the constitutional accord. Indeed this is a glaring, startling and regrettable omission which we must all resolve to correct, whether it is to be corrected in the days which follow in debate in the House or whether it is to be corrected after patriation with the new amending formula which will be at our disposal.

We must address these questions. It has been argued with some justice that it will be difficult to override the charter, that the charter will provide an imperative for our courts that will make it very, very difficult for any legislature to tamper with the provisions relating to rights or to pass any legislation which would derogate from those rights. I shall not rest, and I am sure there are others in the House and in the country who will not rest until we achieve, once and for all, the complete entrenchment of these rights from any legislative sanction.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, first of all let us look at one of the main reasons why constitutional reform was so important for Canada, namely the entrenchment of the constitutional guarantees which ensure the survival of the French language and culture. As an English-speaking Canadian, I must admit that I am not proud of the way French-speaking Canadians have been treated for many decades. The two major examples of the shameful treatment of the French minority by the English majority have already been outlined during this debate. They happened in Manitoba in 1890 and in Ontario in 1912. There have been many other such cases, the most recent one being the air traffic controllers strike in 1976. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it was the ambivalence of English-speaking Canadians which showed once more that francophones cannot rely on the good will and the generosity of the legislators to guarantee their language rights.

Mr. Speaker, the survival and the promotion of the French language are important concerns for the Liberal Party of Canada, the Liberal Party of Quebec, and of course, the Parti Québécois. However, the latter believes, because of its destructive and reactionary ethnically-based prejudice, that the protection of the French language requires cutting back of some of the rights of the English minority established in Quebec. This contemptible nationalism has brought even more urgency to the need for linguistic guarantees, and the attitude of Mr. Lévesque and his friends during the recent constitutional talks has emphasized the dishonesty of such a policy.

The former protector of the French language is now turning his back on the French minorities outside Quebec. This agitator has betrayed his provincial colleagues by refusing to sign the constitutional accord. This fanatic, whose slogan is Je me souviens, has abandoned his own province by renouncing to the veto of Quebec. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? Because this man and his party are determined to sabotage Confederation whatever the cost, even at the risk of weakening the position of their own province in future constitutional debates. If Quebec is now alone, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec premier is to blame.

[English]

This is why I am so happy, even in perhaps the most modest way, that we have entrenched French language rights in the constitutional Accord, that we will at once be making our peace with those of our French-speaking brothers and sisters who have gone before us, who suffered discrimination and found that their language and culture were suppressed. My only sadness is that we have not quite given in this resolution the same rights to the English minority of Quebec; almost but not quite. But I believe what we have done for the English minority in Quebec will go a long way toward ensuring that the rights of English-speaking Quebecers will be safeguarded in the years ahead. It is my hope—and I think it is the hope of everyone in the chamber—that at some point, hopefully very soon in the future, when there will be an end to the independent party in Quebec, a federalist party once again will be in power, will come into the accord and join the other nine provinces and the federal government to preserve these rights and to entrench them for all Canadians.

I would be remiss if I did not say a few words about Section 133 of the present British North America Act and about my profound regret that the Premier of my province, notwithstanding the fact that he showed great vision in trying to reach a new constitutional accord, notwithstanding the fact that he supported our party which introduced the original resolution, has failed to extend these basic rights to the province of Ontario. That is something else for which we as Ontarians should fight in the years ahead. At the provincial level, and even at this level, by using the power of our influence as Members of Parliament, we should prevail upon the government of Ontario and upon subsequent governments or premiers of Ontario to make this last great gesture in the name of language equality in this country.

I just want to reflect on the process that we have gone through in the last year or so. I have been very caught up in that process and, like many hon. members on both sides of the House, have worked extremely hard both day and night, because this was not just another piece of legislation and not just another parliamentary act. This was something more profound. Very seldom in the lifetime of an individual can he or she make or hope to make some contribution to history. All of us in this chamber have made such a contribution in the past year, despite the differences in our opinions. I think it is a testimony to the greatness of our parliamentary tradition that we were able to come to an agreement in this country without bloodshed, without brother and sister fighting against each other, and without civil strife.

Let us look at other countries in the world to see how they acquired their constitutions. Even Great Britain went through some bloody times, going back to Cromwell, going back to the chartist movement in the 1830s, and the social protests in that country during the development of their constitution.

We have indeed been fortunate. We should indeed be proud that we have been civilized enough in this country to fight with every last ounce of our strength, but with words and not physically, not fighting with each other in a manner which would cause irreversible bitterness. That is why the process which went on in the last year was so rewarding and monumental.

I think especially of the deliberations of the Joint Special Committee on the Constitution. Day in and day out, this committee's deliberations showed that democracy was indeed alive and well in our country. Many Canadians and many groups were represented and were able to express their point of view. Hundreds of briefs were received. The televising of those committee deliberations had a lot to do with provoking thought on the part of individual Canadians who otherwise would not have involved themselves with this question. We then saw the matter go to the Supreme Court. I would not want to reflect on judicial decisions, however, I must say that the decision that the original constitutional resolution was not constitutional in the convential sense must be accepted. I think that the Supreme Court really did not address the problem of the definition of proper conventions. It said that there had to be consent of the provinces.

However, I want to draw Your Honour's attention to a statement made by the noted constitutional professor, the late E. V. Dicey, in his well known work entitled "The Law of the Constitution". He stated that "the fundamental dogma of modern constitutionalism" is that "the legal sovereignty of Parliament is subordinate to the political sovereignty of the nation". The Supreme Court of Canada asserted that the original resolution, as I stated, was not constitutional in the conventional sense and that the political sovereignty of the nation was defined as a substantial consensus among the provincial and federal governments.

As an individual Canadian, I am offended that convention is defined in those terms. It is for that reason that I have always been of the view—and I stated it in the House many years ago in a debate on a referendum bill, Bill C-9, in the second session of the Thirtieth Parliament—that political sovereignty should be defined as the will of the people as expressed by themselves rather than by elected politicians.

It is my belief that in order to determine the rules of the game and to determine the rules which will govern us as a people, as distinct from moral issues and other questions, we should consult the people via the referendum mechanism. It is not an idea which would be unique to Canada. I just look at what has happened in Great Britain in recent years, where there have been two such referenda, one on entry into the Common Market and the other on questions of devolution of powers for Scotland and Wales. Therefore, one cannot argue that referenda are not in the British parliamentary tradition.

It is significant that the offer of a referendum was made by the Prime Minister during the negotiations, and it was turned down by many of the provinces. I regret that. What we saw was that the Canadian way, as described by the Leader of the Opposition and many of the provinces, really was the wheeling and dealing among elected politicians and elected governments to determine the rules by which the public and the people of Canada would live. Indeed, one may describe this Canadian way as one which permits some degree of moral cynicism.. I am prompted here to reflect upon some of the thoughts of the late American theologian, Reinhold Niebuhr. In his classical defence of democracy, entitled "The Children of Light and the Children of Darkness", he identified the powers of will and persuasion, the forces in society. It was Mr. Niebuhr who said that we may well designate the moral cynics who know no law beyond their own will and interest with a scriptural designation of "children of this world" or "children of darkness". Those who believe that self-interest should be brought under the discipline of a higher law could then be termed "the children of light".

He defines the children of light as those who seek to bring self interest under the discipline of this more universal law and in harmony with the more universal good. One does not want to get overly metaphysical in this very practical constitutional debate, but I think we must view what has gone on in the last little while with some disquietude that, in a sense, the will of the people themselves has been excluded and that there were those who could not put aside their own self-interest and could not seek a higher vision of what Canada was to become in the next century. However, in a sense, they settled for something which is good but which could have been infinitely better.

That is why I find it somewhat distasteful at the moment to see this continual bartering of rights, this continual trading off of native rights or women's rights. Surely the protection of those rights can stand or fall on their own merits. I suppose that I will leave this place a happy person—whether after the next election or whenever—because I was able to play some small role in the historic development of this country in the bringing in of a new Constitution. However, I would exhort all of us to be, in Reinhold Niebuhr's words, "children of light". Let us put aside our self-interest and our petty divisions. Let us try to go beyond ourselves and see the greater view. Let us see the new vision of Canada. Let us try to attain that vision. We can start the attainment of that vision by trying to realize our original objectives.

What we have before us now is good. It is great. It is a source of great joy. But it could have been better.

I am reminded of a story we studied in high school written by Robert Louis Stevenson. I believe the title of the story was El Dorado. In life one must always be searching and grasping for a new ideal. We must have a new goal. I entreat members of the House of Commons to see as their goal the complete restoration of the charter of rights as it was originally intended in the resolution so that all Canadians may live in dignity and harmony.

I would exhort all of those who read the House of Commons debates and all those Canadians who follow the issues of the day not to let their politicians off the hook. We have triumphed, yes, but we could have done better.

Let us hope that in the days, the months and the years ahead we will finally achieve our complete goal, the complete entrenchment of the basic rights notwithstanding the notwithstanding clauses, so they can stand by themselves all time and enshrined for oblivious to political change. That is what I am pledging to work for in my remaining time as a member of Parliament. I hope that my colleagues feel the same way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks I want to say to the honourable member who has just finished speaking that it would be nice for once if someone on the government benches would admit that we viewed the Supreme Court decision on television. It is difficult to listen to members on the other side almost claiming credit for a resulting process for which all Canadian fought.

Before I came here in 1979, it was my privilege to represent many of the people I now represent at the municipal level of government. During that time I had the honour to be involved, along with others, several of whom are now members in this House representing all sides, in the creation and implementation of a bold new urban plan for the city of Toronto. That plan from start to finish took several years. It involved dozens of compromises, the creative co-operation of literally hundreds of citizens in Toronto and thousands of hours of meetings. At the end, one Toronto wag commented that the plan was perfect and typically Toronto. It had to be good because it displeased everybody equally.

When I left municipal politics to seek this office, I did so with a question mark in my mind. Those members who are familiar with the mind-set peculiar to municipal councillors that the sun rises and sets on one's municipality, perhaps can best understand the doubt as to whether life in the House could ever be as stimulating as municipal work or whether any project here could ever be as important and challenging as our new plan was.

I rise today just a few days short of three years since I left municipal affairs to participate in this debate, a debate essentially about another plan, the proposed new plan for Canada's constitutional future.

I can only say that this experience, the experience of being part of our constitutional renewal, has been in so many ways the highlight of my so far short public career. I want to try to express to you, Sir, to my party, to the House and, most important, to the people who sent me here, my intense feeling of gratitude for the privilege of being here at this historic time.

This promises to be an emotional debate. Earlier speakers members at various times showed through their tears the emotion they felt. I do not expect to have that effect on members, but I can say this, that however one views this resolution, whatever one's political bias, there can be no doubt that the importance of this date for Canada is felt on all sides of the House.

The writing of constitutions must be among the most noble and important work in which people's elected representatives engage. I am here in some measure because the previous member for Don Valley West, Mr. Jim Gillies chose not to run. Perhaps with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I might read into the record his favourite quote. He used it always to advise his constituents, now my constituents, on matters of importance. It seems this quote has merit in our discussions today. The quote will be familiar to many people here. It goes like this:

> Make no little plans: They have no magic to stir men's blood—make big plans, aim high in hope and work.

The philosophy behind those words continues something along the line of: "Aim high in your hopes and dreams remembering that our grandchildren will probably do things that we never dreamed of. Let your watchword be justice and your beacon be hope."

Let us be clear and sure that the spirit in which we approach this debate is exactly that: hope for justice for all Canadians, including women, men, our native people and all Canadians, especially the people of Quebec.

Let us also be clear that this debate must not delay dealing with the other urgent problems this country faces, and our unreasonable delay would serve no one.

There are several matters I want to raise in this debate. We are, however, approaching four o'clock and I would like to make sure that I put something on the record before I proceed to deal with what I think are absolutely vital questions in this debate, specifically the issues of equality of men and women, the issue of the protection of the treaty rights of our aboriginal people, and the amendments which my leader proposed earlier today.

We received a telex in which I believe the House will be interested because quite a bit of admirable discussion has taken place about attempting to persuade premiers to come on side with native rights and men's and women's rights. This telex came from the Premier of Ontario, the Hon. William G. Davis. It was addressed to the Right Hon. Joe Clark and to Duke Redbird, president, Ontario Métis and Non-Status Indian Association, Native Council of Canada offices. To those who want to know where Ontario stands, I can say it stands foursquare behind the entrenchment of the rights of the aboriginal peoples and for Section 28 unamended. I will quote for the record from the telex. It reads, in part:

> Ontario remains committed to the accord signed on November 5. However, to the extent there is significant opportunity prior to the end of the debate in Ottawa to influence those who do not support the current provisions for women's rights and the inclusion of aboriginal rights, we will be endeavouring to do so.

It continues:

> We do express our sincere regret that aboriginal rights were excluded from that agreement. . . .

It concludes:

> We remain committed to the principle of entrenching rights for both women and native peoples.

Let there be no mistake about where Ontario stands.

I propose to continue that argument when I am next allowed to rise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRODUCTION OF FUEL ALCOHOL

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

> That Bill C-259, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (renewable energy), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, private members' hour is getting the attention it always gets in the House, but I do recognize that many members are very busy.

I bring this bill forward today as one of a series I want to present to the House which deal with renewable energy. This is a subject in respect of which we would require very minor amendments to a number of acts in order to allow us to proceed toward energy self-sufficiency in this nation more quickly than is presently the case. I have considered a number of acts and I have presented simple amendments by way of private member's bills which I think would greatly assist us in moving toward the use of more renewable energy fuels in our nation.

This bill has to do with the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Its purpose is to extend the objects and powers of the Canadian Wheat Board so as to allow it to purchase and market surplus or deteriorating grain for eventual use in the production of fuel alcohol.

This bill would amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act in such a way that the board would be able to purchase surplus grains in years of surplus as well as grains that for some reason do not meet the requirements of the Canadian Wheat Board for sale for human or animal consumption. This maybe because of the presence of certain weed seeds, or for either human or livestock consumption.

In the situation as it exists today a farmer cannot sell that grain to an elevator agent who is buying for the Wheat Board if that grain is rejected for one of the reasons I have outlined. However, we have the capacity and the technology to produce alcohol from those types of grains. By allowing the Wheat Board to become involved, we would enable farmers to sell these types of grains to their elevator agents on an equitable basis rather than having to find their own markets.

The other important aspect of this is that many of the plants capable of producing alcohol—at present we only have one in Canada—may not be situated in areas where frost may have produced large amounts of grain with a high nitrate content. With the adoption of this measure, agents could buy that grain and easily ship it to the existing plant in Manitoba, or others that hopefully will either be built or converted in the future to the production of alcohol.

If we look at past years we will find that we have had surpluses of these types of grains in Canada. Let me go back as far as 1967. I would note that the Canadian Wheat Board considers eight million metric tons of wheat as a normal carry-over, the kind of carry-over that must be maintained to ensure self-sufficiency in our nation should we experience a total crop failure. This would allow to continue year by year without a break, so to speak, in the pipeline system.

In 1967 we had a carry-over of 18 million metric tons. This meant some ten million metric tons of surplus. In 1968 we had a carry-over of 23 million metric tons; in 1969 we had the largest surplus in our history of 27 million metric tons; in 1970 we had 19 million metric tons; in 1971 we had 15.5 million metric tons; in 1972 we had 10 million metric tons, and the same in 1973. In those years we had substantial surpluses. This inhibited our farmers to a great extent in obtaining the kinds of returns they needed in order to continue this production on their farms.

Had this measure been in place at that time, perhaps the Wheat Board could have helped our farmers in a domestic way to alleviate their problems in relation to production surpluses.

In the early 1970s, 1972 and 1973 we had a huge surplus of barley on the prairies. Many of us who are farmers remember selling barley at three bushels for a dollar. One might say it is nice to have a surplus, and it is. However, the government has an obligation to our farmers to attempt to market these surpluses in any manner possible.

Today we are inhibited by our transportation system. The difficulty arises not because of the lack of world markets for our grain, but rather because we do not have an adequate transportation or port system to handle the grains presently grown on the prairies. This bill would allow the Wheat Board to assist the farmers in coming years until the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) commits the $1.5 billion he has promised. I must say to that minister that this money is desperately needed for those improvements that should be started today so that within four years we can move to a quota system on our tracks, and I would plead with the minister to make every effort to provide that money.

We have the ability to produce certain grains with tremendous yields in various regions of our country. I could use as an example the Lethbridge area where substantial irrigation has and is taking place and we can now produce soft white spring wheats at the rate of 125 bushels per acre and up. Often we have not had a market for these grains, even though we were producing them, and they jammed elevators in the area. Farmers had great quantities stored on their farms. The government was unable to sell this grain and we ended up putting it into our foreign aid programs. That is an admirable use, but these quantities of grains could be used for fuel alcohol production. Following alcohol production the protein could be used for human or animal consumption.

I recall there being a substantial frost in Saskatchewan two years ago and many farmers only had a three-bushel quota for number three utility wheat for the entire crop year. They had to carry that wheat over for some considerable time before being able to market it. That type of grain could very easily be used for the production of alcohol.

What I am trying to point out is that there is a need in this country for this kind of legislation so that the Wheat Board could assist us in times of surplus and at times when we have grades of grain that are not fit for human or animal consumption. I am hoping that members of this House will find this bill important enough, although it may not be drafted perfectly, to send it to the committee for further study and recommendation.

A draft paper on alcohol fuels, which was used as a background piece for the 1980 discussion paper on liquid fuel options, indicated that a concerted federal and provincial effort could result in fuel alcohol production of some 600 million gallons per year by 1990, if we get started today. This would be the equivalent of 400 million gallons of gasoline or 5 per cent of the projected gasoline requirement for this country.

Many people have been reluctant to have countries commit what is called human food to the production of alcohol because they believe the byproduct is unusable. This is not the case. In fact, the fermentation process really only converts the starches and sugars into alcohol and the protein is the byproduct. It can serve as an excellent animal feed and can be recycled, with proper methods, into an excellent food for humans as well. In fact, the rich protein byproduct feed for animals is even more effective than if they were fed wheat, barley or oats before it had been put through that process.

There have been tests done on this in the United States. In one case, the byproducts from corn, the mash that was offered, had more protein and vitamins than it had before it was put through the fermentation process. Through the experimentation that was done, it was found that the growth rate efficiency for animals was 13 per cent greater than if they were fed feed which had not gone through the fermentation process. I believe further experiments will show that this is a fact.

In the State of Kansas a $15 million plant has been designed to produce 5.5 million gallons of alcohol per year, 200 per cent proof, plus 15,000 tons of liquid carbon dioxide, plus a byproduct to finish feed 30,000 heads of cattle. It is operating very well.

We have one plant in Canada. In Minnedosa, Manitoba, the Mohawk Oil Company has converted a former Gooderham and Worts distillery to fuel alcohol production. The conversions were designed by an Austrian firm. This firm has developed many plants around the world, including a 20 million gallon plant in the state of Missouri.

The Mohawk plant follows in the wake of about ten United States distilleries which have been converted from producing beverage to the production of fuel alcohol. The technology and the equipment remain virtually the same for the production but the efficiency is greater because the alcohol does not have to be as distilled for consumption in cars as it is for human consumption. It is expected that Mohawk will have a $17 million to $22 million per year capacity and the fuel will be made from locally grown barley and grains.

If Mohawk is as successful as we believe it would be, my bill would encourage the construction of another plant and the use of surplus grains from other regions that are not fit for human consumption for the production of alcohol. This would be of assistance to this plant in going ahead with the construction of a second plant and hopefully would encourage production in Saskatchewan and Alberta as well. The government of Alberta assisted Manitoba to convert this plant, and immediately upon giving the plant a production licence, the government eliminated the road taxes on this fuel.

In a few years fuel alcohol plants will have no difficulty in competing with gasoline prices. At the present time this type of incentive is needed if fuel alcohol is to become competitive.

We also have the potential to produce alcohol from a number of other materials. People who are familiar with this area will know that the Jerusalem artichoke is the most productive, and sugar beets, which grow very well in southern Alberta in irrigation areas, are close behind. While wheat is not the most efficient, it is abundant in this nation. Potatoes, of which there is a surplus in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island can also be used. Farmers there would be willing to produce more potatoes if they were given an opportunity to sell them for the production of alcohol. We have the ability to produce alcohol from much of the produce that farmers grow in Canada. Also, experimental farms in Ontario have produced a type of poplar tree which grows very quickly and can be converted into ethyl alcohol. Although I am only presenting one bill, I could present many more which would assist farmers in producing crops which would be capable of producing alcohol.

Many other countries around the world are far ahead of Canada in the production of fuel alcohol. The United States has, particularly since the embargo on oil, forged ahead in providing incentives for plants and private industry to develop fuel alcohol production. For example, producers in the United States are eligible for alcohol fuels entitlement from the department of energy. These are loan guarantees given to alcohol plants as well as investment tax credits to individuals who wish to produce fuel alcohol. In addition, there are substantial funds for research and development—an increase from $3 million in 1977 to $25 million this year.

Brazil, which also suffered from the oil embargo, produces 5 per cent of its fuel from alcohol and hopes to increase that substantially in the years to come. In 1980 Brazil exported 70,000 tons of soybeans. In the near future they will not be exporting any because they will be putting them into alcohol production to meet their own desperate needs.

The Dutch have designed, through their applied sciences, a device which enables cars to run on any mixture of gas and alcohol and even on pure alcohol. The refinements in this industry are progressing rapidly and the capacity for Canada to learn from that technology is real.

There is also substantial use of alcohol fuels in Sweden, New Zealand, Australia and Japan. This proves that many countries are moving rapidly forward in this area, and I believe Canada should keep pace.

A task force was established this year which did an excellent job in the area of renewable energy. I would like to quote my hon. friend for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), who was a member of the parliamentary task force on energy alternatives. He said:

> Our committee was struck by the potential for alcohol to extend our current supplies of gasoline in a 10 per cent blend with no need to modify the engine. The committee recommended that the government should go beyond its proposal for fuel alcohol regulations and should allow alcohol to be sold to retailers.

We have an inhibiting factor present in our country at this time. When Bill C-57 was before the House last year, many of our members argued very strenuously for some amendments. The difficulty we face in Canada today is that the government only allows experimentation licences to individuals which are renewable for only one year. After that year the equipment has to be destroyed. The licence should be extended to five years to give these individuals a chance to refine their product and increase their capacity. We also believe that instead of research being done on a limited, personal use basis, the bond should be extended so that individuals could establish larger plants which could offer economies of scale and enable joint effort projects among a number of farmers to be undertaken. In this way they could refine their yearly and daily production quotas. While there is a movement to reduce the bond from $200,000 to $10,000, there is still a lot of room to allow for expansion in the fuel alcohol area.

In conclusion, I would like to see the House seriously consider this bill and allow it to go to committee for further study so that farm groups and various others could attend and encourage Members of Parliament to move in this direction and allow the Wheat Board to get fully involved in this area.

Mr. Stan Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this bill and I congratulate the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) for bringing it forward. I appreciate the fact that in bringing this bill forward he suggested the extension of the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board so that it could control the movement of grains used for this particular reason.

● (1620)

The history of the Canadian Wheat Board is very interesting. It has benefited farmers in the past and will continue to do so. It was established in 1935. It was operating prior to that, but in 1935 it was given the power to handle wheat and in 1949 the power to handle oats and barley. The circumstances in existence at the time the board was formed are similar to the circumstances today. Prior to 1935 it was quite possible for a farmer to sell grain at one price in the fall and at a different price in the spring. I remember very well my father's selling grain for 75 cents a bushel in October and holding as much as he could until March when he would get $1.50 a bushel for it. By virtue of the organization of the board and its sales policies this has been evened out so that in this situation a farmer would probably get $1 a bushel the whole year.

There was another reason for the setting up of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is a reason why the board still exists and why its powers should be extended. That reason is the continued existence of the grain exchange. The grain exchange does today what it was doing back in 1929. The grain exchange claimed to be the farmer's friend and to give him a better return for his grain. It claimed to be the consumer's friend, as it claimed it could sell grain cheaper than it could be sold in any other way. However, in the process of buying grain and selling grain the grain exchange makes money, and it has never been able to explain to me whether it took that money from the consumer or the farmer. There is no added value in the handling of grain by the grain exchange. The exchange added nothing to the grain, so it took money either from the consumer or the farmer.

The establishment of the Canadian Wheat Board and the extension of powers to it continue to be of value. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin endorses orderly marketing, which has served Canadian farmers well. If we can extend that principle to other products and for other reasons, we should do so.

In the last few months serious attempts have been made to undermine the orderly marketing process. Attacks have been made by what I call flunkey large corporations. It pains me to say this of such a prestigious organization, but one of the flunkeys has turned out to be the Economic Council of Canada. This prestigious organization blew its credibility and possibly much of its effective work by using spurious and unsound arguments and half truths about orderly marketing. The council has been aided in this by another flunkey—and again it pains me to say this—the CBC. In the last year in the presentations "What Bread Basket," "Against the Grain" and "The Game of Monopoly" this prestigious organization has succeeded in giving a biased picture of farm life, of grain transportation and of orderly marketing.

This government has allowed the food industry to be dominated by five large corporations. If the government is going to allow that, it should at least even out the odds somewhat by establishing and promoting marketing boards wherever possible. Surprisingly, people like Frank Warnock, who used to be the head of Loeb, supports this position, and I will refer to a newspaper article in this respect. It reads:

> Warnock cited the power of those five "who virtually dominate the retail food market" and said any government that allows that must also allow farmers to form marketing boards to protect their interests.

Again I must congratulate the hon. member for Wetaskiwin for recognizing the value of orderly marketing. I hope he will lead his party to support the extended use of the Canadian Wheat Board.

To get a little closer to the subject matter of Bill C-259, it deals with the sale of surplus and deteriorating wheat for use in the production of alcohol. In addressing the question of using food for the purpose of producing byproducts such as fuel alcohol, there are serious ethical and moral problems which must be addressed as a matter of policy. The hon. member used the term "surpluses" in respect of a particular year. If that grain—or that food—was really surplus, it would still be around, and whenever there is hunger in the world there is no such thing as a surplus of food. It was not too long ago that serious opposition was mounted in my province of Saskatchewan to using locally grown malting barley in a malt plant from which beer would ultimately be produced. This opposition was based on moral grounds. There are substantial numbers of people in Saskatchewan and other parts of Canada who believe it is immoral to use food grain for brewing and alcoholic distillation. There is a similar argument about fuel alcohol, and it is a compelling one.

Large scale fuel alcohol and gasohol operations are rapidly being built in the United States, as the hon. member indicated. I recognize that the grain used is surplus or deteriorating grain, but there is still a question as to what happens to large potential food supplies which are diverted to other purposes, even if the byproducts retain a high nutrient value. The answer, of course, is that the price of available stocks goes up. The director of the United States National Alcohol Fuels Commission has conceded that the United States target of four billion gallons of alcohol from corn would increase the price of corn by 6.6 cents per bushel.

No producer objects to high prices, but some producers wonder if they can ever produce enough food to feed the world. They seem to be producing surpluses, yet millions are starving because their countries cannot afford to buy food grains. This is another aspect of the ethical dilemma we have. In the face of increasing petroleum fuel prices, food grains may become more valuable as alcohol stock than as food.

Right now there is a question in the United States as to whether the use of corn for alcohol will ultimately see its price rise over wheat, and huge U.S. wheat surpluses which have played a major part in international wheat trade in recent years will be retained in the United States. They will not be put on to the export market. If this happens, what will happen to the food supply of the world? This is a rather daunting picture. U.S. wheat exports now feed much of the world. They will quite possibly be removed by the use of corn to produce alcohol.

As some hon. members know, United States wheat exports for the 1981-82 crop year were 49.7 million tonnes, an increase of 18.2 million tonnes or 58 per cent over four years ago, and more than the exports of the other four major grain exporters, Canada, Argentina, Australia and the European Economic Community, in total. Given the kind of possibility which would eliminate United States grain from the food export market, Canada must make a deliberate political decision, not a market decision, on where our food grain can best be used.

Alcohol production here is still in its commercial infancy, but the patterns will be set now and will be difficult to reverse in later years. Given the pressure on potential food supplies, is it not better to start a fuel alcohol plant using some of the materials the hon. member mentioned, such as wood, crop residues and high carbohydrate non-food materials? Then food grains could be added, but only under conditions of deterioration which would be a total loss under any other circumstances.

Already the Saskatchewan government has made a pioneering effort in the commercial alcohol area, as has a plant in Manitoba. A research contract in connection with the Federated Co-operatives for a pilot ethanol plant is the first step. The research part of the agreement calls for investigation of crop residues and wood as an alcohol feedstock.

Some of the fastest growing trees, such as poplar on the prairies, could well be the basis of part of this beginning industry. I was happy to hear the hon. member for Wetaskiwin allude to these as possible sources for the production of alcohol. Obviously this is a question which needs far more examination and planning before it takes its final form. Too often a plant is built and the raw materials are available for only a very short time.

The Canadian Wheat Board would be an excellent vehicle for determining available grain supplies for such a venture. As a central selling agency, the board can do much to plan and shape a fuel alcohol industry in Canada. However, the board is ultimately an administrative agency, one that is charged specifically with providing farmers with the best prices in the selling of their grains. Thus a political decision must be taken, and taken in Parliament, as to how the broader use of alcohol-source materials can best be deployed. Maybe this should not be the responsibility of the wheat board.

I hope that the government speaker on this bill will give us some information on what the state of government planning is on this important subject. We on this side of the House always express the hope that the government will have considered something that goes a bit beyond what is happening today.

Too often, I am afraid, the response of the government consists of a few off-topic notes which are suitably garbled by the government spokesman and constitute nothing more than a slap in the face of Parliament and what is the democratic process in Canada. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin deserves better. He has brought forward a serious proposal which deserves every consideration by the government, the House, the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Wheat Board.

I look forward to the government's response as an indication of how it intends to respond to an initiative which I and the New Democratic Party support because it not only exceeds the scope of the most effective government agency in grain marketing, of which I approve, but also addresses itself to a question which has tremendous implications for all Canadians in the future. How we get our fuel in the next few years will be very pertinent to the way in which we live.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with reference to private members' Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the government would not support the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act proposed in this bill for a number of reasons.

The Canadian Wheat Board already has the legal authority to take delivery of, to handle, distribute, and so forth, grain for the purpose of producing fuel alcohol. In fact, a company has been established in Manitoba, Mohawk Oil Company, which is at present producing fuel alcohol from grain. This company has had discussions with the Canadian Wheat Board on its requirements and how deliveries of grain for this purpose would be fitted in with administration of the Canadian Wheat Board Act and regulations.

The Minnedosa Company has been granted permission to buy off-board grain as an elevator and account to the board accordingly. It will be buying off-board grain directly from producers. This makes it possible for grain of the type described in this bill to be purchased, if they wish to do so. They may also purchase off-board stocks from out of country elevators if they can find suppliers.

Since its requirements are feed grain, purchases are made off-board and do not fall under the board's quota system. There has to be a notation made in the permit book to meet the administrative regulations of these off-board quotas. Deliveries are made from grains grown in Manitoba and since the byproducts in addition to the fuel alcohol are also sold in Manitoba, this operation is deemed to be intra-provincial and therefore outside the terms of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Nevertheless, the plant is operating and in compliance with quota regulations under the Canadian Wheat Board Act for off-board deliveries, and there is no hindrance to its operations.

Recently, interest has bee expressed by a group of Albertans in establishing a grain-based fuel alcohol plant in that province. They have also approached the Canadian Wheat Board on this. This group has been informed that arrangements identical to those made for the Manitoba company would also be made for them. These arrangements would be to designate the plant as a licenced delivery point under the terms of the Canada Grain Act. Then under the terms of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the plant would be empowered to take delivery of grains and make the necessary notation in producers' permit books, recording deliveries of off-board grains and reporting such deliveries to the board in accordance with the board's statistical requirements under the act.

The suggestion made by the hon. member who introduced this legislation is that infested and contaminated grain must have an outlet in order to facilitate the production of grain based fuel alcohol. The Canadian Grain Commission, whose responsibility it is to ensure that grain moving into commercial channels meets with Canada's stringent quality and health requirements, advises that infested and contaminated grains, when detected, are isolated and actions to fumigate or decontaminate are taken so that the grain can be allowed to be sold commercially. Commercial sale, of course, means that the producer receives an ordinary return for his product rather than being forced to destroy the grain or otherwise dispose of it at a loss. In any case, in terms of the Canadian experience, the quantities of infested and contaminated grain actually entering commercial channels are exceedingly small. Such quantities would not form an adequate base to supply a plant or plants producing fuel alcohol from grain.

The Canadian government is aware and informed of work that has gone into the development of gasohol, a blend of ethyl alcohol and gasoline. The U.S. has had a major program in existence for several years, which has been very costly and appears to be less than successful. It has been a subsidized program. Some of the problems are as follows: One, energy input is greater than energy output—in other words, it requires more energy to produce a gallon of alcohol than you can get out of that gallon; two, a product with a high starch content such as corn is preferable as yields of alcohol are greater; three, the cost of ethyl alcohol is wholly dependent on the cost of raw materials. Therefore, the finished gasohol is also dependent on raw material costs. Four, an economically-sized plant should produce a large quantity of alcohol. Some plants produce up to 10 million gallons, while others produce 50 million gallons of alcohol. It would require 23 million bushels of grain to produce 50 million gallons of alcohol. Five, supplies of low quality grain are unpredictable. Therefore, supplies of necessary cheap raw material would also be unpredictable.

There is also a suggestion in the bill that surplus grain must be made available through the Canadian Wheat Board for the production of fuel alcohol or ethanol. As the hon. member must be aware, the Canadian Wheat Board does not feel that such surpluses exist or will exist in the future. It would seem appropriate for me to read into the record a statement made by the Canadian Wheat Board about its proposed target for shipments in the 1981-82 crop year.

The Canadian Wheat Board announces its export targets for 1981-82 as follows:

—The Canadian Wheat Board today announced an export target of 26 million tonnes of western Canadian grains, oil seeds, and products for the 1981-82 crop year.

The target represents an increase of more than 13 per cent over the previous record set in 1979-80, and is in line with the longer term objective of 30 million tonnes by 1985-86.

The board said . . . that western grain growers have presented a challenge to the grain handling and marketing system by producing a record harvest. The western Canadian crop . . . is estimated by Statistics Canada in . . . forecast at more than 41 million tonnes, surpassing the previous record output by some 3 million tonnes, or about seven per cent.

Last Wednesday at the Saskatchewan wheat pools annual meeting it was reported that, indeed, we had a record prairie gain harvest of 41.8 million tonnes, which is only 13 per cent short of the target for 1985. The Canadian Wheat Board plans to export 26 million tonnes of grain products this year, only 15 per cent less than its projected target of 30 million tonnes in 1985.

The inference in this proposed legislation is that by giving the legal power to the Canadian Wheat Board to market such grains, a plant producing fuel alcohol from grain would obtain a low cost raw material in sufficient quantities that would sustain the production of ethanol on a commercial basis. The Canadian Wheat Board was established as a producer's marketing board to sell on behalf of farmers in western Canada to their best advantage. This bill, with its basic intention of getting the Canadian Wheat Board involved in supplying western grains for the production of fuel, would not work to the advantage of the company or companies concerned as the Canadian Wheat Board would constantly try to seek the highest price for grain in both the domestic and export markets.

Canada, with its enviable record as a producer of quality grains, does not set out to produce low grades which might be suitable for use as a fuel. In fact, over the past 25 years, over 76 per cent of Canada Western Red Spring Wheats have graded either number one or number two. The Canadian Wheat Board's press release of October 16 on the subject of record quantity of grain supplies available in the 1981-82 crop year would seem to be noteworthy. It reads:

—a Canadian Wheat Board survey—

—forecasts and has determined from its——country elevator managers . . . that farmers in western Canada have a record quantity of grain supplies, with above average quality, available for delivery this year.

According to the survey, farmers have 39,676,000 tonnes of the six major grains available for delivery.

The important thing is above average quality. The top two grains combined account for 82 per cent of the total Canada Western Red Spring Wheat supplies compared to the 25 year average of 76 per cent.

Supplies of No. 3 Canadian Red Wheat were estimated at 2,587,000 tonnes, while Canada feed was estimated at only 182,000 tonnes, which is down from 1,804,000 tonnes from last year. I am trying to indicate by this that there is very little low grade wheat available for the production of gasohol.

The Canadian Wheat Board was consulted and they suggested the concept and application of these amendments would raise many difficulties among them. Under the Canada Grain Act, infested or out-of-condition grain can only enter or be discharged from an elevator with the approval and by order of the Canadian Grain Commission. If this is done, the bin and equipment used must subsequently be fumigated as must railway cars and terminals handling it. If trucks are used to transport this grain, they must also be fumigated before carrying other proper grain. Infested grain, when found on a farm, is usually not in a large quantity. The practice has been for the owner of such grain to sell it to nearby feeders or other purchasers in ways that do not involve the ordinary commercial grain handling system. The board has the power to buy infested or out-of-condition grain if it so wishes, but the board has never knowingly made such purchases except for out-of-condition grain in the tough and damp categories which can be conditioned by blending or drying. It would be better to leave the present practices in operation and allow the producers of such grain as the bill describes to dispose of it as it has been in the past, with the additional alternative of selling to a methanol plant in the manner described.

Before concluding, therefore, let me say that the government does not feel that the Canadian Wheat Board Act need be amended as set out in the bill. A firm which is already producing fuel alcohol is receiving quantities of grain off-board directly from producers by truck. The arrangement is apparently to the satisfaction of the company, the producers and the board. The quantities of infested, out-of-condition or low grade grain are never very large. Empowering the board to take delivery and dispose of such grains would not be very practical and the administrative costs could be substantial. Low-grade wheats tend to remain outside the usual market channels. They are fed to animals or are disposed of by producers. The small quantities of infested and contaminated grain which might possibly enter the system are rigidly controlled and are not permitted to move through regular commercial channels when detected. It is the opinion of the Canadian Wheat Board that it would be better to leave the present practices in operation to allow producers to dispose of low-grade, infected, contaminated or out-of-condition grain as they have in the past.

The car unloads at Thunder Bay have steadily increased. We will be able to reach record highs of delivery of grain in the current crop year. The car unloads at Thunder Bay this week demonstrate that there has been a real pick-up since the strike. In the week ending November 14, on the west coast there were 2,593 car unloads and at Thunder Bay, 6,989, for a total of 9,582 car unloads this week as compared to 7,676 at the same time last year.

What is of more concern to western farmers is the transportation and the availability of equipment to move grain to market and to export. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is taking all necessary steps with Mr. Radke of the Grain Transportation Authority to ensure that the grain transportation system is able to move 26 million tonnes to export position this year. The terminals at Vancouver will have to handle 20 per cent more grain than the record set last year, while at Thunder Bay handlings will have to be about 16 per cent better than any previous record there. Total exports to November 4 from all ports were 2.6 per cent ahead of Thunder Bay early in the crop year. To quote from a telegram which I received, Mr. Radke said:

> The short-term outlook in transportation is good and recent steps toward financing a new terminal at Prince Rupert, along with commitments to purchase six new lake freighters, promise even greater capacity.

Mr. Radke also recommended that the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian government acquire additional hopper cars in the next three years. This is one of the matters with which the Minister of Transport will deal.

By giving these examples I am trying to say that we have fine quality wheat. It is all needed for export, it is all being sold. There is little of it to be disposed of, in the manner of contaminated or spoiled wheat, for the production of gasohol. There is no need to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act at this time to provide gasohol plants in either Manitoba or Alberta. It is possible under the current system, with the present regulations and authority of the Canadian Wheat Board, to do so. For this reason the government urges the House not to agree to the amendments proposed in Bill C-259.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk out this bill because it is an excellent one. I congratulate the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) for introducing it. The entire address read by the parliamentary secretary—and I emphasize "read"—is most dismaying. It shows a lack of desire to do anything new—do not rock the ship, do not do anything the Canadian Wheat Board or the government does not want to do. He did not say that the farmers did not want to do it. Farmers should be given an opportunity. The Canadian Wheat Board has annual meetings. It would be logical for the Wheat Board to give the farmers who produce wheat an opportunity to do it.

A few years ago a good field of soft wheat was lost in the Medicine Hat area because there was no place for it. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin is not saying that they should interfere with the good, high protein wheat; not at all. This can be done—there is always some spoiled wheat.

In connection with the lack of food and the immorality of using wheat for alcohol production, at the present time there is a method of taking out the high protein, leaving the basic food product. It is not a case of doing this or that. The wheat board has never challenged farmers to produce more wheat or different types of wheat. We are not living in a stagnant world. If that attitude had prevailed years ago, we would still be plowing our fields with oxen and riding around in buggies. The government should become involved in research. It should realize that there are advances to be made and that this bill would be an advance. I think the farmers of western Canada would go for it. We are not asking them to give up growing good wheat. We are asking that the other wheat be used. Let us establish another industry. It would mean more jobs. There are a million people unemployed because the government has no initiative. It does not want to turn to research, it does not want to rock the boat. It wants to leave everything the way it is. This is why we are going backwards. It is the old turkey dance—one step forward and about five steps backward. This bill should be passed. Farmers should be given an opportunity to say whether they want to do it or not.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak to this bill because I know the hon. member who introduced it is very interested in renewable energy. Now, after reading the bill as well as several press releases, I cannot help but object to the bill itself.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, referred to as the Bill to Amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, is aimed at extending the objects and powers of the Canadian Wheat Board so as to allow it to purchase and market surplus or deteriorating grain for eventual use in the production of fuel alcohol, or farm ethanol, as this surplus is called. Now, I do not think that a country like Canada, which has an excellent reputation as a top quality wheat producer, would purposely produce wheat for the production of fuel alcohol. For the last 25 years Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

GREY CUP GAME, 1981

OUTCOME OF CLASSIC CANADIAN FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP FINAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That special status in this nation be entrenched for the Eskimos of Edmonton for their exceptional contribution on Sunday to Canadian football, and that honourable mention be accorded the Rough Riders of Ottawa for their courage, their skill, and their sportsmanship.

Madam Speaker: I suppose the whole House agrees?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF FIXED INTEREST RATE POLICY FOR FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, aside from the great depression it is impossible to recall a time when Canadian agriculture has suffered such severe and devastating harm, and it is all due to the government's economic mismanagement. Farmers are dependent upon credit, and the high interest rate policy pursued by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has pushed farmers to the wall, to the point where farm bankruptcies have increased 139 per cent in two years. In light of this I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That the Minister of Finance make long-term capital at a fixed rate of interest available to farmers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

APPLICATION OF DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to the small business community, including many small farming operations.

Since the government has now limited the use of Small Business Development Bonds to only those businesses and farms in financial difficulty, the number of which is rapidly becoming a majority, and since confusion exists as to just what is meant by "financial difficulty", and just when this new legislation is to become effective, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That this House request the Minister of State for Small Businesses and the Minister of Agriculture to issue releases immediately to the financial and small-business communities clarifying the changes to the SBDB as they now relate to both small businesses and small farms.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTION MINISTER SPEAK IN BUDGET DEBATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, whereas the Liberal government's energy taxes hit farmers extra hard, and whereas the Liberal government's budget of November 12 abolished income averaging annuities and the capital gains tax reserve, both of which were used to preserve the family farm, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Agriculture speak soon in the budget debate to answer for his failure to prevent the above attacks on the farmers of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On Saturday, November 21, tens of thousands of demonstrators gathered on Parliament Hill to try to explain to the government the real impact of its high interest rate policy and years of poor economic planning. The response of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) was that the representations were "simplistic and naive". The minister responded by urging the provincial governments to "turn a deaf ear" to the 900,000 unemployed. We hope that the provinces are not as hard of hearing as the federal government. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That the Minister of Finance recognize the responsibility he shares for the policies and problems successive Liberal governments have created, and now produce policies that will return investment, jobs and hope for Canadians facing a severe recession.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

ENDORSATION BY FORMER PRESIDENT OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It seems that a prominent member of the Progressive Conservative Party, in fact a former national president of that party, none other than Dalton Camp, has endorsed the budget tabled last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You better watch out.

Mr. Burghardt: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House call upon Mr. Camp to come to Ottawa and hold meetings with his former protégé, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, in order to instruct the latter on basic economics.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

APPLICATION OF TAX REMISSION FOR NORTHERN RESIDENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that in his recent budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) extended for one year the special tax remission for employees working in the north, and given the fact that this measure benefits only a certain proportion of the people in the north, namely, non-residents, and whereas all residents must bear the same highest cost of living in the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Minister of Finance take immediate steps to provide equal tax remissions to all residents of the Canadian north.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

METRIC CONVERSION

CONDEMNATION OF PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Americans have abandoned their metric board and the British have abandoned their metric board, and together they are major trading partners representing 86 per cent of our total trade. They have either reverted to or stayed on weights and measures in imperial while our government, which preaches restraint, grants our Metric Commission in Canada $12 million under supplementary estimates in 1982, including $3 million for salaries, and $2 million for forced implementation of metric in the retail food stores. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House condemn the government's mad plan to force metric on the people of Canada against their will, particularly in the retail food stores.

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the same Standing Order and move, without preamble, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Transport either rescind his decision to reduce the ferry service from North Sydney to Argentia, Newfoundland, by removing one of the two vessels now in use, thus crippling transport services to Newfoundland for tourists and Newfoundlanders alike, and creating further unemployment, or resign immediately and admit his abject failure to deal fairly or adequately, or at all, with the Atlantic area transportation problems.

INITIATIVES TO AID INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the more permanent closures in the forest industry in the last two weeks which have resulted in 850 more people being unemployed, and in view of the current lay-offs in the forest industry, which means one quarter of the workers in the forest industry of British Columbia are unemployed, as well as high rates of unemployment in the forest industry elsewhere in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House demand that the government immediately present the new initiatives for the forest sector promised in the budget and that these initiatives include emergency funding to enable the provinces to create employment in reforestation programs, and further, that these programs give preference to those forestry workers who have already lost their jobs as a result of the economic policies of this government.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, agriculture needs help. Every month the obituary column cites increases in farm foreclosures and bankruptcies, to say nothing of the farmers who, frustrated and angry, just give up. Farmers are being told to sell some of their land to pay their debts, yet the land is their only means of survival. The budget, by eliminating the income averaging contract, and the government's white paper threatening 100 per cent capital gains tax, dampen the enthusiasm of the young and make the elderly afraid to retire. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

DEMONSTRATION ORGANIZED BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, on Saturday 100,000 Canadians participated in a dramatic demonstration of dissatisfaction with the current economic policies of the government. Clearly these Canadians feel that the budget made no attempt to address the present recession. This morning the heartless response of the Minister of Finance was "to turn a deaf ear to these pleas", the pleas of Canadians who are suffering greatly from high interest rates, inflation and unemployment.

My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does that statement represent the sum total of the response of the government to these 100,000 Canadians and many other Canadians who are suffering so much from the policies of the government?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the budget statement, and in particular the economic development strategy tabled with it, demonstrate the intention of this government to work to strengthen the economy and to deal with the unemployment problems we have at this time. The basic thrust of the budget is to create a climate of greater stability in prices and interest rates. I think that in itself will have a major positive effect on over-all job creation across the country.

EFFECT OF BUDGET IN PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, with that response the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has told us that he is totally out of touch with reality. The response of Canadians across the country is one of great disappointment and great dissatisfaction with what the budget is doing. The economic development program itself is down $2 billion compared with the projections of last year, so that is how much this government is doing.

The budget papers further show that Canadian productivity ranked dead last among the industrialized countries of the world in 1980 and in the period 1973 to 1980. The minister knows that this is one of the key factors leading to the higher unemployment rate we will see over the next five years, again according to the budget.

Why did the budget introduce specific actions which will reduce productivity because of the significant deterrent for Canadians to invest in new plant and equipment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the hon. member speaks of productivity. I know of measures connected with it in the economic development document which are intended to enhance productivity. I refer to the commitments in it with respect to measures under the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I refer also to the announcement in the document that we will be creating a new industrial opportunities program to enhance the capacity of the federal government to aid our industry in being more innovative and to aid it in its over-all development. These are major measures aimed at improving productivity. As usual, my hon. friend is quite wrong when he says that this budget ignores the need for a major thrust to improve Canadian productivity.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF INDUSTRY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I think I should ask the minister to reread that document. There is nothing new in it. It is a different packaging of things which had already been introduced by the government but which were not doing the job. There are no new initiatives—and I think the minister should realize that—which will change this productivity thrust. The budget itself represents a major step backwards in efforts to increase Canadian ownership of our industry because of these new deterrents to investment. If I might refer these to the minister, ours is the only country in the world which proposes to tax life insurance. There is a proposal to change the rules on interest deductibility, which will be very negative for small businessmen and high technology companies.

Will the minister, who is now known as the defrocked minister of Canadian ownership, consider introducing alternative incentives to encourage Canadian ownership to offset these budget changes?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think it could be argued that the over-all reduction in income tax rates places more money in the hands of Canadians, and they will be able to use it for investment in productive activity in Canada. That is a major initiative in the budget which goes in exactly the opposite direction to what my hon. friend suggests is the approach of the budget. The Minister of Finance has said that he is willing to look at representations about the effect of the budget, and I can only repeat what he has said in that particular regard.

I think there is a number of initiatives connected with the budget which are intended to reinforce a movement not only to lower interest rates but also to over-all growth of the economy, and I think we all have to work to make sure that the budget achieves that.

● (1420)

With respect to Canadian ownership, we have confirmed our basic commitments in that regard. In particular, we are carrying forward the major thrust of Canadianization of the National Energy Program. I am surprised my hon. friend cries out about an alleged setback in Canadian ownership when he and his party have steadfastly opposed that basic idea of the National Energy Program. No wonder my hon. friend was defrocked by the Canadian people in the last election. They will do it again the next time they have a chance.

TRADE

RESULT OF DISCUSSIONS WITH JAPANESE GOVERNMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is not to the hon. Barbie doll but to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, from whom we might get some kind of an answer. The minister recently visited Japan. Apparently his main purpose was to ask the Japanese government to urge the United States government to permit Canada to participate in the trade consultations proposed by the United States, between them, the European Community, and Japan.

The minister went to Japan with his begging bowl. Did the Japanese government promise to support Canada's position vigorously, that we be admitted to these talks with the three parties that are meeting and have met together? Have they agreed to press that?

Second, can the minister tell us whether the United States government has now withdrawn its objection to the participation of Canada in view of the government's surrender with reference to its election promises on FIRA, and the humiliation and emasculation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Has the U.S. government now withdrawn its objection? What is the position?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is continuing his sometime interest in external affairs. However, he has mingled two very diverse questions. The focal point of my official visit to Japan was not, as the hon. member says, to deal with the question of the restricted trade talks, but was to urge more and freer trade between Canada and Japan, particularly to try to facilitate the entry of more Canadian manufactured and semi-manufactured products into Japan, and also to encourage Japanese investment in Canada, as well as to discuss multilateral issues.

The hon. gentleman is quite right in suggesting that I did discuss the question of the restricted trade talks with the Japanese government. I have to say that I got a somewhat different message from the two Japanese ministers with whom I discussed the question. One took the view that the matter should really be left to the United States. The other was more supportive in his response.

Coming to the other question of the hon. member, I do not know if it was a question on which he places greater stress or not, but he did slip it in at the end, the question of the American response to FIRA. The United States does not have any general objection to FIRA. They have made it clear they have no general objection to our policies either of Canadianization or FIRA. Their problems are with certain very specific things which are done by the National Energy Program and by FIRA. We are having intensive discussions on those issues with the United States to try to assure them of the fairness of our procedures.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN TRADE TALKS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my sporadic interest in external affairs is less damaging to Canada than the minister's constant interest in external affairs. The organ grinder is away and the monkey is being questioned in his place today. I will come back to the question.

Has the United States withdrawn its objections, not to FIRA—we know they are continuing—not general but specific objections to the participation of Canada in the trade talks with the European Community, Japan, and the United States, which the United States has proposed? The United States is punishing the minister and the government for some irritants it caused the United States. Because of the change announced in the budget on FIRA, because of the promise of good behaviour by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, have the U.S. authorities now withdrawn their objection? That is my question to the minister. Will he answer that?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if that was the point the honourable member was trying to make in his previous question, I am glad he had a second try. In fact the United States has not taken a position as an administration with respect to the restricted trade talks which is in the direction the honourable member suggests. Indeed, Mr. Brock, who is the ambassador with special trade responsibilities, it seems to me had attempted to sponsor a previous meeting to which Canada was not invited. That meeting was cancelled by the President, I believe, because Canada was not invited. Therefore the general position of the U.S. administration on that, and with regard to many other things, appears to be understanding of and sympathetic with the Canadian position. We are doing our best from this side of the House to work out with them the particulars of difficulties which they may have with some points of our legislation and policy.

THE ECONOMY

DEMONSTRATION ORGANIZED BY CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the acting Prime Minister. Since the budget, home owners have protested, farmers have protested, and small business men have protested the devastating effects of high interest rates. On Saturday the largest crowd in Canadian history assembled on Parliament Hill to demonstrate their outrage, and they demanded a change in the government's high interest rate policy. Is the government now prepared to listen to the people of Canada, representing every sector of the economic spectrum, and change its high interest rate policy?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I heard somebody referring to the fact that last Saturday there were no Liberal members present to witness the manifestations that took place in Ottawa. I want to emphasize the fact, so that the public will know, that it was at the very request of the CLC that meetings were organized on Thursday with ministers and different regional caucuses. That should be very clearly emphasized.

Mr. Broadbent: There were no politicians there.

Mr. Pepin: I understand my hon. friend was there.

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Pepin: Anyway, some opposition members said a moment ago that there were no Liberal members at that particular meeting. I just wanted to make the public aware of the fact that there had been meetings with ministers and with Liberal Members of Parliament within the regional caucuses last Thursday. I just wanted to make sure this was known. These representations were heard by the Minister of Finance. The other day the minister responded to a question put by the hon. member from Hamilton, when he indicated his willingness to look into some of the suggestions made to him. Obviously this will continue in the future.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if verbal fog were an economic solution, the contribution of the minister would have removed all economic problems for Canadians a long time ago. The Minister of Finance alluded to an effort that would be made by the banks to help home owners. That has already been turned down by the banks, I tell the minister. If the people who were protesting out in front of this building on Saturday have to renew their mortgages either this year or in 1982, the average increase will be $200 to $300 a month, and considering we have lost, since August alone, 50,000 jobs in lay-offs, when will the government simply stop pursuing its old policy and start listening to the people of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as everyone knows, there were measures taken in the budget at least to help mortgage renewers at this time. Since then there has been a substantial reduction in the interest rate; six points have been shaved from it in recent months. Obviously that situation is improving. If the government feels that more help is needed, the Minister of Finance will announce that in due course.

DIRECTION OF ECONOMIC POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I shall ask the minister the question again. Even with the current interest rate people renewing their mortgages will have to pay $200 to $300 a month more, which means a $200 to $300 a month decline in their standard of living. Considering that in the budget itself there is a forecast increase in unemployment not only for 1982 but for 1983 and 1984, and that there has been no change in the direction of economic policy, does the government ever plan to listen to the people of Canada, or will it go blindly on and do to this country what Margaret Thatcher has done in the United Kingdom?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously when the Minister of Finance wrote his budget he was aware of all these facts. He was also aware that wages in Canada have increased for a great number of people and that there are a number of people who could not purchase homes and consequently do not face the problem of increased mortgage rates. These people should not be penalized in comparison with those people who thought they could afford homes at that time. Many in the first group will tell us that if interest rates should continue to go down they will obviously be in a much better position to face the problem they have now.

Mr. McDermid: Except those who have renewed their mortgages at 21 per cent.

Mr. Pepin: This is the general policy of the government—to reduce interest rates. Obviously some of the measures which are taken to achieve that objective are hurting some people, but generally speaking I think Canadians agree with the objectives of the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is now estimated that by year's end the forest industry in the country will be down by 50 per cent, which will have the potential of 300,000 direct and indirect workers being unemployed for most of next year. Since this phenomenon is directly related to the government's deliberate policy of neglect, to its high interest rate policy and to its most recent budget policy, could the minister, who likes to believe in major thrusts, tell me whether the depletion of the $4 billion western resource fund is one of the major thrusts he has in place for helping this industry which is faced with a very serious problem? From where will he get the money to do the things he usually says he will do for the industry, in finding new markets and securing a resource base, if there is no longer any money left in the Western Development Fund?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, if I recall the budget correctly, it set out some very important ways in which the Western Development Fund will be used.

Some hon. Members: Where is it?

Mr. Gray: Moving more specifically to the hon. member's question, he seems to overlook the fact that the problem faced by the forest industry across Canada is due principally to the decline in the housing market in the United States and its interest rate policy, something over which this government certainly has no control, although as I have said in the past, many hon. members of the official opposition seem to have originally delighted in the kinds of policies imposed by the Reagan administration in that country.

We will be continuing our effort to help the forest industry in British Columbia to find additional markets quite apart from the United States, through programs such as the Co-operative Overseas Marketing Development Program which we run jointly with the British Columbia Forest Products Council and the British Columbia provincial government. Just a few months ago we signed an agreement to increase our funding. The result of that program has been that, over less than ten years, there has been an increase in the export of British Columbia forest products to markets other than the United States, from some $200 million to close to $1 billion. I think this is an important record of co-operative effort by the industry, the federal government, and the province. I certainly intend to see that these efforts are continued.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, the minister knows full well that this is not only a problem which is serious in British Columbia. It is more serious there because 60 per cent of its total economy is based upon the forest industry, but it is a problem throughout the country. This most important industry is facing a very serious crisis. Regardless of what the minister says, they are not doing anything about it.

STRENGTH OF CANADIAN FOREST SERVICE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for forestry. One problem the industry is facing of course is the incredible accelerating depletion of the resource base. The minister is fully aware of that. The only thing which depletes faster then the trees in the country is the number of the minister's officials in his department.

An hon. Member: And the Western Development Fund.

Mr. Oberle: It went from 2,400 ten years ago to merely 1,100 now. Recently on televison the minister described this situation as a crisis to which the government must address itself. What is he doing within his department? We know that he does not have any new money in the budget. What is he doing within his department to beef up the Canadian Forest Service to ensure that there is a stable resource base, not only for the industry but to avert very serious consequences in terms of the environment and the ecology? As our trees deplete, so does our fresh water and fresh air. What is the minister doing within his department to take hold of the situation and do something about it?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, within the last year we have enhanced the standing of the forestry service. We appointed Mr. Les Reed as assistant deputy minister, which I think is a very positive step forward; indeed it is one for which the hon. member commended me. I believe the situation, as he correctly described me as saying, is one of crisis in the forest industry in relation to reforestation. This is a matter that is at the heart of the discussion paper I released at the end of September, which I hope hon. members have seen. It was the heart of our discussions with the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers.

I hope to be making announcements within the next two or three months about various aspects of our own responsibilities, particularly in relation to support of the training of highly skilled manpower, in terms of the improvement of our research effort, and other areas in which the federal government will be taking positive action of its own.

As I believe I explained to the hon. member in committee the other day, we have begun urgent consultation with each province to see how the provincial government and the federal government in each province can act together to create the context which will lead to the kind of reforestation which the hon. member and I would both like to see take place in Canada.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAMS SPONSORED BY CANADIAN COUNCIL OF THE BLIND

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport. The minister knows that the Canadian Council of the Blind has for years encouraged, co-ordinated and developed a program of recreational curling and bowling for those people afflicted with a sight disability. In this year of the handicapped, how does the minister justify the discontinuance of the use of such moneys to aid the council in its activities?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I assure him that in this year of the disabled the department, within its means, had a number of special allocation programs. Every effort was made to utilize those dollars as equitably as possible for the various events organized for people afflicted with different types of disabilities. I take the hon. member's particular question as notice and will provide him with the details on the events into which he inquired.

HOSTING OF GREY CUP RECEPTION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. I understand from this group of people that the funding has been discontinued, as has the funding of Canadian gold medallist handicapped people for their participation in international sport. This being so, in this year of government restraint how does the minister justify the finding of moneys for the first time to host a reception in Montreal at the Hyatt Regency Hotel, promoted and developed by an American public relations group, giving the usual Grey Cup bash a government spending flavour, and staging not one but two Grey Cup shows during the day? Will the minister follow the lead of the Minister of Finance and accept at least the responsibility for paying the cost of that Hyatt Regency guest reception?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I was not sure to what the hon. member was leading with his first question.

An hon. Member: Now you know.

Mr. Regan: I am most reluctant to spoil his fun, but I point out that the Government of Canada for the last five years, including the government with which the hon. member was associated, has been supportive of Grey Cup week. It has done that because of the fact that the Grey Cup probably constitutes the only unique national over-all sports event in this country. From the unity point of view it is extremely important for Canada. I hope the hon. member shares with me the pride that I feel in the 2,000 young Canadians who participated in the half-time show, a rather magnificent half-time show, during the Grey Cup game on Sunday.

● (1440)

I want to say further to the hon. member that the funds he refers to, which I think were utilized in promoting a very great and important Canadian event, were not funds that came from the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport. As I gather was the case in other years, the financing of what I consider to be very worth-while expenditures was undertaken by the Canadian Unity Information Office.

FISHERIES

RECOMMENDATIONS ON TRANSFERABILITY OF LICENCES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In the past two years the minister has received two significant reports. One is the Levelton report entitled "Toward an Atlantic Coast Commercial Fisheries Licensing System" and the other is the Pearse report on the west coast fishing industry. The Levelton report indicates that speculation in licences constitutes one element of over-capitalization and that if some control over ownership is to be exercised, open transfer simply cannot be permitted. Dr. Pearse takes the opposite point of view. He adopts the view that "transferability permits flexible reallocation of the fishing privileges among those who can gain the most value from them which—"

Madam Speaker: Order, please, the hon. member should ask a question, not quote at such length.

Mr. Miller: Madam Speaker, has the minister now adopted a policy that will reflect the view of either Levelton or Pearse, and specifically, is he going to maintain the same transferability privileges that exist now, or will some attempt be made to limit transferability and compensate those who have already invested heavily in licences?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the problem with inheriting situations is that you have to live with that realistically and you cannot take ideological stances. In certain provinces licences are not transferable at all. There is no value attached to them. They disappear with the holder. In other provinces they have been the subject of speculation. Dr. Pearse addressed this issue. He will appear before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry tomorrow, and I hope hon. members will have the chance to sound him out on why he came to certain conclusions. I do not think I would want to prejudge his conclusions before I have had the views of Parliament and of the industry, which I hope to have in the next eight or ten days.

REQUEST THAT FISHERMEN BE CONSULTED ON PROPOSED LANDING TAX

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comment that the minister will review the recommendations in the Pearse report. Another recommendation which will impact very heavily on the fishing industry is the attempt by Pearse to overcome those privileges by putting royalties on profits to the private sector so that the public will accrue some benefit.

In view of the difficulty that the fishing industry is experiencing right now in terms of meeting its expenses, I should like to ask the minister whether he will defer, for the time being, at least until he has an opportunity to confer in depth with the industry, any recommendation made by Pearse on a landing tax to fishermen? Will the minister guarantee the fishermen and this House that they will have full consultation before any precipitous step is taken on taxing fish landings to the fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, Madam Speaker, there will be full consultation. Certainly the hon. member would not want me to arrive at a conclusion before these consultations have taken place.

QUERY RESPECTING DETAILS OF PROPOSED CONSULTATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has just said that he would not want the hon. member to arrive at a conclusion until these discussions have taken place. I am speaking now of the interim recommendations of the Pearse report.

I should like to know from the minister how these discussions will take place. For instance, the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union will appear before the committee for a couple of hours, and Dr. Pearse will appear before the committee for an hour or two. What other discussions are taking place?

Concern is growing on the west coast that some of the recommendations of Dr. Pearse may work a very serious hardship on the ordinary people in the fishing industry. I should like to know exactly what the minister means when he refers to consultation.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, surely the hon. member would not want the consultations to take place only in Ottawa. They will take place mainly in the province that is affected, which is British Columbia. That is what has already taken place. My officials have met with representatives of different sectors of the industry, and I will be meeting with representatives of the advisory council which was created by my predecessor. I hope there will be full discussion in these forums. I intend to be in the Prince Rupert area in the middle of December, and again I will meet with groups there.

I encourage full discussion of the report. My worry is that a lot of people are drawing conclusions from the opposition of one group to one recommendation in what is a very broad report. I would hope that everybody would keep an open mind and that we could arrive at conclusions on consensus if possible.

TIMETABLE FOR DISCUSSIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I would remind the minister that a few days ago I asked about Dr. Pearse's report and I point out we all respect Dr. Pearse. I wanted to know what chance there would be for public discussion, and what chance there would be for discussion in front of the committee. The minister indicated that there would be both.

The minister also said that, in view of certain time requirements for the coming season, the government might have to move quickly on some of the recommendations. In general terms I think that is what the minister said.

What we want to know, Madam Speaker, is under what sort of time deadline are we operating. The concern has been brought to us by one group, the minister says. But that group represents an awful lot of individuals, a lot of people and families, and their concerns are very important to them. Under what time limit are we operating?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would have to check the exact words but, as hon. members know, if some decisions are not made before the opening of the season next spring, then obviously there will be a one-year delay before making any changes. The industry advised that, if possible, we should have recommendations from Dr. Pearse early enough to look at them and see if some might be implemented before the 1982 season. That is what I hope to achieve.

ABANDONMENT OF BRANCH LINE FROM ROSEDALE TO EAST COULEE, ALTA.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On October 23, 1981, the western wing of the Canadian Transport Commission ordered that the CNR and CPR, and I quote, "shall abandon the branch line from Rosedale to East Coulee" (8.8 miles)." Under what authority was this order made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission has that authority. After analysing a branch line it can either decide to put an end to it or it can decide to recommend a continuation. The decision is reviewable after five years. The Canadian Transport Commission can also recommend to me that a branch line should be incorporated in the basic network system up to the year 2000 and also that it be included in the branch line rehabilitation program. These are decisions for the minister to make, but the Canadian Transport Commission can make a recommendation.

LEGALITY OF ABANDONMENT ORDER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, since there are millions of tons of coal in the East Coulee area, and Allied Chemicals Canada has a plant on the route, the decision by the CTC is difficult to understand. I would point out to the minister that in 1929 an act was passed by the Parliament of Canada under which Parliament confirmed an agreement between the CPR and the CNR, dated June, 1929, to operate this line "in perpetuity". This statute has never been repealed; it is still on the law books.

Has the CTC the authority to repeal statutes or to make orders contrary to the laws of Canada? I am sure the minister will answer no. Therefore, will the minister review this situation and have the said order rescinded, because it is completely contrary to the statute on the law books of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that the Canadian Transport Commission was aware of that legal document. My honourable friend suggests that I look into the matter further. I will. I cannot, however, commit myself to reversing a decision of the CTC. I am quite sure the CTC took the legal document he referred to into account.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONTRACT FOR USE OF CENTENNIAL TOWERS OFFICE BUILDING IN OTTAWA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The life systems of a rather decrepit building here in Ottawa, Centennial Towers are gradually flickering out, such as the elevators and electrical system. This building is reported to be the latest instrument by which the government can extend its largesse to Robert Campeau, a needy builder of Liberal persuasion. Is the Minister of Public Works conversant with this proposed give-away arrangement? If so, will the minister tell the House what the proposed value is of the package to Mr. Campeau? I have heard $40 million or $50 million, for a building worth $5 million or $6 million.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that the Department of Public Works is negotiating with the Campeau Corporation on the continued use of the building. The negotiations will take into account any necessary changes that are required if the building continues to be used for government purposes.

I do not have the particulars of the cost of bringing the building up to government standards or to local standards. But any such contract, as I am sure the honourable member knows from previous experience, would have to be open to full scrutiny and scrutinized by Treasury Board as well.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): That is what worries me, Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: —when I look at les Terrasses de la Chaudière and other of these past horror stories involving taxpayers' money. I understand that the proposed cost of renovations will be about $15 million, which costs will probably be recovered by Mr. Campeau in blended payments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Since there are approximately 250,000 square feet of unused space in the Portage building, why is there such a great necessity to extend government largesse to Mr. Campeau? Is he too affected by this budget to that extent?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I suppose the gentleman to whom the hon. member has referred as an officer of a corporation is subject to any general change in the budget that affects any corporation in Canada. In so far as the use of government buildings both in Hull and Ottawa is concerned, I can advise the hon. gentleman that, after a review of the accommodation needs of the various ministries in the government during the last year, a number are being studied for use in Ottawa and Hull. Announcements will probably be made within the next few months.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF LAND EXPROPRIATED FOR MIRABEL AIRPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have some questions for the Minister of Public Works. I hope the minister will read page 5322 of Hansard for December 4, 1980. At that time I asked the minister about some 79,000 acres of Mirabel peripheral lands. The minister could not make up his mind then, and said that the cabinet document that had been leaked was going before a committee of the government last December 12. The industrial plans and parks have proved to be a complete failure and, by admission of the government's own internal review, the land is deteriorating.

Several groups joined forces last week, including 400 farmers who want to continue farming. Is the government now willing to respond to those farmers and other residents and, is it prepared to return that land to these people? The farmers are prepared to pay the price they received for this land so they can regain their livelihood and the region can begin to rebuild its economy—

An hon. Member: Question, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We only have until three o'clock, Les.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure that with the research the hon. member has directed to this problem he will have seen that the government has set up a land corporation which is comprised of representatives who were suggested to us by various local organizations, including the local university. That corporation has been receiving submissions over the last few months, not only from farmers but from businesses, the local council, and all interested parties. A plan has been prepared and this will be presented to cabinet within the next two weeks.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT DELAY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the minister still cannot make up his mind. His own report states that local residents have suffered significant losses due to destabilization of the area. Why will the government not take immediate action, especially when studies on the situation, signed by the minister, recommend that the land be returned? These studies were completed over a year ago, the farmers are willing to pay for the land, and community leaders in the area say the delay is having a damaging effect. What is the government waiting for? Why is it waiting for this commission headed by one Jean-Pierre Goyer?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would like the hon. gentleman to have his researcher get my answer to the question he asked me last year. My answer was to the effect that was because of its impact on the local community and our wishes, as a government, to be sensitive to the local needs and designs of that plan, that we asked for that kind of advice. I direct the hon. member to the answer I made last year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR MISSILES IN EUROPE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week President Reagan made a speech that has been hailed as the most important speech of his presidency. In it he said that the United States would cancel plans to deploy new intermediate range nuclear missiles in Europe if the Soviet Union would dismantle comparable weapons trained on Europe. This initiative has been endorsed by NATO.

What action has the Canadian government taken to press the Soviet Union to respond with a positive, constructive proposal so that a favourable international climate can be established before arms negotiations begin next week in Geneva?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the initiative which President Reagan announced last week in general terms had been discussed with the NATO allies. We were and are fully in support of it. I have said publicly that I hoped the Soviet Union will respond. But before we could take steps of any kind, the general response from the Soviet Union tended to be an unfavourable one. We are consulting with our NATO allies as to the best form of pressure or demarche which collectively we can take.

I know the hon. gentleman realizes that talks between the Soviet Union and the United States will be commencing very shortly in Geneva. I do not know how much likelihood there is that we could influence the Soviet Union before that time, but I can assure him that we will be considering that question fully.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SUB-COMMITTEE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Canadian government establish a parliamentary sub-committee on disarmament so that the views of the public and parliamentarians can be gathered on the arms race, a race which is now costing in excess of $500 billion a year, and so that recommendations be made to the government prior to the United Nations special session on disarmament next June?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would not recommend to my colleague, the government House leader, that we establish a special committee on disarmament. But I have offered to give the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence an order of reference on this subject. As I understand it, they chose the reference on Latin America and the Caribbean last year over this one. Nevertheless my offer still stands, and I am prepared to do my best to persuade the House leader at any time to give a reference to the standing committee on the subject.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

EXPORT FINANCE CORPORATION OF CANADA

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Export Finance Corporation of Canada Ltd. was federally incorporated on June 4, 1959, under a special act of Parliament. Would the minister inform this House on the success or failure of this corporation in meeting its objectives in financing and facilitating exports and imports?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course it is not a simple matter to determine a corporation's ability or inability to achieve its objectives. As was mentioned by the hon. member this corporation was incorporated under a special act of Parliament, and therefore there is no legal or even political obligation that would allow us to make sure whether or not it is meeting its objectives successfully.

POINTS OF ORDER

MISS JEWETT—DISARMAMENT—REPLY OF MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) did not intend to mislead the House in his last answer, but in fact he did. As a member of the steering committee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, let me say there was no request from the minister that we should look into the question of disarmament. Indeed, we could have had a subcommittee on disarmament at the same time and—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I want to inform the House that I communicated with the chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, I believe in writing, to offer him a reference on the subject of disarmament.

MR. PAPROSKI—GREY CUP GAME—REPLY OF MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my point of order refers to the answer the minister in charge of fitness and amateur sport gave to my colleague, the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). He intimated that we on this side of the House when we were in power had gone ahead and had a cocktail party or a bash—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that is not a point of order either.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OBERLE—TELEVISING OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS—LACK OF TRANSLATION FACILITIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question of privilege on a matter which affects your jurisdiction over the affairs of the House of Commons.

As you know, resulting from a decision by the House of Commons to telecast the proceedings in the House most cable companies throughout the country are carrying the question period and some of the debates live. Unfortunately it has not been decided that the official translation, which is available to us in the House in a very efficient manner, should be made available in the same way to the cable companies; in other words, the debates are not simultaneously translated as they are broadcast in both English and in French.

I know this is a matter of privilege to all hon. members and people throughout the country, and I am wondering if you, Madam Speaker, would undertake to arrange for the translation to be carried by all cable companies that subscribe to the service.

Madam Speaker: My impression is that all the deliberations of this House are simultaneously translated. However, if the hon. member knows of cases where that does not happen, I will be glad to look into it and I thank the hon. member for bringing this to my attention.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, even in the capital city Skyline Cablevision does not offer a translation with the service.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in his point of order, the hon. member who is leaving the chamber mentioned that Skyline Cablevision Ltd. does not broadcast the simultaneous translation of the proceedings of the House of Commons. As you know, in the City of Ottawa there are two cablevision companies who each have their own territory. In one part of Ottawa we do get the simultaneous translation and in the other the proceedings are broadcast as they take place on the floor of the House.

The hon. member has expressed an opinion. I beg to disagree with him, because for a francophone living, for instance in that part of Ottawa where Skyline Cablevision Ltd. rebroadcasts the proceedings, it is extremely annoying to have to listen to the English translation of what is said in French by the French-speaking members in this House. So I do not think it is a bad idea to have a few cable companies that merely rebroadcast the proceedings of the House in the language in which they actually take place, because otherwise, in the City of Ottawa, not a single francophone could watch the proceedings of the House of Commons in French, because there would always be either an English translation or the proceedings in English. So I feel the situation is quite satisfactory as it is now and that there is no cause for complaint.

Madam Speaker: In fact, one could say that the proceedings of the House of Commons can be heard in three languages: French, English and the language of the proceedings of the House of Commons. And I thought the hon. member was referring to that situation. I shall look into it, but I think there is something to be said for this.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,237, 2,246, 2,581, 3,058, 3,059, 3,255 and 3,263.

POSITIONS IN PORT AUTHORITIES

Question No. 2,237—Mr. Crosby:

1. What offices or positions are included in the port authorities for the port of (a) Halifax (b) Montreal (c) Saint John and what is the level of compensation in each case?

2. In 1980, what amount was paid to the holder of an office in the port authorities for the port of (a) Halifax (b) Montreal (c) Saint John?

3. What is the level of compensation for 1981 and is this an increase from 1980?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1. The following are the offices or positions included in the port authority for the port of: (a) Halifax: chairman, vice-chairman, and members; (b) Montreal: chairman, vice-chairman, and members; (c) Saint John: chairman, vice-chairman (1980), and members.

See also answer to 3 below.

2. (a) Halifax:

Chairman	none (He received $12,000 in his post as port chief executive officer)
Vice-chairman	$2,000 plus $200 per diem meeting fee
Members	$1,500 plus $200 per diem meeting fee

(b) Montreal:

Chairman	none (He received $15,000 in his post as port chief executive officer)
Vice-chairman	$3,500 plus $200 per diem meeting fee
Members	$3,000 plus $200 per diem meeting fee

(c) Saint John:

Chairman	$3,500 plus $200 per diem meeting fee
Vice-chairman	$2,000 plus $200 per diem meeting fee

Members	$1,500 plus $200 per diem meeting fee

N.B.: In Halifax and Montreal, the port chief executive officer also held the post of chairman. It is NHB policy that the compensation which is received as port chief executive officer includes the remuneration which would have been received if he/she was port authority chairman only.

3. The level of compensation in 1981 is the same as in 1980 (see 2 above). In Montreal, the chairman is no longer concurrently port chief executive officer, and therefore receives standard chairman's compensation of $5,000 plus $200 per diem meeting fee.

PORT AUTHORITY APPOINTMENTS

Question No. 2,246—Mr. Crosby:

1. What is the policy of the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board with respect to appointments to port authorities in the port of (a) Montreal (b) Halifax (c) Saint John?

2. Does the policy ensure representation of organized labour and shippers and other users of the ports on the port authorities?

3. Who or which authority is responsible for the establishment of tariff rates and charges on cargo?

4. Do the port authorities for the port of (a) Montreal (b) Halifax (c) Saint John perform a function with respect to the establishment of tariff rates and charges applicable to cargo and traffic through the ports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1. The policy of the Minister of Transport with respect to appointments to port authorities in the ports of Montreal, Halifax and Saint John is to select and appoint, at pleasure for one calendar year, members who represent a broad cross-section of the business, shipping, industrial and labour sectors in the communities concerned.

2. See answer to part 1 above.

3. The National Harbours Board.

4. No.

MR. JEAN-NOËL TREMBLAY

Question No. 2,581—Mr. Cossitt:

Were public funds ever paid to Mr. Jean-Noël Tremblay by the Department of Supply and Services or by any other branch of government and, if so, for which positions and on what dates did he hold the positions?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Communications and Energy, Mines and Resources as follows: Mr. Jean-Noël Tremblay was awarded two contracts for consulting services: one for the period November 1, 1977 to June 30, 1978, $20,000; the other for the period July 1, 1978 to June 30, 1979, $19,166.59; the former contract was issued by the Department of Communications, the latter by the Department of Supply and Services for the Department of Communications.

See EMR's reply to question No. 5 tabled February 24, 1981.

Order Paper Questions

DVA—CLIENTS FOR HEALTH CARE TRIAL PERIODS

Question No. 3,058—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.47 of the 1980 report of the Auditor General, has the Department of Veterans Affairs developed criteria for deciding which veteran clients should be selected for future health care trial periods?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The initial trial period of the proposed health care policy which took place between November, 1979 and the summer of 1980 was undertaken to enable the health care teams to gain experience in the process of the program while at the same time providing services to clients in need of support. During that period judgments as to who were in need were largely medical and were made on an individual basis. It is not envisaged at this time that further health care trial periods will be held.

HOME SUPPORT PROGRAMS

Question No. 3,059—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to section 10.48 of the 1980 report of the Auditor General, was a federal-provincial agreement reached with respect to home support programs and (a) if so, what are the terms and on what date will it be implemented (b) if not, what attempts are currently being made to reach one?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The Auditor General's observations were based on a pilot project designed to test the operation of the aging veterans program. As a result of this testing, Veterans Affairs accepts the health care assessment of the province, and the doctor's report used by provincial authorities. There is, therefore, no requirement for federal-provincial agreements on this matter.

COST OF ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Question No. 3,255—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the cost to the taxpayer (a) if the government answers a question on the Order Paper within two weeks to a month (b) if questions remain on the Order Paper for periods of six months to five years?

2. For what reason does the government not answer all questions within approximately one month of their appearance on the Order Paper?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The only additional cost would be the printing of the question on the Order Paper for as long as it remains unanswered.

2. Often the information requested in questions requires considerable research. When compiled, it must be translated into the other official language. The government admits that it is often difficult to persuade officials to deal with these matters in an expeditious manner when some hon. members quite clearly overload the system with questions seeking information readily available by telephone or letter.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION STAFF CUTS

Question No. 3,263—Mr. Howie:

Did the Canadian Pension Commission order staff cuts in their district offices across Canada and, if so (a) for what reason is this action being taken at this time (b) will this action impair attempts to speed up consideration of veterans' claims with respect to disability pensions?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Cook: Madam Speaker, I rise in reference to the questions being answered. Question No. 2,347 was asked on April 3 of this year. The parliamentary secretary may be interested in knowing why the question was asked. There is a distinct possibility that the waterlot leases in Burrard Inlet are so unfair and so totally different from one waterlot to another that I can only presume that is the reason the question has not been answered. Could the parliamentary secretary please investigate and perhaps give me the answer?

Mr. Smith: I will take note of the hon. member's representation, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed from Friday, November 20, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités. Cruauté

19. (1) Chacun a le droit d'employer le français ou l'anglais dans toutes les affaires dont sont saisis les tribunaux établis par le Parlement et dans tous les actes de procédure qui en découlent.

Procédures devant les tribunaux du Nouveau-Brunswick

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

(2) Le public a, au Nouveau-Brunswick, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec tout bureau des institutions de la législature ou du gouvernement ou pour en recevoir les services.

Continuation of existing constitutional provisions

21. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any right, privilege or obligation with respect to the English and French languages, or either of them, that exists or is continued by virtue of any other provision of the Constitution of Canada.

21. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet, en ce qui a trait à la langue française ou anglaise ou à ces deux langues, de porter atteinte aux droits, privilèges ou obligations qui existent ou sont maintenus aux termes d'une autre disposition de la Constitution du Canada.

Maintien en vigueur de certaines dispositions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province,

ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Dispositions générales

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

Madam Speaker: Just before we proceed, I want to tell the House that I have examined the amendment proposed by the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), and I find it to be in order. I am prepared to read it to the House.

An hon. Member: Dispense.

Madam Speaker: Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The right hon. member for Yellowhead, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, moves:

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

● (1510)

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, when we broke off debate on Friday I had indicated that I was happy to read into the record a telex from the Premier of Ontario with regard to that province's view of Section 28 and the protection in the charter for the treaty rights of our native people. It is amazing, sometimes, what happens over a weekend. In a way, I am rather happy to have had the break in the middle of my speech since I am equally proud to put into the record today what the attorney general of Ontario had to say over the weekend about Section 28. It has now been admitted by the attorney general of Ontario and the Premier of New Brunswick that the resolution before this House to make Section 28 subject to the override provisions was never discussed prior to the creation of the resolution and its introduction in this House. It was not on the table, and now that it is public I hope it will allow us to discuss it at length, as we proceed in this debate on that issue, precisely because of the importance that has been attached by members opposite, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), to the need to preserve the accord without amendment.

Aside from the fact that there are a number of amendments in the resolution that are, in fact, outside of what was discussed leading up to the November 5 accord, it is now becoming more clear that the amendment to Section 28, which is being used as a block by members opposite to the amendment which my leader has moved, was in fact also brought in after the accord was drawn. As this becomes more clear, I hope we will recognize the simple justice that returning to Section 28 will bring.

Before I continue my remarks which I started last week, I might also indicate my sadness, after listening to my Prime Minister—and I say that advisedly and only as a citizen—returning to the shotgun diplomacy style. I think most members of this House realize that in the middle of some very complex behind-the-scenes negotiations to try to bring everybody onside concerning the amendment to Section 28, as well as amendments to the rest of the charter which my leader has proposed, including what will become clearer—if it is not now public—about conversations with several people in the province of Quebec, that it is frustrating, using that word advisedly, to come back to this house in Ottawa to hear the Prime Minister indicate that as long as the amendment is decided on by tomorrow night, it is all right. That is another guillotine, Mr. Speaker.

At this point in the debate, it is worth reminding ourselves that it was this same Prime Minister who wished to impose this same guillotine and tried to impose it last year. It is the same Prime Minister who tries to impose this guillotine on these clauses who did not include these rights in the original document presented to the House of Commons. It is the same Prime Minister who fought the committee which tried to put these rights in. The Prime Minister is now arguing that these rights are not there because of the premiers whom he did not want to meet with in the first place.

It surely should be clear by now that the reasons for the amendments in the resolution relating to aboriginal rights, treaty rights and to women's rights are that they were taken out, apparently, in the meetings. It takes two to agree. Therefore, all attempts to portray the Premiers as the villains I hope will be rejected by the general public, because it took the Prime Minister of Canada to agree to remove those rights in order for the accord to get to this House of Commons. Let us not forget that.

As we continue this debate, which as I indicated I hope will not be unnecessarily long, I would like to make some general comments and then return to the specific matter of our amendments. I should also point out in that respect that as a Canadian, I believe that any discussions this week which will help improve this charter can only be regarded as helpful by all of us in this House. I would like it to be clear on the record that if it requires more time in the back room to sort these problems out, I do not believe there is one member on this side of the House who is not prepared to see the debate lifted out of this House so we can continue with the budget. I would like to make that very clear at this time.

There will be an attempt made by some to argue that, because some of us are trying to improve the charter, we regard the resolution and its improvement as the priority of the Conservative Party. The priority of Canadians today is to get people back to work. In this country, the right to a job is equally important as the right to equality. If it is necessary for us to break off this debate so we may conclude the budget debate, which was the position put forward by our House leader last week, and since we have had no finality yet as to when we would be able to conclude the budget which we would like to see concluded as soon as possible, I am sure members on this side would not only support that but would regard concluding our economic package as very important.

I would like to refute a current view about what we have been through in the last year to 15 months. I think that just as important as to note the issues that our party is moving amendments on—which I will come to later—in that now that we have all had the direct experience of the difficulties of constitution-writing in our diverse federal state, this experience should give us cause to marvel at and be grateful for the sagacity and capacity of the fathers of our nationhood who more than 100 years ago had the ability to craft what until now has been the backbone of our written Constitution, the BNA Act.

Now that we may be so close to a totally made-in-Canada Constitution, it seems fitting to note that those who hold to the view that for all those years we have been fundamentally flawed, that we have been somehow eunuched as a nation, are wrong. It is precisely because of the wisdom of our forefathers that the exact opposite is true. Because of that wisdom, we have had a package of laws, conventions and co-operation which has allowed us to live together as well as we have while we have sought a consensus on how to take the next step, a consensus which reflects our essence as a federation, a consensus which in itself contains the way to amend our constitutional package in future in line with the reality and spirit of our federalism.

Some have argued that federalism could not work, that more meetings last year would not help to resolve the impasse, and that we could not wait any longer and our nationhood demanded severe unilateral action. When our party undertook to fight such radical unilateralism, a fight initiated by a decision which took guts and courage and a commitment to principle by the leader of our party, a decision in keeping with the traditional Canadian way of doing things—and I hope more Canadians will come to see these qualities as the highest qualification for the highest office in this land—there were some, notably those who think the world can best be governed through a newspaper column rather than through the melee of politics, who thought we must either be kidding or that we were crazy, that we were suicidal or bent on self-destruction.

Time and the Supreme Court have shown the opposite. Time has shown that compromises can be found. Time has shown that consensus and agreement is possible if one wants it and is willing to work for it. Time, even since the first ministers' meeting and the accord which resulted from it, has shown that even further agreement is possible. I am referring to the ongoing attempts to protect the equality of women and men from the override provisions of Section 33 and of the hard work toward that end by so many women and some men in the last few days.

I mean no offence to others involved in those conversations if I mention in this House again the telegram that came from the Hon. John Buchanan of Nova Scotia as a direct result of the intense efforts of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: When our party fought for more time last fall and last winter, it was because we believe our underlying constitutional law, conventions and practice are fundamentally sound enough that we could afford to take the time to make change properly and get it right the first time, rather than rush ahead with who knows what possibly disastrous consequences. We thought that was, at the very least, what had been promised Quebecers in the spring of 1980, particularly federalists in the province of Quebec.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we still believe this, and that is why it is important to amend Clause 39 so that a province wishing to retain the right to provide services in any area now under provincial jurisdiction will receive financial assistance if in the future this field of jurisdiction is transferred from the provinces to the federal government by constitutional amendment. It is not only fair and equitable that a province which continues to provide services receive reasonable compensation from Ottawa if the federal government provides and pays for these services in other provinces, but the omission of such a reasonable clause was probably the first of the three reasons mentioned why the Quebec government did not sign the agreement.

[English]

The amendment has the support of at least the eight provinces which originally dissented, including Quebec, and appears to be opposed only by the government here. Not only is it just, therefore, but its adoption by this House is critical if we are serious about trying to bring at least the people of Quebec into this historic moment.

[Translation]

Whatever we might think about the sincerity of the commitment to federalism of the Premier of Quebec, I cannot overemphasize to those opposite the true fairness of the amendment which the Quebec premier as well as the other premiers consider so important. I cannot believe that anyone would seriously consider not offering an olive branch to the Quebec people when this is not only possible, but has the added advantage of strengthening the resolution without diminishing the support of the rest of the provinces.

[English]

Not only, therefore, is it just and reasonable, but it must be pointed out that, contrary to the views expressed last week by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), who argued that the amendment would somehow protect rich provinces which would be able to keep out socially beneficial programs, in fact it will do exactly the opposite. So that it is clear for those who listen or read Hansard, what the amendment says is that in the case of a constitutional amendment—in other words, an amendment which in future has the support of at least seven provinces, meaning that a majority of the provinces will already have decided that a program should be undertaken—contrary to the view of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in the circumstance where a province stays out it should be entitled to the right to be paid. The reason for that is to protect provinces which will be put in the position, without such protection, of having to cast votes at a constitutional conference without protection from whose who are better off than they are. That surely is the spirit of federalism.

I mentioned earlier that it is critical that Section 28 apply without limitations—if hon. members will excuse my view of this thing—so that men will at long last be guaranteed equal treatment with women under the law. Without that change let us be absolutely clear that the resolution would be deeply and fundamentally flawed, and without that change at least some will argue that the resolution will not deserve our support. Some will say that in addition to that change the compromise allowing legislatures to override, at least temporarily, court decisions which appear in a legislature's view to be inappropriate also eliminates a flaw.

When I started on Friday I made reference to my earlier experience at the municipal level with the Toronto Centre plan and the view of one critic that it must be good because it equally displeased everybody. I think that might be exactly true regarding the override provisions, but this compromise is typically and indisputably Canadian. Those who favour parliamentary supremacy will be able to say that that has been preserved, and perhaps it has been. Those who prefer the coded or entrenched protection of our individual rights will be able to say that that has been achieved, or almost so, and that political pressure will prevent too frequent use of the override. Like the Toronto plan, in other words, the change will equally displease everybody.

This is a difficult issue because it is an attempt to marry two important federalist principles. One is that there should be no constitutional change without the consent of those affected; in other words, our provinces. The other is a desire to separate from government some of our freedoms for which there is in the law no final protection today because Parliaments may do what they wish.

I know my own view, and it is this. When we—and I—argued for the right of the provinces to consent, it never occurred to me that the answer the provinces would find would be the right to override basic freedoms. I would much have preferred, and would still prefer, a negotiated and, if necessary, an abbreviated list of individual freedoms agreed to by the provinces and by the federal government—thereby preserving the Canadian way—adopted by the governments as binding on themselves and therefore not subject to being overriden.

I believe government has now become so big that relying on political pressure to prevent a government from taking away our individual rights—and in this context I think particularly of the government opposite—is naive. Whether wiser negotiation by the federal government or a step by step approach moving simply to patriate with an agreed amending formula would have produced a happier result in this regard appears now to be a question for the historians, but one cannot help but wonder: what if?

If an important compromise has been reached on the charter, therefore, there nevertheless remain other flaws which should, and I hope will, be corrected. Here I think particularly of the refusal of too many governments and too many parties to include the right to property, a right which most Canadians regard as fundamental to their wellbeing. There is one other major flaw which can be corrected before this document is passed, since I am persuaded that the odds for getting property included are not very large. I am persuaded of that by those who are smiling at me; I sat and watched the neosocialists and the true socialists get together last year to prevent the inclusion of property, and I suspect they have not changed their view on that one bit.

One other major flaw that can and should be corrected before passage of this resolution is the resolution's failure to recognize native and aboriginal rights and treaty rights. Some will argue that too many provinces object to the inclusion of the old Section 34, although I am glad to see that that number shrinks every day. I repeat that it would be a shame if the personal timetable for this document of the Prime Minister were to prevent the movement, which appears to be growing, toward recognition of these rights from achieving its proper fruition.

Some will argue that too many provinces object to the inclusion of the old Section 34, which in fact only recognizes that treaties were signed and rights were created, as our common law has made so clear. To them and to those provinces I only say that the rights created by the Crown—which we now regard as our Queen—in treaties with our first peoples predate the provinces themselves and, while the provinces have legitimate concerns with regard to the interpretation of those treaties, the desire of some that our constitutional law not recognize that those rights exist is both impractical, given existing court decisions, and, to put a kind face on it, less than noble. Just as this Parliament had a duty to protect the legitimate involvement of the provinces themselves in the development of a Canadian constitutional consensus, so this Parliament and other Parliaments have a duty to protect the treaty rights of those whose rights were created even before the rights of our Parliament were created.

I said I would not speak for very long today. It is not the wish of those on this side, as we will be indicating throughout, to delay unduly conclusion of the matter. It certainly is not mine. I indicated earlier I would prefer, if necessary, that we revert to the budget. However, I want in closing to deal with one or two matters.

I specifically refer to the argument being made by hon. members opposite, notably the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, who in their comments on Friday said that no amendments were possible because that would violate the spirit of the accord. Second, and this caused me the greatest problem, the phrase was used by the Minister of Justice on behalf of his government that "we must keep our word with the provinces". Suffice it to say that would be the first time in the entire history of the government that it kept its word on anything.

I am therefore loath to accept the argument from people who gave us wage and price controls, promised us no oil increases and said if there were they would quit if elected, that they are supposed to do what is asked of them because they wish to honour their word. On the other hand, it is possible that a lesson may be learned over there—that when they give their word, they should honour it. Maybe that lesson will be learned.

I now want to deal with the more important question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bosley: Sometimes the other side does react. I am more than happy to be part of a group that makes them respond to concerns about keeping their word. Let me repeat to the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) that I hope that is something his party learns.

In closing, let me return briefly to the more important issue, the issue of moving amendments. The resolution adds matters outside the accord, notably the section applying what is called the Canada clauses on minority language rights. That would imply to me, given the argument that one cannot introduce amendments not described in the accord, that the government may introduce amendments or modify the accord but no one else may.

I suggest, as members from this side will be continually suggesting, that to try and say to members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition that they have no role to play in trying to improve a process or resolution is ludicrous. This document, as we will continue to indicate until it is corrected, is fundamentally flawed.

To ask members of the House of Commons in 1981 to support a document which not only does not recognize treaty and aboriginal rights but attempts to deny the fundamental justice that every Canadian subscribes to, namely the equality of our people, be they men or women, are so far behind the times that I guess if it were not actually before us, I would have said there was not a hope in heck that we would see it.

As I said at the beginning, this is historic; this is constitutional renewal. If we are going to go this route and if we are to proceed, it is to me and many member of my party critical that we honour the promises we made in the referendum in 1980. It is critical that we honour the expectations of Canadians and honour the traditions of the original writers of our constitutional law. Now that we are making change, because of the strength they gave to this country all those years, let us honour their commitment to Canada and to the people of Canada today and make sure we do it right with justice and honour the first time.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, members of this House need not be reminded by me of the historical significance of this debate to which the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) just made reference, nor of the remarkable consensus that has been forged between the diverse interests which are the very nature of Canada and, of course, of the importance of enshrining in our Constitution a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Nor need I remind hon. members of the compromises and the disappointments that compromises necessarily entail in order to reach a consensus. I suggest those kinds of compromises are necessary for the greater good consensus can bring.

The hon. member for Don Valley West mentioned the issue of sexual equality and aboriginal rights. These issues are very much alive, alive to the point where some members seem to suggest that they may vote against this resolution on that account. I have received representations from members of my constituency of St. Henri-Westmount requesting me to vote against the resolution on those grounds.

Let us all hope that these matters will be resolved before the resolution leaves this House. In any event, to those in the House who have negative feelings about the resolution on that account and to those members of the community who are not directly present here but who are asking us to reject the resolution on that account, I ask them to reflect upon the following.

What would be accomplished by defeating this resolution? Would a defeat of the resolution in its present form be a victory for sexual equality? Would a defeat in any way enhance the aboriginal rights to which the hon. member for Don Valley West just made reference? Would it accomplish anything other than to rekindle the constitutional haggling and debate which has lingered on for so many years? I ask hon. members to bear in mind that this resolution before us prejudices no one. It gives rights. It takes nothing away, it only adds. Most importantly, it adds a means of accomplishing further constitutional change here in Canada. This resolution provides Canadians with the tools to finish the job, to ensure that the charter is improved to meet the legitimate concerns and demands of those who may require further protection.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, by voting against the resolution just because of a few shortcomings, we may very well undo all that has been achieved up to now, and raise the same feelings of bitterness again, and we shall not be helping those individuals and groups who failed to obtain what they wanted and hoped to obtain through the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They have not won yet, Mr. Speaker, but they have not lost. Perhaps such members who intend to vote against the resolution will indeed do so, safe in the knowledge that the resolution will be passed just the same, because enough fellow members will act responsibly to support a measure that is in the best interests of all Canadians, including those they claim to protect.

[English]

I suggest that to vote against this resolution because it does not contain enough would be an odd way indeed of advancing the cause of sexual equality or aboriginal rights. In my judgment it would be tantamount to a declaration that if some cannot have everything they want at this point in terms of this resolution, others should have nothing. I know that such is not the spirit or the motive of those who take issue with the resolution, but unfortunately that would be the result. That is what a vote against this resolution would be saying.

Surely it is a selfish gesture to deny the rights the charter contains to Canadians because the charter has certain defects, defects which I am the first to agree we should all strive to correct as soon as the Constitution is patriated from the United Kingdom. But the defects take nothing away. They are omissions. This is the very process of compromise, Mr. Speaker, that the Supreme Court of Canada has told us is an essential element of the constitutional convention. The convention has now been observed.

● (1540)

[Translation]

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a subject of particular interest to English-speaking Quebecers. I have already quoted requests from constituents, asking me to vote against the resolution because of the shortcomings I have just mentioned and described. Many others have begged me not to support the motion because in their view, the language rights of English-speaking Quebec citizens are not adequately protected, compared with the protection given francophones outside Quebec.

[English]

For a moment I should like to discuss the issue of English education rights in the province of Quebec and, more precisely, why I have concluded that it is important, in fact essential, as an English-speaking Quebecer to support the resolution in its present form.

The basic and historic protection in Quebec for English language education derives from Section 93 of the British North America Act. The provision in question guaranteed the right of dissent by a Protestant or Catholic minority, as the case may be, and the concomitant right to establish a separate school board, to pay separate taxes, if you like to effectively establish a separate school system founded on religious distinction. All those rights, of course, continue to exist. There is some authority for the view that language may also have been protected through the provisions of Section 93. That point has never been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada.

I now turn to Section 23 of the resolution before us. What is the effect of that article? It provides that citizens whose mother tongue is French or English can send their children to a school in the language of their mother tongue. That is the provision which I will deal with in a moment in regard to its non-application in the province of Quebec. It also provides that they can send their children to a school of the language in which either parent received his or her education in Canada.

This latter provision of Section 23 has come to be known as the "Canada clause", because it permits complete mobility within Canada by Canadian citizens. All provinces, except the province where my riding is located, have agreed to accept Section 23 in its entirety namely that the maternal language criterion would apply and the parents' language of instruction criterion would also apply.

The acceptance by the other nine provinces is most significant. It ensures protection for the French-speaking minority outside of Quebec which, for the first time in our history, is a major accomplishment. The acceptance of the mother tongue criterion is particularly significant for provinces other than Quebec because in the past there were few French minority language schools. Hence, the maternal language criterion is fundamental to ensuring the ongoing protecting of the French linguistic minority outside of the province of Quebec.

Within Quebec the situation is different. Because of Section 93 which I referred to a moment ago, English-speaking Quebecers have always had their schools. The criterion of the Canada clause provides protection to English-speaking Quebecers and to all citizens of Canada coming to Quebec from other provinces whose father or mother, as the case may be, has taken primary education in English anywhere in Canada.

Clearly the maternal language provision, to which I made reference, would also be beneficial for Quebec. It would protect English speaking Canadians, naturalized citizens coming from other parts of the world, whose children might wish to attend English schools at the primary school level. That is where the maternal language provision would, in my view, be most significant. Unfortunately, for reasons which I will describe in a moment, it will apply in Quebec only when there is authorization either by the National Assembly or by the government of the province. The political reality is that such acceptance is unlikely under the present provincial government. That is the difference between the application of Section 23 in Quebec and its application in the rest of Canada.

Why would we agree to modify the application of Section 23 in the case of the province of Quebec? Why do I, as an English-speaking representative, representing a riding in Quebec with a substantial English-speaking population, agree to support the resolution in its present form? My decision was taken only after weighing the long-term advantages and the disadvantages of the approach which I must say I instinctively and intellectually find most appealing; that is to say, that the clause should be imposed in its entirety. In the rational world of pure theory, Mr. Speaker, that would not only be the logical thing to do but I also suggest in today's world it would be the civilized thing to do.

However, in the real world with which we are confronted today in the province of Quebec, political prudence and wisdom dictate otherwise. We must not win a battle and lose the war. The war against separatism is still being waged. My colleagues from Quebec are convinced that the imposition of the mother tongue provision would be misunderstood, and it would provide substantial ammunition to the separatist movement.

The Canada clause is quite another matter. Mr. Lévesque in 1977, at the conference of first ministers in St. Andrews, offered such an arrangement to each of the other provinces. I understand he reconfirmed that offer the following year in Montreal. The Canada clause derives from an idea of Mr. Lévesque's own creation and the notion of reciprocity within the terms of the Canada clause contemplated by Article 86 of Bill 101. Therefore, the Canada clause is nothing new. This is not a provision to which Mr. Lévesque could take exception on grounds of principle and nor could his separatist followers. Moreover, it also seems to be a provision which enjoys wide acceptance among members of the provincial Liberal Party.

This brings me to my second area of concern. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, we shall have another showdown with Mr. Lévesque and his separatist government before the cloud of uncertainty that hangs over the province has finally dissipated. That showdown may take many forms; it may take the form of a referendum; it may take the form of a provincial election. Mr. Lévesque and his colleagues will undoubtedly choose their time and place. When that hour is upon us, we will need the coalition of support that so successfully carried us to victory in the referendum of 1980. We will need the support of all Quebecers. Though many may be Quebec nationalists in one sense, they are total federalists. Some of these federalists have taken the position that nothing should be imposed on the province which in any way diminishes the powers of the National Assembly. Those representations have been made to me. While I respect those views, I am unwilling to support a constitutional resolution which does not impose the Canada clause as a minimum.

At the other end of the spectrum are those members of the English-speaking community who insist upon the application of Section 23 in its entirety, notwithstanding the fact that such a gesture will give further ammunition to the Parti Québécois, for the reasons I have mentioned.

In addition, such an imposition might divide and irreparably damage the provincial Liberal Party itself. Our provincial colleagues are essential to the coalition which must be forged to defeat effectively and definitively the Parti Québécois and its separatist option. I would hope that the middle ground we have selected will provide a basis for that coalition and that Mr. Ryan, who frankly made a magnificent contribution to the referendum debate and for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration, will close ranks with us. Rather than fracture the ranks of Quebec federalists, I accept a compromise which invokes the Canada clause that adds to the rights of English-speaking Quebecers and will permit all federalists of whatever party stripe or affiliation to come together to fight separatism. Certainly I would prefer to have the mother tongue provisions of the first part of Section 23 apply, but I must also be sensitive to the political realities of the province of Quebec in the 1980s.

In the context of this linguistic issue, let me return to my opening comments. The resolution provides additional protection for the English-speaking minority in Quebec. It imposes the Canada clause, a clause which will guarantee that no further erosion can be made of the rights of the existing English-speaking community and that other English-speaking Canadians are able to come into Quebec and attend English-speaking schools by right. These protections do not now exist.

Further protections may be required, such as the mother tongue protection, but let us place such improvements in the same light as my earlier comments on aboriginal rights and the rights of sexual equality. When the Constitution has been patriated, let us make it a better Constitution than the one contained in the resolution before us. But let us not jeopardize the remarkable progress we have made and the additional rights we have acquired under the Canada clause which will apply in Quebec under this resolution. To vote against a resolution which provides greater protection than now exists for English-speaking Quebecers because there are further rights guaranteed to French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec would be at best a "dog in the manger" attitude. It would surely be the perfect example of the old adage—cutting off one's nose to spite one's face.

[Translation]

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I should also like to discuss the connection between the economy in the province of Quebec and this constitutional debate. It is common knowledge that reaching an agreement with the Quebec government on constitutional matters is practically impossible, if it continues to view the separatist option as its objective. With my colleagues, I feel very frustrated about the situation, not only because I would like to see the constitutional matter settled once and for all, but also because as long as this uncertainty exists, I feel there is very little hope of seeing any improvement in Quebec's economy. That is the connection between the economy and the Constitution which is sometimes forgotten. Quebec is in financial trouble. That was made quite clear by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Jacques Parizeau, last week. And of course, the Quebec government continues to blame all its problems on Canada, a strategy that will probably be used more often in order to camouflage the province's deplorable financial administration. Can one trust a government that is willing to spend millions of dollars of its taxpayers' money to satisfy the nationalistic urges of its ministers and purchase the Asbestos Corporation, a government that at the same time makes cutbacks worth one-half billion dollars in its social services? It is appalling!

Until the Lévesque government stops sowing the seeds of discord in the business world at the provincial, Canadian and international level, Quebec is going to remain in its economic slump. One essential factor that could help us get out of the slump, Mr. Speaker, would be to see the end of this endless debate on the Constitution and have the assurance that Quebec will remain within a strong and united Canada.

In the interest of all Quebecers, Mr. Lévesque should agree to the compromise solutions offered by Mr. Trudeau, but he has refused outright. These compromise solutions, which are supported by the federal members who speak on behalf of the interests and aspirations of Quebecers, are very reasonable and very substantial. For instance, in addition to a lack of financial resources in the province of Quebec, sometimes we also lack human resources. It often happens, Mr. Speaker, that we need engineers, scientific researchers, professors, and high technology experts. We need these people like any country, any province and any region needs them, to better achieve our industrial goals. We cannot do without them. Modernization and high technology industries are absolutely indispensable to the industrial future of our province, if we are to revamp the soft sectors of the economy, such as textiles and footwear. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has just earmarked more than $250 million for that purpose. These people are not going to take the place of Quebecers but they are going to create jobs in new enterprises, more profitable jobs in areas where we can compete at the world level. One example is the aerospace industry, where thanks to federal programs, Quebec already has the infrastructure in Quebec on which we can build further.

That is why Section 23, the so-called Canada clause, is so important. It is important because it says that if a Canadian citizen who comes to the province of Quebec was educated in English, he will have the right to send his children to an English school in the province of Quebec. This minimum protection is indispensable if we are to attract Canadians to Quebec in order to meet the needs that I have just mentioned. As I indicated before in English, Mr. Speaker, because at the St. Andrews' Conference in 1977, Mr. Lévesque himself offered to enter into reciprocal agreements with the provinces that would guarantee schools for the francophone or anglophone minorities, as appropriate, the Canada clause in this resolution will, in fact, be entrenching Mr. Lévesque's own concepts. So, Mr. Speaker, with the Canada clause we have an element that is extremely important to the economy of the province of Quebec.

[English]

In conclusion, if ever there was an example of the whole being greater than the sum of its parts, surely it is this country of ours—Canada. Our Fathers of Confederation had the foresight to pursue that dream, and a record of 114 years bears eloquent testimony to their conviction. Sir John A. Macdonald said the following shortly before his death:

> If I had influence over the minds of the people of Canada, any power over their intellect, I would leave them with the legacy: Whatever you do adhere to the union—we are a great country, and shall become one of the greatest in the universe if we preserve it; we shall sink into insignificance and adversity if we suffer it to be broken. God and nature have made the two Canadas one—let no factious men be allowed to put them asunder.

I believe all hon. members of the House accept Sir John's challenge. We will not let factious men put Canada asunder. We will not permit factious men to rob generations of Canadians of this great legacy.

● (1600)

The adoption of the resolution before the House today, Mr. Speaker, is an important step in ensuring that Canada will remain greater than the sum of its parts for the benefit of all future generations of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, once again it is an honour to participate in the development of our Canadian Constitution. Before I begin my comments, I want to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who, prior to leaving the House this afternoon, indicated to me that he would not be present for my remarks. I understand he is engaged in the activity of telephoning various premiers, an activity which some of us have also engaged in over the last days, weeks and months. I can appreciate the work that lies before him today.

One hundred and sixteen years ago, the provincial Parliament of Canada engaged in a debate on the confederation of the British North American colonies. While it was the practical men such as Macdonald, Cartier, Brown and Galt who outlined the immediate advantages of the confederation scheme, it was Thomas D'Arcy McGee who outlined the general principle which was to be the foundation of the new nation. He said:

> There is something in the frequent, fond recurrence of mankind to the federal principle, amongst the freest peoples, in their best times and worst dangers, which leads me to believe that it has a very deep hold in human nature itself—an excellent basis for a government to have.

In the one hundred and fourteenth year of the confederation which those men helped to create, Canadians have debated this same cornerstone of the Canadian nation—the federal principle.

On one side there have been those who have grown impatient with the federal process and who believed that federalism no longer worked. They felt that the merits of such measures as an entrenched charter of rights or a clarification of resource jurisdiction justified a departure from the Canadian tradition of seeking compromise and consensus on major constitutional issues.

On the other side there have been those who have fought for the maintenance of the federal principle. We believed that unilateral action was based on a false premise: that the federal system no longer worked and that progress could not be reached by compromise and consensus. We rejected that attitude completely.

On October 2, 1980 the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) recognized that the government's constitutional proposal offended the federal principle. Since that time, under his direction, the federal Progressive Conservative Party has fought the government at every step to ensure that the federal system would be protected. We were among those who believed that the federal system still could work if all our political leaders had the will to make it work.

On November 2 of this year, almost one year after the government's original deadline for debate on its unilateral action, an event occurred for which those of us who defended the federal principle had fought long and hard. Eleven political leaders of Canada who both represented and reflected the diversity of Canada met to discuss the constitutional resolution.

This meeting was made possible by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada that the government's original plans were unconstitutional. It is the conclusion of that meeting that we are discussing today. That decision occurred before the government's proposals were rushed off to Great Britain only because our party, under our leader, fought a long parliamentary battle last spring. Many Canadians may have forgotten that at that time we were told by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that we were wasting the taxpayers' money and that we should get on with the job, although it was a position that he had supported earlier.

In spite of it all, we remained determined to fight for the right of the Supreme Court of Canada to render its decision. We remained hopeful that Canada's first ministers would use the opportunity which we had provided them to meet once more.

On November 2 the first ministers did use that opportunity. And on November 5, Canada's political leaders restored our faith in the federal system. They proved that they could put aside their personal, political and sectional interests to reach a compromise for all Canadians. I suggest to hon. members that the same spirit must prevail in this House as well.

In defending the Canadian federal tradition of consensus, we were often accused of being naive or of failing to support such worthwhile measures as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But we retained our faith in the nation, in the principle of federalism and in Canada's political leaders. And in the end, I believe we and all Canadians who held that view have been rewarded for that faith.

What, then, is the resolution before us and how does it compare to the old resolution? I believe that Canadians have been rewarded by a new constitutional resolution which is dramatically different from the one which we debated last fall, winter and through the spring.

When speaking in those debates, I and other members of my party outlined four main objections to the government's proposal. Our primary objection was to the unilateral action of the federal government. The resolution before this Parliament today has the support of ten Canadian governments. It represents the result of compromises on all sides. As a result, Canadians will have a truly Canadian Constitution made in Canada through the Canadian tradition of consensus.

We also objected to the interim amending formula which would have subjected Canada to the tyranny of unanimity for several years. We believed such a complicated formula was unnecessary because agreement could be reached on a permanent way to amend the Constitution in the future if the federal and provincial governments met once more to discuss it.

The new resolution contains no interim amending formula. We must ask why that is so. It is because the agreement which we always believed was possible was reached.

The old resolution also had a permanent amending formula to which we objected. The outdated Victorian formula did not conform to the reality of the Canada of today nor, I suggest to hon. members, to the Canada of tomorrow. It did not treat the provinces equally and it provided central Canada with a permanent veto.

Since October 2 of last year, our party maintained that the so-called Vancouver consensus amending formula represented the reasonable basis for an agreement among all governments. The Vancouver formula had the advantages of treating provinces as equals and of being flexible while still protecting the diversity of Canada.

It is this formula, as adapted through intergovernmental co-operation, which is contained in the present resolution. I say to all hon. members that it was that amending formula, one which created different classes of provinces and therefore, by extension, different classes of citizens in Canada, that we fought so hard to have removed from the resolution. Those of us who do not come from central Canada felt it was time not only that we be given equal rights, but that we also be given the responsibility of contributing to the country on an equal basis.

Among the government's original proposals there was one feature which we regarded as highly dangerous and divisive. That was the referendum provision, controlled entirely by the federal government, which was open to potential abuse and would have created needless strife within the country. There are those who say it is the ultimate exercise of democracy, but if we look at the old resolution we will see that the manner in which it could be used would have led to division, strife and rancour rather than agreement. Canadians did not want a Constitution which might pit region against region and neighbour against neighbour. Canadians needed and wanted a Constitution which would unite them.

There is no provision for a permanent referendum anywhere in the present resolution. Canada's political leaders have indicated in their wisdom that such a dangerous and divisive mechanism, a provision which like unilateral action reflected a distrust of the federal principle, was unnecessary.

Throughout the debate on the old resolution, our party offered a number of compromises which would have eliminated our major objections. But most of all, we asked that all our governments return to the bargaining table to discuss the constitutional proposals. When they finally did, Canada's governments removed the most objectionable sections from the old resolution and, I believe, crafted a completely new document of which Canadians should be proud.

The Constitution agreement reached by ten Canadian governments and opposition parties in this House produced a Charter of Rights and Freedoms in which all Canadians should take much pride.

The charter of Rights and Freedoms before the House today contains all the essential features which were developed by the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, with exceptions that I will come to later, in response to the representations of thousands of Canadians. Today those representations are crafted in a document which will enable the courts, Parliament and the legislatures actively to protect the rights of all Canadians.

• (1610)

The premiers' particular contribution was to introduce the concept of a legislative override. This is an important innovation which will strengthen the effectiveness of the charter of Rights and Freedoms. I think it is important that Canadians understand this innovation, particularly because some people are suggesting that this innovation has produced a "watered down" Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

No country in the world, not even Canada, enjoys a system which could perfectly guarantee our rights. The Parliament and legislatures of Canada are not perfect. They have done injustices to individuals and minority groups. But the Supreme Court of Canada is not infallible either. It is equally capable of making mistakes and doing an injustice to Canadians. In an imperfect world Canadians must choose between frail human institutions and decide which should hold the final authority.

A legislative override leaves the final authority, and only the final authority, with the people's elected representatives. You might then ask how that would work. Suppose a future Supreme Court decided that provincial legislation allowing prayers in public schools violated the charter, and specifically the freedom of religion provisions? A provincial legislature would have to decide whether this legislation was so important and so popular that it should still be enacted. It might feel that the court had misinterpreted the intentions of those who drafted the Charter of Rights and Freedoms or the popular will of the people.

Having decided that the legislation was important enough, Parliament or the legislature would have to state publicly that it would pass the legislation knowing that it conflicted with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Not only that, it would have to introduce the legislation knowing it would have to be passed and scrutinized again every five years. Obviously, a government would do this only when it felt that the legislation was very important and was supported by most people. This probably explains why legislative overrides have never been used by any of the provinces which include them in their bill of rights in Canada at the present time.

It is important that Canadians understand that Parliament or a provincial legislature would not be opting out of the guarantee of, in this example, freedom of religion. It would only be stating that this single piece of legislation should still be effective even if it conflicts with the freedom of religion. All Canadian governments have affirmed their commitment to protecting our traditional rights, such as freedom of religion and speech. Ten Canadian governments are also committed to guaranteeing more modern rights, and here I am thinking specifically of the rights of the mentally and physically disabled. It is that section which I believe puts our charter in the vanguard of a modern charter, so to speak, and I am pleased to see those provisions included.

The importance of the commitment of Canadian federal and provincial governments to the rights contained in the charter should not be underestimated. This commitment will open the way to progress in including further guarantees in the Constitution over which our party has expressed some concern. More importantly, all the work which was done, all lofty phrases which were inscribed, and all the promises which were made by all parties in this Parliament during the hearings of the Constitution committee would have been worthless without the full commitment of the provincial governments to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was unthinkable, in my view, that we would have a charter of rights and freedoms and then we would have provinces saying from time to time that the charter would not apply in their province. How, for example, would one be able to opt out of rights?

There are a number of members who insist that a charter of Rights and Freedoms is a hollow document, that it cannot protect the rights of citizens. While I am one who cherishes the rights handed down through the English common law, I remain convinced that redress for violations of rights by government is made possible through the inclusion of a charter of rights and freedoms—the example of Japanese Americans who, while not protected by the charter of rights of the United States either, were given compensation after the war. Japanese Canadians have not been compensated to this day. I have one such person in my riding at the present time. What we have to fear is not the violation of our rights by our fellow citizens, but by the government itself.

Additionally, there are those who point to the U.S.S.R. and other dictatorships as having an entrenched charter of rights, and yet, despite this provision, violations of human rights goes on daily. How do we answer this charge?

I said that our government institutions are fallible because we as people are fallible. The difference between the U.S.S.R. and democracies though is apparent. Dictatorships use charters for propaganda purposes. They have no intention, either at home or internationally, to observe the rights they so piously adopt.

I would now like to speak personally for a moment. My father and his family came to this country in the 1920s. They were given freedom. Yes, they were given that freedom without a charter. But many immigrants, because of the loss of country and status, see a charter as a symbol, as a written guarantee of the rights they so vigorously defend. charters can be empty of resolve. My uncle spent 22 years in a labour camp in the Soviet Gulag. My cousins to this day cannot return to the Ukraine where their family lived, but must remain in the so-called virgin lands. The rights in the U.S.S.R. are empty. Their charter is for propaganda purposes only. But let us not compare either the purpose or the action of the Soviet authorities with our country and the desire of its citizens to protect our basic rights.

On October 6, 1980 the Minister of Justice suggested that the government was completing the work of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. Back then, nothing could have been further from the truth. Prime Minister Diefenbaker respected and loved Canada too much to have acted unilaterally in a way which would have affected the federal system. But I am also certain Prime Minister Diefenbaker dreamed of the day when all provincial governments would commit themselves to entrenching a bill of rights in the Constitution. Now Canada's first ministers have helped to fulfil that dream.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms affirms and extends the freedoms of all Canadians. It should be a source of pride to all Canadians for all generations to come.

If the first ministers drafted a document of which all Canadians should be proud, some people must be wondering why our party has suggested some changes to the accord. Perhaps it is because, as Sir John A. Macdonald once said of the American constitution:

> To say that it has some defects is but to say that it is not the work of Omniscience, but of human intellect.

We must not forget that our first ministers met in a pressure packed period of four days and may not have had the opportunity to consider the full implications of some of the actions taken.

I am suggesting that Parliament has a role to play to ensure that the rights of all Canadians have been kept in mind and to provide, though it might be foreign to us in this chamber, "sober second thought" to their work. That there is room for change and "sober second thought" is obvious from the fact that the resolution which we are debating is not identical to the one which would have been produced by the constitutional accord.

A tremendous furor has been created over the application of the "notwithstanding clause" to the guarantee that rights should apply equally to men and women. A similar furor has surrounded the absence of the guarantee of aboriginal rights from the present resolution. Both of these outcries, on the part of women and on the part of the native peoples, have been perfectly justified. And it would now appear that both important segments of the Canadian federation will find a place in the final accord which this Parliament will approve. That is a hopeful sign.

It is a hopeful sign because it indicates that many Canadians want to play a part in the agreements which are often reached by first ministers behind closed doors. They want to make sure that those agreements truly reflect the diversity of the Canadian federation. Canadians have shown that they want to be part of the process of constitutional change.

I want to speak for a moment about native rights. People sometimes ask me why I am interested in going beyond the entrenchment of the rights that are now in Section 25. One of the practical examples I have been using is as follows. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that you have bought a quarter section of land but when you receive title you find that you receive title for that quarter section with one small omission: the back 40 acres are not included. Suddenly you find that instead of 160 acres you have only 120 acres, although the deal was for 160 acres.

● (1620)

There are many Indian people in Canada today whose treaties still are unfulfilled. They still have treaty entitlement. They are still cut off from lands in British Columbia, and there are treaties still to be signed north of 60. I say to Canadians, all we are asking is for a fair deal. We are asking them to apply this to themselves to see whether or not it would be acceptable to them if the agreements they had made were in fact different from the agreements they received in the end.

Also in reference to Section 28, this party, as proposed by my leader on Friday last, insists that Section 28, as it appeared in the resolution which came out of the joint committee, be restored in its full power.

There is a hopeful sign during these days and these hours when these negotiations take place that these agreements can be made and included as amendments to our constitutional proposals.

On Friday also the Minister of Justice suggested that every Member of Parliament should use gentle persuasion wherever possible to pave the way for a solution in the areas of disagreement. It is in this spirit, and not in a partisan way, that our party has been seeking a reconciliation in the areas I have mentioned of women's and native rights. Now is not the time for any party or person to trumpet their role in bringing about a potential consensus in these areas. It is a time for all of us quietly to play whatever role we can in bringing about these changes.

It is in this same spirit that members of our party have been seeking to make the constitutional accord acceptable to the people of, and perhaps the government of, Quebec. As a Canadian from the west, I can remember the isolation and alienation which we felt when the constitutional proposals were going to be imposed on us, proposals we thought were detrimental to our region and our people. I do not think we should forget now that the same sense of isolation could be felt by another important region of the country.

Under the direction of our leader, we have been seeking to make the constitutional proposals acceptable to the people of Quebec. That is the spirit in which we will propose the amendment on financial compensation. That is the spirit in which today our leader has contacted the Premier of Quebec concerning minority language education provisions. The Leader of the Opposition has asked the Premier of Quebec for a clear commitment that his government will recognize the right of all Canadian citizens to minority language education. We are asking the Premier to take the essential first step, in guaranteeing these rights, after which would commit the government of Quebec to accept the rights of all Canadians to minority language education voluntarily.

All Canadians would like to see all regions involved in the final constitutional accord, and all Canadians feeling at home in this country. What we are seeking is a compromise which would make the accord acceptable to the government of Quebec.

Some members of the House, the press and of the public might say that is impossible. If that is the case, let us be sure that the people of Quebec realize that their government will reject all reasonable proposals. If, regrettably, that is the case, let us make it clear to the people of Quebec that they only appear to be isolated, isolated by a Quebec government which is more interested in deliberately asserting its separatist views than in working within the framework of the Canadian federation to reach a genuine agreement.

I want to spend some time, Mr. Speaker, speaking in reference to how the accord affects the people living north of 60, in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

The accord provides an amending formula which, I believe, requires modifications to meet the requirements of Canadians living north of 60. Many of us dream of the day when Canadians living in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon achieve full responsible government. That should happen today. I just cannot understand why we cannot have full responsibility for those territories today, why we cannot accept the concept that those who are elected must be responsible to those who elect them, and why we cannot remove the federal bureaucratic shackles that have existed for so long north of 60; but I guess change comes very slowly.

Having said that, we look forward to the day when they will achieve full responsible government, and once having achieved that government they eventually will make the decision on the advisability of attaining provincial status. The amending formula allows these citizens to make that judgment, as we see it now, without further change to the amending formula; that is, we are not restricted to the number of provinces needed under the amending formula, but rather to a mathematical formula. There is a section in the accord which I seriously believe brings into question the future of the people living north of 60, and that is Section 41, specifically Section 41(e).

As this Parliament takes a sober second look at the resolution, we might also want to consider the part of the constitutional resolution which will involve the provinces in the creation of new provinces out of Canadian territories. The power to create new provinces out of territories presently rests with the federal government. That is in Schedule 2 of the amendments to the British North America Act, 1871. According to the resolution, this power will still rest with Parliament in part, but in another section, namely Section 41—the schedule is in conflict with Section 41—this power will rest with the federal and the provincial governments. This contradiction should be cleared up so that the intentions of the government in this matter are very clear to all concerned. I suggest to the Minister of Justice that he look at both the schedule and Section 41(e) to see if we cannot clarify that matter before the resolution has the final approval of this House.

Mr. Nielsen: And Section 41(f)

Mr. Epp: My colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), also refers to Section 41(f). I believe he will be speaking more specifically about the north later on in the debate.

As always when compromise is reached, one would like to see changes which cannot be achieved at the moment without jeopardizing the agreement itself. For example, the fact that property rights have been left out is of personal concern to me and I know to many colleagues on this side of the House at least. I urge the provinces to rethink their opposition to this provision. If rights relating to property can be included for other groups, such as natives, I would think that some way could also be found to guarantee property rights and yet allow provincial governments the administrative freedom to acquire property for the benefit of the general public.

I also want to issue a warning to this Parliament and future legislators regarding the absence of rights for the unborn. I am not speaking as a critic of my party but personally as a member of this House. The Minister of Justice and his officials argue that the charter is neutral on this issue. I pray that legislators and courts will not take away, because of this neutrality, the rights of the most defenseless in our society. If I have any disquiet today, Mr. Speaker, it is on that topic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: In conclusion, the debate in this Parliament on the resolution is beginning to settle in the minds of all members of this House the fact that constitutional compromise is possible. When we have concluded this debate Canada will have a Constitution which contains all of the good features of the British North America Act which have served us well in the past. Canada will also be able to change its Constitution in Canada, and we will have entrenched a commitment to equalization, a fuller definition of provincial resource ownership, as well as the charter of Rights and Freedoms to which I referred earlier.

I am relieved that a debate which began in anger and which has created deep divisions in the country is ending in good will. I hope there are others like myself who have had their faith in the federal principle, upon which this nation was founded, rewarded, and I hope there are others whose faith in the principle has been restored.

There are many challenges to be overcome in the coming decades which will require the same Canadian tradition of consensus and compromise. It is time that we left division. It is time that we left the bitter words of the last year far behind us and start to face the challenges of the future.

Someone has said, and John A. Macdonald used to paraphrase it, that Canada is more than a mere geographical expression. All of us who have taken a look at Canada's geography know its geographical grandeur. Whether one sweeps from east to west to north or the other way around, one has been filled with awe with our country. Canada is more than a geographical expression. It is a land of people, people who in their own way each want to build a better Canada.

During the confederation debates in 1865, the Hon. George Etienne Cartier said:

> I view the diversity of races in British North America in this way: we were of different races, not for the purpose of warring against each other, but in order to compete and emulate for the general welfare. This diversity is our strength.

The question might be asked, how do we repay those who laid the foundation of this country? Lord Tweedsmuir probably said it best when he said, "We can only pay one debt to the past, by putting the future in debt to ourselves". That, Mr. Speaker, has been our work and that should be our legacy.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud at this moment to be a Canadian woman. Equality for myself and all Canadian women has ceased to be an elusive dream. Instead, it is taking on the shape of reality, moulded by generations. It is equality not according to the old maxim "As persons in matters of pains and penalties", but as persons in the matter of rights and equality. You can bet that we want full equality.

What is this equality that we women have been fighting for? How many generations of men and women have asked the question: What do women want? Well, for our grandmothers who were not even considered persons and who fought for the vote, and for our mothers who supplied the labour force during the war and since, and for our sisters and daughters and granddaughters, I will tell you what we want. We want the rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guaranteed equally to male and female persons. That means the original wording of Section 28:

> Notwithstanding anything in this charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

It is that simple. We want the reference to Section 28 in the override clause, Section 33, deleted. The charter will then carry a forceful statement of equality. This will give the courts a strong direction that sex discrimination cases require their strictest scrutiny.

For those who argue that affirmative action programs are jeopardized by the removal of Section 28 from Section 33, I remind them that the present constitutional proposals clearly state that affirmative action programs are not subject to the normal rules barring discrimination on the basis of sex.

To go back to some of the things which have happened to women in this country, I am sure there are many who are not aware of the fact that long before the era of the suffragists, women in Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had been entitled to vote and hold office. Why? What happened? Simply because it had not occurred to anyone to make laws to prevent them from voting. Of course, you can guess what happened when this existed; legislation was enacted to remove that right.

It was not until April 25, 1940, with the capitulation of Quebec, which was the last province to give votes to women, that the injustice was overturned. It is curious to recall that in our so-called enlightened age it is almost impossible to believe that the late Senator Therese Casgrain as recently as 1970 became the only one of Canada's leading suffragists to hold federal office. I would like to think that Madame Casgrain, who died just three weeks ago, would be sitting in that gallery this afternoon, but I am sure that she is with us in spirit today.

Well, women got the vote and, as most women know, we who were busy building homes, feeding cattle, ploughing the fields and milking the cows—as my mother did—having babies and raising families, then had to fight for the right to be recognized as persons. Most of us in this House are familiar with the Persons' case, but I think it is worth while to go over it again. In 1928 five Alberta women, the "five persons" as they were later known, Henrietta Edwards, Irene Parlby, Louise McKinney, Nellie McClung and Emily Murphy, appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada to decide whether women were "qualified persons" who could be appointed to the Senate. Of course, the Supreme Court rejected this idea. The case was then appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England who accepted the idea that women were, indeed, persons. This now forms part of the constitutional law of this country.

However, this should serve to remind the men of this country that for decades, right up to the present time, women have participated and agonized in this constitutional exercise.

We look upon the events of the past year as events which have been controlled, to a large degree, by women themselves. They did not let the drafters of the Constitution forget. Back in February, 1981 many thousands of women told the federal government that equality must be guaranteed in any charter of Rights and Freedoms to be entrenched in the Constitution. The government agreed to this and a special guarantee, Section 28, was added to the charter in the general clause.

In April, 1981 this guarantee of equality for women and men was passed by all three parties in the House of Commons. Women thought that they had a guarantee that all laws in Canada would have to treat men and women in Canada equally. So there it was. We have the charter, standing the way we want it, clearly defined. The battle was won, we thought. However, it was not. Why? Because the provinces, the Supreme Court and the opposition parties put this government in the position of bargaining for consensus. The provinces changed the charter without consulting the people within the provincial boundaries.

We will recall, but I think it proper to remind this House and the people of Canada that it was the federal government that held constitutional hearings and an all-party committee sat for months. There were 303 witnesses, including individuals and groups, along with almost 1,000 briefs, letters and telegrams which were heard and received. The committee listened, responded and so developed a charter that did respond to the hearts and minds and needs of the people of Canada.

When it was found that the charter had changed, bowing to the pressure of the provincial premiers, the women looked up and said "No". Women, united as never before, said no. It was time to tell the provinces no. Much credit is due to special groups and dynamic individuals who I will name later on this afternoon, but the credit for speaking out goes to the women of Canada, women working both in and out of their homes, mothers, grandmothers and daughters and particularly the women of this House. I refer to the member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss Macdonald), the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney)—in fact, all the women on the opposite side of the House.

● (1640)

It goes without saying—but I think I should mention it—that the women on this side of the House have given tremendous support, particularly my close friend and colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who is leading us into another major battle for pension reform, which is very much needed to ensure the economic security of the women of this nation.

I must also pay tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who displayed his total commitment and confidence when he appointed me as the minister responsible for the status of women.

We have also been supported all the way by those women members in the other place. I refer to Senators Bird, Rousseau and Neiman who have worked tirelessly in support of these efforts.

Who actually galvanized these women into action? Two groups provided the main thrust. The ad hoc committee, with women such as Pat Hacker, Lynda Ryan Nye, Rosemary Billings, Marylou McPhedran and countless others, and the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women—capably led by its president, Lucie Pepin, I am pleased to say—have provided an extremely powerful force in the past few weeks. Fortuitously, the council was meeting in Vancouver at the time of the signing of the final resolution, and it moved very quickly and very effectively. If there was any doubt about the strength and integrity of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, those doubts have surely been dispelled by the events of the past ten days.

I would like to remind this House that the president of the advisory council, Lucie Pepin, and many of her provincial chapter councils, met this last weekend in Saskatchewan. These groups have managed to reach almost every Canadian woman and, I must say, it is working. This network—and we call it a network because that is what it is—went into action and the premiers heard from the women. Pressure continued to mount on each premier until, one by one, they fell. But will we have Saskatchewan? In order to adhere to the spirit of the accord, we must have all the provinces onside. I say to Saskatchewan, to the Premier of Saskatchewan, to the people of Saskatchewan: join us. I am convinced that reason and justice will prevail.

I must also say that much credit must go to a group of women which has worked largely behind the scenes for the past week or two. I refer to my department, Status of Women Canada, and its co-ordinator, Maureen O'Neil, who with a small but highly skilled staff have kept me and my colleagues informed of the implications of the various decisions and options offered throughout these negotiations.

On Friday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) spoke of his background of growing up on a farm where women were equal. I share that background. I grew up on a farm, and I had the added advantage of growing up next door to an Indian reservation. This has helped me to understand the even greater injustices which have been done to native women. These women—including Sandra Lovelace, Jeanette Lavell and Mary Two Axe Early—must share equality with men under and before the law, a law for all Canadians.

Again I return to the Leader of the Opposition who, on Friday and on previous occasions, indicated his sensitivity to and understanding of this issue. This has been healthy for this country and for this House because during the past week, as never before, the men of this House have opened the doors and let the views of women in. Lest we think this has been a battle fought for and with women only, just this afternoon I received a letter from a senior citizen, and I am compelled to quote part of it:

> I am a senior citizen war veteran who believes that I fought for a better world and society.
>
> It is hard to understand that a minister had to be appointed to see that a Canadian's rights have to be upheld. There should be no question in our country of any Canadian being slighted on their rights. As I write this I am sorry to hear the radio news that there is a question of whether or not rights will be included in the Constitution. All Canadians must enjoy equal rights without questions being involved. It is a shame that any Member of Parliament should voice anything contrary.
> Thank you for trying to make Canada equal for all citizens.

You will pardon us, Mr. Speaker, the women of Canada, if we are optimistic and hopeful and just a little bit cocky. We have come a long way, but there is one step to go.

I will close on that rather optimistic and perhaps light note because I think a little humour always helps us move along the way. I feel today very much as the quarterback of the Edmonton Eskimos must have felt at about this same time yesterday. How can we lose? One final kick. We are still in the game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—The Constitution—proposal that representatives of minorities attend conference; the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—appearance of Canadian pipers at Edinburgh International Tattoo. (b) Request that broadcast be shown in Canada; the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker)—The Budget—minister's awareness of effect.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien respecting the Constitution of Canada, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Clark (p. 13050).

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and privileged to speak in this historic debate on our Constitution. I am indeed very proud but, on the other hand, I am a very disappointed Member of Parliament. I am one of the most disappointed members in this House of Commons because the priorities of this government are wrong.

When I went to my constituency this past summer I was embarrassed because I was asked what I was doing about interest rates, jobs and the energy crisis. I was asked when we would come to some agreement or arrangement to get this country working again. What do Canadians have to do to get us to put our priorities in the proper order and to get us to address ourselves to the problems facing Canadians? Canadians are losing their homes and their jobs. What are we doing? We are talking about the Constitution rather than addressing ourselves to our country's needs.

Who can a person turn to when he is losing his home because of high interest rates? The government says it cannot do anything about high interest rates because our rates are married to the rates in the United States. Are we saying that Canadians should write to Mr. Reagan, the President of the United States, to ask that the matter of high interest rates be addressed so that the needs of Canadians could be met? Or should we be saying that the Liberal government has completely lost control, which in fact it has? The fact is that bureaucrats are governing this country. Perhaps Canadians should be talking to bureaucrats instead of Members of Parliament because Members of Parliament have certainly lost control.

That is sad because we are living in a country of plenty. It is indeed one of the richest countries in the world. That is one reason my family emigrated from Poland to this country. We came here during the depression because of the freedom of opportunity. However, we have less freedom now than ever before. Some countries with the best charter or bill of rights or best constitution have less democracy and freedom than a country like ours.

The constitutional debate has not ploughed one field or created one job. If anything, it has caused a loss of business, jobs and opportunity for Canadians as far as revenue is concerned. This is because the government has not been addressing the needs of the country. It has been talking about the Constitution rather than dealing with the needs of this country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not staying home but rather leaving his toy, the Constitution, for members of Parliament to play with. The Constitution does not matter much to a Canadian who has lost his home or job. In fact, it does not matter at all.

This is not the end of the debate on the Constitution. It will be coming forward again, no question about it. The Prime Minister's intention with this toy, the Constitution, is to have his name inscribed in the history books because he brought the Constitution to Canada at all costs. Without question, it has been "at all costs" to those Canadians who have lost their businesses. That is the way I feel, as do those whom I represent.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the chairman of our Constitution committee, gave a lot of time, made many sacrifices and put in endless hours of effort to help make this Constitution work. It is hard to appreciate or to visualize the sacrifices this hon. member has made towards resolving this constitutional debate successfully.

There is more to Canada than just the French and English. I am neither French nor English but I am very much a Canadian. I have travelled in Quebec. It is beautiful. I do not have the words to express how hospitable and honest the people of Quebec are. I have not often missed the carnaval in Quebec city. I attend almost every year; it is great.

It is not the French people or the Quebecers who cause the problems. One man wants to become a Messiah and the other a hero. Divide and conquer; that is what is now happening. It is unfortunate because the economy of Quebec is not good.

Indeed, it is very bad. I only hope that the Prime Minister, who is a good friend of the Premier of Quebec, will once and for all try to resolve the problems in Quebec, get that province rolling again and the people there working.

Thousands of Quebecers left Quebec to go to western Canada. In fact, my neighbour across the street is from Quebec. He is happy to be in Alberta. His English is not very good. My French is not good either. However, we get along very well as neighbours. We understand each other.

These people have come to western Canada for the same reasons my family came to Canada. It was not necessarily by choice but through necessity in the hope of being able to make a better living. When some of us came to this country, we did not have so much as even a good suitcase. However, those people who came here have worked very hard. They were the pioneers who built this country to what it is today.

The constitutional debate has divided this country more than it ever was before. There has been no need for it. We should have been addressing the economy of this country. I am not against bringing the Constitution to Canada. It is a part of growing up. There is nothing wrong with that. No Canadian is against having the Constitution brought to Canada. However, if it is as complex as some have expressed, why should we bring it here? But this is not so.

We talk about convention, entrenchment and accord. Most Canadians do not even understand what these terms mean. We talk about conventions, traditions and practices. Why not make it so people understand? I will give an example. If we had a non-confidence motion today and the government was defeated, even though it is not provided in the Constitution, the government would resign and an election would be called. This is not in the Constitution; it is a tradition, a practice that is accepted.

As a Member of Parliament, I am very disappointed. If I had known what I know today, it is very questionable whether I would want to be a Member of Parliament and sit in this House. This government is manipulative. We see how the Constitution has been handled and how the government addresses itself to the economy of this country and making the country work. No wonder people are losing confidence in governments and Members of Parliament.

I remember the Prime Minister saying "We will wrestle inflation to the ground" and "The land is strong". I remember when there was hardly any separatism in Quebec or western Canada. We have it today. I remember the day when it was said that we should vote for Pierre Trudeau because he was the only one who can keep this country together. He is the only one who has divided this country and brought separatism not only to Quebec but even to western Canada.

I did not want to say all these things, but I think they had to be said because the people, and speaking especially on behalf on my constituents, if I may express myself, are sick and tired of this Constitution debate and this manipulation. It certainly was not a priority and it certainly is not a priority today either. Without question I feel this is not the end but only the beginning, if Pierre Trudeau has his own way.

I will not take much more time but I would like to say a few words regarding my experience with governments. I was an alderman for about ten years in the city of Calgary. I held all the key positions there are. I have also been a school trustee and an educational bureaucrat at the same time. As well, I have served as an MLA in the Alberta legislature. I have seen people come and go in politics. I certainly do not have to read a book about politics and what makes it work. I have been involved with labour. At the age of 26 I was the president of the Calgary labour council. Speaking of labour, I do not know what the Canadian people have to do so that the Liberal government will get the message once and for all. When 50,000 people come to Parliament to demonstrate about the high interest rates, and they still cannot hear—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to address his remarks to the Constitution debate, namely the amendment before the House.

Mr. Kushner: Mr. Speaker, something has to be done about this. It is quite relevant to the Constitution. As I mentioned before, it is quite clear that we should be talking about the economy of the country, rather than debating the Constitution resolution. We should not be wasting our time. We have wasted the whole summer and all of the fall on this Constitution, rather than talking about the economy of this country.

People representing home owners from British Columbia, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario and the Canadian Labour Congress made representations to me last Friday. I asked them, "What would you expect us to do? What should we be doing? I am losing my home. I will be laid off. I have already received notice. These are only some of the things I was told. What do we need to do to get the government moving or doing something about our interest rates, so we do not lose our homes and get the construction industry moving again so people can afford to build and borrow money, which was the situation not that many years ago? The government is saying that it is more concerned with the Constitution and it cannot do anything about high interest rates. To whom should we refer?"

As I mentioned before, this government has completely lost control of governing. It no longer governs. The bureaucrats are governing this country. Should we be writing to the mortgage companies about the high interest rates? Should we be writing to the banks? Should we be writing to foreign countries? To whom do we refer? The government cannot do anything. One begins to wonder who is governing this country.

I cannot over-emphasize the fact that it is the bureaucrats governing this country. The Liberals have completely lost control and it is time they were booted out. Instead of talking about the Constitution, we should be talking about creating jobs and getting the economy moving again.

We have a majority government. We also have majority unemployment, majority interest rates and majority inflation. We have a dangerous situation in the way the government is functioning and practising. I do not know what is the next move Canadians will be forced to make in order that the government can address itself to the needs of this country.

On Friday thousands of native people found it necessary to demonstrate on Parliament Hill in order to be recognized. They asked that their rights be entrenched in the Constitution, which rightfully should be done.

In conclusion, on one hand I am proud to have had the experience of serving as a Member of Parliament, and of doing my best to see that the interests of my constituents are heard. On the other hand, as I mentioned before, I am most embarrassed and most disappointed to be a Member of Parliament. The way the government has been treating Canadians is disgraceful in that it is not and has not been addressing itself to the needs of this country, but has been fiddling around with the Constitution. Not only has it not created one single job but it has actually cut jobs and it has not given any incentive to this country. Many Canadians have lost millions of dollars in revenue because the government has not faced its responsibility in governing this country.

The Prime Minister did not even have a mandate to deal with the Constitution. I have not received very many letters saying that the Constitution should be a priority, nor did Canadians ask for a change in the Constitution until the government started fiddling with it. The Constitution has served us very well for the last 100 years. I am not saying that we should not bring it back to Canada. I am not saying that at all. However, we should not be doing it in the form we are doing it now.

I shall not take too much more time because I know other members of the House of Commons will be speaking. But I should like to make it quite clear and go on record on this historical day as saying that for one thing I do support the Constitution coming to this country. However, I certainly do not support the way that the Prime Minister has been playing around with it, using it as a toy and as a smoke screen, rather than addressing himself to the economy of the country and finding solutions for the problems we face.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I feel a great sense of pride and history as I stand in the House today to participate in the debate on the Constitution. I have not prepared a formal address, but I should like to pass on some of my over-all feelings about the necessity of addressing the Constitution at this point in time. I only had an opportunity to hear the closing remarks of the previous speaker, but perhaps I will use them as the launching point for some of the things I should like to say for the record today.

We have heard a great deal over the past year as to why we are bothering with constitutional matters when in reality we should be dealing with economic ones. I respectfully suggest that now is a most appropriate time to talk about the Constitution and to talk about it in an economic sense. We are going through a great evolution in Canada. We have come far in such a relatively short period of time as history goes, but I think we can go much farther as we resolve to be one Canada, to be Canadians all, building an even stronger country which we can all enjoy.

To say that to deal with the Constitution now does not really relate to economic problems is inaccurate. We must determine what kind of a Canada we are and what kind of a Canada we want to be. I think Canadians through the constitutional dialogue—and that is exactly what it has turned out to be—have really asked themselves and each other some very difficult questions. They have come up with some very satisfactory answers through the period of discourse and dialogue. As we are about to send the Constitution to Westminster, to be returned to us, we now have a greater strength of purpose and a greater recognition that indeed we are Canadians from coast to coast, from sea to northern sea. It will make it much easier to govern the country. It will make it easier for the provinces to understand their part in building the country. Certainly it will help us as a federal Parliament to understand what we can and cannot do. But the prime consideration is that it reaffirms something we already knew, that we are one country.

The entire process of determining the Constitution has been remarkable. It started off in the eyes of some people as being the dream of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his swan song. This is not so. The Prime Minister indicated to the country that it was time to resolve some of our fundamental problems and thoughts about ourselves. He mobilized the country on this subject. He did what he has done so well on many occasions—he exhibited leadership. He had a great deal of support, not only from the Liberal caucus which has made what happened so far a reality, but the support of Canadian people as well.

As we entered into this discussion, we heard a great deal of rumbling from the provinces because it was an uncomfortable subject. The people in some quarters really did not want to talk about it. After all, we would like to deal with matters that are easy to discuss and to resolve; thus we went into the constitutional discussion with mixed feelings. Some people were very enthusiastic because they felt a real need to resolve the Constitution, to patriate it and to produce an amending formula. Some people felt that at this point in time we needed to establish a charter of rights and freedoms. Some other people said, "I think I will have to give up something; I know it is important, I know it will be a long and hard pull, but I do not know if I am prepared for it".

Initially, for whatever reason, not everyone entered into the constitutional debate with a great deal of enthusiasm. But as it moved along, it moved along in the most remarkable manner. I do not know of any other constitutional experience in the world which has had so much public input, public scrutiny and legal scrutiny before the fact, as has the present resolution before the House. While there are things yet to be done, which hon. members on all sides would like to see reconciled, I have confidence in the people of Canada that they will be done. At least we have moved it to the point where we can say that very soon we will have the Constitution, the amending formula and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—a beginning to do even more with the Constitution.

I should like to return to the area of leadership. As I mentioned earlier, despite the fact that this issue has been a trying experience for some to put it all together, it took the determination, vision and leadership qualities of my leader to bring it to the point where we all take pride in it. There was one game plan which did not quite work out. It went a different route, the committee became involved and so on, but all of us can feel that we have participated in one way or another at a particularly significant point in Canada's history. There was an extremely hardworking joint committee comprised of hon. members from both Houses, from all sides. We listened to 97 groups of witnesses. There were some 1,280 written submissions. There were over 267 hours of debate in committee alone. The earlier resolution had 67 amendments. This indicated that people were now taking the matter seriously. Then it went through the legal process, finally it came to the eleventh hour meeting of the premiers of the provinces, and the accord was reached—nine out of ten provinces agreed to Constitution. We regret that there was not a tenth signature on the accord, but we must remember that in essence Quebec agreed with what was going on. The fact that there were three unresolved items does not take away from the fact that in round figures a 99 per cent agreement was already there.

It became a partisan, political type of subject as opposed to one dealing with the concerns of Quebec. Quebecers have always been good Quebecers; time and again they have proved that they are good Canadians first. I honestly believe that the people of Quebec, if asked the question—and they have been in a poll—want this to happen. We are negotiating some very important and fundamental items which should be included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Before the resolution leaves the country, I sincerely hope that those items will be included.

As I remarked earlier, this is a beginning, not an end. Even if those fundamental items that concern women's rights, that concern aboriginal and treaty rights, are not entrenched in the present charter as all members of the House have indicated they would like, we will at least have the mechanism to enter very quickly into further negotiations. In that way we can continue to build and improve upon this process. I am proud of a system that has allowed the Parliaments of this land, despite the fact that we had to take a hard look at what we were doing and how we were doing it, to come this far.

There have been many sincerely emotional moments in the debates that have taken place. There have been some frightening moments too, such as when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said, after the Supreme Court judgment was delivered, in effect, "Let's put this whole matter on the back burner because now we have time to think about it". I think he has recognized, judging from his subsequent actions and from the way he has behaved in the House, that there comes a moment when you either proceed with a matter of this sort or forget about it.

It would have been a terrible crime to have gone through that year of agony, that year of soul searching, in order to come up with a constitution—to have come that close and then have to say, "Let's forget that and repeat the process somewhere, some time—whenever." That is not happening, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a resolve on the part of members of the House to see that the work begun over a year ago is completed.

I said that I experienced a sense of history in being able to participate in this debate in my own small way. When one has a few grey hairs, one can remember an earlier time. I recall in what was then the city of Port Arthur, in the high schools, public schools and separate school, when we were asked to give our citizenship, that what was meant was our land of origin. We did not put down "Canadian citizen". We had to put down Italian, Scottish, English or whatever, but not "Canadian citizen". I remember very well my pride as a high school student in 1947 when the Citizenship Act was passed—by a Liberal government, I might add.

That was another part of the evolution, Mr. Speaker, saying "Let's define ourselves. Let's recognize that we are a people, that we are not a colony, that we are Canadians. We have fought wars and we have more than proved that we are building a country."

We finally adopted our own flag, not without a debate similar to the constitutional debate; but we now have a flag which we fly proudly and which identifies us to the world as a sovereign nation and as Canadians.

We went on to something else, which is not such a small thing, when we adopted the national anthem, "O Canada". Some day I hope that we will have a Canada Day.

Now we come to the nuts and bolts, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Constitution. I think the Canadian Constitution that is proposed is an excellent one. It is hailed by other people around the world as the best there is. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms will do much to ensure our freedoms. I know that the opposition to this charter has been to the effect that to put something in writing does not necessarily enshrine it forever because people can do whatever they want with such things, but I think more highly of the Canadian people than that, Mr. Speaker. I think there is a resolve to honour the rights that are stated within the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and I think that we will continue to improve upon it.

We will have patriation of the Constitution so that never again will we have to go to another Parliament to ask permission to change it. We will have an amending formula, which means that the work can continue without the frustration of wondering whether what we want will ever come about. We will have those things and, above all, there will be included in the package the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This is a great country, Mr. Speaker, but we take so much for granted. If someone writing a novel described a country like Canada with its narrow fringe population along the border which is comfortable to live in, with its many regions, its many diversities, its people of two main cultures and the multiculturalism aspect, the reader would say that it could not work, that it is impossible to do all the things we want. Not only can it work, Mr. Speaker, it does work.

It is going to work much better because we have taken the time now to clear the way for the magnificent future that is just around the corner. I believe that we have been living better than anyone else in the world but there are greater things in store for us. Things will work much better because we have taken the time to look at ourselves, to define ourselves. We have come to the conclusion that we are one Canada, that we can work together. We will have our Constitution and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms to back that up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too am grateful to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I believe this is the third occasion on which I have addressed myself to the question of the role of women in Canadian society and to the future equality of women with men in Canadian society. Therefore, like others, I am distressed to discover that what is called an "override clause" has been put in the equality of rights clause, Section 28.

With a lot of my colleagues, I was very glad that many features in the accord that was reached between the first ministers of the provinces and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the other day are good ones, are progressive ones, are strong ones and are desirable ones. In that connection I was very happy to read that the new Premier of Manitoba had said that he will certainly not renege on francophone rights in that province or subject them to legislative approval.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: There are good things in this resolution, but it is almost heartbreaking to see the legislative override of some of the most fundamental and most important parts of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. When the proposal was put before the House of Commons I think we all felt that section 15, the equality of rights section outlawing discrimination on grounds of race, colour, religion, sex and so on, and its second component, the affirmative action provision encouraging legislatures to take affirmative action for disadvantaged groups, was one of the strongest parts of that charter. Perhaps it was because there were no women present, or perhaps it was because there were no black people present that the first ministers of this country crippled that section of the charter.

It is all very well to say that a specific act can discriminate only for five years, but to me that almost destroys the intent, the purpose, the symbolism and the substance of that section. To then go on and apparently subject Section 28—which the women of Canada strove so hard to get in the Constitution and which the House unanimously passed in April—to an overriding provision that a legislature or the Parliament of Canada could deny the very rights and freedoms referred to in this charter guaranteed equally to male and female persons and that the government would do this apparently as an oversight, that it had not really thought about Section 28, the section to which Parliament gave a great deal of thought, adds insult to injury.

● (1730)

Hon. members will remember that the very day after the accord was signed I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether Section 28, the section guaranteeing women's equal rights with men, was included. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister said:

> I can only answer that my impression is that the clause would continue. I have not been involved in the drafting which went on between provincial and federal officials yesterday afternoon and, I believe, during the night as well.

He went on to say:

> There were some deletions, and aboriginal rights was one of them. Maybe the other clause was another. I am not sure. I will have to check that, and that is why I say I will see what was done on the drafting over night.

A few days later a writer for La Presse said:

[Translation]

> Questioned in that connection on the day following the constitutional conference by a NDP member, Miss Pauline Jewett, Mr. Trudeau admitted his lack of concern.
>
> Mr. Trudeau remembered that he had sold off native rights. However, he only had a vague idea about women's rights. We know that women are rather unimportant. A mere bunch, I tell you—

[English]

It was, of course, tragic that Section 34 affirming the rights of the native peoples, the aboriginal peoples of Canada, was dropped. At least they were remembered long enough to be dropped. Women were not even remembered.

Let us take a look at what the provincial premiers have said in the few weeks since while struggling to get back on side. Their comments vary from that of the Premier of New Brunswick saying there had been no discussion at all of Section 28, that their intention in the accord was to have Section 28 remain intact, with no override, as a statement of the equal rights of women with men, to that of the Premier of Alberta saying, first, that he was not sure whether or not Section 28 had been discussed, and then saying later that he had not intended that it be subject to the limitation that we have been calling the override, which would take the guts right out of it. We find Premiers Bennett and Davis saying that it certainly was not their intention to take out that section, and we find the officials saying that "it had been a drafting error".

I think we might all come to the conclusion that no one seems to know whether they discussed this section, although the balance of the evidence seems to be that the first ministers did not discuss it. However, if they did discuss it, the impression most of them give is that they wanted Section 28 to remain intact, symbolically and substantively. No one has come forth publicly and said that this section was to be overriden as Section 15 was overriden.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to fellow members that we could appropriately, given this incredible confusion, pass the section in its original form in which we saw it in April. As I understand it, it is not part of the accord that it should be overriden, given what all of the premiers have said.

But what does this tell us about the position of Canadian women in society? Are we simply a detail, a drafting error? I noticed that we were recently blessed with the neanderthal wisdom on the editorial page of The Citizen of Ottawa. The editorial was headed "Fix the details later". The editorial reads:

> The complaints by various women's and native organizations about the constitutional resolution now before Parliament are not sufficiently persuasive—

Let me emphasize the words "the complaints". We are talking about our very rights as human beings, in the case of women, the women's human right to equality, and in the case of the native peoples of Canada, their rights as the original peoples of this country. This editorial is talking about these as complaints. That is why a great many of us are distressed by the possibility that eviscerated Clause 28 will remain. Not a single member of this House, barring the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who were the negotiators, should support Section 28 if this override remains in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: Not a single member of this House should support it. But if any members do support it, do you know what they would be doing, Mr. Speaker? It would mean that we would be taking an enormous backward step, we would be denying the principle of equality of men and women. We would not have even the status quo. We would be going farther and farther backward.

I hope the minister responsible for the status of women agrees. I believe she does. I hope she does. She was not part of the negotiations. I do not know whether she asked, but she certainly did not know what had happened to Section 28. I hope that neither the minister responsible for the status of women, nor any woman nor indeed any member, would support this section unless the amended version that we are discussing today is brought in by the government itself on the ground that the cheapening of Section 28 was not intended in the accord.

For those who would argue that they can only accept the quality of women conditionally, I believe that they too are saying that they do not believe in the fundamental principle of equality of women with men. They are denying, as I said a moment ago, women's human right to equality. It is a goal to be achieved because we do not have it yet; it is a goal to be achieved in and of itself. That is how a lot of us see the original Section 28. We see this, as I say, symbolically as an expression of the equality in our society of men and women, their entitlement equally to the rights and freedoms in the charter. We see it that way, as I say, symbolically. We also see it as a section in its original form of enormously important substance, because we do not in fact have equality, and when I say "we" I mean women. We do not in fact have equality today. Therefore, Section 28 becomes a goal to achieve.

● (1740)

For those who worry that affirmative action programs would somehow be ruled out by Section 28, I can only say that as long as an affirmative action program is a program that will help to achieve what is in Section 28 there is no conflict whatsoever, and Section 15(2) and Section 28 would be in harmony.

Similarly, if there is a discriminatory act under Section 15(1), and it is a positive act which is helping to achieve greater equality for those who do not have it now, then it too would fall within the ambit of the broad statement of equality in Section 28.

The fears then, it seems to me, although legitimately raised, are not legitimately founded. As a previous speaker said, there should be no taking of credit; every woman's group in Canada had a great deal to do with getting the paramountcy clause, as I call it, Clause 28, included in April. I personally think the former minister responsible for the status of women had a great deal to do with getting the clause in.

Miss MacDonald: Right on.

An hon. Member: He sure did.

Miss Jewett: Every time he spoke, he turned another million Canadian women into feminists.

An hon. Member: The Lloyd works in strange ways.

Miss Jewett: While I am not going to single out, with that exception, who made such enormous contributions to the whole concept and principle of equality of the sexes, I must with sorrow express my regret that, with the exception of the present minister responsible for the status of women, and I am sure, although I do not know, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), no other woman on the Liberal side has engaged in this battle. They were not present at the famous February convention. They were not present at rallies in the past two weeks through which we have been trying to get the clause restored in its purity, and they were not even present today, with one exception, when the minister responsible for the status of women spoke. Have the women of the party been speaking outside the House, holding rallies and organizing? I am very distressed to say they have not. It seems that they have become gagged. Even in Quebec—

[Translation]

Three days ago, an article appeared in the newspaper La Presse:

> A gentle Yvette. The organizer of the Yvettes' movement, Mrs. Louise Robic, slightly worried the Liberals by insisting that the government account for its failing to entrench women's rights. Canadian women want to know what happened to their rights and freedoms . . . "A lot of women will be suffering from ulcers", she said.
>
> What could have become a real dispute did not last long however because Mrs. Robic, as befits a good liberal, readily accepted, Mr. Chrétien's arguments. And she added: Well, we must fight the provinces, not the women of Quebec or Canada.

[English]

What can we do? I said a moment ago that the constitutional accord, or much of it, was worked out in the kitchen between the Attorneys General of Saskatchewan and Ontario and the federal Minister of Justice—if ever there was a time when a woman should have been in the kitchen!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: Much of it was drawn up, as indeed the whole accord was, without giving that kind of thought to the needs and the rights of the native peoples, the disabled and certainly of women, and I guess that proves once again that much as others may sympathize—goodness knows, many men do—when they get down to their negotiating and dealing, they do not think of the other half of the population not represented, and they do not think of the disadvantaged. Those thoughts are not paramount.

Therefore, as far as women are concerned, we must once again have our own party develop affirmative action programs, and develop them now, with the party leaders at all levels and the committees in every constituency saying: We must have 50 per cent of our candidates women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: That kind of action must be taken, and not just in the weak ridings. Since the kitchen-created Constitution was influenced enormously by officials, federal and provincial, only two of whom to my knowledge were women, clearly we must have an affirmative action program now in the federal public service of Canada to ensure that women are pulled up—and there are lots of bright women there—and put in positions of responsibility and authority. The federal government did it once, and rightly so, when it discovered that francophones constituted only 7 per cent or 8 per cent of the senior public service. The federal government did it just by saying: That will not do. I do not believe there was even a written edict; it was just the Prime Minister saying: That will not do. That is the kind of leadership women have not had from the men of Canada in the Liberal Party and government. There has to be affirmative action there. Clearly, it is in the senior ranks of politics and the bureaucracy that power resides.

• (1750)

Despite the evisceration of this document, the Supreme Court of Canada will still have a role to play, and it must also be changed. There must be women on the Supreme Court of Canada as well, and this has been argued before. That should be the next fight.

The lawyers who will be working to interpret this Constitution in various cases will, I am confident, be increasingly more balanced as more women graduate from law school. As I have said, the fact that there are more women graduating from law school is one of the most exciting things which has happened in recent years.

I read an article today by Michèle Landsberg of the Toronto Star entitled "Help wage war for women's equality". It is an excellent article and I recommend it to all Members of Parliament. In that article she suggests that there be a women's watchdog in Ottawa to protect our equality rights. Right now the best watchdog in Ottawa is the ad hoc committee. I would also approve of that suggestion. I believe that until we have a strong if not equal, or perhaps for a period more than equal, representation in this House of Commons and in provincial legislatures, such as in Manitoba where women members constitute 12 per cent, and in the bureaucracies both federally and provincially, I do not believe we will be able to ensure that the indifference and neglect to the fundamental principle of equality of women will be seriously addressed. As I have said, I hope that the government will realize that since the dismantling of Clause 28, according to most of the premiers, was not part of the accord, it can proceed and we can proceed in Parliament.

It is true that it was neglect and indifference that made this so, but it provides us with a chance to benefit from it. We must remember, as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said a moment ago, that as important as the two orders of government are in this country, because it is a federal system, it can be said there is a third order. That is the people of Canada who are represented by various groups and many organizations. During the last year, we have certainly seen that third order in operation, as far as the women of Canada are concerned. I wonder if the provincial premiers have ever read the marvellous briefs that were prepared for the Joint Committee on the Constitution by women's groups and other groups all across this country. I wonder if they know that there is a third order, which is the people of Canada represented by these diverse groups.

Finally, I submit that if we do not restore Section 28—and all of what I have said applies to Section 34 concerning the rights of the aboriginal people—it will go down not as an important day in Canadian history but as a day of infamy. I do not believe that is too strong a word to describe this.

I hope that when the women of Canada have 95 per cent of the representation in the House instead of the 5 per cent they now have, and when we hold 100 per cent of the premiers' places instead of none, and if, as may well be, we are pioneering a new constitutional accord, I hope and I am indeed confident that we will not treat the other half of the population with the indifference, injustice and complacency which so many of their number have inflicted upon us. That is a promise.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, as I would like to deliver my speech at one go, could I call it six o'clock. Consequently, I would be able to speak again when the House resumes at eight p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As it is six o'clock, I will leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.56 p.m. the House took recess.

The Constitution

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House recessed at six o'clock, the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) had the floor.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the least we can say about this debate on the patriation of the Canadian Constitution is that it has taken on a major dimension. First, I wish to pay tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has shown great determination as well as great flexibility in obtaining the agreement of nine provincial premiers for his plan to patriate our Constitution. It is with pride that I remind this House that it was a Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, who with courage and tenacity defended the proposal that gave our country a distinctive flag. His successor, again a Liberal leader, is helping to make the dream of so many Canadians, to patriate our own Constitution, come true at last.

I am convinced that history will keep this event alive in the memory of all Canadians for generations. However, I realize that at this stage, there is still a feeling of dissatisfaction. I am a Quebecer, and the government of my province has refused to agree to the plan to patriate our Constitution. I am disappointed, because during the three days when the Prime Minister of Canada and the ten provincial Premiers were meeting, there were a few moments when it seemed that this fifty-four year-old struggle, this quarrel that in a year had taken on gigantic proportions, would finally be resolved.

Like all observers, and especially as a Quebec Member of the Parliament of Canada, I was glad to hear the news given out Wednesday noon at the conference that there was finally agreement between Quebec and the Government of Canada, something we had spent ten years waiting for. And like everyone who was following the conference proceedings, I was disappointed to hear a few hours later that the agreement has failed. Later, we heard that there had been a flood of telephone calls at Premier Lévesque's office in Quebec City. It seems these were from anti-Canadian elements who could not imagine Quebec otherwise than separated from the rest of Canada. What can you expect, Mr. Speaker, when people are subject for six months to deceitful propaganda, under the slogan: "Don't be had"? Of course people were going to think that if there was an agreement between Quebec and the Canadian Government, Quebec was going to get the short end of the stick. In any case, the people who were had were the people who believed this deceptive propaganda.

One must not forget that Quebecers have sent seventy-four Liberal members to Ottawa to defend their interests. Quebecers are represented by thirteen ministers in cabinet. Quebec's influence on the affairs of Canada is greater than ever before. That is why we, the seventy-four Quebec members of the caucus, asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to consider the objections expressed by the delegation of the Province of Quebec. As a Quebecer and as a Canadian, I could appreciate the position taken by the Quebec Liberal Party in the National Assembly. In fact, it shows that in the National Assembly in Quebec City, there are elected representatives who will point out to the Péquistes that contrary to what they would have Quebecers believe, the Canadian Government is trying to get Quebec out of its isolation.

In a speech the Prime Minister delivered held in Quebec City on November 14, he showed that he was willing to take into consideration each of the objections expressed by Premier Lévesque. He was asked to reconsider the matter again by us, the members of his caucus. In fact, with hindsight, it is hard to understand how the Quebec representatives at the conference in Ottawa managed to isolate themselves. It was supposedly to defend Quebec's interests that Premier Lévesque joined the Premiers of seven other provinces, and so, if the eight provinces were agreed to oppose the federal government on a number of points, it would be normal for all eight provinces to agree to the patriation plan if those points ceased to exist. I was present at the Conference Centre in Ottawa on Thursday, when Prime Minister Trudeau and the Premiers of the nine provinces stated that they had reached an agreement. Witnessing this historical moment, I could hardly conceal my disappointment when Premier Lévesque annonunced that he refused to sign the agreement, explaining that three major objections prevented him from giving his approval to the accord.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to review each of the objections formulated by Mr. Lévesque. The first one concerned the withdrawal of the compensation clause. Well, the next day, Quebecers were assured that Quebec would be able to benefit from the compensation clause in certain cases. The Quebec members asked the Prime Minister to be flexible, and he was. In fact, the Right Hon. Prime Minister clearly indicated on November 14 that he would agree to Quebec receiving fiscal compensation if they refused to participate in a federal program on grounds that it affected the French language or the French culture in Quebec. The Prime Minister of Canada agreed that if the nine English-speaking provinces were to decide to waive their jurisdiction with respect to post-secondary education, it would be normal for Quebec to refuse to agree to this measure and that it would receive fiscal compensation. Can Mr. Lévesque be against that? On the other hand, if the federal government decides to set up a program which would benefit all Canadians and which would be financed by the richer provinces, the latter would have no right to refuse. At the present time, Quebec is certainly not a rich province, and if we were to develop a pension transfer program applicable throughout Canada, for instance, I believe that it would be in the interest of Quebecers for the rich provinces not to be able to opt out of this program. Since Quebecers would benefit from this program, how could they be against it?

• (2010)

Mr. Lévesque's second objection concerns the mobility clause. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms will assert the principle of the free movement of goods and individuals all across Canada. This is the basis of what could be called a Canadian common market. This principle is essential to the economic development of Quebec and the other provinces. Some have pointed out that workers from the other provinces could come and work in Quebec, but is it not a fact that thousands of workers from Quebec, Ontario and the Maritimes travel to Alberta to look for work? Experience has shown that whenever a province puts up barriers to protect its workers, its trade and its industry, the other provinces reciprocate.

We will recall the dispute between Ontario and Quebec in connection with the building industry. Yet, the Prime Minister has told the Quebec government that he was willing to seek for other formulas to accommodate the legitimate concerns of a province. He has recognized that Newfoundland may take special steps in this regard as long as the unemployment rate remains higher in that province than in the rest of the country. The Prime Minister of Canada has thrown the ball into Mr. Lévesque's court by saying that Quebec could take special action if it were literally invaded by English-speaking workers from other provinces. Can the Quebec premier reject this proposal? In case there remains a doubt in his mind, I am putting this question to the Quebec premier. He wants to replace Canadian federalism by some type of common market. Yet, Mr. Lévesque should know that measures to restrict the free movement of goods and individuals are forbidden in the European market. There is neither relaxation nor special regime for anyone. All Canadians are equal. Our Canadian charter to which Mr. Lévesque has so many objections is therefore finally more flexible in its application than the Treaty of Rome on which it is based. You will note that he does not refer to this example now as much as he used to.

I would like to know what he would reply to those Quebec workers who could get a job in Alberta but would not be able to do so because of provincial barriers. A worker of Ville de la Baie said to me that the Quebec government was holding Quebecers as hostages, but I told him that if the proposed charter is adopted, he can invoke the clause guaranteeing the mobility rights of workers.

Mr. Speaker, once the principle of the free movement of goods and individuals is no longer accepted in a country, then it no longer is a country. Finally, the last objection raised by Premier Lévesque concerns the clause on education in the language of the minority. Mr. Speaker, the charter will put an end to the iniquities of which French-speaking Canadians in other provinces are victims. Because of the economic slowdown in Quebec, which is actually the responsibility of the Quebec government, thousands of Quebecers have had to leave Quebec to find work in Alberta, for instance, as well as in other richer and more prosperous provinces.

That Quebecer will have the entrenched right to send his children to a French school. French-speaking citizens in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will finally have the right to send their children to French schools. Is the Quebec Premier opposed to that? Would it be that we, Quebecers, did not fight long enough to obtain that for francophones in English-speaking provinces? Admittedly, Quebec has no lessons to learn on how to treat language minorities. However, the Prime Minister feels that Quebec could implement the Canada clause to ensure that schools do not become an anglicizing factor in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity, mainly for the benefit of the people in my area, to quote the Canada clause, which entitles to education in the minority language. I shall give a textual quote, so that people realize what actually is in that clause.

Section 23 deals with the language of instruction and is often said to be unfair to the people in Quebec:

> 23. (1) Citizens of Canada
>
> (a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or
>
> (b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province.
>
> have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.
>
> (2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.
>
> (3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province
>
> (a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and
> (b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the contents of Section 23 that is so controversial in areas such as mine. Mr. Speaker, how can Mr. René Lévesque oppose such a proposal? As may be seen, Mr. Speaker, we were successful in the representations we, as members from Quebec, made to Prime Minister Trudeau that Quebec's goals be taken into account. The Prime Minister accommodated the PQ government and he yielded on every point. And we finally told ourselves that the PQ government could no more withhold their consent, since every obstacle had been put aside. But Premier Lévesque answered with new demands in the form of an ultimatum. I think the leader of the Parti Québécois finally will be seen by the people as he really is. He said he supported sovereignty-association, we learned this week he would drop the hyphenated association. In other words, he is a separatist. The only surprising thing is that he took so long to admit it himself.

Mr. Speaker, there are other questions I would like to raise. I would like to stress that Quebec isolated itself at the Quebec conference, when it proposed the Vancouver formula as opposed to the Victoria formula. I also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Morin himself proposed that formula in the names of the eight Canadian Premiers, and, of course, that formula today deprived Quebec of the right of veto that had always been recognized. As a member from Quebec, I am deeply disappointed at such an attitude because Quebec has been pursuing a course that isolates it more and more from the other provinces, and deliberately refuses to negotiate with the Canadian government. On the other hand, the people of Quebec cannot but realize that the Right Hon. Prime Minister has been very openminded and quite accommodating. Unfortunately we cannot say the same thing about the Premier of Quebec. What happened, in my opinion, is that the Parti Québécois was taken over by the separatists who want Quebec to separate from Canada. That is why they will try to say that the others manœuvred and plotted against them whereas they are the ones who isolated Quebec because that is what they want in the first place.

This is where we find the first tactical error of the PQ government. It was sure that the Ottawa conference would end in failure, it so grossly underestimated the pressure of public opinion on the seven premiers to reach an agreement with the government of Canada that from the outset it joined forces with anybody who was against the resolution. Watching them from Ottawa it was almost funny to see Premier Lévesque plotting with Mr. Lyon, the former Manitoba premier who has never had much use for French Canadians. Had they been given the chance, I think that the PQ supporters would have enlisted Leonard Jones, the former mayor of Moncton. And yet, French culture and language had meant so much to PQ supporters they should have sided with Mr. Trudeau, Mr. De Bané, Mr. Joyal, Mr. Chrétien and the 74 Quebec members. The position of our party on the question of upholding the rights of francophones in all provinces is clear. The electors of Quebec know where we stand and that is why they have given us their massive support since 1968.

No, the PQ strategists preferred to make a common front with people who had been very lukewarm about the rights of francophones in their own provinces. Indeed, perhaps this was right up their alley since Premier Lévesque never did propose anything to improve the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Did the premier of Quebec try to better the lot of francophones outside Quebec, at least those who reside in the provinces of his seven former allies? It seems to me that Premier Lévesque should have insisted that Mr. Lyon, Mr. Peckford and Mr. Lougheed, the Premier of Alberta where so many Quebecers are going, agree to grant more rights to the francophones in their provinces. Did Premier Lévesque insist that Ontario recognize Section 133 so that province would acknowledge the rights of francophones? No, he was not even interested. For the first time in our history the government of Quebec, which prides itself for being the most nationalist, utterly disregarded French-speaking minorities outside Quebec. The Arabs, the Moslems and the Jews fight for their minorities, but not the PQ government. Well, the government of Canada will do just that.

In addition to that, we are going to fight for the interests of Quebecers. Of course there are nationalists who ask how and by what right the 74 Quebec members can fight for the interests of Quebecers. They are not asking by what right is the PQ government sulking by its lonesome self. They are not asking by what right does the culture minister refuse to attend a conference with his provincial counterparts. The PQ government has decided that it will boycott everything other than finance ministers' conferences. Up until now, the PQ has refused to take part in negotiations to improve upon the patriation proposal or the proposed Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Well, Mr. Speaker, the 74 members from Quebec, under our leader, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau have decided to defend the interests of Quebecers and give them a better deal. The PQ refuses to stand up for the rights of Quebec. But, the opposition leader and his party in the National Assembly are prepared to do so. Editorials in Le Devoir and La Presse have urged Premier Levesque to defend the rights of his province and have even indicated that he has no other choice. Finally, we the 74 members from Quebec, have played our part in our party caucus. We continue to defend the interests of Quebec by formulating Canada's position with regard to the ten other provinces and by taking part in this phase of the debate.

I take exception to the PQ and its claim that it has the sole God-given right to defend the interests of Quebecers. Following a few scandals, people now realize that what comes from the Parti Québécois does not necessarily come from heaven. The electorate is becoming aware that its interests with respect to constitutional matters were not well defended by the PQ and that they only have themselves to blame. We must remember that it was Premier Lévesque, the leader of the Parti Québécois, who gave up, on behalf of Quebecers, Quebec's traditional right to veto. It is not Prime Minister Trudeau nor the 74 Quebec Liberal MPs who deprived Quebec of its right to veto. No, it is the PQ who was quite happy to relinquish that right in order to please Messrs. Lyon, Bennett and Lougheed. They gave up Quebec's right of veto in order to join the gang.

Quebec's image as an important province and one of the oldest provinces has become a thing of the past, no thanks to the Péquistes.

Looking at these facts, one wonders whether the Péquistes are sulking. I think they are so ashamed of their stupid mistakes that they are afraid to come out into the open.

And meanwhile, the people in Quebec are starting to feel the adverse effects of the Parti Québécois' poor administration. Taxes are too high in Quebec, and the provincial government is to blame. The separatist government has caused companies and their staff, which means big taxpayers, to leave the province. There are increasingly fewer businesses that are interested in settling in Quebec, and it might well be said, if it were not for the presence of Quebec members and Quebec ministers in the Parliament of Canada, things would be even worse than they already are.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I feel that Quebecers are going to realize that the separatist government has no valid reason for refusing to agree to the plan to patriate the Constitution. If the separatists feel that the accord is unacceptable, they will have to prove it. They will find out that the people in Quebec are not willing to be separated from Canada. They will also find out that Canada is more important than the separatist party.

[English]

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): I am proud to be able to participate in this historic debate not only because our Constitution is the embodiment of our laws but because each one of us should be on record as to our true feelings related to this resolution. First, I should like to congratulate all members of the joint constitutional committee not only for their contributions but for the personal sacrifices they made. The committee sat for over 300 hours, held 106 meetings and heard 314 witnesses, and to add to this, spent countless hours of reading to which every member of the committee was committed. I would also like to pay special thanks to our committee members, headed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who worked diligently to present our case.

I would like to review some of the things which led up to the present dilemma we are facing. In Canada, the Canadian Constitution consists of the British North America Act, the Statute of Westminster 1931, numerous other acts, conventions, customs and traditions and rulings from the Supreme Court of Canada. The British North America Act, 1867, among other things set out the division of powers between the provinces and the federal government. Previous meetings which drafted this act set out the alternatives with which the Fathers of Confederation were confronted when they attempted to draft an act that would create a new nation. They had a choice of creating a nation which was legislative in form or a nation which was federal in form. By "legislative in form", I mean a nation which is run from one central government, with all other elected bodies subservient to the federal government. The other form is the federal system where the power is divided between the provinces and the federal government. The Fathers of Confederation chose the federal system. This federal union recognized equality of all provinces irrespective of population and size. At the meetings drafting the report which would be presented to the British Parliament, each founding province—Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—all had one vote. Also it is significant that the British North America Act, as enacted by the British Parliament, upon the direction of Canadian provinces did not confer upon the federal government any power to amend the Constitution of Canada, even though each province was given power to amend its own constitution within its own sphere, except as regards the office of lieutenant-governor.

• (2030)

Down through the years many changes have been made to the British North America Act. At no time has the British Government ever refused a request by the Canadian Parliament to change the Constitution, although from time to time the British Parliament has made small changes in the presentation. The federal government indicated that the British Parliament has never passed an act submitted by one or more of the provinces, but on the other hand never have any provinces submitted changes to the British North America Act to the British Government. Also the Canadian government argued that it does not have to consult the provinces in order to present a resolution to the British Parliament, but in fact the Canadian government has never presented a resolution to the British government without the agreement of the provinces which would be affected, and history tells us that on numerous occasions the provinces have intervened to change or withhold proposed resolutions.

The obligation of the British Parliament is not only to deal with the resolution but to determine whether it is a proper resolution. It is not its intention to interfere with the meaning or thrust of what the resolution would do to Canadian people. However, its obligation is to consider whether it can properly accept the resolution. Also it is within the sphere of the British Parliament to vote against this resolution because in effect the resolution asks the British Parliament to enact an act of its own, within its own Parliament, on which only it can make a decision. We must understand clearly that only the British Parliament can decide whether it will pass a bill which affects its relationship with another sovereign nation.

Let me deal briefly with the events leading up to the dilemma we are in today. In other words, can we amend our Constitution and, if not, why not? It should be clearly understood that Canada is a sovereign nation, able to pass laws and to deal both internally and globally with other nations and other people. However, the British North America Act did not make any provision for amendment to the BNA Act other than that all amendments would be presented to the British Parliament and all amendments would, in turn, be considered by the British Parliament and voted upon in both House of Commons and the House of Lords. The Statute of Westminster, 1931, was a bill passed by the United Kingdom government to remove the last vestiges of colonialism. The Statute of Westminster, 1931, was an act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom which formally acknowledged the sovereign and co-equal constitutional status of the United Kingdom, Canada, Union of South Africa, Irish Free State, Newfoundland, Australia and New Zealand. The statute indicated in Section 2 that no future legislation introduced by the United Kingdom government would be enacted without the express request and consent of one of the previously mentioned nations. But in reality the prime purpose of the Statute of Westminster was to nullify the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865, which in itself prevented any of the dominions from enacting any changes to the constitutions which would be redundant to the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

It is interesting to look at events leading up to this statute. The first step toward the enactment of the Statute of Westminster dates from the imperial conference of 1926 when special consideration was given to various legislation of the dominions. A number of general principles were laid down, and it was agreed that a Commonwealth committee should be set up to inquire fully into these matters and to make recommendations to a subsequent conference of Commonwealth nations. In the autumn of 1929, the proposed committee met at a conference to discuss the Colonial Laws Validity Act, Dominion legislation, merchant shipping legislation and other minor items. It drafted a report which would in future contain many of the sections of the Statute of Westminster. The conference recalled that Canada alone among the Dominions had no power to amend its Constitution Act without legislation being passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. Following the conference, the report was considered fully in many parts of the Commonwealth. In Ottawa a debate took place in May 1930, when the federal government asked the House of Commons for approval of the report. The document was subjected to careful scrutiny, and the Conservative opposition objected to it on the grounds that formal consent should be obtained from the provinces.

There were a number of items which were wrong with the report, such as its suggestion that provincial legislation should continue to be subject to the Colonial Laws Validity Act and to the legislative supremacy of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, while federal legislation was to be freed from the act. In the following September, shortly before the opening of the imperial conference called to consider the report of 1929, Howard Ferguson, the Premier of Ontario, forwarded to the then prime minister of Canada a letter accompanied by an elaborate memorandum. I should like to read the record of that letter and refer interested readers to the memorandum which dealt with the powers of the provinces vis-à-vis the federal government. By this time, however, a new federal Conservative government had been elected, so the letter and the memorandum were addressed to Prime Minister R. B. Bennett. It read:

My dear Mr. Prime Minister:

You will recall that in some discussions we have had with reference to the report of the imperial conference, and, in particular, the recommendations made in the report of 1929, I have endeavoured to make clear to you the attitude of the Province of Ontario.

The conference appears to have ignored the fact that the confederation of the provinces of Canada was brought about by the action of the provinces. Our Constitution is really the crystallization into law by an imperial statute of an agreement made by the provinces after full consultation and discussion. The province of Ontario holds strongly to the view that this agreement should not be altered without the consent of the parties to it.

On behalf of this province I desire to protest most vigorously against any steps being taken by the dominion government, or the imperial conference, to deal with the provincial treaty until the matter has been submitted to the provinces and they have had ample time to give this subject proper consideration.

To pursue the course indicated by the report of 1929 will not only greatly disturb the present harmonious operation of our Constitution but I fear may seriously disrupt the whole structure of our confederation. Ontario is genuinely alarmed by the situation and I urgently urge upon you, representing the Dominion, and through you upon the imperial conference, that this whole matter be left in abeyance until it can be dealt with in a proper manner, and to the satisfaction of the parties to the original compact.

I am enclosing to you, herewith, a memorandum which embodies a brief from the story of Confederation, together with the views of a number of public men who are leaders in the movement; interpretation of the courts upon the status of the province; and the recent trend of the Dominion authorities upon the question.

● (2040)

With the story as a background I am sure that a perusal of the reports of the last two conferences will convince you that the provinces have ample ground for serious alarm.

Yours very truly

G. H. Ferguson,
Premier of Ontario

I submit that all school children should read that letter, Mr. Speaker, so that they may understand what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been trying to do for the last eight or ten months—in fact, for the last year.

Soon after the Premier of Ontario had written that letter, Quebec and a number of other provinces requested the federal government to refrain from any constitutional changes without consultation. A federal-provincial conference was held in April 1931 and it agreed unanimously to a draft report of a Statute of Westminster and agreed to a special Canadian clause which became Section 7 of that document. It reads as follows, in three parts:

1. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to apply to the repeal, amendment or alteration of the BNA Acts, 1867 to 1930 or any order, rule or regulation made thereunder.

2. The provisions of Section 2 of this act shall extend to laws made by any of the provinces of Canada and to the powers of the legislatures of such provinces.

3. The powers conferred by this act upon the Parliament of Canada or upon the legislatures of the provinces shall be restricted to the enactment of laws in relation to matters within the competence of the Parliament of Canada or any of the legislatures of the provinces respectively.

Later, Prime Minister Bennett explained to the House of Commons why this conference was held. He said:

It is not necessary at this time to relate fully the attitude of the provinces, but they agreed that inasmuch as their constitutional rights as defined by the original act might be amended, in the opinion of the governments of those provinces, by this Parliament by a majority vote, they should have an opportunity before any such action was taken to present their views and make known their decisions.

In other words, the opinion of the provincial governments that their rights might be affected was therefore considered by the federal government of the day as sufficient grounds for provincial-federal consultations.

In June 1931 Prime Minister Bennett introduced a joint address to the U.K. government. It is interesting to note that at that time the Liberal opposition asked to make an amendment to have paragraph 2 and paragraph 3 of Section 7 reversed, but the Prime Minister stated that since the representatives of the provinces had initialled the various sections, the federal government was honour-bound not to change a single letter.

In considering my case further, I refer to the Employment and Social Insurance Act of 1935. The first change in the Constitution, which affected the division of powers, took place in 1935 when the Conservative government passed the Employment and Social Insurance Act. The Liberal opposition opposed the bill because it thought the bill should have been made by an amendment to the Constitution and after consultation with the provinces.

Shortly after the new legislation was enacted, a general election was held and the Liberal Party came to power. One of its first actions in the fall of 1935 was to refer the bill to the Supreme Court of Canada for an advisory opinion. By a judgment on June 17, 1936 the act was declared to be ultra vires of the federal Parliament. At the opening of the session in 1938 the Speech from the Throne announced that the provinces were being consulted to make the Employment and Social Insurance Act an amendment to the British North America Act.

On June 25, 1940, Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced in the House that all nine provinces had assented to the proposed constitutional amendment. In speaking to the resolution, Prime Minister Mackenzie King, as reported at pages 1117 and 1118 of Hansard, 1940, said:

> The difficult but most necessary part of the whole business was to get the consent of the several provinces. That has not been an easy matter.

He said further:

> —we have avoided the raising of a very constitutional question, namely whether or not in amending the British North America Act it is absolutely necessary to secure the consent of all the provinces, or whether the consent of a certain number of the provinces would of itself be sufficient.

There have been other changes to the BNA Act, namely, changes to the Canadian Pension Plan, which the federal government was able to achieve with the consent of the provinces. Quebec was given the opportunity to opt out. This brings me up to the present time, Mr. Speaker. This resolution was originally brought forward on October 2, 1980. Since then the role of the opposition has been clearly identified.

What has been the role of the official opposition? First, it has been to ensure that there would be a full and objective debate in the House of Commons. We attempted to have that full debate, until the government brought in closure.

Second, we ensured that all Canadians would be aware of this event by having it televised. Hon. members will remember how the Liberals tried to prevent that.

Third, we ensured that interested citizens were allowed to appear before the Joint Committee on the Constitution. The committee hearing lasted for three months, and hon. members are well aware of the number of groups that were turned away by the Liberal members of the committee who were afraid of some of the things that were coming out. They wanted to close off debate so they stopped these groups from appearing before the joint committee.

Fourth, we attempted to ensure that the provinces would be consulted on the resolution. Everyone in the House remembers how the Prime Minister attempted to get the resolution through Parliament by December 1980, because he did not want the provinces to be consulted.

Fifth, it was the Conservative Party that ensured that the Supreme Court of Canada was allowed to pass judgment. It was not the Liberal Party nor the Liberal experts on the Constitution who sit on the other side who knew better but were prepared to sit quietly by. They did not do anything to bring this about. They did not care.

Sixth, the official opposition ensured that the federal government would reach agreement again with the provinces before bringing the revised resolution back to Parliament. We all remember how the Liberals squirmed and tried to get out of that. It is disgraceful how the Liberal members behaved during this significant event.

We on this side are prepared to vote for the resolution Mr. Speaker but I just want to mention a couple of problems with it.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mrs. Mitchell: What about women?

Mr. Wright: I hear the NDP rattling away down there. Will Canadians forget about the budget that the NDP are at least indirectly responsible for bringing about?

At present, if the government wishes to restrict our rights, it must enact legislation. Section 24 of the new resolution reads as follows:

> Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

I always thought our rights were guaranteed, Mr. Speaker, but now it seems they are to be turned over to a court. The government is giving us those rights, and the courts can only interpret them. In other words, if the government takes those rights away, the courts are bound to interpret that, not to guarantee our rights.

● (2050)

My second point relates to property rights. All of us in the House know that the Liberal Party in order to get the New Democratic Party on its side voted against property rights. I would like to see how the NDP members will answer to their constituents at the next election, because that point will be brought before every New Democratic Party member across Canada. We can go back to 1933 when the NDP, then the CCF Party, through the Regina manifesto left out property rights. The Liberals also will have to pay for that in the next election.

I am concerned about Section 46. We know how people in the other place have waffled around. How they can go along with this provision when the Senate was set up to protect provincial rights puzzles me. Individuals in the Senate are supposed to represent the provinces. Once again this is an illustration of how members from the other place are nothing but lackeys for the Liberal government. It is a place where the Liberal government puts political hacks. In reality, people in the other place should be representing their regions. The Liberal government has failed once again.

The majority of Canadians must be relieved that the Prime Minister has stopped beating them over the head with his concept of a revised Constitution. We in the official opposition agree with patriation. We have been consistent about that. We have not changed. We have not been all over the place, as have the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. We have consistently said that the Vancouver formula, which was proposed by representatives of the Alberta government, was the proper formula. We did not say that it was cast in stone. But compared to the Victoria formula, the Vancouver formula was the best that had come forward, and we supported it.

We support the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, I question some of the provisions of the charter of Rights and Freedoms in which a government is left with words such as "promptness" and "reasonableness" to indicate whether or n we can be put in jail and at what time we can be freed from jail. These words will decide whether a government is prompt and whether it is reasonable. We no longer have the rights; the government has those rights.

We are committed, all of us, to equalization in Canada no matter from which province we come. We are committed to sharing. No one had to tell us that before.

We are committed to the provincial ownership of resources. Heaven knows what this Liberal government would do if it could get hold of this country's resources. We need go look no further than the Post Office to see what the government does.

The timing of this resolution was not to our party's liking. We, along with most Canadians, would have preferred to have dealt with unemployment, inflation, high interest rates, better housing and other economic problems that are facing the country today. However, since we have had to deal with this resolution, it has been our party's determination to protect the Canadian federal system. We knew our responsibilities to the Canadian people, and they have been realized.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate, humbled by the importance and magnitude of the project that we are undertaking but filled with joy at participating in the final act of the attainment of majority for Canada and the law permitting the amendment of our constitutional document at home.

I wish that the official opposition had earlier been more concerned with substance than with the process which, in my view, might well have strengthened the negotiating stance taken by the federal government on behalf of all Canadians and might, in the end, have produced an even more positive result with regard to those concerns which are now being universally expressed as they pertain to certain absences from the resolution.

Even this evening, my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright), has once again returned to the old sop of concerning himself with the process. He spoke of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) having banged heads in Canada to achieve his concept of the nation while, at the same time, he seemed somehow able to escape the inevitable logic of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in his term must obviously have been attempting to do the same thing with respect to his concept of what this nation is all about.

I think that rather than pointing fingers at each other this evening, we would be taking this debate a step further by suggesting that positions were very strongly held on both sides of this House which, I hope as this debate draws to a close, will produce a resolution that does nothing but win a victory for Canada and for Canadians.

Notwithstanding the past, however, I wish to express my pleasure at the support now being shown for the substance of the resolution agreed upon by the Prime Minister and the Premiers which, with some reservations, is enjoying almost universal support.

Like many others, had I had my preference, I would have preferred a charter of rights and freedoms without the override, without the safety valve as it has been called. Nevertheless, I can accept the position of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) that the override is a safety valve, that it is required to prevent absurdities and, indeed, will undoubtedly rarely be used. But I must at least remind hon. members that the effect of the override is once again to entrust the rights of our minorities to the benevolence and good will of parliaments and legislatures elected by the majorities which have, unfortunately, in the past been found wanting in the measure of compassion and caring necessary to treat our minorities with justice and equity.

The fact is, however, that the Canadian compromise which we now have before us and upon which the loyal opposition insisted, has resulted in the negotiation of a safety valve. I trust that we can count on ourselves and on future parliamentarians to be guardians of minority rights and to ensure that those clauses are so infrequently used that future amendments—and I am sure there will be some—will include the removal of non obstante clauses, or safety valves as they have been characterized.

But lest my comments be regarded by some as being too negative, let me say again that I am jubilant, personally and on behalf of my constituents that the Thirty-second Parliament is coming to grips with this last vestige of colonialism, and is bringing Canada of age.

Let me say as well that if I am jubilant at the event, I am ecstatic at the content and the substance. I suppose it would be correct to say that I am high on Canada this evening. I can stand here proudly and say that as a Canadian I have come of age, that I am a citizen of a country that has had enough faith in itself, its political system and its institutions to require that it have the right and obligation to amend its own basic governing legislation at home. In addition to that, the bringing home process has been accompanied by the creation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms envisaged by my colleagues and by the government, perfected and forged by the parliamentary committee to which we all owe a debt of gratitude, and kept through much trial and heat, thanks to the perseverence, vision and shared conviction that what was right should and must remain, all of which was shown by my colleagues on this side of the House. History will show, I am convinced, that when others would have abandoned principle for process, this party stood steadfast, resolute in its determination to provide a charter of rights and freedoms from which every Canadian present and future can benefit.

• (2100)

An hon. Member: And they changed it.

Mr. Daudlin: History will show that while some preached division, discord and failure, this party and those who support it held faithfully to the principle that the people themselves had expressed throughout, that is that patriation with an amending formula go together with a charter of rights and freedoms.

You will remember that there were many in this House who were prepared to throw that charter of rights and freedoms out with the bath water, who were prepared, as the debate continued, to deal only with patriation and, if necessary, to put in an amending formula but, if that was impossible, to deal only with patriation even without the amending formula. Throughout that debate we continued to say no, we must have the amending formula together with patriation; we must have the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I agree with my hon. friend who says we changed it, but I ask him very sincerely, who required the change?

Mr. Gamble: Everybody.

Mr. Daudlin: He says that he speaks on behalf of everyone.

Mr. Gamble: I didn't say that.

Mr. Daudlin: I presume to speak on behalf of those people who sent me here, and I tell you that he does not speak for the people in Essex-Kent.

I need not enumerate the content and provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as others have done that already, but suffice it to say that bold new steps have been taken, new frontiers have been envisaged, and the course toward a new Canadian future has been set.

Speaking parochially for a moment, let me say that Essex-Kent, if any place in Canada, can claim to be as truly multicultural as the concept itself implies. A mixture of English, Scottish and Irish, later added to by French, and still more recently by German, Russian, Ukrainian, Portuguese, Lebanese, Japanese, Dutch, and even more recently by the Vietnamese and Laotian migration has created a mix that cried for recognition beyond the original concept of the founding races. I take great joy on behalf of my constituents who have for many years lived the principle now embodied in the words expressing the multicultural nature of our society, and I thank the drafters for those words.

May I say that I share the disappointment of all members of this House, and I trust it is all members, that as yet we have not settled the issue of sexual equality which I, as others, had hoped would also have been entrenched. It cannot be too often said that it is not this government that has stood in the past or that now stands in the way of an accord on this issue, and I join my voice with all others in this country in calling upon the remaining premier to recognize the necessity of joining his brother premiers in rectifying this unfortunate deletion to the charter.

An hon. Member: How are you going to vote on it?

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, the member asks how I am going to vote on it. I suggest to him that there is too much good in this resolution to be thrown out just because the agreement unfortunately leaves out certain portions that should be there. I agree with him, it should be there, but I am not one of those who feel that because something is absent the rest should be thrown out. I do not believe the rest of Canada feels that way either.

It is my hope and desire that a settlement will be achieved on the issue of native rights and on the question of Quebec's absence from the accord as well. Surely all members wish that. But again the same reasoning, in my view, applies. The difficulty we have is, having achieved so much, can we legitimately say that, because we have not achieved in these areas, all else must fail, all else be thrown out? I find it difficult to understand how someone can stand and suggest that because there is a certain portion missing we must lose everything else.

This puts me in mind of the child who goes out to play football, does not like the rules and says he is going to take his football home and the game must end. All should not be lost. We have gained so much and there is more to be gained, unquestionably. Surely we have provided the mechanism whereby more can be gained in the immediate, the short-term and the long-term future. Certainly it would be good to have perfection, but I suspect that even what we perceive as perfection, were we able to achieve it tonight, might not be perceived as that perfection a year, five years or ten years from now.

So to argue that I and others should not vote for the resolution as it stands or as it may be modified over the next few days, or even the next few hours as the discussion goes on, would be ridiculous in the extreme, and could surely be likened to the ostrich putting its head in the sand. I do not think that is what we are here for. I think we are here as practical politicians to achieve what can be achieved now and for the future, and to ensure that in fact the mechanisms we put in place are sufficiently flexible to allow more to be achieved if and when we can.

I think that my constituents can accept the offers that have been made to Quebec in an effort to induce that government to surmount its avowed separatist aims and to help forge a new Canada. As an aside I must say that I am proud to see the entrenchment of minority education rights across Canada since, as a member of a linguistic minority in my province, I know what pressures have been present that, but for this step, must ultimately result in the eradication of the French language outside of Quebec.

This momentous accord is a giant step toward equality of our two founding races, and I urge upon my fellow Canadians in Quebec to support our actions to entrench what they have so willingly given without legislation for the past 100 years. I hope that even at this late hour that accord can be reached on the final obstacles and that the whole of the country will march to the sound of a new Canadian drummer; a new accord as we are trying to forge it this evening and in the next few days.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me say, without partisanship intended but with a great deal of pride in my party, that I as a Liberal have always held my head high in the recognition of the fact that I am a member of the party that brought to this nation such great social legislation as the Canada Pension Plan, family allowances, universal medicare, and I have been prouder still to see across this land a flag made Canada's by a great Liberal Prime Minister.

You will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, if I confess that with the resolution now before us I and those who support me will stand just a little taller, not only as Liberals, but as Canadians proud of our heritage, confident in our future and thankful today for the men and women of this government who have, on behalf of all Canadians, provided the tools for present and future Canadians to get on with and complete the job begun so well in 1867.

As I have said, there are those who have suggested that in fact the document is incomplete. In terms of a personal view, I would indicate that I wish we had been able to do something in respect of the unborn. I recognize the undertakings which have been given and I recognize the neutrality of the resolution so far as the unborn are concerned. I share the concern expressed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) in relation to what this and other legislatures will do regarding the unborn, those least able to protect themselves in our society. I would hope that that solid support for the unborn which comes from all sides of this House will emerge in a resolution dealing with another piece of legislation.

An hon. Member: We had a resolution. You rejected it.

Mr. Daudlin: I hope that there will be continuing support for what the member across the way says he had, and I hope it will come from all parties, particularly the members of the New Democratic Party who will see the wisdom of coming forward with recommendations to the Minister of Justice to amend the Criminal Code to allow us, in fact, to protect the unborn.

An hon. Member: It's a deal!

Mr. Daudlin: I will hold him to that. I believe it is one of the most fundamental and important things we have to do in this Parliament. It is not something we can do with this resolution but, in my view, it is something which has to be done. I believe that this was the wrong document with which to do it. I believe that if the good will that, in fact, is beginning to show through in this debate can be continued with respect to this issue, we can resolve that as well. I am particularly pleased that we are able to achieve what we have done this evening. What we are working toward this evening—

An hon. Member: Talk about the resolution and the unborn.

An hon. Member: Keep going. You have five minutes.

Mr. Daudlin: When you find that members have such tremendous interest in hearing what you have to say, it is particularly gratifying, Mr. Speaker.

I have travelled through my constituency and across Canada, as I hope many of my colleagues have done, to find out what it is that Canadians want. I believe that what we are achieving is what was being sought. I am satisfied that the resolution, and particularly the charter of Rights and Freedoms, gives us the guarantees that Canadians were looking for.

An hon. Member: You were unhappy a moment ago.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member does not seem to understand how one can be unhappy but at the same time pleased with what is achieved. It is very difficult to explain, but I will try again.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the resolution and the unborn.

Mr. Daudlin: Perhaps it would be easier, Mr. Speaker, if the member were in his own seat so we could have a question and answer period. Perhaps he would prefer to remain anonymous.

I suggest that notwithstanding his attempt to make light of this issue, a thinking member of this House could not accept this resolution as the be-all and end-all, could accept it as a finality of what we embarked upon a year ago, and knows that we as imperfect persons could not not have come up with perfection. We have come close, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that over the years, dealing with the foundation we have been able to achieve, historians will say that this Parliament has achieved something spectacular and that this was a moment in history of which Canadians can be very proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to inform the House that I have obtained from all provinces which are parties to the accord their agreement that Section 28 on the equality of men and women should apply without the override clause. In addition, I am happy to report to the House that all provinces have agreed to enshrine aboriginal rights in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) just said, what has just occurred does not constitute a point of order. Therefore, I would suggest, that the courtesy be extended to the spokesmen for the opposition parties of allowing them to make a comment, and I will seek the unanimous consent of the House to permit representatives from each party who may wish to do so to make a comment. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) for that announcement. I want to say on behalf of our party that we are pleased that the amendment before us, namely, to restore Section 28 as we had developed that section in the constitutional committee has now received agreement from the nine provinces which signed the accord. I take it that it was the nine provinces that had signed the accord to which the minister if referring. With regard to aboriginal rights, I take it from the minister as well that it is a restoration of what we have come to know as Section 34. That is how I have understood the minister's comments.

On behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, we are pleased that that is now fact. We always thought these provisions should have been restored. Obviously some changes will be needed in terms of technical changes in the resolution. Those can be worked out, Mr. Speaker, and I believe these two amendments should help to speed up passage of the resolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, as are most members in the House, I am always happy to hear good news. We trust that the news we have heard is, indeed, good news. I hope that the minor amendment which the minister has indicated to me might be included in one of the two sections is an amendment we can find acceptable.

For the moment, I would like to reserve a definite position until such time as I have read the actual wording of the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair would normally expect to recognize those members who stand for the purpose of continuing the debate.

Mr. Ittinuar: Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I also would like to reserve my position on this amendment. I must congratulate, however, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) for all the effort he has made on our behalf, the people of the north. I am also grateful to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), the leader of my party, and certainly the hon. Leader of the official opposition (Mr. Clark) for his kind words the other day.

I hope the wording that the Minister of Justice has arrived at will do justice to the efforts made by all the parties in the House as well as the efforts of many people in the country. This applies to the women's equality section as well as to the rights of the aboriginal people. I understand that the wording is very new but that, for the most part, the meaning of the original section is there, and I congratulate the hon. Minister of Justice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) come into the House tonight, I thought he was coming to hear my speech, which might be a little anti-climactic after the welcome announcement he made tonight. I would like to congratulate him and my good friend from Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) for the work which I know he spent on this program, as well as members of my party who are very concerned and involved in the discussions. It is certainly most welcome news. Tonight, I welcome the opportunity to speak during this important historical debate.

• (2120)

It is an exciting and challenging time in which we are Members of Parliament, and I consider it a privilege to be here at this time. As the Member of Parliament for an Ontario riding, Brampton-Georgetown, I must admit that the subject of the Constitution has been a difficult one for me to deal with. I represent federally the riding represented provincially by the Premier of Ontario. It was of great concern to me and many of my constituents that the Premier gave such absolute and unconditional support to the constitutional package initially set forth by the federal government, not so much because of the content of the resolution but because of the procedure which was proposed by the federal government, a procedure which was considered un-Canadian by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, a position upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada. I am very proud, however, that the premier initiated the compromise process by relinquishing the Ontario right of veto. I wish to thank him personally for starting the process that allowed consensus to be achieved.

I would also like to thank and congratulate all the first ministers for upholding the Canadian way. Although the consensus achieved left out one of the most vital partners of our confederation, the province of Quebec, I believe many Canadians are relieved that the consensus was achieved.

The dialogue on a new Constitution has, as we are often reminded by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), been going on for many years. He would have us believe that in the last 54 years Canadians have done nothing but argue about constitutional matters. Any intelligent, thinking person knows that is just not the case. Sporadic attempts have been made during that period to arrive at an acceptable amending formula to permit patriation. I would, however, congratulate the Prime Minister for, it seems, having achieved his dream, albeit an amended version of that dream.

Let us look for a moment at the procedures used to achieve that dream. The Prime Minister was willing to do anything, including alienating the provinces and suffering the possibility of separation, in order, reportedly, to end his political career with Canada's formal declaration of independence. The possibility of his unilateral move was intolerable in a co-operative federalism.

When the original resolution was tabled, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) saw immediately the dangers of unilateral action and that there was more to the resolution than met the eye. It was a knowing and a courageous stand to admit that changes in constitutions change the relationships between people and their governments, and that unless these changes are agreed to, the very basis of our economic, social and cultural stability is jeopardized.

During discussions with many of my constituents it became very clear that they, like most Canadians, did not feel that the Prime Minister should restructure our Constitution and our federal system without the approval of the provinces. In the riding of Brampton-Georgetown, 83 per cent of constituents who were polled felt that provincial consent must be obtained—the consent of a significant majority of the provinces—and this feeling was very evident across the country. This feeling legitimized all attempts of the official opposition to block unilateral action. The fight to ensure Canadians were heard, the formation of a constitutional committee, the televising of proceedings, and the delaying of House proceedings on the question were due to the efforts of the official opposition. We fought long and hard to arouse public opinion, and I am proud of what we accomplished.

Our leader and our party fought for the Canadian way under a great deal of criticism and ridicule from the Liberals, but not for a minute do I apologize for our actions. I am reminded of something the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker once said: "God forbid that in this country we should apologize for standing for those things which made this nation great". If any of my colleagues across the floor feel that these measures were a waste of time, they had better, as some of the Liberals have done, reconsider why they were elected—to represent their constituents or to be unthinking sheep led by a master into whatever pasture he decides to take them, with no consideration for the effects on the people who put their trust in them?

The all-party agreement reached on April 8 in this House to defer final debate on the resolution until after a decision had been rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada on the appeals before it from the lower courts was, I think, welcomed by all. In its wisdom, the court affirmed what we as a party had been saying all along, and that is that the conventions, the customs and the practices making up part of our existing Constitution should not be overlooked.

I am sure that during the past year many Canadians have regarded the constitutional debate with a good deal of indifference, and I can appreciate that reaction. Unemployment, inflation, high interest rates and other bread and butter issues have had a more immediate impact on people's daily lives. Just last Saturday I marched with a group of concerned Bramptonians headed by two very courageous women, Kathy Dinley and Marlene Grant. Here on Parliament Hill they urged that the present constitutional matters be completed as quickly as possible and that work on economic matters take precedence. Two bus loads carrying a group of people independent of any organization came to Ottawa. They also expressed how pleased they were that a consensus had been achieved and that the Canadian way prevailed.

The agreement to wait for the Supreme Court decision was reached because of an ever increasing awareness on the part of the Liberal Party that Canadians across the country were beginning to see through the attempts to change the fundamental nature of our country, and they were not in favour. For Canada's sake I am very happy that the Prime Minister saw fit to take another long, hard look at the precedent he was setting by forging ahead with a plan not condoned by the majority of provinces and not agreed to by a large majority of the people of Canada.

Confederation was arrived at by great statesmen setting aside their individual views and arriving at a consensus. Frustration and separatist sentiments have been widespread throughout our history, but no attempt at division has ever had the potential for breaking up this entire country in the same way that forging ahead without significant consensus would have had. In the words of Lord Acton, "The co-existence of several nations under the same state is the test, as well as the best security, of its freedoms." When Canada adopted its federal system of government, it did so with good reason. It was seen then, as it continues to be now, as the best way of reflecting our national duality and the need for regional local autonomy.

I would like to consider the position of Quebec for a moment. I said earlier that a very vital province has not seen fit to consent to the constitutional accord. The Quebec situation has been an overriding constitutional question for many years. It has, to my mind, been the chief factor in constitutional discussions which have occurred since 1963. Quebec's constitutional position has been deferred many times and, once again, the question has been left unanswered. This may be because of the unwillingness of the federal government or other provincial Premiers to negotiate further, or it may be due to the fact that the Quebec government involved in these constitutional negotiations is committed solely to separation. I do not really know, but it saddens me that Quebec is not a part of the consensus reached. It is a tragedy which I hope can be averted.

● (2130)

The Prime Minister has for years argued that there was an urgent need for constitutional change. The general feeling of the provinces other than Quebec was that there really was not an urgency; important but not urgent. Only after the Quebec referendum last year did most Canadians realize the frustration and the seriousness of Quebec's outlook on its role in Confederation. In May 1971, Claude Ryan urged that:

> English Canada would be much wiser to look to the government of Quebec as the real interpreter of the French Canadian will,—

Keep in mind this was at the time of a Liberal government in Quebec.

> —a government seen not through some temporary vacillation of Robert Bourassa but through a constant threat expressed in the major constitutional documents since 1966. There will be found the essential elements, not necessarily of a solution, but for real negotiation. Until these are examined and accepted, no solution will be possible.

The official opposition party has put forward a proposition giving Quebec another opportunity to reconsider its position. If the availability of compensation to provinces which opt out is not accepted by the present Quebec government, it will be clear that the present representation of the province of Quebec is committed solely to separation. Whether or not the provincial government of Quebec actually represents the political will of Quebecers remains to be seen.

In April the Quebec government signed an accord with seven other premiers which included this provision. Did the Premier of Quebec sign the accord at that time because he believed this is what Quebecers want, or did he sign it just to embarrass the federal government, assuming that the accord would not be accepted? I can only hope that all sides of the negotiations bargain in good faith and continue to act in the best interests of Canadian unity. I ask all Quebecers to examine our position, and if they approve, if they want to take their rightful place in the federation, then let Premier Lévesque and the Prime Minister of Canada know, act together to remain partners. I cannot envision a Canada without Quebec.

One major disappointment for me is to see a Canadian Constitution before us that does not contain property rights. To my way of thinking, the cornerstone of democracy is the right to own property. An investment in a piece of property gives one a feeling of security, "a piece of the rock" as one famous advertisement says, at owning a small part of this great country. Why not protect that right, a basic right of any democracy? The late President of the United States of America, General Dwight D. Eisenhower, said:

When some people declare that we care more for property rights than human rights I say that a property right is one of the human rights and if it is not sustained then all others will disappear.

I say amen to that and ask that this be on the top priority list when next the matter of constitutional amendments are discussed by the first ministers.

I would like for a moment to discuss a section of the charter which is of great concern to many of our legal and enforcement bodies. That section is 24(2), known as the exclusionary rule. The government has been accused of trying to Americanize Canadian rules of evidence and placing Canada in a constitutional straitjacket in terms of the evolution of our criminal law and procedures by entrenching a form of the American exclusionary rule of evidence.

The government, after a compromise was reached with the provinces in the summer of 1980, reversed its position, as it has been known to do sometimes, and in January, 1981, decided to adopt the exclusionary rule. Because of this decision and the concern expressed by many, the official opposition offered a compromise wording which was adopted by the joint committee.

However, this section continues to represent a concern, and I feel these concerns must be expressed and put on the record. The possible problems with entrenchment of this rule were brought to my attention by many, including Chief Ackroyd of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force and by Chief Doug Burrows of the Peel Regional Police.

Section 24(2) sets a subjective standard for our courts. There is no jurisprudence in this area to guide our judiciary. It is interesting to note that although it is an American rule of evidence, it is not entrenched in the American Constitution. This rule can be changed by United States courts or Congress at any time. Why then is Canada heading in a direction which will involve a constitutional amendment if a change in this area becomes necessary?

Law reform commissions, both federal and provincial, have recommended that an exclusionary rule, or the type of clause that is present in the charter, be included in provincial and federal evidence acts. I know that some Crown attorneys and attorneys general, including the Ontario attorney general, feel that section 24(2) should not be entrenched but should possibly be adopted as an amendment to our evidence acts. In a letter dated March 20, 1981, the attorney general of Ontario wrote this to all Members of Parliament:

I would urge you to avoid the introduction into our criminal justice system of American concepts which have substantially undermined effective law enforcement in the United States while failing to enhance the rights of individual citizens.

When the government reversed its position in January and decided to adopt the exclusionary rule, there were no consultations by the federal government with the provinces. It is an area that civil libertarians feel must be included in the charter, but as put forth by the Canadian Police Association and many others, serious consideration must be given to the changes which this rule will cause in our criminal law system. They have asked each of us to consider a series of questions. I quote a few:

Do I want to change to a United States rule consistently rejected by the courts of Canada and England for 300 years and which has recently come under serious question in the United States and has been firmly rejected as unsound by three distinguished English Royal Commissions, the last as recent as December 1980? . . .

Does the exclusionary rule really control police and thereby protect civil liberties? Or, is it inferior to strong before-the-fact accountability coupled with prosecution and discipline of police after-the-fact, when deserved? . . .

Do the women of Canada want to protect sexual attackers to the extent that even the slightest mistake by police in following the proper investigatory and arrest procedures will exclude relevant evidence and lead to an acquittal, even if the evidence of guilt is overwhelming?

A gory, not pleasant but true story of an incident which took place in California vividly demonstrates what could happen. A highway patrol in California pulled a car over and started to question the driver. He became very suspicious and asked the driver to open his trunk. The driver refused, the police patrol insisted, and the driver finally opened his trunk. In the trunk the policeman found a dismembered body, a member of the driver's family. The driver pleaded guilty to the charge of murder and was convicted in a lower court. In an appeal court he was declared innocent and let go because the patrol officer did not have a proper search warrant to look in the trunk. That was because of the exclusionary rules of evidence that they have in the United States. We do not want that here in this country.

I feel the public should be aware of these concerns being expressed by some Canadians. These concerns should be carefully examined once the Constitution returns to Canada, its final resting place.

I would like to comment briefly and commend the first ministers on the formal recognition of Canada's multicultural heritage, a heritage that has been a continuing and undisputed fibre of our history.

Canada has benefited from the diversity of its people. Because of this diversity, we are a richer nation, committed to living together in understanding and mutual appreciation.

In the early 1960s the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker from Prince Albert likened Canada to a garden. He said:

> A garden ... into which has been transplanted the hardiest and brightest flowers from many lands, each retaining in its new environment the best of the qualities for which it was loved and prized in its native land.

In my new responsibility as immigration spokesman, I have become in the past few months very aware of the fact that our attitudes towards immigrants and immigration are an important part of our multicultural ideology. Mr. Speaker, I hope my education in this area broadens my horizons even further. In this regard the charter does reflect the reality that is Canada.

In the past year and a half I have travelled extensively in Canada. The employment opportunities contained in the Committee of Employment Opportunities for the 80s gave me the chance to see in depth the Canada I did not know. I was very familiar with Ontario; but the rest of Canada was not well known to me. I had travelled to some extent in Canada but I never took the time to see it, and to really look at it.

I have walked on the stone beach at Stephenville, Newfoundland; amazed at the sight of the harbour of St. John's; driven and walked along the most beautiful Cabot Trail; slipped on the rocks at Peggy's Cove just trying to get that perfect picture; stood in the famous legislature in New Brunswick; visited with city council in Chicoutimi, Quebec; sang, ate and drank shoulder to shoulder with my fellow French-speaking Canadians in a wine cellar in old Montreal. Mr. Speaker smiles because he knows what I am talking about. I travelled Ontario from Fort Francis to Pelee Island; watched a flock of geese heading south with trees a brilliant yellow, the black storm ahead and the sun glistening off the frost somewhere between Brandon and Winnipeg; visited the little towns in Saskatchewan, such as Biggar, Perdue and even Lennie where my mother came from; travelled through breathtakingly beautiful Alberta to the tar sands in the north. I heard a native Canadian couple tell their story, the most articulate presentation I think I have ever had the pleasure of hearing. I watched the world junior softball championships in Edmonton. I flew a twin Otter from Fort McMurray to Yellowknife, walked the streets at midnight in broad daylight, skied the Rockies, got wet in Vancouver, and marvelled at the diversity of British Columbia. From coast to coast and to the north it is Canada. Its beauty, its people, its resources make it the greatest nation in the world, and I, along with millions of Canadians, want to maintain its greatness. God help those who would attempt to destroy this greatness.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that there were many who said that a Constitutional accord would not be possible. God willing, Canada will have its Constitution. My prayer as a proud Canadian is that we will all be guided in the next few weeks and in future constitutional change to uphold the human and political freedoms that we tend to take for granted. I love this country. My dedication is to keep it strong economically and socially, and united from coast to coast.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): I rise tonight near the end of this great constitutional debate that has been causing so much difficulty in this country. With the news that has been given to us of the agreement reached on the two outstanding and most controversial subjects, there is very little that one could say. However, I feel I should take a few minutes to put on the record some thoughts with regard to a couple of matters on which I have personally been questioned on the effect of the constitutional resolution when it is passed.

First I should say, Mr. Speaker, as someone who came to this country some 40 years ago now, I liked what I saw. I spent some 15 months training in this country during the war. I liked it so much that when the war was over I wanted to come back. I did come back with my family. Although I travelled fairly extensively in Canada, I liked what I saw in Quebec. I settled in Quebec, and I have lived there ever since. I did not choose Quebec because I thought that I would be able to continue to speak the English language; in fact, quite the contrary. I assumed that I would probably be obliged to brush up on my French. However, that was not so. If I can interject here, somewhat to my disappointment that was not so. I continued to operate for some 10 or 15 years in the English language, even though I was in the construction industry, building from Trois-Rivières, what we used to call Three Rivers, to Chicoutimi and throughout the province, and even in the capital city of Quebec. That was to change.

I think the big change came with Bill 22. Mr. Speaker, because you were a part of that action at that time, you will know that I as an individual did not speak against Bill 22, even though I felt there were some parts of that bill that I did not particularly like. However, over all I felt it was necessary that some action be taken to redress what was certainly an unacceptable situation in the province of Quebec.

I was somewhat unhappy when Bill 22 was replaced with Bill 101. However, even today we have learned to live with Bill 101. Life for the Anglos in the province of Quebec is not really all that bad.

● (2150)

However, as I said at the outset, I want to make a couple of comments on parts of the resolution on which I have been questioned. First I should like to comment upon the non obstante override clause as it applies to the charter of Rights and Freedoms. The entire charter of Rights and Freedoms will be entrenched in the Constitution and no province will be able to opt out of any provision of the charter. The agreement signed by the Prime Minister and the nine Premiers does not emasculate the charter. Democratic rights, fundamental freedoms, mobility rights, legal rights, equality rights and language rights are enshrined in the Constitution and apply across the country. What the premiers and the Prime Minister agreed to is a safety valve which is unlikely ever to be used except in non-controversial circumstances by Parliament or legislatures to override certain sections of the charter.

The Quebec charter of rights and freedoms adopted in 1975 contained an override clause which has been used several times. However, its use has been non-controversial and is instructive in looking at how the override may be applied in terms of the new constitutional charter. For example, despite the provision in the Quebec charter guaranteeing that everyone is equal before the law, the juries act indicates that a lawyer cannot be a member of a jury. Despite the guarantee of open trials in the Quebec charter, the youth protection act provides for circumstances where juvenile court may hold closed sessions. Despite the protection in the Quebec charter for the privileged doctor-patient relationship, the highway safety act requires a doctor to inform the license bureau of the name of the patient who is medically incapable of driving a motor vehicle. It is because of the history of the use of the override clause and because of the need for a safety valve to correct absurd situations without going through the difficulty of obtaining constitutional amendments that leading civil libertarians have welcomed its inclusion in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I should like to make a few comments on the subject of indirect taxation. The British North America Act gives the federal government the power to raise taxes by any means, including indirect taxation, but does not give the same power to the provinces. The provincial authority is contained in Section 92(2) of the BNA Act which indicates direct taxation within the provinces. Thus, under our present Constitution, provincial taxation powers are limited to the raising of a direct tax within the province for provincial purposes. In order to decide whether a tax was direct or indirect, the courts have adopted the John Stuart Mill definition of direct and indirect taxes. This means that a tax is held to be a direct tax when it is demanded from the very person who is intended to pay it. On the other hand, a tax is held to be an indirect tax when it is demanded from one person in the expectation and with the intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Whenever a court has had to decide whether a tax was direct or indirect, it examined the tax in order to find out whether it met that definition. The purpose of the proposal is to free the provinces from the obligation to meet the direct tax test when they levy a tax on non-renewable resources.

In giving provinces the power to levy indirect taxes on non-renewable resources, we are giving provinces the power to levy a tax whose burden does not fall on the very person on whom the tax is levied. This could mean that a tax levied on a non-renewable resource in a province might be paid by residents of another province, if the resource subject to tax were exported to the other province. However, an indirect tax in non-renewable resources should not discriminate between the province and other parts of Canada. Federal taxing powers would not be affected by the proposal. The federal government would retain the power to raise money by any mode or system of taxation on resources, as well as on any other goods or activities.

During all the constitutional discussions of the past several years, there was full agreement that, apart from resources, provinces should not be permitted to apply indirect taxes, the effects of which would be felt by persons outside the province imposing the tax. For example, it would not be fair for a province in which automobiles are manufactured to impose an indirect tax on such automobiles which would then have to be paid, not only by the residents of that province but by the residents of all provinces to which the automobiles were shipped. On the other hand, it was also agreed that non-renewable natural resources presented a special case. It was generally accepted by the provinces and by the federal government that provincial governments through any mode of taxation should be able to ensure that a fair return was received by the residents of the province which was disposing of the resource. It was agreed that provinces should be given indirect taxing powers, with the proviso that their tax laws could not discriminate between resources used in the province and those exported. In other words, an indirect tax by Saskatchewan on, say, potash would have to be the same, whether the potash was used by residents of Saskatchewan or shipped outside.

Another subject of considerable interest in the province of Quebec at the present time is the subject of denominational schools. I should like to make a few comments on the subject. Concerning religious guarantees in the Constitution, Section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867, is the only provision in the act which refers to such guarantees. Section 93(1) provides that no province may prejudicially affect rights or privileges with respect to denominational schools which existed at law in the provinces at the time of Confederation. However, the section does not make any reference to freedom of choice respecting language of education. Jurisprudence indicates that the rights and privileges guaranteed by Section 93(1) are those relating to the establishment of denominational schools and religious teaching therein. But the section does not prevent provinces from regulating the curriculum generally of such schools or prescribing the language of instruction to be used. A decision of the judicial committee of the Privy Council in 1916, in the case of Trustees of the Roman Catholic Separate Schools for the City of Ottawa v. MacKell, held that Ontario legislation which restricted the use of French as a language of instruction in the schools of that province was valid provincial legislation relating to education and not contrary to the provisions of Section 93. However, this does not mean that the provinces are free to prevent the establishment and operation of denominational schools and the teaching of denominational tenets, doctrines and practices in those schools. Quebec's charter of the French language, Bill 101, regulates the language of instruction in the schools of the province, but it does not address itself to the broader issue and, indeed, it could not constitutionally abrogate Section 93 guarantees.

Obviously I would have liked to have seen a lot more freedom in the language provisions in the constitutional resolution. I also fully agree that it is much better to arrive at a consensus, to arrive at a compromise. In that respect, perhaps unwillingly, but nevertheless I accept that the inclusion of the Canada clause is the best we can expect in the circumstances.

May I call it ten o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the hon. member for calling it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CONSTITUTION—PROPOSAL THAT REPRESENTATIVES OF MINORITIES ATTEND CONFERENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on November 9, I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the Constitution. Since the beginning of the constitutional debate in this House, and certainly since the historical agreement between the federal government and the nine consenting provinces was signed, the contents of the charter of rights has continued to be the focus of political debate. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker, I heard this evening that the issues of equal rights for women and native rights had been settled, at least from what we heard in this House earlier.

One very important issue, however, remains to be settled, that of the francophone minority outside Quebec. During this brief debate this evening, I should like to deal with the situation where we, francophones, living in provinces with an English majority, find ourselves in this federation, which is becoming for us a real maze of interpretations. Of course, I refer to the charter of rights, a charter which should be universally applied, but which, in this case, relinquishes the universality principle to the provincial legislatures by letting them determine how it will be implemented. Because of all these optional or "nothwithstanding" clauses, especially as concerns the provisions on basic freedom, legal guarantees and equal rights, this charter is probably the only federal document which will take its meaning from provincial jurisdictions and legislation. In other words, the federal government proposed but the provinces dispose.

This means that the Canadian who wishes to travel in his own country will have to check carefully and practically every day how the various provinces interpret the Constitution before leaving his province for another. The legal guarantees of this Canadian, if arrested, for instance, could vary when he steps across a provincial border. At the limit, in view of this potential multitude of rights which apply or do not apply, we may wonder if we are still in the same country or in a federation of many countries.

A more detailed examination of the contents of this charter reveals that the clauses concerning linguistic rights and the right to education in the language of the minority are firm and universal clauses which are not subject to the opting-out principle. This means that the members of a linguistic minority of either official language may have their children educated in their own language at the elementary and secondary levels only where numbers warrant. As concerns the principles involved, while several premiers, such as Mr. Bennett and Mr. Davis, do not agree and say that Clause 23 will not change anything, I believe that this clause still provides guarantees which seem adequate at first glance. However, as one looks a bit further, one finds that in actual practice the reality is somewhat strange. Let us take an example. A group of French-language parents residing in one of the seven provinces not subject to Section 133, which gives access to legal and legislative institutions, file an application for a French school in their community. The school authorities, the school board answer that the application is turned down because the number of children does not warrant a French school in the area. The parents will then have to find the money, energy and support to go to court and pursue their rights at their own expense. The case will be heard in the provincial Supreme Court. And there lies the irony. Since the charter of rights does not recognize in that Canadian province the access to legal and legislative institutions in the minority language, these parents will have to fight in English for the recognition of the minimum constitutional rights granted them as French-speaking citizens.

So this is in the charter of rights, a serious flaw that makes it in my view both unacceptable and utterly incomplete. Minorities are granted certain rights but not the tools needed to have them enforced. Even the Ontario Premier has no hesitation in recognizing that the charter of rights gives nothing more to French speaking residents in his province, and I refer you to a report published no later than today in the Montreal Paper la Presse, where Mr. Davis is quoted as making the statement utterly shocking to us Franco-Ontarians that there was nothing new there, the charter did not change much in the Ontario situation.

When he replied to a question I directed to him in the House on November 9, the Prime Minister recognized that the linguistic rights applied only to elementary and secondary schools. He stated that he was prepared to convene a federal-provincial conference of the type I had suggested to review the whole question following patriation. This is indeed a commendable and significant response. Yet, because I know a number of premiers, I am very much concerned about the outcome of such a meeting, but I remain optimistic about the possibility of it being held.

According to the information I have checked today, Mr. Speaker, of the nine provincial premiers—I should perhaps exclude Mr. Hatfield who is the only one who recognized fully the linguistic rights of both anglophones and francophones—two have replied: Mr. Hatfield, of course, and Mr. Blakeney, of Saskatchewan, who said: "If the others go, I will certainly go too". Naturally, there was no reply from Bill Davis, and I must say that I am very disappointed with the Ontario Premier's refusal. In Ontario, the province with the greatest minority of francophones—some 500,000 of them—I do not understand his refusal to take part in a federal-provincial conference which could be the perfect forum to consider and discuss in depth the last problem which remains to be settled in this country, that is, the treatment of francophone minorities outside Quebec. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, all members of this House congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier for his unremitting efforts to protect the rights of francophones outside of Quebec, for his tenacity and his eagerness to standup for the rights of francophones throughout Canada.

The hon. member has suggested a federal-provincial conference to enable francophone groups outside Quebec to state their grievances. He worked hard to get the provinces to agree to that meeting but in spite of his efforts, only two are in favour of such a meeting. Such a conference could only bring results if the provinces would agree to attend. Once again our efforts should be channelled towards that end. This being said, we have to recognize at the same time that the new constitution will do much for francophones outside Quebec. First bilingualism is made official at the federal level. Second both language groups are considered equal in every area: executive, legislative and legal. Third the right of linguistic minorities to education is recognized. I know well that in spite of all that, the hon. member as well as many others would rather see the rights of francophones outside Quebec given greater recognition. It must be recognized as well, however, that we have proved that with good will and co-operation between the federal and provincial governments, much can be accomplished. To wit, Mr. Speaker, the historial agreement the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) announced to the House 45 minutes ago, the agreement on women's rights and aboriginal rights. We all congratulate him. We are very proud to be Canadians.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—APPEARANCE OF CANADIAN PIPERS AT EDINBURGH INTERNATIONAL TATTOO. (B) REQUEST THAT BROADCAST BE SHOWN IN CANADA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on November 2, I asked the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), as minister responsible for reporting to this House for the CBC, if he would inquire why the CBC had refused to carry the TV program which had been made by the British Broadcasting Corporation of this year's Edinburgh Tattoo. The reason I asked that was that I wanted Canadians to see this year's tattoo because Canadians on that occasion were doubly honoured; first of all, by including a separate section dedicated to Canada entitled "Canadiana", a section which featured a team of about 100 Canadians drawn from across the country including pipers, drummers, Scottish and habitant dancers from all parts of Canada, and second, honoured by inviting a Canadian service officer, General Lewis, Commanding Officer Air Command, to take the salute in Edinburgh. This year's Tattoo, therefore, was a great event in Canadian terms. It was broadcast broadly in Britain and across Europe. Canada got a great boost in this particular event.

I was subsequently told by the minister that the CBC had not been offered the BBC videotape. I can now assure him, or the parliamentary secretary who will be replying, that this oversight has been remedied and a 75-minute version of the 90-minute Tattoo has been offered to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and I and many more Canadians hope the deal will be closed and Canadians will have a chance to see this outstanding event; the way Canadians did their country proud by their performances.

I am told that the CBC is looking at a five-minute version of the Tattoo, but my view is that even to put on such an abbreviated version of a more than ten-minute participation in the tattoo would be an insult to those Canadians from all parts of Canada who were seen by about 250,000 who attended the Tattoo in Edinburgh, about six million British television viewers, and 50 million to 60 million viewers in Europe and Australia.

Canada's participation this year in this international festival has been in the works for about five years. It was treated by the BBC as a feature item. The show was designed to portray Canadian unity by featuring dancers from all across this land—Scottish pipers, Scottish dancers as well as folk dancers from Quebec. It was, I am told, a moving experience. Having paid for much of the Canadian group's expenses to go to Edinburgh, I contend that Canadians should now have the opportunity to see how well this team which they sponsored performed on their behalf.

• (2215)

Last week, I sent to the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation a petition bearing the signatures of 107 members of this House of Commons and of the other place. I am hopeful that the minister will add these and possibly his signature to a request that the Canadian viewers have an opportunity to see this outstanding version of Canadian performance overseas by Canadian artists.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, 13 years ago Parliament declared in the Broadcasting Act that Canadians are, indeed, entitled to a varied and comprehensive choice of programming on the radio and television stations licensed in Canada. Because of this longstanding requirement, I welcome this opportunity to delineate the minister's position with respect to the selection of programming within the Canadian broadcasting system. This is particularly timely in view of the concern expressed in this House now and on previous occasions by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's apparent refusal to schedule a BBC program of the Edinburgh Festival.

I would first like to comment about the specific BBC program of the Edinburgh Festival in which members of the Canadian Militia played a prominent role this past summer. As the minister said in the House the other day, all Canadians are obviously impressed by and proud of the role of the militia at this international tattoo. Given the cultural heritage of many Canadians, such a program would undoubtedly be of interest to them. However, the responsibility for the choice of any specific program, including this one, rests with the individual licensees.

The minister did inquire as to whether or not the CBC had planned to schedule the program, and the corporation advised that the BBC did in fact prepare a 75-minute program, as has been pointed out, on the 1981 Edinburgh Tattoo which was telecast in Britain and Europe as part of the Eurovision agreement.

Apparently some Canadians understood that the program was carried in the United States and in Commonwealth areas. However, BBC Enterprises, the commercial arm of the BBC, did not select it for international distribution, and it was therefore not offered to the CBC or to any other television organization. Australia does have a tradition of carrying the BBC's coverage of the Tattoo at a later date, but the Australian Broadcasting Commission has not yet signed a contract with the BBC to show the 1981 Tattoo.

The CBC also advises that its programming officers are aware of the five-minute Canadian segment contained in the Tattoo and the participation of a Canadian composite pipe band in the massed bands, and they will be looking at the program with a view to determining where it could be appropriately scheduled. The minister also forwarded the hon. member's interest to Mr. Johnson, President of the CBC, for his consideration. The corporation will undoubtedly take comments such as these into consideration when planning its future programming. However, I think it is timely to remind all hon. members that Parliament declared that government does not and should not involve itself in the selection of the programs provided by radio and television broadcasters, whether public or private.

The Broadcasting Act makes it clear that neither the CRTC nor the government are in a position to ensure that any station might schedule any particular program.

I would like to remind hon. members again that broadcasters do listen to their audience. The broadcaster has a vested interest in maintaining and building a loyal and contented audience, without which it would be impossible for him to carry on business. The minister, therefore, strongly encourages each and every Canadian to let their broadcasters know their desires and wishes in programming matters, as has already been done in this instance.

THE BUDGET—MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF EFFECT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to set forth my dissatisfaction with the answer given to me by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to my question on November 19.

In my question, I exposed two budget changes which seriously injure family farm ownership and the passage of the family farm from one generation to the next.

Provisions in the budget abolish the income averaging annuity provisions and also abolish the capital gains tax reserve. The effect of this is to impose an immediate assessment with respect to capital gains on the sale of a farm.

The budget goes on to state that there are forwarding averaging provisions which are not satisfactory when the details of it are examined. It also provides that a farmer could spread the actual payment of capital gains tax over the next three years, with interest being leviable on the amounts. I simply say that that is not a satisfactory solution to the very real problem of passing farms on to the next generation.

As you may know, the farm practice is that when a farmer puts his whole life into a farm, it then becomes his pension plan. He does not make deductions, as people who are paid a salary do. When he passes that farm on, therefore, it is important to have a scheme whereby he can use the farm proceeds as a pension plan. Traditionally, that is done in two different ways. The first way is usually a sale for cash to a member of the next generation who has financed the purchase price through the Farm Credit Corporation, or the Alberta development corporation, or any number of financial institutions. The farmer, of course, immediately has all the cash. He takes that and purchases an income-averaging annuity and spreads that purchase price over ten or 15 years. A portion of the capital gains tax applies to his income in each of those years, and capital gains tax is paid. That works very well. The other mechanism used between generations is that the farm seller himself finances the deal by selling to his son or daughter by way of an agreement of sale or an outright sale with a mortgage back. In both these ways, a farmer is able to utilize the provisions of the Income Tax Act, called the capital gains tax reserve. All that means is that if the payments are spread out over ten or 15 years, as each payment is received, the farmer declares in that year one-tenth or one-fifteenth of the capital gains tax, and it is paid to the government.

● (2220)

Without those provisions and under the budget the most the farmer can do is to have the entire tax assessed in the year of sale and to spread the payment out over three years, even though if he is financing the sale of the farm to a child—or a stranger for that matter—he will not be receiving those payments for ten or 15 years.

We know that the Farm Credit Corporation does not have sufficient money—nor do the provincial plans—to provide the capital necessary to transfer all of the farms in existence in this country to the next generation. There are some 330,000 farmers in this country. In the province of Ontario the average farm is less than 200 acres, which really is a small farm. Traditionally the sale proceeds from a farm have always been enough for a farmer to move into town, to purchase a small house and to have a nest egg on which to live out the rest of his years. Inflation in the cities is high. With respect to the city of Calgary or the city of Lethbridge, I know that if a farmer has a quarter section of land and sells it, he does not have sufficient money to purchase a home and to have a nest egg. Until now mortgages back or agreements of sale gave a person sufficient money to put a downpayment on a house and, as the payments came in, the farmer was able to pay the mortgage on his house plus the capital gains tax. Under the present provisions of the budget that will become impossible and, frankly, I think we will see a very real disruption which will be a disservice to the farm community.

The parliamentary secretary spends a lot of time in this House. I recall that the hon. member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Evans) was here at 6.15 one morning when I harangued the government. He certainly is faithful in that respect. I ask him to consider throwing away the speech which may have been prepared for him by government officials and to tell me frankly whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) was really aware of the effect of these budget provisions on the farm family community. I know he is briefed by all sorts of different departmental officials. Clearly the budget provisions are designed to solve problems. I think there were abuses in some cases, but I submit that in this case there were no abuses. We need a response, and we need changes. Did the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) give any advice before these changes were put into the budget? If so, what was it? Since the budget has come out, has the Minister of Agriculture made representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the farm community similar to the ones I am now making?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some structured comments about the nature of the new provisions which are being introduced to offset the withdrawal of the income-averaging annuity contracts, the capital gains reserve provision and, indeed, the general-averaging provisions, but at the outset I would like to say to my friend, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), that subsequent to the budget, the minister has received a great many representations, including the representations the hon. member made in his question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I was in Regina all last weekend talking to farmers at a Liberal party convention. I am sure I talked to more than 40 or 50 farmers who raised issues similar to those the hon. member has raised tonight. I was able to allay the concerns of a large number of those individuals with the explanations I was able to give with regard to the forward-averaging provision and other provisions that relate thereto. However, they were able to put in particular questions about forward-averaging provisions which I was not sure handled the problem. These have been brought back and referred directly to the minister for his consideration.

● (2225)

The minister, as he said in the House earlier, is willing to look into all those areas where problems are caused as a result of provisions proposed in the budget. He is prepared to be flexible with regard to matters of timing and so on.

The minister is aware of the kinds of concerns being expressed by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills. I am aware of them fully and I apprised the officials of the department of them this afternoon by relating to them the concerns raised with me by the farmers I talked to in Regina. The minister will be considering these upon his return from Halifax.

As the hon. member has indicated, these provisions for averaging were originally put in place to allow precisely for an averaging of an unusual lump of income over a period of time so that an individual would pay on average the standard tax rate to which his income would normally draw. The problem that arose was that in addition to the averaging provisions, there arose a problem of tax deferral, and in some cases tax deferral for very long periods of time, that was not intended by the original provisions. The three original provisions together tended to overlap a bit and caused some additional problems.

We believe that the forward averaging provision provides in the vast majority of cases not only an adequate averaging provision for Canadians, but also a superior averaging provision to those made available through the other mechanism. This is why the new measures were introduced. We believe they can be make made workable in a vast number of cases. The minister is willing to consider those cases where the forward averaging provision may present difficulties for Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.28 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THE CONSTITUTION

AGREEMENT ON CONTENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas ten first ministers representing and reflecting the diversity of Canada were able to put aside their personal, political and sectional interests in order to reach a compromise which will provide Canadians with a patriated Constitution containing a flexible amending formula, a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and includes equal rights for men and women, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House reaffirms its faith and commitment to the Canadian federal principle of compromise and consensus which has served this country well for 114 years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I am pleased, on behalf of our party, that the members of this House have accepted this motion in the unanimous spirit which we have just seen displayed.

We believe that it is important to serve notice that this House believes the federal principle can work. Over the last number of weeks we have seen demonstrated, despite the acrimony that has prevailed and surrounded the constitutional question, that in fact compromise, consensus and agreement can be found.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Over the past year many Canadians must have begun to wonder whether the federal system to which this House has just reaffirmed its commitment could, in fact, work. The atmosphere surrounding federal-provincial discussions was one which often appeared to be without those traditional Canadian virtues of mutual trust, moderation and compromise.

As has been said so often by our leader, the federal system can work if those of us in it want to make it work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It is important, in view of that working ability which the federal system has again demonstrated, that we review what has in fact happened through compromise and through agreement. First, we have seen that the first ministers of Canada are willing to make the federal system work for the benefit of all Canadians. They have reached an agreement on contentious issues such as an amending formula and a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The first ministers should be congratulated for their flexibility and also for the fact that they abandoned antagonistic stands, and made significant concessions.

What they have produced is a document which has been called typically Canadian. Certainly it was drafted within the fine Canadian tradition of compromise and consensus. A Charter of Rights and Freedoms and amending formula now reflect and represent the Canadian federation in all its diversity.

As has been mentioned, Madam Speaker, we should be able to expect in this country that diversity should not only be fostered but that it should, in fact, be encouraged.

We often say in this House that diversity is our strength. So often, on the other hand, we see legislation or approaches taken which in fact violate that very diversity. After those initial steps taken toward a new Constitution, I believe that the later additions to the accord have further demonstrated that agreement can be found. What are some of those agreements?

First, it is important to remember that Canadians were anxious that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should apply equally to men and women. That is a position which has been unanimously adopted by this House. As well, special groups and individual Canadians applied pressure on the government and on Members of Parliament, as well as using gentle persuasion on those who had some contacts with Members of Parliament who were to make a decision.

• (1410)

Canadians were also anxious that the aboriginal and treaty rights of native people should be preserved under the new Constitution, and again everyone played his or her role in trying to alter the agreement which was reached by the first ministers.

There was criticism that, by suggesting amendments, our party was in fact going to break the accord. That was never our intention or our purpose. However, it was our purpose and our belief that the accord itself could be improved through this Parliament.

Through intergovernmental negotiation and compromise, ten Canadian governments have responded to these concerns and have now expressed their willingness to change their original agreement in order to ensure that the final constitutional accord will truly reflect Canadian society. Again the first ministers have proved that the federal system can and does work, and that they are willing to make it work for the benefit of all Canadians.

Traditional Canadian virtues of trust and moderation inherent in our federal system, of which we have spoken earlier, have now been reasserted and reconfirmed. The last 114 years have not been a failure. The last 114 years have seen the growth of a country and the inclusion of additional provinces to make it the ten we now have, and many of us have the fond hope that to those ten will be added the Northwest Territories and Yukon at some future date.

The last days have also taught us one other lesson, and that is that, in the new era of federal-provincial discussions, Canadians must be vigilant. And governments should be aware of this new vigilance on the part of Canadians and that what is going on behind closed doors cannot be left behind closed doors. Somebody mentioned yesterday that if women should ever have been in the kitchen, they should have been in the kitchen when the accord was drafted.

I say to Your Honour, and to all members of the House, that this accord should lead to a more open and tolerant view not only of our differences but also in the discussions of those differences as they lead to the accords we all seek. Given the events of the past year it is important for this House to reaffirm its commitment to the Canadian federal tradition of compromise and consensus, and I thank the House for accepting the motion.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I too would like to speak to this motion under Standing Order 43 and to thank the House for giving its unanimous consent. I applaud the ten first ministers who finally saw the light. If it had not been for the unity of women across Canada, whether they were in the kitchen or out of the kitchen, we probably would not have the inclusion of Section 28 in the charter. This has been a progression starting way back, probably with the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

During the past weeks the minister responsible for the status of women, and all the women in this House, have worked on this in one way or another. There have been efforts put forth by provincial and federal advisory councils—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Miss Campbell: I am sorry. There are still a few seconds left. It might hurt hon. members opposite, but certain things need to be said in this debate.

The Advisory Council on the Status of Women—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Oral Questions.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—REFUSAL OF MORTGAGES TO AFFECTED HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House have known for many months the havoc that the government has created with the urea formaldehyde foam insulation problem. We are now seeing the magnitude of that problem. Now it is no longer just a health problem. It is no longer just a problem of corrosion and a resulting fire hazard. It is a problem which means potential economic disaster for 80,000 to 100,000 home owners who have UFFI in their homes. Therefore I have a question for the minister responsible for CMHC.

Mortgage lenders, trust companies, banks and financial institutions are refusing to guarantee mortgages to people whose homes are insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. What can these home owners do?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, Canada Mortage and Housing Corporation is involved in the insurance of mortgage funds, as well as the financial institutions mentioned by the hon. member. In fact CMHC is probably the major insurer of that type of funding in the private residential sector. I say to the hon. member, and to others who may have seen some press coverage earlier today, that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation policy is not changed. It will continue to insure homes insulated with this material. There is nothing different today from what there was yesterday in the insuring operation of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is the major insurer in this country.

ROLE OF CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION APPRAISERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, there is absolutely no question that the minister's department and CMHC have been involved with this and that the government has been a co-conspirator in the whole UFFI mess from the beginning. In the meantime we are concerned about those people whose mortgages come up for renewal today, tomorrow, and next week. What instructions did the minister give to CMHC appraisers if they run into local buyer resistance when a mortgage is up for renewal—not when the house is up for sale but when the mortgage is up for renewal?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I guess I should repeat my answer. Possibly the hon. member did not get the significance of it. There is nothing different in the operation of CMHC as an insurer today with respect to homes that have UFFI than pertained yesterday or at any time. Nor is there any difference in the way CMHC is dealing with homes with this material or with any other home. No instructions were given to the contrary, or anything specific dealing with this substance.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, just so that people will be absolutely sure, if they have installed urea formaldehyde home insulation in their homes, thanks to this government, just so they can be reassured, and before the government comes up with a decision to remove the foam and compensate people who have a problem, has the government considered guaranteeing mortgages to all home owners with UFFI and, if not, why not?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I welcome the interest of the hon. member and his party in this issue. It is unfortunate that the question was not directed to the minister responsible for the government response in this area, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is not here today but has been here for months, available to answer questions of hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION TO HOME OWNERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister responsible for housing. He was given notice of this question and will know that the question arises today because of press reports that his department is warning its appraisers not to accept the risk of houses with UFFI insulation. That is why the question is being raised today.

It has been four years since CMHC approved UFFI under the CHIP program. It is one year since it was banned by the government. Does the government intend to provide assistance, in the form of compensation, for the 100,000 Canadian householders who have been made the lepers of the housing industry, the untouchables, because of the negligence of this government?

• (1420)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Obviously I would be wasting the time of the House to repeat the answer I have given twice to the hon. member's colleague when I indicated that there were no instructions or anything different given to CMHC officials from what pertained yesterday, no instructions that set UFFI in a different category from any other. If the hon. member did not hear that I will say it again, and I apologize to all other hon. members in the House for saying it.

Again, Madam Speaker, I guess if the hon. member cannot hear what I say today, although he has taken the opportunity of giving notice of his question, obviously he has not done any research because that question was asked before in this House. The answer is that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is the lead minister, the government is considering this matter, and it is close to making a decision on it. We are awaiting the decision of the special appeal board on the question of whether the government's decision to ban will stand or not. I admit it is a matter that has some long history. It is a history, Madam Speaker, by the way, that pertained at the time that his government was in power for nine months. He might reflect on the actions of his government during that period of time.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the fact is the minister is right. No instructions are forthcoming from this minister or this government, and hence 100,000 householders in this country have been hung out to dry. That is the problem.

On September 22 the minister of state from Quebec, his seat-mate, said, and I quote:

> The government is not excluding the possibility of considering various types of technical and financial assistance.

That was a press release, Madam Speaker. Since last June we have been waiting for the report of the hazardous product review board.

My question to the minister is very simple and straightforward, and I ask it on behalf of these 100,000 Canadians who cannot sell their houses and now, because of his negligence, they cannot get mortgages on their houses. Given those circumstances, and given the government's culpability and responsibility, does the government intend to provide any form of compensation or financial assistance to these 100,000 unfortunate Canadians?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would recommend that officers under your direction who are responsible for the audio provisions and audio services of this House—

An hon. Member: Why do you not answer the question?

Mr. Cosgrove: —check the audio available to the hon. member, because for the fourth time I have to say to him that the provisions of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and its policy with regard to insurance for homes that have UFFI are no different today than they were yesterday. I have to take issue with that misstatement. Perhaps the hon. member did not mean to say it, or he has not heard my answer three times previously. There is no difference in the underwriting practices of CMHC that pertain to UFFI today from what there was yesterday. Such a house is not any different from any other home that has any other insulation in it.

I guess the hon. member again has not done his research and he does not know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be reporting to the House not only on the results of the special committee that is reviewing it but on the results of 2,400 homes that have been studied, on the results of the National Research Council which is looking into it, and on the advice and expert opinion that we will be receiving from other countries. That will be before the government and the House shortly.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S PLANS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question again is for the minister responsible for CMHC. The press today mentions Donald Munro as the assistant underwriting official in his department. He gave some very extensive quotes in the newspaper article about how they would not even handle these mortgages, period, but then reconsidered and asked that the matter be seriously downgraded. We are asking the minister, Madam Speaker, who is in charge over there? Obviously it is not he.

We have done our research. It has all been very carefully worked out. We have noticed that we really do now know who is in charge over there. They keep passing the buck down to health, up to consumer and corporate affairs, and over to the minister. It is really a device to obfuscate on this. My question has been put several times. You have 100,000 Canadian homes, half a million Canadians, with one of the most serious problems this country has ever faced, and the government is doing absolutely nothing. What will the minister or the government do? What is the minister prepared to do on this issue?

• (1425)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am prepared to repeat my answer for the fifth time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS MEET WITH HOME OWNERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, obviously that is an inadequate answer, and typical. There are thousands of people in the city of Vancouver and on the coast of British Columbia who have experienced this. We have turned in many petitions. People in those communities asked to meet with the Prime Minister and to meet with a senator in cabinet responsible for that, and they have been clearly turned down. Will the minister explain why officials in cabinet or in government are not prepared to meet with people who are experiencing the problem?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, many members on this side—and as the hon. member says on the other side—have received representations, not only from industry but from home owners, from one side of the country to the other. I assure the hon. member that there are dozens of members, including myself, who have made submissions, to the members who are on the committee with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the minister who occupies the seat beside the minister responsible for CMHC, again as it was pointed out, made certain statements about government commitments, financial and otherwise. This is a serious health problem. The government has ripped off the equity of many Canadians. Could the minister basically tell the House what was the background, or for what reason did he make these commitments to people that there would be financial assistance to Canadians who suffered from this problem?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member began his questioning by saying that he had done his research. Obviously he has not researched that question, it having been asked earlier in the session, nor did he research the answer which was given.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY RESPECTING NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES WHO WILL RESUME WORK IN FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister probably knows that the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada announced that since September, 1981, 2,800 workers have lost their jobs in this industry. In view of the minister's statement this morning concerning the new policy for the next three years, and assuming that the minister has had his new policy carefully researched, could the minister tell the House how many workers, out of the 2,800 who lost their jobs, will be able to get their jobs back in the footwear industry, considering the projections made in his statement this morning?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I believe that many of these lay-offs have occurred because the Canadian footwear market is soft, and not only as a result of the pressure created by imports. However, in the policy announced today, we have introduced a quota system that will apply to all imports of non-leather footwear. This would prevent the present pressure from increasing at the same rate, and I feel that with this quota system and the modernization plan I have announced, the situation for employees in this important industry will improve; I hope that will be the case.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I am truly appalled by the minister's reply; in fact he was absolutely unable to tell us how many of these 2,800 workers, who are in the same circumstances as so many others who were laid off temporarily during the last few months, will be able to get their jobs back in that industry, in view of his new policy. From the proposals the minister made in his statement, it is clear that a number of these employees will not be able to go back to jobs in the footwear industry. It is important that Canadians should know the facts. I shall ask my question again. Could the minister tell the House—in fact I think he could—what percentage of the 2,800 workers will be able to get jobs again in the footwear industry, and how does he expect us to believe there is a possibility, when imports this year will take about 60 per cent of the market, which is exactly what caused lay-offs in the first place, also considering last year's rate of 61 per cent.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, the policy we announced this morning follows the broad outlines of a report prepared by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. It is something the footwear industry has wanted for some time. In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the quota system we announced today, especially since it applies to non-leather footwear, will somewhat relieve the pressure on our industry in the non-leather footwear sector, because most of these lay-offs are occurring in that sector. That is why I feel the quota system could improve the situation.

• (1430)

[English]

LEVEL OF QUOTA ON FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who gave the footwear manufacturers their final breakfast today when he announced the lifting of the quota covering leather footwear, and establishing a global quota on all non-leather footwear and canvas footwear much higher than is being imported at present. Why would the minister give another Canadian industry, at a time when we see all kinds of lay-offs, a kick in the teeth with a frozen boot just when it was getting back on its feet? This means that 15,000 jobs will be affected by the policy that the minister announced today. Why would he announce the lifting of a quota at a time when jobs need to be preserved in Canada instead of the industry being faced with lay-offs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we announced today a balanced program with two basic elements. The first is a substantial program with a budget of $17 million to assist in the modernization and the restructuring of that industry to help preserve jobs and strengthen job opportunities. This program will be administered by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. In order that this program has an opportunity to work, we also announced a new program involving global quotas on imports from all countries of shoes which are manufactured with a covering other than leather. We have included something in that quota that the industry asked for, and that is shoes made of canvas. That was not covered in the original quota system. It is not correct to say that we have set a base figure higher than the existing one, because the existing one does not cover canvas footwear.

In announcing the program today we were responding to the broad lines of the report of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal which said that our industry is now in a position to meet competition from developed countries, including state trading countries. These are the main source of imports of leather footwear. We are following the recommendations of this major report which received the enthusiastic support of many members opposite. In addition to that, we are putting in place the major program to assist in the modernization and strengthening of the Canadian footwear industry.

EFFECT ON COMMUNITIES AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, that program is going to help Mitsubishi which has 125 employees in Canada and is the forty-ninth largest company in Canada, with sales of $1.25 billion. Mr. Ted Rowe, chairman of the Canadian Shoe Manufacturers Association, has stated that it is a "$17 million sham." If the minister thinks this is going to create jobs, why is he giving money to communities to diversify because of the effect of this policy, and also providing early retirement benefits to affected workers with lengthy work records in the industry?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Give them a gold watch and a pair of shoes!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are putting forward a modernization program to strengthen job opportunities through having a more efficient and up-to-date industry. To the extent that there are companies not able to modernize, I am sure my hon. friend would want us to work to ensure alternative job opportunities. I gather from what my hon. friend says that he would prefer people to be out of work. That is not our position.

An hon. Member: Shame!

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it has always been a position of the federal New Democratic Party to support the Crow rate. My question is to the Minister of Transport. I understand that at a recent meeting of the Manitoba Wheat Pool Elevators he announced that a bill will be coming before Parliament shortly to change the Crow rate. In light of the statement the Prime Minister made earlier this year in the House that there would be no change in the Crow rate until there was consensus in western Canada, and now that the province of Saskatchewan and also the province of Manitoba support retention of the Crow rate, what is the government's position with regard to the Crow rate at this time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I answered a question on the same subject last week at which time I indicated that, following the budget which assigns $1.3 billion to western transportation, the government was going to decide on which way to spend it. I said the other day that there were two broad possible approaches. One was a comprehensive approach which would include the Crow rate modernization, and the other was a special project approach. This debate is before cabinet now and I will advise my hon. friend when a decision is made.

REGINA RALLY IN SUPPORT OF RATE RETENTION

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I understand that there is a rally in Regina today in support of the Crow rate. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who has been a great advocate of retention of the Crow rate, was supposed to have been addressing that rally in Regina at this very hour. From a phone call to his office I have found out that he is not at that meeting in Regina but is in his office in Ottawa. I would ask the minister, if he has not already made a decision on the Crow rate and if he does not have his tail tucked between his legs here in Ottawa, eating Crow, when that decision will be made.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, both the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and myself are due to address the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool in the coming days. I think he does so tomorrow and I do so on Thursday. Both of us will have ample opportunity to express our views on that subject at this time.

But there is one thing about which both of us agree enthusiastically and strongly, and that is that measures have to be taken now to make sure that western Canada will have the best possible transportation system. That means enhancing very substantially the main line capacity of that railway system. That will be done.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT RESOLUTION CONSIDERED IN QUEBEC NATIONAL ASSEMBLY BE CONSIDERED AT CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, whom I wish to congratulate on the agreement reached on equality of women and aboriginal rights. Starting today and during the next few days, the Quebec National Assembly will be debating an important resolution containing basic principles for the future of Canada, that is, the principle of Canadian duality and special status for Quebec. Although he is not now considering this resolution, is the minister prepared to give the House the assurance that the constitutional process will not end once the resolution has been passed here in Ottawa, and second, that the contents and the basic principles of this resolution will be discussed at a future constitutional conference?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the constitutional process will not end after the vote to be held shortly on the resolution. This is the first stage in developing a new constitution for Canadians. There will be other conferences. In fact, one is to be held some time during the next few months, in order to discuss, with the provinces, how yesterday's agreement on aboriginal rights is to be implemented. There will be further stages in the discussion on the Constitution and obviously, if the Government of Quebec wishes to continue the debate in order to amend more specifically the three elements with which it cannot agree at this time, we are always prepared to discuss these issues. I regret it has not been possible to have discussions on this matter during the last two or three weeks, because according to my information at this time, the provinces would have been prepared to consider various amendments that might have been satifactory to the government of Quebec. But in any case, I can give the hon. member the assurance that we are prepared to make changes later, since then we will finally have the Constitution here in Canada, with a mechanism for amending the Constitution in Canada, without going through the British Parliament. Therefore if the government of the province of Quebec does not make a decision within the next few days, the door will still be open and attempts to improve the situation can still be made. I am sure that the other provinces will be willing to consider any reasonable proposals.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROCEEDINGS IN TRIAL OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, Bill C-43, the access to information bill, a government bill which has been accepted in principle by this House, would restrict ministers of the Crown from denying public access to certain documents. Contrary to the spirit and the terms of that bill, an affidavit which has been executed by the Solicitor General and which was presented to a Montreal court this morning, prevents the production of 33 documents required for the defence of 17 RCMP officers who have been charged with various criminal offences.

My question to the Solicitor General is simply this: when this trial relates to events which occurred over ten years ago, what possible harm—except, perhaps, to the political credibility and embarrassment of some who are still here—would occur if these documents were used in court as a defence for those who are charged?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, all of the documents in question, which were the subject of my certificate this morning, are documents to which the McDonald commission had full access in its work. The McDonald commission made public certain portions of those documents and recommended that other portions not be made public. I followed exactly that recommendation and, of course, have not withheld any documents which were made public in that process. However, I would remind the hon. member that the McDonald commission made a decision very recently concerning matters of national security and cabinet confidence. The decisions which they made are simply expressed in the certificate that I signed this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I remind the Solicitor General that none of these documents have been produced by the government as of yet, and none have been produced in that Montreal court case. Second, of course, we are not dealing with the judgment of the McDonald commission. We are dealing with the liberty of individuals who are charged with a criminal offence.

COST TO TAXPAYERS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Because the taxpayers of this country are footing the bill for the government lawyers who are objecting to the release of this documentation and, at the same time, because public funds are being used in the defence of these officers who want to produce these very same documents, does it make sense that the taxpayers are paying for both of these contradictory arguments?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that the Mounties should not be provided with defence at public expense, because I think they should.

Mr. Lawrence: No; I am saying call off those objecting.

An hon. Member: Produce the documents.

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member knows, or should know, from the office that he held in the previous administration, that there were matters before the McDonald commission and documents produced to the McDonald commission which were not appropriate to be made public. The McDonald commission did examine those, and hon. members are aware of the findings which were made on the basis of that very full examination. The subject of my certificate is simply an implementation, an acceptance of the classification and declassification decisions which were recommended by that commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL

FUTURE OF TORONTO-HAVELOCK LINE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask the minister whether he could confirm that he intends to meet soon with the minister of transport of Ontario to finalize arrangements because of the dual purpose of the Toronto-Havelock line, the VIA portion of which was cancelled, and that, because of the dual nature of that line, there will be an arrangement for joint financing of that line so that this line can continue.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the House of what was said. It was said that some commuter-type routes might be taken over by the provinces. We assigned a longer period of time to make this possible. On a number of occasions, privately and quite publicly, Mr. Snow has expressed the wish, which I find to be very logical, that the federal government should give to the provinces the same kind of financial status that the federal government has by way of VIA, in operating these lines at present. That is a reference to costing order 63-13 of the CTC. In recent days CNR has offered that regime to the city of Montreal in the province of Quebec with respect to the operating of commuter type lines in Montreal. I am not sure about the CP, but the CN would surely be quite willing to offer the same advantage to the province of Ontario should it decide to operate those three—Stouffville, Barrie and Havelock—in the Toronto area.

Oral Questions

QUERY RESPECTING ASSISTANCE FOR COMMUTER LINES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for the answer, as far as it went. But surely if there are circumstances which define the Havelock-Toronto line as unique because of being intercity or commuter, the same reasoning could apply to other parts of the VIA Rail service which were cut out, such as the Atlantic, which is interprovincial and/or commuter and/or out of Edmonton, which is the only way to get to the coast. If help is being offered to the Havelock-Toronto situation, with funding from the federal government, surely the minister will offer the same help to other portions of the VIA Rail service which have been eliminated at the moment. Would he confirm that he would?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the situation to which the hon. member refers is not the situation existing in the Toronto area or, for that matter, in the Montreal area. The situations there essentially involve routes which were previously inter-city and which, de facto, because of growth of metropolitan areas, have become commuter type routes. That situation is entirely different, and that is why the treatment of it is quite different too.

In the first case we proceeded to elimination and reduction right away. In the second, we gave ourselves a longer period of time in order to discuss the matter with the provinces. However, I believe that agreement will be reached. It may be that the Havelock route will not be completely maintained, but some of it will be maintained because it has a commuter type of operation.

COMMUNICATIONS

RECEPTION OF TELEVISION SIGNALS FROM CANCOM SATELLITE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the uncertainty in many areas of northern Canada as to the legal status of receiving signals from United States TV satellites, can the minister clarify the arrangement which will apply to communities receiving TV from the CanCom satellite? Will these local cable TV systems in northern Ontario and in other parts of northern Canada receiving the CanCom signal be permitted to receive signals from the U.S. TV satellites as well?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member points out, during the course of the past year we have proceeded with the extension of services to every part of Canada and delivery via satellite. The answer to his question is that the CanCom licensees are authorized to receive the signals that the CRTC has authorized them to receive.

Concerning the wider question of access to U.S. programming, I believe it is, indeed, in the interests of all Canadians that we come to some situation where there is an equalization of viewing opportunities across the country. We are presently looking into the matter within the Department of Communications.

SMALL BUSINESS

TREATMENT OF SMALL BUSINESSES BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for small businesses. Since the Liberal government budget of November 12, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Toronto-Dominion Bank have ceased to accept applications under the Small Business Development Bond. I am sure that the minister is aware of this. Could the minister explain to the House what incentives there are for the banks to loan money to small businesses in financial difficulty?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question because it gives me the opportunity to clarify that the chartered banks, as mentioned by the hon. member, have indeed indicated to their various branches that they would impose a temporary moratorium on the implementation of the program in order to consolidate their criteria, as there are changes in the program. A meeting will be held early next week between the officials of Revenue Canada, Finance and the Small Business Secretariat in order to redefine the criteria of the new program as announced by the Minister of Finance, and by the end of November all chartered banks should be implementing it.

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES TO BUDGET

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. If, after the meeting, the criterion which is established does not satisfy the lending institutions or does not give the required incentive to the lending institutions, is the minister for small businesses prepared to make representation to the Minister of Finance to change the budget so that it will, indeed, help small business as the Small Business Development Bond was intended to do in the first place?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I think there is a hypothetical aspect to this question. I want to indicate to the hon. member that instead of pressuring the Minister of Finance into changing his budget, it is the banks that should be pressured, if they refuse to implement this program. But all the information that I now have indicates that—if I could finish my answer, Madam Speaker, perhaps, members would understand the situation better—as I was saying all the information I have received from the banking community and the financial institutions indicates that they are in agreement.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, I understand, has now come into the House, and it concerns a recent report by the Ontario Status of Women Council which found that nearly half of all female senior citizens scrape by on a yearly income of less than $5,000 a year. Members on all sides of the House know that many women at this very moment are going hungry. Will the minister take immediate action to relieve this reprehensible situation by increasing pension benefits so that all senior citizens are guaranteed incomes above the poverty line?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would like to confirm that we did request funds as a first priority of the government as soon as the economy is a little better, because we are talking about a sum of $730 million to bring single pensioners, most of them being women, just above the poverty line. Of course nothing prevents the provincial government of Ontario from adding a "top-up" immediately to help the particular situation that the Council defined as one of great concern to all of us.

REQUEST FOR PENSIONS FOR FEMALE HOMEMAKERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same minister. As the minister is aware, part of the reason older women are poor is that as homemakers they accrue no pension benefits in their own right. Now that the minister's surveys have shown that most women who work at home cannot pay into the CPP, what measures is she prepared to take to ensure that women at home raising children will be able to accrue their own pension benefits?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I can suggest to the hon. member what I will be most probably proposing, but I would have liked to hear what his party is proposing. I am still looking for some text on that. The only idea we have received in about ten years, since the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women has been published, is that the Canada Pension Plan should be opened up, either on a voluntary basis or in a compulsory fashion, to all women at home, so-called housewives, for contribution. They would make them in a way similar to a self-employed person. The reason this was not done earlier is, of course, because that would amount to some $30 or more a month, and women in the lowest income bracket, those most in need, would not have that money available.

I have finally accepted the idea to push, promote and discuss with women the options by which a majority of middle-class housewives could contribute, using a different means to help those with the lowest incomes.

THE CONSTITUTION

FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Jonquière, also directed to the Minister of Justice. If I understand correctly, the minister said that the constitutional debate does not end now and that new developments will be possible at a future stage. I should like the Minister of Justice to explain two things to me and to the Canadian people. First, how can he guarantee the Canadian duality to which he refers, and second, with the proposed amending formula which requires the consent of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the Canadian population, how can he explain to francophones outside Quebec that at the present time, three provinces will guarantee the rights of francophone Canadians across Canada, but that in seven provinces they will be restricted as to their legal and legislative rights?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): The answer is very simple, Madam Speaker. First of all, to everyone's surprise, the nine English-speaking provinces agreed to protect the education rights of francophones outside Quebec, which is a tremendous achievement and one which has given me great cause for rejoicing. There is still the matter of the courts and the proceedings in the legislatures. The Constitution of 1867 already provides for the use of both languages in the courts and legislatures in two cases, and this year we have made some progress because the government of New Brunswick has committed itself even further under Section 133, which provides francophones with better guarantees than those enjoyed by anglophones in Quebec. I do agree that it is unfortunate that Ontario has not decided to make French one of the languages used in the courts and in the Ontario legislature. However, in our charter and in our constitutional resolution, we have provided for a mechanism that will enable the provinces to make such changes through bilateral agreements, and I would ask the provinces to consider such action as soon as possible. In any case, we have made considerable progress by entrenching in the Constitution, here and now, that the Parliament of Canada and federal institutions shall always be bilingual.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT ON DEPARTMENT—DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts yesterday tabled its report on the Auditor General's audit of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That report made a number of very incriminating condemnations of the serious ongoing problems within the department. The report calls on the government to make legislative changes to the present antiquated and archaic legislation so veterans would have their pensions processed within 180 days instead of the present four to five years. Will the minister assure this House that he will co-operate with the Pension Commission in drafting the new veterans affairs legislation as recommended by the Auditor General, the Public Accounts Committee, and the Conservative Party?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is well aware that the administrative and adjudicative processes of the Pension Commission are now being reviewed. I can tell him that the new chairman of the commission has already undertaken a massive reorganization of the commission and we have seen fairly rapid results in that the backlog has now been reduced by over 500 in a little over a month, and it has also reduced the time period for phasing. Until such time as I can satisfy myself that it is necessary to introduce new legislation, I would like to have the review process completed prior to indicating to the House a commitment on that basis.

RECOMMENDATION MADE BY PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the former chairman of the Pension Commission has said he was hamstrung by the present legislation and could not process the pensions any faster. The Public Accounts Committee has asked the Pension Commission to report before the committee prior to the end of March next year with a full recommendation on what type of legislation should be drafted, so we no longer will have this four to five-year processing period. Is the minister saying he will not comply with the Public Accounts Committee wish that the commission have this all completed by the end of March?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, that is not what I am saying. What I am saying is that the review process is now going on. I anticipate receiving reports from Mr. McCracken within a month to a month and a half. Also, the commission itself is reviewing the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee and will be responding within the established guidelines.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

APPROVAL OF SALE OF TORONTO HOTEL TO HONG KONG INTERESTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Recently the Harbour Castle Hotel in Toronto, Campeau property, was sold to wealthy Hong Kong interests, more particularly interests controlled by Mr. Canning Fok. Will the minister advise the House how long it took to obtain FIRA approval for this action?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I think it is well known that there are confidentiality requirements in the law—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —regarding the administration of FIRA. I can assure my hon. friend that the full process was followed and the decision that was announced about the transaction involved significant benefit for Canada, as stated in the relevant press release.

TIME TAKEN TO ISSUE AGENCY APPROVAL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Would the minister tell the House what the average time is to gain approval through FIRA, because I can assure him that this approval only took a fraction of the average?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Well, Madam Speaker, the time does vary, but I know—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —at least 50 per cent of the applications to FIRA are dealt with in three weeks or less.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning House business. My question is directed to the government House leader. We had discussions this morning which led to the arrangements that are being made for today. I am asking him to confirm those arrangements.

As I understand it, the member for Vaudreuil who now has the floor will be concluding his remarks. Next will be the member for Kingston and the Islands, who informs me that her contribution will take approximately 15 minutes. She will then be followed by one speaker from the New Democratic Party, immediately following which we will have a recorded division and, following the division, presumably the Minister of Justice or another minister of the Crown will introduce a motion with respect to the restoration of aboriginal rights in the resolution.

I would ask the government House leader to confirm my understanding of those arrangements and, while doing so, perhaps he might indicate what the business will be for the remainder of the week.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: The statement made by the hon. member for Yukon is almost perfect. Indeed there will be a recorded vote if required. As I understand it, after the hon. member for the riding of Jewett has spoken on the amendment concerning women, Mr. Speaker will put the question to the House and if all members agree there will be no recorded vote. If, however, as indicated by the hon. member for Yukon, the Progressive Conservatives ask for a recorded vote, of course we will be here to vote and support the motion of the Leader of the Opposition in that respect. As for the rest, the statement of the hon. member for Yukon reflects the agreement we reached this morning.

As to the House business for tomorrow, contrary to what I announced last Friday, we will go on with the constitutional debate so as to enable more members to express their views and, consequently, the fifth day of the budget debate is postponed until Friday this week.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I did not hear the government House leader specifically delineate that the Constitution would be continued on Wednesday and on Thursday and that we would move on to the fifth day of the budget debate on Friday. Is that correct?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: We simply cannot hide anything from the hon. member. That is exactly what I have just said, and I am sure the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam will forgive me for failing to remember the name of her riding, something which is very important.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I just want to make one minor correction. The House business as set out by both the House leader for the official opposition and the President of the Privy Council is correct. I know the House would be delighted to again hear the words of wisdom of the member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, whose knowledge of women's affairs is undoubtedly unparalleled. However, she spoke yesterday and we think that perhaps we will have the member for Vancouver East speak today.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we fully agree that the hon. member for Vancouver East be allowed to express her views today, and that was the object of the agreement we have reached.

PETITION

MR. WENMAN—EFFECTS OF HIGH MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition on behalf of my constituents as a method of expressing through direct representation the anger and frustration that they feel at the prospect of losing their homes. The purpose of this petition, signed by another 324 citizens of the Vancouver lower mainland, is to indicate that in spite of the budget, in spite of climbing interest rates, banks are still floating 18 per cent to 18½ per cent mortgage interest rates. The purpose remains, therefore, substantially the same, as these petitioners, along with thousands of other Canadians, find themselves day by day, more and more in dire straits.

The nature of this petition is to demand that the government lower interest rates and allow mortgage interest rates to become tax deductible. These petitioners realize that the vacuous budget presented by the government provides virtually no help whatsoever to alleviate this grievance. Therefore, the petitioners hope that you will sense, Madam Speaker, the urgency and desperation of this plea, find this petition in order and use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion on this matter so that a remedy may be found.

ABOLITION OF CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 1,798—Mr. Cossitt:

Will Crown Assets Disposal Corporation be abolished and be amalgamated with the Department of Supply and Services and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reasons?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): No, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation will not be abolished. However, the government has decided to integrate the staff and activities of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation into the Department of Supply and Services. Crown Assets Disposal will continue as a corporation with a board of directors in conformance with Section 15 of the Surplus Crown Assets Act.

A memorandum of understanding will be signed by the board of directors of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation authorizing the supply administration of the Department of Supply and Services to carry out the functions of the CADC as a separate and distinct output service.

(a) The scheduled date for the integration of the activities of CADC into the Department of Supply and Services is January 11, 1982.

(b) The Glassco Royal Commission on Government Organization, Item 7, pages 141 and 142, Volume 2, recommended that "CADC be operated as a division of the proposed department of purchasing and supply and its personnel and method of operation be integrated as closely as possible with other functions of the department." In addition, in the Lambert commission report of March, 1979, one of the conclusions drawn was that "Crown Assets Disposal Corporation does not require an arm's length relationship from government because it is basically an integral part of the established departmental common service structure. It should function under the common service policies applicable to other organizations and be subject to the managment and accountability regime that we have prescribed for all departments".

The role of the supply administration of the Department of Supply and Services, as a common service agency, is to provide sound supply management in the federal government through the provision of goods and related services in support of the operational programs of other government departments and agencies. The supply administration is committed to the "total supply concept" which includes purchasing, acquisition management, warehousing, distribution, assets management and services management. The integration of the disposal activities of CADC into DSS is considered to be a significant and natural addition to the activities included in the "total supply concept".

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Monday, November 23, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques.

(1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

(2) Any member of the public in New Brunswick has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any office of an institution of the legislature or government of New Brunswick in English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province,

ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Recours

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

PARTIE II

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PARTIE III

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Conférence constitutionnelle

36. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART IV

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

37. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

Majority of members

(2) An amendment made under subsection (1) that derogates from the legislative powers, the proprietary rights or any other rights or privileges of the legislature or gov-

PARTIE IV

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

The Constitution

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

50. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

Idem

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

PART VI

GENERAL

Primacy of Constitution of Canada

51. (1) The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

Constitution of Canada

(2) The Constitution of Canada includes

(a) the Canada Act, including this Act;

(b) the Acts and orders referred to in Schedule I; and (c) any amendment to any Act or order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

Amendments to Constitution of Canada

(3) Amendments to the Constitution of Canada shall be made only in accordance with the authority contained in the Constitution of Canada.

Repeals and new names

52. (1) The enactments referred to in Column I of Schedule I are hereby repealed or amended to the extent indicated in Column II thereof and, unless repealed, shall continue as law in Canada under the names set out in Column III thereof.

Consequential amendments

(2) Every enactment, except the Canada Act, that refers to an enactment referred to in Schedule I by the name in Column I thereof is hereby amended by substituting for that name the corresponding name in Column III thereof, and any British North America Act not referred to in Schedule I may be cited as the Constitution Act fol-

PARTIE VI

DISPOSITIONS GÉNÉRALES

Primauté de la Constitution du Canada

51. (1) La Constitution du Canada est la loi suprême du Canada; elle rend inopérantes les dispositions incompatibles de toute autre règle de droit.

Constitution du Canada

(2) La Constitution du Canada comprend :

a) la Loi sur le Canada, y compris la présente loi;

b) les textes législatifs et les décrets figurant à l'annexe I;

c) les modifications des textes législatifs et des décrets mentionnés aux alinéas a) ou b).

Modification

(3) La Constitution du Canada ne peut être modifiée que conformément aux pouvoirs conférés par elle.

Abrogation et nouveaux titres

52. (1) Les textes législatifs et les décrets énumérés à la colonne I de l'annexe I sont abrogés ou modifiés dans la mesure indiquée à la colonne II. Sauf abrogation, ils restent en vigueur en tant que lois du Canada sous les titres mentionnés à la colonne III.

Modifications corrélatives

(2) Tout texte législatif ou réglementaire, sauf la Loi sur le Canada, qui fait mention d'un texte législatif ou décret figurant à l'annexe I par le titre indiqué à la colonne I est modifié par substitution à ce titre du titre correspondant mentionné à la colonne III; tout Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique non mentionné à l'annexe I peut être cité sous le titre de Loi constitutionnelle suivi de l'indication de l'année de son adoption et éventuellement de son numéro.

Repeal and consequential amendments

53. Part III is repealed on the day that is one year after this Part comes into force and this section may be repealed and this Act renumbered, consequential upon the repeal of Part III and this section, by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

53. La partie III est abrogée un an après l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie et le gouverneur général peut, par proclamation sous le grand sceau du Canada, abroger le présent article et apporter en conséquence de cette double abrogation les aménagements qui s'imposent à la présente loi.

Abrogation et modifications qui en découlent

French version of Constitution of Canada

54. A French version of the portions of the Constitution of Canada referred to in Schedule I shall be prepared by the Minister of Justice of Canada as expeditiously as possible and, when any portion thereof sufficient to warrant action being taken has been so prepared, it shall be put forward for enactment by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada pursuant to the procedure then applicable to an amendment of the same provisions of the Constitution of Canada.

54. Le ministre de la Justice du Canada est chargé de rédiger, dans les meilleurs délais, la version française des parties de la Constitution du Canada qui figurent à l'annexe I; toute partie suffisamment importante est, dès qu'elle est prête, déposée pour adoption par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, conformément à la procédure applicable à l'époque à la modification des dispositions constitutionnelles qu'elle contient.

Version française de certains textes constitutionnels

English and French versions of certain constitutional texts

55. Where any portion of the Constitution of Canada has been or is enacted in English and French or where a French version of any portion of the Constitution is enacted pursuant to section 54, the English and French versions of that portion of the Constitution are equally authoritative.

55. Les versions française et anglaise des parties de la Constitution du Canada adoptées dans ces deux langues ont également force de loi. En outre, ont également force de loi, dès l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'article 54, d'une partie de la version française de la Constitution, cette partie et la version anglaise correspondante.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, when my remarks were interrupted by the adjournment motion last evening, I had said that I accept that the inclusion of the Canada clause is the best we can expect in the circumstances. Obviously I am acknowledging that I would have liked something better. In the next few minutes I will try to explain why I am prepared to accept a compromise.

I should say, first, as I said last evening, that as an immigrant who has enjoyed almost 40 years in Canada, maybe longer than most people who are presently Canadians who are living in Canada, I have always felt that the immigrant coming to this country must try to accept conditions as they are and not try to change the inherent culture, nature and character of the people. Of course, I cannot hide the fact that I am an anglophone. With an accent such as mine, I am unable to hide the fact that I am an immigrant. As a result, I have been part of what I might term a sort of minority caucus in my party, and my good friend who sits beside me, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), has been fighting—even today in question period—for the rights of Les francophones hors Québec. My job today is to explain why I feel that the anglophones in this country, and specifically the anglophones in the province of Quebec, should accept as the best possible compromise the insertion of what is commonly termed the Canada clause in the constitutional proposition.

Section 23 will apply to Quebec with the exception of subsection 23(1)(a). The minority language of education rights which will go into effect immediately are the Canada clause—Section 23(1)(b)—and the continuation of education right—Section 23(2). These two sections provide the minimum of reciprocity between Quebec and the other provinces, which the PQ government itself acknowledged as desirable in the 1977 St. Andrews and the 1978 Montreal agreements with the other provinces and for which provision was made in Quebec's Bill 101. In fact, the resolution does little more than give effect to section 86 of that law, something Quebec was unable to do, because the consent of the other provinces was a prior requirement. That consent has now been achieved through the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The charter also gives Quebec the right to opt in to constitutional provisions protecting the language of education rights of citizens according to their mother tongue. Section 23(1)(a) will not apply in Quebec until the National Assembly has given its approval. In the meantime, however, its protection will be available to French-speaking Canadians in other provinces, a matter of great importance for them.

Subsection 23(1)(a), the mother tongue test, permits immigrants who become citizens and whose first language is English or French to have their children educated in English or French. In Quebec this right will not be extended to new citizens, to meet the concerns of Quebec that the majority of new citizens will assimilate with the minority language group when the desire is to have them identify with the majority language population.

Subsection 23(1)(a) also gives the right to parents who are Canadian citizens and received their primary school education in Canada, but not in their mother tongue, to have their children receive their education in the mother tongue. This right is important to francophones residing in many provinces where facilities for French language education have not been generally available until very recently. The right is also important in Quebec. However, anglophones in Quebec have always had access to English language instruction.

Put in concrete terms, in Quebec a citizen who received his primary school instruction in Canada in English—Section 23(1)(b)—or a citizen whose child was educated or is being educated in English in Canada—Section 23(2)—will have a right to have all his children educated in English at the primary and secondary level. On the other hand, a new citizen who did not attend primary school in English in Canada would not have the right to send his children to English schools even though his mother tongue was English, unless he had previously lived in another province and his children had already begun their education in English.

However, there is an opt-in provision for Quebec, and we are going to have to hope that we can eventually change the government in the province of Quebec so that we can exercise that option. Section 58, which has been added to this resolution, will provide a mechanism for Quebec to opt in the Section 23(1)(a) once the National Assembly signifies its approval of this section in respect of Quebec.

Because my children have been educated in both English and French schools in the province of Quebec, I feel that I am in somewhat of a privileged position. I am concerned, however, and will continue to be concerned that there will be other Canadian immigrants like myself whose children have not yet entered the educational system in this country who will not have that same choice or right. However, I am also well aware that there are many francophones in the province of Quebec who would like to be able to exercise their right to send their children to English schools and who at the present time do not have that right.

Life is a compromise. To live with each other in peace and harmony we must try not only to respect the opinions of others but also attempt to understand the reasons for their concerns.

It is my belief that the constitutional proposal we are debating is the best compromise that could have been compiled in a country as diverse as our country, Canada.

In conclusion, I congratulate all those who have participated in making this agreement possible. I would like to express particular gratitude to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who, by their courage and determination, have achieved the seemingly impossible. We are all very proud to be Canadian.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate today in a mood vastly different from that which would have characterized my approach had I spoken yesterday. My remarks then would have conveyed my anger that once again the fundamental principle of the equality of women and men was under siege and my despair that an 80-year-old struggle for the basic rights of women in this country had brought us but such a short distance and, finally, I would have expressed my fervent hope that right and reason would yet prevail.

I am glad to say that hope has won the day. I feel a deep and overwhelming sense of relief—and then of jubilation—that the amendment before us is to be accepted and Section 28 entrenched without qualification and without any override provision in the charter. That section merits repeating:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

But as we accept this amendment before us, let us not forget the hurdles that had to be overcome to achieve it nor the hard work and effort of thousands of Canadian women and men who made it possible.

Section 28, as hon. members will remember, was not in the original constitutional proposals introduced into the House in October of 1980. Neither was it a product of the weeks and months of the hearings of the joint parliamentary committee on the Constitution. That hard-working committee produced many amendments, but Section 28 was not among them. No, that section was the creation of hundreds—indeed, thousands—of Canadian women who converged on Ottawa last spring to speak their minds about what they considered their fundamental rights.

Who were those women and what did they represent? They were of all political affiliations and no political affiliation. They came from all parts of Canada and all backgrounds. They were housewives and students, professional women and store clerks, grandmothers and their children and their children's children bound together by one great common bond, to see that justice prevailed.

● (1520)

The lobby that ensued in the weeks following the women's ad hoc committee on the Constitution was one of the most successful and resourceful that Parliament Hill has ever witnessed. They convinced party member individually and collectively that a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to be worthy of its name, must declare forthrightly and nobly the true equality of women and men.

On a historic day last April, April 21, Section 28, which I read a little earlier, was accepted unanimously by all members of the House of Commons. That is the way it remained until earlier this month when the first ministers met in one last effort to make federalism work. They met to see if they could come up jointly with an agreed-upon constitutional resolution. At that time Section 28 was left untouched, either through neglect or oversight or because it was considered to be of no great importance.

At that conference earlier this month Section 28 was not even discussed, as various first ministers have admitted. But bureaucrats, who have a way of dealing with what they consider technical details, soon put an end to that. They persuaded their political masters to emasculate Section 28 by subjecting it to a legislative override. Women, once again denied full equality in law, by their thousands took up anew the battlecry of equal rights.

During these past two weeks we have witnessed their tremendous effort with admiration and have been proud to be a part of it. The results are as we see them today—full restoration of the guarantee of equality in law to women and men. I am almost tempted to say, Mr. Speaker, "Let us hurry and get this resolution off to Westminster before somebody changes his mind".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: What has for me been one of the most rewarding aspects of this year-long battle has been the political awakening and mobilization of thousands of Canadian women, women who never before had taken part in a political campaign but who now recognize the virtue of that word "solidarity".

In all the battles that lie ahead, and there will be many, women know that they have forged bonds which will stand them in good stead whenever the need arises, and the need will arise. What has been achieved today is not an end but a beginning.

You will notice that I have used the phrase on several occasions "equality in law" because it is still sadly true that there is no equality in fact. I look at this little pamphlet put out by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women entitled "Women and Poverty: What are your Chances?" There is a section headed "Poverty: More likely if you're a woman". These are some of the points it makes:

> There are 1.4 times the number of poor women as poor men in Canada.
>
> Two-thirds of all minimum-wage workers are women.
>
> Single mothers are especially at risk:
> —83 per cent of all single parent families are headed by women.
> —44 per cent of these families are living below the poverty line.

It goes on:

> And your chances of being poor increase if you are old and alone:
> —6 out of 10 single, divorced or widowed women over 65 have annual incomes under $5,000.
> —Less than 1 in 4 widows can expect to get a widow's pension from a private pension plan.
> —One-half of all unattached women over 65 depend entirely on government pensions for their support . . .
>
> Getting a job does not necessarily insure women against poverty.
>
> One out of six women employed full-time earns less than $6,000 per year.
>
> Women employed full-time earn only 62 per cent of what men earn.
> The Canada/Quebec Pension Plan . . . the average income for a woman . . . is $99 per month while for a man it is $141.

Women did not choose to be in this position of deprivation and poverty, but society, attitudes and laws have combined to relegate hundreds of thousands of women to a life bereft of self-dignity and hope. We can ask, are women guaranteed equal treatment under the Criminal Code with respect to sexual assault? Do women receive equal pay for work of equal value? Should Indian women who marry non-Indians lose their status whereas Indian men do not?

The reinstatement of Section 28 in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is a great step forward, but we have to recognize that it will not materially or magically change the status of women overnight. Attitudes are deep-rooted and hard to dislodge. Decision-making in most fields will continue to be dominated by men. The provisions of this charter itself must undergo a three-year time lag before it can be used by individual Canadians to challenge discriminatory practices. That three-year period can be used by both Parliament and the provincial legislatures to change existing laws that deny the equality of women in fact, or to introduce new legislation advancing the status of women.

But why wait the three-year period? Why not undertake a crash program now to bring all other legislation into accord with Section 28? The Government of Canada can set the example. It can do so by eliminating immediately the most glaring inequity in the country, the one for which we are internationally renowned. I refer to the lot of Indian women, condemned by Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act to lose their Indian status if they marry a non-Indian. Indian men, as we all know, do not lose their status if they marry a non-Indian.

When Sandra Lovelace, an Indian woman from New Brunswick who had lost her status, took her case to the United Nations Human Rights Commission, the federal government in its defence stated, and I quote from United Nations Human Rights Commission Communication R6/24 dated July 30, 1981:

> Legislative proposals are being considered which would ensure that no Indian person, male or female, would lose his or her status under any circumstances other than his or her own personal desire to renounce it . . .
> Legislative recommendations are being prepared for presentation to cabinet for approval and placement on the parliamentary calendar for introduction before the House by mid-1981.

That promise has already been overtaken by time. Let the government now come forward with legislation to correct this injustice and I am certain it will receive speedy passage. It will also be an earnest indication of the government's firm resolve to accord the highest priority, both symbolically and substantively, to the full equality of women and men.

The battle for equality takes many forms and it will go on in many arenas, but in this past year the women of Canada have shown that they are more than up to it. They have won a signal victory and the country is the better for it. So, too, our system of federalism has been reaffirmed and the country is the stronger for it. Unilateralism has been rejected.

● (1530)

Canadian women have kept faith with those great pioneers of the feminist movement who, in their day, had to overcome much greater obstacles. In the early years of this century, it was Agnes McPhail, Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung and others who blazed the path. And more recently, Therese Casgrain, Ellen Fairclough and Judy LaMarsh.

Yes, the women's movement of 1981 has indeed kept faith. Parliament and legislatures have responded to their efforts and, as a result, we can take pride in the fact that our Constitution will be a nobler, a loftier document. Women's rights have been confirmed.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that these women of 1981, worthy successors of the early suffragette movement, had and will continue to have as their rallying cry Nellie McClung's fighting words of the 1920s:

> Never retreat, never apologize, never explain. Get the job done and let them howl.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today in the House, a very important day for all of us in this House and indeed for the people of Canada. As we all know, last night the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) announced that the nine provinces which signed this provincial accord agreed that Section 28 of the equality of men and women would apply in the new Constitution, and would apply without the provinces being able to override this section.

The minister also announced that the provinces had now agreed to enshrine existing aboriginal rights in our new Constitution, the word "existing" being added to the former Section 34 which will be reinstated. I need not say once again how delighted we in the New Democratic Party are, after all the struggles of so many people in our party and in other parties and indeed citizen organizations across this country, that these new developments have taken place and are now approved across our land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: As a member of the New Democratic Party and caucus, I am very proud that Section 28 was introduced by the New Democratic Party last spring. It was done in conjunction with many advocates from women's groups who had legal advice among their own members and worked very hard to make sure that there were provisions in this Constitution that would make absolutely certain that equal rights for men and women would be entrenched.

I am also very proud that it was my leader and my party that over the past three or four years have made this a major issue in our campaigns and indeed in our performance in this House. There is certainly no issue more important than the whole question of the rights of aboriginal peoples and women of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: We in the New Democratic Party rejoice that equal rights for men and women once again will have paramountcy as a national goal which no province can ignore and, indeed, which the federal government also cannot ignore.

Women of Canada can take great pride in their very successful lobby which they organized over the past two-week period and previously last spring. They were able to protest the federal-provincial accord which had overridden equal rights for men and women in Section 28.

We should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the first ministers of our provinces did not see this as a national right and priority. They did not consult with Canadian women. They had no Canadian women in their ranks sitting at the table making decisions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself was willing to trade off protection of women's rights for an accord that protected other rights but not the rights of women in Canada.

These attitudes, I must say made by male politicians who control decisions in this country, will not soon be forgotten by Canadian women, even though we are rejoicing that the changes have been made. I want to quote one woman lobbyist who said:

Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned.

This proves once again with dramatic clarity that it will be absolutely essential in the future to have women politicians in local, provincial and federal governments.

Another point which makes me very proud to have been associated with women's groups who have lobbied so hard for equal rights and who have worked along with their parliamentarians in this regard is the solidarity which they showed toward the rights and efforts of native people, and the commitment which they still have to try to remove the provincial override from all sections which affect people's rights generally.

This morning a member of the ad hoc women's committee said to me, and I quote:

Last night's announcement is a good beginning, but we have only won half the battle. We must get rid of the override completely regarding fundamental freedoms in Section 2 and also the Sections 7 to 15 regarding rights and freedoms which must be universally applied across Canada with no override clause for provinces.

This will be an effort to be continued not only by women's groups but by all of us who are concerned about equality in our country that applies equally from sea to sea, regardless of which province we may live in.

For example, in British Columbia it happens that we have a very weak Human Rights Commission. The permanent members to this commission have not yet been appointed by the government. I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that recently members of this commission were chastised because of their attitude and their language toward women. It is very reminiscent, incidentally, of Senator Hays, our famous representative on the Constitution committee. Is this the kind of body, in a province such as British Columbia, that we want to protect people's rights and put pressure on the government?

Also in British Columbia we have a government which recently has forced women on welfare who have a young child to go to work. It uses very punitive measures to do this by depriving them of a certain amount of their welfare cheques. This is the kind of thing, again, that makes women fearful, especially if they think provinces may have undue authority with regard to certain rights, particularly as they apply to women.

On the other side of the continent, I want to say that I was told this morning by a woman from St. John's that their premier worked very hard to keep offshore resources under provincial jurisdiction. We agree with that decision, but it is ironical, Mr. Speaker, that women who are applying for these very jobs in offshore resources have been refused work and have appealed to the Human Rights Commission.

I mention these examples to reinforce the importance of this change and the importance of having a national policy, not a policy that can be changed from province to province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: I agree with the ad hoc women's committee—I am quoting them rather frequently because I have seen them on many occasions in my office—that we have a long way to go and that there will be many cases to test these constitutional provisions. But we are pleased that such a good start has been made. By including Section 28 with no override, we expect, for example, that the Supreme Court of Canada will never again be able to rule against women as it did in the Lavell, Bédard and Bliss cases, as well as in other instances mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and yesterday by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett).

• (1540)

Some concerns have been expressed that guaranteeing equal rights for male and female persons may undermine affirmative action programs designed to open opportunities for women and for other minorities, such as the handicapped and ethnic groups. Of course, this will be tested in the courts. However, it is our clear understanding that equality is a constitutional goal, a goal which will apply to all provinces as a result of the change. Provincial affirmative action programs are the means of achieving equality through equal treatment of women and other minorities. This means the goal of equality will be entrenched and that affirmative action will be constitutionally protected as a means to achieve equality. We now have a federal principle. Hopefully this will be an impetus to encourage affirmative action programs within federal jurisdictions, provincial jurisdictions and also in the municipal levels of government.

Before I move on to other aspects of discrimination and constitutional rights upon which I should like to touch today, I want to place in the record a summary of the evolution and development that has occurred in the Canadian women's movement as a result of their fight for equality over the past few months. Never have Canadian women organized so quickly, realized their potential and lobbied so effectively for so just a cause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: This is a summary of how they did it and what they gained through mass action and organization. It is important for women across Canada to know this and to learn from experiences so that they can go on to further actions of this kind. It reflects an awakening and the involvement of a whole new generation of women, along with many concerned men and many of us who are in older generations.

The ad hoc committee, for example, is connected with hundreds of organizations across the country. In January, 1981, women found out that the second promised conference on issues relating to the Constitution was cancelled. An ad hoc committee was formed to work with women in Parliament because there were so few of us in the House of Commons. The ad hoc conference was held on February 14. Hundreds of women attended on very short notice. There were no funds available from the government to help them get here or even to pay for telephone calls and stamps. They met, they lobbied, they learned, and they took many actions which caused many of us to become much more actively concerned about the Constitution, as it did not cover the rights of women at that time. They met with each caucus, with party leaders and with powerful people at all levels of government.

Of course, the committee was also connected with many groups across the country, such as the National Association of Women and the Law, provincial advisory councils, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the YWCA, the Ottawa women's lobby, business and professional women, women in trade unions and women concerned with political action. It was a very democratic process and a very enlightening one. I know my colleagues will agree when I say that this was the major reason for having an expanded Constitution today, with the removal of the provincial override on women's rights in Section 28.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: Why is Section 28 so important? I should like to mention quickly some examples of discrimination which were perhaps mentioned in questions posed in the House. These are examples of which I have been personally aware in my short experience of three years since becoming a member of Parliament. First, immigrant women. We know that the Immigration Act in some ways discriminates against women. Certainly the settlement services of the federal government do not provide adequate coverage for individual women who want to come into our country with rights equal to those of their male partners. For example, settlement services apply equally to women and their children. They do not allow them equally to take courses, to go to work and to learn English or French. Also we know that domestic workers, most of whom are women, experience difficulties when they come to Canada. Will the Constitution now help to protect their rights and move them toward citizenship more quickly?

There are many examples of women who are trying to get into the whole field of non-traditional jobs. Today I met with some of our brothers from the fishermen's union in British Columbia. I was reminded of a case there where fisherwomen who were working as partners with their husbands were refused unemployment insurance benefits on an equal basis. Of course, they took their case to the Human Rights Commission and after a long struggle they won. I hope this discrimination will no longer be possible under the new Constitution.

I am reminded of women in Stelco, the women in the steel industry in Hamilton. I visited groups last year and discovered that Rosie the Riveter was welcomed in the steel industry during the war; in fact there was day care provided in the workplace. As soon as the war was over, there were no jobs for women in the steel industry. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) should take note of this instance. The women in steel are certainly not putting up with this. Many have now regained their right to work in the industry. There are others fighting for equal opportunities to work in CNR, Douglas Aircraft and many other industries.

In my own riding I talked with members of the painters' union and of the International Woodworkers of America. I am pleased that the labour movement and many unions which are dominated largely by male trade union members are now much more aware of the rights of women in this area. For example, members of the painters' union are saying to their employers, "Look, if you are going to employ us, you are going to make jobs open equally to any person who can qualify for them, regardless of sex". They have found that women can carry ladders and paint cans just as well as men.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: Last week I attended a meeting in Ottawa concerned with women in trades. I was told that there were many women with interests in mechanical, electrical and other trades traditionally considered as being in the field of male employment who want very much to get into these trades. One thing which happened in our society was that women in their education have been forced into sex roles and perhaps do not have the background or training for such skills. They find that there has been a cutback in the federal government of training programs and pre-employment upgrading programs to assist women to get into trades on an equal basis. The same thing applies to women wishing to enter high technology fields of the future, particularly in this area of the country, and to other areas where women must have equal rights and opportunities for employment with no question of sex involved. We hope the Constitution will now support the whole movement in which we believe very strongly, as do our trade union friends—equal pay for work of equal value.

Last year in my riding there was a Kenworth Industries, CAIMAW strike, and women eventually won equal pay. They won that after a six-month strike. They should not have had to wait six months or to go on strike for equal pay, Mr. Speaker. This is another inequity which I hope they will challenge as the result of the constitutional changes.

• (1550)

There are many examples that have been raised in the House in the past year of women clerks in the public service, general service workers, research technicians doing jobs equal to those done by many male employees but who are being paid on a higher basis. This we will no longer tolerate, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot go on without mentioning bank workers, nurses and hospital workers who traditionally work at lower rates of pay than they should. Daycare workers are another important example.

Not only is this protection now in our Constitution, which will allow all people concerned with human rights to go before the courts, but I suspect it is the beginning of a change in attitude in the country—a change in the attitude of employers and workers themselves who will demand their rights.

Women in the home must also be recognized as workers who do an extremely important job in raising the children. They have the right to pensions, benefits and an income as well as the recognition that they are doing just as important a job at home as they would in the work force. We hope there will be changes and that the government will support this.

I have two more points to deal with before my time expires, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking primarily to Section 28 of the constitutional amendment dealing with women's rights but I should like hon. members to know that this party is equally concerned with the whole question of aboriginal rights. The women of Canada have gone on record as showing solidarity with the native people in their struggle for the changes that will benefit them and protect their present rights but most important, perhaps, will protect their rights in the future.

When we speak of the future of the aboriginal people, I think the best way to make the point clearly is to speak about the necessity for federal action on behalf of native children. Last spring I was a member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs subcommittee on children, whose report has not yet gone to cabinet and certainly has not yet been mentioned in the House. In a minority report which I presented on behalf of the NDP we recognized the rights of Indian children and their desperate situation as being a first priority. We recommended that Indian, Inuit, Metis and non-status Indians in all regions be protected by constitutional provisions. We also felt that it was essential that, based on this recognition, adequate funding be provided for economic and educational programs that would ensure that native children would be proud to be Indian, Métis or Inuit.

We recommended that there be changes in the whole health care service and that, in consultation with native people, children of Indian and native background have the opportunity to grow up in the native environment. I hope this new Constitution will mean that native children will no longer be taken from their homes or native communities and put in foster homes of non-native people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer briefly to Section 15 which deals with equality rights and states as follows:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

I am saddened that this position, which is so important and should be so universal, still has the provincial override. I should like to illustrate the importance of this by citing the example of what happened to the Chinese and Asian people of Canada. This demands that there must be full protection of their rights. In my riding as in other parts of western Canada, many Chinese were brought to Canada to work on the CPR. There was a head tax imposed by the federal government of $50 per person. It was raised to $100 in 1900 and to $500 in 1903. In 1907 a riot occurred in Vancouver's Chinatown, instigated by the Asiatic Exclusion League, which was formed in 1907 in response to the increased Japanese, Chinese and East Indian immigration. These people were being excluded because they were Asian. Splinter mobs went through Chinatown breaking windows, then they moved to Powell Street in the Japanese quarter for more of the same. Some Chinese domestic and kitchen workers tried to oppose this but, of course, they were subjected to all kinds of discrimination.

The exclusion act was not repealed until 1947, when immigration was permitted but with increased restrictions on Asian groups. Finally, in 1967 the federal government adopted the universal merit system which ended discrimination. However, it was not until 1947 that Canadians of Asian origin finally won the right to vote.

We are also very familiar with the internment of Japanese Canadians and the shame and nightmares that continue for all Canadians who think of this situation.

I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) the present concern of East Indians in our country. We have expressed our view in questions. We must be sure that under the Immigration Act there is equal treatment for all people, regardless of their country of origin, their race and ethnicity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say once again that we are very proud that we are reaching the conclusion of this very historic process. I am particularly proud that it was this party that fought so hard for inclusion of both the aboriginal rights section and Section 28 which protects the rights male and female persons.

I want to congratulate all members of the House and all people across Canada who worked so hard for this great day for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried.

Mr. Nielsen: No, no, no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay. In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Clark), which was agreed to on the following division:

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, this moment gives me the greatest pleasure I have experienced as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The opportunity to move the motion put before the House is the highlight not only of myself as minister, but of any minister who could occupy this portfolio. I might also add that it is a welcome and dramatic conclusion to one of the most intensive periods of agonizing discussion that I have experienced in all my days and years as a member of this House.

Members of the House, I cannot overemphasize the significance that I place on the events of the last couple of days in view of the outcome. The distance that native people have come in those few short days, by gaining recognition for their aboriginal and treaty rights in what is soon to become the highest expression of the law of this land, is immeasurable at this time. However, I predict that history will prove it to be a giant step.

Let it be said now that the disappointment that I and others felt earlier this month on the eve of the accord, when it became evident that some provinces declined to endorse the concept of aboriginal rights, was second only to that of the native people themselves.

Let it be said now for the record that many of us share a high degree of elation today. I recall, moving out of the Convention Centre with native leaders, what I and some of my colleagues had to face when Section 34 was dropped. One cannot measure the terrible grief, disappointment and utter frustration that they expressed on that particular day.

I want the Indian people especially to understand why I feel as I do. To be sure, the contrast between my disappointment of a few days ago and my mood today is uplifting. But that is not the only reason. Hon. members, we are here today in the House of Commons with a motion that proposes to accord to native peoples a unique status in the highest law of the land. Not only are we as Members of Parliament about to consider this historic amendment; we are here to do so with the specific endorsement of the nine provincial governments which were parties to the November 5 accord on patriation of the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is the involvement of those provinces that is most significant to me. It is the fact that they are in this resolution that makes me so encouraged today. The people of Canada and their leaders have concentrated on this question with an intensity such as has been seldom experienced. What they have decided irrefutably is that an expression of this country's highest principles is simply not acceptable without due recognition for native people, the first Canadians.

To be sure, the constitutional resolution with this amendment will not resolve all the outstanding issues. It will not put to rest all the questions about the future relationship of native people to the rest of the country. If the motion before the House is passed, it will set the stage for a whole new series of issues yet to be raised. It represents, however, an enormous gain over where we were after the signing of the November 5 Accord.

In the depressing moments of reflection which followed that initial jubilation of reaching agreement on patriation, who would have thought in these few short days that this was possible? Aside from the gentle pressure which my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) referred to last week, it took some considerable soul-searching and accommodation on the part of certain provinces to get us where we are today. Let us trust that, as the process unfolds and as we begin to address, in preparation for a constitutional conference, those outstanding issues I have already mentioned, this new spirit of co-operation will be sustained.

● (1650)

I would like to review the critical provisions in this package that refer to natives. First, under the proposed amendment to the resolution the most critical section recognizes and affirms aboriginal and treaty rights of all aboriginal peoples in the highest law of the land. While the clause differs in one minor respect from the previous Section 34, it has the identical effect as the previous section. This is borne out by the legal opinions afforded the government.

Second, I would like to emphasize that the resolution also contains other important provisions respecting native people. Specifically Section 25 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms states:

> The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including
>
> (a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and
>
> (b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

This section, then, is purposely open-ended and protects those rights which may flow to natives from future land claims settlements.

Third, the resolution also provides for the establishment of a constitutional conference at which there will be an item on the agenda respecting matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada. Representatives of aboriginal peoples will be invited to participate in this conference. This agenda item will include the identification and definition of the specific rights of native peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada. I hope that all parties, including the provincial governments and the federal government and the native people, will do all they can to ensure that that conference is a success. Considerable effort will be needed to find common ground among Indian peoples, other native peoples and Canadians in general before understanding and acceptance is reached on all issues. But I am sure this can be achieved.

It is a great accomplishment today. I should like to pay my respects to all the work and effort of so many members of this House, not the least of which is the colleague sitting beside me, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), who has worked tirelessly for many months and who has certainly been on the telephone during the weekend and the last two days to bring about this most beneficial result that we have before us today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), who led the fight for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms from the beginning, I think all of us owe a debt of gratitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), I think we agree, and so will many of my friends in the New Democratic Party, that he has worked under very difficult circumstances, night and day, with his people to be as constructive as possible to bring this result before us today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): With some minor deviations, these congratulations would apply to the entire New Democratic Party and their leader who fought during the months for the entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights. The Northwest Territories government people, the executive committee and the assembly, have all been most supportive during the past week, and I think they should also take some real credit in this unique achievement.

Perhaps I should now refer to my predecessor minister of Indian affairs who worked so hard all during the constitutional conference to attain this result. I hope that makes the member from Edmonton feel better.

An hon. Member: And the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): And, of course, the hon. member for the Yukon.

Perhaps I should now refer to my responsibilities for nothern affairs, what this resolution does and what impact it has in that very important area. I want to stress what the earlier and the present version of the resolution has to say about the participation by the territorial government in future constitutional discussions. Territorial representatives will be invited to participate in discussions on any item of the agenda of the conference that directly affects the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Hon. members will also recall that the resolution has generated some discussion in connection with the application of the Constitution Act to the potential creation of new provinces in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, or the extension of existing provinces into the two territories. As hon. members are aware, this issue is not a new one. For example, the issue concerns the appropriate role of provincial governments in the consideration of the creation of new provinces and/or in the extension of existing provinces.

The principal question being asked about the Constitution Act by many of the people north of 60 is how it applies to Canada's territories. The question they are asking is why it should be necessary to make the federal power to create new provinces subject to the amending formula. There is also a concern about the mention in the amending formula of the power to extend provincial boundaries northward.

The entire assembly of the Northwest Territories came to Ottawa to express to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Justice and to myself their serious concern about this matter and other matters. We have had extensive meetings to discuss this matter. The depth of their concern at having provinces involved in the creation of a province to the north, formerly a purely federal responsibility, is well understood. It should be noted, however, that the government leader in the Yukon has indicated a certain degree of approval of the new provision in the belief that it is beneficial to have the provinces take the role in a decision to create provinces in the north.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It was a direct quote and I shall be pleased to show my hon. friend what he had to say. Moreover, it has been the federal government's recent practice to consult the provinces when considering the creation of new provinces, in any case. It should be noted that the manner in which the resolution deals with the possible extension of existing provinces to the north provides northerners with extra protection against the eventuality that only the consent of those provinces that extend their boundaries will be necessary.

In any event, in concluding my remarks I should like to note especially that native Canadians are gaining mightily from this recent turn of events. Through their eloquence and their steadfast insistence they have built on a historical federal pledge that goes back to the Royal Proclamation of 1763. In fact, they have turned a legalistic federal obligation for native people into a national confirmation of their special place in the consciousness and fabric of Canada

Quite the contrary to what some would suggest, this is not an erosion of federal obligation. It is an additional confirmation, not once but nine times, that provinces do share in that commitment.

Therefore, with great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras):

• (1700)

That the proposed Constitution Act, 1981 contained in the motion in the name of the Minister of Justice (Government Business, Government Motion No. 56), as printed in the Order Paper of Monday, November 23, 1981, be amended

(a) by adding, immediately after line 19 on page 24 of the Order Paper, the following:

PART II

RIGHTS OF THE ABORIGINAL PEOPLES OF CANADA

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

Definition of "aboriginal peoples of Canada"

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

(b) by renumbering the subsequent parts and clauses accordingly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). Due to some confusion, I should like to ask the minister for clarification with respect to the word "existing" which has been added to the original Section 34. Does the addition of the word "existing" eliminate the aboriginal rights of Indians or Inuit whose rights at one time were unilaterally extinguished by legislation of a provincial legislature or of the federal Parliament? In other words, if a provincial legislature or the federal Parliament extinguished in a unilateral manner in years past the aboriginal rights of an Indian band or an Inuit community, does it mean that those rights no longer exist and consequently are eliminated from the charter by the addition of that word?

My second question is a related one. Would the Indian bands who were not able to exercise their rights because the white man's world grew up around them—their cities, factories and so on—for example, the Musqueam near Vancouver, lose their rights? Was it considered that the word "existing" takes away those rights because they have not been able to exercise them and cannot exercise them today?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I should answer the hon. member's question. In fact he is asking for a legal opinion at this time, and I am not about to give one. Today the House of Commons is affirming and recognizing the rights of aboriginal people as they exist. It will be up to the courts to make a legal interpretation of the facts. The rights of natives, in the mind of the government, are the rights which flow from the Royal Proclamation of 1763. It will apply in Canada because in fact we are recognizing the obligation which was vested on the Crown at that time by King George II or III. It is now recognized as such for the first time in the Canadian Constitution. It is an affirmation of the rights of natives.

What the courts will decide later on is how they will implement it in the case where, as the hon. member said, a town or city was constructed on land which would have belonged at one time to the natives. Of course this cannot be redressed by returning that land; in my own judgment I think the Crown will be obliged to offer other lands or financial compensation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I sense that there may be other hon. members who wish to rise on points of order or possibly to continue to ask questions. The House will recognize the custom that hon. members, unless there is objection, can be recognized under the expression "point of order" for that purpose, as long as there is time remaining to the hon. member or minister who had the floor at the time the points of order or questions began.

Mr. Nielsen: Or by unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Or by unanimous consent. In the circumstances, therefore, until I hear otherwise from hon. members I will recognize points of order. The time allotted to the hon. minister was such that his time will expire at approximately 5.15 o'clock. If the Chair hears no objection, points of order in that regard will be recognized.

The hon. member from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East on a fresh point of order.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister answered the second part of my question concerning whether the word "existing" would take away rights which could not be exercised because the white man's community grew up around Indian bands. What about the first part of my question? Would those Indians and Inuit lose their rights. Would they be considered non-existent if a provincial legislature or the federal Parliament unilaterally extinguished their rights by legislation? Would it mean that they do not exist in terms of the new addition to Section 34? While I congratulate the minister for bringing back this section we want to make sure what it says before we give our agreement to it.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that I have checked with the legal adviser of the Crown and with some outside counsel yesterday and this morning. The addition of the word "existing" is absolutely not changing the substance of what was proposed to the House previously. Section 35 or the new resolution has the same meaning, according to the legal advice I received, as the previous Section 34.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) a question. If the inclusion of the word "existing" really does not change the meaning of Section 35(1) of the resolution, why was it included?

I should also like to follow up on the question asked by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) but in a more practical sense. Both gentlemen are very much aware of this matter, both having been ministers of Indian affairs. I am referring to the question of the British Columbia cut-off lands where the legislature, with the consent of the people of the province and following the recommendation of a commission, took away certain lands from Indian people. If we are looking at existing rights, these rights no longer exist. Would the minister agree with me on that?

Finally, when we go to former acts of 1763 which mainly dealt with lands, what about native people who aspired to certain cultural rights or rights to self-determination which would require in some sense self-government? These rights do not now exist. Will it rule out any opportunity for native people to negotiate certain rights such as cultural rights, education and self-government? These are the concerns. As we all know, we are dealing with a very, very serious matter. If so many rights for native people exist now, why are they in the position they are in? Why are they so deprived, if they had so many rights and the government was so compassionate with them in the past? These questions must be answered.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is entering into debate. I should like to answer the first question as to why it is there. It is because some provinces did not want Section 34 at all. I negotiated with them and on Friday some new words were proposed by the Alberta government. I talked with the premier on Sunday and with his ministers on Monday morning. They asked to make what was implicit explicit, the word "existing". If there are rights they must have existed before, so they asked us to make what was implicit explicit. I have checked with lawyers and they said it does not change the substance of what we were doing. In order to have an agreement and not to break the accord, I made that concession being satisfied, as the Minister of Justice, that we were not changing the substance of the proposition.

We are back now and what is great is that nine provinces are part of the accord. They have accepted these words and they are accepted by the House of Commons. It is a great achievement because before we were planning to impose it upon the provinces. Now it is very significant that we have nine provinces which virtually have exactly the same wording in the Canadian Constitution.

In terms of the British Columbia land question, I think the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) could reply, but I could as well because I have been involved in that matter. We have already settled cases involving land which had been cut off from Indians in the past. If the rights were irregularly taken away from the natives, the recognition that their rights flow from the Royal Proclamation will give them a stronger case in court than they had before.

• (1710)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). Both he and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) have said quite clearly that the addition of the word "existing" in Section 34 does not change its impact. They have said that they make that assertion based on legal advice. I should like to know whether the minister is going to table those legal opinions so that the native people of this country may know the true meaning of Section 34 as it is now before the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the custom of this House is that when the Minister of Justice stands up in his seat and expresses an opinion like that, he speaks on behalf of the government and the legal advisers of the Crown. I do not have to table a written legal opinion. Most of those legal opinions have been researched over the weekend by different counsel to the government. They were all unanimous.

If the hon. member does not want to vote for aboriginal rights he can vote against the amendment.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, referring to the question put by my hon. friend on the cut-off claims, as he may know, there is a sound body of legal opinion that would cast some very real doubt on the legal validity of the action taken by the province at that particular time. The province has met with the federal government and is prepared to make adjustments in terms of settlements combined with this government, putting in its own resources to rectify what is clearly felt to be an injustice of the past.

That situation is based on legal views as to improprieties and disorders in terms of powers exercised by the province in the past. The manner in which that has been settled stands on its own merit and, I believe, has been settled to some degree to the satisfaction of the Indian peoples involved.

As far as the latter part of the hon. member's question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, many of the cultural rights, the rights to self-government and all these matters, have already been assured to the Indian people. They will be the first items on the agenda when we discuss matters at the constitutional conference.

I think the hon. member was privy to the many legal opinions expressed on this historical occasion in this House on what "aboriginal rights" precisely means now that it is entrenched. Suffice to say that the opinion is afforded to the native peoples themselves that it greatly strengthens the basis of their claims to unique status in Canada and strengthens them in their desire and aspirations along the lines the hon. member just referred to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In this rather unofficial question period, perhaps hon. members might agree if I try to limit the points of order, which is what we are calling them, to a main point of order and a supplementary. I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Justice. He indicated that it is not customary to table such legal opinions. I would remind him that the action being taken in this House is unprecedented and that what we are really dealing with is a question of trust between peoples. If he were to table those legal opinions on the meaning of Section 34, it would create a climate of trust. People would understand clearly what is proposed for entrenchment in the Constitution. I wonder if the Minister of Justice would not consider this unprecedented action in light of the fact that we are dealing with a historically unique situation.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that I have received this legal opinion. The hon. member has to take my word. We never table legal opinions. In fact, I never received lengthy legal opinions on that; it was just a word that was added at the request of the provinces. I asked my legal advisers if it was changing the meaning of what we were doing and they said it was not. I did not have piles of documents. It was just one word that was implicit and became explicit.

I have checked that with other legal advisers outside the government in order to satisfy myself. Some were in Toronto and some were in the west. They indicated they came to the same conclusion.

This does not call for great research. We are voting a law of Parliament. It will be for the court to decide if that changes something. I am satisfied that it does not. I am entrenching in the Constitution the concept of aboriginal rights. No one is questioning the wording that we used in the first instance.

In committee we tried to improve many of the words that we are legislating at this time. The wish of this Parliament is to entrench in the Constitution the concept of aboriginal rights. That is clearly stated in the speeches. In the judgment of my legal advisers the words are satisfactory, and I accept that legal opinion which has been sustained by others.

I do not have a document to table. I discussed this with my legal advisers and we even discussed with some lawyers the possibility of what the court might decide on this and that. Regarding the charter, the courts may take some decisions that we will not be completely happy with but we will have the remedy to change that in this House through the amending formula. We will have an amending formula in Canada that will permit this Parliament and the provinces to correct things if eventually the court decides something contrary to the wishes of Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on a point of order, followed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) which relates to the operative effectiveness of the amendment relating to aboriginal rights when it comes into effect, assuming it is passed by this House and the British House. I ask this question because a number of court cases have been postponed since last July or August, awaiting the outcome of the debate and passage of this constitutional amendment. Could the minister explain if it is just a case of the House adopting the resolution here, it being adopted in the U.K. and then being proclaimed? Does it become effective at that moment or are there other delays which would further postpone these pending court cases?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is up to the parties to a case to decide to proceed. I presume we will vote in this House very quickly. The resolution will be passed eventually by England and when it comes back to Canada it will be proclaimed. The aboriginal rights of Canada's first citizens will be in the Canadian Constitution. It will then be for the parties to decide how to use it in front of the court. It will strengthen the case of the natives in front of the Canadian court. We should all be proud of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) followed by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Before proceeding to debate, I presume I would need consent, since we have now gone past 5.15 p.m., Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should explain to the hon. member that I was in error earlier. The minister's time will expire at 5.25 p.m. If the House wishes to continue with these so-called points of order, it can do so until 5.25 at which time I will put to the House the question whether there is unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. Nielsen: I have one brief question which should elicit a very brief answer. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has consulted the nine premiers in order to bring this amendment back into the resolution. That is commendable; that is the way it should be in our system. He has also consulted with the elected representatives of the Northwest Territories legislative assembly. Could I ask if he was thoughtful enough to consult with the elected representatives of the Yukon legislative assembly in order to get their input and their approval of what he is doing today?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on the question of the accord, it was signed with the nine provinces and the federal government. We have not had to consult anybody else in terms of governments. The Northwest Territories expressed their views to us and we received them. I have not received any request personally. I do not know if the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received some representations from the Yukon council, but I have not received any communication from them.

The accord which I am respecting at this time is an accord signed and agreed upon by the nine provinces and the federal government on November 5. The agreement of yesterday was made by me with either the premiers or the attorneys general of the different provinces on the phone. That was the only formal communication there was. Their words were good enough for me, and I guess my words were good enough for them.

• (1720)

Mr. Nielsen: Since I did not get a simple answer, may I just put the question abundantly simply and directly in the hope that I will get a "yes" or "no". Did the minister consult with the elected assembly—

Mr. Chrétien: No. I said, "no".

Mr. Nielsen: —in the Yukon?

Mr. Chrétien: I said, no, not personally. They did not call me and I did not call them.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, just to get the record straight, I think the hon. member should be aware that my office did get advice from the Yukon. I will check as to its accuracy, but it was advice that was much appreciated and was that, yes, the leaders of the government of the Yukon were concerned about and supportive of the entrenchment of aboriginal rights since these were dropped from the accord.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I know he will not be around to answer it, but I want to pose it so that it is on the record.

First of all, I want to indicate how pleased I am that, indeed, a new accord has been arrived at concerning this matter. My question is this: does the insertion or the inclusion of the word "existing" impose, suggest or include any distinction between surface land rights and mineral rights, which are generally well below the surface, particularly on provincial lands involving the Metis people? Again, I do not expect an answer. I just want to leave the question standing.

Mr. Nielsen: The answer is "no".

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Do you want an answer?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question on this particular matter would arise from remarks made that the possibility of extinguishing or not recognizing rights which have been extinguished by the legislature, I am sure, would be an advantage to the province of British Columbia facing the cut-off problem. The minister said that negotiations were going on between the Government of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia concerning those cut-off claims. Can the minister clarify whether those have taken a more progressive turn than the discussions which have been dragging on for aeons and whether there is, in fact, some real progress there? If so, could he tell us what it would be?

The second question is, what role did the province of British Columbia play in inserting the word "existing"? I presume that it would benefit more than any other province in terms of the present premier's attitude toward dealing with cut-offs and native people.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the latter question the hon. member asked, let me tell him what the Minister of Justice has already said. The Minister of Justice was the one who, in his role as the minister responsible for constitutional discussions, was negotiating on the phone and talking to all the provinces with respect to trying to find wording to get the entrenchment of treaty and aboriginal rights back in the package. Therefore, the question as to what role B.C. or any particular province played would have to be directed to him.

Suffice it to say that the legal advice that the Minister of Justice and I have received states that the insertion of "existing" in this particular amendment has an identical effect. There is no change with respect to the effect of this clause with "existing" in it and the old Section 34 which did not have it. I am just saying that I am gratified to have been assured on several occasions during the course of today and late last night that this, indeed, was the legal view that the Minister of Justice received and relayed to me.

Concerning the previous question asked by the hon. member, I can just tell him that where there was past action taken by provincial legislatures of the type he described in terms of extinguishing certain rights, and where this was felt to be improper, either as a result of court action taken or because of legal views which ministers previous to myself obtained from the justice department, as a result of discussions the provinces themselves have come forward with this government to endeavour to set in process a means by which we could receive and obtain a settlement. This, in itself, is indicative of legal views casting some doubt on the propriety of what was done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I see that a considerable number of hon. members are still rising.

[Translation]

I believe the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) is rising to be recognized by the Speaker, either to take part in the debate or perhaps on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: I am rising to take part in the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): So it is to take part in the debate—

[English]

It is 5.25 p.m. I now have to ask whether there is unanimous consent that questions be permitted of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). One presumes that the time limit on it would be left to the discretion of the Chair, if that is agreeable.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Therefore, the question is whether or not there is unanimous consent to continue a form of questions and answers with the minister.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: No. We have now had 25 minutes of questions and answers, and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) would like to have his entire speech on the record before we break for dinner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: The Tories said no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has been handed a motion put forth by the hon. Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That motion is under consideration at the moment, but, subject to the caveat of a later decision respecting its admissibility, the Chair will indicate that debate is acceptable on the motion. Therefore, I do not think it is necessary to read it at the moment, and I will recognize the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) once I have given notice of the questions to be raised tonight on the adjournment motion at ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Actions of Czechoslovak government affecting Canadian citizens. (b) Procedures surrounding issuance of Czechoslovakian passports; the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher)—Airports—Contract to operate duty free stores at Toronto International Airport; and the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Western Development Fund—Compensation payments to grain growers for embargo on shipments to Russia. (b) Consultation with provincial governments.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien on the Constitution of Canada, as amended.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the last time I had the privilege of speaking on this very important subject in the House was last March. I remember clearly that I asked Parliament to be careful, to take its time, and I see that today we are still discussing the same subject—not for long, probably—but I feel that once more I shall have to caution the members of this House to beware and take the time to make sure that all Canadians agree to these so very important amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak about a matter that is very dear to my heart. I am both happy and sad to talk about the constitutional draft. I am happy because, like most Quebecers, I thought that at last we would succeed in achieving constitutional renewal in a way that would be satisfactory to all Canadians and Quebecers, and I am sad because the resolution ignores the eminently relevant recommendations made by the Pepin-Robarts commission on what has been commonly called the Canadian reality. In doing so, I feel the resolution has betrayed the history of Canada and has refused to recognize the Canadian duality and Quebec's distinctive position among the other provinces. A reality that has in fact been recognized and endorsed by federalists who want federalism to have respect for the partners concerned. I have no intention of giving government members a course in political science, but I think a country's basic laws, in other words, its constitution, should truly and accurately reflect every aspect of that country, while respecting and entrenching in its clauses the inalienable rights and freedoms of all citizens. When the Fathers of Confederation after much pondering gave us the British North America Act in 1867, they had broadly defined the basic principles that were to lay the foundation of our country, namely, duality and the sharing of powers between two levels of government. That is what has always been referred to as Canadian federalism. A few years ago, a famous Canadian said, and I quote:

> Federalism is by its very essence a compromise and a pact. It is a compromise in the sense that when national consensus on all things is not desirable or cannot readily obtain, the area of consensus is reduced in order that consensus on some things be reached. It is a pact or quasi-treaty in the sense that the terms of that compromise cannot be changed unilaterally.

That famous Canadian was none other than the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). In his book "Federalism and the French Canadians", the same Prime Minister wrote, and I quote:

> The centralists are the ones who should be in a hurry to change the Constitution.

● (1730)

In any case, in his book on federalism, the Prime Minister did not seem to have boundless confidence in constitutional reforms that are hastily construed in order to solve our problems. In my opinion, he wrote, it would be an illusion to look for (a solution) in sweeping constitutional changes.

As for the Charter of Rights, Mr. Speaker, which the present Prime Minister sees as having exceptional merits, at the time he did not look on it as a panacea. Legal guarantees by themselves are far too fragile to ensure the survival of the French language and culture. And he added the following sentence which today both he and the members of his party could usefully ponder over.

> People who think such guarantees are enough may be the most dangerous enemies of the traditions we wish to safeguard and perpetuate.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we are discussing today, some 114 years after our first Constitution Act. Can the terms of an agreement be changed without the consent of one of the parties that was already recognized at the time as one of the two founding peoples of this country? It is important that all Canadians know that Quebecers, as much as the government they freely elected on April 13 last, object to a breach of agreement that by a stroke of the pen deprives them of any possibility of a compensating formula, that would allow the federal government to impinge on a jurisdiction that heretofore had been the exclusive domain of the provinces ever since 1867.

We, members from Quebec—and I say we because we sit on both sides of this House, although not many on this side—may have something in common all the same. And I would like to remind the Quebecers opposite that under the governments of Maurice Duplessis, Jean Lesage, Daniel Johnson, Jean-Jacques Bertrand as well as Robert Bourassa, which was not so long ago, we all supported those Quebec premiers in difficult periods and for different reasons, those premiers who steadfastly defended the educational rights of Quebecers against any invasion by the federal government. All those premiers, Mr. Speaker, swore that never would the federal government infringe on that basic right of Quebecers. As much for historical and geographical as for linguistic and cultural reasons, those premiers realized they represented the people in Quebec. All members from Quebec who sit opposite today supported, encouraged and applauded as much as I did, those federalist governments of the province of Quebec, whatever their political affiliations. Those Union Nationale and Liberal governments in Quebec always had a strong sense of belonging to the Quebec identity, and they never strayed from it.

I believed, and probably all those hon. members believed in such a philosophy, and I still do. How can we now betray what we so steadfastly defended all our lives, Mr. Speaker? I, for one, have not changed, I have respected and still respect my Quebec origin and that philosophy that was not incompatible with the national objective pursued by every federal government.

How can one imagine today, Mr. Speaker, that the objections of the present Quebec government are sacrilegious, since we supported the previous premiers for identical reasons, and we even commended them for their courage in defending steadfastly the future and the emancipation of the people in Quebec?

If I may, I would like to recall that when I first came to Ottawa in 1968, I was warned that I would first have to meet the challenge of convincing my English-speaking colleagues in the House. I accepted the responsibility to defend my province honestly and to convince my colleagues that they should ensure the fundamental rights of my province. I believed then and I still believe in a federalism respectful of its partners. What I find embarrassing today, Mr. Speaker, is that, to meet my basic responsibilities, I have to plead with my French-speaking colleagues about the issue now before the House in front of my colleagues from the other provinces. I had never imagined that this could be possible, especially since the 74 Liberal members from Quebec could have avoided putting their province in this strait-jacket. Where are they now, these proud representatives of the people of Quebec in Ottawa? This is the question now being asked by thousands of Quebecers.

If I may, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my leader who showed his open-mindedness and his statesmanship during this debate last Friday when he made an original and positive contribution in his capacity as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. All the government members should read and re-read this speech and many of them should reflect on their own position instead of trying to ridicule the comments made by my leader last Friday in this House. The speech made by the leader of our party is a model of clarity and understanding during this troubled period of our history, Mr. Speaker. The Progressive Conservative Party has moved three amendments of which two have already been accepted unanimously, and I have every reason to believe that the Canadian people will be grateful for the leadership shown not only by my leader, but also by my party concerning the rights of women and the native people.

I believe that the third amendment will be agreeable to both the government and the people of Quebec. Last April, the Quebec government relinquished its veto right in exchange for a reasonable guarantee of financial compensation if ever they decided to opt out of a constitutional amendment. We want to grant this full financial compensation. The day after the conference, Mr. Ryan, the leader of the Liberal Party in Quebec, also stated that he would not have signed the accord. Even Mr. Bourassa, the former premier of Quebec, stated a few days ago during an open-line program that he would not have signed the accord either given the conditions that prevailed then. Most of the responsible political observers in Quebec have come to the same conclusion. They say that the government's resolution proposal is even worse than the status quo. It is clearly a step backwards for Quebec generally. The federal government cannot claim the right to rewrite our Constitution without the consent of one of the two founding peoples. This situation is highly explosive, Mr. Speaker. This government should relinquish its arrogant and cynical position. Unfortunately, for several members of this House, Canada is simply Ottawa. They have forgotten that negotiating in good faith is the basis of federalism. I very much fear that their centralizing approach to federalism and narrow view of the future have made them so blind that they cannot see that they are dividing rather than uniting Canadians. They are so blind that they refuse to respect the Canadian fact. I also want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to appeal to the premiers to ponder a little over the implication of the isolation of Quebec. And since any appeal to the Prime Minister of Canada would fall on deaf ears, I wonder if they could not convince the Prime Minister of Canada to shift his position, explore possible solutions and try to find one that would be acceptable for the people of Quebec so that Quebec would agree to sign this resolution before it is sent to London.

• (1740)

I seldom have the opportunity to urge the members of another party to reconsider what they are doing, Mr. Speaker, but I urge them just the same to dare state the views of hundreds of thousands of their fellow-citizens who elected them to represent them with dignity rather than betray them. They can imagine what they will find to say to justify themselves when they face a swarm of furious electors blaming them for their irresponsibility, their utter lack of respectability and dignity. It is completely shocking and distressing, Mr. Speaker, to find that their sense of belonging is no longer consistent with that of their electors. They are the only ones in great enough numbers to prevent something irrevocable from happening. Instead of forcing on Quebec a plan whose terms it cannot decently accept at present, why does the federal government not allow tempers to cool off, why does it not calm down and make a final attempt to conclude an honourable agreement with and for Quebec instead of driving the present government to something irrevocable and running the risk—

Mr. Tousignant: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Could the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) tell us what Mr. Lévesque would be ready to accept?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry, but without the consent of the hon. member for Joliette, the Chair cannot accept that intervention as a point of order. The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister of Canada, in the speech he made in Quebec City, said that even if his proposal were passed without Quebec's consent, it will remain on the table for a future federalist government in Quebec. If he is consistent, Mr. Speaker, why not wait for that future federalist government in Quebec, since he has pointed out that the federal government will maintain its position until a government agrees to it? We would then see whether or not a federalist government in Quebec would accept the current proposal. A little more time will not matter much in the history of Canada but, at least in the meantime, Quebecers, even the most nationalist amongst them, will have time to reflect on such constitutional compromise as might prevent breaking the federal tie. If the federal government persists in its present approach, I fear it may lead the country headlong toward a catastrophe of such magnitude that the word "Canada" might within a generation or two become a mere historical footnote.

The Quebec government is being blamed for having given up its traditional veto right as provided for in the amending formula contained in the April agreement; if, in the eyes of the Minister of Justice, giving it up is such an infamy, why then, on his own authority, does he not reinstate it on behalf of Quebec which he claims to represent even better than the government of that province itself? The minister knows that the loss of the veto right was conditional upon fiscal compensation. Everyone knows that the notorious veto right is a cause of tension and disagreement, that it is bound to disappear sooner or later. In fact, if the veto right is so essential to Quebec, as the Minister of Justice maintains, why then did he not use it during the night of November 5 and demand that the approval of Quebec be an essential condition of the agreement? How could I possibly support the present resolution when it grants one province the right to opt out of a constitutional amendment without financial compensation, except in the case of linguistic and cultural programs? To begin with, where do the boundaries lie between cultural, social and economic matters? In fact, do they not overlap? Where are the limits of each to be drawn? Those are some of the problems the courts will eventually have to solve. But one point is more important still. Since when can one be penalized for exercising a right the Constitution has recognized for 114 years? The right to opt out with financial compensation, the terms of which would be agreed upon by the parties, must not be weakened. Otherwise, no province, and not only Quebec, would ever be able to develop integrated policies either in the area of social security or even its own economy planning. The Prime Minister acts as though he were afraid some rich province might, at the expense of the poorer ones, opt out of a new federal program and use the accrued funds to serve its own selfish ends. The Prime Minsiter does not seem to trust the fair play and common sense of his provincial counterparts. Why does he not think of the unfair burden he would impose on a poor province which, for whatever reason, could not accept the new constitutional amendment?

The right to opt out without full financial compensation and non obstante clauses is an illusion which may lead us into centralization and deny the provinces their right to act in their own jurisdiction in their people's best interests. When, on the morning of November 5, the Prime Minister simply removed the compensatory clause, his intention was clearly to put Quebec in chains. The time may come, before long, when other provinces may find it difficult to bear the iron collar they have themselves agreed to wear. As to the manpower mobility clause, it does not take into sufficient account Quebec's social and cultural structure. It seems to me that it should be possible to carry out a more in-depth analysis of its potential effects on provincial economies, and find ways to give local workers better protection against a possible massive invasion from other provinces. I suggest that the provinces' manpower training programs and local manpower preference policies should not be jeopardized, as this would prevent local workers from finding employment or developing new skills while workers from other provinces would take over their jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the statements by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) concerning mobility, perhaps I should again mention Mr. Brian Mulroney who took advantage of a mobility program to help the Iron Ore Company workers he had laid off.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have the same difficulty I experienced a moment earlier. This is not a point of order. If the hon. member for Manicouagan wants to debate a point with the hon. member, that is something different, but certainly not a point of order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Maltais: When the hon. member for Joliette states that mobility—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I can quite understand that the hon. member for Manicouagan would like to ask a question. The hon. member for Joliette has the floor.

Mr. La Salle: If the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) has anything to say, he will have an opportunity to do so. We still have two or three days left for this debate. When he talks about lost jobs, I would say that I recall when I arrived here in 1968 there were 300,000 people unemployed but we now have 1,300,000 of them and the Liberal government was in office during all that time except for eight months. I therefore leave the hon. member for Manicouagan to reflect upon the administration of the last 14 years. Here again, Mr. Speaker, any hurrying up can only be dangerous for the unity of the country and the legitimate aspirations of Quebecers who are anxious to find a job in their own province. Knowing their openmindedness, I do not believe that the people's protest—because as we all know in Quebec the government is not the only one who has voiced objections—stems from the fear of being invaded by English-speaking workers. There has to be a limit to what you can try to get people to believe.

Mr. Speaker, I have said how I feel about the government's constitutional project. I do not like the fact that it was hastily thrown together over Quebec's objections and without due regard for the basic duality of our country. Nor do I like the haste with which the government wants to force it upon us, and I strongly urge the government to continue negotiations with Quebec which might lead to a satisfactory arrangement for both governments. Today, of course, the Liberal majority may very well flash a smile of victory, and insult and deride the Quebec government, but the people of Quebec will have the final say. This government's moment of triumph might be very short indeed. Let's not forget that Canada cannot exist without Quebec, the worthy representative of the French-speaking founders of this country. Hastily sending a document to London over the head of Quebec may very well cause a ground swell which is likely to destroy any hope for a renewal of Canadian federalism, as envisaged by the Pepin-Robarts Task Force.

• (1750)

I find it rather strange in fact that we never hear of that report now that one of the co-chairmen of that commission sits in the House. Has he forgotten about it? That is impossible. Would the members from Quebec have forgotten this near masterpiece of understanding and the seeds of harmony that it contained? I think it would have been wise to fouder somewhat longer upon the very important recommendations of that report. I believe that study reflected, like no other study before it, a Canadian entity and contained recommendations relevant to any constitutional reform. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec membership, especially those who sit in cabinet—and I clearly remember that some cabinet members proudly spoke up for the right, for instance, of air traffic controllers to use French—in particular of the minister now responsible for Quebec and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané)—

Miss Bégin: Bravo!

Mr. La Salle: —who would wave the Canadian flag while speaking up for the air traffic controllers' right to use French. So perhaps I could call on those two members of cabinet today and ask them to pressure the government into continuing and increasing its efforts—

Mr. Rossi: What about Stewart!

Mr. La Salle: —so that Quebec can be party to this consensus and can sign this accord. And I warn all those who are listening to us today not to think that we are going to solve the problem and achieve unity or national harmony without Quebec. Those who wish to ignore Quebec's importance and special status within Canada can expect rough times ahead. I do trust that all hon. members from Quebec will seriously consider the matter. Not only can I speak to other members from Quebec, but I can do so in great seriousness because I know that they realize the big gap which results from Quebec's exclusion from this accord.

An hon. Member: What about Stewart!

Mr. La Salle: I know that they realize how big this gap is and I hope that as a result of these comments and speeches—and I call upon them to try to speed up the process—Quebec can be party to this accord. I also hope that no resolution will be sent to London without Quebec because otherwise the problem will remain unsolved. That is why I am urging French-speaking members to make their English-speaking colleagues truly aware of the situation. We know that opinions are split. Quebecers, like many other Canadians, are sick and tired of hearing about constitutional reform, yet this remains an important and crucial matter. I do hope that my appeal will not be in vain, because I do so with the best intentions in the world, Mr. Speaker, despite the rumbles from the other side. It is not the first time I have heard that. But I do think that I can convince members opposite and I am doing so with the best intentions and the best will in the world. And I would be the happiest man in the world, Mr. Speaker, if Quebec succeeded in presenting valid arguments and in having sufficiently successful negotiations to sign this agreement so that we could speak of a true federalism which respects now, and will respect in the future, the ten provinces which make up this country.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution was to be approved without including the rights which would show respect for the identity of the Quebec people. I suggest that our children and their children remembering the heritage we have left them, which was wanting in so many ways, will perhaps be ashamed to be Canadian. However there is still time to go back to the basic principles of federalism. There is still time to do so, Mr. Speaker! I have heard such stupid statements for the past 14 years in this regard, Mr. Speaker. However, I am patient and I still believe that most members of this House are responsible people, that there is still time to go back to basic principles and to find solutions which will make anyone proud to sing: "O Canada, terre de nos aïeux . . . Ta valeur, de foi trempée, protégera nos foyers et nos droits", including those of Quebec!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) on a point of order.

Mr. Maltais: Would the hon. member for Joliette accept a few questions following the statements he just made?

Mr. La Salle: No! My colleague has more interesting things to say.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in a moment. Earlier I indicated that the admissibility of the motion put by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) would be considered. That has been done, and it is the decision of the Chair that his motion is admissible. The motion having been found to be in order, debate is accordingly in order.

The Chair has recognized the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, with the consent of hon. members, may wish to call it six o'clock.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed I would like to do like several short-sighted members and not see the time on the clock, but I want first to address the hon. member for Joliette who has just spoken some rather cutting words in the House, and who said hardly five minutes ago, and I will quote him to the best of my ability: "Let's not forget that Canada cannot exist without Quebec."

I think this is indeed true. As a Quebecer, I know full well, like all my colleagues in this House, that it is true. However, I would rather he had added the other part of the premise without which the country cannot exist. He took great care to omit other part of the premise, but it would have been more honest to say that, on the other hand, Quebec has no future outside Canada. This is the great difference that throws a new light on this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: I would like to remind the hon. minister that I indeed said in my speech that I still believe in a federalism respectful of its partners, that is the provinces. This is what I actually said, as will be seen in tomorrow's Hansard. I still believe in a federalism respectful of its provincial partners.

Miss Bégin: I call it six o'clock Mr. Speaker, and will proceed when the sitting resumes at eight o'clock.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had the floor.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, Saturday morning when I was preparing my speech for the House, some Jehovah's Witnesses rang my doorbell, to talk about their faith and leave some religious pamphlets. It made me think of Duplessis and the unfair lawsuits he brought against them, at a time when I was a young teacher in one of the provinces, my own province which was then Catholic, monolithic and intolerant of the beliefs of others. I was reminded of the padlock law, the Roncarelli case and also the landmark decision handed down by Justice Ivan Rand. All this was only 25 years ago. In looking back on this arduous struggle for basic freedoms, freedom of expression and freedom of religion, my intention is not to pass judgment on my own province, certainly not.

[English]

Everywhere in Canada, in small communities and in large cities, and even in big government, we have been guilty of attacking or limiting freedoms and rights. History is full of examples.

May I be permitted, in lieu of illustrations, simply to read the chapter headings in Mr. Justice Thomas Berger's newly released book "Fragile Freedoms: Human Rights and Dissent in Canada". They read like this: The Acadians: Expulsion and Return; Louis Riel and the New Nation; Laurier and the Separate Schools; The Banished Canadians: Mackenzie King and the Japanese Canadians; The Communist Party and the Limits of Dissent; Jehovah's Witnesses: Church, State and Religious Dissent; October 1970; the Nishga Indians and Aboriginal Rights.

We can all remember many other cases where society as a whole would not leave any space for a weaker group or individual that became threatening just because he or she was different.

Nothing illustrates better the deeply rooted intolerance that all of us must keep fighting than the childhood souvenir in NDG Montreal where we landed at the end of the war when my family immigrated to Canada in the heart of the winter. We used to wear knee high heavy wool stockings sent to us by my Belgian grandmother instead of the long, ugly, drab Canadian stockings of the little Canadian girls. During the night charitable societies, which I will not name, used to leave boxes of Canadian clothes, and insulting letters to my parents because allegedly they were not raising us properly. That was done simply because we were different.

That is only a minuscule example. I could give numerous examples of the discrimination, often subtle, suffered by all those who came from elsewhere or who were born of families who had been here for centuries but were different. We were threatening to the surrounding milieu, its values, beliefs and lifestyles. However, because there have always been voices to raise doubts and push for safeguards, slowly but constantly our institutions have adapted to protect the members of the very distinct societies which form Canada today.

[Translation]

All these events involving minorities may seem very remote from us, from the majority of Quebecers and Canadians. These people may look to us as society's dropouts and they may irritate us because they are different. However, it is exactly because they are not like most of us that we must protect their rights, and paradoxically, by being able to protect their rights we are guaranteeing our integrity and democracy. Some day, somewhere, we shall be the ones who are different and who want to see our rights and freedoms protected. I would like to end with these words by John F. Kennedy:

[English]

"When the rights of one man are diminished, the rights of every man are threatened".

• (2010)

[Translation]

In the view of many the Canadian people actually enjoy a good many rights and all those constitutional conferences are a waste of time. You often hear people saying that the charter is no use at all. It is true that in Canada, we have enjoyed basic freedoms and equal rights in varying degrees for decades now. It is a fact that the charter cannot "give" us our rights: these are granted by society. But by entrenching them in the constitution, the charter will protect them forever, because nothing is more fragile than a right and nothing is more vulnerable than freedom. In the section of the newspapers dealing with international news, numerous are the cases of intolerance and oppression. For instance, the problem of refugees and migrants which has now become worldwide, should make us appreciate how lucky we are in Canada. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I can say that I am truly happy today to see our rights as citizens, rights that are new and not so new, that were more or less guaranteed and familiar and not so familiar, entrenched in the Constitution of Canada.

In endless discussions on the Constitution which we have with one another, at least in Quebec at the present time, there is always some relative, friend or neighbour who will come out with the statement that it was unnecessary to go to all this trouble because at any rate we have had these rights for a long time, and we are not getting anything more. I would like to say to these people who usually, in the same breath, accuse the federal government of not preserving symbols that are dear to us Quebecers that the most important aspect of the rights now entrenched in the Constitution is their importance as symbols and how they are perceived by people. I would say, walk down Jean-Talon in little Italy in the east end of Montreal or go to the Haitian fruit or fish market in St. Leonard or attend a meeting of Moroccan Jews at Côte-des-Neiges or talk to Ukrainian senior citizens in Rosemont, there you will sense the immense pride and the feeling of security the Charter of Rights has given these new Canadians, the fact that these rights apply to them and to their family forever, and that discrimination against them, in any form, because they speak Creole, because they are black or because they came from another country and are different from the majority, will no longer be tolerated.

Of course everything is not perfect, and it is with perhaps a broken heart the other night that I had to say to a group of Canadians of Italian descent in my constituency that we could not give them back the right to choose the language in which their children will be educated. And I attempted once more to explain the point of view of one group to another group, the feelings of Quebecers who see their survival threatened by immigrants who have no difficulty speaking French anyway, but cannot get to learn English without schools, and who do not want to deprive their children from opportunities in the continent they chose. Of course, the provincial government could easily decide to make excellent English courses compulsory in every school, but that is another matter. Once more I tried to explain to them that even though we are culturally very healthy even though Quebec society has reached a critical point where its survival has not been endangered for quite some time, the feeling of insecurity still remains. That is why the entire population in Quebec wanted to give themselves the tools to ensure that the main centre of French culture in America will have all the odds in its favour. And this is indeed recognized by our new Constitution.

People in Quebec are often concerned right now. They ask us: "Did you deprive us of our Bill 101? "No, we decided to respect Bill 101 in order to maintain social peace in Quebec. All the provisions of the existing Bill 101—the predominantly French schools, French as a working language, posting in French, business in French, etc., all this remains. We propose one amendment only, in fact we change one single word, and anyway all Quebecers recognize this as simple justice. We have the Canada clause instead of the Quebec clause. But what does this mean? It means that we want to give English-speaking Canadians from other provinces the right to go on sending their children to English schools in Quebec. Will the opposite be possible? Yes, French-speaking Quebecers who go and work outside Quebec where there is a sufficient number of people to warrant French schools will be given that right throughout Canada by the Constitution.

All nine provinces signed that agreement and they cannot even temporarily opt out, because by passing Bill 101, Quebec chose a kind of community, likewise the Canada clause means a choice of community. As long as Quebecers have decided to be part of a larger unit, as long as their country is Canada, it logically follows that they can enjoy every benefit such as mobility anywhere in Canada. Being part of Canada means, for example, that their young people can go and look for a job in any province, gain some experience for a few years and return to Quebec without being penalized.

If we take, for example, the Common Market, which the péquistes like to refer to, we see that the mobility of goods and individuals is totally unhampered among member countries and is benefical to everyone. The Canada clause merely constitutionalizes the benefits Quebecers can enjoy as Canadians. For example, no thought has been given during the four or five past years to some 300,000 Quebecers, many of them French-speaking, who went to work outside their native province, most likely in Alberta.

Are we to infer from the temporary migration of Quebecers to areas of economic growth that Canadians from other provinces, mostly English-speaking Canadians, will come and steal our jobs in James Bay, in construction projects, in the Bombardier plants or the F-18 program? However weird that assumption, the fact is that the Parti Québécois has deluded some people into believing that the Constitution would invalidate all proficiency cards delivered by corporations and trades and that Quebec would be invaded by outsiders. This is false. All provincial regulations, all established procedures will still be enforced by the same people. It is spelled out in the Constitution. Any Canadian can earn his living in the province of his choice, provided that he abide by its laws and customs. For example, if that province is suffering from too high a level of unemployment, it will be entitled, Quebec included, to carry out special programs to protect and encourage its own underprivileged groups.

Now, what about the million francophones outside Quebec, to whom we attach so little importance, amongst Quebecers? Where do they fit into all this? Our brothers and sisters, from Acadia, Ontario, British Columbia, which we were the ones to discover? Those francophones outside Quebec, those million francophones are the very foundation of the communities scattered about in English Canada that will enable families from Quebec who are transferred by their companies to Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, or Toronto to get the benefit of French schooling for their children. In fact, for the very first time, those francophones see their right to French education becoming an inalienable right: thus, they will no longer be treated as hostages by their politicians. Of course, this is just a beginning, but I hope that in the very near future Ontario will recognize the rights of its French minority in its legislative assembly, its courts, its administrative agencies, rights which are already beginning to be recognized in practice.

Let me note how gauche and damaging to understanding and respect for us all, French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians, were the letters and statements released by Premier Davis this weekend. It is unacceptable for political leaders to speak out of both sides of their mouths on such sensitive issues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: I believe that the final issue which concerns Quebecers is whether their future will be protected when other amendments are made to the Constitution. Speaking about the new rules of the game to amend the Constitution leads us of course to talk about the issue of the veto right. The Quebec Premier himself, Mr. Lévesque, had agreed to an amending formula without any veto right for Quebec when he signed the St. Andrews declaration on April 16, 1981. As a Quebecer, I believe that Mr. Lévesque should never have relinquished Quebec's veto right as proposed by Prime Minister Trudeau in the Victoria Formula in 1971. However, if we look at this issue soberly and ask ourselves when the veto right is essential, we have to conclude that it is critical when it concerns the special position of Quebec, what makes Quebec different, namely, its language and its culture. However, with the amendment wrested by the 74 members of the Quebec caucus in Ottawa on behalf of those who elected them, Quebec will now be able to receive if it so desires full fiscal or financial compensation for any future constitutional amendment concerning educational or cultural affairs it is not interested in implementing, which means that Quebec would remain autonomous in these key areas.

Up to this point, I have spoken at length about the Constitution as a whole. I have spoken about the Constitution as it concerns Quebecers, and in this regard, I can assure my fellow-Quebecers who four times in a row have elected me to this House that, like dozens of us, I shall always be able to confirm that the Constitution is something good and that it takes away none of Quebec's powers while guaranteeing enough rights for any one of us to say out loud and without any hesitation: "Yes, it was worth it!"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I also believe that it may be just as important to ask ourselves this question: Why should Mrs. Langelier or Mr. Désir or Mr. Vaccaro be interested in the Constitution? Is there a reasonable chance that some aspect of the Constitution will affect them directly at some time in their life? The answer is yes. In the long list of individual equal rights now being entrenched in the Constitution and which it is of course impossible to summarize here, the following examples may be mentioned: women will be able to claim not only equal pay for equal work, but also equal rights to pension and fringe benefits anywhere in Canada and whoever their employer is.

A handicapped person will never again be denied employment simply because he or she is in a wheelchair, walks with difficulty or does not communicate the way most people do. That reminds me of someone who came to see my colleague, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), someone who was slightly mentally retarded and who wanted a daycare job with a school board. She has just been told: Don't try to get a job, go on welfare instead. That is the kind of situation which will no longer be tolerated because that is outright discrimination.

Or again take the case of a man or a woman, say 51 years of age, who will no longer be legally turned down for employment when applying for employment with a company or at our own manpower centres anywhere in Canada simply because he or she is too old. That type of discrimination on the part of employers will henceforth be banned under the Constitution. That provision goes even further because any employer, including the federal or provincial governments, may implement special employment programs giving priority to such people over other applicants so as to redress past injustices. Similarly, wherever he or she may work, an employee will no longer be subject to be laid off simply because he or she is 58, 60 or 65 years old. Age discrimination at the time of retirement will no longer be allowed in Canada. Of course, I have not mentioned the case of native women who will be able to recover their Indian status they had forsaken by marrying a non-Indian and return to the reserve with their children.

[English]

I have directed most of my comments to the people of the Montreal riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou who elected me to represent them in the House of Commons. But I think the House will agree that the people of Saint-Léonard-Anjou have many characteristics in common with Canadians from coast to coast. They or their ancestors came from Italy, Greece, Portugal, France and England, to name only a few of their countries of origin. Some came 300 years ago, some came three years ago. Today they are Canadians and Quebecers, they are proud to be both. No one has asked them to choose between one or the other; both belong to them. They are proud, just as those from other provinces in this country are proud of their provinces and of the Canada we all share. In a sense, my constituency is a little Canada. But there are those in my constituency, as there are in all parts of Canada, who are asking, "Why all this fuss over the Constitution?" A constitution is the very fibre which holds the nation together.

[Translation]

I should like to borrow from my colleague the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) a wonderful thought which I have found in a text he has just devoted to the Canadian Constitution. I quote:

> Each time the rights of a Canadian are infringed upon, the social fiber of the whole nation deteriorates a little.

[English]

A constitution defines the responsibilities of governments, it guarantees the rights of individuals, and it establishes the ground rules for nationhood. By having our own Constitution after 114 years, Canadians together will be able to define the kind of Canada we want. We will become masters of our own destiny.

[Translation]

We owe this to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) who have put all their heart, intelligence and determination into something which I dare call an act of civilization. We owe this also to their officials, to the new Minister of State who is sitting beside me this evening, and to a number of provincial representatives who had faith in something. Now we owe this directly to the Canadian people and especially to the Indians and Inuit. We owe this finally to the Canadian women, and I know that I will not surprise anyone when I say that there are now Mothers of Confederation. The hon. minister from Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola) is one of them. Our children will appreciate this.

But there remains a sour note, and it is Mr. Lévesque's refusal to negotiate, when Quebecers insist the discussions be resumed and a possible agreement be sought. I could not conclude, therefore, other than by saying that as a native Quebecer and a Quebecer for ever, I hope the Quebec government will agree to represent our interests and reopen the dialogue. And as they are currently saying in their own advertising campaign: "Now is the time to talk!".

• (2030)

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this historic debate this evening on a resolution that will have a profound effect on shaping this nation's written Constitution. It is a resolution which will affect the very nature of confederation as we have known it.

By way of preface to my remarks I want to hark back to the proceedings this afternoon in order to underline some of the points that I want to make tonight. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) rose in his place and presented an amendment to the resolution which will now include the so-called existing rights of the aboriginal peoples of this country. Following the introduction of the amendment, a number of questions were posed in a sort of mini-question period by members on both sides of the House with respect to the meaning and the full extent of the motion. To put the response of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) in simple terms, it was to the effect that this would give full protection to the aboriginal peoples of our country; that we were not to be concerned with the terminology because the Minister of Justice had telephoned a number of lawyers on the weekend and had received legal opinions to the effect that the rights of the aboriginal peoples would be protected by the wording of the amendment.

When the minister was not prepared to explain the legal basis upon which he was proceeding but simply said that he had advice to that effect, I asked myself if this was not a crazy way to build a constitution.

I am one who has been disturbed by the nature of the so-called constitutional renewal process undertaken by this government. The entire country has been ordered out on a forced march designed to achieve the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) personal objectives. It is a march that has to date imposed great costs on the country, and the journey is by no means over.

The Prime Minister's obsession with deadlines and with hasty progress in this whole matter, concerns me greatly. Lord Randolph Churchill once described Gladstone as "an old man in a hurry" in relation to his tactics in trying to ram through a proposal for home rule for Ireland. We have our own "old man in a hurry" in this country—the right hon. gentleman who now occupies the chair of Prime Minister.

A constitution or a constitutional document is not just any other statute. It is the embodiment of a fundamental consensus on the rules under which a country should govern itself. That consensus cannot be created by a decreee from on high or by the stroke of a pen; it must be developed through long and careful debate at all levels of the national community. It is certainly not something that magically appears at the appropriate spot in a script written in the Prime Minister's office.

Senator Forsey, with his characteristic flair, has said that a constitution is:

> Like a marriage—in the words of the Anglican prayer book, "Not by any to be enterprised, nor taken in hand, inadvertently, lightly or wantonly . . . but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly and in the fear of God."

This government has clearly not given credence to Prime Minister Pearson's advice that "the most delicate of all question" should be the way in which the balance within a federal system is altered. Rather than attempt to encourage a full and wide-ranging debate on the proposals before us, the government and the Prime Minister have systematically attempted to minimize public debate and ram their proposals through Parliament as quickly as possible.

The litany of their sins is well known to us all—a $6 million advertising campaign to set the stage; the use of closure to force the resolution to committee; a refusal to allow the committee to travel; fierce opposition to television and radio coverage of the committee proceedings; an initial reporting deadline that would have effectively made a complete farce of the hearings; an extended reporting date that still obliged the committee to work at a back-breaking pace and that gave little time for sober reflection; severe limitation on the number of expert witnesses who were allowed to speak to the committee; a series of "less than candid" representations as to the nature of the British commitments, and, after the historic Supreme Court decision, a first ministers' conference that was faced with too much haste and too many deadlines, designing a document that will shape the lives of Canadians for years to come.

We have seen the same government that so self-righteously refused to barter fish for rights, demonstrating an incredible capacity to play politics with the basic values of our society. In order to gain support for its initiative, the government initially refused to consider extending institutional bilingualism to Ontario. It did a cynical flip-flop on the entrenchment of property rights in an attempt to keep Premier Blakeney onside. It bought federal NDP support with promises of expanded resource jurisdiction for the provinces. It has played politics with the women's rights and aboriginal issues as well. The government negligently refused to take the time to hammer together a full resolution on these issues—so basic and so important to those involved—but is quick to point the finger at the provinces when critics of the accord of November 5 point out that these aspects are missing. Rather than put it together through reasonable negotiation with time for sober reflection, the government deals in timetables measured in hours and in accusation against any province or individual who fails to understand or agree completely.

The same can be said for the handling of negotiations with Quebec. That is a worrisome matter to all in the House, or it should be. A hasty negotiation purportedly leaves the Quebec government in isolation. Whether that is in fact the case is not as important as how the government's handling of Quebec is perceived by the people of that province. The Prime Minister, in order to placate Quebec, begins to make his piecemeal compromise-a-day offerings. Negotiations with a province that has such complex concerns and problems could surely have been handled on a different timetable, rather than through the overnight cloak and dagger one-upmanship, engaged in by this government. The Prime Minister is in such a great hurry that he is prepared to do anything to speed his mission.

The government's approach to constitutional revision and the strategies and tactics it is using to gain its objective carry with them a number of serious consequences and repercussions. I am afraid that they will be around to plague and haunt Canadians long after this government and this Prime Minister have passed from the scene.

First of all, the government's initiative has, without question, caused very, very serious divisions in our country. These can only be partially healed by the Accord of November 5 and the subsequent revision. The lingering suspicions and concerns of the federal government will remain in the hearts and minds of Canadians long after this document returns from London. The government especially runs the risk of providing to the Party Québécois' ammunition it could never have assembled itself.

History may view this period as a critical turning point in our search for unity—let us hope people are able to view it as a time when unity was renewed and not irreparably fractured.

A second consequence of the government's strategy is simply this: I am afraid that we will discover that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is something less than flawless. In its frantic work, the joint committee adopted 67 amendments—an incredible number for such a relatively short resolution.

We have not had time to fully explore all of the ramifications of the words before us or to investigate alternative phrasing and modifications in the content. The committee heard from few experts and there has simply not been a wide-ranging or sophisticated public debate about the nuts and bolts of the package. This is doubly true now that the accord is to be pushed through the House without committee examination.

● (2040)

What is the full consequence and effect of the revised accord, now arrived at, with respect to aboriginal rights? How will the provisions of Clauses 41(1)(e) and (f), dealing with the extension of provincial boundaries into the territories and the establishment of new provinces, affect that enormous and important part of our country north of the 60th parallel? These and many other questions cry out for answers. Many have commented on the increasingly complex nature of the document and, in particular, the application of the notwithstanding or opting-out clause. In my submission, such a massive change, be it good or bad, needs the thorough consideration of the House, and indeed consideration in committee.

It is not possible to write constitutions to fit a predetermined deadline. I am prepared to wager that one day the government, and indeed all of us, will wish that we had heeded the words of Thomas Jefferson, a truly great constitutional draftsman, when he said to George Washington that delay is preferable to error.

There is a third point I wish to make concerning the government's approach to this matter. I am concerned that, in its passion to sell a charter of rights and freedoms to Canadians, the government has created misapprehensions and misunderstandings about the effect of an entrenched charter. Much as I favour an entrenched bill of rights, I do not see it as a great and shining panacea for the problems of civil rights and freedoms in this or any other country. I was interested in listening to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) when she listed the great and glorious things which would automatically flow by the mere passage of this particular resolution. We must be careful that we do not lull the public into a state of complacency by speaking of the concept of a charter in terms that are too glorifying or too glowing.

There are several factors which must be kept in mind. We must not delude oursleves concerning the power of the courts to act contrary to the sentiments of the general public. At some point, a decree from the courts will be simply nullified by the force of public opposition. For example, in the United States, there was a violent reaction to the bussing orders which followed Brown v. the Board of Education. Some American jurisdictions have flatly refused to comply with the school prayer decision. The courts simply cannot move too far from the general views and values of the public.

Even though the Prime Minister appears not to like it, at least the notwithstanding clause in the resolution recognizes the reality that the courts are not necessarily more in tune with public opinion and morals than are legislative bodies. At least in this country we will have a mechanism for adjusting court decisions which fall out of step with public opinion. Some may view this as the charter's downfall; but the argument is that, particularly in the early years of a charter and because of our federal nature, we need a route which will allow Parliament and the provinces to deal with judicial pronouncements without having to resort to a constitutional amendment.

My point is that, important as the entrenched bill of rights is, let us not woo the Canadian people into believing that it is the final solution. The price of freedom is vigilance by individual citizens. We do our country a great disservice by failing to stress that particular responsibility.

My fourth concern is one relating to the role of the judiciary in interpreting the new charter. We have a charter which will affect the lives of all Canadians. A good deal of authority has now been handed to the courts, authority to determine the application and parameter of our rights. It will take several years of litigation before the words of the charter will have full discussion and are given a certain meaning. We have, however, a bench that is trained in the common law practice of relying on precedent to reach a decision. Now, however, judges will be called upon to rule on every aspect of social and political life in a sweeping fashion. They will be called upon to make these vast pronouncements with major sociological and political implications.

Canadians will be faced with a judiciary which will be obliged to exercise a quasi-legislative role in interpreting the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We will soon realize that the composition of the courts and the political and social beliefs of our judges will be an extremely important factor in the determination of the rights and prerogatives of citizens and institutions in the country. Indeed, the power of appointment of judges from time to time will be of immense importance in the ultimate determination and interpretation of fundamental rights in Canada.

My final concern is of a technical nature. I would ask the government to consider for a moment an argument put forward by several legal scholars concerning the possible legislative frailty of the resolution. It is argued that this legislation could still be challenged in the Supreme Court of Canada as it is not truly an amendment to the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1930 but, rather, a brand new act. As we are aware, the original British North America Act contained no provision for amendment. Convention after 1895 dictated that change to the Constitution would be made by the British parliament to Her Majesty on a joint resolution of the Canadian House of Commons and the Senate. In 1931, the British parliament, by the Statute of Westminster, relinquished its power to legislate for Canada, with certain specific exceptions. First of all, under Section 7(1) it could legislate with respect to the repeal, amendment or alteration of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1930; second, by Section 4, the British parliament could legislate for Canada if requested and consented to by Canada.

The first problem is that this may not be an amendment or alteration required by the Statute of Westminster. When one looks at the form which the resolution takes, it is clear that this is a brand new enactment. It is not styled as an amendment to the specific acts of 1867 to 1930 but, rather, styled as a new act with incidental amendments to those acts. The Supreme Court of Canada could conceivably strike most of the legislation on this basis. The government would then say, if this be the case, that it could still rely on Section 4, which allows Britain to legislate for Canada if the legislation is requested and consented to by the Canadian Parliament.

The problem here is that if the legislation falls under Section 4 rather than Section 7(1), it could be repealed by Parliament or the legislatures in those areas where it has legislative competence. Therefore, depending on the interpretation given to those sections, portions of the Constitution could conceivably be struck out as being outside the legislative competence of the British parliament as it affects Canada or, if saved by Section 4, be then subject to repeal by Parliament or the legislatures. Without doubt, this would be just the tool Mr. Lévesque is seeking. Therefore, in all seriousness, I caution the government and ask it to give serious consideration to this question of the form of the resolution.

I have listened to many hon. members speak on the government side, and particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have listened to a long list of wrongs which will, in fact, be cured by this new Constitution and this new charter. I note that in each of these instances, reference was made to many of the contraventions of human rights and civil liberties which have taken place in governments other than the federal government. However, I now wish to deal with another aspect of the way in which the government has conducted itself during the past few months.

Miss Bégin: You didn't listen.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I listened and I heard—

Miss Bégin: Read the speech tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —only the most casual reference to government in a general sense. I listened with great interest and I will read with great interest the minister's remarks.

During these past few months and years, we have seen the government championing civil rights and personal freedoms. I have sat in the House and watched hon. members on the other side, particularly the Prime Minister, label opponents of this particular resolution as people who hate Liberals more than they love freedom. The imposition of a charter of rights on the provinces has somehow become a crusade against infidels who cannot be trusted to protect freedom within their own boundaries and within their own spheres or jurisdictions.

• (2050)

However, it must be pointed out that while the government may paint itself lily white, we on this side of the House know, as do many, many Canadians, that its closets are crammed with skeletons. The government is guilty of both non-feasance and malfeasance in dealing with the issue of human rights. Although the government and the Prime Minister have been in a position for years to do a great many of the things they now push so urgently and so righteously, they have done nothing.

Let me point out some examples of what I mean. The Liberals have been in a position for over a decade to strengthen Mr. Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights. A few simple amendments by ordinary statute could have given it some real teeth and done much to halt the retreat from the Drybones decision. The government has done absolutely nothing in that regard.

We should note too that the greatest violation of civil liberties in recent times took place at the instigation of the Liberal government during the October crisis of 1970. The same Prime Minister who invoked the War Measures Act, now styles himself as a white knight, duty bound to impose a charter on the provinces. The government's own backyard is not a very happy sight.

The provisions of the Indian Act, which discriminate blatantly on the basis of sex by providing that an Indian woman who marries a white man loses her Indian status, has been allowed to stand by the government. A simple amendment by ordinary statute could have corrected this great injustice, but nothing was done. Indeed, the government sent its own lawyers to the Supreme Court in 1973 to argue that this outrageous provision should not be struck down by the court.

The list of similar situations is a long one. Let me just point out a couple of examples. In a decision called Hogan v. the Queen in 1974 the Supreme Court ruled that evidence of a breathalyser test obtained in violation of an accused's right to counsel was admissible at trial. In a similar vein, Canadian courts have consistently held that illegally obtained evidence is admissible. Although the government has for many years been able to provide that such evidence should be inadmissible, it has done nothing. Although a simple amendment to the Criminal Code or the Canada Evidence Act could have given judges the power to exclude illegally obtained evidence, and although such changes have been called for from many quarters, it has only been in the last few months that our government has become the champion of that concept.

The government has been neglectful of the needs of the handicapped. Amendments should be introduced by the government to the human rights code in keeping with the recommendations of the special committee on the disabled and the handicapped. Such legislation would be met with enormous goodwill on this side of the House. Some provisions with respect to the Canadian Human Rights Act were promised in the Speech from the Throne some two years ago. The government House leader has been advised of the willingness on our part to let this legislation be brought forward and dealt with expeditiously, yet no legislation has been brought forward, and the ones to suffer for it are the thousands of mentally and physically handicapped Canadians. In this international year of the handicapped person, the government sits mute with regard to this particular legislation, legislation which would be tangible evidence of its commitment to human rights.

Another example, one that is currently in the news, and one which I find particularly difficult to understand, is that of the current Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) day in and day out advocating the lifting of the moratorium on the issuance of writs of assistance. How can a government minister who advocates this drastic measure stand behind a resolution calling for the right of everyone to be secure from unreasonable search or seizure?

These writs have been banned in Britain and they have been prohibited in the United States of America by the bill of rights. An officer having such a writ in his possession may barge into any home he believes may contain prohibited goods. No justification is required by any judge, and no special permission is required under this writ. It is an ongoing writ without any time limitation. I have submitted to this House and to the government on different occasions that this is totally undesirable, and the practice should be banned.

Another example of current government thinking with respect to fundamental principles of justice in this country is that the government has now issued an emergency planning order providing the various ministries with authority to plan for the placing of virtually every facet of the public and private sector at their disposal should an emergency occur. However, the ministers make all their plans without one piece of enabling legislation. They make these plans not for a situation in which war may be declared but, indeed, in cases of environmental tragedies, disasters or situations where there may be civil disobedience in certain areas of our country, something short of an actual declaration of war. The powers they are giving themselves under this order are far-reaching, and there is no legislation which in fact allows them to bring forward this particular order.

The government will say it will not do anything without legislation. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if you believe that, you should read the remarks of the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), in the June-September Emergency Planning Digest where he suggests that the government could and would act extra-legally; that is, outside the law, should Parliament be dissolved and an emergency arise. This is a very telling comment on the government's understanding of the rule of law.

One might also comment on the government's management of the RCMP. A significant amount of evidence exists that would suggest the government was aware of illegal acts engaged in by the RCMP for a decade and chose to do nothing about it. The public of this country is proud of the RCMP, and with just reason, but if this had occurred in the United States, I suggest it would be tantamount to a Watergate scandal. Not only has the government participated in the clear violation of the law in this respect, it has made every effort to roadblock any investigation of the part it played, and this from the self-righteous Prime Minister and a succession of solicitors general making their contributions as they went through a revolving door.

I would like to make a comment on my party's contribution to this constitutional process. We stand as a party firmly committed to the entrenchment of rights and freedoms in a Constitution made in Canada, arrived at through consensus by Canada and the provinces. The Prime Minister enjoys accusing this party of failing to support the substantive aspects of the former resolution. We in fact worked as hard as any party to see that the resolution was as beneficial and as workable as possible. We have, however, steadfastly opposed the unilateral actions of the Prime Minister and his associates in the New Democratic Party. We have opposed the process, and it gives me a great deal of pride to look at what has been accomplished because of our efforts to have the Supreme Courts of Canada rule on the constitutionality of the resolution before final debate.

We now have a made-in-Canada Constitution, albeit without the support, as I mentioned before, of the Parti Québécois government. This has been a negotiated settlement, and we in this country have been relieved of watching the spectacle of provinces having to go to the parliament in London on their knees begging for relief.

The absence of the government of Quebec from the accord is a matter that is worrisome, as I have mentioned, to all Canadians. There is still much work to be done. My party's amendment to this resolution is indicative of our determination to address the concerns of the people of Quebec.

• (2100)

This historic compromise would never have taken place without pressure being put on the government by this party, particularly through the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and of my seatmate, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). It gave to the Supreme Court as well the opportunity to instruct the government in its responsibilities and gave the provinces a solid foot in the door to force the government to compromise, to slow down our Prime Minister in his determination to push this matter through according to his own personal timetable.

It will be viewed historically as a turning point in this constitutional debate. I am confident that we will view the new amending formula as more in keeping with the federal nature of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the proposal for the referendum contained in the original resolution is not included. That proposal was received with great resentment in the part of Canada from which I come, namely, western Canada. The veto powers given to certain provinces have been removed. I suggest that this is an advance and an improvement on our constitutional amending process. These improvements would never have seen the light of day were it not for the persistence and effective action of my party.

In short, let me say that when the provinces were finally given an opportunity to be heard and when the Supreme Court finally told the Prime Minister and the federal government that they must now listen, an agreement was reached. Our party has been the party of compromise. We now invite the Prime Minister to finish the job properly—not necessarily by moving with undue haste. We have accomplished very much by the delay we have been able to bring about but let us not now spoil the great effort. Let us move carefully and deliberately to ensure that this charter, this revised Constitution, truly reflects the aspirations of all Canadians. Let us be able to stand up with our colleagues from coast to coast with a Constitution in which we will all feel great pride in saying in our own language, "I am Canadian".

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): As I begin, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say how puzzled I am at the members who have spoken since the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) made his speech. In fact, at this point we are debating an amendment that affects about one in 20 Canadians.

I would like to start my speech by moving an amendment. I move:

That the amendment of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be amended by deleting the word "existing".

Before submitting that amendment, I want to mention a second concern. I would like to read the formal motion in English and in French. I believe the law officers and the Clerk at the Table will confirm my understanding from a brief reading of the amendment put forward today by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that there has been a serious deletion in the French version. The formal Notice of Motion read:

Moved that the motion of the Minister of Justice of November 18, 1981, that an address to be presented to Her Majesty the Queen be amended in schedule B of the measure to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom by deleting the word "existing" from the amendment now before the House so the clause would read:

"Part 1.1. Rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. 34.1(1) The aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed. (2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada".

My concern, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure the Clerk will be able to check this in terms of the translation, which was not done by the minister today is that it should read as follows, and I will dispose of the first part. It says in French:

[Translation]

Partie II Droits des peuples autochtones du Canada. 34(1); Les droits aborigènes ou issus de traités des peuples autochtones du Canada sont par les présentes reconnus et confirmés.

[English]

It is in that section, I believe, that the amendment tabled in French by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was incorrect.

[Translation]

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) deserves our warmest congratulations for this last effort, as well as for his leading role in the initial agreement concluded with the nine provinces.

[English]

Before getting into the main text of my speech, I would like to give the history of Section 34. I do not think that too many of us remember that in October of last year, when the resolution was put before the House, there was no positive statement in the resolution in relation to aboriginal and treaty rights, and no amendments were proposed by the Tories at the committee stage. In fact, the precise Section 34 that is before the House was drafted by this party in direct consultation with the native people of Canada. This was after a fierce battle by the aboriginal peoples, a battle that found a firm ally in this party, and a firm and trustworthy spokesman during those negotiations in the leader of this party. After unanimous all-party support on January 30 for inclusion of the motion moved by my colleague for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), it remained in place until November 5, when it was ditched by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by some of the first ministers at that famous meeting. In the following days, this party made it clear where we stood on aboriginal and treaty rights. We made it clear that we would not support the Constitution if there were not inclusion and entrenchment of aboriginal and treaty rights.

Various comments have been made since the statement made by the Minister of Justice in the House last night. The addition of that word has been described by one famous Canadian as "quintessentially a Liberal compromise. The changes to Section 34 add unnecessary ambiguity to it. It symbolically impairs the section." I think that is most crucial because the native people have been treacherously dealt with, not only in terms of the original resolution with no positive statement, but on November 5 when the first ministers never said publicly, either in their own provinces or when they came to Ottawa, that it was their intention to dump it. Nor was it ever indicated by the government or any of its officials before the consensus was signed that that treacherous deal had been struck.

Much praise should be directed at the aboriginal people of Canada tonight for their continued fight as a result of which Section 34 is back in its present state. I am hopeful that in the coming days all members of the House will reflect on the original January 30 all-party unanimous agreement to the wording and will agree to delete a word that is, at best, ambiguous.

Another important point, Mr. Speaker, is that the addition of that word affects the mind set of government and bureaucrats about the need to move in good faith to settle land claims, not only in British Columbia and north of 60 in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories but throughout the country.

Another famous Canadian described the addition of that word as "a clever attempt to fight the groundswell support that native Canadians were finding in every household across the country."

This section introduces weasel words. One weasel word, to be exact, is that word "existing". There could have been a resounding affirmation in the House, supported across the country, because nine months had passed and native people in every village and town, urban and rural area of the country had had an opportunity to look at it and think about it. To add this word now is extremely unfair.

A few days ago six provinces—and if one is to include British Columbia, seven provinces—supported the old wording of Section 34. Again, that is something we need to think about in the House. We had unanimous all-party support here and in the Senate and we had seven provinces on side just a few days ago. It is the insistence of Alberta, and possibly that of some other provinces, along with the federal Liberals, that moved that small opposing opinion against the growing tide of public, aboriginal and provincial support.

The agreement struck last night to force the word "existing" into Section 34 was done without consultation with the aboriginal peoples of Canada, despite the fact that ever since unanimous all-party acceptance on January 30 of this year it has been the wording considered and studied by those people all over Canada.

My colleagues and I deeply wish to see the principle of consent included but have found no support for the principle from any member on the government side and from few members of the Conservative Party. If they are ready to support it now, let us hear from them.

I have consulted 20 lawyers in Canada over the past 18 hours since the Minister of Justice included the word "existing" in Section 34. The majority of those lawyers feel that the word does not damage the legal thrust of the section but that it taints it. However, all agree that the section is better without the word.

The Minister of Justice said this afternoon that it makes absolutely no difference to the legal meaning. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a Constitution. If concerns are raised—and we all know that a principle of law is that the word speaks when it is written in the law—how can "existing" be implicit in the original and then, on addition, be no more than explicit?

• (2110)

Never in my life have I heard weaker constitutional arguments than those I heard today from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). If I cannot find a lawyer who thinks the word "existing" improves the section, where has the government found these masterminds who say that adding words to a constitution has no effect? Common sense and a sense of decency requires removal of the word "existing". It is at once superfluous and ambiguous.

I would like to move briefly into the history of how the resolution came to be here and my concerns about it, and also I should like to give some direct, factual information which I think all members of the House should consider in the next few days before we vote on the subamendment and the amendment itself so that we do find unanimity again on removing that word. The process which has brought us to this final stage of debate can at best be described as inappropriate. In its rush to meet some unknown deadline, the government has forced upon the House and the nation a resolution which will forever bear the savage tatters of first ministers' consensus. I must say that the presence of a native or a woman at the final phase of negotiation might have saved this debate. Better yet, if Parliament had truly been a leader, consensus would have been built at the family, community and regional levels. No Supreme Court ruling would have been required, no late night bargaining over non obstante clause, no last minute ditching of equality rights for male and female persons and no last minute treachery by 11 men whose smiling, outward reassurance put the knife to over one million aboriginal Canadians.

Rather than a process of nation building in which all political parties played a role of listening, understanding and developing a document in the Canadian spirit, we have before us a much watered down charter, but we have consensus; we have an amending formula with provincial equality, but without Quebec; and somehow we have a government still champing at the bit to get it through and to take all the credit while passing all the blame and then blasting the Canadian public with a multimillion dollar advertising campaign to prove it was all worth while. I must say that if time, care and more love for this nation, this land and all its occupants had been the operating principles rather than political expediency, we would have before us a social blueprint for the future. Instead, we have a debt list of the showdown at the Conference Centre corral.

So much for the problems of process. Let me deal with substance. We recognize, as do all members of the House, that the search of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for support from the premiers went too far in arriving at an accord that denied rights to the majority of Canadians, to women, rights returned with the Section 28 paramountcy a few hours earlier today, and to Indian, Inuit and Métis people, soon to be entrenched, minus one single word, I trust, with the unanimous all-party support that we witnessed on January 30 of this year, and I would dearly like to see that repeated in a couple of days.

Previous speakers have dwelt on the contents, ranging from patriation, the amending formula and the charter to equalization and provincial control of resources, but let me deal with the need to entrench the recognition and affirmation of aboriginal and treaty rights. My colleagues, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), among others, have dealt very well with the issue of equality.

It is now some 500 years since Columbus set foot in North America, heralding the voluntary flood of Europeans to this land. It is my intention in the next few minutes to put on the record a brief glimpse of the events which have brought us to today.

As Mr. Justice Thomas Berger said in his recent book, "Fragile Freedoms", the issue of aboriginal rights is the oldest question of human rights in Canada. It may be hard for some members of the House to understand—perhaps impossible for some premiers—nevertheless, some of us in this debate are not promoting a radically new idea, a changed idea or a partisan formulation. We are addressing the living and historical reality of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. The thrust of the amendment to recognize and affirm aboriginal rights goes far beyond any political ideology presently in existence in Canada or, I might say, in most areas of the House. The time has come for their view of their laws, land title and tradition to be entrenched in the foundation laws of this nation. The cultural, social and economic expression of aboriginal rights through self-determination, through cultural activities and so forth will surpass, in my view, what we can even imagine today. The northwest coast Indians' culture, for example, is often compared with the cultures of ancient Greece and Rome. The robust art and tradition of the plains and northern and eastern Canadian native people are similarly renowned around the world in history and at present. We shall not forget, in our support for this historic move to entrench, that the development and re-emergence of native culture and institutions through the affirmation of rights to renewable and non-renewable resources will simultaneously bring about the decline and extinction of such bureaucratic institutions as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Such institutions, which were created to manage native people for the convenience of the French, then for the convenience of the English and now of Canadian systems, will no longer be allowed.

Let me now take the House on a speedy but important tour of the legal history which has delivered to Parliament historic propriety in entrenching aboriginal rights forever into the Constitution. The Europeans, who voluntarily came to Canada, asserted their sovereignty over the land based on the principle of discovery. It was not a principle of law but one of supposed moral and cultural superiority, which is something we should bear in mind in this debate. This "moral superiority" was consolidated in European minds solely by superior arms. However, Europeans did acknowledge throughout the past four centuries that Canada's Indians retained a legal interest in the land because they had been the original occupants. The interest was and is known as aboriginal or Indian title.

I think we should reflect in this debate on the fact that many of our forefathers—many of my forefathers—recognized the rights of aboriginal people, recognized their title to the land and recognized their rights to all kinds of traditions in various areas of Canada, and it is only in this last century that we have seen the terror and terrible repression which has been used against the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

In setting the record straight I think it is important that there be unanimity on the exclusion of the word "existing" because on January 30 there was all-party support. The Minister of Justice does not have a single argument that holds water as to why it should be there, and I think all members of the House should think about it carefully and not vote like a bunch of seals because some deal was made over the telephone. We should make it clear to the native people of Canada that they can trust, not just a few members of the House, but Parliament, and that they can trust and be part of Canadian institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: So, in most of North America title was acquired from the Indian people by way of treaties or, in the United States where negotiations did not work or broke down, by war. The legal question of aboriginal property rights was not faced by the United States Supreme Court until 1955. The policy of treaties was established in Canada and enshrined by our forefathers in the Royal Proclamation of 1763.

By 1850, treaties had brought about the surrender of almost the whole of eastern Canada and were fast being made across the prairies. By 1885, Canada had its first major legal battle of aboriginal title, the now famous St. Catharines milling case. In that case the counsel for the province of Ontario argued: "We say that there is no Indian title at law or in equity. The claim of the Indians is simply moral and no more."

The St. Catharines milling case dealt with Treaty 3, the Lake of the Woods area in Ontario and, although related to aboriginal title, Indian people were never directly represented in the litigation. The real conflicting parties in the case were the interests sought by the governments of Canada and Ontario. Strangely enough, it was the logging company that argued that Canadian policy had always recognized Indian land rights. That is something we in the House should remember in this historic debate to set Section 34 as it should be. It was a logging company 100 years ago that fought for the rights of the aboriginal people, not Parliament and not the government of Ontario.

This strange Supreme Court of Canada case was followed, in 1888, by a ruling of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the then highest court of appeal in Canada, that Indians had property rights in their lands prior to the signing of Treaty 3 in 1873. This affirmed, for the first time in Canadian law the legal, real property character of the Indian usufructuary title.

Judicial opinion has wandered somewhat since then. For example, in 1934 the Ontario Supreme Court said that the Crown could do whatever it wished, even with reserve land, whereas the exchequer court, as recently as in 1964, said in essence that Indian band land is the same as title in fee simple.

The great Métis leader, Louis Riel, twice elected to the Parliament of Canada, was hanged in 1885 for his views on aboriginal rights in western Canada.

By the turn of the century, politicians were fast moving to remove the rights of native people through abuses of human rights. In British Columbia, for example, my home province, in 1895 the right to vote was taken away from every Indian person in the province and was not returned until 1949. In the same year, 1895, the federal Department of Fisheries restricted the Indian food fishery. By 1915, Indian hunting and trapping was brought under strict provincial regulation, these actions at that time being taken against the population which was reduced from 50,000 in 1850 to 10,000 in 1900.

Ravaged by smallpox, forced on to small reserves and excluded from wage labour, it was illegal for Indian people in British Columbia to work and be paid for it. They were excluded from the fishery. They were excluded from their traditional hunting and guiding territories. They were excluded from forest activities and then they were put on reserves. Members of the House in the past had, and even today have, the audacity and pomposity to stand in the House and say that native people should not have land and both renewable and non-renewable resources returned to them. It is an atrocity.

It was not until 1960, in fact the 1963 federal election, less than 20 years ago, that native Canadians could first vote. We are just at the threshold of leaving the darkest of dark ages in the history of human rights violations by the Government of Canada done upon the indigenous people of this land. The big breakthrough came in 1969 when the Nishga people of the Nass Valley in British Columbia finally forced the government of British Columbia into court to have the question of aboriginal title adjudicated.

By this time it had been 50 years since the federal government had moved to help the Indian people in any way on the question of aboriginal claims in British Columbia. The first stage of the famous Nishga case was presided over by Mr. Justice Gould who held that if there was aboriginal title, it had been extinguished before the colonies had entered confederation.

The case next went to the B.C. Court of Appeal where it was held that the law had never acknowledged any such concept as aboriginal title. The court seemed stuck on the prejudices that native people could have one, a sophisticated legal system, two, with communal property but no recorded system of title deeds, three, because there was no written language. It is unbelievable.

As Mr. Justice Thomas Berger said recently about the assumptions "white society" placed upon native culture, "they are not locked into the past: we are exlcuding them from the present". It is something we all need to reflect on. We should take ourselves outside of the petty politics that has damaged and tainted Section 34. We as members of the House should reflect on the history of the native people and the need, after the treachery of November 5 and the treacherous acts we have seen since then, to demonstrate to the native people that they can in fact trust the institution of Parliament.

During 1969 while the Nishga case was proceeding through the courts, the Prime Minister spoke on the subject in Vancouver. On August 8 he said the following:

> Our answer is no. We can't recognize aboriginal rights because no society can be built on historical might-have-beens.

That statement may well have been in the Prime Minister's mind on November 5, 1981, and prejudiced his ability to stand firm on the unanimous view of this Parliament.

It was at this point, only 12 years ago, that the issue came to a temporary standstill in Canadian history. Neither the courts nor the federal government would acknowledge aboriginal claims. There was no one 12 years ago in this nation standing by the native people of this country.

An argument that was used at that time has been used in the House and by various premiers. Why should there be special status for native people, they say. Why should they not be assimilated like the Irish, Poles or Swedes? Section 91(24) of the British North America Act, written 114 years ago by our forefathers, gave exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the affairs of native people to Parliament to be safeguarded. They never were. Far more important, those who came to Canada by choice set up to a largely parallel culture, not an assimilated culture of the Indian people, something that was not true of the Indian, Inuit and Métis people. Until very recent times they remained primarily a people outside of the general system and general institutions of Canada.

In 1969 the then minister of Indian affairs, now Minister of Justice, refused to intervene in the Nishga case because of the federal policy at that time to refuse recognition of aboriginal rights.

In November, 1971, the historic Nishga case was heard here in Ottawa for five days before seven judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. It was a split decision, with Mr. Justice Emmett Hall speaking for the three judges in favour. He found that the Nishgas had aboriginal title, that it had never been lawfully extinguished and that this title could still be asserted. That was probably one of the most important legal decisions ever made in Canadian history.

The crucial point, however, is that all six judges who participated in the ruling and addressed the question supported the view that English law in force in British Columbia when colonizations began had recognized Indian title to the land. That is a very important point. A long time ago our forefathers recognized aboriginal title to the land, yet here we sit in this quagmire with provincial and federal politicians idly jerking at the levers.

It is important that we start to move in settling the question of aboriginal rights in this country, not only on tradition, culture and adoption and so on, but to give to the native people a resource base so that they can be equal with all Canadians. That is my intention in speaking here tonight.

Canada's highest court unequivocally affirmed the concept of aboriginal title in February, 1973. Parliament at last began to move after 100 years. On August 8, 1973, the federal government announced the intention to settle native land claims in all parts of Canada where no treaties had yet been made. Thus the federal government has agreed to settle aboriginal claims. The crucial context in which we are about to act as Parliament is to obligate the provinces, by the constitutional entrenchment of recognition and affirmation of aboriginal rights, to negotiate a settlement of native claims. To all of those people who work for the federal and provincial governments, and to all of those elected members, the message that Parliament is giving is that it is time to settle aboriginal claims. It is not time to quibble about little bits of wording here and there. The message that the native people have passed to this chamber and that this chamber is passing to the Canadian public is that Parliament is going to move and, if necessary, we will help to move those provinces that are intransigent on this issue and get a settlement of aboriginal claims in Canada.

The crucial context in which we are about to act as Parliament is, as I said earlier, by way of the constitutional entrenchment of recognition and affirmation of aboroginal rights to negotiate in good faith a settlement of native claims. It is a sad reflection of the events of November 5, 1981, when the first ministers met privately to dump treacherously entrenchment of Section 34, never having said a word publicly of their opposition or any reasons for such opposition. Only Saskatchewan put forward Section 34 for inclusion.

Bill Bennett and Peter Lougheed were the last of the Premiers to be bickering about wording and cost. It is shameful for legislators to be publicly crying about the costs of enacting human rights. When were they last without a vote federally and provincially, forced out of work by law, forced to live on a reserve? Need I go on? I would like to see Bill Bennett and Peter Lougheed live under those sorts of circumstances.

On January 30, 1981, the NDP put forward an amendment to the Constitution for the entrenchment of aboriginal rights that carried unanimously with the committee. The original Liberal resolution had nothing, the Conservative Party proposed nothing, yet we all agreed on Section 34, and I am thankful for it.

We have general support now of the aboriginal people of Canada, the firm support in law of the Supreme Court of Canada, the British North America Act, Section 91(24), the overwhelming majority of the provinces, and now their premiers, the churches of Canada and all parties in the House. Is it not time that Canada's history was set straight, even if a province or two might continue to object?

● (2130)

I urge all members of the House to reject the ambiguity created by the proposed inclusion of the word "existing", primarily for symbolic reasons. I think we need to think of that when we vote on the subamendment, Mr. Speaker. It is the symbolism, the treachery of 500 years of white supremacy in this land. It is time the record was set straight and we set straight what the premiers did on November 5. They committed a treacherous act. In order to regain that fragile faith of the native people, we must put Clause 34 back in in its original wording. This is the second time in three weeks that the aboriginal people have been excluded from the process without consultation.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, let me say that it is their rights, not the rights or views of any premiers or bureaucrats or ministers of the Crown, that are being tampered with. I urge all members of the House to support the subamendment for the sake of the Indian, Inuit and Metis people and all the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It has been moved by Mr. Fulton, seconded by Mr. Broadbent that the amendment be amended by deleting the word "existing". The question is now on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly happy to be participating in this debate on the constitutional resolution at this point, now that most of the controversy and animosity have subsided.

Last night, thanks to the efforts of all three parties in the House, Mr. Chrétien was able to announce that both the aboriginal rights and the womens rights clauses would be reinstated with the consent of the provinces. I would like to pay tribute to those members of both the Conservative and NDP parties who leaned on their provincial counterparts and thus assisted Mr. Chrétien and his colleague Mr. Munro, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is the practice in the House, and I note the previous speaker also fell into the same habit, of referring to hon. members by their constituencies or ministers by their functions, not by personal names.

Mr. Watson: The other colleague who was so invaluable in her assistance to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Chrétien) was the minister of state responsible for the status of women. The result that was achieved by these efforts has been welcomed by all members of the House. The Minister of Justice deserves our most heartfelt congratulations for this latest effort on his part as well as for the leading role he played in the initial agreement with the nine provinces.

The Minister of Justice and Attorney General obviously subscribes to the axiom that politics is the art of the possible and he possesses the fairness, the flexibility, the give and take and the openness which are the basic ground rules for achieving political objectives in a democratic society. As an example of effective politics, I hope it would both impress and influence some of our other ministers, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I should now like to broach subjects of concern to some of my francophone and anglophone constituents. The francophones are concerned with the conflict that opposes Quebec and Ottawa with regard to the three points on which they failed to agree. Concerning the right to mobility and to gain livelihood, the Government of Canada proposes to guarantee, and I quote:

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Those rights, Mr. Speaker, would prevent the provinces from imposing unfair restrictions to the hiring of workers from Quebec or Newfoundland. Yet, this section offers some protection when unemployment is particularly severe. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) offered to add special terms in order to meet the objections of the Quebec government. In view of the provisions of Bill 101 concerning the working language, the danger of a massive migration of workers from the other provinces to Quebec is minimal.

Section 6 will protect mostly Quebecers. As for Section 23, which recognizes for the first time the right of every francophone in the country to education in his mother tongue, let us keep in mind Mr. Speaker, that our society is becoming increasingly mobile. Enormous energy projects will cause temporary movements of population throughout the country. Quebecers will now be able to move with their whole family and be assured that their children may pursue their education in French. As for the objections of Quebec to the Canadian proposal, it should be noted that Mr. Lévesque himself proposed a reciprocal agreement on education in both official languages in St. Andrew's two or three years ago. The third point in dispute between Quebec and Ottawa concerns the lack of compensation for a province which decides to opt out of an amendment affecting its powers. The resolution now before the House make an additional concession to Quebec in Section 39.

Section 39 reads as follows:

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Quebec will therefore have a veto in matters of education and culture.

Another element of this resolution should be of interest to all Quebecers. I am referring to Section 35:

Equalization and regional disparities

The equalization system is of great benefit to all Canadians since it promotes equal opportunities throughout the country, but it is of special benefit to the provinces receiving money, including Quebec. Section 35 of the charter guarantees this principle of sharing and makes it a cornerstone of our Confederation.

What does equalization mean for Quebecers? It means that the wealth produced by the natural resources of western Canada will be shared with Quebecers and maritimers. When the west is prosperous, all Canadians benefit from new job opportunities, economic spin-offs for industry and the sharing of tax revenues guaranteed by equalization.

[English]

The concerns of my English-speaking fellow Quebecers relate particularly to the optional applicability of the maternal language clause, Section 23(1)(a). They are asking why the maternal language clause is being applied in the other nine provinces but not in Quebec. Apart from the political arguments, with which I will deal in a moment, the practical argument which the government employs is that the absence of French schooling facilities in most parts of English Canada means that many French Canadian families would be ineligible under the other subsections of Section 23 to send their children to French schools. They would not have benefited from French schooling facilities since none exist. That handicap does not affect the English-speaking inhabitants of Quebec who have long had excellent school facilities provided by the government of Quebec and supported by all taxpayers of Quebec.

The number of people affected by the non-applicability of Section 23(1)(a) is fairly small. Perhaps we are talking about 2,000 to 3,000 naturalized Canadian citizens, couples who came to Quebec from elsewhere in Canada after the passage of Bill 101. They had not started families or did not have children in school prior to moving to Quebec. They are families with at least one parent whose maternal language is English. Bill 101 allows all inhabitants of Quebec whose maternal language is English, domiciled there at the time of the passage of the bill, to send their children to English language schools. We are faced with a situation where admittedly the 2,000 to 3,000—and I do not know if my figures are accurate—couples who moved to Quebec since Bill 101 from other parts of Canada will not have rights which are available to other Canadians anywhere else in the country. We are also talking about another group of a few thousand or more naturalized Canadians who came to Quebec since the passage of Bill 101 from outside Canada and whose mother tongue is English. In this case the people who came knew what they were facing when they came; the bill had been passed, and they are not stuck with a situation which was thrust upon them after the fact.

The reason I am quoting these statistics is to underline that the numbers are insignificant from a demographic viewpoint or from the viewpoint of a threat to Quebec's French majority.

There is a third group which is potentially affected by the section, that is the English language immigrant group that could be expected to total perhaps 2,000 to 4,000 per year over the next few years, if the statistics of the last several years hold accurate. This group is of particular importance. These people usually come from the United States or Great Britain because their skills are particularly in demand by sectors of the Quebec economy.

[Translation]

Whether we like it or not, we in Canada suffer from a shortage of skilled workers in various fields, including geologists and geophysicists in western Canada as well as aerospace technicians in Quebec. The blame rests squarely on the federal and provincial governments as well as on industry. Nevertheless, if we fail to improve our technical training programs, Canada will continue to import those skilled workers from other countries. It is precisely those skilled technicians and their availability to develop Quebec's aerospace industry which will be affected by our lack of courage with respect to Section 23(1)(a). Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about waves of English-speaking immigrants who will severely upset the demographic balance in Quebec but instead just a few thousand couples.

[English]

The statistics of the last decade demonstrate that Quebec's native English-speaking population, young people in particular, educated at the expense of Quebec taxpayers, has been moving westward to take advantage of greater opportunities in far larger numbers than they have been replaced by English-speaking immigrants. The English-speaking percentage of Quebec's population has been diminishing rapidly over the years. We are not talking about any threat to the French-language majority in Quebec. Even the Parti Québécois now admits that the demographic views, which were a major factor behind the growth of the separatist movement, are no longer justified by statistics.

As I have already alluded, if the absence of the maternal language clause in Section 23(1)(a) will be bad for Quebec's economy, in particular the aerospace industry, and if there is no demographic threat, why are we showing such lack of courage?

● (2150)

It is the political judgment of my colleagues in the House of Commons from Quebec, that imposing Section 23(1)(a), the maternal language clause now, would provide the Parti Québécois separatists with a rallying cry, to the detriment of the acceptance of the entire package by the Quebec population. It is more important, they argue, to win the larger war against separatism than to jeopardize popular Quebec, as distinct from the Quebec government, acceptance of the present constitutional package.

While I accept that argument, I frankly do not believe the battle for the minds and loyalties of Quebecers will be greatly affected by this issue. Wisdom dictates a quick, clearcut decision, rather than to leave it a festering cause of future discussion and perhaps controversy.

I believe that the Quebec public is far better informed and better able to judge the facts than they are given credit for by both federal and provincial politicians.

By leaving out Section 23(1)(a) now and allowing Quebec to opt in later, we are, in effect, surrendering to the threat of Parti Québécois demagoguery. I do not think we should succumb to that threat.

Quebec members are in a strong position to handle Parti Québécois arguments regarding the application of Section 23(1)(b) which allows Canadians who have received their education in English or French anywhere in Canada to pass on that right to English or French language education to their children. We can also handle the argument relating to Section 23(2) which allows the family of any child of a Canadian citizen who has started his education in English or French to continue the education of all the children of the family in that same language anywhere in Canada, because Mr. Lévesque himself proposed such a formula based on reciprocity at a premier's conference in St. Andrews a few years ago.

Why not have Section 23(1)(a) as well or, I would urge the Prime Minister, at least have an exception to the non-applicability of Section 23(1)(a) to allow Canadians who moved to Quebec since passage of Bill 101, the choice of language? Maternal English language immigrants who came to the country after that time were clearly aware what they were coming to as were Canadians who moved to Quebec. To me it seems that a distinction can and should be made in favour of Canadians, perhaps without families, who moved to Quebec for a year or two, then decided to stay and raise families, that they be allowed to make the choice that their English-speaking co-inhabitants of Quebec have under the existing Quebec law and should have as a result of the changes proposed in the Constitution. To do otherwise, I would argue, is not in keeping with the contents and spirit of the resolution we are debating tonight.

[Translation]

A moment ago I expressed some reservations about the wisdom of excluding Quebec at this time from the application of section 23(1)(a). Except for those reservations, I must say that I am proud to support the endeavour of the Prime Minister who has been anxious to guarantee full sovereignty for Canada. His initiative, his perseverance and, in recent weeks, his flexibility have now brought us to the point where patriating the Constitution has almost become a mere formality. It is indeed thanks to the courage and tenacity of the Right Hon. Prime Minister at each stage of the long process that his efforts will be successful. The charter will establish the principle of sharing our wealth among all regions of our country. It will give Quebecers the assurance that they will enjoy the right to go anywhere without restrictions and to work in all parts of Canada.

The charter will guarantee that workers from Quebec will enjoy the right to have their children educated in French anywhere in Canada.

[English]

Canadians can be proud of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. They can be proud too that the political leadership of the country, both federal and provincial, has shown a new maturity in achieving consensus on the resolution we are debating tonight. The process has been a victory for the Canadian federal system, and all Canadians are the winners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, rather than trying to crowd all my remarks in the time remaining between now and ten o'clock, perhaps hon. members might be disposed to allow me to call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY—ACTIONS OF CZECHOSLOVAK GOVERNMENT AFFECTING CANADIAN CITIZENS. (b) PROCEDURES SURROUNDING ISSUANCE OF CZECHOSLOVAKIAN PASSPORTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I raised a very grave issue with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) which amounts to the invasion of Canadian jurisdiction by a foreign power in the absence of any appropriate Canadian citizenship legislation to protect the citizens from Czechoslovakia, in this case, from the blandishments and coercion of that country.

This is a very serious matter. The minister's response to my question indicated that he really did not have very much knowledge of the issues involved at that time. In fairness, however, I suppose he has now been briefed.

In contrast, his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), who is more concerned with matters of security, in response to questions from my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), indicated that he was aware of the gravity of what has been going on. Since 1977 a very sincere and erudite columnist, Lubor Zink, has been bringing this particular matter to the attention of the Canadian people. Indeed, he has grilled the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about it and brought it to the attention of a former minister of external affairs, the Hon. Don Jamieson.

For anyone who is interested in dog dancing and evasiveness on the part of the Prime Minister on the very important issue on rights and sovereignty, Mr. Zink's column is most instructive, particularly now when the House is concerned with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for our people.

Lest anyone be misled that this is only an academic problem, I want to refer to a current letter which illustrates the problem very well. It came from a Canadian citizen who asked for my advice, although he is not one of my constituents. He said that he and his family had escaped from Czechoslovakia soon after the Russian invasion in 1968, when he was a child. He is now a Canadian citizen and he is proud of it. He applied at the Czechoslovakian embassy to have his former citizenship formally revoked, and his application was finally approved.

Now, however, it appears that the Communists have raised a new demand. He is asked to pay $215 for the document which repudiates his former Czech citizenship. He is quite prepared to pay that amount provided the whole matter is not simply a Communist hoax designed to gain worthy currency. He asked whether he would really be free, with no strings attached, from his former association with the governing clique in Prague. He wondered, for example, whether he could visit Czechoslovakia in the future without fear of detention, arrest or disappearance. He wrote, "You have been helping Canadians of Czech origin for many years. Surely, you have some information regarding this policy of revoking citizenship for payment".

● (2200)

It was not to me that this letter was written but to one of my colleagues. What is my colleague to advise this Canadian citizen? Obviously, he cannot in all good conscience say that if this citizen goes down to the Czech embassy he will not, in fact, be grilled and will not be asked to fill in some very, very personal information, including information on all of his connections in the old country, his relatives, and what he has been doing ever since he got here. It would be very instructive for all hon. members to read the kind of questions that Czech émigrés are forced to answer in order to deal with their people back in Czechoslovakia.

One cannot really attribute this kind of reprehensible behaviour to just one particular country. However, Czechoslovakia seems to be particularly good at it. However, other Iron Curtain countries are using this kind of tactic on their citizens simply because Canada has not had the guts to do anything about this.

Our Citizenship Act was changed a few years ago. There are really no sanctions, and there is no encouragement to help those who are contemplating whether they should submit to what amounts to blackmail in order to make contact with their loved ones or go back to a country which still means something to them for traditional reasons. The Czechs are doing this in Canada and are applying pressure to Canadians who, in some cases, have sensitive positions and have in fact accepted Czech passports and travel back to Czechalovakia and, I believe, pose a security risk to our country.

In the same way the Czechs are doing this—and we are doing nothing about it—the Soviet Union is using these kinds of tactics on people in that country. Do not think for one moment that when people of Jewish persuasion want to leave the Soviet Union, they too must submit to this kind of blackmail paid by them or their relatives? They are not prepared to say, "Well, comrades, this goes on in Canada, you know. Czech people whose citizenship is still enforced by Czechoslovakia do not mind paying money for the privilege of going back to Czechoslovakia. They will take affirmations showing either loyalty or pledging to do nothing against the Czech socialist republic." It is a reprehensible situation. It is an insult to our country.

Lubor Zink summed up the situation very well in one of his colums in December of 1977 after bringing it to the attention of the then minister of external affairs and the Prime Minister. Concerning the false arguments with regard to the so-called dual nationality with which the govvernment cannot seem to come to grips, he said:

> It would be very strange indeed if political refugees were to lose the protection they have as stateless persons who had been granted political asylum, the moment they become citizens of a host country.

That host country is us, ourselves, and we cannot protect them because we simply do not have the guts to do it. For example, we purchase a great deal of goods and services from Czechoslovakia. During the last seven or eight years, we have purchased approximately $324 million worth. We have sold them only $113 million worth. Has no one thought of using a little of our feeble economic leverage on Czechoslovakia, or are we just going to continue to submit to this kind of treatment?

It is not as if the security service is not aware of this, or the Solicitor General, or, surely by now, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). This matter has been raised repeatedly. Hon. members must know that the Czech secret service is second only to the KGB itself in terms of its effectiveness and operations in Canada. Hon. members must know, as well, that any commercial dealings with this country by the Czechs or by the Soviet Union are simply a cover to obtain intelligence and to finance espionage against our country. When will we do something about this to protect our own citizens of Czech origin?

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House again. Although it is ten o'clock and there are few people in the House, and few hon. members, I think it is important because Canada is one of the most respected democracies in the world. The opinion of this democracy is that what Czechoslovokia is doing now is wrong. We hope that message is delivered to Czechoslovakia.

As my hon. friend has indicated, former Czech citizens who are now Canadian citizens are forced, in some instances, not all, to complete questionnaires, to be interviewed and to sign statements of allegiance to Czechoslovakia. This is really foreign to everything we think of as traditionally belonging to Canadian citizenship.

I think my hon. friend would admit, however, that Czechoslovakia is a Communist country and is sovereign in its own right, and short of sending gun boats we are restricted to economic discussions and human rights discussions on this side, in the forefront, and persuasion. That is what we are trying to do. There have been discussions as recently as November 5, 1981, with the Czechoslovakian national association at the official level. We have discussed it with the Czechoslovakian authorities on several occasions in the context of one-to-one discussions and in the context of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe.

The Czechoslovakian position is not satisfactory to Canada, and we have so indicated. We have made it clear that we will not be satisfied until these Canadian citizens, albeit of Czechoslovakian descent, are no further harassed while abroad. We feel that at a maximum all they need be required to have in Czechoslovakia is a Canadian passport and a Czechoslovakian visa.

In 1980 discussions were started on this issue at the consular level to obtain a consular agreement, and it is an item in the second phase of the consular discussions that will begin in the first half of 1982. As Bismarck once remarked when they showed him the motto of his house "no steps backward, but a few zigzags". That is probably the way Canada has had to go traditionally and will have to go in the future—many zigzags to the desired goal, and the desired goal is to free these Czechoslovakian-Canadian citizens—I do not like hyphenated citizenship—Canadian citizens from this yoke of oppression.

AIRPORTS—CONTRACT TO OPERATE DUTY FREE STORES AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, on November 10 I asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) about the allocation of the duty free stores at Toronto International Airport to a foreign company, despite the presence of several acceptable bids by Canadian companies. I believe that the giving of this contract to a foreign company was a mistake. We gave away the best duty free store location in Canada to a foreign company to the detriment of good Canadian firms. I believe we distorted the tendering procedures of the Ministry of Transport in the course of that, and I believe we gained nothing for Canadians that we could not already obtain for ourselves.

We have a fundamental obligation to foster Canadian enterprise. We must use the available resources of our government to bring the fruits of our own economic efforts under our own control and into the ownership of our own companies and people.

The short history of this duty free store location deserves to be told, partly because it shows how even in the government we can lose sight of this principle, partly to try to remedy the situation, and partly to bring us back on course in future situations like this.

The sequence of events is simple. In early 1979 the lease on this location had expired and we called for bids from new renters. There were two briefings for potential bidders, one on May 30, a verbal question and answer session, and one on June 12, a written supplementary session. In the normal situation that was prevailing at that time, the bids were to be received in August and the awards were to be made on November 1, 1979. The award was not made, however, until November 1, 1981. The reason is that Duty Free Shoppers of Honolulu and Hong Kong offered much higher sums for this location, much higher even that the estimates of the Ministry of Transport itself. As a result, the bidding process was greatly delayed and twisted about. Had the Ministry of Transport decided to give the contract directly to a Canadian company, that company would have received a contract right away, in 1979. Instead, the prior rules and principles, the prior regulations, were thrown out the window and there was a delay of two years.

● (2210)

I would like to quote from a Ministry of Transport document, the one I referred to just a moment ago. It is headed "Duty Free Briefing." It concerns a briefing which was held on May 30, 1979, at 1.30 p.m. at Toronto International Airport. The document is marked File No. 5156-381. On page 9 of that document there is the following question:

It is indicated in the tender specifications that conditional tenders will not be accepted. What happens in the situation where a tender is accepted and then is subsequently not approved by FIRA?

The question goes on a little further but the answer comes very clearly. It says:

Conditional tenders will NOT be considered.

To clarify the particular situation presented no tender will be accepted until it has received all necessary approvals. Hence any tender submitted subject to FIRA approval will be deemed to be a conditional tender and not considered.

However, Mr. Speaker, one of the bids from Duty Free Shoppers was so much higher that it was thrown out the window. On March 5, 1981, The Globe and Mail reported the reason for the long delay as follows:

Douglas Gerrie, acting director of airport marketing for the Ministry of Transport, said the long delay in reaching a decision is unusual. He said the reason was that "some of the highest bidders were out of country bidders and there had been no decision by FIRA with respect to certain aspects of their applications to operate in Canada."

Then, by November 10, the minister himself said in reply to my question—and I quote a portion of it:

When one of the foreign bidders appeared to be the winner a decision was made to get the case to FIRA. FIRA and my department developed a regime for duty-free shops.

In other words, as soon as the money was worth it we threw out the tendering and the prior regulations and we forgot about our own principles.

Now, when FIRA agreed to approve the right by Duty Free Shoppers to bid, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) said, and I quote from a FIRA press release of October 29:

—Mr. Gray noted that allowance of the 422694 proposal should result in a greater number of bidders for the airport concession and, if 422694 is successful in its bid, will bring to Canada the expertise of its affiliates in operating duty-free concessions—

What I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, is this. There were half a dozen Canadian companies bidding on that contract. Why do we need what the minister called "a greater number of bidders"? Every last one of them already deals with the Ministry of Transport. What expertise are they lacking? What extra ingredients do they bring? And when we look through the other concessions made by FIRA, the other undertakings made to FIRA, we find no additional benefit to Canada that this company brings that our own people were not able to give us already. Mr. Speaker, the final concern that I have comes from one of the undertakings made to FIRA itself—and I will conclude on this:

—to waive any right, which it—

That is, Duty Free Shoppers—

● (2215)

—might acquire through allowance under the FIR Act, to engage concurrently or subsequently in any related business in Canada, excepting the operation of other duty-free concessions, without prior approval under the FIR Act;

Not only have we allowed this company to come here, to the detriment of Canadian companies already operating, but we are also going to let this happen again in the future.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Duty Free Shoppers Limited, an American firm, has been awarded the duty free concession at Toronto International Airport. The hon. member's main objection seems to be that the award was made to a foreign firm. The explanation is simply that the firm in question submitted by far the highest bid, and was willing to meet the conditions imposed by FIRA.

In this particular situation, the submission of bids by foreign firms required the development of new FIRA guidelines that could be used to evaluate the applications. The guidelines, as indicated by the minister in answer to the original question on November 10, stipulate a very high Canadian content.

It should be clear that the tender specifications did not preclude foreign firms from submitting bids. This question was in fact raised during the pre-tender briefing, in the context of whether a tender should be submitted "subject to" the approval of FIRA to ensure that the tenderer's security deposit be returned. It was clarified that tenders must be self-supporting and not subject to extraneous considerations. Sections 5 and 6 of the "terms and conditions" of the tender specifications clearly state that the lessee shall abide by all rules, regulations and bylaws of the federal, provincial or municipal governments. Consequently, if a tender was received subject to FIRA or any other approval, it would be rejected. In the end, no tenderer submitted an offer of this sort.

With respect to the costs incurred in the tendering process, it should be noted that the tenderer has the option of submitting security deposits in the form of certified cheques or Government of Canada bonds. Any company that is bidding in the millions of dollars is no doubt aware of the advantages and disadvantages of each option, and any tenderer will attempt to minimize his financial commitments. In fact, certain bidders for this concession did exchange their security deposits from certified cheques to bonds.

In conclusion, the government believes the contract was awarded fairly to the highest bidder. The conditions imposed by FIRA on this foreign company will ensure that Canadians will derive significant benefit from the contract.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND—COMPENSATION PAYMENTS TO GRAIN GROWERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA. (b) CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House on the subject of the Western Development Fund, the elusive dream mentioned in the October 28, 1980 budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and dealt with again on November 12 last. We find, however, that the transportation and resource fund of 1980 is the slush fund of 1981.

It is interesting to note the words of the Minister of Finance in his budget address of October 28, 1980. He said:

> We have, therefore, allocated $4 billion to a Western Development Fund, of which we expect to spend $2 billion over the next three years... Specific development initiatives will be selected in consultation with the governments of the western provinces. They will be designed to address the major economic opportunities and constraints which will challenge the west during this decade. For example, the federal government is hopeful that through consultation with interested groups in the west, agreement can be reached on the modernization of the western grain handling and transportation system which is so vital to the growth and diversification of the prairie economy. We will also consider initiatives relating to industrial diversification and examine ways in which trade and industrial policies can better serve western development. To co-ordinate these efforts and to ensure early action, the Prime Minister has established a special group of ministers led by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

What has become of that plan? The government has forgotten about it. No consultations have been held and no plans have been drawn up for the spending of these alleged billions of dollars.

Indeed, one wonders whether the government really knew what it had created. The simple fact is that nobody in the government had any intention of putting in place seed money for the development of industry in western Canada. They simply needed a fund they could dip their hands into when the pot was empty somewhere else.

In the budget, we can plainly see how completely fraudulent this fund really is and what a cruel hoax has been perpetrated on the people of western Canada by this government. The fund has now been slashed to $1.5 billion from $4 billion, to be spread over five years instead of three. This year's allocations are at $148 million, down $202 million from this year's main estimates. In the budget, the government announced that the allocations are all intended to provide for improvements in the western transportation system. Now we find that $65 million will be used to assist Vancouver in the purchase of urban transit, light rapid transit. All that equipment comes from eastern Canada. So much for providing jobs and secondary industry and technology to the west.

What is even more disturbing is the use of the fund to funnel $81 million to Canadian farmers for payment for losses sustained because of the Soviet grain embargo. Canadian farmers have every right to their money. They must be compensated fairly for their loss. This government, however, is paying money to them from a fund declared to be for the economic development of the west. One should add that of the $81 million payment, $13 million goes to farmers in Ontario and Quebec. Both payments should have been paid out of the general treasury.

Grain embargo moneys out of a fund purportedly designed to place seed money in western Canada for industrial and transportation improvement and expansion is a complete betrayal of promises to western Canada. The use of the fund to buy an eastern transit system for Vancouver means no new industry and jobs for western Canadians. When the pot gets dry, western Canadians will pay again as we have in the past. The fund, created to turn some resource profits back to western Canada to build the west, is a fraud simply and purely, a mirage, a joke.

With the envelope system of expenditures having been accepted by the government, any moneys dedicated to the Western Development Fund will be used as a slush fund by cabinet to loosen up moneys in the envelope for other parts of the country. Thus, perversely, the so-called Western Development Fund is actually the antithesis of that. The government's actions are another in a long series of broken promises to the west. It is no wonder that the Liberal Party is the laughing stock of western Canada.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) packed a number of assertions into his questions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) on November 16.

Among them was the assertion that the Western Development Fund has been and I quote "put out into Never Never Land until some time in the 1990s". It is true that the Minister of Finance's (Mr. MacEachen) budget has announced the government's decision on the first allocation of the fund, namely $1.355 billion for a major initiative on western transportation, and about $400 million for socioeconomic development of native peoples.

The hon. member will understand why there has been a delay in the government's decisions about the western fund, as he is a former minister of energy, mines and resources. Contrary to the government's expectations at the time of last year's budget, the energy agreements with western producing provinces have just recently been concluded. As the principle for the creation of the fund, namely, the use of federal energy revenues to accomplish major projects within the federal government's mandate in the west—as this principle has guided the government's deliberations on this matter—the government had to await the outcome of the energy negotiations before making firm commitments and allocations.

The hon. member spoke of "Never Never Land", and "sometime in the 1980s" for the fund. Clearly, with the Minister of Finance's first allocations now announced, it is the hon. member who is living in some strange land. Maybe he is looking too far into the future for his own good.

I am particularly proud as a western member on this side of the House that the government's initial decisions on the western fund are intended for transportation—the single most critical and important physical infrastructure constraint upon western Canada's economic growth, and for native development.

● (2225)

All westerners know that, unfortunately, native peoples are at the present time the least well prepared to participate fully in the benefits that growth brings. Native development is thus the most critical and important human resources concern in western Canada. It is the government's promise that the western Development Fund will be used in part to assist native westerners in their quest for a better chance in the economic opportunity that the present boom brings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

THE BUDGET

CHANGE IN TAX FROM MANUFACTURING TO WHOLESALE LEVEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, as a person knowledgeable of the wholesaling business, and with reference to the budgetary provision which shifts the federal sales tax from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level, I know that this is another clumsy example of the MacEachenism school of root canal economics from the minister in charge of the expanding department of unemployment and bankruptcies. It is yet another hidden tax, another ad valorem tax, perpetrated against the Canadian consumer, which will provide constantly escalating millions of dollars built into the final retail prices consumers will be forced to pay, particularly for building materials, this from the minister who preaches restraint. It is inflationary. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the minister act immediately to rescind this regressive hidden tax and spare consumers from higher prices and wholesalers from added paper burden, which means additional employees, not to mention the increased government bureaucracy which would be required for its administration.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

GOLD MEDAL WON BY CANADIAN BOXER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, they say it can only happen in the movies. Last week a 19-year-old amateur boxer named Shawn O'Sullivan, who trained in a run-down, decayed building in that part of Toronto known as Cabbagetown, won a gold medal at the World Cup Amateur Boxing Championships in Montreal. As this is the first gold medal awarded to a Canadian boxer in 49 years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House do recognize the fine example and inspiration that Shawn O'Sullivan will be to the art of boxing, and commends him on an accomplishment which leaves all Canadians proud and elated.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House would want to express its sentiments, but I am afraid this is not an urgent and pressing matter under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

EFFECT OF INTEREST POLICY ON FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has placed a tax on farmers for being good at what they do, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the Minister of Finance jump in his Jetstar and fly out to visit a few of our Canadian farmers to see the disastrous effect his America plus 4 per cent interest policy is having and, while he is there, announce his plans to change his Small Business Development Bond policy so that not only farmers facing bankruptcy but also those who are being crippled by his America plus 4 per cent policy qualify for Small Business Development Bonds.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

POWER TO CREATE NEW PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that in Canada's history new provinces were created at the request of the territories and regions in direct legal and constitutional negotiation with the federal government, and since it is the view of this party that that regime should continue, with boundary or provincial status change coming only with the consent of the territories, and in view of the November 5, 1981, consensus in which eight Tory premiers, along with the Liberal Party of Canada, changed the historic rules for creation of provinces without consultation with or the participation of the Yukon and Northwest Territories governments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House condemns the Liberal and Conservative parties for refusing to accept publicly their responsibility for initiating the proposal to exclude the territories and to give such extraordinary new power to the provinces.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that many farmers in western Canada have, over the years, based their retirement plans on tax laws respecting capital gain and IAACs which have been in force for a number of years, and in view of the fact that the budget makes changes in these laws effective November 12 rather than at the end of the taxation year, resulting in unexpected and excessive tax burdens on these retiring farmers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the government allow retiring farmers who sell their property prior to December 31, 1981, the right to make use of the provisions of the Income Tax Act respecting IAACs that were in effect prior to the November 12 budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NEGOTIATIONS TO LIMIT NUMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, in view of the positive initiative taken by President Reagan's zero option proposal, under which the Soviet Union and the United States would mutually agree to have no intermediate range nuclear missiles, and recognizing that President Brezhnev has made a counterproposal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House urge the United States and the Soviet Union in their negotiations scheduled to start on November 30 in Geneva, Switzerland, to seek vigorously, balanced and verifiable limitations and reductions of those nuclear weapons at the lowest possible levels.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

RATE OF RETURN PAID TO INVESTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance, by paying 19½ per cent on savings bonds, at least 4 per cent more than he should have paid, raised from the private market nearly $12 billion, thus exacerbating the interest problems faced by ordinary Canadians. The money raised is largely on deposit with the chartered banks. The borrowing raises government expense by at least $1 billion over what it should be. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That the Minister of Finance report to this House on motions why he paid 19½ per cent to borrow Canada Savings Bond money, why he borrowed far more money than he needed for current operations, and why in so doing he is now Canada's one billion dollar loser?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES ON PART OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has confirmed that the RCMP is still gathering information of a political nature in Quebec, although this does not fall within its terms of reference, and whereas the Solicitor General has refused to put an end immediately to these irregular activities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the minister take immediate action to stop this unlawful infiltration of the Quebec Government and also cease to consider the present Quebec government as an alien and subversive government.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

LABOUR RELATIONS

MEETING WITH CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REPRESENTATIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. according to reports in the media today, Dennis McDermott, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, has threatened to move his protest movement into an occupation of Parliament Hill, claiming that he is unable to get the ear of the government. In view of the fact that Mr. McDermott claims the New Democratic Party would not exist if it had not been created by the labour movement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail):

That this House urges the hon. member for Oshawa and his colleagues to tell their leader, Mr. McDermott, to come clean with the labour movement and inform them that, at the request of the Canadian Labour Congress, nine ministers, including the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works, as well as many MPs, met for close to two hours last Thursday afternoon inside Parliament Hill with representatives from all regions of this country to discuss their views, well in advance of the carefully staged rally on Parliament Hill last Saturday.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AGRICULTURE

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I did not hear you call my name because of the labour supporters down here. In light of the fact that the herd maintenance program, established to assist farmers in maintaining beef herds following the drought conditions of the spring and summer of 1980, was conducted in such a way as to pay farmers or ranchers in large blocks while leaving a few individual operators in the middle of those blocks without payment, paid compensation for full townships except for specific individuals whose ranch buildings were located in adjoining townships, and because payment was made for hays and legumes relative to the farmers' production of yield for cereal crops, a situation for which there is no necessary correlation, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That the subject matter of the 1980 pay-out for herd maintenance programs be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the government's new budget threatens to reduce funding for social programs across Canada, and increases the burden on the voluntary sector which so significantly serves the social needs of Canadians, especially those of women, the elderly, the disabled and the working poor. The government's budget has ignored the taxation suggestions put forward by the national voluntary organizations which would have encouraged charitable giving during these inflationary times. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House condemn the government for its neglect of the voluntary sector in its budget of November 12 and demands that the budget be withdrawn and replaced by one which encourages the important work of Canada's volunteers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

ELIMINATION OF TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR INVESTMENT PURPOSES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister, since the Minister of Finance is not in his seat and is presumably out to lunch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Yesterday, in Vancouver, the Prime Minister accused British Columbians of being "terribly unaware of what is happening in the country". I suggest that the Prime Minister is unaware of the unfair and unthinking impact the budget has on many Canadians. Since the stated objective of this government is to encourage the Canadianization of our economy, why has the government eliminated the right to deduct interest on loans made to invest in Canadian companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that the Minister of Finance came back from Halifax yesterday and went on to Toronto to attend other meetings, so that today he is unavoidably absent from the House. I can assure hon. members that he is very sorry to have to miss question period. The member indicated that the Minister of Finance did not pay sufficient attention to some aspects of the budget which might have created certain problems. The hon. member will recall that in the case of certain costs related to the MURB program, the Minister of Finance, following a question and representations from colleagues on this side of the House, immediately added refinements which made it possible to improve the program to accommodate MURBs on which construction had already started.

Concerning the deduction of interest on loans for investment purposes, this provision should be considered most carefully. It does not say that interest costs may never be deducted. Interest received on investments may also be deducted. Furthermore, one should also consider that under this provision interest payable on loans for investment purposes can be deferred over a period of time.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF "GRANDFATHER CLAUSE"

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my next question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. His comments bring to mind a letter written to me by one of the Prime Minister's own constituents. It states, "Never in the history of human endeavour have so few stolen so much from so many".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, many civil servants, senior citizens and small businessmen base their retirement plans and their business decisions on measures introduced by past Liberal governments and now face heavy tax penalties. Will the minister consider imposing a "grandfather clause" on those measures which impose retroactive tax penalties, to allay the extreme hardship and anxiety of those Canadians who made their commitments in good faith?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I believe it is a mistake to draw hasty conclusions with respect to the various provisions contained in the budget, before a careful analysis of each individual case has been made. I feel that certain measures may require further refinement. We are considering them as we are considering individual cases that are brought forward. We shall also have an opportunity to discuss the nature of each measure when the House is in Committee of the Whole. I feel that if we take the trouble to look at the exact nature and scope of these measures, we will find that they make our tax system more equitable, and that in fact, they are benefiting all Canadian taxpayers. We must also realize that when a tax preference was removed which mainly benefited higher income people at the same time, marginal income tax rates were adjusted, thus increasing the financial power of individuals who lost that benefit or preference.

[English]

TAX INCENTIVES FOR RENTAL HOUSING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question also is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance who calls for the need for analysis. Most of us would have preferred to have had the analysis made before the budget was introduced to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, the prospect of huge rent increases in a tight housing market is panicking many tenants who realize that the government's proposal to subsidize only 15,000 new rental units will produce a rental housing famine. There are 20,000 people on the housing waiting list in the Greater Vancouver area alone. Will the minister recommend that the government continue tax incentives for rental housing, at least until the supply is in better balance with the demand?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seemed shocked at my use of the word "analysis". I can assure the hon. member that very thorough analyses were made before the budget was brought down. In fact, it was because these analyses were so thorough that the Minister of Finance was able to bring down such a sound budget. However, if we refer to specific measures and specific cases, the impact of the general measure on a specific case cannot be established without analysing that particular case.

On the subject of housing, the hon. member wanted us to reintroduce tax incentives for residential construction. For the sake of equity, the Minister of Finance decided to remove from our tax system a number of tax privileges and preferences. I fail to see why, after removing existing tax privileges or preferences, we should turn around and introduce new preferences. We want a more equitable tax system, and I believe that we shall achieve this by taking these tax preferences out of our system altogether.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR HOSPITALS AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. It concerns federal payments covering health and post-secondary education. The budget indicated a cut in that area of $1.9 billion, but, as a result of a government error, the cutback has been increased by $600 million. Does the minister still believe that the hospitals, universities and colleges of the country can continue to provide services at the same level?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the simple answer to the question the hon. member poses is yes, as long as the provinces meet their responsibilities. If the hon. member listened carefully to the budget address of the very able Minister of Finance, he would have noted that the minister specifically said that there would be no cut in the financing of higher education and of health services. He chose, instead, despite the dire predictions of hon. members opposite, to remove the revenue guarantee, an item of financial transfer which had been specifically mentioned again and again by the provincial governments as not being part of the financing of higher education or of health care costs.

If the hon. member will not place himself in the very unusual position in his party of disagreeing with the provincial governments, then he would have to go along with what they have said in the past, that this is not part of the financing of higher education or of health. I assure the hon. member that, in relation to our goals in negotiating the future structure of higher education—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Regan: —we have every intention of continuing to provide high priority to the support of post-secondary education, which has characterized the government over the years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Short questions; long answers which mean nothing.

STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State seems to ignore the fact that an all-party task force called for the retention of that money. Somehow the government seems to think that the universities, colleges and hospitals of the country can make more bricks with less straw.

My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State. On November 3 he said that he was "highly confident that there will not be any $1.5 billion reduction in support of post-secondary education", and that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating". How does it feel to swallow a sour $2.6 billion cut pudding, including the plate?

● (1425)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the problem the hon. member has is that he is throwing straw men instead of bricks. He is in the position that he refuses to recognize that he was wrong and that the budget clearly showed that there is not a $1.5 billion cut that affects education or health. As long as the provinces do their part, which in many instances they have not been doing, then we can improve post-secondary education in this country.

PURPOSE OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will put my question to the Minister of State for Social Development, not to the Secretary of State. I do not think we have enough time for another answer by the Secretary of State.

In view of the intransigence which the Minister of Finance seems to be showing in his intention to cut back federal transfer payments to the provinces, particularly the money associated with the $5.7 billion over five years of revenue guarantees, will the minister please explain to the House why the Minister of Finance and his government now pretend, as the Secretary of State just did, that this money is not for health and post-secondary education? Up until the budget of November 12, the government and the Liberal Party always regarded this money as being earmarked for health care and post-secondary education.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I have nothing much to add. I think that the Minister of Finance has clearly established that at the time of the fiscal reform in 1972, when Mr. Benson was Minister of Finance, we had offered to the provinces a revenue guarantee for a period of five years, which was then extended for another five years. All this was done under the tax reform and had absolutely nothing to do with the health and post-secondary education payments.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister really expects anyone who knows anything at all about fiscal arrangements to be tricked by this latest manoeuvre on the part of the government. In his submission to the parliamentary task force the Minister of Finance called the revenue guarantee money "conditional" money. The Liberals have used the revenue guarantee money for the last five years in their self-righteous calculation of the federal share of spending on health care and post-secondary education. It seems to me they have a very short or convenient memory.

NEGOTIATION OF NATIONAL HEALTH CARE STANDARDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns the government's stated intention to clarify and strengthen national standards for health care in Canada, something which we in the NDP would support. How does the minister expect to negotiate tough, new, and undoubtedly expensive national health care standards with the provinces, when the government is taking money off the table?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is very clear, Madam Speaker. I would have liked the premiers, when they met in whatever city of Canada at the end of August, not to have issued a press release saying that the revenue guarantee was not part of health or post-secondary education. They would have helped me and their ministers of health today, and would have avoided the debate we are now having. They decided clearly—and it was not the first public statement—that they would separate the revenue guarantee from the health moneys. The health moneys per se have not been and will not be cut. The hon. member knows that. The total sum over the next five years which I hope to negotiate, with more serious conditions, to save the health system in Canada, that is, medicare, will include an average increase over preceding years of 13 per cent.

Mr. Blaikie: We will deal with the sophistry of the provinces after we have dealt with the sophistry of the federal government. I submit that the latest actions of the federal government are indeed an abandonment of the search for better national standards in medicare.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. The minister knows that, even if the present arrangements are continued, the federal government will be paying a smaller and smaller share of the health and education fiscal pie, so to speak, and that there is no need for the government to cut back in this area in any case. Expecting, as he should, that funding for these services is already at an irreducible level, as the task force recommended, if the government is so intent on saving money, why has it put these vital Canadian programs in jeopardy at the same time that it is reducing tax rates for the wealthy, thus giving the lie to all this Liberal piety about equity and fairness?

● (1430)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think that it is important to remember and to understand that the established programs, financing and the revenue guarantee, are two separate things. The financing for health, medicare and post-secondary education programs is not affected and will continue to increase at the same rate as the gross national product. As for the revenue guarantee, the hon. member is well aware that the removal of certain fiscal preferences or privileges from our tax system, will provide additional revenues for the provinces. These additional revenues for the provinces will compensate for their losses due to the removal of the revenue guarantee from the program as a whole.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. In regard to the cancellation of income annuities, particularly those of farmers, and the hardship that this has placed upon farmers in the sale of their farms, the sale of their cattle or the sale of their machinery, was the minister aware that his government was taking this action? If he was, what is he doing about it? Farmers are losing the only retirement plan they have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well, under the British parliamentary system, how a budget is developed.

Some hon. Members: How is that?

Mr. Crosbie: How?

Mr. Whelan: I will not say anything more about that.

An hon. Member: You never had that system going here.

Mr. Clark: You tell Vickers and Benson, but not the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Whelan: I have received representations earlier from the hon. member, and also from hon. members on this side, concerning this matter. I am sure the Minister of Finance has also received representations. We have prepared a presentation on that, along the lines of the representations made to us by many people. There has been deep concern expressed. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, has told the House that he will look at these representations, and I am sure that he will. He has already acted on some which have been made.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO CABINET

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Is the minister aware that he is a part of the cabinet and that he is a part of that government which should be doing something about the matter? Is he willing to make representations in that area, as well as in the area of capital gains, where the rollover of the family farm has become almost impossible under this latest budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in response to the last statement made by the hon. member, to the effect that the roll-over of the family farm is almost impossible, we are the only nation in the world which allows a father and mother who happen to be the owners of a farm to turn that farm completely over to a son or daughter without any tax, if the son or daughter is to take over the operation of that farm. No other country in the world does that kind of thing. It is true that, if the farm is to be sold, there have been some changes in the capital gains—

Mr. Clark: Yes, there sure have.

Mr. Whelan: —in the taxation program for the farm, if it is being sold to a son or daughter. However, if the farm is just being given away, there is no problem whatsoever, because that is the law of the land.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are rolling over. That's the problem.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member asks, "Are you aware of the fact that you are a member of the cabinet?" I am, because that law is one of the ones which is so beneficial to Canadian farms and Canadian farm families who have helped build those family farms. They are able to turn them over without paying for them again in the form of taxation. We have one of the best laws in the world.

REASONS FOR INCOME TAX CHANGES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance from the House, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The minister will be aware that the Minister of Finance, in his budget, has reduced tax rates for people in the highest tax brackets and, at the same time, has decided to tax long-term protection in life insurance policies, 70 per cent of which are held by those earning $20,000 or less per year.

Quite simply, my question to the minister is, why is the government taxing low-income people while giving tax breaks to those with higher income?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. member should pay more attention to the income tax tables or marginal rates and examine how they have been adjusted. They have been adjusted fairly, and the hon. member will recognize that the removal of taxation privileges in the budget will affect mostly those in higher-income brackets who in turn will have to pay more taxes. As for the income from a life insurance policy, which now becomes taxable, we consider this part of a life insurance policy as a savings instrument. The income produced by this savings instrument therefore becomes taxable. This proposal therefore aims at putting this savings instrument on the same level as any other.

EFFECT ON WORKERS RECEIVING HEALTH AND DENTAL INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, out of one side of its mouth the government states that it is concerned for long-term protection for Canadians and calls pension conferences; however, from the other side it states that these vehicles will suddenly become investment vehicles. Will the minister explain to low-income Canadians why his budget proposes a punishing tax on workers who are eligible for employer paid health and dental insurance benefits? Will the minister tell the House why he is wiping out years of bargaining, with a tax which will cause many plans to be withdrawn or never installed?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would invite the hon. member to reflect on the meaning of the word "equity". If we want to have a more equitable taxation system, we must ensure that people will pay taxes commensurate with their income. Obviously, a great many taxpayers cannot benefit from certain privileges in the same way as others do in our system. This creates distortions within the tax system, because of which a great many taxpayers pay proportionately more income tax than others who can avoid taxes because of all sorts of completely legitimate deductions allowed under our tax system. If we consider the system on the basis of equity, we want to make—Madam Speaker: Order, please! I really have to ask the minister to try to reply more briefly.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RESULTS ACHIEVED IN DISCUSSIONS WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. As a result of the recent strident and half-witted remarks of the leader of the Canadian Labour Congress following the weekend rally on Parliament Hill, there have been a number of attempts made by that leadership to give the impression that the government is less than willing to meet with the CLC and openly to discuss labour views and real concerns. The House is aware of the fact that a number of ministers met with representatives from the CLC two days prior to that demonstration, and that a number of Members of Parliament met on a regional basis, in the Atlantic and western regions, to discuss both sides. Could the minister indicate to the House what was achieved in terms of a better understanding of the views of one another in this regard?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, these meetings which were held at the request of the Canadian Labour Congress covered a number of topics, including the economy, mortgage rates, the employment situation, and the like. It would be fair to conclude that, while it was unfortunate that senior officials of the CLC were not present, the meetings ended with a mutual understanding and with a conclusion that both sides had the same objective, namely, that of bringing down interest rates and mortgage rates. Further, both sides came to the conclusion that frequent and regular meetings of this kind would be mutually beneficial.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the former postmaster general, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Canadians will soon be facing a proposed 76 per cent increase in postal costs, having been given only a few months notice. The budget in more detail projects post office revenues and expenditures will be over $3 billion by 1985-1986, which is almost three times today's revenues.

Will the minister make a commitment to this House that he will strive to delay the implementation of the present 76 per cent rate increase until April of next year to permit planning by such entities as small business and charities, and further, will the minister work to ensure that no other increases are granted until the public is presented with a five-year postal rate forecast?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can advise the House that not only several organizations, but also several individuals have availed themselves of the consultation process which has been under way for the past few weeks to express their views, and that after the deadline in late December, the government will have to make a decision in light of the recommendations and suggestions that are now being received.

[English]

BUDGET PROJECTION OF INCREASED POSTAL REVENUES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the former postmaster general. This increase and the estimate in the budget could foreseeably see post office mailing rates go to 60 cents or 70 cents within the next four years. Could the minister tell the House what rate for first-class postage was projected in the budget document to arrive at the figure that over $3 billion worth of revenue would be generated by the post office in 1985-1986?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member who has been such a strong supporter of the bill to establish the Canada Post Corporation and to provide the directors of this corporation with more authority and administrative discretion, will certainly recognize that his question should be directed instead to the chairman and the board of directors of the new corporation. I shall be pleased, however, to forward his representations to the chairman.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR ELDERLY WOMEN

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if I could get her attention. The minister will recall, as she was co-chairman of the National Pensions Conference, that the one thing upon which there was unanimous consent was that the most urgent problem in Canada was to assist the some 400,000 elderly women living in poverty. A recent report of the Ontario Status of Women Council has highlighted this national scandal. My question to the minister is simple. When is this government going to assist those 400,000 elderly women living in poverty?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the exact same question was asked of me yesterday. My answer is, as soon as possible.

Mr. Siddon: That is not an answer at all.

BANK OF CANADA

STATEMENT ON MONETARY POLICY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the significant statement on monetary policy made yesterday by the Bank of Canada, could the Acting Prime Minister tell me whether the government was consulted before this policy statement was issued yesterday?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I am unable to answer this question. The Minister of Finance will be here tomorrow, and I ask the hon. member to address his question to him then.

Mr. Clark: What do you do here?

Mr. Nielsen: You are the Acting Prime Minister. For heaven's sake, inform yourself.

CANADIAN UNITY

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister whose responsibility covers the Canadian Unity Office. Last night in Vancouver the Prime Minister is reported to have said that "Vancouver is terribly unaware of the rest of the country". Madam Speaker, I would suggest that Vancouver is situated in a province which is the most aware in the country, because British Columbia sends no Liberals to this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: The Prime Minister is also reported to have said that "British Columbia is like a consort who is always the last to know". In view of these insulting comments, is keeping the province of British Columbia in the dark a matter of government policy, or may we expect massive tax dollars to be spent by the Canadian Unity Office for advertising to correct the Prime Minister's incorrect assumption of our unawareness?

An hon. Member: More propaganda.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for pointing out to the House how very useful it is for the government and for Parliament to have this office working for all of us.

AGRICULTURE

CONDITION OF RED MEAT INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last month the Minister of Agriculture suggested that if his government did not bring forth measures to save the red meat industry within weeks, he would re-examine his position within cabinet. We have had a budget with Farm Credit Corporation changes that might help 235 farmers across Canada, a change in the Small Business Development Bond that increased rates 3 per cent to distressed farmers, and changes in capital gains that have cut the legs off the financial future of farmers.

Does the minister feel that he has provided "practical and workable" efforts as far as saving the red meat industry in Canada is concerned? Does the minister know that the measures that have been taken will ensure that within another year we will have hundreds if not thousands more farmers in trouble? In fact, already in Ontario a vigilante committee has been formed by farmers who are prepared to take militant action unless something is done.

An hon. Member: We do not want a marketing board.

Mr. Nielsen: String them up.

Mr. Jarvis: Tell us about the questionnaire now.

Mr. Crosbie: High noon, Gene.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member and I attended a very nice meeting in his constituency not too many weeks ago. We are doing some of the very things that I said were needed to be done and that many people said were needed to be done. The Minister of Finance has seen fit to extend the Small Business Development Bond, which has no limitations on how much money is available. Much more money can be made available to the farmers who are in need of extra financing, or who need emergency financing, under this bond than I could ever provide under the provisions of the Farm Credit Corporation, because the lending institutions have tremendous amounts of money which they can loan out under the bond program.

There are some discussions going on about the suggested interest rate. I understand that the Minister of Finance is meeting with representatives of the lending institutions this coming Monday to explain all the criteria and just how this proposal will work.

The Farm Credit Corporation has outlined its program. The government is willing to work with the lending institutions to make sure that the money available is lent to those people who really need it. I have a two-person commission working on a program to try to outline some better marketing system for the red meat industry. The hon. member knows, as well as I do—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Whelan: —that you can give them all the money that you want but if they do not have a better marketing system they will go down the tube anyway.

FINANCE

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—CONSEQUENCE TO QUEBEC OF NEW FORMULA

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. In his budget speech, and earlier this week in Halifax, the Minister of Finance indicated that as of 1982, Ontario would be used as the norm to calculate the equalization payments made to have-not provinces. Could the minister indicate to the House what effect this change will have on the equalization payments made to Quebec as of 1982, and could he tell us whether it is true, as was suggested by the Quebec Minister of Finance, that such a change will prompt the federal government to promote Ontario's economic development inordinately?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I fail to understand the rationale of the statement of the Quebec Minister of Finance to the effect that to take Ontario as the norm for equalization purposes would prompt the federal government to give increasing support to Ontario's development. The federal government will use this yardstick to calculate what should be the revenue of a province eligible for equalization payments. That means that as Ontario develops, the amounts given by the federal government to eligible provinces would increase. Therefore, it would be in the federal government's interest that eligible provinces develop at a faster rate, because as their revenue increases and catches up with that of Ontario, it will not have to pay out so much in equalization payments. Therefore, I think Mr. Parizeau's argument should be turned around in order to understand exactly what the Ontario norm means.

McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

QUERY RESPECTING REPORT ABRIDGEMENTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General, of course, will be aware that the McDonald commission report which is now in our hands has been very seriously abridged. We know why some of the abridgements took place, but could the minister tell us where those abridgements are, and will we eventually have an opportunity to examine them? Can he say that they will not disappear as one of the volumes of the Mackenzie King diaries did?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as members will know from the statements I made at the time, there is an editing process which took place in which less than 3 per cent of the substance of the report was deleted—

An hon. Member: Eighteen minutes?

Mr. Kaplan: —on the grounds of national security. I explained this at the time they were put forward. Perhaps the hon. member is referring to two chapters which have not been published because of the recommendation of the McDonald commission that they be referred to the relevant attorneys general of provinces, along with accompanying documents and other material, to permit attorneys general of those provinces and the federal Attorney General to make decisions about the possibility of laying charges.

I cannot inform the House yet when those decisions will be made. I have begun to get reaction from provincial attorneys general, but I have not had any firm decision made about them. The federal Attorney General still has the matter before him.

There was, in addition, an amount of material from the report that was referred to the Commissioner of the RCMP to make decisions about disciplinary charges. His work will be done and his decision will be made before the end of the year.

PREPARATION OF INDEX TO REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I was referring, of course, to all the material which was not made public. I do hope it is in safe hands and will not disappear.

In the meantime, I understand that there is some sort of computer record or index which would help one find one's way through the three volumes of the McDonald commission report. I was wondering whether any steps whatsoever are being taken by the minister's department to make sure that an index is prepared and made available to the public, so that they will be able to find their way through the McDonald report?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the report was not prepared by the Government of Canada. It was prepared by the McDonald commission, which was an independent royal commission established under the Inquiries Act. I do not know whether they worked with the kind of computer index to which the hon. member refers. I can look into that and find out if there is one which might be helpful to members and if the commissioners would agree to have it made public and report back to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—POSSIBLE GIFT OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSELS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns important developments taking place which will affect Canada's good relations with Nicaragua.

As the minister knows, since the Andreas Mentor is in Vancouver Harbour today loading the last of Canada's wheat aid for Nicaragua, as well as several thousand tons of fishing gear, office machines, and other aid donated generously by British Columbians—which rather contradicts the Prime Minister's assertions that British Columbians are parochial and self-centred—will the minister assure this House that, if and when the federal government buys back any more fishing vessels on the west coast, these vessels will be studied for their suitability for the needs of Nicaragua and, if found to be suitable, be passed on to Nicaragua as part of our assistance to that country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have already announced a grant of $4.5 million in food aid for Nicaragua. We are in the process of planning other aid projects.

When hon. members raised the question, several weeks ago I believe, of the possibility of providing some of these vessels to Nicaragua, at that point we had not had any request from Nicaragua, but a request did arrive shortly afterwards. We do have that under consideration. We have already informed the Nicaraguans that the number of ships that they believed was available is not that, and we are not sure how valuable this would be, even if we could include this in our aid program. I would like to assure the hon. member that we will continue to scrutinize this.

Miss Jewett: I did realize that seven of the vessels that are remaining of the last buy-back are totally unsuitable. I am speaking of the next buy-back, which I understand is going to take place very soon, and I hope the minister will look into it immediately.

STATEMENTS MADE BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question on a closely related matter, since many countries are most concerned about the United States administration's calling for the violent overthrow of the Nicaraguan government and possible military intervention in that country—the minister will have read that in the testimony in Washington this week of the U.S. Secretary of State—will the Canadian government express to Washington its grave concern about this escalating rhetoric and actual threats against that country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do look forward to an early opportunity of discussing questions involving Central America with Secretary Haig.

I think that all of the reports that we have seen are highly speculative. Even the suggestions by the Secretary of State in the United States, and in the press, have been very speculative. We are certainly not anticipating any early United States action.

Miss Jewett: It is in his testimony.

Mr. MacGuigan: On the question of fishing boats, I can assure the hon. member that we will consider it fully, as she has suggested. Second, I will be discussing these problems in Central America with Secretary Haig.

PUBLIC SERVICE

HEALTH HAZARDS TO EMPLOYEES IN RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with respect to the Sir Frederick Banting Building and the callous disregard by the government for the safety of its employees, by permitting them to work in hazardous conditions.

Would the minister tell us how a building such as the Sir Frederick Banting Building, which was not designed for the use of hazardous materials, could be used for that kind of handling? Could the minister also explain to the House why, with the knowledge of that inadequacy, the government permitted its public servants to continue to work there until they threatened to stop work? There must be an explanation for such callous neglect.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the member, whom I invited with other local members to a meeting last Friday on that subject, as soon as all the facts were gathered asked the same question, and answers were provided to him by the senior officials who were present in my office.

The Sir Frederick Banting Building, which is one of my labs here in Ottawa, was designed and built in the early 1970s. Because we are new players, none of us in the department in that particular branch know exactly whose responsibility it is but, as I told the hon. member, I believe it is most important to make sure that all my labs in Canada are suitable for research and the handling of toxic materials. I have asked for a survey on that to be made immediately. In the meantime, the situation in the Sir Frederick Banting Building is being corrected and will be completed in two weeks.

EVACUATION OF PERSONNEL OFFICE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the problem still goes on. Despite what the minister says, the personnel office of the Sir Frederick Banting Building had to be evacuated last Friday by the safety officer because of the smell. Yet there are reports that the venting has been completed. I ask the minister whether or not she is aware of this and, if she is not, would she please look into it? I can tell her that the problem is still continuing, and the apprehension is still there. There have been tests taken recently which indicated that inappropriate levels of toxic materials are still in the area and are being breathed by the people in that building.

● (1500)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member has any other specific requests I would want to note them myself if possible. The answer to this one is yes, I am aware of the problem. Yes, there were unpleasant odours, but the measurement of the toxicity of those odours was below the ceiling which is acceptable to protect the health of people. It was in fact so low that it was hardly measurable, so from a scientific viewpoint the situation seems to be under control, but we are investigating these abnormalities.

EMPLOYMENT

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRIAL LABOUR MARKET INSTITUTE

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister has on his desk a proposal for the establishment of a national industrial labour market institute. He has had the proposal on his desk for some time, and I am sure he is aware that the purpose of that institute would be to pinpoint skilled labour needs and to map out strategies for meeting those needs. It is supported by the Canadian Labour Congress and by the Business Council on National Issues. I would like to ask the minister why he is taking so long to support it.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is not quite accurate in saying it is sitting on my desk. In fact the matter is the subject of active exchanges between members of the CLC, the Business Council and officials of my office. I met with senior officials of those two organizations about three weeks ago. We looked at the application in principle, and we then set up a steering committee composed of officials of my department and of those two organizations to look at the details of those proposals.

I expect a report from the steering group within about a week or so, at which time I will have another meeting with the CLC and the Business Council on what I consider to be a very important proposal.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

INQUIRY WHEN CANADIAN OFFICE FOR RENEWAL OF INDUSTRY WILL BE IN A POSITION TO HELP SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. Considering the forthcoming negotiations and the present agreements on restrictions with respect to the textile and clothing industry, and considering the great concern expressed by so many workers in this industry regarding the future of their companies, perhaps the minister could inform the House when the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board will be able to respond to requests for assistance from established businesses in this sector which are having to face increasing international competition.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, in my opinion, the policy on textiles and clothing announced a few months ago, the special fund of $250 million and the extension of protective measures with respect to imports will help the textile and clothing industry not only to survive but to modernize their plant and seek out new markets with the expectation of a more promising future.

The Industrial Renewal Board started operations this week, and this morning I was informed that a number of applications had already been received by the board. The director general informed me that we are now examining these applications, which will be processed as soon as possible.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—THE CONSTITUTION—ALLEGED INACCURACY IN TRANSLATION OF AMENDMENT TO RESOLUTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises from the amendment put before the House yesterday by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) regarding the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. The words he read into the record are the following:

35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.

However, the translated words tabled by the minister are the following:

35. (1) Les droits existants—ancestraux ou issus de traités—des peuples autochtones du Canada sont confirmés.

That is a terribly inaccurate translation of the English words. What I am going to ask of you, Madam Speaker, is that you rule both on the facts I put before you and also the law.

This being an amendment which could be in the Constitution of Canada, it is extremely important that the legal principles which are articulated in the English language are articulated in the French language as well. What is left out in the French is the legal concept or recognition. I have checked with some scholars of the French language who say the section should read:

Les droits aborigènes ou issus de traités des peuples autochtones du Canada sont par les présentes reconnus et confirmés.

I ask Your Honour to take steps to inquire into the accurate translation of the English spoken into the record yesterday and tabled by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I ask Your Honour to inquire into that translation and to provide the appropriate and accurate translation of those words so that the legal significance which is there in the English is provided in the French text.

Since it is part of the Constitution, it will go before the courts and before legislatures, and I think it would be very improper for this House to pass something that has such a tragic inaccuracy in it.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I have to tell the hon. member that this is neither privilege nor order. The Chair is not competent to determine whether a translation is correct or whether two texts are equivalent. Sometimes it is a matter of translation, but there is also the matter of the equivalency of texts, and it is not for the Chair to determine that either under order or privilege. If the hon. member feels he has a point, the proper way to deal with it would be to propose an amendment to the motion in order to have the text changed. That would be the proper course to follow, and I invite the hon. member to do just that.

MR. A. E. MASTERS

Question No. 2,326—Mr. Crosby:

Is Mr. A. E. Masters, president of the Maritime Employers Association, also a member of the Montreal Port Authority and, if so, does the government consider that the holding of the office of the president of the Maritime Employers Association plus membership in the Montreal Port Authority might result in a conflict of interest in respect of the different interests of the port of Montreal and the port of Halifax?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: Mr. Masters has been a member of the Montreal Port Authority since it was established as an advisory body. The Port Authority membership includes representatives from both labour and employers, and Mr. Masters' knowledge and expertise in labour matters associated with shipping is considered an asset in providing advice to those responsible for management at the port of Montreal.

PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES CONTRACTS

Question No. 2,956—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to Section 32 of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, under what authority has the limit for enumeration of professional and special services contracts been raised from $2,000 to $25,000 and what rationale was used in making this twelvefold increase?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The office of the Comptroller General authorized the limit increase for the enumeration of professional and special services contracts, from $2,000 to $25,000. This was done after the office of the Comptroller General consulted with the Departments of Finance and Supply and Services.

This increase in the limit was requested by the Department of Supply and Services in order to reduce the costs of preparing and printing the public accounts as well as the costs incurred by departments in preparing their input to the accounts. As a result of the increase in limit, departments do not provide information on contracts between $2,000 to $25,000, but only $25,000 and over.

JOB PLACEMENTS IN CANADA

Question No. 3,309—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of all job placements in Canada, by province and for the last complete year for which statistics are available, were placed by the Department of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission does not have data on all placements made in Canada. However, placements made by the commission in response to job orders from employers numbered 1,045,181 for the fiscal year 1980-81. The breakdown by province is as follows:

Province	Placements
Newfoundland	28,953
Nova Scotia	46,999
Prince Edward Island	8,009
New Brunswick	35,049
Quebec	217,333
Ontario	357,252

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that there be consent that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I can draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to notice of motion for the production of papers No. 34, which has been on the Order Paper for a year. When I inquired of the department why these papers were not being produced, I was told that the department was awaiting a report from the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I feel that perhaps the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence might like to have these papers in advance of making its report. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would inquire.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's representation and make inquiries.

• (1510)

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, if I am in error I apologize to the parliamentary secretary, but I do not think I heard him say he was answering question No. 30 today. If I am correct, I would like to raise a point of order.

That question has been on the Order Paper for over five and a half years. It asks the question, as I have repeated to the House on a previous point of order, how many members of the Canadian Transport Commission, their wives, employees and so on have passes on Air Canada. There is a direct conflict of interest when someone who is regulating Air Canada receives free transportation, free gravy, from Air Canada.

For five and a half years the government has persisted in saying the question will be answered soon. The parliamentary secretary's predecessors frequently gave the answer "soon". I do not know this government's definition of the word "soon", but to me it means a week or two weeks, not five and a half years.

Every time I raise this matter, I get statistics about how many of my questions have been answered. I know the parliamentary secretary has accused me of loading up the Order Paper, not being diligent and all kinds of fancy things. I do not mind those accusations. They are not true, so what does it matter? My point is, and I think I have a fair accusation to make, that the question has not been answered for five and a half years. When are we going to get more than gobbledygook, such as we will get when I sit down? I know we will get more gobbledygook. I hope I am wrong. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us when I will be told who in the Canadian Transport Commission is getting free gravy from Air Canada, and why?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that this question was on the Order Paper during the entire length of the Clark government and was not answered at that time. In response to the hon. member's inquiry, I would say soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province,

ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

The Constitution

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Recours

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

Effet de la dérogation

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

Durée de validité

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

Nouvelle adoption

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

Durée de validité

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

PARTIE II

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PARTIE III

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Conférence constitutionnelle

36. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PARTIE IV

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

The Constitution

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Idem

50. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

(2) Dans la présente loi, «peuples autochtones du Canada» s'entend notamment des Indiens, des Inuit et des Métis du Canada.»;

b) les changements de numéros de partie et d'article qui en découlent.

Et sur le sous-amendement de M. Fulton, appuyé par M. Broadbent,—Qu'on modifie l'amendement en retranchant le mot «existants».

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Before you leave the chair, Madam Speaker, since ten o'clock last night, when I was recognized, there have been developments that require my further consideration before participating in the debate. I would therefore ask that in my stead you recognize our critic for Indian affairs, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger).

Madam Speaker: I will recognize him if he rises.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we on this side will be glad to agree to that, because unanimous consent is required. In addition, I would like to confirm that there were talks among the representatives of the parties. It seems there will be unanimous consent that the length of speeches on the subamendment be limited to 20 minutes, beginning now. I would like confirmation of that. This seems to be the case from discussions I had with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the acting House leader for the NDP.

Mr. Nielsen: That is agreeable, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we have no objection to reducing the length of the speeches. I understood that was with an eye to voting on the subamendment and the amendment before six o'clock this evening.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we certainly do not object to voting on the amendment and subamendment at six o'clock today. I understand the hon. member for Yukon is in a better position to speak on behalf of his party.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, when I became House leader, in my first meeting and in a subsequent meeting with the government House leader and the acting House leader of the NDP I assured them that the discussions between us would be confidential and not exposed on the floor of the House of Commons.

This is the first breach of that confidentiality. It does not bode well for our future discussions if that kind of exposure is going to take place. I am talking about the submission just now made by the acting House leader of the NDP relating to discussions which were had between the government House leader and him and the government House leader and me separately, but in the nature of a House leaders' meeting. That kind of thing is not going to help co-operation in the House of Commons.

When I use the term confidentiality, that is exactly what I mean, that discussions will remain confidential. Otherwise we will get into the kind of hassle that was evident prior to the summer recess on the floor of this House of Commons with respect to negotiations, and I do not think that is at all helpful.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am afraid there is a misunderstanding and that the facts are being misinterpreted by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). First of all, he is referring to the situation before the summer recess, when his hon. predecessor initiated some memorable agreements. In my opinion he would perhaps find it helpful to follow the example of his predecessor, because we did, in fact, obtain very satisfactory results that have been beneficial to Parliament and to this country. I would therefore urge him to take a leaf from the book of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He also mentioned that we had an understanding that the contents of our discussions were not to be revealed, and I certainly do agree. In any case, I am the one who made the request in the first place. However, I think that what the hon. member failed to understand when the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) mentioned the possibility of having a vote at six o'clock this evening on the subamendment and the amendment is, that, as I understand it, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain did not disclose the contents of our discussions. He was referring to what seemed to him to be a procedure that would be acceptable to all the parties.

I agree that the contents of our discussions should not be disclosed. On the other hand, it is very difficult when an agreement is reached to avoid revealing its substance if we want it to be approved by the House. In these circumstances, I can assure the hon. member for Yukon that, in the future, we shall be very careful not to offend his sensibilities, but we also want to be practical. Some of our agreements will have to be made public if we want them to be approved by the House. We shall have to properly define what constitutes an agreement and what constitutes a discussion. Once that is settled, I am more than willing, and I also would ask the hon. member, to respect the confidentiality of our discussions. There are some areas, of course, where we must be flexible enough to understand that we are so close to reaching an agreement that there is nothing against mentioning the discussions that have just taken place. In this case, I assumed that we were agreed on a 20-minute limit on speeches. The hon. member for Yukon left the floor, we discussed this privately and he did not hold it against me. He said: Yes that is true, we do agree. We did not agree on this point in the meeting but we finalized the matter here. I assume that what the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain said about the vote on the subamendment and the amendment being held at six o'clock this evening was said with the same intent. I want to assure the hon. member for Yukon that we have no intention of disclosing the contents of our meetings in the future, but we must be flexible enough to accept that once an agreement is reached, we should be able to explain how it was reached, what it was about and how it is to be implemented by this House.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was not referring to the agreement on 20-minute speeches. That was agreed upon. I was concerned about the subject matter which went beyond that and which was raised by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. The government House leader left me with the impression that that would be the subject matter of further discussions this afternoon. That was going to be discussed privately. We were in a three-way conversation as House leaders when that discussion took place.

I am not going to stand idly by and see any political manoeuvring by these two parties that are in bed together in an effort to embarrass us. I am prepared to sit down at any time with the other House leaders in a confidential way to discuss ways and means of expediting House business, but if we cannot have confidentiality in those meetings and discussions, the whole purpose is destroyed.

I agree with the government House leader that at the appropriate time, should a House order be necessary, or should it be necessary to inform all members of the House what the business is going to be and how it is going to be handled, at that time, should it be necessary, the meetings and the subject matter thereof will become public. I have adopted the standard throughout, since our first House meeting, of not discussing anything that goes on there with members of the media or anyone else. My stock answer has been that the discussions that take place between House leaders in House leaders' meetings are confidential. I intend to keep them that way. If we want to start off on a fresh foot and keep them that way, that is fine; that is the way it will be. But if it is the intention to have this kind of byplay that took place today about voting on the subamendment and the amendment today, when those discussions had not yet been completed, as far as I am concerned, between House leaders, then that is the time that House leaders' meetings have lost any useful purpose. If that is the manner in which—

● (1520)

Mr. Deans: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Nielsen: The member for Hamilton Mountain says to me, "Oh, sit down". If the hon. member feels that retaining a high standard of confidentiality in House leaders' meetings—

Mr. Deans: It is not a high standard, it is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Nielsen: If he thinks that my intention to adhere to that high standard is being an ass, then I can only say to him that he has an entirely different idea of how proceedings here should be conducted in an appropriate fashion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I would like the assurance from the government House leader, since this matter has come up, that he intends to keep those discussions confidential. If I do not get it from him, then I will know how to conduct myself in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: It happens often in our meetings that are not institutionalized that we will have discussions, that we have to go back to our respective caucuses to submit proposals and then come back and make up an agreement. Most of what is said sooner or later is known by our own caucuses and, therefore, is known by the press.

Mr. Nielsen: Not through me.

Mr. Pinard: It is very difficult to keep absolutely confidential what is discussed in our meetings. For example, following our negotiations on the debate of the Constitution, we agreed to consult with our respective caucuses this morning and submit proposals. It is very difficult then to guarantee the confidentiality of what has been discussed in the previous House leaders' meetings if we submit it to all Members of Parliament. I cannot guarantee that his caucus will not keep totally secret what we discuss in our House leaders' meetings.

Mr. Nielsen: Let me draw one example. The government House leader called me to the back of the chamber at about ten minutes to three.

An hon. Member: You are disclosing secrets now.

Mr. Nielsen: We had a discussion in which certain proposals were put to me involving a discussion between himself and the NDP House leader. I have not yet even had the opportunity of informing my leader of the content of those discussions before they were exposed on the floor of the House of Commons. I ask you whether that is decency?

Mr. Deans: I do not quite understand what this is all about.

Mr. Clark: That is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: First of all, I want to suggest that if it is the intention of the House leader for the official opposition to turn everything into a political wrangle, then he will destroy whatever opportunity there is for co-operation.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Deans: I want to say further that by rising and indicating that there was agreement for 20-minute speeches, at that point there was an admission that there had been a meeting and that that matter had been discussed. All I was doing was asking whether other matters that had been discussed had been left out inadvertently or whether or not at some subsequent point in time there would be further discussion.

As far as I am concerned, whatever takes place at House leaders' meetings, so far as the House leader for the Tories is concerned, his contribution is zilch anyway.

Madam Speaker: I understand from this exchange that the House has agreed upon a limitation of 20 minutes for speeches. Is this for today or for the entire debate?

Mr. Nielsen: For the subamendment.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, because of the time limit imposed upon members and the importance of the amendment that is before us today, I would like to limit myself to speaking on the amendment.

This resolution, as we know, has been put before us. Many of us, as individual members, can find reasons why one section or another is not in a sense perfect to us. We feel many should be left out or others included.

One area that is of importance to me as a member, and to many other members in this chamber, has been the leaving out of the aboriginal clause and now the proposal that it be replaced. We want to treat this as a very serious amendment and hope that we can contribute to the thoughts and desires of all parties to deal with this in a serious manner.

I believe it is essential for our aboriginal peoples that their treaty rights be reinstated in this charter. Recently I went over the committee reports at the time the wording of Section 34 was discussed. That was back on January 30. At that time the feeling was evident that this was a very historic moment. It was the culmination of months of lobbying, of years of hard work by the native groups and a determination by all participants finally to come to some conclusion. It was a dedication to a principle. That should not be overlooked.

This process of constitutional renewal has been ongoing for many years. It took a decisive step forward on the evening of October 2, 1980, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a televised statement began with these words: "A century and thirteen years ago, a group of remarkable people launched a remarkable endeavour. They created a country."

While the Fathers of Confederation indeed did create a new political unit, a new country, Canada, it is sometimes too easy to overlook the obvious. There was not only a land upon which Canada was built in existence in 1867, but there also were the original inhabitants that were here long before any European settlers emigrated to this land. A society, a culture, a way of life, existed in Canada. More precisely, a number of cultures existed in this country. As we now continue with the endeavour, as is provided in Section 36 of this resolution, these aboriginal rights must be defined. It will be a very difficult quest for the provinces, the federal government and the native people to define what are aboriginal rights.

As I said, many cultures existed in this country. As a result, it will be difficult to sit down and make a definition that will cover all of these political entities that existed and what rights they now have because of those in this nation. The indigenous peoples have lived in Canada for thousands of years. When the settlers arrived, they were welcomed. The Indian community never attempted to impose its way of life or its culture on the European settlers at the time. In fact they welcomed those settlers. They allowed them to live in a different culture and climate. They gave them examples and the ability to deal with the country.

Many times they have assisted in the country's advancement over the years. For example, in the war of 1812, some 9,000 Indian warriors fought as allies of Canada. During two world wars 12,000 Indian people enlisted and fought on the side of the allies, and many of them lost their lives.

Even today as a country we have never adequately recognized our native veterans. We created the Indian Act which many felt was paternalistic. We created reserves which placed native people in groups on small tracts of land which, in many instances, we thought were worthless at the time. We did not allow these people the right to vote and to participate in government until recently. At one point we did not allow them the right to drink alcohol. Now we wonder why they are fighting so hard to have their rights entrenched in the Constitution! Basically it is because they never had the rights which we accept as natural since the founding of Canada in 1867.

Many times in our history we have found that the tracts of land set aside were valuable to us. Therefore, we took certain of those parcels on behalf of governments. The cutoff lands in British Columbia are a perfect example. Of course, the natives reacted with realistic suspicion at the time. We entered into the James Bay agreement because we needed a power source, and it became immediately important to settle aboriginal rights. That was also the case with respect to the Beaufort Sea. We wanted to build a pipeline from the Yukon, through Alberta, to the United States; suddenly it became important to deal with the concept of aboriginal rights.

Basically Indian people were immature politically, but they are moving very rapidly to gain political maturity. They virtually had no weapons because they faced a different kind of law from that to which they were accustomed. We imposed our law. They faced a massive culture shock, deplorable living conditions, alcoholism, poverty and unemployment. Now they are faced with being dealt a blow as far as their rights are concerned. Their rights are first in the Constitution, then out of the Constitution. Now they are back in again and one word is included which is causing great concern.

When we give a group of people with such a history some hope that finally an amendment will be placed in the Constitution which will give them some assurance of equal rights and of what are aboriginal rights, and then they find it taken out, is it any wonder they reacted in the manner they did? A strong and courageous voice has developed. Native people marched on the Hill. They displayed a conduct which I wish many other groups would display when marching on the Hill, speaking for their rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberger: This is why I am angry when I hear people complain that the reason the rights were removed was because native people could not agree among themselves whether or not Section 34 should be included. They never stated that. They stated that because of the definition clause it was not enough, that it may not mean anything more than they have at the present time. All they have been requesting over the months is something more specific to define legitimate aboriginal rights. Because of that concern and, as I said before, genuine mistrust, is it any wonder they would ask for more as far as recognition of aboriginal rights is concerned? No wonder anger, panic and cynicism engulfed native people when they learned they had been dropped from the charter. At least it is understandable. To them it was the latest in a long line of broken promises. They felt angry and betrayed when they were dropped from the charter. We now find that they are legitimately suspicious of the new word "existing" contained in the amendment.

This word has taken us all by surprise. Many of us are attempting to define it, to find out what it really means. The Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) assured us that it in no way changed the meaning of the text of the amendment before us. It is the same now, with the word "existing", as it was before without the word.

We in our party feel that it is essential to reinstate Section 34, which is now Section 35. We are pleased that that is the case, but we also realize the tremendous importance which is being placed upon the federal government, provincial governments and native people of the land to define what these rights are. If we are to be faced with another impediment, another word such as "existing", it only makes a conference so much more important.

Because of the manner in which the resolution has been drafted and because Section 36 has been included, it is imperative for the House, since nine provinces have signed the accord and there was the unanimous movement of the House to have native rights placed in the Constitution before, to place the heavy burden of faith and hope of aboriginal peoples upon the conference; it is a tremendous undertaking. I know the preparation for the conference will be very important, but it also places upon us as legislators and upon the provinces that signed the accord the obligation to deal in a fair, proper and legitimate manner with the definition of aboriginal rights. That will be the most important part of the conference.

Would it not have been better for the conference to have taken place before, so that we would know with what we are dealing and would not have to flounder about trying to find the meaning of words? Would it not have been better to place before the House the hope that aboriginal rights would be adequately dealt with and adequately defined? We would then not have to return to the House time and time again to question whether or not promises were kept.

It reminds me of the James Bay situation. We signed an agreement to take over certain lands. We included in the agreement various terms of justice which were supposed to be upheld, such as housing and health care. Various moneys were to be paid to eliminate the term "aboriginal rights". Now we find the government is living up to the letter of the law, the meaning of words, but not up to the spirit of the agreement which the aboriginal people of the area and we as members of the committee felt we had discussed in specific terms. We feel we showed some spirit and some reason by which the agreement should have taken place. When we now look at the wording, is it any wonder that native people are justly concerned, organized and lobbying us to do the right thing?

I know time goes very quickly and I have much more I should like to say.

● (1540)

However, I must state that since 1973 this party has stood formally in this House for aboriginal rights.

In 1973 a motion was moved in committee by the member who is now the Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). I will read just one sentence from his motion, as follows:

—publicly accept and endorse the said concept of aboriginal title.

That was supported by the two opposition parties at that time. We stand by that, Mr. Speaker, and we have shown this by our intention to move an amendment which we are pleased, through the accord with the provinces, the government has been able to move. Last week when it seemed that aboriginal rights would not be included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, my colleagues and I were deeply disturbed. That is why we chose at that time to reintroduce the motion on Section 34.

When the Constitution is finally patriated and Canadians have their Charter of Rights and Freedoms and have a just method of amending the Constitution in Canada, how sad it would have been if not all Canadians could share in the pride and happiness of that event. How tragic it would have been if one group of Canadians felt that they had been excluded and if that group should have been the aboriginal peoples. That situation would have been unacceptable to more than the native peoples; it would have been unacceptable to this national Parliament and this nation.

The time is now right for us to act responsibly by entrenching aboriginal rights in the Canadian Constitution, thus putting an end to the injustices of history, of which none of us is proud, and replacing them with a positive change—with an act of good faith. That good faith must come from the provinces, the federal government and the native peoples if we are ever to solve this problem. I hope that will be soon, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, not only is it a pleasure for me to rise, but I appreciate being able to participate in this debate today. It is of course a historic occasion, particularly on Saint Catherine's Day which gives a very special meaning to the debate. Mr.

Speaker, I was in the House last Friday when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) introduced the amended resolution. I felt there was in this House a consensus the likes of which I had never seen before on such a basic question. Naturally it took quite some time to reach an agreement, but the events of last Friday really warmed one's heart because all members on both sides of the House readily accepted the promises made by the Minister of Justice.

If we consider the role played by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, we really have to extend our congratulations to him for what he did and for his contribution to the events we are witnessing now. He was the chief negotiator for the government, he worked long and very hard and never gave up, Mr. Speaker, until he had finally completed this arduous task. I have also read in yesterday's Hansard the remarks made concerning the aboriginal rights and the answers given by the Minister of Justice. I find it difficult to understand why members opposite should raise objections about one additional word, the word which means the existing aboriginal rights, that is to say those which are confirmed by Canadian history. Indeed, if we are talking about aboriginal rights, about treaty rights, it is because those rights do exist.

We cannot expect the creation of ancestral or aboriginal rights in the near future because, after all, when we are talking about the nature of ancestral rights we imply that those rights used to belong to our ancestors and since they are no longer with us the rights must have belonged to those ancestors who, of course, have since died. Considering that we cannot talk about future rights, I do not see anything wrong with that additional word. If it was added, as the Minister of Justice has already said, it was indeed to make explicit something which was already implied in Section 34 when it was inserted in the first constitutional proposal. The word "existing" has now been added simply to meet the requirements of certain provinces that wanted a more specific wording. Moreover, when we say that we are grateful to the Minister of Justice, it is obvious that the architect of the constitutional proposal, its principal mover, namely the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), deserves the thanks of all Canadians for the efforts he has put in this project. It is because of his foresight, his sense of history, his love of justice, his persistence and his patience that we now have before us a constitutional proposal of such scope.

The contribution of the New Democractic Party, and especially of its leader, should be singled out because last year, when we were looking for support, it was the New Democratic Party and its leader who gave us that alliance, that support which proved essential to maintain the principles included in the constitutional proposal. The leader of the NDP showed a lot of courage because he did not have the support of all his caucus, and we know that there were divisions within that group for some time. He held on and even confronted his own members. We are also all indebted to the premiers of the anglophone provinces. They have helped us achieve the final consensus and they have also agreed to the compromises which were essential to achieve it. I am personally grateful to them for having agreed to Section 23 of the Charter of Rights. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Section 23 is very sensitive because it guarantees the educational rights of francophones outside Quebec.

As recently as 12 months ago, who would have believed that the English-speaking provinces and their governments would agree to submit freely to the requirements of Section 23 and to relinquish part of their jurisdiction in the field of education as provided in Section 23? For my part, I would not have believed it, because of my long experience of the manner in which francophone minorities outside Quebec were dealt with. I have already told the House of my experience at school when I was unable to attend a French secondary school in Ontario. Since all this has already been put on the record of the House, I will not repeat it. However, Mr. Speaker, I had another experience as a young lawyer in Toronto. I was then approached by French-Canadian parents from Midland, in Simcoe county, who wanted French language education in that county, not even at the secondary level, only at the primary level. At that time, you had to apply to the separate school board for this right. Our request was turned down. I then went before the separate school board in Simcoe county in Ontario, where there is a large proportion of francophones, to ask for French schooling. Our request was firmly denied. The members of the school board were very nice and very polite, but they were under no obligation to recognize these rights which we had always considered as ours. When I was a young lad, we, Franco-Ontarians thought that we had a right to be educated in our mother tongue. But that right was not clearly expressed in the Constitution. What we have done now is to precisely spell it out.

● (1550)

Furthermore, with regard to secondary education, when I was in Toronto, I sat on the advisory committee on French language whose purpose was the establishment of a French high school. That took four years of hard work, Mr. Speaker. In a large city like Toronto, where there are two million people and 60,000 French Canadians, there was a real need for such a school. Yet that process took four years. I have also seen the frustration experienced in communities throughout Ontario when they tried to set up French schools. Why? Because this came under the local school boards and not the provincial government as such. Everything was almost in complete chaos. Yet, all that is past now because Section 23 recognizes minority language rights. Despite the reservations some may have, I am quite pleased with the "where numbers warrant" provision. Rights are guaranteed but there has to be enough students to justify the setting up of French classes or of a French school. What pleases me is the fact that the "where numbers warrant" provision will be interpreted generously by anglophone provinces, precisely because they have accepted Section 23. They will therefore be willing to give a generous interpretation to that provision so that as many students as possible can exercise that right.

The second reason why I am not too concerned with the "where numbers warrant" provision in Section 23 is that it will be up to the courts to enforce it. In his speech, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) expressed the hope that provinces would be generous in their interpretation of that section. I hope so too. But he forgot to add that if provinces are not generous in their interpretation, that is not the end of it, since reference will be made to the courts for their interpretation, and those courts will be bound by Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter. It is precisely in Sections 16 to 20 that for the first time in our history, the official status of both French and English is entrenched. Therefore, when French minorities in anglophone provinces ask for French education, at either grade school or high school level, they can expect to have the same rights, in the final analysis, as the English majority of those same provinces.

Indeed, if a French community wants a French school, the criteria used, as far as numbers are concerned, will be the same as would be applied for an English community asking for an English school. That is normal. It is clear and understandable. That is precisely how the court will interpret this provision. No discrimination will be made between a rural and an urban region, because the criteria applied to a rural community for English schools are the same as those applied to an urban community, and the same goes for French communities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I see no problem with the "where numbers warrant" provision. Of course, I would have preferred that the phrase be deleted, but it was not possible and there it is. French groups outside Quebec might now find an interpretation to that phrase in favour of the establishment of French schools throughout English Canada to serve French Canadians that would like to attend them. Mr. Speaker, I was therefore somewhat shaken by the fact that the province of Quebec dropped us francophones outside Quebec, and for once that English-speaking provinces had been generous, they did not also agree to Section 23. Of course, this is disastrous. They did not expect either that English-speaking provinces would agree to Section 23. And they were taken by surprise when the conclusion was reached on French minority rights outside Quebec. They had no reply, although they had undertaken in 1977 to grant equivalent rights to English minorities in their own province. They did not act accordingly.

In addition, I would be less than honest were I not disappointed that Ontario did not choose to follow New Brunswick's example in agreeing to Sections 16 to 20 of the constitutional charter. I hope they will do so in the near future. I can assure that in my capacity as a government member of this House, I will keep on pressing the government to agree to that actual section, not Section 133 because it is not enough, but Sections 16 to 20 of the new Charter of Rights. Just the same, I must point out, Mr. Speaker, that last weekend there was a meeting of the association of French-speaking members of the legal profession in Ontario for the purpose of giving French-speaking lawyers in Ontario the opportunity to compare notes so that they will be ready to practice in the French courts that are being established in Ontario. As you are aware, we have already amended the Criminal Code to provide for French language court proceedings in Ontario, and this is already in place. Also, the province of Ontario has designated a number of areas, including my own, as areas where French language courts are to be established in order that court proceedings can go on in French, not only in criminal matters but also in civil matters.

Some would have wished that government had forced Sections 16 to 20 on the province of Ontario. However, I read yesterday in the newspaper Le Droit an editorial that I would like to share with this House, because I agree with it and I also feel it is very informative, and I quote:

> But can the federal government be blamed for not going still further? Should it get involved more deeply into exclusive provincial domains? Already the Quebec government is indignant because school safeguards granted religious groups 114 years ago are extended to language groups. Any consensus between the provinces would then be impossible.

Two options are open to the Federation of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec. In effect, the editorial attacked the Federation, which is fighting for the adoption of Section 133 in Ontario.

> The FFHQ is left with two possibilities. First, it could do its utmost to convince Pierre Trudeau to strike a heavy linguistic blow and in total defiance of the provinces, to unilaterally introduce in Westminster an omnibus constitutional motion with the sole support of the federal Liberals and I even doubt that they would all agree to it. It would be political suicide to disregard provincial jurisdictions for the sake of coast to coast bilingualism. Second, the FFHQ could get ready for the second phase of the constitutional reform where provincial jurisdictions and political institutions will be specifically discussed.

Mr. Speaker, I must say at once that I agree with the editorial. Secondly, I think it gives a proper direction to the FFHQ which, with all other French-speaking institutions in various English-speaking provinces, should change its policy and instead of zeroing in on the amendments made to the Canadian constitution, they should try to inform the various provincial governments, to prepare various French minority groups for their application to governments, and school authorities, to draw up files to assist public authorities unfamiliar with minority language education. They should begin to educate public authorities in English-speaking provinces with a view to enabling them to adjust when they show some reluctance. They should also indicate to French-speaking minorities how to take advantage of Section 24, which allows them to go to court to have their rights confirmed.

As I have said before, I would have liked to see the whole package in force in English-speaking provinces. However it is impossible! Back home, however, we say that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. We know that the bird we have in hand is a big one. We also know that we must protect it and use it to try to catch the one in the bush. That bird in the bush we will certainly catch, because we are indeed very determined to do so. What is great about the constitutional package is that for the first time the right to education for francophones is clearly spelled out and enshrined. It never had been before. There used to be separate school systems; now, French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec and English-speaking Canadians within Quebec are clearly identified as linguistic minorities. Mr. Speaker, this will allow all Canadians, whether French or English speaking, to choose freely the place they like most and may want to call home.

Mr. Speaker, we owe a tremendous debt of gratitude especially to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, as I indicated earlier, has not only elaborated a framework for the future of Canada on the basis of its past history, but succeeded in securing the consensus of all Canadians on his action. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that no Canadian will ever be too grateful for that. I, for one, thank you for granting me a few additional seconds, Mr. Speaker, and I say to you that the times all Canadians are living now are most favourable and promising.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a few moments to participate in this part of the constitutional debate which concerns the rights and privileges of our native peoples in their own country. The longer we carry on this discussion about the Constitution, the more evident it becomes that we were right when we said we should patriate the Constitution, that we should agree on an amending formula and then bring the Constitution home to broaden the discussion about other matters. These include the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, matters which profoundly affect individuals, matters which profoundly affect the relationship between the individual and the state and matters which affect individual groups in our society, such as our native people.

Our native people do have a very special position in our society in Canada. They are aboriginal people. They have been in this country since time immemorial. Not only that, they have made a valuable and important contribution to this country. Our aboriginal people have played an important part in our early history and in the evolution of what we now consider a great and important nation in a community of nations in the world. It is said that had it not been for the Indians, the province of Ontario may not have been an English province. It is said that if it were not the residents in the Arctic and their traditional rights and pursuits, we would have had no justification to proclaim sovereignty in the Arctic.

Certainly all of us know that had it not been for the Metis and Louis Riel in Manitoba, that part of the country may not be as it is today.

In 1973 this party achieved in this House the recognition of the concept of aboriginal rights for the first time. Before that and certainly since then the courts have tried to come to grips with the definition of "aboriginal rights". If one takes a look at the proclamation of 1763, aboriginal rights have something to do with property. No one doubts that. But are aboriginal rights only to do with property? What about cultural rights? What about religious rights? Some courts say that aboriginal rights only concern property rights. But if aboriginal rights have something to do with religious and cultural rights, why did we allow the missionaries to take our native peoples to the river to baptize them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost?

That certainly was not a solution to their problem. They have their own religion and they have their own culture. Their culture is one that cannot co-exist with the western civilization because it is something quite different. Their culture is one which moves in harmony with nature whereas the culture and basis of western civilization is a culture that has taken upon itself to manage nature to its best advantage. Therefore, the native culture and the western culture cannot co-exist.

If we were to give our native people some cultural integrity, we would have to back that up with constitutional rights. Everything else means assimilation and integration. We would be lying to our native people if we told them that we were not asking them to assimilate and to integrate by not protecting their cultural rights. I have already said their culture cannot co-exist with that of the western culture in our Constitution. It is for that reason that natives in our country need special protection.

Natives are not the only group that needs special protection. In Quebec there are the special circumstances of the French culture and language. That is why some of us have now agreed that there needs to be special protection and recognition in the Constitution of the reality that there are six million French-speaking persons in North America and 260 million English-speaking persons. This is a special problem which requires special consideration. That is why I am saying native people deserve and must have special protection in the Constitution.

What should that protection be? Is it good enough just to say that we will recognize and affirm the concept of aboriginal rights when we have not taken the time to give a definition to that concept? What is the rush now? We have an accord to patriate the Constitution and an amending formula. Why can we not sit down and define aboriginal rights, which we recognize do exist, before we take the final step? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tell us there is no need for that because they are deeply committed to sit down with the aboriginal peoples and talk about their rights and put a definition on those rights as soon as the Constitution is patriated. If I were the Prime Minister I would have no problem agreeing with that, but I am not the Prime Minister; nor was I the Prime Minister or an agent of Her Majesty the Queen when the treaties which were never kept were signed.

If we look back 80, 100 or 200 years when the treaties were signed, at least we asked the native people to sit down and discuss what was being signed. Some of these treaties were peace treaties because the natives were at war with the settlers who were moving on to their land and arrangements had to be made to keep the peace. Not only that, the government said that whatever was agreed to, whether it be a box of shells, a Hudson Bay blanket or a medical chest, would be written down and signed.

That is not so with this Constitution. The Constitution will be brought back, the government will sit down with the native peoples and talk about the future of their culture and language, but there will no longer be any consent or signature required. The nine Premiers and the Prime Minister will decide and say: "We are your guardians forever; we do not need your signature any longer". That is why I am saying that this Constitution cannot work without a consent clause, because natives have special problems. These problems cannot be compared with women's rights or other political rights. There must be a consent clause as there was at the time we were negotiating the treaties.

Many members have discussed this crucial word "existing", which, as they say, is totally meaningless, if you listen to the advice of the Minister of Justice and the Crown counsels. This word "existing", which is now the subject of this amendment, was inserted by the Minister of Justice. The minister told us yesterday that we do not have to worry about a thing because it is totally meaningless. If I know anything about law, Mr. Speaker, it is that legislatures are not supposed to put meaningless language into law. Logic tells me that if the word is meaningless, then it should be taken out.

I say that it is dishonest for the Minister of Justice to stand in the House and say that the word "existing" is meaningless, because if it were it would be his duty to take that word out. It is not for us to give the Supreme Court language in our fundamental law that is meaningless. You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that the words "existing rights" are not at all meaningless.

The premiers have decided among themselves that the native people are getting everything to which they are entitled now and nothing else. The status quo is what the native peoples will be dealing with. The premiers say: "If the status quo is property rights, we will find them some property somewhere to hunt and fish until we need that property for drilling and developing resources. Then we will find somewhere to push them, farther away, somewhere where the rats and caribou are." If "existing rights" means cultural and language rights or religious rights, they certainly do not exist right now so there is little hope for those rights to exist in the future.

I feel very deeply and emotionally about this issue. I find it very difficult to reconcile what we are doing here with my conscience. I cannot believe that this national disgrace should be allowed to exist for another hundred years. I cannot believe that we should continue to make ourselves the target for condemnation by international tribunals to which our native peoples have found access. These tribunals have agreed with our native peoples that they are being treated as second-class citizens and that we have commited an act of cultural and religious genocide. I cannot believe that this nation, as proud and rich as it is, can afford to let that kind of disgrace continue in the future.

I suggest that we must take steps today to correct this imbalance. I question the integrity of those who have asked to have the word "existing" added to the resolution. I question the integrity of those who will not give the native people at this crucial time in our history the right to consent to matters which affect no one else but themselves, to consent to changes in our fundamental law which will have no effect on anyone but them. What this means is that we are no more sincere in coming to grips with the very special rights of our aboriginal people in this country than we were when we signed the initial treaties.

I do not have any faith in the conferences that are to be conducted for the purpose of putting a definition on the term "aboriginal rights". We have recent examples of why there should be doubt and mistrust. We only have to look at the James Bay agreement for an example. It is not so long ago that we sat here and talked about that. There were just a few of us in the House who sounded warning signals at that time and we were right. The treaty was signed and then forgotten about. These meetings will continue, Mr. Speaker, and the native peoples will be able to participate, but the decisions about their lives, their future and their culture and religion will be made by people who have very little understanding, if any, of the real problems of our two cultures. Our two cultures can only co-exist if one develops respect for the other. The rights of these cultures must be entrenched in the basic law of the country.

If we cannot have any faith in what the premiers are going to do after the Constitution is patriated, certainly the courts have been given a clear direction regarding what they are to do. They are to legislate the status quo since the words "existing rights" are in the Constitution. Existing rights have not helped our native peoples achieve self-determination in the future.

If we are not prepared to accept the status quo, I say let us defeat this amendment. I find myself in a very difficult position because we have been told that unless this word stays in the resolution, the accord could be fractured. Well, I will not develop any pride in our Constitution if my neighbours have to live in abject poverty and deprivation, as the native peoples whom I represent in Parliament do and as they have done for the past 300 years since the white man took over their land.

I cannot be proud of my country when that kind of situation exists. I will find it difficult to consent to something like this and I would go so far as to say that I do not care if this accord is broken or not. I am ashamed of what we have done to our native peoples in the past and I will fight for them in the future, as I am now.

The Constitution

● (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago I told the minister responsible for the constitutional reform that I intended to take part in this historic debate. Finally, after an incredibly long debate in this House and after over 500 hours of proceedings and public hearings at the joint committee, I finally have the honour to share my vision of our country and of our constitutional charter with the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, during the past year, I may have prepared as many as three speeches to be delivered in this House. I believe that if they had been delivered at the time they were written they would surely have seemed quite relevant.

The events being what they are, those speeches are no longer relevant and I had to write a new one in the past few days. The political conditions have so drastically been altered, Mr. Speaker, that you will understand why my comments are particularly directed to Quebecers. In my previous speeches, I had never questioned the necessity under the present political circumstances of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Moreover I had examined at length the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on November 4, 1950. And if you will allow me one digression, Mr. Speaker, I would say that our charter, although there is no such provision at present, will in the future require not only a commission of human rights but also a special court such as the European Court of Human Rights to ensure the enforcement of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that as far as the contents of the charter are concerned with the recognition of native rights and sexual equality, it is a greatly improved paper. It is now a much more valuable resolution than it was last week and it can be favourably compared with any charter, especially the European Convention.

The most important fact this day, on November 25, Mr. Speaker, is that we are on the verge of voting in the Parliament of Canada on a constitutional resolution patriating our Constitution to which has been added an amending formula and a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I must admit that in spite of the fact that I am certain that Canada will be a greater country once the resolution is passed and our constitution is patriated, I must say that as a federal member representing a Quebec constituency, I am disappointed and sorry that Quebec, on account of its separatist government, is not a party to this agreement. Not only as a Member of Parliament but also as a Quebecer I had to decide what kind of Canada I wanted for today and especially which one I wanted for my children. And my choice is clear: I choose our motion, our constitutional resolution which is, in my view, a true Canadian vision that has nothing to do, of course, with that of René Lévesque and his separatist government.

I want a Canada which will be far greater for having a Constitution which recognizes and exemplifies our national identity. When I attended the Saint-Jean seminary in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, they used to teach Greek philosophy, and especially Aristotle, and I remember that in one of his books, Aristotle had this to say about constitutions, which is quite relevant to what we have before us today, and I quote:

A good constitution must express the identity of a nation and also promote the establishment and stability of a just and orderly society.

But in expressing its vision for the future, Mr. Speaker, a good constitution for Canada must recognize the successes and failures of our past history, that is, a Constitution committed to the ideals of tolerance, diversity and dissidence, a vision that is affected as much by the deportation of the Acadian people as by the French school issue in Manitoba, as much by Louis Riel's rebellion as by the involvement of the Canadian Armed Forces in peacekeeping duties, as much by the detention of Canadians of Japanese descent during World War II as by Canada's international image as a peace-loving country. Mr. Speaker, we need a Constitution which reflects fundamental values and reiterate the truly Canadian views expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he wrote, and I quote:

I will devote my whole life to achieving reconciliation, harmony and understanding among the various elements of our country.

I think that we are indeed very lucky that our Prime Minister is a worthy successor to Laurier in word and deed. He had to be a very courageous and ambitious man, Mr. Speaker, to attempt, after 54 years of repeated failures, such a giant constitutional step forward. It would have been easy for him to abandon or postpone the constitutional reform, and only a leader who really understands Canada, our country, its differences and needs, could also understand that the time to act and move forward had come if one believed in the future of Canada. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we will have a constitution that we can call our own.

Only a few days before the dramatic breakthrough of November 4, a book appeared in Canada which summarizes my vision of our country. As indicated by the very title of this book, "Fragile Freedoms", by Justice Thomas Berger, who is well known in Canada for his tolerance and far-sightedness, our fundamental freedoms have long been very fragile realities for minority and dissident groups in Canada, and although this alone could warrant the entrenchment of a charter of rights, my position differs from that of Mr. Lévesque on another point, and it is the extreme importance of having rights and freedoms granted to all Canadians. That is why I unreservedly support this excerpt from Justice Berger's book, and I quote:

[English]

If every Canadian is not to enjoy freedom of conscience, of speech, of religion, of association and assembly, as necessary incidents of citizens, and the federal state does not include express provisions for the safeguarding of fundamental freedoms throughout Canada, freedoms common to every citizen and enforceable equally in every province, then what is the point of our remaining together? What is the common bond—what are the common values—that hold us together?

[Translation]

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the separatist government in Quebec claims that no common values are strong enough to justify Quebec's presence within confederation, and that over the short term, as far as it is concerned, the only thing of value might be an economic association. Mr. Speaker, with that kind of principle or policy, it would indeed have been amazing for Mr. René Lévesque to sign the constitutional agreement with the Canadian government, regardless of what offers were made. The unanimous agreement of the ten provinces and the central government, the government of Canada, on a series of common values that would serve as the very foundation of federalism, would be in obvious contradiction with the description of Mr. Lévesque, the one he refers to so often and which he quoted repeatedly in his book "Option Québec", in which he compares Quebec and Canada to two scorpions in the same bottle. It therefore seems obvious that Mr. Lévesque and his separatist party are prisoners of their own rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, is there then such a thing as a possible and acceptable constitutional pact? I must confess that, to my mind, there cannot be any for Mr. Lévesque. He and his separatist government have failed the test of good faith. I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of repeating the gesture of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, in Quebec, two weeks ago, threw him a line. But the door was opened on November 4 last. Today, even as I am speaking, it is still open and will continue to be even after the final vote is taken on the resolution. And if it is, Mr. Speaker, at this time when we are so close to the vote, when we are fed up to the gills with constitutional talk, that is because the people of Quebec, those who send us here to Ottawa and those who elected Mr. Lévesque in Quebec want to keep it open, want the talks and negotiations to resume. Still, the Quebecers are those who bear the brunt of the door that remains closed in the separatist camp, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lévesque made three objections to the Canadian agreement signed on last November 4. I should like to dwell briefly on the one that strikes me as the most fundamental in terms of the vision I have of Canada. What obviously flies in the face of the philosophy of the Parti Québécois are the mobility clauses as they would apply to Quebec. And yet, there is no doubt the people of Quebec will benefit from them. Maybe more than any other province, because unfortunately, we have seen in recent years provincial legislatures pass legislation restricting manpower mobility. It is also obvious that in the very short term all provinces would have had to pass such legislation with the result that workers would have been prisoners within their own province, their only consolation being that their fellow workers in their province would have shared their lot.

What are we proposing, Mr. Speaker? We are proposing that all Canadian workers, and especially Quebec workers, whenever they cannot find employment in Quebec, could move to greener pastures, in Alberta or elsewhere, in order to get some work, to earn a living, to have their children educated in French, and to return to Quebec some day if they wanted to. Of course, those workers who stay in Quebec, precisely because of the amendment proposed by the province of Newfoundland in a genuine spirit of federation, would be protected here as long as the province did not have full employment, and thus the province of Quebec is now protected. On its face, this makes so much sense and it is so evident we must ask why the PQ is against it. Well, it is clear their opposition stems from the fact that this stands for a united Canada, an open Canada while they want a closed-in Quebec, an isolated Quebec. That kind of Canada the separatists cannot accept. What is at stake is the lot of all Canadians, including Quebecers. That lot must be improved, at the cost of entering into an agreement with the Canadian government. And this is something the Quebec government is not willing to do.

The references to us Quebec Members of Parliament being traitors, bums, gangsters and thieves point to a lack of arguments and a reliance on rhetoric. It is ignoring public opinion, Mr. Speaker, because the population is fed up with family quarrels, because all that bickering and aggravation are going on between Quebecers.

But let me conclude by quoting Laurier once more, because this explains why Lévesque cannot sign, and expresses our challenge, as Members of Parliament from Quebec and I quote:

> We are French Canadians, but our country is not confined to the territory overshadowed by the Citadel of Quebec; our country is Canada; it is the fertile lands bordered by the Bay of Fundy, The Valley of the St. Lawrence, the regions of the Great Lakes, the prairies of the west, the Rocky Mountains, the lands washed by the famous ocean where breezes are said to be as sweet as the breezes of the Mediterranean, our fellow-countrymen are not only those in whose veins runs the blood of France.
> They are all those, whatever their race or whatever their language, whom the fortunes of war, the chances of fate, or their own choice have brought among us. As far as I am concerned, those are my fellow-countrymen. I am a Canadian. The rights of my fellow-countrymen of different origins are as dear to me, as sacred to me, as the rights of my own race. What I claim for us is an equal place in the sun, an equal share of justice, of liberty; that share we have it; we have it amply, and what we claim for ourselves, we are anxious to grant to others.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is our role here. Such a role Mr. Lévesque and his government would deny us. They are jealous indeed because they are truly isolated. They are locked in. And I want to ensure all the constituents of Laprairie and all Quebecers that once this resolution is passed, it will only be a starting point because every day, with a Constitution that will be here in Canada where it may be amended freely, we are going to strive together to improve the lot of all Canadians, and this includes all Quebecers.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected to the House of Commons in 1957, almost a quarter of a century ago, my leader, the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, displayed the same deep sense of commitment for fundamental rights and freedoms of individual Canadians as has been projected by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Mr. Deifenbaker's commitment to a Bill of Rights for Canadians came from his ethnic background and personal experience as a lawyer and politician. It was Mr. Deifenbaker's lifelong ambition to make Canadians who are not of English or French extraction comfortable as Canadians.

The present Prime Minister has indicated by his words and actions the same type of commitment and concern for Canadians of French origin. I know what a special day it was for Mr. Diefenbaker and for Canadians when the Bill of Rights was introduced in the House of Commons on July 1, 1960, and again when it was proclaimed on August 10, 1960, but the Bill of Rights never realized its full potential as the protective statute it was meant to be, much to the chagrin and frustration of Mr. Diefenbaker.

First, it was a federal statute and thus did not relate to provincial affairs unless provinces passed enabling statutes. Some did, others did not. Second, the Bill of Rights was never given the priority consideration Mr. Diefenbaker had hoped and anticipated it would receive by the Supreme Court of Canada.

There were examples where it was a protection to Canadians, such as the Drybones case, but all too often the protections offered individual Canadians were ignored by the Supreme Court in the decisions that august body rendered.

Because these are facts, it pleases me that we will have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our Constitution that touches both the federal and provincial governments. While that charter might not be perfection, it is the beginning of something very special in the area of rights and freedoms that will be built upon in a truly democratic way as Canada moves forward to find its rightful place in the sun.

November 4, 1981, was a historic day of monumental significance for the maturity of Canada and Canadians. Almost since the last general election there has been an urgency of purpose on the part of the Prime Minister to conceive a new Constitution for Canada. Many will argue, and there is much evidence to support such arguments, that we sacrificed much from an economic viability point of view to reach this moment in our history. Such arguments, however, cannot dilute the special significance of this debate. We have come of age in a special way.

There were times leading up to the agreement of November 4 when I feared for this nation's future. To be very honest, I was a pessimist about a final agreement in Canada. I hated to imagine what might transpire in London were such an accord not achieved. The achievement of agreement between the federal government and nine of the ten provinces of Canada was a victory for the maturity of our nation and its people, and not for any single individual in this nation.

● (1640)

However, it must be recognized that the stubborn persistence of the Prime Minister made it happen. It must also be recognized that the Prime Minister proved himself a most able negotiator in his dealings with the ten provincial Premiers.

It must also be recognized that my leader made a very special, significant and courageous contribution to this achievement. There were many times, especially in the final months of 1980 and again during the committee hearings and the debate that followed in this chamber, before the resolution was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, when my leader could have taken different, more popular stands. But he persisted, and in many ways was the catalyst that kept it moving until we had this document before us.

The premiers, in representing the different views of our very large nation, made it happen because they were willing to compromise, which is the art of politics, with the Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) has been the workhorse for the Prime Minister in seeing that the flesh was put on the skeleton when deals were made. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) from our party acquitted himself with distinction in his special efforts to achieve the compromise that finally became the accord.

I came from a town and county in Nova Scotia that has contributed much to the history of the nation. The first member from Cumberland, which was the constituency I first represented in Parliament, was Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles Tupper was joined by three others from Cumberland, namely, Dickey, McCully and Chandler as Fathers of Confederation, in conceiving this nation.

I would suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) that taking stands on significant matters can sometimes prove to be a very heavy burden. I have some appreciation of how he has felt during this long debate on the Constitution because of his commitment to a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I might tell the hon. member that Sir Charles Tupper, who was premier of Nova Scotia and made the decision to have Nova Scotia join in the confederation of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Upper and Lower Canada, found that in Nova Scotia he was one of three MPs elected to Parliament in 1867, with 16 Liberal MPs opposed to confederation elected in the other seats. Sir Charles also found he unleashed the anger of Joseph Howe, a not insignificant force in the politics of our nation at that time.

I believe that John Diefenbaker would have championed this constitutional accord because it is the firm evidence that we believe in ourselves and in our future destiny. We are involved in a unique and historic happening that will not return again to our nation.

For those who feel it is not the perfect document, and it is not, I say, do not be concerned, because when this resolution is passed by Westminster we will have a Constitution in our nation that can be improved upon because, included in that Constitution, is an amending formula that guarantees the Canadian Constitution will not become a sterile document only amendable by the Supreme Court of Canada but will reflect the attitudes and desires of Canadians through their elected representatives, either federal or provincial.

I say to my colleague from the province of Quebec who has just finished his speech that I really feel for the members from the province of Quebec at this particular juncture in our history because, by and large, they support the Prime Minister in his special commitment to produce a new Canadian Constitution and, at the same time, they have a government in their province that opposes the objectives of a new kind of Canada for Canadians. I can well understand why the Premier of the province of Quebec would find arguments with every word and phrase in that constitutional accord that has been agreed upon, arguments why he should not sign it. It is because the whole aspect of that accord is opposed to his philosophy on the place of Quebec in future on the continent of North America. They are in the vanguard in ensuring that the people of the province of Quebec have the opportunity tomorrow, if not today, to become full partners in the confederation of Canada. No matter what Mr. Lévesque thinks of where his province should be heading, I believe there will be a different government in that province tomorrow and there will be the opportunity for the people of that province to join with the rest of Canada in the signing of this accord. That is my attitude, Mr. Speaker.

I think that this Constitution is much larger than any political party. It is a special feeling that every individual must have about his own nation. While it is not the perfect document, in my opinion, it is a very unique Canadian document, unlike any other constitution in the world. We should recognize it as a signal achievement. This debate and this resolution instil a new sense of pride in me when I say I am a Canadian.

As well, it pleases me, as President of the John G. Diefenbaker Memorial Foundation, to know that while this debate is taking place in the House, our foundation will be holding its first annual meeting in this building. While we cannot have John Diefenbaker with us to provide the inspirational message he always managed on historic occasions, we will be able to pay tribute to the special contribution he made to the building of this nation.

In conclusion I would like to say to the members of the present government, as President of the John G. Diefenbaker Memorial Foundation, that I thank them for their consideration and reconsideration in relation to Mr. Diefenbaker's home in Rockliffe Park, which he bequeathed to the nation. In the first instance, the government believed it could not accept the house because of many other commitments it had made to Mr. Diefenbaker in his life but, on reflection and reconsideration it has agreed to accept it as a historic site and a museum for future generations of Canadians, and has agreed to ask the foundation to implement and carry out the operation of that home as a historic site and museum. I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, the foundation accepts that responsibility with a great deal of pride and pleasure. As one who has been here for a long time, I can only say that I deeply regret that John Diefenbaker is not with us today. I am sure he would consider this a very special and unique debate that will be forever an important factor in the lives not only of Canadians today but of Canadians, tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Did I hear the Minister of Supply and Services saying no?

Mr. Blais: I was commenting on a private conversation.

Mr. Nielsen: I rose on a point of order which I think will be pleasing to the government, especially the government House leader. In order to expedite the debate and the hopeful early conclusion of debate on the resolution, we in this party are now prepared to vote at once on the subamendment.

● (1650)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we would be delighted to vote 20 minutes from now, as soon as the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) has completed his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will take the silence as some indication that the last proposal was agreed to.

Mr. Nielsen: No, it was not, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to vote at once, if the Chair can obtain the consent of all parties; I am sure you will get it from the government side.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we are quite willing to vote anytime. Clearly enough the New Democrats are indicating that they would prefer contributing one more speaker. Therefore, we are not denying consent. In these circumstances, we are agreeable. I do not think they are.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: You gesture, Mr. Speaker; we are still prepared to vote at once.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is evident to the Chair that there is no agreement, but the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is encouraging the Chair to put the question to the House. Is there unanimous consent to proceed to the vote immediately?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, originally I had many concerns about the process of patriating the Canadian Constitution. Certainly the original package has changed over the many months the House of Commons and the people of Canada have been intensely involved in the patriation process. My original concerns were about the unilateralism of the process versus co-operative federalism of the provinces working together to form one country. I had concerns about the package as well, in terms of provincial ownership of resources, the amending formula, the referendum and the Senate veto. Also I was concerned about native rights from the beginning.

We have reached this point in the debate, and I am limited to 20 minutes. I should like to dwell on the subject of the subamendment and the amendment concerning native rights which are now included in the package once again. Also I have another concern with regard to the province of Quebec. I should like very much for the Québécois to be part of the agreement. I hope the Liberal members of that province truly represent the people in what they are doing. I hope there will in fact be an accord across Canada and that we will remain one country. It saddens me deeply to think that Quebec is not part of the accord.

When I speak of Indian and Metis people, let me make it clear that I refer to treaty Indians, non-status Indians, the Inuit and the Metis. Unless I state otherwise, when I speak of Indian and Metis people this is what I actually mean. I was shocked when the accord came back on November 5 and the recognition of the aboriginal rights of native people in the country had been removed. I am pleased to a large extent that we will now place it back in the charter.

One particular area of concern to me is the word "existing" which is being included in the resolution as it now stands. If the word "existing" does not mean anything, if it is there just to make more explicit the meaning of the section in the resolution, if it does not change anything, it is important as a matter of principle to have it removed, especially because of the distrust Indian and Metis people have for governments which have dealt with them over a number of years, going back to the first treaties that were signed and the many promises that were broken.

In the part of Saskatchewan which I represent, there are 17 Indian reserves, and approximately 50 per cent of the population of the northern part of my riding consists of Metis people. From living in the area and having worked closely with Indian and Metis people, I know they have very special rights which have been recognized. I am referring to their historical rights, to scripts, to the affirmative action programs in various parts of Canada, to statutes, treaties and to the royal proclamation of 1763. It is not a matter of them not having rights. The real problem is that over the years an economic base has never been formed. There has never been a political will—and I say this in a non-partisan manner—to bring those rights to the forefront and to develop the needed economic bases so that the people of whom we are speaking today can live with some pride and dignity.

Over the years great institutions were developed which were supposed to take care of Indian and Metis people. Those great institutions have failed. In fact, they placed Indian people into a position of reliance upon our system. We have dominated them. We have passed out money to appease their feelings and at times to keep them quiet. This has caused a great reaction in the white community. Many people in the white community are upset by the amounts of money and by the rights given to Indian and Metis people, but they do not understand that all that giving was not helping. It has only oppressed Indian and Metis people in Canada, and made them regress.

I have mentioned that the word "existing" should be removed. I feel very strongly about this. It is a principle of law, of statutory interpretation, that every word in a statute—and in this case it is the Constitution—has meaning and must be considered by the courts when something comes before them. If this word remains, I am sure the judges will have to say that the word is there because the legislators or the parliamentarians, the people who put it into the Constitution, the governing law of the land, wanted it there. It may mean a variety of things. For example, the Metis people are not recognized by the federal Department of Justice as having any rights. If the courts look at the interpretation of the Department of Justice without looking at the historic rights, the land scripts and other rights of Metis people, the Metis could very well have no rights left under the Constitution as it stands now with the inclusion of the word "existing". In order to clarify it or to make it explicit in terms of the way I am speaking today, the word should be deleted.

I think there are things which should have happened before we became involved in the constitutional process. As has been mentioned by other hon. members, the talks with Indian and Metis people should have taken place before the constitutional resolution was drafted. The provincial and federal governments tried to impose some type of rights without adequate consultation and the consent of the aboriginal people, the first peoples of the land.

Now I should like to refer to a point which was just brought to my attention. Today the Newfoundland legislature brought in a resolution to keep the word "existing" in that section of the constitutional resolution. I was informed a few moments ago that Premier Brian Peckford introduced the resolution in the Newfoundland assembly and it was defeated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: There might be accord from the premiers but there is certainly not accord from all governments. The Liberals and some Conservatives in Newfoundland defeated the resolution today. This should bear heavily upon the minds of the parliamentarians who will be voting on this resolution in less than an hour.

I should like to deal with the items that I feel should have been included in Section 36 but were put in the background. We should lay down some principles which govern the discussions, meetings or consent-findings meetings, with Indian and Metis people within the period of a year after the Constitution comes back home. Those governing principles should define who the treaty Indian people are, who the Inuit are, who the Metis are, who the non-status Indians of this country are. They should determine what the rights of these groups are so that we can come to some kind of fair settlement and live with these groups in harmony. As a social democrat and as a New Democrat I believe they should have some right of self-determination. I also believe that is the way most Canadians would want the issue resolved.

● (1700)

It must be made clear that the Metis people are in fact Indian people. That should be stressed in the governing Section 91(24) of the British North America Act. We should recognize the Metis people and the non-status Indians as Indians in the language of the statutes that we put through the House.

Also, the following principles should prevail at the meetings provided for in Section 36. These principles were authorized and approved by the Joint Council of the National Indian Brotherhood. They read:

1. The aboriginal title, aboriginal rights and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including:

(a) all rights recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7th, 1763;

(b) all rights recognized in treaties between the Crown and nations or tribes of Indians in Canada ensuring the Spiritual concept of Treaties;

(c) all rights acquired by aboriginal peoples in settlements or agreements with the Crown on aboriginal rights and title; are hereby recognized, confirmed, ratified and sanctioned.

2. "Aboriginal people" means the First Nations or Tribes of Indians in Canada and each Nation having the right to define its own Citizenship.

3. Those parts of the Royal Proclamation of October 7th, 1763, providing for the rights of the Nations or tribes of Indians are legally and politically binding on the Canadian and British Parliaments.

4. No Law of Canada or of the Provinces, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Constitution of Canada, shall hereafter be construed or applied so as to abrogate, abridge or diminish the rights specified in Sections 1 and 3 of this Part.

5. (a) The Parliament and Government of Canada shall be committed to the negotiation of the full realization and implementation of the rights specified in Sections 1 and 3 of this Part.

(b) Such negotiations shall be internationally supervised, if the aboriginal peoples parties to those negotiations so request.

(c) Such negotiations, and any agreements concluded thereby, shall be with the full participation and the full consent of aboriginal peoples affected.

6. Any amendments to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any constitutional matters which affect the aboriginal peoples, including the identification or definition of the rights of any of those peoples, shall be made only with the consent of the governing Council, Grand Council, or Assembly of the aboriginal peoples affected by such amendment, identification or definition.

7. A Treaty and Aboriginal Rights Protection Office shall be established.

I think it is imperative that the Government of Canada and we as parliamentarians take action on this, Mr. Speaker. The Indian and Metis people in this country have had rights for many years but one would hardly realize this to see them on the reserve or in the urban native settings where alcoholism runs high and unemployment is such a disaster that it is not included in the Statistics Canada unemployment reports. Today, Indian babies are being born with a fetal alcohol syndrome as high as 50 per cent. This must have a disastrous effect on the education of these children and the way they will proceed through life. An aboriginal rights protection office should be established so that there is political will and an economic base is established to fulfil those rights and aspirations of the Indian and native people. They must be fulfilled with some authority and by a specific group responsible for those obligations.

The document goes on as follows:

8. A declaration that Indian Governmental powers and responsibilities exist as a permanent, integral fact in the Canadian policy.

That should happen within the year following patriation. The document continues:

9. All pre-confederation, post-confederation treaties and treaties executed outside the present boundaries of Canada but which apply to the Indian Nations of Canada are international treaty agreements between sovereign nations. Any changes to the treaties requires the consent of the two parties to the treaties, who are the Indian Governments representing Indian Nations and the Crown represented by the British Government, the Canadian Government is only a third party and cannot initiate any changes.

That refers to agreements that have already been made. Those things should be clear in our minds as Canadian politicians when the resolution returns to this country. Those things should be included for the protection of the Indian and Metis people in order to overcome some of the atrocities committed over the years and to put respect and self-determination back into the hands of the Indian and Metis people.

So far we have failed to do this, Mr. Speaker, but a good place to start would be to remove the word "existing" from the resolution by voting for the subamendment. If that word means nothing, then we should remove it as an indication of our trust. If the word "existing" means something, then that should be established too. I have tried to point out that the interpretations of the courts may differ. The Indian, and especially the Metis people, may have to go to court to establish that they have rights before they can enter the negotiating process in which they determine what they want in the year following patriation. I think the word should be removed in order to clarify the situation.

We have reached the point where we must restore the trust that has been eroded over the years between ourselves and the Indian and Metis people. Earlier today, a Conservative member spoke of smoking the peace-pipe together, talking about concerns, and then signing a document. But that trust has been lost over the years. At the present time there is very little trust between the Indian and Metis people and the predominantly white government in Canada.

That must be changed, Mr. Speaker. Let us change it now by deleting the word "existing" from the resolution. Let us approach the negotiations following the patriation of the Constitution with a political will to return to the hands of the native and aboriginal peoples the right of self-determination, the right to guide their own destiny and to have the Indians and Metis work with the rest of Canada as they work in harmony together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Ursula Appoloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is 114 years since the Fathers of Confederation laid aside seemingly irreconcilable differences in the larger interests of the union of this country. The country itself was born, despite differences, and it grew in defiance of geography. Throughout the years, the plea for unity has become almost stale with frequent usage. The coin may be common, but it certainly is not debased.

When other countries laboured in blood and fratricidal strife for their very survival, Canadians struggled in controversy and frequently acrimonious debate.

However, if there was one outstanding quality which kept us together, surely it was the quality of faith, the faith of successive leaders that Canadians could prove to the world that a nation such as this, born in strife, diverse in its origins, speaking two languages and representing the embodiment of several great cultures, can survive and prosper. That faith has been tested on many occasions. There were those who questioned our will to survive as a nation. There were others who, recognizing the bone and the muscle of nationhood, queried whether or not we possessed the spirit of nationhood. The spirit of nationhood had to be embodied in a sense of patriotism which would put Canada ahead of its parts; and, for a fleeting period, that emotion was palpably evident in the year that marked Canada's centennial.

Finally, we had a distinctive, truly Canadian flag which became the symbol which helped erase the image and the idea of any kind of hyphenated Canadian. However, even the adoption of a distinctive flag was not sufficient to instil in all Canadians a sense of common purpose, a deep sense of pride in their country, and an abiding faith in its destiny. To a certain extent, Canada was a nation in search of an identity. After all, what did it really mean and what does it really mean to be a Canadian? Now, for the first time in 114 years, we are finally in a position to at least partially answer that question, an answer which probably would not have been supplied through the process of simple patriation.

Finally, we are able to establish in our own minds and in the minds of the rest of the world, the kind of people we really are, the vision of a country we intend Canada to be, and our deep commitment and loyalty to that country and to the principles by which we govern ourselves.

I have noticed, among some members of the public, and even of the media, a certain impatience that Parliament should devote so much time to constitutional matters when economic matters are so very pressing. My feeling is that unless we proclaim our determination to survive as a country, to live together, to work together and to build together a worth-while nation, we will be constantly assailed by economic forces to which the very lack of cohesion would leave us particularly vulnerable.

Finally, and in an awesome endeavour demanding a sense of responsibility which the importance of the question deserves, we are about to achieve that cohesion. However, even as I sense the euphoria of the moment, I am conscious—as, indeed, are all hon. members of the House—of the absence of one voice from the proclamation of common purpose. What is that purpose? It is to build a truly Canadian nation in which all its people will be known by their tolerance, fairness and determination to uphold the dignity and to acknowledge the intrinsic value of every man and every woman. It is on these very attributes of tolerance and fairness that I wish to dwell as I believe they are the hallmark of the constitutional proposal now before us.

Perhaps I am in a unique position to be objective in analysing the Canadian identity for the simple reason that I am probably the newest Canadian in the entire House, inasmuch as citizenship was conferred on me only 11 years ago. Therefore, I am Canadian not by birth but very definitely by conviction. Unlike some people, I had a choice of countries to which I could have emigrated, and each of them probably could have offered me an equal amount of economic opportunity.

Why, then, did I specifically choose Canada? Fundamentally, it was because of my faith in Canada as an open, free, tolerant country which refused to remain prisoner of its own past but which was capable of reconciling the past with the present in one vibrant, throbbing hope for the future. I choose it too because of its immense size and the sense of grandeur, adventure and rich variety which that size denoted. In geography alone it offered me more wealth than any treasure trove of which I had ever read or dreamed. I believed that Canada would welcome me and my family, not despite our cultural background but, perhaps, even because of it. I believed that diversity was considered to be a challenge and even an asset rather than a pitiable or even contemptible liability. I believed that the only restrictions imposed on myself and on all members of my family were those of good common sense, our own ability and our own willingness to work.

My private faith in Canada and in the Canadian way of life has been fully justified. The daughter of a women who had to join the suffragette movement in order to obtain the right to vote is now, herself, a member of Parliament. The sister of a fully qualified veterinarian, denied a prominent government position because of his faith, can now proudly, and without fear of reprisal, claim from government benches, "I am a Catholic".

My personal odyssey through four countries has no doubt given me a perspective of freedom unseen by many who so blithely take freedom for granted. However, the same odyssey gave me an insight into other sections of the document now under debate when fate conspired to deprive me of some of my abilities. For years, I joined the ranks of handicapped people. This charter is eloquent testimony to the fact that a broken body does not denote a broken spirit. Human worth and dignity cannot and must not be governed by the outward condition or appearance.

Therefore, drawn to the freedom, tolerance and boundless opportunity which, for me, spelled Canada, I applied for and was granted Canadian citizenship. I so well remember the day on which I became a Canadian citizen because, for me, it was an occasion which prompted a very deep sense of marvel and gratitude and, at the same time, a particularly strong sense of responsibility toward the country which had so fully accepted me. However, even as I rejoiced that my own personal faith in Canada had been amply justified, I soon realized that many of the freedoms which I had enjoyed had been denied to others, because the freedom I had experienced came not from a constitutional guarantee but merely from tradition. We all know that tradition cannot too often be broken.

Whereas my freedom had come with a sense of good fortune, I was determined, because it was my responsibility, to guarantee the freedoms of people who would come after me. Therefore, it was not a kind of Russian roulette where one wonders who will be free and who will not. On this momentous occasion, we are on the brink of guaranteeing those freedoms, not just to me but to all who come after us, and I am very, very proud of that.

Again, as a new Canadian, I spoke of the vastness of this country which had attracted me, the wealth and the diversity of it. As a new Canadian at the time of the referendum in Quebec, I was shattered. First of all, I marvelled. I thought, "How can people, born with this immense wealth, want to get rid of it and make the country smaller? How could people want to live only in a province and not in a great big country?" I could not understand, for many, many months—perhaps I do not understand even to this day—those people who would want to make Canada smaller. I remember also that at that time, particularly in the House, we feared for the future of our country. We feared for Canada. I in recent days realized the analogy of what has happened. In Quebec the quiet women got together in what we now call the Yvette movement. Quietly and systematically they won over the male leaders of Quebec and made them accept the Canadian situation. That was a tremendous triumph for the women of Quebec. It was a tremendous triumph for all of Canada. I refer to that because what happened in the last few days has been woman power. We have achieved equality of the sexes in this Constitution. It is not really thanks to a few individual, isolated men who happen to be premiers of provinces, it is mainly due to the work of women who felt, just as I do, about the integrity and the intrinsic value of the human person.

• (1720)

If I can, I would like to direct my plea to the women in Quebec in particular to repeat what they did. The Yvette movement gave us and the rest of Canada the idea in the first place of sticking together to ensure that we can have a united country. I ask the women in Quebec now to please help us once again. I ask them to get all their power together to ensure that their leaders give to them the same equality that our leaders have done in the rest of Canada. I am sure they can do that.

I urge the immigrants of Quebec—and here again I can only speak to them in English—to use their power. They came to Canada with the same aspirations that I have. We are guaranteeing the rights that people like me enjoy. I want the immigrants in Quebec to realize that. I want them to go to Mr. Lévesque to ask him what he is doing. I want them to ask him if he is not robbing them of their rights.

Now I want to speak directly to the women of Quebec. If they will forgive me, I shall try my fractured French to address them in their language.

[Translation]

I too am a woman. I too am a mother whose aspirations are the same as yours for our children. I too am a Canadian. So, I invite you to join me in making sure that the whole Canadian family has a future filled with hope, tolerance and unlimited potential.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It arises out of comments made by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). I know members of the House would want accuracy to prevail. While I do not have the verbatim account of what the hon. member said, I believe that he made the point that the house of assembly in Newfoundland today voted or decided that if the word "existing" in Section 34 were not deleted, the assembly could not support Section 34. I want to tell the House and the hon. member—

Mr. Fulton: That is not what he said.

Mr. Epp: I think what is important is that I do mention what happened, Mr. Speaker. There was an attempt to have the motion introduced, and the opposition did not give consent. It was on that basis that the motion did not go forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) whom I expect to finish the issue.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I want the context of my speech to be accurate. At this time I will not withdraw what I said in my address this afternoon. However, if events over the next days prove that what I said was inaccurate, I will certainly stand up in the House at the appropriate time and withdraw any inaccurate statement I might have made. I do appreciate what the hon. member is trying to do.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I feel especially privileged to take part in this constitutional debate in this House of Commons, the highest court of the Canadian realm. Without a doubt, of all the multitude of issues which have occupied the time, attention, talents and emotions of members over the past century, this issue has by far the greatest implications. The debate, which has been the preoccupation of the House despite obvious more pressing economic concerns, will define the future direction and complexion of this Canada of ours for all time to come. This is the ominous and vital context in which the whole Constitution matter must be judged.

As individuals, our characters are formed from the amalgam of all the inputs and actions which have gone into our development to this point. We are the product of parental guidance, of education, of spiritual conviction, of environment, of the influence of friends and of our community.

Similarly, Canada's character as a nation has been formed by our experience and traditions in living together as a federation. The substance of the original constitutional proposal was an attempt to repudiate the essential elements of the character of Canada, the elements of experience in partnership and equality which are so essential in a federal state.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) took the highroad approach to this debate when he addressed the House last Friday. His comments and observations were compelling, made the more so by his stated intention to refrain from politically inspired rhetoric. That speech had a quality and depth befiting a national leader as he lay before the House and the nation the issues and the position of this party on some of the unresolved irritants to domestic peace and unity.

It is possible that I will wander from the highroad example of my leader. You see, I am an angry and not so young man. I am angry about what this and previous Liberal administrations have done to our nation, about what they have done and what they are still attempting to do. I am not alone in my resentment. I would think that never in the life of this nation has there been such widespread and justified unrest.

We have seen the anger of the native peoples of Canada and the anger of the women of Canada. It is hoped that the constitutional amendments announced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) will have soothed those angers and will provide the framework under which fair and equitable resolutions can be achieved.

This would be our wish, particularly for the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I, like all Members of Parliament, have received letters and personal representations from native people expressing their resentment or, as the tribal director of the Shuswap nation tribal council put it appropriately: "I wish to convey my disheartened feelings." One letter especially gripped me. It was from the Nicola Valley Indian Fellowship, a group trying to improve the educational status of children within their care.

Barney Shackelly, the pastor, wrote in part as follows:

> All we ask is that you and your party deal justly with this so-called new Constitution and be merciful unto the native peoples of our land, so-called Canada. Sincerely in Christ, Barney Shackelly, Pastor.

● (1730)

I trust that this constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights will mark the point from which native people can begin to feel they are being justly treated, but that it will also mark the point at which native people will feel full partners in society, receiving due recognition and—I think this is important—accepting a full position in the creative responsibility toward development of the total Canadian society, being prepared to live within the rules of society which attempts to produce the fairness and justice for all which native people have found lacking to date.

It is a situation which Parliament and the provincial legislatures are now attempting to redress. It would be tragic indeed if friction such as now exists in mobile home parks on the West Bank Indian Reserve were allowed to create blockage to the growing spirit of goodwill and supportive favour between aboriginal and other Canadians. Hopefully this will receive impetus from the supportive words and actions of all members of the House.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in his speech to the House last Friday put our party's position on aboriginal rights in the proper perspective when he said:

> . . . the original people were here before our civilization. Our treatment, our meagre, mean treatment of them, has increased our obligation, not diminished it.
> We cannot reverse history, but we can take account of it. A minimum step must be for this Parliament to put in a document that deals with the rights of our people and to acknowledge at least the particular rights of our first people to draw their life and their culture from what we made our land.

Now we still have with us the anger of the territorial government focusing on constitutional provisions which are seen as leaving them vulnerable to the ambitions of other jurisdictions and which fail to address their aspirations to develop into full partnership arrangements. This also must be addressed by the Governments of Canada under the authority now vested in the Constitution of our nation to produce changes and improvements in Canada through the process of negotiation, compromise and reconciliation, recognizing always the unique political situation occupied by the vast area of northern Canada.

We see the anger of labour as expressed in their march on Parliament Hill last Saturday. We have seen the anger of Canadians who are losing homes and businesses because of high interest rates. We have seen the anger of western Canadians take form in WestFed and other separatist-motivated organizations. This is an angry, resentful nation, and the very people who formed the Government of Canada, who are the root cause of the economic mischief that befalls Canada, had the effrontery in October, 1980, and through the months of constitutional debate to say to the nation, "Look, Canada, we alone have the knowledge of what is good for you. We alone possess constitutional wisdom. Premiers are unwise. Liberal Members of Parliament are omnipotent. In Canada's interests we are going it alone." This was the message that Liberal folly delivered to the nation in October, 1980. What pomposity from a government which has brought economic disaster to so many!

The anger of which I spoke was reflected in conversations with my constituents last weekend in Okanagan-Similkameen. Everywhere I went, the same was true. Businessmen, home owners, investors were hurt, frustrated and incredulous that disasters like this could happen to them in Canada.

How can the government face the people with an attitude of constitutional superiority when its direction for Canada over the past decade reveals a record of economic failure? The road to socializing Canada with ever-increasing government interference in the economic life of the nation and in the individual lives of Canadians was to have its great quantum forward leap through the Prime Minister's own personally conceived constitution. Thank God this was at least partially forestalled.

On January 20, 1981, at the meeting of the constitutional committee, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), in presenting our party's proposed amendment to a bad government initiative, said the following:

> Mr. Chairman, in presenting our proposed amendments to the government's resolution, we do so in the knowledge that it is the popular will of Canadians that our Constitution rest in this country. It is also the popular will that we have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the Canadian people embedded in the Constitution.

The Progressive Conservative Party's position in these matters reflects the popular will. The desire to enhance our freedoms is based on the strong traditions of our party. It was this party, through the vision and leadership of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, which gave Canadians their first Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights gave expression to the full citizenship Canadians desired. No longer were they hyphenated Canadians. The sovereignty of God over the nation was expressed. The family was recognized as the cornerstone of our society. The right to own personal property, so often denied in other countries, was guaranteed. Those principles are valid today; all amendments to the charter rest on that foundation.

The hon. member went on to say:

... we have listened to Canadians, and believe we have also listened to colleagues on both sides of this table. I believe the acceptance of our suggestions will save us from constitutional chaos and deepening national division.

It is unfortunate that it took a Supreme Court decision plus the outcry of the people, plus the concentrated effort of the official opposition in the House and in the Senate to cause the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal members opposite to abandon their unilateralist role in the matter of the Canadian Constitution.

Western Canadians in particular were incensed by an amending formula which would have entrenched second and third-class status upon the provinces in which they hold citizenship, a citizenship which they hold dear, just as they hold dear their allegiance to Canada.

In the February, 1981, issue of The Presbyterian Record, Lloyd Robertson, who is anchorman on the CTV eleven o'clock newscast, wrote an article entitled "Viewing the West". In part, this is what he wrote:

At this time in the west, one reality overwhelms all others. In spite of the strident voices of the protest leaders, the vast majority of westerners are Canadians first. They are not greedy or unpatriotic. They will tell you repeatedly that all they want is a fair deal. It will take a long time and much more disenchantment to bring the majority close to the breaking point of separation. Nevertheless the seeds of discontent are there. They can be blown away by understanding, friendship and good old Canadian compromise.

So wrote Lloyd Robertson in February, 1981.

The truth of Mr. Robertson's conviction that the majority of westerners are Canadians first is evidenced by the accord reached in which premiers from the west, the centre and the Atlantic put the interests of Canada before narrow provincial ambitions. We applaud that spirit of compromise and accommodation which resulted in the resolution which is the subject of our debate in the House today.

I am proud that the Premier of British Columbia played such a distinguished role in producing the climate in which compromise was possible.

● (1740)

On February 9, 1981, as a member of the constitutional committee meeting in room 200 of the West Block, I had the opportunity to speak on behalf of the constituents I represent and the party to which I am proud to belong. At that time I said in part:

The Constitution of Canada should by its very nature be a unifying, inspiring document which should raise in all Canadians the passion of patriotic fervour; and I am appalled that this most significant action in the history of Canada's Parliament should be the instrument by which discord and discontent is focused and intensified across Canada.

I went on to say:

It is with acute sadness and a degree of despair, I might say, that I must tell you that what has been done, and more especially the way it has been done, is totally unacceptable.

The announcement that the first ministers of Canada had reached an accord was a milestone in Canadian history which brought forth a great sigh of relief from Canadians from coast to coast. The more recent refinements and additions to that accord can only increase the level of satisfaction. I have shared in that immediate reaction, not because what was created by the Prime Minister and the premiers was perfect; quite the contrary, there are many Canadians, myself included, who have very grave reservations about this resolution. Those reservations extend far beyond the process employed by the government in its headlong reach for constitutional change, with all the many implications for change to the very character of Canada itself. These reservations extend indeed to the content itself.

I can do no better than to refer each hon. member here to the speech in the House yesterday by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), whose factual and comprehensive review of the resolution should be compulsory reading for all hon. members, most specifically those hon. members opposite whose euphoric description of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and what it offers to Canadians is based on a distortion of the present reality in Canada with regard to individual rights and freedoms. No country has a better record of respect for the individual than has our Canada. My analysis is that the charter mainly marks a new day for rights in Canada to the extent that the charter's provisions put into the hands of the courts, rather than the elected legislatures, the future direction of social policies in Canada. The hon. member for Saskatoon West said last night:

We will soon realize that the composition of the courts and the political and social beliefs of our judges will be an extremely important factor in the determination of the rights and prerogatives of citizens and institutions in the country. Indeed, the power of appointment of judges from time to time will be of immense importance in the ultimate determination and interpretation of fundamental rights in Canada.

I concur in that fully.

With the end of the constitutional confusion now in sight, where do we as a nation go from here? We have to be optimistic. We have very much going for us. We have to be optimistic because we will have a Canadian Constitution resident in Canada with an amending formula which recognizes the reality of Canada and respects the role of the provinces in the composition of our nation. We have to be optimistic because we have an amending formula which will preclude the type of arbitrary change which so recently threatened national unity and composure.

I know that time is moving fast and that I have only a few minutes left. Let me just say in closing that an hour ago we offered to vote on the subamendment, and I suggest that we move to that vote immediately.

The Constitution

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Once again I make the same offer to call the vote on the subamendment now.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to have the vote called 40 minutes ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the subamendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the subamendment (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The amendment to the amendment is defeated. Motion (Mr. Fulton) negatived.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I believe there is agreement among the parties. In the French version of the amendment the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) moved yesterday, the word "reconnus" was omitted in Section 35(1). Only the word "confirmés" appeared. By unanimous consent of the House, we should like the word "reconnus" to be added to the French text, at line 3 of Section 35(1).

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, we agree.

Mr. Deans: We also agree, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: If everyone agrees, it is so ordered.

The Constitution

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FISHERIES

TARIFFS IMPOSED BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the serious economic conditions faced today by all segments of Atlantic Canada's fishing industry, namely, our inshore and offshore fishermen and processors, brought about by high inventories, high interest rates, lower sales prices for fish products and higher wage and fuel costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax-East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this government take steps to negotiate the lowering of tariffs placed on Canadian fish exports by the European Economic Community so that Canadians are competitive with the preferential rates given by the European Economic Community to Norway and Iceland.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEED FOR INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, more than 5,000 General Motors workers will be laid off this Monday, and more are expected to follow before Christmas. In January and February, traditionally the slowest months in the automobile industry, we are told to expect further slowdowns accompanied by even further lay-offs. Industrial unemployment now stands at a staggering 280,000, and considering that a crisis situation will soon be upon us, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek):

That this House instructs the government to take immediate action to avert the coming crisis in the automobile industry and that it now recognize the urgent necessity of an industrial strategy for Canada and a short-term policy to assist the automobile industry.

SUGGESTION THAT ONTARIO PREMIER RECOGNIZE LINGUISTIC DUALITY OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas a nation, in drafting its constitution, should do so with respect and in a spirit of generosity towards its minorities; and whereas it is vital to recognize more fully and to protect Canada's duality, I move, seconded by the member for Missisquoi (Mr. Bachand):

That this House invite forthwith the Premier of Ontario, William Davis, to introduce in the Ontario Legislature now in session, a resolution to the effect that Ontario recognizes the linguistic duality of Canada and requests that it be bound by sections 14(2), 18(2), 19(2) and 20(2), which would make it possible for all French-speaking Canadians—wherever they may reside in Canada—when coming to Ontario, to have access to that province's parliamentary and judicial institutions and government services in the same manner as all English-speaking Canadians have had access to the same institutions in Quebec for over 114 years.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

APPLICATION OF OVERRIDE PROVISION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Section 33 of the proposed Constitution resolution would permit provincial and federal governments to override and deny fundamental rights to Canadians, including freedom of conscience and religion, freedom of the press, freedom of association, and the right to protect from discrimination against the physically and mentally disabled, ethnic and racial minorities, the elderly, and possibly women, and in view of the fact that the federal-provincial accord refused to protect these groups from possible discrimination, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House urge the Minister of Justice to propose amendments to the constitutional resolution, eliminating the possibility of Section 33, the override provision, applying at the very least within federal jurisdiction.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, it is now apparent why the government's budget has turned into such an unmitigated disaster. Senior officials of the finance department have advised the Canadian Tax Foundation that budget preparation was "characterized by a totally inadequate group" in the Department of Finance, and that budget changes were designed to increase budget revenues. This House was told that equity was the main thrust of this budget. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to withdraw the budget and to take another run at it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF GENERAL INQUIRIES TELEPHONE NUMBER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that Canadian veterans presently face such critical problems as excessive pension delays, the Hong Kong parasites disease and abnormally low pension levels, as well as the fact that many phone books in Canada fail to list a Veterans Affairs general inquiry phone number, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That in light of the present crisis confronting the Department of Veterans Affairs, this House instruct the Minister of Veterans Affairs to ensure immediately that all future phone books across the country will list in the government blue pages a general inquiries number so that Canadian veterans can approach the government with their problems.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT LINGUISTIC RIGHTS OF FRANCO-ONTARIANS BE ENTRENCHED IN CHARTER OF RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Hundreds of thousands of Ontarians have French as their mother tongue, and it is only fair to ask that their cultural heritage and language rights should be protected. Considering the fact that the government of Ontario persists in refusing to recognize the right of Franco-Ontarians to communicate with their government and legislature and with their Ontario courts in the official language of their choice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the House of Commons amend the constitutional resolution to make Section 133 of the British North America Act, in other words, Sections 16 to 20 and 22 of the constitutional resolution, applicable to Ontario, and to provide for entrenchment of the language rights of Franco-Ontarians in the Charter of Rights and our Constitution.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATE IN EXHIBITION AT SALON DE L'AGRICULTURE IN MONTREAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

An agricultural exhibition will be held in Montreal in the next few days. The federal government has already contributed $50,000, plus an additional $46,000 as an incentive to farm producers to participate in this exhibition and conduct a seminar on farm produce exports to benefit the Quebec agri-food industry. We are shocked to learn that the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Jean Garon, has just asked the federal government to abstain from participating in this exhibition. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) as well as the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the House condemn the Quebec government and urge the Canadian government to make every effort to ensure the participation of the federal Department of Agriculture in this exhibition, since Quebec farm producers play an important part in feeding our society and should not become hostages to the Quebec Minister of Agriculture.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE DEVELOPMENT OF SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED ENTERPRISES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that some 2,588 Quebec businesses have gone bankrupt during the first ten months of 1981, incurring total losses of $354 million, in view of the fact that such a disaster has particularly affected the Quebec economy where 40 per cent of Canadian bankruptcies occurred since January 1, even though 74 Quebec members are sitting on the government side, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That the House condemn the Minister of Finance for his inflationary and irresponsible budget and ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to meet with his Quebec counterpart so that both governments may work together to really promote and develop the small and medium-sized businesses that are still in operation.

Madam Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the President of Canada Post Corporation has been presented with a brief from the Gift Packaging and Greeting Card Association of Canada demonstrating dramatically the decrease in business with each increase in postal rates. Now with the proposed huge unjustified increase all at once, the outlook for the Canadian greeting card industry is not bright. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Government of Canada instruct the President of Canada Post Corporation not to enact the outrageous increase in postal rates at this time of high inflation, high unemployment and slow economic growth, and thus give Canadians, for a change, a break.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who undoubtedly noted the massive lay-offs which were reported this week, on top of lay-offs which were reported in the auto industry last week. Would the minister indicate how he explains that imports of Japanese cars in the first nine months of this year are up 118 per cent, when he assured the House only last June that he had an agreement that such imports would not exceed 10 per cent over last year?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the understanding of the Japanese is that they would restrain the level of exports to Canada to 174,000 for the period April 1, 1981 to April 1, 1982. The arrangement does not begin until the fourth month of 1981. My hon. friend is not counting the right period.

An hon. Member: You are not counting the cars.

Mr. Gray: That being the case, we have been in touch with the Japanese to confirm that they will be maintaining their forecast of the level of exports which I have mentioned. They have assured us, in talks with my officials and with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that they expect to maintain that forecast.

* * *

LEVEL OF TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Surely he noted that in the first nine months of this year Japanese imports were up 56 per cent. Exports to that country were down in the same period. This leaves only a slight surplus of trade between Canada and Japan. If he has noted that, would he indicate to the House what steps he has taken to curtail this exportation of jobs to other countries from Canada? In short, has he given any thought to taking steps to having some of these Japanese products manufactured in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we have been working to encourage the Japanese to establish facilities here or to increase their purchases from Canadian companies. In fact the other day my hon. friend talked about the Mitsui company and the $1.5 billion worth of business it does here. He neglected to mention that this was a great trading company. The total volume he mentioned reflects both their exports from and imports into Canada. This particular company has been responsible for the sale of hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian products in Japan and other countries.

Mr. McDermid: How much in manufactured goods?

Mr. Gray: My hon. friend neglected to mention that at that particular point in time.

An hon. Member: What about coal?

Mr. Gray: In any event, we are continuing our efforts to increase our share of exports to Japan to be more in the area of manufactured goods. We continue to have a surplus with that country. I am wondering what my hon. friend is saying. Is it that Conservative members from British Columbia and the western provinces want to prevent any Japanese cars coming into the country? I presume that is now their official policy.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who wishes to deal in the figures which I put on the record only a few days ago. He must know that in the top Canadian companies there are eleven Japanese firms doing sales in Canada of $5 billion, yet they collectively employ fewer than 2,000 Canadians. Would the minister indicate to the House how he intends to continue supporting a policy whereby tens of thousands of Canadian jobs are being exported to other countries while our unemployed go without jobs, as is being demonstrated with GM, Ford, and other concerns every week?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are working to increase the number of manufacturing jobs in the country, as demonstrated by projects like the KHD diesel engine plant in Quebec where there are to be 1,300 jobs, and as demonstrated by the Burrard Yarrows shipyard expansion with its hundreds of jobs in British Columbia.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the St. John's, Newfoundland shipyard?

Mr. Gray: It is exemplified, as the hon. member says, by the Saint John, New Brunswick, shipyard expansion, with hundreds of jobs there. It is exemplified also in a company I visited yesterday in St. John's, Newfoundland, Ice Engineering Ltd., which with the help of the federal government is expanding its operations in the advanced technology offshore area.

• (1420)

We are working to expand the number of manufacturing jobs in this country. My hon. friend is saying that, in spite of the commitment that he claims to an open trading system, he wants to put blockages in the way which cannot help but inhibit our ability to create more manufacturing jobs by selling more manufactured goods to Japan and other countries around the world. What hypocrisy, Madam Speaker!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, that answer is so much hogwash. Since the last budget, which the minister himself supports, there have been over 100,000 lay-offs or jobs lost in southwestern Ontario alone, in sectors such as the auto industry, at Admiral, and so on. The minister is telling us that he is doing such a tremendous job in creating jobs. Would he tell the 100,000 people unemployed in the last two weeks alone why they will continue to be unemployed during Christmas?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are very concerned about these lay-offs. The basic approach of the budget is to create a climate to encourage further investment and economic activity to help these people get back to work. A basic approach of the budget is to reinforce the movement to reduced interest rates, which has been very much a pattern of our activity since August. We are working to help get people back to work.

A major cause of lay-offs is the downturn in the economy of the United States, our major export market. This is something on which unfortunately, this government has no direct hold. Perhaps my hon. friend should go to his colleagues in the United States who practise Reaganite economic policies, which they love, and tell them, as did Mr. Stockman in that government, that they are not on the right track in so far as it pertains to Canada and other western countries.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

PERCENTAGE OF CANADIAN CONTENT IN OFFSHORE IMPORTS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in the auto industry alone in the last ten days there have been over 12,000 lay-offs, again in southwestern Ontario. The minister should know by now that he has failed dramatically in his agreement with Japan. Imports are increasing on a monthly basis. Last month they increased by over 45 per cent from the month before. He should know that the only answer really is to increase the Canadian content in all offshore imports, particularly those from Japan.

A year ago the minister told us that his goal was to increase the Canadian content in Japanese autos. The Canadian content at that time was less than 1 per cent. Today it is far less than 1 per cent. I should like to ask the minister where he has failed. Has he changed his goals? What specific action is he going to take to increase the Canadian content in our offshore imports, particularly those from Japan?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the unfortunate lay-offs in the auto industry are due principally to the fact that 80 per cent of our production is exported to the United States market. That market is very weak. The administration of that country has admitted that it is in a recession.

As well, the restraint undertaking that Japan has entered into is for a 12-month period extending from April 1 this year to April 1 next year. Basically we are six months into that period. We have been expressing our concerns to the Japanese about the level of exports and they confirm their intention of meeting the forecast figure of 174,000.

With respect to increasing Canadian content in imported vehicles, we are continuing our efforts. We are discussing various projects with the Japanese companies. We have achieved one initial success in the area of increasing Canadian content in imported vehicles by the arrangement we entered into with Volkswagen a few weeks ago, an arrangement which will mean an increase in Canadian content over a few years to 84 per cent in their vehicles imported to this country. That is a much higher level of content than is required for motor vehicles manufactured here. I look forward to this agreement and the some 1,500 jobs involved in it—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Gray: —across the country, as being the harbinger of similar agreements to come. We are making progress in the area of Canadian content—

An hon. Member: Speech!

Mr. Gray: —and we intend to make more progress.

Miss MacDonald: Ask the unemployed.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF FEDERAL SALES TAX ON CANADIAN MANUFACTURED CARS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, that was one of the longest recorded announcements this House has ever heard. I listened to the minister with care, but it took some doing to concentrate on that answer within that period of time. However, it has been announced that 5,000 workers will be laid off by GM in Ste. Therese, in Oshawa, and in other communities in Quebec and Ontario. The minister has not said one thing today which will provide an additional job for them before Christmas.

I would like to ask the minister something very specific. Since the price charged to Canadian consumers for cars produced in Canada remains substantially higher than the price charged for the same cars in the United States, will the minister remove the 9 per cent federal sales tax on cars on the condition that that tax saving be passed on to the consumer, and on the further condition that the North American producers of cars in Canada start charging Canadians the same price they charge Americans?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Minister of Finance listened to that representation very attentively, and he is in the best position to deal with this important matter of tax policy. However, I will say, in addition, that what we have been doing to reinforce the trend to lower interest rates should be strengthening the market for Canadian built cars in this country. I hope that the market in the United States for the 80 per cent of our production in this country exported there will also be strengthened, thereby bringing further help to auto workers in this country.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I will give up on him and try the smiling Minister of Finance.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AND AMERICAN PRICES BE EQUALIZED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, cars produced in Oshawa, Windsor or St. Catharines are sold in the United States for prices which are in the neighbourhood of $1,500 or less than the prices in Canada. Will the Minister of Finance take immediate steps to stimulate the market in Canada, to produce jobs, and to reduce the federal sales tax on the condition that the producers in Canada charge Canadians the same prices as Americans for those cars?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that proposal would be quite the wrong thing to do at the present time. The hon.

member has been urging me and the government over the past number of months to take measures, and to develop an economic policy which would have the effect of reducing interest rates and inflation in this country; especially interest rates, from his point of view. That is the type of policy which I have adopted. I believe that if I accepted the hon. member's approach, I would be co-operating with a reversal of the downward trend in interest rate reduction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF PRICE EQUALIZATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I confess, and I am prepared to take a short lecture from the Minister of Finance, that I did not understand the connection at all between what I asked him and what he answered. Would he explain to the House why charging Canadian consumers the same price for cars produced in Canada as for those which are sold in the United States would cause interest rates to go up in this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that if the honourable member will refer to his question he will find that he talked about his stimulating demand for automobile sales.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: It was to that aspect of the question that I was directing my attention.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CRIMINAL CODE

APPLICATION OF ABORTION PROVISIONS

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice; however, in his absence I would ask the question of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the House if the Criminal Code of Canada will still be the governing law concerning abortion after the constitutional package becomes law?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, it is quite clear in my mind that the criminal power still remains with the federal government. In the unlikely case where any court would say the contrary, we could always "notwithstand" that particular judgment and go ahead and act on abortion in the way that this—

Mrs. Mitchell: Oh, great!

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, there is a lady over in the NDP who is worried. Now, what is her point of view?

Mrs. Mitchell: An hon. lady!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: She is from British Columbia.

Mrs. Mitchell: Vancouver, too!

An hon. Member: B.C. is insulted.

An hon. Member: Go back to B.C.

• (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: Any time. I would be happy to go back to B.C.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Why not retire there?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What about retirement?

Mr. Trudeau: Most British Columbians are grown up people. If they realize what kind of members they have sent here, they would change their minds very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Try it, Pierre.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Keep going. I think we are winning.

Mr. Trudeau: I hope members opposite keep thinking they are winning. We are very happy with this opposition. We would like them to stay there forever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If the essence of the question is whether this House continues to have the right to deal with abortion, Madam Speaker, the answer is yes. It will be the Parliament of Canada which will still be writing the Criminal Code, and members of this House will have the responsibility, and I wish them well, in dealing with the problem of abortion.

Mr. Nielsen: Is that a promise?

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF IMPLEMENTATION OF PEARSE COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS ON SIZE OF WEST COAST FISHING FLEET

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the minister knows, the United Fishermen's and Allied Worker's Union was before our committee today and Dr. Pearse, the author of the Pearse commission report on west coast fisheries, was before our committee the other night. Dr. Pearse was unable to give us any indication, either in his report or in his testimony, of what shape the fishing fleet would take after the proposed buy-back program, in other words, how many vessels of whatever type or gear types would be left in the fleet. Can the minister tell us whether the government knows what type of fleet would be there after the buy-back?

If the government does not know, can the minister tell us whether it is appropriate to proceed at the present time with the royalty provisions, which Dr. Pearse recommended, until we all know, including the fishermen on the west coast, what kind of fleet the government has in mind after completion of the program?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I did meet at considerable length with Dr. Pearse and representatives of the union. We discussed these very issues. I might say to the hon. member that nobody disagrees that the fleet, whatever shape it takes, will be smaller. In other words, the catching capacity simply has gone beyond the bounds of the potential of the biology. For that reason, we should not lose the opportunity to start reducing the size of the fleet. I have not yet committed myself to a royalty program. This is part of the ongoing discussion and consultation that I hope to continue in my forthcoming trip to British Columbia in the next ten days. But surely no one I have heard has advocated that the fleet in the B.C. fishery should not be reduced.

CONSEQUENCES OF PROPOSED ROYALTY PROGRAM

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): May I say through you, Madam Speaker, to the minister that we would be interested in knowing whether the government, or for that matter Dr. Pearse, has any studies which indicate what effect the proposed royalty program will have on individual fishermen on the west coast? In other words, before any royalty program is considered, can the government tell us what effect that program will have on the type of gear that will be taken out of the fleet? That is a legitimate and a proper question, and I ask the minister to address himself to it.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would hope that if a Crown corporation were created, the board of that corporation would examine that sort of question. I, too, would be worried if the market forces were left absolutely free in this case, that a lot of the small marginal fishermen would be eliminated by "la force des choses", as we say. For that reason I would think that the input from fishermen, through their organization and through their representation on any body to emanate from recommendations in the Pearse report, would be so important. I think it is a matter of judgment. Certainly everyone agrees that some large units should be removed from the fleet, otherwise the individual small fishermen will bear the brunt of the program.

IMPLEMENTATION OF 1982 GROUNDFISH MANAGEMENT PLAN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. When the minister spoke recently to the Prince Edward Island Fishermen's Association, according to the press he stated that the 1982 groundfish management plan will likely exclude all but the older offshore trawlers and the inshore fishermen from fishing in the Gulf.

Since the minister's statement includes all types of fishermen, and in light of present unemployment in the industry, can the minister tell us whether he has decided how many fishermen, and how many boats, both large and small, he plans to license for the Gulf fishery in 1982? Also, can the minister tell us how many deep sea trawlers that are licensed in continental France will be permitted to fish in the Gulf next year, or have they been excluded from the Gulf along with all large Canadian trawlers?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, consultations with the industry representatives, the provinces and the federal government took place over the past week. I have not yet seen the final report from the advisory groundfish committee meeting.

The question of the French vessels is very simple. They are there by treaty with Canada. Surely the hon. member does not advocate that we break treaties. As for the larger units which were asked to fish in the new 200-mile limit, where they have been fishing profitably, I do not think their real problems will be solved by 5,000, 6,000 or 10,000 tonnes of fish from the Gulf, in direct competition with the small boat fishermen. If the committee has recommended some leniency in this matter, I have not yet been told of it.

CLOSURE OF NOVA SCOTIA INSHORE FISHERY AREA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I have one brief supplementary question for the same minister. In light of the minister's answer at this moment, why did the minister arbitrarily close down the inshore fishery in Nova Scotia in the area slated on the charts as 4VN, tying up the fleet of 28-foot boats operating out of Neils Harbour, Dingwall and Ingonish, with the excuse that they had caught 112 per cent of their quota, while at the same time the minister left open area 4T adjacent to his New Brunswick constituency, where I am informed the fishermen have caught 145 per cent of their quota?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I expect the odd slander in this House, but I did not expect that one from the hon. member.

An hon. Member: It is the truth.

Mr. LeBlanc: The decision as to when to close down quotas are made by my regional director and his staff. They are made on recommendations of the biologist. They are also made with some reference to what kind of fishery the fishermen have had in the past season. I assume that they made this decision for exactly the same reasons.

Oral Questions

MARINE TRANSPORT

SHIPMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL TO JAPAN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, our party believes that Canadian resources should be transported in Canadian built and Canadian crewed ships, especially when it comes to the upcoming energy megaprojects. Does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce know whether Federal Commerce and Navigation Ltd. is presently building two 150,000 tonne bulk carriers in Belgium, and another two in Korea, to ship coal from northeastern British Columbia to Japan? Is the minister aware of this fact, and will the minister tell the House that he is prepared to have Canadian resources shipped in Canadian ships?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I am generally aware of those plans. I strongly support the over-all principle of having more of our resources processed and upgraded here, using Canadian skills and Canadian services. That is one of the major objectives of our industrial and regional benefits program that we announced last August. Also, in that connection, I want to remind the House that just the day before yesterday Gulf announced the building of a number of ships in Canadian shipyards. That is the trend we want to encourage.

POSSIBLE USE OF CANADIAN SHIPS TO TRANSPORT ARCTIC GAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, that answer of the minister's reminds me of the fading old crotchety philosopher king who said it is often those who live at the foot of great mountains who are the last to climb the mountains. Let me invite the minister to climb a mountain.

In the Arctic pilot project, it is proposed to ship arctic gas from Melville Island to the Strait of Canso or to Gros Cacouna, to be transshipped to the United States or shipped to Europe. That is again going to be done with foreign ships. Is the minister prepared to bring down an industrial strategy which will ensure that transportation of our resources from these great energy projects will be carried out in Canadian built and Canadian crewed ships?

● (1440)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I do not think that all elements of the Arctic gas project have been confirmed and finalized as yet, and the matter regarding the ships to be used remains an important one to be gone into. I just want to remind the House that a basic objective of the industrial benefits policy which we announced a few months ago is to ensure a full and fair opportunity on a competitive basis to Canadian workers and companies in Canada, and as far as I am concerned this certainly includes Canadian ships.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL ATTEND AT SALON DE L'AGRICULTURE IN MONTREAL

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that a symposium on livestock feed is now being held at the Conference Centre in Ottawa and that Quebec is not represented, considering that the Minister of Agriculture has given the Salon de l'agriculture $96,000 on behalf of the Canadian Government and that the Quebec Minister has asked Ottawa to stay home, and finally considering that Agriculture Canada supports agriculture in Quebec to the tune of $247 million, I would ask the minister of Agriculture whether he intends to go, nevertheless, to the Salon de l'agriculture which is being held in Montreal for Quebec producers of farm products and for the agro-food industry in general.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I did attend the forage symposium that took place in Ottawa. There were Quebec farmers in attendance who wanted to learn as much as they could about modern technology in the production of food for their livestock. We still intend to attend the trade symposium we are putting on at the Salon de l'agriculture in Montreal, regardless of what the minister of agriculture for Quebec wants. We have participated in this program. We have given $50,000 in outright grants for this organization, and $46,000 in prize money yearly.

The people who exhibit at the agricultural show are from all over eastern Canada, so this is not a show that is isolated to Quebec. We have met with the farmers and they still want us to go there, so we intend to be there next Wednesday.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

INQUIRY WHETHER FINANCIAL AID WILL BE GRANTED TO VICTIMS OF UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and it concerns the victims of urea formaldehyde. Nearly 500,000 people are affected by this problem in Canada and the Minister has said previously that he was in favour of an investigation being held to find out who is really to blame. The fact remains that thousands of Canadians and Quebecers are having to cope with this problem. I therefore wish to ask the minister whether he is prepared to help these people, who otherwise have no way of protecting themselves, by recommending that a special fund be set up to help them finance the necessary improvements in their homes, and depending on the results of the investigation, the government will still be able to recover these amounts as soon as it finds out who are the real culprits.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that the Canadian government has already acted responsibly by setting up an information centre in Ottawa which provides advice free of charge to all the victims of this product and who are seeking assistance and information from the government. The government has initiated a series of tests in some 2,400 homes in Canada for the purpose of making a scientific assessment of the effects of this product.

The government is spending several hundred thousand dollars on research through the National Research Council, in order to find ways of dealing with the effects in question. We have already said this was only the first step in a series of measures to help the people concerned. Tomorrow morning in Montreal, I am meeting with an association formed by the victims of this product. We shall be discussing what they expect the government to do and I shall ask them what recommendations they would have for the Canadian Government and the provincial governments as well, that is, what steps they would recommend that both levels of government take to correct the situation.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. minister. Once again, I know the minister will tell us that he has ordered a lot of investigations. He knows perfectly well that these several thousand people are faced with financial problems. Could the minister tell us today whether or not he intends to recommend that a special fund be set up to give them immediate assistance, considering the fact that these people cannot spend the winter in these homes? I feel that this would certainly help those concerned to ask pertinent questions tomorrow when they meet the minister. They need financial support, and could the minister tell us whether or not he intends to take immediate action, in view of the fact that the government stands to recover this expenditure as soon as the investigation has revealed who are the real culprits? In any case, if the government is to blame, recovery would be unnecessary.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I think that finding the guilty party is not terribly important for the victims of this product. I feel the most important thing is to give them technical advice,—

Mr. La Salle: Money!

Mr. Ouellet: —and help them solve this problem. That is why I will meet with them and I will discuss the problem with the persons concerned and not with Don Quixote types like the member for Joliette, who try to act on behalf of the real victims of this situation. I prefer to meet the people concerned instead of talking about them with the member for Joliette.

[English]

BANK OF CANADA

SALE OF TREASURY BILLS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that his traders and the Bank of Canada yesterday and this morning interfered with the market so that treasury bills today sold at only slightly less than they did last week. I am wondering how the minister can explain to this House why he has deliberately kept interest rates higher in Canada than in the United States, and why Canadian treasury bills sell for 50 per cent more than American treasury bills?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Canadian bank rate has dropped rather rapidly, and at the present time is at the lowest level it has been in the last year. Today the bank rate experienced a further drop, so I do not believe the hon. member has much foundation to argue that the governor of the bank is restraining a drop in the Canadian bank rate. The evidence is there before him.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that the activities of his traders, and the advice given to the Canadian market place by the major banks would indicate that if it were not for his interference in the market, Canadian interest rates today would be at least 1 per cent lower than they are now. I want to know from the minister why he continues to pretend he is allowing the Canadian dollar and interest rates to float in Canada when he is deliberately trading in the market in such a fashion as to keep rates higher here than they need be.

• (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I assure the hon. member that there is no intention on the part of myself or the Bank of Canada to prevent orderly reductions in the Canadian bank rate. The hon. member knows that it has always been the policy of the Bank of Canada on the exchange market to attempt to even out fluctuations in the value of the dollar. Occasionally these fluctuations have to be evened out on the money market as well.

The trend is downward. The bank rate went down further today. It is at the lowest level in a year. I am very delighted that that trend will continue and that the hon. member believes that there is further room for a descent in the value of the Canadian bank rate. I hope that he attaches that improvement very directly to the budget which I presented.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME OF FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It arises out of an answer given yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture. The minister will be aware of the very serious situation which exists in contract annuities with regard to farmers and the sale of their farms, cattle, or the sale of their machinery, in taking from many farmers the only retirement savings plan they have. The Minister of Agriculture said yesterday that he would submit in writing a presentation to the Minister of Finance that came from Members of Parliament, different farm groups and accountants. I am asking the Minister of Finance what he is prepared to do for the farmers who find themselves in a very difficult situation in regard to his budget.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there have been a number of questions raised in the House about the impact of the elimination of the income-averaging annuities. As the hon. member knows, the intention is to replace that system with a more equitable one called forward averaging. I believe that the new system will prove in the long run to be better than the income-averaging annuity contract system which the hon. member has mentioned. I want to add, as has been mentioned previously by myself, that I am quite prepared to hear representations—

An hon. Member: You are hearing them.

Mr. MacEachen: —from various interest groups with respect to the impact of these tax changes on their situation. I made that indication quite clear in a press release issued last week, and applied it directly to the possibility of transitional rules for interest deductibility.

I am quite prepared to receive the representations of the hon. member and of the Minister of Agriculture and others with a view to improving the proposals which, in due course, will be debated before the House of Commons. The hon. member realizes that all these measures will have to come before a committee of the whole House and they will have to be discussed in detail.

In the meantime I will be considering all representations that will be made with a view to ensuring that the equity, which is my objective, will be fully implemented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It would be a shorter answer if you tell us what you are not changing.

MULTICULTURALISM

DEPICTION OF TAILOR IN "SHOP CANADIAN" ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): My question is for the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). As part of his personal war on the media he gave a speech in Toronto on November 9 in which he criticized ethnic stereotyping in the media. He cited a number of advertisements which he called conspicuous examples of this. Why did the minister, when he gave those examples, not mention the most conspicuous example? A federal government advertisement for "Shop Canadian", which features a tailor named Rinaldo who speaks in heavily accented English, is an advertisement which was approved when the minister was responsible for government advertising. In particular, will the minister assure that in the future, before he attacks the media, his own house is in order first?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I hope, without sounding pious, I know more about the media than does the hon. member, having worked in it for a number of years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I probably spend more time defending the media than the hon. member. Certainly if there is a case of that kind of stereotyping with the particular advertisement he mentioned, I will look into it and talk to my colleague, the Secretary State, because that is wrong if it is happening.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

APPLICATION OF NEW FORMULA TO HAVE-NOT PROVINCES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the minister's budget, the new formula for equalization payments to the have-not provinces—to the disadvantaged provinces—will be based on the capacity of Ontario to raise revenues, rather than on a national average as has been the case in the past.

Will the minister come clean with the House and admit that, should the economy of Ontario continue to decline, the effect of this new formula will be that fewer provinces will qualify for equalization payments, and those that do qualify will receive less? Will he admit that the effect of the new formula will be to deny have-not provinces much-needed revenue?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that will not be the effect. Under the new formula that has been proposed to the provinces, equalization payments as a whole will be increased in the first year by 15 per cent. If the hon. member looks at the transfers to all the provinces under the new proposals which I had made to the finance ministers, every province stands to benefit, including the province of Prince Edward Island. I think that is the most important point that can possibly be made at this time. Under the new system all provinces will gain each year, more and more and more. That is the reality.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION TO FARMERS AFFECTED BY EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS OF GRAIN TO RUSSIA

Mr. Stan Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding the phantom Western Development Fund. On budget day, in briefings conducted by the minister's staff, it was stated that $81 million in compensation payments to farmers for the Soviet grain embargo came from the Western Development Fund. The Minister of Agriculture has denied that fact, saying that the compensation fund came from his spending envelope and not from the fund. Can the minister straighten this out by telling us exactly where the funds came from for the embargo payments?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to look into that question. Obviously there is a conflict of information. I would like to look at what the Minister of Agriculture said, and discuss the matter with my officials. After checking into it, I will be glad to give the hon. member the information.

PURPOSE OF FUND

Mr. Stan Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, since the Western Development Fund did not appear in the supplementary estimates, could the minister again straighten this out for the House by tabling the planning and disbursement of these funds so we can be sure that the Western Development Fund is not a Liberal party vote-getting slush fund?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, there is no danger that it will become that. No such funds exist within the Liberal party. I believe I have laid out, rather fully, in the budget paper entitled "The Budget in More Detail", the reprofiled Western Development Fund, which is intended to support western transportation and assistance to the native people. I believe all those facts are set out in that particular paper.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is in the nature of a supplementary to a question asked a moment ago by my colleague from Hillsborough about equalization payments.

Is it the intention of the government to effect net savings in payments to the provinces under the new equalization formula? I understood the Minister of Finance to say that the answer to that would be no, but I would ask him to clarify that for me. If the answer is no, would he give a guarantee to the provinces which are eligible to receive equalization that they will receive no less than they would have received under the existing formula? If they do receive less, will the government make up the difference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, it is not possible to give that assurance. It has been demonstrated that the present formula for equalization is unworkable. The best proof of that is that in the course of this session it was necessary to bring in a special law in order to prevent Ontario from receiving equalization to which it was entitled under the equalization formula. Therefore, I would argue that a formula is defective if you have to exclude any particular province arbitrarily. That is why it was necessary to bring forward a new formula based on the Ontario standard, in the belief that the province of Ontario has the fiscal capacity to provide a reasonable standard of public service and that it is the job of equalization to ensure that all provinces have that reasonable standard. That is what we propose to do.

● (1500)

However, I would attempt to assure my hon. friend by telling him that, regardless of the change in the formula, the equalization payments for the first year of the new formula will increase by 15 per cent. I believe that is a rather substantial rate of growth in equalization payments that would occur to the provinces year over year.

MRS. MITCHELL—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and thirty-sixth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) on Wednesday, November 25, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the government House leader the usual Thursday question with respect to business of the House. He will recall that he had already indicated we would be continuing the fifth day of the budget debate tomorrow. However, he has indicated to me that that might be changed as the order of business for tomorrow. At the same time, he might indicate what the business will be as far as he can into next week.

In addition, may I suggest to the government House leader that we in this party are prepared to vote now on the amendment to the resolution by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, subject to the following. Ordinarily the next speaker recognized in the debate would be a member from the government side. The usual rotation would bring the order of speaking back to this side. I am therefore suggesting that after the vote he agree that I be recognized immediately following the vote as the first speaker on the resumed debate. If that is agreed, we are prepared to vote immediately on the amendment by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, that is a very appealing suggestion. I have one minor problem that I am sure we can overcome. We have a subamendment we would like to move to Section 34 that would take perhaps 15 minutes. I would ask if we could alter the suggestion by the House leader for the official opposition to allow 15 minutes for us to move a subamendment to Section 34 and have the vote take place at, let us say, 3.20?

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, could the House be made aware of the essence of the NDP subamendment?

Mr. Deans: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will be happy to make hon. members aware of the essence of it. The essence is to put a consent clause in Section 34.

Mr. Nielsen: Normally, as a matter of courtesy we would have been supplied with copies of the amendment. I wonder if we might have a copy of the proposed amendment by the NDP?

Mr. Deans: Always wishing to be courteous, Madam Speaker, I would be delighted to provide a copy of the subamendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, meanwhile I could perhaps answer the first part of the question put by the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. Regarding the business of the House, for today, I can inform the House that tomorrow and next week, if necessary, we shall continue the debate on the constitutional resolution moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien). I hope we shall be able to finish this evening or tomorrow. If we do not finish tomorrow, we shall probably resume the debate next week. In the circumstances, contrary to what I said last week, tomorrow's debate on the budget has been postponed.

AGRICULTURE

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table in the House, in both official languages, the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (D), 1981-82

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (D) with regard to sums required for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1982 and, pursuant to the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, recommending those estimates to the House of Commons, was presented by Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of Treasury Board) and read by Madam Speaker to the House.

[English]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, following the tabling of the estimates, I move:

That the Supplementary Estimates (D), 1981-1982, tabled this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

MR. TOWERS—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present to the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled a petition on behalf of my constituents.

The petition of the undersigned humbly sheweth: That certain residents of Red Deer, Alberta, are concerned about high interest rates and demand government action to alleviate the burden on ordinary citizens.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

MR. COLLENETTE—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, it is my duty, honour and pleasure to present a petition sponsored by the Ad Hoc Committee on Canadian Women on the Constitution which, under the leadership of one of my constituents, Mrs. Elizabeth Carr of Don Mills, Ontario, has obtained literally overnight 300 signatures from Torontonians who believe that the legislative override clause now in the constitutional resolution should be removed. It will be my hope that the nine provinces which signed the constitutional accord will also agree to these petitions.

PUBLIC PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT

MEASURE RESPECTING PROCEDURE ON PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-642, respecting the presentation of petitions to Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Speaker, presently there is no requirement for the government to take any action in terms of either acknowledging or reacting to petitions. This bill sets out guidelines which would result in petitions being a more effective democratic instrument than they are at present.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,985, 2,986, 3,026, 3,052 and 3,266.

I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS OF CANADA

Question No. 2,985—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Parliament of Canada under the House of Commons program at page 32.24, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the government account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each service and, for contracts of a value more than $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The subject matter of this question falls within the administrative responsibility of the Speaker of the House of Commons. This information could best be made available to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts by the Speaker upon request.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 2,986—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the professional and special services recorded by the Parliament of Canada under the Library of Parliament at page 32.24, volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to other types of services (a) how does the government account for the increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what was the name of each type of service (c) what was the amount paid for each type of service and, for contracts of a value more than $2,000, to whom was it paid?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The subject matter of this question falls within the administrative responsibility of the Speakers of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

See reply to question No. 2,985 answered this day.

WHITE PASS AND YUKON ROUTE RAILWAY

Question No. 3,026—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Canadian Transport Commission hold a hearing in Whitehorse, Yukon in September, 1981 to determine why the White Pass and Yukon route railway should have more time to instal warning lights on crossings and, if so, what was the cost to the taxpayer of the hearing?

2. Had the warning lights already been installed in the spring of 1980 and had they been in operation since that time?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. As provided for in Section 53 of the National Transportation Act, a hearing was held in Whitehorse on September 16, 1981, concerning the crossing protection over the White Pass and Yukon route railway at 4th Avenue in the city of Whitehorse. The cost of the hearing was $717.

2. The signal protection was operational as of September, 1980. However, as a result of the hearing it has been determined that modifications to the protection will have to be made.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 3,052—Mr. McKenzie:

1. With reference to section 10.24 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General, has the Canadian Pension Commission, since the release of the report, developed formalized standards for work processes within their control and (a) if so, what are they (b) if not, at what stage is the process?

2. (a) Did the Department of Veterans Affairs consider setting down firm time guidelines for pension application processing and, if so, on what date will they be imposed (b) will there be self-imposed sanctions for failure to meet the guidelines and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, what are they and will they help to shorten processing time periods?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Section 10.118 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General recommended that the Canadian Pension Commission formalize processing time standards, to the maximum extent practicable, in all areas of the pension adjudication process under its control. Formalized standards have not yet been developed.

(a) Not applicable—see above.

(b) A control system is now in operation which enables measurements of performance. Based on the information provided by this process control system, the commission is working towards establishing formal processing time standards to the extent practicable for those processes within its control.

2. (a) The commission has under consideration the establishment of time guidelines for processing pension applications. No firm date has been established for imposing such guidelines. The Auditor General has recognized that, because of the very wide variation between pension applications, the development of specific time guidelines for their processing may be virtually impossible. The commission is attempting to develop an over-all average target time for the processing of applications.

(b) Because each case is different, there can be no sanctions for not meeting an over-all average target date in individual cases. Over-all production will be closely monitored and appropriate action taken if the average target times are not met.

CTC HEARING IN WHITEHORSE

Question No. 3,266—Mr. Nielsen:

1. With reference to the recent hearing held on September 16, 1981 in Whitehorse, Yukon by officials of the Canadian Transport Commission, western division, regarding an application for extension by the White Pass and Yukon route railway, file 49135.13, for the installation of flashing lights in the city of Whitehorse (a) what was the cost of the hearing (b) what were the names of all employees of the western division of the commission who attended the hearing and what was the total cost incurred for their attendance?

2. Was the installation completed on August 31, 1981 and, if so, what was the purpose of the hearing on September 16, 1981 to grant an extension of time in order to complete the installation on October 19, 1981?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. (a) See answer to question No. 3,026 answered this day. (b) The western division of the commission was represented by Mr. B. Wolfe; costs were $717.

2. See reply to question No. 3,026 answered this day.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I have brought up the question of the written questions Nos. 2,035 and 2,519 on three previous occasions. On each occasion the parliamentary secretary has said: "I will take note of his representations and make inquiries". I wonder if the hon. member can tell us what kind of answer he gets to those inquiries?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take further note. I am still awaiting the response of my earlier inquiry.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I asked the parliamentary secretary last week to check into question No. 1,795 which I placed on the Order Paper over a year ago. It is a fairly routine matter. It asks: "Are private organizations receiving federal grants for research and development?" I wish the hon. member had given me some kind of an answer about what the department said. Are they providing grants for research or are they not providing grants for research?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, again I will look into this matter and take note of the hon. member's representation.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I, too, would like to ask the parliamentary secretary a question concerning question No. 2,250 which is in my name and goes back to March 13, 1981. This is the second time I have had to ask the parliamentary secretary why this question has not been answered. It may be a little sensitive for the Solicitor General, but I would like to remind the hon. member that the Solicitor General said he would give top priority to launching an investigation in this country to see if any former Nazi war criminals are in this country and what measures he would be prepared to take to bring them to prosecution and trial. I have now been waiting over eight months for a reply. I would respectfully ask the parliamentary secretary to get in touch with the Solicitor General so that this question can be answered and answered openly.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I will pass on that representation to the minister.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, on July 11, I placed a question on the Order Paper concerning one C. Arnold Patterson and his employment in the office of the Prime Minister. to date I have received no reply, although subsequent questions that I placed on the Order Paper have been answered. Madam Speaker, the matter has come to the fore because that same Mr. Patterson is now appearing before the CRTC seeking an application for a television licence for the City of Halifax. Part of the relevance of the question that has now come to the forefront about this same C. Arnold Patterson is that he may have been guilty of a breach of conflict of interest provisions pertaining to employment in the Prime Minister's Office because of his involvement at that time in the broadcasting business.

I think it is very important that this question be answered. It is a simple question and dates back in time to March of 1979 when similar questions were not answered. It seeks only factual information. It can be answered very briefly and very quickly. I wonder why the government does not see fit to answer this vital question.

Mr. Smith: I will look into this matter and make a representation to the minister.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining question be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands will be moving the subamendment referred to a moment ago by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain. The hon. member said that the matter would take about 15 minutes.

If there is general agreement that immediately following the vote or votes I would be recognized as the first speaker on the resumption of the debate of the main resolution, we are prepared to agree to the motion being made and spoken to by the mover, that we have the right of response by one of our members, and then naturally the government would have the right of response through the minister, whom I assume would respond to it. Then the votes would both be taken on the proposed subamendment and upon the amendment of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Subject to those stipulations, we would be prepared to accept the proposal of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Pinard: Do you agree to that?

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we have absolutely no objection to the situation as described by the House leader for the official opposition. We will be happy to have our amendment put as quickly as the Chair calls the order, and we can dispose of it as quickly as hon. members will allow the disposition to take place.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, now that my friends are agreed, I certainly do not want to break up this happy alliance, and we shall support the proposal made by the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I do hope, however, that when the hon. member speaks after the vote on the amendement, we can then expect to have speeches of not more than twenty minutes, and that if the member for Yukon moves an amendment, it will comply with the accord between the provinces and the federal government. I am not making this a formal condition, but it would show whether the Progressive Conservative Party is serious in its desire to expedite the debate so that we can complete it this week, or whether he is just trying to play for time.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: No, Madam Speaker, I hope that that was not a condition. The amendment that I would be proposing, when recognized immediately following the vote on both the subamendment and the amendment of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, would be calling for the deletion of Clause 41, subclause (1), paragraphs (e) and (f) of the resolution having reference to the extension of provincial boundaries northward and subjecting the creation of new provinces to the amending formula. That is the nature of our amendment.

What I have to say on behalf of this 40 per cent of Canada and these two territories would go beyond 20 minutes. I fully intend to use the 40 minutes to speak on behalf of those northern Canadians who have not yet been heard at all in this process.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it has become obvious that the amendment that the hon. member intends to move will not reflect the accord. It has also become obvious that the hon. member does not agree to 20 minutes speeches. This is a clear indication that the Tory party does not intend to have this debate end in a reasonable length of time. Nevertheless, we are willing to vote on the subamendment and on the amendment, as suggested by the hon. member for the Yukon.

• (1520)

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I should like to respond briefly to the comments of the Hon. President of the Privy Council and allay one fear which I read into them, and that is that the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Yukon would break the accord.

Mr. Pinard: Right.

Mr. Epp: I want to indicate to him that while he may have that fear—and I will not try to dissuade him otherwise—there has been work done regarding Section 41.

Mr. Nielsen: We have been working.

Mr. Epp: I do not want to leave him with the impression that all the "t"s have been crossed and all the "i"s have been dotted. That work is still continuing. I would ask him not only for patience but also for the good will which we are, frankly, trying to show to see if we cannot resolve this issue in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: In the same way as it was done for women's rights and native rights.

Mr. Epp: Therefore, it would allow the people north of 60 the same good will and the same feeling toward a new Constitution for Canada as we hope all Canadians will have when this matter is completed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not question the good faith of the member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), but there have been incidents since this debate, which was supposed to last two days according to the previous agreement, was resumed. So many incidents, in fact, that we have the impression the Progressive Conservative Party is not interested in having this debate come to an end within a reasonable period of time.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that is the first note of rancour which I have heard injected into the debate since it started a few short days ago.

Mr. McDermid: It is very unfair.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not think the government House leader is justified in making a charge such as that, since we voted on one of the amendments yesterday, we will be voting on a new subamendment of which we had no knowledge until it was announced today, and we will be voting on the main amendment to the resolution of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. All of the offers to vote, both yesterday and today, have come from this party.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there could be 100 amendments and 100 subamendments. We on this side have always wanted, when dealing with amendments and subamendments, to respect the accord. I am saying that all attempts to move amendments and subamendments which go against the accord are a clear indication that there is not the will to conclude the debate in a reasonable length of time.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonsense!

Mr. Pinard: We will have a better idea at the end of the day.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to assure both the House leader of the government and the House leader of the official opposition that we would be quite prepared to sit down to work out any necessary arrangement to allow all outstanding amendments to be dealt with and for the final vote on the constitutional package to take place very quickly. I am available; I will be here all day today, tomorrow, Saturday and Sunday. If they need any help, they can give me a call.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, now that is the kind of good faith and good will we expect from the Progressive Conservative Party. If the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party could show the same flexibility and the same good faith, I would have to take back what I said earlier. But if he does not, we shall draw our own conclusions.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I really do not know what the Grit House leader has in mind when he says that.

Mr. Cousineau: What is in your mind?

Mr. Nielsen: I am on the record of yesterday as making two attempts to get the vote taken, the second of which was finally accepted. I am on the record of today as making an offer to vote on the main motion. That offer was not accepted. As I said, we were prepared to get it out of the way right after question period. What is causing the hold-up? It is another subamendment from those hon. fellows on my left. Who is acting in good faith here, when the suggestions are coming from this party?

The hon. minister knows, without being told by me now, that I am available at any time. Indeed, I have made some suggestions to him which he well knows on the score of arranging debate and voting on the amendment. I did that long ago.

Mr. Waddell: This sounds like kindergarten.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member will just stop his yapping and listen a minute, he might learn something. We are still available to conduct any meaningful negotiations in the spirit in which negotiations are normally carried on in House leaders' meetings, where discussions are kept confidential. I am sure we can work out an arrangement for handling the remainder of the debate. It is up to the government House leader to call House leaders' meetings. He knows that I am here every day and throughout the weekend as well.

Mr. Pinard: We have agreed to keep confidential what is discussed in House leaders' meetings.

Mr. Epp: Well done.

Mr. Pinard: What is not said cannot be kept confidential. The hon. member said that he made proposals to organize debate on the main resolution. I do not think I am betraying the secrecy of our meeting by saying that that is not my understanding. On the contrary; his contribution has been clearly established and defined by my hon. colleague of the NDP yesterday and today in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Your bedmate.

Mr. Pinard: If he is now considering discussing seriously the conclusion of the debate, not on subamendments or amendments but on the main resolution, in a reasonable length of time, it is good news for me. I am willing to discuss that with him right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Any time, any time.

Mr. Epp: Anywhere, any place.

Mr. Nielsen: Anywhere, any place, 24 hours a day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I should just like to say to those two cosy partners that I will not interfere with them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Often I feel that three is a crowd, but in this situation I do not at all. I point out that both subamendments on the motion have been from the little red rump, not from here.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I should just like to make one point about the cosy arrangement. I was not party to the discussions today between the House leader of the official opposition and the House leader of the government when they arranged what was put on the floor of the House by them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is absolutely right. However, I did inform him of my conversation with the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

In answer to the offer of the hon. member for Yukon, I am willing to meet him right now in my office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 25, consideration of the amended motion of Mr. Chrétien:

THAT, WHEREAS in the past certain amendments to the Constitution of Canada have been made by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at the request and with the consent of Canada;

AND WHEREAS it is in accord with the status of Canada as an independent state that Canadians be able to amend their Constitution in Canada in all respects;

AND WHEREAS it is also desirable to provide in the Constitution of Canada for the recognition of certain fundamental rights and freedoms and to make other amendments to that Constitution;

A respectful address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, respectfully approach Your Majesty, requesting that you may graciously be pleased to cause to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom a measure containing the recitals and clauses hereinafter set forth:

CONSIDÉRANT :
que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni a modifié à plusieurs reprises la Constitution du Canada à la demande et avec le consentement de celui-ci;

que, de par le statut d'État indépendant du Canada, il est légitime que les Canadiens aient tout pouvoir pour modifier leur Constitution au Canada;

qu'il est souhaitable d'inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada la reconnaissance de certains droits et libertés fondamentaux et d'y apporter d'autres modifications,

il est proposé que soit présentée respectueusement à Sa Majesté la Reine l'adresse dont la teneur suit :

A Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine,
Très Gracieuse Souveraine :

Nous, membres de la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement, fidèles sujets de Votre Majesté, demandons respectueusement à Votre Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi ainsi conçu :

ANNEXE A—SCHEDULE A

An Act to give effect to a request by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada

Loi donnant suite à une demande du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes du Canada

Whereas Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to give effect to the provisions hereinafter set forth and the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty requesting that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a Bill to be laid before the Parliament of the United Kingdom for that purpose.

Sa Très Excellente Majesté la Reine, considérant :

qu'à la demande et avec le consentement du Canada, le Parlement du Royaume-Uni est invité à adopter une loi visant à donner effet aux dispositions énoncées ci-après et que le Sénat et la Chambre des communes du Canada réunis en Parlement ont présenté une adresse demandant à Sa Très Gracieuse Majesté de bien vouloir faire déposer devant le Parlement du Royaume-Uni un projet de loi à cette fin,

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

sur l'avis et du consentement des Lords spirituels et temporels et des Communes réunis en Parlement, et par l'autorité de celui-ci, édicte :

Constitution Act, 1981 enacted

1. The Constitution Act, 1981 set out in Schedule B to this Act is hereby enacted for and shall have the force of law in Canada and shall come into force as provided in that Act.

Adoption de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981

1. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1981, énoncée à l'annexe B, est édictée pour le Canada et y a force de loi. Elle entre en vigueur conformément à ses dispositions.

Termination of power to legislate for Canada

2. No Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the Constitution Act, 1981 comes into force shall extend to Canada as part of its law.

Cessation du pouvoir de légiférer pour le Canada

2. Les lois adoptées par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni après l'entrée en vigueur de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1981 ne font pas partie du droit du Canada.

French version

3. So far as it is not contained in Schedule B, the French version of this Act is set out in Schedule A to this Act and has the same authority in Canada as the English version thereof.

Version française

3. La partie de la version française de la présente loi qui figure à l'annexe A a force de loi au Canada au même titre que la version anglaise correspondante.

Short title

4. This Act may be cited as the Canada Act.

Titre abrégé

4. Titre abrégé de la présente loi : Loi sur le Canada.

PART I

CANADIAN CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law:

Guarantee of Rights and Freedoms

Rights and freedoms in Canada

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Fundamental Freedoms

Fundamental freedoms

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Democratic Rights

Democratic rights of citizens

3. Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Maximum duration of legislative bodies

4. (1) No House of Commons and no legislative assembly shall continue for longer than five years from the date fixed for the return of the writs at a general election of its members.

Continuation in special circumstances

(2) In time of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection, a House of Commons may be continued by Parliament and a legislative assembly may be continued by the legislature beyond five years if such continuation is not opposed by the votes of more than one-third of the members of the House

ANNEXE B

LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1981

PARTIE I

CHARTE CANADIENNE DES DROITS ET LIBERTÉS

Attendu que le Canada est fondé sur des principes qui reconnaissent la suprématie de Dieu et la primauté du droit :

Garantie des droits et libertés

Droits et libertés au Canada

1. La Charte canadienne des droits et libertés garantit les droits et libertés qui y sont énoncés. Ils ne peuvent être restreints que par une règle de droit, dans des limites qui soient raisonnables et dont la justification puisse se démontrer dans le cadre d'une société libre et démocratique.

Libertés fondamentales

Libertés fondamentales

2. Chacun a les libertés fondamentales suivantes :

a) liberté de conscience et de religion;

b) liberté de pensée, de croyance, d'opinion et d'expression, y compris la liberté de la presse et des autres moyens de communication;

c) liberté de réunion pacifique;

d) liberté d'association.

Droits démocratiques

Droits démocratiques des citoyens

3. Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de vote et est éligible aux élections législatives fédérales ou provinciales.

Mandat maximal des assemblées

4. (1) Le mandat maximal de la Chambre des communes et des assemblées législatives est de cinq ans à compter de la date fixée pour le retour des brefs relatifs aux élections générales correspondantes.

Prolongations spéciales

(2) Le mandat de la Chambre des communes ou celui d'une assemblée législative peut être prolongé respectivement par le Parlement ou par la législature en question au-delà de cinq ans en cas de guerre, d'invasion ou d'insurrection, réelles ou appréhendées, pourvu que cette prolongation ne fasse pas

of Commons or the legislative assembly, as the case may be.

l'objet d'une opposition exprimée par les voix de plus du tiers des députés de la Chambre des communes ou de l'assemblée législative.

Annual sitting of legislative bodies

5. There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

Séance annuelle

5. Le Parlement et les législatures tiennent une séance au moins une fois tous les douze mois.

Mobility Rights

Liberté de circulation et d'établissement

Mobility of citizens

6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

Liberté de circulation

6. (1) Tout citoyen canadien a le droit de demeurer au Canada, d'y entrer ou d'en sortir.

Rights to move and gain livelihood

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

(a) to move to and take up residence in any province; and

(b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

Liberté d'établissement

(2) Tout citoyen canadien et toute personne ayant le statut de résident permanent au Canada ont le droit :

a) de se déplacer dans tout le pays et d'établir leur résidence dans toute province;

b) de gagner leur vie dans toute province.

Limitation

(3) The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to

(a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence; and

(b) any laws providing for reasonable residency requirements as a qualification for the receipt of publicly provided social services.

Restriction

(3) Les droits mentionnés au paragraphe (2) sont subordonnés :

a) aux lois et usages d'application générale en vigueur dans une province donnée, s'ils n'établissent entre les personnes aucune distinction fondée principalement sur la province de résidence antérieure ou actuelle;

b) aux lois prévoyant de justes conditions de résidence en vue de l'obtention des services sociaux publics.

Affirmative action programs

(4) Subsections (2) and (3) do not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration in a province of conditions of individuals in that province who are socially or economically disadvantaged if the rate of employment in that province is below the rate of employment in Canada.

Programmes de promotion sociale

(4) Les paragraphes (2) et (3) n'ont pas pour objet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer, dans une province, la situation d'individus défavorisés socialement ou économiquement, si le taux d'emploi dans la province est inférieur à la moyenne nationale.

Legal Rights

Garanties juridiques

Life, liberty and security of person

7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

Vie, liberté et sécurité

7. Chacun a droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la sécurité de sa personne; il ne peut être porté atteinte à ce droit qu'en conformité avec les principes de justice fondamentale.

Search or seizure

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

Fouilles, perquisitions ou saisies

8. Chacun a droit à la protection contre les fouilles, les perquisitions ou les saisies abusives.

Detention or imprisonment

9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

Détention ou emprisonnement

9. Chacun a droit à la protection contre la détention ou l'emprisonnement arbitraires.

The Constitution

Arrest or detention

10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention

(a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;

(b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and

(c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

Proceedings in criminal and penal matters

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

(a) to be informed without unreasonable delay of the specific offence;

(b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

(c) not to be compelled to be a witness in proceedings against that person in respect of the offence;

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal;

(e) not to be denied reasonable bail without just cause;

(f) except in the case of an offence under military law tried before a military tribunal, to the benefit of trial by jury where the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for five years or a more severe punishment;

(g) not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations;

(h) if finally acquitted of the offence, not to be tried for it again and, if finally found guilty and punished for the offence, not to be tried or punished for it again; and

(i) if found guilty of the offence and if the punishment for the offence has been varied between the time of commission and the time of sentencing, to the benefit of the lesser punishment.

Arrestation ou détention

10. Chacun a le droit, en cas d'arrestation ou de détention :

a) d'être informé dans les plus brefs délais des motifs de son arrestation ou de sa détention;

b) d'avoir recours sans délai à l'assistance d'un avocat et d'être informé de ce droit;

c) de faire contrôler, par habeas corpus, la légalité de sa détention et d'obtenir, le cas échéant, sa libération.

Affaires criminelles et pénales

11. Tout inculpé a le droit :

a) d'être informé sans délai anormal de l'infraction précise qu'on lui reproche;

b) d'être jugé dans un délai raisonnable;

c) de ne pas être contraint de témoigner contre lui-même dans toute poursuite intentée contre lui pour l'infraction qu'on lui reproche;

d) d'être présumé innocent tant qu'il n'est pas déclaré coupable, conformément à la loi, par un tribunal indépendant et impartial à l'issue d'un procès public et équitable;

e) de ne pas être privé sans juste cause d'une mise en liberté assortie d'un cautionnement raisonnable;

f) sauf s'il s'agit d'une infraction relevant de la justice militaire, de bénéficier d'un procès avec jury lorsque la peine maximale prévue pour l'infraction dont il est accusé est un emprisonnement de cinq ans ou une peine plus grave;

g) de ne pas être déclaré coupable en raison d'une action ou d'une omission qui, au moment où elle est survenue, ne constituait pas une infraction d'après le droit interne du Canada ou le droit international et n'avait pas de caractère criminel d'après les principes généraux de droit reconnus par l'ensemble des nations;

h) d'une part de ne pas être jugé de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement acquitté, d'autre part de ne pas être jugé ni puni de nouveau pour une infraction dont il a été définitivement déclaré coupable et puni;

i) de bénéficier de la peine la moins sévère, lorsque la peine qui sanctionne l'infraction dont il est déclaré coupable est

modifiée entre le moment de la perpétration de l'infraction et celui de la sentence.

Treatment or punishment

12. Everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment.

12. Chacun a droit à la protection contre tous traitements ou peines cruels et inusités.

Cruauté

Self-crimination

13. A witness who testifies in any proceedings has the right not to have any incriminating evidence so given used to incriminate that witness in any other proceedings, except in a prosecution for perjury or for the giving of contradictory evidence.

13. Chacun a droit à ce qu'aucun témoignage incriminant qu'il donne ne soit utilisé pour l'incriminer dans d'autres procédures, sauf lors de poursuites pour parjure ou pour témoignages contradictoires.

Témoignage incriminant

Interpreter

14. A party or witness in any proceedings who does not understand or speak the language in which the proceedings are conducted or who is deaf has the right to the assistance of an interpreter.

14. La partie ou le témoin qui ne peuvent suivre les procédures, soit parce qu'ils ne comprennent pas ou ne parlent pas la langue employée, soit parce qu'ils sont atteints de surdité, ont droit à l'assistance d'un interprète.

Equality Rights

Droits à l'égalité

Equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

15. (1) La loi ne fait acception de personne et s'applique également à tous, et tous ont droit à la même protection et au même bénéfice de la loi, indépendamment de toute discrimination, notamment des discriminations fondées sur la race, l'origine nationale ou ethnique, la couleur, la religion, le sexe, l'âge ou les déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Égalité devant la loi, égalité de bénéfice et protection égale de la loi

Affirmative action programs

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Le paragraphe (1) n'a pas pour effet d'interdire les lois, programmes ou activités destinés à améliorer la situation d'individus ou de groupes défavorisés, notamment du fait de leur race, de leur origine nationale ou ethnique, de leur couleur, de leur religion, de leur sexe, de leur âge ou de leurs déficiences mentales ou physiques.

Communications by public with federal institutions

20. (1) Any member of the public in Canada has the right to communicate with, and to receive available services from, any head or central office of an institution of the Parliament or government of Canada in English or French, and has the same right with respect to any other office of any such institution where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in such language; or

20. (1) Le public a, au Canada, droit à l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais pour communiquer avec le siège ou l'administration centrale des institutions du Parlement ou du gouvernement du Canada ou pour en recevoir les services; il a le même droit à l'égard de tout autre bureau de ces institutions là où, selon le cas :

a) l'emploi du français ou de l'anglais fait l'objet d'une demande importante;

b) l'emploi du français et de l'anglais se justifie par la vocation du bureau.

Communications entre les administrés et les institutions fédérales

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Communications by public with New Brunswick institutions

Rights and privileges preserved

22. Nothing in sections 16 to 20 abrogates or derogates from any legal or customary right or privilege acquired or enjoyed either before or after the coming into force of this Charter with respect to any language that is not English or French.

22. Les articles 16 à 20 n'ont pas pour effet de porter atteinte aux droits et privilèges, antérieurs ou postérieurs à l'entrée en vigueur de la présente charte et découlant de la loi ou de la coutume, des langues autres que le français ou l'anglais.

Droits préservés

Minority Language Educational Rights

Droits à l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité

Language of instruction

23. (1) Citizens of Canada

(a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside, or

(b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province,

have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province.

23. (1) Les citoyens canadiens :

a) dont la première langue apprise et encore comprise est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province où ils résident,

b) qui ont reçu leur instruction, au niveau primaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada et qui résident dans une province où la langue dans laquelle ils ont reçu cette instruction est celle de la minorité francophone ou anglophone de la province,

ont, dans l'un ou l'autre cas, le droit d'y faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans cette langue.

Langue d'instruction

Continuity of language instruction

(2) Citizens of Canada of whom any child has received or is receiving primary or secondary school instruction in English or French in Canada, have the right to have all their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the same language.

(2) Les citoyens canadiens dont un enfant a reçu ou reçoit son instruction, au niveau primaire ou secondaire, en français ou en anglais au Canada ont le droit de faire instruire tous leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de cette instruction.

Continuité d'emploi de la langue d'instruction

Application where numbers warrant

(3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of a province

(a) applies wherever in the province the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision to them out of public funds of minority language instruction; and

(b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

Justification par le nombre

(3) Le droit reconnu aux citoyens canadiens par les paragraphes (1) et (2) de faire instruire leurs enfants, aux niveaux primaire et secondaire, dans la langue de la minorité francophone ou anglophone d'une province :

a) s'exerce partout dans la province où le nombre des enfants des citoyens qui ont ce droit est suffisant pour justifier à leur endroit la prestation, sur les fonds publics, de l'instruction dans la langue de la minorité;

b) comprend, lorsque le nombre de ces enfants le justifie, le droit de les faire instruire dans des établissements d'enseignement de la minorité linguistique financés sur les fonds publics.

Enforcement

Enforcement of guaranteed rights and freedoms

24. (1) Anyone whose rights or freedoms, as guaranteed by this Charter, have been infringed or denied may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to obtain such remedy as the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances.

Exclusion of evidence bringing administration of justice into disrepute

(2) Where, in proceedings under subsection (1), a court concludes that evidence was obtained in a manner that infringed or denied any rights or freedoms guaranteed by this Charter, the evidence shall be excluded if it is established that, having regard to all the circumstances, the admission of it in the proceedings would bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

Recours

Recours en cas d'atteinte aux droits et libertés

24. (1) Toute personne, victime de violation ou de négation des droits ou libertés qui lui sont garantis par la présente charte, peut s'adresser à un tribunal compétent pour obtenir la réparation que le tribunal estime convenable et juste eu égard aux circonstances.

Irrecevabilité d'éléments de preuve qui risqueraient de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice

(2) Lorsque, dans une instance visée au paragraphe (1), le tribunal a conclu que des éléments de preuve ont été obtenus dans des conditions qui portent atteinte aux droits ou libertés garantis par la présente charte, ces éléments de preuve sont écartés s'il est établi, eu égard aux circonstances, que leur utilisation est susceptible de déconsidérer l'administration de la justice.

General

Aboriginal rights and freedoms not affected by Charter

25. The guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms that pertain to the aboriginal peoples of Canada including

(a) any rights or freedoms that have been recognized by the Royal Proclamation of October 7, 1763; and

(b) any rights or freedoms that may be acquired by the aboriginal peoples of Canada by way of land claims settlement.

Dispositions générales

Maintien des droits et libertés des autochtones

25. Le fait que la présente charte garantit certains droits et libertés ne porte pas atteinte aux droits ou libertés — ancestraux, issus de traités ou autres — des peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment :

a) aux droits ou libertés reconnus par la Proclamation royale du 7 octobre 1763;

b) aux droits ou libertés acquis par règlement de revendications territoriales.

27. This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

27. Toute interprétation de la présente charte doit concorder avec l'objectif de promouvoir le maintien et la valorisation du patrimoine multiculturel des Canadiens.

Maintien du patrimoine culturel

Rights guaranteed equally to both sexes

28. Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

28. Indépendamment des autres dispositions de la présente charte, les droits et libertés qui y sont mentionnés sont garantis également aux personnes des deux sexes.

Égalité de garantie des droits pour les deux sexes

Rights respecting certain schools preserved

29. Nothing in this Charter abrogates or derogates from any rights or privileges guaranteed by or under the Constitution of Canada in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools.

29. Les dispositions de la présente charte ne portent pas atteinte aux droits ou privilèges garantis en vertu de la Constitution du Canada concernant les écoles séparées et autres écoles confessionnelles.

Maintien des droits relatifs à certaines écoles

Application to territories and territorial authorities

30. A reference in this Charter to a province or to the legislative assembly or legislature of a province shall be deemed to include a reference to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, or to the appropriate legislative authority thereof, as the case may be.

30. Dans la présente charte, les dispositions qui visent les provinces, leur législature ou leur assemblée législative visent également le territoire du Yukon, les territoires du Nord-Ouest ou leurs autorités législatives compétentes.

Application aux territoires

Legislative powers not extended

31. Nothing in this Charter extends the legislative powers of any body or authority.

31. La présente charte n'élargit pas les compétences législatives de quelque organisme ou autorité que ce soit.

Non-élargissement des compétences législatives

Application of Charter

Application de la charte

Application of Charter

32. (1) This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament including all matters relating to the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories; and

(b) to the legislature and government of each province in respect of all matters within the authority of the legislature of each province.

32. (1) La présente charte s'applique :

a) au Parlement et au gouvernement du Canada, pour tous les domaines relevant du Parlement, y compris ceux qui concernent le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest;

b) à la législature et au gouvernement de chaque province, pour tous les domaines relevant de cette législature.

Application de la charte

Exception

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), section 15 shall not have effect until three years after this section comes into force.

(2) Par dérogation au paragraphe (1), l'article 15 n'a d'effet que trois ans après l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.

Restriction

Exception where express declaration

33. (1) Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

33. (1) Le Parlement ou la législature d'une province peut adopter une loi où il est expressément déclaré que celle-ci ou une de ses dispositions a effet indépendamment d'une disposition donnée de l'article 2 ou des articles 7 à 15 de la présente charte.

Dérogation par déclaration expresse

Operation of exception

(2) An Act or a provision of an Act in respect of which a declaration made under this section is in effect shall have such operation as it would have but for the provision of this Charter referred to in the declaration.

Five year limitation

(3) A declaration made under subsection (1) shall cease to have effect five years after it comes into force or on such earlier date as may be specified in the declaration.

Re-enactment

(4) Parliament or a legislature of a province may re-enact a declaration made under subsection (1).

Five year limitation

(5) Subsection (3) applies in respect of a re-enactment made under subsection (4).

Effet de la dérogation

(2) La loi ou la disposition qui fait l'objet d'une déclaration conforme au présent article et en vigueur a l'effet qu'elle aurait sauf la disposition en cause de la charte.

Durée de validité

(3) La déclaration visée au paragraphe (1) cesse d'avoir effet à la date qui y est précisée ou, au plus tard, cinq ans après son entrée en vigueur.

Nouvelle adoption

(4) Le Parlement ou une législature peut adopter de nouveau une déclaration visée au paragraphe (1).

Durée de validité

(5) Le paragraphe (3) s'applique à toute déclaration adoptée sous le régime du paragraphe (4).

PART II

EQUALIZATION AND REGIONAL DISPARITIES

Commitment to promote equal opportunities

35. (1) Without altering the legislative authority of Parliament or of the provincial legislatures, or the rights of any of them with respect to the exercise of their legislative authority, Parliament and the legislatures, together with the government of Canada and the provincial governments, are committed to

(a) promoting equal opportunities for the well-being of Canadians;

(b) furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities; and

(c) providing essential public services of reasonable quality to all Canadians.

Commitment respecting public services

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

PARTIE II

PÉRÉQUATION ET INÉGALITÉS RÉGIONALES

Engagements relatifs à l'égalité des chances

35. (1) Sous réserve des compétences législatives du Parlement et des législatures et de leur droit de les exercer, le Parlement et les législatures, ainsi que les gouvernements fédéral et provinciaux, s'engagent à :

a) promouvoir l'égalité des chances de tous les Canadiens dans la recherche de leur bien-être;

b) favoriser le développement économique pour réduire l'inégalité des chances;

c) fournir à tous les Canadiens, à un niveau de qualité acceptable, les services publics essentiels.

Engagement relatif aux services publics

(2) Le Parlement et le gouvernement du Canada prennent l'engagement de principe de faire des paiements de péréquation propres à donner aux gouvernements provinciaux des revenus suffisants pour les mettre en mesure d'assurer les services publics à un niveau de qualité et de fiscalité sensiblement comparables.

PART III

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Constitutional conference

36. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within one year after this Part comes into force.

Participation of aboriginal peoples

(2) The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

Participation of territories

(3) The Prime Minister of Canada shall invite elected representatives of the governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories to participate in the discussions on any item on the agenda of the conference convened under subsection (1) that, in the opinion of the Prime Minister, directly affects the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

PARTIE III

CONFÉRENCE CONSTITUTIONNELLE

Conférence constitutionnelle

36. (1) Dans l'année suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même.

Participation des peuples autochtones

(2) Sont placées à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) les questions constitutionnelles qui intéressent directement les peuples autochtones du Canada, notamment la détermination et la définition des droits de ces peuples à inscrire dans la Constitution du Canada. Le premier ministre du Canada invite leurs représentants à participer aux travaux relatifs à ces questions.

Participation des territoires

(3) Le premier ministre du Canada invite des représentants élus des gouvernements du territoire du Yukon et des territoires du Nord-Ouest à participer aux travaux relatifs à toute question placée à l'ordre du jour de la conférence visée au paragraphe (1) et qui, selon lui, intéresse directement le territoire du Yukon et les territoires du Nord-Ouest.

PART IV

PROCEDURE FOR AMENDING CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

General procedure for amending Constitution of Canada

37. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons; and

(b) resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least fifty per cent of the population of all the provinces.

PARTIE IV

PROCÉDURE DE MODIFICATION DE LA CONSTITUTION DU CANADA

Procédure normale de modification

37. (1) La Constitution du Canada peut être modifiée par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée à la fois :

a) par des résolutions du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes;

b) par des résolutions des assemblées législatives d'au moins deux tiers des provinces dont la population confondue représente, selon le recensement général le plus récent à l'époque, au moins cinquante pour cent de la population de toutes les provinces.

Majorité simple

(2) Une modification faite conformément au paragraphe (1) mais dérogatoire à la compétence législative, aux droits de propriété ou à tous autres droits ou privilèges

ernment of a province shall require a resolution supported by a majority of the members of each of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies required under subsection (1).

d'une législature ou d'un gouvernement provincial exige une résolution adoptée à la majorité des sénateurs, des députés fédéraux et des députés de chacune des assemblées législatives du nombre requis de provinces.

Expression of dissent

(3) An amendment referred to in subsection (2) shall not have effect in a province the legislative assembly of which has expressed its dissent thereto by resolution supported by a majority of its members prior to the issue of the proclamation to which the amendment relates unless that legislative assembly, subsequently, by resolution supported by a majority of its members, revokes its dissent and authorizes the amendment.

Désaccord

(3) La modification visée au paragraphe (2) est sans effet dans une province dont l'assemblée législative a, avant la prise de la proclamation, exprimé son désaccord par une résolution adoptée à la majorité des députés, sauf si cette assemblée, par résolution également adoptée à la majorité, revient sur son désaccord et autorise la modification.

Revocation of dissent

(4) A resolution of dissent made for the purposes of subsection (3) may be revoked at any time before or after the issue of the proclamation to which it relates.

Levée du désaccord

(4) La résolution de désaccord visée au paragraphe (3) peut être révoquée à tout moment, indépendamment de la date de la proclamation à laquelle elle se rapporte.

Restriction on proclamation

38. (1) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) before the expiration of one year from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder, unless the legislative assembly of each province has previously adopted a resolution of assent or dissent.

Restriction

38. (1) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise dans l'année suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification que si l'assemblée législative de chaque province a préalablement adopté une résolution d'agrément ou de désaccord.

Idem

(2) A proclamation shall not be issued under subsection 37(1) after the expiration of three years from the adoption of the resolution initiating the amendment procedure thereunder.

Idem

(2) La proclamation visée au paragraphe 37(1) ne peut être prise que dans les trois ans suivant l'adoption de la résolution à l'origine de la procédure de modification.

Compensation

39. Where an amendment is made under subsection 37(1) that transfers provincial legislative powers relating to education or other cultural matters from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

Compensation

39. Le Canada fournit une juste compensation aux provinces auxquelles ne s'applique pas une modification faite conformément au paragraphe 37(1) et relative, en matière d'éducation ou dans d'autres domaines culturels, à un transfert de compétences législatives provinciales au Parlement.

Amendment by unanimous consent

40. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

Consentement unanime

40. Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province :

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

a) la charge de Reine, celle de gouverneur général et celle de lieutenant-gouverneur;

(b) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province is entitled to be represented at the time this Part comes into force;

(c) subject to section 42, the use of the English or the French language;

(d) the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(e) an amendment to this Part.

b) le droit d'une province d'avoir à la Chambre des communes un nombre de députés au moins égal à celui des sénateurs par lesquels elle est habilitée à être représentée lors de l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie;

c) sous réserve de l'article 42, l'usage du français ou de l'anglais;

d) la composition de la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) la modification de la présente partie.

Amendment by general procedure

41. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 37(1):

(a) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) subject to paragraph 40(d), the Supreme Court of Canada;

(e) the extension of existing provinces into the territories; and

(f) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces.

Procédure normale de modification

41. (1) Toute modification de la Constitution du Canada portant sur les questions suivantes se fait conformément au paragraphe 37(1) :

a) le principe de la représentation proportionnelle des provinces à la Chambre des communes prévu par la Constitution du Canada;

b) les pouvoirs du Sénat et le mode de sélection des sénateurs;

c) le nombre des sénateurs par lesquels une province est habilitée à être représentée et les conditions de résidence qu'ils doivent remplir;

d) sous réserve de l'alinéa 40*d*), la Cour suprême du Canada;

e) le rattachement aux provinces existantes de tout ou partie des territoires;

f) par dérogation à toute autre loi ou usage, la création de provinces.

Exception

(2) Subsections 37(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

Exception

(2) Les paragraphes 37(2) à (4) ne s'appliquent pas aux questions mentionnées au paragraphe (1).

Amendment of provisions relating to some but not all provinces

42. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, provinces, including

(a) any alteration to boundaries between provinces, and

(b) any amendment to any provision that relates to the use of the English or the French language within a province,

may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons

Modification à l'égard de certaines provinces

42. Les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada applicables à certaines provinces seulement ne peuvent être modifiées que par proclamation du gouverneur général sous le grand sceau du Canada, autorisée par des résolutions du Sénat, de la Chambre des communes et de l'assemblée législative de chaque province concernée. Le présent article s'applique notamment :

a) aux changements du tracé des frontières interprovinciales;

b) aux modifications des dispositions relatives à l'usage du français ou de l'anglais dans une province.

and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies.

Amendments by Parliament

43. Subject to sections 40 and 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons.

Modification par le Parlement

43. Sous réserve des articles 40 et 41, le Parlement a compétence exclusive pour modifier les dispositions de la Constitution du Canada relatives au pouvoir exécutif fédéral, au Sénat ou à la Chambre des communes.

Amendments by provincial legislatures

44. Subject to section 40, the legislature of each province may exclusively make laws amending the constitution of the province.

Modification par les législatures

44. Sous réserve de l'article 40, une législature a compétence exclusive pour modifier la constitution de sa province.

Initiation of amendment procedures

45. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 37, 40, 41 and 42 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province.

Initiative des procédures

45. (1) L'initiative des procédures de modification visées aux articles 37, 40, 41 et 42 appartient au Sénat, à la Chambre des communes ou à une assemblée législative.

Revocation of authorization

(2) A resolution of assent made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Possibilité de révocation

(2) Une résolution d'agrément adoptée dans le cadre de la présente partie peut être révoquée à tout moment avant la date de la proclamation qu'elle autorise.

Amendments without Senate resolution

46. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 37, 40, 41 or 42 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution.

Modification sans résolution du Sénat

46. (1) Dans les cas visés à l'article 37, 40, 41 ou 42, il peut être passé outre au défaut d'autorisation du Sénat si celui-ci n'a pas adopté de résolution dans un délai de cent quatre-vingts jours suivant l'adoption de celle de la Chambre des communes et si cette dernière, après l'expiration du délai, adopte une nouvelle résolution dans le même sens.

Computation of period

(2) Any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the one hundred and eighty day period referred to in subsection (1).

Computation du délai

(2) Dans la computation du délai visé au paragraphe (1), ne sont pas comptées les périodes pendant lesquelles le Parlement est prorogé ou dissous.

Advice to issue proclamation

47. The Queen's Privy Council for Canada shall advise the Governor General to issue a proclamation under this Part forthwith on the adoption of the resolutions required for an amendment made by proclamation under this Part.

Demande de proclamation

47. Le Conseil privé de la Reine pour le Canada demande au gouverneur général de prendre, conformément à la présente partie, une proclamation dès l'adoption des résolutions prévues par cette partie pour une modification par proclamation.

Constitutional conference

48. A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada within fifteen years after this Part comes into force to review the provisions of this Part.

Conférence constitutionnelle

48. Dans les quinze ans suivant l'entrée en vigueur de la présente partie, le premier ministre du Canada convoque une conférence constitutionnelle réunissant les premiers ministres provinciaux et lui-même, en vue du réexamen des dispositions de cette partie.

PART V

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

Amendment to Constitution Act, 1867

49. The Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867) is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 92 thereof, the following heading and section:

"Non-Renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

Laws respecting non-renewable natural resources, forestry resources and electrical energy

92A. (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

(a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and

(c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Export from provinces of resources

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the production from facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy, but such laws may not authorize or provide for discrimination in prices or in supplies exported to another part of Canada.

Authority of Parliament

(3) Nothing in subsection (2) derogates from the authority of Parliament to enact laws in relation to the matters referred to in that subsection and, where such a law of Parliament and a law of a province conflict, the law of Parliament prevails to the extent of the conflict.

PARTIE V

MODIFICATION DE LA LOI CONSTITUTIONNELLE DE 1867

Modification de la Loi constitutionnelle de 1867

49. La Loi constitutionnelle de 1867 (antérieurement désignée sous le titre : Acte de l'Amérique du Nord britannique, 1867) est modifiée par insertion, après l'article 92, de la rubrique et de l'article suivants :

«Ressources naturelles non renouvelables, ressources forestières et énergie électrique

Compétence provinciale

92A. (1) La législature de chaque province a compétence exclusive pour légiférer dans les domaines suivants :

a) prospection des ressources naturelles non renouvelables de la province;

b) exploitation, conservation et gestion des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, y compris leur rythme de production primaire;

c) aménagement, conservation et gestion des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique.

Exportation hors des provinces

(2) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour légiférer en ce qui concerne l'exportation, hors de la province, à destination d'une autre partie du Canada, de la production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production d'énergie électrique de la province, sous réserve de ne pas adopter de lois autorisant ou prévoyant des disparités de prix ou des disparités dans les exportations destinées à une autre partie du Canada.

Pouvoir du Parlement

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne porte pas atteinte au pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer dans les domaines visés à ce paragraphe, les dispositions d'une loi du Parlement adoptée dans ces domaines l'emportant sur les dispositions incompatibles d'une loi provinciale.

The Constitution

Taxation of resources

(4) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation in respect of

(a) non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province and the primary production therefrom, and

(b) sites and facilities in the province for the generation of electrical energy and the production therefrom, whether or not such production is exported in whole or in part from the province, but such laws may not authorize or provide for taxation that differentiates between production exported to another part of Canada and production not exported from the province.

"Primary production"

(5) The expression "primary production" has the meaning assigned by the Sixth Schedule.

Existing powers or rights

(6) Nothing in subsections (1) to (5) derogates from any powers or rights that a legislature or government of a province had immediately before the coming into force of this section."

Idem

50. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following Schedule:

Taxation des ressources

(4) La législature de chaque province a compétence pour prélever des sommes d'argent par tout mode ou système de taxation :

a) des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières de la province, ainsi que de la production primaire qui en est tirée;

b) des emplacements et des installations de la province destinés à la production d'énergie électrique, ainsi que de cette production même.

Cette compétence peut s'exercer indépendamment du fait que la production en cause soit ou non, en totalité ou en partie, exportée hors de la province, mais les lois adoptées dans ces domaines ne peuvent autoriser ou prévoir une taxation qui établisse une distinction entre la production exportée à destination d'une autre partie du Canada et la production non exportée hors de la province.

«Production primaire»

(5) L'expression «production primaire» a le sens qui lui est donné dans la sixième annexe.

Pouvoirs ou droits existants

(6) Les paragraphes (1) à (5) ne portent pas atteinte aux pouvoirs ou droits détenus par la législature ou le gouvernement d'une province lors de l'entrée en vigueur du présent article.»

Idem

50. Ladite loi est en outre modifiée par adjonction de l'annexe suivante :

"THE SIXTH SCHEDULE

Primary Production from Non-Renewable Natural Resources and Forestry Resources

1. For the purposes of section 92A of this Act,

(a) production from a non-renewable natural resource is primary production therefrom if

(i) it is in the form in which it exists upon its recovery or severance from its natural state, or

«SIXIÈME ANNEXE

Production primaire tirée des ressources naturelles non renouvelables et des ressources forestières

1. Pour l'application de l'article 92A :

a) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource naturelle non renouvelable :

(i) soit le produit qui se présente sous la même forme que lors de son extraction du milieu naturel,

(ii) soit le produit non manufacturé de la transformation, du raffinage ou de

(ii) it is a product resulting from processing or refining the resource, and is not a manufactured product or a product resulting from refining crude oil, refining upgraded heavy crude oil, refining gases or liquids derived from coal or refining a synthetic equivalent of crude oil; and

(b) production from a forestry resource is primary production therefrom if it consists of sawlogs, poles, lumber, wood chips, sawdust or any other primary wood product, or wood pulp, and is not a product manufactured from wood."

l'affinage d'une ressource, à l'exception du produit du raffinage du pétrole brut, du raffinage du pétrole brut lourd amélioré, du raffinage des gaz ou des liquides dérivés du charbon ou du raffinage d'un équivalent synthétique du pétrole brut;

b) on entend par production primaire tirée d'une ressource forestière la production constituée de billots, de poteaux, de bois d'œuvre, de copeaux, de sciure ou d'autre produit primaire du bois, ou de pâte de bois, à l'exception d'un produit manufacturé en bois.»

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Vanier.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, there must be some mistake, because I do not think—I am very surprised to have the floor. Before I go on, Madam Speaker, could you tell me whether I am supposed to address the subamendment? Am I still allowed only twenty minutes, or have all agreements been waived?

Madam Speaker: I would ask the Clerk to read again the order of the day, so that the hon. member will know what he is supposed to address.

(The Clerk read the motion again.)

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I drew from what we just finished discussing that we had agreed to have the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) move his subamendment, to allow an opportunity for debate, and then to go to the vote. I understood that was agreed.

● (1530)

Madam Speaker: I understood that too, but when hon. members do not rise I cannot recognize them. I am sorry, but the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had risen before the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). I did wait a few seconds because I had understood the agreement and there was no House order. If the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier wants to defer, because I think he has understood the wish of the House although an order was not made, perhaps he could make his speech at a later time. That was my understanding. However, I am in the hands of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I understood earlier that we had come to a partial agreement to the effect that the NDP member would move a subamendment and make a short 15-minute speech, after which there would be one speaker for the Conservative Party and perhaps one from the Liberal Party, and that we would then vote both on the subamendment and the amendment, provided that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) could be recognized immediately afterwards. This is what we have agreed to. I thought that this was quite clear and that an order of the House had been made. What the House leaders are now going to discuss in my office concerns something else: shorter speeches and a vote on the main resolution within a very short time. That is what we want to negotiate. It has nothing to do with the agreement which has already been made.

In these circumstances, I respectfully submit that the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) might be recognized later on but that we must first comply with the earlier agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct.

Madam Speaker: That is exactly what I had understood, even though the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has made it quite clear. Certain conditions have been discussed, namely that the speeches be shortened and that the House agree to a number of things. That is why I did not officially ask the House if this were to be made an order. I can do so now. Does the House wish for the proposals explained by the hon. President of the Privy Council to be made an order of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I simply wish to co-operate with the House. I do not want to delay the proceedings, but I have the clear impression that I never heard any public announcement of an agreement by one of the three negotiators. I had been recognized, but I am willing to let the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) speak before me. However, I reserve the right to speak after him or as soon as I can be recognized.

Madam Speaker: I thank the hon. member for yielding with good grace. The situation has not been clearly explained or understood. I tried to clairfy matters by asking that question just now. It seems to me that the reply was very clear and that the House now wishes to hear the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. I certainly hope that the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will have an opportunity to express his views.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to thank hon. members for their courtesy in affording me the opportunity to speak at this time.

Last January when the aboriginal rights clause was first accepted by the constitutional committee, everyone present regarded it as a great step forward for the Indian, Inuit and Metis peoples of Canada. While joining in the general euphoria of the moment, at that time I said that members of the New Democratic Party would be looking very closely at the amending formula for that section. Subsequently, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), obtained a promise from the government that the aboriginal and treaty rights clause would be fully entrenched, as it was, in Section 55(c) of the resolution which was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

On Tuesday of this week the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) moved an amendment to include an aboriginal and treaty rights clause, but he did not include any formula for entrenchment or amendment. In the absence of any such formula the aboriginal people in the provinces are at the mercy of Section 42. Under that section those rights could be altered, amended or even extinguished by bilateral action of the federal government and individual provinces. Aboriginal rights in the Yukon and Northwest Territories could be altered or extinguished by the federal government acting unilaterally.

It is in this context that I wish to move an important amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That the motion of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be amended by adding thereto after Section 35(2) the following:

35(3) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada set out in this part may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the great seal of Canada only in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) In the Yukon and Northwest Territories, when so authorized by resolution of a two-thirds majority vote in the Senate and House of Commons and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected;

(b) In the provinces, when so authorized in accordance with Section 41 and with the consent of a majority of each of the aborignal peoples so affected.

(4) For the purposes referred to in Subsection 3 consent of the aboriginal peoples shall be obtained by a procedure determined by the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, the minister's amendment appears on page 40 of today's Order Paper.

In assessing the importance of this amendment and the need for it, let us begin by reviewing the process we have followed thus far. All of us remember that last October, when the constitutional resolution was first tabled in this House, there was a completely inadequate recognition of aboriginal and treaty rights. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms simply said that nothing would take away rights or freedoms that pertained to the native peoples of Canada. There was absolutely no positive recognition of what those rights might be.

We are aware of the Prime Minister's opposition to the recognition of aboriginal rights. In 1969 he said that, in his opinion, there was no such thing as aboriginal rights. The split decision of the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the case of the Nishgas in northern Brisith Columbia pointed out that there was very substantial legal opinion to the contrary, and he had to admit that maybe these people have more rights than he thought. As a result, the government came forward with a land claims policy but the narrow legalistic basis of this policy made it very difficult for many people to submit their claims and have them recognized.

In a memo submitted over the signature of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development there is a section entitled "Native Title Superseded by Law" which reads as follows:

It appears from an extensive historical and legal review that in settled areas of British Columbia, southern Quebec and Nova Scotia, native title has been superseded by law and as a consequence there is no basis under the 1973 policy for negotiating claims settlements in these areas.

This is the reality under which the native peoples have had to try to negotiate their settlements.

Last November I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if it were not possible to have a clause put in the constitutional resolution that would recognize aboriginal and treaty rights. In his answer he indicated very clearly his own opposition to that kind of recognition.

● (1540)

It seems that the Prime Minister delights in the fact that not all Indian, Inuit and Metis leaders are in perfect agreement concerning rights. He is constantly using this as an excuse for refusing to deal honestly with their concerns, instead of taking a constructive leadership role in bringing these people together, helping them to sort out their priorities and major concerns which could perhaps mesh with the government's concerns. The Prime Minister has delighted in his role as lord of disunity.

In any event, the resolution was referred to the constitutional committee. At that time representatives of different bands, tribal councils and provincial and national organizations came before the committee requesting recognition and entrenchment of their rights. As I said earlier, the government heard and responded to those on January 30. It was a high moment for all people in that committee who were present when a clause was finally inserted into the constitutional proposal which recognized and affirmed the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

However, the aboriginal peoples were not completely satisfied. They wanted a consent clause. It was not that they wanted Clause 34, as it was, to be removed from that proposal; rather, they wanted to go further. They wanted a clause stating that these rights could only be changed or amended with their consent. I ask, was their concern somehow un-Canadian, irrational or out of line?

In recent months we have seen that the provinces are very concerned about their role in the amending formula. The amending formula in the earlier constitutional proposal was acceptable to many hon. members in this House. We felt that it was fair and reasonably flexible. However, it was not acceptable to the majority of the provinces in 1981, even though it had been ten years earlier. Therefore, the provinces went back to the federal government. They lobbied and they got a different amending formula.

If it was right for the provinces to insist upon an amending formula acceptable to them, surely it was a legitimate act for the aboriginal peoples to insist on an amending formula which was acceptable to them and which would protect their rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: The New Democratic Party has always supported and worked for such a clause. We would like to see that, and that is the purpose of our amendment today. The aboriginal people have no sound reason to trust their rights either to the federal or the provincial governments. They want and need all possible protection because they can look back on a history of 440 years of lies, deceptions and broken promises in Canada.

When Jacques Cartier kidnapped Donnacona and other Iroquois and took them to France, he began the long, unsuccessful policy of trying to assimilate the Indian people. When he returned to Canada in 1541, all the Indians who had gone to France had died. Instead of admitting this, Cartier lied and told the other Iroquois that their relatives were living like lords in France and did not want to return. This was the first recorded lie to Canada's aboriginal people. It was the first lie, but absolutely not the last. A cynic might suggest that Jacques Cartier laid the two cornerstones of Canadian Indian policy: forced assimilation and lies.

I would like to give two recent examples showing why the Indian people feel they cannot trust the government. First of all, let us look at the question of the B.C. Indian cut-off lands. Back in the early years of this century, the British Columbia government and the federal government appointed a joint commission known as the McKenna-McBride commission to look into the size of Indian reserves in British Columbia. One of the important conditions was that no changes were to be made in the size of reserves without Indian consent. That was contained in the terms of reference. However, in actual fact thousands of acres of prime land were taken away without such consent, affecting 34 reserves and 22 bands in British Columbia. The government's position has been that this act was legal because it was done by legally formalized orders in council.

The Indian people have struggled for 60 years in an attempt to obtain justice on the B.C. cut-off lands issue, and it is still not resolved. That does not give them any confidence in either the federal government or the provincial government of British Columbia.

Second, we can recall that just a year and a half ago the Prime Minister promised that native leaders would be able to participate in first ministers' conferences in all matters directly relating to them. A section in the constitutional resolution was even tabled and sent to the Supreme Court of Canada last year, and it is still there in the present resolution. It states that native leaders, leaders of the aboriginal peoples, would be invited to the first ministers' conference to participate in discussions respecting constitutional matters which would directly affect the aboriginal peoples. That was the very explicit intent.

When the first ministers' conference was held earlier this month, where were the leaders of the aboriginal peoples. They were waiting in Ottawa. They asked to be present but they were not invited. They were not invited to the kitchen where all the deals were made. They were not even invited to the main conference room to get a chance to state their case. As a matter of fact, there was no public discussion of aboriginal rights at that meeting. The only exception was Saskatchewan, which tabled a counter proposal including the aboriginal rights proposal.

Perhaps we get an idea of what went on when we look at British Columbia's attitude. The Premier of British Columbia first said that the aboriginal rights clause was left out by oversight and that it had not really been discussed at all. However, last week he said: "Yes, we would be willing to reinsert the aboriginal and treaty rights clause if the federal government were willing to pick up the costs". In other words, it all boils down to money. As far as the Social Credit government of British Columbia is concerned, the matter of human rights has a price tag on it.

Right now there are several land claims outstanding in British Columbia. In addition to the Nishga claim, there are the claims of the Gitskan Carrier band, the Kitwancool band, the Association of United Tahltans and the Haisla Nation. The land claims of all of these people have been accepted by the Office of Native Claims for negotiation, subject to provincial participation. However, the province has not indicated any willingness to participate. Other B.C. land claims from the Haida, the Heiltsuk and the Nuu Chalh Nhuh are awaiting word as to their acceptance and they will face the same stone wall attitude from the provincial government, which does not want to recognize aboriginal rights because it will cost money. It will take away from its revenue.

British Columbia and other provinces are worried about the costs of recognizing aboriginal rights. I submit that it is a proper part of their job. There is a price tag to the recognition of rights, and provinces, very naturally, must consider the cost. However, we must condemn the cynical attitude of Premier Bennett and the Social Credit government, as they would only consent to an aboriginal rights clause if the federal government were willing to pick up the tab. Certainly there is a price and we must consider it; but we also must consider the opposite, which is a denial of basic justice. Perhaps the government of British Columbia would remember the fact that it has benefited from the wealth of the land taken from the Indian people of British Columbia. Other governments and provinces have benefited from the land which has been taken.

It is now unacceptable to say that a government will only recognize rights if it can be scot-free of any expense. However, in a larger sense, I believe that we need to move beyond the question of cost. In addition to considering the costs of this program, we need to consider the possibilities. We should ask what contribution the aboriginal peoples of Canada can make to our society if we give them half a chance. What possibilities are there to enrich everybody's life if these people are enabled take their full place in Canadian society? Already they have made great contributions to our society, but they have been stymied and hemmed in by lack of resources and the denial of their rights.

In concluding, I simply want to remind all hon. members of the importance of this act of patriation. I want to remind hon. members that the relationship of the Crown to the aboriginal peoples of Canada is a relationship that predates the relationship of the federal government to the provincial governments. It is important, therefore, that this relationship be placed on a sound basis within our Constitution. If we do not do that, we will have a Constitution that is tainted. We will have a Constitution that has written into it a denial of basic justice.

It was good to see what happened last week when people demanded that aboriginal rights be put back into the Constitution. However, we would have been happier if the word "existing" had not been included. But even more than that, we want to see protection of those rights and we want to see those rights guaranteed to the Indian people, the Metis people and the Inuit people of Canada with an amending formula that protects them and is not at the mercy of unilateral action by the federal government or at the mercy of bilateral action by the federal government and one provincial government. We want to see an amendment which gives these people a say in the continuation of their rights and any change contemplated to their rights.

I urge all hon. members to join members of our party in supporting this very important amendment.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept just one question?

Mr. Manly: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I feel very happy about this amendment but I have one difficulty about putting something into a Constitution or into a very important legal document without consultation. Does the hon. member have a way to get consultation and either agreement or disagreement from the native people? The hon. member mentioned three groups, but I think we should add a fourth and separate the status from the non-status Indians. How do we legally get consultation and some kind of agreement or disagreement from the native people? Does the hon. member have a way to approach this?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, in the constitutional proposal there is provision for the Prime Minister to invite leaders of the aboriginal peoples to meet with the first ministers. I presume that in a similar way the Prime Minister could meet with the leaders and draw up some acceptable formula which would enable the government to have the aboriginal peoples declare their interests on this aspect. The native peoples have different organizations. For instance, the Indian people are organized into bands by the federal government. Perhaps in that area it might be the band councils who would be responsible. The Metis people are organized differently and perhaps in that instance a referendum might be required.

In my view, this is a matter to be negotiated, as with the section that says there will be meetings between the Prime Minister and the leaders of the aboriginal peoples to determine what future rights they may have.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, before I begin to speak on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), I must say to members of the House that this is quite a way to write a Constitution.

We have here a proposal. I am not trying to reflect on the member's intentions; I know the hon. member and I believe his intentions are honourable, but it is difficult, in debating the Constitution, to address this issue and be able to resolve it in half an hour or less. The cudgel sort of hangs over our head that if we cannot do it in half an hour or less, then we better get on to the next issue. That is just not the way to write a Constitution.

Frankly, I abhor the way this is being done. It is not fair to the people—not to members of the House because that is by the by, so to speak. I suggest that we spend a little more time and thought on a Constitution that Canadians will have to live and work with in the future. My comments will be made with that in mind.

It almost reminds me of the kind of situation that took place in the constitutional committee. We would have a proposal put to us and within five minutes we were supposed not only to debate the merits of it but also declare them. What we did, which I think was acceptable to all members of the committee, was to put forward our whole body of amendments. Then members could look at them over a period of time, they could get back to their caucuses, discuss them and come up with rational debate as to the merits or lack thereof on any given issue.

Again I say to the hon. member that in making my comments I am not in any way trying to reflect on his method, it was the only avenue he had. But I suggest to him and to all members of the House that what he suggested is not the best way to approach this whole question. I am not talking about the native questions but rather the matter of Constitution-making.

Having said that, the subamendment of the honourable member has a number of aspects in it which I believe go directly to the heart of the accord. That creates difficulties for all members of this House who want to see the accord preserved and eventually the final vote taken. The subamendment provides, following the salutation:

> In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, when so authorized by resolution of a two-thirds majority vote in the Senate and House of Commons—

I will just stop there for a minute. The amending formula in the resolution that is before us, specifically Section 37(1), sets out the procedure for amending the Constitution of Canada, which is not a two thirds majority in the House of Commons or in the Senate. What is needed is a resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons, which I take to understand to mean 50 per cent plus one. That, I believe, is how this section is being interpreted. Yet for this purpose, and for this purpose only, there is to be a two thirds majority. That is simply inconsistent with the resolution before us and the agreement that was made between the nine provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada. In that sense I do not believe we can accept the words "a two thirds majority". That is inconsistent with the accord before us.

Additionally, if we take a look at the honourable member's proposed Section 35(3)(a), after the words "of a two thirds majority vote in the Senate and House of Commons" it goes on to say:

—and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected—

During the time that I held the responsibility of minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—I see the honourable member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is in the House and I know that he worked in the same way—we worked with the definition "the peoples involved". That was always difficult to determine. Who were the aboriginal peoples when you got down to the issue of, say, land claims? When you take a look at that section, Mr. Speaker, what would be the result? Consent of the majority of the peoples, that is the aboriginal peoples, but that leaves out the other peoples who live in those territories. While I have no difficulty personally in saying that the aboriginal peoples should be consulted, land claims only in those territories goes beyond just affecting the aboriginal peoples. These claims will affect the future of those territories and, therefore, the future and the lives of all people living in those territories.

● (1600)

If I could just give a practical example, Mr. Speaker, at the present time negotiations for a Yukon land claim are under way. I am pleased that those negotiations are going well. While the negotiations directly involve the Government of Canada and the aboriginal peoples of the Yukon through the umbrella of the Council of Yukon Indians, the legislative assembly of the Yukon, while not being directly involved in the decision-making in the negotiations, is an integral part of the negotiations. Everyone in the Yukon knows that if that land claim is to be successful it will require an agreement. By that I do not mean a formal agreement but a mental agreement or an understanding that in fact the land claim will be to the benefit not only of the aboriginal peoples of the Yukon, but will represent another step forward in reaching the possibility of the Yukon taking its rightful place in the Canadian family.

With all due respect to the hon. member, I see some real difficulties that will be created, not only for the Yukon at this time but as well for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in the future. While there is an aboriginal majority in the Northwest Territories which, by the way, is reflected in the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories, problems will exist in terms of the definition of who aboriginal peoples are; and that was a factor, for example, in the COPE agreement in principle. There was a problem there.

There is a problem, for example, in that people who are living in the Northwest Territories who are covered by the COPE agreement in principle are the beneficiaries of the Alaska claim. I am not trying to say these people are not entitled under these claims, but I am trying to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all members of this House, that this amendment goes very deeply to the natural development and evolution that is now taking place in Canada north of 60. We are deeply concerned that we are almost inserting ourselves into the centre of that process by this amendment.

I said I would not be long, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to take advantage of the patience the House has shown on these issues, but if you look at Section 41, to which the second part of the amendment refers, you will see that the amendment states in part:

In the provinces, when so authorized in accordance with Section 41 and with the consent of a majority of each of the aboriginal peoples so affected—

I will not deal with the last part relating to the aboriginal peoples so affected, but Section 41 relates in part to the creation of new provinces; that is, the extension of the boundaries of the existing provinces and the creation of new provinces in the territories. It is the opinion and position of our party that we should go back to the position of 1871.

If you look at the resolution before us, Schedule I, the amendments of 1871, you will see that all that the resolution before us does is change the citation of the 1871 amendment. What it leaves in place is that the creation of new provinces in the territories shall be under the jurisdiction and responsibility of the federal government. That is why, when the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and other members of our party speak later on, we want to refer back to Section 41(e) and (f), and that is why we would like to see those parts taken out. If we were to vote for this amendment we would in fact be voting against that principle; that is, that we feel this matter should fall within federal jurisdiction rather than a shared jurisdiction between the federal government and the provinces of Canada.

Lastly, if you will just bear with me for one more minute, Mr. Speaker, if one goes back to the point the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands made—and he made a valid point when the talked about the aboriginal people feeling frustration in the sense that they had not received the rights they felt they had been given—you will note his reference to the cut-off lands in British Columbia. I want to tell him that during the time I had responsibility as minister we tried to get also question of those cut-off lands resolved. Quite frankly, I thought we had almost done so, but I regret this still has not been accomplished. I sincerely believe it was just a matter of pushing this over the side, so to speak, and getting it done. I agree with the member that it has to be done and it should have been done. However, with all respect, I do not see how his amendment would necessarily speed up that process at this stage. I think there has to be moral suasion on the part of all of us to encourage that kind of agreement.

Moving now to Section 36, which calls for a federal-provincial conference to be participated in by the federal government, the provincial governments and the aboriginal peoples, Section 36(2) reads:

The conference convened under subsection (1) shall have included in its agenda an item respecting constitutional matters that directly affect the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including the identification and definition of the rights of those peoples to be included in the Constitution of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Canada shall invite representatives of those peoples to participate in the discussions on that item.

I know, with all the history we have that has taken us to this point, that an argument can be made as to whether the native peoples were treated fairly. I think hon. members in this House have expressed the belief that they were not. We are now at the point where we have this provision in the resolution, and quite frankly good faith has to prevail. What is needed is that definition which is called for in that item on the proposed agenda of that conference, and which I suggest is also called for by the hon. member's amendment. I have pointed out that there will be difficulty when this conference starts this defining process, and it will take time.

I spoke to some native people yesterday and pointed out that while I accept the argument that wrongs have been done in the past—and I frankly do not think members of this House want to be party to more wrongs—it is now incumbent upon native leaders, the federal government, provincial governments and members of this house to put together an agenda for that conference whereby not only will the definition be discussed but it will finally be concluded. We must take time to do that adequately and properly.

If I could issue one warning to the federal government, it would be this. I see that conference taking place with the federal government acting not only as chairman, but also as a participant, taking its responsibilities under Section 91(2)(iv) as trustee. This will leave the aboriginal peoples to make their claims not only to the provinces, but to the federal government. The federal government will be there not only in the role of chairman, but also as defending the rights of the aboriginal peoples, fulfilling the responsibilities every federal government has had to accept.

That is how I interpret Section 36, and while I commend the hon. member for the sincerity I believe he had in putting forward the subamendment, I suggest not only is it premature but that it also violates the Accord; and, frankly, I think it could do more damage than good in terms of present negotiations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has had an opportunity to examine the subamendment offered by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). The Chair can see a serious procedural problem in so far as the subamendment proposes an amending procedure in a part of the resolution dealing with aboriginal rights. It ought properly to be offered as an amendment in Part IV of the proposed act under the heading "Procedure for Amending Constitution of Canada". I must therefore decline to accept the subamendment offered and suggest that it be moved at a later time.

• (1610)

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Munro Hamilton East), which was agreed to on the following division:

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment carried.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House of an agreement reached by the party representatives, and I request that you ask for the unanimous consent of the House to ratify it. First, for the remainder of the debate on the resolution moved by the Minister of Justice, all speeches, whether on the amendments, subamendments or the main resolution, will be limited to 20 minutes, except that members moving an amendment or a subamendment will be entitled to 40 minutes.

We have also agreed to proceed in such a way as to be able ultimately to vote, at four o'clock tomorrow, on the amendment that the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) intends to move in a few moments. We have also agreed that if a Conservative member introduces an amendment regarding fiscal compensation, the floor would then be given to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, if he is in the House. We also agree that after voting on the amendment moved by the hon. member for the Yukon, the floor be given to a member of the Progressive Conservative Party. I think that just about covers the main points of the agreement we have reached.

● (1650)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I may not have received the entire translation. It is my understanding that part of the exception of the 20-minute rule would also be the leaders of the parties—

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: —and that the subject matter of the amendment to be moved may be displaced by another—and I made that point. It may not be the fiscal compensation amendment but another one.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, in the event that it turns out that the Conservative Party does not move the fiscal compensation amendment, we reserve the right to move the amendment that would normally have flowed from that amendment as a subamendment to the amendment.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Carried.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, just so that we know what we are talking about in this debate and so that I do not forget to move the amendment when I come to the end of my remarks, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the proposed Constitution Act, 1981 be amended by striking out paragraphs (e) and (f) of subsection 41(1).

I have provided copies of the amendment to both the government House leader and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

While the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is in his seat, I want to set the record straight on something that he said yesterday when introducing the amendment which has just been disposed of. During the debate he said the leader of the government in the Yukon had, to a degree, supported the inclusion of those two subparagraphs, the subject of my amendment, in the resolution. At the time I believe I characteristically, and perhaps discourteously, shouted across the aisle "Rubbish". I have since established that that is precisely what it was.

As the minister knows, the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly passed a resolution. For the sake of placing it on record—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If hon. members want to hold private meetings, perhaps they could retire behind the curtains and give the hon. member who has the floor a chance to be heard.

Mr. Nielsen: The position of that assembly is stated as follows:

The Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories seeks the following amendments to the proposed Constitution of Canada in recognition of the special responsibility of the Government of Canada for the native peoples of the Northwest Territories and the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of Canada over the Territories.

The relevant paragraph is (2), which reads as follows:

The Legislative Assembly seeks the deletion of Clause 9(e)—

That would be 41(1)(e) of the resolution.

—of the amending formula in the proposed Constitution which provides for the extension of existing provinces into the territories. The Legislative Assembly sees this authority as an affront to its legislative authority and an infringement of the democratic rights of the people of the Northwest Territories.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there have been times in the past when I have complained about the sound system. Now I am complaining that it is not loud enough for me to be heard over the hubbub that is going on and the private conversations being held around the House. The matter we are debating is of deep concern to Canadians living above 60. I would be very grateful if hon. members would be courteous enough to allow those members who wish to listen to what I have to say to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I will continue:

The Legislative Assembly requests that the power to alter boundaries be exercised as presently provided under the British North America Act, 1871.

(3) The Legislative Assembly also seeks the deletion of Clause 9(f)—

That would be 41(1)(f) of the resolution before the House.

—from the amending formula in the proposed Constitution. This clause provides that notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces can only be achieved with the consent of Canada and at least two thirds of the provinces whose total population exceeds 50 per cent of the population of Canada. The Legislative Assembly's position is that the right to establish new provinces out of existing territories is vested in the federal Parliament by virtue of the British North America Act 1871 and this power should continue to reside in the Parliament of Canada.

In his remarks yesterday the minister indicated that the leader of the government in the Yukon was somehow in favour, to a degree, of the retention of these subparagraphs in the resolution. Today I received the text of the resolution passed unanimously in the Yukon Legislative Assembly by all members of the government party, all members of the official opposition, that is, the NDP in the Assembly, and, I might add, all members of the Liberal party in the Assembly.

The resolution passed November 23, 1981, some two days before the minister spoke, reads as follows:

MOVED BY: The Honourable C. W. Pearson
Leader of the Yukon Legislative Assembly

SECONDED BY: The Honourable Howard Tracey
Minister of Justice

That the Yukon Legislative Assembly supports the efforts of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories to have Clauses 41(1)(e) and 41(1)(f) of the Constitution Act 1981 now before the House of Commons removed, and that this Legislature further seeks the inclusion in the Constitution Act 1981 of a Clause that will provide for the capability of new provinces to be created under similar circumstances to the BNA Act of 1871.

In other words, they do not want those subparagraphs in the Constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I hope the minister will accept the official record of the Yukon Legislative Assembly and of the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly in establishing the position of those bodies with respect to the subject matter of this amendment.

The native peoples also support the deletion of these two subparagraphs from the constitutional resolution. That is the position of the Council of Yukon Indians and it is the position of the native organizations of the Northwest Territories.

I should like to quote from a position paper submitted by the Aboriginal Rights Coalition on November 12, 1981. On page 2, paragraph (9) reads as follows:

The future aspirations of aboriginal peoples towards provincehood in the Northwest and Yukon Territories must not be made subject to provincial consent.

I think that spells out their position very clearly.

We have just finished voting on an amendment introduced by the minister which reinstates aboriginal rights in our Constitution and describes those rights as existing rights. The native peoples of both territories feel they have an existing right, as they say in the paragraph 9 that I just read, to provincehood in the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory. They have an existing right which is not subject to provincial consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges)—Veterans Affairs—Processing of applications for disability pensions b) Terms of eligibility; the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott)—Hazardous substances—Urea formaldehyde foam insulation—Compensation sought for home owners b) Request for government advice; the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke—Railways—Employees' hours of work.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers). Does the House agree to stand all items under the heading of notices of motions (papers)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PUBLICATION OF OPINION POLL RESULTS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester) moved that Bill C-262, to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of the result of opinion polls), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not the first time I have brought a bill before this House on this particular subject. As a matter of fact, it is at least the sixth time that this particular bill has been before Parliament in my name and has been debated. Prior to that, other hon. members in this House had felt the same way I feel about the publication of polls during election campaigns.

On one occasion, the government did take some specific action. My bill, and also one standing in the name of another hon. member were referred to the broadcasting committee, where we had a very long and useful discussion. At that time the committee came in with a recommendation that action be taken by the government which would eliminate the publication of opinion polls during actual election campaigns. The government did not move on that recommendation.

What I hope we might accomplish today, as far as this particular piece of legislation is concerned, is that it be referred to the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons. The committee could then discuss the matter and come forth with a decision, expressing its views in relation to the matter of polls. If there were a supportive view from that committee regarding the banning of the publication of polls during election campaigns, appropriate legislation to put it into effect might then be forthcoming from the government.

At this moment, the only province in Canada which bans the publication of public opinion polls during election campaigns is the province of British Columbia. I have often used the example of the election of the Bennett government in British Columbia which was predicted by no one because there were no polls to give guidance to the great fourth estate in coming up with conclusions.

However, that is only one example, and it is not the reason I believe public opinion polls should be banned from public discussion during election campaigns. What really gives me great concern is not the actual raw information which comes from polls, but the pollution resulting from experts on the media who speak only about numbers and never about issues during election campaigns. They put people into the position of playing numbers games, wondering who is ahead and who says who is ahead.

The greatest travesty of poll results which has ever been perpetrated upon the public was evident in the last election campaign in the United States. Pollsters in that country were on every network of radio and television, and reported in every newspaper one could imagine. They told the people of that country that the election between Ronald Reagan and President Jimmy Carter would be a cliff-hanger, too close to call, with less than 1 per cent dividing the opinions of the public. On election day, the end result was that the people in California did not have to bother going to the polls because the election was over before they even got there. For instance, the ABC network carried out a raw poll almost as soon as the TV debate was concluded. The poll stated more than just who the public felt was the winner of the debate; it stated that Ronald Reagan was the people's choice. However, even with all of this evidence, on November 3, the day before the election, the public was told that it was a toss-up, with Ronald Reagan one point ahead of Jimmy Carter. As it turned out, Ronald Reagan was not one point ahead of Jimmy Carter the next evening, he was nine points ahead. Even with all of the protectors the pollsters put into their predictions, they cannot, in justice, explain away the misdirection they gave to the United States public.

While I have never suggested the art of polling should be banned, nor that politicians and political parties should be deterred from using them at any time, I believe more strongly than ever that from the date an election campaign officially begins until it is finished, there should be no polling information made available to the public. What a change it would be for the electorate to make decisions based on leadership and programs rather than percentages!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: For years John Diefenbaker said that polls were for dogs, and they knew best how to use them. That is part of the truth. Winston Churchill also had a very low opinion of polls. He said, "Oh that God would deliver us from the opinion polls; if only people would make decisions on rightness and wrongness rather than public opinion". And so right he was.

An illustration of my concern is what happened to us in the last general election. My leader, the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), phoned me during that campaign because he knew I had spoken out against the publication of polls. He sought my assurance that I would reintroduce the bill, as I had on many occasions in the past, because of the atrocities being committed against our party by all the instant experts in the media who knew what would happen. Of course, even in that election campaign, it did not happen.

In a country as mixed up as Canada, considering the different political persuasions of people in various regions, the publication of opinion polls could create terrible aberrations in poll results. For instance, in the last election campaign, where 74 Liberal members were elected in the province of Quebec, polling something like 70 per cent of the popular vote, how could one put that mix into a national poll and get any kind of a realistic assessment of what is happening in the country? One could not.

I was impressed with the fact that during the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), himself, although I do not know his exact words, indicated his unhappiness with the manipulation of poll results to favour the instant experts who were telling the people what the results meant. We should really want to get down to discussing the democratic issues. The newspapers might jump on us and say we are trying to infringe on the freedom of the press if we prevent publication of poll results.

However, for one reason or another, people believe pollsters to be experts concerning what is happening, what will happen, how people will vote and how they think in the country. They sit there and talk about what is going on. I remember one election which was very close, I think it was the 1972 election. The CBC put on a program and brought all of its people from across the country. This was done after all advertising had been banned. The program went on the national network. There was no chance for our party to say anything and our party suffered on that particular occasion. These so-called experts from the CBC were polled. Without exception they stated that the Liberal government would be re-elected with a majority. They were all wrong. The government was re-elected but it won a minority and not a majority. There is no doubt in my mind that the intrusion by the media on that program into that election campaign had a major impact on the people who were still uncommitted and still in doubt. There were many doubts in that election campaign.

• (1710)

I do not think there is infringement on the freedom of the press if polls are banned. Instead, the banning of polls will force the reporters, who are being paid to write, is write stories about what is really happening in the country. These reporters will have to go out and do their job rather than rely upon numbers that are produced by one polling organization or the other as to how people are thinking and feeling. Writing is a reporter's job. Reporters should not fall back on the Gallup poll or some other polling organization for the background information they need to write their story. They should be out there among the people finding out what the people think.

If we do not have numbers games and we do not have polls, people will have to be questioned on the issues. When people are questioned on the issues, maybe they will realize what election campaigns are all about. If ever there was an example where issues were not in question, it was the February 1980, federal election campaign. You could not find the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). You could not find out what the policies of the government were going to be either. We know now what they are, but we did not know then and we could not find out. There was nothing to talk about in that election campaign. There was no real debate, but there would have been had it not been for the fact that every week a new poll was released saying that the Conservative Party was 20 points behind, or something like that. That is great encouragement to the public to support our party in a given election campaign!

The shoe, of course, can be on the other foot. The other party can be in the same situation. We would have a much more realistic election campaign if we did not have the interference and intrusion of public opinion polls being released ad infinitum throughout an election campaign. People never get down to the issues while discussing numbers.

I hope this House at the conclusion of this discussion will give some consideration to referring this bill to an appropriate committee of the House so that we can really take a look at what can be done. People who are concerned with the issues can come before the appropriate committee to express their views, whether in relation to the infringement of freedom or whether in relation to the misinterpretation that is given to figures and the way they are determined.

I hope other members will participate in this debate. I hope they will give support at least to referring this bill to the appropriate standing committee of the House.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to participate in this debate. I might preface my remarks by telling hon. members who are in the House that it is not often that I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) but in this case I do. If not for the same reasons, I do agree in principle that the people of Canada in some way can be misled by the pollsters if these pollsters desire to do that.

Some time ago in Toronto I served on a panel. To say that I was one of the more unpopular panelists because of my stand on polls goes virtually without saying. I do not think it is "un-Liberal", if you will, to take this position. Questions that are asked by pollsters many times are so tailored that any kind of response can be elicited.

What would happen to the democratic process if we simply governed by polls? What would be the net effect on the people of Canada? Would this take away all of the incentive and interest for them to look at the issues of the day? Would it preclude any necessity on their part to inform themselves so that they could make intelligent decisions?

I must say to my dismay that polls taken over the years have been remarkably accurate many times. I think it was the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester who pointed out that in the 1948 American election it was predicted that the Republican candidate would win over the Democrat candidate, but this proved incorrect. However, hon. members will remember that in 1948 we did not have as much immediate coverage by television. We had radio and newspapers. But television has immediate impact. Television stations take polls immediately after a speech is delivered. This happened not too long ago when a presidential candidate delivered a speech. Instant reaction was portrayed and it was done before people could digest what had been said. The commentators on the spot said the people of the country think this and that. But what they had done was to take a sampling of a few thousand people out of millions of people across the country.

[Translation]

And I believe also that with polls carried out in this way, Mr. Speaker, just about any question can be asked. Many times questions asked by pollsters are so tailored that a specific response can be elicited. So with this kind of tool in the hands of pollsters who want to prove a point, the media and private industries can make the public believe anything. And we do have polls. Last week, they held a poll on the Grey Cup game. The team representing Western Canada was supposed to win by some twenty points. After the game, we realized that the score had been a lot closer than the pollsters had wanted us to believe.

[English]

I do not believe it is accurate to say that people are not influenced by polls. It would be nice to believe that all of the people of Canada could take the time to inform themselves about the issues on which they should inform themselves, whether it be an election or anything else. The fact is that many times those polls can be so doctored, and I use that term advisedly, as to bring about virtually any point of view the people who are conducting the polls want.

● (1720)

We saw this in respect of the Constitution. One of the questions regarding the Constitution was very simple: "Do you think that the provincial governments and the federal government should agree on a Constitution?" Naturally everyone in Canada would like us all to agree about virtually everything all the time in order to get along and be good fellows. The way that was interpreted was that unless there was agreement we should not go ahead with the Constitution. My opinion from talking to people across Canada is that many people, indeed, were in favour of our proceeding with this constitutional debate.

It is my belief that polls make up the minds of some people in this country, or that some people can be led by polls. In that sense, if that is not a miscarriage of the democratic process, surely it is undue influence of the electorate. They should be able to make up their own minds.

Should we be concerned about the cost of these polls? The cost in terms of dollars is not really that important to me because these polls are conducted by private groups, people who indeed make their living conducting polls and peddling them to whoever wants to read them. One can get polls on virtually everything in this day and age. What about the cost of polls when individuals virtually give up, if not their right, their desire to look into the fundamental issues that are being discussed? This cost in democratic terms is one which is unbearable in any democracy. Would we indeed become a government run by pollsters and, if so, why should the people of a constituency elect a Member of Parliament, a member of a legislative assembly or, indeed, a member of a municipal council if all we have to do is call 200 or 2,000 people at any given time and hold a poll to determine an issue? When these polls involve people who are not as informed as they should be, or people who react on emotion as opposed to thinking the process through, I suggest that the cost is the abrogation of the rights we have and that we must exercise as citizens.

Let me digress for just a bit because I think this has to do with polls. I want to make known my views on the amount of time we take for our elections. I believe the issues can be put forward to the people of Canada in a much shorter time than we now allow. It was suggested during a debate here last spring that perhaps we should have a standing list of voters across Canada rather than making up a list just before election time. I would prefer to have a shorter campaign period than we now have. I would suggest that four weeks from the time a writ is issued would be sufficient, in this day of instant communication across the country, for people to make up their minds.

The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester said of the 1980 election that the people did not have a chance to bring forward the issues and discuss them thoroughly. I believe he said that "the Prime Minister could not be found". If he meant the Prime Minister of that time, I would agree with him because the then Prime Minister was a member of his own party. I guess we could say the same thing happened in 1979 when we did not have a vote for anyone, but rather a vote against certain things. Perhaps it could be said that people do not win elections, but that elections are lost for whatever reason.

I believe that polls, whatever they may be on, tend to be usurped by the media in order to get people excited. The hon. member pointed out that during the last election campaign the pollsters showed there was a 40-point spread between the parties. Did he say there was a 40-point spread between the parties? He suggested that because of this great spread—and I do not think it was that great—people tended to ask themselves why they should go out and work for the party or the candidate when the result had already been decided. I agree with the hon. member.

It is small wonder that at the last federal election we had 74 per cent or 75 per cent—shall I exaggerate—of the people of Canada exercise their franchise. Why would the people not come out and vote, exercising their democratic right in this country? Were they influenced by the pollsters to the extent they felt that this party was so far ahead and this one so far behind that they need not take the time to go out and vote, that it would mean nothing because the election had already been decided? The election had been decided then by whom?

Was it decided by the pollsters or by the media? I suggest that is unacceptable in a democratic society.

Let me point out also with regard to elections that I would personally be in favour of what they do in Australia. There, if you vote you get a certain tax rebate; I believe that is how they work it. If you do not vote, then whatever taxes you have to pay must be paid and there is no rebate at all. This encourages, and some would even say it forces, the people to get out and exercise their right to vote. This would give us a truer picture of the feelings of the people at the time of an election.

I am opposed to polls being published during an election campaign. My wish is that there would be no polls published from the time the writ is issued. We should have legislation on this particular matter. The matter should be studied by a committee. We should hear what the pollsters have to say about their part in the whole situation. I would ask that in the meantime, until we have legislation, the people who are involved in these polls—newspapers, television stations and research bureaux, wherever they are—should take the responsibility upon themselves to declare their own moratorium on the publication of poll, unless they really want to influence the people and not just report what the people are supposed to be thinking. If that were the case we would not run the risk of having government by pollsters rather than by the people through their elected Members of Parliament or their legislative assemblies.

I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester and I would urge that this bill be sent to committee, where there could be open and frank discussion by all the people concerned with these polls—the pollsters themselves, the people in public office and, indeed, people from the public at large. Then we could know what their views on the polls are and the effect they have on the voting process in Canada.

● (1730)

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to say a few words about Bill C-262. I commend the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) for bringing this discussion to the House today.

The whole question of polling is something which has bothered and intrigued me for many years. It seems to me in a general way that what has happened, perhaps unwittingly on the part of pollsters, is that over the years they have actually usurped the right of citizens to think for themselves. I am not saying that they have done this deliberately but I suspect that what has happened, particularly among those members of the voting public who are not constantly interested in politics and may be undecided at election time, is that they suddenly find themselves unconsciously influenced by polls. I think this perhaps relates directly to the herd instinct that is in all of us; that one wants to go with the winner. If a person has not followed a local or national campaign for three or four weeks and has not studied the issues, or has not watched the television or listened to radio or gone to an all-candidates meeting or read about candidates' views in the newspapers, it becomes very easy for an uncommitted voter or, perhaps, a disinterested voter who nonetheless is a good citizen to sit back and say, "Well, John Brown or the leader of this or that party is ahead in the polls by 6 per cent" and instinctively there is the urge to go along with the winner and to be on the winning team without giving any serious consideration to the issues.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members in the House, that over the years the polls have both relieved people of the responsibility of considering election issues for themselves and, on the other hand, swayed people toward voting in a way they would not have otherwise voted had they taken more time to consider the issues, the candidates and the leaders.

I am speaking in support of Bill C-262. Another problem I find with polls is that they tend to focus on the leaders—not just on the substance of the individuals but on their appearance as it is portrayed on television, radio or in public. Polls tend to simplify, perhaps even oversimplify a leader's potential or actual capabilities. The reason for this is that people today are very easily influenced by television, the most intimate medium of all. In many cases, the very people who are conducting the polls are often closely connected to the various broadcast networks. I believe that this only adds to the confusion, because when people are asked on television a simple question, such as what do they think of Mr. X as leader of Y party, the immediate concern of that person is how he or she looks on television. The same can be said for radio. Of course, that poll can be greatly distorted, and when an uncommitted voter sees that a certain party is ahead nationally by two, four or eight points, that perhaps is not really the case.

To return to my first comment, a double error is made in judgment. The herd instinct takes over. The uncommitted voter may see that a certain party will win, so they might as well vote for that candidate in their constituency. I believe that polling, in general, distorts election campaigns. I believe it is unfair to all parties, particularly parties at the local level where a candidate may be running well ahead of his opponent, yet his opponent's party is deemed to be well ahead in a poll and the candidate who is ahead suffers as a result.

If the government will eventually have the courage to introduce legislation based on Bill C-262 and it is passed into law, I suppose that the media will be on our backs. The pollsters may not, but the media will cry foul. They will say that this prohibits or limits freedom of the press.

Well, both hon. members who have spoken before me, I think, have made very good arguments to refute this. This bill does not in any way limit freedom of the press or freedom of expression. In fact, as one hon. member pointed out, it will make the media work harder. It will have to cover a campaign in the good, old-fashioned way of 40 or 50 years ago when leading print journalists used to follow the leaders in this country, the United States and Europe on election campaigns. These journalists went to all the meetings and had the time during the evening or during the night, whether they were on trains or buses or in a hotel room, to think about what had been said. I think they were able to come to a much more educated conclusion because they had a longer time to think about what had been said.

Now that we are in the electronic age, I hope that a bill such as Bill C-262 will make the media slow down a bit, because instant wisdom from television is getting out of control. If Bill C-262 is passed into law some day, the media people will have to think more and analyse more before they begin typing or "mouthing off", as we might say, on television and radio.

Polls tend to package elections into just too neat a form. They take away a lot of the natural and human element of an election campaign. Therefore, I suggest that this bill proposed by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester should be given a great deal of consideration, and I hope it will be sent to the appropriate committee and that the government will act on the recommendations of that committee.

I see one major problem which has nothing to do with the drafting of this bill, that is that Canada has 3,000 miles of border between it and the United States and approximately 70 per cent of Canadians live within 60 miles of the United States border. I do not know how we would be able to prevent American pollsters or anyone else from taking polls and either print the results or, worse, broadcast them on American radio and television networks. I do not know how we can get around that problem. I envision a lot of pirating and high profits being made by taking so-called non-professional, non-profit commercial polls. For example, university students could be used to do a poll which would then be relayed down to Buffalo or Rochester from where those results could be broadcast. The vast majority of Canadians who own television sets can easily watch American television stations or listen to American radio.

It is one problem that should be dealt with and, of course, it is part and parcel of the larger and more important problem vis-à-vis the influence of American television on Canada. With the exception of that loophole, which I hope and expect can eventually be tightened up with a tremendous amount of effort on our part, I highly commend this piece of legislation.

I understand that this is the sixth time that this bill has been debated in the House. The government has obviously seen fit to talk it out on the five previous occasions. I understand that this is probably what they are about to do today, and that is usually the name of the game in private members' hour.

However, I would like to urge government members who are opposed to this bill or its coming on stream now to seriously consider within their own caucus, and certainly within cabinet, to allow a bill such as this to come before the House in the name of the government, or a government minister for a free and open debate and then to go to committee.

The government may be surprised by the fact that there would be fairly widespread support for this bill. Perhaps we could even have a free vote on this bill. The only problem I can see, if my information is correct, is that, notwithstanding what the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent) said a few moments ago, the Liberal Party of Canada has relied very heavily on polls taken at election time. I do not know whether those polls are commissioned by the Liberal Party of Canada. I do not know whether they spend money commissioning them. I suspect they do. Maybe I will be enlightened in a few minutes and the answer will be no.

● (1740)

If the Liberal Party of Canada is heavily dependent on these private and very expensive polls, I suggest to the Liberal members in the House that they try to bring back a little more democracy into our politics, reduce the influence of the electronic media in politics, give people at least the opportunity that their grandfathers had to think for themselves at election time and not be overwhelmed by a numbers game that is not always accurate.

I hope that in our lifetime this will reach cabinet, come into the House for debate and be passed into law. I am afraid that if we do not get a handle on the situation now, the electronic media in the country and throughout the western world will some day, without our even being aware of it, take over virtually the entire electioneering that goes on in this part of the world. They have far too much influence on the voters. It should be left to the candidates. If we goof and make a mistake, we pay for it at the polls. Let us not be pre-judged by these professional pollsters, let the people judge us on our merits.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to participate in this debate and to support my colleague from Nova Scotia, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) who has presented Bill C-262 to the House for consideration. If I may begin where the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) left off and point out that what we have for consideration is a reference of this bill to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is important that, if the House is not willing to consider the content of this bill in terms of passing it into law we at least take the opportunity to have the subject matter of the use of polls in relation to federal elections reviewed by a committee of the House.

We have in the debate to this moment heard from not only the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester, who represents the Progressive Conservative Party, but from the hon. member for Welland representing the Liberal Party and the hon. member for Brant representing the New Democratic Party. They all agree there is some real merit to the proposal. It is very difficult, in light of the expressions of that all-party support, to have the bill simply talked out so that it will no longer be considered in the House or committees of the House. I intend to yield the floor in sufficient time to allow the motion to refer Bill C-262 to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to be put to a vote.

Let me begin my remarks on Bill C-262 by referring to the principle that it involves. It involves the very important matter of freedom of speech and freedom of communication. We have before us at the present time the constitutional proposal. In that proposal as part of the Constitution Act, 1981, which the House will be asked to approve and enact into law through the Parliament of the United Kingdom, there is a statement of fundamental freedoms. Section 2 of the Constitution Act reads:

> Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
>
> (a) Freedom of conscience and religion;
>
> (b) Freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communications;

There is no question that across this nation the freedom to express one's views is of prime importance, but that has to be considered in the context of the real world. We recognize immediately that there are qualifications put on that freedom of expression and freedom of communication.

We have already recognized in a myriad of provisions in the Canada Elections Act that, in relation to a political campaign, there is not entirely freedom of expression in the ultimate sense of that concept; in particular, as other hon. members have pointed out, there are already restrictions on advertising. Candidates who seek elected office must indicate in their advertising the source of that advertising, who sponsored it and other forms of identification. There is a ban on advertising in the period immediately preceding an election. Under the Canada Elections Act, elections advertising is banned prior to the date of the election being announced. Therefore, we have it established clearly that there are already existing limitations on communication. I do not think any member of the House or any person in Canada would regard these limitations as unreasonable.

The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester is asking the House to consider another restriction, a restriction which, in the opinion of the hon. member, as he so aptly expressed it in his speech when presenting this bill today, will advance in the ultimate the freedom of choice which all citizens ought to be able to exercise in a federal election.

The balancing of rights is the matter which the House has to consider in this and other measures that come before it. On one hand we have the right as citizens to freely express ourselves in the course of an election campaign and, on the other hand, the need to protect the secrecy of the ballot, and the need to allow all citizens to make an appropriate and proper choice in an election campaign.

This bill recognizes that the use of polls during an election campaign becomes an impediment in the exercise of free choice of the citizen to vote and exercise his or her franchise. How can that occur? That is to say, how can it come about that a citizen is impeded in the exercise of his or her free choice in an election campaign?

You learn something from time to time by listening to members debate in the House. In the course of his remarks, the hon. member for Welland came up with an excellent phrase, "undue influence". The phrase "undue influence" has been in the law for years. We recognize that concept in the matter of will-making. It is said that a testator who makes a will must have free choice and not be subjected to undue influence. Undue influence can be exercised by persons pressing the testator at the time he is making a will and influencing him to leave his property in a certain way or subject to certain conditions. For centuries the law has said that if that kind of influence is exercised, the will should not be valid because it is not the act of the maker of the will. He would have been subject to undue influence.

That is what we are talking about when we support a measure such as the one contained in Bill C-262; namely, the use of polls in the election campaigns in the current environment becomes an undue influence, unduly influencing voters.

As I indicated, there are many ways in which a voter can be influenced in an election campaign. For example, we recognize that a voter might be influenced by the manner in which votes were cast in an advance poll. In some cases an advance poll is taken two weeks prior to an election. The results are not announced until polling day. Why not simply count the votes when the advance poll closes and make an announcement? The reason must be that this might improperly influence voters on polling day.

If a poll taken on a scientific base is an accurate indication of the view of the persons polled who constitute the voters in an election, that would act as a similar influence on the voters. Assuming it is accurate, it would not be unlike announcing the result of an advance poll which, of course, is prohibited under the Canada Elections Act. If one were to make the analogy between the advanced poll and the poll taken under scientific conditions, one would have the answer: The voters should not be given this kind of information because, similarly to announcing the result of the advance poll, it may act unduly to influence voters in an election campaign. That is one of many arguments that can be made.

● (1750)

To give some background to the matter, Mr. Speaker, we should consider polls as they are constituted at present. In past years, polls were really guess work. I think that is where the expression "straw polls" came from. It meant you threw straws into the air and judged the result by how and where the straws landed. Since then, Mr. Speaker, polls have been conducted on a more scientific basis. As a result of efforts of social scientists and statisticians, over the years, a reasonably accurate, in some cases a tremendously accurate method has been established for determining what people will do in certain circumstances. It not only applies to the electoral process, but it applies to a great many other things. Many manufacturers in marketing their product rely on information obtained from polls. I think it has been established fairly clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the scientific technique has been developed to the stage where polls can be very accurate.

It is quite possible and conceivable that individuals in Canada would take a poll result as being a definite indication of the outcome of an election. You may say, Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with that? Again, I think it disturbs the freedom of choice in an election campaign. It is the kind of interference with the principle and concept of the secrecy of the ballot. For example, one should not be allowed to look into the ballot box to see how the person who came before you voted, and at the same time one should not be given information that may amount to the same thing; that is, one has advance notice or a preview of what will be the election count.

As I have said, the matter before the House is not simply the passage of the provision proposed by Bill C-262, which is the prohibition of the publication of polls during an election campaign, but, more important, it is the reference of this subject to a committee of the House. We do not have to decide the matter today; we merely have to decide whether the matter should be further explored. I think that is very important in the light of the scientific developments that have taken place. In a very short time, Mr. Speaker, polls will advance to the stage where people will regard them as a true and accurate indicator of an election result. I believe and suspect this is already happening.

In a recent election in Nova Scotia, in some cases poll results were announced that indicated one candidate was well ahead in the election campaign. In fact, when the polling day arrived, that candidate trailed another candidate by a considerable number of votes. I happened to be very involved in that election campaign, and I firmly and honestly believed that the publication of a poll did affect the outcome of our particular election.

The next question is to determine whether that is good or bad. The supporter of the candidate, of course, who eventually won that election, would think it is a good thing. Other persons would disagree with that. I happen to be one who disagrees with that.

In exercising the franchise in that particular constituency, I believe that the voters were influenced by that particular poll. Why am I mentioning this in the Parliament of Canada? It is because it subsequently came to light that the poll was not as accurate as it purported to be. In fact, it purported to be a scientific poll that was conducted under the auspices of a university professor who utilized his students in a particular statistics course. Subsequently I spoke with one of the students and was told that it was nothing of the kind, that the students were simply given the assignment of selecting persons and coming back with the results of their particular survey. Those results were tabulated and the total result was established and communicated. The reason Parliament should consider this matter, Mr. Speaker, is that it is the broad public concept that polls are now accurate, and that once that concept becomes recognized by the public, unscrupulous people will take advantage of that faith and will attempt to manipulate polls in such a way that it will affect the outcome of an election. That is reason enough to have this matter considered in Parliament.

Very recently—in fact, a few weeks ago—I had the opportunity to appear as a guest before the student parliament in Halifax, the Halifax-Dartmouth Regional Student Parliament. Interestingly enough, the topic of debate that day was the publication of polls. I had the opportunity to hear both sides of the question expressed very well. I noted that the students grasped very quickly the element of freedom of speech that is involved in this particular question and, at the same time, the need for sensible restrictions on the right to express and communicate freely to Canadians. When I addressed the participants in that parliament afterwards, I could not help saying that I had considered the matter, as they had, and had come to the conclusion that in that particular situation, and bearing in mind the developments that had taken place, the balance had swung, in my view, in favour of at least considering the banning or prohibiting of the publication of polls during an election campaign, for some of the reasons I have just outlined. In my area we have a radio station called CFDR that has acquired what is known in the trade as a telephone computing device. That telephone computing device has been used to take polls in election campaigns. The results of the polls taken by that particular station have been communicated and published, particularly when the polls have supported a particular party. I will not draw any inferences, but I will say that the principal shareholder, the president, director and managing operator of that station, is none other than C. Arnold Patterson, who was press secretary to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) for some months and who today is before the CRTC applying for another licence to operate a television station in the Halifax area.

If I had no other reason for wanting this matter to be considered by Parliament with a view to banning the publication of polls during an election campaign, there would be sufficient reason in that one instance. Here we have a political partisan who apparently owns a radio station, who has control of poll taking machinery and who publishes the results of that poll at his whim and at his desire.

Let me end my remarks so that we can vote on this issue by referring, as did the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester, to the words of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. Mr. Diefenbaker said on many occasions that "the only poll that counts is the poll taken on election day". I believe we will preserve the dignity and the good sense of that remark by having this matter considered and banning the publication of polls in the manner suggested by my good friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired, and I do now leave the chair—

An hon. Member: Three minutes remains.

An hon. Member: We do not consent to calling it six o'clock.

Mr. Smith: Since there is no agreement to calling it six o'clock, I might make a few comments with regard to this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I see from the clock in front of me that it is six o'clock. The hour provided for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESOLUTION RESPECTING THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1981

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien on the Constitution of Canada, as amended, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nielsen (p. 13346).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for private members' hour, I was emphasizing the fact that we had just dealt with a resolution which entrenched in the reinstated Section 34 the right to existing aboriginal rights. That includes existing aboriginal rights in the two northern territories. I read to the House the native position with respect to their rights, in terms of their right to become a participant in a future Canadian province. We now have enshrined in Section 34 by a decision of the House the right to achieve provincial status without the overriding subjection to the so-called amending formula where seven provincial premiers must agree to the carving out of new provinces, together with in excess of 50 per cent of the population.

While I believe the government's acceptance of the April accord by the premiers as a basis for constitutional amendment improved that part of the charter by strengthening the consensus principle, it created a very serious and threatening problem for Canadian citizens living above the 60th parallel. For over half a century, and certainly as long as I have been living in the north—and it is not that long—the dream of provincial status has been the loadstone of northern hopes. It has been central to the vision of the north which sees the development of Yukon and the Northwest Territories as the best and brightest hope for Canada's future. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) accepted the inclusion of two clauses in the April accord relating to "the extension of existing provinces into the territories" and "notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces", he dealt a crushing blow to the hopes and aspirations of thousands of Canadian citizens resident above 60. He gave away what was not his to give away—the rights and privileges of Canadians of northern Canada above 60.

The clauses proposed by the provinces in the April accord did not become part of the constitutional package until accepted by the Prime Minister in November. They were bad in April; they are bad in November. They had their origin in 1976 when, I am informed, the premier most insistent upon the retention of those two clauses in what turned out to be the accord was the Premier of Nova Scotia. We have been creating movement in order to bring about accord for the deletion of these sections. It had not occurred to me at the time—but it does now—that in discussions with provincial governments and premiers we found that the premier of the province who insisted upon the inclusion of the clauses as we see them now was not the present Premier of Nova Scotia but the minister for amateur fitness and sport, or whatever it is; he is the minister for "Diamond Tooth Gertie". He was the man who insisted upon the retention of this invidious proposal as far as it concerns the two northern territories.

I cannot hear the hon. Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola); I would dearly love to. I know she would not wish to extend her boundaries beyond those she enjoys now.

Mrs. Erola: Oh, yes, I would.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonetheless, I wish to become serious about this matter of deep concern to the northern territories. Never at any time did the governments of Yukon or of the Northwest Territories participate in putting together either the April accord or the latest arrangement from which the north was totally, resolutely and determinedly excluded. We were given the opportunity as governments in Yukon and in the Northwest Territories to appear as witnesses before the standing committee on a resolution which did not contain these two provisions. After the committee had finished its work and after it reported back to Parliament, there was a meeting of provincial premiers at which the elected legislatures of the two northern territories were not heard. They were not heard in April, they were not heard in November. Yet we are now confronted with two provisions in a resolution affecting the future forever and a day of Canadians, in which we in the north have not had any input; we have not been heard.

● (2010)

In my view, this was a rather cavalier treatment, of the kind to be expected, perhaps, by a Soviet government or one of its satellites. That is what it boils down to. The shutting out of these thousands of Canadian citizens in the north is something about which we are deeply resentful. These give-away clauses that open the door to provincial invasion of the north with the blessing of the federal government are found in the sections that are the subject of the amendment.

I submit to you and to the government, Mr. Speaker, that the government cannot barter away the rights of northern Canadians in order to secure a provincial consensus for the package—a consensus that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and other are working on and on which they are getting some movement so that the premiers now understand what is coming down. As far as the future of the Northwest Territories is concerned, they are coming around to the view that this is not right and coming around to agreement that these clauses should be deleted from both the moral and the legal point of view.

In the early stages of this debate, the Prime Minister talked about trading off rights for fish, trading off rights for oil, trading off rights for whatever. What are we doing if it is not trading off the rights of all Canadian citizens in northern Canada for the sake of consensus? This is an outright betrayal of the rights of northern Canadian citizens who live in a part of Canada where it is felt that the southern mentality stops at the 60th parallel.

There may be one or two exceptions, of course. I would be remiss and ungallant if I did not recognize—and I do so immediately—that one of those exceptions is the Minister of State for Mines. If she is truly as happy—and it was a day for champagne—as when the House unanimously passed equal rights for male and female persons, then she should be ecstatic about the prospect of voting in favour of the motion which I have proposed with respect to the rights of northern Canadians, of whom she is one.

As it stands now, Section 146 of the British North America Act, followed by the 1871 Act, gives to the federal Parliament the exclusive jurisdiction to create new provinces. That includes the same process as that which created the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, and British Columbia, which was carved out of the Northwestern Territories as it was known in those days, without any provincial consultation or consensus. Yet the government wants us as a Parliament to barter away those rights in favour of the amending formula.

That is simply not right. It is another example of the rights of northern Canadians being trampled upon.

Arguments have been presented with respect to the effect of Bill C-48, the National Energy Program, whereby the federal government asserts Ottawa's right to northern resources as if the north were a mere department of government. This emphasizes unmistakably the need to bring about provincial status for Yukon and the Northwest Territories as quickly as possible.

I know that the Liberal philosophy and the Trudeau philosophy does not embrace that concept and never will. I point out, however, that they have an obligation to leave Parliament free to enjoy the jurisdiction with which it was originally endowed when that principle of creating new provinces was first established in 1867 and 1871.

For those who would argue numbers and money, I point out that the Northwest Territories, with 60,000 people, has a greater population than either Manitoba or British Columbia had in 1871 when they attained provincial status. Never was it contemplated, either in the BNA Act, the Yukon Act or any other relevant statute, that any of the existing provinces should extend their boundaries northward to gobble up the territories. That idea was first expressed by Premier Pattullo in 1935 in British Columbia and was reiterated by Premier W. A. C. Bennett. Later it was jumped on by Alberta and Saskatchewan. The reaction of northerners was a counterproposal to the effect, "Let's take our boundaries south 54-60, 56-40 or bust."

It is all for the expediency of consensus at a time when northern sections of existing provinces are, in many cases, desperately unhappy because of the inability of far-away provincial governments to understand and solve their problems. Neither the government of Yukon nor that of the Northwest Territories was permitted to participate in the negotiations which took place behind closed doors.

We were permitted in as observers. In the public sessions chairs were placed in the corner of the room for an elected representative of Yukon and of the Northwest Territories. They were not to be heard; they were not to speak on behalf of the people who elected them.

The attitude of the government is that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) speaks for Canadians in the north. I say, God help us if that is the attitude to be adopted here.

My objective today is to persuade the government of the inherent error in that kind of thinking, an error far too common in southern Canada where the official mindset is irrevocably programmed to the concept "From Sea to Sea". Except from members on this side, we never hear "throughout the country". We never hear "from sea to sea to sea"; we have three seas. I hear snickers from hon. members opposite.

I want to try to convince members that Canada is more, must be more than simply from sea unto sea; Canada is from sea unto sea unto sea. We are a nation with three seacoasts. All are important, and perhaps the most important in terms of Canada's future is the sea that borders on Canada's Arctic.

Commenting on the cavalier treatment accorded to northern Canadians, the Globe and Mail on Saturday, November 21, under the heading "Selling of the North" editorialized as follows:

> The people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon—both natives and whites—have been used as bargaining counters in the constitutional argument between the Prime Minister and the premiers.

I could not agree more. This was a blatant political sell-out of a kind for which the Prime Minister is becoming notorious. First, women's rights were sold out—we restored those; the credit goes here for restoring them.

An hon. Member: Nice try!

An hon. Member: That is the joke of the week!

Mr. Nielsen: Let hon. members on my left, the bed partners of the hon. members opposite, rise and say that they are called chiefs.

The women were sold out, Mr. Speaker, and we were responsible for having their rights restored. I noticed with great gratitude today that members to my left voted for the restoration of Section 34 in the Constitution.

• (2020)

I will make another prediction. When those hon. members speak, they will speak in favour of this amendment. Let them say "nay" to it. They do not dare to do otherwise. If they had any conscience or morality on the other side, they would do the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Unless we are deemed to have less than the same democratic freedoms as southern Canadians, unless we are deemed to be different from any other Canadians, and unless we are deemed to be second-class Canadians, hon. members will support it; but I doubt it, notwithstanding the substantial movement that my friend, the hon. member for Provencher has caused to be made in bringing the premiers together, and, hopefully, they will support this amendment tomorrow.

I could go on and quote from The Globe and Mail editorial to which I referred, but I do not think that I will have time. What is happening here is a dastardly betrayal of the rights of the people of Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have got to rectify it.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a dastardly betrayal. Certainly, the sooner provincial status is achieved and recognized by Parliament, the sooner will the people in our territories feel at long last that they are part of Canada and that they will be able to develop their resources for the benefit of all Canadians. I hear some cheeping from the hon. member for Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Nielsen: If he wants to cheep, or if he wants to ask a question, I will gladly sit down and let him ask it, and I will answer it; but, otherwise, let him listen and learn. I invite him to come to Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Blaikie: I have been there twice.

Mr. Nielsen: For how long?

Mr. Blaikie: I have been there twice.

Mr. Nielsen: For how long?

Mr. Taylor: Fifteen minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: I have lived there for 30 years, and if the hon. member will shut up and listen, he might learn something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It just goes to show that time does not mean a thing!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has the floor.

Mr. Epp: We thought so, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not mind, sir. It livens up the debate to have these interjections. But if hon. members are really interested and really want to learn, they will listen and they might learn.

An hon. Member: From you?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, from me, because I live there. I know what the people throughout the Northwest Territories and Yukon feel, native and white alike, and the hon. member does not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Over and over again, the people of the north have learned that as far as this government is concerned, they have no rights and, indeed, they do not exist. We have judicial opinions which state just that, brought down by judges who, I might say, have been appointed to the Supreme Court by a Liberal government. We are mere colonials in the eyes of the government and of the law. That is a fact, and let hon. members speak against that when their turn comes in the debate. I will lay odds that the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) will say nothing less than what I am saying now.

Mr. Ittinuar: I will say a lot more, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: He may do, and that will add to it, more than the interjections of the hon. members are adding to this debate.

Mr. Epp: I think you have got to them, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: So far as the north is concerned, our people, our Canadian citizens in the north, are being subjected to a policy of de-Canadianization by this government, which has been running all over the country shouting about its policy of Canadianization. The federal government must not be allowed to get away with the idea that after more than 100 years of confederation-building, the rules can be suddenly changed, and that we will be subjected to the whim of seven provincial Premiers—

An hon. Member: Conservative.

Mr. Nielsen: —and 50 per cent of the population. I am sorry, I could not hear the interjection. The hon. member asks, "Do you not trust the premiers?" Of course I trust all of our premiers. That is what this country is about. I am afraid the reason for the mess we are in right now is that the government over there does not trust the premiers of the country when they are purporting to speak on behalf of the people within their jurisdiction.

An hon. Member: Nine of them trust us.

Mr. Nielsen: The people of northern Canada have been treated as second-class and third-class citizens and have been allowed no more role in the constitutional negotiations affecting them than if they had resided in Ulan Bator. For the benefit of people like the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who probably does not know where Ulan Bator is, it happens to be in outer Mongolia. That is the way we sometimes feel in Yukon and Northwest Territories with respect to our treatment by this government. We are absolutely sick and tired of accepting colonial status, including the administration of bureaucrats thousands of miles away.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, being a farmer—and I do not suggest for one moment that you are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —and driving a team of horses with reins 4,000 miles long. That is what we have up there. The end of the reins are here. I will not say where the end of the horse is, but that is where we are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We know where the end of the horse is.

Mr. Nielsen: Northerners must have the assurance that their future destiny will not be the subject of collusion and whim—but did I hear the unmentionable end of the horse from Newfoundland just interject?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: If I had to move a motion with any hope of acceptance tonight, it would be to create a referendum to establish two provinces in the north.

I see that my time is slipping by, and so is my speech. If any confirmation was needed of the destructiveness of the proposals regarding the Yukon and Northwest Territories, it is found in the lame and feeble explanation by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The simple fact is that the federal government picked up the proposal embodied in clauses (e) and (f) in Section 41(1) of the accord reached by the premiers in April. It is not strange or unusual to find that kind of thing happening. It is, however, more than strange to find the federal government embodying a principle in the Constitution—and I want to be serious for a moment here—which never before existed in any form; that is, a provincial veto over the formation of a province. The formation of a new province is a power belonging to the federal Parliament. It has always been thus. It does not belong to the government but to Parliament under the BNA Act.

The proposals to which the north objects are a complete reversal of constitutional practice which has existed for over 100 years. It is an indication that the government takes the same cavalier attitude to the powers of Parliament that it does to those of the provinces when its own interests are at stake.

The minister trotted out the statement that it is the federal government's recent practice to consult the provinces when considering the creation of a new province. First, consulting the provinces in any field at all is a new departure for this government. Second, it is a mind-boggling statement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in answer to the question: what new provinces have been created recently?

As far as anyone is aware, the last time a new province was created was when Newfoundland entered confederation in 1949. Certainly that cannot be deemed to be a recent event, nor was the minister around to take part. I will not comment on where he might have been. Therefore, when he says that the government has recently consulted provinces about creating provinces, what is he talking about? What were those recent consultations? What provinces took part in those recent consultations? What possible new provinces were being discussed? Were they talking about a new province of Yukon, which is long overdue for provincehood? I very much doubt it; at least, not with that minister there, not with that Prime Minister there, not with that government there, not with those Liberals there. Is this why we have these new clauses which overturn the practice of the past and take away a right that belongs to Parliament?

• (2030)

What have they been up to, sir? Is there some way we can get at the facts, facts which Canadians are entitled to know about this government's subterranean tunnels? Parliament creates new provinces, not the government and not the existing provinces. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia were created by Parliament through a joint address of both Parliaments. Some were colonies, some were territories. British Columbia was a colony. I might interject here that, there are many people who believe that this Parliament has never amended the BNA Act. We cannot do it, they say. How many people would be surprised if I told them it was done? It was done in 1952. How many hon. members know that?

Mr. Deans: You just told us.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad the hon. member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans) is listening. It is very gratifying and the information just might penetrate his mind.

The BNA Act was amended unilaterally by this Parliament in 1952 when, for the first time, a Member of Parliament was given a seat in this place for the Northwest Territories. A request was not made to Westminster to do this. It was done here. For those who believe, like the hon. member for Hamilton-Mountain when he was supporting the government in the initial resolution together with other members of his party, right down the line—

Mr. Deans: Are you going to read and talk for 40 minutes?

Mr. Nielsen: I might be asking for a minute or two more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The bottom line of the argument is that a government cannot take away from the people of Canada the right to establish new provinces through Parliament. To do so is a travesty and a betrayal of a right enjoyed by Canada for over 100 years. The government must be aware of the Pandora's box it is opening with these proposals. First, it is putting off indefinitely the creation of new provinces by subjecting them to provincial veto.

Second, the government is opening the door to provincial intervention and invasion—there is no other word for it but invasion—of the territories now belonging to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Third, the government is inviting a shambles in the administration of resources in those two territories. But that is not surprising to me. I am one of those who believe that the government creates disorder deliberately for its own purposes. It has created and fomented fiscal disorder in the budget, economic disorder in its interest rate policy, constitutional disorder in its tortuous and evasive method of putting together a Constitution for Canadians. This has created unbelievable disorder in the oil and gas industry by setting up God knows what Crown corporation for what purpose, if not for massive state intervention. The policy of the government is one of creating confusion and disorder.

The people of the north are a special breed. They are Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: They want the rights and privileges enjoyed by other Canadians, no more and no less but the same rights and privileges enjoyed by any other Canadian. They do not want to accept taxation without representation. They will not accept being used as pawns by a politically-minded government. They have chosen to accept hardship and inconvenience. They have chosen to make do with less than their fellow Canadians. They are an independent breed. They are people who stand on their own two feet. I have often called the people in the territories the last bastion of free enterprise in this socialistically torn country of ours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: They laugh over there. Let them visit and get the feeling of the people of the north themselves. Let them ask their own member, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar).

Mr. Blaikie: Why did the NDP win the last by-election?

Mr. Taylor: Bird's eye would freeze to death if he ever went up there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Bird's eye would freeze in his own bird's nest if he went up there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The northern people do not want to see the north turn into a gigantic reserve operated from Ottawa by people who, in the main, have never seen it.

Sir, I need a few moments more to complete my speech and I ask the indulgence of the House to do this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired, but he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its indulgence.

Natives and whites are united on this issue. In this issue there are no natives and no whites; there are only northerners. We are united in fighting the southern Canadian mentality that the world ends at the 60th parallel or before. The world does not end there. It is a different world. Perhaps it is a world where climate is everything and where in most communities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon everything must be flown in. Perhaps it is the last frontier of our country.

Canada's future economic prospects depend on orderly development of northern resources for the benefit of all Canadians. That will come only if provincial administrations are given the task of dealing with conditions on the spot, conditions dealt with by the residents who are there and who know the conditions. The day has long gone when citizens of the north, native or European, will tolerate being a colony of the bureaucracy.

The future belongs to the north, and the north must be free to realize that future for the benefit of all Canadians.

Throughout these negotiations, the elected governments of the territories have been patronized, ignored, treated with indifference or contempt but, whatever else, never heard by their elected representatives.

The Mackenzie Valley, the Beaufort Sea, Melville Island, these are the passwords of the future. Northerners demand a voice in that future so they can speak for a Canadian point of view, a point of view formed by living and working in the north country.

We are the trustees of the future, and it is time that this fact was recognized here in the House and in the country. I hope that by tomorrow we will have that provincial accord which will delete these invidious provisions from the proposed Constitution, and I have every indication from the government that if we do have an assurance that there is that accord, the government will voluntarily support the amendments proposed by me.

With all my heart I hope that this will come about so that we do not take this terribly retrograde step which will forever doom every possibility of the Yukon or any other of our northern territories from ever becoming a province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my comments will be to clarify my position on the proposed resolution for patriation of the Canadian constitution, because I feel it is essential at this point in the debate to explain exactly why I disagree with the motion. First of all, I want to make it quite clear that I am personally in favour of patriating the Canadian constitution. Our country will not be fully sovereign until it is able to decide for itself what its future is to be. Patriating our constitution to Canada will remove any lingering traces of colonialism, and from now on, Canadians will make their own decision. I am not opposed to the government's objectives in introducing this motion, nor am I objecting to the way it was done, although I would have preferred the Government of Quebec to have been a partner in the agreement that was concluded. The present situation is probably due to the ambiguity of the Supreme Court decision in which the Justices washed their hands of the whole thing simply tossing the ball back in the politicians' court. It is important to understand which constitutional provisions relate to the Charter of Rights. After establishing what the objectives of these provisions are, I will argue about the expected implementation of these provisions.

● (2040)

[English]

The main purpose of a constitution is to guarantee the rights of citizens beyond the reach of any political power. Furthermore, it should not be used to protect the rights of majorities but rather those of minorities, for the former, the majorities, protect themselves naturally through their numbers, through political influence and through the environment they create. That is why protection of the rights of the minorities cannot be left in the hands of the majorities, nor in those, for that matter, of the various legislative assemblies.

A constitution is in fact, Mr. Speaker, a social contract which binds a whole nation, and to which each citizen is subject. The latter element should ensure that each and every citizen enjoys respect and equality within the social body, regardless of his origin, opinions, language and beliefs.

[Translation]

In the present constitutional resolution presented to the Parliament of Canada by the federal government, these rights will be entrenched in a charter of rights and freedoms. The charter is intended to be universal, above everything else. Its primary objective is to guarantee equal rights to all individuals throughout Canada. The rights in the charter include the right to fundamental freedoms and democratic rights, which are covered by Clauses 1 to 5, and with which I wholeheartedly agree. Clause 6 guarantees mobility rights and rights to gain livelyhood everywhere in Canada. Although I agree with the essence of this clause, we shall see that other constitutional provisions make it somewhat less than ironclad, and I would go so far as to say that in practice, its existence is threatened. Clauses 7 to 15 guarantee legal rights, and for the same reasons I gave concerning Clause 6, the implementation of these rights is also threatened throughout Canada. Clauses 16 to 22 deal with official languages, and it is said specifically that these provisions apply to the Parliament of Canada and to New Brunswick. The status of official languages in other provinces is regulated by earlier constitutional provisions in Section 133 of the British North America Act and Section 23 of the Manitoba Act. There, Mr. Speaker, we have the crux of the constitutional resolution. A direct consequence of the fact that the status of the French language is governed by such provisions is that all clauses in the charter starting with Clause 16 are, in effect, English only in seven out of 10 provinces.

[English]

It is true that mobility rights and legal rights are guaranteed under the charter, but in reality are those rights guaranteed to French-speaking citizens if they cannot, except in three provinces, be tried in their own language, buy a house in their own language or register their will in their own language? Indeed, can they use their own language to carry on business, make transactions, sign contracts, etc? No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Clause 23 gives constitutional guarantees with respect to language educational rights, up to and including secondary school, in all provinces including Quebec. The wording of Clause 23 is not specific about the administration and control of minority language educational institutions. A liberal and broad interpretation will probably be necessary to establish that the legislators of this House, by applying the process in subparagraph 23(3)(b), and I quote:

> (3) The right of citizens of Canada under subsections (1) and (2) . . .
> (b) includes, where the number of those children so warrants, the right to have them receive that instruction in minority language educational facilities provided out of public funds.

That is the process, Mr. Speaker. With due respect to my friend Bill Davis, the premier of my province, there is still a glimmer of hope.

Not more than a week or two ago, my Canadian First Minister told me something I would like to read to you, in reply to a question I asked him on November 9. His answer was: "So I think that to start with, francophones outside Quebec should take time out to celebrate, but not too long", and I agree, Mr. Speaker, there is a glimmer of hope in the fact that a liberal interpretation of this clause may give us access to the administration and control of our educational institutions.

[English]

Of course, some will say that since the charter grants minority language education right, throughout the country, the rights of the francophones are, indeed, protected. However, the charter imposes a notion of quantity by specifying, quite ignobly, "where the number is sufficient to warrant"—that famous clause. What will this number be? Who will decide what is to be that number, the provinces concerned or the courts of justice? We can look forward to some tough battles on this question, Mr. Speaker, in the years to come.

Furthermore, in seven provinces out of ten, including my province of Ontario, a French-speaking citizen will not be able to use his mother tongue in the legislative assembly and courts since these rights will not be guaranteed by the Canadian Constitution. Can it truly be said that equal rights are guaranteed to all?

[Translation]

The irony of this situation can be readily appreciated. Since the Charter of Rights does not give access to legal and legislative institutions in the language of the linguistic minority in that Canadian province, parents will have to fight in English to obtain recognition of a minimum of the constitutional rights granted to them as francophones. This serious deficiency in the Charter of Rights makes it unacceptable in my opinion. We are told that the charter safeguards the rights of linguistic minorities, but it does so only partially. Minorities are given certain rights, but not the tools required to ensure that they are respected. That is why I disagree with this proposal, Mr.

Speaker. The inclusion of a charter of rights reflects the desire to grant the same rights to all Canadians. Yet, these rights granted in the charter are denied in practice by other provisions. This is what I question. I am told that as a French-speaking Canadian, I am given every right while, in fact, these rights can be exercised fully and completely only in three provinces. In its present version, our future Constitution will maintain the notion of two classes of citizens: those who have rights across the country, namely English Canadians, and those who have rights only in three provinces, namely French-speaking Canadians.

Even the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was against this disparity of linguistic rights at the time. In reply to a question I asked in this House concerning the equality of linguistic rights, Mr. Trudeau replied, as reported on page 2642 of Hansard for January 29, 1979:

—I would insist on the fact that this bill of rights should and must include a bill of rights protecting official language minorities all over the country.

This commitment has been partly met and some of these rights are included in the charter. The problem therefore comes basically from Section 133 which, because of its exclusive application to Quebec, cancels out the total application of these rights in seven other Canadian provinces. Section 133 is the tool used by the English-speaking majority to have access to parliamentary and legal institutions through its minority. This means that all English-speaking Canadians can have access to the democratic institutions in their own language throughout the country, including Quebec, where they are in a minority, and I quite agree with that. However, the majority of the provinces, or seven out of ten, are refusing to grant French-speaking Canadians from Quebec and elsewhere the same right to access in their own language to legislative and legal institutions.

● (2050)

[English]

I am against this double standard in applying legislation in Canadian territory. I am truly embarrassed to realize that today, in 1981, the majority continues to impose itself, even where the members of its group are in a minority, and refuses to grant the same rights to the other linguistic community. I would feel much better if we abolished Section 133 of the British North America Act, thus putting an end to the preferential treatment afforded to the majority.

All provinces should be subjected to the application of such a provision, or it should be simply deleted as was proposed by the Pepin-Robarts Task Force on Canadian Unity. I believe that the arguments brought forward by that commission are the same as those I am advancing tonight.

Moreover, I am not the only one to hold that view. My colleagues of the Ontario branch of the Liberal Party of Canada unanimously passed the following proposal last fall. I will spare you the preamble, but the resolution reads as follows:

. . . Resolved that this meeting of the Liberal Party of Canada (Ontario) firmly support the application of Section 133 of the Constitution to Ontario.

[English]

Even public opinion supports this position which seems to indicate that the population is often more awake than certain politicians would lead us to believe.

At the provincial level, an opinion poll commissioned by The Globe and Mail revealed that in Ontario more than 53 per cent of the population agree that the province of Ontario should be bound by Section 133. In my own riding of Ottawa-Vanier, this figure exceeds 66 per cent, according to an opinion poll taken in October, 1981. Over 83 per cent of the population in my riding demand that francophones outside Quebec be granted the same constitutional rights as those granted to the English-speaking minority in the province of Quebec, namely, a completely autonomous education system, which we do not have in Ontario, and the right to use their own language in the legislative assemblies and the courts. Under the present resolution this equality of treatment is denied francophones. For this equality to exist, Section 133 should either be made applicable to those provinces which are not bound by it, or be abolished in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba.

Now who objects to that? The Ontario Premier, Mr. Davis, of course, and several of his provincial counterparts. The federal government was compelled by Mr. Davis to accept this way of thinking in order to get his support. At that time, since eight provinces out of ten rejected the patriation proposal, the Prime Minister had no choice. Besides, he stated at a recent press conference that nothing would please him more than to compel Ontario to recognize its francophones by forcing Section 133 on that province; but the interplay of political alliances prevented him from doing so. La Presse reported in its edition of Monday, November 23, the comments of Premier Davis who said, and I quote:

It is quite obvious that our strong objection to Ottawa's initial intention to review Section 133 of the Constitution in order to institutionalize bilingualism has led the Canadian government to give up that idea.

Mr. Davis, on the other hand, claims that Ontario should not be forced to grand francophones these rights, that Ontario would do it at its own pace, that is, slowly. Need I remind hon. members of all the battles fought by francophones in Ontario to get a few statutory privileges. Need I remind hon. members, to question the good will of Mr. Davis, of the painful clashes I witnessed as school trustee from 1966 to 1979? Sturgeon Falls in 1971-72, Cornwall in 1973, Elliot Lake in 1974, Windsor-Essex, Penetanguishene, and this is only in Ontario, Mr. Speaker, but I could mention similar battles now being fought all over Canada. Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the preamble of the Ontario legislation creating a French school in Essex. I think this preamble is quite eloquent about the legal recognition of francophones in Ontario. I quote:

The Constitution

[English]

An Act to require The Essex County Board of Education to provide a French-language Secondary School

Assented to July 12th, 1977

WHEREAS the French-language advisory committee of The Essex County Board of Education has, since 1969, consistently recommended that a French-language secondary school be provided; and whereas, upon such recommendation having been rejected by the Board in the year 1974, the Languages of Instruction Commission of Ontario recommended that the Board provide such a school; and whereas The Essex County Board of Education, having initially rejected the recommendation of the Commission, subsequently agreed in April, 1975 to proceed with construction of a French-language secondary school, but on and after the 23rd day of February, 1976 ceased to proceed therewith; and whereas a mediator appointed by order in council No. 1452/76 recommended in February, 1977 that the Board build such school, but the Board, on or about the 8th day of March, 1977, decided not to build the school and it is now apparent that no such school will be provided at this time; and whereas there are sufficient French-speaking secondary school pupils resident in or adjacent to the area of jurisdiction of The Essex County Board of Education who have elected to be taught in the French language to warrant the provision of a French-language secondary school; and whereas the public interest, and in particular the interests of such French-speaking secondary school pupils, require that such a school be constructed;

Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario, enacts as follows:

And the bill followed nine years after the formal recommendation, Mr. Speaker.

The meagre comfort we have obtained from the Ontario government over the past 100 years is the result of bitter fighting such as that I have just described. And Mr. Davis would have us believe that he will grant us additional rights when the Constitution will allow him not to. Let us not dream in colour, Mr. Speaker. One of the best ways to ensure that linguistic minorities enjoy these rights forever is to spell it out in the Constitution. Because the current resolution fails to do so, I must in all conscience voice my opposition. The resolution is incompleted and unfair to francophones. It will create two classes of citizens. It will create a checker board country of legal exemptions. I am sure we could do better, much better.

Another aspect of this resolution which reveals even more its real worth, is the presence in the Charter of a great many non obstante clauses. These clauses of course are the result of the negotiated compromise between the federal government and the nine provincial governments. However, if we reflect upon the result of that compromise we realize that this resolution is probably the only federal document which has to rely upon provincial jurisdiction or legislation to become operative. As I pointed out in an earlier speech, that is a good example of a situation where the government of Canada proposes and where provincial governments dispose. How then can we speak of a Canadian constitution? We should instead speak of a constitution of the Canadian provinces made possible through the federal government. Those numerous opting-out clauses leave us in a rather strange situation, Mr. Speaker. I see that you are about to rise. I do not know whether my time is up, but I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to finish my speech because I have only a few pages left to read.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.
