It is frustrating in the extreme, to go before a committee, to debate in the House, to discuss in Committee of the Whole or whatever procedure, bills of such tremendous importance as this bill and, whether sitting around the committee table or in the House, be faced by a bunch of members who know that their only purpose and reason for being there is to say "aye" when the minister orders it. Independent thinking is intolerable to the backbenchers or frontbenchers of the Liberal Party. They do not tolerate independent thinking. Therefore, I can perhaps understand some of their frustration and the reason they applaud bringing in closure today. It is because they have been sitting there for a year, with different characters coming in and participating in different stages, but they have not been allowed to have a single independent thought, and they have not been allowed to examine the legislation from any other point of view. They must always say, "Is this not wonderful? The minister is such a brilliant man! This Liberal government is so sensational!" Their sole role is to say, "Aye, sir, aye", when ordered to do so. They are never allowed to think. If they dare think, they will be back there behind the curtains forever. Their chances of going on a trip? Zip! Their chances of becoming parliamentary secretaries? Zip! Their chances of getting any of these nice perks are shot if they ever dare think. Therefore, "For goodness sakes, do not think!" is the cardinal rule of the Liberal backbencher. They must say, "Aye, aye, aye!"

If they were thinking, and I assume that some of them have the capacity of doing so from time to time, they would have listened to some of the things said. Yes, they might have heard some things being said by the industry, which many of them hate. However, they would have listened. Perhaps, if they did not like what the industry had to say, they would have listened to what the legislative council in the Northwest Territories and the legislative council of the Yukon Territories had to say. They would have heard their concerns. They would have heard their feelings of exasperation at being treated as a bunch of colonials by this bill.

What this bill does for the Northwest Territories and Yukon is the same thing that the Dutch East India Company did to India. The government established Petro-Canada as a kind of governor of this enormous territory. This benevolent Crown corporation will now have more to do with the development of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon than the democratically elected legislatures of those two territories. It is colonialism of the worst sort.

If hon. members opposite had the capability to think, they would have thought a little bit about what those people were saying. They would have thought about what those democratically elected legislators were saying. Hon. members would have said, "Maybe we should not be so rash in the manner in which we put forward this legislation".

This situation is really sad. I think that this House would do itself a service by devoting several days of debate and discussion to the quality of the democracy that exists and to the nature and way this place operates. The reality is that much of what we do is basically fraudulent. Hon. members opposite, and particularly backbenchers of the government party, sit in committee and participate in debate, claiming they are speaking as individual MPs. However, in fact they are automatons, robots who say, "Aye, sir, aye", and nothing more.

We call this a democratic Parliament, a parliamentary system which has its tradition; but in a sense we are deceiving the people of Canada if we claim that Parliament, in fact, functions as it should. It does not. Whatever comes out of the bowels of the bureaucracy, rubber-stamped by the cabinet, becomes holy writ.

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, initially I did not intend to take part in the debate on the motion of closure presented by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), but considering that the debate on the bill has been going on for more than a year, I feel it should be made clear to the members of the opposition that the line has to be drawn somewhere. Personally, I would be the first to protest any attempt to gag the House whenever a bill is at all controversial, if the time allotted to consider the bill was not sufficient. However, Bill C-48 was tabled in the House more than a year ago, and I feel that anyone who wants to extend the debate is clearly showing signs of bad faith.

Earlier, I was listening to the member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) speak to this bill, when he asked to extend the debate again for a few days, so that certain improvements could be made. The surprising thing is that during the ten minutes he spent talking, the hon. member made no new proposals aside from criticizing the measure of closure. In my view, if the hon. member had any desire to be effective, he would have used his ten minutes to suggest at least a few improvements, if he is so convinced there is room for any. One of the important elements that has been added to the bill during the past year, Mr. Speaker, concerns future discussions with native peoples because Bill C-48 is not placing any restrictions on the debate on land titles or rights that apply directly to native peoples throughout Canada. I believe that just now the member for York-Peel could usefully have proposed some concrete elements, in discussing native peoples and the environment.

In fact, Bill C-48 is intended to provide a framework for the implementation of new legislative provisions that are to govern the development of both gas and oil resources. This bill will help us exercise more government control over resources that belong to all Canadians. Of course this bill could be debated for ages. We could even add or delete a few commas! But let us at least give this bill a chance to be enacted. Later, if necessary, it could be tabled again in Parliament, when amendments could be proposed. Mr. Speaker, in debates like this one it is hard to understand why, instead of pressing on, instead of wanting to pass legislation, the opposition seems to be literally obstructing the parliamentary process and democracy. For one whole year, the opposition has had an opportunity to make its position clear, as have the members on the government side, and whatever the member for York-Peel may have said in this regard just now, he is very little concerned with the backbenchers of his own party or those on the government side. Members who were genuinely interested in the subject have all had an opportunity to speak to this bill, and to discuss it in committee.

So, anyone who says that we are blindly accepting measures presented directly by cabinet is ignoring the critical faculties of the members on all sides of this House. To the members opposite and to the members of my own party I can say that I have personally taken part in a number of discussions on native rights to ensure that the rights of these first owners of this country are not neglected by legislation that is of course creating a framework for the development of natural resources. The bill says clearly that in future, native peoples could claim any royalties to which they would be entitled. In no way does the bill affect native rights. It simply confirms the right of Parliament to continue to negotiate with the native people those provisions which could bring them revenue and also confirms their ownership of these lands for the years to come. It is important to note this. Another aspect of Bill C-48 which might be mentioned is the environmental aspect. In my opinion, some worthwhile provisions contained in this bill will guarantee the harmonious development of oil and gas resources and ensure that we shall have no cause to regret in the future whatever action is taken under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to be guilty myself of what I deplore and talk about nothing, but I really want the opposition to understand, as we do on this side of the House, that some decision must be made after one year of debate on this issue. Something which many people deplore about the government is that we do not often have the courage to draw the line, even though imperfectly. Obviously, if I were to go over this bill, I might want to make some very personal changes and add my own personal touch to it. However, on the whole, I am satisfied. The bill provides guarantees which I am very happy to accept. We should at least give this bill a chance to see the light of day and quit dragging on about matters which have been debated according to the rules of democracy. In view of what was said in committee and all the representations made to the minister and to the standing committee of the House, no one can say that the process of democracy has not been respected.

I understand that some members may not be happy about this bill and that some people would have preferred another formula to ensure the development of Canadian oil and gas resources, but the fact is that the government is responsible for the decisions to be made in this regard. I believe that only the people may show their appreciation or disapproval of such a bill when they go to the polls every four years. It is important for the opposition to be heard and to express its views, but afterwards, we have to vote. As a last resort, the opposition will be able to revert to this issue in the next election, and if the people really condemn the government party at that time, they will obviously show it. Until then, the opposition should respect those that the majority of Canadians have elected to act on their behalf. This is important. We often have the impression that some people are trying to play a role or to speak on behalf of other people because they are convinced that only they can speak the truth.

Under a democratic system, the government is allowed to govern and the opposition to act in character, of course, and even to oppose measures, while abiding by the rules of the game, and making sure as well that no time is wasted. Considering the present economic problems in this country, I think it would be rather irresponsible for the opposition to ask for additional time in order to repeat over again same things that have been said for quite some time in the House and in committee on that bill.

Mr. Speaker, since my time is almost up, I merely want to say to the parties opposite that I would be the first, along with others in the House to object to being gagged if all the time required to discuss this bill had not been allotted, but since a year has elapsed since the bill was introduced, I think that every democratic rule has been complied with and that it is rather unfortunate that we have to resort to the gag, because we would like to proceed with the co-operation of the parties opposite.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I stand today with a sense of outrage. Today was the first time in over a year that I have put on my parliamentary button. I took it off the night after the brief debate when Liberal members opposite moved closure on the Constitution of Canada. Liberal members stood in this House and voted for closure after a short debate. This morning I decided that possibly the Parliament of Canada could work. I put on my button, and at my first opportunity to speak in this house I again face closure.

I would like to remind hon. members of the Liberal Party of Canada that they may have a tendency to blame the cabinet and the government, but their fund raisers, volunteers and votes in this House of Commons have sustained the government. Never in the history of this country have there been so many closure motions faced by a Parliament. Eight times members of this cabinet have moved closure in this House during this Parliament. I remind hon. members opposite that very shortly after the introduction of the constitutional resolution, closure was moved. A cabinet cannot do this. A cabinet cannot deny Canadians the freedom of speech which this House represents unless that cabinet is sustained by its backbenchers. I say to hon. members opposite that they must examine their consciences on each and every occasion a cabinet minister says that it is a good idea to move closure. Hon. members opposite must weigh the pros and cons to see whether or not they are culpable and part of a system which is gradually eroding democracy piece by piece in this country. Hon. members opposite must accept responsibility for that. I suggest to Liberal voters in Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or wherever they are found that they must begin to judge members by the contributions they make to informed discussion and to democracy in this House.

It is our responsibility, and I will encourage our candidates in the ridings, to make voters aware of how often members opposite have stood in this House and voted for closure. There is nothing in terms of the long-term impact on the functioning of the Parliament of Canada that is as damaging as this record of closure.

The parliamentary secretary stood earlier in this House and talked about obstructionism. I put a different word on debate in this house. If we have a government that values this House, then we should all learn from each other. We come from various parts of Canada. This is a forum. We come from Newfoundland, Vancouver Island and the Northwest Territories. We come to this chamber as representatives of people in our communities and regions. We come to bring that perspective to the debates of this House. The extent to which closure is used as a tool to cut off our instructional process is eroding public confidence in the ability of this chamber and the Parliament of Canada to act on behalf of the Canadian people.

On each occasion closure is used, it becomes easier to use it on the next occasion. The proof of that lies in the fact that we are considering the ninth motion of this kind brought forward by this government.

If hon. members opposite are pleased with last Wednesday's vote on the Constitution of Canada, I remind them that they could not have stood in this House and voted for that resolution or the accord if this party, led by the former prime minister of Canada, had not fought for seven days to keep them from getting to a closure motion. That is what the filibuster was all about; it was not on the Constitution of Canada. It was to stop the cabinet from moving a closure motion on the fundamental law of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I stand here today representing the people of Calgary West and facing a closure motion on Bill C-48, the Canada oil and gas act. There is a sense of tiredness in this party about trying to educate members opposite to the impact of this legislation on the future supply of oil and gas for Canadians. In my riding, in my neighbourhood and on my street, there are many people who work in the oil and gas industry as janitors, secretaries, engineers and geologists. I see them day after day. I have lived among them all of my life. I tell hon. members that the present bill will not produce the desired consequences. It will not produce the oil and gas Canadians could have and do need, the oil and gas which will become even more important in the future.

● (1600)

The minister has a choice. He can read the speeches of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. André) and the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) as a student trying to learn about the industry which is important to the future of this country, or he can read them with a closed mind believing that members on this side have no interests other than those of obstructionists.

In the meantime I say to the minister that a number of my friends and neighbours have left this country with their skills, their money and their equipment. They are not here today to help us find the oil and gas this country needs. One of the reasons they are not here is Bill C-48.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre said earlier today that never in the history of a democratic government has there been a piece of legislation which simply moves in, without compensation, to seal 25 per cent of the assets of people who have their money invested in the shares of these companies, including the pension funds. What this legislation does is steal 25 per cent of the assets of Canadians who have invested in these companies, or in pension funds, without compensation. That is one of the things it does, and that is one of the things that has chased Canadians with talents, skills, equipment and money out of this country. The United States, Australia, New Zealand and other countries are benefiting from this policy promoted by the Liberal Party of Canada. This policy is probably more important in world economic terms than the North-South dialogue, particularly in its potential to influence events as we go down the road.

One of the problems results from his lack of understanding that in the world today, because of the actions of the OPEC cartel and things of that kind, there is a worldwide shortage of human beings with the skills, knowledge and experience needed to find oil and gas, get it out of the ground and into our homes, our cars and buses. These people are in short supply in the world today.

When the government decides to strengthen the hand of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and to trust the advice of its officials, then I suggest the first thing it should do is compare the salaries paid to the officials of that department with the salaries paid to those in the private sector. The minister should remember that there is a shortage and then ask himself whether in that competitive labour market he is getting advice from the best brains, the most knowledgeable people. Is the minister, who knew little about this industry when he started, getting the best advice? If the minister cannot come to the conclusion, on the basis of plain common sense, that the government can, is and will be competing in the competitive market for the best brains, then he better be careful about how much responsibility he is giving his officials and how much advice he is taking from them.

I suggest to the minister that any objective observer would have to come to the conclusion that a government department is never going to be able to get the kind of talented and experienced human beings required to run this industry. When the minister has that clear in his mind he should look again at Bill C-48 and recognize that for each individual play there is going to be a bureaucrat determining the rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity of saying a few words on the motion before the House this afternoon to limit the time for debate on Bill C-48.

This bill is very important to all Canadians, and certainly to those involved in the oil and gas industry, with particular reference to the Canada lands, some 300 million acres in the north and on the east coast. The bill has been before the House for over a year now, and it is clear that even though it has had very extensive study in committee, with extensive debate at second reading and at the report stage, there is now under way a long filibuster on third reading.

It seems to me that the opposition has the right to oppose a bill of this nature, but at some stage a decision has to be taken on what is the will of the House. During some 70 meetings the committee studying the details of this bill heard not only from representatives of oil companies but from people in the north and from other countries.

One feature of the bill that is often misunderstood, and about which there are outlandish cries of concern, is that feature regarding the federal government's 25 per cent share of oil and gas leases in the Canada lands. Bill C-48 does away with the existing system in almost all respects and adds one new element, namely, the 25 per cent Crown share.

Another related and very important component of the system is the federal government's cash incentives, the PIP grants, available to explorers, which will offset the 25 per cent Crown share. Thus there will be no free ride because the federal government is making grants for exploration. The government will be paying its way throughout the exploration and development stage and there will be no discrimination against foreign oil companies because they will receive the same 25 per cent cash incentive available to all Canadian companies. In fact, when the Crown agency converts to a working interest during the exploration stage, the federal government, in effect, will be paying nearly twice for its interest during the balance of that stage, because the private interest holder will continue to receive the minimum 25 per cent exploration grant in respect of his 75 per cent interest, while the Crown agency will pay 100 per cent of its working 25 per cent interest. Thus nearly 44 per cent of exploration costs will be met by or on behalf of the federal government.

Having regard to the fact that oil and gas resources are 100 per cent owned by Canadians in the first place, and the fact that Canadians have been funding frontier exploration and development through their tax dollars by an amount equal to much more than 25 per cent, Canadians should be entitled to at least a 25 per cent share of any oil and gas rights issued under the new act.

Regarding the 25 per cent Crown share of existing oil and gas rights, the rationale is equally sound. The fact is that Canadian taxpayers have been paying for the bulk of oil and gas exploration expenditures made in the frontier regions. Of the frontier development expenditures of $4.5 billion to $5 billion to date, some 75 per cent, or over $3 billion, has been provided through tax dollars in write-off provisions. Thus there is no case to be made for the suggestion that the 25 per cent Crown share is expropriation without compensation.

Furthermore, 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the total expenditure involved in exploring for oil and bringing a field into production is incurred after the production system has been approved. Since the Crown share will be in the form of a working interest not later than the time of the approval, the Crown agency will be paying a proportionate share of these major costs. That is, bringing the field into production and, as I said, paying 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the total expenditure. Of course, at that stage the Crown agency, whether it be Petro-Canada or another Crown corporation, will have converted their carrying interest into a working interest and will be paying their full share.

To ensure a fair distribution of past costs, there is a new provision for ex gratia payments on 25 per cent of the exploration expenditure made up to December 31, 1980 in respect of any oil and gas discovery which results from a well which is spudded prior to that date and which qualifies to be declared a significant discovery prior to December 31, 1982. The amount of payments to be made out of the Crown share of production will be fully reflected in the value in time of the qualifying expenditures. Thus, the government cannot accept the views of some companies that repayment should be in terms of the full market value of their reserves which have already been delivered.

Finally, our attention should be directed to the significant difference between the current Canada lands regime and the proposed Bill C-48 package. Currently, holders of exploration rights are required to return at least 50 per cent of their acreage to the Crown, which could involve up to 30 per cent of their discoveries, prior to obtaining production rights. Furthermore, the rights holder thereby loses a portion of the production area of the field. While some explorers have said that this imposes less of a burden than the proposals in Bill C-48, their actions contradict this view. In several cases they have opted for special renewal permits on their entire acreage, thus accepting the 25 per cent Petro-Canada back-in. They have done this in preference to moving directly to lease, yielding 50 per cent of their acreage but avoiding a Petro-Canada back-in. They are thereby recognizing a preference for the new system which allows them, among other things, to retain production rights in the entire area of an oil and gas field.

I would like to emphasize again the point that the people of Canada actually own 100 per cent of the Canada lands and the oil and gas which these regions contain. This amounts to approximately 300 million acres. Private companies may explore and develop these oil and gas resources but only on the full understanding that the federal government, as the landlord, can set a regime that is appropriate to the circumstances and in protection of the national interest. This is a basic principle which all governments must follow in managing their resources.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems important to me that we move on with this bill now. We have been without firm legislation for the past ten years, since the oil and gas land regulations have been in abeyance. This bill has been thoroughly aired, both in the House and in the committee. People who are interested are now concerned about the delay that is taking place at third reading, when amendments cannot be brought in anyway. I think it is important that we proceed now to pass this bill. The House has had an opportunity to discuss it in detail. I believe it is a waste of time to filibuster this bill at third reading. We should be putting in place a new oil and gas regulation regime for this important sector of our economy instead of wasting the time of the House. I would urge members to get on with the job and pass this bill and bring its beneficial effects into being.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, there are several types of legislation that this House deals with. One type of legislation is that with which there is a considerable amount of agreement from all sides, such as housekeeping matters which have to be dealt with rather quickly and expeditiously. We on this side of the House have tried to be as co-operative as possible as far as these issues are concerned. We have heard this afternoon that rapid consent has been given to approximately 33 pieces of legislation during this session of Parliament. If that is contrasted to what happened in 1979, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that during this session of Parliament it is evident that we have tried to be much more co-operative than the previous opposition.

Another type of legislation is that of a financial nature, such as the budget, with which we know there will not be agreement. The rules of the House, under the Standing Orders, provide a system of time allocation so that these matters can be reasonably and adequately debated before they come to a vote.

A third type of legislation is the type that is before us today, Bill C-48. This is a highly controversial piece of legislation which contains radical and new ideas that are not acceptable to the vast majority of Canadians. The traditional system which has developed over the decades in Canada for dealing with this type of legislation has been for the government to introduce the legislation, but rather than deal with it all at once, debate it over a period of time. There is a process of negotiation which is supposed to take place, and until this government was elected, this process by and large did go on. A majority government would get its way but the process would allow for consideration of other ideas and for the government to modify the proposals which it would have put forward. This process would prevent a radical change taking place virtually overnight.

I believe that this parliamentary process is a good one and should be inherent in the Constitution of Canada. We are now seeing this parliamentary process being abused and thrown away by the government. It does not care for the established principles of democracy and parliamentary procedure. Had the government brought forward legislation similar to Bill C-20, it would have been dealt with expeditiously. Bill C-20 was considered by the government, the opposition parties, by the industry and by people in the areas which would be affected, and there was a general consensus that Bill C-20 was the proper way to go. All that work went for nought and the government introduced Bill C-48, a bill with radical proposals; the concept of Canada lands and the continued colonialization and exploitation which the government wishes to see continue in the north, the idea that the minister can hand out gas and oil dispositions to anyone he wants. You do not get in line to come on a first come, first served basis or put in a bid at public tender; you just go to the back door of the minister's office and ask for a disposition at some particular area and ask, "What can I do for you?"

The notion of the oil and gas lease has grown up over many years in Canada. Companies would know what they were embarking upon when they signed an oil and gas lease in the north or in the provinces which issued these instruments. That will not be the case any longer under this legislation. The best that companies can do is to have something called a licence to produce. I do not know what kind of title that is. I am not surprised that property rights were not included in the new Constitution. What type of ownership is a licence to produce? It is practically meaningless. The idea is that whether you want it or not, you are going to have Petro-Canada in there as a 25 per cent or more partner. They are going to take that 25 per cent from you. It is confiscation, not, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren) said, obstruction on the part of the opposition. It is obstruction of the parliamentary process by this government; that is what it is.

Unlike the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Kelly), who I am afraid is beyond hope and redemption, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources must have some spark of intelligence beneath that flint-like exterior. If he were to bring that little intelligence that he possesses to bear on this question, he would see what he has been party to. He must be able to see what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has been putting him up to.

This has been a shameful display of government arrogance. This is what the government intends to do. It came in with Bill C-48, it is going to take 25 per cent, confiscate it and do all the other things I mentioned. The government is not going to brook any opposition. It is going to do precisely and exactly what it had in mind in the first instance. It remains of that mind, not having listened to any of the arguments proposed by the opposition, other governments in Canada that have been involved or people in the oil and gas industry.

During the committee stage, this party proposed between 50 and 60 amendments. How many of those were accepted by the government? I will tell the House how many. Not one single amendment. I can believe that, out of the 58 amendments presented, after careful reflection 54 might not have been in the best interest of the country. However, I am sure that at least four, three, two or one, had they been looked at and carefully examined by members opposite, would have been found to have at least some merit. But no, that did not happen. The government made up its mind a year ago when this bill was introduced that it would not listen to the opposition.

That is one reason the government has run into so much trouble over the period of time it has taken. Another reason is all that has been going on in the meantime, all the time devoted to the Constitution and other issues. The government could have come in with Bill C-48, listened to the arguments and said, "No, we have listened to what you have to say and we realize that what you are saying makes some sense"—

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

The member for Vanier has the floor.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): For Ottawa-Vanier, Mr. Speaker! I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in this debate. I wish to remind the member who just took his seat that the House has spent twenty-eight days considering Bill C-48. There have been seventy committee meetings at which 140 witnesses were heard. I think it is time the government took action and that the House decided on this very important bill. Mr. Speaker, I also want to stress a very important aspect of Bill C-48, namely, the Canadianization of our industry. Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, will enable the government to have more control over the development of regions under its jurisdiction, namely the Canada lands, and also to increase the level of Canadian participation.

This bill is therefore directly linked to one of the three primary objectives of the National Energy Program, Canadianization, which will give Canadians an opportunity to increase their participation in the energy sector, especially in the oil and gas industry. Mr. Speaker, one can hardly overestimate the importance of this bill, as it represents one of the major concerns of our National Energy Program. Its aim is to provide a basic framework for the sound management and profitable development of Canada's considerable oil resources, and more specifically in lands owned by the government in the North or adjacent to our coasts. The bill will also give Canadians a fair share in the development of their oil industry, while guaranteeing safeguards for the population and environment of these remote regions. Our program, Mr. Speaker, confirms the principle that Canadians are entitled to participate more fully in the activities of their oil industry, but it also wants to be fair to Canadians with respect to setting oil prices and royalties. These objectives are entirely compatible with our desire to guarantee the security of our oil supplies.

One cannot deny that Canadianization is progressing satisfactorily. In fact, the majority of Canadians are in favour of this measure. Since the National Energy Program was announced about a year ago, foreign participation has dropped by about 6 per cent and foreign control by about 10 per cent. Both the governments of oil producing provinces and the vast majority of Canadian citizens are supporting our Canadianization efforts. It is clear that Canadians see the National Energy Program and the Canadianization project as the two key stages in achieving two objectives, namely, 50 per cent Canadian participation and energy self-sufficiency by the end of this decade. If we take into account the rate of Canadianization since the National Energy Program was announced, we can safely assume that we are close to achieving these two objectives. Actually, the Canadian oil and gas industry can look to a very promising future, thanks to the National Energy Program and to these specific provisions of Bill C-48.

Naturally, as a state-owned corporation, Petro-Canada is committed to promoting Canadianization, and more specifically, the growth of our national industrial capability for providing the goods and services required for oil exploration. I want to stress the importance of the Canadianization program in connection with the development of our resources in offshore areas adjacent to the coasts. Thanks to this provision, Canadian industries will not only be taking part in the exploration of offshore resources, they will also be providing the equipment required to explore these resources. The National Energy Program also requires companies engaged in prospecting for oil and gas in offshore areas adjacent to the coasts and in the Canada lands to allow Canadians to compete on a normal basis as suppliers of goods and services. The Canadianization of the ancillary land facilities will allow new jobs to be created in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces and promote industrial development. Moreover, the use of Canadian goods and services will contribute to the development of new techniques likely to be exported which may have positive effects on our balance of payments.

Thanks to the Canadian corporation Petro-Canada and the oil incentive program, as well as the other measures which favour Canadianization under the National Energy Program, Canadians will participate to a large extent in the development of our offshore resources. Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada is playing an increasingly important part in achieving the Canadianization objective set forth in the National Energy Program and the specific aims of Bill C-48. Over its past five years of operation, Petro-Canada has acquired much experience as an active participant in the Canada lands, a high degree of operational efficiency, and has played an active part in the development of new technologies, as well as an important though modest part on various international scenes. Since 1976, the corporation has been involved in digging 90 of the 153 wells in frontier areas and has been associated with the projects involved in every oil and gas discovery both on the east coast and in the Arctic islands. The corporation has for two years been operating drilling boats off the coast of Labrador, one of the most difficult drilling areas in the world, and it is now operating a drilling program off the Nova Scotia continental shelf. It is the only wholly-Canadian oil corporation in Canada, ranking sixth among the major oil and gas corporations, and it is involved in oil products marketing. I have had the pleasure to see Petro-Canada signs in my own constituency, and I feel that we should be proud to have Petro-Canada service stations in our constituencies.

Because of the experience it has gained, Petro-Canada has reached the following conclusions, and I should like to summarize these conclusions about the corporation and the impact Bill C-48 will have on the energy policy. Mr. Speaker, foreign investments in Canada's petroleum and gas industry are higher than in any other country, a fact which is reflected in the number of permits held on Canada lands as much by the extent of foreign ownership as by the size of individual international oil companies' land holdings. If we are to make room for Canadians, Mr. Speaker, and if we do not want to wait for years and years before production begins in the less promising remote expanses of land, it is imperative that we make changes in the land system. The aims and techniques set forth in Bill C-48 are moderate under the circumstances, they are not unheard of on international oil markets, and they are geared to the purposes of the energy policy.

Mr. Speaker, the Canada lands are a huge area of sedimentary basins whose enormous potential requires large scale and high risk investments; skilful development and sophisticated technology are necessary. That region must have a competitive commercial environment and uninterrupted participation on the part of international corporations while we encourage new Canadian investments in frontier areas. The proposed tax system and land management meet that requirement. Just like any other country whose oil potential is significant, Canada must strike the proper balance between measures designed to encourage activities which generate new supplies and its desire to achieve a balanced and orderly industrial energy growth and responsible tax levies on the development of its new supplies. The policy appears to be commercially attractive and internationally competitive, and it will bring on stream the desirable contribution of the Canada lands so as to achieve self-sufficiency sooner than expected. Bill C-48 also sets up the structure for the deliberate action required if we want to offer full and competitive business opportunities to Canadian industrial, engineering and service companies. Those are my opinions, Mr. Speaker, after serious reflection, and they are shared by many members on this side of the House and, I believe, by many Canadians as well.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is disappointing that we have to deal with Bill C-48 again by means of closure. Bill C-48 is one of the most important bills that the government has introduced in its short term and for the term it has had under its previous administration as a Liberal government.

In my opinion, the government has taken a very narrow approach to Bill C-48 in terms of what the bill attempts to do for energy production. So far as the future of Canada is concerned, it is certainly important. The bill also has a great impact on many people in Canada, not only those who are dependent upon producing oil and those who are consuming oil, but also on our northern people and on some important offshore resources that employ many Canadians.

I am particularly disappointed that the government reneged on a commitment in committee to put this bill and all its implications before the people in the north so as to allow them to have direct input. It is not sufficient with a bill of this nature to expect the northern people, the fishermen on the east or west coast to compile adequate briefs on such short notice so as to make adequate representations of their concerns in Ottawa.

We are concerned that closure is being imposed upon us in the House without our having any legal information from the government, particularly from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), which would indicate what impact Bill C-48 will have on native land claims. We have been asking for that information for some time and it is not forthcoming. If anyone is obstructing the progress of Parliament, democracy and this bill, it is the government itself. The government certainly cannot expect the opposition parties to approve a bill that is so seriously flawed in many respects. Obviously, the "C" in Bill C-48 stands for closure.

The east and west coast fishing industry is poorly represented in Bill C-48, despite representations from the fishermen and allied workers in British Columbia, the Newfoundland fishermen, food and allied workers, the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee and the eastern federation of fishermen. We observe that little is contained in Bill C-48 that would indicate to those groups that the government is really concerned about protecting the offshore fishing resource which is so important, particularly in eastern Canada, the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has been particularly silent on Bill C-48. We were expecting some comment from the minister. We were also expecting some comment from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), who has so far failed to release the terms of reference as to how the environment will be protected under this Bill.

It seems to me and to the New Democratic Party that the only minister who has had very much input into Bill C-48 is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). In fact, it is a power grab not only for resources, but it is a power grab by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of the Environment. It is also a power grab to take away jurisdiction from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

We have just had an example in the Northwest Territories at Hall's Beach, where a cargo ship ran aground and we had pollution from diesel fuel leaking into that very sensitive environment. Bill C-48 does not address, in fact it confuses, jurisdiction over Arctic resources, Arctic pollution and offshore pollution in Canada. The Edgar Jordain lay on that beach for nine months before the federal government and its departments reached any conclusion as to how that particular oil spill would be cleared up. There were jurisdictional problems with the coastguard, the Ministry of Transport, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. There also were jurisdictional problems between insurance companies and the ship owner. We cannot afford in our offshore and northern resources to have jurisdictional problems. The bill does not adequately address the jurisdiction and the responsibilities of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and of the Minister of the Environment.

Also the bill is seriously flawed in the area of jobs for Canadians. My party has moved a number of amendments which would have provided some assurance that Canadians would receive the full benefit of this massive bill and its implications in terms of offshore, northern development and the types and number of jobs required if there is to be full scale exploitation of offshore oil and gas. Sourcing provisions have been ignored. Canadians should have the opportunities, particularly those in areas which are hard pressed by unemployment or dependent upon the fishing industry. We are looking to some alternative to fishing on the east coast. The people there should have had some guarantees in the bill. They should have been provided with an opportunity to build the necessary ships and oil rigs and to provide all the technology which goes into offshore exploration and exploitation of oil and gas. There are inadequate provisions in Bill C-48, despite the input of various groups such as the shipbuilding and mechanical industries, despite the amendments proposed by my party to guarantee that those jobs existed for Canadians. We do not have any complaint about other nations having some access to those jobs, but when there are over one million people unemployed, there should be opportunities to train them for skilled, well-paying jobs so that they can contribute to the national economy rather than to national unemployment. There should have been some opportunity given by the government to those Canadians who find themselves unemployed, or to those Canadians, for example, in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada who find themselves employed but in receipt of wages and incomes far below the poverty line, far below what they can adequately survive and raise families on.

Closure is no way to deal with important bills on which the House of Commons is prepared to expend time and effort. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) made a fine suggestion this afternoon. He said that there should be some opportunity to determine the legislative program of the government before the session begins or early in the session so that we can judge the time which bills require. It is not time that matters in this particular case. We may have had a year, but we still find we are discussing a flawed bill, a bill which is the result of the government not listening to anyone other than the oil interests.

Mr. Kelly: That is untrue.

Mr. Miller: To the greatest extent the oil industry has been well represented before committee, but what about people who are affected by northern developments and offshore resources? What about fishermen who are dependent upon a healthy environment for the production of stocks? Bill C-48 will pass because of the weight and power of the government, but we in the opposition would certainly be remiss if we did not oppose closure and a very flawed bill which does not consider its implications on the environment, on northern people, and on the fisheries and oceans aspects of the Canadian way of life. We will be voting against closure and against Bill C-48.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the concluding debate on Bill C-48. In particular, I want to use the few moments allotted to me this afternoon to read into the record of the House portions of the "Forum" column carried in the October 1981 issue of The Roughneck, a small spunky periodical which I believe is published monthly in Alberta.

I have chosen this column as my topic this afternoon for two reasons. First, it was written by a small producer who is a member of a group which, in the struggle between the Titans, is easily and often ignored. Second, its author, Joe Mercier, offered a rational—that is, a calm and balanced view of both the national energy policy and its critics. I should like to start with the latter, those critics whom hon. members of the official opposition champion so emotionally, vociferously and, as we have seen this afternoon, so blindly in the House. The author wrote:

—the National Energy Program is the long time work of well educated civil servants who feel that they are doing the best they can for Canadians. They won't be dissuaded by industry criticism that lumps them as inept, malicious facist-communists. Being avid readers of the industry press, they are quick to point out the inaccuracy, exaggeration and hypocisy of the industry arguments, especially those from the independents. Some examples they choose:

—Putting total blame on the national policy for the exodus of small Canadian producers to the United States

—Doing the same for the rig exodus and exaggerating the numbers

—Pretending dismay and surprise at the 25 per cent back-in on Canadian lands when the industry was alerted to that provision in 1976 and provided with draft implementation of it in 1978

—Embellishing the opportunity in Australia without mentioning that the government back-in there will be 50 per cent, or failing to suggest that American targets are not as good as those in Alberta and are as subject to bureaucratic regulations and interference as are Canadian targets.

In dealing with the national energy policy, he critically pointed out:

No question—the small producer faces severe problems. He is overextended under high interest rates with little cash flow and no means of raising equity capital . . .

His largest, single problem is a lack of markets for natural gas . . .

His second problem is the inability to raise equity capital. Stock prices are down and there is no assistance from government in improving them.

His third problem could well eclipse the other two—the unbelievable complexity and paper work, dozens of taxes, and production forms, drilling incentive applications and back-ins. Now we have to add proof of Canadian ownership rating applications and justification for PIP grants and proof of non-avoidance under the Canadianization rules . . .

His fourth problem is a lack of input with governments chiefly because of the assumption by politicians that the larger independents are speaking for him.

For the small producer the recommended cures are relatively simple—for cash flow—bring rationality into the marketing of natural gas. If the bureaucrats in Ottawa and Edmonton and the large independents sincerely wish to help the small producer they should start here. Not only would a rational market save the small producer but it would at last bring an effective effort from the industry in making a creditable determination of surplus reserves, reasonable exports and expansion of the gas markets . . .

The largest contributions undoubtedly could be made by the federal government if it would allow a full tax write-off against other income for the purchase of shares in Canadian companies. That provision alone would do more for Canadianization than any other provision intended for that purpose . . .

For a continuing input into government policies and regulations that affect us, we would suggest that the spokesmen for the . . . independents follow the example of the majors in making reasonable specific criticisms.

● (1650)

Obviously, Mr. Mercier is concerned, obviously he is anxious to defend and promote the interests of small producers and just as obviously, the small producers want to reach an accommodation with the national government that respects the basic interests and prosperity of both sides. I commend him and his point of view to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and to the members of this House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-48

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde:

That, in relation to Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the third reading stage of the bill; and that 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, this has been an amazing two hours. On this side we have watched hon. members opposite read the speeches prepared for them by the bureaucracy. Absolutely no independent facts went into those speeches in this discussion of the most important loss in a free democracy, the loss of freedom to debate a bill through the imposition of closure.

The hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) referred to an article written by a Joe Mercier as if that gentleman were speaking for independent people in the west. Mr. Mercier, of course, is in a good position: he is a very close personal friend of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and he has a close relationship with Petro-Canada. That is the point that we have been making—that certain people who have close Liberal contacts end up with very favoured positions.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, for the record, I should like to point out that Mr. Mercier is a well-known, highly respected and admired member of the business community in Alberta. It was on that basis that I quoted him.

Mr. Andre: He is also a Liberal and a good friend of Marc!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have obviously hit a raw nerve. Close patronage friends of the Liberal government are going to benefit under this program. There is no doubt that the federal oil policy will cost 60,000 people their jobs, and there is no doubt that the number of rigs drilling in the west has dropped by 50 per cent. The bulk of the people who had those jobs come from central Canada. They are young men and women from Ontario and Quebec who went to Alberta to get a job. Now, as the result of hon. members opposite not fulfilling their role, these people do not have a job.

I believe hon. members opposite have forgotten the fundamental rule of a parliamentary democracy, which is responsible government. Instead, we have the cabinet lined up against all the rest of us. The cabinet is responsible to this House, Mr. Speaker, and we as individual members have to respond to the needs and desires of our constituents. It should not matter what the cabinet says.

When a bill is presented to this House, each member should analyse it to see whether it hurts his or her constituents, the region or the nation as a whole, and that is what members of this party do. We immediately recognized that there were some fundamental national and regional problems with the constitutional resolution, so we raised objections and forced the government to change the resolution. But hon. members opposite stood up and voted for a motion of closure on that constitutional resolution. Or they were going to do that until we stopped them with a six or seven-day debate which blocked them from taking refuge in the rules. That allowed the Supreme Court to hand down its decision. Finally, the government went back to the table and brought in the very changes that this party had identified as necessary.

This party has proposed dozens of amendments to Bill C-48. They are not spurious amendments, Mr. Speaker, but good amendments that would help people in the north. Today the government brought in a closure motion.

Mr. Taylor: Lalonde clones!

Mr. Thacker: This is clearly the worst bill that has ever come before this House, Mr. Speaker. It is full of drafting errors and the concepts are wrong. It should be withdrawn. It provides for confiscation. If we allow it to go through, we are putting in place a precedent that will let the government take away 25 per cent of Canada lands without compensation. If that can be done for Canada lands, then why can it not be done for farm lands? Surely nothing could be more important to our country than farm land? What is to stop the government bringing in a bill to take away 25 per cent of a person's farm? Here is a precedent for it and hon. members opposite have approved it as a policy. Indeed, it could be said that the government is taking 25 per cent of the farm land by means of the capital gains tax.

● (1700)

The people who live in Yukon and the Northwest Territories are being forever foreclosed by this bill. Those territories will never become provinces and they will never get control, management and ownership of their natural resources. Hon. members opposite do not seem to understand that there are human beings who live there, who love and have a feeling for the land.

As an Albertan, and knowing the history of Alberta, I know how they feel. In 1905 when Alberta was created, a central Liberal government decided that the people of Alberta could not control their resources and that the mighty Liberal government in Ottawa could make better decisions about the disposition of those resources than the people of Alberta. Even though Alberta had a provincial Liberal government from 1905 to 1921, the people rallied and demanded ownership of their resources. Their efforts were unsuccessful. In 1921 they turned out that provincial Liberal government and put in a UFA government. That particular party felt so strongly about obtaining ownership of the provincial resources that at an annual provincial meeting in 1924 it debated a resolution to separate the province from Canada. The people in Yukon and Northwest Territories feel just as strongly, Mr. Speaker.

In 1930 Alberta gained control of its resources, Mr. Speaker. Fortunately a Conservative prime minister, R. B. Bennett, came to power. But it took ten years, Mr. Speaker. During the depression the resources could not be developed, but things began to pick up in the 1940s. When the then premier of Alberta came to the federal government to seek money to develop the resources, none was available. The government in central Canada decided not to put money into the Alberta resources but through Royal Dutch Shell the people of the Netherlands did, as did the people of the U.K. through Gulf and BP, and as the people of the U.S.A. did through Esso.

We take a bloody dim view of a Liberal government now attacking those companies as if they were somehow evil and corrupt. They were prepared to put their money into Alberta when the federal government would not. Hon. members opposite do not seem to understand that. We are not threatened by those multinational corporations.

Mr. MacBain: Shame.

Mr. Thacker: Only a central Canadian would think that. Only a Liberal backbencher who does not have the spine to stand up to the cabinet and say "That is not right and we are not going to put up with it" would—

Mr. MacBain: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: If I were a citizen of Yukon and the Northwest Territories, I would be marching. I would be throwing bricks. I would start a revolution if I had to, to get control of those resources.

Mr. MacBain: Oh, another Lévesque! Why don't you go to Quebec?

Mr. Thacker: The only thing hon. members opposite understand is power.

Mr. Taylor: Why don't you stand up and talk? Won't Trudeau let you stand up and talk?

Mr. Thacker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) seems to be rather exercised. Where was he on the Constitution? The hon. member for Niagara Falls has done nothing on the Constitution.

Mr. MacBain: I spoke for it. Your party did not even vote for it, or half of them did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

● (1700)

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamigue): Mr. Speaker, as the last one to speak on Bill C-48, I could use the few minutes that I have to respond to the insanities of the members opposite, but I prefer to point out the positive aspects of this piece of legislation. Bill C-48 has three main objectives: first, to ensure active research and development of our oil and gas interests in the frontier areas, the territories and offshore; second, to increase Canadian participation in the development of oil and gas reserves in the frontier lands; third, to ensure Canadians a fair share of these resources, promote Canadian employment and the use of goods indigenous to these areas, and provide for energy self-sufficiency.

Although Bill C-48 does not deal with environmental issues, I would like to point out, in response to the concerns expressed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) over ecology and the environment, that the bill extends the existing environmental protection legislation and provides additional safeguards for the fragile ecology of the lands north of 60°. The original legislation gives the federal government the power to administer the Canada lands. However, the industry has since then greatly increased its role in the development of oil and gas resources in the Canada lands. The federal government has indeed in the past encouraged this development through various tax incentives and continues to do so now through oil subsidies under the National Energy Program. It believes that we must know exactly what oil and gas resources are in order to plan our energy supply, and it also thinks that the oil resources of the northern part of Canada lands are a vast reservoir that could help us meet our future energy needs.

Under Bill C-48, the government will be able to subject corporations to stricter requirements, thereby ensuring that they actively undertake development programs on Canada lands instead of creating land banks as has been the case in the past. Furthermore, the government wants to make sure that the environment is adequately protected, and that Canadians generally, and particularly those who live in the communities surrounded by Crown lands, benefit from the exploration and development operations in progress around them.

Bill C-48 will allow the government to better evaluate the impact on the environment of exploration and development, thanks to the establishment of a new environmental studies revolving fund. This fund will give additional support to the financing of regional studies already undertaken by the industry and the government under research programs. In that regard, we must realize that major studies on the environment are already under way in areas where oil and gas could be found. Over $12 million have now been spent on environmental studies in the Beaufort Sea and comparable studies have been started in the Baffin Bay, the Davis Strait, the Labrador Sea, the Scotian continental plateau and the Grand Banks, most of them financed by industry.

In addition to those, the government has sponsored complementary environmental surveys through organizations such as the Bedford Institute, the Canadian Wildlife Service, the Environmental Protection Service, and the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and Energy, Mines and Resources.

All amounts credited to the revolving fund will be used to finance environmental and regional biological studies as well as research and development or ways and means to alleviate the impact of development on the environment which could apply generally to oil and gas development. This bill will legalize officially the financing of environmental studies undertaken by the industry, and serve as the legal basis for the non official methods used on Crown lands since the early seventies in the financing of major environmental surveys. This fund is a necessity since regional studies on the environment will have repercussions on the major and essential energy projects such as the development of the Hibernia and Venture oil fields discoveries—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 5.05 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 75C have expired. Accordingly, pursuant to this standing order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

The question is on the motion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde), which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, after consultation with my colleagues, we have come to an agreement to allow the House to sit from seven o'clock to ten o'clock tonight in order to deal with the fifth day of debate on the budget. If you seek unanimous consent, Madam Speaker, I think you will obtain a favourable response.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, we have had those discussions and we have come to that agreement. I take it that the final day of debate for Bill C-48 will be next Wednesday, is that correct?

Mr. Pinard: That is correct, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we also understand the agreement to be as the House leader said.

Order Paper Questions

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that the House will sit from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: I understand that the hon. member for Yukon meant Wednesday of this week.

TURNOVER OF ACADEMIC STAFF IN CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 3,144—Mr. Herbert:

Is the government giving consideration to establishing or financing a study on the magnitude and nature of the turnover of academic staff in Canadian universities and on the factors which encourage or inhibit turnover?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Secretary of State as follows: Statistics Canada collects information annually on the number of full-time academic staff newly appointed to Canadian universities. This information appears in publication 81-241, "Teachers in Universities". Data on the number of academic staff leaving the university teaching community is also available on request from the education, science and culture division.

Presently, the program does not investigate the variety of factors which may or may not encourage or inhibit this turnover.

The Secretary of State is not planning such a study.

CONTRACTS WITH CHRYSLER CANADA AND DIEMACO INC.

Question No. 3,180—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence and the Post Office order a light truck from Chrysler Canada Ltd. at the cost of $1,256,660 under contract numbers 72.TS.P0023-1-4067 (OTS81-00140) and 30TV.1091W-3630222 (2TV81-00059) and, if so, what type and for what purpose?

SURVEY ON PENSION ISSUES

Question No. 3,294—Mr. Dantzer

Are the results of the Department of National Health and Welfare's summer surveys of the elderly and attitudes towards the elderly now available and, if not, on what date will they be available?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The results of the survey on pension issues, conducted by the Department of National Health and Welfare are currently being analysed and prepared for publication. The results of the survey are scheduled for release on or before December 31, 1981.

USE OF STANDARD PAPER SIZES

Question No. 3,329—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,554 of the first session of the Thirtieth Parliament, on what date was metric stationery made available for general use in the public service?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The metric paper sizes referred to in question No. 1554 of the first session of the Thirtieth Parliament were not approved by the Canadian Government Specifications Board committee on paper sizes (now the Canadian General Standards Board), thus this size was not made available for general use in the public service.

The National Standard of Canada for paper sizes, CAN2-9. 60M-76, issued in 1976, includes, for general correspondence use, the size designated P4 which is 21.5 + 28 cm, and is the same size as the 8½ + 11 inch paper generally used for correspondence purposes.

The paper sizes recommended in the National Standard were implemented for use throughout the public service by the federal identity program in 1979.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I understand that I have roughly 15 minutes left in the speech which I started on November 18, 1981.

In my opening remarks I referred to the fact that, in the 13 years that I have been a member of the House, I never had the experience of seeing a budget which was so roundly and universally condemned. In short, I think that members of the House and Canadians at large are recognizing this budget as a formula for economic disaster. If one studies the budget, one can see that it inflicts irreparable damage and hardship on literally everyone and provides relief to no one. It provides no hope or encouragement and it is incumbent upon all of us in the House who believe in representative democracy to fight the passage of this budget in the hope that it will eventually be withdrawn. It destroys the motivation to invest, to produce, to build.

In the time I have remaining, Mr. Speaker, I will deal particularly with the document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties". All I can say is that it is a document which is couched in bureaucratic language that emanates from the ivory towers in Ottawa. It clearly offers nothing in the way of hope or encouragement for increasing the productive capacity of Canada. In effect, it is really a job creation program for loyal Liberals because in that document one sees that there will be the creation of at least a half dozen commissions, task forces and boards which will serve to do nothing more than obstruct, frustrate and harass the private sector; all done in the name of outlining a new industrial strategy.

I must say that this is viewed in many quarters with some degree of suspicion. It is interesting to note the recent publication of a document entitled "Spectrum" put out by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the issue entitled "Canada's National Priorities and the Changing World Economy", written by Mr. Russell E. Harrison, chairman and chief executive officer of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. He points out that there are fewer than 20 years remaining in the twentieth century, the twentieth century that Sir Wilfrid Laurier said would belong to Canada. He further points out that we have but 19 years in this century to fulfil the Canadian dream to which Laurier gave expression—that our astonishing potential, our skills and our aspirations provide the basis for a strong economic finish to the year 2000.

He does point out that Canada ranks among the ten most important countries and economies of the more than 150 members of the United Nations. He also points out that despite our size and strength, Canada has lagged behind most other industrialized countries in recent years in the critical areas such as real growth, productivity gains, employment and ability to control inflation. He goes on to point out:

> The dimensions of our national economic dilemma deserve careful scrutiny.

He points out that the four main aspects of our economic dilemma can be summarized as inflation, lack of growth, productivity and competitiveness. There is absolutely nothing in this document that addresses those crucial problems. He goes on to say:

> Our problems are to a very real extent "made in Canada".

I certainly agree with that. He continues:

> —we should be improving economic efficiency and encouraging new productive investment, especially in sophisticated high technology product and service areas . . . The services sector is the most rapidly expanding sector.

We should be doing more to promote growth in the new high technology industry.

> —our over-all investment in research and development, measured as a percentage of gross national product, ranks well behind other successful industrial countries such as Japan, West Germany and Sweden. . . .
> We can no longer rely on riding the coattails of a dominant world power as we have done for most of our history. There is no longer a single dominant economic power in the world, let alone one with which Canada has a privileged relationship. . . . An emphasis on one or two markets, especially ones which are our major competitors, will no longer suffice. We would do well to note that this is central to the strategy of successful countries such as West Germany and Japan. . . . It is market forces—

He is referring back to this document which is supposed to outline a comprehensive industrial strategy. He points out that you cannot rely strictly upon the guesswork of government to develop an over-all industrial framework. He points out:

> It is market forces, not government guesswork, which should guide our economic development and our economic pruning. The industrial landscape in Canada and many other countries is littered with government-sponsored industrial concerns which challenge market forces rather than respond to them.

This is not to say that the role of government is not important, but the role of government does begin with the creation of a healthy economic climate that will contain inflation, provide for the responsible management of monetary aggregates, moderation in public expenditures and a stimulative taxation, regulatory environment, and an effective, long-term approach to energy pricing and supplies. It is this kind of structure and approach that is not contained in the budget and therefore does not provide any hope for our country.

It is very discouraging when one reads that document to find that there is nothing in it to give any hope to individual Canadians and companies to capture the tremendous wealth and potential that we have in this country. What else does the document say? It is almost laughable when one reads on. It points out that as an incentive to agriculture, this government announced it is going to have consultation to develop an agri-food strategy. It says it is continuing its review of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

For the fishery sector, this government says it is reviewing fisheries policy. For forest-based industries, the government says it will continue consultations. For the mining industry, the government says it will continue consultations and make a report later this year.

For transportation in western Canada, the government says it will continue its meeting this year to try to develop an action plan. I should say there has been nothing done by this government to deal with transportation since 1979 when the Progressive Conservative Party was in office. All we hear about is the vanishing $4 billion western development fund which is now down to $1.3 billion. We are not sure what it is going to be spent on. Suffice it to say it is merely a slush fund.

The government says that to stimulate increased Canadian exports it will create an export trade development board to co-ordinate policy formation. In the final section of the Economic Development Paper on Human Resources, the government again skirts the problem in favour of inaction. It is going to review the labour market policies and have consultations to try to discover what initiatives might be taken for education and job training.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is trying to identify manpower needs and develop strategies to meet them. Canada Employment and Immigration is trying to increase its analytical capability. The entire strategy of this document entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties" reads as if the entire government had been on holiday for the last ten years and is now trying to engage in consultations and co-ordination, develop ideas, create new offices and agencies to try and figure out what is going on and then figure out what to do.

It will mean nothing more than an obstacle, another action of this government which will discourage investment and production and thereby discourage growth. This budget penalizes investment in this country. We need investment in order to create wealth, produce jobs and have individual Canadians exploit their full potential. We must have investment and increased productivity. We must have investment to advance technological change. We must curtail the mass exodus of capital, manpower, expertise and machinery which is fleeing from this country. There is nothing in this budget which addresses that problem.

As for the impact of the budget on the Toronto stock market, within a week after the budget was introduced it was recorded that the Toronto Stock Exchange index was reduced by some $6 billion. That is hardly an indicator of investor confidence. This lack of confidence comes on the heels of the 12 months of disaster that has been perpetrated on this country by the unfortunate National Energy Program which has been brought in. It has been disastrous.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member says rubbish. He should go to western Canada and find out for himself. This National Energy Program is an unmitigated disaster. It has particularly hurt the drilling and servicing sector which is 95 per cent Canadian owned. With regard to the exploration sector, all that has happened is that this activity has shifted south of the border.

I had directed to me a copy of the October 5 Houston Business Journal. It is headlined "Canadian connection: Energy, money, politics blur borders". I quote briefly from the article:

> Houston oilmen call the visiting Canadian oilmen "snowbacks". They began to migrate south in 1974 when the first signs of nationalism and anti-Americanism appeared in the rhetoric of Canadian politicians. But since October 1980, when the national energy policy was passed by Pierre Trudeau's government, what was once a trickle of snowbacks has turned into a deluge.
> One unofficial estimate places the amount of Canadian exploration and development money spent in the United States since the passage of the NEP at about $2.5 billion. Much of that has found its way to Houston.
> Several new oil and gas companies have been formed here backed by Canadian money. Large established Canadian oil companies, such as Dome Petroleum Ltd., have opened offices here. Many small and medium-sized Canadian independents have set up U.S. subsidiaries here to take farm-outs in U.S. operations.

They total something like two dozen new Canadian branch operations which have been opened in the United States. Some 226 rigs and more than 100 service rigs have left Canada for the United States. I quote:

> Although designed for cold weather, many of the rigs have come to Texas. Some Canadian contractors are selling rigs to firms here rather than just moving them south—

In the Edmonton Journal of October 5 it is reported that some 235 rigs have now left Alberta for the United States as well as over 100 service rigs. Looking at that in terms of employment, each rig employs about 40 or 50 people and service rigs employ about ten people each. Imagine what that does. That is over 10,000 workers misplaced as a result of a deliberate government policy. It is no wonder that division, anger and outrage is created in the country.

● (1750)

In my constituency of Vegreville The Wainwright Star Chronicle carried the headline "Jurassic quitting Canada". This is a very human story, Mr. Speaker. The November 25 edition of The Wainwright Star Chronicle reported as follows:

> "It was the hardest thing I've ever had to do."
> So says Jim Voll, who laid off 30 employees here and will take Wainwright-based Jurassic Well Servicing's remaining rigs south to Oklahoma.
> The decision was taken in the light of federal and provincial policies which continue to destroy the small operator. ... Last fall's National Energy Program ... agreement in September set the stage for the move.
> And the recent federal budget was the final straw. ...
> "There was just nothing in the budget to encourage us to stay."
> Government induced depression in the oil industry here has meant there's just too little work here to remain in business. ...
> The Wainwright-based company had operated 10 rigs from here, but sent six to the Oklahoma oilfields last spring. The final four will follow by the new year, Voll says, and the Wainwright office closed for good.

That is in my home riding; that is one of the major centres in my constituency. So much for Canadianization and the promotion of Canadian ownership! They are driving the expertise, the investment and jobs south of the border.

If one were to peruse the budget to see what it was supposed to do for Canadianization and promoting Canadian ownership, one notices that the taxes introduced in the National Energy Program, such as the petroleum, gas and revenue tax and the natural gas liquid tax, proportionately hit harder at the independent oil and gas producers, which are largely Canadian owned. It affects them more severely than the large multinational, integrated oil companies. There is nothing to redress that situation in this budget.

Second, Canadian oil and gas producers need now new equity and new capital to survive and grow. The November 12, 1981, budget restricts interest cost deductibility which will make this process more difficult.

Third, Americans continue to have full interest cost deductibility. Thus, foreigners will find it cheaper to invest in Canadian oil and gas activities than will Canadians.

Fourth, by deeming an interest benefit on loans made for employee stock purchase plans, it destroys a very important mechanism which many Canadian companies use to attract good staff and to motivate their staff to increase Canadian-owned shareholdings of their companies.

Fifth, the November 12 budget requiring the payment of taxes even for non-cash corporate reorganizations will severely affect the ability of many junior oil and gas companies, which are, again, largely Canadian owned, to reorganize their affairs so as to survive the adverse effects of other aspects of the National Energy Program. It penalizes those reorganizations and reduces the ability of junior Canadian oil and gas companies to contribute to the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry.

The National Energy Program is not a Canadianization policy; it is a nationalization policy. There is a fundamental difference between the two of them; there is no question about that.

Let us look at agriculture, a very important industry to western Canada, particularly to my constituency of Vegreville. As far as this budget concerns agriculture, it is a cop-out. Canada's farmers are caught in the squeeze of high interest, high inflation, high input costs and low commodity prices. In our society we know that farmers are price-takers. They do not have the luxury of passing on the impact of high input costs, high inflation and high interest to the consumer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House.

An hon. Member: Is there unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I asked if there was unanimous consent. An hon. member was rising in his place; therefore, I have to recognize him.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to allow the hon. member to proceed, if he so wishes, for a few minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Therefore, I take it there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Mazankowski: I want to thank my hon. friend for his courtesy; it is most appreciated. Maybe some day I will have the good fortune of returning that particular gesture. I do appreciate it very much.

I should like to deal briefly with two very important high input matters as they relate to the production of food. I think many farmers, particularly in eastern Canada, who have experienced a dramatic increase in the price of fuel, may very well be pointing the finger at the people of western Canada, particularly at the producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. It should be pointed out that at the present time Alberta and Saskatchewan sell oil for Canadian consumption at a figure of some $21.25 a barrel. More than $10 per barrel is tacked on in the way of federal taxes. This works out at a price of more than $31 at the refinery level. We are still importing some 400,000 barrels a day at roughly $42.38 a barrel.

The high energy cost, the high fuel cost, is attributable to the rip-off which is occurring by the federal government on the backs of the producers. Roughly 57 cents a gallon in the form of federal taxes is levied upon fuel which is used for the production of food. The excise tax of some seven cents is refunded upon application. So really 50 cents a gallon is levied against the producers of Canada for the production of food. This is a very substantial amount of revenue in the hands of the government.

As a matter of fact, if one were to look at the increase in the price of fuel in 1981, 75 per cent of the increase was attributable to federal taxes. Canadian food producers consume about 900 million gallons of diesel fuel and gasoline on an annual basis. If there is a 50 cent per gallon federal tax levied on that fuel, that amounts to some $450 million.

I believe it is terrible to think that the Government of Canada, which wants to pursue a cheap food policy, would have the audacity to impose that kind of taxation on the farmers of Canada who have no way of recovering that cost. Surely there is room for a 25, 30 or maybe even a 40 cents rebate. A 30 cents rebate would amount to some $270 million.

Let us look at fertilizers. At the present time the equivalent federal tax for the natural gas that is used for producing a tonne of ammonia is equal to $25 per tonne. Under the new energy agreement by 1985 the federal tax will increase to some $72 per tonne. If the federal government wanted to provide some relief to the producers of Canada, it could do so by modifying that tax. As it is, it is a federal government rip-off. There are substantial federal government revenues being generated on the backs of the producers who cannot recover and pass this cost along. The government is, in effect, penalizing the producers of Canada and not coming to their aid. I suggest that if this government were interested in preserving an effective food production system, this tax should be exempted or at least modified or reduced. It is one of our natural resources that should be used as a benefit for all Canadians, not as a benefit to or as an instrument for a major tax grab by the government.

We meet here today at a time when our agricultural industry is being severely threatened. It is a situation that is most serious throughout the country. Perhaps it is more serious in Ontario than it is anywhere else. Out of the 230 farm bankruptcies that have been reported since the beginning of the year, some 126 have occurred in the province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until seven o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address the House on the recent budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I must say at the outset that this budget confirms very clearly the government's firm commitment to economic leadership, the determination to counter the forces of inflation and to maximize economic opportunities for Canadians in all parts of Canada. This can be seen throughout the document. That is why I am strongly supportive of the measures which the Minister of Finance proposed.

The minister presented a responsible budget. Its themes of restraint, equity and economic renewal are certainly appropriate to the changing social and economic conditions we face in Canada today. One of the ways the minister has striven to meet these goals is through reform of the tax incentive structure. A year ago he announced that he would take a hard look at tax incentives. He has done precisely that. Tax incentives tend to pyramid, with the result that a number of profitable corporations or wealthy individuals have very little or no tax. On the other hand, there has been a large group of individuals and corporations which have not been able to take full advantage of these tax benefits. These people and companies can be found primarily in the smaller communities of the country, in particular in those provinces which suffer most from economic and social disparities. That is why I welcome the review and that is why I applaud the results. Moreover, I hope the Minister of Finance will continue to examine and improve the federal tax structure, for I believe corporate tax incentives can be a very positive force for both national and regional economic development. The Government of Canada demonstrated that concern last year through the creation of the 50 per cent investment tax credit program which is helping to bring much needed development to those parts of Canada where it is sorely needed. I believe that further consideration of the regional effects of all elements of corporate tax incentives could contribute substantially to the equitable distribution of economic opportunity and to the more effective use of underutilized resources.

I am sure hon. members on both sides of the House recognize that national economic renewal cannot be achieved overnight; there is no quick solution. However, the budget and its accompanying economic development statement form the nucleus of a comprehensive economic approach to economic development in Canada which, if followed, will bring about the renewal we are all seeking.

This summer the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) was a member of the ministerial committee which prepared the new economic development policy framework. I know that the document entitled, "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties" fully reflects his determination to deal with the problems of inflation, high interest rates and unemployment through a long-term comprehensive program of industrial renewal.

Today I should like to focus on the basic principles which will guide the direction of these national policies and programs, and to say a few words on what they mean for Canada's regions. Quite simply, the government's priority is national economic renewal. Its policy focuses squarely on industrial innovation, as well as the restructuring and improving of the processes of adjustment in all areas of Canada. To this end it states clearly that "regional economic development will be central to public policy planning at the federal level". I am most reassured by this statement, for I have long held that the regional character of Canada's economic environment is of prime importance to all of us.

Along with the Minister of DREE I have also emphasized the need for a comprehensive framework for economic development which must surely be based on the support and strengthening of our regional economies. I am sure all members of the House, and particularly those who were members of the Standing Committee on Regional Development who have worked closely with the minister, appreciate the complexities of integrating national and regional development objectives. The committee members in particular will also recognize that the main directions for the regional policy were enunciated in documents tabled at the standing committee some time ago.

The main elements outlined at that time, as hon. members will recall, were the development of human resources, the need to overcome barriers to growth, the requirement to promote industrial renewal and adjustment and to enhance interregional linkages by allowing the free flow of goods, services, capital and people within Canada.

Not only are these goals appropriate for the regional needs of our country, I am pleased to say they have also been given and accepted as central to the government's over-all policies and priorities for national economic development. It is now clear that this government is firmly committed to the development of our regions. This fundamental commitment will now be seen as being integral to the decision-making process of all our economic departments.

I am most pleased with the central position that regional economic development has been given. DREE has fully participated in the formation of the government's new economic policy framework, and is now embarked on an elaboration of that statement for each region of this country that will enable this policy to become a reality.

The objective, if I may paraphrase the words of Ontario's minister of industry, is to forge and strengthen the economic links which bind our nation together. We must recognize that the Government of Canada cannot achieve these goals alone. Both the federal and provincial governments have economic development responsibilities. Therefore, joint planning and co-ordination is essential.

The federal government has forged some important new links in the past few months, first with the signing of federal-provincial agreements on energy and second with the federal-provincial agreement on a made-in-Canada Constitution, which contains a commitment by both levels of government to regional development and equalization. Let us continue to strengthen those links.

I believe that federal and provincial governments can and must work side by side to realize the economic opportunities that are before us. I also believe that the federal government's role in the implementation of regional development programs needs to be more clearly defined, recognizing once again that both levels of government have economic development responsibilities. Let us sit down together and discuss our plans and strategies. Let us seek to establish common objectives and priorities for regional development programs. Let us determine where the federal government can make its best contribution, and where the provincial governments can make their best contribution.

Planning and co-ordination of regional policies will be no less difficult than the energy negotiations or the constitutional negotiations. But I believe they can be equally rewarding.

A new set of economic relationships will build on our strengths which can be found all across our country. A new set of relationships will include the Atlantic region, Quebec, Ontario and the west in a genuine and just economic partnership. Co-ordinated strategies for the development of Canada's regions—complementary strategies—are essential to the building of that economic partnership.

The development of industry, natural resources, transportation, exports and Canada's human resources requires that the national government gain a thorough understanding of the circumstances and concerns in each region. Furthermore, the economic development framework accompanying this budget promises that special attention will be given to those areas of the country with the lowest per capita incomes and highest unemployment.

In this way, we will be working to reduce those economic and social disparities that exist between the various regions of Canada. These disparities are particularly prevalent in Canada's rural and more remote areas and among our native peoples. But in order to attack disparities, we must have accurate information for planning our programs. However, to date, even measuring these disparities has been a real challenge. But as members of the Standing Committee on Regional Development know, DREE has placed a high priority on the development of a small-area data system which will greatly assist our planning. It will also enable members of the House to gain a better understanding of economic circumstances in their own areas. In the near future, the Minister of DREE expects to be in a position to advise members of the House of a new, more comprehensive data system that will be able to respond to their real needs for information and statistics about their constituencies.

I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to look at some of the regional development issues we will face in the coming decade. We are indeed fortunate that throughout the 1980s, there will be genuine prospects for growth in every region of Canada. Of course, our regional dynamics mean that there are distinct problems that must be faced. The opportunities, as well as the constraints, must be addressed if we are to meet the challenge successfully.

The Atlantic region has areas that have begun to prosper in recent years, but there are also too many areas, such has my own constituency of Cape Breton-The Sydneys, where a great deal remains to be done. Nevertheless, the Atlantic region is, in fact, entering the 1980s well positioned for a decade of solid growth. The challenge here is to promote the expansion of enterprises capable of taking advantage of new markets, products and technologies which are emerging in world industrial markets.

[Translation]

Quebec is facing specific problems of industrial readjustment, especially in labour-intensive, low technology industries such as the textile, clothing and shoe industry. That province has a large number of mature industries that will have to meet stiffer and stiffer international competition. While in the seventies emphasis has been put mainly on public investments, ways must now be found at all costs to increase investments in the private sector. Emphasis must be put mainly on high technology industries, promoting industrial research and the creation of export industries, especially those connected with the processing of national resources. Local and community development, aimed in the first place at areas where unemployment is highest and per capita disposable income is the lowest, must be a priority. We must also give back to Montreal its role as Canada's first trading centre, promoting the growth of its industrial and service industries and reconfirming its international status.

• (1920)

Ontario remains one of the strongest provinces in confederation, but there has been a relative weakening of its position within the national economy over the last decade. It is increasingly apparent that the Ontario economy must undergo a process of industrial renewal in order to adapt to changing conditions in international trade and to capture the opportunities which will be generated by major energy and other resource projects elsewhere in the country.

For several years, now, the west has been the fastest growing region in Canada, and the prospects for the future are that this rapid growth will continue. Economic growth has not been even, however. The west is now faced with a number of constraints: soil and water supply problems in the dry southern prairies; the inadequacy of the transportation systems, especially the bulk handling export delivery system; and, most critically, the short supply of skilled manpower. These, then, are the major regional development challenges we must face in the eighties.

I know that with this new policy framework, we will be able to meet these challenges. By recognizing the regional dynamics that underlie our country's economic and political structure, we will be able to achieve the renewal we seek, for economic renewal through the promotion of initiatives in the priority areas of industry, natural resources, transportation, exports and human resources can come about only through a development policy based on the needs of Canada as a whole, and its distinctive regional components.

As the government of Canada strengthens its capacity to integrate regional development concerns into its total policy-making process, I know that we will be able to make great strides toward achieving our goals of equity and economic renewal. This understanding of the needs of all Canadians in all regions is central to the economic development policies of the Government of Canada.

In this budget, the Government of Canada has pledged itself to the principles of equity, restraint and economic renewal. I, along with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, endorse these principles.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had as much enthusiasm as the hon. member who spoke previously with respect to the budget, because I listened with interest on November 12 last, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) presented his budget in the House. He stated that there were three themes to his budget: restraint, equity and economic renewal. With respect to restraint, he said, in part:

> There is need for restraint on the part of the government and restraint on the part of all Canadians.

With interest rates running at 20 per cent, unemployment at record highs, more lay-offs on a daily basis, inflation rate at about 12.8 per cent, and increased energy costs amounting to an additional $1,400 a year per family, individual Canadians have little choice but to exercise restraint. The government's restraint program, on the other hand, is to increase expenditures by some 20 per cent.

The minister talked of equity and about an overhaul of the tax plan to clear what he called loopholes. It was a Liberal government and a succession of Liberal finance ministers who brought in these so called loopholes. But they were not loopholes when Benson, Turner, Macdonald and Chrétien introduced them in the House. At that time they were tax incentives, incentives to encourage growth in the economy, to create new jobs, and to encourage construction and incentives for individuals to invest and for business to expand.

The Minister of Finance was a member of that government when all these measures were brought in. I do not ever recall the Minister of Finance, before he assumed his portfolio, standing up in his place in the House and saying that the measures, when they were introduced by former finance ministers, were unfair. On the contrary, he applauded them. On Thursday evening, November 12, very piously, in an attempt to cleanse his soul, I would suggest, he almost made it appear that those who had been making use of the incentives that he and his colleagues had passed as the law of the land were doing things which were not quite legitimate. I think he will have difficulty in persuading young working people who were borrowing money from the banks to buy RRSPs and claiming back interest as an expense, that they were taking advantage of a loophole; or that individuals who were making use of income-averaging certificates or who were deferring the capital gains tax after having sold the capital assets under agreements for sale were taking advantage of a loophole.

The minister spoke of economic renewal when he said:

> This decade offers exceptional opportunities for strengthening and diversifying growth in every region in Canada.

He tabled a major policy document on economic development for Canada in the eighties, and the hon. member who spoke previously referred to that document.

In the last decade that I have been here in Parliament successive Liberal governments and finance ministers in the past have always talked of major policy changes, industrial strategy, and the opportunity for Canada and Canadians in the decade of the seventies. Did it take place? Let us examine the record. In 1970-71, the budget was for $14.6 billion. The last budget we have, the 1980-81 budget, is for $65.5 billion. In 1970-71, the beginning of this decade, the gross public debt was about $37.5 billion. In 1980-81, the gross public debt is over $122 billion. The interest on our public debt now exceeds our total budgetary expenditure of ten years ago. Our inflation rate has climbed to over 12 per cent. Unemployment is over 8 per cent, with almost one million unemployed people in our country. Bankruptcies of small businesses and farms are increasing, there are daily lay-offs in industries, and there are mortgage foreclosures because individuals cannot renew their mortgages and meet the high payments required monthly. Our standard of living is well below that of most developed countries.

We had exceptional opportunities in the seventies, and the government blew it because, under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Liberal Party has moved to the left, toward socialism. The government abandoned the principles of its predecessors who realized that this country was built on individual initiative and a free enterprise system tempered with compassion for the sick, the unfortunate and the elderly. The policies and the programs of this government has been such since the present Prime Minister took over that, generally speaking, Canadians have lost the initiative and the desire to risk their future and their capital on an enterprise which not only has to struggle in the marketplace, but, worst of all, is also plagued with complicated and uncertain tax laws, and, on top of that, government red tape, bureaucratic indifference and all the frustrations that go with the operating of a business.

It is a sad commentary on this great country of ours. The budget that was handed down on November 12 is of great concern not only to my constituency but to the whole of the country. Not only does it affect the economy, but it affects individuals and businesses.

I would now like to examine a few of the proposed changes. Let us consider the effect of the provision regarding interest deductibility. What does that mean to small businesses and to small corporations, and what will it mean to employee-sharing programs? I would suggest it means a drying up of capital and the possible disappearance of many small businesses. Small businesses are the backbone of our economy because they are Canada's major employer. Small businesses create jobs. Do we want to see business initiative disappear even further? Do we want to deny our young people the right to invest without a reasonable prospect of a return on that investment? More and more young people are reluctant to take over their parents businesses because of tax problems and government red tape, both provincial and federal.

Over the last two or three years I have talked in particular with two businessmen from my constituency who had excellent, well organized and well paying businesses. They had sons who, they thought, would take over their businesses. The opportunity was there for their sons. However, in both instances the sons told their fathers that in no way could they take over the businesses. With all of the risk, all of the problems and all of the government red tape, as well as the bureaucratic procedures that have to be followed, the sons told their fathers they would sooner get jobs elsewhere.

The sons went off to university, got degrees, moved out of the province and are working for major companies. There is a good chance those two businesses will disappear because the young people who have the initiative to make a go of business are not there.

What about interest deductibility that is being denied or restricted to the amount of income from investment? I ask the Minister of Finance what is the situation with respect to a young farmer who borrows money from the bank or the Farm Credit Corporation to buy some land? Generally speaking, because he has payments on machinery and other expenses, he does not really have an income. Is he going to be denied the right to claim the income that he pays on his loan as an expense? The government is not in a position to answer that question. The question has been asked. But that situation is all up in the air.

What about taxation on life insurance? Nearly everyone has life insurance. When one is young, newly married and starting out in life, one buys life insurance to guarantee that one's wife and children will be taken care of if something happens to the breadwinner. It is a secondary consideration that the insurance will create some sort of an estate for the individual on retirement. But what does this budget do? It taxes policyholders every three years on accrued interest and benefits. A few days ago I received a letter from Life Underwriters Association of Canada. The letter gives an example of a purchaser aged 25 who opted for a $25,000 whole life contract with an annual premium of $237.25 paid with after-tax dollars. By choosing to use his dividends to purchase paid up additions, he hoped to offset the ravages of inflation.

I should point out that the death benefit by the time this individual reaches the age of 73 totals $131,575. But under the present regulations proposed in this budget, this individual would have to pay a total of $28,357.43 in income tax on money that he never even saw. He would be paying that $28,357 out of after-tax dollars.

It is almost unbelievable what has been set down in this budget. There are proposed changes in the Small Business Development Bond program, but one has to be almost in bankruptcy before one can qualify for these bonds. I talked to a banker a few days ago and asked whether he was lending any money under the Small Business Development Bond program. He told me that he had been doing so for some time, but that since the budget came down he had not. "Why would I lend money to an individual on the verge of bankruptcy?", he asked me. "There is no government guarantee on the loan. I would be foolish to lend money," he said.

Let me refer to The Globe and Mail issue for Saturday, December 5, 1981. In it, there is an article about Small Business Development Bonds and the Farm Credit Corporation. Hon. members will recall that in the budget some $45 million was set aside to help farmers in need under the Farm Credit Corporation. I want to put on the record part of the article that appeared in last Saturday's The Globe and Mail. It commences:

> Despite a flood of applications for the low-interest emergency farm aid promised in the federal budget a month ago, only three farmers across the country have received any money from the program.

The article continues:

> Farmers can't apply for the federal money unless they have been turned down for a Small Business Development Bond first, and many banks have not been processing those applications because the federal government has not made clear who is eligible for the bonds, which the budget made available to unincorporated farmers.

On November 12, almost a month ago, the government handed down a budget. But the government does not know who qualifies for the Small Business Development Bonds. It cannot even tell the banks who qualifies. This is unbelievable.

Capital cost allowances have been cut in half for the first year. Has the government considered the effect this has on business, on industry and on farmers? Can the minister not see that this will have a very serious effect on the farm implement manufacturing industry and, on the farm implement dealers around the country? If farmers are restricted by the capital cost allowance, they can claim in the first year, they, along with other businessmen will not buy in the early part of the year. They will wait until the last day of the year. They would be foolish to do otherwise.

What concerns me, however, are the changes with respect to capital gains, particulary as they affect farmers and small business people. Over the years farmers and small business people have traditionally looked upon their business or their farm as the means by which they might have some money when they reach retirement to buy themselves a home and to supplement their old-age security pension. In many cases the only asset that a farmer and a small businessman has when reaching the age of retirement is land, inventory and machinery. When there was no capital gains tax in effect, there was no problem. In 1972 when the capital gains tax was brought into being as a result of the white paper on taxation, the problems began. Even so, a farmer or businessman had the opportunity of purchasing income-averaging certificates and the right to sell land or assets on time and to defer capital gains.

The capital gains tax has had a real effect on land values, and farmers are now faced with substantial capital gains. A farmer who sells his farm usually moves into the city or town and often buys a house, and it takes a pretty good chunk of the money realized on the sale of the farm to pay for that home. What does this budget do? It takes away the right of the person who has a capital gain to invest in income-averaging certificates. It takes away the right of a farmer or a businessman to sell land or assets on terms over a period of time and to defer that income.

What is even worse is the fact that this government is changing the rules in the middle of the taxation year. This is just like running a horse race with the opportunity of deciding when the race is going to end. Obviously you will end the race when your horse is ahead. That is what the government is trying to do by changing the rules in the middle of the taxation year.

There are many farmers and businessmen in this country who, based on the rules, regulations and the law which existed this year, sold their farms and their businesses, anticipating they would be able to purchase income-averaging certificates until the end of March of next year. This opportunity was cut off on November 12.

I talked with one farmer who, as a result of the November 12 budget, will be faced with a tax liability of some $100,000. I talked to another farmer who wanted to make arrangements to divide his land among his family to be disposed of on his death. As a result of this budget, he is faced with a tax liability of some $71,000 and he has only three quarters of a section. This is unbelievable.

It seems to me that the very least this government could do is to say to those farmers, businessmen and people who incur a capital gain this year and who have based their sales and plans on the laws that existed, the law will not be changed as of November 12 but will remain the same until the end of the taxation year. That is only fair. In a few minutes I will come to another aspect of the unfairness of this budget.

Having regard to capital gains, I suggest that the minister should set up an all-party committee to consider perhaps the elimination of the capital gains tax, the exemption of capital gains from taxation up to a certain amount, or perhaps the updating of the valuation day. This was promised by the Liberals in the 1979-80 election campaign. The present leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan said at a news conference in Regina, "If you elect a Liberal government, we will update evaluation day." What did the Liberal government do? It took away any benefit the farmer or businessman had when it comes to capital gains.

Such a committee should also give some consideration to the Farm Credit Corporation. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has complained about money being expensive. The interest rates on loans from the Farm Credit Corporation have increased I believe to 16.25 per cent or 16.75 per cent.

On numerous occasions members of this party, including myself, have suggested to the minister that perhaps one solution to the capital gains situation in relation to farmland would be to allow farmers who have capital gains to invest the capital gain portion of the selling price with the Farm Credit Corporation in the form of bonds. If a farmer did this and undertook to leave the money there for a period of five years, there would be no capital gains tax on that portion. The farmer could be paid interest at the rate of 5 per cent or 6 per cent, and that would not be taxable. The result would be that money would be made available to farmers at cheap rates, particularly to young farmers.

I should like to read part of a letter I received the other day from a young farmer. He says:

> I am . . . 21 years old and have lived on the farm all of my life. I now wish to farm for a living and am now renting three quarters of (a section of) land. I now have an opportunity to buy a half section of land. My father is well established financially and operationally but he is a small farmer and is limited in helping me get established. He is helping by renting his machinery to me and is partly financing me to buy this land. I will be working it off in a construction job and will subsidize my farming operation with this income.
> Although all these things are in my favour (my young age, experience of living on the farm and renting land, my father's help with machinery and financing me, my subsidizing the farm) I find that a loan from Farm Credit Corporation at its high interest rate makes repayment possibilities so close and risky it is unsafe and unwise to buy.

He wrote to me and asked, "What can I do?"

I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that he examine the proposal put forth by this party to allow farmers to put capital gains into the Farm Credit Corporation which would enable it to lend money to young farmers at perhaps 7 per cent or 8 per cent, a rate with which they could live.

Finally I come to the matter of taxation of severance pay. The taxation of severance pay rules apply to all public servants, members of the armed forces and the RCMP or anyone who receives superannuation from the government. Within the last week I have had two telephone calls from people who are government employees, one in the Armed Forces and the other in the RCMP. They face compulsory retirement because of their age. They knew what the tax law was, and they made their arrangements based on that law. The money that they were expecting to put into RRSPs or income-averaging securities never came in time to beat the November 12 budget. What happened is that these individuals are now faced with the fact that their severance pay is completely taxable. One of these people is faced with a tax burden of $7,000 or $8,000. It is absolutely unfair that the rules were changed in midstream. The Minister of Finance and the bureaucrats who worked on this budget never considered the effect of this budget on individual Canadians, the farmers, businessmen and corporations. If they had, they would not have brought in a budget such as this.

It is clear that the budget has caused hardship, confusion and anger across the country. One solution would be for the government to withdraw this budget, but I doubt very much that it would do so.

I suggest that the provisions of this budget should not be implemented until they can be studied by the various concerned committees. If the Minister of Finance is not prepared to do this, I think his only alternative is to resign.

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I will take three approaches; the economy in general, the budget in relation to the economy, and then the international influence on our economy.

The number one complaint about the economy that I hear from my constituents in Kitchener is not inflation. It is, rather, a combination of feelings and thoughts which I would characterize as uncertainty, fear, anger and hopelessness. This mood of the people is a number one problem. They do not have any confidence or belief that our economic problems can be beaten and, without that confidence, there is less chance that any measure directed at dealing with the economic problems facing us will be accepted as a positive course or that it will have a positive impact.

The Minister of Finance emphasized that point and its importance in his budget speech when he said, "The key which can open the door to our future is a change in our attitudes and expectations. We will move much more quickly to non-inflationary growth if the conviction spreads that we are heading back toward stable prices and lower interest rates".

People do not expect miracles. Canadians have tightened their belts, but they do not want to tighten their belts on a rollercoaster that is leading nowhere and from which the weak fall off. Many Canadians perceive this to be the situation, and I will deal with this particular issue during my speech.

Before focusing on the economic problems and courses of action we have taken and can take, I would like to point out that members of the House have identified high interest rates, inflation, unemployment, low productivity and foreign ownership as our major enemies. Unlike most hon. members, many Canadians do not see the need to sacrifice one against the other, and I agree with that view.

The Economic Council of Canada concurred with this in its report of October, 1981, and offered two concrete proposals to bring down inflation while at the same time lowering interest rates and lessening the negative impact on unemployment and economic slowdown.

John Kenneth Galbraith also seems to agree on this point and, further, offers different proposals which I will discuss in more detail later.

Turning now to the economy in general, I would like to discuss what I see to be our approach to the macroeconomic and structural aspects of the Canadian economy. The first area is economic measures which have already been taken outside the budget that serve to set the economic framework in which the budget will operate. I support the principle of a strong national government with the necessary tools to face our economic challenges. I do not support the "community of communities" principle espoused by the opposition. I see this principle leading to the further balkanization of our country, resulting in ten fiefdoms fighting common enemies with uncoordinated and often contradictory strategies.

Canada must have a strong national government to direct, co-ordinate and unify our country's attack on our economic problems. Our government has gone a long way toward this goal through the Constitution, the National Energy Program and the energy agreements between the national government and some provinces. The increased revenues from multinationals and the long-term reduced capital outflow have done much more than any five budgets in the past to enable us to reduce our deficit, thus easing the pressure on interest rates and inflation, as well as helping to balance our current account deficits over the long-term.

The second area that must be considered is the impact of the United States economic strategy. Any Canadian budget is based, to a large degree, on the estimated economic performance of the United States. The United States owns and controls over 60 per cent of the energy and manufacturing sectors of our economy. As well, it is our largest trading partner, with 70 per cent.

President Reagan now concedes that the United States economy is in a recession that, as he put it, "none of us predicted." Let us consider the dramatic changes in the economic policy in the United States since it was first proposed in the 1980 election campaign. In that campaign, President Reagan set forth his platform of massive tax cuts, massive cuts in social spending as advised by David Stockman, a massive decrease in defence spending, monetary restraint, which was a policy advanced by Paul Volker, a balanced budget by 1984, reduced inflation and strengthening of the economy through supply side economics. Even then, many political and economic observers said that the arithmetic did not add up.

What has happened since the election campaign? President Reagan appointed David Stockman as the director of the Office of Management and Budget, or OMB, in the United States. In this capacity, he has control of the United States budget and is a major influence on United States economic and social strategy. This is similar to the role of the Minister of Finance in Canada.

Mr. Stockman's major problem was reconciling President Reagan's contradictory campaign promises of raising defence spending, cutting income taxes and balancing the budget all at once. Mr. Stockman's supply side approach to economics was premised on faith, as he admitted, not on economic factors or economic studies, but on faith.

When President Reagan's economic platform was put into the OMB computer, Mr. Stockman was shocked by the results. It showed that the United States deficit would be $82 billion in 1982 and $116 billion by 1984, a level unprecedented in peacetime. David Stockman realized that if this occurred, the stockmarket would panic, interest rates would go higher and long-term inflation would be a certainty. Therefore, the OMB computer was reprogrammed by supply side economists. Instead of being given the orthodox assumptions of how the economy would behave, it assumed a fast decline in prices and interest rates and a huge increase in productivity. Even when these irresponsible assumptions were fed into the computer—which the United States economy has since shown not to be valid—the deficit still showed $60 billion annually, which was also unprecedented in peacetime.

President Reagan has also promised to increase defence spending by $1.6 trillion over the next five years. This is more than double the annual United States budget. This increased defence spending has resulted in such a massive deficit that there is now excessive monetary restraint, which still leaves unquestionably high interest rates.

David Stockman's most disconcerting admission was that the administration's budget was based on shaky premises which did not add up. He stated:

● (2000)

None of us really understand what's going on with all these numbers. You've got so many different budgets out and so many base lines and such complexity now people are getting from A to B and its not clear how they are getting there. Its not clear how we got there.

This is the man who designed the U.S. budget. Even so, Reagan's economic plan was a political success. It was not a success on Wall Street though. The inflation rate was declining, but Stockman conceded this was due more to good luck with grain harvests and world oil supplies than anything Reagan had done. Stockman's original idea that the dramatic political moves would affect the market's expectations of continued high inflation was wrong. He discussed what had gone wrong in this way:

The defence numbers got out of control and we were doing that whole budget-cutting exercise so frantically. In other words, you were juggling details, pushing people, and going from one session to another, trying to cut housing programs here and rural electric there, and we were doing it so fast we didn't know where we were ending up for sure . . . and it didn't quite mesh. That's what happened. But, you see, for about a month and a half we got away with that because of the novelty of all these budget reductions.

Mr. Nielsen: Sounds like U.S. News and World Report.

Mr. Lang: Hon. members opposite may not understand the importance of the impact of the U.S. economy on the Canadian economy, but it is of significant importance. If we want to understand how our budget operates in this economy, we should be aware of what is happening in the United States.

There was nothing new about Reagan's new Republicanism in which the oil companies win and the poor lose. Stockman said it too. He stated:

Power is contingent . . . The power of these client groups turned out to be stronger than I realized. The client groups know how to make themselves heard. The problem is, unorganized groups can't play this game.

Stockman's final analysis of the whole mess:

Whenever there are great strains or changes in the economic system it tends to generate crackpot theories, which then find their way into the legislative channels.

I have a number of points to make on the fiasco of President Reagan's program on which the U.S. budget director has reported.

First, the importance of Canada gaining control of its own economy through Canadianization with the National Energy Program and through the Foreign Investment Review Agency is underlined. However, the timing of this is also important, as will be discussed later. We must use economic strategy increasingly and tools that target on domestic inflation, interest rates and economic growth.

We cannot assume any positive impact on our economy from the United States. Adjustments in our policy may have to be considered in light of this new information that David Stockman has given us since our own budget was outlined. However, it is a good sign that Mr. Stockman has had the courage to tell it like it is, which may generate enough political pressure on President Reagan to get his act together.

The third area I will consider with respect to the economy in general is monetary policy. The responsibility of the Bank of Canada, and I quote Governor Bouey:

—is to discharge its parliamentary mandate, to regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation.

Until now we have seen monetary policy being used as the bulwark of anti-inflationary methods by most countries of the western industrialized world. Paul Volker of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board has been the pacesetter, and again we have seen the dramatic impact of U.S. measures in Canada. Our interest rates follow theirs like a slow but persistent tracking dog, not getting up to the same peaks or as deep into the valleys but nevertheless always on track.

It is of interest to note Governor Bouey's comments on this in the 1980 annual report of the Bank of Canada. It states this:

Although control over the rate of monetary expansion is an essential component of an effective anti-inflationary policy it should not be the only element. If it is left to carry the whole load it may, to be effective, have to involve such high interest rates as to be very disruptive to the functioning of the economy. Very high interest rates have an uneven impact on the economy, affecting particularly those areas of activity that typically involve the use of large amounts of credit, as for example, house building. The slowing of inflation will be accomplished with much less economic and social strain if policies elsewhere in the economy help the process.

Despite these statements we see that the recent fall in Canadian interest rates has been impeded by the Bank of Canada. This is inconsistent with the bank's own guides to action, the value of the Canadian dollar and the growth in money supply as measured by M1.

If this continues, it will hold interest rates unnecessarily high and deepen the recession that is already causing widespread lay-offs. The constituents in my riding are well aware of this.

Governor Bouey used to state that a strong dollar meant that we could lower interest rates, but he is now letting our dollar rise relative to all other currencies. The other determinant of interest rate policy has been the growth of the money supply. Instead of letting the money supply grow by up to 4 to 8 per cent per year, the target announced, the Bank of Canada has allowed no growth at all in the past 12 months. In fact, the M1 money supply has declined by $1 billion from October 1980, from $25.2 billion to $24.2 billion.

The Bank of Canada itself has said the minimum to keep our economy growing without inflation is $26 billion, or we are short of $1.8 billion. Hence, the Bank of Canada has the elbow room to ease up on tight money allowing some increase in growth and decreased interest rates. When money is kept this tight, it means that interest rates are higher than necessary and are only exacerbating inflation.

I would now like to consider the budget in relation to the economy. Looking at general economic policy and the budget, we can see a number of adjustments that have validity and can be made to improve our prospects. First, considering restraint, we have seen that there has been excessive monetary restraint and that we can increase our money supply without any inflationary impact, leading to an immediate decrease in pressure on interest rates as well as increased employment and productivity in the short term.

Next I would like to consider expenditure control. I have received numerous representations from my constituents on the importance of expenditure. In this area, the government has a rate of expenditure growth of 16.3 per cent for this fiscal year. Apart from public debt charges, the total dollar amount charges that will be spent are less than the amount forcast in the budget of October, 1980.

The government has had to pay an additional $2 billion in public debt charges because of higher interest rates. It is this increase, not new spending programs, which accounts for the unexpected increase in our expenditures to 16.3 per cent.

The budget sets out a program for steady reduction of the deficit. Financial requirements are expected to decline from $9.8 billion in 1981-82 to $6.6 billion in 1982-83. Most important, financial requirements are less than anticipated in the October 1980 budget. They are $1.2 billion less in 1981-82 and $1.8 billion less in 1982-83.

The second major principle of the budget is equity. There is little question that the major inequity we have in our economy today is high interest rates. The increased revenues from the multinational oil companies as a result of the energy agreement as well as fiscal measures discussed above are in the right direction in terms of alleviating pressure on interest rates.

Aid has been targeted to home owners with mortgages coming due, small businesses and farmers. These groups have borne an inequitable burden of the fight against inflation. My constituents inform me that this aid is not having the desired impact, partly due to poor co-operation from the banks. Further pressure on the banks is required. It is important to note that an excessive increase in bank profits due to higher interest rates is not an equitable situation, as clearly they are not bearing any of the burden in the fight against inflation. In fact, they appear to be profiting from it.

Considering equity further, we have the suggestions of more direct price-cost control advocated by John Kenneth Galbraith. Adding to this adjusted monetary and fiscal policies, as he suggests, enables us to deal with the cost-push component of inflation with considerably less negative impact on interest rates. Furthermore, he points out that decreasing interest rates frees up capital for industrial modernization and economic growth. Just as important, in terms of equity, employment prospects are dramatically improved.

I am disappointed that we have not seen more constructive alternatives put forward by the official opposition. Is it because, in their own self interest to gather power, they are afraid to propose constructive measures that will always have a downside to them and hence lay the opposition open to criticism? Nowhere in this debate have I heard direct price cost controls being discussed, and despite both their merits and detractions, they have been used with varying degrees of success against cost push inflation since World War II. They have been used by many countries such as the U.S., Britain, Switzerland, West Germany and Canada.

I do not put it forward as a panacea, Mr. Speaker. However, I ask a number of questions. Is it wise to abandon completely the major bulwark of anti-inflationary policy in the past, a policy that has proven by experience in many countries to be at least partially successful. On adopting monetary restraint to deal with excessive total aggregate demand, the new and as yet unproven anti-inflationary theory, should we abandon totally the cost push theories of inflation and direct price cost controls? Is not the inequity of excessive monetary restraint, which cuts aggregate demand through high interest rates, decreasing economic growth and unemployment, greater than the inequity of direct price cost controls? Should we not consider the pros and cons of adding direct price cost controls to monetary and fiscal restraint by taking some of the burden off monetary restraint, which would allow further output and hence higher employment, as well as lower interest rates? By dealing with domestic inflation more directly, we can also lessen the negative impact of U.S. policies. Although, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) pointed out in the budget, we cannot insulate ourselves from the United States, nevertheless, we must face the reality, as enunciated by David Stockman, that unless the United States takes dramatic steps to control defence spending or totally changes its program, both of which are unlikely, the U.S. will continue with stagflation, volatile interest rates and inflationary pressures for some time to come.

Hence, I believe, further consideration of direct price cost controls is essential, as well as being more equitable in terms of dealing with the inequities of high interest rates and high unemployment.

Another aspect of equity in the budget is the new tax reform measures. Again, I have had numerous representations about the closure of tax expenditure loopholes. Many of my constituents feel that, in some measure, the Department of Finance has miscalculated the impact on the economy and individuals. As well, they feel that in addition to catching those who are abusing these tax loopholes, the middle class, the productive sector of our society, those who are working for a living, will be hard hit and that there will be tremendous discouragement through the efforts of working and saving. The Minister of Finance has indicated that appropriate adjustments will be made to the withdrawal of these tax incentives to ensure that the desired impact is obtained. This should also deal with other concerns that have been raised in regard to loss of high risk venture capital necessary to junior Canadian oil and gas companies as well as to new high technology industries.

Now let us consider economic growth, the third major principle of the budget. We have seen that we do not have to wait for inflation to be brought under control before allowing the economy to grow.

The above measures, past experience, as well as economic theory, allow for growth associated with increased capital formation and productivity, while protecting against inflationary growth. Thus, we can move on with implementing the strategy contained in the budget's document "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties".

I should like to highlight briefly some of these points. First, the start-up of the megaprojects and other natural resource industries; second, measures for increasing industrial investment, as well as research and development; third, facilitating increased transportation capacity, particularly in export trade expansion in grain, coal, fertilizers and forest products; fourth, increased export trade by implementing the strategy contained in the budget for export development and by lower value of the Canadian dollar relative to other currencies; and fifth, facilitating the education and training of human resources, particularly for application in microelectronics technology and megaprojects.

The last area of consideration is the international structural aspects of our economy. Most Canadians are aware of the large degree of foreign ownership and control of both the energy and non-energy sectors of our economy. In fact, our economy is often referred to as a branch plant economy. The government has recognized this with the Canadianization aspects of the National Energy Program and with the Foreign Investment Review Agency. I believe that the government has also recognized that the pace and timing of gaining further control of our economy is critically important. We must be aware of the problems of capital outflow, current account deficit, decreased foreign investment and retaliatory measures, which are threatened by the U.S. either directly through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or, indirectly, which can result from moving too quickly on re-owning our economy, or which can result from the inappropriate timing of these measures, such as in times of economic stress.

Another aspect in considering structure in the economy is tax reform, which was briefly discussed earlier. The government has introduced measures to increase tax equity. This is welcomed. Again, we must be aware of the timing and pace of these reforms so as not to introduce further stress to an already embattled economy. There are dangers to decreasing business investment, decreasing capital formation, decreasing employment and decreasing incentives for high risk venture capital.

The incentive for risk-taking, increased productivity, and the entrepreneurial spirit must not be hampered. The Minister of Finance has indicated the importance of ensuring a positive impact on the economy with respect to tax reform. He has also indicated an openness to adjustments where further equity can be obtained.

I have already discussed in the House my concern with tax on unrealized accrued income on life insurance savings and the impact on dependants, jobs and business investments that are involved.

Again on the international level, Mr. Speaker, because of the failure of the U.S. approach so far, this places even more pressure on Canada to take a leadership role in a truly equitable fight against inflation. It is not unusual to have economists split on what the economic future holds; but it is unusual when the director of the economic strategy of the major economy in the free world, the United states economy, indicates that his strategy has been a failure. Budget Director, David Stockman, has done exactly this. Again, I am hopeful that this admission in itself will produce changes in the U.S. policy; but as yet we have no evidence of this change. It is incumbent upon Canada to take a leadership role in showing that inflation can be beaten, unemployment reduced and economic growth proceed on the basis of output and productivity.

For the western world to go through a recessionary period, with the tremendous social damage and inequity involved, would be truly devastating, particularly if the battle against inflation is not won. This would seriously endanger any attempts to control inflation in the future. People are hurting in this fight against inflation and they expect positive results for their sacrifice.

United States policies have endangered the probability of positive results. This is yet another impelling reason for Canada to approach inflation in terms of targeting more closely on domestic inflation, as opposed to targeting on inflation as a whole in Canada. There is little we can do about foreign inflation, Mr. Speaker, other than setting an example of how to beat inflation. I believe this can be done with the economic framework we now have and the economic measures discussed above. By recording success in controlling domestic inflation, which again can be recorded with the GNE deflator, as opposed to the CPI, we can instil a sense of confidence in Canadians, and, by our success, give an example to other countries in the western industrialized world.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I could not help but be somewhat amused when I listened to the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) speak about the budget, not so much our budget but that of the United States. If I were a Liberal these days, I would probably prefer to speak about Mr. Stockman and his budget much more than I would about the document we are discussing in the House this evening. I wonder whether the hon. member knows that inflation in the United States is 5 per cent below that of our own, that interest rates are 5 per cent below ours, and that all signs point toward the fact that the Americans are indeed in much better control of their economy than we could ever hope to be, particularly after this budget.

I doubt whether there has ever been a budget that was more universally rejected, that was so off the target as this one. It is fair and equitable only in the sense that the devastation is universal. The minister has not forgotten anyone in his compulsory restraint program. Our offices are flooded with mail daily. Our constituents are calling this document cynical, cruel and callous. It was received with disgust, dismay and outright anger. The only theme is a major attack on the private sector and more government intervention in every sphere of economic activity. It is a frontal attack on the middle class, on small business and on the farm sectors, and it robs the poor.

There is no better example than the one I must cite where the government, expecting and planning for a massive increase in unemployment, is intending in its budget to impose a measure which will tax severance pay that companies pay the employees they have to lay off.

The message to us is to reduce our expectations. The minister in charge of housing interprets that to mean that we must learn to sit on orange crates again. The ownership of a home or the affordability to rent decent shelter is no longer a social right under the government but a privilege which is conferred on the deserving by their government. Those who have a few dollars to invest are taxed on money they have not yet earned or may never earn. In the past, farmers were allowed to average income from a farm sale, which is the only profit they would have made in their lives. Now they must pay tax on all their income the first year. Even life insurance premiums, unrealized accrued income, will be taxed. They are calling that a closing of the loophole!

Why do they do these things? It is quite obvious to anyone who has sat across from these social engineers for the last ten years that Canadians should not be greedy and save for old age; after all, their government will look after them from cradle to grave! Why should they save money in life insurance? Why should they build up assets or equity in farmland? There is no need to do that because the government looks after them when they are old! It appears that the government, having realized that conventional textbook measures are ineffective in solving the stubborn and chronic problems of inflation, unemployment and high interest rates, has only made the problem worse. But the government has not yet come to understand why these conventional measures are no longer effective. The normal tinkering to stimulate economic growth or to slow it down has not worked. The reason for all this is quite obvious to even the most casual observer. The government is overlooking the facts that private sector activity in the economy is no longer the most dominant factor and that the public sector is not playing by the same rules. For instance, how can we expect to bring down interest rates when the government competes in the marketplace totally unrestrained, as if there were no tomorrow?

The banks are blamed for the fact that thousands of businesses go bankrupt and people lose their homes. Yet any cash the banks may have had to invest in Small Business Development Bonds or mortgages was skimmed off by the latest issue of Canada Savings Bonds which the government guaranteed at 5 per cent above market rates. They are forgetting that the public sector now leads in every sphere of economic activity. Energy prices, indiscriminately set by governments, are a major cost to all industries and all individuals, so are other government-regulated or controlled services such as transportation, communications and postal rates. For example, postal rates have seen an increase of 60 per cent. The public sector continues to lead in wage and salary settlements and spends money as if there were no tomorrow. One of the themes of the budget is restraint—restraint, indeed! It would not matter how well the lesson contained in the Liberal budget were received or how much the average Canadian restrained his demand on the economy. Unless the government begins to practise what it preaches, things can only get worse. The message in this budget and all indications from the initial response to it indicate that things will get much worse.

The financial wizards of the Liberal government all lament the fact that our productivity has fallen way behind that of other industrial nations, and claim that to be a major contributing factor to our economic ills. I agree, but when was a planned and controlled economy ever productive? I should like the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to tell me of one example where a government-controlled economy ever produced anything but inefficiency, waste and shortages, and particularly shortages in people's confidence in themselves. I see nothing in the budget to restore any of the confidence we have already lost, I see no economic renewal in the budget at all.

Last week one of my colleagues said in the House that we could see a move toward a collective farm sector. It was during the question period and it brought spontaneous laughter from the other side. I wonder how much longer farmers will continue to produce cheap food below the cost of production just because the government tells them to. The only sectors in the agricultural industry which are still viable are those that operate under the control of supply management through marketing boards. It is quite apparent that the beef and red meat industries will have to be organized under such a scheme if they are to survive. I am philosophically opposed to marketing boards, but they are the only thing which will keep farmers alive. It is direct control, and it only works domestically. We have only to look at the Milk Marketing Board. We used to sell a lot of cheese to the European Economic Community; we do not any longer because the marketing board has taken care of that. It is not because free enterprise no longer works but because one cannot just intervene a little in the economy, just like one cannot be a little pregnant. Once one starts, one must go all the way. All the way is what tumbles around in the cupboard of the former brain kitchen of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—the head of Jim Coutts. I will tell the House what he said. He shed his obligation to secrecy just recently. He is now at large, away from the loony bin. He is so convinced of the virtues of the economic order to which he and his former boss subscribe that he is testing his theories on the public platform. He competed in an election and he made a speech to a Liberal convention. He is not content with government ownership of the energy sector alone, even though modern day socialists no longer believe, as did Karl Marx, that the state must own the tools and machines of production. They think, rightly so, that if we control and own the energy which drives the machines and own and control the resources which are fed through the machine, the rest can well be left to the proletariat. But Jim Coutts wants to go further. He wants the state to own the lumber industry. Would that be good news to lumber people? He wants the high tech business controlled and owned by government, he wants the agricultural sector in some way controlled by the government. Some of the anger which has fed back to our offices was a result of the fact that we overlooked that some Canadians think they have a right to the ownership of their property. The rejection of the budget has something to do with this, because people fear and mistrust those social reformers opposite. They actually thought that Jim Coutts could have his way and could assume complete control and ownership of our farm industry some day! Fortunately the people of Spadina opted for a somewhat less radical and dangerous representative of the social democrats. It is said that there is a difference between the Liberals and the social democrats; at least the people of Spadina believe that.

One of the great features of our system is the right of the electorate to receive as much punishment as it keeps asking for. My advice to anyone who has difficulty understanding the theme of the budget is to read it in conjunction with the speech that Jim Coutts delivered to the Liberal convention. That will put it in better focus. It is a giant step forward, a planned economy, not much different from that which operates in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Jim Coutts and his former boss believe that the failure of the Soviets to feed themselves has nothing to do with the way their economic order is arranged but has something to do with the 53 consecutive crop failures experienced in the Soviet Union. The Lord must not be smiling at our friends behind the Iron Curtain.

What this budget represents is an inevitable consequence of 12 years of pursuing the socialist notion of taking from each according to his ability and giving to each according to his need. That is equity, according to the government.

I always like to refer to the professor of political science from New York who tells his students that in order to understand this concept of socialism they just have to look around the classroom and say to the students who receive 95 per cent in tests, that they should give up some of their marks to those who only achieve 55 per cent. That way, everyone would end up with equal passing marks—about 70 per cent or 75 per cent. That seems fair. After adjusting all the scores, everyone would be equal! The question is, would the student who earns 95 per cent work as hard the following year? Would the student who only received 65 per cent work at all? In fact, quite soon all students would score well below the passing grade. Compulsory assignments and severe punishments would be needed in order to raise the grade of even the most capable to the passing level.

Productivity in our economy has long ago fallen below the passing level. Too many people with great ability have registered themselves among the needy. More and more of us are throwing up our hands, no longer able to bear the load being placed on us.

This budget, sir, is the first of the compulsory assignments and the punishment which is needed to raise the passing grade of our activity—except that it is not going to work. The government will just find someone else to blame. The Minister of Finance tells us that it is the banks that are to blame for businesses, large and small, going under, and for the people who are losing their farms and their homes. Oil price increases are the fault of the multinational corporations.

As I said earlier, it is not possible to intervene just a little bit. It is hardly the fault of the oil companies when the government doubles taxes through order in council and then the price of gasoline and heating oil increases, or when the Bank of Canada increases the prime lending rate. If a government adopts these measures, then it must go all the way and tax excessive profits. That is what the NDP wants to do. It wants to bring in a windfall profits tax. If bank profits can be legislated, then it may be necessary to bring in such a measure.

Jim Coutts wants to go further, however. He wants more nationalization in order to solve the problem completely. I suppose bank employees would have nothing to lose—they would get 17 weeks maternity leave, indexed pensions and all the perks which fall under the security blanket that comes with a public service job. Of course, the banks would not register any more profit and therefore would not have any money to lend to small business in order to create new jobs. But without the need to be accountable to those greedy shareholders, the banks, the oil companies or any other government enterprise would undoubtedly take up the slack by hiring a lot of new people themselves, thereby making life easier for everyone else.

Sir, it is not going to work. I will tell you what the theme of this budget is—it is the same as every other budget since our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) proclaimed his new society.

As Churchill said 40 years ago, you can remove the inherent vice of free enterprise and capitalism, which is the unequal distribution of blessings, and replace it with the inherent virtue of socialism, which is the equal distribution of misery. Even that only works in theory because there really is no misery for those who are on the inside. The socialists always look after themselves.

I sometimes wonder what Liberal members tell their constituents when they go home to lecture them and explain why and how ordinary people should restrain their demands on the economy. I am sure some constituents must ask, "What have you done lately to cut back your own demands, or the government's? What about some of the friends of the party or the higher echelons of the bureaucracy?" What about Mr. Campeau, here in Ottawa? He is a builder—is he suffering? Of course not, because the Liberals are looking after him. What about Mr. Bouey, for instance, although one should be fair to him. After all, he only accepted a 9 per cent increase in his salary, although he chastises everyone else for taking as much as 10 per cent or even 12 per cent. Mr. Bouey is one of these neat flow chart people who work with percentages. Such people dominate the public service these days—the social engineers who figure everything in percentages. He got a 9 per cent increase in his salary. This amounted to $9,000 and brought his salary to $104,000 per year. The average Canadian earning $15,000 or $20,000 and asking for a 10 per cent increase will get only $2,000 and end with $22,000 per year.

But he will probably buy his meat in the same store and his gas at the same gas station as Mr. Bouey.

Sir, there is no equity in a socialist order. It is one rule for the inner circle and equal misery for everyone else. The power of the inner circle keeps expanding and the size of government keeps growing. The bureaucracy keeps growing till it becomes a ravenous monster which gobbles up our freedom.

It really will not matter how deeply entrenched our rights are in the Constitution because if the bureaucrat says that our freedom interferes with what is good for the masses, then it will be restrained. The budget is an example of that.

All the while we are told that the government will look after our needs. We are told not to be greedy and take money out of the economy to save for a rainy day or for old age. Apparently all that is looked after by Big Brother. I always say that a government big enough to provide us with everything we need is also big enough to take from us everything that we have.

Will Rogers once said that only the ignorant are willing to give up their freedoms to a person or a government which claims it will solve all their problems for them. It means they have never read history.

One should not be all negative, however, Mr. Speaker. I should like to remind the government that members on this side presented some ideas, so it was not a lack of ideas which prompted a budget like this. Surely the government can no longer point to the United States as the source of all our problems. Their policies are beginning to work, if the rate of inflation is any indication. At the present time it is 5 per cent below ours, their interest rates are 4 per cent lower and their mortgages rates stand at 10 per cent and 11 per cent because of special measures they have introduced to cushion home owners from the effects of inflation. Some of the measures are not unlike those proposed from time to time by this party and others. For instance, our mortgage deductibility program would have had a significant impact on mortgage rates. The Mortgage Exchange Corporation was authorized by the House in 1975. It would have been a perfect tool to combat the present day housing crisis. If it is true that the banks and the mortgage companies are the villains, let us bypass them and give them a little competition by giving individual investors a chance to participate. By allowing private investors to put money in our mortgage corporation and into the mortgage field, with the same concessions offered to the banks, I am confident that most Canadians would prefer such an investment over having term deposits in the banks. Interest rates on guaranteed mortgages could be 11 per cent tomorrow if the government were serious and were to bring in such measures. These measures have been proposed. The government should allow private investors to simply put their money into the mortgage field and allow them to earn their interest free of income tax. That is the concession being given to the banks.

If it is the fault of the banks that small businesses and farms are going bankrupt, let us bypass them. We should give private investors the same concessions the banks are rejecting. Let them purchase Small Business Development Bonds. At this time, it could be done through the Federal Business Development Bank, which, in the first place, was set up for the purpose of keeping the chartered banks honest. We had to take measures like that from time to time. We incorporated the Farm Credit Corporation because the banks were not able or willing to make loans to farmers. Why should we not proclaim the mortgage corporation, and get a handle on the housing crisis? However, the government is not interested or cannot be interested while some of these measures are in place.

I know of no better way to keep the banks honest than to force them to compete for the savings of private investors, for as the economy slides deeper and deeper into recession, people will want to invest in tangible assets, and the banks will find it progressively more difficult to serve both the large corporate and small business customers. We all know whose notes will get called first.

Therefore, Your Honour can see that there is no shortage of available options or ideas. There is only a shortage of will. What we must decide is whether the Prime Minister and his advisers are unwilling to act because they are ignorant or incompetent, or whether they are unwilling to act for other more sinister reasons which would require the further destruction of our economy to make more room for the public sector to intervene, and which would surrender individual Canadians to dependence on and submission to the state forever. It is time for us to wake up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate, first because it will give me the opportunity to point out the importance of the small business sector for the Canadian economy, and second, because the government has recognized this importance and taken action to promote the development of Canadian small businesses both in the past and in this budget.

Detailed analysis of this budget shows that it contains several provisions to assist small businesses. First, it relies on the many incentives developed by the government in the past to assist small businesses. Second, it contains a series of new measures which will be especially beneficial to small businesses, and finally, it promotes a climate which will promote the development of small and large businesses in Canada.

But what about the base which had already been established? Before the budget, certain tax measures were designed especially for small businesses. Nothing has changed in this regard. These measures are too numerous to list them all, but I would like to mention some of the most important. As everyone knows, there is, of course, the reduced income tax rate for small businesses, which is about 21 per cent lower than that applied to large businesses. This provision means a loss in revenue of $1 billion a year for the Government of Canada.

The significance of this lower tax rate, which is unique to Canada, is often not appreciated. If one looks at other countries with an economy similar to ours, one finds, for instance, that in the United States, small businesses with an income between $50,000 and $75,000 would be taxed at 30 per cent, those with an income between $75,000 and $100,000 at 40 per cent and those with an income of over $100,000 at 46 per cent, while in Canada, as I pointed out earlier, these companies are taxed at 25 per cent. If one looks at the United Kingdom, one finds that all the earnings of small businesses up to £80,000 are taxed at a rate of 40 per cent and earnings over £80,000 are taxed at a rate of 60 per cent compared with 25 per cent in Canada. I also obtained some information about the situation in France, where, from what I was told, there is no preferential rate for small businesses. I also looked at the situation in Australia, whose economy, like ours, is based on resource development and where there is no special tax rate for small businesses.

In addition to this special tax rate for the first $200,000 of income, provisions in force before the budget include the special investment tax credit which small businesses can use to defray their research and development costs. Because of this incentive, a private company owned by Canadian interests and eligible for the special tax rate for small businesses receives a tax credit of 25 per cent of all research and development expenses. As all the hon. members are aware, small businesses play a major role in high technology, and this 25 per cent tax credit is aimed at helping them continue their research and development activities in the field of new technologies. There are, of course, other measures which still apply, including deferral of up to $200,000 of capital gains produced by the transfer of small businesses from one generation to the other, the exemption of the federal sales tax for all businesses whose income does not exceed $50,000, the possibility for unincorporated businesses or for the owner of such companies to pay a salary to his spouse and deduct it from his income, and the possibility for risk capital companies which acquire shares in small and medium-sized businesses to have their income taxed as capital gains rather than as regular income.

These examples illustrate the base established in the past by the government to promote the development of small businesses through the tax system. I pointed out a while ago that the preferential tax rate represented a loss in revenue of $1 billion for the Government of Canada. The other incentives which I have just listed represent another billion dollars in tax expenditures for the Canadian government. There are other measures which apply to both small and large businesses, such as the accelerated write-off provision, the investment tax credit, the adjustment to stock value and many others. The budget is therefore based first of all on existing provisions, such as the reduced corporate tax rate. As you know, this budget raises the ceiling for the annual income of small businesses taxed at the reduced rate from $150,000 to $200,000 and the ceiling for cumulative income from $750,000 to $1 million. To give an example of the benefits provided by this measure, let us consider the case of a business with an income of $200,000 to which this special tax rate is applied. We see that this measure will allow this company to save up to $42,000 a year in taxes. During all of last year, Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of touring Canada and meeting a number of small business groups, thousands of small entrepreneurs throughout the country. Those entrepreneurs, those men and women from the small business community all requested that I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. McEachen) to raise the maximum eligibility level for the special tax rate for small businesses. I am both proud and happy to see that in this budget, there is an increase from $150,000 to $200,000 in the first income bracket and in the cumulative income rate from $750,000 to $1 million, which will allow a very large number of Canadian businesses to now qualify for that special tax rate.

Until the budget, there has also been the Small Business Development Bond program, and this is another example of how the government wrote its budget on the basis of previous success. This program is a fiscal measure which provides easier access to reduced interest rate loans for refinancing and expansion purposes. In its two years of existence, the Small Business Development Bond program has promoted investments in small businesses to the tune of $2 billion, at reduced tax rates. That kind of financial help was extended through financial institutions. Since the funds made available were considered not as loans but as bonds, those institutions could charge reduced interest rates, approximately half the commercial rate plus 1 or 2 per cent for handling charges.

In this budget, the Minister of Finance has agreed to extend that program for an additional year, to extend its term to the end of 1982, and he changed somewhat the regulations for its implementation in order to extend the benefits to a greater number of businesses that are not incorporated, also including farmers and fishermen.

Therefore, the program will allow a reduction of interest rates exceeding 6 per cent. The program will now be extended to businesses, farmers and fishermen facing difficulties, because clearly in these times of fiscal restraint it is impossible to help everyone. The Small Business Development Bond program—

[English]

Mr. Kempling: Read your mail.

Mr. Lewis: It is the small business desperation bond, and you know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): I hear the hon. members opposite, who are rarely in great numbers in the House, say that this is nonsense. Perhaps it is nonsense in their opinion to help businesses that are experiencing financial hardship, and nonsense also to allow unincorporated businesses to be eligible for this program, because they believe that to assist the Canadian economy only the richer segments of our society need be helped.

Under the Small Business Development Bond program, the Government of Canada will be spending an additional $82 million.

Another provision affecting small business and contributing to the development of this sector, which is one of the objectives of this budget, is the two-year extension on the business corporate surtax. But, as the Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech, small businesses will be exempt from the surtax payable on that part of their income which is eligible for the reduced small business tax rate. This will allow small businesses to save approximately $100 million in income tax over the next two years.

As of 1982, the employer's weekly contribution to the unemployment insurance plan will be reduced by about 9 per cent, which means that the employer's contribution will go down from $2.52 to $2.31. That too, Mr. Speaker, is a measure that the small business community had requested. I think that will allow small businesses to save approximately $75 million a year.

The provisions announced by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech with respect to small manufacturers will also help the small business community. The federal tax rate on income from manufacturing and processing operations will decrease from 15 to 10 per cent. Under the existing tax provisions, a small business had to separate its eligible manufacturing operations income from all its other income using complicated calculations if its total yearly income was above $50,000. Previously, a corporation which was mainly involved in manufacturing and whose total income did not exceed $50,000 did not have to make these calculations. Now, the budget proposes that a small business which is mainly involved in manufacturing should no longer have to separate its income derived from the manufacturing side of its operation from other revenues to benefit from the reduced tax rates which apply to manufacturing revenues. I think that in addition to reducing paperwork, this measure will make it possible once again for small businesses involved in processing and manufacturing to benefit from a still more beneficial system.

One of the major themes of this budget is equity. It is the underlying theme of the changes made to the manner in which dividends from private businesses are treated. Before this budget, the owner of a private business owned by Canadian interests could be paid by his business an income comparable to that of an executive, without having to pay quite as much in income tax. For instance, the owner of a private corporation could be paid up to $30,000 on which he had to pay only the tax rate applicable to small businesses, that is 25 per cent. The employees and unincorporated businessmen paid comparable incomes were subject to an average tax rate of 35 per cent.

As I indicated earlier, one of the main objectives of the government was to develop a more equitable tax system. That is why some provisions in the budget are designed to eliminate a certain imbalance. They will make sure that the decision as to whether a business should be incorporated is based on the financial benefits the business stands to gain rather than on mere fiscal considerations. They will make sure also that the tax deductions granted to small businesses are directed to those which are in full expansion and need them most. There is a third reason, Mr. Speaker, why this budget is beneficial to small businesses. It will foster an economic climate in which all Canadian businesses will begin to thrive as the worldwide recession dies down. I mean, of course, the considerable effort which the government has made in this budget to reduce its deficits and its borrowings. As my colleague the Minister of Finance suggested, this effort will alleviate the pressures exerted on the loan markets, reduce the interest rates and leave more room for borrowers seeking funds. The budget is a step in the right direction for this government which is constantly trying to slow down the growth of its spending, leave more room for the private sector and promote entrepreneurship, while assuming its responsibility for leadership and assistance.

I did not mention the many other means which are available to provide financial assistance to small businesses. I am thinking of the Federal Business Development Bank with a lending and borrowing capability of over $2 billion, which helps out more than 40,000 businesses. I am thinking also of the risk capital of the Federal Business Development Bank which has invested more than 40 million dollars in over 150 manufacturing companies in this country. In addition, there is, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Small Businesses Loans Act pursuant to which 1.4 billion loans are guaranteed by the Canadian government to 24,000 businesses. I could mention many more programs, such as the National Research Council Programs, the Industrial Research Assistance Program, the Small Business Development Program, the Regional Economic Expansion Department program, the Suppliers' Establishment Funds, the Supply and Services Department Program.

Mr. Speaker, considering this wide range of opportunities, it is obvious that over the last few years and even now in the present budget the government has done its very best to aid small businesses and has promoted original policies, as I mentioned earlier, when I compared our fiscal system to those of countries similar to our own. The present budget respects this commitment and is an efficient way of helping small Canadian businesses build a better future for themselves.

I would like to remind hon. members, as the Minister of Finance has mentioned several times in this House, that he is ready to listen to proposals by groups of people and Members of Parliament in order to determine whether or not in some cases certain adjustments may be justified for the sake of equity. As Minister of State for Small Businesses, Mr. Speaker, I shall and do live up to my responsibilities to see to it that all the concerns of small businessmen are brought to the attention of my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the few minutes I have left to address another topic which also concerns and affects small businesses, more particularly in Ontario and Quebec. I would like to deal for awhile with the new Canadian policy on behalf of the shoe industry. I would like to quote from a paper which was presented or read at the Quebec National Assembly, during the presentation of the Parizeau Budget in 1979:

The traditional textile, clothing, shoe and furniture industries which in 1977 had lost 20,000 jobs and were in some cases threatened with total elimination, were saved by the adoption of radical policies. The federal government agreed to pursue a strict and responsible policy of quota imposition for three to four years to protect three of those industries. And the Quebec government removed the sales tax from those four areas for a year . . . it is most important that we agree on the objective. For three years the governments will give an exceptional assistance to those traditional industries. We shall do everything possible to reach a specific objective, which is to make them competitive within three years with their American and Western European counterparts. We will not ask them to compete with Taiwan or Korea. That would not be possible. But I must give those industries the solemn warning that, at the end of those three years, they cannot expect an extension of this exceptional government help. It is up to them to undertake right now the work of reorganization and modernization which is necessary to their survival.

Mr. Speaker, this speech by the Minister of Finance in Quebec is exactly what we have sought to implement after four years of protective measures on behalf of the shoe industry.

Total imports during the period from 1977 to 1981 increased by 9.2 million pairs of footwear compared with 1975. More than 80 per cent of that disastrous increase consisted of footwear made of materials other than leather. Of the other 20 per cent, leather footwear, more than two thirds came from both developed and state-trading countries. So, a cursory look at those figures prove clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the sad state of affairs with regard to low-production-cost countries is caused by a sharp increase in footwear imports other than leather and cannot be blamed on increased imports of leather footwear from those countries. Since 1977, the situation has changed considerably. For instance, the value of the Canadian dollar is no longer what it was and Canadian producers have improved their productivity, thanks not only to the steps taken by the Quebec government, as mentioned by the Quebec Minister of Industry and Tourism, but also to the restructuration program of the government of Canada.

The Canadian leather and man-made fabric shoe industry is protected, moreover, by a 24.4 per cent rate of value for duty advances in the case of nine countries, including Italy and Brazil; in addition, it is still possible to resort to the normal protection of compensatory rights and anti-dumping rules as provided for in federal legislation. The Anti-dumping Tribunal, which made the study of the industry on which our new policy is based, indicates on page 112 of its report that it is now satisfied that the Canadian footwear industry is now able to compete with the imports from developing economies and state-trading countries.

In 1980, Canadian producers had over 70 per cent of the domestic leather footwear market, industrialized countries 20 per cent and underdeveloped countries 10 per cent. Among the latter, Brazil represented almost half the imports. With regard to that country, the Tribunal recognizes in its report and concludes on page 113 that, "the necessity of special measures of protection in the case of Brazil is somewhat less urgent as imports from that source are subjected to a 50 per cent advance for duty". And this, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the 24.4 per cent rate on any imported footwear. Again, as far as Brazil is concerned, Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago, it levied a 15 per cent export tax on that footwear. Now considering the small share of the leather footwear market held by other underdeveloped countries, you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that it would be almost impossible to justify any unilateral action to our trade partners, even if there were some international mechanisms such as, for example, the multi-fiber agreement on textile and clothing now in effect. It would not be possible at all to justify such an exception under our GATT agreements.

As for footwear other than leather on which we imposed a quota, the Tribunal concluded also, on page 123, that the greater part of the increase in imports from underdeveloped countries would be absorbed by footwear other than leather, and that Canadian manufacturers especially would suffer. That prejudice could be ascribed to substitution.

Now, the decision of the government of Canada to impose quotas on footwear other than leather is based on real statistics and on the findings of the Anti-dumping Tribunal. In addition, it must also be kept in mind that if we had imposed quotas on leather footwear, which would have affected mostly our trading partners of the European Economic Community and the United States, it is quite obvious that many Quebec and Ontario manufacturers of leather footwear already exporting much of their production to those markets, would also have been subjected to retaliatory measures and would have been unable to export their footwear to those markets. With this new restructuration and modernization program for which we have earmarked $17 million to bring special assistance to footwear manufacturers so they will expand their export activities by closing our markets to all but leather footwear, I think we can hope that the workers and the manufacturers will be able to get a handle on the new situation and develop a much more dynamic and much more competitive footwear industry. In any event, before the end of the week my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières) and myself will meet with the footwear manufacturers and the spokesmen for the labour force in that industry.

I wanted to take the opportunity offered in this speech to clear up the situation on that subject because we have been getting political flak from the government of Quebec which has been saying that the footwear industry will go belly up. I also wanted to demonstrate the originality of our tax system for small Canadian businesses with all the new measures contained in the budget we are studying now, and that small Canadian businesses will continue to be the backbone of our economic development and that, for the government of Canada, it will remain the most important sector of our economy.

The Budget—Mr. Althouse

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, before this budget was brought down, I had a very modest list of items which I had hoped would be in it. These items applied to agriculture, which is my area of concern. I thought we might see some much needed improvement in funding for stabilization programs in the agricultural community.

During this International Year of the Disabled Persons, I hoped that there would be at least a minor bow in recognition of that fact by providing for some equality in the application of the Income Tax Act for people who are mentally handicapped. There are families of mentally handicapped people who do not have the same kind of tax options which are available to families of physically disabled people.

I had sent letters to the various ministers involved in the hope that there would be some recognition of this situation during this year of the disabled and that it would be corrected. It would not cost the people of Canada very much and it would, in fact, give some recognition to those families with mentally disabled people who are sometimes faced with a great financial cost.

I had hoped that there would be some increased funding to the Farm Credit Corporation through the introduction of a means of recycling the funds which go from one farming generation to the next. I would have liked to have seen a method whereby the farmer who was selling the farm would be allowed to reinvest his money in the Farm Credit Corporation bond at a reduced tax rate to encourage the recycling of money which, in turn, would be more available since the Farm Credit Corporation at the present time supplies only between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of the required funds for refinancing.

I had also hoped that some means would be provided in this budget to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to provide for additional sources of funding, either from private or government sources. With the exception of $45 million, that too did not happen.

Since we have just experienced a fairly heavy tax regime under the National Energy Program and the energy agreements between the federal government and the producing provinces, I had hoped that the tax increases would not be too great. There are some sectors of our economy, such as the banks and oil companies which are making tremendous profits from the high interest rates, and I would like to have seen a tax leveled on these windfall profits. That did not happen either.

I thought that it might have been time for the recognition of the workers who are not working under a union contract and have to supply most of their own equipment for their trade, whether it be carpentry, plumbing or farming; that there would be some allowance for them to write off part of their tools as part of their jobs. That was not in the budget either.

One of the main farm planks in the Liberal Party campaign during the last election was a change in the valuation day for farmland from the end of 1971 to the end of 1974. This was one of the few planks in the Liberal Party platform, and I was extremely distressed to see that it was not included in the budget. Since there was no change to the valuation day, no changes in the Farm Credit Corporation, no monies for the stabilization program I was beginning to wonder where the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had been when the proposals for the budget were being drawn up. Those are some of the things which were not provided for in the budget.

What we did get were changes to the income-averaging annuity program which were not particularly welcomed in the farming community. I believe that these changes were aimed more at the professional athletes, perhaps entertainers and presidents of large corporations who receive large sums of money on the termination of contracts. In these areas the changes to the income-averaging annuity program contract may have some element of fairness because these people are not at the end of their careers. Most of them will again take jobs and be part of the economy. However, as this provision applies to retiring farmers, I maintain that the effect, on balance, is unfair.

The provision for income-averaging annuity has been beneficial to farmers since it first came into effect in 1972 because it was offered in recognition of the fact that while farmers may not be producing very much in the way of income tax payments during their careers—I will elaborate on this point later—they do find themselves facing retirement with fairly large sums of money in some cases, and this income-averaging annuity contract allowed the farmer to average his income on a forwarding basis, thus spreading the effects of that income, which had been accumulated sometimes up to 50 years, over the ensuing five to 10 years. This protection is not longer available to the farmer.

The effective elimination of the IAAC, if we can use that short term, will probably produce a tendency for farmers to sell less land and in smaller parcels, which will not make it any easier for the rest of the community continuing to farm. With this tendency, it also means that these sales will take place over a number of years in an effort to effect the same kind of tax averaging which was available under the IAAC program. The more worrisome effects of the program's elimination are the different reactions to this from the operators of small and medium-sized farms as opposed to the reaction from farmers with larger operations. The farmers who sold their farms in 1981 with the understanding that they would be able to use the income averaging annuity program to spread their tax burden are especially affected by this budget. These people were caught on November 12. I have received phone calls from several who have been caught in the unhealthy position of having sold their land under an agreement of sale in order to spread the income over the next four or five years. As of budget date, they will have to consider all of the sale as income this year, even though they will not receive the income until five years down the road. They will have to pay tax on that income.

Most of those who called face the prospect of having to borrow money to pay the tax. They will have no money left to purchase a house or even to pay rent on one so that they will have a place to live in their retirement years. This is simply because of the manner in which this program has been implemented.

Another change in the income tax as it affects farmers is in the capital gains reserve. As of November 12, after the budget, sellers of land will no longer be able to average the payment of income tax on capital gains when the purchaser makes payment to the vendor over a number of years. I discussed some of the problems by using the example of the man who had sold his land and will receive payments over five years who finds himself in the unenviable position of having no money to pay his tax and no money for the next year and a half of his retirement.

This kind of financing will probably be wiped out. About 10 per cent of the sales that now take place are financed on vendor-purchase agreements. That may not sound like much, but I remind hon. members the Farm Credit Corporation finances less than 10 per cent of the land transactions that take place in this country. Therefore, we are talking about a program that will affect more land transactions than the Farm Credit Corporation and will affect them very negatively.

The budget tends to create a regressive tax system in relation to capital gains rollovers when parents transfer farmland to children. The Minister of Agricuture takes great joy in pointing out that the rollover provision is still there, and it is. However, the effect will be different, depending on the income and the size of the farming operation that is being rolled over.

Two or three accountants have brought examples which indicate that the small or medium-sized farmer, because he has no other source of income to retire with, is forced to sell his small holding at full or nearly full market value. This means he will be paying capital gains tax on that property. It also means that his sons, daughters or grandchildren will have to pay full or nearly full market value for that property. At today's interest rates, it creates a very difficult situation.

The larger operation, because of being able to generate more cash flow and higher net incomes, finds it possible to turn over some, if not all, of the land at the V-day value. On the larger operations we can see where the rollover will apply, and no capital gains tax collected. The next generation will not be forced to pay as high a price for the total assets for which they will be working.

The net result shoult not be too surprising because it is a consistent theme of this budget. The net result is a regressive tax, a tax that falls most heavily on the lower-income people, those with less assets than the amount of tax that falls on those with more assets and higher incomes.

Other changes to the tax laws as they affect farmers in this budget have to do with the Small Business Bond and Small Business Development Bond. The Small Business Development Bonds have been extended. We have a new instrument, the small business bond, which is now available for unincorporated farms, small businesses, fishermen, and will be available as of November 12. The budget states it is available for farms or businesses in financial difficulty. The program may be used after December 31 until the end of 1982. That is what the budget states.

A week ago last Friday I asked the Minister of Agriculture when the regulations and description as to who would be eligible for these bonds would be published. He told me they would be available next week. A week has passed. To date the banks do not have any guidelines as to who is eligible for the small business bond and who is not. Farmers in dire straits have been contacting their bankers. Some will have their land placed in receivership and in the hands of the sheriff before the end of this month, and to date there is still no action on this aspect of the budget. We have the small business bond promised in the budget, but no action. As long as there is no description of who is eligible and who is not, the proposal and offer are of no use to anyone.

The last change in the budget to affect farmers is the changes to the capital cost allowance. To give some idea of the effect, I will run through a brief description of a possible purchase.

Suppose a farmer purchases a $80,000 used tractor and receives $50,000 for his trade-in. The difference he must pay is $30,000. Prior to the budget, he would have shown an acquisition of $80,000 and a disposal of $50,000 in his Class 10 assets on his capital cost schedules, which depreciates at 30 per cent. In other words, from this transaction he would gain $9,000 of capital cost allowance, 30 per cent of $30,000.

After the budget, he would show an acquisition of $80,000. However, he can only depreciate the asset at the new rate of 15 per cent, which would be equivalent to $12,000. In addition, he would have to deduct his trade-in at 30 per cent of $50,000, which equals $15,000. Therefore, he has lost the difference between $15,000 and $12,000, or $3,000 of capital cost allowance because of the new budget.

The loss is even worse than that. Prior to the budget he could show an increase of $9,000. Now he has to show an additional $3,000. His loss in relation to the capital cost allowance schedule is $12,000. Assuming a 35 per cent tax bracket, it is costing the farmer $4,200 in tax to trade one tractor in for another.

I do not think there is very much incentive for a farmer to trade in his equipment. There is no incentive to take the equipment off the lots of dealers. Dealer inventories are increasing at a rapid rate. At today's interest rates, this will have a very negative effect on those small businessmen supplying farm equipment.

Prior to the budget we were seeing a tremendous number of lay-offs in the farm equipment field. Factories are closing and workers are being laid off right across the country. International Harvester, one of the largest farm equipment manufacturers, now faces the prospect of going into receivership. Massey-Ferguson faced the same problem last year. White

Farm Equipment was refinanced, went bankrupt and was revitalized over the past year. This aspect of the budget will worsen the prospects for the farm equipment industry and employment in that industry. I think that when one looks at the situation in agriculture, had the minister been able to convince the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of the true state of affairs in agriculture, I am sure it would not have received such short shrift in the budget. There must be some understanding on the government side that there is a lot of money in agriculture or that there is some ability to pay higher taxes, because the government certainly did levy higher taxes on the farm sector. I think this is a misconception. I would refer government members to a very small booklet entitled "Agricultural Facts". It does not take long to read. It has all the data laid out in very simple terms. In that booklet it shows that net farm incomes in Canada in 1973 were $3.3 billion. It was the same in 1980.

Over the same period of time, output in agriculture increased two and a half times, and yet incomes remained virtually the same. If one converts the income in 1980 to 1973 dollars, the net income has decreased almost by half. It is $1.74 billion instead of $3.3 billion. Prospects for 1981 are supposed to be slightly better. They are expecting that it may hit $4 billion this year, an increase of about 12 or 15 per cent. The outlook for 1982 is that it will decrease to $3.4 billion.

While net incomes in agriculture have deteriorated, if one takes into consideration the inflationary effects, productivity has still increased. Even using 1973 dollars, productivity has increased. Agriculture is one of the few sectors of this economy that is more than pulling its weight in terms of productivity versus income received. The thanks they get for it are extra taxes. I do not think that is acceptable in terms of fighting inflation; it is not acceptable in terms of equity of taxation. It makes absolutely no sense to me, Mr. Speaker.

When we look at the effects of the budget on agriculture, we have to ask ourselves why the Minister of Finance has introduced this kind of budget. He has told us that he is trying to fight inflation. How is he fighting inflation? By reducing government deficits, he says. He is hoping to increase taxes and decrease spending, thereby reducing the deficit. The minister's economic theory is that because he is doing these things, inflation will drop. I think that is an invalid theory.

I should like to spend a few moments now reviewing some of the reasons for reaching this conclusion. I will simply go back to the historic statistics and try to find some rationale for that kind of theory. If the theory has any legitimacy, it should show up in the statistics over the past.

When we go back to the early 1930s, we see the 1930 to 1935 federal budgets had six straight deficits, and not just little deficits but deficits equivalent to $25 billion in today's dollars. What happened to the price level during this time when government spending was in a whirlwind state? Price levels dropped by 26 per cent over that six-year period. They dropped, while government deficits were at an all-time high.

Right after that period during the Second World War, government budget deficits were equivalent to $75 billion in today's dollars. The price level rose about one per cent a year. It is not true that the elimination of budget deficits ends inflation. There was no deficit in 1973. The federal government had a surplus. Along with the surplus budget, in 1973 there also happened to have been the highest rate of inflation we have had for the past 20 years. In 1974 we followed it with an even larger surplus; and the inflation rate rose even higher. I do not see any correlation between budgets and inflation, deficits and inflation.

The other reason for the kind of fiscal policy that this government is embarking upon is to get rid of the burden of the national debt. Today it stands at roughly $100 billion. This year the federal government will have to pay about $15 billion in interest on that debt. Approximately one fifth of the debt is held by the Bank of Canada, which is wholly government-owned and, each year, hands over to the government all the money that it takes at the end of the year, over and above that amount. Of the remaining $80 billion in bonds, $70 billion is held by Canadians. It remains in the country. The government paid them $11 billion, but it is spent within the country.

I maintain that as long as the money is used to produce productive assets, it is an asset to the economy and not a liability. Spending is considered that way even by the economists to my right. As long as it is in the private sector, then in economic theory I see no reason that it should make any difference if it is spent in the public sector, so long as it is spent on productive assets.

In the end, when one finishes doing the arithmetic, one is left with about $9 billion of the $100 billion, $8 billion of which Canadian bondholders had left after tax and was not lost to Canada; and they are fellow Canadians. The real burden of the debt to Canada was about $1 billion which is the approximate cost of maintaining the $8 to $10 billion that is held by foreigners.

That money, which had to be raised from the people of Canada and paid out, went to foreigners. The real burden of that so-called burdensome debt to the country is the amount that we paid to foreigners. We need an economic policy that attempts to gain more control of our economy. We must concentrate more in the area of ordinary Canadians to overcome any so-called burden, thus improving the economy to the point that it would begin to fight inflation with a will.

In closing, I repeat that I see the agricultural sector as perhaps the only sector that is producing more than it takes from the economy. Because it has been doing that, it has had to suffer low net incomes, family incomes that are as low as $8,000 to $12,000 during the period of time when factory workers are earning $12,000 to $15,000. It has had to borrow money in order to expand its productive plants. Because it has had to do this, the amount of money that is owed by farm people has increased. Because of that, when we get into a period of time such as at present when interest rates are extremely high, it is especially burdensome to the agricultural sector.

This budget did not attack the problem of high interest rates in any real and meaningful way. It provided for a small panacea in the form of the small business bond. Those small business bonds have not been activated in any real sense of the word. Until that happens, there will be absolutely no help for the Canadian agricultural sector. It has been a totally negative kind of budget, a regressive budget and one which I think we should vote against. The minister should start over and discuss with the agricultural people of Canada the kind of things that are required in order for them to stay in business. The minister should discuss with the home owners of this country the kind of programs they need to maintain their homes. The minister should discuss with the unemployed the kinds of programs they need in order to get them working again. It is not time to cut back nor to reduce spending. It is time to create employment to get this economy working at close to full capacity again, instead of at a 60 to 80 per cent capacity.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words in this budget debate and, because of allocation of time, I should like first to inform my colleagues of the economic conditions which now prevail in the Sherbrooke area. In the last few years, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion opened a regional office in Sherbrooke where business people of the area could apply for assistance given to small and middle-sized businesses in the queen city of the Eastern Townships. For our area, the opening of this office was a significant step because in the past we had to send all our applications to Montreal. I have indicated to this House, more than once, that we have several institutions of higher learning in our area, namely, Sherbrooke University, Bishop University, the Collège Champlain, the Sherbrooke College and several other specialized schools and every year too large a number of our young people must leave the Eastern Townships area to go to Montreal or to other places in Quebec as well as outside Quebec, to find work.

This means that we educate them but they go and find jobs somewhere else. This is a very sad situation which should be corrected at once and which should be given the highest priority. This is a collective responsibility which involves the federal government, the provincial government, municipalities, intermediary bodies, the business community and all the people of the Estrie area. We can no longer tolerate this brain drain. The greatest wealth of our area are its people and among them the most skilled are leaving. These young people are a significant asset for our development but because of our industrial structure, because of the lack of investments, and because also of the lukewarm interest shown by governments, including the federal government, it is with sadness that we see a large number of our young people going to other places in Quebec and in Canada. Several steps were taken the last year, and periodically various people take counsel together with regard to the ways and means of co-ordinating the efforts of groups and individuals towards the economic development of Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships.

About a month ago, a study commissioned by the City of Sherbrooke to a Montreal firm on the Sherbrooke economy, showed that its economic conditions, despite obvious shortcomings, had still a significant potential. This new report considers several aspects of the economic conditions of our area and puts forward suggestions to correct the present situation. Following a rather accurate analysis of the economy of the area, of its healthy and not-so-healthy sectors, in the last chapters of the report possible action and an over-all strategy are suggested for the forthcoming years. I sincerely hope that this report will be considered and that as soon as possible we shall come up with a policy that will make it possible to speed up the economic development of that area. For the past decade, studies about Sherbrooke have been undertaken by a variety of people: provincial governments, federal government, university regional agencies and firms of all kinds. I humbly suggest that it is about time—and according to the last report the willingness and the dynamics are there—to launch as of now the economic renewal of the area.

Several opportunities are open to us and personally I think that our approach should be based on a co-ordination of efforts at all levels of government. I sincerely believe that we have available to us several tools which should allow us to make significant progress in the economic development of Sherbrooke. I am thinking in particular of the fact that Sherbrooke University was designated by the federal government as a first-rate centre in electronics. The scientists at Sherbrooke University in electronics have been among the pioneers in this field and this honour with the grants connected to it, should make it possible for the industry of the area to take advantage of the knowledge and the opportunities for development in that leading industry. But there again we will have to make sure that what is done in our area will be of assistance to the small and middle-sized businesses. The University is willing to dispense its knowledge to all those who would like to take advantage of it, and I think that if we could further increase an already well established co-operation between the University and the local economic agents, this could have an extremely positive impact on our area.

It is in the best interests of the economy-oriented organizations in our area to co-ordinate their efforts. Permanent co-ordination and co-operation should be arranged between the various economic components in the Sherbrooke area. We certainly are not short of economic agencies and organizations to do considerable work. What we need is a co-ordination of our efforts.

Most of our regional economy-oriented organizations have developed plans of action and intervention for the area. We must absolutely make sure that there is a follow-up to our interventions and we must always be careful that what has been gained is thriving and stable. Moreover, not only the new industries that wish to settle in our area but our existing businesses must maintain frequent and numerous contacts so that businessmen, governments at all levels, intermediate bodies, the industrial commission and all organizations involved in economic promotion in our area will work together.

It is impossible during this debate to deal with all the aspects of the question and all the important opportunities available in our area. I will come back to that later. However, for the time being, let me remind you that we have a reasonably progressive service sector, some rather important organizations and the labour force we need to undertake the economic renewal of the area. The authors of the report which I quoted a while ago stated the following in the first paragraph of their document:

Economic growth is for the most part based on the confidence of the business community in its future. Several leaders should not hesitate to assert themselves and to exercise their leadership. The basis of Sherbrooke's economy——in spite of some deficiencies however—

—is healthy, in spite of difficult economic conditions. Sherbrooke's economy has at present various assets which help generate significant advantages. The people of Sherbrooke only have to take the opportunities. However important the strategy is, it remains that the determination and confidence of the business community to attain the economic future which is within the reach of their ambitions and their opportunities are also essential.

I shall simply add that I intend to devote all my energy to the development of the area. I urge all parties concerned to support the efforts of all those men and women who strive to improve the current economic situation. On the federal government level, I intend to make use of all available opportunities and openings to help our region, so that we may, to the extent of our ability, efforts and possibilities, bring to Sherbrooke the continuing economic development it has been seeking for such a long time.

On June 19 last, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) announced the new textile and clothing policy for Canada. The ministers indicated that the government of Canada had started negotiations aimed at extending the restrictive agreements with our suppliers. This textile policy for Canada, I must point out, was favourably received at the time by both industry and workers. Six months after this new policy was announced, we can say that all in all, it has helped the industry significantly, but that some areas, especially the glove industry, have been affected, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will have to look into this particular problem. Generally speaking, we can say that the textile industry now is one segment of our economy that is doing fairly well. I should like however, to return to that announcement made last June which reads in part as follows:

The government intends to propose a readjustment program designed to ensure that the Canadian textile and clothing industry is viable and competitive and to revitalize the economy of communities that are most vulnerable to foreign competition.

The minister announced, and I quote:

A new program for which more than $250 million has been earmarked by the government over the next five years will be set up for the following purposes:

1—To create new jobs in the communities affected by industrial readjustment;

2—To make it possible for displaced workers to benefit from new job opportunities; and

3—To promote the modernization of viable businesses in the textile and clothing industry.

These $250 million—if I understood well the announcement made last June—will be spent essentially in Canadian communities with textile and clothing plants, therefore mostly in Quebec. Approximately a month ago, more specifically on October 26 last, the Prime Minister announced the creation of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, the terms of reference of which included, and I quote:

To promote the restructuration, regrouping and modernization of our textile and clothing industries, renew the economic basis of communities which depend largely on these industries and are therefore more likely to be adversely affected by the increasingly freer trade of these products, and to help the workers affected by these changes.

Mr. Speaker, this announcement is of tremendous importance for Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships. In spite of efforts made by the governments in the past few years to help diversify our industrial structure to a greater extent, we have not yet succeeded in the Eastern Townships in giving impetus to the industrial restructuring process, which is of the utmost importance for the future of our region. Recent statistics indicate that the Eastern Townships area is one of the least advanced in Quebec with respect to its industrial structure. The communiqué states that the creation of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board will work in close co-operation with the federal departments under the guidance of a special committee of ministers chaired by the Prime Minister so as to make sure that the industrial renewal, inasmuch as it affects the economy of the regions, the community groups and the labour force, does indeed meet the social and economic needs involved.

One of the basic characteristics of this new strategy is the pooling of efforts from the private and public sectors with a view to increasing competition in the designated sectors, diversifying the economic base of the communities involved and ensuring that the workers will benefit from new job opportunities. Finally, it is stated in the communiqué that in the coming months it will submit to the special committee of ministers recommendations concerning the communities which should be the first to benefit from the special assistance program. The board will also remain in close contact with the provincial authorities as well as labour leaders, employers and the communities involved. Mr. Speaker, I want to say right now that at the earliest opportunity I intend to get in touch with the chairman of the board, in co-operation with local organizations. We want to make sure that the Eastern Townships and the Sherbrooke area will draw maximum benefits from the funds made available to the board. We intend to meet the members of that organization as soon as possible and, along with local organizations, I will not miss an opportunity of making recommendations to that committee. Mr. Speaker, a significant event took place in Sherbrooke last October. For the first time a subcommittee of the Canadian Parliament unanimously adopted a reference of the House of Commons to undertake a survey in Quebec within the DREE hearings to study on site the economic situation of those two regions, namely the Eastern Townships and the Gaspé peninsula. This first experiment in Quebec and the third in Canada has turned out to be a real success.

We cannot, for the time being, foretell what will happen, as the report will be tabled only in a few weeks' time, on the recommendations of the subcommittee which visited those two areas in Quebec. But we can, right now, state that all those who presented a paper before the members of the subcommittee unanimously expressed their satisfaction at the fact that a committee from the House of Commons had come to study and discuss economic problems at the grass root level. The reports which were presented in percé and Sherbrooke have shown that there was a widespread desire to see the Department of Regional Economic Expansion getting more deeply involved in the development of those areas whose economic growth is slow. While DREE's contribution to the economic development in Quebec was readily acknowledged, the desire was expressed that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is supposed to help the deprived areas, enlarge its terms of reference and be provided with financial means and additional powers so that it may provide faster, more direct and more efficient aid. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that those field trips last fall have demonstrated to us the importance of providing the representatives of the people with the opportunity to see in situ the impact of some of their policies. We were able to detect a few shortcomings in DREE's policies, but also some of its benefits. Now we have to improve the procedures, as many speakers have suggested, so that this department may become the real co-ordinator of federal interventions and help the economic situation of the less advanced areas in Canada.

I sincerely hope that the new legislation governing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which the minister says is supposed to be tabled early in 1982, will fulfil the wishes of the groups we met over the last two years, who would like DREE to redirect its economic action at the regional level. When the law is tabled I shall elaborate on that a little further but for the time being, Mr. Speaker, I only want to point out that DREE has proved a big help in the economic field in many regions of Canada, and must redirect its course so as to play a more efficient part as the foremost dynamic force in areas of slow economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, statistics recently published about the unemployment rate fail, in my humble opinion, to express the seriousness of the situation in my area. We are a town, and have often been described as such, of institutions. I sincerely hope that we will examine the plight of this area as soon as possible. The unemployment problem among young people is a responsibility of all levels of governments and of private industry as well. We should work together to suggest means to resolve this problem and help young workers.

Even though I have pointed out, on many occasions but especially over the last few years, the stunning number of jobless young people in our area, I ought to add that there are many mature workers who are out of work as well and I feel we should make a special effort to help them make a decent living. Unemployment is a social scourge that government should and must endeavour to eliminate, by working in co-operation with all persons concerned. No one can look with equanimity at the waste of talent and intelligence caused by this unused potential. If the government does not respond to my cries of alarm, at least it should not be insensitive to the distress of the many unemployed workers.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a good way to co-ordinate the economic policies that I mentioned earlier, would be to hold an economic conference on the area in question. At the first stage, we could hold a meeting in Sherbrooke, and at the second stage extend it to the whole region and in this manner we could exercise a greater pressure on the different levels of governments.

Let us first agree on the priorities, the directions at the Sherbrooke level, let us examine the specifics of action. When this is done, we can invite the greater area of the Eastern Townships to join us in a common development effort, because the economic development of the Sherbrooke area is very closely linked to that of the Eastern Townships, and vice versa. That economic summit, in addition to enabling us to see what the situation is and determine the directions to follow, will also enable us to establish the major priorities for the area over the next few years. I submit that this is essential. In the last few years, we had economic summits in our area on the textile, footwear and furniture industries, therefore an economic summit would enable us to know the state of all industries in Sherbrooke and give us the opportunity to decide on the direction we want to follow for our area.

On the economic level—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member.

[English]

I am sorry. I did think that perhaps the hon. member would like to complete his remarks, but in accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been made and seconded.

Is the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would obtain unanimous consent if he only had a minute or two to go, and if I could then call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I still have seven or eight minutes at my disposal, but I would prefer to resume tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

McDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION—QUERY RESPECTING REPORT ABRIDGEMENTS.—(B) PREPARATION OF INDEX TO REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on November 25, at page 13240 in Hansard, I put two questions to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) relating to the documents and the report of the McDonald Commission. The first of these was to seek his assurance that those deletions, which we all understand were made in the report, are in safekeeping and will be made available to the public in due course; second, that because of the complexity and the volume of the report, some effort be made to prepare an index to the three documents. What I therefore seek is an assurance that the abridgements will be preserved and made available to the public in due course; second, we would like an index.

My worries are of three kinds. The first concerns these deletions. I quite understand the qualms of the commissioners when they say that they feel it is desirable and in the public interest to withhold some of the report, particularly if there is a risk of imperilling the security of Canada. They also consider that the identity of individuals and organizations should be safeguarded, particularly as they might be liable to prosecution in the course of time. In the report, they did not wish to prejudice the process. That is quite understandable.

What I find to be a little lacking in assurance, giving me cause to worry, is that this particular government, which has a record of having lost or mislaid or deliberately allowing certain documents to be destroyed which now ought to be in the public domain, might cause these particular chapters of the McDonald commission report to disappear as well.

I think, for example, of the loss of the Mackenzie King diary, one of the important Mackenzie King diaries related to the Gouzenko papers. That document has disappeared. I quite recognize that it did not disappear at the archives. However, somehow or other, it was not properly safeguarded until the executors had a chance to look at it, and it has now disappeared. I am sure it is a valuable document because it specifically dealt with the Gouzenko matter.

The second problem involving my mistrust of the government in these matters arises from the fact that after the usual 30 years of preventing the public scrutiny of documents related to the Taschereau-Kellogg report on the Gouzenko matter, we learned that an extra ten years would be added for reasons which were never clear. Subsequently we learned that another solicitor general of another government tried to get access to those documents to see whether they ought to be made public, but he was denied access to them.

The next stage in that particular operation was that the Liberal government was returned to office and ordered, under some pressure I should add, those documents to be re-examined to see whether they could be released. Now they are released. But we have no certainty that in the interim some of them have not disappeared. I do not want the McDonald commission documents to disappear.

The third misgiving I have is the mystery surrounding the Featherbed files and where they went. Nobody seems to be able to say where they went. If they can disappear, what about documents relating to the McDonald commission?

Fourth, there was the deliberate destruction of the Checkmate files, which is reported upon in the McDonald report. Those four reasons give me ample cause to have misgivings about the lost documents.

All these matters, together with the refusal of cabinet to accept final responsibility for RCMP actions, as mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) give me concern. In a 1977 press conference, the Prime Minister stated:

> It is a matter of stating as a principle that the particular minister of the day should not have a right to know what the police are doing constantly in their investigative practices, what they are looking at, and what they are looking for, and the way in which they are doing it.

That, I suggest, is not a proper expression of ministerial responsibility and gives me concern about the possible loss of these documents.

On those grounds, I think I am amply justified in seeking the assurance of the government that these documents are in safekeeping and that they will, in due course, be made available to the public.

The other matter of the index arises mainly from the complexity of this report. It is a long report and contains thousands of pages. It is not easy to follow one's way through it. An index would be most helpful. I would appreciate getting from the government some sort of an assurance that the index that has been prepared by the commission itself, which I believe was put on a computer tape, will be available in due course. I hope not too far down the road that it will be available to the general public so that we will all be able to find our way through this very complicated report. I do hope I will get those two assurances, although I doubt it.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for raising this issue tonight. I am pleased to respond on behalf of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). As the hon. member will understand, I will resist the temptation to respond to the nonsense about papers which have disappeared—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not nonsense, it is true.

Mr. Simmons: —and to his mistrust of the government, which does not come exactly as a startlingly new revelation.

However, the hon. member does raise a couple of important points that need response. First, with respect to abridgments in the report. The report of the commission was, as the House knows, published on August 25, 1981. The report dealt with matters of national security, and because it was obviously not in the public interest to disclose those matters that could adversely affect national security, the report was edited, with the concurrence of the commissioners.

As a result of that editing process, less than 3 per cent of the report was deleted on the grounds of not disclosing the identity of targets, endangering sources, not disclosing the precise means of implementing intrusive and other clandestine operating methods and techniques, and not disclosing information relating to allied or other friendly security-intelligence agencies.

An hon. Member: We know all that.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member want the response? I shall give it in my fashion, not his. If he has a little patience, he may learn something.

There was the assurance that nothing was deleted which reported conduct of any individual which was criticized by the commission.

In addition, with regard to the third report, there has been agreement with the commission to delay publication of those chapters of Part IV of the report that recommend referrals of particular matters to the attorneys general and to the commissioner for possible disciplinary action. These chapters, together with related material identified by the commissioners, have been conveyed to the attorneys general for their consideration.

The hon. member has asked where the deletions have been made, but the House will understand that that sort of information cannot be disclosed lest that disclosure would reveal clues to the precise matters which have been expurgated. It is not, therefore, possible to go beyond stating the grounds on which the deletions were made. As for the report as presented to the governor in council, it has been filed with the Privy Council office where it is under the control and in the care of the custodian of the documents and records of the commission, the Clerk of the Privy Council and secretary to the cabinet.

With regard to the editing done to the report, it should be recalled that the government made as few deletions as was consistent with our security needs, that those made had the full support of the commissioners, and that the publication of the report constitutes an unprecedented public disclosure of our security affairs.

The second matter raised by the hon. member in his questions was access to an index to the report. Upon inquiry, I have ascertained that no computer records or index of the report was made by the commission. I can also inform the House that the government is not considering the preparation of an index to these volumes.

The report is the result of the extensive work conducted by the commission, not the government. I would remind the hon. member that this report has been publicly available for more than three months, giving ample time for him to have read it. It should be noted that the report contains a detailed and lengthy table of contents and has been cross-referenced. For this reason, the government sees no reason to go to the expense of preparing the index that has been proposed by the hon. member.

AGRICULTURE—ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN GRAINS RESEARCH FOUNDATION.—(B) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on October 21 last I posed a question, as recorded at page 12023 of Hansard, to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to determine whether or not he supported the presentation of a group of western farm organizations which set up the Western Grains Research Foundation. Their presentation requested that the $9 million presently in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund be paid to their foundation and that a voluntary levy of one tenth of 1 per cent on grain sales also be part of their funding.

The minister indicated he had not met with the foundation, but they had met with his officials and he had not, at the time I asked the question, had an opportunity to see the report from his officials.

In response to my supplementary question, recorded again at page 12023 of Hansard, he seemed to try to cast a doubt on the fact that the $9 million in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund in fact belonged to the producers. He said, "He knows that that money belongs to both the government—", and after interruption he continued by saying, "—was contributed to by the producers". If one refers back to the debate on February 3, 1981, at page 6845, one will see that the minister referred to the fund in the following terms:

Having this money work for prairie farmers through research is the ideal situation because, after all, it is the farmers' money.

The debate in question on that date was on second reading of a private member's bill, Bill C-245, proposed by myself, to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and to set up a trust consisting of four trustees, three of whom would be producers listed in permit books as actual producers, one from each of the three prairie provinces, and as the fourth a man expert in the field of research and development in cereal and oilseeds, who would be the chairman of the trust. The trustees would hold the $9 million presently in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund in trust and use the interest earned on the money for research and development in cereal and oil seeds suitable for production in the Canadian Wheat Board area.

I raised the point in the debate that some $9,066,972 has been standing to the credit of the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund since 1972 and that the government has been using that money without payment of interest since that time. It is farmers' money; and if interest had been paid since the inception of the fund, the fund itself would have doubled or tripled in size by this time. At rates that have prevailed for the past year, the fund would have been earning between $3,500 and $4,000 per day. As each day goes by, this interest is lost to research in the Canadian Wheat Board area.

The minister was not prepared to approve my bill in February of 1981, arguing that his department was in the process of putting the final touches to his own bill which he would be presenting to Parliament. Almost a year has gone by, Mr. Speaker, and his bill has not yet seen the light of day.

He did agree during the debate on February, 1981, to send the subject matter of my bill to committee for a study, but such a study has never taken place. In the meantime, the Grains Research Foundation has been set up by a group of western farm organizations—I should say the group of western farm organizations, including all the western farm organizations with one exception—and the aims and objects of the trust that they propose to set up is the same as the aims and objects which I set forth in my Bill C-245. I have indicated to the foundation that they have my complete and full support.

I believe it is incumbent upon the Minister of Agriculture to indicate his reaction to the Western Grains Research Foundation proposal, and whether or not he is prepared to introduce legislation transferring the $9 million to that foundation. I caution him that every day of delay on his part means between $3,500 and $4,000 lost to western grain research, and it is he who must assume full responsibility and answer to the western grain producers.

I know his answer has been that the money is in a non-interest bearing fund, but I think it is an absolute disgrace that producers' money has sat in an account since 1972, been used by the government and has not drawn one cent of interest.

If the minister is indicating that he plans on bringing in a bill of his own, I would suggest that he do so without further delay. I would like to tell him quite frankly, however, that if his bill is such that he or his department retains control of the fund and it does not provide for control of the fund by the producers of western Canada, he will certainly not gain the approval of members on this side of the House.

In closing, I want to make it quite clear that it was not my intention, and it is not the intention of the Western Grains Research Foundation when they submitted their proposal, to downgrade or detract from the great work that the research branch of the Department of Agriculture has carried out. They are doing excellent work, but they are limited in their funds and they are doing research in areas that would not ordinarily be the priority of producers who had their own ideas on what should be done. This foundation would not detract from the department, but would give the producer an opportunity to decide what particular type of research he wants. There is a shortage of researchers, I would like to point out. In talking to the research foundation members, I found out that perhaps it might be part of their plan to fund some senior students who would like to further their education in order to become researchers. I understand that university students from Canada who are taking their degree do not wish to further their education because it is not worth it. It is only people from abroad who take their Master's degree or do their doctorate in research.

It is my hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Ostiguy) in responding to my remarks tonight will at least give us some indication of what the minister plans to do with respect to the $9 million, and I would hope that he appreciates the fact that there is a great deal of urgency because of the interest lost on this money on a daily basis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2220)

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention the timeliness of the hon. member's question considering that the Conference on Agricultural Outlooks for the Eighties opened this morning. As the hon. member most appropriately remarked, it was precisely on October 21, 1981, the very day that he asked the Minister a question on this issue, that the Federation of Agriculture and the Western Grain foundation submitted to the officials of the Department of Agriculture a proposal providing for a transfer of funds, the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund in order to promote research.

Since then the Minister has been and continues to be in close contact with the President of the Treasury Board, and this very day he was meeting with the representatives of both organizations, that is Mr. Hamilton of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and Mr. Strath of the Western Grain Research Foundation, to consider whatever changes Agriculture Canada or the Treasury Board might have to make in order to make this $9 million fund provide better support for research.

The hon. member is no doubt aware that agricultural research is dealt with directly in the document tabled by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) entitled "The Agri-food Strategy for the Eighties". Agriculture Canada does realize that research is a must and we agree with the hon. member that part of those funds could be transferred to the producers. We hope that following the meeting the Minister is having today and tomorrow with the spokesmen for both organizations, he will be able to give us an answer before the end of the year. I do not have a definite answer at this moment. However during these meetings table hold in the next two or three days here in Ottawa as I just said, with the representatives of both organizations, and as we know the federal-provincial conference of ministers of agriculture will also be held here on Wednesday—the minister will have ample opportunity to discuss this issue with all parties concerned. Let us not forget that Agriculture Canada has invested over $200 million in agricultural research. We are all aware of the fact that Canadian agriculture must develop and improve its productivity, as the various speakers were saying this morning in presenting their papers at the meeting of the federal conference on agriculture for the eighties, and also that its development is directly related to that of research.

AGRICULTURE—REFINANCING OF CO-OPERATIVE IMPLEMENTS OF WINNIPEG.—(B) AMOUNT OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my intervention tonight is with regard to a problem of Co-op Implements of Winnipeg, a farm co-operative which has been producing implements in the west for a number of years. Since its organization in Canada in 1958, Co-op Implements have made dramatic progress. Gross sales for the fiscal year ending October 31 this year have increased 84 per cent, from $57 million in 1978 to $105 million in 1981. The work force of Co-op Implements has increased 27 per cent in this timeframe, from 773 in October 1978 to 982 on October 31, 1981. Expenditures on research and development by Co-op Implements have increased 464 per cent in that period, from $285,000 in 1978 to $1.6 million in 1981, 1.5 per cent of its sales, which is a very good record for any industry. Co-op Implements have turned around from $3.8 million loss in 1978 to $1.6 million profit in 1979. Despite the soaring interest costs, heavy investments in research and development and a million dollar employee training program in 1980, losses were kept below $1 million. The final results for 1981 are not yet available, but it would seem they will break even. Except for one factor, this year they would have made a profit.

The interest bill of Co-op Implements for 1981 was $105 million. They have an interest bill of approximately $35,000 a day. It is another case of interest rates affecting the viability of an industry.

The key line of this report on Co-op Implements is probably this last line which says that profits would have been assured in 1981 had the supposed equity package been in place. Mr. Speaker, my intervention is exactly on that basis.

The proposed package was a $35.5 million package. Nine and a half million dollars was to be raised by the organizations in the co-ops in western Canada. Five million dollars was to be raised by the membership of Co-Op Implements, by farmers such as myself. Seven million dollars was to be raised by the provinces. The fourth group to contribute to this package was $14 million by the federal government.

On December 4, 1981, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made the following statement in a press release:

Financial Aid to Co-op Implements

—Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan today announced that cabinet has proposed a total of $14 million in federal funding to assist Co-operative Implements of Winnipeg.

That was a very misleading statement. If one were to turn to the second last paragraph of the same press release, one would find that it states that:

The outstanding portion of this contribution, about $7.5 million, will be forgiven as part of the total assistance to the company.

The request was for $14 million. The suggestion by the federal government is for $6.5 million. The $7.5 million majority of the federal contribution is a loan, a write-off. The governments of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta have asked for a $14 million contribution in cash from the federal government. This is somewhat similar to the contribution which was asked for previously by the Government of Ontario when Chrysler Canada Ltd. was in trouble.

The proposal of the Minister of Agriculture is not new to the governments of the prairies, and it was not acceptable when it was known. It will not become acceptable because it has been made public.

Let us look at some comparisons. During the last couple of weeks, $6.5 million in grants was given to a hotel complex in Windsor which will be operated by the Hilton Corporation. Thirty million dollars in grants was given to what we called in the west the Deutz company, which produces diesel tractors in the east. This $30 million was contributed to these companies so as to give them a basis for operation; but instead, a company in the west, which is Canadian owned and Canadian operated with 1,000 employees, was offered a paltry $6.5 million, compared to the $14 million that it requested. I want to know from the minister or his parliamentary secretary right now exactly what we can expect from the federal government in this situation. How much can we expect, and when can we expect it?

● (2230)

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) concerning Co-operative Implements of Winnipeg, I must say that the figures he has quoted are almost accurate, except that he stated that the government contributed to Massey-Ferguson, to Chrysler and to White Implement. I would like to remind the hon. member that these companies received a loan guarantee while Co-operative Implements of Winnipeg received grants on various occasions, of which the first was an interest-free grant of $7 million, I believe, which, with $3 million in interest, would represent, according to my calculation about $10 million in direct assistance.

We recognize the magnificent contribution of this company in western Canada. It manufactures fine equipment, but we still have to look at its operations, and this is why it will perhaps be impossible to go any further this evening, as the minister and the department are now considering, along with the provinces, the various means available to save or to assist financially Co-operative Implements of Winnipeg. The hon. member himself mentioned the high interest rates, but it still remains that various farm machinery manufacturers are going through a rather difficult period. Of course, the American and European markets are not as sound as they were. Equipment costs, wages, and everything else have increased in the last few years, and it seems that farmers are thinking twice about investing heavily in farm machinery. As I said earlier, I am sorry that I am not able to provide more information, but we are aware of the situation described by the hon. member for Prince Albert.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR TRAINING FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. To meet the shortage of skilled workers in Canada, and in view of the fact that at present most training costs for an apprentice fall on the training company and many firms do not have apprenticeship or on-the-job training programs because they are too costly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the federal government institute a fairer plan for paying for facilities, instructors and equipment, and since the early stage of apprenticeship is a kind of post-secondary education and is vital to the economy, that the federal government pay a greater share of this training.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the criteria set out to determine eligibility for the herd maintenance assistance program were unfair, inconsistent and discriminatory toward northeastern Alberta producers. Recommendations concerning this injustice from the Herd Maintenance Review Board fell on deaf ministerial ears. In addition to being denied herd assistance, farmers in northeastern Alberta suffered a disastrous 1980-81 winter followed by an unusually dry summer. In view of these facts, and given that the 1981 Liberal budget offers virtually no assistance to Canadian farmers struggling to survive against high interest rates and poor returns, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House direct the Ministers of Finance, Agriculture and Regional Economic Expansion to extend the herd maintenance assistance program or to create a new, meaningful and fair program which will allow producers in this country to maintain their herds.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

PROPOSED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, thousands of Canadians have strongly voiced their concerns about the 30-cent stamp. It will be devastating to charitable organizations, little theatre groups, mail order businesses, senior citizens, Sports Canada, small businesses, municipalities, and in fact in some way to all Canadians. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation accept the advice given him by so many and suggest to his cabinet colleagues that a more realistic rate be struck for first-class mail, or, since he appears so pleased with the way the Post Office Act was so well handled in committee and in this place, that he bring the issue of postal rates to the floor of the House in order to be debated by the elected representatives of the people it affects.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FARM WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In contrast to other workers like plumbers and carpenters, Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Act denies farm workers all unemployment insurance credit for the days worked unless they work 25 days for the same employer. Thus, over 100,000 farm workers among Canada's poorest paid workers who are not normally covered by minimum wage legislation, health and safety protection, or workers' compensation benefits, are victims of unemployment insurance discrimination which can force these workers into the arms of labour contractors who can, by moving workers from job to job, employ farm workers for the season for a fee of sometimes up to 40 per cent of their already low wages. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen):

That Section 16 of the Unemployment Insurance Act be abolished since it discriminates against a racial minority who do at least half the farm work in the Fraser Valley and because it has been described as a "Magna Carta for unscrupulous labour practices".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

DEMAND THAT AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER POSITIONS BE STAFFED WITH CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. At present the Canadian air traffic control system needs approximately 250 additional qualified controllers to meet today's traffic demands, and the Department of Transport proposes to hire fired United States air traffic controllers to fill these vacancies. In view of the fact that today we have more than one million people unemployed in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That all existing air traffic controller vacancies in this country be filled by qualified Canadian citizens.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESOLUTION CONCERNING BUDGET PASSED BY ONTARIO LIBERAL PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the Ontario wing of the Liberal Party of Canada recently passed resolutions concerning the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), one of which bluntly indicated that the budget, instead of encouraging risk-taking and job creation, actually increases taxes, does nothing to fight inflation, and actively discourages job creation. In light of this agreement with Tory objections to the budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff):

That this House congratulates the Ontario Liberal rank and file for their miraculous conversion, and urges them to spread the good Tory word to their brothers and sisters across this land.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN VALUATION DATE GOVERNING TAXATION OF CAPITAL GAINS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, since the government has steadfastly refused to review capital gains provisions relief to farmers and small-business men and, instead, is using capital gains taxes to attack their retirement income, since the government income benefits most from inflation and graduated tax structure, and since the December 31, 1971, valuation day for property assessment is totally unrealistic when considering that property values have skyrocketed in inflationary rather than real terms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister of Finance change the valuation day for fixed value to December 31, 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, with the Canadian economy in complete disarray, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is in an "orderly advance backwards", and Canada burns. In order that history may repeat itself completely I move, on behalf of all Canadians, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That at the forthcoming Liberal Christmas party the Prime Minister be presented with a violin on which would be the logo "The country is folding as it should".

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST FOR LOWER INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas more than 2,600 businesses have shut down in Quebec alone during the past eleven months, thus putting more than 67,000 Quebecers out of work; whereas there are many small businesses in that province and high interest rates are making it very difficult for them to operate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House ask the government to reduce interest rates immediately so as to put a stop to these shutdowns and the resulting loss of jobs.

Madam Speaker: Does this motion have the unanimous consent of the House?

BANK OF CANADA

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN BANK RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Liberal government has repeatedly told Canadians that its high interest rate policy can be attributed to United States interest rates. Last Thursday the Bank of Canada dropped its rate only 1/100th of a percentage point, to 15.31 per cent, while in the U.S. the Federal Reserve Bank reduced its discount rate a full percentage point, from 13 per cent to 12 per cent. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this government be consistent in its interest rate policy and direct the Bank of Canada to drop its bank rate at least two percentage points to reduce the spread between Canadian and the United States interest rates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF PROVISION AFFECTING HOLDERS OF TRAVEL PASSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, workers in the airline industry and all public transportation sectors are distraught and astounded that the government would attack them personally by taxing travel passes which have long been considered a part of any package that forms an agreement between worker and employer. As the government intends to tax this benefit, as well as a good number of other items such as health and dental benefits, it can only, and rightly so, lead to higher wage demands by workers to compensate, which will be acutely inflationary. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That the Minister of Finance withdraw the entire provision.

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to stop his policy of complete indifference toward the people affected by lay-offs and unemployment and to provide the stimulus for direct job creation that areas like Cape Breton and his own constituency need so desperately.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR PLEBISCITE ON DISARMAMENT TO BE HELD BY MUNICIPALITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the decision by Ottawa City Council to hold a plebiscite on nuclear disarmament at the next municipal election, and in view of the fact that a growing number of Canadians and world leaders are deeply concerned over the prospects of a new arms race that will escalate the growth of nuclear weapons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House call on all of Canada's local governments to include a question on nuclear disarmament on ballots that will be used to elect municipal and regional governments in the coming year, and that the results of this plebiscite be tabulated and forwarded to Mr. A. R. Menzies, Canada's Ambassador for Disarmament.

AUDITOR GENERAL

RECOMMENDATION ON AUDITING OF CROWN CORPORATIONS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know that the report of the Auditor General is to be tabled today. It will come as no surprise to the President of the Treasury Board that in his report the Auditor General points out the need for legislation to provide for a comprehensive audit in all Crown corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada because Parliament needs the independent assurance that comprehensive audit would give. He would also know that the Public Accounts Committee, in its fourth report, dated February, 1981, recommended the same. Will the minister now tell the House when legislation of that type will be forthcoming?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra for his question. At this time I would not like to predict a specific date when legislation will be forthcoming. However, I would like to advise the hon. member that the views of the Public Accounts Committee, the views of the Auditor General, the views of senior officials, and the views of Crown corporations themselves will all be taken into account in developing policies with regard to this matter.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS HOLD CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, the minister has not indicated whether or not he is in favour of such a policy. Since the traditional financial audit cannot tell the directors or Parliament whether management practices have been consistent with the objectives approved by Parliament for Crown corporations, I want to ask the minister if he will be sure to read paragraphs 1.18 to 1.24 in the Auditor General's report, which I hope will convince him, and will he then consult with his colleague, the President of the Privy Council, to get this legislation moving?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I have not yet had the opportunity to read the report of the Auditor General. I look forward to doing so, and hon. members can rest assured that I will read the paragraphs in question and will consult with my colleagues with respect to those recommendations.

ROLE OF AUDITOR GENERAL IN RELATION TO CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the minister was not with us this morning in the lock-up. However, the Auditor General said in his report that he, the Auditor General, as an officer of Parliament, should be the auditor of wholly-owned Crown corporations which are dependent on the public purse for assistance. Since at the moment only 58 of 460 or so Crown corporations are audited by the Auditor General, will the President of the Treasury Board also give the assurance to the House that this is in the sphere of his desires?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra knows full well how supportive I have been, and continue to be, of the concept of comprehensive audits when appropriate.

An hon. Member: What have you done about it?

Mr. Johnston: As I indicated in response to the two earlier questions, these recommendations coming from the Auditor General will be given most careful consideration by me.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In his 1981 report the Auditor General has stated that progress in the IMPAC program, that is, the improvement of management practices and accountability, is disappointingly slow. He has also found that there are significant weaknesses in central management control over human resources and that responsibilities for financial management are split among the Minister of Finance, the Receiver General, and the President of the Treasury Board. What immediate action is the President of the Treasury Board intending to take (a) to reduce the delays in the implementation of the IMPAC program, (b) to remove significant weaknesses in central management control over human resources, and (c), to provide the Comptroller General with appropriate statutory authority to enable him to provide central direction to departments and agencies?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is somewhat difficult for me to give a comprehensive answer inasmuch as the Auditor General's report has only been made available today, and I have not yet had the opportunity to read it. I can respond with respect to the progress on IMPAC. In fact IMPAC has been proceeding steadily across government. The Auditor General tells us that progress has been disappointingly slow. We would all like to see greater progress. However, the progress has been consistent, and I am satisfied that the IMPAC program is very much on track. I would urge all hon. members of the House to pay close attention to the results of IMPAC, which is probably one of the most important management initiatives ever undertaken by the federal government.

MOTIVATION OF PUBLIC SERVICE MANAGERS TO ACHIEVE VALUE FOR MONEY

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The 1981 report also states that the Auditor General criticizes the poor attitude of the Public Service managers toward achieving value for money in government programs. What specific measures does the President of the Treasury Board intend to adopt to ensure that Public Service managers are better motivated and held accountable more effectively?

• (1420)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): That, Madam Speaker, is a very important question. It is one that we are addressing and continue to address. I should tell the hon. member that one of the projects under way that has been taken in response to the recommendations of the Lambert commission and the D'Avignon special committee has been to develop a philosophy of management across government. An early draft of this philosophy was circulated to members. It was made available to a wide number of critics, and it has now been put in final form.

I would be happy to make a copy available to all members of the House as soon as it is available. However, I think all members will recognize that this philosophy of management embodies as one of its fundamental principles the necessity of achieving value for money—to help with this philosophy of management, to vastly improve the attitudinal problems which have been addressed by the Auditor General, which were addressed by his predecessor in the past, and which have been addressed by independent critics, such as Mr. Lambert and his fellow commissioners, and the D'Avignon committee.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE INTRODUCED TO END LAY-OFFS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce admitted that the growth rate in the Canadian economy will be 17 per cent lower than was forecast by the budget. Yesterday also saw Stats Canada releasing data confirming this same point. Finally, the more than 25,000 Canadians who have been laid off since the budget was brought down show too that the minister was wrong. Considering that today is the last day for the budget debate, is the minister prepared to announce that both his predictions and prescriptions in the budget were wrong, and is he prepared now to bring in measures to put an end to these lay-offs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot go along with the hon. member's preamble that both my prescriptions and projections were wrong. At times anyone of us can be wrong. There is no more likely place to be wrong than in the production of projections. It may be necessary to revise the projections of growth for the Canadian economy in 1981, but if that is necessary I will do it later.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST THAT EXCESS PROFITS TAX BE LEVIED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the question is not basically about predictions and projections, but as follows. Is the government prepared to change its course of action so that jobs will be provided? That is the issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the minister indicated yesterday that he would be prepared to establish a committee that will look into bank profits, I put the following question to him. We in this House know that bank profits are up to $1.8 billion this year. We think there should be an excess profits tax. In that context, is the minister now prepared to levy that excess profits tax. It would bring in $700 million in additional revenue and it would create 110,000 jobs that Canadians need, leaving the banks' profits at exactly the level they were last year.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is usually not the practice to announce tax changes in reply to questions on orders of the day. When I propose any tax changes, I will announce them in the usual way.

REQUEST THAT PROFIT LEVELS BE LOWERED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my final question is for the Minister of Finance. I preface it by saying that $700 million would be sufficient to create the 50,000 additional homes that we need in 1982. Therefore I put this proposition to him. Considering that construction of these homes would create in addition 14,500 manufacturing jobs, why is the minister reluctant now to tell the people of Canada that he would bring the profit levels of the banks down to reasonable levels and create the jobs and the homes that Canadians need?

● (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, you may have gathered the impression by now that I am quite skeptical about statistics that are daily used by the hon. member for Broadview. The statistics today are equivalent to those which he uses regularly saying that hundreds of thousands of Canadian families lost their homes owing to high interest rates. That is patently false. The hon. member is now producing another set of figures that probably, upon investigation, will prove to be equally false.

INTEREST CHARGEABLE ON NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise in my place to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that on page 12 of the Auditor General's report, in talking about the interest on the national debt, he says that paying that interest "accounts for more than one fifth of every tax dollar, and its load burdens all the people of Canada like a huge, high-interest mortgage." Some 20 cents out of every dollar, Madam Speaker, go to the bankers in Geneva, New York, and throughout Canada, so that bankers through investments receive more money than we spend on pensions, health care or post-secondary education. The solution is an issue of "political will", according to the Auditor General.

Can the finance minister give us an indication that he and his party are going to demonstrate the political will necessary to reduce the national debt and provide this country with more money for pensions, health care, and things of that kind?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, like the Auditor General I am concerned at the size of the national debt, and particularly the proportion of annual outlays that have to be spent to service the debt in the form of interest payments.

I disagree with the hon. member when he says that all these payments flow outside the country. I believe that is what I heard him say. There are many Canadians who hold Canada Savings Bonds and other debt instruments. A good deal of the debt is within the country—I would say almost all of it.

The hon. member is asking for an expression of political will. I believe I have demonstrated that political will in the budget when I indicated that next year my financial requirements will be reduced to $6.6 billion. If the hon. member will recall, earlier in the session, for the current year I introduced a bill asking for borrowing authority in the net amount of about $11 billion. The next bill will ask for $6.6 billion. I believe that is a rather substantial demonstration of my determination to reduce that proportion of total outlays assigned to the national debt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WASTE IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING—RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I think what the finance minister said was that the principal of the mortgage is going to get greater and the interest payments are going to get higher, and he is bragging about it.

My supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. The Auditor General on that same page indicates that one of the ways to reduce the deficit and reduce those interest payments is to reduce waste in government spending, and he says the key to that is "dedicated support of their ministers", that is, dedicated support to the civil servants on the issue of cutting wasteful spending. Can the President of the Treasury Board indicate to and promise this House that in a discussion with the Prime Minister of Canada prior to the shuffling of his cabinet, he will advise the Prime Minister to fire those ministers who are not concerned about economy and cutting down waste, and promote some backbenchers who perhaps are a little bit more concerned about cutting waste?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is somewhat out of date. I think he is thinking of the preceding government. The ministers on this side of the House are all concerned about the economy and cutting down waste.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: If the hon. member for Calgary West takes the trouble to look at the budget speech, he will find that there is a specific direction to the Treasury Board, which Treasury Board ministers accept enthusiastically, to carve at least $100 million out of general overheads in the current year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—ADVICE GIVEN TO SCARBOROUGH, ONT. HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which approved the installation of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I am directing my question to this minister because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs told me to do so. Did the minister tell very disgruntled Scarborough home owners last week, as reported, to rip the foam out of their homes and, if he did say that, whose advice should UFFI home owners follow? Should they follow the minister's advice to rip the foam out, or the advice of the National Research Council to keep it in?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, at a monthly meeting in my constituency last week, I met with a group of home owners who were concerned about the problem that the hon. member has raised. The discussion lasted for a couple of hours and covered a number of subjects, and some discussion touched upon what advice home owners should take. There was discussion as to what alternatives were available. I did not offer any specific advice. I indicated that the government, as a government, would be responding to the problem under the leadership of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, within a short period of time.

NATURE OF MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, is the minister denying that he told the people to take the foam out of their homes, or is he saying that he and the government do not know what to tell those 100,000 home owners who have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the advice which I gave home owners that evening was to await the decision of the government with respect to the concerns they raised at that meeting about health and finances, and I further undertook that after they had seen the government's response and had seen what recommendations the government makes on this difficult problem, and bearing in mind the many suggestions which were made that evening, if they were not satisfied I would be happy to respond to them on an individual basis.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE WHEN PRICE WATERHOUSE ASSOCIATES REPORT ON INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCTION COSTS WILL BE PRESENTED

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, but since he is absent, I shall redirect it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of numerous requests from farmers in my constituency who are asking for an adjustment of target prices for industrial milk, I should appreciate it if the minister could inform the House when he will be able to table the report by Price Waterhouse Associates on Canadian production costs of industrial milk?

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the report by Price Waterhouse Associates has just been received by the Minister of Agriculture and is now being examined. Meanwhile, there is a possibility that, by the end of this month or on the 1st of January, a new dairy policy will be announced for Canadian dairy producers.

REDUCTION IN MINING OPERATIONS AT LEAF RAPIDS AND LYNN LAKE, MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. At the present time the members of cabinet are receiving lay-off notices on behalf of the people of Canada. Attached to those lay-off notices are five pages of lay-offs which have occurred in this country during the last month. My first question is to ask the minister to do me a favour and make sure that his brother Tom also receives one of these lay-off notices. Let the axes fall where they may.

An hon. Member: The ax is worthy.

Mr. Murphy: I have a more serious question, Madam Speaker. Sherritt Gordon has announced reductions in the operation of their plant's mining operations in Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake. They have ordered a meeting for December 18 to decide whether or not there will be lay-offs, and to what degree they will occur. Has the minister met with the board of directors or senior officials of Sherritt Gordon to decide whether or not lay-offs should occur, and to make sure there are some job creation programs in that region?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should first point out to the hon. member that I am not my brother's mailman.

Mr. Epp: How about his keeper?

Mr. Axworthy: Second, with respect to proposed lay-offs, our department has a number of services which are available to both the employers and the trade unions. Our manpower consultative services will work with them to provide for any planning of help to the dislocated workers, if the two parties are prepared to sign an agreement. I personally would be quite prepared to deal with any interview or inquiry from any employer who would like some help. I am also prepared to deal with Members of Parliament who also bring those representations to us because we are very much concerned about the impact of lay-offs on the workers. As the hon. member knows, these are decisions made by the private employers which the government can only respond to, not dictate.

REQUEST THAT ONTARIO COMMUNITIES BE AIDED WITH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There is hardly a single community in Ontario which has not suffered lay-offs. Up to this time in 1981 there are over 7,000 people who have lost their jobs permanently as a result of the inaction of the government. Exactly what programs does the minister propose could be implemented in the smaller communities of Ontario which have suffered significant lay-offs that would put those people back to work in some meaningful employment in those communities, such as the building of houses?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, the over-all thrust of the budget is to create a sound basis for economic renewal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: Certainly its efforts in reinforcing the substantial decrease of interest rates since August is an important effort in terms of the job creation activity about which the hon. member has been talking.

An hon. Member: That is a great answer.

Mr. Gray: Also, Madam Speaker, we have the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. The inter-ministerial committee which is chaired by the Minister of Finance, has been considering the possibility of further designations of communities, as I reported to the House yesterday, and I look forward to decisions being made by the government in the light of the work of that committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

MINISTER'S REPLY TO PETITION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing who said in the House, just two minutes ago, that as far as UFFI foam insulation is concerned he is going to handle it on an individual basis. Never mind the groups, or delegations, or the people, he is going to take them on a one-to-one basis.

The minister said on October 26 he had undertaken in the House of Commons to follow up cases referred to him of people who were going to lose their homes.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Domm: What did the minister say just about a week ago, on November 25? He said, "Mr. Domm: I am writing in response to the petition you presented in this House . . . I will not be responsible—as minister of housing, I will not be responsible—"

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is obviously not enough for me to look at the hon. member straight in the eye so as to indicate that his question is too long. I have to stand and ask him to shorten his question. I am asking him to go to his question immediately.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, my question to the minister responsible for housing is, since he will not respond directly to these people who are losing their homes in Canada, when will he start telling the people and Members of Parliament the truth?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, with the greatest of respect, the hon. member is obviously having difficulty with his hearing today. I recommend that he look at Hansard tomorrow so he will see, as I repeat the answer that I gave a few moments ago, that I invited people who were at that meeting to await the Government of Canada's response to the UFFI question. That is what I invited them to do, to await that response.

Mr. Nielsen: Wait for the budget.

Mr. Cosgrove: Further to that, I suggested that if they had any difficulties with that decision, any application to their particular circumstances, or if they do not understand, that just as the hon. member's leader was able to assist people on an individual basis last week in Metropolitan Toronto, I would undertake the same thing.

● (1440)

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, our leader handled the situation on an individual basis. That minister did not.

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS IN PETERBOROUGH, ONT.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. On November 12, in the House Of Commons, he said, "All cases received to date have been acted on." As of noon today he has not telephoned one of the 75 people whose names were submitted to him by the United Electrical Workers Union of Peterborough. When will the minister responsible for housing start telling hon. members in this House the truth? When can the people of Canada have any faith in this government, which continues to misrepresent, mislead, misinform, and not tell the truth?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as I observed the support given by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to a concerned household at the weekend, I noted that he indicated he was very thankful that they had, in effect, helped themselves by persisting in looking for that kind of support. I appreciate the fact that the Leader of the Opposition undertook that particular course of action for that single household. I have done that, with my officials, for literally hundreds of Canadians in the last few weeks.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT—QUERY RESPECTING INFORMATION OBTAINED FROM DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing. Last Friday the minister finally admitted that outsiders in Montreal had budget information before the budget was introduced in this House. I refer the minister to the statement to me by Peter Crombie, vice-president of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that such budget details on housing were obtained from the Department of Finance on the Monday before the budget. Will the minister tell the House the names of those in the Department of Finance who furnished this information to his department? Instead of daily soap opera episodes, can we now have these names? Can we now have the entire truth immediately about this incompetent and serious escapade?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, this question sounds like a question asked by the hon. gentleman last week. I indicated at that time that I would inquire as to the specifics. I believe it was on the next day that I confirmed that CMHC officials were supported by typesetters in a firm in Montreal in preparing ads which were shown in newspapers after the publication of the budget.

The hon. gentleman and his colleagues have been persistent in saying that they want Canadians to know what is going on in housing. They want to know what the government's programs are, and what we are doing to assist Canadians. We prepared material for publication immediately following the budget, and in that we had the assistance of typesetters so that we could release that material after the speech of the Minister of Finance in the House on November 12.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, a moment ago the minister said there was something wrong with the hearing of the hon. member for Peterborough. In view of the way the minister answers questions I suggest there is something wrong with his hearing. He has not answered anything yet.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, the minister refers to other ads when, in reality, there was only one ad. Would he be prepared to table in this House or make available publicly, right away—so that they cannot be drafted later—the other ads that allegedly were available? At the same time, in view of all these developments in the last few days and the four or five different stories he has told, will the minister agree to a parliamentary inquiry, which he previously refused to do, and will he do the honourable thing and announce right now to this House and get it over with that he intends to do the country a great service by resigning from office?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure I answered almost the same question on Thursday or Friday of last week. I told the hon. gentleman that an ad was prepared. It was in five or six newspapers the day after the budget. At the weekend following, the ad I have here was published in approximately 140 other newspapers across the country.

We have to respond to Canadians from coast to coast, and that we have done in an attempt to advise them what is in the budget and what support this government has given to mortgage holders on renewal of their mortgages.

DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FROM FARMERS UNDER SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It has been reported that since the budget only three farmers across the country have been extended loans by the Farm Credit Corporation, which now takes applications from farmers only after they have been turned down for Small Business Development Bonds, and there have been delays in processing these bonds, as the minister is well aware.

Will the minister tell the House the reason for this continued delay which is threatening to bankrupt farmers, and will he also tell this House when farmers can expect to have bond applications processed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I received some representations earlier about delays in extending these facilities, particularly to unincorporated farmers. I understand that initially the banks were uncertain as to what regulations might prevail but since that time discussions have been held between the banks and officials of my department, and that the banks are now generally ready to accept such applications for such loans. In fact, I understand that some loans have already been arranged under this program. It is certainly my intention to facilitate the very objective the hon. member seeks, namely, that farmers have access to these additional benefits provided in the budget.

REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that these bond applications have been processed. As of this morning I have received representations from my riding to the effect that people are still awaiting the processing of these bonds.

In view of the fact that the applications of the majority of farmers are not processed, will the minister consider some sort of financial assistance, albeit temporary assistance, for those individuals whose applications are now on hold, so that they can in some temporary way, for the time being at least, offset the possibility of bankruptcies taking place in the very near future?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to repeat that it was just about a week ago that I received assurances from the Canadian Bankers' Association that the information with respect to these loans ought to be available. If the hon. member has some particular institutions in mind, I would be happy to make some inquiries.

GRAIN

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Given the disruptions in grain movement this summer and the ripple effects which have followed from that—one of these ripple effects being that up until about ten days ago there was only a very small amount of shipping going into Thunder Bay—could the minister give me some indication of what plans he and his department have respecting extending the St. Lawrence Seaway season to meet the commitments?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the slowdown created by the summer strike at Thunder Bay is being rectified very rapidly. I have figures here indicating that the same level of exports between this year and last year has almost been reached now; so much for the capacity of Thunder Bay to pick up the slack in the delivery system due to the strike.

With respect to the Great Lakes, as my hon. friend said, there is some uncertainty as to the future with respect to iron ore, grain and coal. Consequently the Canadian and American Seaway authorities are now sponsoring an in-depth study on the future of the Seaway. For the time being the Seaway Management emphasizes the progress which is being made by way of getting more out of the system through technological and administrative improvements.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION BE STIMULATED TO HELP END LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister allegedly responsible for housing, or the lack of it. Today in British Columbia over 15,000 forestry workers—that is over 30 per cent—are laid off as a direct result of the economic policies of this government. As a direct result of the inadequate assistance provided for housing in the budget, in the coming year housing starts in Canada will fall some 50,000 below the number needed.

• (1450)

In light of the fact that over one quarter of B.C. wood products and 85 per cent of plywood go to the domestic housing industry, will the minister take immediate action to bring housing starts to an adequate level and thus help create jobs in the forest industry, or is the minister simply content to let Canadians go without either jobs or housing?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, of course I am not anxious that people in associated industries that are supportive of the housing sector and the housing industry should be unemployed or that their products should not be used. It was for that reason, Madam Speaker, in an attempt to address the larger market that uses the forest products—and I am now speaking of the American and Japanese markets—that I, for example, spent a week meeting with my counterpart in June, the new secretary responsible for housing in the United States government, to talk about the plans of that administration to support housing and to get an idea of what the American markets would be.

Similarly, I took the opportunity of meeting for three days in the month of August in the City of Vancouver, British Columbia, with the minister responsible for housing in Japan. I toured some of the projects that the government has supported, the co-op and non-profit projects in Vancouver, in an attempt to interest him and explain the construction methods used in this country that might have application in Japan. In addition to that, Madam Speaker, the member ought not to be so pessimistic about housing starts in Vancouver. For example, I am told that with the re-introduction of the soft costs, the MURB ancillary provision, there has been an increase of 5,000 starts in Vancouver in the last two weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

QUERY RESPECTING FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO EAST COAST FISHERMEN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I think the pink slip that the previous minister received should be a permanent lay-off for that answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Miller: I should like to address my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Atlantic coast fishing industry this year has been characterized by massive lay-offs, plant shutdowns, trawler tie-ups, and a bleak outlook for the future. The minister has simply responded to the concerns of the east coast fishery with vague promises, promises about orderly marketing, orderly catch of stock and more money for quality products. Do the minister and his colleagues have any proposals to put before the House today in terms of financial assistance to fishermen and possibly to the processing industry? In view of his meeting yesterday with the ministers of fisheries of the provinces, does he have any indication from the provinces as to whether they will rationalize the processing industry in Canada?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I thought the meeting was very positive with certainly a very constructive approach. I hope to put to my cabinet colleagues very soon a program which should offer some assistance. That does not mean that we do not need to do some restructuring and long-term planning. I might say that I was somewhat disappointed to hear that, on the processing end of the industry, there does not seem to be a great deal of readiness to match the word "efficiency" on the one hand, and the word "rationalization" on the other hand. There seems to be the idea that somehow one can be "efficient" while keeping open everything that is now in existence. I was somewhat disappointed in that area, Madam Speaker.

CMHC ADVERTISEMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENTS IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of housing. As reported in Hansard at page 13683, on December 3, the minister said, and I quote:

—no person was aware who was not authorized and under normal budgetary security—all employees or civil servants in the employ or control of the federal government, no person beyond those was aware or had in their possession the particulars of the ad—

That is what the minister said on December 3.

In Hansard at page 13728, on December 4, the minister said:

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials . . . were assisted by some employees of the firm of S&B in Montreal.

Will the minister tell the House of Commons which of those contradictory statements is the truth?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was not in the House when I had the opportunity of explaining to the House that four employees of a firm, referred to in the quotes that he has just referenced, assisted CMHC employees in the actual printing of the advertisement that I talked about earlier in question period. Those four people were under the direct supervision of CMHC at all times.

The material that was prepared was taken under security by CMHC officials. It was not authorized for release until after the Minister of Finance had finished his speech on the budget in the House. That material then appeared as an advertisement the following day in approximately six newspapers in this country, and on the following weekend in approximately another 140 newspapers.

Again I would stress to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the objective of having that material available to the public was to provide information to the public, and, obviously, was to respond to their concerns, as witnessed by the petitions filed by the Right Hon. Leader in this House, in the many weeks leading up to the budget. It was an attempt to have a prompt response to concerned Canadians.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON DECEMBER 3

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister of housing evades my question. I shall again refer the minister back to his words in this House on December 3, in Hansard, at page 13683 when he said:

—no person was aware who was not authorized and under normal budgetary security—all employees or civil servants in the employ or control of the federal government, no person beyond those was aware or had in their possession the particulars of the ad—

That is what the minister said on December 3. Will the minister now tell us whether that was the truth?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am attempting to communicate to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition the fact that the firm that assisted the corporation officials in the reproduction of that advertisement, which was used the following day, were people who had assisted the corporation in that area on previous occasions. They were under direct supervision of the corporation. Their technical advice and talents were required. They had been used before. They had worked for the corporation before. They were employed, retained, and directly supervised by corporation officials.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is now directed to the Minister of Finance. He will have heard the minister of housing admit that on one day the minister of housing said one thing to the House of Commons, and on the other day he said exactly the opposite to the House of Commons.

I have two questions for the Minister of Finance. One is that he evaded answering a question from my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, the other day when my colleague asked him whether he had taken action to satisfy himself that there were no budget leaks. His answer was that he had not heard anything in the House that would cause him to believe there were budget leaks. That was not the question. The question was, did he do his duty and satisfy himself that there was not the presentation, in advance of publication of the budget, of information to typesetters from Montreal or to anyone else? Has he satisfied himself? That is the first question.

An hon. Member: How many questions do you have?

Mr. Clark: What I am interested in is some answers.

The second question is, since the minister of housing has directly contradicted himself on the floor of this House, saying one thing one day and the opposite the next day, and since this is a matter that goes to the heart of confidence in the government, will the Minister of Finance agree to have a public parliamentary inquiry into all aspects of this matter so that the whole truth will be known?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I did say in reply to the question that I had heard nothing to justify the view that there was a budget leak of any kind. I do not know of any circumstance that would lead me to conclude that there was a budget leak.

● (1500)

Mr. Nielsen: What about the answers of the minister of housing?

Mr. MacEachen: That is my conclusion. Therefore I do not see the necessity for any investigation.

Mr. Fraser: What is your conclusion?

Mr. MacEachen: Surely if there had been a budget leak in the sense to which we have learned about budget leaks—

Mr. Fraser: You would have told us about it.

Mr. MacEachen: —it would have been apparent to all hands. A budget leak is hardly a leak if it is held in secret.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is past the hour and I have already allowed the Hon. Leader of the Opposition three questions.

Mr. Nielsen: Saved by the bell. Saved by the bell!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANAGREX ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I understand that consultation has taken place among the parties and that there is unanimous consent for the introduction of an act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, for which notice was received this morning.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, we on this side are delighted to give our consent to the introduction of an idea initiated by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) when he was in office. We in this party express our gratitude to the minister for perpetuating the idea of the hon. member for Elgin in this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-85, to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, I rise on a short point of order. I want to say thank you to the parties on the other side of the House for their tremendous co-operation.

Madam Speaker: That is not a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, while the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is in the House, I should like to rise on a point of order. It relates to the introduction of bills. Since Madam Speaker tabled at three o'clock the report of the Auditor General rather than at two o'clock as we had expected, I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board could respond as to whether or not it is the intention of the government to respond to the request of the Auditor General that there be an amendment to the Auditor General Act which would permit more than merely the annual report as set forth in the report tabled a few moments ago.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, in response to the inquiry of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I have not yet had the opportunity to review the report of the Auditor General which has just been tabled. I shall immediately do so and I shall advise the hon. member, either in the House or privately, as to what the government's intentions might be in that regard after due consultation with my colleagues.

Mr. Nielsen: Tell us all.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madame Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point or order. Once again I ask the parliamentary secretary why there has been such a delay in answering question No. 2,042 which was put on the Order Paper on January 29. It asked the following simple questions:

What was the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour?

What percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's representations and make further inquiries.

Mr. Nielsen: You must have quite a notebook by now.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I am sure the parliamentary secretary's day would not be a good one if I did not raise the fact that it is now well over five and a half years since I placed question No. 30 on the Order Paper. The parliamentary secretary hardly needs to be reminded of the question, but it asks how many members of the Canadian Transport Commission were issued passes on Air Canada, including their wives and employees of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I draw attention again to the importance of this answer which has been hidden for five and a half years. Because of the fact that Air Canada is regulated by the CTC, Air Canada is giving gravy to members of the CTC. Therefore, something is rotten somewhere. It is about time the question was answered. After five and a half years one can only assume that it is so rotten that the government does not want to tell us the answer.

The other question about which I want to ask is question No. 136 which also concerns Air Canada. Officials of Air Canada have told me that the answer was prepared a year ago and sent to the minister, but it is still not here in the House. It concerns a jet aircraft rented in the election of May 22, 1979, to transport the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on his various political travels across the country. A bill was rendered by Air Canada to the Liberal Party which disputed the amount of the bill and wanted a reduction of some thousands of dollars. I have asked whether the bill was ever paid and what was the reduction which the Liberal Party finally got, if any. It is straightforward; there is no reason to hide it.

Always we get from "Dr. No" the answer that it will be soon. Could I end my remarks by saying in future, instead of calling him "Dr. No", instead of calling him "Dr. Soon", maybe we should call him "Dr. Maybe Soon", "Dr. Perhaps Soon", or "Dr. Someday Soon".

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, of course I will take due note of the representations made by the hon. member, but I should point out that we are not obliged to answer questions to the House on the operations of the Liberal Party. The government, yes, but not the Liberal Party.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I want to make very clear that I did not ask a question about the Liberal Party. I asked a question about Air Canada, a Crown corporation, renting an aircraft to the Liberal Party, which is entirely different. My words have been misrepresented unintentionally in that I was not questioning the Liberal Party. I was questioning Air Canada about whether it had received payment from the Liberal Party for the use of that aircraft and, if so, how much.

• (1510)

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I have made due note of his representation.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, just before the adjournment debate started last night, I informed the House of a proposal according to which an economic summit should be organized as soon as possible in Sherbrooke. I said that it would give us a chance to determine the condition of the various economic sectors in Sherbrooke and decide how we want our region to develop.

We cannot let decisions affecting our economy be made without having a say in their implementation. My suggestion for an economic summit means that someone will have to be in charge of organizing the summit. Without wishing to give anyone in particular a mandate or a set of tasks, or responsibilities, it seems to me that the industrial commissariat, in view of its fundamental role in Sherbrooke's economic development, would be able to organize a summit with the help of all economic partners in Sherbrooke. Personally, I am prepared to co-operate fully with the organizers of such a meeting.

Mr. Speaker, on a different matter, I would like to say something about the VIA Rail cutbacks announced in the last week of July by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). As soon as the government announced its intentions, I sent a telegram to the minister in which I expressed my apprehension as follows:

> I read in the newspapers that in the near future, your department intends to terminate VIA Rail services between Sherbrooke and Montreal. I cannot support such a proposal. I should appreciate it if public hearings were held on this matter and the government's decision postponed until the local residents have aired their views on the present rail services provided for Sherbrooke and the general area.

Many organizations in the area and a number of private citizens informed me that they were opposed to the decision, and one of the agencies that has been most active in this respect, the Eastern Townships Regional Development Council, informed the minister in a brief and in press releases of that agency's position which reflects the region's concerns.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, and the minister has said as much many times in the House, that some passenger lines in Canada are not profitable. In a letter I received not long ago from VIA Rail, in reply to questions I asked the Director of Government Relations, Mr. Branchaud, I was informed that for the line Sherbrooke-Montreal-Sherbrooke, the user rate averaged 30 per cent, but also that for Otterburn Park, Beloeil and Saint-Hyacinthe, the occupancy rate was 100 per cent, dropping after Saint-Hyacinthe to less than 25 per cent, that operating costs were $1.5 million and revenue only amounted to $140,-

000, which means that on the VIA Rail route between Sherbrooke and Montreal, the railway company is losing more than $1.3 million per year. I also asked VIA Rail authorities whether they could put an LRC on the line between Sherbrooke and Montreal, and they answered that there were only eighty-eight cars of that type in Canada, that they were in high demand elsewhere in Canada, on relatively short routes, and that they could hardly justify putting another unit train on this route because of the low user rate.

I also asked whether it would be possible to establish a quicker route between Sherbrooke and Montreal and I was told that this was impossible as there is no continuous rail on a direct route, but that a project for a bus service between Sherbrooke and Drummondville, from where passengers could then go on to Montreal and Quebec, was being considered. Mr. Speaker, outside Montreal and Quebec city, Sherbrooke has been one of the busiest stops of the passenger service for over a century. I recognize that the figures provided to us for the last two decades show a substantial drop in the user rate between Sherbrooke and Montreal, but since our region is already manufacturing passenger cars for other countries and for VIA Rail, we believe in the Eastern Townships that an alternative must be found if it is not possible to maintain the present service, which is scheduled for abandonment in September 1982. We have to look at other solutions, and in my humble opinion, RDC passenger cars would be perfectly appropriate to the needs of our region. We shall continue to make representations to VIA Rail and the Department of Transport asking that an adequate solution be found to this problem before September, 1982, when the service between Sherbrooke and Montreal is scheduled to be abandoned.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of the footwear industry is reaching tragic proportions in many cities and villages throughout Canada. Nearly 4,000 workers have been laid off since the beginning of 1981. Reports published in 1977 and 1981 following the comprehensive and detailed studies made by the Anti-dumping Tribunal recognized that the Canadian footwear manufacturers had been seriously disadvantaged by the loopholes contained in the legislation. Both reports of the Anti-dumping Tribunal suggested that the government take effective action to protect the footwear industry as a whole. Mr. Speaker, imports now account for over 61 per cent of the Canadian market, and I find this completely unacceptable. In my humble opinion, it is essential that the government seriously consider comprehensive quotas, which are much more effective, and I believe that if the system is not weakened by administrative procedures as it has been in the past, the effectiveness and competitive ability of this industry will be greatly increased. I share the opinion expressed recently by Mr. Maheux in a letter to us in which he said:

> We believe, and many experts agree, that the footwear manufacturing industry in Canada can be extremely vigorous, effective and better off competitively through an increased use of computers, and that it can become a positive element in the Canadian economy during the eighties if the federal government decides to extend comprehensive quotas for a period of five to ten years.

Mr. Speaker, in that industry just as in the textile industry a larger share of the Canadian market must be opened to Canadian manufacturers. And above all, let no one argue that we are not giving enough chances to the poor countries which are anxious to compete on the Canadian market. In the majority of cases the developed countries are those which are now causing the most damage to the Canadian market. Mr. Speaker, I must say that today the minister is meeting with a good number of shoe manufacturers and that he answered a question I put to him in the House last week by saying that he was prepared to listen to representations from the industry and, if possible, to bring in amendments to the policy on footwear.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it is imperative that the minister seriously consider some of the amendments advocated at this time by Canadian manufacturers and, since he is meeting with them today, I hope he will understand the plight of thousands of Quebecers and Canadians who work in that industry and who need to be reassured that the Canadian government will not now let that industry down by implementing the policy which has already been announced because, in my humble opinion, it will be quite vulnerable. Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has run out.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this budget has been called an economic disaster and a blunder of the first magnitude. Even the Liberal members recognize that now. I will refer to the hon. member for York-East (Mr. Collenette) in a moment or two if he will just be patient, because I designed part of my speech to accommodate him. I said it was a blunder. It is a blunder of the first magnitude. Of that there can be no doubt. It warrants the appellation a "blunder budget". When the minister came into the House the other night, with great fanfare, great cheers—

Mr. McDermid: And a new pair of shoes.

Mr. Nielsen: —and a new pair of shoes, and unveiled his budget, he dropped a real clinker. It landed with a dull thud which is still being heard throughout the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Never in living memory has a budget been received with such universal criticism and disdain and such downright rejection. Those in trouble over mortgage payments, nearly one million Canadians, those in trouble over high interest bank loans, those who have been laid off and the farmers, all scrutinized the minister's announcement in a vain search for some small recognition of their desperate plight. Oh, there were lots of words: words of hope, words of good cheer and words conveying the message that help was on the way. That is what the minister responsible for housing said.

When the nature of the help was revealed, what was it? It was verbal cosmetics; nothing more and nothing less. It was a pallid, lacklustre attempt to convey an assurance of concern.

There is no concern in this budget and no milk of human kindness. It is a company report, a document exhibiting no care by a government with a total lack of care. It reads as though it were put together in a vacuum, so totally divorced is it from the real concerns of Canadians. It is quite obvious that to the minister and the gang of seven who put together the economic development formula at Meach Lake, the hardships and fears of the one million laid off and the 40,000 worrying about suddenly escalating mortgage payments were deemed to be very trivial indeed.

I now refer to the hon. member for York East. The other day we listened to him. He is highly regarded in philosophical circles in the Liberal Party. He explained his party's thoughts concerning those who were in trouble because of high interest rates. As a model of heartlessness and disregard for the facts, his speech was in a class by itself. He was placing the onus on the purchasers, and I think I quote him accurately, to look at their own financial situation. That was his remedy. He asked rhetorically, "Is it the duty of the government to subsidize lifestyle? Certainly not", he said. However, I say to him that it is the duty of the government, in a well managed economy, to so order its affairs that citizens will be assured of a measure of economic stability when they undertake large obligations and that they will not have the rug pulled out from under them by the mismanagement and indifference of an uncaring government.

This morning, on "Canada AM", the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) and his colleague were asked a very blunt but highly intelligent question by Pamela Wallin. She asked, "Why are you voting for a budget that is so roundly condemned?" "Oh", said the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, "we are not voting for all of these 120-odd budget resolutions. They are all going to come before the House and we will be voting on them. What we are voting on tonight has nothing to do with what is coming in the next month or two. We are just voting on a policy."

Mr. Paproski: Shame, shame!

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member is not so stupid that he does not know the falsity of that kind of stand. What he and his colleagues are voting on tonight are all of those resolutions which will be before us in the weeks and months to come which are being authorized by this very budget. I know he did not pull the wool over Pamela Wallin's eyes, although I am sure he would have dearly loved to do so.

However, let us not try to pull the wool over the eyes of thousands of listeners to that broadcast. With regard to mortgage renewals, will he say that the mortgage renewal policy is not part of this budget? Does he condone what is happening to the mortgagors in this country who have been kicked out in the streets, or is that not a part of this budget policy? Will he be voting against the taxation of insurance premiums, or is that just a part of a resolution which will come along somewhere down the line? What utter tripe! I heard that hon. member this morning on "Canada AM" and I could not believe my ears. That is perhaps why he was not invited back into the cabinet after being left out in the cold. He was ceremoniously booted out.

The government's servile and heartless policy of high interest rates at 18 per cent—and that is a high interest rate—has condemned thousands of innocent people to suffer, to lose their savings, and to accept a deterioration in living standards. That is what the hon. member would be voting against tonight, unless he is for it, in which case he and his colleague the hon. member for York East will stand up and be counted on the side of implementation of that kind of heartless, uncaring policy.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Nielsen: That is exactly what Canadians are complaining about, and that is exactly the message the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) heard the other night from over 30 members of the Liberal caucus with whom he met after coming back from traipsing around Scotland and playing footsies with haggis and golf balls. The minister talked about restraint and equity.

Mr. Deans: Footsies?

Mr. Nielsen: I have nothing against haggis. I am sorry, I did not intend it as a racial slur at all, quite the contrary.

Mr. Deans: I hope not.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not like it, mind you, but I respect the taste of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for haggis, at any rate.

When the minister presented his budget, he talked about restraint and equity. The words fell strangely from his lips as he spoke of increasing government spending by 22 per cent, taking $1 billion out of the economy in oil and gas taxes, and increasing his tax levies by $1.4 billion. If that is restraint, heaven help us if he ever lets go! Heaven help us if he ever takes the lid off!

There is restraint for everyone but the government. That is the policy of the government. Government members fly in formation to Winnipeg in three separate JetStars to attend the same function, for the same purpose, but they talk of restraint. The government goes ahead with its grandiose schemes for harnessing the economy—and that is the phrase it uses—for taking over resources from the provinces, for muscling in on business and industry, because, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says, "If the free market is not working very well, we will have to do something about it".

This government goes about its endless empire-building like a mole tunnelling in the earth, surfacing only when it needs more money to carry on borrowing further. Its requirements are endless. Close to $70 billion in the expenditure program in this budget have been allocated for purposes and objectives which remain in what I consider to be the realm of the airy-fairy. It is the development formula produced by the Meach Lake bunch. What is that formula?

Mr. Paproski: Airy-fairy!

Mr. Nielsen: It is more and more expenditures for less and less results. The economy spins in an ever-narrowing circle. The bankruptcy parade goes on. The army of lay-offs and jobless grows, and the government gets fatter and fatter and does less and less. The government members are the lotus-eaters. The lotus-eaters grow fat, and ordinary Canadians, hassled by fear and uncertainty, do not know where to turn. That is the crime of this budget. It is a Shylock budget. It helps no one but the money lenders. The government preaches restraint, but then squeezes the economy like a sponge for its own debatable purposes and to indulge in its own ideological pretentions about managing the economy and manipulating the social structure. This budget virtually flattens the middle-class in this country. It lowers the living standards and expectations of millions of Canadians, wiping out savings accounts and their future hopes.

• (1530)

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Do you believe that?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, indeed I believe that with all the fervour at my command, more than the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River believed himself when he appeared on "Canada AM" this morning. He said that when he was going to vote for this budget, he was not going to be voting for all of these miseries that will be brought down on the heads of so many millions of Canadians. Yes, I believe it, more than he can honestly say he believed what he said this morning.

Giving the government an additional $2 billion in energy tax and additional taxation to play with is like giving a drunk a credit card for the liquor store. Sometimes it makes me wonder whether or not members on the other side might have such credit cards and are using them regularly.

Meanwhile, at the consumer level where stimulus is required, the dead hand of the government has come down hard. The palsied hand of this government is digging deeper into the pockets of Canadians more than any other government has in our history in order to seize whatever disposable income is left to them through so-called loopholes. In this regard, the government's approach is very like that of the mafia. Whatever it does not pick up is now defined as a loophole. The government is actually and literally taxing the teeth in people's mouths.

Canadians, hit with a whole series of higher taxes—and I wonder if the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is going to vote for that—are also being forced to pay an extra $1,500 annually to heat their homes and drive their cars so that this government can squeeze an additional $1 billion out of the economy. That is $1,500 for people in southern Canada, Mr. Speaker. It is far more than that in the north. Imagine how this budget hits the north. Can members imagine just how hard it hits those people living north of 60 where heating and transport are not luxuries but necessities of life, indeed, matters of life and death in the more remote Arctic communities? This hidden tax will add $2,500 annually to the cost of living of the average northerner and a great deal more for those in the more remote northern areas. This serves as a further disincentive to living north of 60 and it shows this government's total disregard for the future of northern Canada.

And still, as ministers drive around in their limousines to their $2,000 lunches or fly their individual jets in formation to party seminars, we hear the refrain "Restraint, restraint, for the end of the world is at hand". Then a few days before the election, the Meach Lake boys, the gang of seven, spent $130,000 boasting about how the government had spent $30 billion in 18 months. That is restraint? It is not the economy that needs to be restrained, sir, it is this government.

Then we had the egregious blunder of taxing assembly costs on residential housing construction which threatened to freeze 20,000 housing starts across the country. The minister, and I see him in his seat now, backed off when that matter was brought to his attention by the leader of this party. It was the first he had heard of it, although he had heard about a good many other things in the budget that somehow got out of his hands.

This raises the question of how many other situations of economic disaster have remained outside the minister's knowledge. Perhaps he just is not informed, or perhaps he just does not grasp the impact of his tax measures until disaster strikes. He should be in a position about now to realize that the budget is shoving this country into a serious recession, and that as the United States starts out of recession in the spring, we will be plunging down the slope, urged on by this feckless, tired and tattered government.

The budget simply tightens the screws on Canadians all across this land. Never was so much verbosity expended to achieve so little. The government's vaunted economic strategy can be summed up as "Loser takes all". They are steering this country to disaster amid a stream of clichés.

The Prime Minister, while addressing the party faithful a few weeks ago in one of the interim periods when he was not battling with Mr. Lévesque, said this:

> Canadians must come to their senses.

Canadians have been waiting for this government to come to its senses for a long time.

In his budget speech the minister dipped deep into the cliché department when he said:

> It is time to overcome our anxieties.

No doubt this was addressed to the thousands of people who have lost their jobs, the thousands who have lost their homes or the thousands who have seen their businesses go into bankruptcy. The chief anxiety suffered by most Canadians at this time is a government completely out of step with the rest of the country and with the needs of the country; a government marching to a different drum.

It would take a great many doses of MacEachen soothing syrup to calm the uneasiness that exists in the economy at the present time. At a time when hundreds of thousands of Canadians are feeling the pinch of economic hardship, this budget is a positive indecency. It constitutes a betrayal by the government of the assurances given in this House to home owners by the minister responsible for housing and others in the cabinet. "Wait for the budget" was the cry of the minister in charge of housing and the Minister of Finance. "Wait for the budget and all will be well'. Home owners waited and waited, but they waited in vain. There is nothing in this budget to assist one single home owner in weathering the storm of high interest rates, only cosmetic guarantees.

The minister has accomplished the nearly incredible feat of increasing inflation while slowing down the economy and producing rising unemployment. This makes him a destroyer of the dreams and hopes of thousands of Canadians, a destroyer without mercy, without concern, without care, who hides behind textbook clichés and outmoded panaceas while Canadians suffer.

At the same time we have his acolyte, the undistinguished minister responsible for housing, who trots around telling Canadians to lower their expectations, and to sit on orange crates. How could those expectations be lower while this gang remains in power?

This government has been overcome by an attack of unmitigated nationalism and Canadians are paying the penalty as the economy grinds to a halt. They have virtually transferred to the national field the policies advocated by Mr. Lévesque and his friends at the provincial level. We even now have the incredible spectacle of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), in the name of his particular version of Canadian culture, threatening to tell Canadians what satellite programs they will be allowed to bring into this country. Next, they will be deciding what books Canadians can read.

So discredited is the minister's budget that rumours are flying in financial circles that it is about to be withdrawn and rewritten in its entirety. These rumours add to the prevailing uncertainty in money markets.

The budget has been rejected by the Ontario Liberals meeting in convention recently. They demanded a return of numerous incentives defined by the minister as "loopholes", including a restoration of the MURB program. That was one of the loopholes which the minister plugged, with the result that construction was frozen on some 20,000 housing units across the country. They demand tax-free interest on Small Business Development Bonds, tax deductibility for venture financing, and new incentives to entrepreneurs. The minister would do well to pay attention to these recommendations because, for once, the Liberal Party of Ontario appears to be in closer touch with what is going on in this country than this government is.

We have entered a phase of economic recession; homes are not being built, that is a fact; unemployment is spreading like a cancer across the country, and that is a fact; young people, those who have jobs, are being forced into debt by high mortgage rates, and that is a fact. Those are the miseries of this budget.

We are in this situation precisely because of the government's ill-advised and uninformed interventions in the economy, and because of the enormous spending by this government which has placed an insupportable burden on the economy as well as on the taxpayers.

Instead of cutting back on unnecessary expenditures, their solution is to increase taxes, squeeze the provinces and take more money out of the economy to finance their pet schemes, such as the $91 million loaned to a computer firm in Ottawa which subsequently went belly up, and the $6 million interest-free loan to an hotel promotion in Windsor, Ontario. These are the kinds of problems that get attention from this government. There has been a wholesale corruption of economic policy by the most blatant patronage considerations.

What is particularly disturbing is that, as the recession deepens and unemployment increases across the country, there is no sign of awareness by the minister or the government that Canadians are suffering. A recent report by Statistics Canada revealed that we have reached a zero growth situation in the economy, while inflation continues to increase without any signs of moderation. According to Statistics Canada, one of the major inflationary factors in the economy is the government's chauvinistic national energy policy, followed by the increased taxes on oil and gas, taxes which the Minister of Finance during the last election campaign said were going to be kept down as long as Canadians voted Liberal.

The budget is simply another example of the kind of authoritarian control which permeates every facet of this arrogant government's activities. What it is doing cannot be described as policies, for the benefit of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, any more than the aimless fluttering of moths around a flame can be described as policy. The flame is love of power and the arrogant assumption of a right to tell Canadians what they must do and how they must think to satisfy the criteria of these men on horseback.

They have alienated Quebec, bankrupted the economy, forced thousands into the soup kitchens, brought exploration and initiative to a standstill or forced it out of the country, and pushed the frontiers of achievement in this country back to the thirties. Every single major project in the energy field has been stifled and curtailed because of their unenlightened interference in the area of free choice. The country can no longer afford the luxury of this government.

It is not the budget alone which must go. The government which produced the budget has outlived its usefulness. That, sir, is why this evening we are taking the unprecedented course on the sixth and final day of a budget debate of requiring a standing vote. It is unprecedented, yes, for it is usually the custom on the sixth day to allow the budget to be adopted on division. But this, sir, is an unprecedented budget, unprecedented in the misery it is causing millions of Canadians. It is the worst I have seen since I have been here.

I urge the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and the hon. member for York East to have the courage of their convictions and to do right by their constituents, along with any other of those 30 colleagues who met in caucus with the minister the other night, and vote against the continuation of this misery, if they are to do a service to their constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say how much I enjoyed the speech by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I thought he read it very well. I can recall the days before the hon. member for Yukon had the opportunity of being a cabinet minister and of spending some time in the ministry, where he usually had people to write his speeches for him, when he was able to stand in the House with a few notes written on the back of a cigar box and entertain us with witticisms we knew fell from the heart. Now what has happened? Because of the status to which he has now risen, he has fallen into the habit of having others write his speeches for him, as it was in the days when he was minister. I am one of those who regrets very much the lack of spontaneous wit with which the hon. member used to entertain the House. What we are getting now is written wit; written, I think, with a certain skill, but it certainly does not tumble from the lips the way it used to.

Now that the hon. member for Yukon has acceded to the position of House leader for the opposition, I know he would not want to accept a lesson in procedure from somebody as humble as myself. However, I did think it would be extremely useful to read to him the motion we are going to vote on tonight. The motion is found, of course, in the papers of the House of Commons and I will just read it, although the hon. member, I know, knows it full well. It says that the motion has been moved by Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Pinard:

> That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

It is on that motion, which we will be voting on at 9.45 p.m., that I will be casting my vote.

What I tell the House and the hon. gentleman is that in general I do approve the budgetary policy of the government. I say that I do have, as do many other members, reservations about the proposed changes in tax legislation contained in the budget. I think that is no secret. I think it is also fair to make clear, as the hon. member for Yukon fully understands, that we will not see what that legislative proposal is until probably after Christmas, at which time the legislation will go through the House in the usual way for tax legislation. There will be a choice given to the House, I hope, as to whether that legislation is dealt with on the floor of the House of Commons or in a standing committee. At that point, in one way or another it will go through three readings in the House of Commons. I will have the opportunity, as will other members, of speaking on the specific details of the tax policy, because it will only be then that they come into effect and become law.

It is on that basis that I have decided to support the budgetary policy of the government. I believe the budgetary policy, as distinct from the tax policy, is reasonable under the circumstances.

The hon. member for Yukon has raised an interesting point, and that is the method by which we proceed in dealing with the budget in this House. It is clear from the examples of the last four or five budgets that the procedure we follow is inherently destructive. What happens when the budget is prepared? It is prepared by a very small number of officials in the tax policy section of the Department of Finance. They do not have the ability, as they have on almost any other item, to consult with other civil servants. Nor do they have the right and are not allowed to discuss tax policy with anybody outside the governmental system. So this is an extremely small group. Furthermore, to carry it to absurdity, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) traditionally does not discuss it with his colleagues in cabinet and usually the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is only informed after the budget is in the hands of the printer.

So we have this fundamentally important document developed in secrecy by an extremely small number of people, and consequently every Minister of Finance ultimately comes to the House saying that he made a mistake and had to change it. We have seen examples of this time and again with every Minister of Finance and it is accepted by the House as a normal part of the procedure. We have seen that when the Minister of Finance proposes tax policy changes, they are changed. If we study the tax policy changes of any Minister of Finance and then see what the final legislation says, we will find that almost every section is significantly changed.

The reason for that is simple. It is that this limited number of people simply cannot comprehend the totality of what the Canadian economy is all about. In many cases, the budgetary papers provide for a forum for the discussion of tax policy matters. That is another matter. In my judgment, it is separate from the question of over-all budgetary operations.

Why do we have all of this secrecy? I suspect there are two reasons. First, the British have it and ours is fundamentally a British system. Second, the Americans do not have it and for that reason it must be good if we have it.

It seems that we should be moving away from the tradition of secrecy and becoming more open by striking down the veil of secrecy, which does nothing more than encourage the debate of tax policy before we even have it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I might say that these excessive measures to impose budgetary secrecy are one of the main reasons why budgets do not very often meet the quality which we should demand and expect.

I have other suggestions for change. I think that once we eliminate the secrecy and open up the system, we must admit that there should be the possibility of releasing this information and the concepts that the minister is working on ahead of time so that people will have an opportunity to comment on them, the same as is done for other legislative proposals. I also think that we have to eliminate retroactive legislation. I believe that that concept is foreign to parliamentary democracy. It is especially foreign to parliamentary democracy when we see that the retroactive legislation proposed by the minister is usually changed extensively before it takes its final form in law. As a consequence, we have three sets of laws occurring at one time. There is the law as it exists, the law as it exists in the words of the minister and the law as the Parliament of Canada will eventually develop it. Often there is a tremendous difference between those three forms of law.

The process as it now exists creates a great amount of uncertainty for business and for everyone in the economic community. Is strikes me that the time has come for us to eliminate this concept of retroactive legislation, but I would suggest that there be one exception, and that is that the minister have the authority to set rates when he brings down his budget. He can take the existing taxes and change the rates but should not have the authority to do the things which he has been doing, such as legislation being enacted retroactively. I think this is important and it should be one of the matters discussed in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

I would also like to say that I am disappointed in the House leader because his long promised changes in procedures in the House of Commons have not yet appeared. This Parliament has been in session for nearly two years and I think this long delay should not be tolerated.

In examining the whole budgetary process, we must have regard to the way legislation is treated on the floor of the House. I think it is absurd that in this day and age our Standing Orders require that the budgetary bills be dealt with on the floor of the House of Commons. That requirement should be eliminated so that the legislation can be dealt with in committees so the ordinary citizens of Canada can appear before the committee and make their opinions known. It is not right that Canadians should have to make their views known through their Members of Parliament, who may or may not understand the complexity of their case. It is important to allow people to present their case directly and specifically to members sitting on the commmittee on matters as important as tax policies. That is a very important reform.

I could discuss the question of budgetary secrecy and the changes that I would like to see, but I will move now to the subject of budget basics. I generally approve of the basic thrust of the budget. For example, I think that the deficit has been far too large and that it is time we began to tackle it. It is time that the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada sang the same tune, or at least sang in harmony. For the last number of years the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance have followed one direction and the Governor of the Bank of Canada has gone the other way. I think the House should take note that for the first time they are at least trying to follow the same direction. That is a unique situation for which the Minister of Finance should be congratulated. It has not been an easy choice for him to make.

If hon. members were to review the speeches made during this debate, it would be evident that very few speeches have dealt with the budget itself. What we have heard from members on all sides of the House are pleas from individual groups of constituents who are being badly hurt by the current inflationary process. Those pleas should be made and listened to because there are casualties. However, if we look at what the solution would cost, the estimate is that if just the basic concerns were considered the government would be looking at an expenditure of a minimum of $20 million to protect the people who are caught up in the war against inflation. If we added all the expenditures that business has asked the government to make in one form or another on their behalf, we would be looking at another $20 million.

The fact of the matter is that at some point it must be decided how much revenue should be taken out of the system to spend on government programs. The government has decided to hold down the expenditures as much as possible in spite of the fact that it is carrying four massive spending programs in Canada at this time. The first of these massive spending programs is the subsidy to keep oil prices down. The amount of money the government has spent from 1974 to 1979 is $12 billion to subsidize the price of oil we import into Canada. That is a lot of money which comes out of the pocket of the average Canadian taxpayer. We are emerging from that program but the fact is that $12 billion has been spent from which there has been no real return.

The second large expenditure program is indexation. Most of our social expenditures have been indexed and, furthermore, we have indexed almost all of the revenue we get from individuals. Consequently, we have built into our spending approximately $2 million to $3 million every year, and the amount is increasing, to meet that indexation cost. This means that our expenditurs must go up to meet that cost. At the same time, we have built a decline into our revenue requirements because we have indexed the amount of revenue we are prepared to take. The cost of that indexation amounts to around $5 million a year. This is a massive spending program in itself. I think there is a general consensus in the House that we should continue that kind of program, but it costs a great deal of money.

The third spending program is—

Mr. Crombie: It is not spent.

• (1600)

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): It is money that is spent. It is money that the government must find somewhere in order to make those expenditures. For example, if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is going to spend $1 billion on, say, the guaranteed income supplement program and that is indexed to the rate of inflation, the next year she not only has to find what she started off with but she also has to find the additional; so the consequence of that is that she must find, or the government must find, that amount of money every year. And let us remember that the government is not taking the inflationary quotient that is in the economy any more because we have indexed our revenues. The revenue goes down, expenditures go up and, in my judgment, that is a massive spending program.

The third spending program is, of course, the deficit. If we look at the amount of money it takes to service the deficit, we find that the deficit now takes up some 20 per cent of the budget of the federal government.

Mr. Nielsen: You made it.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Let us go back and take a look at that. Where does that deficit come from? I wanted to know where it came from, so I went to the research department of the Bank of Canada and asked where the Canadian deficit comes from. Does it come from indexation? Does it come from spending money on the oil subsidization program? No, I was told, it comes from the reduction in income taxes, sales taxes or corporation taxes which every Minister of Finance has put into his budget since 1974. Of course, they were behaving in a good Keynesian way. They were trying to pump up the economy. Pump, pump, pump every year and that made up 90 per cent of the deficit of $14 billion. If in fact that deficit came from that expenditure of money, lowering taxes means that eventually we have to pay for it, and we pay for it through the service of the national debt. We have done it so much that we have created a situation in which that is now the fastest growing spending program of the federal government.

When hon. members tell me that they do not want to have taxes raised but that they want to have expenditures increased substantially to look after the people who are being hurt, I have to ask hon. members where the money comes from. Do we go back to the market and borrow more, squeeze out the private borrower and raise interest rates by competitive action? Do we raise taxes to try to pay if off and to control it? Or do we ask the Bank of Canada to start printing money and increase our inflation rate? I know of no other way that the Government of Canada can raise money than by those ways, and I certainly would like hon. members who come to the House of Commons to plead the case of their afflicted constituents to tell us where we are to get the money and how it should be expended.

We have a real problem in this country, and that is what this budget is all about. It is one of the first budgets I can recall which really tries to deal with the over-all financial state of the Canadian government and tries to relate it to what the Bank of Canada is doing and to Canada's position in the world. I think the Minister of Finance deserves a great deal of credit for that. I would have been happier with what the Minister of Finance had done had we had a debate on that subject in this budget debate, but if hon. members look at the speeches which have been made during this debate, they will find that the number of people who have tried to address this very difficult question is indeed very small. I say to the hon. member for Yukon that I am going to vote for this budget because it tries to address the real questions in the Canadian economy.

I want to quote an economist under whose regime we are now living. Perhaps I might better say whose regime we are leaving.

> —if (my) ideas are correct . . . it would be a mistake, I predict to dispute their potency over a period of time . . . the ideas of economists and political philosophers, both when they are right and when they are wrong, are more powerful than is commonly understood. Indeed, the world is ruled by little else. Practical men, who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influences, are usually the slaves of some defunct economist. Madmen in authority, who hear voices in the air, are distilling their frenzy from some academic scribbler of a few years back. I am sure that the power of vested interests is vastly exaggerated compared with the encroachment of ideas. Not, indeed, immediately, but after a certain interval; for in the field of economics and political philosophy there are not many who are influenced by new theories after they are twenty-five or thirty years of age, so that the ideas which civil servants and politicians and even agitators apply to current events are not likely to be the newest. But sooner or later, it is ideas, not vested interests, which are dangerous for good or evil.

For hon. members who are curious as to who wrote that, it was John Maynard Keynes in the concluding page of "The General Theory".

Mr. Crombie: What year?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): It was 1936.

One of the things which concerns us is that we seem to have come to the end of the Keynesian period. The concept of high inflation combined with high unemployment is something which is not possible under Keynesian theory. It certainly was not predicted, and certainly Keynesians have no idea how to deal with it. It may well be that the Keynesian theory, which was developed at a different time and in a different place and which was implemented by governments more or less after the Second World War, is like those sub-atomic particles which physicists study and which physicists have said that in the act of studying them, you change them.

It may be that the implementation of Lord Keynes' theory has actually changed the economy so that the theory itself no longer applies to the economy which has been created as a result of the application of that theory. I do not know. I am not an economist. I am not a trained economist, but I do know that if Lord Keynes is correct about the scribblings of madmen which are followed by politicians, civil servants and business leaders, if he is correct that the theory will be important to these people because it gets into the environment in which people move and act, and if it is true that we have come to the end of that theory, what theory do we follow when we come to framing our budgetary policies? What theory do we follow when, in our own individual lives, we come to predicting the future and making our own personal investments? If we are in the corporate sector, how do we make the same kinds of judgments about the money that is saved by ordinary people? If we do not have a road map and if we do not know where we are, how can we determine where we want to go?

I think the real dilemma right now is that there is no road map that applies. There is no consensus in economic theory in North America. Having returned from a month in Europe where I had the opportunity to talk with a great many leading politicians and civil servants about the problems their economies in the Common Market were facing, I can tell hon. members that they also have no road map at all. If we examine what is going on in the world, we will see that each country has taken a different tack. The countries of the world have tried different theories, and at the present time the world is a laboratory of conflicting economic theory being put into practice. All of us in the OECD countries are suffering from the same malaise. We are all suffering from high unemployment, high interest rates and a lack of markets, and it seems to me that if in fact these conditions of the disease are not unique to Canada but are found in almost every other country, the best we can do is try to analyse our own set of circumstances and cut our cloth according to those circumstances. We should be examining with a great deal of care what is going on in other countries so that we can see perhaps more of the forest and less of the trees, where some of the paths go and avoid going down some of the dead-end alleys.

It strikes me that we have not yet begun that part of the exercise in Canada because the debates up until now show that this has been a subject most hon. members have avoided like the plague. I admit that I have no answers, but I do say that the Minister of Finance is about the only politician in this country who has attempted to grapple with these questions and to take the Canadian economy, and particularly the financial status of the Government of Canada, and try to put it on a new track and combine what is going on in the operations of the Government of Canada with those of the Bank of Canada. As I said, this is the first time in a long time that a Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have been going down the same path. While it may not lead us to the promised land, Mr. Speaker, it is a lot better than to have them go in opposite directions. On that basis, it is a decision which impresses me enough that I can happily vote for the budget, with no regret.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable care and attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). The hon. member went into the question of economic theory, a matter that I shall return to in the last couple of minutes of what I have to say.

One of the great things about budgets is that they tell the truth. Whether a budget is a family budget, a national budget, a provincial budget or a municipal budget, budgets do a couple of things. First of all, it tells exactly where one is in relation to the numbers one has to work with; it tells the people in a family or in a nation what kind of vision the government might have, what kind of philosophy operates behind the budget.

Unfortunately, in the last number of years it has been very difficult for people to understand budgets. Budgets have become incredibly complicated. If I may, Mr. Speaker, let me read one quote which I had from the now President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) when he made a comment with respect to what had recently happened to budgets. He said that budgets had now taken up more time and more energy by accountants and lawyers than it would have taken had they been involved in some productive labour—that is the final part of the quote. Because, indeed, it is difficult for ordinary individual taxpayers to understand how they are being affected by the budget. It is even more complicated for people in small and medium-sized businesses to understand what indeed is happening to them.

The other night the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) rose in his place and said: "I have for you a budget which does three things: it is going to give restraint"—everyone is in favour of restraint—"it is going to offer equity"—everyone is in favour of fairness—"it is going to offer recovery"—we are all desperately seeking recovery, Mr. Speaker. When he said those things, most people said, that is right, that is what we want. Those honeyed words of "restraint", "equity" and "recovery" were just what everyone wanted to hear. That is why the initial response to the budget in the newspapers, on radio and television was something like "a neutral budget". One newspaper was quoted as stating that. Someone else called it "a stand pat budget". Another said "housekeeping".

The fact of the matter is that initially everyone listened not to the budget but to the words about the budget. They did not listen to the song but to the singer. Every time one does that, one tends to lose the reality of what is happening. Indeed, many people of this country began to be seduced into saying: "Gee, I guess it is all right". That was until, of course, they were able to read more, listen more, think more, and then the whole thing began to unravel before their very eyes. Because it was a budget not of any large slash; it was a budget of one thousands cuts. The cuts were not in the budget, but it affected increasingly more and more people. As those little circles began to go towards the shore, hon. members of the House, journalists, the media and other people who observed the scene began to get the effects of those ripples. The gathering storm about this budget got bigger and bigger and bigger. It will not go away, Mr. Speaker. I should like to explain to the Chair and to the House why I believe the gathering storm hovering over the Minister of Finance and hovering over this country will not go away. The demand for the revision of the budget will increase daily. It is increasing now and it will increase in the future.

Let me look, first of all, at the question of equity. Indeed, when the Minister of Finance read the budget speech, he spent most of his time on equity. He had little to say about restraint, and even less to say about recovery. He spent most of his time on equity, because he knows that Canadians are instinctively fair-minded people who like to have fair treatment. They like to have fair treatment for themselves and they like to have fair treatment for other Canadians.

Let us look at the second principle in the budget, equity. Whom does this budget favour? Where is the equity? For whom does that equity flow in this budget? Is it fair, Mr. Speaker, to home owners? There are 1.2 million home owners who will renegotiate their mortgages over the next few months at interest rates which are not only unacceptable but impossible for them to manage on the money they earn. The minister responsible for housing, who is present in the House, knows that from a CMHC report from his officials. CMHC predicts that 40,000 Canadians will lose their homes in the next short while. Is that the fairness that is supposed to be in the budget? Is that the equity, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Evans: I want facts.

Mr. Crombie: The hon. member wants facts, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member will allow me the short time I am allowed, and if he takes notes, he will have them. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) should take some notes, because there are people in his constituency who would like to know what those facts are. They know the facts that are affecting them. For example, look at renters, Mr. Speaker. There is no choice now in this country as to whether or not one will rent an apartment or a home as opposed to owning a home. The vacancy rate in this country is now at 0.3. According to the budget of the Minister of Finance in 1983 the vacancy rate will approach zero. That is a fact, I say to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre. If one were to examine the budget, there is no choice any more for renters in this country. We are supposed to build 90,000 new rental units to keep up with the demand we already have. At best, if one were to use the figures to the best of their ability, the budget offers 15,000. That is not fair.

I spent yesterday in All Saints Church in downtown Toronto. It is now called the "Church of last resort". Every hostel space in Toronto now has one and a half claims on it. There are 50 per cent more people looking for space than we have available in hostels alone. Is that fair?

What about the unemployed? Maybe they see that the equity comes to the unemployed in this budget. There are almost one million people on record looking for work in this country. That is 8.2 per cent of the work force, including 62,000 people in the residential construction industry alone. Is it fair to them? The unemployment rate for native people in this country is 35 per cent to 75 per cent. Is it fair to them?

Forty-one per cent of the women in this country who are sole supporters for their families live below the Stats Canada poverty line. Is that fair? Is that what the government means by "fair"? Maybe it is fair to the young people, I say to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre. Maybe that is what the hon. member means. The unemployment rate for young people between the ages of 15 and 24 is 14.1 per cent. Every time one reads the unemployment figures, Mr. Speaker, one should remember that 44 per cent of those figures represents people between the ages of 15 and 24. That is not fair.

Is the government doing anything about job creation in this budget? There is not one new initiative in the budget with regard to job creation. Out of all of the pages in the whole of the budget, there is only one page that deals with human resource development. They did not even use the entire page. It called for a comprehensive review of job creation in the 1980s. It is now almost 1982. The time for job creation for the 1980s was in the 1970s, so that young people would have a chance. Is there any opportunity for growth in our educational institutions to train young people in technical and technological fields? The answer is no. The government is cutting back $5.7 billion over the next five years in grants to educational institutions which engage in technical and technological education. Is that fair? Is that what the government means by fair.

Is it equity? For whom is it equity? Is it equity for small and medium-sized businesses? Do they remember small and medium-sized businesses? First, small and medium-sized businesses create the majority of new jobs.

Mr. Evans: This is the same speech you have given for the last number of years. Get down to the details.

Mr. Crombie: Second, they make a major contribution to growth in the country through technological innovation. Third, all these businesses are technologically and research intensive. I have mentioned these things about small and medium-sized businesses because the clack over there who keep yelling will pay for it dearly when they meet with their constituents. They know this from their own mail and telephone calls. The government, through this budget, dealt a body blow to small and medium-sized businesses from which they may never recover for years to come. This is why the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which represents 63,000 businesses in the country, declared war on the government, on the budget and on the minister. The federation did this because it knew that the budget offered absolutely no opportunity for investment, which creates jobs.

Perhaps it is fair to senior citizens. One in every three people over the age of 65 lives below the Statistics Canada poverty line; 350,000 women over the age of 65 live below the poverty line. Of those between the ages of 55 and 64, 39.4 per cent live below the poverty line; between the ages of 65 and 69, 34.6 per cent; over the age of 70, 48 per cent. I notice the hon. member for Ottawa Centre is not paying any attention to these facts. The reason I mention senior citizens is because absolutely no relief was promised them in the budget. Worse, the government has prated about the necessity of pension plans in the private sector being better so that they serve more Canadians. The budget taxed registered retirement savings plans and life insurance policies.

Mr. Evans: That is untrue and you know it.

Mr. Crombie: That is what the budget did to people who have worked hard for decades to save money and put it away on a monthly basis against their old age. The government decided to take as much of it as it could. Hon. members opposite do not like to hear this because they know it is the truth.

Mr. Evans: It is totally false.

Mr. Crombie: What about equity and recovery? The budget is an unmitigated and uncovered attack on incentive, individual effort and creative spirit.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) was interested in how we were to get new money. He was very interested and concerned about the theory of getting money to pay for things. One theory which has always worked is to ensure that those who want to invest and to create jobs are allowed to do it. It is not a government budget which creates wealth. Is is the people of the country who create wealth, and it is the budget which is holding them back. That is how they get money for programs.

The gathering storm will continue because there is a smell of tragedy about the budget. People really know this down deep. It said to people: "Remember how you used to think you could get ahead? Forget it. Remember how you used to think there were chances and opportunities? Forget those."

The budget needs to be revised. Indeed I predict, despite what the clack says, that the Minister of Finance will revise the budget. Because he must revise it, and he must listen to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The federation set out the following rather neatly in the newspaper today:

> The MacEachen budget is not what it seems to be. It is a sly, devious document that nearly fooled us all.

Absolutely, and this is why the minister will change the budget. Hon. members opposite who do not want to listen to the truth will have to find something else to say, because the people of the country will not stand for a budget which locks their future behind doors.

[Translation]

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to speak in the budget debate. First I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on his choice of the three important themes that form the basis of his budget: restraint, equity and economic renewal. A number of the budget's provisions, including tax relief for owners of small businesses and farmers who are severely affected by interest rates, are very important to thousands of my constituents. Many low-income families in my riding will benefit from tax reductions as a result of a tax rebate. This special rebate now stands at 9 per cent of income tax, with a minimum of $200 and a maximum of $500. From now on, it will be set at $200 for all taxpayers, while married taxpayers will be able to claim $200 more for their dependent spouse. Since indexing of personal income has been maintained, personal exemptions for a family of four will be raised from $7,230 to $8,110 next year, while the child tax credit will increase from $261 to $293 per child, as a result of indexing and the budget measures.

The average family of four will be able to earn about $15,000 in 1982 without paying income tax to the government of Canada. These measures, and others I shall be mentioning later in my speech, should have a beneficial effect in my riding. I could of course spend my allotted time on subjects of national interest only, but I prefer to use half for these and half for issues that are directly of interest to my constituents. The first half of my speech will concern important issues in my riding. One of these is the increasing involvement of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in my riding of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle. The department's financial contribution will play a very important role in boosting the region's economy. Under the Canada-Quebec subsidiary agreement on development of tourism, the Minister of DREE (Mr. De Bané) suggested to his Quebec counterpart last July that the scope of the agreement could be enlarged to include a new program to support the development of international standard ski resorts, such as Mont Sainte-Marie which is going to be one of the most important resorts of its kind in Canada.

This measure will involve expenditures totalling $13 million, 60 per cent of which is to be paid by the Canadian government and 40 per cent by the government of the province of Quebec. Thus, DREE's contribution under this agreement will be $7.8 million. Mont Sainte-Marie will be the first activity supported under this component of the agreement. The government of Canada is willing to participate financially in developing this fantastic resort location. I fail to understand why the government of Quebec has not yet made its position clear, and in so doing is postponing indefinitely an important project in a region that urgently needs jobs. DREE is also involved in road construction in the region. For instance, construction of the Maniwaki-Témiscamingue highway is being financed 60 per cent by the government of Canada, which is paying $15 million of the total cost of $25 million, while the remaining $10 million is to be paid by the province of Quebec. This permanent highway linking Maniwaki to Témiscamingue is part of the Canada-Quebec subsidiary agreement on forestry development. This access road to forest resources in the area will provide a more rational development of the huge hardwood and softwood lots while promoting tourism.

Under the Canada-Quebec agreement on forest development, another road which will also give access to forest resources and promote tourist development will connect with the Maniwaki-Témiscamingue highway in the Pontiac at Lake Nilgault. The section under construction extends from the Bois-Franc Road at Fort-Coulonge to Lake Jim. According to the agreement signed between the two levels of government and the lumber companies E. B. Eddy and Consolidated Bathurst, 50 per cent of the cost will be paid by the governments and 50 per cent by the companies involved. Under an auxiliary agreement on major roads, expenditures estimated at $36 million are earmarked for the reconstruction of highway 117 from St-Jovite in the Laurentians to Louvincourt in the Abitibi. This highway goes through Mont-Laurier in the north of the Gatineau constituency near Grand-Remous. The federal contribution is $21,600,000 and that of Quebec $14,400,000.

Mr. Speaker, I had suggested some time ago that the Government of Canada sponsor an information day in the Pontiac area of my constituency. The Pontiac Businessmen Association agreed to sponsor it itself and it was effectively held last March. On that occasion, four federal departments sent representatives to explain their programs and policies to businessmen and others. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) attended the closing ceremony of the information day and this was much appreciated by the audience. This event gave rise to substantial achievements, since DREE decided to undertake a study on the economic revival of the Pontiac. This study has now been completed and I am convinced that it will help greatly to find the necessary solutions to promote the rational development of the Pontiac area of this large constituency.

Tomorrow night, Mr. Speaker, together with officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and some Quebec government representatives, I will take part in Campbells Bay in a luncheon sponsored once again by the Pontiac Businessmen Association. I hope that during the discussions that will follow, we will be able to set in motion an action plan for the citizens of Pontiac. Again recently, the representatives of the City of Maniwaki and the Upper Gatineau Development Association appeared before the Subcommittee on Regional Economic Expansion at the hearings it held in Sherbrooke and submitted briefs in which they asked DREE to get involved more directly in the economic revival of the Upper Gatineau Valley. The DREE study group will meet shortly to consider the feasability of sponsoring a study on the economic renewal of the Upper Gatineau Valley. I certainly hope, following the studies carried out in Pontiac and those which are very likely to be carried out in the Upper Gatineau Valley, that DREE will decide to make this a designated area. DREE would thus be able to get involved unilaterally and directly in the economic renewal of this constituency, without having to wait for Quebec's requests which are sometimes very long in coming.

Mr. Speaker, another very interesting program for the constituency is that initiated on November 3 by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. The first Local Economic Development Assistance Agency—or ADEL as it is known in Quebec—was officially inaugurated on that day in Maniwaki. This new organization, known as the LEDA Agency of Upper Gatineau, obtained a grant of $250,000 for its first year of operation. Out of this, some $150,000 will be used to stimulate employment, and the remaining $100,000 will pay the costs of technical and administrative assistance to businesses. The financial involvement of the agency in the projects it will receive will be through loans or the purchase of shares, up to a maximum of $25,000 per business. Up to now, only twelve such agencies have been established throughout Canada. The creation of this LEDA Agency in the Upper Gatineau Valley should continue to create new jobs, thereby contributing to the fight against unemployment which is an all-permeating cancer in this region. I hope that in the near future two other areas of the constituency, namely, Pontiac and Labelle, will get LEDA agencies of their own. In order to encourage job creation, the Government of Canada has granted, through the Department of Employment and Immigration, a $99,000 subsidy to the Société coopérative d'action et d'initiative municipale de Notre-Dame-de-Pontmain under a LEAP project. This subsidy has made possible the creation of 5 jobs over a one year period. During this planning stage, the employees of the project will look into the feasibility of setting up a plant for manufacturing chip-wood planks.

Once the planning stage is over and if the study proves that such a project would be profitable and viable, the promoters might be given additional grants to carry it out. Mr. Speaker, over the past five years the government of Canada through the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has invested in excess of $11 million to repair, modernize and alter hundreds of houses in the various municipalities of the riding. At least a third of those $11 million were in the form of direct grants and the balance was made up of long term loans at very attractive prime rates. Besides making it possible for the owners of those houses to live in better conditions, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program did create new jobs while at the same time encouraging local building material dealers.

Mr. Speaker, we should note as well the importance of all the other programs implemented by the government of Canada in the housing area, such as the low-rental houses which were built in a number of municipalities in the riding, and financed mostly by the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as well as homes for senior citizens, the Neighbourhood Improvement Program in the urban centres of Maniwaki and Mont-Laurier, and the Community Services Contribution Program. Mr. Speaker, the farmers in my riding are among the most active in Canada. Our beef producers rank first in Quebec since they account for more than one third of the total production of the province.

Just recently I had the opportunity to meet here in Ottawa with a representative group of feed lot operators from Pontiac. Also present were officials from the Farm Credit Corporation, the small business secretariat and Agriculture Canada, including an adviser from the minister's office and representatives of two banks. These beef producers explained the reasons they are encountering very grave financial difficulties. The discussion explored ways by which the measures announced in the budget could be quickly implemented in order to help these producers. It was agreed that decisions were needed in the coming weeks in order for measures to be effective.

I support these initiatives and trust that the solutions can be found very quickly.

I also had an opportunity to meet the spokesmen for the dairy producers of my riding who told me about their worries concerning the financial difficulties they are facing, as are all Canadians. They are impatiently awaiting the announcement which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will be making about the forthcoming dairy year as soon as the special study now under way is received and analysed. Dairy production is a major component of the economy of our area and I echo the wishes of the producers that the policy will be based on hard facts, that it will be a fair policy which will continue to provide producers with an adequate income which will give them a standard of living to match their work load and their productivity. I am pleased to note that in his budget the Minister of Finance kept the farmers in mind, particularly those whose financial situation is rather shaky. They could benefit from special loans from the Farm Credit Corporation whose interest rates are lower by as much as five percentage points, which would bring current rates of 16.75 per cent down to 11.75 per cent. Thus they will henceforth be eligible under the Small Business Development Bond program. Mr. Speaker, ever since the "Petit train du Nord" has been discontinued, some 5,000 electors, mostly in my riding, have made representations and four very specific recommendations which I have been glad to support.

These recommendations were basically as follows: That the railway be maintained and that the freight train remain in operation, that the "little train" occasionally, as for special events, go up to Mont-Laurier, that the opportunity of providing an electric train service in the region be studied, and that the Mont-Laurier station be declared a heritage building. Last Sunday, I also attended a public meeting on that same issue in Mont-Laurier with about a hundred people concerned about the future of the rail service between Montreal and Mont-Laurier. We discussed these four recommendations. During the meeting, I was able to discuss with those people for three or four hours and trade views and ideas with them on this issue.

With respect to urea formaldehyde foam insulation, I am fully aware that this might inconvenience some homeowners of my riding as well as elsewhere in the country, but I agree with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that we must await the results of the tests conducted throughout the country so that the action that will be decided upon is based on the recommendations and findings of the commission of inquiry. I hope that the study will be completed as quickly as possible and that the action taken is fair for all concerned.

Another important issue in my riding, Mr. Speaker, is Camp Gatineau. For several years and especially in the last weeks I have spared no effort to avoid the closing of the camp. The camp is located within Gatineau park, on NCC land, and accommodates every year several hundred mentally handicapped people from Quebec, most of whom come from outside the Ottawa Valley. I was quite happy, especially in this international year of the disabled, to hear the Minister of DREE announce that his department was immediately going to approach the Quebec government so that the Camp Gatineau renewal project and the $450,000 required, would be included in the Quebec-Canada subsidiary agreement on tourism development in order to achieve the objectives of this camp for the handicapped.

In view of all the facts that I have so far highlighted in my remarks, you will no doubt have realized by now, Mr. Speaker, that I am speaking for this region. That is indeed the case because I am fully aware of the tremendous efforts made up to now in order to improve the standard of living of my constituents. But increased efforts and considerable help will be needed in order to stimulate the economy of the region and thus encourage job creation and check unemployment which is endemic in this riding. The residents of the area want stable and permanent jobs. They are grateful for the economic benefits as well as for the many temporary jobs created by community development projects, as well as for the services and equipment made available to them. However, with a budget of $1.8 million for this winter, we all know that these are only temporary jobs and these people are concerned about the future because they hope to find permanent jobs in the area, particularly in the riding of Pontiac-Papineau-Labelle, in order to stop the flow of people leaving for more promising areas.

[English]

I would now like to speak as the former chairman of the Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution which was established on May 23, 1980. I am pleased that the budget contains measures dealing with energy. This seven-man, all-party special committee was given a mandate to explore and report upon new energy sources, technologies and fuels of potential interest to Canada, with particular regard to the technical and economic feasibility of their introduction. One year of intensive study and research was needed before the committee was able to arrive at conclusions and make its recommendations.

On the basis of the array of information, opinion and first-hand observation, the committee tabled a remarkable document containing 65 specific recommendations. The report looks ahead 50 years and foresees a fundamentally altered energy system in Canada.

[Translation]

Hydro-electric generation will continue to increase until our whole hydraulic potential has been nearly exhausted, probably early in the forthcoming century. The committee has found low-heads of water of growing interest and, in particular, small generating stations; it would appear that the technology involved is also ready to be exported. Considering Canada's conventional energy infrastructure and its evolution, how can alternative energy sources which seem so promising be integrated into it? The solution becomes more obvious when one turns the question around and looks at the energy markets in need of supplies. From that point of view, the advantages of hydrogen as a fuel or energy currency become obvious.

[English]

In line with one of the recommendations contained in the report, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr.

Lalonde) announced in July that the federal government will increase funds for energy research and development by $35 million. The increased funds will provide more technical support for the following policy priorities which were established in the National Energy Program: developing new liquid fuel alternatives to gasoline; increasing the efficiency of energy use in all sectors of the economy; developing environmentally acceptable alternatives to oil and gas; and ensuring the continuing development of conventional energy for the benefit of all Canadians.

[Translation]

The study made by the committee has enabled us to discover that converting our conventional energy infrastructure is quite a challenge especially because of its magnitude, its complexity and the massive investments it involves. If we are aiming at such a restructuring, then, according to the committee, the hard facts of life will have to be faced. We shall have to put our resources to other uses, provoking in all likelihood the protests of the affected sectors of industry. We shall have to expect new attitudes and new technologies, both of which will require considerable time. The public will have to recognize the need to change and adapt to new energy systems. In addition, as the elected representatives of the people usually know very little about technology, one wonders who in fact will advocate the change. Finally, it is becoming increasingly difficult to make radical decisions in today's society.

● (1650)

[English]

The members also considered it essential to formulate their recommendations in view of a guiding philosophy. Consequently the report lays out principles or concerns which the committee felt very strongly should form the foundation for domestic energy planning. These policy elements are energy conservation, progressively greater reliance on sustainable energy sources, minimal environmental disruption, greater diversity in Canada's energy mix, recognition of regional differences in energy resources and requirements, acknowledgment of strategic concerns, and consideration of the social implications of altering our nation's energy system.

[Translation]

At first glance, one might wonder at finding conservation under the heading "Alternative Energy Sources, Currencies and Technologies". But the committee was drawn to the conclusion that conservation should be looked upon as a source of energy, and an important one at that for Canada, especially because we have never been particularly concerned about energy efficiency in the past. Energy has always come cheap in Canada and that explains why our economy has evolved in such a way that we now use more energy per dollar of gross national product than any other industrialized country in the world. Paradoxically, this means that while our wasteful consumer habits of the past might have been regrettable, we now have a major energy source available because of conservation, which source can be used more easily and more economically than any other existing resource. By reducing demand, we increase the relative value of existing energy supplies. Many witnesses who appeared before the committee stated that conservation should be the starting point of any alternative energy strategy, and we fully agree. We can view conservation as a reduced utilization of a resource in the short term to have more available in the long term.

The members of the committee would like all housing financed by the Canadian government to be built in accordance with conservation principles and to use passive solar heating to show the benefits of such systems. Energy performance standards should be incorporated into the National Building Code to promote innovation and conservation in building concepts. Both commercial and residential buildings should make use of lighting systems which do not waste electricity. Mr. Speaker, as those who spoke before me, I shall conclude my comments in a few moments so that other members can have an opportunity to speak as the debate will end this evening. In closing, I would simply like to say that I shall come back to the issue of new and renewable energy sources in the future. I think that the committee has tabled a very important report. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has already announced several initiatives based on our recommendations and I am convinced that there will be more in the future. I think that this report can be very important for our energy future in Canada because its recommendations can not only help Canada to become self-sufficient in oil supplies, but will also contribute to the creation of thousands of jobs in Canada in export industries thanks to new technologies developed in this country. Mr. Speaker, I believe that during these few minutes, I have been able to outline vitally important issues for the future of my constituents and for the energy future of Canada in general.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me this opportunity to comment on a budget that many people have described as inadequate under the present circumstances, both as it affects my province and as it affects the entire country.

This evening we are being asked to support a budget that should normally be in tune with the present economic conditions. We are being asked to support a document that is absolutely devastating for the entire Canadian economy, a document that is totally unacceptable, and that, according to thousands of Canadians, will leave Canada in an economic quagmire. I feel it is also important to point out that in other speeches I have heard, especially from the government benches, the minister has been approached with a number of suggestions, a fact that in itself should be ample proof of the inadequacy of this budget vis-à-vis the problems facing the people in their ridings.

It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, and I think Canadians will realize this in the medium term and I hope even sooner, that the budgets we have had in the last fifteen years have been remarkable for their ineptness and that they have been unable to provide a sufficient stimulus to the Canadian economy. And going back a little over the past fifteen years, we realize that things are going from bad to worse, and that despite the projections our Ministers of Finance have given us over the last fifteen years, no solution has been found, nor has it been possible to realize this famous equity which the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has said he would make a reality. My colleague from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) proved earlier that the commitments made by the Minister of Finance and his concept of equity, as presented in the budget, will be impossible to realize. In his speech, the member for Rosedale proved time and time again that the budget is unfair to thousands of Canadians. In my riding, as in the rest of Canada, Mr. Speaker, farmers and workers are very concerned.

From what has been said by members from every part of Canada, it is clear that the Canadian people are anxious, they are concerned and cannot be sure what the future holds in store, and they will certainly find no reassurances in the measures contained in this budget, and, quite frankly and objectively, these measures are certainly not going to set the minister and his government the confidence he is seeking from the House. I know perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, that the members on the government benches will have to support the budget, with probably more reservations than ever before. Those members are well aware that farmers are not getting what they need from this budget, that workers did not get what they were seeking, that homeowners will have to wait and spend another winter in an untenable position, that tenants will not get what they were promised and so on for thousands of Canadians. The members on the government benches are very familiar with the reactions of the business world and various organizations and sectors. But the system being what it is, they will have to support the Minister of Finance and hope and pray.

Earlier, I heard some comments from hon. members who were quite rightly seeking from the minister a number of corrective measures to remedy the omission or absence of adequate measures in the budget. Figures have been given and statistics have been put before the House, but the fact remains that the Canadian people not only have a right to be concerned, they will also have to remain in a limbo of uncertainty as a result of a totally inadequate budget. During question period the minister will try, as he has on other occasions, to make Canadians believe that with his budget cuts, Canada will get back on the road to prosperity, and that is just not true! I feel that Canadians are at least entitled to know the truth. The situation is alarming, and the economic policies that have been presented by the present government during the last fifteen years have brought Canada to the brink of bankruptcy. Members opposite will consider this an exaggeration, but this is the situation which we are now facing, and thousands of Canadians, thousands of unemployed, are concerned about the absence of appropriate action.

Some will ask me if I have the solution myself. Since Canada has been left to drift for so long, it is of course impossible to find a miraculous solution in 24 hours. This would be unthinkable and it is impossible to correct such a situation immediately, but it is important for Canadians to recognize that it is this Liberal government which is responsible for that kind of brinkmanship. This is the situation. Mr. Speaker, no government member and no minister can assure Canadians that the situation will improve in the short term. This situation has been brought about by the marked incompetence of past ministers of finance and the members who have supported them in the last 15 years.

I am thinking especially about the farmers and the homeowners. The absence of appropriate action in the areas of housing and the building industry has created the dilemna now facing the country. The minister responsible for housing has demonstrated that he can no longer cope. He was unable to convince the Minister of Finance to provide sufficient funds to meet the demand. Because of this, the budget does not promote recovery of the building industry, which has been frozen for 18 months, or nearly two years, creating unemployment and putting Canadians in a terrible situation. The budget does not meet housing needs, and every member of the House realizes it.

Mr. Peterson: Untrue!

Mr. La Salle: They say that it is untrue. It is incredible, Mr. Speaker! The budget does not meet our needs and those who want to be honest will have to recognize it. This lack of policy in the field of construction and housing has been costly for Canadians. And I could say the same about agriculture. Nearly every member has met with farmers from my constituency and elsewhere and representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the UPA in Quebec, and so on recently. Farmers are very concerned about the lack of action of the government and the minister concerning dairy policies, for instance. The minister has not applied the indexing formula to dairy producers, which he should normally have done in August. The minister has not announced his five-year plan as he was supposed to do last April, and the Minister of Finance has not provided the necessary funds for the Farm Credit Corporation. Moreover, dairy producers still do not know what to expect and they fear that the subsidies on dairy products will be abolished or reduced.

I think that all the members of this House whose constituency includes dairy producers want the minister to announce his policies as soon as possible, before January 1. I hope that he will do so and I take this opportunity to appeal to the Minister of Agriculture, who is responsible for a very important industry, at least in my province and also in Ontario, since the dairy industry is centralized in those two provinces. I believe that it is important for the Minister of Agriculture to make these announcements as soon as possible, to ensure dairy producers that the subsidies will be maintained and to apply the indexing formula based on production costs.

Moreover, as farmers already have told the Minister of Finance, this budget does not respond to the financial needs of the farming community, and this scarcity of funds may force our agriculture into stagnation as it did with the construction industry, a tremendously important industry, and this in turn will mean increased unemployment. The budget does not provide for these two areas, absolutely not, and this is affecting thousands of Canadians because there is no resumption of activity in the building industry and a lack of funds to maintain and promote agriculture.

An hon. member referred earlier to the victims of urea-formaldehyde foam insulation. The government has remained absolutely mute on this. They felt that there was no need to provide funds to help those victims, and this is serious in my view. We are aware that thousands of Canadians are faced with that problem. We are aware that thousands of homeowners have problems not only with their mortgage costs but also with toxic foam insulation. The government or the responsible minister have not yet seen fit to recommend a special fund to help the victims clean up those homes, at a cost of thousands of dollars. I know perfectly well that the government, aware of the scope of that problem, does not dare get involved because this will prove too costly. Can you imagine leaving the whole burden with the home owners? The minister involved suggests that when the review is completed, he will see to it that the people responsible pay the costs.

It seems to me that if the minister had any sense of responsibility, he would accept recommending to Treasury Board that a special fund be established to help the victims. After such an investigation, it will be much easier for the government to recoup the expenses from the responsible parties. For the time being the government, through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) denies any responsibility in the matter. Let the investigation follow its course. But what if the government is responsible? Government actions lead us to wonder about its own responsibility. Anyway, it has a moral obligation because this is a social problem, and I submit that the government should now help the victims with something more than a promise of an investigation or of certain services.

I would also like to refer briefly to the amazing discovery made by the Minister of Finance. All of a sudden, the Minister of Finance, in his budget, has mentioned loopholes. He was going to recoup thousands of dollars, if not millions, from those loopholes. Big joke, Mr. Speaker! Because those provisions, those loopholes were developed and provided for by the same government. These so-called tax incentives were designed to stimulate the Canadian economy. That selfsame government had allowed some Canadians tax relief in conjunction with the purchase of goods and services and in other ways. But what that government had considered as incentives for years, the minister now sees in a different light. All of a sudden he says: I have made the discovery of the century. I shall recover billions of tax dollars and sneakily trap the Canadian to whom those advantages were offered. Because in fact Canadians had been encouraged to avail themselves of those loopholes. Today, these are plugged up without notice. We know hundreds of Canadians will have problems as a result of that radical step.

I have no quarrel with changing tax measures occasionally, it has to be done. But let no one have me believe that suddenly the minister grows vigilant when taking away what Canadians were granted a few years earlier. And above all, let no one claim that those Canadians were bad citizens because they availed themselves of those loopholes. Those people have never intended to cheat Revenue Canada, not at all! They simply used what measures the government had made available which, I say it again, were considered as relief and incentives. The government may have had a change of heart because of circumstances. Still, I wish it had kept its word and honoured its long-term commitments which benefit many Canadians, even if it did have to put an end to them in due course. I think it is nothing but sheer hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, and certainly no proof of outstanding quality, when the Minister of Finance gives the impression that he has found something really exceptional.

Two or three times, and perhaps more, I heard my colleagues from Quebec mention the difficulties which our industries in Quebec and Canada are facing, and the best example I can give is that I heard the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) say this afternoon that they regretted and deplored the decision taken by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) with respect to a particular industry in their regions. Well, I have one at home and it is the footwear industry.

Those members who sit on the government side have been down on their knees over the past few days and again this afternoon urging the minister to pay special attention to the footwear industry. That makes sense because it is now obvious that the measures announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce fall far short of the mark. Just as I did not so long ago during question period, they acknowledged that we have already lost 4,000 jobs in that sector since 1981 and that the corrective steps or measures announced by the minister just will not solve the problem. So now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is being urged to reconsider those measures. I therefore hope that all hon. members, particularly our colleagues on the government side, will convince him that the situation has to be reviewed.

As can be seen in the industry and elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, the budget measures are not quite the remedy required in this case. This is where we have to make a choice when a measure is introduced, and we can certainly not congratulate the Minister of Finance when we known full well that practically every day those small and medium-sized businesses have to shut down. Of course, the government will say that it has created thousands of jobs over the past five, ten or fifteen years. The fact remains that 15 years ago we had 300,000 idle workers in this country whereas we now have over one million. Something is amiss. During that period, the country was run almost entirely by the same party. I think the citizens of this country have a right to question the ability of this government and to deny it its confidence. Members on this side of the House obviously cannot put their confidence in a government which shows such blatant incompetence and which has failed once again to bring down a budget likely to restore confidence and reassure the Canadian people. I hope that when the budget bills are introduced in the House a majority of members will be able to bring the government back to reason and force it, by way of legislation, to improve the proposals made, which, in our opinion, are simply not good enough.

Finally, and I will end on this note, I cannot forget the confidence that the voters of Joliette recently put in me when I asked them to tell the government that it had failed with regard to interest rates, the fight against inflation and also with respect to energy costs, in particular the cost of gas. I will not go back to the constitutional vision, as we have just passed a resolution on that. Last August 17, Mr. Speaker, the riding of Joliette, through thousands of voters, asked me to give the government the message that the people were dissatisfied, that they could no longer tolerate the lack of adequate measures with regard to the present economic situation. It is clear, even though the government does not want to admit it to the people, that we are facing very hard months ahead. It is clear that the budget will not correct nor reverse the trend. It is also clear that unemployment will increase in the next few months. I may be accused of being pessimistic, but I think it is important for the people of Canada to realize that this government is incapable of the economic leadership required to remedy the situation.

Considering, as I say, that unemployment will increase and that the economic situation will only worsen, I can only hope that in the short term we will take the opportunity to show the government our disapproval of the blatant incompetence it has shown during the last decade. That is it. I will give others the opportunity to take part in this debate, but I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that on behalf of all my constituents and of thousands of Canadians, I do not intend to support this budget and pretend that we can have confidence in a government that has been deceiving us for so long with measures that are inadequate and incapable of improving the present situation.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, budgets such as the one presented on November 12 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are quite complicated documents and deserve thoughtful attention. This is particularly true of some of those aspects of the budget which are not easily understood and which are not readily identifiable as affecting the immediate self-interests of individuals or groups but which, nevertheless, have a great impact on the lives of all Canadians.

A good example of such an area of concern, to which there is devoted a separate document in the budget papers, is the area of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, a subject I hope I will be able to reflect upon usefully in the next thirty minutes in the context of the proposals of the Liberal government. It is a concern which I hope will command some attention, as I look at an empty press gallery, even though it must compete with such highlights as inadequate mortgage legislation, the dogmatic monetarism of the Liberal Party, tax changes supposedy for the sake of equity which hurt the middle class but leave the rich unscathed, and the shameless retreat of the Liberal Party from the pursuit of controlling our own economy.

Nevertheless, the two aspects of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which I wish to address today are established programs financing and the cuts which the government proposes in these transfer payments to the provinces and equalization payments, or the equalization formula, and the proposal of the Liberal government to use Ontario as the standard to which all other provinces will be equalized.

I feel much more qualified to comment on these matters than I would have prior to last spring, at which time I had the opportunity of being the New Democratic Member of Parliament on the seven-person, all-party special parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangments which released the report entitled "Fiscal Federalism in Canada" on August 30. As a task force we visited all ten provincial capitals as well as the capitals in the territories, in addition to three weeks of public hearings here in Ottawa. It was a tremendous learning experience for me about Canada, about federalism and about what has been called the nuts and bolts of Canadian federalism, the fiscal arrangements which provide for the existence of many programs and services which Canadians take for granted.

However, at the end of a long and sometimes difficult process the task force produced a unanimous report, and later I hope I shall have cause to refer to some of the recommendations in our report.

The established programs financing, hereinafter in my speech referred to as EPF, is that part of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which provides federal funding to the provinces in the form of block funding for those services which come under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, the Medical Care Act and federal support for post-secondary education.

In 1977 health and post-secondary education shared cost programs were integrated in a block-funding arrangement between the federal government and the provinces. The purpose of this significant change was twofold. It was to provide the federal government with more fiscal predictability than it had under previous arrangements wherein its spending was directly related to provincial spending, and in the same way the new arrangements were to act as a ceiling for the federal government, which was a form of restraint. I think it is important to note that the restraint began back in 1977, not in 1981.

There were also a number of benefits for the provincial governments in the new arrangement in 1977. They would not have to spend a dollar in order to get a dollar from the federal government, as they did under the shared cost programs, thus giving them more incentive to reduce costs. And with block funding they would be freer to innovate, unencumbered by the task of having to meet federal cost sharing criteria, a task which sometimes distorted provincial priorities. If they could receive cost sharing for the provision of acute care beds and not for chronic care beds, they tended to provide more acute care beds and neglect the need for chronic care beds. That is just an example of what I mean by distorting provincial priorities.

The block funding arrangement for health care and post-secondary education has received much criticism since 1977. Basically these criticisms have focused on the fact that the percentage of provincial spending on health care and post-secondary education has gone down significantly since 1977, with a corresponding decrease in the quality and availability of these services. Unfortunately, most provinces did not seize the opportunity to be creative in the new arrangement. Instead, they used their newfound spending autonomy to save money at the expense of the programs by allowing the guaranteed federal moneys to form a larger and larger percentage of spending in these areas. To a certain extent this is what they were supposed to do, according to the self-understanding of the 1977 EPF arrangements or agreements.

Again, unfortunately, most provinces went overboard, combining their new fiscal autonomy with the ideological zeal we witnessed in the late seventies on the part, mostly, of Progressive Conservative provincial governments, for cutbacks in government spending as the panacea for all our problems. It is, of course, a delusion which is still alive and well and seems recently to have been adopted by the Liberal government; but the point I wish to make is that EPF block funding never really had an opportunity to show its potential strength because its first five years coincided with this other historical and political phenomena. At this point we do not know, and cannot know as yet, whether the block funding could succeed in having the creative as well as the limiting effects it was supposed to have.

In any case, over the last few years there have been great arguments between federal and provincial governments about their respective contributions to health care and post-secondary education. The federal government has made much of its increasing percentage spending in this area and expressed increasing concern about cutbacks in health care and policies which seemed to retreat from, rather than advance toward, the perfection of medicare as a universal health care program available to rich and poor alike. Provinces argued, on the other hand, that the federal government was being self-righteous, that the provinces were only doing what they were expected to do under the 1977 agreement and that, furthermore, the EPF money was not as earmarked as the federal government claimed it was. For instance, the provinces argued that the federal division of the EPF program money into two thirds for health care and one third for post-secondary education was arbitrary. Furthermore, in 1977 there was money in the EPF package which had been included in the package as compensation for the termination of an old agreement called the revenue guarantee. The money attributable to the revenue guarantee was particularly unconditional, argued the provinces. It was unfair, they claimed, for the federal government to use this money in the calculation of its spending on health care and post-secondary education relative to the provinces' contributions.

The provinces should have known that they might come to regret this line of argument, as I am sure they now do. The federal government has now adopted their arguments and the provinces are left to ponder the wisdom of their former pronouncements.

In his proposals for fiscal arrangements in the 1980s, the Minister of Finance proposes to cut federal transfer payments to the provinces by an amount equal to that attributable to the revenue guarantee in the EPF block fund, a reduction of some $5.7 billion over five years. The Minister of Finance argues two things in this respect. He argues that, after all, the revenue guarantee was not earmarked for health care and post-secondary education; thus adopting a version of things, in my view, which goes against the theory and against the statistics this government has been using for five years. The Minister of Finance also argues, knowing the frailty of his first argument and feeling guilty about it, that a good portion of this loss to the provinces will be made up by increased revenues to the provinces as a result of tax changes in the budget, leaving the provinces with only about a $2 billion loss over five years, provided that the government's economic forecast, not known for their accuracy, are actually accurate and not overly optimistic. Even according to the figures used by the Minister of Finance, a province such as my own province, Manitoba, would come out $75 million short at the end of the next five year fiscal arrangement. This is not an insignificant amount of money when one considers a have not province such as Manitoba.

The debate over fiscal arrangements is not a matter of siding with either the federal government or the provinces. This is something that I, as a member of the opposition, feel one should not get into. It is just not that simple, as I have tried to show. There are aspects of the fiscal arrangements that I do not even have the time to go into this afternoon. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that both sides have been less than honest in the way they have presented the problem to the public.

The only side that I feel obliged to come down on is the side of the programs themselves and the people of Canada who look to health care and post-secondary education as established programs for the healing and for the teaching of Canadians that no inter-governmental dispute should be able to threaten.

In this respect, I now call on the federal government to recall its proposed cutbacks for three reasons. The first reason is that there is no need for them in the first place. The federal government is anticipating new revenues as a result of the energy agreement, and besides, these programs have not been the cause of the deficit. They have not grown out of proportion to government spending as a whole. These programs cannot be blamed for the deficit. The federal government could also, if it wanted to make up the amounts of money that it proposes to save through the cancellation of the revenue guarantee, raise new moneys through the closing of corporate tax loopholes, the ones they left unclosed in this budget while slamming middle-income working people. And the federal percentage of spending in health care and post-secondary education will decrease even if the present arrangements were to continue, because the federal contribution is tied to the economy, while the provincial contribution is tied to inflation. Even if things were to continue as they are now, the federal contribution to these programs would decrease further. The Minister of Finance should be well satisfied if he could convince the provinces to continue the existing arrangements.

The second reason that I appeal to the Minister of Finance to recall his cutbacks is that if he is serious about having the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) negotiate the clarification and enforcement of national standards for medicare, such as the banning of extra billing by physicians, the discontinuance of user fees and, even the abolition of premiums, the Minister of Finance must not then be trying to take money off the table at the same time as the Minister of National Health and Welfare is trying to put more expensive standards on the table.

The third reason that I call on the minister to recall the proposed cutbacks is that there will be some provinces that will, quite beyond whatever legitimate anger they may express at the federal proposals, use the cutbacks to justify further cutbacks in their own commitment to these programs, while blaming the federal government.

Like it or not, Mr. Speaker, there are Progressive Conservative provincial governments in this country that still resent the existence of medicare. I say this with regret. I am not making a partisan speech when I say this. This is a political and philosophical fact, and the governments of Alberta, Ontario, and others of the same ilk should not, in the name of comprehensive federal restraint, be carelessly adding fuel to the fires they would like to set under Canada's medicare system. That is what the Minister of Finance is now doing with these cutbacks. These Progressive Conservative governments, along with the paranoid, red-necked, intellectually impoverished leadership of the Canadian Medical Association, who do great disservice to all the doctors I have ever known, pose the greatest danger to medicare. Together they represent that group of people who have not been able to put their ideological hobby horses aside and accept the will of the Canadian people that there be a publicly-funded health care system in Canada second to none in the world.

I call on the provinces not to compound the stress they have already placed on these programs by cutting back even more than they have already. The federal response to provincial restraint, it seems, has been cutbacks of their own. To that I say that two wrongs do not make a right. If the provincial response to these cutbacks is more cutbacks, then I can only say that three wrongs do not make a right.

Earlier I referred to the Government of Ontario as being, among others, dangerous to the future wellbeing of medicare, and to Ontario, for that matter. If there was ever any doubt about this, it was completely erased last week when the health minister of that province announced new hospital policies that would have the effect of making fewer beds available to Canadians without private health insurance. The privatization of health care in Ontario is well under way. The Frank Millers and Dennis Timbrells can hardly contain their obscene delight that this is finally going on. They did not like medicare in the first place. They did not have the guts to levy the corporate taxes that would have paid for medicare, even when they grudgingly accepted it, and now they are perversely pleased when economic perceptions, to which the Minister of Finance is carelessly contributing with his cutbacks, give them the pretext for further dismantling of publicly funded health care in Ontario where medicare has always had only a tenuous foothold.

Ontario is one of the three provinces—and I probably do not have to remind members—and the others are Alberta and B.C., where medicare premiums are still paid, a form of paying for medicare which the all-party task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements found to be regressive and regrettable.

The state of medicare in Ontario brings me to the second topic with which I should like to deal today—the proposals of the Minister of Finance concerning equalization.

The new equalization plan whereby Ontario will become the standard to which have-not provinces are equalized is a very dangerous proposal in my view. Economically, if it is true that Ontario is becoming a have-not province, then other have-not provinces are tied to a sinking ship. From another standpoint, using Ontario's taxation and public services policies as a national model is dangerous indeed. Ontario's taxation and social policies are not value neutral but represent the accumulated values and decisions of decades of Conservative government. To suggest that this is the national average or the national model is an affront to all those who seek improvements and shows ignorance of the extent to which all such policies are formed by philosophical choices. For instance, as I have already indicated, Ontario drastically undertaxes its resource sector and wants to privatize health care. Is this the standard to which all provinces should be equalized? I think not. In fact, I find the whole idea repulsive in the extreme for reasons of both practice and principle, as I have said. Besides, this proposal of the government vis-à-vis making Ontario the model for equalization goes against the recommendation of the Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements that the new equalization formula not discriminate against any one province. The proposed formula discriminates against Ontario by definition and is therefore theoretically suspect on the basis of this recommendation alone. A new equalization formula will no doubt have to be found. I am well aware of the problems which exist with the old one. It will not be easy, but equalization is an important aspect of Canadian history, of Canadian federalism and of our new Constitution. Equalization payments to the provinces are entrenched in the new Constitution, but making the entrenched conservatism of Ontario the standard to which, hopefully, more enlightened parts of the country must conform would indeed be a mistake.

In this respect I should like to respond to the remarks made in the House by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) who was chairman of the special task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. In his speech on November 13 he stated:

> In fact, it can be said that basically the federal proposals are in line with our recommendations.

I think this statement by the hon. member for Gloucester, the chairman of the task force on which I sat, is highly debatable. The hon. member was a good chairman. He helped produce a report which recommended against any cutbacks in federal support to health care and post-secondary education. It was a report which I believe went far in stopping the more draconian measures brewing on the back burner of the mysterious mind of the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Gloucester shoud not now blur the glimpse we have had of him as an independent spirit by pretending that the government followed the recommendations of the task force. The task force indicated:

> By virtue of the federal government's own internal allocation, all fiscal transfers associated with the revenue guarantee must now be considered part of the health care and post-secondary education package, and should therefore be allocated, in the renewed EPF arrangements, to health and/or post-secondary education in proportions to be negotiated.

How does the hon. member for Gloucester square that recommendation with the fact that the budget says the revenue guarantee was never allocated the way the task force obviously said it was, and that, furthermore, this budget proposes cutbacks against which the task force recommended and proposes to cut money the task force indicated must be seen to be part of the health care and post-secondary education package? People who have read the report entitled "Fiscal Federalism in Canada" and people who have read the budget document presented by the Minister of Finance entitled "Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements in the 80s" will not be tricked by the facile optimism of the hon. member for Gloucester.

Although I have dealt primarily with fiscal arrangements, I should like to wind up by calling on the Minister of Finance to respond in a general way to the almost unanimous condemnation of his budget by Canadians, whether they be home owners, tenants, workers, small businessmen or farmers. I want him to respond to the unanimous condemnation of the budget and to announce soon some significant changes in the budget which will be sensitive to the condemnation the budget has received. He has indicated that he might consider some actions. Every once in a while we get a glimpse of reflection that perhaps he is actually thinking something over. I want to second the call of my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), for an immediate excess profits tax on the banks, a measure which could raise some $700 million right away, making money available for housing, interest rate relief, job creation and many of the things left undone in the budget as it stands now. An excess profits tax on banks would still leave banks at the profit rate level they had last year, which was already too high and would make the average corporation green with envy.

I support the criticisms of all those who have pointed to the way in which the budget, rather than being fair and equitable, is actually an attack on the hard-earned savings and retirement plans of many average Canadians. The loopholes closed by the government have been selective indeed, but the government selected the wrong people in most instances.

The budget deserves all the criticism it gets. I look forward, along with other members of the New Democratic Party caucus, to Committee of the Whole House wherein we will get a chance to tear it to shreds.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to add a few comments to those of my colleagues about the budget which was presented on November 12 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). This afternoon, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) asked if anyone could reassure Canadians with respect to this budget. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I am better qualified than he, at any rate, to do so. The fact is that when the hon. member for Joliette was sitting on the government side, the then Minister of Finance had tabled such a budget that they were voted out.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that that budget had a disastrous impact on the hon. member for Joliette, because at that time, such regressive measures as an 18-cent tax on gasoline brought the downfall of the previous government, and why was that, Mr. Speaker? They have been talking for a few days now about the bad housing situation in Canada. They conveniently forget that when they were in power, they had proposed doing away with no less than the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Speaker, a basic agency which is responsible for monitoring the housing situation in Canada. Right now, our economic growth is not as rapid as in the early seventies, and most economists agree on that point, but it is a long way from justifying the hon. member's pessimism . . . Not only has the Liberal government relied on the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but the present budget has included a program which will bring 15,000 more units and a subsidy of $7,500 per rental unit with an interest-free loan, and, according to existing programs, 25,000 units, already provided for by the CMHC, within the co-operative housing and non profit rental accommodation programs, will be made available. So, we can see, Mr. Speaker, that 40,000 housing units will be ready for occupancy. I think those policies will meet the needs of the Quebec people and that the building industry in that province will avail itself of those measures.

Single family home owners, as far as the Montreal-Mercier riding is concerned, are in some cases experiencing difficulties and I hope the program put forward by the minister concerned, will be of assistance to them. Any home owner who has to invest more than 30 per cent of his income on housing, will qualify for a special interest rate on his mortgage. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, most of the people in my constituency are not home owners and as their representative I shall oppose a universal financing program for mortgage loans which would bring down the present interest rate of approximately 18 per cent down to 13.14 or 12 per cent, as it used to be, because in so doing we would have to take one billion dollars or more out of the taxpayers' pockets. I think that no responsible government can present a balanced, non inflationary budget and at the same time include additional taxes to pay for the mortgages of home owners. However, I am well aware of the problems and I urge the people of my constituency to contact the department. A special service has been set up to help them if the burden of the debt were to become overpowering. Among the positive aspects of this budget, let us mention the $210 tax reduction that on the average 12,000,000 taxpayers will be granted. It is almost wizardry, nowadays, to get a budget which cuts on taxes. Yet not only does the budget allow tax cuts but more than 3.2 billion dollars will find their way back into the taxpayers' pockets through income tax indexing. This means Canadians will not be penalized by inflation since taxation will be adjusted as it was in the past. Evidently our opposition friends a few weeks before the budget was tabled, raised the spectre of the elimination of indexation and today forget to mention the important fact that Canadian taxpayers will not have to pay those additional 3.2 billion dollars.

And for the Quebec people, Mr. Speaker, it is even more important, because for years the so-called soicialist, or social democratic government of Quebec has been talking about full indexation of income tax rolls but has never implemented it. On the other hand, this Liberal government that I am proud to work with, keeps maintaining this indexation which means so much to the workers of the Montreal-Mercier constituency.

Other major programs have been not only retained but indexed, Mr. Speaker. For example, mothers in my riding can still benefit from the child endowment which is indexed on a three-month basis. A tax credit for their children will go up from $261 per child to $293 per child. Old age security pensions, which were increased in the last budget by $35 besides indexation, will continue to be indexed.

And another good piece of news for the Quebec workers: Each worker's contribution to the unemployment insurance will decrease from $1.80 to $1.65 while the employer's contribution will be reduced to $2.31.

Mr. Speaker, this budget reflects the Liberal philosophy, maintaining as it does the socially oriented programs which account for a large share of the federal budgetary envelope, and yet they will enable each family in Quebec to maintain a style and quality of life which all of us ought to be proud of. I suggest as well that the low-income families will be glad to learn that the $200 family deduction will be raised to $400—a 100 per cent increase. That increase is on top of all the other advantages that the average taxpayer in the province of Quebec will gain from this budget. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, a lot has been said in Quebec about fiscal arrangements. The finance minister has been very loquacious on that subject, somewhat less about his own taxes and slightly more about the contributions of that same federal government whose existence he denies. However, he forgets to mention that under the fiscal arrangements, over the next five years Quebec will benefit from an average annual increase of about 12.9 per cent. And then they often forget—and that makes me laugh a little, Mr. Speaker—that the so-called progressive university circles dismiss rather easily the contribution made by the federal government to their own budgets. Indeed, at the present time roughly 58 per cent of the funds budgeted by Quebec universities come from the federal government.

While, Mr. Speaker, there is reason to rejoice in the federal government's contributions to these programs, we must also ask ourselves how these programs are being administered by our province. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what is Quebec's record in this respect? As far as health insurance is concerned, any profits or benefits as a result of good administration of the program are transferred to the public treasury without benefit to the program itself, and as far as hospital insurance is concerned, although the federal government contributes to the program, under the Constitution hospital administration is a provincial responsibility, and the provincial government is not a good administrator. It has been making budget cuts every year and reducing the quality and especially the volume of care provided in Quebec. Where does Canada stand, Mr. Speaker, as far as per capita income is concerned compared with the rest of the world? A report by the Tribune magazine in one of the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but it being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose, I was about to quote figures from the 1981 World Almanac to show how Canadians rank on per capita income. According to my tables, Canada is fourth in the world out of 150 countries and Canadians have an average per capita income of $7,572. West Germany, the United States and France come, respectively, first, second and third.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can be proud of these statistics. However, in its November 14, 1981 issue, The Economist says that one of the problems facing Canada today and which this budget has had to face as well is inflation. I think that my constituents realize that massive budgetary spending might have increased inflationary pressures. Our colleagues opposite, of course, advocate sound conservative principles when they speak outside the House, but here they call for further spending, forgetting that the inflation rate during the last quarter has reached 12.5 per cent. But what does a 12.5 per cent inflation rate means when in the United States the rate is 11 per cent, in the Federal Republic of Germany, 7 per cent, and in the Netherlands, 6 per cent? I think that it means that the purchasing value of the dollar is eroded.

I think that the budget shows that the Minister of Finance is realistic and responsible when he wants to extend social measures while attempting to reduce our deficit over a five-year period. I must not forget to mention the value of our currency, because all those factors must be taken into consideration when a budget is being prepared. For example, let us consider what happened in the European Economic Community or in Europe when the German mark was recently devalued by 20 per cent, the French franc by 30 per cent, while last week the Canadian dollar was worth about 85 cents. I also feel that most Canadians agree to maintain that slight margin in relation to the American dollar.

I should like to point out to the hon. members that in terms of dollars, every dollar spent because of the monetary policy of the Minister of Finance will enable us to control inflation and to ensure finally that the weekly income of the constituents of Mercier, especially the aged, the single parent families, largely made up of women and children, is not affected. I feel that at present, the priority of the government is to provide every citizen with the required income to enjoy a minimum quality of life, to set fair and equitable tax rates, as does the budget and manage at the same time to reduce inflation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major components of the budget is, of course, the national energy policy implemented by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) as well as the agreement entered into with Alberta. Since 1979, Canada was really not in a position to prepare a budget without that major component. I am pleased to note today that the Canadian government has signed that agreement with Alberta, even though the negotiations were difficult, even though the previous government had never succeeded in reaching an agreement.

For the information of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should mention some of the loopholes this budget intends to plug, to indicate what the Minister of Finance exactly had in mind when he set forth to abolish some of the exemptions that were granted to certain individuals. For instance, Quebec taxpayers are already contributing to a dental insurance plan for children aged from 0 to 16. This coverage is already provided, and some $50 millions have already been paid by Quebec taxpayers. Also, a number of employers, through collective agreements, are providing their employees with free dental care programs. These are benefits which are not included in the income and which will be taxable from now on. Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian living in Quebec I think I am already paying taxes to provide my children with dental care, and that it is only fair that if such benefits are to be provided to some people, they should not be provided to only one class of citizens, as it is the case now, a very small group of workers who benefit from collective agreements, as only 30 per cent of workers are now unionized and are entitled as such to free dental programs.

Here is another example, Mr. Speaker, of benefits which will be taxable from now, I mean, in the case of a taxpayer who owns two houses. Previously, a well-advised citizen could quite legally buy a first house and register it under his own name, then buy himself a house in the country and register it in his wife's name. I think that this was the way it went most of the time, although in some cases, there are wives who have bought second houses and registered them in the names of their husbands. So when he or she sold both houses, there were no taxable gains because the houses had been registered under two different names. From now on, it is the family unit that will be taken into account under the new taxation system. The capital gains, therefore, on the second house will become taxable. I think that the taxpayers in my riding of Mercier will feel that this is quite fair, for I do not see how they could support a second residence for other Canadians or would provide them with special benefits, when some of them cannot even afford good quality housing. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I am also aware that some business executives were receiving interest-free loans. I too would have liked to see my constituents in Montreal-Mercier go to the bank and borrow $100,000 without paying interest. The old provisions in our fiscal law allowed corporations to lend tremendous amounts, as high as $100,000, without tax being levied on that interest benefit. I feel that this budget is simply reintroducing equity for Canadians. The 12 million taxpayers who were granted a tax reduction through this budget cannot but agree. As far as I am concerned, I must state that in my constituency I received only one letter, and it came not from a firm but from a business association. I can understand that some adjustments have to be made. I can understand that some non-discriminatory interpretations have to be drawn, and I believe the initiatives in the new budget will be interpreted in a fair and equitable way by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) raised the matter of the urea-formaldehyde foam insulation, and he suggested the government should commit funds in that respect in the budget. I must state that as far as I am concerned, I have followed the situation very closely because in my constituency, I know of a number of victims. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is now considering different measures to help those involved.

But what I would like to condemn at this point is the behavior of the hon. member for Joliette who in his capacity as the former Minister for Supply and Services, had agreed to an established standard for the use of that foam insulation under the previous government. And now, the hon. member has stood in his place and told us this afternoon that remedial actions had to be taken. I would point out that the product was allowed to be used when he was minister, and the people in the constituency of Joliette must know that the hon. member for Joliette approved that product. And if problems arose because of what may have been faulty application or installation, I feel that this government will take its responsibilities as it did with the budget. But I also think that this responsible government is not willing to commit $1 billion of the taxpayers' money to solve a problem where a much smaller amount may be needed.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the many well-documented comments made by my colleagues from the NDP on medicare programs. I must say how I sympathize but I find it passing strange that their arguments should always center on provincial programs and that they put so much emphasis on bank profits. I am not here to speak in defence of the banks, Mr. Speaker, and I do think that we passed an excellent piece of legislation on that matter earlier in this session. I will leave it up to the Minister of Finance to decide whether he wants to consider this issue. Still I think that it is not with our hearts but with our heads that we must analyse this budget, and that is why I ask every member of this House to think that each and every citizen of his riding, each and every taxpayer, everyone in fact must have his or her fair share of the gross national product and of the wealth of this country, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, as a Quebecer I am proud to vote in favour of a budget such as this one.

• (2010)

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) permit a question? I believe she has some time remaining.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Will the hon. parliamentary secretary entertain a question from the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, if the question concerns the minister's portfolio, I am unable to answer questions for him.

Mr. Taylor: She doesn't have any answers. She just reads them.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to add the concerns of the people of Waterloo riding to the national tide of dissatisfaction which has risen to greet this antisocial and regressive budget.

In a document which gives the government such an important opportunity to send out so many signals of its social policy, even those in my area who have supported the government so loyally for so long have found that there is nothing but a cold shoulder for the growing number of unemployed, the small family farmer, the low-income insurance policyholders, the small business community, and perhaps foremost is the sector of Canadian society made up of victims of this government's last budget and its continuing high interest rate policies. I refer, of course, to home owners. I refer also to those on fixed incomes, whether veterans, widows, single parent families or the elderly.

In this budget, which has been presented with such fine rhetoric, Canadians are blamed for inflation. They are force-fed with price increases. They are ignored if they are not working. They are taxed more if they are working. And they are forgotten if they are unable to work.

The most devastating of the finance minister's error in judgment is the one of omission. Nowhere in all the volumes that go to support this budget is there even the slightest bit of evidence that the minister, or his officials, who seem to have taken hold of him in the process, have ever considered giving encouragement to the voluntary sector.

On top of forcing cuts to community based centres and transition homes for women, the government refuses to maintain and to widen caring alternatives, which are supplied across our nation by the voluntary community. Already faced with staggering increases in the operating overhead as a result of the government's refusal to offset unprecedented postal rate increases, the voluntary sector—the YMCAs, the Cancer Society, the Red Cross and the churches—is being overloaded and discouraged just when the need is greatest for their goods and services.

It is not surprising that in recent days those looking at the fabric of our Canadian society see the potential for a great deal of social violence and social strife. Already instances of family violence are up as family after family seeks to make ends meet just to provide the basics.

At a time when unemployment in Kitchener-Waterloo, in the surrounding area and generally in southwestern Ontario, has never been greater, this budget does not create even one job. As my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr.

Speyer) said on November 18, "There is no reason to believe that this government wants Canadians to believe they have the right to make a living".

My colleague, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), former minister of agriculture, pointed out on November 19 that the Minister of Finance's (Mr. MacEachen) elimination of the income-averaging annuity contracts and the capital gains tax reserve has tragically penalized the retirement income of the Canadian farmer.

It would seem clear that no one in this government understands the fact that a farmer's retirement income lies in the sale of his land. No other segment of Canadian society has its retirement income so severely taxed. According to the government's own Statistics Canada figures, Canadian farmers will bear the brunt of the economic effects. Their net income is expected to drop by about 15 per cent. Farm operating costs will rise faster than the return on the sale of farm products. On top of this must be added the hidden costs of energy price increases, which alone will account for a 2 per cent increase in food prices. These have not been offset by any form of energy tax credit, a feature in the Crosbie budget. The Crosbie budget now looks much more humane and compassionate in terms of the human and social side of its proposals, which brings me to this government's assault on the ability of low-income Canadians to plan a family's financial security.

At the national pensions conference held in Ottawa in April, the Minister of Finance had some interesting comments. He said:

I think it is universally agreed that private pension plans will continue to play a vital role in the retirement income system.

The effect of inflation on private pension plans is perhaps one of the most difficult problems that we face. I think we must deal with the harmful effect inflation can have on those with pensions from employer-sponsored pension plans and on those people in our society who are least able to protect themselves from inflation.

Finally he said:

The federal government, acting alone, cannot give Canada a retirement system geared to suit the expectations and the needs of Canadians.

Despite those statements, Mr. Speaker, made just over six months ago, the Minister of Finance, acting alone, has, without warning, knocked the bottom out of the private pension market, employer-sponsored pension schemes and the retirement plans of millions of Canadians. To rearrange the minister's own words, the federal government, acting alone, can give Canada a retirement system completely unsuited to the needs and expectations of Canadians.

Another of the many areas with which this budget has tinkered so callously is that of support for health care and post-secondary education. The budget includes an attempt to reduce the federal government's obligation to assist in the financing of health and post-secondary education by $5.7 billion over the next five years. We all remember now that on budget night the Minister of Finance argued that such reductions would be offset by $3.790 billion in additional tax revenues to be collected by provincial governments. Already he has revised this figure downward by $662 million, meaning that provincial tax revenues will be raised by $3.128 billion, but they will have $2.562 billion less to use in the health care system and for the Canadian community colleges and universities.

It is indeed ironic that after justifying the new energy taxes, which are part of the agreements they signed with the governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, on the grounds that the national government had to be able to distribute energy wealth across the country more equitably, this budget does not propose to spend one cent of the $7.5 billion additional revenue on either health care or post-secondary education. Indeed, the budget proposes to save government money at the expense of these two social programs.

I am urging, within my own riding of Waterloo, the University of Waterloo, Wilfrid Laurier University and Conestoga College, just as I urge the representative bodies from the sector of post-secondary education across the nation, not to be deluded by the finance minister's subtle and confusing schemes. Just as this budget includes no job creation incentives, neither do our community colleges receive extra funding for retraining initiatives and programs geared to the thousands of Canadian women who are seeking to re-enter the work force.

I should like to say that the mail I have received from Kitchener, from Waterloo and from the townships of Woolwich, Wellesley and Wilmot which I represent, and from across Canada since this insensitive budget was introduced, is overwhelming. It outlines the unnecessary suffering the budget inflicts on those in our society who are least able to cope. Here, is just one of several examples: I quote from a letter written to the Hon. Paul Cosgrove, minister for housing. It states in part:

There are few words strong enough to express my displeasure with both the current state of economic affairs and the recent budget. You see, I am one of the unfortunate individuals whose mortgage renewed at high interest rates. To be precise, on August 25, 1981 at 21½ per cent, up from 9¾ per cent. On a mortgage of approximately $44,000, the interest rate increase meant monthly payments would increase by approximately $400 in after tax dollars.

Further on the letter goes on to read:

The disappointment you have created in hundreds of individuals who put their trust in you is beyond comprehension . . . it's criminal and I am both angry and depressed. Here are some alternatives:

(B) Sell and rent. Almost a (zero) per cent vacancy rate in this area.

(E) Sell more annuities and life insurance, my profession, to earn additional income. Although I'm working night and day to reach that objective, I guess it goes without saying that Mr. MacEachen's budget has blocked this alternative, the repercussions of which will be monumental and will become apparent in the immediate future.

I have another letter which has come to me from the head office of a National Company, Home Hardware. The general manager of that collection of entrepreneurial and energetic hardware operators across the country writes in this letter, addressed to Mr. MacEachen:

The provisions in your recent budget to transfer the collection of the Federal Sales Tax to the wholesaler is one that perplexes our industry—

Transferring the tax to the wholesale industry will increase the paper-work burden by more than 1,000 fold . . . We urge you to reconsider this very costly proposal until it can be studied more fully by government and the industry . . . the tax should be applied on the acquisition cost and not on the wholesale selling price.

Again, Mr. Speaker, from across this area of Canada, full of representatives of working people in our industries, representatives of small business people, comes another letter which states in part:

Why are you removing the incentive for the small business?

This person goes on, as he sees the dilution of his Canadian dream, in these terms:

The shame of it all is that we are a consulting firm specializing in productivity improvement, something this country and your government needs badly. We are very successful in this and are having good results in the immediate area which, as you know, suffers from severe economic problems, plant shut downs, lay-offs, etc. However, your budget is destroying us and the people we are trying to serve. You may have been out to catch the super rich, but you caught us in the same net.

The budget, in its efforts to come to terms with the importance of responsibility in government planning, has done something which the previous budget presented by those on this side sought, has not balanced restraint with compassion. It has not offsets for those who are hurt the most.

Since the finance minister is so interested in bottom lines, as he is fond of saying, and not in social costs, let me conclude by giving him a message relating to both on behalf of the people of Waterloo riding whom I represent. This budget offers no incentive for people to invest either for themselves or of themselves. I urge the minister to withdraw the budget and realize the disastrous social effects it is having upon the morale of the people of this nation.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the over-all intent of my remarks tonight will be to point out some of the very tangible benefits of this budget for the native people. But first, as far as the general thrust of the remarks by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his budget speech is concerned, it is of no less interest to the native and northern Canadians than to others. It seems to me that the task of crafting a national economic policy requires the meshing together of a multitude of considerations into a coherent over-all policy. I congratulate my colleague for his general approach to the economy and I also thank him for the consideration which his budget showed for the particular interests of those Canadians whom I represent in cabinet.

As the Minister of Finance said, the budget has three main themes: equity, restraint and economic renewal. The budget embodies two measures which will have a direct impact on natives and northerners in which these themes are clearly evident. These three elements of the budget package are combined in its approach to native economic development. According to the government's fiscal plan until 1985-86, a sum of $345 million has been reallocated from the Western Development Fund to the social affairs envelope to meet the needs of the economic objectives of the native people.

An hon. Member: How much was that?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is $345 million. Indian people have demonstrated a growing capacity to capitalize on economic development opportunities over the past decade. Wherever I go these days, I hear native leaders describe economic development as a remedy for their peoples' social ills. Perhaps jobs and money in peoples' pockets is not the only answer, but I am satisfied that the systematic identification and exploitation of economic opportunity is one of the single most promising approaches available to us. I am indeed pleased that by agreeing to reassign moneys on the scale which was mentioned in the budget, my colleagues have made a major resource commitment in this direction.

Over the past few years, native leaders have substantially contributed to the evolution of a national approach to break the old cycle of welfare dependence. Together, we have been able to identify significant economic and employment opportunities. Our research indicates an on-reserve potential for thousands of jobs for Indians if we can build on the resources of reserves. The off-reserve potential for native people to be gainfully employed is estimated to be similar, according to our findings.

Through experience, some of it admittedly bitter, we have been able to isolate several limitations to past economic development strategies which were designed for the Indian people. Our primary conclusion was that they have not always had enough control over their own social and economic development and have not had the chance to shape it to their own particular values and widely varying needs. We must ensure that this does not happen again.

Another major impediment to encouraging appropriate economic development has been the absence of one essential ingredient, which is money. All the potential that Indian people can muster will not create jobs and wealth to get them on the road to recovery of their self-reliance without the money to make it happen. In the past, the funds necessary to generate native-run ventures have too often been consumed by the relentless demands of the welfare cycle. The government is taking a positive step in the right direction by setting aside the money identified in this budget. This is the proper direction to follow because Indian people have played a substantial part in its choice. In short, the government has shown the political will to direct a major portion of its new financial allocations toward economic development for native peoples.

To return to the main themes of the budget and how it benefits another group of people for whom I am responsible in cabinet, it is evident also that the principle of equity in taxation has particular significance to northern Canadians. I feel it is vital for northerners to understand that principle which is at stake in taxation of northern benefits. I want to do what I can in the House to clarify this issue and help people make sense of what some may fear is simply just a withdrawal of federal support to people living and working in the north, so I hope that hon. members will bear with me for a moment.

Above all, I want to assure the House that every effort will be made to see that the special needs of northerners are answered in a way that is compatible with Canada's tax system.

I recall with some vividness my first tour of the north as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the early 1980s. I remember clearly the anxiety and sincerity with which I was greeted in numerous communities during that tour which coincidentally closely followed an administrative decision to eliminate the customary exemption of northern benefits which had been permitted until then. I, for one, Mr. Speaker, remain convinced of the necessity for finding an equitable solution.

As you know by now, a decision has been taken to discontinue the temporary remission from taxation of certain employee benefits accorded to people working in the north and in isolated posts. That remission order, or moratorium, was due to expire on December 31, 1981. After that date, low-cost housing benefits, subsidized housing allowances and travel assistance in respect of transportation and medical purposes would have become taxable like any other income.

The effect of the budget, then, is, first, to extend the moratorium for another year until December 31, 1982. The tax relief is limited to those benefits that are granted under employer-employee agreements reached before this budget was announced. All such benefits will become taxable as income from employment effective January 1, 1983. The extension will allow sufficient time for employers and employees who are directly affected by this decision to negotiate the required adjustment.

Second, beginning with the 1982 taxation year, and for the following years, the list of qualifying deductible medical expenses will be extended to include travel costs incurred by residents in isolated areas so that they may receive medical services which are not available to them in their region. I welcome this measure which contributes toward improving the fairness in the accessibility in the medical services for all Canadians wherever they may live.

It is well known that in order to attract experienced workers in the north and other remote areas, industry and governments have to offer higher financial incentives. The present system favours employees represented by unions which negotiate non-taxable benefits which are added to their members' basic wages. For the majority of employees who are not represented by unions, the additional financial incentive offered to them by small employers to work in the north has been built into their basic wages and consequently has been fully taxed. This clearly is unfair and unacceptable.

The cost of living in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon affects all northerners to some degree. Therefore, any measure to assist them should benefit everyone, and, preferably, it should be related to their economic status.

As indicated in the budget, the delay of one year will allow the government to have adequate time to review the need for and the means of providing special assistance to employees working in the north and in isolated posts. I am pleased to say that I have been assigned this responsibility and that I have already instructed my officials to look, in co-operation with officials of other departments, at possible means of responding to the special needs of northerners in a way that is compatible with Canada's tax system. The difficulty we are faced with is how to offset termination of the moratorium without creating a precedent in the national personal income tax policy. I am confident we will find a solution in the ensuing years.

I have followed closely the budget debate and the public comment over the last four weeks. I have been impressed by the one conclusion that must be reached by any hon. member who is prepared to deal with the economic facts. The undeniable truth is that nothing which has been said in the debate undermines the fundamental premise of the budget as presented by my colleague, the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance set out to establish—convincingly, I believe—that there can be no deep and lasting relief from our current economic ills, including high levels of unemployment, slow economic growth rates and high interest rates, until inflation is reduced. We must do all we can to bring down the rate of inflation. This is what the measures introduced by the budget will help bring about, if we give them a chance. As my colleague, the Minister of Finance, stated in the House:

> We will generate less employment, less growth and more unemployment if we attempt to live with inflation than if we resolve once and for all to see it steadily reduced.

As a trading nation, Canada has no choice but to follow this policy with determination. All hon. members are aware, but it bears repeating, that Canada is an open economy; 25 per cent to 30 per cent of our gross national product is generated by exports. If we are to remain competitive with our major trading partners, we have to make sure that the rate of inflation in this country does not exceed that of our competition. This is particularly the case at this time. The principal policy objective of the United States, which accounts for about 70 per cent of our exports, is to break the back of inflation. This is what the United States government believes it must do in order to put its own house in order and enable it to meet tough competition in its domestic and world markets. The current projection is that the United States may be able to achieve an inflation rate of 7.5 per cent to 8 per cent in 1982. This compares with an inflation rate in Canada of 12.7 per cent. Unless we are determined to bring our rate down, a gap of more than 4 per cent in the inflation rate between Canada and the United States will impose a severe burden on our ability to compete in our most important markets.

As a Member of Parliament from a so-called steel city, I know this could a have a major impact of a deleterious kind in terms of steel production in that city and a more exaggerated and unfortunate impact on employment rates in the steel industry.

The budget reinforces the determination on the part of the government to take the lead in bringing down the rate of inflation. In the first place, the government is taking effective measures to reduce the budgetary deficit. We believe that the vast majority of Canadians support this endeavour, since too great a share of tax revenue is now needed to service the national debt. This process was started in the October 1980 budget. It will move forward at an accelerated rate under the current fiscal plan. The deficit and financial requirements will be reduced by $2.9 billion, to a level of $10.5 billion in 1982-83, and there will be a further reduction in 1983-84.

By bringing down the deficit, the government will ease pressure on interest rates. the magnitude of this initiative and its potential for economical stimulation can be measured by the fact that the deficit amounts to 4 per cent of the gross national product this year and, according to the strategy under the current fiscal plan, this could be reduced to 1.9 per cent of the gross national product by 1985-86.

At the same time my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has made provision to continue to assist those Canadians who need government help and to ensure that the burden in the fight against inflation is shared equitably. This is done in a number of ways. first, it establishes a greater measures of equity in the taxes Canadians will pay starting next year. For example, by taking back some special privileges enjoyed by a minority of taxpayers it will make possible a reduction in taxes for about 12 million taxpayers. Taxes will be about the same for 3½ million taxpayers, and they will be higher for fewer than 800,000. The lower taxes for the majority of Canadians hopefully will provide new incentives for individuals to work, save and invest.

Second, the budget brings a significant measure of relief to Canadians who have been hard-pressed by high interest rates, including Canadians who are renewing their mortgages and small business proprietors and farmers who need to finance their operations. The government is allocating $400 million to help Canadians renewing their mortgages, to assist small businesses and farmers and to stimulate the construction of new rental units in metropolitan centres.

Third, the budget will continue the previous measures for indexing which have assisted taxpayers to meet increases in personal and family living costs due to inflation. For 1982, personal exemptions, tax brackets and the refundable child tax credit will rise by 12.2 per cent. The personal exemptions for a family of four will rise from $7,230 to $8,110 next year. The largest percentage benefit from indexing will go to lower-income taxpayers. The total benefit for all taxpayers will amount to more than $3 billion.

The budget must also be given credit for reinforcing a new economic climate that is responsible for bringing down interest rates. It does so, I believe, by giving the strong indication that our inflationary expections have been misguided. We can do something as a country to bring down the rate of inflation, and the reduction in interest rates which all Canadians want is bound to follow. We have already witnessed with a great sense of relief over the past few weeks and months a lowering of interest rates, which certainly is some indication of confidence in the direction we are taking with this economic policy.

As my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has indicated on a number of occasions, the budget measures will be examined in detail in Committee of the Whole. The government will be guided by the three themes which were set out in the budget itself; namely, restraint in government spending, equity for all taxpayers and economic renewal. If all hon. members are motivated by the same considerations, I believe we will be in a good position to work toward the economic recovery this country badly needs and richly deserves.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to debate the very damaging and destructive budget which was tabled in this House on November 12 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Events since then have shown that the budget has had a devastating impact on the economy of our country and on the lives of individual Canadians. The budget is so harmful that in the few short weeks since its introduction the Minister of Finance has been forced to acknowledge three major errors. He has had to change the rules affecting rental housing construction so that the 13,000 homes now under construction can proceed, he has had to give special dispensation to allow certain corporate takeovers to be completed under terms introduced in previous budgets, and he has had to confess to a $700 million error in the federal government's projections of lost provincial revenues. And that is only the start.

At a time of increasing unemployment, the minister has introduced measures which will severely cripple small business, which is one of the most important job-creating sectors of the economy. When nearly one million Canadians are out of work, he has threatened major industries such as the insurance industry, which employs thousands of Canadians, the construction industry and the forest industry. At a time of high interest rates he has brought in a budget which imposes new taxes on income before it is even received, forcing companies and individuals to go to the banks or bankruptcy courts. At a time when productivity is low he has introduced measures which create a tax structure which discriminates against young, expanding and innovative firms which need their cash reserves to finance their future growth and favours established, mature companies which have the resources to pay dividends. At a time when vast new sources of financing and saving are required to finance the projects we need to sustain our economy, he has wiped out incentives to investors. At a time when Canadianization is a goal of government, he has eliminated the right of Canadians to deduct interest on loans made to invest in Canadian companies and given foreign investors a clear advantage over Canadian investors. At a time when Canadians' confidence in the economy is at a 20-year low, the minister has launched a massive assault on our homes, our jobs and our savings. This is not merely my assessment of the havoc that he has created, Mr. Speaker, nor is it only the view of the major interest groups. It is the assessment of those Canadians who have to live with this budget.

Tonight I want you, Mr. Speaker, to hear some of the concerns that have been expressed. A good overview of the feeling of outrage in the country, was expressed by a voter in the constituency of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He writes:

> The Liberals are now proposing to tax the insurance policy income of widows and orphans, the deferred income savings of one-shot earners and the annuity build-ups of self-employed people who have no company pension fund or fat indexed civil service retirement scheme. This is a confiscation of property on a scale not seen since the days of the robber barons of the middle ages.

The general anxiety felt by many Canadians is expressed by the senior citizen who spent her life savings of $500 and borrowed more than $1,000 to buy a wheelchair.

She wrote me:

> How on earth can I pay $1,000 back with the high cost of food, shelter and phone and now this dreadful budget? This budget is making everyone live in fear and fear is foreign to me.

One of the most fearful aspects of the budget is its impact on housing and construction. The budget has not done anything to relieve the critical shortage of housing in the country. Indeed, it has deliberately eliminated tax incentives which have encouraged the construction of rental housing in the 1970s.

The Rental Housing Council of B.C. notes that in the past when incentives were withdrawn, the bottom dropped out of housing development, and vacancy rates dropped to near zero. When the present tax incentives cease at the end of the year, housing experts predict a rental housing famine for years to come.

Tenants in Canada are already suffering from a shortage of accommodation and rising rents. There is the Vancouver apartment dweller whose rent has just increased 66 per cent, from $850 to $1390 per month, and who realizes that with the withdrawal of incentives for rental housing, he will be unable to find cheaper accommodation.

Then there is the case in my constituency of the three senior citizens whose rent is soaring by 70 per cent, from $235 per month to $400 per month, because their building has been sold and they are being forced to assume the burden of the refinancing costs.

There are agencies such as the Kitsilano housing registry in Vancouver, which is in my constituency, which is trying to find housing for single parents who are only able to pay $200 to $300 a month, in a market where a two-bedroom apartment rents from $600 to $900 a month and a one-bedroom apartment from $400 to $600.

The Greater Victoria Apartment Owners Association has advised the minister that without incentives rents on new units will double, and many tenants simply cannot afford to pay.

The association president, Robert Jawl, writes:

> We think people who are forced to rent can be kept housed in decent shelter. Surely Canadians are not asking for favours when they ask that much.

When the then minister of finance, John Turner, introduced the capital cost allowance on MURBs in 1974, he said:

> I am confident that this measure will attract a significant amount of private equity capital into the construction of new rental housing.

History has shown that Mr. Turner was correct. History will show that his successor, the present Minister of Finance, is wrong in removing the incentives which have provided Canadians with homes in the past.

Another concern of individual Canadians is the elimination of the right to deduct interest on loans made to invest in Canadian companies. This right has existed since 1948. This right has been in place for 33 years. Its purpose for 33 years has been to provide an incentive to cautious Canadians to take a risk on the future of our country. This budget makes it a poor risk, since many Canadians have borrowed money and have made commitments in good faith based on measures that were introduced by the past Liberal governments. Now they find they face heavy tax penalties.

There is the college professor who has written the Minister of Finance in these terms:

> Please help, I will be placed in a serious financial situation unless you reconsider a grandfather interest deductibility for commercial as well as residential investments.

He was a small investor with a few thousand dollars who borrowed to invest in a real estate partnership under the tax laws prevailing at the time. His anticipated interest costs for 1982 are $20,000, which represents a large share of his after-tax salary, his only source of income. The investment is not liquid and will not return any income until 1990. He writes:

> It seems most unfair to change the law when I cannot alter my investment which was only feasible under the previous rules.

There were thousands of British Columbians who borrowed money from the chartered banks to take advantage of an opportunity to buy $400 million worth of shares in the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation. That was the largest share issue in British Columbia's history. People bought their shares then at $6 each. The current market price is about $3.20, reflecting the depressed economy. Yet many small shareholders and first time investors find they can no longer deduct the interest on the money they borrowed to buy a share of their own provincial resources, unless they have other investment income.

Then there is the Canadian businessman who was trying to build a group of totally Canadian employee-owned businesses in Canada, who writes that the loss of interest deductibility will have a disastrous effect on his company's operations, growth and ability to maintain a Canadian presence against its foreign-owned competitors. He writes:

> I, my 100 fellow shareholders and our 500 employees, many of whom aspire to future ownership and management in our companies, have never felt so betrayed or sabotaged in our efforts, as by our own government in the new proposed budget.

Buying a share in the company which employs them, thus helping them to secure their jobs, is the dream of many Canadians. That dream has been shattered by the elimination of interest deductibility for many Canadians.

There are all those Canadians who are writing the Minister of Finance for the first time to point out the unfairness of the government's move in changing rules after commitments have been made. One Canadian writes:

I am incensed that you have the gall to close the "rich man's loopholes", while only a few years ago, you referred to these loopholes, as "tax incentives for housing".

Previous Liberal ministers introduced these measures to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada, to provide for their own financial security and to help Canadians to own a greater share of their national resources and economy. History will show that these Liberal ministers have been right. History will show that the present Minister of Finance has been dead wrong.

The elimination of the interest deductibility is particularly destructive to the very sectors of the economy that this government has sought to encourage. Those companies which require all their cash resources to finance their expansion, and thus do not pay dividends, have been particularly savaged. This group includes junior oil and mining companies which require their funds for exploration and development and high technology companies which use their cash resources to develop new product lines and thus do not plan to pay dividends in their first few years of operation.

The president of one high-tech company, with offices in my constituency, wrote the minister:

The damage that will be done to the growth section of the Canadian economy, the largest provider of new jobs for Canadians, cannot be justified.

A Canadian who located and brought four mines into production in the last 25 years wrote the minister:

The move to propose to limit the deduction of an individual to the amount of his annual taxable investment income is absolutely insane.

Where do you think the majority of money comes from for the initial and secondary financing of the resource orientated companies of this resource rich country of Canada?

This budget removes the incentive to invest in our own country.

There are other measures in the budget which have dealt a bitter blow to many small businesses, many of whom must now pay tax on income before they actually receive it and whose sources of alternative financing have been wiped out.

There is the oil field operator who finds himself being taxed on profits he has not yet made, on business decisions he made under previous budgets, or even on possible future income. He writes:

These provisions as contained in the budget are nothing short of legalized extortion.

There is the logging truck operator in southern British Columbia who bought a tandem trailer truck under financing provided through the Small Business Development Bond first introduced in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). Under the budget of the Minister of Finance, this development bond has been downgraded to a "bail-out" bond, available only to companies in trouble. Since his bank refuses to proceed under the new budget measures, he is left with an expensive piece of equipment, high interest rates and no source of financing.

Then there is the small developer who has been effectively put out of business through the elimination of mortgage reserves. He writes that it normally takes him 10 years to get a subdivision plan approved before he starts to market the property. In the past he usually negotiated a downpayment in cash and then took back a mortgage on the property he sold. He was allowed to declare the profit and pay tax each year as the mortgage payments were made. Now he must declare the entire profit and pay the tax in advance, even though it may be years before he receives his full payment. He wrote to my office as follows:

I was just reaching the stage where lower interest rates made it feasible to start developing some property. Now it wouldn't matter if rates dropped to 5 per cent. I would still be out of business.

Then there is the small developer who has been working for more than a year negotiating the rezoning of his building in a lower mainland municipality. He has written to the minister responsible for housing as follows:

How in the world is an individual supposed to plan in today's economy when you change the rules with no warning and give no time for individuals to prepare or plan their business policy?

There is the Victoria businessman who, with his family, purchased a parcel of land with the intention of developing it as a site for a commercial office building under previous budget provisions. The new budget alters the entire economics of his proposed development. He has been working on his project since November, 1980. He may now be forced to abandon it and face carrying costs of $20,000 per month.

Of course one of the outrageous aspects of the new budget is the provision which taxes accrued income on life insurance policies. In effect, the government proposes to tax income long before it is received. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) dealt with this matter earlier this evening.

Then there are all those measures which impact personally on individuals who run their own business or whose union has negotiated employee benefits in the form of dental plans and medical insurance. Under the new budget people receiving such benefits must pay tax on them. One union official advised me that this provision alone could destroy years of work by the union movement in approving the over-all pay package of Canadians. It will also encourage union negotiators to increase wage demands as compensation at a time when the government is asking Canadians to accept lower wages.

Another unfair blow deals with the small businessman who now finds that he cannot utilize his company's deferred profit-sharing scheme, his hedge against future years when his earnings may be low. Many small businessmen do not know how much money their companies will earn in a year. Thus they draw very limited salaries and, in the event that there are any profits, they allocate funds to their deferred profit-sharing plan. Now these principals are effectively penalized for setting up their companies, assuming risks and putting their money on the line to create the jobs Canadians need and the goods and services Canadians want. Similarly, the 12.5 per cent tax on dividend contributions to small business will make it harder to finance small business from internal cash flows and increase their reliance on bank financing. Clarkson-Gordon estimated that the dividend tax credit amounts to an increase in income tax of nearly 40 per cent for a small businessman who before the budget took his salary in the form of dividends, if and when he made them. The frustration of many small businessmen is echoed in the one who wrote:

> Canada did not attain its present state of prosperity and advancement through a system of penalizing personal initiative.

There is another measure in the budget which hurts individual Canadians, and it deals with income averaging. In the past, individuals who receive severance pay or writers and artists whose annual income varies could roll their funds into income-averaging annuity contracts or registered retirement savings plans. This provision has been eliminated. The result is that the financial security and the retirement plans of many people have been shattered. There are the public servants and other employees who no longer have an opportunity to transfer severance benefits, without tax penalty, into registered retirement savings plans or to use such plans for the purchase of other types of income annuity plans. Initially this tax deferral mechanism was introduced in other budgets to encourage savings and to help people prepare for their retirement years. Now people who planned their entire retirement income under existing budget provisions will also find themselves paying taxes. The fact that they will now be taxed on their retirement allowance means many people will have to rethink their retirement plans. They are also writing to the minister and to their Members of Parliament.

When RRSPs were first introduced in 1957 by Liberal finance minister Walter Harris, he said:

> Whatever the subsequent loss of revenue may be, it can, however, be regarded as an indication of the volume of provision being made by Canadians toward freedom from financial worry at a time when their earning power has lessened.
> To me, this policy makes good sense. Moreover, the broad effect of this new policy will be anti-inflationary, since it will be an encouragement to increased immediate saving which will be productively employed.

History has shown that Mr. Harris was right; history will show that the Minister of Finance is wrong. The budget provisions which affect income averaging do not just affect the wealthy. They affect farmers who sell their only asset, their farm, and plan to live off the proceeds. Now they too face a heavy tax penalty. They affect thousands of Canadians who bought a registered home ownership savings plan and now realize that they will never be able to buy a house. Before the budget they could roll that money into an income-averaging annuity contract. Now, without any warning, they face the prospect of paying a heavy tax penalty at the time of the rollover. Many people affected by this category have been in touch with me. They are senior citizens who quite simply need the extra money which they must now pay in taxes to keep themselves above the poverty line.

The loss of the general averaging provisions also removes an element of financial stability for people whose incomes vary from year to year. There is a logging operator in northern British Columbia who spent years building up his business. Now, through the elimination of the provision, he will get hit for taxes the first year he meets with any success. There is the west coast fisherman who did well during this summer's salmon season after several years of poor runs. He operated the whole season under the existing general averaging provisions, and now he feels he will have to pay extra taxes. The loss of this provision hits hard on small business people who earn very little in their first years of operation while they build up their business and then face high taxes in their first good year of operation.

I have attempted to convey some of the views of ordinary Canadians who have been affected by the budget. One of the best views comes from a British Columbian who wrote to the Minister of Finance as follows:

> Please explain to me how a budget that creates unemployment, stops construction of housing units, bankrupts the middle class and hamstrings Canadian investors can help Canada at this time.

But I think the best summation of all comes from another British Columbian who wrote the minister as follows:

> I'm mad as hell and I'm not gonna take it anymore!

Canadians will not accept the budget. It has caused too much pain, too much anguish and too many broken commitments. The problems are too big for band-aid treatment. The budget must be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in light of what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) just said, it would be worth repeating that the minister indicated on a number of occasions that where serious problems are being caused for individuals who made plans and provisions under the old tax rules, he is prepared to consider them seriously and to bring about adjustment provisions for the transition from the old regime to the new regime. It is really unfair to stand in the House of Commons and indicate that the new regime will come into effect immediately without any adjustment or transition provisions, when the minister indicated clearly that such measures would be forthcoming if it could be shown that serious difficulties were being caused for Canadians as a result.

• (2110)

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre raised another point and before I get into my discussion I should like to deal with it. The hon. member discussed a great many of the incentives that have been put into the tax system in past years.

An hon. Member: Loopholes!

Mr. Evans: Some hon. members opposite say there are loopholes. The same word has been used before. I would say it is an unfortunate word to use, and if I have ever used it myself it was unintentional. Some incentives were put into the tax system in order to achieve certain economic objectives. If those incentives have been used over the years for tax avoidance as opposed to the achievement of economic benefits for Canadians and Canadian taxpayers through the generation of additional wealth, then it behooves the government and this House to ask why they are not achieving their original purpose.

Every time a Canadian taxpayer defers one dollar of tax, that means that other Canadian taxpayers have to take up the burden.

Mr. Stevens: If the government spends it.

Mr. Evans: Hon. members opposite will say that government expenditures should be drastically reduced, and some members on this side and in the corner opposite will agree. We can talk about expenditure restraint, of course, but that does not apply to tax policy. Tax policy is established in order to generate the revenues necessary to finance the operations of government. Given the level of expenditures, the tax policy is then established to raise the revenues sufficient to fund that.

If some people use deferrals or other measures to avoid taxation, it means that other Canadians have to pick up the extra burden. They will pick it up in the form of higher tax rates, as was indicated today by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid); in the form of inflation when the Bank of Canada finances the government deficit, or in the form of higher interest rates when the government has to borrow in the marketplace in order to finance deficits. Certainly, however, the government will have to finance a given level of expenditures. Its operations will be financed and Canadians will have to bear that burden. For every dollar that is rightfully deferred by one Canadian for a good reason, another Canadian has to pick up the additional burden.

Deferrals in the system are a fact of life. If economic benefits greater than the amount of the deferrals themselves are generated, then that is good for Canada. An analysis has to be made, however, and I am sure hon. members opposite would demand it, to determine whether every dollar handed out by the government will return more than one dollar to the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Stevens: Show it to us.

Mr. Evans: That is a fundamental tenet with which I am sure the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) would agree. I do not argue that it holds true in all cases; I am arguing that it is a fundamental principle, and if the hon. member for York-Peel does not agree, I wish he would say so, but I think he does agree with it.

Mr. Stevens: Why don't you do it?

Mr. Evans: If the federal government or a provincial government decides not to collect certain tax dollars, then some tests have to be made. Over the last two years an analysis has been carried out. In fact it was started by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who introduced the tax expenditure account in his budget of 1979. That was the first time tax expenditures were examined and listed in a systematic way. They were listed again in 1980. In October of 1980 the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) indicated that he intended to examine these expenditures very carefully for his forthcoming budget.

When questions were raised, in some cases it was seen that the incentives were not leading to benefits for the Canadian taxpayer sufficient to justify the non-collection of the revenue which is, by its very nature a tax expenditure. That was the basis on which we started.

I am rather sorry that during these six days of debate we have not had a more careful analysis of the situation that faces this country, the United States, Great Britain and western European countries. The situation that we face, the fundamental problems that we face and the kinds of policies that we will require—

Mr. Lewis: Tell us about Coutts.

Mr. Evans: —irrespective of whether there is a Liberal government, a Conservative government or an NDP government in office, the kind of policies required to deal with the fundamental cause of the difficulties we face—

Mr. Stevens: What does Coutts say?

Mr. Evans: I think the Minister of Finance put it correctly and hon. members opposite who are howling over there, for whatever reason, and I am not being the slightest bit partisan—

Mr. Stevens: What does Jimmy Coutts say?

Mr. Evans: —I wish they would sit back and listen to what I have to say before they criticize it. The circus is at it again, Mr. Speaker.

The fundamental problem in our country—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is this government.

Mr. Evans: The fundamental problem is inflation. A number of things flow from an inflationary environment. It increases the uncertainty facing investors and the uncertainty facing consumers. It puts a drag on long-term investment and a drag on economic growth. Time horizons tend to shorten when we are faced with an inflationary environment.

Mr. Stevens: What about Coutts? What about Coutts?

Mr. Evans: It increases required rates of return on investment and it puts a bias on investment decisions toward physical assets and not productive assets. It influences investors toward the purchase of gold and other assets such as land, and depresses—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, while your attention is being distracted by the hon. house leader of the NDP in the House, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), we are not being made aware of the constant interruptions from the gentlemen—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) has the floor.

Mr. Epp: J.-J. You blew it again. You are like a blind.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my friend, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais), for trying to quell the screams on the other side.

Mr. Stevens: Tell us about Jimmy Coutts.

Mr. Evans: Inflation leads to corporate takeovers.

Mr. Stevens: What did Jimmy Coutts say?

Mr. Evans: In the last few years we have seen a rise in corporate takeovers rather than capital being directed toward new productive investment. This kind of activity reallocates wealth arbitrarily within the system. It penalizes those who save and it rewards those who borrow. In the past ten years the big losers to inflation—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Are Canadians.

Mr. Evans: —have been those who saved, those who invested, because the rate of return—

Mr. Stevens: Who caused that? Who has been in power?

Mr. Evans: —on these kinds of assets has been negative over that period.

Mr. Stevens: Who caused inflation?

Mr. Epp: That is the best part of your speech.

Mr. Evans: It encourages speculative behaviour as opposed to investment. Inflation tends to depress productive investment.

Mr. Stevens: Correct. Who caused it?

Mr. Evans: It tends to depress productivity growth. It tends to depress employment growth, especially in stable, long-term jobs.

Mr. Epp: You depress us.

Mr. Evans: If we look at the latter half of the last 1970s, we see it as a period when inflation accelerated in all parts of the world.

• (2120)

I realize that the hon. members opposite are not interested in hearing someone try to analyse long-term problems which are facing this country and other countries.

Mr. Epp: What are the solutions?

Mr. Evans: Because it is exactly this kind of behaviour that makes the House of Commons a laughing stock to the Canadian people.

Mr. Stevens: No, it is your type of speech!

Mr. Evans: It is about time we started to have some rational debate and a serious analysis of the kinds of problems that are facing us. I would appreciate, if not attention, at least a bit of silence.

Mr. Epp: Give us the solutions!

Mr. Stevens: But talk sense!

Mr. Evans: In the latter half of the seventies, we saw—

Mr. Stevens: And who was in power?

Mr. Evans: —inflation accelerate here and in the rest of the world. What did we see going along with that accelerating inflation? We saw slowing growth, we saw zero productivity growth—

Mr. Stevens: Now you caught on!

Mr. Evans: —we saw rising unemployment, we saw high interest rates, we saw no real income growth for Canadians. Essentially, this country, the United States, Britain, France and Germany, all went into a period of stagnation, which is the handmaiden of inflation. Partially due to inflation, during the period from 1967 to 1971, and not only here but also in other countries, there was an increasing burden being placed on the taxpayer caused by the inflationary movement of people rising into higher and higher tax brackets. This further reduced the incentive to work, to save and to invest. By the mid 1970s, all the western countries had recognized the problem and had responded.

However, the typical response of the western countries during the early seventies, mid seventies and late seventies was to try to offset the disincentives being caused by inflation, by an ever-increasing taxation burden, especially in the United States. That is a country which does not currently benefit from indexation of its tax system. These countries tried to respond by increasing the number of tax concessions, by increasing the number of tax credits, by increasing the number of deductions within their systems and, in some countries, such as Canada, by indexation of the tax systems.

However, the real problem was the high marginal tax rates, and those were not touched. The response by the individual countries meant that one could increase the rate of return on investment if one could find an investment vehicle which involved some form of tax concession. That led to greater demand for even more concessions. However, the incentive problem of high marginal tax rates remained, since each additional dollar earned, without an offsetting concession, was taxed at a relatively high rate. Investment for tax policy as opposed to economic reasons became the rule of the day.

Let me now summarize the matter. What are the causes of our current dilemma? Here and around the world, I think that the causes are common.

Mr. Fennell: Socialist philosophy.

Mr. Evans: I see certain facts. The first fact is that the fundamental, underlying cause of inflation—

Mr. Fennell: Is the Liberal government.

Mr. Evans: —is monetary expansion which grows at a greater rate than the growth of real output. I think that is agreed to—

Mr. Epp: Economics 102.

Mr. Evans: —around the world. Some people will say that it is a long-term problem, but not a problem which cannot be offset with other policy means. However, I think all would agree that, fundamentally, it is the rate of monetary expansion and the growth of purchasing power relative to that which causes inflation.

If we want to solve inflation, we can do it simply through monetary restraint. However, the problem is that when inflation is accelerating, the process of eliminating inflation from one's system through the use of monetary restraint will be long and painful. People will tell us that Japan has high deficits and low inflation. How can that be? It is because Japan's monetary expansion has been relatively low during the period of the last 10 to 15 years; and, in addition to that, it has been able to maintain—

Mr. Epp: High productivity.

Mr. Evans: —low inflation at the same time as high deficits. However, there has been a transfer from the private sector to the public sector—

Mr. Huntington: Of a spirit of excellence.

Mr. Evans: —as a result of those higher deficits. However, one can have high deficits and low inflation; that is not inconsistent. The problem we are facing in this country—

Mr. Huntington: Is both.

Mr. Evans: —is trying to move from a period of high inflation to a period of low inflation at the same time as we are running large deficits. The process of moving from high inflation to low inflation can be faster—

Mr. Stevens: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York Peel on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, before the parliamentary secretary concludes, I was wondering if he could indicate whether he will be dealing with Jimmy Coutts' comments on the budget. After all, he was the—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) has the floor.

Mr. Evans: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of dealing with Mr. Coutts.

Some hon. Members: Chicken!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the process could be made faster and less painful if fiscal policy is brought into line with monetary policy on the restraint side. Therefore, as I said, while deficits do not create inflation, they can make the job of the monetary authority more difficult. In other words, the process of moving from a highly inflationary state to a low inflation state without fiscal policy or fiscal restraint will be more painful in terms of higher real interest rates, more painful in high unemployment, and more painful in terms of a longer period of slow growth.

The second fact is that increasing tax burdens, in other words, high marginal tax rates, reduce the incentive to work, save and invest. In other words, they reduce the returns to productive economic activity. Again, I think that this fact is now recognized worldwide, because high marginal tax rates, if one takes the British example, have led to tax avoidance behaviour, have led to the growth of the underground economy and have led to the kinds of demands for more tax concessions. The same kinds of demands were being seen and felt here in Canada. First of all—

Mr. Huntington: Talk about productivity, John.

Mr. Evans: —a proliferation of tax incentives tends to confuse the economic system and increases the complexity of the tax system. They tend to direct investment and savings into areas where they might not have gone otherwise. It narrows and erodes the tax base which, as I said earlier, necessitates the placing of a heavier tax burden on other Canadian taxpayers, and it reallocates the tax burden generally on to those who are less vocal and less well organized. It is very important, I think that where the term loophole has arisen in the past, it has led to a perception by individuals in our society of inequity and a demand for ever more concessions by individuals and groups.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Would the parliamentary secretary identify the public servant who wrote that speech for him?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It is Jim Coutts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Evans: Walter, no public servant would write this for me.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You're right!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it focuses attention on the existence of concessions, the existence of the kind of system which we are faced with now and have been faced with before the budget. It focuses attention, again, on the tax policy reasons for activity as opposed to the long-term economic reasons.

As I said earlier, when concessions are granted, it means that other Canadians must carry a heavier tax burden. That was the kind of problem which was facing the minister and the government when this particular budget—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: —was brought into place. These are the fundamental facts which are at the heart of our economic difficulties in this country, namely, inflation, and the rates of taxation and deficits.

What of the current policy implemented by the budget? The budget we have in place is one of monetary restraint. There has been a policy of gradualism to bring down the rate of growth and money supply over a good many years now. It is now at the level where we can expect to see some break in the rate of inflation. However, as the Governor of the Bank of Canada has said, some support on the fiscal side is required if we are not to go through a prolonged period of difficulty. Therefore, the government has introduced a policy of fiscal restraint. At the same time, it has tried to improve the over-all incentives, not the specific incentives, in our system of working, saving and investing.

Now, for obvious reasons in politics, the opposition will say that there is no fiscal restraint.

Mr. Epp: A twelve billion dollar deficit!

Mr. Evans: An honest and objective appraisal of the situation will show that to be false. I think it is fair to ask Canadians to consider the public accounts figures. During a period of transition from a highly inflationary period to a low inflationary period, when we can expect real interest rates to be higher than we expect them to be over the medium term, we can look at government discretionary expenditures, if you will, not expenditures as given in the public accounts without public debt charges. The figures in the public accounts for growth of net government expenditures without public debt charges show, and show clearly, that there has been and there continues to be a policy of restraint of discretionary government expenditures. The question is whether the transition costs—and that is the argument we will get into with regard to national account versus public accounts—those costs that are associated with the move from a highly inflationary situation, a high unemployment situation, a slow growth situation toward lower inflation, lower unemployment and a faster growth situation, should be considered as part of the government's permanent expenditure pattern. That is where the argument arises. I say it is not fair and it is not honest to the Canadian people to include those transition costs on a permanent basis in the government's expenditures as part of the government expenditures.

• (2130)

An hon. Member: Someone has to.

Mr. Evans: Certainly they are not permanent costs. They are not discretionary costs. That is especially the case with regard to interest rates. When interest rates rose dramatically over the last year, the cost of servicing the public debt went up by some $2.5 billion. This was totally unanticipated. This was a transitional cost that one cannot say was an intentional result of government policy.

I would doubt whether the Opposition would give the government credit when interest rates come down, if the public debt charges come down and government expenditures fall as a result of those lower debt charges. People would say, "See, the government is now constraining its expenditures." Instead, the opposition will say "No, this happened because interest rates fell, not because of discretion". But I say it is fair on both sides.

I contend that we have put forward a policy of balanced restraint conducive to the fight against inflation. Given what is happening around the world and the domestic situation that we face now, the agreed need is for restraint. I do not think there is any argument on either side of the House that there is a need for restraint, that there is a need to support monetary policy, that there is a need to fight inflation. The question is, how do we achieve it? We can do this in one or two ways. We can cut expenditures. But where would we cut expenditures?

Mr. Taylor: Throw out metric.

Mr. Nielsen: We will start with you.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for York-Peel is an example of one who would cut government expenditures. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) indicated in an interview the other day that over a period of five years the hon. member for York-Peel was able to eliminate $5 billion by cutting expenditures. Given his reputation, that does not seem like a very sizeable sum. But he had done his job, and I am sure, given his reputation, he had done that job very well. That indicates to me that if that is the best he could do, which is a sizeable sum—and I am not saying it is not—we are talking about $5 billion over 5 years, Mr. Speaker, and we are talking about a federal deficit today of about $10 billion. We are not talking about a major decrease from that kind of expenditure reduction.

From where would the expenditure reductions come? Would hon. members slash the social security of Canadians? Are those the programs they would slash?

Mr. Nielsen: How about Mirabel?

Mr. Taylor: How about metric?

Mr. Kempling: What about Mirabel?

An hon. Member: That costs $1 million a week.

Mr. Evans: If the answer is not on the expenditure side, where else is it? It has to be on the revenue side. Ask yourselves that. Ask yourselves if you are going to have that, will you raise taxes? Where are those taxes to be levied if you raise revenues through taxation? Would you raise the burden on those who are already straining under the load? No, Mr. Speaker, there is a growing consensus that tax reductions are in order, not tax increases. But how can you have a reduced deficit when tax rates are reduced as well?

An hon. Member: You tell us, John.

Mr. Evans: Others have tried. Mr. Reagan has tried in the United States. He has decided that the way to go about reducing tax rates and reducing the deficit is to slash social programs at the same time. We have seen the folly of that approach politically. Mr. Reagan will not be able to do it. The deficit in the United States will probably be double what he projected it would be just six months ago because he cannot deliver on the expenditure cut side.

If you look at what Mrs. Thatcher is doing—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who is doing it right, John?

Mr. Taylor: At least she is trying.

Mr. Evans: —she has decided that she would cut social expenditures and let the monetary policy carry the load over the long period. You have seen the unemployment effect of that. Our government has decided that the approach to take to improving incentive and reducing the deficit is to broaden the tax base, to shore up the foundations of the tax base, to ensure that the tax burden is carried by a greater number of Canadians in an equitable fashion. That will generate the revenues. That will allow us to preserve the valuable system of social programs that we have built up in this country over the years. That will allow us to cut the tax rate which will increase the incentives to work, save and invest.

That approach which is being implemented by this government, I contend, will prove to be successful. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it will prove to be successful and it will be copied by other governments in the western world as a way of coming to grips with these problems without placing the burden on those least able to carry that burden.

The budget attacks the root causes of our problems. It supports the monetary policy in the fight against inflation. It puts strong general incentives in place to work, save and invest by cutting marginal tax rates. An additional benefit, and a benefit that is not recognized as flowing from this budget, but should be, is that because of the reduced deficit and because of the higher and higher incentives, we will have lower rates of inflation leading to lower interest rates than would have been the case without deficit reduction. We are going to have a stable medium-term oriented policy and not a short-term counter-cyclical policy that responds in an ever-increasing way, in an ever-inflationary way. These are powerful incentives as well.

Mr. Nielsen: Garbage.

Mr. Evans: Certainly there will be transition problems. As I said earlier, the minister has indicated his concern and his intention to correct these problems within the context of the general thrust of his budget.

I sincerely believe that Canadians should applaud this budget. Certainly all those who are adversely affected would prefer the budget to take away from other Canadians and not themselves. I know of no way in which revenues can be raised in which no one has to lose anything.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Evans: In the speeches I have heard from the Opposition, and especially the speech made by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) today, the Opposition is behaving like an alcoholic who thinks that the solution to the problem is more of the same. It is not restraint. It is one more drink, one more subsidy, that will solve our problems.

Mr. Taylor: You should know.

Mr. Epp: You have been the bartender all these years.

Mr. Evans: But it is clear that this is not the real solution. A longer perspective is required and more of the same is not the solution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Evans: There are a number of points we can raise with regard to the reaction to policy. I hear the Opposition screaming that we do not care for home owners, for renters, for senior citizens, for the unemployed, for small business or farmers.

Mr. Lewis: That's Cosgrove saying that.

Mr. Evans: I challenge hon. members to ask their constituents, as I have asked mine and some of their constituents as well, whether they would prefer more government programs or lower interest rates. Would they prefer lower inflation? Would they prefer a good future for our young people?

The minister has taken the challenge and he has put forward a budget. I commend him for it.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues urged me at five minutes before the termination of this debate to go as a posse of one to catch this wild, runaway, stupid, totally inappropriate budget that has been put forward by this administration. There is no minister apart from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who has the slightest understanding of what was provided for in the budget. As a matter of fact, I defy members of the Department of Finance to say what are the implications of this budget as far as the Canadian public is concerned.

The Minister of Finance was proud to announce that this budget had three themes: restraint, equity and economic renewal. In relation to restraint, I call attention to the table at page 60 of "The Budget in More Detail". As my colleague, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), and others have said, expenditures have increased by 22 per cent. That is restraint? Revenues by the Government of Canada increased by 19.6 per cent this year. We know that this increases tremendously through income taxes, and if the Canadian people think the minister is being easy in respect of personal income taxes, let me point out that this year he projects revenue through personal income tax to be $23.665 billion. In three years' time that is projected at $41.470 billion. That is restraint? Corporate income tax revenue almost doubles. Petroleum and gas revenue taxes go up almost five times. We find this all the way down the line. As a matter of fact, total budgetary revenues under this budget of restraint will go up from $54.310 billion to $64.960 billion next year. From that minor and modest sum, total budgetary revenues for 1985-86 are projected to be $91.745 billion. That is the projection in respect of budgetary revenues on the basis of tax rates and the national energy plan. The government has fashioned three more udders to the cow this year and has taken the teats from two udders to itself. Is that what is said to be restraint by government?

People like the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and other ministers have nothing else in mind but spending programs, which they put forward before their docile colleagues and which they convince a part of the Canadian public to buy. Then they say they must have the money. They do not think first about getting the money and then bringing in the programs. No, they get the programs into place and then insist that they have the money. This is why we have this pulling and pushing with the provinces. The Government of Canada says it must have money and it says how it is going to get the money. That is restraint?

As far as equity is concerned, every discredited proposition contained in the Carter report and every discredited proposition in the white paper on taxation in 1969 has been brought forward by the tax policy section of the Department of Finance, where all the senior people have gone, and we are left with this miserable, mean group of proposals we find in this budget. We will see whether there is equity and we will see what this does to Canadians. Even our professional athletes are going to flee from us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: I ask those birds over in the peanut gallery to look at the provisions for revenue-averaging and see what happens. Look at what their friends, the doctors, the accountants and the lawyers, will have to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: Just look in any part of this country where there is any economic activity and see what is happening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Section (8) of Standing Order 60, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question on the motion now before the House. The question is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

Wednesday, December 9, 1981

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

ACCESS TO FINANCIAL AND MANAGEMENT INFORMATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Auditor General has stated in his 1981 report that his auditors were denied information material to the audit. In particular he was denied documentation by senior officials on the direction of ministers, related to financial and management decisions. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That all financial and management information be available to the Auditor General and that all incidents of non-compliance be reported by the Auditor General to the House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO MEET SKILLED LABOUR SHORTAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that a skilled labour shortage is a prime concern facing many in the small business community, and in view of the recommendation of the all-party parliamentary task force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the federal government make a national, regional and local inventory and evaluation of all its training programs and institutions to ensure that they are being used to their greatest capacity, and that these training institutions and programs be used in co-operation with those existing in the private sector so that there is better co-ordination of training in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FORESTRY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF TRAINING COMPLEX IN NEW BRUNSWICK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since plans are completed for a maritime forest ranger school and training sawmill at Fredericton, New Brunswick, and the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have agreed to pay 50 per cent of the cost of establishing this complex, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the federal government, faced with a 50 per cent demand for continuing forestry education for young foresters who lack facilities to make a significant contribution to their training, take immediate action to approve this project in cabinet so that current and forthcoming forestry programs in Atlantic Canada will not suffer from a lack of forestry technicians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INTRODUCTION OF DAYCARE FACILITIES AND PAID MATERNITY LEAVE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last week when I abstained from the final vote on the Constitution I did so because I believed the rights of the unborn child were not adequately protected, and further, that society has not adequately provided the support measures necessary to assist women during pregnancy, working mothers and their children. I therefore move, seconded by the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House confirm its desire to see adequate daycare facilities and other assistance necessary to make childbirth and child rearing less of a burden and more desirable; and further, that we congratulate you, Madam Speaker, for your support of this cause by introducing daycare facilities and paid maternity leave for women working in the House of Commons, and further that this leave be extended to Members' staff, Library staff and Senators' staff.

S.O. 43

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

REDUCTION IN PRICE OF EGGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I seek the attention of all hon. members of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. On Monday, December 2, 1981, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency rightly lowered the price of eggs to farmers by two cents per dozen. This price reduction was triggered by their cost of production formula reflecting lower feed costs and interest rates. This responsible action contributes appropriately to our never-ending war on inflation. I therefore move, seconded by our agricultural expert, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson):

That this House recognize, support and encourage other such moves by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency and other similar commodity groups.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING ENERGY CONSERVATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Once again the people of Atlantic Canada are being asked to suffer under this uncaring government. The Energy Conservation Assistance Program, ECAP, was created by the government over 14 months ago to assist home owners with the cost of insulation and off-oil conversion. However, in that time only 850 applications out of 4,000 requests have been issued. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is responsible for ECAP, do immediately release the applications to those who have asked for them, and that he guarantee that the assistance be delivered immediately on the return of the application forms, or be ECAPed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas yesterday the President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association reported that, as a result of the Liberal government's inept economic policy, 140,000 Canadians have already lost their jobs in the manufacturing industries, and that with the recent budget there will be no improvement in job opportunities in the coming months, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the November 12 budget be immediately withdrawn and replaced by measures which will increase job prospects instead of throwing yet more Canadians out of work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESULTS OF GALLUP POLL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the results of a public opinion survey released today by the Gallup organization demonstrate that, if an election were held now, voters across Canada would elect a strong Progressive Conservative majority government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: The PCs lead the Liberals 42 per cent to 38 per cent, and top the NDP by a whopping 24 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That this House concurs with the judgment of the Canadian people that the Liberals should be turfed out of office and replaced by a strong majority PC government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATION TO SOVIET UNION ON SUBJECT OF HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which I hope gains the support of all the hon. members of this House. Whereas the number of Jewish people permitted to leave the Soviet Union in the past year has dropped precipitiously, whereas there is increasing harassment of those who have indicated their desire to leave the Soviet Union, and in view of the Soviet Union's refusal to allow study groups of Jewish people to meet and learn the Hebrew language, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson):

That this House make an urgent representation to the Soviet Union expressing grave concern over the Soviet Union's increasing violations of human rights in respect to those Soviet Jews who wish to leave that country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON RETIREMENT INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, prior to November 12, hundreds of Canadians had entered into agreements for sale of their land or business, and planned to use the income-averaging annuities to spread their capital gains over future years. This was both fair and legal, and enabled pioneers to provide for their families and for themselves for the remaining years of their lives. But then they were not robbed at gunpoint by a criminal, but, nonetheless, they were robbed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), whose voice stealthily crept into the homes of these Canadians who spent a lifetime building a nest egg for their retirement, and literally robbed these Canadians of such a great part of their earnings that their families are now left in ruins, bringing heartaches, frustrations, and maybe even suicides. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House begs and prays that the Minister of Finance will leave all laws as they were prior to November 12, at least for those who had carried out transactions that were then within the law.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF AEROSPACE CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Quebec caucus of the Liberal Party passed a unanimous resolution which calls for an aerospace training centre to be located in Montreal, or nowhere. As this resolution has overruled a government appointed advisory group's recommendation which stated that the aerospace centre should be located in Winnipeg, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House call on the Minister of Transport and the whole cabinet to ensure that the benefits from the recently announced joint research and development agreement for the aerospace industry signed with the United States are distributed in a fair and equitable manner in all parts of the country and that Manitoba receive at least 10 per cent of the resulting benefits.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT ON POSSIBLE CHANGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I put my question to the Prime Minister. On budget night I referred to the possibility of a tax revolt in this country as a result of the finance minister's budget. Since then I have received hundreds of letters of complaint. Just today I received well over 100 letters from people complaining about the impact of the budget. At a press conference today 23 national leaders of large organizations asked the government to withdraw the budget. People are expressing anger, depression and despair, and I am sure that hon. members in the Liberal Party are getting the same response. When will the government announce which parts of the budget will be changed, and which parts of the budget will be withdrawn in total?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member forgot to point out that it took courage for the Minister of Finance to make these proposals in the House, considering the privileges that existed in our tax system.

I may also remind the hon. member that since the Minister of Finance brought down the budget, I myself and the parliamentary secretary have had an opportunity to meet many groups and to listen to their views on the various provisions and measures contained in the budget.

I may also remind him that the Minister of Finance has pointed out several times that he was a good listener, that one of the objectives he wanted to achieve through this budget was equity, and that he was considering and listening to comments so as to make sure that the equity principle was observed in its various provisions.

REQUEST THAT CHANGES BE ANNOUNCED BEFORE CHRISTMAS RECESS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, many Canadians and companies have been left in total limbo or a total state of uncertainty with respect to their personal and corporate planning. The December 31 year end is coming up shortly, being only three weeks away. It will present a deadline within which many people have to make decisions. The budget attacks capital spending, it attacks savings, and spending plans are being put on the shelf pending some resolution to the uncertainty caused by the budget.

I put my question again to the Prime Minister. Will he commit to the House that any announcements of changes to the budget will be made in the House, and that they will be made prior to the Christmas recess?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I cannot inform the hon. member when and how the Minister of Finance will decide to give the House his conclusions after considering various budget measures. However, knowing how wise is the minister and also his respect for parliamentary procedure, there is no doubt that the Minister of Finance will take those steps at the appropriate time and in the appropriate manner.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether my translation was working properly, but I thought the minister said prudence and horse sense. If the Minister of Finance had any prudence and horse sense he would not have brought in that budget; he would have known better than to bring in that budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: The changes arising out of the 1980 budget caused the same type of disruption that this budget has, but last year it was in a more concentrated way. This year it will affect many Canadians.

I will put my question to the Minister of State for Finance this time. Since the disruption caused by this year's budget affects so many individuals and so many companies, will the government consider as an option withdrawing the entire budget and starting fresh after the Christmas recess?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member really has not read, and certainly has not understood the importance of, this budget. If he had understood the meaning of equity, which underlies the tax provisions, and if he had understood the measures of restraint that formed the basis for the budget's financial framework, he would not be asking the government to withdraw the budget but would be joining the members on this side of the House who gave their majority approval yesterday to the principles of the budget.

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING MATTERS CONSIDERED WHEN PREPARING BUDGET

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that we are now faced with the worst red ink figures in our relationship with the rest of the world in terms of trade, and in view of the fact that the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association now says that 140,000 more people have found themselves out of work in the past three months, and bearing in mind there have been 67 plants closed down in Ontario alone, will the Prime Minister indicate, as he was one of the architects of the budget, whether he took this type of thing into consideration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to convey the hon. member's representation to the minister. I believe he will be in the House presently.

DURATION OF RECESSION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would direct my supplementary again to the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister, working with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has put in place conditions for a serious recession in Canada, will he indicate to the House how long he expects that recession to continue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course I do not agree with the premise of the question. Therefore, the answer cannot be given.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED BANNING FORECLOSURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. Legislation was introduced yesterday in the province of Saskatchewan which will guarantee that no resident of that province will have to lose his or her home because of foreclosure, and this will have the force of law. Considering that the minister has made a promise to that effect at the national level, and in light of the fact there are 635,000 home owners in Canada who will have their mortgages coming up for renewal next year, is the federal government prepared to back up this vague promise with the security of law so that when these home owners go to the banks they will have a firm foundation upon which to deal?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the leader of the New Democratic Party for the question. I had the opportunity of discussing this matter with the minister of housing for the province of Saskatchewan during my visit some few days ago. I should like to point out at the outset that the move is obviously in response to the fact that fewer than 100 home owners faced foreclosure during 1981. In response to that we feel the Canada mortgage renewal plan addresses the problems which the legislation that was introduced attempts to address. Indeed, it appears as if the challenge to the courts under this new legislation will result from the equitable rules we have already applied in the plan announced in the budget.

But more than that, Madam Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, from the news reports on this legislation, and I have not read it, I am fearful that the introduction of it will have the effect of turning down the production of housing in that province and will, therefore, have the effect of creating further unemployment there. Most important of all, as I indicated to the provincial minister, I am disappointed that in the Speech from the Throne by that NDP government in that province there were no initiatives with new money to stimulate the construction of housing in that province; no money, for example, that parallels the $350 million provided by the Minister of Finance for Canada.

PROVISION OF MORTGAGE MONEY BY BANKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the commitment made by the federal government falls 50,000 short of the number of housing units that are needed nationally next year.

My second question concerns the point which the minister picked on, the thrust of the Saskatchewan legislation. As the minister knows, the legislation is intended to deal not simply with foreclosures but also with people who will be forced to sell because they cannot afford to renew mortgages. Both these points are covered in the legislation.

Therefore I would like to ask the minister, considering that the Minister of Finance has said in that immortal phrase "the banks must be forced to bleed a little", and considering that bank profits have risen by 182 per cent in the past five years as compared to only a 52 per cent increase in wages and salaries, will the minister now introduce a Canada home owners protection act that will force the banks to provide money for mortgages at an affordable level?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I cannot let the introductory remarks of the hon. leader of the NDP go unchallenged. The point that I was making to him was that the number of units allocated under the federal rental stimulus program—500 or 600—is 500 or 600 more than that which the province of Saskatchewan addressed in its budget. They addressed zero, a big zero.

Further than that, my fear is that this legislation, rather than helping the industry in that province, will have the exact opposite effect in that it will turn down housing starts and cause further difficulties to the housing industry in that province. As I have indicated, the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan equitably addresses the problems of Canadians facing mortgage renewal. If they feel that they cannot meet the new payments, that plan is available to them and, of course, the option would be either foreclosure or sale. It is to meet those problems that we introduced that plan.

Mr. Mazankowski: There are a lot of empty houses in Uranium City.

REQUEST THAT BANK ACT BE AMENDED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows full well that the legislation which has come from this government will leave literally thousands of Canadians having to increase their mortgage payments by $200 to $300 per month, and this government is doing nothing about it. That is the reality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Would he now answer the question which I put to him, and answer it in a straightforward way? Considering that the data is accurate, that bank profits are up by 182 per cent in five years which is more than three times the increase in wages and salaries, why does this government not restore to the Bank Act the principle that used to be there before the Liberals took it out, namely, that the banks have to provide mortgages at levels which the ordinary family can afford?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Canada mortgage renewal plan which was the subject of the ad which was published in the newspapers following the budget—

Mr. Broadbent: Is this a recorded announcement?

Mr. Cosgrove: —addressed the matter of an equitable response to people who were facing mortgage renewal. Using that equitable base as a guideline, we said that Canadians must address their problems first.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes.

Mr. Cosgrove: We felt that it was equitable that all Canadians, for example, pay a reasonable and fair amount of their income toward shelter costs.

Mr. Broadbent: A guaranteed income program for banks.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, how else can we justify introducing $350 million of taxpayers' money to support shelter and to support renters, if at the same time the hon. member is asking us to use large amounts of money to assist people who are building equity in their homes.

We said that people ought to pay up to a reasonable amount for their own protection, 30 per cent.

An hon. Member: What about the banks?

Mr. Cosgrove: Beyond that we felt it would be equitable for the government to assist.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED PLOT AGAINST LIVES OF UNITED STATES OFFICIALS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The President of the United States has said, "We have the evidence", and the U.S. State Department says that they have strong evidence "that Khadafy has been planning the murder of American officials both here and overseas". Has the Government of Canada seen this U.S. evidence, and do we agree that the leader of Libya has planned such activities? Second, have we taken any special measures to co-operate with the United States to prevent any Libyan agents from entering Canada and transiting to the United States and, if so, what kinds of measures have we taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not had the matter raised with me before this moment and I know nothing about it, but I would be happy to enquire on behalf of the hon. member.

ENTRY INTO CANADA OF LIBYAN NATIONALS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I will try a supplementary question with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has Canada taken any measures to deal with the entry into Canada of Libyans or possible Libyan agents, transiting through Canada to the United States? Have we taken any special measures, or have we been asked to take any special measures by the United States? They seem to be very concerned and worried that some attempt might be made on the life of the President or other United States officials. If we have been asked, have we taken any such measures, and has the government considered whether we should ban travel to Canada by Libyans, or by Canadians to Libya? Is anything under consideration in this area?

• (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, anybody applying to come to Canada would be required to have a security check, so all those who have come to Canada on student visas, or others, would be subject to those kinds of assessments made by the RCMP at that time. One step we have taken is to provide for additional checks on those who are already in Canada to determine whether there is any connection, and we are satisfied at this point that there is none. We have also undertaken to develop at our border points of entry particular screenings or assessments of those who might be crossing the border, based on consultations with American authorities. We are co-operating to the extent we can within the basic laws of this country.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER SUBSIDY ON MILK PRODUCTION WILL BE CHANGED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I shall direct my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Since I am sure the parliamentary secretary is aware of a problem that is of particular concern to Canadian dairy producers, namely, the fact that agreement on a five-year plan which was to be signed in April has yet to materialize, can the parliamentary secretary give this House and the dairy producers the assurance that the agreement will be signed before December 31, and that the present subsidy will remain unchanged over the next five years?

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette, I should like to point out that we have had a study made by Price Waterhouse Associates. We received the finished study a few days ago, and the minister and the Canadian Dairy Commission are looking at the possibility of announcing a new dairy policy. Nevertheless, between now and January 1, it is expected that an increase based on production costs of dairy producers will be announced. For two days the minister and senior officials of the Department of Agriculture have met with more than 800 farmers or persons involved in the agro-food sector, and it is truly regrettable that there were no representatives from the government of Quebec.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, since I am asking a question that particularly concerns federal jurisdiction over dairy policy, I should again like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can now give dairy producers the assurance that the subsidy of $2.66 will be maintained in the government's dairy policy for the next five years?

Mr. Ostiguy: Madam Speaker, the subsidy of $2.66 was introduced by this government, and I can inform the hon. member that I do not believe there is any question of dropping this subsidy.

AUDITOR GENERAL

RECOMMENDATION ON RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACCOUNTING AND FINANCIAL REPORTING POLICIES

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday the report of the Auditor General was tabled in the House, and the Auditor General has suggested that the development of generally accepted accounting principles for government and a comprehensive summary of financial statements are necessary and will require strong central direction and leadership within the Government of Canada. As the minister will know, this is now diffused between the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General for Canada.

Would the President of the Treasury Board assure this House that he will confer with his cabinet colleagues and establish the necessary amendments to the Financial Administration Act to provide the Comptroller General of Canada, through the Treasury Board, with the primary responsibility for the accounting and financial reporting policies of the government?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am pleased indeed that the hon. member makes reference to the report of the Auditor General, which I did not have the opportunity to read yesterday before question period.

I must say I am very pleased with the over-all tone and content of the report, which I think the hon. member will agree demonstrates major progress across all areas of accountability in government and a great dedication on the part of this government to greater management and accountability practices. In keeping with that, my answer to the hon. member is yes, we are conducting studies at the present time. We hope to be bringing forward some technical amendments to the Financial Administration Act in the near future to make some adjustments, but we also hope to engage in an overview and an over-all study of the Financial Administration Act and the accounts at an early date.

OVERPAYMENT MADE TO CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport who, along with the President of the Treasury Board and many others, I assume is recovering from the surprising disclosure that Canadian National Railways was the recipient of a $53 million overpayment and, in addition, substantial tax benefits, when it claimed losses which in fact it did not have. A previous report of an auditor general, Mr. Macdonell, criticized the government for not verifying claims for railway subsidies, and I wonder what the Minister of Transport has to say about this overpayment and what he is willing to do about it. Is there also an overpayment of this magnitude to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker. The difficulty was created at the time of recapitalization of the CN in 1978. The mistake was uncovered by the Canadian Transport Commission in 1980. Payments were stopped at the time, and we are looking now at a way to recover what was overpaid at that time, so the problem will be resolved.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—APPROVAL OF MEASURE BY UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We are constantly hearing predictions of gloom and doom from the benches across the way about such things as our economic relations with the United States. In this regard, would the minister kindly report on the status of the macro Alaska pipeline project?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sure the House will be happy to know that the House of Representatives has approved the waiver package put forward by the administration to the United States Congress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This step by the United States Congress ensures that all the legislative roadblocks to this major project have been removed and that the United States administration and Congress honour fully the commitment they made to the Canadian government last year when we discussed this matter with them and stressed to them how important it was that this project receive support from the United States Congress and the United States administration. We now hope that financial arrangements will be made to ensure the realization of this project in the private sector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION ON HYDROGEN PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In January of this year the minister of energy for Ontario requested the assistance and co-operation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in relation to energy research and development, particularly for hydrogen. In May of this year a special parliamentary committee suggested a $1 million hydrogen program. Up until two weeks ago there was federal-provincial co-operation respecting this program. Will the minister tell us why he asked his officials to stop discussing this with Ontario officials two weeks ago?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I never made such a request, Madam Speaker. I think the best evidence of that is that there were meetings as recently as two weeks ago, and I presume there will be other meetings. I have never given any such instruction.

There are discussions taking place, I believe, with the government of Ontario and with officials of the government of Quebec, and we have indicated to other provinces which are interested in this particular technology that if they have any proposal to put forward, we would be happy to discuss it with them. I am afraid the hon. member's information is completely wrong.

REPORTED INSTRUCTIONS FROM QUEBEC LIBERAL CAUCUS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am afraid the minister's nose is starting to grow again. He will know full well that his officials had instructions two weeks ago to stop discussions with officials from the province of Ontario. It is unfortunate that the minister's main expertise is in political manipulation, as the people of Canada will know well when they consider the massive taxes they are paying on heating oil and gasoline and when they consider the stalled tar sands plants.

I ask the minister to confirm to the House that he has been given instructions from his Quebec Liberal caucus to make sure all investment in hydrogen occurs in the province of Quebec, to confirm that he has denied the province of Ontario participation in a national energy program, and to confirm that in fact what he has done, because the province of Quebec has now boycotted the federal government, has been to stall completely progress in this important area of energy development for Canada.

● (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I hope the forecast of the hon. member about my nose is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. Epp: Just take a look.

Mr. Lalonde: I can tell him that the rest of his question was even more without foundation. There has never been any discussion of the type the hon. member mentions. It is a lot of nonsense. I must tell the hon. member, without any reservation, that he is completely wrong from the beginning to the end of his question. It is totally without foundation.

REQUEST THAT ANNOUNCEMENT BE MADE ON ALBERTA MEGAPROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Perhaps he can use the occasion of my question to make another announcement in the House on the megaprojects in northeastern Alberta. I am sure the minister is aware that the investment in one megaproject, either in Alsands, Fort McMurray, or the plant at Cold Lake is $14 billion. This would lead to 97 million man-hours of employment across Canada at a time when unemployment is at an all-time high. It would contribute $3.6 billion to Canada's balance of payments and help secure Canada's future energy supplies. When is the minister going to stop dragging his feet and make an announcement in this House that those megaprojects will proceed on schedule this winter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have never dragged my feet.

REQUEST THAT CONCESSIONS BE MADE TO OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, the minister may not be dragging his feet but he is certainly dragging his nose. Will the minister confirm to this House that he will make the necessary concessions to the industry so that these megaprojects can get onstream and be constructed now? He knows that if the Alsands project does not proceed this winter, it will result in a full 18-month delay, if the go-ahead is not given by mid-December. Is he prepared to give this assurance to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have had negotiations with the government of Alberta. An agreement was concluded in September on oil pricing and fiscal arrangements. Since then we have had a number of discussions with representatives of the oil companies on the subject of tar sands projects. These negotiations have been conducted at the senior official level by Alberta, the Government of Canada and the companies concerned. On December 18 of this year we shall be having a meeting with representatives of Alsands and I shall be happy to report to my hon. colleague on the results as soon as the discussions involving the government of Alberta, the government of Alberta and the oil companies have been completed.

THE BUDGET

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ADVERTISEMENT—STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for housing. On December 4 the minister admitted to the House that employees of Studio S&B of Montreal had typeset the now famous ad on the Monday prior to the budget. That ad was sent out from Montreal by Purolator on Thursday, budget day. On November 17 the minister stated in the House:

> I learned generally of the provisions of the budget ... on Thursday afternoon ... My officials worked from five o'clock in the afternoon, through the evening, and early the next morning, and produced for my inspection that document which had been worked upon.

My question to the minister is: which of those contradictory statements is true?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as I intimated in response to a question from the leader of the New Democratic Party earlier this afternoon, the purpose of the ad being prepared in readiness to be produced in newspapers across the country on the following weekend was to give Canadians an opportunity of knowing what the particulars of the budget were, and what the specifics of the program were so that, for example, provincial legislatures that were looking at the same problem, as well as individual Canadians, would know what the federal government was proposing. That is the reason why the material was prepared in advance. If it coincided with the budget provisions announced by the Minister of Finance, it would be released. It was authorized for release for delivery to the newspapers after the Minister of Finance gave his speech in the House of Commons on November 12.

WORK OF OFFICIALS ON EVENING OF BUDGET'S PRESENTATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the minister just admitted that the ad was prepared in advance of the budget. I would ask the minister what his officials were working on from five o'clock in the afternoon until the next morning.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, there are a number of issues involved in the mortgage renewal plan, which the leader of the NDP hit upon this afternoon, such as the question of equity. For example, should the government decide to introduce grants rather than provide support to the financial industry for offering an interest deferral? That is one of the issues that generated a large amount of discussion between my officials, my office, officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as well as our representations over the last three months prior to the budget with officials of the Department of Finance and the minister.

RESEARCH

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT GRANTS MORE SUBSIDIES TO ONTARIO THAN TO QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Science and Technology Canada. For some time Quebec has publicly claimed that the federal government gives more research grants to Ontario than to Quebec. Can the minister clarify these statements? Second, can the minister inform the House whether Quebec has refused to accept money from his department which was earmarked for national parks, especially in the Mingan Islands area on the North Shore?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, regarding the first part of the hon. member's question, some ministers in Quebec claim that the federal government is not doing as much for Quebec as it is doing for Ontario. This is entirely inaccurate, Madam Speaker. If we consider financial support for universities and industrial research, the funding for Quebec is quite similar, proportionally, to what is being done for Ontario, on a per capita basis. It is true that at the government level, much of our research is carried out within the departments in the National Capital Region. It has often been said that we do not communicate with the Government of Quebec on co-ordinating a science policy. That is not true. I have often expressed my willingness to listen to my Quebec counterparts and to discuss our problems. After all, it was Mr. Lévesque who suggested that Quebec ministers should not meet their Ottawa counterparts; I did not. I am still willing to meet my opposite number, Mr. Morin, if he is agreeable. I believe the second part of the question concerns national parks, and I must say that we are also willing to co-ordinate our efforts for the purpose of creating new national parks in Quebec, but that, too, requires the co-operation of the provincial government.

EFFECT ON FORMER CNR AND VIA RAIL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The November 12 budget has hit many retiring low and middle-income people very hard and, I might add, unfairly. For example, those who retired after November 12 and are affected by the CNR-VIA cutbacks cannot place their retirement allowances or job termination payments into an RRSP or annuity. Of course this also affects farmers and small businessmen. They stand to lose up to half of their retirement funds to taxation. The Minister of State mentioned earlier that members of the government are prepared to do some fine tuning to the budget. Will he inform the House what he is doing to address the problem of former CNR and VIA employees?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, the Minister of Finance is still considering the provisions contained in the budget and the extent to which these provisions satisfy his concern for equity. As soon as he has thought the matter over and made any decisions that may be necessary, he will inform the House accordingly, and the hon. member's concerns will be considered by the minister.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERCEDE ON BEHALF OF RETIRED RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I hope he is a little more prompt in answering this question, because he has a letter from me that he has not answered for the past four months. Many of the CNR and VIA employees in my riding of Dauphin, and also in Yorkton-Melville, and hundreds of others across Canada are being forced to take early retirement due to the recent cutbacks. These people are faced, as I mentioned earlier, with losing up to half of their retirement allowances, their only income until age 65, through taxation.

Is the minister, who heartlessly oversaw the CNR-VIA cuts, prepared to show a caring attitude and help the cause of his former employees by seeking to put pressure on the Minister of Finance to have delineated a reasonable amount of retirement allowance so that it would be non-taxable?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the second question is absolutely the same as the first question. Obviously the answer is the same as the first answer.

An hon. Member: You did not answer it the first time.

Mr. Pepin: The problem raised by my hon. friend is a real one. There is no doubt that some arrangements had been made for the retirement of people at VIA, CN and CP. The Minister of State for Finance and I have been talking with the Minister of Finance in order to reach a resolution of that difficulty.

PETRO-CANADA

QUERY RESPECTING LOCATION FOR HEAVY OIL UPGRADER IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Because of PetroCan's involvement with the heavy oil consortium, the upgrading consortium in Saskatchewan, will the minister explain to the House and the shareholders of Petro-Canada, and to the people of Canada, the preference the government has, or PetroCan has, as to the location of the heavy oil upgrader?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada and, as far as I know, Petro-Canada, have no particular preference as to the location of the heavy oil upgrader in Saskatchewan. The leader of this group is Husky Oil Ltd., which is the largest shareholder. Examination of the various sites is taking place. I assume that the consortium, of which Petro-Canada is a member with various other corporations, is going to make an announcement shortly in that regard. Husky Oil is the leading company in that group and will be the one to make the announcement when they have reached a particular decision. As far as the Government of Canada is concerned, I can tell my hon. friend that the department that I head has taken no stand and has no particular views with regard to a particular site.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR SITE DECISION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the majority of the publicly held companies in the consortium have expressed their preference for a location in northwestern Saskatchewan for the heavy oil upgrader, am I to understand from the minister that he is leaving that decision up to Sask Oil and The Government of Saskatchewan, disregarding the other 75 per cent of that consortium?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, what I have just said is that there is a consortium of companies, of which some are public companies and some private companies analysing this particular situation, and that I do not intend to interfere with their management decision as to where this particular upgrader should be situated. I believe Petro-Canada represents only a 15 per cent interest in this particular project. There are other parties, but those various parties are discussing this issue, I am sure. But, again, Husky Oil Ltd. as the leading shareholder in this project, will be the one to make the announcement in due time.

HOUSING

DOCTOR'S ADVICE TO SCARBOROUGH, ONT. HOME OWNERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of housing. Is the minister of housing aware of a statement by a Hamilton radiologist, Dr. Dermit McLoughlin, who said with reference to families on McClure Crescent in Scarborough who have radioactive soil in their back yards that they should move out immediately? If he is aware of that, is the government prepared to purchase the homes of the affected families to enable them to move away before their health is threatened?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am aware of newspaper accounts of the information that the hon. member has just introduced to the House. I must say, as the Member of Parliament for the riding affected where the homes are located, the allegation made most recently, one that is being repeated, was made earlier and it was checked by a number of other doctors in Metropolitan Toronto, I believe in the Hospital for Sick Children. There is some dispute among the medical profession as to whether the advice given that the hon. member has referred to can be verified by other medical practitioners.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am trying to get the translation of the minister's answer. Is the minister saying that he does not believe that this matter is serious enough that the government should be offering to buy the homes of the affected families on McClure Crescent?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the contrary, this government believed that the matter was serious indeed. It was to that end that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources authorized and worked with the agency of government, the Atomic Energy Control Board, to move the affected material, upon it being identified. Because of applications to the Federal Court of Canada, the federal government was blocked in two attempts to move the material. It is because of an interim injunction granted by the Federal Court, blocking the federal government from moving that material, that we have been frustrated in our attempts, because of the risks posed by this material, to act on the matter.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER BUYING AFFECTED HOUSES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the minister of housing tell the House whether he is recommending to the government that the government prepare itself to purchase the houses on McClure Crescent?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto that the federal government would co-operate and assist with the removal of the material to a location just a few miles away from the spot where it is now. We are waiting for the decision of Metropolitan Toronto to have the material removed. All we need is the okay and the material will be removed with dispatch. As I indicated, that would be a less costly and a more practical solution than the one to which the right hon. gentleman has referred.

MINISTER'S RECOMMENDATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the minister of housing recommending against the government purchasing the houses on McClure Crescent?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, that request has been made. I have asked my officials to take a look at it. If Metropolitan Toronto indeed does not respond to the residents affected, then that is one of the options that this government would have to consider. I must say, Madam Speaker, that it is very frustrating that this government, which has offered financing, has offered expertise and offered its co-operation in the removal of the soil, and has been frustrated by other levels of government, but we still get the silly kind of question such as the right hon. gentleman has asked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

BANKS AND BANKING

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The minister will know that the government presently has about $11 billion on deposit with the chartered banks. It is receiving only 13.5 per cent or so for that money. I was wondering why the government was not using its influence with the chartered banks, having all that money on deposit at such a low rate with those banks, so as to force them to reduce the prime rate of interest for business and others that borrow from the banks, say to 16.25 per cent, instead of 17.24 per cent?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to make the hon. member a couple of suggestions. First, he should take another look at how chartered banks operate in Canada, and second, he should also look at the situation on the money market and how interest rates are set. If he does, he will easily find the answer to his question.

USE MADE OF GOVERNMENT MONEY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am surprised he is so incompetent that he is prepared to lend money at 13.5 per cent and pay 19.5 per cent to borrow it.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Blenkarn: Since he is prepared to lend money so cheaply to the banks, why does he not lend some of that money through the Bank of Canada to the Farm Credit Corporation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: —or to the Federal Business Development Bank, or the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, instead of leaving it with the banks? Why does he not use it for the people of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I was trying to be polite in answering the hon. member. I omitted to say that he was incompetent and I just mentioned he was ignorant. What he should do before asking his questions is to look at market conditions and find out why a deposit is made in such and such a bank and why that deposit bears a given rate of interest. He would easily find the answers to his questions. So, between incompetence and ignorance, I think I will let him be the judge.

PETITION

MR. McLEAN—THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR DELETION OF SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the 153rd report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) on Tuesday, December 8, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—FAILURE BY MR. COSGROVE TO CLARIFY ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises from answers given by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) who is responsible for housing, to questions posed yesterday by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and today by me. Yesterday my leader pointed out that the minister had told two different stories on two different occasions; today in my question I also pointed out that the minister had given two different answers on two different occasions.

I want to invite you, Madam Speaker, to consider a question of privilege which is not exactly covered by the rules. I submit to you that one of the privileges of a member of the House is to have the truth for herself, for himself and for the country. I invite you to set a precedent within the rules and to widen them. When it is clearly demonstrated to the House that a minister has made contradictory statements and when that minister refuses, when asked, to establish which of those contradictory statements is more correct, I submit to you that the House has a right to the truth.

In Beauchesne, fifth edition, page 12, Citation 19(2), there appears the following statement:

> The failure of a Minister of the Crown to answer a question may not be raised as a question of privilege.

I am not raising the minister's failure to answer a question as a matter of privilege; I am not dealing with that. What I am raising is the minister's failure to clarify his answers, and the right of the House to the truth.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That particular point is certainly provided for by our rules, our precedents, and by citations from Beauchesne and Erskine May. What the hon. member is saying is that he does not agree with the practice that is indicated by the hon. minister. There is obviously a dispute as to the interpretation of a situation. The question may be dealt with through debate, through questions in the House, but certainly not in a question of privilege. If an hon. member is not satisfied with an answer given to him by another member in the House, that does not form the basis for a question of privilege. I have said that before and the hon. member, who knows that I have said it before is inviting me to interpret a question of privilege by criteria which are outside our rules. I do not know then under which criterion I could consider the question of privilege if it is not within the confines of our rules and precedents.

If hon. members want to change the rules and provide other occasions for the discussion of these matters when they disagree on the interpretation of facts, then I invite them to do so. Certainly, however, the hon. member cannot invite the Chair to rule outside of the rules. That is simply impossible and quite outside any conception that I might have of my role.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, what I was inviting you to do, within the ambit of your duties as Speaker, was to widen the protection for this House; not the privilege, but the protection. You are the protector of the House in order to get at the truth. When we have contradictory statements, I invite you to consider a motion putting that to the committee—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, but I have to interrupt the hon. member. I am not the protector of the House to allow hon. members to get at the truth. Who is going to determine what is truth? I bring the hon. member back to the situation we have been discussing in the House for a number of weeks and that is, can the Chair determine where "the truth" is among the different facts that have been presented before the House? If debate does not elicit this information, nothing else will and certainly not the arbitrary, or perhaps not so arbitrary, decision of the Speaker. I am not at all authorized and furthermore I am not equipped in my function, to determine where the truth is.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, on this question I would hope that your ruling is not to be interpreted as meaning that it is not within the province of the Chair to find that a question of privilege exists where a minister has been caught, red-handed, making misleading statements to the House. If there is one privilege upon which all members of the House are entitled to rely, it is upon the answers of ministers being consistent.

In order to give emphasis to the matter, I am going to contrast it with an example of something that happened several years ago. In the case before us the record shows that in reply to questions put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) yesterday, the minister made one statement on the day referred to in the question and the following day made a totally contrary statement.

Questioning by the deputy House leader today demonstrates that the same thing has occurred again; one answer on one day and a totally different answer on another. In my mind that constitutes circumstances worthy of consideration as to whether they constitute a question of privilege.

May I draw to the attention of the Chair the precedent upon which I could rest my case exclusively but need not do so, namely, that contradictory statements or misleading statements to the House are matters which may be found to be questions of privilege.

I take the Chair back to a precedent which occurred in 1963 when the prime minister of the day, the late Mr. Pearson, in responding to questions raised by the opposition, stated to the House that the first he had heard of certain circumstances relating to the rather scandalous matters which arose on that occasion was when he had returned from a trip to Jamaica, I believe it was. It was only a question of having heard of the matter within the previous couple of days. It transpired, two or three days later, as the result of the work of the media and of members of the opposition, that his answer was incorrect and that the minister of justice of the day had in fact briefed the prime minister during a trip from Prince Edward Island to Ottawa. The clearly contradictory statements made by the prime minister of that day constituted a very real question of privilege. I draw the analogy to the contradictory statements now under consideration.

After presentation of the case and a consideration of the contrariness of those statements, of course the Chair is at liberty to find that they do not constitute a question of privilege since they do not want to mislead members of the House. I submit to the Chair, however, that the hon. member who raised the question has a right to present enough of his case to the Chair to show the contradictory nature of those statements in order to at least bring it within the purview of the consideration of the Chair. What the Chair does with it after that is another question. Your Honour may well find that the circumstances about to be described do not constitute a breach of privilege. The bottom line, however, is that if a minister of the Crown misleads a member of the House, in my submission that is a very serious breach of privilege. I also submit, however, that the Chair is bound, in the protection of the privileges and rights of all members of the House, at least to hear the case in order to be in a position to make that decision.

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member hinted that the particular case which he raised concerning the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson had been dealt with through a question of privilege. I would want to verify that because the hon. member did not clearly say that; but if it had been, I would doubt very much that it was considered to be a question of privilege for the reasons he stated. When a contradictory statement is made in the House—and I would say that any hon. member is entitled to contradict himself if he so wishes—it is the duty of hon. members opposite to point out these contradictions and to challenge the hon. member because he had contradicted himself. However, it is not the duty of the Chair to do that, and the Chair has no means by which to do it, except by exercising a judgment on the substance of that question, which hon. members know the Chair is not in a position to do.

The hon. member spoke about hon. members having a privilege in the sense that they are entitled to consistent answers, answers which are not contradictory.

Mr. Nielsen: They are entitled not to be misled.

Madam Speaker: I agree that they would want to seek that kind of an answer from hon. members in the House. However, if they feel that they have been misled in any way or form, they have procedures to follow in order to solve that particular problem. Hon. members know what procedures they can follow. But certainly, if we resort to questions of privilege in all these circumstances, then the privilege of hon. members will certainly be in danger because we will have widened the scope so much that questions of privilege will be raised in many circumstances. I repeat to the hon. member that while a question of privilege gives a very special protection to hon. members, and because that protection is so special, we must use it with infinite care so that it not be dispersed in other matters.

Therefore, the matter raised by the hon. member is not a question of privilege. If an hon. member is not satisfied with the answer of a minister and feels that it is contradictory, he can deal with it in the House through all sorts of means, but not through the means of raising a question of privilege.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I hesitate to speak on this matter, but Your Honour made a statement, which does somewhat concern me, that an hon. member of the House of Commons has the right to contradict himself. I say with respect that that statement, taken by itself, is a rather dangerous proposition, because what it envisages, at least in my mind, is that if I spoke what was held to be the truth today—

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not know whether I used the correct words. What I did mean, and what remains a fact, is that if an hon. member does decide to make contradictory statements in the House, that is his funeral, and other hon. members—

Mr. Nielsen: Well, exactly.

Madam Speaker: —would easily be able to point out the contradictory nature of these statements. The Chair cannot tell an hon. member not to make a contradictory statement. It is not within the purview of the Chair to say such things. That is the only thing I am saying.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there was some doubt in your mind as to the precedent quoted by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), my House leader; namely, the 1963 precedent. Your Honour had indicated some doubt as to his interpretation with regard to that precedent. I assume that Your Honour would like to look at that precedent to see how it applies. However, I say with respect that we must be very careful to ensure that the rules are not interpreted or applied so that there is really a licence for irresponsibility in terms of answers given, a licence which could be exercised in such a way that there could be contradictory statements, hon. members saying one thing one day and saying the opposite the next day, to the extent where the House could indeed be misled as a result of unparliamentary practice.

I think that, given the examples raised yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) concerning the minister responsible for housing, and today, by my friend, the deputy opposition House leader concerning the same minister, if those contradictions are allowed to exist, then not only will we have damaged the precious right of the question period but we will also have made a mockery of it in that ministers, for one reason or another, could say anything they wanted on one day and anything they liked on the other, with impunity. I have never thought that that was the purpose of the question period, nor what this House of Commons was all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It may be the minister's funeral, and it may be that we are observing his last rites here. However, if Your Honour is reserving decision, it is very important that, with respect to the truth of answers in the question period—not the right of a minister not to answer—Your Honour should at least take an opportunity, which I think you gave yourself, to review the precedent which has been put forward by the hon. member for Yukon and to review the statements which were made yesterday in response to the questions by the leader and the deputy House leader of the official opposition with respect to this matter. While no one wants to widen the rights of privilege to the point that there is chaos in the House of Commons, and that is not the argument, I say, with respect, that they should not be so narrowly interpreted that they amount to a licence not to use one's best efforts to give the truth and a licence to mislead, because that was never the purpose of the question period.

Madam Speaker: I interrupt the hon. member because he is going in a direction that I feel is completely removed from what we are trying to discuss and look into more precisely. There is no licence to tell the untruth in the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): One or the other is true, or they are both false.

Madam Speaker: The goal of the opposition is to try to elicit answers on certain matters and situations and to get the facts straight from the government side. The rules and the total process of Parliament exist for that reason in particular.

I cannot accept the arguments of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Hon. members know full well that if they want to accuse the minister of having been inconsistent or contradictory, they can do that, and they have other ways of doing it. However, of course, those other ways require the hon. members be very precise in their own facts when they challenge the minister's exercise of responsibility. I invite hon. members to do that if they feel they can, because that is the process; but not through a question of privilege. Despite the fact that hon. members on this side are inviting me to enlarge my interpretation of a question of privilege, I cannot do it in this particular circumstance because the problem, as exposed to me, does not incite me to do so.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on this matter since Your Honour has not had an opportunity—nor have I, nor had the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to consult the precise precedent to which the hon. member for Yukon made reference.

I am really rising to signal my interest in reserving the right to pursue, tomorrow or on another occasion, the question relating to the facts I will outline. No one in the House disputes the ruling which has been made by Your Honour and others in the Chair that a difference of opinion between hon. members is simply debate. What we have here is a difference of opinion by the same minister with regard to the same set of facts which are on the record. I would just make the observation in passing that, as Your Honour would know, a minister of the Crown has an unusual duty to the House, having sworn an oath as Privy Councillor, and that is a duty to tell the truth.

Mr. Nielsen: That's the point.

Mr. Clark: There is no doubt at all about a minister's right not to answer; but I would suggest that there should also be no doubt at all about the right of private members of this House of Commons to be able to count upon the answers which are given by a minister when a minister chooses to answer.

• (1520)

We are put in a situation here where, on at least two occasions, the minister responsible for housing has given directly contradictory answers. We do not know which of his answers we are to believe or, indeed, if there is a third, fourth or fifth answer which he may offer later on which will be contradictory to those that he has put forward at this point. I can quite understand the Chair's reluctance to widen the rules. The difficulty always, when a new situation arises that has not been confronted squarely by the rules in the past, is that an interpretation is required. A reluctance to make an interpretation on the grounds that it would widen the rules could have the effect of narrowing the rules. It could have the effect of narrowing the rights of Members of Parliament. I am sure that is something that none of us would want to contemplate lightly.

I rise at this point simply to indicate to you, Madam Speaker, that I would like to reserve the right to pursue the matter raised by my colleague, the deputy House leader of the official opposition, referred to by my colleague from Yukon and my colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), either tomorrow or at another time.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in the event that you are still hearing submissions on this point, there is one point on which I would agree with the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), that is that there is nothing in Beauchesne, Erskine May or in any precedent of which I am aware that would constitute a precedent to enable you to rule that this matter is a question of privilege.

It really boils down to the fact that members opposite are saying they do not like the answers given by the minister responsible for housing. That is fine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: There are answers given consistently in this House which members opposite do not like. For you to make a ruling, Madam Speaker, that would create a precedent that somehow you are to become the arbitrator of what is or is not the truth would put the Chair in an absolutely impossible position. I think it is a political matter. It is a matter for debate.

Hon. members say the minister has made contradictory statements. But in whose opinion? It is in their opinion. Not everyone will share that opinion. In my opinion, it would put the Chair in an impossible position to have to render an opinion as to whether ministers may or may not have made contradictory statements.

I agree with you, Madam Speaker, that a member has the right to change his or her position on some matter. I remember hearing stories about Mackenzie King when he was in Parliament. Members opposite would frequently rise and quote something from Hansard that he had said. But Mackenzie King would always say "Read on, read on". And if members read on, they would find that he had come down on both sides of the issue. This situation frequently occurs.

An hon. Member: That is all very helpful.

Mr. Smith: As situations may change, positions may change. I think it would put the Chair in an absolutely impossible position to create a precedent along the lines suggested here today.

Madam Speaker: I have not completed my ruling on this particular question. I was only responding to the invitation of the hon. member for Simcoe North to widen the interpretation of what I consider constitutes the basis for a question of privilege.

I think most of the interventions I have made to date have conveyed to hon. members that I am not prepared to do that without further consideration of the question by the entire House. I want to live by the rules which the House have given me to protect.

I do feel at this point, after the discussion we have had, that I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege in the facts as exposed by hon. members.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has reserved the right to look into the precedent which was quoted. I suggest that perhaps he could raise a new question of privilege as soon as possible. He may do that with proper notice, of course. It would be helpful if he would indicate to the Chair where he finds the basis for a question of privilege. I will await that. However, for the time being the matter is closed on this particular question raised by the hon. member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I should tell you that both the Leader of the Opposition and myself perforce must be absent tomorrow at the appropriate time. Therefore, the earliest the matter can be raised will be Friday.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I assume you misunderstood the reason why I rose earlier and have been rising for the last five or ten minutes. I have been rising to make a submission to you prior to your making a ruling.

I must say to you that if there has been that misunderstanding in your mind then I accept that. If you did appreciate that I was standing to make a submission to you before you make your ruling, I must say that I resent it very deeply.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member knows that the Chair may decide when it is sufficiently informed to make a ruling on a particular question. I heard several speakers. The Chair is not obliged to listen to all members who want to speak on a question of privilege or on a point of order. At some point the Chair has the discretion to end the discussion.

I usually find the intervention of the hon. member quite useful, but in this particular case I felt that I had all the information that I required.

MR. FENNELL—REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA PERMIT THE OPERATION OF A FULL SERVICE STATION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The nature of the petition is a plea from the customers that the government intervene on their behalf and demand that Petro-Canada permit this lessee to continue operating a full service station rather than a self-service gas bar, and be allowed to continue to offer full mechanical and maintenance service that has not only been profitable but serves his customers and my constituents.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING THE PREVENTION OF STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS IN ESSENTIAL SERVICES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-644 to amend the Canada Labour Code, (strikes in public monopolies).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I will quote briefly from the explanatory notes of the bill itself as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to prevent strikes and lockouts in essential services controlled by monopoly corporations engaged in businesses under federal jurisdiction. Where management and labour failed to come to terms on a new collective agreement, the bill would render the report of a conciliation board binding on them.

This narrows down the legislation to focusing on the most damaging service sector of the economy, namely, the Post Office, which in its last strike cost the small business community alone a total of $3 billion.

Because this sort of legislation receives widespread support from all Canadians, I would hope it would receive the support it deserves from both sides of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was two weeks ago that I asked the parliamentary secretary to look into Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 34. It is a motion which requests communications in connection with trade, tourism and cultural exchanges between Canada and the Caribbean area. I drew his attention to the response I got from the Department of the Secretary of State, that they were awaiting a report from the subcommittee which is studying our relations with the Caribbean area, and I suggested to him that the production of these documents might be useful to the work of this committee. I wonder if he has been able to obtain an answer from the department as to why these documents cannot be produced.

Mr. Smith: Not at this point, Madam Speaker, but I will take note of the hon. member's representation and make further inquiries.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I would ask that motion No. 69, which calls for the production of papers regarding gazetted order in council calling for the establishment of civilian internment camps, be transferred for debate.

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING OIL AND GAS INTERESTS

The House resumed from Thursday, December 3, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-48, to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, when I finished last Thursday, I was having quite a time of it with the socialist members here to my left. I was interrupted by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who, I thought, was asking a question by the inch and, indeed, he was. I measured it and it was seven inches long. At a minute per inch that is how much of my time I gave to him in the debate. I hope he appreciates that. I hope he sits there and listens as a result of those interjections, particularly by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I am sorry he is not here today. He must be at a committee or somewhere. He was assisted by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

When I was explaining that they were not going to support this legislation but would vote against it, they agreed with that. I suggested the reason for that lack of support is that the measure does not go far enough, and they agreed with that. They want to see the bill go as far along the road to nationalization of this industry as possible. That is a rather hypocritical stance to be taking.

They asked in their interjections whether I care about the aboriginal people, and do I not care about environmental concerns. Indeed I do, but let them not be so hypocritical as to take the stance, all in support of the native peoples, that nothing should be done until native land claims have been settled in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and then turn around and say to the government that they want it to go further in this bill than it has. It seems to me these are mutually inconsistent stances. That is not unusual from that corner. Indeed, I often think they should instal another translation booth down there because, while their friends across the way in the Liberal Party understand their particular language, we have grave difficulty in understanding jibberish, and that is what usually comes from over there.

When I was speaking to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the uranium cartel, he made some interesting statements about that arrangement. He has allowed some tiny tidbits of information to slip out in his glib, offhand way. In off-the-cuff, carefully prepared press statements he has said: "Well, we cannot let out the information because that would be contravening the combines legislation in the United States, and we do not want to have our relationship deteriorate any more than it already has with that country." But what about the Canadian combines legislation? Are the oil companies not now under investigation by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission? Are they not faced with accusations of doing exactly what this government is doing under those uranium arrangements? None of these matters have seen the light of day. They are just like what actually happened in respect of the Petrofina purchase; they will remain forever hidden as long as those hon. rascals stay over there. Surely these matters ought to be elucidated before the House conveys new major powers on the government. This government having done the things it has done, surely there is no limit to what it will do under this legislation.

Another major consideration about this bill is the matter of self-sufficiency. Government spokesmen, one after the other, have suggested that the bill will move the country toward self-sufficiency. That is bunkum. All the evidence points the other way. The government's so-called Canadianization program has exactly the opposite effect. It has driven capital out of the country in a flight unprecedented in modern times. We have heard the accurate statistics given by the hon. members for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and Calgary South (Mr. Thomson). Canadianization has forced small Canadian companies to the wall. The 25 per cent back-in clause will remove from the remaining Canadian companies any opportunity for profitable operation.

Finally, the policy pursued by this government of increasing state intervention has antagonized our friends, our clients and our best customer, the United States. The United States sees in the philosophy of this legislation, which is only the tip of the iceberg, an objective that is not financial and not economic but, rather, ideological. The government is moving on a broad front to exert its authority in every area of economic and political activity in a way that no government in the history of this country has ever done before.

The government has interfered with freedom of the press, and it is in a position to threaten and intimidate the media with intimations of government control. The government has placed the economy in a straitjacket and destroyed the ability of the country to meet new economic challenges. The government has acted both illegally and arbitrarily in demolishing a large segment of this country's ground transportation system at an enormous potential increase in transportation and energy expenditures.

Meanwhile, in the energy field, serious problems involve bringing new sources on-stream and initiating the use of alternative energy resources. The bill does nothing to solve these problems. It merely reinforces the government's capacity to interfere, to intervene, to harass and to intimidate operators in the energy field. In the poll which was taken the other day on what Canadians feared most in this country today, 44 per cent indicated they feared big government, especially this government which is not worthy of any further trust. A government which has shown itself to be secretive, power-hungry, spendthrift, arrogant and dishonest does not deserve any new accretion of authority.

Those are some of the reasons why this bill should not be proceeded with at the present time.

I have tried to be entirely objective in my remarks last Thursday and now. My last plea is strictly a parochial plea, Mr. Speaker, and I would like the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), who, I understand, is speaking next in this debate, to explain his way around this, that what the government is planning with this bill will deny forever the control over resources to the Yukon and any province which might be created out of the Northwest Territories. Without that control, without those resource revenues, we can forget about ever becoming a province, and that minister has been a part of that plot and the philosophy to prevent it ever coming about. Let there be no mistake about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly nice to hear the detached and objective point of view that was given by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I noticed that he made some reference to the Petrofina situation. I do not know exactly what he had in mind. I, for one, am very interested in being explicit in the House. If he would care to be explicit in the House on some occasion and even explicit outside the House, it would be very interesting to see what he had in mind.

Mr. Nielsen: I will be explicit.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I personally invite him to do so.

I will begin my remarks by indicating that I think an appropriate answer to this last challenge which the hon. member for Yukon set out that this legislation will deny forever the attributes of provincehood should it occur north of sixty—the ownership of resources and all its other aspects—is that it is obvious the hon. member knows different because if we were to think otherwise, it would make me think that, at least, the hon. member is lacking in any fundamental intelligence. I am sure all hon. members know that it is just not the case. We have far too much esteem for his astuteness and intelligence to accuse the hon. member for Yukon of being fundamentally stupid.

The fact of the matter is, and the hon. member for Yukon knows this, that the current situation in the Yukon and Northwest Territories is that they do not have ownership or management of resource areas. The hon. member has known that for some time. To change that situation would require legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada, and that is precisely the situation as it now is under this legislation. If we should face the fundamental question of making provinces out of the Yukon and Northwest Territories at some subsequent time or decide that not only full and responsible government should come to the Yukon—it has almost come to the Yukon now—then—

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Well, I am sure that the hon. member did not think so when he was part of the previous government in which his colleague, the minister of Indian affairs and northern development at that time, came up with the so-called "Epp letter" that devolved a great deal of political responsibility to the Yukon, and, as I recall, the hon. member for Yukon had a good deal to do with it. It was most laudatory in terms of impact and full responsibility for the government of the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: A first step.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He cannot criticize it now after praising it ten months ago. Perhaps I should rise on a point of order and talk about the fundamental contradictions—not alleged against the minister of housing from one day to another— but against the hon. member for Yukon for the number of his contradictions within ten minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: I invite you to do that.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would remind him again, and through him the people of the Yukon, that his bill has no impact on the status of ownership or management of lands and resources to any degree whatsoever. The situation remains entirely as it always was.

Mr. Nielsen: No control.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is for an act of volition on the part of this government and the government of the day, if it wishes to change that situation. That is the case now, as it has been since the Yukon and the Northwest Territories came into being.

Mr. Nielsen: That is exactly what we are complaining about.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The hon. member says that that is exactly what they are complaining about. He attributed to this bill those qualities, clearly stating that this changed the rules of the game and created a new situation in his view. Now he is saying "exactly" when I said that it did not change the situation one iota. I wish he would make up his mind.

What we are debating today, Mr. Speaker, has had a lot of scrutiny over the last year. Aside from the required parliamentary examination, it has been analysed in the news media. The energy resource industry has carefully probed it in both letter and spirit. The provincial and territorial governments have taken a hard look at it, as well as the people for whom it has very immediate and great social meaning. I am referring, of course, to the northerners, native and non-native, who realize the importance of non-renewable resource development in their future.

If I may, I would like to use the time available to me today to set forth as clearly as I can some of the broad concepts of Bill C-48 and what it is going to mean to Canadians in terms of future energy and national economic growth.

It would be difficult to view this legislation in isolation from the National Energy Program which was introduced only two months before Bill C-48, almost exactly a year ago. In point of fact, both pieces of legislation complement one another. Both are integral components of an over-all government thrust aimed at eliminating Canada's dependency on imported energy supplies and in giving Canadians greater ownership and control over their own petroleum resources.

We are all well aware of the global economic convulsions resulting from the dramatic escalation of OPEC oil prices in the 1970s, to say nothing of the temporary interruption of the supply. Canada did not escape unscathed. Indeed, many economists say that we are still feeling the effects today.

Even before those traumatic events, there was widespread recognition in Canada that our existing oil and gas legislation was outdated. It goes back more than two decades and is utterly inappropriate to our current resource needs.

The legislation as it now exists does little to spur exploration and development of new sources of gas and oil. The legislation that we wish to replace makes no mention whatsoever of the needs and aspirations of our aboriginal peoples and does not have sufficiently stringent environmental safeguards.

It was against this background that the National Energy Program was devised. As hon. members are aware, the new legislation provides for incentives to encourage petroleum exploration and production. It establishes firm ground rules as to how these activities will be conducted and by whom. It will secure for the people of Canada an equitable share in resource development. It also makes clear that no resource development will be undertaken at an unacceptable cost to the environment.

At the same time, and most important, it provides that native Canadians must be given an opportunity to participate in and benefit from resource development in the north.

Mr. Nickerson: That is not in the bill.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): One thing that Bill C-48 does not do is prejudice the negotiation of native land claims settlements. The notion that it seeks to remove oil and gas rights from the negotiating process is simply not true. As a matter of fact, in view of the recent constitutional developments, it may be of interest to point out that Bill C-48 contains the following clause which hon. members will recognize from the constitutional resolution which is now on its way to England. It says:

Nothing in this act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right or claim that pertained to the aboriginal peoples of Canada prior to the coming into force of this act.

The government has been fortunate in receiving substantial input from northerners in preparing this legislation. Indeed, no fewer than eight of the amendments accepted by the government originated with the Inuit Committee on National Issues. Important contributions have also been made by the Dene Nation, the Council for Yukon Indians, the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories and the governments of the two territories.

One of the northern groups which expressed deep concern about the possible implications of Bill C-48 is the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement, commonly known as COPE. Its president, Mr. Sam Raddi, wrote to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), and myself seeking reassurance that the legislation now before us would not impinge upon the agreement in principle reached late in 1978 on the COPE land claim. On December 8, just yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I both signed a letter to Mr. Raddi, which I think has particular significance regarding aboriginal claims and the comprehensive claims of all the native peoples north of 60. The letter read in part as follows:

Bill C-48 does not interfere with existing aboriginal rights and specifically does not contradict the government's commitments under the COPE agreement-in-principle. More explicitly, we both confirm to you that neither Bill C-48 nor, more importantly, action taken pursuant to Bill C-48 will foreclose any element of a settlement arrived at with COPE on the basis of the commitment expressed in the COPE agreement-in-principle.

The letter went on to express our belief that the agreement in principle should be interpreted as including the 25 per cent Crown share to be created under Section 27 of Bill C-48. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I, therefore, added in the letter that it was the government's intention to provide for the transfer of these interests to the Inuvialuit in any final settlement based on the 1978 agreement in principle. This satisfied Mr. Raddi, after a history of much soul searching and unhappiness with respect to Bill C-48. He replied on the same date—that is, yesterday—expressing the gratitude of the Inuvialuit for our efforts which had, in his words, "resolved our long-standing concern" about the possible effects of Bill C-48 on the COPE agreement in principle. Mr. Raddi wrote that COPE would like to interpret our actions as an indication of "a renewed commitment on the part of this government to honour its agreement with us". I do not think I am being overly optimistic when I look forward to the resumption of negotiations toward the finalization of the Inuvialuit settlement.

Mr. Nielsen: Are we going to be involved?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, you will be involved, as you have been involved. If the hon. member is referring to the Yukon government, I am glad to hear him talk about involvement. The position paper we are ready to put to COPE has been advanced to the Yukon for its comments before it is put to COPE. We asked for the views of the Yukon government. I cannot think of a greater expression of our desire to involve the Yukon government. I will not comment on what happened after it was sent.

The government views resource development in the north as an ongoing process involving all levels of government, including those of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, the northern people and, of course, the private sector. A prime example of this ongoing process of involving all the key elements—the native peoples of the north and certainly the governments of the north—in terms of any type of resource development is the Norman Wells oil field expansion and pipeline project. I can point to no greater example than that. Hon. members might recall that, in relation to that particular pipeline project, there was a great deal of apprehension north of 60. People were concerned that the rights of native peoples north of 60 might be prejudiced. The Roman Catholic Church, the United Church of Canada, the Anglican Church of Canada and all the major church groups expressed grave concerns about the Norman Wells project. The leadership of the entire Dene nation and the Métis were expressing severe reservations about the Norman Wells pipeline project. It became symbolic of the polarization which surrounds any development project north of 60. It polarized the entire community—or it seemed to—in very real terms into pro-development and anti-development sentiments. In my view there was no greater challenge facing any government than that particular project in terms of opening up development in the north. Indeed, the forces of polarization had to be undermined. The community and the heretofore perceived adverse interests had to be reconciled so that that project could move ahead. Indeed, that is precisely what happened. A compromise was reached. The compromise was to approve the project but to delay its commencement north of 60 for a two-year period. This received the approval not only of the Northwest Territorial government but also of the proponents—the developers themselves—Esso Resources and Interprovincal Pipe Line. However, more important, it brought on side the very people who were most concerned about the impact of the project, the Dene Nation and the Métis. When the decision and all its elements were announced by the government, they supported the decision to go ahead with Norman Wells. How was that done? It was an example and tangible evidence of the commitment of the government to involve northerners in every stage of the development of Norman Wells. There was a pattern to ensure that northerners would be involved in the development of the north. There was a package of joint ventures. Roughly $1.5 million were put up to allow, in this case northerners, to participate with the oil company whether it was with respect to oil rigs or other types of involvement. Over four years, $10.5 million were put up for special training to ensure that northerners participated in the actual construction of the pipeline and also in the running of the oil field. It was a management regime made up of northerners which would govern the day to day operations of the whole project. There was an advisory committee made up of northerners to advise the minister on the monitoring, from a political point of view, of the project throughout its entire history. There were social and community development moneys totalling $4.5 million put up to ensure that we could cope with the social and community fallout effects of the pipeline.

Mr. Nielsen: You did not even consult the northern government on this bill.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What more tangible evidence can there be? Money was put up front so that the territorial government could provide an infrastructure for the pipeline. What more tangible evidence could there be of the involvement of northerners in a major project and a solution which brings on side the territorial government, the native peoples and the developers themselves than the proposal we put before them? Rather than specious allegations which have no foundation I am offering the people of the north concrete evidence that that can be done and that there was the political will on the part of this government to see that it would be done.

To achieve our 1990 goal of energy security and to maintain that position in the years ahead, an enormous and continuing capital investment in energy projects will be required. It is the intention of the National Energy Program to get Canadians fully into the oil and gas game for the first time in our history. The bulk of the necessary investment in conventional oil and gas will be generated in Canada as before but with a better balance of ownership. Some of our megaprojects such as those in the oil sands will, no doubt, require additional capital from outside Canada. Canada will continue to welcome such investments. The returns will be generous.

Bill C-48 is crucial to the development of long-term stability of oil and gas supply in Canada. The frontier regions may or may not help to meet a significant part of Canada's energy needs in the 1980s but we all hope they do, and passage of this legislation is essential if that hope is to have a realistic chance of fulfilment.

I would like to reiterate that Bill C-48 will be administered jointly by my department and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. With this in mind, the two departments will set up the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration—COGLA as it is commonly referred to—pooling the resources of each and reporting to myself and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This legislation is designed to take into account and be adaptable to the concerns of native people and other northerners. It is also sensitive to the process of political change in the north. Again it is in no way intended to prejudice the outcome of ongoing discussions on major issues such as land claims and the political development of the two territories, each of which is important in its own right and deserves the benefit of full discussion and negotiation.

• (1600)

Bill C-48 is good legislation. It is good for the nation and its economy, good for the territorial governments, good for industry and, more particularly, it is good for the people who live in the north. As such, it deserves our support.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I recommend this bill's adoption by my colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful that the government has been able to make an agreement with the Committee for Aboriginal Peoples' Entitlement. I am also happy that Mr. Raddi has expressed his gratitude. However, with regard to the rest of the north, it remains to be seen. I am afraid I am not going to be so kind, given the nature of this bill, to the Liberal side and other people in the country in general.

The invoking of closure is the latest testament to this government's apparent thirst for power over the Canadian north. Bill C-48 has rightly been called an unprecedented power grab by the federal government. I suppose it is only being consistent when the government tries to bring debate to a close with this type of procedural power play.

This bill remains unacceptable to myself, my constituents and all northern residents for a great number of reasons. Before I get into these in detail, I think it is important to again remind hon. members of the true significance of this bill. Only by viewing it in its proper historic context can we appreciate its potential impact on the country as a whole and the north in particular.

To average Canadians, the title of this bill makes it appear quite innocuous. It is just another bill before the House, people might conclude, but nothing could be further from the truth. It must be understood by the Canadian people and by members of the House that what we are seeing in the government's National Energy Program, of which Bill C-48 is the main plank, is a move to structure the economy in a way that is unparalleled since the days of the national policy of 100 years ago.

The original national policy was designed to exploit the resources of the west for the benefit of the dominant commercial interests in central Canada. While it contained a variety of measures designed to build up the national economy, two main elements characterized its approach to the western frontier.

One was the securing of control over the land and the other was the building of a transportation system to ship out the resources. When we look at the government's National Energy Program and the bill that is now before this House, it is obvious that a direct parallel exists between the national policy of the 1880s and the National Energy Program of the 1980s.

The purpose of Bill C-48 is to accomplish both of these goals, only this time on a different frontier. The designation of lands in the north as Canada lands is an explicit attempt by the government to solidify its control over those areas in preparation for the development it seeks to promote.

While in the west it was the CPR that was the main vehicle for extracting resources, in the north it will be pipelines and super tankers. By securing its control over the north with Bill C-48, the government is laying the legislative groundwork for these eventualities. I regret to say that we will probably be seeing them sooner rather than later.

There is reason for all Canadians, not just northerners, to be concerned about where the National Energy Program and Bill C-48 are taking us. Since the Second World War, this government has tried to tell Canadians that the best way to overcome our economy's traditional reliance on resource exports has been to invite Americans in to build up our industrial and manufacturing sectors. Now with those branch plant operations closing down at an alarming rate and the failure of post-war economic policies becoming all too apparent, the government is once again moving to make resources, this time energy, the centrepiece of Canada's economic development policy.

There are many elements in the bill which provide thinking Canadians with cause for concern, but I would like to touch on four in particular. They are ones which I and my colleagues in the NDP have been fighting the hardest since this bill was announced in the House.

Let me review first some of the deficiencies of this bill which should be of great concern, as I said before, to all Canadians. First, the bill is being sold to the Canadian people as a piece of legislation that will lead to the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry. As my colleague the hon. member from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has pointed out time and time again, this is a complete sham. For one thing, Canadianization implies to most of us that the industry will be under the control of the people of Canada. However, this is not what this bill will accomplish in the least. Instead, it will continue to promote the domination of the oil industry by a few large companies, including the multinationals.

When the government assures us with great nationalistic pride that its goal is to achieve 50 per cent Canadian ownership in the industry, it is perpetrating a sleight of hand on the Canadian public.

It forgets to tell the Canadian people that U.S. oil companies will still be able to have majority control of the oil industry through their subsidiaries. In effect, the only thing Bill C-48 will do will be to encourage foreign firms to set up dummy corporations within Canada to qualify for the lucrative tax benefits so willingly provided by this government.

The government is also taking great nationalistic satisfaction out of the proposed 25 per cent interest that will accrue to PetroCan. Does this represent any sort of progress when we realize that in 1945, for example, the government was taking a 33 per cent interest in Imperial Oil's activities in Norman Wells? The government would have us believe that we are coming a long way toward greater control over our own resources with this bill, but the "Mack Truck" loopholes and the gorgeous tax benefits to the major players in the industry will soon prove otherwise.

All Canadians also have reason to be concerned with the industrial benefits that will supposedly result from this bill, or should I say the lack of them? For a bill that supposedly sets the framework for national economic policy over the next quarter century, the lack of any provisions to ensure industrial spin-offs is a scandal.

In Norway it is clearly stipulated that 50 per cent of all contracts generated by oil and gas development have to go to domestic industries. In Britain it is required that 52 per cent to 57 per cent of all equipment orders have to be placed with British industries. What do we in Canada get? Only the stipulation that developers submit a plan "satisfactory to the minister" for the employment of Canadians and the use of Canadian goods and services. Flaccid criterion at best, Mr. Speaker.

If Canada is going to embark on a program to systematically exploit its non-renewable resources as fast as possible, the least we can do is to try to make sure the benefits get spread around as much as possible within our own country.

Canadians also have cause to be concerned over the potential impact on the environment that this bill will allow. First, it allows the minister in charge to completely usurp the responsibilities of the Minister of the Environment for protecting the environment on Canada lands. That is like putting Peter Lougheed in charge of aboriginal rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ittinuar: There will be an unavoidable conflict of interest situation created by this, only now it will be resolved internally within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, depending on whom you believe. This can only serve to limit public information, public involvement and public accountability, and when push comes to shove, it is all too predictable where the government's priorities will lie.

What of compensation for peoples affected when the inevitable pollution occurs as a result of this government's rush to develop offshore resources? My good friend and hon. colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has been particularly effective in driving home the point that this bill is woefully inadequate in this regard.

The bill stipulates that people cannot be compensated for oil spills caused by the government, despite the fact that it gives the minister explicit authority to allow such spills. It does not allow for people to be compensated for loss of future income as a result of environmental disruption. Of particular interest to my constituents is the fact that it does not allow for damages to property which is not privately owned. In short, it gives people whose lives depend on the protection of the physical environment very little protection indeed.

• (1610)

While there are reasons for all Canadians to be concerned with the directions being taken by Bill C-48, northerners and aboriginal peoples, such as myself, have particular reasons to be concerned. I see a smirk now on the faces across the way. I think that is why there are no Liberals north of 60. If there is a direct parallel between the national policy of the 1800s and the National Energy Program of today, what does this mean for us? Doctor Tony Clarke, of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, has pointed out, quite correctly I feel, that there are contradictions in the Canadian experience of national economic planning. He notes, for example, that:

> While attempting to be an instrument for nation building and economic independence, it often results in new forms of colonialism. Economic strategies are aimed at opening up a new frontier and exploiting its resources . . . The first victims are generally those for whom the frontier has been a homeland, namely, the native peoples.

With the opening up of the west under the national policy, there is no question that native peoples were the first victims. They are still the victims. Those who sought to defend their basic political and economic rights were dealt with by both the military and the courts.

Let me first deal with the process the government has used to get this bill enacted to illustrate the reasons for a lack of trust. Take the matter of consultation. There is seldom a day that goes by whereby a government representative does not wax eloquent about the need for consultation with aboriginal peoples on matters which affect them. Unfortunately, the extent to which they extol this principle has proven to be in direct proportion to their own unwillingness to live up to it. The introduction of the present bill provides us with perhaps the most shocking example of this. No single piece of legislation has ever had the potential impact on northern native peoples such as Bill C-48 will have. Yet, let me illustrate the kind of consultation that has taken place. I will read the words of Mr. Jim Bourque, the President of the Northwest Territory Métis Association, which described how he found out about Bill C-48. He said:

> I did not know anything about the bill. In fact the way I first ran across it was through a friend who got it in the mail with a little note from somewhere down here saying read this, because it is devastating to you guys . . . but as far as government officials are concerned, no, no one has ever spoken to us.

This was part of his presentation to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on March 27, 1981.

If this characterizes the extent to which the government has been willing to take native people into its trust in preparing this bill, Mr. Speaker, what right do we have to expect that things will be any better once it is in place? I am sorry to say there is more. At the same committee meeting, Mr. David Joe, of the Council of Yukon Indians, described how his people were not only kept in the dark about Bill C-48, but actually deceived. He spoke of a meeting between CYI and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) which had taken place on December 6, 1980, shortly before Bill C-48 was introduced. The meeting was about up-coming land claims negotiations. CYI was pressing to have resource issues placed on the agenda.

According to Mr. Joe, the minister:

> —suggested to us that it would be appropriate if we discussed the matter with the government of the Yukon. He indicated there was no real federal policy, if you like, that was in his mind at that point in time. It is ironic that the bill was subsequently introduced perhaps two weeks after this discussion. It is apparent, to me at least, that the government had a strategy with respect to resources north of 60. But for him to forgo the kind of discussion we would have had at the table by simply saying we do not have a strategy at this time is in my estimation certainly bad faith.

These comments merely illustrate the lack of consultation prior to the introduction of this bill. The same lack of interest in northerners' views has been apparent while the bill has been processed through the House, particularly in committee. Most of the committee's time was taken up with hearing the views of industry. To say that they have an interest in the bill would be an understatement. The time given over to hearing the views of all northerners was small in comparison. In March, when a delegation of native leaders was appearing before the committee, a motion was moved by my honourable colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway which would have had the committee seek the permission of the House to travel north to solicit greater input from northerners.

Afraid to say no, I believe, in front of northern delegates, the committee, with the consent of its members from across the floor, approved the motion. Those who viewed the Liberal members' support with suspicion had their expectations confirmed at the very next meeting. With the native representatives safely out of town, the Liberal members of the committee immediately voted to rescind the previous motion. However, I believe that the northern people have been doing their part. In our efforts to clearly define our relationship to the rest of Canada before development pushes us aside, we have put together proposals for the sharing of economic wealth and political power in the north.

In the case of the Inuit, for example, we have proposed the creation of a whole new area of political jurisdiction within the eastern Arctic, which we hope would eventually achieve full provincial status.

We have said time and again, Mr. Speaker, that we do not want to exclude development from the north; we just want it to be carried out in a way that is compatible with our own cultural and economic interests. We plan to be living in the north long after the last drop of oil has been taken out. In the meantime, we do not want our culture and environment decimated for the short-term gains of others outside of the north.

We have been invited by the government to sit down and negotiate a resolution to our outstanding claims. Negotiations to me, Mr. Speaker, imply a certain amount of give and take. So far, from that side, we have seen precious little give and a lot of take. Negotiations also require a certain amount of good faith on both sides. At the same time as the government is negotiating northern claims, it introduces this bill which is intended to make northern energy resources the basis for this country's economic development for the next quarter century. At the same time it is assuring native people in the north that everything is negotiable. It served notice to all of us that it intends to retain secure control over the resource wealth of the north, for the benefit of the so-called "national interest".

Since the bill was introduced a year ago, ministers of the government have been insistent that aboriginal claims would not be jeopardized by it. Recalling my comments regarding consultation, I have come to the conclusion that the more the government emphasizes a particular point, the less likely it is to be true. I strongly suspect that this will be the case with Bill C-48, regarding its implications for land claims, depending on who will be the next minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

One of the most critical elements in any land claim negotiation is the question of ownership and control of nonrenewable resources. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has said to me in the past that Bill C-48 will not preclude anything in the way of settlement. He assures us that anything is possible and that the current legislation can always be changed to accommodate whatever is negotiated in the way of settlement in the future. However much I would like to believe him on this—and I hope he is right—I am afraid that the hon. minister is moving into the theoretical plane when he makes such remarks.

The government has been eager to offer aboriginal peoples assurances that the bill will not affect their claims. It says that it even has legal opinions to back up this belief. But when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was asked in the House to present those legal arguments so that those who are skeptical can be reassured, he has refused to do so. If the legal opinions, in fact, support the government's contention, why should they have to be hidden and what does he have to lose by sharing them with us? One would think that it would be to his and his government's advantage if those legal opinions existed. In fact, his determination to withhold them speaks volumes about what must really be at stake for aboriginal peoples with the passage of this bill.

Throughout all of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to draw the parallels between the National Energy Program of today and the national policy of the 1800s. I should like to conclude my remarks by again alluding to that parallel and say, if I may take liberties with the words of Frank Underhill, a noted historian, that "What this country needs is the moral equivalent of Bill C-48".

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, once again I have an opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-48, the Canada oil and gas act.

Mr. Waddell: You are one of the few Liberals who is interested.

Mr. Dingwall: The main thrust of this piece of legislation was perhaps best summarized by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when he appeared before the committee, and subsequently when he spoke in the House. He noted the thrust of this legislation, and I think it is worth quoting him when he said:

> It is a key element of the National Energy Program. It will provide the framework for the careful management and successful development of the huge oil and gas potential of the Canada lands for many decades. And it will at the same time secure for the people of Canada an equitable share in that development while helping to ensure that it is carried out in a safe and environmentally-acceptable manner.

That is the thrust of Bill C-48, put very succinctly.

Before I go on to the substantive part of the legislation, I should like to deal with the process which has culminated in the bill coming to a vote.

There have been many opportunities for Members of Parliament to examine the legislation. In fact, we have been dealing with it for approximately one year. My colleagues and I have never objected to the lengthy and detailed scrutiny to which the legislation has been subjected; in fact, we have welcomed it. All Members of Parliament have had an opportunity to speak to the issues, to propose amendments and to vote on the bill at its various stages. In fact, to date 235 speeches have been made on this piece of legislation. The Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works held hearings and considered amendments to the bill for approximately six months. During those deliberations, 140 witnesses were called to testify and some 70 meetings, lasting a total of approximately 130 hours, were held. Hundreds of amendments offered by all political parties were considered and over 100 were accepted by the government.

It is worth noting who the witnesses were. There were numerous representatives of the oil and gas industry, various witnesses from related industries and individuals from the academic community. We also heard the views, oral and written, of representatives of Canada's original peoples as well as elected representatives of the territorial governments. We heard submissions and various assertions presented by Members of Parliament from all three political parties. We heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), as well as officials from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I think it is worth reflecting for a few moments on who the witnesses were, and I think we should congratulate those who appeared before the committee and offered frank and, in many instances, helpful suggestions on how to make a good bill better.

The bill was in committee twice as long as the Foreign Investment Review Act and three times as long as the Banks and Banking Law Revision Act. The committee reported this bill to the House and debate resumed for several days in July. Since we resumed sitting in October, Bill C-48 has been the sole subject for consideration, with the exception of the Constitution and the economy. We have been plodding painfully through 57 motions to amend the bill further. I remind hon. members that all of these motions were considered by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

There are times when governments have the luxury of prolonged contemplation. There are times when governments can allow for prolonged and wide-ranging discussion, but ultimately the time for action and decision arrives. Canadians demand it. Canada's energy situation demands it, and I suggest the time is now. The motion before us today challenges this House to act. Let us not avoid this responsibility which is bestowed upon all Members of Parliament who are the representatives of the people of Canada.

Perhaps not every member of the House accepts every word of every section of the bill as it now stands. But every member of the House will acknowledge that the need for this legislation is great and that the time for implementation of this new regime is long overdue. The legislation which this bill will replace is over two decades old and utterly inappropriate to our resource needs today. This legislation does little to spur exploration and development of new sources of oil and gas, makes no mention of the aspirations of aboriginal peoples, and does not have sufficiently stringent environmental safeguards. I suggest that is perhaps one of the most important, substantive portions of the bill.

The urgency of this situation was recognized by a previous minister of energy, who attempted to replace this outmoded legislation in 1971. Unfortunately, that bill died on the Order Paper. The need for a comprehensive new regime governing the offshore areas and the frontier has been recognized by prominent members of the opposition as well. The argument was put quite succinctly by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who said in Parliament on December 11, 1980:

> The broad objectives of this legislation are worthwhile and certainly acceptable. One might go so far as to say that they are motherhood; they are intended to increase production and Canadian ownership, as well as to provide a very stable tax environment. I agree with the minister when he says that it is important to have this legislation. We have been waiting for it for about ten years now.

After criticizing the government for not bringing this legislation forward promptly, little did I suspect that a bill which the hon. member describes as important, and indeed, even as motherhood, would face prolonged obstruction and opposition procrastination for almost one year.

We on this side of the House have been very active. Members of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works had an opportunity to travel to western Canada, although I admit the travel was limited. While there we had an opportunity to meet with the various sectors of the oil and gas industry, with some native persons and with some academics. I think it can be said that members of the committee from all parties became aware of the concerns of the people of western Canada in regard to Bill C-48.

In addition to the trip that the committee made out west, a number of members on this side of the House made a special journey to western Canada on their own time and at their own expense, to meet with additional individuals. We were given further information and were brought up to date on how these measures will affect people out there. I think that has had a tremendous influence on what is contained in the bill now before us.

Over the same year, we made significant progress on most aspects of our ambitious and comprehensive National Energy Program. As opposition parties demanded, we have achieved new oil and gas accords with the producing provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. We have also begun serious negotiations with Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and British Columbia concerning offshore resources. Finally, we have established an attractive price for new oil from Canada lands which, taken in conjunction with the petroleum incentives program, will stimulate new exploration and production.

How can Members of Parliament justify their efforts to delay a bill which will encourage greater Canadian participation in the petroleum industry operating on Canada lands? The Conservative government of Alberta supports the Canadianization provisions of the National Energy Program. The Social Credit government of British Columbia supports the Canadianization provisions of the National Energy Program. The NDP government of Saskatchewan supports the Canadianization provisions of the National Energy Program. Moreover, judging by their acquisitions of Suncor shares, I suggest that the big blue machine in the province of Ontario supports the Canadianization provisions as well.

Finally, 84 per cent of Canadians support our government's Canadianization policy, as indicated in an opinion survey sponsored by the Canadian Petroleum Association.

I suggest that Conservative members of this House need to confer with their Conservative colleagues in Alberta. The New Democratic Party, which I have often referred to as the pink rump, should also consult with their friends in Saskatchewan. They will learn, as other Canadians have learned, that Canadianization is welcomed and, indeed, is an essential part of a national energy program.

I wish that opposition members would feel the same sense of accomplishment and achievement as I do. A decision which hon. members opposite have taken was well described by the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) in his speech to this House on October 19, when he said: "We had to resort to a filibuster and to delaying tactics. This was hard on everyone, including government members who had to sit and listen". We all know of occasions where the opposition deliberately obstructs the work of Parliament, but rarely do hon. members boast of it so openly and brazenly.

Today I wish to tell the hon. member that we cannot sit and listen forever. We have not been elected to Parliament to provide him or his party with an audience, merely to sit and listen, as he puts it. We have a responsibility to protect Canadians from the dangers of a volatile world energy situation. This responsibility requires action, not indecision. Both opposition parties have contributed to the delay of this bill. More than 120 hon. members have spoken on this bill in Parliament. The incurable disease I call PetroCan paralysis, a disease which numbs Conservative thinking and paralyses Conservative action, has spread from this aspect of Conservative energy policy to include all aspects.

Mr. Paproski: I have got to leave, I am sorry.

Mr. Dingwall: Let me quote from the former critic of the Conservative Party before he, too, fell victim to the PetroCan paralysis. Once again, speaking on December 1, 1980, during the debate on this bill, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) said:

> This delay is shocking . . . It is irresponsible to expect companies to operate in an environment when they have no idea what the ground rules will be . . . This delay . . . going back to 1970, has cost Canada valuable years in reaching oil self-sufficiency. It is important that we get on with the job now.

From the start, we recognized the need for long, intensive and comprehensive consideration of Bill C-48 in all its challenging complexity. We have also allowed for the necessary time to debate this bill, and more. We have demonstrated the high degree of flexibility appropriate for such a bill. We have accepted advice regarding amendments from a variety of sources. I think it important that we recognize the contribution of all Members of Parliament, particularly those in the National Resources and Public Works Committee. In addition, we should single out two persons, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. MacLaren), as well as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources himself, for demonstrating that high degree of flexibility and receptiveness to changes as they relate to amendments to the bill.

I must say that we are not grateful for the hindrance we have also received from some quarters in this House at certain points in the process. At this late stage, we do not accept the prospect of further undue delay. The process is now drawing to a close, a close which is every bit as necessary as the preceding stages of consideration which have assisted so much in making a good bill better.

As I have already suggested to hon. members, we are not talking of a process lasting one year to date, but one lasting more than ten years since notice was served of the intention to update this legislation. In neither the specific case of Bill C-48 nor in the longer-term search for a new regulatory regime for the Canada lands can hon. members make a serious case for being the victims of unseemly haste.

In the final analysis, the test of whether and when this bill should be passed is not that we have fulfilled a need for full and fair consideration. The real test is the content of the bill itself. This bill passes this test at every crucial point in the challenge of meeting Canada's energy needs for the next ten years and beyond.

We have heard a great deal about the number of witnesses who appeared and the amount of time Members of Parliament spent on this particular piece of legislation. However, I want very briefly to touch on a few amendments and proposals which were made in committee by hon. members opposite and on this side. An amendment was proposed to change the definition of "significant discovery", in that particular section to read:

> "significant discovery" means the first well on a geological feature that indicates by flow testing the existence of hydrocarbons in that feature and, having regard to geological and engineering factors, indicates the existence of an accumulation of hydrocarbons that has potential for production.

Mr. Waddell: Read that in English. It would help the companies, too.

Mr. Dingwall: In addition, there were amendments to the exploration agreements and the PIR, the progressive incremental royalty. The PGRT was accordingly amended to make it deductible. Of course, the environmental studies revolving fund, as I said earlier, makes a very important provision in this particular bill. If amendments were made to that, I am sure the fund could be applied on a region by region basis.

There were other suggested amendments which were considered. One particular area of concern raised by committee members and by those individuals who had appeared before us was the provision relating to the industrial benefits. I am happy to say that there were modifications to the industrial benefits provisions which clearly stipulate that Canadian manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies will have a full and fair opportunity to participate competitively in the supply of goods and services.

Mr. Waddell: That was a retreat.

Mr. Dingwall: This particular provision has great significance for Canada, because if we are to rid ourselves of the label of a have-not province, or the have-not provinces, we will have to take advantage of that opportunity which is about to come in the oil and gas industry so that we can provide meaningful employment to the people in Atlantic Canada and they, too, like other Canadians, will have an opportunity to build homes, raise families, and prosper in society.

In addition to this particular provision, I have referred to the Canadianization provisions. The minister has included, in this particular bill, a provision in Section 5(6) whereby advisory bodies can be set up at his discretion. This is important because in the administering of this particular act there would be situations where it may be necessary to consult with certain people in the industry, to consult with various native groups, fishermen or what have you, to make certain that the provisions of the bill are being carried out with the intent that we all know.

The final comment that I would like to make in terms of the substantive portion of the bill concerns the absolute liability provisions. As an hon. member from Atlantic Canada, I am very pleased that that particular section dealing with the claims which may or may not be made by fishermen is written in the way it is. The absolute liability regime where no proof of fault or negligence is required to establish liability is indeed a far-reaching measure. Closer examination of the relative provisions, however, will reveal that the liability under the bill applies regardless of whether this bill is authorized or unauthorized. For Your Honour's edification, that was a particular point which I think all hon. members would agree had to be clarified, and I am happy to say that it has been clarified to the satisfaction of all hon. members.

The liability provisions include not only damages resulting from spills, but also compensation for damages resulting from debris on the ocean floor. Another significant feature of the liability and compensation scheme is the inclusion of loss of income, including future income, in the definition of actual loss or damage. I must emphasize that this provision goes beyond the basis for the award of damages under the common law and, in my view, is unprecedented in any similar type of legislation.

Bill C-48 is crucial to the development of long-term stability of oil and gas supply in Canada. The frontier regions may or may not help to meet a significant part of Canada's energy needs in the 1980s, but I believe all hon. members hope they will. Passage of this legislation is essential if that hope is to have a chance of realization. However, we know the longer future of oil and gas development in Canada lies in our untapped frontier regions where the bulk of our conventional oil and gas resources are projected to be found. The time for making that future possible is now. That is why the regulatory stability to be provided by Bill C-48 is so essential at this time. There is an enormous, emerging momentum building up for exploration in the frontier. With the help of Bill C-48 and a number of supporting initiatives in the National Energy Program, we will soon see this tremendous potential being harnessed at precisely the optimum moment in our history.

The National Energy Program provides an opportunity for Canadians to begin to participate in the development of their own oil and gas resources on a grand and growing scale. That is the only scale of participation sufficient to ensure that the benefits of frontier oil and gas development are sufficiently great for Canadians to justify the high costs of this undertaking. I need hardly add that a major share for Canadians in frontier oil and gas opportunities is also essential to the goal of fairness in sharing the benefits of petroleum industry growth. Canadians are more than ready to do this job in co-operation with those companies, mostly foreign owned, which currently hold the bulk of the promising acreage in the frontier.

Bill C-48 and supporting national energy initiatives provide a regime second to none in the world for both Canadian and foreign investors to build a truly outstanding store of usable energy and energy wealth, for themselves and indeed for all Canadians.

Members of this House know that the goal of enhancing Canadian participation in frontier oil and gas opportunities could hardly command a greater degree of public support. Hon. members also know, indeed they have told us repeatedly, that the existing regime for frontier oil and gas was simply not getting the job done either for Canadian participation or supply development.

I believe the need to act expeditiously will be apparent to anyone with a real desire to see Canada begin facing the frontier oil and gas challenge in full measure. That is why I have not the slightest hesitation in supporting a measure necessary to ensure that this bill is carried forward in an efficient manner with all due regard to both the responsibilities of this House and the energy needs of the nation. The time is now.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak during the final moments of debate on Bill C-48. I believe the two main points that should be discussed have been identified by the previous speaker. The discussion has to centre on both the mechanism of closure and also some of the aspects of the substance of Bill C-48.

Before getting into those two major points, I want to spend a little time on points made by earlier speakers, particularly those contained in the speech made by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). He mentioned Canadianization. It should be very clear to people across Canada that the Progressive Conservative Party strongly supports Canadianization. What we have a great deal of difficulty with are the types of measures in this bill and the types of things that have been done so far by this government opposite which do not represent Canadianization but represent, or may represent, nationalization, more government involvement, more interference and more difficulties down the road in terms of developing our industry.

Just as an example of the kind of difficulties that can occur, I will mention Petrofina because that company has been referred to today. I can think of a case in my own constituency concerning Petrofina. An honest dealer who works for another oil company wanted to start up a gas station. He bought land, part of which was owned by Petrofina. This dealer cannot now open up a gas station because Petro-Canada has control of the land. The dealer has asked for release, and there is not another gas station in the area and they will not give him the release. Therefore, this dealer has been prevented by Petro-Canada from earning a living on the basis of the Petrofina purchase. This is just one example. There can be more of these sorts of things as we see more and more direct government involvement through Crown corporations. This should be of real concern to all Canadians.

I believe the previous speaker repeatedly mentioned closure and he ended his speech with the words "The time is now." There would be no argument from this side of the House that it is high time that legislation be brought in to deal with programs that have occurred in the oil and gas industry, but that is not the point. The question is, what changes should be made? The hon. member made reference to the red rump. We in this party make many references to the red rump. We identify them as the red rump of the sheep on the other side of the House. I just point that out because I want it to be clear.

The hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) mentioned the potential impact this bill will have on the people north of 60. I think the impact with which we are faced will affect people on the east coast, the west coast and all across Canada. We share his concern about the potential impact this bill will have on all Canadians.

I will turn now to the comments made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). He had about five major points. The most telling one was the denial he made that this bill in itself represents in any way an infringement on the fundamental rights of Canadians or Canadian companies to own property. There can be no argument that this bill and its main impact with its retroactive 25 per cent back-in provision on Canada lands leased by oil and gas companies represents an infringement on the ability of Canadians and Canadian companies to own property. This kind of thing is in keeping with the general tone of government policy today, and it is something to which I will return in a few moments.

The second point made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerned existing legislation. It should be pointed out to the Canadian public, and it should be clear to the Liberal Party that forms the government, that governments in power since the oil embargo of 1973 have not reacted properly when it was clear that major changes were needed. It was the responsibility of Liberal governments to make changes to legislation. It is their fault that we are now faced with a crisis. They are now saying that they can use this bill as a justification and a rationalization for closure.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said that this bill in some way will help to provide Canadians with an equitable share of the oil and gas industry. But what it has done is provide the Liberal government with the major return. Canadians are faced with terrific increases in prices across the board for heating oil and gasoline. There is another 50 cents that will be added in the coming year. Canadians are not the ones who are getting an equitable share. The Canadian government is because of its profligate ways and its horrendous borrowing, the Liberal government having had to raise revenue. The Liberal government is the major beneficiary of this so-called equity.

As a result of recent changes in oil and gas prices, the revenue from a barrel of oil is divided as follows: the federal government receives $18.50, the Ontario government receives $8.32 and the Alberta government receives $7.56. Who is paying all this money? The Canadian public. But the federal government reaps the major benefit.

The minister talked about protection of the environment. I believe he talked in a very supportive way of the legislation and the fact that it would provide the safeguards and make sure the environment was respected. At the same time, he neglected to talk about the discretionary powers and the track record of this government in terms of environmental protection. The most glaring example is the government's effort in Toronto to remove radioactive soil and dump it in the Camp Borden area. That is the kind of environmental sensitivity this government has, and this is the kind of thing we have to be concerned about when we look at the protection the environment might have under this type of legislation, particularly in view of the discretionary powers of the minister.

Finally, the major point he was trying to make was that this bill would in a major way help to achieve energy self-sufficiency. The goal of energy self-sufficiency was first established by the Progressive Conservative Party in 1979. This was a policy the whole country could relate to, one the importance of which is known to the people. In fact, we did not have an energy policy in Canada until that government made this a major goal. We had not had the need for energy self-sufficiency in this country identified until that time. That was a goal we established. It is a goal that the party and the government opposite are now the beneficiaries of, and it is one I think we all hoped we could achieve.

The fact is that the mechanism for achieving this goal is something that will not only be avoided by this kind of bill, but it is something which is continually thwarted by a number of measures brought in by this government, the most recent of which is the budget. I will return to that in a moment with figures to show where we will be in energy self-sufficiency with our shortfall. This bill clearly is not going to help satisfy any of those goals. In fact, it has had a net negative effect.

I should like to return for a moment to the background of the conditions we are now facing as we look at this bill. Bill C-48 is certainly one of the flagships of the government's National Energy Program. If we want to consider an example of government flagships, and we had time, we could think about the Canadian navy and how well the flagships of government activity in that field have served us. The dedication the government has given the Department of National Defence in its support for that department over the last number of years does not speak well for this measure if it is to be the flagship of the National Energy Program.

We have had at least 13 years of successive Liberal government policies in relation to energy and the economy which have today put our country into a situation which everyone knows compares only to that of about 30 years ago. We are experiencing a most severe recession, and statistics revealed today show that it will probably be worse next year. That is the kind of thing nobody likes to hear. It is the kind of thing that is entirely unnecessary, but it is the consequence of the policies of successive Liberal governments.

It is difficult for members of this party to accept the kind of promise made by the party opposite at election time. That government has made promises in respect of cheap gas, cheap heating oil and lower interest rates. All those promises have proved to be like the promise in respect of wage and price controls. They were promises made in order to get elected but never kept. This government goes on in ways which get us into deeper and deeper trouble.

The economic climate of this country is certainly depressed, and it is depressing to talk about it. The fact is that those people who are now unemployed and those who face the loss of their jobs in the coming year must know that this Liberal government is responsible, and that as a country there is no need for our being in this situation. It is not necessary because, since Canada became a nation, we have had the resources and the opportunity to move ahead. What we have not had is the kind of direction needed to maximize the potential to put us in the position of having full employment, and the energy security, optimism and hope for the future which I think all Canadians deserve.

I should like to turn now to the mechanism of closure. I guess the most dramatic use of the mechanism of closure I have experienced was last summer when we sat here in the House of Commons in an effort to achieve in some way a quick and effective resolution to the Post Office strike. At that time, as the opposition was mounting pressure on the government to get something done to achieve a conclusion to that situation, this government brought in closure. We wanted a conclusion to that strike whether that meant legislation, which this party would have supported, or something else. The government has legislated postal workers back to work in the past. We wanted that conclusion even if it meant taking away the right to strike from essential services, something which I think all Canadians would support. What this government chose to do, at a time when business was reeling from the pressure of high interest rates, when small businesses were going bankrupt and faced a total loss of $3 billion, was to bring in closure. Perhaps it was because the weather was too hot outside and therefore we were still sitting in the House of Commons, but whatever the reason this House used closure and prevented us from terminating that Post Office strike.

This government has actually brought in closure nine times since 1979. One occasion when it brought in closure before last summer which strikes me as being dramatic was after two weeks of debate on the Constitution. At that time the government felt it was justified in using that measure. I do not know how the comments of the previous speaker related to that time, that period of two weeks when we were considering an entirely new constitutional framework for Canada. I do not know how hon. members opposite can justify, rationalize or square the use of that measure with the people of Canada. I do not know how individual members of the Liberal Party can go back to their constituencies and justify the government's continual use of this mechanism which in fact overrides the democratic principles upon which this House functions. I think this was expressed best by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) a couple of days ago. He said that members opposite will have to justify this use of closure by the government in relation to important national issues; they will have to justify overriding the democratic process of this House of Commons.

Perhaps another use of closure that will come to the minds of many Canadians was during the pipeline debate. In that regard it was interesting to hear the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) make an announcement, as a result of a question in the House by one of his own members, about the passage by the United States government of measures which will in fact secure the ongoing development of this pipeline. The thing that surprised us on this side of the House is that hon. members opposite should have been so relieved. We had so many guarantees for so long regarding the construction of this pipeline that there seemed to be no problem, at least to us on this side of the House. For that reason it was with a little bit of confusion that we received that announcement through the efforts of that Liberal backbencher. Perhaps the minister had a reason for making this announcement today, in spite of the fact that he has given us repeated assurances that everything was A-OK.

As this program is part of the ongoing implementation of Bill C-48, I think the initial reaction to the total program by different sectors in varying regions of Canada was that it had some favourable measures. Canadians from central Canada were among the first to give their initial reaction to this bill and they indicated that, on the basis of the National Energy Program, they expected energy security and less expensive oil and gas. They anticipated an end to the difficulties which had existed for several years in trying to negotiate agreements between the federal government and the provinces. I cannot speak for the people of Quebec but it appeared to be a beneficial program according to the people of Ontario. I believe this same attitude was reflected as well in eastern Canada.

However, the realization evolved that this program was not going to solve all the problems. In fact, more problems were created which became evident by the fact that it took at least another year to reach an energy pricing agreement. When that agreement was reached last fall, the consequences were entirely different from what most people in central Canada had originally hoped for.

I think the government has done a very wise thing politically by selling to the Canadian public all of the ingredients of this legislation under the name of Canadianization and presenting it as a single package. It is a complex and difficult issue to understand, and to present it in the name of Canadianization is a term which is very well accepted. Hon. members opposite know that this party strongly supports the intent of the word "Canadianization".

As far as the reaction of industry and the people at large in western Canada to the National Energy Program is concerned, I believe that their awareness of the consequences was much greater. Their appreciation of the results and their concern for some of its difficulties was greater initially.

In many ways, some of their fears and concerns were proven to be valid because the minister had to make adjustments to some of the provisions in order to accommodate the realities in terms of prices which would help the industry survive. These changes were necessitated by the increasing number of rigs and workers leaving Canada because they could not function in an uncertain environment, one in which there was not a guaranteed return on their investment. I think this was a major factor the minister had to deal with in terms of making adjustments which were reasonably equitable to the country as a whole.

I would like to talk about the initial reaction to this program by the industry. For example, the executive of TransCanada PipeLines wanted to see the implementation of the more favourable parts of the National Energy Program and thought that the program as a whole was legitimate in terms of the country trying to develop a sense of national identity, that it was not something which needed to be feared but needed to be developed. It is clear from recent public submissions made by executives of TransCanada PipeLines that some of their worst fears, which were not initially revealed, had been realized. They now know that the net impact of the National Energy Program has been negative and will continue to be so unless more adjustments are made to it. There are other examples which I will not go into right now.

I would like to discuss further the self-sufficiency aspect of this National Energy Program by quoting what Woods, Gordon have to say about the effect of the National Energy Program and self-sufficiency. Woods, Gordon states:

> The NEP document states, "it would be premature and unwise to count on the frontier to solve the oil supply problem". A CPA forecast (which does not include frontier production or new tar sands production) results in a shortfall of 740,000 barrels per day by 1990.

That is at least double, if not triple, the shortfall we have today.

As we continue, in spite of the fact that the Liberal government has almost turned consumption off—not because of conservation but because they have restrained business so much that they do not need any more—we have a situation now in which, if we were in full production of oil and doing what is possible, the shortfall that was feared in the last several years would still be apparent and real. The conservation measures which have been attempted are starting to have an impact now, and as much as hon. members opposite deny this in their remarks and their philosophy, the increased business price has had more to do with that than anything else. The Liberals fought an election on this and now they are again the happy beneficiaries of the fact that Canadians will turn to less use of oil and gas, and will use smaller cars because they cannot afford the prices which the Liberals have heaped upon them.

Another result of this so-called Canadianization program which has been undertaken has been a large outflow of capital from Canada. The figures vary but the latest figure I heard mentioned about a month ago about the outflow of capital from Canada was $10 billion, money which has gone to the United States and possibly other countries. This is a result of the effort to achieve more Canadian ownership. There has been an increase of Canadian content in the oil industry of from 27 per cent to 31 per cent. One of the serious consequences is the enormous pressure put on the Canadian dollar and the interest rates which this reflects. It is my hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has taken this situation into account, because it appears that the government has to slow that process down to reduce competition for capital in Canada so that we do not face continuously the kind of economic pressure which our economy cannot stand today.

While the goal of increased Canadian ownership is admirable and one which would be supported by all sides of the House, the speed and amount of capital required to meet this goal is something the minister must take into account while doing his economic planning.

As this discussion culminates I think what we will see as the result of this program during the short time it has been in existence—approximately a year—is higher prices than we have anticipated. There has been no real improvement in our ability to be self-sufficient. There has been an aggravation to the economic recession we are in and Bill C-48 now takes us into an area in which the government is retroactively confiscating property.

This bill will increase ministerial discretion in the entire energy field. We have here a major move by the government to become intimately, aggressively and completely involved in the energy system in Canada. I would like to put that into the context of things that have happened over recent years in this country. That context has a very important message in terms of where this government is going and where the Canadian people can expect to be in the future if the government continues in power and on the same course it is on now.

In spite of the concern of New Democratic Party members that the government is not involved enough, through its budget the government is now more involved and taking more out of our gross national product than ever. It is more involved in a financial way than it has been at any time since the end of the Second World War. There has been a succession of measures taken by this government, which I am sure has been influenced enormously by senior civil servants. The government is involved in social programs to an extent never achieved before. The government is involved in health care and in all parts of the social system in an almost complete and total way, to the point where private involvement is very, very limited.

Now the government is involved in the energy system. Granted, it is involved just by way of introduction at the present time, but through this bill and the remainder of the National Energy Program there is the potential for almost total involvement. The government has the potential to control the entire energy system.

The final step—and this is achieved through budgetary measures—is government involvement in business and the financing of small businesses and farmers all the way up to larger businesses and large corporations. I am sure hon. members opposite can respond to that, but I think the important proof of that is what happens in terms of the ability of the individual to own property. The Constitution has been the subject of a considerable amount of discussion lately, and I will not try to put this matter into that context; but there is no question that the ownership of property is not guaranteed by the Constitution.

There are some hon. members opposite who suggest that some of the budgetary measures were not a mistake but that they came at the wrong time; they are really what they wanted but at the wrong time. That is one point of view, but the more worrisome point of view is that those measures were not a mistake and really were designed and intended.

With respect to the ability of the individual to own property, I think some of the measures in the budget should be of major concern to all Canadians. I will not go into technical details, but I will mention the capital cost allowance changes, the changes in the capital gains tax, the changes in the income-averaging annuities and the changes respecting the ability of an individual to give a mortgage to somebody who wants to buy his business. Within a very few years all those changes will have the net result of making it almost impossible for an individual to buy a business or a farm. Those changes will make it undesirable for many people to retire on farms. There will be a tremendous impact on people who want to own property.

The government has taken the last step in the budget. It has taken the last major step into that wonderful world of socialism. Canadians across the country should recognize this and understand it. I suppose it is a cause for glee among some hon. members. While their motives are honest and while in their responses they can jest, what is happening is a tragedy.

If there are any examples of independent business left in this country, one is the example of independent cattlemen. They are the last free enterprisers. They do not have a marketing board. They have been doing their own thing. There are many who would accept marketing boards, there is no question about that, but the unfortunate thing is that they are looking for government grants. Businesses are looking for government grants. The government will have to provide grants in order to make it possible for people in this country to survive. Who will handle the grants? Who will tell the people who get grants what to do? I think there should be a major change. Perhaps there will be a tax revolt. It is clear that we in the official opposition will not get support from hon. members on my left, but perhaps we will be able to do something. It is unlikely that we can precipitate an election before its time, but there is a groundswell across the country. There is a gradual indication of discontent. Small business people are the first to make it known, along with insurance people and people who are feeling negative effects now. They understand the consequences of some of the measures in the budget.

I think Canadians want the self-respect and the dignity they should be able to earn. They want the tools to be able to function within a free enterprise economy. This government continues on its present course at its own peril. The Liberal caucus continues to support its Minister of Finance at its peril. I hope this situation can change soon. I am not completely in despair, and I am glad to have had this opportunity to express my concerns.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had the corner of your eye, but I would like to point out that this bill is being discussed under closure. Recognition of the parliamentary secretary indicates that there will be three full speeches from the government side on this, the last day for discussion of this bill, and we in the official opposition will have the opportunity to hear only one full speech and the remainder of a speech which began on a previous day. I wonder if Your Honor might reverse the recognition order, or perhaps government members will agree to split the remaining time so that we might at least have an opportunity to be heard on this last day under closure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member does not have a point of order in the sense that he requests that the Chair change the usual rule. The Chair looks to left and right alternately, and there is no way around that. Hon. members to my right have a right which cannot be disposed of by the Chair. If the hon. member wants to try to make arrangements with the party to my right either to reduce the time for speeches or to alternate in some different way, the Chair would of course recognize such an arrangement. That might take a couple of minutes, and I suggest I begin by recognizing, as I should, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Taylor: Why did you vote for closure if you wanted to speak?

Mr. Bockstael: —I am grateful for this opportunity to speak on Bill C-48.

Mr. Taylor: Why did you vote for closure then?

Mr. Bockstael: I shall review with hon. members the reasons for the government's conviction that this legislation and the management regime it establishes are essential to vigorous and responsible oil and gas development on the Canada lands.

Let us turn for a moment to the main elements of the new regime set out in Bill C-48. With respect to land management under Bill C-48, there will be stiffer work requirements through negotiated exploration agreements that include firm drilling commitments. The new management regime will provide a greater degree of control over the timing, direction, rate and level of exploration and development. This will be achieved through earlier release of proprietary information and prior approval of transfers and assignment of rights and drilling orders. The Bill also provides for ministerial authority to order production to commence and be delivered to Canadian markets in quantities and at prices specified in the order.

In terms of employment Bill C-48 will require, through negotiated exploration agreements, that companies submit detailed manpower plans which must include advance specification of labor requirements and sourcing, recruiting procedures, training programs and local hiring programs. Companies will need to establish and maintain close contact with the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission in the development and implementation of the plan. Thus we intend to ensure that Canadian workers have an opportunity to contribute their skills to developing oil and gas in the Canada lands. We will also require that the companies submit a procurement plan to ensure that Canadian manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies are given a full and fair opportunity to participate on a competitive basis in the supply of goods and services.

● (1720)

In the National Energy Program we were emphatic that decisions on energy development in the north would respond to the concerns of the native people. Despite this commitment, some native groups have expressed concern about Bill C-48, in part because they fear that development fostered by the new regime could prejudice their interest in land claims negotiations. The natives are asking us to prove our good intention.

Mr. Friesen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Beauchesne at page 101, rule 309, reads as follows:

It is a rule in both Houses of Parliament that a member must address the House orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech.

I do not mind if the hon. member has copious notes. We know he can read. We would like to hear an extemporaneous speech from him rather than a parliamentary secretary's or bureaucrat's speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): This particular occupant of the Chair has had occasion to deal with this point of order before. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is perfectly correct; members are encouraged to avoid reading speeches verbatim. The difficulty that the Chair faces, whether it be myself or some other occupant, is that if the House wishes to instruct the Chair that this rule is to be followed, the Chair will instantly and with great pleasure do so; but it will apply equally to all members of the House at all times.

I would recommend that the hon. member give some thought to whether indeed that is the rule he would like applied to members on all sides. If that is the case, I am sure the Chair will be notified of that. Aside from being astounded and delighted, the Chair would be pleased to put that into effect immediately. I suggest that some consideration be given in caucus to that matter before the hon. member asks me to make a decision. If the hon. member wants the rules applied, I will apply them.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is simply reading what somebody else wrote. That is completely contrary to this rule. I ask him to close his notes and give his speech. He can not do it. He is reading word for word. Somebody else wrote that speech and he knows it. Also, they vote for closure and then try to waste our time. Why did you vote for closure, you bunch of hypocrites?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The point is entirely irrelevant. If the hon. member wants to read the collected works of Shakespeare word for word—

Mr. Taylor: Shakespeare didn't write that trash!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The point would still remain that the issue is not the author of what an hon. member may refer to but rather whether or not he is reading a speech. I can add no more to what I have already said to the earlier member who rose on the same point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can take seriously your statement that you are reserving judgment and that we can have a judgment on this later. Since you quoted the eminent Mr. Shakespeare, he said that brevity is the soul of wisdom.

An hon. Member: Wit.

Mr. Friesen: Or wit, which was the contemporary definition of wisdom. When we have this hon. member reading a prepared text, the speech may have a lot of qualities but brevity will not be one of them. We would prefer some wit and wisdom coming in the nature of brevity from this member.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, native people have often indicated that they were concerned about this development. We have already shown them our good faith when we decided to withhold the development of the pipeline for at least two years.

Mr. Taylor: Can you find your place?

Mr. Bockstael: As for protection of the environment, Bill C-48 will reinforce already stringent regulations and practice to ensure that the contribution of the Canada lands to Canada's energy security will not be at the expense of the environment.

Some elements of Bill C-48 relate to the fiscal regime for the Canada land that is intended to provide to all Canadians a share in the financial benefits flowing from the exploitation of their resources. The challenge here is to provide to investors a fair and competitive return on their investment, while at the same time ensuring a fair return to the Canadian people who own the land and who have supported exploration investments so generously through incentives on a scale available to no other industry.

First, as part of the over-all fiscal regime, a 25 per cent share of oil and gas production from the Canada lands will be reserved to the Crown. This share will be exercised through Petro-Canada or some other designated Crown corporation.

Second, to ensure that Canadians receive a fair return for their oil and gas resources, there will be a basic royalty of 10 per cent, with an additional royalty of 40 per cent of the net profits of the field above the 25 per cent rate of return.

Third, to provide the opportunity for direct Canadian participation there will be a minimum requirement of 50 per cent Canadian private and public sector ownership of production in the Canada lands.

In terms of price, the new oil reference price will promote a high level of exploration and development activity in the Canada lands. This generous pricing regime was established under the oil pricing and revenue-sharing agreement signed with the province of Alberta last September. By guaranteeing producers of new Canada lands oil world level prices, it recognizes that oil exploration and development on the frontiers are relatively high-cost, high-risk ventures.

In short, as industry has recognized, the new oil reference price makes Canada fully competitive in price terms with oil exploration and development anywhere in the world giving significant stimulus for Canada lands oil development as it does for new tar sands projects and for production from the remaining conventional oil prospects in western Canada.

Second, consider the fiscal incentive in the Canada lands in relation to other countries. After the incentives in the income tax system, even without the depletion allowance that will be in effect until 1985, the effective cost for a foreign-owned company exploring in the Canada lands is 53 cents on the dollar. This is lower than comparative figures for the U.S. offshore which range up to 67 cents on the dollar. This is without taking into account the fact that unlike the United States we have not required an up-front bonus bid. We know of no investment regime in any major producing country that is nearly as attractive.

Put another way, we consciously provide to foreign companies a regime that is more attractive to them than any they enjoy in their home country. As you know, the investment incentive for Canadian-owned companies is even richer, providing the basis for a wealth of prospective deals between major companies now holding most of the prospective land and Canadian companies wishing to participate.

Finally, consider returns to industry under the fiscal regime governing production. Recall for a moment the numbers submitted by Petro-Canada. Using a sample field, Petro-Canada calculated that international investors would earn a rate of return of 24.4 per cent in the United Kingdom, 18.3 per cent in Norway, 21.6 per cent in the United States, not counting the bonus bids, and as much as 27.7 per cent in Canada. Together, the lower cost of investment on the Canada lands, our world level prices for new oil and exciting oil prospects provide the industry with prospective returns that are very attractive by U.S., U.K., Norwegian or any other standard. I know of no company which has taken the trouble to compare the economics in the Canada lands to regimes elsewhere that will debate this point. The numbers are there. They are public knowledge. Any analyst can verify them.

I want to address some of the specific criticisms which have been directed towards the Crown interest provision. Critics of the Crown share have called it an "expropriation" or a "land grab". They have been especially critical of the fact that the Crown interest will apply retroactively, as it applies to all lands not currently in production, whether or not exploration and discoveries have already taken place. They also continue to claim a right to substantial compensation. Mr. Speaker, this reaction stems from a basic misunderstanding of the Crown interest and its role established by Bill C-48.

The Crown interest involves retention by the Crown of 25 per cent of all interest in the Canada lands, except those where production has already occurred. The government also is involved directly in the management of the venture, commensurate with the level of its share. In return, the Crown will contribute 25 per cent of all costs involved. To argue that the Crown interest is a carried interest, a "free-ride", is obviously a misportrayal. We are paying for all of our share through the 25 per cent Crown interest incentive payment, by carrying our share of costs at the development stage, the Crown's interest is carried up to the point when a production plan is filed, at which point the Crown must convert its holdings to a working interest.

There are circumstances where the Crown might elect to convert to a working interest before exploration is completed, in which case the other partners would be paid double for the Crown's share of the costs, first through the 25 per cent Crown interest incentive payment, and second through a proportionate contribution by the Crown's working interest agent. In any event, the Crown will always contribute its share of the cost of developing a field for production. This activity usually accounts for 85 per cent or more of the total investment.

It is important to see Crown interest and its application in the proper context. First of all, it represents a means by which all Canadians can share in the benefits of a resource that is and will remain 100 per cent owned by Canadians. Canadians have, through their tax dollars, paid for the majority of the oil and gas exploration work. Moreover, the principle of Crown interest is not a new development; it incorporates elements of Canadian energy policy which have been evolving for the last 20 years.

Since the establishment of the Canada oil and gas land regulations in 1961, the world and the place of energy in it have changed. The Crown interest provision is one of the means, along with royalties, of ensuring that Canadians share in the benefits of the greatly increased value of the energy resources in the Canada lands.

Let us be quite clear on one point. The new regime, whatever its form, inevitably had to result in a greater government share of oil and gas revenues than would have been the case under the existing rules or the rules proposed in 1977. Existing rights were issued prior to the 1979 explosion in world oil prices and most lands now held by the industry even pre-date the emergence of OPEC's radical pricing policies in 1974.

These OPEC actions transformed the world oil market and effected a huge windfall economic gain on existing reserves and oil and gas rights. Canada has, as has every other government faced with this situation—including Norway, the United Kingdom and even the United States—made it clear that this windfall would not accrue to the industry alone. On the Canada lands, the larger federal revenues from under the 25 per cent Crown interest and the progressive incremental royalty are intended to achieve government revenue objectives and can be equated reasonably to the fiscal measures of the United Kingdom and the United States, which have dramatically increased government revenues from existing reserves of oil and gas.

It is essential to establish this point quite early. There is an obligation upon us, as stewards of this national resource, to establish a mix of measures that give both the industry and the owners of the resource a fair share. On the basis of our comparative analysis of international regimes, we came to the conclusion that the regime had to be substantially toughened up, even over the 1977 rules, if we were to fulfil our responsibilities. Thus, it was not a question of a Crown interest or not; it was a question, with us, of how we would obtain this magnitude of share. Each country has its own approach.

Let me illustrate this with a United States example. In 1979, the United States, having decontrolled oil prices, imposed a tax called the "windfall profits tax". It applied to all production, current and future. It provided for a tax ranging from 30 per cent to 70 per cent on production profits. Quite clearly, to a dramatic extent, this affected the value of the industry's already discovered assets. Yet so far as we can ascertain, no serious attempt was made by companies in the United States to obtain compensation for this measure, which was every bit as retroactive as the Crown interest provision. Indeed, it was much more retroactive, because we are grandfathering existing production in the Canada lands. There are literally dozens of similar examples from around the world and within Canada.

For example, consider Alberta. A former cabinet minister of the Alberta government, the Hon. Bill Yurko, had this to say in the House of Commons on November 3, 1981, as reported at page 12460 of Hansard:

> I want to say first that I was involved as a minister of a government for over half a dozen years in changing drastically the energy regime in Alberta. No one has to tell me about retroactive legislation. We changed every lease in Alberta retroactively and changed the royalty structure from a maximum 16⅔ per cent to a much higher royalty.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order. The hon. member should also say that that was done after meeting the industry in an agricultural public affairs committee and discussing it fairly, not doing it by closure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. That is not a point of order, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Bockstael:

> Indeed, we changed legislation to effectively change the transfer of ownership of oil and gas.

Yet no company, so far as we know, claimed compensation for this retroactive change of rules affecting existing reserves.

Against this background, it is unreasonable to claim that the Crown interest does something more to the industry's assets than other fiscal measures, here and elsewhere, have done time and again, as governments took steps to ensure that their citizens obtained a fair share of the gains from the increased value of oil and gas production.

It is time we lay to rest the claim that the Crown interest is a measure that is financially unusual or that it calls for compensation. Consider the options we had at our disposal to ensure that Canadians got a fair share of profits from resources that they, not the oil companies, own. We could, for example, have raised the basic royalty, say to levels prevailing in Alberta. This would have raised it, on average, by 25 or 30 percentage points. The Crown's share of Canada lands production then would have been at least 35 to 40 per cent in the form of a royalty. This would have been more onerous on the industry than the Crown interest provision will be. For one thing, we pay our full share of costs in return for the Crown share. Yet I get the impression that had we opted for a royalty solution, the protests from the industry and from other governments would have been less intense.

Particular attention has been focused on the Crown interest in Hibernia, where Petro-Canada already had acquired an interest in the play in 1979 by virtue of the so-called back-in provision. It has been proposed that, because of this back-in, the Crown interest provision of Bill C-48 should not apply to Hibernia. Canadian ownership in that venture reached 35 per cent. Surely it would be inequitable to apply the Crown interest to those permit holders that actively sought private Canadian participation, but not to Hibernia. We can see no special case for the Hibernia partners. Their return will still be higher than they can earn in the other countries to which I have referred.

The new regime for the Canada lands leaves foreign-owned companies with an investment return that is superior to that available in their home countries. Consider for a moment a situation where Petro-Canada is involved in development in, say, Norway. If Norway were, in a reasonable and even-handed fashion, to change the fiscal rules, would anyone plausibly argue that such a move warranted protests on the part of the Canadian government? The case for protest would become even less sustainable if the new regime still left Petro-Canada better off—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think the filibuster in this House when we were trying to stop another closure measure taught all members on this side of the House that the basic foundation of a question of privilege arises from the fact that the king used to try to keep the commoners out of the House of Commons so that they could not represent the people who elected them.

I wonder if there is a question of privilege in the following set of circumstances, Mr. Speaker. When a motion under Standing Order 75C is moved in this House and when a member votes on that motion, it is essentially a vote to close off debate, to restrict the time that is allowed for debate. Today is a very short day and it has been selected by the government as the last day of debate on a bill which steals 25 per cent of the assets of a number of Canadians. We have been treated to hearing a succession of three Liberal members speak, each of whom has read for a total of 40 minutes each, or whatever time was allowed, while only one member on this side of the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the usual procedure has been followed. That is, the Chair listens to an hon. member who seeks to raise a question of privilege. I have listened to the hon. member and if he is seeking to find some issue of privilege in the tradition and rule that the Chair looks to the left and the right alternatively, then I have explained that previously. Closure or no closure, we proceed in accordance with those rules. There is no element of privilege within the hon. member's submission.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I have answered the hon. member. Does he want to pursue the point further?

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Unless the hon. member devotes his remarks very closely to the matter of privilege, I will have to cut him off.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it may be due to my lack of eloquence in explaining my point, but the problem is not whether you look left or right, Mr. Speaker. The point is that there seems to have been a deliberate campaign of reading 40 minute speeches—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. That is not in any way a question of privilege.

Mr. Bockstael: Whether the government collects economic rent through a royalty which is taken in kind or through—

Mr. Taylor: That is the wrong page. You started in the wrong place.

Mr. Bockstael: —or through the retention of part of interest, there is very little difference—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. If this man wants to read, at least he should start in the right place. Hon. members opposite voted for freedom of expression in the charter, but they close off, shut the door, and don't let anyone else talk.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have to point out to the hon. member for Bow River, who says he finds there is some abuse of the rules in the reading of speeches, that no hon. member in this House is on his feet on points of order that are found to be without merit as often as he is.

It being 5.45 o'clock, pursuant to order made Monday, December 7, 1981, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

[Translation]

The question is on the motion in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

HUMAN RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UNITED NATIONS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that today is the thirty-third anniversary of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights and that Canada is one of the foremost supporters of that Declaration, having ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Human rights which gives legal expression to that declaration; and in view of the continuing abuses of human rights in almost all parts of the world by both left wing and right wing regimes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist), the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) and the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That this House condemn human rights abuses and urge all states to conform to the norms set out in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to ratify the International Covenant on Human Rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Carried.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I see the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), but I must advise him that the motion is now carried and, therefore, debate cannot take place. If the hon. member had risen before, I could have allowed him to debate the matter.

Mr. King: I had, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I apologize; I did not see the hon. member. Therefore, in order for the hon. member to be recognized, I must ask for the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. King: Madam Speaker, I would be a more imposing figure had my parents fed me better when I was a youth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. King: It is a signal honour which permits me to speak to this most important and timely motion.

Nothing in all of man's activities can even closely parallel in value those efforts put forth in response to human need wherever it occurs. No emotion can possibly equal the emotion involved in feeling at one with fellow men anywhere in the world who suffer individual or national abuse. No calling is of demonstratively more worth than the devotion to respect for human rights in our community, in our nation, and throughout the world.

No single occurrence should inflame our impatience, rebuke our indifference and galvanize us to action more than the oppression of man's spirit and the denial of man's freedoms. In this respect, we are our brother's keeper. Dr. Sakharov in response to Dr. Shcharansky's ordeal said:

Shcharansky represents us all.

This is never more true than when applied to all who suffer from national breaches to human rights.

There is no cause on earth more worthy of our attention as parliamentarians, more demanding of our vigilance, more precious in the sight of God and of man than that cause which pursues as its ultimate goal the enhancement of human and spiritual values and dignities. Wherever abuses occur in Canada, in Europe, in Africa, in Asia, in South America, it is man's spirit that is oppressed, the very substance of humanity which is threatened.

Favoured Canadians generally are the poorer for a lack of real appreciation for the value of human dignity. This lack of understanding results from being part of a most favoured society in a most blessed land, and this sheltering environment breeds a complacency which too easily absorbs us.

Canada has ratified the United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which gives legal expression to the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Canada has acceded as well to Article 41 of the Covenant which allows a state, signatory to both the Covenant and the Article, to bring to the United Nations Human Rights Committee a charge that another "state party" has violated its obligations under the Covenant. Most significantly, Canada has ratified the optional protocol to the Covenant which recognizes the right of individuals to bring such charges to the Human Rights Committee. To date, only 12 of the 61 states which have ratified the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights have acceded to Article 41.

Dr. Andrei Sakharov has said that "without human rights there is no détente . . . no peace". That is true of nations and it is true of the individual. God grant that even we in Canada will have no peace—no personal peace—so long as the human spirit is denied liberty anywhere in the world. Dr. Sakharov also said that "the price of exercising your rights may well be imprisonment". That, indeed, has been his experience. May we, to the extent possible, share in his suffering.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, in rising to speak in support of the motion may I say that as we mark the 33rd anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights today, I am pleased to report to this House on behalf of the government and, in particular, on behalf of my colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), and the minister responsible for the status of women, that Canada has taken yet a further step in its commitment to promote the full and practical enjoyment of human rights.

Canada has today, with the support of all provinces and territories, deposited at the United Nations its instrument of ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: In ratifying the Convention, all jurisdictions in Canada have indicated their commitment to take appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the political and public life of the country, and to ensure equal rights with men in the fields of education, employment and health care, and in the areas of marriage and the family.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I intended to move a somewhat similar motion. I am happy that hon. members of the House agree.

I want to use this occasion to congratulate the many organizations, particularly Amnesty International, for the work which they have done in acquainting the people of Canada and Members of Parliament with the violations of human rights that occur in so many parts of the world—in the east, the west, the north and the south—and for the urging they continue to give to us to do the kind of thing we are doing today.

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: The question is on the motion moved by Mr. King, seconded by Mr. Smith. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NEW AGREEMENT DEMANDED ON CLEANING UP HOOKER CHEMICAL COMPANY'S HYDE PARK DUMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent discovery that the United States Environmental Protection Agency employed the services of an allegedly unqualified person to negotiate the clean-up agreement of the Hooker Chemical Company's Hyde Park dump, and in view of the fact that this discovery completely eradicates any integrity the proposed clean-up agreement may have had, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House call on the Minister of the Environment to demand that a new agreement to clean up the Hyde Park dump be negotiated and that he publicly state his support of the Pollution Probe position that the only foolproof method of protecting our environment from Hyde Park wastes is to excavate the contents of the dump.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RETIREMENT INCOME

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my questions today are for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister will know that members on this side of the House are very much concerned about people who have recently retired or are about to retire, because the November 12 budget greatly hurt many of those people.

Does the minister think it is fair that those Canadians who have spent a lifetime planning for their retirement by putting their money into a small business such as a farm, a fishing boat or a truck, should have part of that income they were counting on for retirement suddenly taken away on November 12? Does the minister think it is fair to take away part of the income of those who get severance or retirement pay, leaving them with less to live on in their retirement years? Would the minister tell us whether or not she thinks that is fair, and whether she has figures in her department which would indicate how many of these people may now have to be supported at least in part by the tax system in the future?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think it would be more appropriate to address a question on the budget to the Minister of Finance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: —instead of trying to play one portfolio and responsibility against another. The member should know that the interpretation which he tries to give to the budget today is inaccurate and misleading to the public, as much as the one he tried Friday morning in the standing committee, when he affirmed that all bus tickets for senior citizens and other reduced transportation tickets which they were able to obtain throughout previous years, are to be taxed. I repeat that these affirmations are completely false.

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX TO MARRIED COUPLES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I invite people to read the minutes of that standing committee meeting. They are very interesting, particularly about what the minister does not know and which she should know.

I would ask the minister whether or not it is an accident in the budget that the principle is affirmed that adult Canadians are entitled to own a home as a part of their long-term retirement plan, that they can dispose of that asset without taxation to have something to live on in their retirement years, except for those Canadians who are married? They have half the right that those who are single, those who are divorced, those who live common law would have. Is that an accident of the budget which was not thought through, or is that part of Liberal policy that they would prefer to penalize those who are married and take half of that privilege away from them?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I can only repeat to the member that I know that he has been appointed social affairs critic. He has the various responsibilities completely mixed up. The right of a Canadian to own a home may touch social policies, but I am sorry, I am not familiar with that particular policy.

IMPACT ON PENSIONS AND GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENTS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the minister responsible for senior citizens and retired people has not really given the budget the kind of scrutiny that she perhaps should have before going to cabinet meetings.

In our system, those who work for the government or for a large company such as Imperial Oil, or the Bank of Canada, may belong to a pension plan. They can put quite a bit of their own money and their employers' money into it. But Canadians such as waitresses, cab drivers and others are stuck with trying to put their money into something like an RRSP. Those who are rich in society can put more in than can those who have no company pension plans. I would like to ask the minister if she thinks that is fair and what impact that might have over the long term for her department, respecting the pensions and guaranteed income supplements it must pay.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think the only point of information I can bring to the attention of the hon. member is to repeat what the intention of the budget is, namely, to bring about equity, to which I fully subscribe. In the past people with higher incomes have managed, albeit legally, not to pay their share for redistribution.

With regard to the fears the hon. member is trying to spread regarding pensions, the only thing I can add for his information is that all the elements of the pension system in Canada, including the ones mentioned by the hon. member, are under review by the Department of Finance and my department.

POSSIBLE IMPACT ON PAY INCREASE DEMANDS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He will know that there are some 46,000 employees of airlines who receive a substantial travel benefit which is about to be taxed as a result of the budget. Similarly, there are 100,000 railway workers who have free travel, and that is about to be taxed. This free travel is the result of collective agreements. There are thousands of clerks and other employees throughout the country who work, for example, at Eaton's or Simpsons, and get a 20 per cent discount on sales. There is going to be an irresistable demand in future labour negotiations for inflationary and substantial pay hikes to compensate for the loss of these benefits because of taxation.

Will the minister acknowledge that there will be these irresistable demands for inflationary pay hikes? Second, will the minister prevail upon the Minister of Finance to abandon this particular proposal, which is both unrealistic and counterproductive?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, representations along similar lines have been made to me by the groups the hon. member has mentioned, and I suppose representations have been made to other members of the government. I have made good notes of these representations, and I will keep them in mind.

IMPLEMENTATION OF TAX CHANGES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I am fascinated by the prospect of how the minister is going to enforce the taxation of these particular benefits. How many hundreds of Canadians will the minister have to employ to determine the quite complicated question of what a taxable benefit is and the value of the benefit to be taxed? How much money will be derived by the federal treasury as a result of these provisions?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would encourage the hon. member, the other hon. members opposite and, indeed, the people of the country, not to jump to concusions about how this budget is going to be implemented.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: A new budget is coming up.

Mr. Rompkey: There is no evidence at all to indicate any of the options which have been discussed in the press and are now being discussed by the opposition. The theme of this budget is fairness and equity—

An hon. Member: Shaft Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Speaker, hon. members opposite do not want to hear. That same theme will be applied in the implementation of the budget as in the substance of the budget. There are people in this country who can afford to pay more than the share of the accounts of this country they are shouldering at this time. There are other people who cannot afford to pay that share. We will be putting the emphasis of taxation on the former group. We will administer the budget with fairness and equity, and that will be made clear in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEMAND FOR CHANGES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is clear that because of this budget, which has been described as being concerned with fairness and equity, most Canadians will have the bleakest Christmas in recent memory. In the past three months alone 140,000 people have been laid off from their jobs. The situation for farmers has become so bad that they are taking vigilante action to protect their farms.

• (1425)

My question to the Minister of Finance is this. Considering that he has promised on a number of occasions, as recently as last night in a speech in Toronto, to bring forward some changes in the budget to deal with the economic crisis, will he now announce some of those changes that even some Liberals who walked out of the dinner last night demanded?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member wants me to talk about farm policy, employment policy, the dinner in Toronto last night, the budget, the NDP, or whatever. I will say a word about the dinner. There were over 500 people. It was a tremendous dinner. I was delighted to be there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER LISTEN TO REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as usual the minister is more interested in people who can pay $125 or more for a dinner than in those who are unemployed in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask him a straightforward question he should be able to cope with, should he decide to for a change. Considering that businessmen, farmers, consumer groups, home owners, in short Canadians in every part of this land, representing every occupational group, are demanding that the minister make changes in his budget, when is he going to start listening to Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member, as I assured my audience in Toronto last night, that I have been listening very carefully to the representations that were made, that I am open to suggestions for improvements. That is the process I have been going through. I have a meeting this afternoon with the small business men to hear their views. When I have completed the process of consultation and consideration, I will have no hesitation in making public the adjustments that I regard as desirable. I remind the hon. member that the budget has been before the House of Commons. It has received the support of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I regard the House of Commons as the body from which I take direction basically as a minister. As long as I have the support of the House of Commons, I feel confident in the work I am doing.

BANKS AND BANKING

LEVEL OF TAXATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister cannot even be sure he has the support of the people who sit behind him, let alone the members on this side of the House, when it comes to his budget. He indicated some weeks ago, and I think I quote him exactly, that the banks should be made to bleed a little. I would like to ask him a two-part question. First, does he still believe, given the substantial increase in their profits which even the bankers' association attributes to the high interest rate policy of the government, that they should be made to bleed a little? If the answer to that is yes, will he agree that taxing them at a fair level could obtain $700 million in additional revenue that could be used to produce houses and jobs that are needed by Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about support. He should not transfer his insecurities about support to me. If he has certain insecurities, let him deal with them on that side. They do not exist over here.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. The number one priority recommendation of the Standing Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped for action during the International Year of Disabled Persons was, and I am quoting:

That physical and mental handicaps be made a proscribed ground for discrimination for all discriminatory practices listed in the Canadian Human Rights Act.

In view of the fact that this same recommendation was accepted by the government and included in the Speech from the Throne, and today we are observing International Human Rights Day, would the Secretary of State choose this auspicious occasion to practise what he preaches and assure the House that the required legislation will be on the Order Paper before Parliament adjourns for the Christmas recess, so that arrangements can be made for speedy passage?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. Upon reflection I think that he will agree that the particular question might be more properly addressed to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General who will have the responsibility to introduce this amendment. He is actively working on the matter. I would think that he would be able to report to the hon. member in the near future.

The hon. member is aware of the fact that my responsibilities are those of co-ordinating the responses of the departments to the recommendations in the "Obstacles" Report, and that individual ministers will indicate the actions that affect their particular departments.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, accepting the advice of the Secretary of State, and in the absence of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, I shall address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Chairman of the Standing Committee. In view of the strong support of the committee, could he take the necessary action within Liberal Party circles to ensure that we will have this legislation before us so that we can actually discharge our obligation? It is a specific obligation, Madam Speaker, that we have undertaken to the disabled community of Canada that this matter would be on the Order Paper and dealt with before the end of the International Year of Disabled Persons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, it is true that this matter was addressed in the Speech from the Throne as a priority of this government. The Minister of Justice has repeated several times since then, in public announcements and to groups of the handicapped, that it is a high priority on his list. We would hope that this will be coming in fairly soon.

PORTS

PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION TO GRANT LOCAL AUTONOMY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport concerning our national ports. The documents presented to this House with the budget speech on November 12 indicate that the government will introduce legislation relating to national ports. The proposed new policy will give local autonomy to ports. Is the legislation now prepared and, if so, will the minister make the draft legislation available to interested persons so that it can be reviewed and considered by them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Yes, indeed, the legislation is now being prepared; the drafting is taking place. I am not in command of that situation, but I would hope that we will get the bill early in the coming year, either January or February. It will be ready at that time, anyway.

On the subject of the contents of the policy itself, there have been a number of papers issued for consultation with industry. I have made a few little speeches on it myself. I will gladly send the full file to my hon. friend.

CNR FREIGHT RATE POLICY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): The minister apparently knows that there have been a number of statements on the ports policy, which underlines the importance of vetting any proposed legislation before it is introduced in the House. I hope the minister will undertake to do that. The minister also knows that, with respect to ports policy, Nova Scotia ports are dependent on Canadian National Railways as the land link to central Canada. Is the minister prepared to investigate Canadian National Railways freight rate policy, along with the ports policy, to ensure that east coast ports can compete with St. Lawrence River ports under both policies?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the reprimand that I received from my hon. friend for publishing documents, I have not yet found a way to engage in conversation or discussion of a policy without producing a paper. Therefore, that is what we have done, and this is what I would be in a position to give my hon. friend. Besides that, the reaction to it has been extremely important. A great number of interested associations have already reacted to the basic paper we distributed. If I may say so, things are going very well and we may be in a position to produce a ports policy which will be acceptable to all parts of Canada. It would be an accomplishment, in view of the fact it has been tried unsuccessfully, three times before.

On the subject of freight rates to the port of Halifax, I think CN has produced charts a number of times before the CTC, giving these rates and demonstrating that they are quite in line with rates given to other ports. As a matter of fact, they have been better in recent years. I will provide that information to my friend also.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF AMERICAN SPACE SHUTTLE ASTRONAUTS

Madam Speaker: Members will understand why I take the liberty of drawing the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of Colonel Joe Engle and Captain Richard H. Truly, who are astronauts from the United States space shuttle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PROVINCIAL VIEWS ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who is responsible for legislation on freedom of information. As the minister knows, yesterday the federal-provincial conference of attorneys general issued a communique in which the provinces urged the federal government to shelve all action on freedom of information legislation at this time. In view of the fact that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is now in the final stages of considering this important and long overdue legislation, and in view of the fact that we have already passed the clauses to which the provinces object, will the minister appear before the justice committee next week, as the steering committee has ordered him to do, so that the bill can be reported out by Christmas, or will he at this last minute cave in to the demands of the provinces and kill this important legislation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to see that the hon. member shows so much diligence in hurrying to get the bill through. If it had not been for him, it would have been passed last summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to meeting the attorneys general. I would like to tell him that the meeting took place. I met with them at the request of the Hon. Roy Romanow, the Attorney General of the Province of Saskatchewan who, on behalf of all the attorneys general of the provinces, wrote to me and asked me to appear and to meet with the attorneys general of the provinces. The common front of the attorneys general of the provinces—and, as I understand it, it includes all provinces, with the possible exception of the Attorney General of Manitoba who was not completely briefed on the question of the federal bill on access to information—therefore, asked me to consider some of the clauses in the access to information bill, so as to give them the opportunity of making representations to my officials. Madam Speaker, indeed I think that I would be irresponsible if, in face of the recommendations made to me by a group of people who are in charge of the administration of the criminal justice system in Canada, I were to simply cast aside their request to meet and explore whatever problems they see in the present access to information bill.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT ON INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN NEW SESSION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, we make no apologies for ensuring that the bill that was originally presented to the House was improved as a result of the work that we did in committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I must say, Madam Speaker, it is clear that the minister today is not prepared to commit himself to access to information legislation in Canada. I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. If this bill dies in committee as a result of the delay which is now being imposed, is the minister prepared to assure the house that he will bring before the House, in the new session, legislation on access to information that is at least as strong as the bill which we now have before the committee?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, quite obviously what I have indicated is that I wanted to give the attorneys general of the provinces the opportunity of making their points to me and to my officials. As a result of the examination of whatever points they want to bring to my attention I will, of course, report to my cabinet colleagues on whatever problems the attorneys general feel must be met in the bill. If there are amendments to be proposed at that stage, I will listen to the attorneys general to try to improve the bill in the same way as I have tried to listen to the hon. member and the New Democratic Party in attempting to get the bill through the House. The bill is not through the House at the moment, and the hon. member must bear most of the responsibility for that.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who told us that he is consulting with the business community. I should point out that it was the practice of his predecessors to consult on policy changes before introducing a budget, not after.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The minister talked about making transitional changes in his budget, but at the moment people are being laid off and businesses are closing their doors because of the uncertainties created by the budget. Could the minister tell the House in more detail what changes he proposes to make, and when he proposes to make them? Will it be before Christmas or after Christmas? When will he bring his budget bills before us?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously the budget bills cannot be dealt with before Christmas, nor probably early in the New Year, depending upon when we return.

Mr. Stevens: Why?

Mr. MacEachen: What I have in mind is to complete my examination of the representations I have received and, where justified, to propose adjustments or changes. Just as soon as I have completed that process I will make the announcement. I am not certain yet when that will be possible.

The hon. member referred to the necessity for consultation prior to the budget. I assure the hon. member that I had extensive representations from the business community prior to the budget but, as is very well known, it is not possible to discuss specific proposed tax measures because of budgetary secrecy prior to the presentation of the budget. It may be that the House of Commons ought to consider at some time revising the attitude toward budget secrecy to make it possible to have a more meaningful consultation prior to the budget presentation.

MINES AND MINING

EFFECT OF BUDGET

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. It will be a Christmas of heartache and despair for families in Thompson and Sudbury, Shebandowan, Uranium City, Thetford Mines, Burns Lake and many other Canadian mining towns which have been hard hit by the current economic recession. The minister has been made painfully aware by her mail of the further damaging blow which the November 12 budget strikes against companies, employees and communities engaged in mineral exploration and mining. What advice has she offered to the Minister of Finance to reverse the serious damage which his budget is doing to Canadian mining?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member listed a number of mines. The picture is not quite as bleak as he painted. The lay-offs to which he referred are not completely lay-offs in terms of workers being laid off permanently. For instance, in the mine that is being closed in Sudbury the workers are not being laid off. They are being transferred to other operations within Sudbury. The lay-off is not a lay-off; it is a summer work stoppage which takes place almost every year, as it did in the year past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: Of course I sympathize with those workers who are being displaced, but I should like to add that many of those, particularly in Uranium City, are being comforted by the fact that some 430 workers will be employed by the coal companies. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has told me that Fording Coal is interested in hiring some of them, that there is work for a number of these people in other areas of Canada.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RECOMMENDATION TO INCREASE BENEFITS PAYABLE UNDER CANADA PENSION PLAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that we are quickly approaching the end of the International Year of Disabled Persons, could the minister inform the House whether she is prepared to proceed with two very important recommendations found in the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped, namely, an increase in disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, as well as an eventual implementation of a national comprehensive disability scheme?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes to both questions. For disabled persons who are so severely handicapped that they receive benefits from the Canada Pension Plan, perhaps from memory I would say that there are 90,000 of them in Canada, I proposed to the provinces, I think last week, to almost double their monthly benefits. This would not draw on public expenditures, but from money already provided for in the Canada Pension Plan. Hon. members will note that I need their help on that. The okay of two thirds of the provinces with two thirds of the population is needed although this is federal legislation, but I am sure we can count on the support of everyone.

Oral Questions

ELIGIBILITY OF FARMERS UNDER SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am certain by now that the minister should be convinced that his November 12 budget severely hurt farmers more than it helped them. I know that the Minister of Finance met a few days ago with the Canadian Bankers' Association or members of the banking community to clarify the terms of reference to be applied by the banks as they relate to the Small Business Development Bond. In an effort to dispel the confusion which now exists, will the minister make public as soon as possible the criteria which will be applied and used by the banks for determining the eligibility of farmers who are in financial distress and, if so, when?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased with the interest of the hon. member in the operation of the Small Business Development Bond. The decision to extend the bond to unincorporated farmers was made as a result of representations from the farm community elsewhere. I will inquire whether at this stage it would be desirable to make further public information available. I should say with respect to the bonds in general that the existing rules will apply to such bonds issued after November 12 and before the end of the year where such arrangements for the issue where undertaken prior to the budget.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I appreciate the minister's response to my question. I look forward to publication of the criteria within a matter of days. In view of the continuing confusion surrounding other budget provisions, namely, the income-averaging annuity, the capital gains reserve and the income-averaging provisions, would the minister agree to meet a small delegation of two or three representatives of three or four of the major farm organizations in Canada? Would he demonstrate to the House, and particularly to the farm community, that he cares enough to spend at least 60 minutes in the not too distant future to clear up some of the confusion and difficulties that he presented to the industry in his budget of November 12? Does he care enough to give them 60 minutes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as a result of requests from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture I have already agreed to meet with representatives of the federation. The date has not yet been set, but I am quite prepared and have agreed to that meeting. I look forward to the meeting because I believe it will be possible to demonstrate through a discussion with the representatives that the new forward-averaging system will provide benefits to the farming community—

Some hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. MacEachen: —which are on a par with the income-averaging annuity contracts that were in effect. I am quite prepared to enter into that discussion because I have that belief, and to hear the views of the representatives of the farmers.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

INVESTMENT GUIDELINES

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I think it is significant, on this auspicious occasion of the presence of our distinguished guests in the gallery who are testimonials to man's success and achievement in space high technology, that I direct my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology, whose department has just put out a booklet entitled "Limited Partnerships: Investment Opportunities for Financing R&D" in Canada. For a year, in speeches and news releases, the minister has been stating his commitment to high technology and to R&D in Canada, and we applaud this very much. But then came the budget, with not one dollar for R&D, and instead it made cutbacks in investment, interest charges, interest write-offs, and even in post-secondary funding for the training of future scientists.

I want to ask the minister if this booklet, which is intended to show how we can invest more in research, will be a loophole. Can we trust the Minister of Finance to support his colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, or will we be trapping Canadians into investing, and then cut off their investment in the future, to the detriment of Canada's research?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am really surprised by the hon. member's question. I had obviously expected that, when he rose to ask a question today, he wished to congratulate us on the announcement yesterday of our increase in the space funding for Canadian industry, amounting to something like $132 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: That was in the Crosbie budget.

Mr. Roberts: This is one more concrete example of the support that this government is giving to the development of science and technology research in our country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was John Crosbie's idea.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. gentleman referred to the provisions of the budget. He should recognize that in terms of support for research and development in this country, over the past 21 months this government has expanded support for research and development by something like $500 million, which is an increase of approximately 50 per cent over a base budget for hard research and development of $1 billion. In terms of the impact of tax incentives, he should be aware that the consequences of the tax changes which were introduced before 1979 have led to a very rapid expansion of tax forgone, and therefore, an indication of research and development being done by the private industry which we now estimate is close to $100 million. On the basis of present tax provisions we expect it will amount to something like $500 million by 1985.

Mr. Siddon: Nonsense.

Mr. Roberts: Therefore, within our present tax arrangements there is considerable encouragement for the private sector to increase research and development funding. I would have hoped that he would also have been aware—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: I can assure the hon. member that I have the full support of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Beattie: Burnt out on re-entry.

GUIDANCE FOR FARMERS AND BUSINESSMEN

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is somewhat supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Elgin. The minister will know that today farming and small business take long-term planning, and the budget has been most confusing because it has disrupted the plans of farmers and businessmen at every turn. Does the minister intend to give some guidance before the end of the year so that farmers and businessmen can move in a positive direction concerning their businesses and farms? Will he give this some consideration?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, it would be my wish to provide that encouragement before the end of the year in that positive direction which the hon. member seeks.

Mr. Siddon: Why didn't your budget do it?

INDUSTRY

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INCORPORATED—AUDITOR GENERAL'S WARNING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister replying on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the $94 million which this department squandered through the Enterprise Development Program's guaranteed loans to Consolidated Computer Corporation and its two leasing companies. In 1977-78 the Auditor General's report warned IT&C that there were "a number of serious problems and weaknesses in the program system of financial management and control". His report also predicted serious cases of mismanagement could result because of the lack of public disclosure inherent in the loans system.

I would like the minister, or the person replying on his behalf to tell the House what has been done in the three years which have passed since those recommendations were made to tighten these controls. If they were tightened up, then how did all these loans amounting to $94 million, or $30 million in the last 16 months, sneak through?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question has been duly noted and will be reported to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[English]

INVESTIGATION OF LOANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board, a minister who has attempted in the last few days to convince us that his department was the proper body to investigate this soaring record of almost $100 million in losses. The same Auditor General's report makes it quite clear that it was the Treasury Board's responsibility, along with IT&C and the Comptroller General's office,to get things in place so that there would be improved financial operations in the loans program and proper disclosure.

In light of this, can the minister tell the House if he still insists that his department is capable of making an impartial in-house investigation? Where was the Comptroller General's office, that public watchdog, when these loans went through to Consolidated? Where was the watchdog? Was it asleep in its kennel or was it wagging its tail?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first of all the Comptroller General is the deputy minister who reports to me as President of the Treasury Board. If the hon. member is talking about the history of these transactions, the Office of the Comptroller General came into existence only in 1978. As I mentioned in an earlier answer to a similar-minded question last week, the past is clearly behind us, and that is why the Comptroller General has been involved in IMPAC studies across government to improve financial management and control systems. That is his role. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that we should not undertake such an investigation. We feel it is incumbent upon us to conduct such investigations in the interests of good management.

I have also replied in the past I would be very pleased if the Auditor General or the Public Accounts Committee, or anyone else for that matter, wished to conduct an independent investigation. I am sure we are all interested in getting to the facts because there may be valuable lessons to be learned from the experience of CCI.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

BUDGET FOR SPACE PROGRAM

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. He just recently referred to a budget amounting to some $100 million for additions to the space program. When I read The Globe and Mail I was interested in noting that what he has proposed is part of a program which was adopted by the Conservative government in 1979 for the same amount of money, but which was cancelled by the Liberal government in 1980.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fennell: I would like to have the minister confirm that this is nothing more than a reintroduction of a five-year program of the Conservative government. I would like to ask why the amount of money is the same even though inflation has eroded the value of the dollar in the last two years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, that is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Siddon: It's true.

Mr. Roberts: When the opposition was in government it often proclaimed programs, but very rarely furnished the money to implement them. In this case, it did not even do that.

Mr. Siddon: It was in the estimates, and you know it.

FORESTRY

MINISTER'S ACTIONS TO ASSIST INDUSTRY AND ESTABLISH MARITIME RESEARCH COMPLEX

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the same minister who spent a lot of time telling us all the things he does in research and development. I would like him to cast his mind to his other portfolio, forestry. I would ask him what he has done lately for the forest community, particularly in exercising his clear responsibility to assist the industry, which is in very deep trouble, with research and development.

More particularly, what has he done lately to advance the idea of a regional forest complex for the maritime provinces, an idea which has been on the drawing boards for eight years and has been before the cabinet for eight months? Particularly, what has he done to combine this forest complex with a forest ranger school to overcome some of the serious manpower shortages in this important sector of our economy?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, there are a whole series of questions contained within the hon. member's one question. He knows very well that at the end of September we brought forward a discussion paper outlining the problems in the forestry industry in Canada and possible approaches to those problems. We are pursuing the initiatives we took at that time in discussions with the provinces in relation to reforestation. We are bringing forward for government consideration a variety of proposals in relation to marketing, in relation to assistance to the forestry schools of the country, and in relation to the training of highly qualified manpower in the forestry industry.

We do have under active consideration the question raised concerning the Maritime forestry complex, and I expect to be able to make an announcement some time within the next few days.

PETITION

MR. FENNELL—REQUEST THAT PETRO-CANADA PERMIT OPERATION OF A FULL SERVICE STATION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and fifty-fourth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) on Wednesday, December 9, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTIRE OF MEMBERS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It concerns the question of decorum in the House. For some time I have been concerned with what I consider to be the declining state of decorum in the House. It came to my attention during question period that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who has since left the chamber, was here without the usual jacket and tie. This may be a small and picayune point that has been debated before, but under Standing Order 12(1), Madam

Speaker, you have the responsibility to preserve order and to decide questions of order.

Because I could not raise this matter in the normal way during question period, I would ask, is this type of behaviour permitted?

Madam Speaker: I can tell the hon. member that turtleneck sweaters are not allowed in the House and are not considered to be the proper attire.

An hon. Member: What about the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola)? She is wearing a turtleneck sweater!

An hon. Member: This is discrimination!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Equal rights!

Madam Speaker: The hon. Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) tells me she will wear a tie tomorrow!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: A shirt, tie and jacket are to be worn in the House and I must remind hon. members that is the proper attire for the House of Commons. Until further notice, that is what I will expect from hon. members.

MOTION RESPECTING CHRISTMAS RECESS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the opposition House leader, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the government House leader about the business of the House for the rest of the week and into next week.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, before dealing with the specifics, the House leaders had consultations earlier this week. We came to the agreement on the following motion:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, December 18, 1981, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, January 25, 1982, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Madam Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Madam Speaker may give notice that she is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and that, in the event of Madam Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in her stead for all purposes of this order.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that if you ask for unanimous consent, it will be granted.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, on behalf of our party, I can agree to that motion.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I was at that meeting and we in this party can give unanimous consent to that motion.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the House leaders agreed on a package with respect to the business of the House for tomorrow and next week. The first item of business tomorrow will be Bill S-23, the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation. That bill should be carried through all stages, and will be followed by Bill C-60, to amend the National Energy Board Act. That bill should be approved after report stage and receive third reading. Following that we will deal with Bill C-46, respecting the importation of meat. That bill should be accepted at the report stage and receive third reading.

If we have time, Bill C-45 will be considered, but there is no confirmed commitment on this one.

[Translation]

As far as next week is concerned, the House leaders have agreed firstly that before the House adjourns for the holidays on December 18, on Monday, before the end of the day, we shall complete second reading of Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, secondly that on Tuesday and Wednesday all stages of Bill C-84, the Small Businesses Loans Act will be completed. Thirdly, on Thursday provided the Minister of Justice is back and is present in the House, second reading of Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Criminal Code will be completed. Finally, the business of the House for Friday has not yet been determined. This will be done some time next week, after consultation with the House leaders on the opposite side. That, Madam Speaker, is substantially the order of business as agreed for tomorrow and next week, until the House adjourns for the holidays from December 18 until January 25, 1982.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I believe we are basically in agreement with the government House leader. The only reservation I would have to put on what he said as to the business up until Thursday is to suggest that it may take more than one day's debate for all parties to consider Bill C-78. Since we still have some time before Monday, I will clear up that point with the opposition House leader.

However, I have three things to suggest to the government House leader. First, during question period suggestions were made by our side that we would like to see legislation to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act for the disabled placed in the House before the end of the year, especially as this is the International Year of Disabled Persons.

Second, I would like to reflect the unease in our caucus with respect to suggested changes to the Income Tax Act, which suggestions have appeared in the press and elsewhere. We feel that it is in the interests of the country to remove the uncertainty as to whether or not changes will be made, and that bill should be tabled.

Third, I would inquire of the government House leader as to the possibility of dealing with Bill C-85 before the House adjourns. I might say that I have already mentioned this matter to the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, first, with respect to Bill C-78, the understanding I had with the hon. member for Yukon was very clear—that second reading would be completed on Monday night. However, I am willing to leave that matter open provided that I am also free to designate Friday of next week as an allotted day if this agreement is not respected. However, I gather that it will be.

Second, as far as legislation for the disabled is concerned, I will consult with the Minister of Justice. I hope that when he is back in Ottawa I will be in a better position to advise about the possibility of tabling the bill before the Christmas adjournment. I am not in a position today to answer that question.

Third, concerning income tax changes, I will have to consult with the Minister of Justice about that matter.

Finally, with respect to Bill C-85, I have suggested that we have second reading of that bill next week. I am told that many members wish to participate in the debate on that bill, which is understandable. Therefore, it will not be possible to send that bill to a committee before December 18. If, however, opposition members are willing to send Bill C-85 to a committee, we on this side will be prepared to agree to one speaker per party.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, rather than agree to next Friday as an allotted day, I say to the government House leader that in no way do I want to break a commitment which may have been made by the hon. member for the Yukon. We may have missed things. However, I will take that up with him as soon as possible. Perhaps I will be able to do that tonight before the vote.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as I understood the agreement, the bills to be dealt with are as outlined by the government House leader. However, I would like to suggest on behalf of my colleague the hon. member for Beaches and on behalf of the New Democratic Party that, if it were possible to let us have a look at the changes that might well be proposed to the Canadian Human Rights Act, not only would that be desirable, but we believe it will be quite possible to pass that legislation by next Friday. As well this will enable us to live up to what I think is a moral commitment that was made during the International Year of Disabled Persons. I would even go so far as saying that we might be prepared to work on reducing the length of time we would spend on other pieces of legislation in order to accommodate the government, if it were the desire of the government to bring forward that legislation early in the week.

With regard to all other matters, we are prepared, as the House leader knows, to deal not only with this legislation that is before us, but other pieces of legislation. If we can get agreement later we would be quite happy to deal with them.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his collaboration. On his first point, I witnessed the excellent answer given today by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice on our willingness to do something as soon as possible. This is not a matter of substance, it is a matter of timing, and on the timing aspect I would like to consult with the Minister of Justice when he is back from London this weekend.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, with regard to Bill C-60, I just want to put one small caveat before the House; I do not think there will be any problem. I was not able to determine from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources exactly what he meant. We passed this bill once; it went to the Senate, was amended and brought back. I do not know what the amendment is. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources could not tell me what it is. I would not want to discover tomorrow that I have agreed to some wholesale change. I do not think there is a problem, but with that small caveat I agree to what was recommended.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, it is very simple. It is the amendment recommended by the Senate, which is supposed to appear on the Order Paper. There is nothing special in this regard. In addition, there have been discussions, I am told, to the effect that later on, if not possible before Christmas then after coming back, we will introduce a separate bill to increase the number of members of the National Energy Board to allow that board to deal with the measures in C-60. I think there was agreement to that too. We will not deal with this bill tomorrow.

MR. SHIELDS—HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 79 citizens of the riding of Athabasca, is to indicate to the government that the criteria used to determine eligibility for the herd maintenance program this past year was extremely unfair and discriminatory towards producers of northeastern Alberta.

The nature of the petition is to demand that the government take action to correct the injustices of the program and to renew it so that those producers who found themselves in dire straits due to unusually harsh years, coupled with high interest rates and poor returns, will qualify for much needed assistance in order to continue their operations.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to the committee at the earliest possible moment.

COST OF PRINTING A QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Question No. 3,467—Mr. Cossitt:

What is the estimated cost to the taxpayer of the printing of a question which remains on successive Order Papers for a period of 5½ years without being answered and will the government consider a policy of reducing such costs of printing by announcing a maximum lenght of time for the answering of the straightforward Order Paper questions?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): It is impossible to determine the cost of printing one very small portion of the Order Paper.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Question No. 3,468—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,255, did the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council prepare the answer for the government without any assistance from others and, if not, what are the names and job designations of all those who assisted him?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Ministers and parliamentary secretaries who answer written questions take full responsibility for such answers.

Question No. 3,469—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,255, which states in part in regard to Order Paper questions, "some hon. members quite clearly overload the system . . .", what are the names of all members who have overloaded the system and is it government policy to consider that the asking of frequent questions by Members of Parliament seeking legitimate information is to be placed in the category of overloading the system?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The hon. member needs only to read successive Order Papers in order to form his own conclusions as to the answer to this question.

Question No. 3,470—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,255, which states in part, that it is "difficult to persuade officials" to deal with answering Order Paper questions "in an expeditious manner", what are the names of all government officials along with job designations that are difficult to persuade and what are the reasons in each case?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The answer referred to the human reaction of many officials who, by instinct and training, are reluctant to seek publicity. They therefore are quite often reluctant, also, to become involved in matters directly pertaining to the parliamentary process, especially when some hon. members are known to inquire, after answers are given, which officials assisted in the preparation of those answers.

ABOLITION OF CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORP.

Question No. 3,478—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,798 which stated in part that the Department of Supply and Services will carry out the functions of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation but that the Corporation will not be abolished and its board of directors will continue (a) what are all the reasons for maintaining a board of directors for a corporation which will be operated by a department (b) what are the names of all the directors of the corporation who will remain in office, what is the total amount of the directors' salaries involved and what is the breakdown of the amount paid to each director?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) Section 15 of the Surplus Crown Assets Act states, inter alia, that "the affairs of the corporation shall not be wound up unless Parliament so provides". In addition, the complexity of the financial arrangements for the corporation's activities require that changes would have to be made to the Supply Revolving Fund. These will be examined in the near future.

(b) (i) G. R. D'Avignon, G. A. Berger, plus at least four additional public servants to be named by the governor-in-council.

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,252 on the subject of Order Paper questions which stated in part that "the government is not amused . . .", what are all the details of the methods whereby the government reaches a decision as to whether it (a) is (b) is not amused?

2. Did the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council prepare the answer to this question for the government which he signed or was it prepared for his signature by someone else and, if so, what is the name and job designation of any person taking part in its preparation?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) and (b) The answer to this question could be found in any suitable elementary psychology text, some of which are available through the Library of Parliament.

2. See reply to question No. 3,468 answered this day.

Question No. 3,480—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,252 on the subject of Order Paper questions which stated in part "the government does not regret the discomfort of hon. members who so abuse the system when other more diligent hon. members point out this behaviour", what are the names of all hon. members (a) in relation to whom the government "does not regret the discomfort" (b) whom the government considers "more diligent" and, in each case, what is the breakdown of the total number between Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic Party Members of Parliament?

2. What are all the details of the measurement used by the government to arrive at the Members in the category of (a) "discomfort" (b) "diligent"?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. See reply to question No. 3,469 answered this day.

2. See reply to question No. 3,479, 1 (a) and (b) answered this day.

(d) First repairs to the ships that are discovered to have header problems will be completed in mid-April 1982. Meanwhile, stress calculations and a firm awareness of the crack propagation pattern confirm that there would be no compromise to crew safety should the ships have to sail.

I would remind you, Madam Speaker, that it was the questioner who asked that this question be starred; therefore, we replied to it verbally.

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence if there is a date on the answer to the starred question which has just been read into the record, because the information as I heard it does not correspond to some of the current information which is available.

● (1520)

My second point of order is to draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council to my question No. 3,267 dealing with subventions to a private sector organization which was filed on October 28, and to draw to his attention question No. 3,341 which was placed on the Order Paper on November 6 and dealt with the simple matter of the number of hovercraft which are in service on the west coast, and what is contemplated by way of increases in that number. I think the tally should be just as easy as it was for the answer to the other question, and I do hope that the answers will not be unduly delayed.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, with regard to the hon. member's question about the date of the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence, the information is current but the answer is actually dated November 30, 1981—that was the date of the question. So that being the date of the answer, this information is correct as of today.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do not think it is.

Mr. Smith: That is my best advice. With regard to the other representations made by the hon. member, I take due note of his comments.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—HIGH INTEREST RATES

Madam Speaker: Since today is the final allotted day the House will go through the usual procedures this evening to consider and dispose of the supply bill. In view of this fact, and according to practices, do hon. members agree that we should distribute that bill now so it may be available to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so agreed.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved:

That this House censures the government of its perpetual, excessive, and ineffective reliance on a high interest rate policy, which has not only created the worst economic recession in Canada since the 1930s, but which also continues, to threaten the survival of thousands of small enterprises, adds more Canadians daily to the ranks of the million already out of work, and confronts home owners and renters alike with the worst housing crisis since the Second World War.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as we approach the time of the Christmas adjournment the country finds itself locked into a mood of economic uncertainty, critically high unemployment, record high inflation and the worst housing crisis since the Second World War. We have a government that does not seem to appreciate this or in fact want to do anything about it, or respond in any way whatsoever.

The Toronto Sun in its edition dated September 16, 1981, had this headline: "Grits dine as riot cops stand guard". That, of course, had to do with the shameful and disgraceful performance of the minister responsible for housing and his colleagues who called out the RCMP riot squad to shield them from a delegation of irate home owners who were in Ottawa at the time protesting the high interest rates policy. Another headline in the Toronto Star on the same day read: "Home Owners Roll into Ottawa Protesting High Interest Rates".

I refer again to The Citizen published in Ottawa on Wednesday, September 16, 1981—this is very relevant to what I want to say, sir— which carried the headline: "Hang in there, home owners told". It went on:

Grit your teeth and hang on until the federal budget if you are in danger of being foreclosed, Public Works Minister Paul Cosgrove advised home owners Tuesday, holding out promise that help is on the way.

Finally, going back to that September 16 date, I quote from the Toronto Star, which is not unknown to be favourable to the government and not known to misquote any members of the government. The article reads:

Canadians are fed up with the federal government's handling of the economy, particularly high interest rates, Liberal MPs and Senators from across Canada have told Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and his government.

Those headlines are very relevant with respect to the debate today. It is because of what I and many people construe to be the advance billing by the minister responsible for housing wherein he raised expectations, deliberately and cruelly, by having us believe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) would be addressing problems facing home owners and renters in the budget as a result of the high interest rate policy, that I intend to focus my remarks particularly on the housing problem.

Let us examine the facts. The housing crisis can best be summarized under two headings, affordability and availability. My colleague the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) will be dealing with another aspect of the housing crisis with respect to those unfortunate Canadians who have urea formaldehyde foam insulation in their homes. They are the untouchables. They do not even qualify for a conventional mortgage and cannot sell their homes.

I would like to deal with the question of affordability and availability, which has created the worst housing crisis since the Second World War. It has created an acute shortage of rental accommodation in this country, unknown since the Second World War.

If we examine the record, we find that the fact is that in Canada we are just not producing enough new housing units each year to meet the housing needs of Canadians. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada predict that we need, on average, 220,000 new housing units each year to meet this demand. If we examine the record, starting in 1977 housing requirements as compared to housing starts showed a critical decline. At no time since 1977 have we been able to keep up with housing requirements or the demand for housing. For example, in 1977 we needed 256,000 starts and in fact only 245,000 were produced. The number goes down correspondingly. In 1978 the requirement was 259,000 and there were 227,000 actual starts. That continues to the critical period we are in today, 1981, where we required 265,000 starts and only produced 170,000.

If we take the predictions of the minister responsible for housing, the advice he has given his cabinet colleagues, then we are looking at housing starts in 1982 of 135,000 whereas the actual requirement for 1982 is 261,000 units. There is a serious crisis and a critical situation in the country.

Because of the acute shortfall in housing starts, the price of the average Canadian home, which is now $76,000 if you consider an average Canadian home to be a three-bedroomed bungalow, will continue to rise. We are told that we can look forward to increases in the range of 20 per cent next year, once again because of the shortfall and because of inflation. Now, if we are to regard the crisis in that context, what is the response of the government? What advice did the minister responsible for housing have for the people of Canada? This is what he said to his cabinet colleagues, and I quote from the famous leaked document entitled "Impact of Prolonged High Interest Rates on the Housing Sector."

They—

That is, the home owners.

—cannot use interest deferral techniques because they have insufficient equity for these households. The situation is one of hardship. Their choices are to pay a very large proportion of their income to retain their home, try to sell their home or just walk away and face foreclosure.

Again, from page 25 of the report:

In 1982, total starts could be as low as 135,000 with total rental starts dropping from in excess of 50,000 in 1981 to closer to half this total in 1982—

This is important to note:

—virtually all of which will be publicly assisted.

In other words, the government is saying that there will be no new housing starts in Canada next year in rental accommodation except that which is publicly assisted. Of course, this will be considerably below the estimates of long-run sustainable demand over the decade ahead.

It will also mean—and this is certainly something to consider when we realize that one million Canadians are unemployed—the loss of up to 30,000 man-years of employment in 1982.

Sir, we are seeing that prophecy come true. One need only refer to the release from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I am sorry that the minister responsible for housing is not in his seat. He obviously had a chance to read this resolution. It was placed on the Order Paper at 6 p.m. last evening, and there is no excuse for his not being in the House today. However, we have to proceed nevertheless. One need only refer to the release from the minister dated December 4 of this year showing another sharp decline in actual housing starts. Actual housing starts in urban areas of the country are down 27 per cent from those reported at the same time last year, for a total of 121,000 starts on a seasonally adjusted basis for the year.

Now let us take a look at what this means for Canadians today who have to renew their mortgages. The budget we brought in which was defeated with the support of the New Democratic Party provided for mortgage interest and property tax credits, and if that program were in effect today, home owners would enjoy tax credits of $1,125 for 1981 and $1,500 in 1982. That program would have meant $2 billion in relief for home owners.

What is the response from the government? It has come up with a promise of less than $50 million for 1982. Let us examine what the government proposes to provide in the form of relief to home owners who are faced with mortgage renewals and who have to get by under the added burden of continuing increased fuel costs. There is no energy tax credit to help them, as we had in our budget almost two years ago to this day. In the next year close to 900,000 Canadians will have to renew their mortgages. Again, if we are to believe the advice of the minister responsible for housing in his report to the cabinet, 100,000 of these householders face the risk of losing their homes. Of these 900,000 Canadians facing mortgage renewal during the coming year the government will assist only 12,500. Only 12,500 will be helped directly. That is barely 2 per cent of those who are faced with mortgage renewal next year. Of course, if you are unfortunate enough, as many people are, to be among those who had to renew their mortgages prior to September 1, 1981 when interest rates were in the 20 per cent to 22 per cent range, then you are out of luck. You do not have a chance. There is nothing for you.

Only one third of the 40,000 Canadians facing severe hardship will receive any aid under this plan, other than that which will throw them deeper into debt, if we talk about the mortgage deferral program, because that is precisely what is does. It puts a home owner deeper into debt. Again let us refer to the minister's famous leaked document:

Options such as interest deferral and lengthened amortization periods appear unlikely to be able to resolve the difficulties faced by all households renewing their mortgages.

The mortgage deferral scheme which the minister responsible for housing puts forward as a panacea and as the fulfilment of the promises made when he was raising expectations can only be likened to getting a loan from the mafia. The more you pay back, the deeper you get into debt. That has been the response of the government.

Finally, we have the government's discharging what it considers to be its obligation to help those "in dire straits". I put "dire straits" in quotation marks because if you are among the 900,000 facing substantial increases in mortgage payments, do not forget that you are also facing substantial increases in your heating bills. You are also facing increases in your property tax, hydro costs and just about everything. Those who qualify under the government's definition of "dire straits" will receive up to $3,000 in the form of one-time grants. That will barely be enough in most cases to keep the sheriff from the door.

Let us look at another aspect of the problem which is related and which is even worse. I am talking about the rental situation in the country. The government estimates that we need to produce 90,000 rental units a year to meet our requirements, and yet we are told by the minister, presumably on the advice of his officials in Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that only government assisted rental housing will be built next year, given continuing high interest rates and all the other disincentives contained in the budget of the Minister of Finance. Just to compound the problem, as a result of the cancellation of the multiple unit residential building program there will be 20,000 fewer units starting next year, and the number could be as high as 25,000 less. We know it will be 20,000 less.

What has been the response of the government to the cancellation of the MURB program? The government brings in a program under which it will assist, with interest free loans of up to $7,500, 15,000 units which will be selectively spotted across the country. Fifteen thousand is all we can expect to see being built in Canada next year. That will barely satisfy the demand in the city of Calgary. What did the minister have to say? Again let us look at that famous leaked document. Page 19 of the document says:

The present level of interest rates renders rental investment uneconomic across the country. The average metropolitan area rent of $400 quoted in this document compares with average investor carrying cost of $750 on the mortgage and property tax for a newly constructed unit with a 30 per cent downpayment.

Again I go on to quote from the document:

Rental investment will thus dry up in most markets. Even when vacancy rates have dropped to zero, there will be no new building until there is a better correspondence between investor costs and market rents for new units. This correspondence will only be achieved after a period during which waiting lists prevail and tenants have little choice of accommodation. Vacancy rates in most markets will approach zero by 1983.

We are almost there. We are almost at zero vacancy rates in most of the major metropolitan areas of the country. The city of Oshawa already has a zero vacancy rate. The city of Toronto has a 0.4 per cent vacancy rate; it is rapidly approaching zero. We can go across the country to the city of Winnipeg, the city of Calgary, the city of Vancouver or the city of Halifax. This is a very, very serious problem, and the situation will get worse.

What is the consequence of this? Again, sir, I have no better authority than the minister responsible for housing, who said:

A black market could develop in rental accommodation with the phenomenon of key money becoming prevalent.

For those who do not understand the term "key money", let me explain. It is a term which came about during the Second World War. It grew from the critical shortage of rental accommodation in many of the major metropolitan areas across the country. You nod, Mr. Speaker, probably because you have first-hand experience. That was the practice whereby, if you were desperate for accommodation, you would bribe the doorman or the building superintendent. In exchange for that bribe he would show you the accommodation available in the building. In return for another bribe he would provide you with a key and a lease. Of course, the understanding was that you would have to provide a bribe every month you were a tenant in that building. That is key money, and that is where we are heading. That is what the minister is predicting. That is the housing black market the minister referred to in his advice to the cabinet. That is a disgraceful situation for a country like Canada.

I want to continue to quote the minister because this is important. I am quoting from a document which was the minister's advice to his cabinet colleagues in trying to make a case for some relief in the budget, which we did not get:

The prospect is not only for tight rental markets but for waiting lists and doubling up with family and friends. We will thus witness a substantial regression in housing conditions following 35 years of gradual improvement.

What a shocking statement. What an indictment out of the mouth of the minister of housing of this government's inability to face up to its responsibility to Canadians. It is interesting that 10, maybe 11 years ago, the minister of housing of the day felt so strongly about the trends in housing in Canada and where we were heading in terms of housing and urban renewal that he put a task force on the road which he himself headed. I refer, of course, to the Hon. Paul Hellyer. When he brought in the report of the task force and its recommendations, he expected some action from the government. When the government failed to act, he did the only honourable thing he could do: he resigned his position from the cabinet.

I suppose you can liken the recommendations in the minister's task force report of ten years ago to the recommendations or warnings contained in the present minister's document to the cabinet of a few short months ago. I suggest to the minister of housing that he would do well to emulate the honourable course of his predecessor, the Hon. Paul Hellyer, and resign from the cabinet.

I advise hon. members who are interested in this crisis, as I am sure all hon. members are, to take a look at the report of the Hellyer task force on housing. They will find it very interesting reading. Many of its recommendations are very relevant to the present housing situation. There were ten principles listed in the recommendations of the task force. I will just quote two which happen to form the keystone of our philosophy as a party. I quote:

Housing and urban development are an urgent priority for the people of Canada and must be treated as such by their elected representatives at all levels.

What a pity the government refused or failed to respond to that recommendation ten years ago. I quote the second principle of the Hellyer task force, one to which my colleagues and I subscribe:

Every Canadian should be entitled to clean, warm shelter as a matter of basic human right.

That is the keystone of our commitments. It is interesting to note that the minister's executive assistance at that time had a large part to play in the drafting of that report. I would not be at all surprised if he had a hand in some of the recommendations.

Hon. members will be interested in knowing who the minister's executive assistant was at that time. He was none other than Mr. Lloyd Axworthy, who now sits opposite as the minister responsible for employment and immigration. He seems to have lost his concern based on his experience. I quote from Hansard of 1979:

The people of Canada are not being crucified, they are being hung, drawn and quartered by high interest rates.

I wish I had said that. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) said that in this House in 1979 when he was the housing critic. He said that at a time when interest rates were at 14 per cent. At 14 per cent he stood in this House and said that the people of Canada were being hung, drawn and quartered. Today we have seen interest rates reach as high as 22 per cent and we see the minister who made that statement now sitting in the cabinet.

What could the government have done? They could have swallowed their pride and reintroduced our mortgage and property tax credit plan. They could have increased the capital cost allowance from 5 to 10 per cent which would help to bring down building costs. They could have continued the MURB program. They could have brought in a shelter allowance to help ease the critical situation in the area of social housing. We do not hear enough about that. All you have to do is read the metropolitan papers of the country to find that the charitable institutions can no longer cope with the critical demand of those who are literally on the street at night.

The government could have brought in a plan whereby the registered home ownership savings plan could be folded into an RRSP and applied to home ownership. They could have done all those things. There were a number of things they could have done if they fully appreciated the seriousness of the situation in the country today and the depth of feeling of Canadians.

All we get from this government is advice from the minister of housing that Canadians have to lower their expectations. That is the advice of the minister of housing. We have to go back to the way things were two or three decades ago. Tell the young people of the country to make do with orange crates. You will find it awfully difficult to sit on an orange crate today because they are no longer made of wood; you would find yourself with your bottom on the floor in no time short. Yet that is the advice we get from the minister.

I say this to the minister. He was not entirely out to lunch on that advice because the situation 20 years ago was a lot better than it is today. If twenty years ago you could not afford to buy a house because you did not have the down payment and you were just starting out in married life, you at least had an apartment to go to. Now you have no apartment to go to. Housing is beyond your reach. It has become an impossible dream. You either have to forgo your plans or double up with your parents. What a shameful situation in this country today.

I believe before too long we are going to see further backstepping by the government, what we in Newfoundland used to call turkey-trotting where you take one step ahead and two steps backwards. We have already seen one step backwards when they had to reinstitute the soft cost provisions of the MURB program to accommodate those units which had been started during this current calendar year. I predict that the situation is going to get so bad that before the winter is over this budget, which is already in scrambles, will have to be scrapped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this motion with a great deal of pleasure. The effects of the high interest rate policy of this government are now well known. They are even well known to the members on the backbenches opposite in this House of Commons. They cannot ignore the reality that in the past 90 days 140,000 Canadians have lost their jobs through lay-offs. They cannot ignore the reality that 7,000 small businesses so far this year have gone into bankruptcy.

The backbenchers opposite cannot ignore the fact that bankruptcies of small businesses in Canada in November this year compared to November last year were up 49 per cent. That is significant because, as all business people and consumers know, if there is any possibility of staying in business you sure stay in business in November and through the December shopping period. When bankruptcies are up 49 per cent in the month of November this year over last year, it can be seen that we are in the middle of an economic and human crisis.

The backbenchers in the Liberal Party cannot ignore the fact that farmers are being hurt now as never before. I do not need to stress in this House that farmers are hardly well known for demonstrating and actively showing their opposition to government policy when they are unhappy. Of all the segments of our population, they are the small "c" conservative, law-abiding, peaceful group. What have we seen in recent days? In the province of Québec at St.-Isidore, hog producers block roads. Why? Because of high interest rates and the impact it is having on their operations as farmers. In the Bruce-Grey region of the province of Ontario, another group of farmers have virtually taken to vigilante action to protect their farms from banks and other mortgage holders who may want to take them over.

Finally, as other evidence of the effects of the high interest rate policy of this government, we had the demonstrations just a few weeks ago of 100,000 Canadians who appeared just outside the main door of this building. That figure surprised a lot of people, Mr. Speaker. It surprised me. To be perfectly frank, it surprised the organizers who represented a number of groups. It was almost double the number they anticipated would turn out. They were people who came not simply from trade unions, but small businessmen, home owners, farmers, people who were trying to send a message to the Government of Canada.

Given this reality of 140,000 lay-offs in three months, the record number of small business bankruptcies, the disruption in farm communities, the loss of homes, the fear of renters all over Canada that their rents will increase by two, three or four hundred dollars next year, how have the major institutions with power and responsibility in Canada responded to this?

First we have the Bank of Canada and our beloved Governor, Mr. Bouey. He has seen the reality; he has seen the effects of high interest rates. What has he said? He made a speech a few days ago in which he complained. What did he complain about? He complained about minimum wages. He said that minimum wages in Canada were a source of inflation. He urged the government—I do not exaggerate, these were his words—to hang tough with its policy. That is what the Governor of the Bank of Canada said.

An hon. Member: And then he gave himself a raise.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, through you, to the Governor of the Bank of Canada that it is very easy to be tough when your salary is being increased to $105,000 a year, as was Mr. Bouey's. I point out that in dollar value, just the increase alone is greater than the minimum income in Canada that Mr. Bouey said was inflationary. For the governor of the Bank of Canada to be making such a statement is shameful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I should also say that it is easy to be tough when you have the financial resources at this time of year to treat one's family to the things that one comes to expect in a land normally as prosperous as ours at Christmas, to such things as toys and to a special Christmas meal and so on. It is easy to be tough if one is in a financial position to do that. But I also want to say that it is not easy to be tough when one is living on a minimum wage or when one is among the thousands that are being laid off in Canada, a number of whom in 1981 will not even be in a position to buy the traditional family turkey for Christmas. I say in that context that if there is one turkey this country cannot afford, it is the turkey who is the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If there is one case for the Government of Canada getting tough, it is the case of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. They should get tough enough to fire him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Governor of the Bank of Canada's response has been one of ignorance in economics—and I say that bluntly—a failure to understand the economic theory that I thought went out of date at the end of the 1920s or certainly at the beginning of the 1930s and is certainly wrong now, if he is to be faulted for technical competence reasons as well as insensitivity, what can one say about the Government of Canada, which since the Coyne affair at least has had the full legal authority to direct and control monetary policy in this country?

Before I note their reaction, I want to say in passing that even President Reagan of the United States, the arch-conservative of the modern age, has begun to reduce interest rates at a more rapid level in the United States than has the Government of Canada. Even President Reagan has recognized the negative, inhumane effect in terms of escalation of unemployment in the United States that the high interest rate policy has had there.

What we have had in recent weeks is an increase in the spread in interest rates between Canada and the United States. As bizarre as it is in some sense, to contend, President Reagan has had a more humane response to the economic circumstances of the Americans than has the Government of Canada. It is hard to believe, but that happens to be the factual reality.

What did the government do? It had a chance to deal with this reality in the budget, but what does the budget do? The budget continues to tax people who are living on pensions and deliberately creates more unemployment. Its own forecast calculated increases in unemployment for the next three years before there is some turnaround. The only way we will get a turnaround is to turn this government out. But that is in the budget forecast.

It continues to tax pensioners and it deliberately creates unemployment, but at the same time it reduces taxes by as much as $5,000 a year for the very rich in Canada. It is a government that has responded to budget criticism from its friends, such as Dome Petroleum Limited. It made one phone call and within minutes there was an announced change for Dome Petroleum Limited for its benefit, but we have not yet seen a change that would benefit the poor. It is a budget which, above all at this time because of the government's commitment to interest rates, leaves the truly exorbitant and unconscionable profits of the banks virtually untouched.

I say that in this context of human suffering it is time that the Government of Canada realized that in a democratic society the basic moral obligation of a government is to the ordinary people of the land, not to the rich and powerful who can look after themselves.

Specifically, I want to say something about bank profits. I want to do so for a number of reasons. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in one of his casual and arrogant dismissals a couple of weeks ago when he was questioned about action to improve the wellbeing of the ordinary Canadians, asked: "Where will we get the money?" Then he sat down. That was one of his definitive arguments.

I want to say something about that because the hon. member who sits to his right, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), has said that the banks of Canada must bleed a little. They sure have not been bleeding; they have been leeching the people of Canada. We know their profits are $1.8 billion. Their profits are high. A number of corporations could be having high profits for a variety of reasons. Perhaps some of them are very efficient and are producing a good product that is selling well and producing jobs. There are all kinds of reasons. But the reason the banks are having high profits is made clear not by the New Democratic Party but was made clear earlier this week by a statement from a spokesman for the banks that appeared in a publication of the Canadian Bankers' Association when he said that the reason the bank profits are so high is because of the high interest rate policy of this government.

In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we say that it is long overdue that we tax the banks at a fair level. That is all we are saying. We are not saying: "Let us confiscate all their revenue, let us seize their property". We are saying that when there are thousands of Canadians living in poverty, when we have a national housing crisis and the highest level of unemployment since the depression, it is time that the banks of Canada did indeed bleed a little and paid their share.

● (1600)

I have a simple proposal to put forward. When the minister responds today, I should like to hear him deal with the argument. Let us tax the banks at a fair level. If they have $1.8 billion, let us levy a tax on them for some $700 million. I am sure the Minister of Finance could figure this out; it would leave approximately $1 billion for the banks. That is not bad, they would still have that profit. We need some $700 million. A few weeks ago the Prime Minister asked from where we could get money to do various things. Go to the banks, go to the banks! Instead of putting it in, take it out for the people of Canada.

Before saying what I would do with it, in this context I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches:

> That the motion be amended by including after the word "policy" the following:
> "and its failure to introduce an excess profits tax on bank profits so that new programs could be established to assist home owners, and to stimulate construction of the needed housing units".

What could be done with the results of this single action? There are many other things about which other speakers in my party will be talking today, but I want to zero in on this one item. First, there is a minimal shortage of some 50,000 units for the coming year, even if the projections of the government are lived up to as to what is needed across Canada. With the $700 million which could be obtained if the government acted on this amendment, we would be able to stimulate enough production of housing in Canada to produce the 50,000 units. In addition, at a time when real unemployment levels are in excess of one million, we would be able to produce 110,000 jobs which would result from the construction of the homes, on the one hand, and also from the goods purchased to go in the homes and the services related to the construction of the homes. It would mean 110,000 additional men and women working who want to work; 110,000 men and women would be paying taxes instead of collecting unemployment insurance and welfare. This makes economic and social sense to us. This is a practical and just proposal, a proposal which ought to be implemented right away.

Having made the point about the social sensitivity and economic incompetence of Liberals, I want to turn to the movers of the motion today. If the Liberals have been insensitive to Canadians in the budget, it seems to me that the motion before us demonstrates that at best Conservatives have forgotten their own record and at worst, to be blunt, are hypocritical. I remind the Conservatives present in the House that under the government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) its monetary policy was precisely the same as that of the Liberal government today.

Mr. Blenkarn: No way.

Mr. Broadbent: Under the government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, interest rates rose not once, twice or three times, but four times. If they had been in office longer than nine months, no doubt they would have risen as frequently and as rapidly as they have under the Liberals.

Mr. Blenkarn: They were less than the American rates, but now they are more.

Mr. Broadbent: I hear a Conservative member jeering in the background. Now that they are back in opposition, at least one Conservative member has been consistent. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the former finance critic, said as recently as June in a television interview that he was speaking for his party and that they would support Governor Bouey's high interest rate policy. At least the hon. member has been consistent, but I say to hon. members of the Conservative Party that they cannot have it both ways. They cannot in one motion single out the negative human effects of a ridiculous high interest rate policy and simultaneously advocate a high interest rate policy. The cannot have it both ways.

I conclude my remarks this afternoon by saying that I have repeated in my speech what is well known about the negative effects of the high interest rate policy and the indifferent government. Also in this context I have proposed in a straightforward manner a partial solution to an important problem. If we look at the banks honestly and fairly and make them perform fairly, we could deal with the present housing situation and produce some jobs. This is the precise, concrete action, instead of indifference, which we ought to be receiving from the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must admit that the amendment proposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is a clever one. Throughout his speech, the hon. member failed to address the root of the problem as was the case with the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative Party—and what he is proposing is a band-aid solution. Mr. Speaker, I believe that both the motion and the speeches made in its defence are deceiving, because the official opposition always tells only part of the story. The motion is also false because it does not reflect reality and confuses cause and effect. In addition to being false, it is fallacious, because it creates illusions, is misleading and obscures the real situation by confusing cause and effect. To put it in a medical context, everyone has been discussing symptoms without trying to establish what is really wrong with the patient and prescribing the appropriate medication.

• (1610)

Our main problem—and this was clearly pointed out in the budget—is inflation, which is still very much a fact in our society and in our economy. However, before making alarmist statements, it would perhaps be wise to remember certain facts. For instance, between November 1980 and November 1981, nearly 110,000 new jobs were created in Canada. During that same period, the same twelve months, the economy's real growth was 3.7 per cent. This is, in fact, a remarkable performance compared with the economic situation in the world today. However, although there has been a substantial increase in the number of jobs and the growth rate of our economy, the fact remains that inflation has remained at unacceptable levels, that the unemployment rate is still very high in Canada, and that interest rates are high as well. The government is not saying that the problem is easy to solve, and we are ready to admit that this is a difficult situation. However, we are saying that people should not delude themselves that they will be able to get through this difficult period without paying a price. The real enemy to be beaten is inflation. High interest rates are a consequence of inflation and if we really want to bring down interest rates, we shall have to fight inflation and reduce inflationary pressures.

Since the seventies, inflation has become an increasing threat to our economy. Inflation is becoming a way of life. That is the root of the problem, and that is what makes it difficult to solve. We must get rid of our inflationary expectations and at the same time get rid of the causes of inflation. During the last decade, the average inflation rate was 9 per cent. If we look at the decade before that, the average inflation rate was less than 3 per cent. During the seventies, profound changes have unsettled the world economic situation and also our own. For instance, the price of oil products has increased by about 650 per cent. The Canadian dollar has depreciated by about 20 per cent compared with the American dollar. In other words, inflation is a serious problem and it is the problem we must fight. It is no use focusing on external or secondary causes. We must get at the root of the problem, bearing in mind that inflation and inflationary expectations are the cause of high interest rates and are therefore responsible for the consequences of high interest rates.

How borrowers reacted to what they thought were high interest rates this spring and summer is a good example of how inflation affects our behaviour. At that time, when mortgage rates were at a record high—about 16 per cent—housing prices in various areas in Canada, became artificially inflated as a result of speculation. Buyers were willing to pay more, expecting prices to go even higher later on. Similarly, general credit demand did not drop until recently, that is, sometime after interest rates peaked last August. So, instead of blindly concentrating on the issue of high interest rates, it is necessary to understand that as long as inflation stays above 10 per cent, interest rates will not go down. However, interest rates have dropped six percentage points since the month of August. On the other hand, we must realize that there is very little hope there will be a rapid progression in that decline, if inflation does not drop substantially.

What are the alternative suggestions in the main motion and the amendment proposed by the NDP? Would we rather have lower interest rates in the present economic situation? The Bank of Canada could probably take steps to reduce interest rates, but what would the consequences be? There would be a substantial increase in the rate of growth of the money supply. The Canadian dollar would probably drop in value on the foreign exchange market, and that would inevitably lead to a jump in interest rates in subsequent months.

It must be understood that increasing the money supply acts as a two-edged sword. In the short term, it expands credit and reduces interest rates. However, since the money supply is inflated in proportion to economic and production capacity, this creates an inflationary trend, leading to rising interest rates.

It would therefore be inconsistent to abandon a policy that is aimed at bringing down inflation and getting at the root of the problem, just to have two or three months' respite before getting into a situation that is even worse.

Do the supporters of this motion recommend that the government maintain its present monetary policy, while at the same time adopting an expansionary financial policy, increasing its expenditures, setting up new programs and even reducing taxes? That would go against the views of a number of economists who favour reducing the deficit as a means of fighting inflation.

The government recognizes that bringing down the deficit is a major element of the anti-inflation strategy which will alleviate pressures on the capital markets and thus bring about a decrease in interest rates. The alternative policies proposed in the motion now before the House fly in the face of an anti-inflation strategy. Since the supporters of the motion are not likely to really want to give up the fight against inflation, they might prefer that the government impose direct wage and price controls? Such a solution has already been suggested; it was even used temporarily in 1975 and had relatively helpful results in an emergency situation. However, I believe that such controls are generally considered as often resulting in inequity and as failing to strike at the roots of inflation. If opposition members are now suggesting indirectly that we impose wage controls, they should say so, but they should say so openly without trying to undermine the anti-inflation strategy in the eyes of the population. The government could tunnel-vision its approach to inflation as implied by the opposition party by pursuing expansionist policies and developing new programs which would put back for an indefinite period the return to an inflation free economy. In fact, such a tunnel vision would solve nothing and would only delay the solutions which would have to be found sooner or later and would then have to be much more drastic as the situation would have worsened.

In choosing to fight inflation, the government does not want to delude the Canadian people or to give them false hopes. It does not want to mislead the people into believing that inflation is not a problem. As you know, inflation could be compared to obesity. When an individual starts to gain weight, he does not necessarily consider this a major problem, but as he puts on additional pounds, his body loses flexibility and the obese individual will eventually realize that he must radically change his way of life. Of course, there are many degrees in the efforts made to lose weight. An overly drastic diet could make the patient's condition worse. I believe that the same applies to the economy. That is why the government has chosen a gradualist approach, a monetary and fiscal restriction strategy tempered by equity, and indeed an economic policy which fights inflation while avoiding the extremes which would cause more serious damage to those who have problems or which would simply feed the flames of inflation. If we truly want to fight this economic ill which can be compared to obesity, we must reduce inflationary pressures as well as the total demand for goods and services. We believe that this first form of restriction must be applied by the government to its own activities. In 1982-83, the growth rate of government spending will go down to 11.7 per cent, which is lower than the inflation rate.

In other words, if we consider the inflation rate and the rate growth of government expenditures, in real terms there will not be an increase in public expenses. Now what about the reduction of the deficit? The deficit was $13.4 billion in 1981-82, it will be $10.5 billion in 1982-83. As a result of this lower deficit the cash requirements of the government will be lower, and there will be a very significant reduction in the borrowing needs of the government, from $9.8 billion in 1981-82 down to $6.6 billion in 1982-83. The direct consequence of such lower cash requirements next year will enable us to seek less capital on the markets. This partial withdrawal by the government will relieve pressure on interest rates and the declining trend we have been witnessing will continue.

In addition, it will be easier for the private sector to borrow on a less active financial market. This possibility of easier borrowings will pave the way for job-creating investments which will be a shot in the arm of our economy. I mentioned restrictive measures to fight against inflation. I also said that those restrictive measures are being taken while keeping in mind our concern for equity. It was in that spirit that the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech that he would maintain full tax indexation, the indexation of basic exemptions of the tax rolls as well as the worthwhile indexation of social programs. The 1982 indexation rate will be 12.2 per cent. In terms of purchasing power, the indexation of the tax rolls means that Canadian taxpayers will get refunds in excess of $2 billion.

Therefore, through indexing, the government will be protecting the purchasing power of Canadians in 1982-83, by over $3 billion. It could have ended the indexing of such programs and cut back the deficit by an equivalent amount. But it considers that such a move would have disastrous social effects since the indexing of income tax and social programs is specifically designed to help those who are hardest hit by inflation. The theme of equity upon which, among others, the budget is based will also take the form of selective measures to help those who are hardest hit by high interest rates. Indeed, the Minister of Finance has announced the implementation of a program to facilitate mortgage renewal. The government is prepared to guarantee the terms under which financial institutions will defer part of the interests incurred when mortgage payments exceed 30 per cent of gross income.

Furthermore, in the case of home owners whose mortgage debt could reach unduly high levels as a result of interest deferral, the government proposes to provide assistance in order to reduce or completely eliminate this deferred interest. The government will also be encouraging the construction of rental housing. It will provide interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit for 15,000 units allocated to tight markets across Canada. These units will be over and beyond the 25,000 units provided for by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation under its co-operative and nonprofit housing program. The Farm Credit Corporation will also be able to offer loans at 5 percentage points below its normal interest rate through a special $50 million allocation set aside for this purpose.

The budget also contains a series of provisions for small businesses, and these provisions were described yesterday by the Minister of State responsible for small businesses in a very important speech. The government has been selective in distributing aid to various groups in Canada. It would be totally inconsistent of the government to set up subsidy programs for all groups that are affected by present interest rates. Such a policy would be very costly, while feeding inflation as well. On the other hand, if the government were to protect all those affected by interest rates by giving them subsidies, it would not be getting at the cause of our high interest rates and would only provide temporary relief. In fact, giving subsidies to all and sundry would merely create the illusion that our present inflation rate is not serious and that we can go on living as if it did not exist, since the government is going to compensate for high inflation. The government has decided to give selective aid, because inflation and the resulting high interest rates often affect those who can least afford such problems. In fact, the government has introduced the programs I have just described in order to eliminate cases of inequity.

The present monetary and fiscal policies are aimed at deflating inflationary pressures and are involved in a joint effort to reduce inflation. Reducing inflationary pressures is a prerequisite for reducing the high interest rates we are experiencing today. The government cannot fight inflation alone. The strategy for fighting inflation requires all economic partners to make their contribution. High interest rates are a temporary problem if we get at the root of this problem, namely inflation.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the most positive attitude the members of this House could take would be to support the policy of restraint described in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, a policy that is aimed at bringing down inflation and hence interest rates.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this unfortunately timely but very important motion by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I wish to focus my remarks on that portion of the motion which deals with the worst housing crisis since the Second World War, and specifically on the presence of urea formaldehyde foam insulation in 100,000 Canadian homes and perhaps even more.

The presence of UFFI exacerbates an already critical housing situation. Since we are dealing with this housing crisis, particularly the crisis which affects those unfortunate enough to have had this foam put into their homes, I would like to make an aside here, that I realize it is difficult for ministers and, indeed, all Members of Parliament to be present in the House of Commons on all occasions when there is a crucial debate going on. I think that when the official opposition sets aside an entire day on a matter as crucial as the housing crisis Canada is going through, it would be courteous for the minister responsible for housing to be in his place to be able to hear some of the cases of hardship we want to bring to the attention of the government, and perhaps be able to get some information from the government on what it plans to do to redress these hardship cases.

This government has consigned at least 100,000 home owners, which could mean anywhere from 250,000 to 300,000, maybe half a million, Canadians, to the ranks of the untouchables, the lepers of the housing industry. For a great number of Canadians the presence of UFFI means not only a health crisis and a structural risk—because the unstable product does cause corrosion—but for many, many people it is an economic catastrophe.

My repeated questions in the House over the past few weeks and months on the UFFI matter may have sounded like a broken record, but this Liberal government has broken all records in terms of the home owners' misery index. There will be one million home owners with mortgages coming due this year. About 10 per cent of those home owners will be having genuine difficulty renewing their mortgages, getting them guaranteed, indeed, even trying to sell their homes.

Attempting to answer questions in the House on November 24, the minister for housing, who is responsible in the House for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, stated that nothing has changed with respect to CMHC housing mortgages. However, he failed to point out that CMHC had considered refusing to guarantee mortgages for homes with foam, according to one senior official, but found it necessary to continue insuring them. Then the minister of housing had the gall to suggest to the news media outside the House that it would be prudent of the legal profession and prospective home buyers to find out what kind of insulation is in those homes so as to know whether urea formaldehyde foam is in them.

I would like the minister to tell me who is buying those homes, since he must be aware there are homes in Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver, St. John's, London, Waterloo, Hamilton, St. Catharines, everywhere in this country, that are not marketable.

Let me read part of a letter, Mr. Speaker, from a home owner in North York, Ontario. This letter is from a large real estate firm and is addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Spitzer, 20 Hilltop Road, North York. The letter says:

> You have a lovely home with nicely proportioned rooms, and it is in excellent condition. While it would, under ordinary circumstances, be an extremely desirable property, and hence very saleable, it is with regret that I must inform you that because of the urea-formaldehyde insulation you had installed, it would be futile for me to take the listing, as there would be little hope of selling it even at a price far below market value.
> I am sorry that we cannot do business at this time, but it would be unfair for me to give you false hope about the marketability of your home.

Let me read another letter from Mr. Larry Gee of Point Clair, Quebec. This is from another large real estate firm, A.E. Lepage, and it states:

> It is certainly unfortunate that although all of these indications suggest a market value of $42,000.00, I feel that because of the type of insulation (ie urea-formaldehyde foam) in your home it would be virtually impossible to market.

Later in the letter it is stated:

> Since the insulation in your home appears to be impossible to remove without virtually removing the building, I would have to consider the building to be worthless. In fact it is a liability, as someone would have to spend money to effect its removal.
> The land value in the area indicates that your lot because of its location should sell for $15,000.00; however, the cost of removal of the building may have to be deducted from this amount.

Our office has become sort of an ombudsman headquarters for urea formaldehyde foam home owners across the country. I guess one of the saddest cases has come to my attention through the good offices of the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), from the town of Pelham. There is in Fenwick a senior citizen who has been hospitalized from reaction to the substance UFFI, according to her doctor's findings, and has had to have her home completely reconstructed. My colleague, the hon. member for Erie, informs me that her whole lifetime saving, everything she has right now, is $8,000. The cost to have the foam taken out of her home and to restore it to its original condition was approximately $18,000. This is a senior citizen, and according to the mayor of the town of Pelham, Mr. Bergenstein:

> For many, many people, as in the case of Mrs. Illes and several others in my Town, it is presently a personal disaster and I would urge all your respective levels of government to regard it as an emergency and respond appropriately—which means promptly!

That also means positively.

How will these people ever be able to sell their homes? How will they ever be able to obtain mortgages, even if they can afford them, when trust companies and banks such as Canada Trust, the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Toronto-Dominion Bank will not grant mortgages to those who want to buy UFFI insulated homes? In fact, the mortgage insurance companies of Canada will not underwrite any new mortgages on houses insulated with the foam. When the minister suggests that people are buying these homes, I wish he would tell that to the 100,000 home owners who have seen their lives' investments slowly sink beneath their feet.

● (1640)

Most Canadians insulated their homes to save energy costs and conserve the precious resources that we have in this world. About 100,000 to 125,000 home owners insulated their homes with urea formaldehyde foam, 40,000 under the CHIP program. It was a classic case of one arm of the government advising people to use a substance which other arms of government had warned was an unhealthy and unstable product. This is the same government which had recommended its use and eventually banned it altogether as a hazardous product. Because people were concerned about conserving energy, they took the government at its word and insulated with UFFI. They have been hung up by the thumbs and left there by a government which does not seem to care what happens to these 100,000 people, and it could be as many as 200,000 or maybe 500,000 people.

Oh yes, we did have a test program of 2,400 homes out of 100,000. The tests were announced only when it became painfully clear to this government that those home owners across Canada could not be walked upon or pushed around. It is our understanding that the results of those tests are now in the hands of the government and indeed the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) suggested the other night that the preliminary results show a 13 per cent problem level in the province of Quebec and approximately 13 per cent in Ontario. My mathematical ability is lousy, but a rough calculation would indicate that 13,500 homes across the country could be affected. If that turns out to be the case, a 13 per cent trouble factor, that clearly is the group which the government should be considering giving financial assistance to now. Incidentally, the tests were conveniently scheduled to take place in September and October, after the summer heat and humidity but before the winter heating season is fully upon us. This is just at the time when the foam would be at its most relatively stable period. As I have said, at least 100,000 home owners are involved, affecting 250,000 people, and it represents at least 1.5 per cent of this country's meagre existing housing stock.

There is the possibility that on Monday the government may announce the second phase of its solution to the UFFI problem. A report out of Vancouver suggested that the government will look first to those people who identifiably have health problems, and then offer limited assistance to others who have foam in their homes. The report mentions a statement made by an unidentified official report of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It states:

> The unidentified official says there is no doubt the federal government feels a moral obligation to assist home owners who took government advice and insulated their homes with foam.
> He says the primary consideration for compensation will be medical, followed by some degree of financial help related to costs incurred in having the foam removed.
> He also says home owners cannot expect full compensation because the costs would be prohibitive.

Well, that is not going to be good enough for those people who live in these homes, who have invested all their life savings and who expected to enjoy good health in their homes in the ensuing years.

The question is whether they will be able to sell their homes for what they were worth. I do not think so. I do think the government has a great moral, legal and financial obligation to compensate those people who are experiencing difficulties as a result of having UFFI in their homes. I do not think that those people who have a clearly identifiable problem will be too happy at the announcement to come Monday, which could very well be too little and too late.

In closing, I would like to say that I intend to support the motion before us and to vigorously vote non-confidence in this government on behalf of 100,000 home owners who have UFFI in their homes and who would, if they were standing in my place tonight, also vote non-confidence in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to stand today and address the opposition motion. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has raised a number of issues in this motion which deserve serious discussion. Unfortunately, when one reads the motion, one is somewhat appalled by one of the shortcomings in it. Perhaps it was not done intentionally and could be amended later on, but the fact is that although the hon. member talks about high interest rates, jobs, housing and the small enterprises of this country, he forgets to mention the root of the problem, which is inflation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, inflation is running at a very high rate in this country. One of the contributing factors to high inflation is the deficit which this government is attempting to bring under control in a very reasonable way through its recent budget. It is my understanding and belief that by reducing the deficit, inflation will be reduced and will thereby have a direct impact on high interest rates. It should be said that members opposite, whether they come from St. John's East or from Oshawa, are not the only ones, nor are their parties concerned about high interest rates. We on this side of the House are equally concerned and I believe that we have now taken some action which will eventually alleviate inflation, bring it under control and impact upon high interest rates.

We need a lower deficit, Mr. Speaker. A reduction in the deficit will have positive effects over time on inflationary expectations through expenditure restraint and deficit reduction. The federal government is giving a clear signal that it intends to restrain the growth of its demands on the economy.

Another result from reducing the deficit is that the government will reduce its demands on the financial market, thereby making it easier for the Bank of Canada to achieve its monetary growth targets and restrain demands for credit in the economy. A reduction in the deficit, through restraint on government spending and increased taxes, directly leads to reduced demands for goods and services.

An hon. Member: And recession.

Mr. Dingwall: As prices are typically marked up on costs, the maintenance of some slack in product markets puts downward pressure on mark-ups and restrains inflationary pressures.

In his motion, the hon. member for St. John's East mentions certain added pressure which is exerted on the small business community. One of the matters which has been raised in recent times is the question of interest deductibility. One of the criticisms is that investors in small businesses and those who invest in office buildings, factories and apartment buildings will be deterred by the provision restricting deductibility of interest rate expense from investment income.

There are a number of factors which deal with that particular criticism which I would like to state for the record. First, this measure does not deny a deduction. It only changes the timing of it, when it may be claimed. Borrowing costs on one asset may be offset against any investment income that the individual has from assets or other investments. The facts are that if the measure had applied in 1979, over 76 per cent of interest costs would have remained deductible immediately. Of the 1.3 million individuals who claimed the deduction, only 198,000 of them would have had their interest costs limited, and of these, 163,000 would have had their taxable income affected by less than $500. Only 7,000 persons would have had restricted interest expenses of over $5,000. For many of these people the tax rate cut benefits will offset the restrictions in interest expense deductibility.

Of the large number of individuals who invest in risky ventures or securities, most invest their own savings or have adequate investment income in total to be able to claim any interest expense on borrowed funds.

The revenues from this measure are being used to help finance reductions in tax rates which will reduce the top rate on capital gains from 33 per cent to 25 per cent on average and will increase the after tax return on risky investments. We must keep certain policy measures in perspective, and that is one matter on which I want to elaborate today.

The motion today alleges a lack of concern for home owners and renters in this country, but I think the minister responsible for housing as well as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) have provided a sizeable amount of money and directed it in such a way that I hope—and I am sure hon. members opposite hope—will help alleviate some of the hardships Canadians are facing at the present time.

For home owners, growth in income means that most Canadians are able to renew their mortgages by adjusting their spending decisions. But for those facing the potential loss of their homes, the Government of Canada is introducing a program to help. For those home owners whose payments would exceed 30 per cent of their household incomes and who wish to enter into a deferred interest plan with their lending institutions, the government is prepared to guarantee repayment of this deferred interest up to $3,000. For home owners whose payments would exceed 30 per cent of their household income and who have yet to build up sufficient equity in their homes to support interest deferral, the Government of Canada will pay 100 per cent of the interest deferred under the guarantee plan to a maximum of $3,000.

Hon. members opposite have very graciously referred to the measures the Government of Canada is taking in relation to renters. A number of criticisms of government policies have been made. One particular criticism is that under the budget it will be more difficult for a small businessman to sell his business because it eliminates the so-called reserve provisions and thus imposes tax on capital gains at the time the business is sold, even if the buyer does not pay cash for the full purchase price. The fact in relation to that concern is that, as a result of the reduction in marginal tax rates, the maximum tax on a capital gain will now be only 25 per cent of the gain. The gain itself will invariably be less than the sale price of the business. Thus, the tax will be only a small proportion of the sale price, and the seller would normally receive at least some of the proceeds in cash, which he could use to pay the tax.

The seller may now choose to forward average the capital gain through the new budget provision so that it can be spread out and taxed in later years when his tax rate is lower. This provision will be of significant benefit to those who are selling their businesses on retirement and, with the lower tax rate proposed in the budget, will provide benefits similar to, and in some cases better than, those provided under the IAAC and reserve provisions.

In addition, the pre-budget rules provided a very significant tax deferral advantage to some taxpayers which was not generally available to all. This deferral advantage was of primary benefit to high-income taxpayers. The new forward-averaging system will allow averaging of the capital gain over many years without also providing tax deferrals which resulted in a few high income individuals totally escaping paying federal tax.

Another criticism was that allowing only one-half capital cost allowance write-off in the year an asset is acquired will reduce the cash flow of small businesses. That, too, is a faulty criticism. The measure thus merely alters the timing of depreciation but not the total amount. The amount of depreciation not allowed in the year an asset is acquired will be deductible in subsequent years. An hon. member opposite is nodding his head in agreement; I am glad he concurs in what I am saying.

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Dingwall: The measure will not materially alter the rate of return on investment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My colleague suggested I nodded my head in agreement. I nodded my head in amazement.

Mr. Dingwall: It is amazing that that head could be nodded.

Canada's rates of capital cost allowance for assets such as machinery and equipment will continue to permit a faster write-off than in the United States. Canada's investment incentive overall will remain better for both machinery and equipment and buildings.

It was not a right that a business could obtain a full year's depreciation on an asset bought part way through the year. The pre-budget rule, for example, turned the two-year write-off for manufacturing machinery and equipment into a write-off over as little as 13 months.

While the approach of basing depreciation claims on the exact month an asset bought is theoretically correct, the budget's one half rule on average gives the same results but is simpler for small businesses.

The thrust of the budget to reduce the deficit, and thus inflation and interest rates, is the best way to boost investment.

A number of inferences and assertions have been made by the hon. member from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). As we all know, he stood in the House of Commons today and very eloquently and compassionately echoed certain sentiments about certain individuals in this country who are suffering grave hardship. However, the hon. member unfortunately forgot to mention some of the measures this government has taken to help the less fortunate in this country. For his edification and for the edification of some other members of his party, I would like to deal briefly with a few of those measures.

Tax rates will be reduced for taxpayers with over $11,000 in taxable income. The current 9 per cent tax reduction will be changed to a flat $200 tax credit for all taxpayers, and married taxpayers will be allowed to claim an additional $200 for their dependent spouses. This means that approximately 620,000 low-income taxpayers will have their tax credits doubled to $400.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about the people at the top.

Mr. Dingwall: The Leader of the New Democratic Party unfortunately forgot to mention these measures in his remarks. His colleagues have forgotten that the child tax credit will increase from $261 to $293 per child. That was another measure included in the budget. Tax measures for 1982, including cutbacks in tax preferences and indexing, will bring reductions averaging $210 for almost 12 million taxpayers. A family of four will now be able to earn up to $15,000 without paying any tax. I think that is a commendable measure in the budget, and that ought to be recognized by hon. members opposite as well as by hon. members on this side of the House. Reduced unemployment premiums will increase the take-home pay of wage earners by some $200 million. This was referred to by the hon. member for Oshawa.

There are other measures to which I would like to refer (Mr. Dingwal). The hon. member from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) stood in his place today and said that the Government of Canada should be spending more money on shelter allowances to help those in need. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) has said that our main problem is inflation and that fighting inflation would reduce interest rates. The Progressive Conservative Party has sent out a letter across the country on its stationery asking people to contribute to that political party. In its letter the party says:

> But if we're going to force him into reducing government spending and reducing taxes—

On the one hand the hon. member for St. John's East says we should spend more. On the other hand the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre says we should spend less. The fund raising chairman of the Progressive Conservative Party says he wants a reduction in taxes and a reduction in the deficit as well. You cannot have it both ways.

• (1700)

The hon. member for St. John's East, who unfortunately is not in the chamber, talked about job creation. For his edification, I bring to his attention that the Government of Canada has provided significant economic benefits to the province of Newfoundland to ensure employment in that province, to try to reduce the high unemployment in that province—

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about unemployment in Cape Breton.

Mr. Dingwall: That is true, there is a lot of unemployment in Cape Breton. I would say to that hon. member that it is the Government of Canada which is providing direct funds for the stabilization and continued operation of the Glace Bay heavy water plant and the Port Hawkesbury heavy water plant. The NDP at their last convention in a resolution said that the NDP support the phasing out of existing nuclear projects, including uranium mining. That is where they stand.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Dingwall: Continuing with the various projects in Newfoundland, I bring to the attention of members the pulp and paper modernization agreement whereby the Government of Canada has provided $30 million to the economy of Newfoundland. The hon. member for St. John's East stands in his place, handkerchief in hand, but he does not mention the measures that this government has taken in a positive way.

The Newfoundland forestry agreement has provided an additional $47 million. The Newfoundland transportation agreement provided approximately $10 million to the economy of that province. My colleague from Humbert-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) just announced recently, in addition to the $26.5 million for the Canada Newfoundland industrial subsidiary agreement, an additional $5.5 million for that province.

Progressive Conservative members from Newfoundland have not recognized the great contribution that all Liberals from Newfoundland have been making in this House. They secured an extra $40 million from Parks Canada for road construction. Of course, large amounts of money have been deposited in Newfoundland for small craft harbours as well. In addition to these new agreements, there are some three or four existing agreements in tourism, agriculture and forestry, representing $13 million, $15 million and $14 million respectively, which have been directed to the economy of Newfoundland.

I object most strenuously to the charge that the Government of Canada doing nothing to assist in job creation or that it is not working to try and alleviate the housing problem and assist small businessmen. Unfortunately, the motion which has been placed before the House of Commons today is misleading and deceiving and does not go to the root of the problem, which is inflation.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I may add, yes indeed, the member for Joliette, the only Progressive Conservative member for the only riding that, not long ago, decided to get its message across to a government that is causing a lot of suffering and will do so for a while yet, if we look at the replies we have had today. I feel that opposition days are an excellent opportunity for members to express their views and make comments and help the government side to correct its mistakes and clean up its act. Well, we are all convinced—and that probably includes members on the opposite side as well—that the present budget does not even provide the bare minimum. Businessmen in all sectors have lost confidence in the government, and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is aware of it, the members are aware of it, I heard the hon. member from Newfoundland, I believe, who referred to projects in his province, but there unemployment is also unacceptably high.

Unemployment has reached unacceptable high levels in my province as well, and the outlook is not a happy one. It is not happy in Ontario either. There may be a few provinces in western Canada where the economic situation is a bit better. On this opposition day, we are to consider a motion of censure. How can we not blame the government, when so many Canadians are faced with a difficult situation they will not be able to solve in the medium term, and certainly not in the short term, and who will certainly not have a very happy Christmas or New Year? And earlier, the Minister of State for Finance definitely confirmed that interest rates would not go down and that it was not easy—we know that—but for heaven's sake, we have had this government in power for 15 years, and there has been a lot of discussion and they are trying to find a way to go to the root of the problem. Well, the root of the problem might well be—

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Bussières: I just want to remind the hon. member that he left out part of my sentence. I made a connection between interest rates and inflation, and I said that as long as inflation remained high, it was unlikely that interest rates would drop.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, it amounts to the same thing. For ten years, this government has been promising us it would launch an all-out attack against inflation. The results are there for all to see today. Unemployment was created to reduce inflation, and now we have 1,300,000 unemployed, plus galloping inflation. That is what has been achieved by a government that has long outlived its usefulness. And the minister has no new statements to make on the subject, and I must say it is terribly depressing for Canadians who are aware of the situation to listen to this kind of news today, and it is certainly depressing for people like myself who are trying to persuade the members opposite to at least have the guts to tell their Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen): But you have not found the solution yet. However, out of partisanship these people will once again have to support and defend their government tonight, even if they may not be doing so with much enthusiasm. During the budget debate, I was listening to the member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and to the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) who severely criticized the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). As usual, however, they voted in favour of a budget that is seriously affecting industries in their own ridings, Mr. Speaker.

Once again this evening, the Minister of Finance, who is giving evidence of even greater incompetence than his predecessor, will be applauded. This seems impossible to me, but the Minister of Finance will once again be covered for this evening, and the Minister of State for Finance has given us the same old story that he probably repeats all across Canada but which does not meet our needs or suggest appropriate corrective action. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is being criticized simply for having shown that our housing policies are clearly inadequate to meet Canadian needs, and not a single government member can deny it. There will be a housing shortage and therefore a major problem in this area, and I am certain that hon. members opposite know as well as I do that there will be a shortage in the coming year. I must therefore congratulate the mover of the motion for having introduced this subject in the House of Commons, and I hope that the government members will force the Minister of Finance to show at least some sympathy for those people who are now or who will be soon without a home. I am not exaggerating, Mr. Speaker. Those are the facts. Some will say: It is not easy. Of course not, but this is the issue we wanted to discuss today in an attempt to convince government members that they should show more human feelings than they have done until now by doing nothing.

The hon. member for St. John's East was quite right to raise this issue in the House. We are not saying that everything in the budget is unacceptable, but certain omissions are inexcusable, and as responsible members of this House and as a responsible party, we want to ask the government to seriously think about such basic necessities as housing. Of course, interest rates have been harmful; they have been fatal to the building industry. The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) is aware of it. It is obvious that interest rates have frozen the building industry and put thousands of people out of work. Consequently, there will not be enough housing units for all Canadians. Any self-respecting country or government should be farsighted enough to provide at least this much. Not only are there more and more unemployed in Canada, but there is also an increasing number of people without a home because of an extremely dangerous product—and I shall get back to that later—but the government is doing absolutely nothing to help them except for a few tests with results to be published later. For the moment, some Canadians are without a home for lack of an effective housing policy, and matters have been made even more difficult because of high interest rates, as we must all admit.

The New Democratic Party accused us earlier of having nearly the same views as this government about economics. If the philosophies of our two parties have been somewhat similar, it still remains that on this side of the House, we have been able to make a choice when faced with the need to house Canadians. This is where we must make some choices and establish certain priorities to provide certain advantages to home owners, and this is what we had proposed. In 1982, home owners could have received a credit of $1,500 to help them face the present situation. But this government defeated us on this vitally important question for home owners, and it is important for home owners to realize it, Mr. Speaker. When we made that proposal, I recall quite clearly that our friends opposite blamed us, supposedly because tenants had been forgotten in the home owner tax credit bill. Obviously if this bill could have been implemented, home owners would have been quite embarrassed to talk about increases this year. But as they were left to cope for themselves, and as the Canadian public elected this government which then abandoned not only our proposal, but also their good intentions of helping tenants—

Renters have seen nothing coming from the floor of this House to help them cope with high interest rates. Thousands of home owners are losing their homes. Those who would like to buy a house cannot afford to, and the budget has no answer for them. Honestly, this must be recognized. The budget does not enable young couples to buy homes. And people are at a loss to keep the homes they have. Mr. Speaker, you are aware that the government will help some 10 per cent of the people affected, those facing bankruptcy. That is all. Their agony will be lengthened because their loan will be extended. What a solution! And there is nothing for renters in all that, Mr. Speaker. The government talks of 15,000 units when it is alleged that 265,000 units would be needed. This is ridiculous, utterly ridiculous.

It is important in my view that the issue be dealt with seriously, that we confront the government with it and urge government members to bring those responsible to their senses. I realize and understand that quite often, members of the House remain silent. I also realize their ineffectiveness about cabinet failures. But responsible members must confront some ministers with the problem. In Quebec also there are major problems. Quebec will account for 40 per cent of the bankruptcies. I know some member from my province will say: The Quebec government is responsible for that. Out of the total number of bankruptcies in Canada, 40 per cent happen in Quebec. For a Quebecer this hurts. But this government has been in office for 15 years. I have been here for nearly 15 years, but today they are in larger numbers, they are now 74. For that reason, they decided long ago to speak on behalf of Quebec. But let them do something for Quebec here. More than talk is needed.

There is a large number of ministers from Quebec. There are also many backbenchers. Recently I was in Montreal. On Montreal island in these last 15 years—a Progressive Conservative has spent a few days, but otherwise there are 22 Liberal members out of 22, with seven or eight ministers. This did not prevent Montreal from losing its position as Canada's metropolis. Are Progressive Conservatives responsible for that? Are New Democrats responsible for that? Mr. Speaker, somebody here is certainly not doing his job. Somebody here is certainly not finding the answers. They claim to know what they are.

In the circumstances, this allotted day could give members in this House an opportunity to bring the minister responsible to his senses. I will not say too much about the minister in charge of housing. He has enough problems these days, and anyway the hon. member for Saint-Jean has amply demonstrated his utter failure and incompetence in that area.

My colleague from Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) also referred to the victims of urea formaldehyde, and all my friends in Quebec, all Canadians are aware of that major problem, but the government refuses to face the problem. I submit that this problem is of a social nature. We have a responsibility as Members of Parliament. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) told us: When the investigation is completed, we shall see who is responsible and we shall expose him. It is not so, Mr. Speaker. We are told that it will cost millions and this is why the government is unwilling to deal with it. In my view, this is unthinkable! If it is true that the problem is costly, how can you expect individuals, these poor home owners, the breadwinners, women and children to go through the winter? The government has a responsibility. I mentioned a special credit, a loan, but those people should be helped if the government is humane but it believes that as a result of that inquiry it will be in a position to find the culprit. It will make the culprit pay. However, the government is asking those individuals to fight against that terrible problem. A heartless government alone can speak in such a way, Mr. Speaker. I would like to convince the hon. members opposite that they should compel the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to assume its basic responsibilities and as the elective representation of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the time allotted to me has expired—not yet. Then the problem exists, Mr. Speaker, and it is the matter now under consideration.

● (1720)

To allow these people, and this is what I am seeking from hon. members on the government side, to advise the ministers of inadequate or unapplied measures, and these people are aware of it, according to the remarks we hear nowadays. Unemployment will increase. I challenge one of you to deny the unemployment rate will be higher next spring. I think everybody agrees that it will be close to 20 per cent. Nobody says no, and I do not think that I am wrong by much, Mr. Speaker. They talk about increasing by the hundreds and the thousands the number of housing units for Canadians... There are some of them who will realize soon that they have no shelter over their heads. In the area of inflation, they say that interest rates will remain the same. Therefore, the government should do something to help those who cannot afford these high interest rates. They talk about getting the housing industry moving again with these interest rates. When inflation comes down, so will interest rates. We have been hearing this tune for the past 10 years, but people are suffering in the meantime. For this reason, I think that this opposition day will make it possible for us to recommend very special measures to the government to help at least those who are suffering most. There is no remedy which could cure the condition overnight, that is for sure. But there are people, for instance, who cannot wait until inflation comes down to 6 or 7 per cent. These people are going to suffer. They will starve. And I think that we must assume our responsibility in this respect. It is with this in mind that I urge hon. members to meet these social problems head on. There are major social problems in all our ridings throughout Canada. I am aware of this. But now we are asking the government to consider them. We seek, during this opposition day, to convince the hardhearted government members to introduce adequate legislation, so that Canadians may sleep in warm beds, live in comfortable lodgings, and obtain mortgage loans at rates they can afford. Of course, interest rates could remain high for luxury goods and services, on the assumption that inflation would be more likely to come down if interest rates remained high. However, an ever-increasing minority of Canadians need a decent minimum to live decently. With interest rates approaching 20 per cent, Canadians and Quebecers by the thousands like those who are now in the House will be laid off and will no longer be able to cope with these problems.

An hon. Member: Don't cry over that!

Mr. La Salle: I am told not to cry over that. I think this is serious, Mr. Speaker. There are Canadians who take this seriously and there are members on the other side who should take this seriously as well. That is what I have in mind when I say that and I do so with the best intentions in the world; to my mind, we ought to be able to discuss politics with the utmost objectivity, but we also ought to do it emotionally, inspired by the feelings which enabled us to gain the confidence of our public. In all those ridings which are represented by government members, the electors put their faith in them. Those men and those women promised they would form a good government, a government of men and women who would show respect for their fellow human beings, but that is not what is happening. We will stand idly by while maybe 25 or 30 per cent of the Canadian population will be living the worst experience of their lives right in the middle of the forthcoming holiday season, Mr. Speaker. We should do everything we can to try and force this government to respond in a more respectful, more charitable and more compassionate way to those groups of people who cannot take it any longer. That, Mr. Speaker, is our problem in Canada right now. Let no one ask me to have faith in a government which has been failing so miserably for the past 15 years, which has inflated its deficit and boosted the number of people out of work; a great many plants are closing down and things are getting worse every day. They bragged about 110,000 new jobs, but they did not say how many jobs had been lost during the same period. We are moving backwards and people are suffering. This is an opposition day and once again I hope—I will not ask for a time extension—I echo from the bottom of my heart, Mr. Speaker, the wishes of thousands of electors in Quebec and in Canada. People tell us that the situation is bad and they wonder what is going to happen. We cannot answer that, but what we do know is that some people will not be able to join the festivities like the others, they will not be able to eat like the others; those are basic rights, Mr. Speaker, but they are being thwarted by an economic policy which has turned out to be a monumental failure. That is clear. Let us reassess our priorities and help the most needy. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) agrees with me, I am sure of that, and in his riding as well there are people, farmers who are now worried because problems which should be solved are not being solved, and for the residents of Frontenac as well as those of Joliette I hope they will be solved. I would invite those people to put pressure on the ministers responsible and urge them to find some kind of solution; it may not be a component of an over-all policy but it will have to be modified because the over-all policy falls far short of the mark, something which Quebecers and Canadians, thousands of Canadians, are aware of, just as most members are, here in this House. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the other side has the majority and they would rather glorify a finance minister who shows such incompetence and lack of compassion for the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, through you, I would like to ask the hon. member for Joliette if he would allow me a question. With the unanimous consent of the House I would like to ask a question on what he has just said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allotted to the hon. member for Joliette has expired. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. La Salle: I think the hon. member for Longueuil should address his questions to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, since he is the one who delivered the budget, not I.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean. The hon. member for Joliette has not allowed the question.

The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette, whom I listened to, mentioned the hon. member for Longueuil twice in his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleague, the member for Longueuil, will have a chance to rise on a matter of privilege tomorrow to raise the point he wishes to discuss. To the member for Joliette, I would like to say that I find it very stimulating to follow a French-speaking member. It is the first time this has happened to me since I became a member of this House. Unfortunately, I think Quebecers have lost confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party and have never really had any confidence in the New Democratic Party. They do trust the Liberals, which is good for the province but makes it less interesting for us Liberal members, since we never have a chance to answer a francophone member when we take the floor.

Before discussing the motion introduced today, I will start with the small fry, the rump of the House, the New Democratic Party. I was listening just now to the eloquent speech by the Leader of the New Democratic Party who was launching his strongest arguments against the government's budget, its mortgage rate policies, and against every conceivable fault the government might have.

It seems that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is against the budget policy and the mortgage rate policy of the Liberal government. If he does not agree with the government, why wasn't the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the House on December 8 when we voted on the budget, in order to vote against it. I think this neatly characterizes the party. I am against but I will not vote against, or I am in favour but I will not vote in favour. Or else, I am voting in favour, but I am against, or I am voting against, but I am in favour. The epitome of indecision! A party that includes, among its members, people with a negative outlook, highly trained intellectuals who are supposed to bring this country to a certain kind of socialism which is not clearly defined and which flirts from time to time with communism, when their leader is meeting international communist parties or other kinds of communists when he is travelling in Salvador. We do not need that kind of party! We do not need them because Canadians will not build a country for the future with that kind of help. I am very serious about this because for a long time, for 18 months, I have been watching this party that has no face of its own—

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about the unemployed in Lac-Saint-Jean. Talk some sense.

Mr. Gimaïel: I tell people who voted NDP in the last election to look at the vote on the budget on December 8, 1981, and they will realize that the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party was not present. That is further proof that that party is a no-decision party. When it is time to take action, they are not present.

[Translation]

That is simply unacceptable. I also have a few words for a friend of the New Democratic Party, the leader of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. McDermott, who likes to visit Parliament Hill and who, as the leader of Canadian workers, is doing more than anyone else to harm their cause. Mr. McDermott is no longer a union leader, Mr. McDermott is now a politician—a politician doing what? He makes workers go on strike and lose money, and he comes here to support a political party that is decadent, has no positive contribution to make and would have us believe that it represents the workers of Canada. No, Mr. Speaker, we do not need such allies because the real challenge of this country will be to rebuild for the future. When we speak about inflation and high interest rates, what does it mean? It means aging industries. We need a new economic structure. There is sometimes talk of renewing our labour structure and relations. Can Mr. McDermott help us reorganize labour relations and find positive solutions? Certainly not! He has always clearly stated that he wants nothing to do with the government, that he is there to fight and that he is simply acting as a messenger of the New Democratic Party to try to manipulate workers so that they will vote for that party even though he never succeeds. This is something that I wanted to mention.

• (1730)

As for the motion introduced by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), this is what we find in the first few lines:

> That this House censures the government of its perpetual, excessive, and ineffective reliance on a high interest rate policy, which has not only—

—and so on. Strangely enough, when we have these opposition days, no constructive suggestion is ever made saying, for instance, we, of the Progressive Conservative Party, would like to work with the Canadian government to bring solutions to the problems facing Canadians. Why are we being censured? The government of Canada is being censured because the dollar has not gone down by one cent in the last year in Canada while the currency has gone down by 20 per cent, 25 per cent and 30 per cent in the countries who form the Europe of the nine and who are saying: There are nine of us and we are strong enough to resist the pressures of American interest rates. Who pays the bill when a currency goes down by 20 per cent, 25 per cent, and 30 per cent? How much would it cost to purchase ordinary consumer goods, such as automotive parts, oil, and everything that we import like sugar and steel, if our dollar had fallen by 25 per cent in 1981? Who is the hardest hit in such a case? Not the millionaire! It makes no difference to the millionaire if gas costs $2 or $4 a gallon. It makes no difference at the end of the month. It only means lower taxes.

But for the poor, the unemployed, the person on welfare, what would their position be if the dollar went down by 25 per cent like the French franc has done or even like the great German mark, which has suffered an incredible fall last year? These countries have tried to follow another policy than that which was needed in the interest of the population. They believed that the nine countries together were strong enough to withstand the import of American interest rates. Just look at the result. I believe that we have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that when we speak of interest rates in Canada, only the rich can afford to borrow. Do not try to borrow if you do not have any money, Mr. Speaker. If you try it, the bank will tell you: Even at 2 per cent, you will not get a loan. The rest of the population is forgotten.

I heard the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) speak earlier about over one million unemployed. Yes, but are you forgetting them? Ask those people if they are able to borrow, even at 2 per cent! Those are the people the government is protecting by telling the others: Even though for a while interest rates are higher, and you are facing the impact of a difficult policy to support our dollar, in so doing you are supporting your children because most of the time, unfortunately, the children of people with money do not work. The father has a job, a good income but the son is unemployed. This is the problem we are confronted with, because of our obsolescent factories, because of job security, because provincial governments, such as the friends of the honourable member for Joliette, put forward legislation as the one under which there must one apprentice for every five journeymen. How is it possible to think this opens opportunities for the young, Mr. Speaker? One apprentice for every five journeymen! No! What this government is trying to do is helping the people and getting allies to do so. And how are people going to be helped? The way the recent budget is doing.

Currently, farmers are entitled to the Small Business Development Bond program. This is one way of helping them. Those in difficulty are entitled to a five per cent rebate on the rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. And anyway, that rate is going to be revised downward as early as the end of December, and we are told that this five per cent rebate will be maintained. There have been many benefits: housing construction in areas where there is a need, the government will have build 7,500 new units.

People who are in danger of losing their homes, and I would like to say to my colleagues that I helped some of them recently, can now apply to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The government will help them to keep their homes. We are intelligent enough to realize that it would be costlier to build new ones instead of keeping those which are already there. We are not that stupid. However, I heard a while ago the speech of the member for Joliette and I thought that such a speech would have been more appropriately delivered not in this House but in the legislature where he tried to be elected. When the member said that Montreal was losing its international status, I found it strange because five years ago Montreal was still the metropolis of Canada but it now appears that it is no longer the case. Five years ago, Montreal was still an international city, the proof given being the Olympic Games of 1976. Why is Montreal no longer an international city? For the simple reason that during the past five years the government has done nothing to help Quebecers, but is only interested in one thing, and we were again aware of this during the weekend, to build a new country at any cost and it was the party in power, the Parti Québécois, which during the weekend held its national convention Mr. Speaker. How long did they discuss the Quebec economy in the plenary meeting at that eighth annual convention? I give you a thousand guesses: They did not for one minute, not one second. Is not that weird? But that's the way things go under that government.

The government is trying to find partners to help it to solve the problems of Canadians. I heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) say that we had not done what should have been done to help as far as housing and interest rates on mortgages are concerned. Can anybody tell us what the Saskatchewan government has done? Neo-Democrats are allegedly socialists, but what have they done to help poor home owners? Nothing. I am eager to see what the new Manitoba government will be doing and I remember, I still go farther than those so-called socialists, that not so long ago, they were still discussing there whether the equality of sexes would be recognized.

One of the two premiers who dug in his heels up to the very end was Mr. Blakeney, a member of the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan. What kind of socialism is that? And the great discovery these governments have made, and I include the government of Quebec, because everybody in Quebec has heard this for the last five years, they have discovered that whatever goes wrong, the federal government is to blame. We, the provincial governments, are elected but we have no powers; you elect us for the sake of tradition because you have to have a leader, but all the power is in Ottawa.

Well, I have the impression that people are starting to get the message, but it is not exactly what they meant to say. The message is, I think, that when something positive is done such as health insurance legislation, access to post-secondary education, hospital insurance legislation, it is initiated by the Canadian government which tells the provinces: This is what you are going to do to improve the wellbeing of your citizens. People are starting to understand, and I am reminded of the people in Montmagny who are having all kinds of problems as a result of the economic situation. And whom do they ask for help, whom do they ask to make their region a designated area? Not the members of the government of the province of Quebec, they know they won't do anything to help them. Those people are only interested in one thing, their nation and their flag. What happens to Quebecers does not interest them in the least. They went directly to the Canadian government which has proved, and is continuing to do so, that it is interested in taking action and helping individuals to develop in a liberal sense and to live without constraints in this country. It is really nonsensical that the opposition parties in this House should join the provinces in telling us that everything that goes wrong in Canada is the federal government's fault.

I would like to draw the attention of my hon. colleagues to the fact that there are several Conservative governments in place in other provinces. What are they doing to improve the economy? I will tell you what they are doing. The Premier of Newfoundland is very willing to come to Ottawa to sign agreements with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) when the federal government foots 90 per cent of the bill. But what kind of a budget do they fish out of their fertile little imaginations? Right now there are all sorts of suggestions and speculations being made over the fact that the Canadian government, through its budget, is hitting hard at this or that group, but that completely ignores the fact that 12 million Canadians will be paying less income tax next year.

Now, life insurance. What a terrible thing it is to defend the insurance companies, which pay 4, 4½ or 5 per cent interest. If you pay $25 or $30 a month in insurance premiums, at 4½ or 5 per cent interest, it would take you an awful long time to reach the first $1,000 tax deductible. This will never be taxable. We are accused of the worst sins under the sun. The best advice I would be willing to give to my constituents, Mr. Speaker, would be for them to borrow on their life insurance, since they would get a loan rate of 6 or 7 per cent, which comes up to about the same as they get from the companies. That is one way of beating the high cost of money. The money is there, it belongs to everyone and anybody can borrow his or her own money at a normal rate, that is at a rate which allows the company to make a certain profit and which is related to the yield that money has produced for the individual.

Members opposite find this quite amusing of course because any constructive proposal makes them laugh. They are not here to represent their constituents, they are here to fling abuse at the government. They completely ignore the fact, for instance, that Canadian farmers, dairy farmers, have told the government: "We think you have a good, an excellent dairy policy; let us have it for another five years. And it is very good". Members opposite would never dare tell that to their constituents. It would be sinful to say that the government has a good policy, because it would be awful to have to tell everyone the truth. That is the kind of attitude which undermines this country, which is responsible for the fact that we have a leader on the other side who is just an immature politician who is merely concerned with making trouble, having fun at the expense of everybody else, showing through childish antics that he is still the best.

What is even worse, and what I cannot fathom, is that after Canadians have told him that they wanted him no longer as their Prime Minister, that nine months had been long enough, that the labouring pains had been too unendurable and that the pregnancy had been too unbearable, the people who sit behind this man continue to endorse him. That is unbelievable! What will Canadians have to do to show them that they do not want their leader? Perhaps send them a series of telegrams or ask Mr. McDermott to come back, but this time to support his NDP colleagues against the Leader of the Opposition. That may be a solution for he enjoys travelling around. He cannot find time to review his files, but he does get around. That may be a solution.

An hon. Member: Let's have an election!

Mr. Gimaïel: Yes, an election. Let us talk about elections. Mr. Speaker, those people simply love elections. They were in office and could have stayed there for four years. They introduced a budget and said: The Liberals are bluffing, they will not vote against us, we will have them approve a budget as if we were in a minority position and, at the worst, we will call an election and do as the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker once did—after nine months we will be in a majority position. The people got the picture, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the members of the opposition got the picture as well: Canadians do not elect governments to call elections, they elect governments to look after the administration of their country. An election is a democratic tool, not something everybody enjoys because it gives him or her an opportunity to go on a campaign. We should not think that Canadians enjoy the fun of listening to politicians talking through their hats and making speeches here and there. No. Canadians accept the fact that politicians do exist and want to talk to them now and then, because they need people to administer their country.

Fortunately this country goes on growing, expanding and developing, showing ever more respect for the individual citizen regardless of his or her language, colour, race and religion; Canadians have been fortunate over the past 20 years because the Liberals have been in power in their country. The only thing I ask from the people is that they understand the nature of political liberalism. I would strongly urge them to elect Liberal governments in the provinces so that we will no longer be alone to work for the wellbeing of Quebecers and of the other citizens of this country, so that we will have allies whose sole objective will be not to promote their own credibility or prove that they wield more power than the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Let us elect Liberals everywhere in this country and we will see that problems such as the ones we have today will be much fewer and we will come up with solutions to help the most disadvantaged people come to grips with all those problems.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of having a Christmas break is that the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) will be able to return to his riding to face the truth. He will have to face the unemployed and he will have to face the hardship that people are experiencing caused by high interest rates. He will have to face the cost of this stupid, incompetent budget, the kind of incompetence that was expressed this afternoon by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières). When hon. members on the other side are away from this place for a month of two, they will have to face what is going on out there.

Last night in Toronto the monetary policy of this government, financed in the green glass tower across the way on Wellington Street and sponsored by this government, was described to members of the Toronto Board of Trade. Over 600 very worried people were there.

An hon. Member: All Tories.

Mr. Blenkarn: John Grant from the Toronto-Dominion Bank, who is not necessarily known as a Tory, classified the government's policy as kamikaze monetarism. There was not one economist there who forecast growth for next year. Some economists forecast a 3 per cent negative growth in real terms. The best forecast and the most optimistic was for only 1 per cent negative growth. That is what we have coming.

We have just finished taking a look at the budget which stated that Canada will have a balance of payments deficit of $9.1 billion. No one would forecast that small a deficit in our balance of payments. The current forecasts for this year are for a deficit in our balance of payments of between $11 billion and $12 billion.

Why do we have that state of affairs? Let us go back a little way. When the Progressive Conservative Party took over as the government of this country in June, 1979, the current account deficit for 1979 was forecast to be in excess of $7 billion. As we worked through the fall on improving business confidence, the current account deficit for 1979 turned out to be less than $2 billion. Interest rates were high in Canada during that period of time.

Mr. Orlikow: They rose.

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, they rose. They rose to 14 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: They went up four times.

Mr. Blenkarn: Interest rates rose four times, but they remained lower than the interest rates prevalent in the United States during all of that time. There was confidence in Canada, and the dollar increased in value. But now what do we have? Since this government brought in its National Energy Program last year, there has been a massive outflow of capital from this country. Last year the outflow of capital resulted in a small balance of payments deficit. This year the balance of payment deficit will be nearly $12 billion.

What did we have to do to replace that outflow of capital? We had to go to the banks, the hot money lenders of foreign countries, to borrow, borrow and borrow, and we had to let our interest rates rise higher and higher and higher.

Let us take a look at where interest rates are today. The Americans can place T-bills on their market at 10.3 per cent. We placed our T-bills on our market today at 14.93 per cent. We pay 4.63 per cent more than the Americans do.

Let us look at what commercial borrowers have to pay on bankers' acceptances. Commercial borrowers in the United States borrow money at 11.6 per cent. Borrowers in Canada pay 16.85 per cent, or 5.15 per cent more interest than borrowers do in the United States.

Let us look at the European Eurodollar market. It costs 12.5 per cent to borrow money on the Eurodollar market. But the prime rate in Canada is 17.25 per cent. Why is that? You can borrow money on the LIBOR market for 12.75 per cent, but the prime rate in Canada is 17.25 per cent.

Yesterday I asked the minister in charge of this debate why he could not do something about this prime rate problem. He said "You have to understand banking. You are too ignorant. You do not know any better".

I want to tell you what is wrong with the government. Business has lost confidence and the banking community cannot borrow money in Canada for any less than about 4 per cent to 5 per cent more than it can in the United States. The government cannot bring American money, European money, German money or money from whatever country to finance loans in Canada cheaper because people do not have confidence in Canada. People are taking their money out of Canada. That is what is happening.

The only way we can keep money in the country is by keeping a high interest rate policy to balance off that horrid balance of payments problem that the government's incompetence has created. It has been created because of the lack of business confidence, first, in the National Energy Policy and second, in this budget.

This budget again attacks business, entrepreneurialship, growth, progress and job creation. Our economy is damaged by political divisiveness in this country. The government is always trying to have a war with the provinces, and now it has one going again with the province of Quebec. Statements coming out of that province are again hurting and driving business and capital from Canada. On the whole front, political, economic and business, this government is driving money out of the country, and the only way we can keep money in the country is by raising our interest rates higher, higher and higher.

The government says it is doing this to maintain the value of the Canadian dollar. We are maintaining the value of the Canadian dollar all right, but we are maintaining it artificially high, because on any realistic interest assessment on world interest rates, our dollar, unless we are prepared to pay the premium we are presumably being forced to pay, would have declined and declined considerably.

This government tries to hide its incompetence in management by artificially keeping the dollar higher than it would normally be, and that situation will continue if this country is managed the way this government wants to manage it. There is no reason for our dollar to go below 84 cents or 85 cents. Managed properly, there would be an inflow of capital into this country to take advantage of the resources of Canada, the real wealth of Canada, and to make this country grow. Surely there are people who are hungry in the world; surely there are people who need our forest products; surely there are people who want the products we create. They are afraid to come here and create, afraid to come here and develop opportunities. We drive out the people who would explore and develop our energy wealth. We drive them out by expropriating, by double-taxing and triple-taxing them. We tax away entrepreneurialship and then we wonder why we have unemployment. We wonder why people have to pay enormous amounts on home mortgages.

We drive up the value of our currency artificially with our interest rate policy. We do not need to drive it up artificially. Our currency would rise with a decent economic policy, as it did when the Conservative government was in power. With these people in power, we are now paying nearly 5 per cent more than is being paid in the United States for equivalent money.

The government says the high interest policy is needed to curb inflation. How does it curb inflation? I suppose it curbs inflation by driving beef farmers to sell off their herds so that some people can find cheap meat temporarily, or by forcing businessmen into bankruptcy so there are bankruptcy sales. I suppose that is how they do it. I suppose they cut prices down by putting storekeepers out of business so they have to sell off their stock cheap. Maybe you can cut prices that way for a day or two, but the only real way to cut prices is by increasing productivity, and you cannot increase productivity by making it more difficult for a businessman to buy a new piece of capital equipment. You do not increase productivity by making it more expensive for him to raise money. You do not increase productivity by preventing interest from being deductible or by preventing a person from investing, or making it unattractive for him to invest in an insurance policy. That is the kind of thing we have coming from this government. We have a government that is against increased productivity.

What this government says is that it is going to force prices down and force inflation down by increasing interest rates. It says we have to build a new country so it is going to destroy everything we have and then start building everything again from scratch. You do not build by destroying and you do not build by putting people out of business. That is what this government is doing with its interest rate policy. It is putting people out of business and home owners out of their homes.

We wonder why wage rates are high and why we have demands for higher wages. I was talking to the president of International Nickel the other day and he said: You know, our people in Thompson, Manitoba, have been on strike for a big wage hike. I do not know what we are going to do. We will have to pay them more. I do not blame them for wanting more. After all, their mortgage payments have gone up $100, $200 and $300 a month in some cases, so they need more. How do I pass that on in the international nickel market? What can I do about it?

The government says high interest rates cut inflation. I will tell you what they do. They put people out of work and on unemployment insurance. I suppose they think productivity will increase when people are not working and are being paid not to work. The only way to attack inflation is to increase the productivity of the country, to produce more goods and services, and to have more things available, reducing the cost of producing things by using more machinery by more adequate distribution systems and by a better transportation system. Unless we have a government that is prepared to understand that this is the way we have to go, we will always have higher inflation.

As the government raises interest rates, the inflation rate will go up. That is what has happened. The inflation rate this year is higher than ever at 12.7 per cent. That is the highest rate the country has faced in ages. Interest rates are higher than ever. It is true that they are a little lower today than they were in August, but they are higher today than they were a year ago. Has this government done anything about these high interest rates over the years to bring inflation down? Not on your life. Inflation a year ago was running at about 10 per cent, and now it is running at nearly 13 per cent. We have had another full year of high interest rates and kamikaze monetarism. The government wants to destroy the whole system in order to make its theory work, but it is not working. It is about time the government woke up to the fact that it is not working and woke up to the fact that you cannot drive business out of the country, cut down on productivity and expect all of a sudden to improve our inflationary position. Unless these interest rate policies are changed, sir, we are going to have a very hard time in Canada for a long time.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) had the floor. I understand he may have completed his remarks. Accordingly I will recognize the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove).

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will begin my remarks this evening by referring to the Speech from the Throne, as I have done on a couple of earlier occasions in this session, in speaking on the matter of housing. It was from the Speech from the Throne that the government took its mandate and made certain commitments to the electorate in an expression of that mandate. Some of those commitments dealt specifically with the issue of housing. I will quote these words, which deal clearly with the issue of housing, saying that the government would:

> ... act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

It was an undertaking that we, as a government, would act in these abnormal circumstances to prevent foreclosure. As I indicated, that was the undertaking and that was the action taken by the government in the budget provisions. We have done exactly what we said we would do. We have introduced, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) the Canada mortgage renewal plan which was designed specifically to respond to our undertaking as a government.

There has been criticism in the last few days of the design of the program. One criticism has been that we have not offered enough funding for the program. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has called for an expenditure of $750 million. He stated that we have not really met our undertaking. However, as I have indicated, the program is designed to implement what we have undertaken. It is a two-part program, a deferral of interest and a grants provision. The deferral of interest provision is a design feature of the program whereby those people who have sufficient equity in their homes are able to draw upon that equity to assist themselves, but with the assistance of the federal government backing the financial institutions across the country, thus enabling Canadians who heretofore were not able to use that device to avoid foreclosure by deferral of interest to a point where interest rates, as we all hope, will be lower than they are now. Certainly we hope they are at a lower level than they were during the months of August, September and October.

The other part of the program is the grants provision. It is part of the program that recognizes the difficulties for Canadians who have newly-acquired homes and who have entered into home ownership plans recently and have not built equity or have gone into home ownership in some markets where the equity in the home or the value of a particular project has not increased and they are unable to respond to their problems. In those cases where interest deferral does not apply, the government will provide an outright grant of up to $3,000 to assist those people who apply and qualify under the terms of the Canada mortgage renewal plan.

As well, the budget addressed a problem which has been raised by many members of the House. I would respectfully submit that it was raised by me early this summer in material prepared for my cabinet colleagues in which I expressed my concerns about the housing situation in Canada and envisaged where the concerns and the hazards would be the greatest in the next few years. After identifying the priorities in our concerns, the Minister of Finance responded by supporting the construction of modest rental accommodation across the country in those markets which have the lowest vacancy rates at the present time.

There is also support available for the construction of rental accommodation in areas where Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation local officials and provincial ministers and their officials identify specific needs and anticipated growth, and in areas where it is obvious that rental accommodation will have to be supplied to meet specific circumstances. For that reason, the Minister of Finance introduced through the budget the provision of $350 million in funding for the Canada rental supply program. I had the opportunity of explaining these two programs to the provincial ministers of housing over the last ten days. I met with them in their legislatives offices, in their communities, in the various regions and in the various provinces to explain the planned provisions respecting mortgage deferral. I explained the intentions of our government with respect to addressing tight rental markets. I wanted to receive input from the provincial ministers as to how these plans would meet the problems they might have identified and priorized in their regions.

This morning I had the opportunity to meet with the hon. Neil Windsor from Newfoundland. Although I had previously visited his province on a trip to see the maritime ministers, he was not there. However, this morning Mr. Windsor indicated that if the rental supply program responded to his particular market, it would be a welcome program. He indicated that the mortgage renewal plan had what he felt were shortcomings. He would have preferred a program lasting longer than one year.

As many hon. members have done, he also commented on the fact that the program calls for people to use the equity in their homes to deal with the problem of high interest rates at renewal time. I think I have addressed that problem. The design of the government is to have a modest program to help Canadians help themselves in these abnormal times.

In a budget which shows a reduction in the deficit next year of some $3 billion and under a very controlled program of government expenditures, why did the Minister of Finance commit $350 million toward these housing initiatives? Unfortunately the Conservative housing critic is not in the House this evening.

Mr. Lewis: And you weren't here this afternoon.

Mr. Cosgrove: It is unfortunate that he did not join me, the chairman of the Quebec caucus and some hon. members from the province of Ontario when we met with a delegation which came to Parliament Hill on September 15. For over an hour we listened to the many stories of Canadians facing the problems of high rollover costs and the disruption of meeting interest rates much higher than those in effect when they took out their mortgages. If the hon. member had been there, I am sure he would have realized that through its programs the government was responsive to the needs that were expressed.

It is unfortunate too that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) did not join in the debate in which I had the opportunity to participate in London, Ontario, a few weeks later. At that meeting, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), a colleague of the hon. member for St. John's East and I debated housing problems and solutions thereto before an audience of some 2,000 people. The 2,000 people there were very concerned about mortgage renewals. Present at that meeting also were Members of Parliament from the London area, and they also witnessed the concern. I might say that on that occasion the people expressed their concerns in a heated fashion. I had the delightful experience of being booed off the stage when I could not offer any facile answers and when I could not say, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party could, that I had a solution for every person in Canada with a housing problem. I was also booed while on the stage because at a time when my colleagues in government and I were considering our response and when we were in the process of preparing the budget and the government response about which I have talked I could not speak of those things. That was indeed an awkward time. However, as I say, if the housing critic of the Conservative Party had joined me on those occasions, he would have realized what it was that motivated the government to move in the areas I have described.

The finance critic of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), did participate, and I found his words to be reasonable. I would go so far as to say they were supportive of the position of the government. On that very day the finance critic of the Conservative Party appeared on CTV's "Question Period", and this is what he said in response to the representations made by Canadians on that day:

> I would like to say that we can come up with a program that would help all Canadians who are hurt by high interest rates. We can't, it's too expensive, the government can't afford to do that, so what we can do is help that broad group of Canadians the government can't afford to help by bringing in programs that would reduce over-all levels of interest rates.

He went on:

> I think that the government should be helping a spectrum of people, but not the broad spectrum. We can't afford to do that in this country—

He went on:

> No, I don't think you can legislate the banks to do it because it's not just the banks... But I think that we should be trying to encourage the financial institutions to play a role here—

As I have indicated, our program is designed to enable Canadians to take advantage of equity built up in their homes to address their own difficult problems. For those who are not able to do that, we have a grant program—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I refer Your Honour to page 117 of Beauchesne. It is very clear that it is not proper to quote from a newspaper during a debate in this House. I suggest that by quoting from CTV's "Question Period", and perhaps not doing so in context, it is as if he had quoted from a newspaper. According to Beauchesne:

> —a Member quoting a newspaper in debate was ruled out of order by the Deputy Speaker who said: "The rule is quite clear, that the quoting of a newspaper, an author or a book which reflects upon debate before the House, either directly or indirectly is entirely out of order, because Members are here to give their own opinions and not to quote the opinions of others—"

If the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre were here and were able either to substantiate or disagree with the minister responsible for housing, I respectfully suggest this procedure would be entirely correct, but only the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre knows whether the quotations being read by the minister are entirely within the context of what was said.

I suggest that any further quotations by the minister would be out of order and that the ones he has already made should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief on this point of order. I hope Your Honour will rule on this point with tongue in cheek in the same way the intervention was made.

Mr. Lewis: If I may, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The difficulty is that the hon. member ought not to speak twice on the same point of order. If the hon. member strongly wishes to speak again, perhaps I could recognize him on a different point of order.

Mr. Lewis: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Fine. It seems to me that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) raises a valid point, subject to the continuation of the quotation in Beauchesne to which he referred. He referred to Citation 332. To continue from where the hon. member left off, it reads:

> —(Members) may quote an article or a book stating facts, but a commentary on any proceeding or any discussion in the House, with the object of swinging an opinion to one side or the other, is out of order.

The question is whether or not the quotations made by the minister qualify under the terms of a commentary on any proceeding or discussion in the House. The Chair will now take into consideration the hon. member's point of order and listen carefully to the minister to determine whether his remarks fit into that specific category. The hon. member rises on a fresh point or order?

● (2020)

Mr. Lewis: If I may—

Some hon. Members: No.

High Interest Rates

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) places me in a very difficult position. In the first place he asks me to apply the rules rather rigidly. In the second place he asks to speak twice on the same point or order, which is not permitted. I offered him the floor on a fresh point of order.

Mr. Lewis: On a fresh point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will take this into account. The quotation is referred to in the Debates of March 17, 1933, far before the time of TV.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the reason for my reference to the position taken by the finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre was to say that I had the opportunity of engaging in a radio discussion with the hon. member for St. John's East to discuss housing matters earlier this fall. The point I wanted to make was that that call, request or admonition was that the government, in response to conditions at that time in September, should undertake, and I recall the words he used, a massive government intervention in housing.

I said in the House before that I have had a very difficult time reconciling, on one hand, the position of the Progressive Conservative housing critic with, on the other hand, the words of their finance critic which I have just quoted. I found it very difficult to reconcile this approach. Nonetheless, that contradiction does not surprise me at all. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, in speaking in the House, referred to that very area of government intervention. On budget night he said "It is not Conservative Party policy to support government intervention and certainly not massive government intervention".

Finally, in that vein, I am not surprised at the contradiction. I have before me a document which was requested by the Conservative government when in office not that long ago. I tabled it in this House in November of last year. It was the major thrust of that party when it had the responsibility for leading in the area of housing and all other government matters.

I refer to page 2 of the document. This shows what the government of the day, the Conservative Party, thought about housing. I quote as follows from the "Terms of Reference" of the document which I tabled in this House:

> Cabinet has directed that the task force study the potential for privatizing at least certain of the activities (as opposed to privatization of the corporation as a going concern), or encouraging the private sector to take a larger role in certain of the activities of CMHC. The task force report would focus on:
> (i) The policy implications of privatization in each case;
> (ii) The legal and financial implications of privatization;
>
> (iii) Alternate modes of privatization in each case with a discussion of a preferred modality;
> (iv) A proposed strategy and timetable for privatization.

What were the recommendations to the federal government which ordered the study for privatization? They read:

> Public Housing
> That the government commence negotiations with the provinces with a view to eliminating subsidies by January 1, 1982.
> Residential Rehabilitation
> That no further funding be considered for landlords until this section has been carefully reviewed.
> Non-Profit and Co-operatives
> That funding be withdrawn from both the public and private non-profit and co-operative programs with the thought of developing a more efficient delivery system of benefits—

I have daily representations from members on all sides of the House to increase this program. The government has increased the production of non-profit housing, or co-op housing to serve Canadians on modest income, multiple accommodation equivalent to rental accommodation from one side of the country to the other. When I met with the provincial ministers of housing, the request of the ministers was almost universal that this government, rather than withdrawing from the provision of non-profit housing, should in fact increase it. I introduced these comments to show that the approach of this government, in response to the representations that were apparent to all Canadians, has been to respond in a sensitive and sensible way to the housing need of Canadians at this time.

Criticisms and statements have been made by members opposite that we have the worst crisis since World War II. That is not true. The over-all vacancy rate for rental accommodation was lower in this country many times in the last few years.

Mr. Lewis: Give us the years.

Mr. Cosgrove: Nineteen sixty-seven, 1974, 1975 and 1976. The criticism is made of 100,000 people facing the risk of losing their homes and only 12,000 receiving contributions. As the Minister of Finance indicated, as the budget papers demonstrate and as I, as the minister responsible for housing for this government, say, the Canada Mortgage renewal plan is available to any Canadian facing the difficulty of mortgage renewal who qualifies for the assistance we have promised in that document.

The comment was made that $3,000 is scarcely enough to keep the sheriff from the door. I would point out that $3,000 equates with five or six points of interest rates.

In summary, the response of the government to a difficult problem has been a sensitive one. We have indicated that the government is listening. The government is addressing people, particularly those in need, and helping them in a way that involves not only the federal government, but provincial and municipal governments and the private sector.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today we have heard from two cabinet ministers and a number of Liberal backbench members who have told us how great the economy is, what a wonderful budget we have had, how stupid and ignorant the members of the opposition are who are critical of the budget or the economy. In the almost 20 years I have been here, I have never seen such unanimous opposition to a budget from every group in society in our country. Can any member tell me an occasion when the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have agreed on anything? When did both of them agree with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Independent Businessmen's Association? All of them are unanimous in their condemnation of this budget. It is not surprising that the minister for housing, who just sat down, said that we have been in worse situations since World War II than we are in today. We have the largest number of unemployed and the highest rate of inflation that we have had since the "dirty thirties". Hon. members on the other side are trying to tell us that things are really quite good.

• (2030)

Mr. Cosgrove: Just check the facts.

Mr. Deans: These are the facts.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, these are the facts, and I shall come to them in a few moments.

I listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) this afternoon. What did he say? Inflation must be opposed. He did not use that famous, immortal phrase of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who said a few years ago that we have wrestled inflation to the ground. No, he did not say that. Inflation is the main enemy. We must beat inflation. He argued that the government is opposed to an expansionist policy. It has adopted a gradual first approach. In order to fight inflation, the government will have to cut back on the levels of goods and services that it provides. Next year's rate of growth for government expenditures will be reduced to 11.5 per cent, which the minister pointed out, quite correctly, will be less than the rate of inflation. In other words, the minister is admitting that we will have at least 12 per cent inflation. That is a great thing for the Canadian people to look forward to!

We have heard these arguments before. We have heard these arguments in the 1930s. What is the response of the Conservatives? They want more cutbacks and greater restraint. I think they should both look at a very interesting situation which happened a couple of weeks ago. We had an election in the province of Manitoba. For the first time in the history of Manitoba a government was not re-elected.

The reasons for that are pretty obvious. The Conservative government that was elected in 1977 pledged to the people of Manitoba that it would be a government of restraint, that it would cut back on the activities of government and it would let the free enterprise system run its natural course. It would free the free enterprise system from the heavy hand of government. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, they cut back all the programs one can think of. They cut back on daycare programs; they cut back on programs for senior citizens; they cut back on programs for native people; they cut back on hospitals; they cut back on pharmacare. The people of Manitoba had four years to look at this. They said, "We do not want this". Therefore, they did not re-elect the Conservative government. That Conservative government believed and adopted the same kind of policies that the Thatcher government later adopted in Great Britain and which President Reagan has adopted in the United States. Those governments, in Great Britain and in the United States, will suffer the same fate as the Conservative government of Manitoba because people are not prepared to accept those kinds of conditions.

What is the policy of this government? The policy of the government has been very well explained by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I have tried very hard during my years as a Member of Parliament not to deal with individual people but to deal with policies. I should like to say publicly, Mr. Speaker, that it comes with ill grace from the Governor of the Bank of Canada who has his office in an $80 million glass tower, who was receiving a salary of $95,000 a year and who in the last week or so received a 10 per cent increase. For him to lecture the ordinary people of this country and to tell them that they have to pull in their belts and that they will have to do without in order to beat inflation is saying, "Do as I say, not do as I do". I think that the people of Canada deserve better than they are getting from the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Bouey is the Governor of the Bank of Canada because this Liberal government and the short-lived Conservative government wanted him there. They wanted him there because they believe the policies which he implemented and in which he believes, are the right policies. What are those policies? The Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance believe in those policies, even though it is obvious to everyone, except the governor, that the high interest rates that we have at the present time are driving us further into a recession. They have destroyed the construction industry; they are destroying the automobile industry; they have destroyed the farm equipment industry. But the Governor of the Bank of Canada believes, despite all the evidence that we have, that in order to get out of this recession and to beat inflation we will have to keep the interest rates high. He claims that this is necessary in order to fight inflation. He says that this is just a difficult period of transition and that it is needed in order to lower inflation. Again, I say that it is other people who will have the difficult period and not the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

A few days ago, in a speech he made in Montreal he said that we are in a weaker economic phase and that it does not mean that we should stop worrying about our underlying problem of high inflation and concern ourselves solely with the immediate problem of unsatisfactory economic growth over the near term. Then he said that present interest levels, the bank prime lending rates and the mortgage rates are at about 17 per cent and that this only looks high compared with past levels. If one has to buy a house and one is earning $100,000 a year, one can live with a 17 per cent or a 20 per cent interest rate. The continued high interest rate policy will do two things. It will add to the inflationary pressures in the economy and it will reinforce inflationary expectations. Any worker faced with a 12 per cent inflation who has any ability to negotiate his wages, will ask for a 12 per cent increase to enable him to hold his own and stay where he is. It will also cut deeper into our economic production, close down factories and throw workers out of work.

I should like to spend a couple of minutes on comments made by two Liberal backbenchers whom we do not often hear from. I heard the hon. member from Cape Breton-East Richmond extolling the virtues of the government and all the good things they have done. When I interjected and asked him to tell me about the rate of unemployment in Cape Breton, the hon. member did not answer. He did not give me the figures, Mr. Speaker, although I am sure he knows them better than I do. He answered me by taunting me with the fact—and this is true and I do not apologize for it—that the NDP is opposed to nuclear plants and to heavy water plants. That is true, Mr. Speaker. We are not worried, as are many people who are not in politics, about the effects for a year or two. We are worried about the effects of waste products from the production of power in nuclear plants for thousands of years to come.

I am pleased that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is present in the House, because the rate of unemployment in Cape Breton is now 13 per cent, and I say to that member that it is a disgrace and it is unnecessary for unemployment to be at that rate in any part of this country. I say to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond that, instead of criticizing the NDP for opposing the heavy water plant, he should get after his Liberal government and the provincial Conservative government in Nova Scotia which between them have not put in the money necessary to modernize the steel plant at Sydney so that it can be a viable economic operation.

● (2040)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order so that the record will show very clearly that the New Democratic Party would like to see the Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury heavy water plants closed, thereby throwing 900 people out of work. For the hon. member's edification, the Government of Canada provided moneys to the Sydney Steel Corporation to the tune of $96.2 million for renovations to that particular industry in my constituency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The hon. member raises a point of debate; it is not a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: That is not a point of order, and I hope Mr. Speaker will take into account the time the hon. member used, when taking into consideration my time. The Liberal Government of Canada and the Conservative government of Nova Scotia put enough money into the Sydney Steel Plant so that it will not close down. The hon. member knows the point I am trying to make, that they have not put in the kind of money which will make the plant a modern, economic and viable unit. The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) asked what kind of socialistic party the NDP is. He made some references which I will not even attempt to answer. He suggested that somehow we are akin to a communist party. If the hon. member wants to know what kind of socialist party we are, he should look at the socialist government of France. President Mitterrand has made it very clear that fighting unemployment is more important than fighting inflation. President Mitterrand increased the minimum wage and the old age pension benefits in France. This is the kind of party we are. We are happy to be associated with the present government of France.

Let me turn to what I think is the most serious problem in the country, the fact that, according to Statistics Canada, in October 1981 the number of unemployed was 989,000. This was an increase of more than a 100,000 over the same period in 1980. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 8.3 per cent, an increase of eight-tenths of a percentage point over the same period last year. I wish the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean were present because he would know that the number of unemployed in the province of Quebec in the month of October was 320,000. That is a disgrace.

We must keep in mind that those figures do not tell the entire story. Between October and November in the province of Quebec 69,000 people disappeared from the labour force. They found that it was useless to look for work, and they just stopped looking for it. Once they stopped looking for work, they were not included on the list of unemployed because the figures of Statistics Canada are based on people who are not only unemployed but who are actively seeking work. There was no point in looking for work, so close to 150,000 people across Canada disappeared from the labour force. We have often talked about more than one million people being unemployed. Some hon. members of the House on both sides, depending upon whether they are in government or in opposition when they make the argument, frequently hear from professors who have good positions with tenure and fairly decent salaries and from some newspaper editorial writers who say that being unemployed is not very serious because there are unemployment insurance and welfare programs. They indicate, for example, that if a husband is not working his wife is, and that people are really not hurt or are trying to look for work.

During the Christmas-New Year's break last year I took the opportunity to meet some of the unemployed people in my constituency in an attempt to discover just what it meant to be unemployed. I should like to put a couple of illustrations on the record. First, I met a 57-year old man had worked for a milling company for 35 years; he never had another job. At the time the plant closed down he was earning about $8.61 per hour or $344 per week. His union had negotiated a good severance agreement, so he received one week's pay for each year that he worked, or approximately $12,000. Of course he received his unemployment insurance benefits, but his pension plan was not very good; his pension was very small. Let us assume that the severance pay and unemployment insurance would carry him fairly reasonably for a year. At age 58 he would be left with virtually nothing until he reached the age of 65 when he qualified for old age pension and the Canada Pension Plan. I should like one of the ministers to rise and explain to this man what he should and could do until he reaches age 65. The job opportunities for a man who is 57 or 58 years old are virtually nil.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps Gerald Bouey should explain it.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, I would like Mr. Bouey to explain it. Second, I met a man who came from Portugal to Canada in 1959 because he heard it was a great country. Of course it is a great country. He worked as a labourer for approximately 15 years. From 1959 until a few years ago he was able to work between 8 and 11 months of the year. In 1980, thanks to a slowdown in the economy and thanks to the stop the then Conservative government of Manitoba put on the building of senior citizens homes, nursing home facilities and public housing, there was virtually no construction. In 1980 he worked only eleven weeks. His wife went out to work although she was not well. When I saw him last he did not know how he would manage. He was thinking about moving from Winnipeg, which he liked very much, but there was nothing for him to do there. These are the kinds of problems about which I wish ministers would think when they try to tell us that things are not very bad. There are people whose lives are being wrecked.

I cannot remember whether it was the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) or the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean who told us about how the budget proposals would help hundreds of thousands of poor people, the kind of people they represent. I know they will not believe anything hon. members on the opposition side say because, after all, supposedly we are partisan and will oppose anything they say. But I should like to refer to a position paper which was not developed by the NDP or some radical trade union. It was developed by the Canadian Council on Social Development which takes in almost every private and public organization in the welfare system. I should like to quote a few paragraphs from its analysis of the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). The first paragraph reads as follows:

> For taxpayers in the $50,000-$75,000 income group, the government will take an additional $105.6 million, but will lose $191,125,000. This means a net gain for this income class of $85,525,000.

In other words, the minister proposes to take from the middle class and give it to the rich. I wonder how many of these rich people live in the constituencies of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond or the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel). The council states further:

● (2050)

> When we consider all taxpayers earning $40,000 or more, 98 per cent of the increased federal taxes resulting from the budget are redistributed within the same income category.
> While there is some equity in eliminating tax advantages that do not apply equally to all income groups, we must question the wisdom of this expenditure of tax revenues. For these upper income categories, the government is giving a whopping handout of $735 million, which is > —almost half of the current federal contribution to provincial and municipal welfare programs;
> —almost as much as the proposed cutback of funds to health and post-secondary education;
> —and which by comparison would be enough to increase the Child Tax Credit by about $200, which would give additional assistance to Canada's working poor.

This is the analysis of the budget, in just a few sentences, of an organization which is not political or radical but which represents people who work with the people in Canada who need assistance because they are sick or old or poor.

Again and again we are told by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, "We cannot afford it", and we are asked, "What do you propose?" One of the simple proposals which we have made is that the government receive a good part of the money from those who have it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I thought I had been indicating to him that his time was running out. Does he wish to seek unanimous consent of the House to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That permission is usually given for a moment or two.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the offer. Let me be very brief and put on the record the fact that the profits of banks have never been as high as they are at the present time and that bank profits have increased by over 37 per cent in the last year. After taxes, the big five banks made profits of $1,640 million in 1981. That is an increase of about $500 million over what they made the year before. Not only are their profits very, very high, but they have also been permitted by this Liberal government to pay taxes at a very low rate. We say that to begin to meet the needs of people and to begin to find the money that the government needs to provide services for the people of Canada, it should be done by taking from those who have the money and those who are making exorbitant, unconscionable profits. It should be taken from the banks, as they can afford it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the motion of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), I should first want to note that few among us would argue that Canada is somehow immune from the inflation and other economic ills which have overtaken every western industrialized country. Indeed, Canada, with its heavy reliance on its export trade for its prosperity, is particularly vulnerable to the adverse economic developments that we have seen elsewhere in an increasingly interdependent international marketplace. If one considers the economic situations of our trading partners and other industrialized countries, Canada is to be seen in an enviable position. Nevertheless, there are obvious economic challenges facing Canadians today. They require a determined effort on the part of all sectors of our economy to overcome them.

While it is true that world circumstances have a major impact on our economy, there are things we can do at home to meet the economic challenges, and the government is doing them. For example, the government has concluded energy agreements with the western producing provinces. Those agreements provide not only a promising climate for massive investment in the oil and gas sector, but they will also bring benefits for the economy as a whole, including the manufacturing sectors.

We have recently forged a made-in-Canada Constitution which, among other things, will provide for the free flow of goods, services, capital and labour which are so essential to a strong and vital common market. We have also tabled a budget which is committed to overcoming the root cause of our present economic problems, namely, inflation. The budget is not a quick fix. It is a determined effort to minimize the difficult economic challenges we, as Canadians, face in the near future. At the same time, it will maximize our economic potential in the medium and longer term.

It would seem, judging from the motion of the hon. member, that some hon. members opposite have neglected to consider the broad economic benefits provided by the energy agreements reached with the governments of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Those agreements have created the underpinnings for our economic strategy for the decades ahead. Those accords not only provide for the further development of the petroleum sector, but for many other sectors throughout Canada as well. Indeed, the enormous economic spin-offs from the petroleum sector will provide for the greatest wave of capital investment in our history. Recent projections place investment at $1.5 trillion over the next decade, the great majority of which can be generated here in Canada.

We want all Canadians to share in the benefits and the economic opportunities of those accords. Accordingly, it was necessary not only to encourage Canadians to invest in their own petroleum sector, but also to strengthen the basic structure of our economic union. That, too, has now been accomplished with the approval of a made-in-Canada Constitution with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The social and political ramifications of the charter are more obvious than its economic ramifications of that charter. Those economic elements will do much to ensure that all Canadians in the future have the opportunity to share in the material benefits of our economic growth. The charter provides for a national common market unhampered by artificial internal barriers erected by regions or by provincial governments. The charter encourages the free flow of goods, services, capital and labour which are so essential if we are to maximize our true economic potential. The new Constitution does something more. It also provides investors with a more stable and understandable economic environment. This reassurance of our economic union will, in turn, create a higher degree of investment and provide more jobs and opportunities for all.

The realization of our full economic potential and the resolution of many of our current economic challenges can be achieved when large capital investment is matched with greater productivity and more sourcing of Canadian goods and services. The new Constitution accordingly provides our business community with the assurance of a greater domestic market for its goods and services.

Underlying the energy agreements and the Charter of Rights is the concept of sharing and the belief that all Canadians, from every province and territory, have the right to share in the benefits which both nature and technology have bestowed upon us. The more equitable distribution of Canada's vast wealth among all regions has been a goal of this government, and it continues to be a goal in the economic program submitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) earlier in this session. However, equity is only one aspect of our total economic program.

If one is to appreciate fully the broad elements of the government's commitment to meet the economic challenges now confronting Canadians, one must consider its fundamental objectives. The most important of these objectives is our pledge to reduce inflation. We cannot be satisfied with living with inflation. Such complacency will only hinder growth and create more unemployment. The recent budget abjures piecemeal measures. This is seen in the budget's commitment to match monetary restraint, that is, restraint in the growth of the money supply and credit, with a greater measure of fiscal restraint, including federal government spending.

In recent years, members opposite have strongly criticized the government for what they called fiscal irresponsibility, deploring in particular budget deficits. Such members were quick to argue that the budget deficit had to be reduced significantly if inflation were to be brought under control. Accordingly, I find it strange that these same critics, who now attack the budget, have suddenly forgotten what to them was, only a short time ago, so important.

Fiscal restraint proposed in the budget is part of the government's commitment to reduce deficit spending. Measures included in the budget will reduce the government's borrowing requirements from almost $10 billion this year to $6.6 billion in 1982-1983. The budgetary deficit is projected to drop from about $15 billion to about $10 billion over the same period. This reduction in such a short period is substantial. It will contribute in a major way to strengthening the government's financial position which, in turn, should relieve the pressure on capital markets and thus contribute to lower interest rates for both corporate and private investors. This objective will be reinforced through increased revenues deriving from energy agreements and a more equitable structure in our tax system.

The belief in the soundness of the government's attempt to reduce inflation through a balanced application of restraint on expenditure and some increase in revenue is shared by many Canadians. For example, a recent article in The Globe and Mail stated:

> Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's budget was a good one. Its broad strategy is fundamentally sound. A greater degree of fiscal restraint can indeed take some of the pressure off monetary policy and interest rates in resisting inflation and pave the way for future growth.

The government shares the concern of all Canadians during the current period of sluggish international economic growth. However, there is no alternative that would produce better short term results without harming the medium and long-term prospects for sustained growth in our economy.

Concern over the short term has prompted some to question the desirability of pursuing a policy of deficit reduction at present because of the danger of accentuated recession. Such critics argue that if one takes into account distortions introduced by inflation and the fact that revenues of the provincial and the national governments together are in surplus, there is no need for deficit reduction.

Superficially, that argument is attractive, relying on a basic Keynesian belief that fiscal policy should be the chief element in the government's arsenal for managing short term output and employment. Our budget strategy is, however, more far-sighted. It is based on the belief that fiscal and monetary policy working together can produce sound economic performance with regard to inflation and its concomitant of unemployment.

Certainly, we must be realistic about the present economic situation when deciding what approach to adopt. It is clear that inflation remains a long-term problem. It cannot be reduced quickly. There are too many international pressures and too much built-in inertia in the inflationary process itself for that to happen. Therefore, while proposing certain short-term remedial measures to help those most in need, the government is creating the circumstances for medium to long-term future growth for a stronger, more stable economy.

The government has had to work under considerable limitations in developing such economic strategy. Essentially, the question is how best to resist an increase in inflation without at the same time committing the economy to a deep, prolonged recession. The federal government deficit reduction is clearly a fundamental element of an over-all strategy best suited to meet this difficult dilemma.

National economic renewal, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has asserted, is the overriding priority of this government. "Economic renewal must be accomplished within the restraints required to reduce inflation", as he has noted. Indeed, if Canadians are to reap the tremendous opportunities for growth and development in all regions, we must reduce inflation as well as to increase investment, modernization and development.

The federal government has an important leadership role to play in managing and exploiting opportunities and ensuring that the benefits are shared equally by all Canadians. The government, as part of its over-all fiscal plan, is allocating $42 billion to economic development and over $18 billion to energy development over the next five years.

There are many large capital projects planned for the next two decades. The recent major projects task force, composed of business and labour representatives, estimated that the total value of identified projects is approximately $500 billion to the year 2000. Projects in the field of industrial development, resource development, the transport of bulk commodities and export promotion, all hold great promise for our economic future. The savings made through the pursuit of a policy of deficit reduction and fiscal restraint will find countless outlets for productive use.

As the paper on "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", included in the budget documents, states:

> Close co-operation between governments, business and labour will be needed to permit Canada to develop the industrial capacity to build the machinery and other products needed for resource development in Canada and abroad.

For example, a private sector export trade development board has been created to give the business community a greater opportunity to contribute to the formulation of trade policy, a major priority in the government's current economic strategy. And seeking greater co-operation between the public sector and the private sector, the government is also committed to a careful examination of our regulatory systems to ensure that the rules are clear and the procedures efficient so that they guide business enterprise rather than inhibit it.

We also seek in our economic planning to overcome the mismatch between skills and available jobs which has emerged as a key constraint on economic development and a serious problem for working Canadians. As the budget notes, as the pattern of economic activity changes so does the availability of job opportunities in terms of both their location and their skill requirements. Here is a challenge for greater consultation and co-operation between the public and private sectors. The result of these and other initiatives will be a stronger, investment-led economy, yet one which is more internationally competitive. I would ask hon. members opposite whether this is not preferable to an economy with an over-extended current account deficit paralleling a large federal deficit. This is why the economic program announced by the Minister of Finance is sound and, in the circumstances, the most sensible for dealing with our current economic challenges.

Clearly Canada, like all western industrialized economies, faces difficult economic decisions. In many respects Canada is, indeed, in an enviable position with its enormous resource and industrial potential. However, our sheer territorial size, our small population, the distances to markets and our reliance on export trade pose many difficulties to our growth. Nevertheless, our economic future is bright.

As I have noted, we have set the essential foundation for sustained economic growth by reaching energy accords with the western producing provinces. The direct and spin-off effects of those agreements will set the stage for massive new investment in Canada. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms as part of the Constitution creates a true common market, an economic union which provides for the free flow of goods, services, capital and labour, unrestricted by internal barriers. That move will help to ensure that all productive factors are used as efficiently as possible.

The budget attempts to take advantage of our basic strengths. It does so by promoting a balanced application of spending restraint and increase in revenue. The necessary restraint required to reduce the federal deficit so as to counter the forces of inflation and to promote economic growth is being broadly shared by government, business and private individuals to ensure a healthy economy.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I take no pleasure in joining my colleagues to speak to this motion. I support the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in the motion which states:

That this House censures the government for its perpetual, excessive, and ineffective reliance on a high interest rate policy, which has not only created the worst economic recession in Canada since the 1930s, but which also continues to threaten the survival of thousands of small enterprises, adds more Canadians daily to the ranks of the million already out of work, and confronts home owners and renters alike with the worst housing crisis since the Second World War.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) rose in the House earlier this evening and said this is not the worst crisis we have had, and he mentioned other years when we had worse crises. I do not care whether it is the worst crisis, all I know is that it is a terrible crisis in relation to housing, inflation, interest rates and unemployment, yet the Minister of Public Works can quibble over whether this is the worst crisis we have had since the thirties.

On December 3 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated in Toronto that the blame for high interest rates lies with the banks, the market economy and individuals who want good returns on Canada Savings Bonds, not with his government. This Prime Minister never takes the blame for things he does. Who controls interest rates in Canada? Are they controlled by the market economy, by individuals or by the banks? Surely there is not one person in the House who believes that any of these can control interest rates. Only the Bank of Canada can control interest rates, and the government controls the Bank of Canada. There is no question as to who is controlling rates and stopping those interest rates from coming down. Anyone with any experience in the marketplace or who has been in the investment business can tell you that the Bank of Canada is controlling the treasury bill rate.

If the government believes the banks are responsible, then let them release the banks from the regulation that prevents them from moving interest rates down freely. I challenge the government to do that. I challenge the Bank of Canada, through the government, to get out of the treasury bill market and find out how fast interest rates will come down. They would come down very fast. The banks do not like the rates going up and down. Anyone in the finance industry will tell you that any financial institution needs steady rates. They do not care what the rates are, how high or how low; it is the spread between deposits and loans that is important. Unfortunately the government continues to spread the big lie that the banks are solely responsible.

No one is innocent, but the banks are not solely responsible. It is the Bank of Canada that is mainly responsible. Everyone knows that the Bank of Canada can drop interest rates if that is desired, but not the chartered banks. The chartered banks take their cue from the Bank of Canada and no one else.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said in the House today that he had the support of the House for his budget. If he had said he had the support of the majority of the House, the Liberal members, that would have been a valid statement, but to stand up here and say he had the support of the House is ridiculous.

The Minister of Finance said that interest rates are going to come down and the government is going to beat inflation. Quite frankly we know they are not, because he said in the budget what he expects. All one has to do is to read the budget which says that the government expects interest rates to come down by 1 per cent per year over the next four years. That is what the government expects, and that is what the average person out there is faced with. That is what the average person has to contend with over the next four years—more high interest rates.

We may not have the worst economic recession since the 1930s, but it is awfully close. We are not going to argue whether it is the worst, but I do not want to see anything worse than this. Some 140,000 Canadians have lost their jobs in the last short while and 50,000 have stopped looking for work. There are almost a million people in Canada out of work.

Let me put to rest once and for all the question as to whether the Prime Minister cares. Twenty-eight years ago when the Minister of Finance came to the House of Commons, the average unemployment rate in his riding was 25 per cent. Today, 28 years later, the average unemployment rate is still 25 per cent. Let him stand and deny that. He would not dare. He keeps getting elected by giving special grants in his riding, and he has been doing that for years. Any member who does not agree, let him please stand up.

What has this government offered small business? The minister says he is offering something to small business. At page five of the budget he said that abnormally high interest rates have had a particularly adverse effect on many small businesses. So what does he do? He guts the Small Business Development Bond. He extends it for one more year, but the only way that businessmen can get it is if they are going bankrupt or their business is failing. After these businessmen go to the banks or to the FBDB and are not able to get any money, they finally go to the government and apply for a Small Business Development Bond. The Minister of Finance, being as generous as he always is, says they can have the Small Business Development Bond at an excellent rate of interest.

But what does the budget say about the rate of interest? Under the former provisions of the Small Business Development Bond, money could be borrowed at one half of prime plus up to 3 per cent, based on the marginal tax rate of the particular bank. For example, if the prime rate is 18 per cent and you borrow from the Small Business Development Bond, it would be 9 per cent. Based on the marginal tax rate of the bank, you could be borrowing at a rate of 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent. Under the provisions of the budget, the deal that the minister is now offering sets out that if, for example, the prime rate is 18 per cent, you must subtract 6 per cent because the banks will be taxed on that. The rate is back down to 12 per cent, and half of that is taken away, leaving 6 per cent. The other 6 per cent on which the banks will be taxed is added back on to bring the rate back to 12 per cent. Based on the marginal tax rate of the bank, one per cent is added to that, and it is back to 12 per cent, 13 per cent or 14 per cent. In effect, what the minister has done and is afraid to admit is that he has not only gutted the Small Business Development Bond, he has raised the interest rates on it by 2 per cent. He does not have the courage to stand up in the House and say that that is what he has done.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen are up in arms, and why not? The government will never again get support from that association. All that business will do is to march to Ottawa when the government passes legislation to plead with the government to roll back certain provisions of the legislation. They have to take this course of action with this budget.

Thousands of letters are being sent to the government from the small insurance companies which say that the government is driving them out of business. But the government does not care. The companies are lining up to try to get concessions. What does the Minister of Finance do about this situation? Of all things, he offers jobs to a group of unemployed miners from Cape Breton in Fernie, B.C. in February of 1982. They accepted that offer on the condition that they get a housing subsidy from the employer, and the employer agreed. Now these miners are telling the employer that perhaps they do not want to move because that subsidy becomes a taxable benefit. All the minister can say is that he will consider that problem.

The housing requirement in Canada is for 220,000 units. Until recently we expected to have 170,000 units for 1981. This is a shortfall of 50,000 units. We have now discovered that CMHC projects that the number of completed units for 1981 and into 1982 may be as small as 135,000. The government says it has a solution for this also. It will provide a benefit of $350 million to ease the crisis. When this figure is dissected, we find that $150 million is provided for the first year and $200 million for the second year. The government will provide an interest-free loan of $7,500 for 15,000 rental units, and this figure of $112 million must be subtracted from the $150 million. That leaves $38 million for home owners who are in trouble. This means that 13,000 people in Canada can receive assistance for their mortgages from the government this year. The statistics suggest that over 900,000 people are renewing their mortgages, and CMHC statistics reveal that one in 11 will have difficulty in paying his mortgage, but yet only 13,000 will be helped.

Of the 220,000 units needed in Canada, 110,000 are rental units. What is this government offering? It is offering help to 13,000 people. The Minister of Finance and other Liberals continue to say that they will help Canadians, but they are providing no help. The vacancy rates in many parts of Canada are zero. The minister stood up in the House to say that he would extend the MURBs, and then in a whisper he said, "until December 31, 1981." The minister is obviously not aware that many investors in rental housing require up to eight years to recover their investment. The soft costs were not important until the interest rates went up to a critical 13 per cent, 14 per cent or more. The soft costs were of exceptional benefit to those investors who were building rental units, but the Minister of Finance introduced his budget in isolation. He now says he would like to consult with business after the fact.

Mr. Taylor: Then he left for Scotland.

Mr. Deans: What's wrong with Scotland?

Mr. Wright: This government has eroded business confidence, and very few businesses are going to increase capital spending next year. As I have indicated, unemployment is not going down. The minister has admitted in his budget that unemployment will not go down but will remain at above 8 per cent for the next year. If inflation does go down, it will only go down by one per cent.

In 1973, the government said that inflation was beaten. However, it is still with us. In 1975, the Bank of Canada said it had solved the problem of high interest rates and that it would control the money supply to prevent the problem of high interest rates. That has not been solved. In 1973, the government said that Canada would have oil self-sufficiency. We do not have it. The government indicated in 1974 that government spending would be under control. Some control! This government ship has so many leaks that if it becomes unshoaled, it will sink fast and deep. The only way for it to survive is to remain on the shoal.

It is my intention to support the motion which was moved by my hon. friend from St. John's East. Hopefully the government will come to its senses and remedy the mistakes pointed out in the motion. It is my hope that the government will withdraw the budget, which will cause problems for the Liberal backbenchers such as they have never before experienced. The thirty members who met with the Minister of Finance are concerned about their seats, and so they should be.

Mr. Taylor: They voted for the budget.

Mr. Wright: Then, as my colleague says, they voted for the budget. And what a budget! The Minister of Finance stood in the House and said he would not withdraw the budget. He said he might make some changes if we pleaded with him. If we beg, he might make some changes, but will he be like the Minister of Public Works, who said that if people send him letters and telephone him, he will help them with their problems? The Minister of Public Works sent letters to hon. members on this side of the House saying that he would not provide assistance to people who are having trouble. He told us to wait for the budget. The Minister of Finance is the same as the Minister of Public Works; he is long on promises and short on deeds. We cannot go on presenting legislation and forcing business and the population to react to it. The government must come forward with legislation which business agrees will help. In order to do that, we have to consult with business before the deed is done and not after. We must consult before rather than after the budget.

This budget has been formulated by a group of civil servants. The minister must stand up and answer for that. He and other ministers must stand up and defend the budget, but they do not know how to defend it. It is a terrible budget to have to defend. They hope that in two years' time, in a year's time or whenever an election is held, the people will have forgotten.

Mr. Fretz: But they won't.

Mr. Wright: They certainly will not. We will not let them. Only God knows how anyone could forget the horror story of this budget.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): What do we have here, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), a couple of good Tories, are proposing that this government reduce interest rates. That is it. Those wonderful Tories now have an instant cure for interest rates. These are some marvellous people who brought us the Jerusalem embassy situation, the stimulative deficit and the Petro-Canada two-step.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Simmons: They are back with a brand new show appropriately dubbed the Tory interest rate magic. And boy, is it a winner! It is a seat filler. This time they have something for everybody. Do you have a problem meeting your mortgage payment? Don't worry about it; the Tories have the answer. Are you having trouble carrying inventory in your business? Relax; the Tories have just what you need. They have the Tory interest rate magic. They have your problem all figured out.

Or have they? Did they bother to tell the people of Canada that the people on this side of the House have mortgages too? We too would dearly love to see the interest rate reduced a few percentage points. I am sure the Tories have told the people that this government has the power to reduce interest rates, today or tomorrow morning, to 12 per cent, 10 per cent or 8 per cent, but did they bother to tell the people of Canada some of the consequences of such a decision? Did they happen to tell us about the people who own the money, the investors? Perhaps those investors might just put their money where they get the greatest return on it? If an investor can invest his or her money in Canada at, say, 10 per cent or in the United States at 16 per cent or 18 per cent, where is he or she going to put it?

I have a mortgage too. It is due in February, and as it now stands, my bank manager is going to say to me either "I have some good news for you" or "I have some bad news for you". The good news will be that the interest rate is down a percentage point or two since last February, or the bad news will be that it is up a percentage point or two. He will also say he can lend me money for my house at the present rate, if I am willing to pay that rate. He will have the money. However, let us suppose the United States rate remains high. Let us also suppose that this government decides today or tomorrow morning to reduce interest rates to 10 per cent or 12 per cent so that the Canadian rate would be substantially below the American rate. Imagine my situation in February when I walk into my bank manager's office to try to renew my mortgage. He would probably say to me that he has some good news and some bad news. The good news would be that the mortgage rate has dropped several percentage points. It would not be 16.75 per cent as it was last year; it would be down to 10 per cent. That would be good news, but then he would go on and tell me the bad news. The bad news would be that he does not have any money to lend. He would go on and tell me the reasons, which would be quite straightforward and easy to figure out. The investors who own the money would have taken their money to where they could make the most on it and where they could get the greatest return. They would have taken it out of the country to where the interest rate is higher, and that would be to the United States.

If I were asked whether I wanted a high interest rate or a low interest rate, my answer would be easy: of course I want a low interest rate. I am a mortgage holder too. I want a low rate, and so does every mortgage holder in the country. However, if my choice is renewing my mortgage or not renewing it and if my choice is keeping my house or not keeping it, that is really not a choice at all. Like every other mortgage holder in the country, I want to be able to renew my mortgage, which means that there will have to be money available for that purpose. It will not be available if the investor has taken his or her money to the United States where he or she can get a higher rate of return.

Mr. Taylor: You are sending oil rigs out of the country.

Mr. Simmons: If my good friend from Bow Valley would listen, he might learn something.

Mr. Taylor: Where is Bow Valley?

Mr. Simmons: I ask the gentleman from Bow Valley, did the Tories—

Mr. Taylor: Where is Bow Valley?

Mr. Simmons: If the hon. does not know where Bow Valley is, I will tell him. It is in his constituency of Bow River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Did the Tories bother to tell us the consequences of their magic interest rate solution? They did not because if they did, that would put the lie to their argument.

Mr. Deans: You tell us.

Mr. Simmons: That would expose the deception they are trying to perpetrate on the people of Canada. They wanted to privatize Petro-Canada, they wanted to move an embassy and they wanted to have a stimulative deficit. They thought then they had magic solutions. They have the same kind of magic solution tonight, but it is a solution that is all full of holes. It will not stand up to scrutiny. It will not fool the people of Canada. It will not fool the mortgage holder who wants to have money to renew his mortgage.

Mr. Taylor: The budget is putting people out of work and driving them out of the country. What is wrong with you?

Mr. Simmons: I did not expect the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to take this lying down. If the page would be so kind, I have a little ornament in my pocket which the hon. member might want to play with to occupy himself while I speak to the people who are trying to listen. Some people like to hear two sides of an argument. I am giving one side of this one. I have heard the other side from my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East. Is it not interesting that of all the people on the Tory side of the House it was he who was the annointed one? It was he who was chosen to move this particular resolution.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): And he will win his seat back too.

Mr. Simmons: I remember as far back as 1958 or 1959 when the hon. member for St. John's East was first elected to the House of Commons. He was on the radio almost every day in Newfoundland, and he became known as one of the great consumer advocates of Newfoundland. People used to say, whatever their partisan affiliation, if that member ever gets in government, he is going to do great things for the consumer because he has such a grasp of the issues. He talked about the kinds of programs children were exposed to over television. He talked about all kinds of consumer issues.

I watched when he got into government, as he did ever so briefly. I watched him and the Tory record for nine months. The record clearly shows that this gentleman, the mover of this resolution, my fellow Newfoundlander from St. John's East, did not, in his brief term in government, take one single initiative to address any of the consumer concerns he fought for for 20 years before he got into cabinet. There was not one issue, not one tittle, not one bit of legislation, not one item during the time he was in cabinet that he addressed. Therefore, we put the lie to his crusading. He is great on words and he is long on words, as he is in this resolution. However, he is terribly short on action when he gets in a position where he can do something about it.

I want to refer my good friends, whose blood pressure is rising unjustifiably, to another of their friends in a very friendly fashion. I am going to talk about their finance spokesman, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). We on this side think this man really has his head screwed on right. I refer to his interview in the November 7 edition of the Financial Post. I ask those on the Tory side of the House, the permanent opposition, to compare the spirit of that interview with the spirit of the resolution moved by the hon. member for St. John's East. I submit they are mutually exclusive. One says one thing and the other says the opposite. Here in the public record is the finance spokesman for the Tory party as being largely in support of the interest rate policy pursued by the Bank of Canada at this time. I refer to the Financial Post of November 7.

If that is not enough, let us put all the Tory Newfoundlanders together. Let us look at what my good friend, the junior member from Newfoundland, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the one-time Tory finance critic, had to say. He conceded outside the House that Canadian interest rates "will have to follow to some degree" rates in the United States. He said that in November, 1980. That was at another time when he had another incarnation. He was still wearing the finance hat. That was before his demotion to other matters. When the hon. member for St. John's West was still speaking for the Tory party on this issue, he was saying that we have to follow the United States interest rate. That, in essence, is what I have said tonight, not that we do it anxiously, happily or with any degree of satisfaction. We do it because we do not believe in fooling the people of Canada into thinking we can live in glass houses, bury our heads in the sand, ignore what is going on around us, ignore our trade relations with the United States, ignore that we live on a continent which has a very densely populated country many times the population of ours. We do not pretend to the Canadian people that we can somehow have artificial solutions to the problems we face in this country.

We have levelled with the Canadian people. We have been responsible to the Canadian people. I say to my hon. friend from St. John's East that this resolution is dishonest. For that reason I and members on this side will defeat it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being 9.45 it is my duty pursuant to Section 10 of Standing Order 58 to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

SUPPLY

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 10c, CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE—PROGRAM EXPENDITURES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 10c, in the amount of $8,900,000 under the Department of Justice—Canadian Unity Information Office—Program expenditures, in Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those who are in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those who are opposed to the motion will say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bell?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: The vote has already started.

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, I think all the Chair does now is to put the motion on the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), and that is the only vote that is taken. If the Chair will refer to a similar vote taken on June 22, 1978, where the division was called on a motion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), it shows at page 6687 of Hansard that the vote was called on a motion of Mr. Andras, who was then a member of this House. A vote is taken only on the motion of the member in whose name the motion stands before the House.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the hon. member knows the normal procedure in cases of votes on estimates. If a member wants to vote against the estimates, he gives notice to the House. That notice of wishing to vote against one item of the estimates is transformed, for the purposes of our procedure as adopted, and what is followed, as far as we can see from the precedents, is that that notice is transformed into a motion to concur in that particular item of the estimates. Therefore, if hon. members want to vote against that particular item in the estimates, when the motion to concur in that item is put to the House, they may vote against it.

I will cite a precedent in which one of my predecessors said the following about the exact situation which has been raised by hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

A Member wishing to vote against an estimate would be required to give notice—

This has been done.

—and motions for the adoption of unopposed estimates could be consolidated into a single question. Indeed that is the situation we have before us. The hon. member . . . has given notice that he would like to oppose a particular item and vote against it. Having given that notice the estimate is put in the form of a motion to the Chamber at which time hon. members have the right to vote for or against it.

● (2230)

We are following a procedure which has been followed and established in the process of voting the estimates. I think it is quite plain to hon. members that—

Mr. Lambert: It is wrong.

Madam Speaker: No, it is not wrong. As a matter of fact, it is quite right. Only the government can put motions to create expenses. That is why the notice to vote against it has to be transformed into a motion to concur. Therefore, my duty is to put to the House the motion to concur in that specific item of the estimates, which I have just done. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot hear what the hon. member has to say.

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Madam Speaker, I may have misheard. When I heard Your Honour put the question, the question was put on the bill that is before the House. It was not put on the motion of which notice is contained in today's Order Paper at page XI. The motion, Madam Speaker, is put on the notice standing in the name of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: If we can have a little bit of order we might get on with this particular task.

Mr. Nielsen: I make my point because of the difficulty which we have encountered with this procedure before, and it has been done in different ways before in the two most recent precedents. One was when the Speaker was in the Chair on June 22, 1978, when a similar bill was before the House. If one examines the record, the Speaker said on that occasion:

Therefore, the motion is that Vote 20 be concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

That is the motion, notice of which has been given by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. It occurs at page 6687 of Hansard:

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. SPEAKER: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Yea.

MR. SPEAKER: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Nay.

MR. SPEAKER: In my opinion, the yeas have it . . .

MR. SPEAKER: Is the House prepared to take this vote without further ringing of the bells?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Then this occurs:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andras)—

On that occasion the notice was standing in the name of Mr. Andras. The division was on that particular vote, in this case 10c. The same thing happened on June 22, 1978, when the motion was in the name of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member can help me, because there is no need to confuse the House. The hon. member was rising to tell me that I had not put to vote this specific item which the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe had intended to oppose. But I have read to the House that Vote 10c in the amount of $8,900,000, etc. That is what I have put to the House.

It is on this specific motion that I asked the House to vote. The hon. member is telling me now that this specific motion which one member has the intention of opposing should be voted on first. That is exactly what I am doing. It is what I am asking the House to do. That is normal.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that is exactly the procedure which I believe should be followed and which I did not hear, perhaps mistakenly so. My hearing was—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I am going to take a page out of your book, Pierre. My hearing was that the Chair put the question on the bill, and the notice of the hon. member was not put. The procedure of taking the vote on 10c is the proper procedure.

Madam Speaker: The member is quite mistaken. I suppose he was distracted when he was reading the motion, but I can understand that.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, every major business group, every major trade union, and every consumer organization has protested the inept, incompetent and totally negative effects of the budget of November 12 on the economy of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That inasmuch as every item in the budget is interrelated and the effect of each measure creates a problem with other measures, the Minister of Finance today withdraw the entire budget proposal of November 12, hire a whole new budget and tax planning team, and produce a new budget in January.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CHRISTMAS TRAVEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the cabinet ministers, after jetting home on government planes, and as they sit down with family and friends to 16-course Christmas dinners, recall the words on tens of thousands of Christmas cards: "Dear Mom, I would have been home for Christmas but the Liberal Party is now taxing my flight. It's just too much Mom when added to the gasoline taxes and the tax increases from the April and October budgets last year. Don't worry, Mom, I will sit quietly alone in my room and finish off your last CARE package. Damn the Liberals, but love to Dad."

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

EFFECT OF PROPOSED POSTAL RATE INCREASES ON VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the government refuses to recognize the devastating effects on this country's voluntary groups of its proposed massive increases in postal rates. For example, the $1,200 annual increase in postal costs to the Waterloo regional branch of the Canadian Mental Health Association will make it extremely difficult for that agency to mobilize its 250 volunteers. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That this House urge the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, the Secretary of State in his role as minister responsible for the voluntary action program, or the Minister of Finance, to stand in his place and tell the volunteers of Canada why this government is ignoring and stifling the giving and caring spirit which are more needed than ever due to unprecedented unemployment and inflation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REMOVAL OF UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I too rise under Standing Order 43 on a very urgent matter requiring immediate government action. All CMHC owned and operated apartments located in the lower mainland of B.C., and in many other parts of Canada, are insulated with poisonous urea formaldehyde foam. Since the minister for CMHC, their landlord, provided no hazard warnings to tenants who now suffer health problems, and inasmuch as this is another example of the irresponsibility of this minister and this government which promoted UFFI but refuse to help the victims, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the minister immediately order CMHC to rip out this foam insulation from all CMHC buildings, compensate for any health problems, and establish this as a precedent for compensating all victims of urea formaldehyde foam insulation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

S.O. 43

ARMED SERVICES' FLIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, following along the same line as the motion of the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I should like to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the provision of the Liberal budget which would tax Canadian forces personnel on CFB flights coming home to visit their families at Christmas be thrown out, preferably together with the Minister of Finance.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PROTECTION OF POLAR BEAR PASS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that the international biological program has identified the Polar Bear Pass in the Canadian Arctic as one of approximately 140 environmentally sensitive sites that are worthy of protection, and given the fact that the interdepartmental working group has recently issued a report calling for multiple land use in the Pass so as to accommodate the interests of non-renewable resource developers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the federal government reject the recommendations being made by the working group and immediately take steps to ensure that this environmentally sensitive area will be protected from the future activities of resource developers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

ISSUANCE OF NEW STAMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, since the Canada Post Corporation has just unveiled its new no-price stamp, with just a maple leaf and the letter "A", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That the House extends its best wishes to the government on the issuing of this new stamp, and trusts that since the former Post Office Department made such an awful mess of delivering letters with stamps on them, the Canada Post Corporation may have better luck delivering stamps with letters on them.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF NEW BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, hundreds of farmers and small business men are meeting daily with chartered accountants and lawyers because of the confusion caused in their operations by the November 12 budget, in annuities, depreciation, capital gains tax and the business structure in general. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Finance put an end to the uncertainty and confusion for farmers and small business men and take steps immediately to bring in a new budget.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

CALL FOR INCREASE IN COMPANY PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the coming celebration of Christmas which might bypass many retired railway employees, some of whom receive less than $100 a month from the company pension, and in view of the fact that widows receive only one half of the pension increases that are made, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the House request the Minister of Transport to use his influence with the railway companies to increase railway pensions, index them to protect against inflation, and increase the widows' allowance to 75 per cent immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

SENIOR CITIZENS BELOW POVERTY LEVEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare told a Liberal fund-raising dinner that Canada's pension system is woefully inadequate for the 2.3 million senior citizens who depend on it and that more than half of all pensioners who are dependent on the guaranteed income supplement can be referred to as being on welfare, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House again calls upon the powers that be on the government side of the House to get their priorities straight, find the moneys to bring Canada's seniors above the poverty level and make the Liberal Party's slogan of "Caring and Sharing" more meaningful than pious statements to Liberal fund-raising dinners.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

CHOICE OF LOCATION FOR HEAVY OIL UPGRADER IN SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, because of the involvement of Petro-Canada in the Saskatchewan heavy oil upgrader for 15 per cent of that operation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources consult with the management of Petro-Canada so that they may make it clear to the people of Canada, the real shareholders of Petro-Canada, their choice for the location of the heavy oil upgrader in Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON LOW INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that it has become crystal clear that the budget is having disastrous effects on low-income working Canadians because of the already high taxes placed on gasoline and heating oil, interest rates, and now the direct and indirect taxes placed on the low-income earners' employee benefits in this budget, was the minister not aware of the difficulties and loss of income these low-income earners were suffering already? Will he not announce major changes in the budget before Christmas in these areas, or will he just be creating a group of low-income-earning tax return law breakers in this country? That may be the only way by which they will be able to live with some dignity in the coming year.

• (1115)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to carry out the hon. member's wish, because the budget has provided for reduced taxes or no tax increases for 12 million taxpayers. It has provided substantial tax relief to low-income families because of changes in the federal tax. Whatever increased taxes are to be collected, they are, by design, to be collected from taxpayers in high-income groups. I wonder why the hon. member would suggest that the budget has not distributed in a fairer way the burden of taxation in the country.

EQUITY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, high interest rates, taxes on energy, and now these taxes on employee benefits, are a very difficult pill for these people to swallow. Restaurant workers must dig into their already low incomes to pay for their meal privileges. Department store clerks will have to dig into their already low incomes to pay for their purchasing benefits. Farmers and small-business men will have to dig into their pensions when they retire to pay their capital gains taxes, health insurance premiums, life insurance premiums, and I could go on and on. When will the minister explain to low-income Canadians the equity in this budget? Will he do it before Christmas, or wait until some time in the New Year?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has raised a whole series of issues. Let me deal with one which has been referred to by the hon. member. This is the third time in the past week an hon. member opposite has stated that it is the intention of the budget to tax employee discounts. That is absolutely untrue, and I wish hon. members would stop ascrib-ing to the budget difficulties which do not exist. Those statements are false.

Mr. Schellenberger: That is an unbelievable answer.

ARMED SERVICES' FLIGHTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Has the Minister of National Defence approved or spoken to the Minister of Finance about taxes on servicemen's flights home? These people have been asked by Canadians to protect their freedoms in other countries. Or are the troops going to be singing next year at Christmas, "I'd be home for Christmas but Rompkey taxed my flight"?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think it is time we stopped speculating about the consequences of the budget and looked instead at the realities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: The hon. member has jumped to a false conclusion about troops moving from Germany to Canada. As far as I am concerned, with respect to people moving on leave or moving on duty there is no question of their being taxed. When the Minister of Finance was formulating the budget one of the principles he kept in mind was equity, and I am sure the minister will see to it that there is equity in this case.

EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS TO MEDICAL AND DENTAL PLANS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. It concerns the negative impact of the now notorious MacEachen budget on ordinary working Canadians. Is the minister aware that the budgetary provisions which require that employer contributions to medical and dental plans be regarded as taxable benefits will, in essence, reduce the take-home pay of Canadian workers and are yet another tax grab from middle and low-income groups? Is the minister aware of this?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1120)

EMPLOYEE LOANS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the question is, what is the minister going to do about it? My supplementary is to the same minister. Another provision which will hurt both the employers and employees is the requirement that employee loans will also have to be regarded as taxable benefits, thus creating an administrative nightmare for the employer and another nickel-and-diming to death of the little guy by the tax department. How can the minister justify such a counterproductive measure? Would he explain that, please?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, as I indicated yesterday to the hon. member's colleague who asked me a similar question, I have made a good note of these representations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE MEET CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In recent days he has managed to meet with a number of business groups concerning changes in the budget. He had a call from his friends at Dome Petroleum and agreed to make a certain change. I wonder if he can tell the House why, having met with these other groups, he found it impossible yesterday, although he was here for question period earlier in the day and for a vote last night, to meet with the president of the Canadian Labour Congress and other trade union leaders representing more than two million Canadian workers? Why did the Minister of Finance not assume his responsibility, sit down and meet this very important group of Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am happy to provide that explanation. As I understand it, on Monday of this week the Canadian Labour Congress requested an appointment with the government for yesterday. That is reasonable. However, it seems to me it would have been a lot better if the Canadian Labour Congress had given us some notice. The fact is that at the same time at which the Congress meeting took place with representatives of the government, I had already undertaken to meet with the president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen. That meeting had been set and I felt obligated to carry on with it.

If the Congress is eager to carry on a dialogue with the government, it ought to make arrangements that will provide an opportunity to meet with them. May I add that prior to the budget I did have a consultation with the Canadian Labour Congress. It was I who asked for the consultation. I invited them to come and see me. I was quite prepared to hear their views. Therefore I do not think the hon. member has a very good case.

REQUEST THAT EXCESS PROFITS TAX BE APPLIED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, quite apart from the failure of the minister to meet with them, there is the important question of policy matters which is of interest not only to members of the Canadian Labour Congress but to Canadians. One of my colleagues was on a radio open line show in Alberta this morning, speaking on the question of an excess profits tax for the banks. All kinds of positive indications were received that the majority of Canadians want the excess profits of the banks dealt with now so that that money can be used for housing. That request also comes from the Canadian Labour Congress and, I repeat, from all kinds of groups across the country. I ask the minister, because as he knows we are going to recess next week, is he going to announce an excess profits tax on the banks and, if not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quite extraordinary, to say the least. He is talking about an excess profits tax for the banks and asking us to bring in a measure. That very item was before the House of Commons last night and it was defeated. Does the hon. member not know that? He is reflecting on a decision already taken by the House of Commons that it is not appropriate at this time to establish such a tax.

It was not only the members of the government who defeated that resolution. The government was supported by a large number of members of the official opposition who would like some facts before a tax measure is established on the basis of a non-confidence motion moved by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I find his questions getting more incredible every day.

REQUEST THAT CHANGES BE ANNOUNCED BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the people of Canada find the Minister of Finance more and more incredible every day, considering that we had a vote some time ago on the budget in general. Since we had that vote it was the Minister of Finance who indicated that he was prepared to make a change, and we find it surprising that, having voted last night, he could so completely lock his mind in that he could not come to his senses and accept the possibility of an excess profit tax being reasonable. I point out to the minister that if he could change his mind in the past, one hopes that he could also do it in the future.

Since he has indicated there will be some changes in the budget, in spite of recent votes, would the minister tell the House whether he will announce those changes before Parliament recesses at the end of next week, or will he wait until all Members of Parliament have gone home, and then announce changes that he thinks will be quite unacceptable to the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I answered that question yesterday when it was asked by an hon. member from Vancouver. I told the hon. member that I was receiving representations from various groups in the country, that I was listening, and that if I found adjustments necessary I would announce them as soon as possible. If it is possible to do that before the House recesses next Friday, then I will do that. It would be my preference to do it in the House of Commons, or at least to inform the House of Commons.

Mr. Clark: You will be as cowardly as Mr. Pepin was with VIA Rail.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not undertaking to do anything other than that. If the House is sitting when I make these changes, obviously I will draw these changes to the attention of the House.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT ON INDUSTRY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question was to be addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who was, first of all, sitting with the NDP, who then sat in his seat, and now he is obviously answering a question from one of his angry constituents. May I defer my question until he returns, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: There he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Chair will recall in October last year that he introduced, or the Minister of Finance, on his behalf, introduced a very negative National Energy Program that has caused untold damage to all the small Canadian oil companies, the service contractors and the drilling companies. Has the minister sat down and discussed the damage that the lack of interest deductibility will further cause to these small Canadian entrepreneurs, and, if so, what will he do about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, last year the government introduced a National Energy Program that has meant a significant increase in Canadian ownership of the Canadian oil and gas industry over the last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This program has meant a significant restructuring of the industry in favour of Canadians, rather than in favour of the multinationals that my friend and his party have always been so keen to support. It has also meant that we have introduced a piece of legislation called Bill C-48 that finally passed this House yesterday, after one year of filibustering by the opposition, and which will ensure the development of the Canada lands for the benefit of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: These are some of the things that the National Energy Program has meant, in addition to a fair price for Canadians. Obviously because of the lack of agreement with the oil producing provinces, there have been problems in the last year in the oil and gas industry in western Canada. That I recognized. In September we managed to reach agreements with the oil producing provinces. We have got a good deal for the Canadian oil and gas companies. I am confident that they will take full advantage of all the benefits provided for, under those agreements and the energy program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, that is hogwash.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTEREST DEDUCTIBILITY PROVISIONS IN BUDGET

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): I am from Ontario. What has happened to the ripple benefits from the three megaprojects that have been cancelled? Small service contractors, drilling operators and small Canadian oil companies are in disastrous shape. The new budget is putting them further down the hole. Could the minister plead with the Minister of Finance to remove the punitive lack of deductibility of interest with respect to small Canadian oil resource companies?

• (1130)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How many Uranium Cities will we have?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this hogwash has been the type of opposition and filibustering we have had from the opposition in the last year as far as energy is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The three megaprojects have not been cancelled. They have been the subject of negotiation. Next week I will meet with Alberta and the Alsands people, for instance, in order to arrive at an agreement which will ensure that the Alsands megaproject will proceed. Discussions are also taking place with the Cold Lake group in order to ensure that those projects proceed. The government is taking steps to ensure that those projects will be dealt with and that we will reach self-sufficiency in the country in the area of oil during this decade, at a price which will be fair to Canadians, and with a larger Canadian ownership and control of the industry, which that party has been fighting for the last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIEFENBAKER MUSEUM

OFFER OF FORMER PRIME MINISTER'S HOME

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for housing. I am sure the minister is aware of the deep respect and admiration many Canadians have for that very great Canadian, the late Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. In his will the former Prime Minister left his home in Rockcliffe to the Government of Canada, to be opened to all Canadians as a special and significant museum. Would the minister advise the House whether the government has formally accepted the offer contained in Mr. Diefenbaker's will?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to indicate to the House that the government stands by its offer which was communicated to the executors of the will. The government, acting through the agency of the National Capital Commission, would be pleased to accept title to the property, providing that foundation officials will be responsible for the operation of the property as a museum. The offer still stands. There appears to be some difficulty or some disagreement between the foundation officials and the executors of the will, but the Government of Canada stands behind its offer to receive title and to co-operate with foundation officials in making that objective possible.

TERMS OF WILL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Will the minister confirm to the House whether the government is prepared to accept the title according to the terms and conditions in the late Mr. Diefenbaker's will? These were spelled out specifically in the will. Certainly the minister must be aware of what was in the will and what Mr. Diefenbaker requested.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat my answer. The government stands by its offer to accept title to the property through the offices of the National Capital Commission, which I think is probably the proper agency for dealing with this matter. It was under the condition that the foundation would be responsible for the maintenance of the museum in the future.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who assured the House in the last few weeks, in answer to a question of one of my colleagues, that there would be no change to the Crow rate until a consensus had been reached. Since the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, along with most farmers, oppose any change to the rate, what action is he contemplating to discipline the Minister of Agriculture who said in Chatham recently that he wanted to change the Crow rate and thus drastically reduce net farm incomes to Canadian farmers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to be making an argument rather than asking a question. The government is still discussing the matter of the Crow rate with the concerned parties, not only the farmers and the dealers but with the governments themselves. There is some difference of opinion among various inhabitants of the west. My ministers are trying to ascertain in what direction they would want to move, as being more beneficial to them.

MINISTER'S VIEWS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In his speech he said that the Crow rate works against the goals that they had set out in the federal agri-food strategy. Would the minister explain to the House what benefits he sees to farmers by doing away with the Crow rate? How does it benefit farmers to reduce net farm incomes to Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it is the hon. member's right to interpret what I said or what was reported in the newspaper—that is for sure. But it is not government policy to do away with the Crow rate, as the Prime Minister said. We have to have discussion and we have to find out what people are thinking. It was in answer to a question from the floor of the Ontario soya bean growers' meeting. If he wants to quote all the things said at that meeting, there is no time in question period to do it. What we are saying in the agri-food strategy is that we must create those jobs for the raw product which is produced, processed, etc., to ensure that there are jobs for them in western Canada, eastern Canada, or wherever it will be, to improve the over-all agri-food, farming, industrial sector, or the total industry, to make it better for all. This is what we are proposing in the agri-food strategy. We are not proposing in any place—nor did I say it in any manner or form—to do away with the Crow rate like the hon. member is suggesting.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFORMATION SOUGHT FROM PUBLIC SERVANTS BY MEMBERS OF PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. All political parties encourage the seeking of information about other groups and other parties, and all governments, domestic or otherwise, seek information about the activities, motives and intended policies of other governments. But in some cases, here in Canada in any event, we now know that the police or the security services have been used in error, or the police have gone too far in their sometimes conscientious endeavours in obtaining political information for their political masters.

My question to the Prime Minister relates to comments made yesterday outside the House, which I cannot believe were made by a Solicitor General without the very fullest briefing with his Prime Minister, relating to activities by members of the Parti Québécois in Quebec in obtaining information from federal government public servants, and the use of the security service in preventing this from taking place. Because this does not concern foreign governments and international relations are not involved, would the Prime Minister indicate what information was being sought, by whom, and from whom?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I recall a couple of years ago Mr. Parizeau, the minister of finance of the Péquiste government in Quebec, gleefully reporting that he was trying to cull secret information from the Government of Canada through various agents. I remember at the time the opposition thought that was a great lark. That may have been what the Solicitor General was referring to—I do not know. I have not seen or heard the statements he made yesterday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is talking about today.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister realizes that the purport of the Solicitor General's statements yesterday had two elements, first, to warn those in Quebec who were seeking the presumably political information to stop and, second, to signal to the Canadian security service to go after them. In view of the history of past activities of the security service, especially in the province of Quebec, in rather extremely delicate circumstances such as this, I wonder whether I could obtain a commitment from the Prime Minister for a full, comprehensive statement, either from the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General before the House rises for Christmas.

Mr. Lalonde: That statement has been made.

• (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will make that statement now. Any person, or government of any province which attempts to get confidential information by devious means from the Government of Canada, will be the object of government concern, and certainly it will be the job of the police and of the officials to prevent that from happening.

INTRODUCTION OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LEGISLATION

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On November 5 I asked the minister when the bill spelling out the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation would be ready for presentation to the House. He told me then that the draft legislation was completed. Can the minister now tell the House whether or not the Department of Justice, the Farm Credit Corporation, and he, as the responsible minister, will have this urgent legislation introduced in the House before the Christmas adjournment so that it can, we hope, receive quick passage, or is someone in the back rooms not treating this legislation with a sense of urgency?

Will the minister also discuss this matter with the government House leader, and through him with the other two House leaders, to make sure that the Farm Credit Corporation legislation does pass before Parliament adjourns for Christmas, so that those farm operations that qualify and are in great need can receive loans at a low rate of interest?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Farm Credit Corporation legislation is being discussed. It has been drafted and I hope it will soon be before the House planning committee, but I doubt if it could be presented before the House adjourns for Christmas.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF CANOLA UNDER BOARD'S JURISDICTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is recommending that Canola, a rapeseed, should come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. May I ask the minister if that is the policy of the government and, if so, will producers be given an opportunity to express their preference through a plebiscite?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have read the speech made by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in which he indicated very clearly that he was making a suggestion to that effect, in order to help the development of debate on the subject. He did not announce it as a government policy. There is no reflection to that effect in his speech.

REQUEST THAT PLEBISCITE BE HELD

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, could the minister answer the second part of the question, namely, will the producers of Canada be provided the opportunity to express their preference through a producer plebiscite?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I do not know, Madam Speaker, although I know that this method was used previously in order to determine a position. I do not know if that method would be used again, but it might.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ABSENCE OF MINISTER

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question would be for the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader, but in his absence perhaps I can direct it to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is not in the House today; he was not here yesterday, and he was not here the day before. In fact, he has not been in the House for question period practically since Parliament reconvened. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House why the minister for DREE continues to hide from questions from members about his responsibilities?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to accept notice of the question from the hon. member if it had some substance because, under the procedures of the government, today I am the minister designated to receive questions on behalf of the minister for DREE. I can assure the hon. member that the reputation of the minister for DREE is that of one who is receptive and responsive to representations made by all members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, there can be no more substantive question than the responsibility of cabinet ministers to the House of Commons. In light of that, may I again direct my question to the Prime Minister. Why does the minister of DREE continue to hide from legitimate questions about his department, asked in the House of Commons? Will the Prime Minister instruct the minister of DREE to attend question period, at least on a regular basis. We know that he is in Ottawa, so we know that he can be here, but he refrains from attending question period to answer legitimate questions about his department's responsibilities.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure that you, Madam Speaker, and certainly I personally, have heard the minister of DREE answer many questions—

An hon. Member: When? Give a date.

Mr. Trudeau: —and he has made those replies with extreme competence. Indeed, he generally devastates the questioner.

I imagine the hon. member screwed up his courage to ask the question today because the minister happens to be away. The hon. member should ask the question when the minister is here. I do not know why he says the minister is in Ottawa. He is in Africa, representing the Canadian government on a very important mission.

Without knowing the statistics, I would say that the minister responsible for DREE is in the House about as often as the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

DANGER OF EVICTION TO ONTARIO TENANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for housing, if hon. members across the way will allow us to continue with the session.

At a housing conference held in Toronto on November 21, the minister was asked by the Metro Ontario Housing Tenants Council to speak with the Ontario minister of housing about the "empty nester" evictions policy begun by the Ontario Housing Corporation which is under contract to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The situation is that up to 2,600 more tenants of Ontario Housing are in danger of eviction because their children have started work, are leaving home, have died, or their spouses have died. Of these, 70 per cent—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he need not have these long preambles. If he has a question I think that would be more useful.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is no longer than many others you have not commented upon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I would say that the questions of the hon. member are usually quite long, but I will have a question immediately if he has one.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, my question to the minister is to find out whether at his recent meeting with the Ontario minister of housing he raised the question about the "empty nester" evictions policy, and whether he can tell us if it will be stopped.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The answer is that yes, indeed, I did raise the matter with the minister responsible for housing for the province of Ontario, on Monday of this week. The minister indicated that this matter, being within the jurisdiction of the government of the province of Ontario, is under review. The question of the "empty nesters" in the age group of 50 to 59 is under review. The minister indicated that although he is concerned about the accommodation needs of that group, he is under tremendous pressure to provide, in addition, accommodation to families with children. The policy has not been finalized; it is under review, and I understand that it has been discussed publicly in the forum of the social services committee of the Metropolitan Council and that there has been an opportunity for input from the public at large.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL RENTAL ACCOMMODATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. In view of the 23 per cent increase in rent in Toronto, will the minister negotiate with the minister of housing for Ontario to begin building more supplemented low-rental housing under the auspices of the Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, of course the decision of whether the province takes advantage of Section 40 of the National Housing Act is within the competence of the provincial government which must take that decision. I did have an opportunity of discussing the allocation of modest rental units under the Canada rental supply plan announced by the Minister of Finance in the budget when I spoke with the provincial minister. I also indicated that in addition to the allocation to the province of those units, one third of them could be further rent supplemented in a joint program between the province and the federal government. I understand that the Ontario government is seriously considering taking up those rent supplement plans.

MOVEMENT OF POTATO SHIPMENTS THROUGH STATE OF MAINE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to know whether the minister and the Government of Canada are intervening in the ridiculous actions taken by the state of Maine to block the free movement of New Brunswick potatoes to U.S. markets through that state. If this is so, can he briefly tell this House where the matter now stands? Is he supporting U.S. federal government action in its attempts to convince the Governor of the state of Maine that what the state is now doing is contrary not only to the U.S. Constitution but to the international free trade agreements as well?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, a regional federal court has made a decision that the injunction which was requested by the United States Department of Agriculture was not in order.

I understand that USDA and CDA and other governmental officials here have been requested to consider taking the problem to GATT. I believe that is where it will go because, as the hon. member says, it is contrary to our trading agreement under GATT. This is a situation where a state has passed a law which is a trade restriction type of non-tariff barrier, but nevertheless, it is really a barrier. It is an inspection service where every truckload of potatoes crossing the state border must pay a $200 inspection fee, which makes the cost of transshipping the potatoes into the United States an impossible and exorbitant cost. We believe that the only way to go is through GATT.

Mr. Paproski: Would you say it's a hot potato?

ORDERS AND DECORATIONS

POLICE SERVICE MEDAL

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police in 1980, the Prime Minister announced the intention of the government to establish a medal for long service for Canadian police. As late as December 8, earlier this week, when we were at Government House I spoke to the Director of the Chancellery of Canadian Orders and Decorations, and he had not heard anything about any progress in that matter through the Privy Council Office. Could the Prime Minister advise the House on the status of that decoration, and give some indication of when it might become available for Canadian police forces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do remember the undertaking which I gave in a message to the chiefs of police on the occasion of their anniversary. I indicated that, because of the very important work done by the police forces in this society in keeping a balance between freedom and respect of the law, I would be setting up the presentation of such a medal.

As the hon. member gave me notice before the proceedings of the House began, that he would be raising the subject, I had occasion to inquire. I am told that the placing into effect of that announcement will be early in the New Year, that certain administrative matters still remain to be cleared up, but that the work is well in progress and almost finished.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The issue concerning the Crowsnest Pass rate has come up this morning. I would like to ask the minister if he can clear the air. There are obviously two points of view on this whole question.

Can the minister tell the House whether there are contemplated changes to the Crowsnest Pass rate which will change the payout of money to the railways, the farmers, or whatever? If there will be changes, could the minister indicate in what area the government is now looking at changes, and also what form these changes may take? For example, might we see a task force, or a white or blue paper on the whole question of transportation in western Canada?

Some hon. Members: Order in council.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I wish there were only two points of view on this subject. One of the difficulties is that there are more than two. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have indicated what is now taking place. I have already answered a question to that effect. Ministers are now discussing among themselves the best approach to the resolution of what is essentially a western transportation problem, a mainline transportation problem.

At the moment, two general approaches, found all over western Canada, are being debated. One is the comprehensive or system approach which would encompass a discussion and resolution of the problem of the Crowsnest Pass rate. The other is the special project approach which would mainly consist of the best possible use of the $1.3 billion that the Minister of Finance has made available for that purpose. Therefore, this discussion is ongoing, and as soon as that is resolved there will be a discussion with interested parties in western Canada, and refinements on different items and points which would constitute a resolution to this question.

DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport who should know, and I believe he does know, that there are basically two groups which are concerned and are against any change in the Crowsnest Pass rate. Those groups are the Farmers Union and the New Democratic Party, both federally and at the provincial level.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: Farm groups in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and virtually all farmers in western Canada, are in favour of a change of some sort.

An hon. Member: Not so.

Mr. Murta: Will changes be made to the Crowsnest Pass rate in 1982?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am once again very grateful to the hon. member for Lisgar for indicating that he is a disciple or a proponent of a move on the subject. I think that the NDP takes a position with regard to this subject, and a few others, which is rather reactionary, not to say more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: However, there are indications that there might be movement there, too, because instead of referring to "the" statutory rate, some of them are referring to "a" statutory rate which, if we look very closely, would indicate that they might not be entirely hopeless.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

POSSIBLE USE IN PAYMENT OF GRAIN EMBARGO COMPENSATION TO FARMERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. There has been considerable confusion on the part of the government with respect to the origin of the payment of $81 million to farmers as a result of losses sustained by the implementation of the Soviet grain embargo. The officials of the minister's department have now indicated that this has been taken from the Western Development Fund, and the Minister of Agriculture says it is from his department.

I wonder whether the Minister of Finance, having now had an opportunity to look into this matter, could report to the House as to whether or not there is a Western Development Fund, and whether the $81 million comes from that fund.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all, there is a Western Development Fund.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: You found it.

Mr. MacEachen: I will check with regard to the specific point raised by the hon. member concerning the source of that particular compensation program.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister was asked the very same question two weeks ago. I imagine we will get the answer by about 1986.

USE OF MONEYS FOR RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In terms of the intentions of the government with respect to the so-called Western Development Fund, if it does in fact exist, $1.3 billion has been dedicated toward the upgrading of western grain transportation. One of the options being put forward by the minister is that that money be used to close the gap between the compensatory rate and the actual cost to the railways. Is the government now in a position to say whether that is its intention? There is very great concern in western Canada with respect to the Crow rate. The people of Saskatchewan do not want anyone fooling around with the Crow rate.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is part of the discussion which is now ongoing. However, without breaking cabinet solidarity, I think I can say, glancing at the Prime Minister, that this $1.3 billion will go to western railway transportation. There has been a discussion on that matter.

Mr. Lawrence: He is looking at you, too.

An hon. Member: Doubletrack.

Mr. Pepin: It seems that there is some worry in western Canada concerning other transportation issues. I was able to tell the hon. member that we could take care of air transportation requirements, for example, with the budget of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a national responsibility.

Mr. Pepin: Therefore, that is the situation. The $1.3 billion will go to the western railway mainline transportation system.

I would like to observe that this is only part of what the federal government does by way of helping western transportation and the grain industry, in particular, because over a five-year period the $1.3 billion will be on top of $2.2 billion which is already in the Department of Transport estimates for that purpose. The importance of the subject of ensuring western Canada of the best railway transportation system the world has ever seen is in the mainstream of the preoccupations of this government.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CHANGES TO PROCEDURE RESPECTING PRINTING OF REPORTS

Madam Speaker: I would like to make a statement on the new procedures concerning the printing of committee reports.

In order to make the Votes and Proceedings of the House more readable and to reduce the current substantial expenses of printing committee reports in as many as three or four separate formats, it has been decided in consultation with the Commissioners of Internal Economy and the House leaders to implement the following procedures:

That the text of committee reports on subject matters be printed only in a regular committee issue and not appear in a special edition or in the Votes and Proceedings; that such reports when tabled in the House of Commons be assigned a sessional paper number which will be duly recorded in the Votes and Proceedings; that reports on bills and estimates continue to appear both in the regular committees' issues and in the Votes and Proceedings; that the committees submitting reports of substantial length or on subject matters may choose to have distinctive covers attached to the regular committee issue.

MR. SHIELDS—HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and fifty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on Thursday, December 10, 1981, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—FAILURE BY MR. COSGROVE TO CLARIFY ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I want to pursue the question of privilege which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) flagged last Wednesday. It has to do, of course, with the right of the House and the members of the House to accurate answers from members of the ministry.

The nineteenth edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, at pages 141 and 142, shows very clearly that misleading the House of Commons is considered a very serious contempt of that institution, whether it is done by false documents, conspiracy to deceive or by a deliberately misleading statement. Two paragraphs in particular of that citation are of interest. The first at page 141 sets forth as follows:

> It has already been seen that the giving of false evidence, prevarication or suppression of the truth by witnesses while under examination before either House or before committees of either House is punished as a contempt; and that persons who present false, forged or fabricated documents to either House or to committees of either House are guilty of a breach of privilege. Conspiracy to deceive either House or any committees of either House will also be treated as a breach of privilege.

The second paragraph on page 142 reads as follows:

> The House may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.
> In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

That citation referred to the Profumo case with which the Chair is very familiar.

These paragraphs show very clearly in my submission, Madam Speaker, that the House has always considered that it has the right to hear the truth, and any attempt to mislead the House is considered as a contempt and treated as such.

Our own precedents show that deliberately misleading the House can be done indirectly with a member or a minister being, in a sense, an agent of misrepresentation, but not himself culpable in contempt. That particular case was raised by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), who was then the member for Northumberland-Durham, in 1978 and it is very critical here to your consideration, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Speaker Jerome said on that occasion, which involved the drafting of a deliberately misleading reply to a letter from the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland:

> The complaint which is the subject matter of the question of privilege is not directly—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is arguing the case, and I do not know exactly which case. All of these references to precedents and to Erskine May may be invoked once the hon. member has exposed to the House where he feels there is a basis for a question of privilege. I would like to hear that. Of course, all these citations from Erskine May, to the effect that if someone has deliberately misled the House, or admitted that he has contradicted himself, he may be in contempt of this House, and of course that is true, relate to a description of what contempt of the House really is. But at this particular point this is not the information I seek. I would like the hon. member to tell me exactly where he feels he has a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I undertake to do that, Madam Speaker. In developing my argument I want to present it to you in the form in which I have prepared it, but I can promise you that that will develop as I proceed.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The argument may not be developed before the case is exposed. If the Speaker should find a prima facie case of privilege then, of course, members are invited to develop their arguments. But at this particular point—

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Madam Speaker: At this particular point, the members should present the Chair with the matter and with facts to substantiate the matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Yes, of course, that is what we have to do at this particular point.

Mr. Clark: That is today's ruling.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have been raising questions such as this for 24 years in this place, and I have been developing them as I am developing this one now. In the light of my undertaking to link my argument with facts, surely the Chair will hear me out in the manner in which I have developed this argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I have given the Chair and other members, for the benefit of the minister who is interfering by his interjections, my personal undertaking as a member to present the Chair with those facts which have been requested of me by the Chair. I will do that, but I wish to do it in my own style and in the manner in which I have been presenting questions of this nature for 24 years, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I was just reminding him of the procedures which we have followed in the House with regard to questions of privilege. The citations from Erskine May, even the lengthy ones that the hon. member is making, are the obvious; we all know that Erskine May has so described a question of privilege. What we really need to know is what this particular privilege is all about. I know the hon. member has his own style, but I would appreciate if he would describe the question of privilege so I can come to a conclusion.

Mr. Nielsen: I undertake with the Chair absolutely to do that, Madam Speaker. With respect to the lengthy citations from May to which the Chair has referred, one was nine lines and the other was three.

Mr. Speaker Jerome said on the occasion to which I referred:

That the complaint which is—

Mr. Cosgrove: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: There is no point of order on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Yes, there may be a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: There is no point of order on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Clark: What rules are those?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cosgrove: I have listened to the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I have listened to you—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Just submit your resignation and go.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister said he wanted to rise on a point of order, and subsequently he said he was rising on a point of privilege. I can only hear—

An hon. Member: Sit down, Paul.

Madam Speaker: If the hon. minister would please resume his seat.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. minister please resume his seat until I have finished explaining. As I was saying, the hon. minister said he was rising on a point of order, which I could hear in the course of a question of privilege. He subsequently mentioned that he was rising on a question of privilege. I do have to remind the hon. minister that I cannot entertain two questions of privilege at the same time. I may entertain a point of order in the course of the exploration of a question of privilege but not another question of privilege. If the hon. minister has a further question of privilege, I could hear him after I have heard the hon. member for Yukon.

• (1210)

Mr. Cosgrove: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I have listened on two occasions today to the Chair ruling on procedures of the House. My point of order is that notwithstanding those two rulings, the member seeking the floor on a question of privilege is continuing to proceed with argument before fact. Obviously, Madam Speaker, I am a minister and the person who is the subject of those representations. My point of order is that the Chair and the House ought to follow its procedures. Otherwise, hon. members may find their privileges interfered with and I would have to rise on a question of privilege subsequently.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I had not ruled, I was cautioning the hon. member for Yukon about the usual manner in which we try to hear questions of privilege and to contain members who would like to argue the case before the question is exposed. That was the purport of my caution to the hon. member for Yukon.

I will now hear the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: So as to get on with the matter, Madam Speaker, I will set aside the linkage which I intend to submit to the Chair but the argument and the presentation is now disrupted. I presented May's, I will set aside the argument with respect to our own precedents and I will now lay the facts out for the Chair and, I hope, for the minister.

It is my submission, Madam Speaker, that in the case at hand involving the minister responsible for housing, the House has clearly been misled. The question that it outstanding is, by whom?

Now, had I been allowed to present the precedent in our Canadian House, that question would be more relevant, but I will have to come back to it when I am through giving my version of the facts. I will suggest that both possible answers to the question "By whom?" lead us irrevocably to the conclusion that a contempt has occurred, thereby justifying an investigation by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

According to the citation from May and the citations which I have yet to make, the issue of a possible leak was first raised in the House on Tuesday, November 17, as reported in Hansard at page 12827.

When asked about this suspiciously early appearance of budget advertisements, the minister said this:

—I learned generally of the provisions of the budget as they pertain to housing at a briefing of the cabinet by the Minister of Finance on Thursday afternoon. I learned specifically and saw the budget documents a few minutes before they were presented by the Minister of Finance in the House. My officials worked from five o'clock in the afternoon, through the evening, and early the next morning, and produced for my inspection that document—

Referring to the advertisement.

—which had been worked upon. It was authorized at noon on November 13 as a result of a meeting of the communications cabinet of the Government of Canada, as I say on Friday, November 13.

The minister clearly denied any early knowledge or early communication to anyone not properly involved in the budget process. In fact, he said that neither he nor his officials knew what was in the budget.

Not surprisingly, Madam Speaker, the issue was raised again by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) on Wednesday, November 18, when the minister had obviously had a chance to talk to his officials and make sure that he was giving the story not only as he knew it but as they knew it. The minister added to his story but did not change any material particular. At page 12886 of Hansard, the minister said:

—I have had the opportunity since responding to the questions yesterday afternoon to speak to officials on this matter. I would confirm that the story reported in The Globe and Mail today, on page 8, does consist of the facts as I understand them. The facts are correct that, first, no publication of any material affecting housing in the budget was printed until after the budget, that is, November 13.

Said the minister:

I also confirm that no material pertaining to that advertisement was in the hands of the firm to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. Indeed, their work for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation was to obtain space, which they did.

I would add, finally, that after the budget was delivered in this House, representatives of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation released an advertisement, which was then taken to the newspapers after the budget was delivered—

The minister, therefore, has given a statement to the House before and after consultation with his officials that no one outside the normal and accepted process had access to budget material. On occasion, the minister even implied that it was just dumb luck that the final advertisement had the exact text of the budgetary proposal.

The question was again pursued on Tuesday, December 3, when the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville had investigated further. In response to that question the minister said, as reported at page 13683:

—the brief answer is that no person was aware who was not authorized and under normal budgetary security—all employees or civil servants in the employ or control of the federal government, no person beyond those was aware or had in their possession the particulars of the ad—

The hon. member then asked a supplementary question and even repeated the reference to Studio S & B which was mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. The minister repeated his story and again I quote from page 13684:

—I will stand by my previous answer today and on other occasions in this House. I would say to the hon. gentleman that the employee he is referring to, Mr. Crombie, was in a lockup prior to the budget and he was there until the normal time when the media and all authorized people in that lockup were released.

The next day, Madam Speaker, a new truth appeared and the story changed. The minister now said, as I quote from page 13728 of Hansard:

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials had charge of the security of this document until such time as it was delivered to the newspapers after the speech. They were assisted by some employees of the firm of S & B in Montreal.

They were assisted by typesetters who assisted in setting up the document. It was prepared by CMHC in anticipation that the recommendations to the Minister of Finance by me would be accepted and would be in the budget as announced. When that was confirmed, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation authorized the release of those documents which were in sealed envelopes—

Madam Speaker, the House clearly had been misled and upon reflecting on how that occurred, the House has two clear and unavoidable alternatives. They are, either the minister deliberately misled the House and finally gave in and told the truth when he had no alternative but to do so, and in doing so admitted that his earlier statements were false, or the minister's officials misled the minister, causing him to mislead the House and those officials did not give up and tell him the truth until they had no choice.

The first alternative is a contempt under the Profumo citation, which is already submitted and is on the record, and the second is a contempt which is a prima facie case of privilege under the specific terms of the ruling to which I might now refer, now that this degree of fact is before the Chair.

The ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome on the case of the second alternative, the one that was raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, as his constituency was then called, was:

The complaint which is the subject matter of the question of privilege is not directly a complaint about the minister. Indeed, it is founded on the fact that it is one of the minister's officials who has calculated to contrive this deliberate deception of the House. In fact I have indicated some concern about the fact that this may perhaps be looked upon as a new departure in our practice—that we are going around the minister to get directly at the official by way of this question of privilege. Even if that is so, I have come to the conclusion that it is not a procedural basis upon which I can intervene. Once again, it is a matter to which the House can address itself in debate, and in amendment if necessary, or in a vote—

● (1220)

On that occasion Mr. Speaker Jerome went on to say:

That leaves us with the complaint of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham respecting the testimony of former commissioner Higgitt—and I assume there is no further argument to be addressed to this matter at this time—to the circumstances in which the Solicitor General's letter dated September 4, 1973, was drafted. Does that lead us to the conclusion that, by virtue of an act or ommission, the House, or a member, has directly or indirectly been impeded in the performance of its functions or his duty, or that there has been a tendency to produce such result? If I so find, then I really have no choice but to find, prima facie, that a contempt has been committed.

The Speaker then quoted from the commissioner's testimony that letters were not drafted "on precise statements of fact". Mr. Speaker Jerome concluded in this fashion:

I can interpret that testimony in no other way than meaning that a deliberate attempt was made to obstruct the member in the performance of his duties, and consequently, to obstruct the House itself.

Even beyond the precedents and the complex law of privilege, I cannot conceive that there is any one of us who would accept the argument that this House of Commons has no recourse in the face of such an attempt to obstruct by offering admittedly misleading information.

This citation has two key points. First, the House does have a right not to be deliberately misled and, second, the ruling established that a contempt has occurred if an official misleads a minister and causes him to mislead the House. That was the argument I wanted up front to support the two alternatives I put to the Chair. I submit at this stage that the Chair now sees the logic of that form of presentation.

In conclusion, I suggest that since a reference to a committee is required either way—the Chair can adopt either option—the House should be allowed to make a decision on a reference, and it can only be allowed to do that, of course, if the Chair finds that prima facie there is a case of privilege. I hope no one in the House will suggest that, because we are not sure which of the citations applies, neither should, because such a result would be rather absurd. A contempt has unquestionably, in my submission, been committed according to both logic and precedent in both instances.

If you find that there is a prima facie question of privilege, this is the form of motion I would move:

That this House, having been misled by the answers of the minister responsible for housing, either directly by the misinformation admittedly supplied to the House by the minister responsible for housing, or by officials of the minister, who in misleading the minister misled the House, declares that a contempt of this House has occurred, and refers the question to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and report.

Finally, I strongly suggest, in view of the very serious nature of this matter in terms of the consequences your ruling on it will have on this particular privilege of the House and its members, that you follow the very excellent course of your predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, when he had under consideration the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, as he then was, take the matter under consideration until you have very carefully reviewed the precedents I have cited and provide us with a ruling after you have had that full opportunity to give this matter the careful review and consideration it deserves, having regard to the very serious downstream consequences it could have on the privileges of all of us and of this institution.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when I rose earlier on a point of order respecting this issue I said I felt that the Chair had asked that facts be presented before the House before the Chair entertained consideration of the logic or the precedents which would guide the Chair in this matter. I rise now to make a contribution to the question raised by the House leader of the opposition and to direct just a few comments to the facts.

I draw to the attention of the Chair that in the two fairly lengthy excerpts taken from Hansard, reference was made to a firm which had assisted Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials in the typesetting for an ad. There was a very clear implication that the references in each of those quotations given to your Honour were one and the same. However, a careful look at the facts and at Hansard will show that the first reference was to a firm which indeed was shown not to have had any dealings at all, with the exception of taking space. I only bring this to Your Honour's attention to point out the difficulty the Chair must face in trying to sort through facts and the danger of assuming that these facts come together, which might prompt the Chair to move on to consideration of precedent or argument.

Finally, I would like to say to Your Honour, to hon. members opposite and hon. members on this side that, in answer to a question yesterday dealing with budget secrecy, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said that it is very difficult to prepare a budget, which is a complicated document, in this day and age. For example, the Canada mortgage renewal program, which was the subject of the ad which is at issue here, involves certain implications respecting financial institutions and provincial governments and their plans. Your Honour has heard discussion about similar legislation in one of the provinces. It is not easy to prepare a plan in isolation.

For that reason when I have the opportunity—and it will be shortly—to introduce the legislation necessary to implement the Canada mortgage renewal plan, I will have the opportunity to tell the House about the steps which were required and are necessary for the government to implement this plan in order to demonstrate to the House the difficulty of maintaining what we know as our tradition of budget secrecy while also meeting the modern requirement of communicating information to the public about such a plan so that all those involved, such as financial institutions, the public and other goverments, are quickly apprised of government action.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not the issue.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. A charge of contempt is indeed a very serious matter. I must say to the House leader of the official opposition that two matters strike me. Though his argument was complicated, it certainly was very compelling. The information he placed before your Honour will undoubtedly take time to digest. I am therefore impressed that he would ask that you should consider it over the weekend at least before coming to any decision.

I too have had some reservations about the contradictions which have appeared in Hansard and, in fact, raised them on another occasion when this matter was before the House. Although the minister responsible for housing offers an explanation and although his explanation may tug at one's heart strings, I suggest it does not explain away the contradiction.

I eagerly await Your Honour's ruling and hope there might be an opportunity, having being given some time to review the representation made by the House leader for the official opposition, for some further input before that ruling is given to the House.

● (1230)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I will be quite brief. In response to the minister's intervention, I would say that what the minister suggested was totally irrelevant to the issue that is before the Chair at the present time. The issue is not whether it is inconvenient or difficult for the minister to maintain a balance between consultation with industry and the question of the need for budget secrecy. The issue which the Chair is asked to adjudicate upon is whether the House was misled and whether such misleading of the House constitutes a breach of the privileges of Members of Parliament.

I want to underline two very relevant portions from Hansard which make it very clear to me that the House was given false information. I bring first to your attention page 12827 of Hansard of November 17, 1981, where the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) said the following:

> Madam Speaker, I learned generally of the provisions of the budget as they pertain to housing at a briefing of the cabinet by the Minister of Finance on Thursday afternoon. I learned specifically and saw the budget documents a few minutes before they were presented by the Minister of Finance in the House. My officials worked from five o'clock in the afternoon, through the evening, and early the next morning, and produced for my inspection that document which had been worked upon. It was authorized at noon on November 13 as a result of a meeting of the communications cabinet of the Government of Canada, as I say on Friday, November 13.

The document that was referred to when the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) put the question to the minister was that ad which appeared over the minister's signature and which was placed by CMHC.

The minister has since conceded to the House that the truth was that the ad was prepared well in advance and that indeed it was distributed to various distribution points in Canada prior to the time that was mentioned by the minister in the House or his officials working over the document from five o'clock in the afternoon, into the evening until early the next morning. In fact, the advertisement had been prepared well in advance. The information had been communicated to the officials of Studio S & B some days in advance and very clearly the statement made by the minister at page 12827 simply does not bear any relationship to the facts.

Second, when the minister was questioned by various members in the House, he tried to give some indication as to when he was first informed and when his officials were first informed. At page 12834 of Hansard, the minister was asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) about the time the information was conveyed to various officials. He said the following:

> Madam Speaker, the hon. member indicated as he rose to ask the question that he would be repeating a question. I will repeat my answer. I was not aware of the provisions in the budget pertaining to housing until the Minister of Finance released in this House, or almost simultaneous with that.
> AN HON. MEMBER: You should have been.
> MR. COSGROVE: Nor was the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation knowledgeable as to what was in the budget, nor were they authorized to release or request publication of any advertisement that had to deal with the budget prior to that time.

What we have now learned is that in fact officials from CMHC had had confirmation that these provisions would be in the budget. They asked that the ads be prepared. The ads were indeed prepared and sent to various distribution points in the country for distribution once the budget was brought down.

Those ads were sent out. They were prepared on the basis of this information prior to the budget being brought down. That is why the Chair must look very carefully at the statements that were made on the record by the minister. Any sensible reading of the statements that were made simply leave us in a situation where it is impossible to reconcile what the minister said with the facts which we all know to be true at this time, and the facts which were conceded by the minister at a later date and were conceded, incidentally, by his officials.

Mr. Crombie himself has in fact confirmed publicly, and other officials from CMHC have, that those ads were worked upon in advance and that the information was prepared in advance and distributed in advance. It left the control of the officers of the government later in the evening once the budget was brought down, but the ads had been prepared and sent to various distribution points in the country prior to the release of the budget.

It is impossible to reconcile what the minister says with the truth and to find that in fact he was reporting on a factual basis to the House. Consequently that is the issue which the Chair is being asked to rule on; it is not the issue of whether or not it was difficult for the minister to balance budget secrecy with the need for consultation with private industry, but the question of whether or not the information given by the minister to the House was truthful and factual and whether on the face of it there is sufficient evidence to merit study by a committee.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the arguments made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) are almost entirely based on the item found in Erskine May, nineteenth edition, page 142 where it refers to the misconduct of members or officers of either House as such deliberately misleading the House. It states:

> The House may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.

Prior to the Profumo case, I do not believe that there had been a reference to such a matter as constituting what might be analogous to a question of privilege, as whether a contempt is the same as a question of privilege, is arguable. I do not believe that was in there prior to that.

I do not think the situation we are talking about here has anything to do with the type of facts that were found in the Profumo case. In the Profumo case, a minister stood in the House and admitted to the House that he had lied. If we look at the citations we have in Canada as to whether this constitutes a question of privilege, the clearest point is found on page 12 of Beauchesne, Section 19(1), and I quote:

A dispute arising between two Members, as to allegation of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

This is really what we have here, a dispute between members as to the allegation of facts. In the opinion of some people there are contradictory statements. That is a dispute. We have not had a minister stand up and say that he has deliberately misled the House. I do not think there is any suggestion of that.

When the matter was first raised by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) the other day, he invited the Chair to break new ground and to extend the bounds of parliamentary privilege. I refer Your Honour to page 40 of the fourth edition of Bourinot where it is stated:

Each house, however, exercises and vindicates its own privileges independently of the other. At the same time it has been established by the highest authorities that although either house may expound the law of Parliament and vindicate its own privileges, it is agreed that no new privilege can be created.

Your Honour has been invited to create a new ground of privilege. It is suggested that somehow the area that really is, in my view, debate, a dispute over what the facts are, cannot be drawn into the ambit of the one reference in Erskine May which talks about deliberately misleading the House. This matter was covered very well by Speaker Michener in a ruling which appears in the Journals of the House of Commons of June 17, 1959, and was again referred to on October 30, 1964. I quote the words of Speaker Michener:

In my view, simple justice requires that no honourable Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a Committee until he has been charged with an offence.

What is an offence? Are contradictory statements an offence? It has been alleged that the statements are contradictory. In my opinion, that is a matter of dispute. Even if it was agreed, and it is not, that there had been contradictory statements, that does not constitute an offence. We do not have an offence. I do not think we have a charge. The Speaker on the same occasion, and this is at page 11268, repeated:

Once more there is nothing to prevent the hon. member from bringing a charge, properly drafted.

● (1240)

I would also refer the Chair to Hansard of October 30, 1964, at page 9595. I believe this was a statement made by Speaker Macnaughton. He stated:

It is undoubtedly a very serious thing to attack the conduct of any member of the House of Commons, and in that respect a specific charge should always be made, not a general charge. I am confirmed in this opinion by an excellent ruling . . . given by Mr. Speaker Michener on June 19, 1959—

That is the ruling I have just referred to.

The other day when the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wanted to reserve the right of raising this matter as a question of privilege, he referred to an incident when Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister. I looked up what I believed was the ruling to which the hon. member referred. In that ruling the words of Speaker Michener that I have just cited were reiterated.

Journals of the House of Commons for December 17, 1964, at page 1012, gives the ruling as follows:

Here we are dealing with a misstatement, not a question of privilege. There must be a real accusation made against—in this case—the Right Honourable the Prime Minister, and there must be something in the charge which shows the misstatement, if it was a misstatement, was made with intent, with purpose. There is no specific charge and in view of the ruling of Speaker Michener and of what I have said, in my opinion there is not a prima facie case and therefore no question of privilege.

The one precedent that the hon. member for Yukon raised the other day, we have not heard too much about today, and after having an opportunity to read it, I understand why we did not hear too much about it.

I should also like to refer to some comments made by the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. This is found on page 4825 of Hansard of June 17, 1959. Approximately two weeks ago we were having a dispute about whether or not a budget leak had occurred. There were certain innuendoes made that the minister had been responsible for a budget leak. At that time I referred to the clear precedent, tradition and custom that follows when an hon. member makes a charge of another hon. member, and that is that he basically puts his seat on the line. Mr. Diefenbaker raised this point in 1959 and referred to that 1924 case. He went into it in great detail. In referring to the action that was taken by Mr. Porter, who made the charge at that time, Mr. Diefenbaker said at page 4826 of Hansard of June 17, 1959:

He went into detail and finally moved the motion, which is found at page 2405. He took the course—not the course of innuendo, insinuation and inference—that members have taken in every generation in this parliament. He made a charge, and this is the motion he made:

Then he read the charge. Reference was also made to statements made by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, found on page 4826 of Hansard of June 17, 1959. Mr. Meighen said:

On this occasion the proper course undoubtedly has been pursued by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter). He has made allegations of conduct against a minister of the Crown, conduct inconsistent with the traditions and honour of parliament, conduct designated as improper in every case where similar questions have arisen in this or in the British house. He has taken the full responsibility, and in a speech temperate in tone and very fair in every respect has laid his charges and made his motion.

The motion is the right motion. The privileges and elections committee historically is the committee which always deals with any contested questions affecting the privileges of parliament. There has never been a case in our history where, a charge being formally laid, the full responsibility being taken and a reference to this committee asked for, such a request or such a resolution has been negatived.

I should like to repeat the phrase "the full responsibility being taken". I think there is only one conclusion that one can draw from that, and that is that if a member makes a charge, he is putting his seat on the line.

An hon. Member: That is silly.

Mr. Smith: I do not happen to think that that is silly at all. I think it is a tradition that we can substantiate by statements made by two former leaders of the Conservative Party, Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Meighen.

Mr. Beatty: Obviously the hon. member does not have much confidence in his charges.

Mr. Smith: I think what we have here is a witch-hunt and a bit of a fishing expendition, Madam Speaker. You have been invited to break new ground in terms of what constitutes privilege. I do not believe that is something that you are in a position to do. I think that the precedent found in Erskine May that related to the Profumo case in the British House has no application here whatsoever. We are dealing with people's reputations and with people's careers. I do not think one should tamper with and cloud those reputations and careers lightly. I think one has to put or shut up. I hope that hon. members opposite will either do that or drop this issue.

Madam Speaker: I believe it is my duty at this time, considering the concern of the House on this particular question and the various arguments that have been brought forward, to take the matter under consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTIRE OF MEMBERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege, if this is the time. It is in a little more light-hearted vein, I might say. Very briefly, at page 13920 of Hansard of December 10, 1981, it was brought to my attention that the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) said: "This may be a small and picayune point", something for which the hon. member is famous. He brought to the Chair's attention that I was present in the House, he said, "without the usual jacket and tie".

I should point out that I did have the usual jacket on, but not a tie. It was my understanding, Madam Speaker, that after a previous incident of this nature involving the hon. member from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), that it was indeed possible in the House to wear a turtleneck.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Waddell: I notice that the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) has her tie on today and I congratulate the hon. member. I have also worn mine for the occasion, but perhaps tomorrow the hon. member might not be wearing her tie. I am not quite sure, Madam Speaker, whether it is possible to appear in the House, when one is not asking a question or seeking to be recognized, without wearing a tie.

To be perfectly rational, in 1981 it seems to me, if one is dressed in a perfectly fine turtleneck and a good jacket, that one should be able to appear in the House. It seems to me that the procedure is archaic and backward and I cannot find it written anywhere. However, I will, of course, take my direction from the Chair. I should like to have the matter clarified.

Madam Speaker: Yesterday I did clarify the matter, in the absence of the hon. member. No, the rule or the custom has not changed, despite several attempts, I think, by some hon. members, and even the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), who had worn a tie, I believe, over his turtleneck. The custom has not changed. In order to come into the House, et à plus forte raison, to be recognized on the floor of the House, members are required to wear jackets, shirts and ties. Until further notice, that is the decorum that I will try to preserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member not enlightened by what I have just said?

Mr. Waddell: I take it, Madam Speaker, that excludes female members?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Naturally the proper attire for a female member is not the same as the proper attire for male members. It is quite obvious.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITION

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to lay upon the Table a petition signed by some 270 home owners in Scarborough, in the constituency of the minister responsible for housing which I visited the other night. They indicated that due to their inability to get any action from their member of Parliament on matters relating to housing, they would ask me to act in his stead and represent their interests in the House of Commons. Consequently, I am pleased to lay upon the Table a petition respecting interest rates signed by 270 residents of the city of Scarborough in the province of Ontario.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,783 and 3,109.

[Text]

CANAPOST INCORPORATED

Question No. 2,783—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware that Canapost Incorporated, 350 Sparks Street, Ottawa, is bidding on a contract in Saudi Arabia to automate the post office in that country?

2. (a) To the knowledge of the government, did the bid submitted by the company contain a letter written by Mr. James Corkery, deputy postmaster general, giving references for the company and the consortium of companies involved with it (b) did Mr. Corkery promise in the letter that, if the contract were given to the company the Post Office Department would lend special assistance?

3. (a) Who authorized Mr. Corkery's letter on behalf of one specific bidder and what was the name and job designation of the highest ranking individual involved (b) is it government policy to assist one bidder against another in obtaining foreign contracts and, if so, on what date and for what reason was the policy established?

4. Did Mr. Corkery act on his own initiative and, if so (a) will the government investigate the matter to determine if his actions are considered ethical (b) has the government already investigated the matter and, if so, what were the results of the investigation?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Mr. Corkery's letter did not support any particular bid. It only indicated Canada Post's willingness to work closely with Canapost Incorporated and contribute its experience and manpower in specific areas for the Postal Administration of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. Canapost Incorporated is a consortium of five individual manufacturing companies.

3. (a) The letter did not refer to any specific bidder, only to an invitation of Saudi Arabia PTT to the members of Canapost Incorporated to tender on their projects for mechanization program.

(b) No. See parts 2, 3(a) and 4 of this reply.

4. Yes. Following a request from Canapost Incorporated and in accordance with Canada Post policy to support the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in their efforts to assist Canadian companies in securing export orders against aggressive competition from foreign countries. (a) and (b) This is an established government policy; therefore, no investigation is considered necessary.

ACQUISITION OF SHARES BY CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORP.

Question No. 3,109—Mr. Clarke:

subsidiaries thereof (b) percentage of equity acquired (c) cost of acquisition (d) book value of the acquisition?

2. Does the Cape Breton Development Corporation have a plan to change the present portion of ownership in any of these enterprises and, if so, what is the plan?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am informed by the Cape Breton Development Corporation as follows:

1. During the period 1970-80 the Cape Breton Development Corporation acquired shares in limited liability companies listed below.

(a) Name	(b) Per cent of Ownership	(c) Cost of Shares Purchases

C.B. Woolen Mills	53.3	6,400
Stott Timber Ltd.	49	2,450
Cabotcraft Limited	60	60
Whale Cove Summer Village —preferred shares	100 —	240,000 —
Whale Cove Summer Village —common shares	62.5	25,000
Dundee Estates Ltd.	100	185,000
Marine Farming	100	5,000
C.B. Vegetable Co.	20	20
C.B. Lamb Ltd.	100	52,400
C.B. Welsh Black	50	4
C.B. Eels Ltd.	33	7,500

(d) In all cases the corporation was involved from the incorporation stage of the business and the book value of the acquisition equals the cost of the shares acquired. The preferred shares in whole have since been converted to long-term debt.

2. While some of these businesses have ceased to operate, there are no plans to change our shareholding in them.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

FUNDING OF RESEARCH BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,563—Mr. Neil:

What number of institutes or organizations that do research and carry out other related activities receive funds from the government, through departments or organizations such as the International Development Research Centre and the Canadian International Development Agency, and, in each case (a) what is the name of the organization (b) what is the amount for the current year (c) what was the amount for each of the previous five years?

Return tabled.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary for the second time question No. 2,644 which stands in my name and was put on the Order Paper on June 18. As the parliamentary secretary will remember, I asked at that time prior to the Royal Wedding whether or not the Government of Canada would be issuing a stamp commemorating the Royal Wedding. I pointed out some weeks ago that it appears the firstborn of the Prince of Wales will arrive before the answer. Could the parliamentary secretary indicate when we will have the answer, or is this simply a contest between the stork and the post office, with the post office losing?

Mr. Nielsen: Put your money on the stork.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the answer is soon.

Mr. Beatty: In nine months.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

MEASURE TO INCORPORATE THE JULES AND PAUL-ÉMILE LÉGER FOUNDATION

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State) moved that Bill S-23, to incorporate the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am happy to introduce for second reading Bill S-23, the purpose of which is to incorporate the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation. As Madam Speaker will know, this bill was passed by the Senate on July 9, 1981. It was introduced for first reading in the House by my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), on July 14.

The bill will create a private corporation, a foundation, to act in the many areas of philanthropy which were dear to the hearts of Jules Léger and which continue to be dear to the heart of Cardinal Paul-Émile Léger. One main object of the foundation is to relieve sickness and hunger and to provide assistance to all in need, including orphans, lepers, the aged, the handicapped and the ill-treated. The foundation may carry on its activities throughout Canada and in any jurisdiction outside Canada, to the extent that the laws of such jurisdictions permit.

The incorporation of this foundation by a specific act of Parliament rather than through letters patent under the

The incorporation of this foundation by a specific act of Parliament rather than through letters patent under the Canada Corporations Act is a testament to the important work which the Légers have performed and the desire of the government to recognize that valuable contribution through this bill by setting up a foundation which will bear their names and continue the example of service that has been the hallmark of the Léger family. When I refer to the Léger family, I am thinking not only of Jules and Paul-Émile Léger.

[Translation]

I must also mention Gabrielle Léger, whose energy and enthusiasm have been an inspiration to this country and who has helped people in Canada and other countries achieve a better quality of life. The bill is flexible in its humanitarian aims. One of its objectives is to support and establish hospitals, rehabilitation centres, refuges and other similar institutions. Its objective is directly related to the one that consists in providing assistance to the aged and the handicapped. It is felt that thanks to the prestige enjoyed by the Léger family and to its dedication to philanthropic and humanitarian causes, the foundation will be able to elicit recognition and respect, both of which are essential to the success of any charitable endeavour.

[English]

In introducing the bill for second reading, I am very strongly of the view that this legislation adds a significant contribution to the good works carried out by the approximately 1,000 charitable foundations which exist in Canada. This element, along with the recognition which it gives to a great Canadian family, motivates me to feel pride in presenting the legislation. I commend it to the House for its support, and I also move that it go through Committee of the Whole and all other stages today.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock and start my speech after lunch?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of every member of the Progressive Conservative caucus I speak in favour of the speedy passage today of Bill S-23 from the other place, which would incorporate the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger charitable foundation.

Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation

If there are two Canadian brothers who have given more to their faith, to their neighbours on four continents and to the honour of Canada than these two, Mr. Speaker, I do not know their names.

Let me speak first of our former Governor General. The son of a store-keeping family of St. Anicet, Quebec, he studied at le Collège de Valleyfield, l'Université de Montréal and at the Sorbonne de Paris. After a period as associate editor of Ottawa's own Le Droit, he joined our Department of External Affairs in 1940 and became an important part of its most golden age during the post-war period. At various times he was first secretary to our high commission in London; adviser to the Canadian delegation to the general assembly of the United Nations; ambassador to Mexico, France, Italy, Belgium and Luxembourg and to the North Atlantic Council; under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; and, later, under-Secretary of State. In 1973, he was appointed to our highest office, that of Governor General.

The real greatness of this right hon. public servant, however, is perhaps better revealed by his conduct after he suffered such a serious stroke in 1974 that his brother, Cardinal Léger, evidently administered the last rites of the church to him. He recovered, but paralysis had struck both his left side and his speech organs. For three years with the daily help of his beloved and charming wife, Gaby, he forced himself to relearn both of our official languages. His courage and will power was sufficient that in time he could again work full days, visit all ten provinces and the Northwest Territories and provide inspiration for each disabled Canadian, whom individually and as a group he always urged never to despair. His expressed thoughts about Canada and the larger issues in life are profound and timely. Let me, Mr. Speaker, give only four examples.

[Translation]

Western civilization:

> But times have already changed; we live now in a different age and its contours are not readily apparent. Western civilization, our civilization, is going around in circles and losing its vigour, as a result of a number of contradictions that have paralyzed its energies. Generations are in conflict because there is no recognition of the other's existence; we are insecure in our affluence; there is abject poverty and enormous wealth; conventional morality has lost its hold, and a desire for primeval purity has taken its place; acts of violence are being committed by those who oppose violence; communications technology is using satellites, while large political entities are going towards increasing regionalization.

[English]

On culture:

> In Canada we have the beginnings of a culture, but it is not a complete culture. It takes centuries to shape a culture, centuries spent together.

On citizenship:

> First, I wish to remain a good Canadian. Second, I want to continue to love the province of Quebec from Ottawa. Third, I want to continue to speak French in congenial surroundings. Fourth, I want to receive from you and your colleagues good government. Fifth, I want to pay taxes, moderately.

[Translation]

On the future of Canada, and I quote:

We are now strong enough and sufficiently numerous and sure of ourselves to choose what suits us, to assimilate it and to add our own mark of originality, thus creating a multicultural civilization . . .

It was indeed a national tragedy a year ago when the heart attack that struck him down prevented many Canadians from appreciating the many qualities of our twenty-first governor general. We were all profoundly affected by the loss of this great man. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, His Eminence Cardinal Paul-Émile Léger is still among us, after spending much of his time and energies with the lepers and handicapped children of Africa.

● (1410)

[English]

The cardinal was born in the hamlet of St. Anicet now fully 77 years ago. On Christmas day, 1923, after midnight mass, he resolved to become——a Sulpician priest.

[Translation]

[English]

After that, he said that life was a succession of miracles: first, the Grand Seminary in Montreal and ordination, then four years of seminary teaching in France, and the first opportunity for missionary work in Fukuoka, Japan, in the impossible years from 1933 to 1939. His war years were spent as pastor of the cathedral parish at Valleyfield in Quebec. Thereafter, he was sent to Rome to work closely with His Holiness, Pope Pius XII, in finding food and drugs for the Italian people.

In 1950, at only 46 years of age, he was named Archbishop of Montreal, and only three years later he became the first Montreal ecclesiastic to become a cardinal. Every night at 7 p.m. for the next seventeen years thereafter, he spoke of the faith by radio to the almost two million adherents of his archdiocese. He was a member of the central preparatory commission of the Second Vatican council from 1962 to 1965, and an architect of its important decree on ecumenism. His stature in the church grew so quickly that he was considered to be a future pope. However, in November of 1967 he astonished many people by retiring at 63 years of age to become a simple missionary priest in Africa. He said:

It has become clear to me that the Lord is asking me for deeds as well as words.

[Translation]

Four years before, he had founded the movement FAME PEREO (I am dying of hunger), with the aim of collecting funds in order to care for some of the four million lepers in Africa. The Cardinal provided financial assistance to eighty-two leper colonies in twenty African countries. Since 1967, he has been working with lepers and the handicapped in his rehabilitation centre for the handicapped in Cameroon.

[English]

The following are but three examples of his expressed thoughts. To Canadian youth: "How will your generation change your lives in order to balance out the millions living in our rich centres of prosperity and the 3 billion dying of disease and hunger?"

On his life's work: "I can only provide the reminder that our prime task in life is to help our neighbour. That is all there is to it, yet it says everything".

[Translation]

His faith:

I take what the Lord gives me each day. I do not burden myself with memories, since they often inhibit one's action. My only concern is to practice what the Gospel preaches.

[English]

In short, like Mother Theresa of Calcutta, he is a living saint. Let me close, however, with a prophetic remark made by his brother, Jules, in the presence of the Cardinal in his opening address to Sherbrooke University in 1974, literally only hours before his stroke. He said:

A father had two sons. This was our father. To the one, he gave the gift of speech, to the other, that of silence. To each, he gave the reality of God. He assured them that that gift would enable them to make their way in life. The sons went their ways, the one in the service of the church, and the other, of the state.

On this basis, it is with great pleasure that I would call on all hon. members of this House to pass this measure as quickly as we can. Let us do it today.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, to speak in support of this bill. I quite often think that the activities of our lives obscure the reasons we are here. Speaking to this bill gives us an opportunity to reflect on some of the larger perspectives of life. I am reminded of the story of the passerby of a construction site. He asked three men there what they were doing. One said that he was merely a bricklayer and was laying some bricks; another said he was earning $30 an hour; and the third one said that he was building a cathedral. So it is that if we have larger visions of life, we can motivate and inspire other people. This bill reminds me of that type of vision.

One of my favourite questions when talking with people as I travel to my constituency every week on the plane, or even when talking with some of my colleagues, is this: Can you tell me who you are without giving a job description? We find ourselves so immersed in our activities that we fail to take a look at what our lives have done for others. In life, I think we probably fall into two categories. We can either be builders or wreckers. We can build into the lives of others with our words, deeds, actions and ideas, or we can wreck.

The bill we are discussing today honours two builders. It commemorates two Canadian heroes: the former Governor General, Jules Léger, and the cardinal, Paul-Émile Léger. Let us reflect for a moment on these two Canadian builders. First of all, the former Governor General, Jules Léger, was the twenty-first Governor General of Canada, the fourth Canadian-born Governor General and the second from French Canadian background. He became Governor General in January of 1974 and served that office until 1979 after a lengthy career as a Canadian diplomat.

His work as a Canadian diplomat on our behalf was not easy. He had many difficult situations to face. As an ambassador to France in the years 1964 to 1968, he was caught in an awkward situation. Charles de Gaulle had stated in Canada: "Vive le Québec libre!" The remark was made in Montreal. When Jules Léger was departing from France, he did not receive an audience with the President, and he had to face that diplomatic snub.

He had difficulties in other areas of his life which he had to overcome. When he entered into the office of Governor General, his wife made a comment to the effect that they had lived in 25 different homes during the 35-year diplomatic career of the Governor General. When we think of the sacrifices people must make in terms of our country, we should not look lightly at the sacrifice by the former Governor General.

In the International Year of Disabled Persons, 1981, and also the year in which we have had much opportunity to think about people of strength, such as Terry Fox, it is a good opportunity to think of what the former Governor General, Jules Léger, did for us as a country.

As was mentioned earlier, the stroke that he suffered meant that he was partially paralysed and had lost his voice. For 90 minutes every day he had to work at speech therapy. We know that he had to study the dictionary again, from A to Z, and he had to learn to speak all over again.

In 1975, the year after he had suffered his first stroke, he said: "These long months have brought me close to those who suffer." He was a person who could understand the suffering and the hardships faced by those in similar circumstances.

When I think of the right hon. gentleman, I also think of the fact that he understood Canada and Canadians of all backgrounds. His background was a small rural village where his father was a general merchant and also served as the postmaster, the banker and the choirmaster. This indicates to me that he was able to understand people who came from rural constituencies such as my own. However, in addition to that he sought to understand all of Canada. Even as a young person at the age of 20, he was able to go across Canada on a shoestring. With $6 in his pocket, he covered the prairies all the way to the Rocky Mountains. He tried to make the office of Governor General more truly Canadian and, I think successfully. He said that his intention was to scour away the fussy formality of the office and to make it truly Canadian. If one could further Canadianize the office he would really like to do so. In spite of the difficulties he faced and in spite of his stroke, he still pressed on and proceeded with the goals he had set.

He also had a love for children, a love for young Canadians. Léger often met with school children on the grounds of Rideau Hall, and even in the background of his portrait there appear the figures of children. This is an example for us. Our society has perhaps lost an appreciation for children, has lost vision of the fact that truly they are treasures. We forget what we once were. The greatness of a man is often shown in the way he treats little children, and Léger demonstrated that.

The close of his life reflected the life he had lived; the simplicity he requested at his funeral. He died as he had lived. We can remember how he lived. Léger asked for a simple casket for his funeral, like the poor, and that he was given.

What former Governor General Léger did for Canada in the state his brother cardinal, Paul-Émile, did in the Church. The two brothers provide a unique example of how one family can make a substantial contribution to Canadian society and to Canadian life. They had similar backgrounds. The cardinal indicated he had a spiritual heritage his grandmother had passed on to him, that religion for them was not a question of practice but a question of life, a question of living, a heritage which the Cardinal followed in his life. His life philosophy indicates that his faith gave him the strength to cope with the difficulties he faced during his life. In his earlier life he faced a lot of difficulties with his health which forced him to curtail some of his studies, but he was able to say when he was 75:

—what I feel is that in my 75 years, I have never failed in my fidelity. What I am, the gifts given to me by the Lord, were always at the disposition of the Lord, so if I become sick, I will accept my sickness, and it will be the end.

His career spanned four continents, a career in which he demonstrated his life goal and his philosophy. He was able to serve many people throughout his life. In fact, at one time, as was mentioned earlier, he left Canada to serve in Africa. There he worked among lepers. In his work among lepers he also noticed that there were other people in society who had needs, including children. In fact, at one time he said it is the handicapped children who are vulnerable in any situation. This ministry to handicapped children expanded and certainly set an example for many people. Here is a man who had a vision; here is a man who had a mission; and here is a man who communicated this vision, this mission, to us in today's society.

He has left for us a very challenging question. He did so when he asked during an interview:

How will your generation change your lives in order to balance out the millions living in our rich centres of prosperity and the three billion dying of disease and hunger?

He left for us an extremely challenging question that I think demands a response. It was not a question asked rhetorically, it was a question asked because here is a man who had practised what he preached.

I think Bill S-23 is a memorial and an honour to two people who well deserve it. The objectives of the bill merit our support. One of the things I say to myself quite often is something a chaplain to the U.S. Senate once stated: "Treat everyone you meet as though their heart was breaking—maybe it is." We never know between what we see and the inside of a person's heart or soul what they may be going through. I think this bill attempts to go beyond the many things we may just ordinarily observe in life to look at some of the people who need our concern and our support. Quite often we are insulated from those who are poor. Quite often we are insulated from those who may be suffering because we have not experienced the type of situation they experience.

Last night as I was going outside the House following the vote one of our friends in the House here, a Member of Parliament, was having difficulty collapsing a wheelchair for another one of our colleagues here who has been hurt. I assisted in collapsing this wheelchair because I had done this for more than three years of my life when working with the Society of Crippled Children and Adults. As I was reflecting on that incident when leaving the House I thought this was a very simple task and I was glad that member had that opportunity, it seemed to me for the first time in his life, of collapsing a wheelchair for another person. I said to myself: This type of awareness is something we need because if we are aware of someone who is going through suffering, someone who is very close to us, we become more responsive to those who have needs.

I hope this foundation in the years ahead will make us more aware of those who have needs, be they handicapped or, as the objects of the bill state, those who might be sick, hungry or ill-treated. As I think of the perspective that is offered here I have hope for this foundation, and in closing I would just like to share at least one of my hopes.

At lunchtime I was discussing this particular bill with one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell). We were thinking of some of the implications this bill might have. We thought how nice, how good and how useful it would be if one of the implications of this bill would be to meet some of the needs of our native children. The Légers had a concern for children and for those who are needy. The plight of our native children is a national disgrace. Native children grow up on reserves that lack basic sanitation. They have no amenities. Even in my own constituency, where I have seven Indian reserves, in this year, 1981, they do not have water and sewer in any of their homes. When we think about the overcrowded and inadequate housing they face, the chronic unemployment and education which lacks native cultural content with few native teachers, when we think of the high incidence of health problems, alcoholism and suicide, we realize this is symptomatic of frustration and despair.

I cannot help but reflect, and hope as we support this bill, that there will be things coming from this foundation, which has very broad objectives and deals with very large areas, to benefit these people. I cannot help but think and hope that there will be an opportunity for addressing some of the concerns we have for those who have needs even here in Canada.

We may often ask ourselves why we need another organization. I always think of that little label I often give to people who I think go that extra mile. I call those people gimpers; someone who is prepared to go the extra mile, to do that little bit extra to provide for the needs they see in a given situation. I hope and trust that this foundation, because of the people that it honours and its objectives which have been set forth, will be the gimper that we need to help our society meet some of the needs that exist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Before putting the question I would say there seems to be some agreement among the three parties. It was mentioned by the hon. member that this legislation could go through all stages today. This can be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, by unanimous consent considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for Mr. Lalonde) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-60, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly on Bill C-60, but before doing so I should like to take one moment to add a personal tribute to Mr. Jules Léger. I had the honour to serve with him in the Department of External Affairs for a number of years and would not want this occasion to pass without my noting his extraordinary achievements and contribution to Canada.

Turning to Bill C-60, to amend the National Energy Board Act, I would like briefly to describe the amendments and indicate the reasons for them.

Two of the amendments are relatively minor. The change to Clause 2 on page 4 of the bill deletes the words "of acquiring lands and" from the subsection which sets out the terms of reference for the National Energy Board in approving the detailed routes of a pipeline. This change has been made in order to make it clear that there is no restriction on a pipeline company to enter into voluntary agreements with land owners between the time that a notice is served on the owner under Section 75 of the act and the time that the detailed route is approved by the board. Since it was never intended that there should be any restriction on such agreements, this change represents an improvement in the drafting.

A change to Clause 5 on page 6 will alter one of the mandatory terms that must be included in a land acquisition agreement or an arbitration award made between a pipeline company and land owner. The indemnification which the company must provide to the land owner from claims by third parties arising from the operation of the pipeline will not be lost if the damage results from an act of momentary carelessness on the part of the land owner. The amendment will provide that the protection can be lost only through some act of gross negligence by the land owner. Evidence before the Senate committee indicated that this wording is now virtually standard in land acquisition agreements made by pipeline companies.

The change to Clause 5 on page 6 should be read together with the two changes to Clause 5 on page 12 of the bill. Together, these amendments will improve the flexibility available to a land owner in selecting lump sum or periodic payments for his or her compensation. As the bill was formerly worded, a land owner would have been forced to make one choice covering all of the compensation he or she would receive regardless of whether some of the types of damage would lend themselves better to the other manner of compensation. Further, the bill originally provided for a review of the amount of periodic payments only to a land owner whose land was being taken and not to neighbouring land owners whose lands were adversely affected. Both types of land owners will now be able to select a lump sum or periodic payments with respect to any part of their compensation and there will be a review of periodic payments in all cases.

During the debate in this House on the second reading of Bill C-60, two questions as to the interpretation of the bill were raised by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). It will be noted that the amendment to Clause 5 of the bill deals with one of those points, namely, the definition of market value contained in the proposed Subsection 75.19(2) of the act. That amendment will make it quite clear that at the time of each five-year review of periodic payments on the acquisition of land, changes in market value that have occurred since the original agreement or since the last review are to be taken into account in setting the new level of compensation.

The second point raised by the hon. member for Red Deer related to the wording of the proposed Subsection 73(1) of the act. This subsection restricts the jurisdiction of an arbitration committee to claims that arise directly out of the construction of a pipeline or the presence of a pipeline on the land. The hon. member questioned whether this subsection was worded too narrowly in that the phrase "operations of the company", which appears in other sections of the act dealing with the terms of reference of an arbitration committee, such as Subsections 75.1(1) and 75.12.(1), does not appear in Subsection 73(1).

There is a reason for this difference. The phrase "operations of the company" is a very broad one. Claims arising out of such operations could include many types that are beyond the ability of an arbitration committee, which is composed of experts in land evaluation, to decide and which can only be tried by the courts. An example of these might be claims arising out of torts such as highway traffic accidents, defamation or claims for breach of contract other than a contract for compensation for damages to land or even for claims arising out of financial or stock market operations of the company.

It is for this reason that the wording of Clause 73(1) confines an arbitration committee to claims that arise in relation to a particular pipeline, including leakage of the contents of the line, the activities of the company in building and operating the line and any interference with the use of the land caused by the presence of the pipeline. I am confident that no dispute which should properly be decided by the arbitration committee will be excluded from its jurisdiction.

In conclusion, I urge the House to support the amendments made by the Senate, since each is a clear improvement to the bill. We owe it to those who will be affected by pipeline construction that is now in the planning stages to implement these valuable suggestions.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I am pleased to indicate our agreement to these proposed amendments and to co-operate in any further considerations which might allow us to deal with these amendments and the passage of this bill expeditiously.

However, I cannot let this opportunity pass without pointing out what I consider to be some inconsistent behaviour, to put it in the kindest way. Just the other day we were forced to end debate on a profoundly important bill, Bill C-48, by closure. I think that bill will be back before this House for serious amendment in the not too distant future. We have been told that what is wrong with the operation of the House of Commons is an irresponsible opposition which takes too long to discuss things and that the government cannot deal with its legislative program expeditiously enough. I just want to point out that Bill C-60, which the Senate has sent back to us with some amendments, was passed in this House expeditiously on a Friday afternoon. That was on March 6, 1981, nine months ago. The government brought it to us and said it was needed quickly so that various pipeline projects could be put into effect and farmers, ranchers and land owners would be able to take advantage of these superior and much improved methods of handling the transfer of land rights to the pipeline companies. We dealt with the bill expeditiously, and we can now see how factual representations the government made to us were. On March 6 it was absolutely vital that we get through it quickly. We co-operated. We thought hon. members opposite were telling the truth. We think the bill is an improvement. Nine months later the government brings these amendments forward.

Mr. Smith: That is the period of gestation.

Mr. Andre: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) says nine months is the period of gestation. The mother must be disappointed!

When other accusations are made and when hon. members opposite say that the reason there is delay in this House is an unco-operative opposition, I hope and trust people will recognize that more frequently than not the delay is the result of an incompetent government.

However, we certainly agree to the quick passage this afternoon of this second version of the bill.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to speak about the amendments to Bill C-60, and I do so on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I want to express my appreciation to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), our energy critic, who has given me this opportunity to speak about these amendments.

I want to reiterate some of the things brought forward by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). We dealt with this bill nine months ago, and during those nine months the residents of the Yahk area have experienced disruption. Over the past nine months the people of Yahk have been the actual builders of Bill C-60. The RCMP went out in riot gear to expropriate land. The lands of four residents were expropriated, but during that time the Northern Pipeline Agency mysteriously came in and resolved the situation for those four land owners. The agency made a commitment which satisfied those four residents.

Let me talk about the rest of the community. There was a will to try to co-operate, even though the people saw what was going to happen to them. In October of 1980 the people affected were given small pittances of remuneration. They were promised that if settlements were made in another area, they would be treated equally.

I visited the home of one of these residents the other day. I was accompanied by a representative of the Northern Pipeline Agency and a representative from Foothills Pipe Lines. I asked those two representatives to look out the window and see what that family had to put up with. The pipeline runs within 50 feet of the building. Road access to their home was cut off. From October of 1980 until December 1981 they have suffered the inconvenience of having machinery about. There has been dust and dirt. Their land has been uprooted. In September two inches of top soil were put down and seeds were thrown on to it. The entrance these people had been using to come in and go out had been destroyed to the point where they could not drive on it. I asked those two representatives how they would react if all this happened to their homes and what they would do if they had to leave their cars outside their property and walk through ditches to a home full of dust and dirt. I wonder how they would react if their property were expropriated or their trees were cut down and they were told the value of those trees would be assessed at a later date. These are the kinds of outrageous things that are going on.

Even though these people were allowed to participate in the program, expropriation liens were put on their properties. It has now been agreed that they will be removed.

The pipeline also crossed a creek called Hawkins Creek, a traditional water supply. That has been disrupted, and no one will undertake to help resolve that problem.

There is very little topsoil in the Yahk area, but did Foothills save the topsoil? Did Foothills put it aside, dig gravel and backfill with gravel and then put a little topsoil on top? No, that would be too costly. Foothills dug it up, mixed it up, finished laying the pipe and put all tht material back in, and that was it. Can hon. members imagine what the farmers of that area are thinking? They are told there is no topsoil available for the 150 foot strip through their properties. If there is no topsoil available to the Northern Pipeline Agency, I suppose it is not available to the farmers either. That topsoil was very valuable to the farmers because of fertilizer build up over the years.

I hope the minister will stand by his word. When we were debating this bill at an earlier stage, he said these people would be properly represented, that the provisions of this bill would be retroactive and that the people would be given the opportunity to come back and discuss their problems. The minister said these people would be reimbursed or their land brought up to proper standards. That is the least the people should expect and I think it is only fair. If there is any fairness for the four families whose properties were expropriated and if the minister takes into account the value of the gravel involved, then surely to goodness the value of the topsoil removed and the lawn damage should also be taken into account since this is a matter of great significance to the people affected.

Those are the kinds of hardships that have been created because of the delay of this bill. The government has a responsibility to those who have had to suffer. I would like a commitment from the government that it will bring in this bill when it is finally adopted by the Senate and instruct these people to come into the area and hold hearings. Hopefully people will be treated in the proper way provided in the bill. A commitment was given that they would have that opportunity and that the rest of Canada would enjoy the provisions of this bill.

The Conservative Party talks about the freedom to own land. I did not see any Conservative member stand up and try and protect the rights of those individuals which are being infringed upon. Where were the Conservatives at that time? Was it because it was the Foothills Pipe Lines that was involved? Could that have been why we did not hear from the Conservative Party in an attempt to protect the rights of these individuals? I certainly congratulate my party, the NDP, for standing up and being counted and saying that there has been a violation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Don't break your arm.

Mr. Regan: That's a new twist in politics.

Mr. Parker: While I am at it, I want to criticize the province of British Columbia for allowing an agency to come through that beautiful province, carry out the kinds of programs they have, and doing what they did to our people who live in B.C. for the benefit of exporting natural gas to the Americans. We fought that pipeline and I will carry on the fight for these individuals within the riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the House very long. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) did not take long when he was speaking.

When this pipeline becomes a reality, quite a bit of mileage of it will pass through the constituency of Bow River. There has been considerable concern on the part of many people there and I want to voice one or two of those concerns.

There is one part of this bill that I like very much. If the company does not make a proper award, it goes to arbitration and if the arbitration board rules that it exceeds 85 per cent of the amount offered, all legal fees must be paid by the company. That is proper.

In the Alberta department of highways we worked on the principle that it was a house for a house. When land was disrupted, it had to be left in at least as good a condition as it was found. I have seen rocks, gumbo, black loam, bottles and debris ploughed into the land. There has been no concern for the land owner at all. I hope there will not be a repeat of that type of situation when the pipeline goes through. It is a matter of taking this to the company.

When we had a situation like that, I asked the company man to take a look at it. It was corrected immediately to the satisfaction of the land owner. It is not right when people take advantage of a land owner, thinking that he is only a farmer, that he has no friends and cannot go to court so we will plough our way through, ruin his land and give him the very least possible. I hope that will not be the attitude of those building this pipeline. It is not the attitude of the Alberta government when taking land for highways or other purposes.

One member said that it is a case of stockpiling black dirt. It is an extra expense, but it is an expense charged to that work. It is a bother, a nuisance and a rip-off of black soil, but black soil is a wonderful thing. It is that six inches that feeds the world. We cannot afford to lose that two, three or six inches of black dirt, wherever it happens to be. The Alberta department of highways has an insistent clause: The construction company must stockpile that black dirt. After the work has been done, the soil must be put back.

An experiment was carried out in Alberta. After one year the land did not look that great, but after three years of proper work it was back to the same condition it was before it was disrupted. The crops now grow just as well as previously. We cannot afford the loss of good farmland in this country. There is too little of it now. Farmers should not be expected to bear the brunt of the cost of a large project such as this pipeline. It should be paid for by all the people of this country and the United States, not by just the land owners. When a pipeline is built across a farmer's land, whether it is an acre, quarter section, section or several sections, he should be compensated for the amount of grain he would have grown on that land for many years into the future. That is not asking too much. That is simply being fair to our farmers.

I hope that those who construct the pipeline will be fair to the farmers and not only to those who put up the capital. Farmers are generally reasonable people. I have had some difficult situations to deal with but never once was I not able to go to the farm, stand on the land affected and make a settlement. No matter how irate the farmer is, he is still reasonable.

All the farmer wants is that the land be put back the way it was before so that he can continue to produce food for the world and support his family. This is a wonderful opportunity for the companies involved to show they have some human interest by ensuring that when they disrupt a farm, they will put the land back in at least as good a condition as it was before they appeared on the scene.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

MEAT IMPORT ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE IMPORTATION OF MEAT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before proceeding to report stage of Bill C-46, the Chair has reservations concerning amendments standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). Has the hon. member any representations to make at this time concerning those amendments?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the chair might give an indication of the reservations it has about the amendments in order that we might better meet the point and argue it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are two amendments to the bill. They seek to amend the definiton of meat by including not only beef and veal, which are in the bill, but lamb. As such, the amendments appear to be substantive. They go beyond what is permitted by way of amendment.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what you have said, but this is a meat import act. Certainly lamb is meat. I cannot understand how there is any difficulty with this amendment, which seeks to include another meat in a meat import act. That is all I can say. I am completely at a loss to understand why there is any question about including meat in a meat import act.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might assist the Chair in any difficulty, after the cogent argument put by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), if I say it is the intention of those in the opposition to let the amendment go on division.

Meat Import Act

● (1500)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair invites observations from hon. members on the government side of the House.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): My observations will be very quick and short, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member and I have discussed this fully in committee. There are several reasons we do not think we should accept the amendment, but one of the basic reasons is an agreement that we had made between New Zealand and Canadian producers. They have come to an agreement whereby no fresh lamb would be imported into Canada for one year until they can work out a proper trading arrangement. We think it would be a breaking of faith—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I point out, with respect to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), that the Chair is inviting procedural arguments as to the admissibility of the amendments at this stage. Does the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rise on this matter?

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have read the definition. What we are talking about in that bill is really an additional kind of meat. It is within the ambit of the bill in that the bill intends, or at least tries, to define what is meat.

We talked about beef just a moment ago. What the Chair is really saying is that ground beef would be admissible, but lamb is not because it is not beef, or whatever else is in that definition. I would like to find anyone in the Department of Agriculture who would define meat as beef or not define lamb as meat. Even on Friday afternoon, I think lamb is still meat.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Agriculture would agree that the intent of the bill is to regulate what is commonly referred to as red meat, and that includes not only beef but it includes pork, mutton and lamb. So it is in terms of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the Chair has to be guided by the procedures of the House.

Clause 2 reads as follows:

In this Act,

"meat" means fresh, chilled and frozen beef and veal;—

That is carefully defined in the clause.

There are two amendments offered in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). In the opinion of the Chair, they introduce a new definition to Clause 2 which is an amendment of a substantive nature to the interpretation clause.

On this point, Beauchesne's fifth edition, paragraph (10) of Citation 773 states as follows:

A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a bill.

For this reason, the opinion of the Chair is that Motion No. 1 is not acceptable.

The principle of the bill, as enunciated in the long title and in the Royal Recommendation concerns meat which is explicitly defined in Clause 2 as "beef and veal".

Motion No. 2 and, for that matter, Motion No. 1 are concerned principally with the insertion of a new element, namely lamb into the bill.

For the benefit of the hon. member, I also refer him to Beauchesne's fifth edition, paragraph (1) of Citation 773. Consequently, because Motion No. 2 extends the purposes of the bill beyond its scope, the Chair must rule it out of order.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): I should like to make one additional point. I appreciate the fact the Chair has given its ruling, but if we were to read the beginning of the bill, we would find it reads, "An act to regulate the importation into Canada of fresh, chilled and frozen meat and to amend the Export and Import Permits Act". If the Chair's ruling holds, it means that at no time in the future can the government introduce any amendment to this bill to include anything other than beef. I invite the Chair to read the first clause containing the word "meat". As far as I and the people of Canada are concerned, the word "meat" includes something more than beef. It includes lamb, mutton goat and any other kind of meat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has made a ruling. It is the interpretation of the Chair, after very careful consideration of the precedents, that this would be a substantive amendment, and as such is now ruled not acceptable.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all members of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe the bill has to be moved.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-46 to regulate the importation into Canada of fresh, chilled and frozen meat and to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Nielsen: The minister had risen to be recognized. He was waiting to be recognized, and after he has been recognized there are speakers both in this party and in the party to my left who would like to participate on second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is perfectly right in calling the attention of the Chair to the need for careful observance of procedure. This was report stage of the bill. I now invite third reading, which is debatable, and in which case all the hon. members may be recognized. The Chair should have asked for concurrence of report stage and then invited third reading, which is what I am hoping to do now, with the consent of hon. members.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I should make a comment about many things concerning meat production in Canada. I will be as brief as I possibly can. I will probably not cover all aspects of the subject, which many of the members would like me to put on the record today, because of lack of time.

I am sure that all members of the meat industry, as well as Canadian consumers, will be pleased to see this bill finally enacted into law. I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) would say that if he had included that other group in it, they would also be pleased.

The proposal for a meat import law was widely discussed before the act was drafted. There was a lively debate at second reading and the bill was thoroughly debated in committee. Also in committee, provisions were made for the interested parties to present their views, and many organizations took advantage of that opportunity.

I think I can safely say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill represents the best thinking on the subject by all parties concerned. I believe it will help a great deal to assist the beef industry and to provide consumers with the assurance that adequate supplies of red meat will always be available at reasonable prices.

Canada is the only major beef importing country in the world that has not had an ongoing beef import policy. Without such a policy, we were vulnerable to market distortions and international price swings which are beyond our control. The ad hoc import quotas, which we have been applying on a periodic basis, have led to uncertainties, both for our trading partners and for the Canadian beef industry. With this act we now have permanent controls in place.

Canada is both an importer and an exporter of beef. About 90 per cent of imports are from New Zealand and Australia and are primarily for manufacturing or the lower end of the hotel, the restaurant and the institutional trade. The other 10 per cent comes from the United States and is primarily high quality cuts for the deluxe hotel and restaurant trade.

In 1980 Canada imported 115 million pounds of beef and veal and exported 100 million pounds. In terms of export, the United States of America is by far our most important customer, buying nearly 92 million pounds.

Bill C-46 roughly parallels the U.S. Meat Import Law, including the counter-cyclical formula which allows for lower import quotas when domestic production is high, and higher import quotas when Canadian production is low. This will allow Canada to remain an integral part of the North American livestock economy.

I want to comment briefly, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw to have lamb included under the provisions of the act. This matter was discussed in committee and the answers were given at that time. Just last month we reached an agreement with New Zealand to suspend all shipments of chilled lamb carcasses for the next 12 months. This should give the Canadian industry time to study the situation, and we always have access to the safeguard provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act which can be used in an ad hoc fashion in the event of any disruptions in the importation of this product that can be disruptive to our domestically-produced products market. We must increase lamb production in Canada. Although the sheep industry in Canada is expanding at a significant rate, Canada still relies on imports for 80 per cent of its lamb consumption. I believe the market for Canadian lamb could be considerably strengthened and expanded through improved marketing mechanisms and market development activity.

I might also add that if we were to try to include lamb in the act now, it would mean working out a formula to guide import levels, and that would further delay the bill.

Mr. Neil: It would not delay the bill one bit, and the minister knows it.

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) did not include in his amendment any criteria for import levels. The proposal of the hon. member would provide for a control to be placed on imports of lamb, but he failed to mention any criteria which could be used to establish import levels. In other words, no formula was proposed to establish import levels because the circumstances and criteria under which lamb imports are to be controlled were not spelled out. The producers and consumers were not given any assurance regarding the predictability of lamb imports. Even New Zealanders cannot promise that under present world market conditions and considering the demand for their product.

In the past, the beef industry has had little opportunity to comment on annual beef import levels before they were put in place. As I said, the industry has been awaiting this legislation for a long time. Under the meat import act there will be an advisory committee that can examine the relevant information and advise the minister before he makes a decision on the import level for the coming year. The advisory committee will consist of representatives of a cross-section of the beef marketing chain, from producer to consumer. I expect that I will be inviting members of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Canadian Association of Consumers and the Canadian Meat Council, among others, to serve on the committee.

This legislation, which clearly spells out the criteria under which beef imports will be controlled, should provide cattle producers with greater confidence. At the same time, consumers will have access to world supplies of beef at times when Canadian supplies are not sufficient to serve the market. Over time, the act will help to stabilize both supplies and prices.

As I said before, the act will not answer all the questions of Canadian beef producers. One of the main concerns in the many letters I have received is that they want control of imports of live cattle coming into our market, which can be very disruptive to the supply position in slaughtering operations in Canada. We saw this happen last year. We predict that it will happen again this year. This act does not have anything to do with live cattle. I make that very clear, but I know most hon. members in the House are aware of this. It is one of the most unpredictable problems which they face, especially when imports from another country can take over as much as 18 per cent of the slaughter market in the country. This is not per day, per week or per month; this is for several months in the year. This does not happen in any other country in the world. For example, in the province of Ontario imported live cattle took over 25 per cent of the slaughter market for over four months. One could imagine what would happen in the United States of America, which is where these cattle come from, if someone took over that high a percentage of its market. I am sure it would not be allowed for very long.

Earlier, I talked in the House about one of the American states passing a law which was a non-tariff barrier. This act will be disruptive in the potato market in the country if it is allowed to continue. If we go through the procedure of GATT hearings and appointing an independent court of review, commission of review or whatever, it will take some time to rectify what has been done by the state of Maine. It is controlling the imports into the United States, which is contrary to the international trade agreement. Before we even started to draft this act before us, hon. members and people who appeared before the committee were well aware of the views of some of our trading partners.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my remarks today in view of Your Honour's ruling. I find it almost incomprehensible that only in the Parliament of Canada is lamb not meat; it is absolutely unbelievable. I listened to the minister's few comments. He said that if we included lamb in the bill, it would require considerable work to draft some of the clauses. He also said that it would cause delays and that there is no formula. The amendment does not require a formula. The amendment which I put forward provided for the very thing which the minister arranged earlier this year when he issued a news release indicating that the agreement between the New Zealand Meat Producers Board and the Canada Sheep Council was a voluntary agreement to restrict and suspend until Easter 1982 the shipment of lamb into the country.

I do not believe that the minister is really interested in the welfare of Canadian farmers. The Canada Sheep Council appeared before the committee. It made representations to him. It told him what was the problem, but he turned a deaf ear. I am absolutely shocked that the minister is not prepared to include lamb and to protect the lamb producers of the country. It is an infant industry. These people are trying to build up a sheep and lamb-raising industry. They have had many problems over the years. They were at their peak in 1940, and by 1978 they were getting well into the business. During the last three years the sheep industry in Canada increased by 30 per cent. Then they ran into difficulties because New Zealand was importing fresh chilled lamb into Canada at a time when the market was at its peak. It depressed the market, and lamb producers were selling lamb at less than the cost of production. We had an opportunity to help this new industry, but it did not happen.

I will not say anymore, but I suggest that if the industry has difficulties, it is no one's fault but the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the government he represents.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a short intervention on third reading of Bill C-46, but before doing so I want to make a brief comment about the subject of lamb and sheep imports, as well as our Canadian industry. Perhaps it was because there was no meat import bill about 40 years ago that the lamb and sheep industry in Canada has been in continuous trouble. It was a thriving industry prior to the last war. I was surrounded by four large sheep outfits on my cattle ranch, but their downfall began with the lack of good Scots sheep herders who spent their lifetime herding sheep. When it became difficult to attract them from Scotland, the industry began to have problems. Its real problems began soon after the war because of the importation of much cheaper lamb and mutton from Australia and New Zealand. As a result, in Canada we are still consuming less than two pounds per capita of lamb and mutton per year. This amount is almost negligible, Mr. Speaker. If legislation like this had been in place 40 years ago, perhaps we would still have in Canada a major lamb, sheep and wool industry. However, as the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) said, it is coming back.

We in the official opposition fully support Bill C-46, Mr. Speaker, and urge final passage of it this afternoon. My remarks and those of my colleagues will be very brief, I can assure you.

First of all, I should like to make some appropriate background comments. Canada's beef cattle industry has recommended and worked hard for beef, or meat import legislation since 1970. My interest in this subject began two years before I became politically involved in 1972, and I might add that my motivation was partly the need for this kind of legislation in 1970.

In 1970 the Canadian Cattlemen's Association first proposed this type of legislation at a meeting with the then minister of agriculture, the Hon. Bud Olson.

If there was ever any doubt about the need for and the propriety of such legislation, that was entirely removed in 1976 when Canada, and especially our domestic beef-cattle industry, was completely overwhelmed with offshore beef imports from Australia and New Zealand. At that time, those offshore beef imports had unrestricted access to Canadian markets and they were coming in at prices well below those of the same products imported to the United States. It was also a time in our cattle production cycle when we were producing an all-time record amount of domestic beef.

The years 1975 and 1976 were truly disastrous for the Canadian cattle industry because of those unrestricted imports coming into our markets on top of our own record high domestic supplies. In many respects, our cattle industry has never fully recovered from that disaster because there is no genuine incentive, to stay in or go back into or start up a beef-cattle operation in Canada. There is no confidence in the political direction of this government in so far as the long-term future of our cattle industry is concerned. It is to be hoped that this new legislation, a first of its kind, will help change that situation.

I would be remiss indeed, if I did not remind the House of the background contribution to this legislation made by this party's beef import consultative committee during the late summer of 1979. I was privileged to be chairman of that committee, and I recall very well the valuable input it received from cattle producers and many related people in the industry.

The legislation before us today contains the essential elements that emerged from that consultative committee over two years ago. Although our standing committee study of the bill was split over the summer recess, it was a good session in committee.

It is appropriate to commend the input to that committee by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Their presentation was easily the most in depth and carefully researched to come before it. That is quite understandable, in view of its 11 years of effort and support for this kind of legislation. We should be particularly grateful to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association for the improvements it suggested to the quota formula that is now part of the bill dealing with forward projections of cattle numbers. The association pointed out how difficult that exercise would be, and the bill has been improved.

As I have already indicated, the greatest potential benefit of this legislation will be the restoration of some badly needed confidence in the long-term viability of Canada's beef cattle industry. Furthermore, this new legislation will be visible evidence that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is sensitive to the situation in the beef-cattle industry and that he does indeed care.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment about the state of our cattle industry as we approach this year end. Our industry is indeed in a nation-wide crisis in all sectors of cattle and beef production. In some respects it is a crisis even more serious than that of the 1930s—and I will quickly expand on that—because there are now many more farmers, especially cattle producers, who are losing their farms and ranches due to forced sales, to bankruptcies and to bank foreclosures. These and other related problems come about as a result of the difficulties experienced with cash flow, or, more properly, lack of cash flow. At least in the 1930s we survived in many cases without any cash flow by simply living off the land.

The cattle industry is presently undergoing a critical examination and evaluation by three different agencies. First of all there were the public hearings held by the Senate's agriculture committee following its working paper on alternatives to marketing and stabilization for our beef industry. That committee concluded its public hearings last Wednesday in Ottawa, and I was privileged to present some of my personal views there.

The second ongoing event is the questionnaire sent out by the Minister of Agriculture over his signature to 140,000 cattle producers, including 53,000 dairy producers.

Third, there is the minister's two-man investigative committee which, I understand, has completed the physical investigation and is now in the process of preparing a report.

The minister has made it very clear to me that he will not make any public statements indicating what the federal government's program might or might not be in relation to the Canadian cattle crisis until after the three exercises are over and the reports are in. That is understandable and it is fair.

I conclude by urging the minister to use the stabilization legislation that has been on the books in amended form since 1975—and he has used it already on several occasions—in order to bring in a national, harmonized stabilization program for the cattle industry that involves the three sectors that should be involved, that is, the federal government, the governments of the cattle provinces and the cattle producers and feeders on a voluntary basis.

I can only suggest that if they are all approached and brought together, there will be an understanding and a will to do something about the situation in which we find ourselves now in spite of the provincial programs that are becoming a little too numerous. In case there is any misunderstanding, such a national stabilization program would in no way involve a marketing board with or without supply management.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to comment on third reading of Bill C-46, the meat import legislation. This idea has been around since the early 1970s and a great many organizations have favoured some form of import law for meats. I am afraid that a great many of those organizations will be disappointed with this particular development, but it is better than nothing.

• (1530)

For that reason, we will tend to give it some support, with the reservations that I would like to spend a few minutes outlining. It seems to me that what we are doing with the meat import law is generally recognized by most economists who have been dealing with the issue. In effect, we are dealing with a form of supply management. We are attempting, with an import law, to restrict the amount of meat and, in this case, restrict only beef. In the House of Commons, "meat" means only beef and frozen veal. However, it is a recognition that there is a requirement, on occasion, to interfere with the free market system and with the free exchange of goods. In 1976, when imports almost doubled, this was brought to the attention of even the most rabid free enterpriser. We now have fairly wide-ranging support and a minimal attempt at supply management.

In pure, theoretical market or economic terms, the counter-cyclical idea is a strictly philosophical concept which cannot be found in real life. Our beef cycly runs similarly to that of Australia, which runs similarly to that of New Zealand. Any attempt to pretend to implement a counter-cyclical formula will not result in a change in the cycles in those countries. They will not reduce production when our production is at a high point, and they will not produce more beef at times when ours appears to be declining. They will react to the same economic forces on a worldwide basis as those to which we have been reacting, and their overproduction periods will occur at pretty much the same time as our periods of overproduction.

By restricting this meat import bill only to beef and to some classes of veal, the government is telling us in advance what it really thinks of this particular industry. At the beginning of 1981, the government opened the quotas wide open. We had a form of quota which had been in existence for the past decade or so. However, this year, when the cattle cycle was at a point when there probably should have been a quota, the government decided to have no quota at all. As a result, because New Zealand and Australia are at a low point in their production cycles, they did not send us very much meat, but we did receive about one million pounds of European meat into the country. Presumably, these historical imports will become entrenched in practice and will give these countries a foot in the door of our markets, while we find it very difficult to gain entry into their markets.

Meanwhile, back on the farms and ranches of this country, cattle producers are dying a very painful death owing to low prices for beef. This is supposedly the signal to tighten up imports under any counter-cyclical law, but our borders are still wide open. Not only are they wide open, but, as well, during the last round of the GATT negotiations, the New Zealanders were able to gain guaranteed access to this country's markets, which probably overrules the bottom end of the import quota from three to five years out of ten years, depending on whose set of outlook figures one uses. Therefore, the door has been permanently propped open for these imports outside of this law, and the guaranteed minimum access agreements under GATT override this law. Therefore, the law itself will only be in effect from five to seven years out of ten years.

I can say that both parties in opposition did try to improve this bill. We were prepared to support the attempt of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) to include lamb and mutton in the law. We had also proposed that under the law we should have a board, which would monitor and take responsibility for bringing imports into this country so that producers in Canada would be assured that imports would not be brought in at prices lower than the domestic price. That is not a new concept. The Canadian Dairy Commission does that with butter and cheese. We thought that it would only be fair if Canadian meat producers had the same kind of protection. Unfortunately, the government refused to pick up that option. Under the rules of the House and of the committee, as Your Honour knows, such substantive amendments were ruled out of order.

We think that, short of a miracle or a concentrated drive on the part of the Government of Canada and the provinces, the meat industry in this country is in for very difficult times at the producer level. We think there is a clear need for a kind of meat marketing policy which will include all of the red meats, poultry and eggs in one commodity board which can make progressive plans which will be of use to all of these sectors in the meat industry, instead of setting up separate agencies on boards so that one is picking at the other's market.

We think that this is the only way to rationalize the meat industry in a manner which will be of use to producers in this country and which will provide consumers with the plentiful supplies of meat and poultry products. We think that this bill goes only a little way toward that objective. We think it is a very small, tiny, baby step toward the kind of meat marketing authority that the producers in this country have been demanding and require. We think its only use is to demonstrate a willingness to consider a feeble attempt at supply management. Because the bill is making that attempt to control supplies of meat which come into the country and therefore control supplies available on the domestic market, we will grant our support to the bill and wish it a speedy passage.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill for the Canadian cattle industry. I am very pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to say a few words in the final stages of third reading of this bill. It is a great relief to many of us that we in this country will finally be getting a meat import law. We went through the meat definitions earlier, and I will refer to that later if I have the time. However, it is a great relief that we will have this piece of legislation.

We on this side support the bill, but we support it with some reservations. I am glad to see the minister is here this afternoon, and I would like to point out to him why we have some reservations concerning the bill.

The hon. member from the NDP who spoke previously said that it is a feeble attempt at supply management. It is very much of a feeble attempt at supply management for two reasons. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who spoke earlier has been involved with this bill for over ten years, which is a testimony to the ability of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to get minimal things through his cabinet so that we can have some protection for the beef industry in this country.

To paraphrase the minister, he said that Canada is the only major beef importing country which does not have some kind of policy which restricts imports into this country. We all know that, and we have been telling him that in this country for the last ten years. It seems ironic, when we do get a bill which will protect imports in this country, that it will be largely symbolic because of the way we were forced to accept the guaranteed minimum access level to which reference was made earlier this afternoon. The meat import law which is in front of us will not be able to do the kind of job that it could have done had we had better representations on behalf of the Canadian cattle industry at the latest round of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade. It seems ironic that at that meeting we were represented by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who was from western Canada and who was in the cabinet. If anyone should have known what was involved in the guaranteed minimum access which Canada granted to its trading partners in GATT, it should have been that minister. However, what did happen, to quote some figures very briefly, is that as a result of negotiations at GATT, Canada agreed to accept approximately 10 per cent to 15 per cent more beef on a per capita basis than the Americans accepted. What that means is largely that this bill will be ineffective. It will be even worse than that. Had the bill been in operation for the last two years, the beef import law formula would not have come into effect at all. When we have a situation in which the formula does come into effect, it will mean that Canada will again be accepting more beef on a per capita basis than will the Americans. I give notice to the minister that what will happen then is that live cattle will be displaced out of Canada into the United States, causing problems with regard to our trading relations with the Americans. We experienced this in 1976 when they closed the border, not only to beef but to pork as well.

Mr. Whelan: You should have taken them to GATT.

Mr. Mayer: The minister says we should have taken them to GATT. Why didn't he take them to GATT? He is the Minister of Agriculture responsible for the total industry across the country. If he felt strongly enough about it and could convince his cabinet colleagues that this was the proper thing to do to protect the beef industry which he represents from one end of this great country to the other, he should have taken them to GATT. He would have received total support from the agricultural community. It is easy for him to sit in the House now and say that we should have taken them to GATT, implying that he is a good fellow, but why didn't the minister take them to GATT at the time? We would have been very pleased to see that happen, and the minister would have received tremendous support from the agricultural industry. In that regard, I wish he would think of those things at the time they happen and go to bat then for the Canadian beef industry.

Let me refer to a study done by the Senate Standing Committee on Agriculture. The report was released in October 1977. The first time I ever came to Ottawa was to appear before that committee. At that time, some five years ago, it was universally agreed that a beef import law, or a meat import law patterned largely after what the Americans were doing, would have been beneficial to the beef industry. As the minister pointed out in his remarks on this bill earlier on, we know this bill is not going to be a panacea, something which solves all the problems of the industry, but it is one thing that would have helped a tremendous amount had it been in existence five, six or seven years ago. We could have had a meat import law in effect at that time that contained a formula that would have worked without being subject to the guaranteed minimum access levels. These are the kinds of things that are on this minister's head when it comes to making this meat import law as effective as possible for Canadian beef producers.

I cannot emphasize too strongly how badly the industry was served by a previous Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who was a cattleman from Alberta. If anyone should have known what would have been acceptable, workable and helpful to the Canadian beef industry, which is largely located in his province, it was him, yet he was the minister who was responsible for seeing that we agreed to very damaging guaranteed minimum access levels under the agreement that was signed. That points out how important this present Minister of Agriculture has been in terms of influencing his cabinet colleagues in relation to legislation to protect the Canadian agricultural industry in general and, in this case, specifically the beef industry.

Despite all the reservations we have about this measure in terms of its ability to function and do the job intended, we very much support the bill. We have to give credit to the government for accepting two amendments at committee which I think will make the bill much more workable. The main amendment is an amendment that makes better use of the formula mechanism. It gives it a much more responsive base figure for deriving quotas. That is going to be more beneficial to the industry. We have to give the government credit for accepting that amendment, and I mean that in all sincerity. I think everybody would agree that this is a very good amendment.

The other amendment was a minor one in terms of seeing that the advisory committee is sufficiently staffed in the event that one of the members is unable to attend, for whatever reason. That is a good amendment and I think the minister should be pleased that everybody agreed that it should be at the minister's discretion whom he appoints. In that sense we have confidence in the Minister of Agriculture having the discretionary power to appoint people to serve on that committee if somebody is unable to attend for health reasons, personal family reasons, or for whatever other reason.

Our major criticism in terms of this measure is that we did not have it in 1974, 1975 and 1976, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. At that time the Canadian industry was literally being clobbered by offshore New Zealand and Australia beef. At that time beef that stood on docks in Australia and New Zealand commanded a different price simply because of different destinations. There was a difference at that time of some 25 cents to 30 cents a pound for imported beef originating from the same source but landing in Montreal and New York. That was simply because Canada was the only major importer of beef around the world that did not have some form of import protection.

The general view of the cattle industry at that time was that we did not favour any kind of restrictions. The quickest way to get rid of the surplus is to let the market absorb it at whatever price it can be absorbed at, getting rid of the surplus, getting it out of the way so we can get back into a profitable price situation.

What did happen at that time was that the European Economic Community totally cut off the importation of any beef. There were boats literally in the middle of the ocean, yet the European Economic Community simply would not allow them to unload their cargoes of beef. This small country of Canada, with something like 20 million people and a per capita consumption that is less than that of the United States, was left as the only country in the world of any significance in terms of imported beef without import restrictions of some kind. We had no choice but to ask for import restrictions.

Perhaps the minister will remember an opportunity I had, along with colleagues from Manitoba at the time, of meeting with him in the middle of winter on a very cold February evening in Winnipeg. We tried to impress upon him our need for some kind of protection against the vast amounts of meats coming in from Australia and New Zealand. The minister did not see fit to do anything about this until almost the end of 1976 after we had suffered through two very bad years as far as imports are concerned. At that time he brought in import restrictions under the Export and Import Permits Act, which he could certainly have done a lot sooner.

There are all kinds of empirical and statistical evidence to suggest that because we were importing low quality cow-beef in vast quantities, the finished beef market here in Canada was depressed. What did happen in terms of being contra-cyclical was that more people sold off more cows than they should have when the price was depressed more than it needed to be because we were bringing in extra supplies of beef from offshore. The whole industry suffered more than it would have had we had some protection such as we are providing today. The industry suffered more than was needed and, consequently, has taken longer to get back on its feet.

The industry is caught now, as are most industries, in a terrible situation as far as the total economy is concerned. People are now saying that the cure-all as far as the cattle industry is concerned is a supply management system allowing the government to regulate the supply of beef through quotas. This has all kinds of implications.

It is wishful thinking on the part of the minister if he thinks he can bring in a supply management system for beef which will help in the short run in the next six months, eight months or a year, which I suggest is the period of time when the industry needs help. First of all it will be a massive job to bring in any kind of program that involves supply management and quotas for the beef industry.

Those of us in western Canada where three-quarters of the beef herd is located could make a very good argument that when the industry suffers, those who suffer the most and soonest are the cow-calf operators. The feed lot industry suffers as well. The whole industry is in trouble. However, in order to stabilize and formulate long-term solutions to the problems in the industry, the situation with the cow-calf operators must be of primary concern.

In addition to the bureaucratic nightmare which could result from a supply management system for beef, the concern of western Canadian producers would be that its borders would be closed to the United States. This would be detrimental to us in western Canada because the United States provides an outlet and safety valve for many of our feeder cattle and cull cows that go south of the border. At the same time we have a situation in which other provinces are providing subsidies to attract the beef industry into their provinces. That is acceptable, but the difficulties presented to us in western Canada as a result of the closing of the American border would be of major significance, and this question needs to be addressed. If the Minister of Agriculture is interested in giving aid to the beef industry in Canada, he should lead the way in trying to establish a uniform stabilization program across the country. It is evident now that virtually every substantial beef producing province is involved in some way in the support of the beef industry. It is very difficult for my province of Manitoba, where there is a relatively small agricultural community and no vast natural resources or a large industrial base, to support a major part of its economy. Alberta is in a very fortunate position, which we all recognize and approve of, but it makes it more difficult for a province like Manitoba to compete because it does not have the resources or the very large industrial bases such as there are in Ontario.

We should be able to receive leadership from the federal government. However, we have not seen any yet. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will tell us how he approached the provinces in 1977 with a program which he was willing to implement.

Mr. Whelan: We gave them a program.

Mr. Mayer: I do not know what it could have been, because at that time I was involved with the Cattlemen's Association in Manitoba and, to my knowledge, the industry which would have been affected by that program was not consulted in its development.

Mr. Whelan: They all had it for discussion.

Mr. Mayer: The minister says they all had it for discussion. His idea of a discussion is to present a plan which has already been developed and ask the industry if they want to discuss it before it is made official. Discussions should take place before the program is finalized because there are many concerned and capable individuals involved with the cattle industry. If the minister wishes to have a successful program, he should first talk to the industry to get their opinion on what would be best for all concerned.

The government's idea of consultation is to talk about a program a few minutes before its announcement is made to the press.

An hon. Member: When the decision is already made.

Mr. Mayer: That is exactly right, the decision is already made. I cannot see any industry having any faith in a program in which they could not contribute to its formulation.

The minister has talked about a supply management system for beef. I suggest that he knows he would find it impossible to get that accepted by cabinet and Treasury Board. If he were seriously concerned about the beef industry, it would not be beef producers who would give him opposition, it is his own cabinet. He has to convince his government of the financial needs of the industry. I believe the industry realizes the amount of money needed in a commitment from the federal treasury. If the minister could win that concession, we in the cattle industry will support him.

Mr. Whelan: If we run it right, we do not need money.

Mr. Mayer: The minister says that if he runs it right he does not need dollars. The Canadian dairy industry receives a subsidy of over $3 billion a year from the federal government. I believe that the beef industry in Canada is much more important with respect to the money it generates in the Canadian agricultural economy. I do not know what kind of program the minister has in mind, if he thinks he can run it without money. The plan that he referred to the other night—

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. member that we have very effective supply management and planned production systems in place in Canada which have not received one red cent since their inception. I do not think they should be grouped together.

Mr. Whelan: Now we have got that straight.

Mr. Mayer: In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we in this party are supportive of the principles of this bill. I have tried to point out some of the reservations we have about the effectiveness of the bill as opposed to the protection which could have been provided to the Canadian beef industry if the legislation had been in place five or seven years ago. I understand that there will be a renegotiation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in 1982, at which time Canada may be able to negotiate a reduced guaranteed minimum access, which could have happened if proper representations were made on behalf of the industry during the last round of negotiations. I would urge the minister to do his utmost—and he will receive much support if he cares to solicit it—to see that we have a better guaranteed minimum access level relative to what the Americans have to enable the formula which we will approve in this bill to have a better chance of functioning. If this can take place, he will receive support from the industry and at the same time be doing a service to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PEST CONTROL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That Bill C-45, an act to amend the Pest Control Products Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will not have too much time, but I want to make sure that all members of the House are well aware of the very important role that pesticides have played and still play in the development of this country. They are used widely and effectively in the forest industry and the agricultural industry. They have made life easier for the home gardener and have saved millions of dollars in the control of insect pests and the removal of weeds along public highways, railways and energy corridors.

At the same time, I am also sure that all members of the House are well aware of the growing public concern that chemical pesticides be used properly and be subject to adequate controls.

It has always been the intent of this government, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the public is fully protected, and for that reason, the Pest Control Products Act was passed to provide my department with the authority to regulate all pesticide products used in Canada.

The amendments now before the House in Bill C-45 represent a reinforcement of those powers in respect of jurisdiction over other government agencies. The amendments are regarded by all those concerned as necessary to clearly define appropriate powers of the federal government over all pesticide matters in Canada.

Let me say that, for many years, my department and, indeed, provincial government agencies have operated under the broad legislative umbrella of the Pest Control Products Act. All people involved in using pesticide products in Canada have followed the act.

But it has been determined by the courts that, in fact, because of the terms and conditions of the act, there were areas of government that were not specifically tied to the Pest Control Products Act. In other words, they were not obliged to operate within its regulations.

Officials of my department have fully discussed the matter with provincial officials and those of other government agencies, and there is complete agreement that the Pest Control Products Act should apply to all those using pesticide products in Canada.

● (1600)

As a result, the amendments are before the House. In essence, they provide a legal basis for jurisdiction that had, until now, been assumed and accepted.

I would also like to draw hon. member's attention to the continuing efforts of researchers in my department to find alternatives to chemicals in the control of pests. They are having remarkable success, both in the discovery of biological controls and in breeding plants that are free of disease and pest resistant.

We will probably never see the day when chemical pesticides will not be necessary, but by using them judiciously as part of an integrated pest management program, the volume of chemicals can be substantially reduced and effective control of pests maintained.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

NARCOTICS

CANNABIS OFFENCES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should reconsider its plan announced in the Speech from the Throne to move cannabis offences to the Food and Drugs Act and to remove the possibility of imprisonment for simple possession and should consider the advisability of leaving cannabis offences as they are in the Criminal Code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I submitted this motion to the House because, as a concerned Canadian and a father of three teenagers, I was extremely distressed when the government proposed to move marijuana related offences from the Narcotic Control Act to the Food and Drugs Act. Such a move would remove the possibility of imprisonment for simple possession, and the act of possessing marijuana would be changed from a crime to a simple misdemeanour. While the act of smoking marijuana would not be entirely legalized, most people would interpret that to be the case. That is a concern of mine, and there would be grave consequences.

Because of my long involvement with young people and my deep and abiding concern for their wellbeing, I feel very strongly about any move toward leniency in the law where marijuana and other such drugs are concerned. There is a developing trend of evidence pointing to the harmful effects of marijuana. Unfortunately, many—and I could go as far as to say most—people are not aware of this new evidence. How many hon. members are aware of the current medical opinion on marijuana? I venture to say there are only a few. The general public and many parliamentarians have been isolated from these developments. Back in 1972 the LeDain commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs concluded:

> The short-term physical effects of cannabis are relatively insignificant on normal persons, and there is as yet no evidence of serious long-term physical effects from use at current levels of consumption in North America.

That was back in 1972. It is indeed unfortunate that many hon. members still refer to the LeDain report as conclusive evidence of the harmlessness of marijuana. Much of what was said in the sixties and early seventies about the harmlessness of marijuana is obsolete and proved untrue. Over the past nine years medical opinion that marijuana "is a harmless substance" or "may be harmfull" has been increasingly altered in favour of the opinion that "marijuana is harmfull". There have been significant changes in the position of the scientific community. Many prominent authorities on the subject who in the sixties and early seventies deemed marijuana harmless are now admitting how wrong they were. I quote Dr. Powelson, who said in 1967:

> Marijuana is harmless. There is no evidence that it does anything except make people feel good. It has never made anyone into a criminal or a narcotics addict. It should be legalized.

That was back in 1967. In 1974 Dr. Powelson admitted:

> Within five years I knew I was totally wrong... Medical research groups, after a generation of neglect, began to attribute long-range ill effects to the use of pot. As a result of these findings and my own, I now believe that marijuana is the most dangerous drug we have to contend with today.

This change of opinion throughout the scientific community came about because it has taken time for scientists to complete studies and draw conclusions on the effects of marijuana. It is important to keep in mind, and most pharmacologists agree, that a drug must be presumed harmful until proved otherwise.

I would like to inform the House of what doctors and scientists are telling us today about the damaging effects of marijuana. Cannabis is not a simple drug. The marijuana plant contains many drugs, some of which affect the mind, others which affect the body. THC is the principal psychoactive factor in cannabis responsible for intoxication, although there are at least fifty identifiable, chemically active substances present. As THC and other cannabinoid substances are highly soluble in fat, they tend to accumulate in the brain and gonads and other fatty tissues, and can be expected to persist in the body for a considerable period of time and to accumulate with repeated exposure. THC is removed slowly from the body, and many months are required to recover from its effects. The marijuana user is under the influence of the drug even between highs.

Scientists confirm that cannabis has a number of short-term effects on the brain. There is also significant evidence that continuation over a period of time can produce organic damage to the tissues of the brain, possibly of a permanent nature. Cannabis preparations get in and directly affect brain functions and produce distinctive and irreversible changes. In studies done in England it was found that chronic marijuana smokers aged 18 to 26 had suffered as much brain atrophy as normally encountered in very elderly people. Severe personality changes, memory loss of recent events, hallucinations, and other mental effects were displayed. It was concluded that "regular use of cannabis produces cerebral atrophy in young adults." Anything that adversely affects the brain should not be taken lightly.

Recent findings demonstrate that cannabis inhalation has severely damaging effects on human lung tissue. Chronic cannabis smoking can produce a variety of respiratory difficulties in a year or less, as opposed to ten or twenty years of cigarette smoking. Cannabis smoke is far more damaging to lung tissue than tobacco smoke and renders the lungs more susceptible to infection. Cellular changes in the lung tissue caused by marijuana smoking have been described as "precancerous", indicating that long-term inhalation of marijuana smoke may either directly evoke lung cancer or may at least contribute to the development of lung cancer. Dr. Carol Smith of the Uniform Services University of the Health Services Studies has recently released startling evidence which indicates that chronic use of marijuana may cause disruption of the female menstrual cycle to the point of causing infertility. This is the result of THC interfering with the production of essential hormones.

Other studies by Dr. Ethel Sassenrath of the University of California indicate that the marijuana by-product THC in the bodies of pregnant women is the cause of a much higher incidence of stillbirths and spontaneous abortions. Other recent studies have clearly established that male fertility is also upset by the use of the drug. Users often experience a higher than normal incidence of abnormal sperm, which often is accompanied by reduction in sperm produced. This greatly increased the chance of being temporarily sterile.

The brain, reproductive process and the lungs are not the only body organs and functions that marijuana affects. Medical evidence points to damage to the entire cellular process, chromosome and genetic damage and mutation and suppression of the immune system owing to the use of cannabis. It has also been firmly established that tolerance to cannabis develops, providing a psychological basis for the necessity of the heavy chronic smoker to increase dosage, or to use more potent psychoactive drugs. While marijuana is not physically addictive, there develops a more subtle but no less real psychological dependence that is a formidable obstacle to discontinuance of its use.

So although we may believe that occasional smoking of marijuana is harmless in that we will not become addicted, it is very important to remember that cannabis is a habit-forming substance capable of producing dependence of a pyschological nature.

● (1610)

One person who knows better than any of us the effects of marijuana is Dr. Ingrid L. Lantner of the Erinside Clinic in Willoughby, Ohio. She recently wrote that, in her observation as someone who regularly treats users:

> Marijuana is one of the most deteriorating drugs that youth and society has been exposed to!

She explains that few of us or the users recognize the long range consequences. Individuals with symptoms such as fatigue, lack of motivation, depression, paranoia, changed sexual attitudes and forgetfulness do not realize the cause until after they are totally marijuana-free and have regained their original functions. It is becoming clear that easy accessibility of marijuana is rapidly increasing the number of individuals who have difficulty in leading meaningful, happy and healthy lives. Dr. Lantner concludes:

> If we do not do everything possible to prevent its acceptance as a recreational drug, we should stop worrying about the health of our nations in general. Legalization of marijuana will certainly create the impression that this drug is not bad.

I am sure that many hon. members have seen for themselves those who have been smoking up and noted the mindless stupor in which those under the influence seem to exist. Studies have shown that those who smoke marijuana reflect an amotivational syndrome, a massive, chronic passivity, and experience symptoms such as mental confusion, inability to concentrate, diminished attention span, loss of will power, difficulties with concept formation and recent memory, serious loss of motivation, paranoid suspiciouness of others, especially young people of their parents, regression to a more infantile state, distortion of perception and reality, a tendency toward magical thinking, emotional disorders, and I could go on and on. It is quite a list. Is this what we want for our children? I certainly hope not.

As marijuana becomes more common in our society, so does driving under its influence. Millions of people in North America use it and drive every day. Although the scientific community does not know exactly how or to what extent marijuana affects one's driving ability, there is proof that it is dangerous to operate a vehicle while under the influence of marijuana. A Massachusetts study found that 16 per cent of drivers responsible for fatal accidents were stoned on marijuana at the time of the accident. Our unavoidable conclusion must be that doping and driving do not mix.

There is ample evidence that Canadian youth as a collective group are facing unparalleled challenges in the coming decades. We know that any organism is more susceptible to harm when it is growing, and yet efforts to reduce cannabis use by adolescents are minimal and inadequate. Do we want to add to the confusion faced by Canada's young people by changing a law and in the eyes of the young people condoning drug use?

By relaxation of the law, the government is giving the impression that it no longer considers the issue as serious. The interpretation of this by the youth is that marijuana is okay. While the act of smoking marijuana would not be entirely legalized, the vast majority of people would interpret it to be. That is what the problem is. It is a great risk.

If the present trends continue, if adolescent marijuana use increases at its present rate, our society is on its way to acquiring an unmanageable number of emotionally and intellectually handicapped individuals. Regular and daily use of marijuana is not uncommon among the young people of this country. Surveys of high school students have shown rises in direct cannabis experience to the point where by 1979, nearly half the graduates had tried the drug.

A 1978 study by the British Columbia Alcohol and Drug Commission indicated that 47 per cent of 28,000 high school students in Vancouver have used cannabis. Nearly 21 per cent of the students tested indicated cannabis use at least seven or more times in the preceding six months. In Toronto, the most recent survey of the Ontario Addiction Research Foundation found that marijuana had edged out tobacco as the second most popular drug among senior male high school students.

Another 1978 Ontario survey showed that 41 per cent of men between 18 and 20 had smoked marijuana in the previous 12 months. Not a pretty picture, is it? The experience of our American neighbours indicates decriminalization will greatly increase those numbers. There is ample evidence that wherever marijuana has been decriminalized, use and abuse as well as trafficking have drastically increased. Teenage use of marijuana has risen in both Canada and the United States since 1970, but the growth has been higher in those states which have decriminalized marijuana.

In Oregon, the first American state to decriminalize marijuana, a study revealed an increase of 35 per cent in the use in the 18 to 29-year age group from 1974 to 1976. An Oregon police chief suggested why this should not be surprising, in these words:

> Adoption of liberalized marijuana laws provides a societal imprimatur that removes the onus from the user and signifies societal acceptance of the practice.

Decriminalization in the state of Maine has demonstrated the dangers of creating the impression among users and potential users that the drug is harmless. The chairman of the Chiefs of Police Association in that state reported in his own community there was a 40 per cent increase in the number of seizures following decriminalization. Alaska and California also report sharp increases in use and trafficking following changes in the law. Is this what we want for our country? This prospect of increased cannabis use must force us also to face up to evidence that heavy users are likely to go on to the use of even more dangerous drugs. Mr. William Pollin of the National Institute on Drug Abuse through studies has concluded that:

> —a significant causal relationship exists between the use of marijuana and the use of other drugs.

He found a staggering 73 per cent of heavy users went on to use harder drugs. He also found that people who use marijuana had a thousand times greater chance of going on to heavier drugs than people who did not smoke marijuana.

A front page article in last Wednesday's Globe and Mail revealed that the use of LSD among Ontario high school students rose 67 per in the last four years. In light of Mr. Pollin's conclusions, this House must recognize that the outbreak of this mind-bending drug is largely the result of the casual acceptance and use of marijuana by our youth. Without a doubt, decriminalization will not just lead to higher marijuana acceptance but will unleash a drug abuse problem more severe than we have ever known.

One argument for decriminalization is that people should not be given a criminal record for simple possession. However, to decriminalize marijuana in order to solve this problem would be a drastic overreaction. Decriminalization is not necessary. Under the Criminal Law Amendment Act of July 15, 1972, it is possible for judges, instead of convicting an accused person, to direct that he or she be discharged absolutely or placed under conditions of probation.

An individual receiving this kind of discharge is not considered to have been convicted of a criminal offence. As well, under the Criminal Records Act anyone convicted of offences concerning cannabis is already eligible for pardon after appropriate periods of good behaviour.

The existence of this legislation allows a judge to use his discretion with a first-time offender. Unfortunately, it is not being consistently applied across the country. In my home province of P.E.I., a first-time offender has a 74 per cent chance of receiving a pardon, while the same offender in Alberta has only a 2.5 per chance of being excused.

Judges who refuse to grant the pardon usually cite the current medical and psychological evidence which I have presented as the reason why they feel bound to impress on young offenders the seriousness of their offence.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has expressed concern that new legislation is needed in part to act as a guideline for judges and to relieve the heavy burden on the courts which marijuana prosecutions impose. I agree with both of these goals but I must impress upon the House that decriminalization is far too high a price for our young people to pay. The Prince Edward Island Citizens' Council on Drug abuse has made an excellent proposal which will solve these problems and in effect decrease the use of marijuana. This alternative to decriminalization will not saddle the naive user with a record, but it will greatly decrease the number of court appearances, without removing legal sanctions against marijuana use. The change will involve an amendment to the Narcotic Control Act which will give those charged for the first time with possession the option of pleading guilty without going to court. They will, in return receive a full pardon, after completing an in-depth educational program dealing with the medical and psychological effects of marijuana use.

● (1620)

I recognize that not all users will respond to this program. Those charged a second time clearly have developed a habit that is already inflicting its damage. The judges must have the continued authority to use the full measures of the present law to impress on the offender the seriousness of the offence.

I believe so strongly in this proposal that I will soon be presenting it in the form of a private member's bill. It will reflect my belief that the majority of our young people are smart enough, when given the facts, to recognize the dangers of marijuana. But first, the government must acknowledge the dangers and then, respond to it in a reasonable manner. Decriminalization is not a responsible act; it will only shift the responsibility for marijuana misuse off to the pushers and the drug dealers.

I believe that reform of marijuana's legal status at this time will prove detrimental to the youth and society of this country, Mr. Speaker and hon. members. Extreme caution should be taken when contemplating legislative changes which could have far-reaching effects on our society in general and on our youth in particular. We must educate ourselves and our youth to recognize the hazards involved in cannabis use. This should be the priority, and not the moving of cannabis offences from the Narcotic Control Act to the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gass: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and I thank hon. members. I appreciate the extra time that I have been given. I have been working on this for one year and I am finally having my day in the House.

Before Parliament proceeds to pass a bill decriminalizing the possession of marijuana, let us at least understand and discuss the issues. Let us ask ourselves if we have enough facts to justify such a far-reaching move at this time. Let us understand all the issues before the decriminalization of marijuana gets carved in tablets of stone. If the present trend to drug abuse continues, we will soon acquire, as I mentioned earlier, an unmanageable number of emotionally, intellectually and socially handicapped young people who are unable to function effectively, if at all, in an increasingly complex and demanding world.

I should like to quote Doctor George K. Russell. It was from his excellent book entitled "Marijuana Today" that I have gleaned much of the evidence that I have presented to the House today. I do hope it will give hon. members on all sides of the House food for thought in the consideration of this motion. Doctor Russell writes:

> Can the use of marijuana, in any amount, ever be reconciled with the clarity of thought, the personal integrity, and the strength of will, that an individual must have, who would play an active role in helping humanity find the way out of its presently severe and ever-worsening difficulties?

I will conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by saying that, considering the growing volumes of evidence that we have which tells us that marijuana is a harmful drug, if the government is considering decriminalization and it continues to push ahead with its intent to decriminalize, then I say it is wrong. If it were to do any good, Mr. Speaker, I would get down on both my knees in the House and beg and plead with the members opposite to reconsider.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply on behalf of the NDP to this motion today. I note that we have been debating agriculture for part of the afternoon. I suppose it is proper that we move from soil to grass. As a matter of fact, hemp—and the Chair will pardon me for that—was part of the agricultural sector of this country for many years before Canada became an industrialized country, for the making of ropes and so on. As a matter of fact, it is true that the government subsidized it for many years. No doubt in this very House of Commons at some point in history they debated subsidization of hemp, much as we did subsidization of meat and lamb this afternoon. No doubt this country is capable of growing a lot of hemp and a lot of marijuana, if it so wanted. I suppose the question is, what do we want to do about this?

I agree with the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) that it is a very important issue. I listened very closely to what the hon. member had to say. He spent quite some time on his speech. I was very interested in what the hon. member had to say. However, in noting that he dealt with the medical evidence and the evidence that he cited, I might tell the hon. member that I was a member of the alcohol and drug commission of the Province of British Columbia for a short period, and I also practised criminal law in the courts of British Columbia for about ten years and dealt with a number of cases of drugs of all sorts. The evidence he cited really deals with the crime of chronic use. I agree with the hon. member that chronic use of almost anything would bring one to a mindless stupor. When the member talked about mindless stupors, diminishing values, suspicion of others and emotional disorders, I thought he was talking about question period in the House of Commons. The hon. member is right in a sense that any chronic abuse obviously creates problems. It is the same for alcohol and tobacco. One can see that around us. One does not need to be a scientist to report that.

As a matter of fact, the problem that we have is that the medical evidence on marijuana is only suggestive and not conclusive. I think it stops far short of proving that heavy, regular use of marijuana may produce lung or heart disease, slow down or halt one's sex life, cause long lasting disturbances of behaviour and brain function, or lower one's resistance to infection.

An authoritative statement from the Addiction Research Foundation points out:

> "what is not yet known is the frequency with which these health problems occur among cannabis users, the degree of use needed to produce them, and the percentage of users at risk . . . it is probable that any specific health problem due to cannabis will have a low incidence . . .

A Gallup poll indicated that about 15 per cent of the Canadian population that is between 2.5 and 2.7 million people, have tried marijuana, and that among younger people between the ages of 18 to 24 the figure is over 25 per cent. Not being a scientist but based on common sense, that would indicate to me that if that many people had used marijuana for a period of time, we would in fact have a lot greater incidence of disease and ill-health than we have, if it caused all the things that the hon. member said it caused. It indicates to me that chronic users may have problems, but occasional users may not have those medical problems.

The hon. member spoke about young people. The problem we have with young people is that they believe what I have just said a minute ago. They think we are trying to scare them. They do not think we are being straightforward with them. I do not think we are either.

I agree with the hon. member that we must find ways to have better drug education programs and alcohol education programs—that is the biggest drug abuse; but we should also have some way of dealing with our law in a just manner. It has been eight long years in the making, but it appears that the federal government is about to change the present law. This fulfils the promise of 1972, although I am not sure. I looked through some clippings and I noticed some of the headlines were "Ottawa to Ease Marijuana Law within Weeks", in quoting the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) on June 12, 1980. Other clippings in the past eight years have read pretty much the same way.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I know it is only common courtesy for an hon. member who speaks on a motion to remain and listen to the comments of other hon. members following him. I should certainly like to listen to everything the hon. member has to say, but I have an airplane to catch. I beg the indulgence of the House if I were to leave.

Mr. Prud'homme: If everyone were as courteous as the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), it would be easy.

Mr. Waddell: I agree with the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) but before the hon. member leaves I want to point out just one matter. The fact is that the motion is wrong; I have checked it out. Despite perhaps what the Library told him, the present law is not in the Criminal Code; it is in the Narcotic Control Act. This is Martin's Criminal Code. I will pass it along to the hon. member so that he can look at it. The government appears to be saying that it should be taken out of the Narcotic Control Act and put into the Food and Drugs Act. It has never been in the Criminal Code, but we can argue about it later.

Mr. Gass: Your point is well taken.

Mr. Waddell: I should like to deal with some of the arguments of the hon. member which are pertinent to the debate. We must ask ourselves whether the state should enforce standards of public taste and common morality. I think that is the first question. It is a difficult one, but I think we decided it in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the then minister of justice, brought in amendments to the Criminal Code. He talked about the state not having a place in the bedrooms of the nation and so on. It is a debate among criminal lawyers and criminologists. It is Professor Hart on the one side saying that the state has no business; it is to force legality, not morality. It is Sir Patrick Devlin on the other side saying that the state must force morality in order to enforce legality. My view of what has happened in the law in the last 20 years is that the state's business is not to enforce private morality. For example, alcohol is bad but we do not prohibit alcohol; tobacco smoke is bad but we do not prohibit someone from smoking tobacco. Perhaps we do in certain places, but generally we leave it up to a personal choice. Perhaps this is where we should go on the marijuana aspect, providing that it is not hurting other people and that people are not making black market money on it, which, of course, means traffickers.

The second question which we must ask ourselves is whether the classification of cannabis in the Narcotic Control Act is justified. Critics argue that this classification is too strict because cannabis is put in the same legal regime as heroin, cocaine, opium and morphine and it does not have the same properties and same addictive capacities as those drugs. The penalties under the present act are considered too high. For example, seven years' imprisonment maximum for possession, seven years minimum for importing and trafficking, and no discharge or summary conviction for trafficking offences.

Cannabis was added to the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act in 1923, not because of any knowledge of the extent of its use or scientific evidence of harm, but probably on the basis of a book entitled, "The Black Candle" written by a juvenile court judge which included many sensational and irresponsible statements. I appreciate the fact that the hon. member for Malpeque tried to marshal his evidence today with no irresponsible statements, but this has been done too much in the past. There may be arguments that cannabis should not be put in the Narcotic Control Act.

The next question is: How effective is the law right now? We are told that there have been a number of convictions and that they are rising. In 1976, there were 34,000 convictions for simple possession; in 1977, there were approximately 33,000 convictions; in 1978, there were 27,000; in 1979, 27,000. I do not have the figures for 1980, but I suspect they will be substantial. All convictions are registered in criminal records. It is said that there are some 300,000 Canadians who now have criminal records for no other offence than simple possession. One with a drug conviction for possession of even a small amount of marijuana cannot cross the American border. Certainly it has some effect upon these people. In the last year which I cited, 16,970 of those persons convicted were fined; 8,076 were given conditional or absolute discharges; 1,130 were sent to jail, of whom 1,095 were sentenced to less than six months and the remaining convictions resulted in probationary or suspended sentences.

When I was a lawyer in Vancouver I can remember appearing before a judge about five years ago in provincial court. My client had been charged with simple possession. I had been around the courts, I knew the courts. I knew something was wrong; I was about to plead my client guilty, but I let a less experienced lawyer go ahead of me. He pleaded his client guilty. Sure enough, something was bothering the magistrate that day and he gave a 17-year-old young man who had never been in court before, seven days in jail, because he was going to stamp out marijuana. I have heard courts indicate this. For example, I heard the British Columbia Court of Appeal indicate that it would stamp out marijuana in a case which I took before the court. The fact is that they have not stamped it out.

I tend to favour what the hon. member for Malpeque said that there should be more emphasis on educational programs. How effective is the law? The answer to the question is, not very effective. Not only that, it is a discriminatory law.

Tonight there will be parties in Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and in other big cities. There will be alcohol and there will be marijuana smoked at those parties. If those people are good citizens in the middle-class and in the upper middle-class, the police will not come to their doors. It will be tolerated by their friends in high places in all walks of life. But who will be arrested tonight? It will be the youth with marijuana in his car. It will be younger people, people who are less able to be protected. It is hypocritical; let us face it, it is a hypocritical law. It comes down hard on a certain segment of our population, but if it came down hard on older or middle-aged people, we would change it pretty quickly. The youth know that the law is harsher on them, they know that they are being discriminated against generally as a group.

The next question is whether cannabis damages health. I personally think drugs damage health, as do alcohol and cigarettes, but the evidence shows that it must be dealt with in chronic proportions. What is the extent of the use of drugs now? I think it is fairly widespread. I cited the Gallup poll earlier. It actually indicated that 46.2 per cent of people between the ages of 18 and 29 have used marijuana. This is a sizeable proportion of our population. By all rights, if we do not change the law and it is illegal, we should seek them out, prosecute them, put them on probation, fine them or put them in jail. This does not make much sense. It seems to me that we are back to the old arguments with respect to alcohol and prohibition.

The final question which should be raised is whether decriminalization will lead to increased use of drugs. It is an important question. It seems to me that the evidence is that the number of cannabis users who progress to harder drugs is only a small proportion of the total number of cannabis users. Moreover, the prohibition against cannabis encourages the progression factor because it requires people to contact traffickers who deal in a variety of drugs. I have defended probably 400 to 500 cases of possession of marijuana. I used to know what happened to some of my clients in later years; I would follow them up. They never progressed to harder drugs. I knew many heroin addicts with whom I dealt. I have talked to them; they came into heroin for various reasons.

In conclusion I want to say that I agree with the hon. member for Malpeque that young people are not stupid. They understand. They know what is going on. They have friends who smoke marijuana and they have friends who abuse marijuana. I agree that when there is abuse at school or at work, disciplinary action must be taken, but I question the effectiveness of the present laws regarding marijuana. It is perhaps a fact that the bad effects of the drug outweigh the good, and the hon. member for Malpeque suggested a number of ways by which we might reduce the problem of drug use.

I think it is plain that minor violations of the law relating to cannabis should no longer carry a criminal stigma or the onerous penalties that currently apply. Nothing less than the minimum concessions proposed by the government should be considered—that is if they are not just idle election promises made to appeal to a certain section of the population, while the government at the same time refuses to deal with the other section of the population that does not like them. If the proposals for these concessions reach this House, I think they should be welcomed, they should be supported and they should be swiftly passed into law.

Make no mistake; this would not make the use of marijuana respectable. As I understand it, it would only deal with a small amount of marijuana and would eliminate criminal records. That seems to me to make sense.

I smiled when the hon. member for Malpeque quoted some authorities on drug abuse among young people. I began a paper I once wrote on international narcotics control with a quote from an official who said, "The trouble today is that young people abuse drugs; they do not respect their elders and they are not the way they used to be." Mr. Speaker, that was said in 1969, so things have not changed much—the older generation still thinks that the younger generation is irresponsible and that it abuses its health and so on.

I think we have to try to approach the question of marijuana rationally, Mr. Speaker, but we have to approach it. We should welcome a bill that would take at least the minimal step of decriminalizing the possession of small amounts of marijuana. To do less would be hypocritical, and I think our young people know that. We should then say to our young people that abuse of the body, of the self or of the mind is wrong, and we should show them that it is wrong. It seems to me that if we did this, we would have more credibility in their eyes.

My predecessor in Vancouver-Kingsway once made a speech about marijuana which was circulated. It was to the effect that marijuana was the devil's drug, and so on. I watched the reaction of the young people closely. They laughed at it, Mr. Speaker. I do not want them to laugh at the suggestion of the hon. member for Malpeque, and in fact I do not think they will because he put his positions forward very solidly—although I disagree with some of them. I think we both seek the same end, that is, that our young people be healthy individuals who can make a good contribution to society. Still, there are some healthy individuals who are good contributors to our society who have also used marijuana. It does not seem to have affected them particularly, and the young people know that. I think we must make a big effort to establish some educational programs in this regard.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must decide what we consider to be the morality of the nation from the particular laws of the nation. I think we have already taken that decision and if we have, we should not have any problem in dealing logically with the government's long awaited reform of the laws that relate to cannabis in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) is not in the House as I should like to commend him on the research he has done into the topic now before the House. I agree with many of the things he said. What is perhaps the other extreme was evident in some of the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who seemed to lean too far the other way. Perhaps that is typical of members on that side of the House.

As the father of four children, three of whom are now beyond their teen years, I have been very concerned about this subject. As head of the family, I have wondered what I would do if one of my children became involved with drugs. I was always proud of my children's scholastic standing, and of their abilty to participate in team sports. When they were at the age where they could become involved in active sports programs, we left the decision up to them. When they decided to participate, we accompanied them to the games so that in fact they were not participating as individuals but the whole family was participating. Sometimes it meant that we had to quit work in the middle of the afternoon in order to go with them, but we did this to show that we were interested in the development of their skills and physical co-ordination. That gave them the encouragement that is so important to any young person involved in sports, whether it be minor baseball or minor hockey.

Over a period of years it was very interesting to notice how they developed even when they were playing atom hockey in the International Silver Stick competition. A group of small town kids won the North American championship two years in a row. This was not only due to their dedication but to that of their parents and the all-round extra effort and team work involved. These kids were not selected from a group of hockey teams to make up a star team. They belonged to a team that played together and developed the co-ordination and team spirit that enabled them to achieve that level. Whether it was in the softball season or the fastball season when they went on to the Ontario playdowns and championships, that keenness of mind and keenness of reflex that is so important to any championship team was always present.

As these children got older, every once in a while I would notice that one was dropping back, not performing as he should. Pretty soon it would be heard that he was doing something that he should not be doing and the standard of excellence was not maintained at the level of the other children who were not experimenting.

I also witnessed the development of these students in schools over many years. In some cases they could not cope and decided to drop out even though they had been top students in the final years of their elementary school and their families had been proud of the way they excelled in their studies as well as in their athletic accomplisments.

● (1650)

It was a terrible schock to me when, in early 1980, I was invited to an elementary school meeting in my constituency which was called by the parents because it was discovered that quite a number of students in grades six and seven were users of the drug cannabis and that someone was pushing that drug at that level. It was a shocking experience to see what had happened there and how it had wrecked the lives of these young people.

It may be argued by those same young people that alcohol has its ill effects too. However, we must remember that when alcohol is consumed, it is excreted from the body within a matter of hours, whereas cannabis is retained within the system in the fatty tissues of the body. Its effects may turn up several days later in various symptoms usually associated with the judgment and functioning of the mind. I believe that if we looked for examples and statistics, some of which I have heard from those in the medical profession concerning the number of highway traffic accidents which are not related to alcohol but which are related to the use of cannabis or the accumulation of the residue of cannabis in the fatty tissues of the body, we would find them rather shocking.

Certainly, I am not one who believes that this drug should be allowed or made available to young people of our community or to the upper or middle-class, as mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I normally go home to my family every weekend. I do not get to attend these parties in the capital of Canada on a Friday night.

Mr. Waddell: Neither do I.

Mr. Ferguson: I have to go back to my constituents to keep in touch so that I know what is happening in the outside world. However, it would be interesting to know how many convictions there would have been made under the highway traffic act if it could be implicitly proven that many of these accidents were caused by the use of this drug. Even if used several days before, the accumulation of this drug in the body could impair the judgment of a person behind the wheel of an automobile. Certainly, we must admit that although alcohol does not stay in the body for the same extended period of time as the residue of cannabis, alcohol has ill effects if used to excess and can perhaps become just as habit forming. However, I believe that now is not the time to be looking for trends which may open up the accessibility to this drug.

I am somewhat sorry that the hon. member for Malpeque moved his motion in the manner in which he did. I would rather that it had been made very distinctly clear that it should be left under the Narcotics Control Act and, in so doing, ease the level of penalty for a first offence. However, from that time on, it should be made known that if a person is convicted a second time, he can no longer have that criminal record erased, and he cannot go on in society with the profession of his choice. I do not like to think that this might happen to a promising young accountant who must be bonded and cannot have a criminal record. Too many have made a mistake once and have been caught in a situation where they have had to carry criminal records for the rest of their lives. However, they should be given a second chance and some leniency.

It has been nearly ten years since the report of the LeDain Commission. Since that time, we have made tremendous advances as far as plant life is concerned. The yields of wheat have dramatically increased. The yields of other plants such as grains, corn or beans have dramatically increased. In some cases, the protein levels have increased. However, in the same time period, the potency of this drug has also increased by as much as tenfold over what it was at the time of the LeDain Commission report. Therefore, we cannot just go ahead in a hodgepodge situation without some in-depth study. I suspect it is likely that members of the medical profession who belong to this chamber here, one of whom is sitting across the way from me today, will concur with me when I point out that the effects today are far different from what they were ten years ago. This is what scares me, not only as head of a family, but also as the father of children who, thank God, have not become involved in some of these things but have burned off their excess energy through athletics.

I feel that we must reassess the whole situation concerning any changes in this legislation. I hope that when those changes come, we will bear in mind that a young person should not have to carry the burden of his first mistake for the rest of his life. However, we should let that person know what the consequences will be if caught a second time or caught trafficking. I think this is the only way to go. It should be left under the Narcotics Control Act, but the penalty for that first offence must be re-examined. Then, if no further offences occur after a specified period of time, the criminal record should be erased and that person permitted to take his place in the profession of his choice without that cloud or criminal record hanging over his head.

I feel very strongly about this matter. I hope that other responsible hon. members on all sides of this House of Commons and other parents in this chamber will take a very long look at this situation to ensure that we do not develop a society of young people who grow up under the influence of this drug. It affects not only the living, but also the unborn for years to come.

It is with this thought in mind that I say it is of the utmost importance that the House take a long, hard look at any changes taking place here. If necessary, we should perhaps establish a committee to look into the possibility of holding hearings across this country in a selected number of communities to reassess what has happened. We should find out whether the use has been increased. There should be a thorough check and examination of what has been happening through our medical profession and the autopsies which are performed on many accident victims. It is imperative that somewhere along the line we do much more research and obtain more information than that which became available to us through the LeDain Commission. The commission certainly did the very best it could with the information available at that time; but since that time there have been many additional improvements.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

POLAND—INTERVENTION OF ANY FOREIGN GOVERNMENT VIEWED WITH DISFAVOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, a national emergency exists in the state of Poland following the imposition of martial law and the assumption of all power and control by the Military Council of Salvation in that country. So that the present use of water cannons is not turned into a more lethal weapons use, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the intervention of any foreign government in the internal affairs of Poland would be viewed with disfavour by this government.

Given that there is no central registry to commemorate those peace officers who have sacrificed their lives in the line of duty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House request that a Book of Remembrance be initiated to pay homage to those peace officers who have died in the service of their community and that this Book of Remembrance be placed within the Houses of Parliament as an indication of Canada's gratitude and appreciation.

POLAND—PROVISION OF ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE BY CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The new developments in Poland this past weekend indicate the difficulties of finding long-term solutions in that country. Yesterday, Pope John Paul II asked on behalf of his people that there be no violence. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House go on record that there be no outside interference, that Poland be allowed to solve its own problems and that the people of Canada will provide economic assistance to the people of Poland consistent with the needs of the Polish people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLAND—NON-INTERFERENCE IN INTERNAL AFFAIRS BY OTHER NATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I seek the attention of all hon. members of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas Canadians are greatly concerned over the recent developments in Poland, and whereas Canadians strongly adhere to the principles of the Helsinki Accord with special references to basic human rights and freedoms, and whereas Canadians support the citizens of Poland in the struggle to acquire those basic freedoms to which they have a right, and whereas Pope John Paul II yesterday asked that solutions be arrived at without violence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the House urge all nations of the world to refrain from any political or military actions that may in any way interfere with the internal affairs of Poland and that this House express the wish that Poland's internal difficulties will be solved by peaceful negotiations between the Polish government and the Polish people.

NATURAL GAS—EXPANSION OF DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Many natural gas companies throughout the country, including the one in my own riding, are still waiting for the government to announce the date in 1982 when funds under the National Energy Program will become available to the companies enabling them to extend their services to municipalities not now serviced.

In light of the fact that many of these companies are ready to provide this necessary service now and that many municipalities are eagerly awaiting this extension of service for residential and industrial requirements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources inform this House of the exact date in the New Year when his department's distribution system expansion program will commence and which areas of the country will be given priority.

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CAPITAL GAINS PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in light of recent interest stimulated by the November 12 Liberal budget in the area of capital gains taxation and the negative effect that such a proposed taxation would have on the private pension arrangements of farmers, individual fishing operations and other small business persons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That all of the November 12 budget provisions relating to capital gains be withdrawn, that an all-party committee be established to investigate the issue of capital gains and to further determine the reality of gain vis-à-vis the fact of inflation, and that the committee report back to Parliament with recommendations on the issue of capital gains taxation but only after holding public hearings across Canada with representatives of those persons directly affected.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

PLANNED SHUTDOWN IN URANIUM CITY—CALL FOR ASSISTANCE TO WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent importance. Whereas the Premier of Saskatchewan and members of his government and the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) are now in Uranium City to meet with local residents on the wider effects of the planned shutdown of the Eldorado Nuclear uranium mine, and whereas the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the president of Eldorado Nuclear were invited to join this fact finding mission but declined because of insufficient notice of three days when their notice of the shutdown of the mine was sixteen hours to the Government of Saskatchewan and nil to the mayor of Uranium City, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the federal government enter immediately into negotiations with the Government of Saskatchewan and the town of Uranium City to discuss assistance for those of the 2,500 Canadians who have not been included in the limited federal commitment that is restricted to aiding the Eldorado worker force and who will be driven from their community within six months as the direct result of actions taken by a federal Crown corporation.

That the Minister of Finance be persuaded by his cabinet colleagues to withdraw the budget and replace it with a proper set of budgetary proposals when the House resumes its sittings in January, proposals which will provide realistic incentives to industry, enterprise and the work force to get the economy out of the current doldrums.

I move accordingly , seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House demonstrate its real approval of fundamental rights and freedoms by making the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms apply forthwith to proceedings in the House as part of the Standing Orders so that the charter will govern over these ancient usages and customs that now apply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—POSSIBLE INTERVENTION BY U.S.S.R.—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It refers to the events on the weekend in Poland. Has the government made it clear in any official manner to the U.S.S.R. how seriously we would view any interference in Poland by the U.S.S.R.? Has the government made any representations to the Government of Poland deploring the actions taken this weekend, or any representations at all to the Government of Poland? In short, what representations, if any, have been made by the Government of Canada to either the Government of Russia or the Government of Poland?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I was very happy to hear some of the resolutions in the House today. If some were refused by this side, or by the other side, it was because of a question of wording and not because of how this government views the Polish situation. With regard to the hon. member's question, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was in Dublin yesterday or the day before, where he publicly stated that Canada is watching the evolving situation in Poland with very keen interests. He appealed to everyone, both inside and outside Poland, to refrain from taking any actions which could jeopardize the situation in Poland. We are of the opinion that the situation in Poland can be resolved in a peaceful manner. We believe that this is possible.

COMMUNICATION LINK WITH CANADIAN EMBASSY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, we all know that Canada is watching. The whole world is watching. My question was to the Acting Prime Minister and it is still not answered. Has Canada made any representations in an official way to the U.S.S.R. or the Government of Poland in connection with events this past weekend? If so, what were the representations? We all know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is watching. We are all watching.

My supplementary question, if the Acting Prime Minister will answer, is this. Are we now in communication with our embassy in Poland? Can we communicate with them? Are we hearing from them? Would either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of National Defence make a full statement on motions concerning the Polish situation? Is either minister prepared to make a statement on motions today outlining for us just what is happening and what position Canada is taking?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think it is clear that in the final analysis, this government has always defended the rights and freedoms of nations. When, on earlier occasions, questions have been asked in this House regarding Poland and Afghanistan, the conclusion was always that it was up to the people themselves to decide what their future should be.

Regarding the question of whether we are in touch with our embassy in Warsaw or with other cities, I would say that it is very difficult right now to have any communications with our embassy in Warsaw, for the obvious reason that the borders are closed and communications are controlled by the military and by the present Polish government. However, we remain constantly in touch with the capital cities of NATO member countries, who are also watching the situation very closely. Perhaps the hon. member does not like it when we say that we are watching the situation in Poland with interest, but I think that in reacting to these events, our main concern should be the interests of the Polish people. There could be serious consequences if a country failed to show restraint or did not act wisely.

SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I am asking the minister whether his government, the Government of Canada, has made any official representations to the U.S.S.R., advising of our views with respect to any interference by them in Polish internal affairs, or any representations to the Government of Poland about events on the weekend? Have we made any official representations? We all know the world is watching, and so is Canada. Can the minister answer those questions? Will he make a statement on motions on what the government has done, if anything?

Also, can he tell us is the government satisfied that any Canadian nationals, who are now in Poland, are safe? Is the government satisfied with respect to that? Could the minister just answer these questions, because it is a serious issue that we want some serious answers to, or would the minister like to give us more detail in a statement on motions?

• (1420)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, when I mentioned just now that we were looking very closely at this situation, it should be clear that we are concerned about the situation in Poland and that we are also watching out for the safety of Canadian residents in that country. We have received word that the lives of Canadian residents in Poland are not in danger. The embassy is using all available means to get in touch with them and give them appropriate instructions on what to do until communications are back to normal.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN DISENGAGEMENT OBSERVER FORCE IN MIDDLE EAST

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister, and also deals with the international scene. In view of today's surprising announcement from Tel Aviv, would the Minister of National Defence inform the House what plans Canada has with relation to our troops who are currently participating in UNDOF? What is Canada's official reaction to these events?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the reaction of the Canadian troops there today is just the same reaction as they have always had there. We are there as a peacekeeping and information force. I do not think there is any change in that situation as far as our troops are concerned in that part of the world.

FUNCTION TO BE PERFORMED

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): The minister is surely aware that these are not peacekeeping forces, that they are observers who are unarmed. There are over 200 of them. Will the minister tell the House if he is in any way satisfied that they will be able to perform any useful function, considering the news from Tel Aviv this morning?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, if our 200 people there are observers, who are unarmed, and who are there to examine the situation which is happening in this part of the world, then obviously they are there as a peacekeeping force. They are certainly not aggressive and they are not so conditioned. I can assure the hon. member that if they were not useful to the countries there, they would not be there, because we have a better use for the troops elsewhere.

EXTERNAL AID

DEVELOPMENT OF COPPER MINES IN PERU

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. No doubt the minister is aware that over the weekend the Canadian government and some Canadian bankers decided to provide something in the order of $250 million to develop copper mines in Peru. What possible justification is there for spending $250 million Canadian dollars to develop copper mines in Peru when we in Canada have closed one copper mine in Newfoundland, when we are closing one copper mine in British Columbia, and when we are presently laying off in Manitoba where there are two mines that yield a significant amount of copper, thus causing unemployment in Canada, and creating employment with Canadian dollars in another part of the world?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the $250 million loan that the hon. member refers to will bring 3,000 person-years of work to Canadians.

BENEFITS TO CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like the minister to enumerate exactly how many Canadians will receive employment as a result of spending $250 million Canadian dollars in Peru, in operations that are, in fact, being closed down in this country, where people are becoming unemployed and where, in fact, we ought to be using those dollars to develop secondary industry here rather than in some other part of the world?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, that is exactly what we are doing. We are employing a great number of Canadians. Goods and machinery will be sourced here in Canada and will provide jobs for Canadians in badly needed areas. I might add that the copper mine that is being developed in Peru would have been developed by other sources if it had not been for the aid of Canadians. In this way we are guaranteeing jobs for Canadians. Those mines which are being closed in Canada are being closed for various reasons, including declining ore grade. In this case we are very sure of providing the kind of employment we want for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF CANADIAN RESOURCES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Surely the minister recognizes that instead of using Canadian dollars to open up those mines, mines that will pay workers only 86 cents an hour compared to what Canadian workers earn, it would make more sense to use Canadian workers to develop Canadian resources. If we were to do that, we could still put those additional workers to work who will make the machinery. Why are we not using our resource to build our infrastructure in order that we will be in the forefront of world development?

• (1425)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, that is precisely what we are doing; we are using our resources.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: Canadian mining expertise is world renowned. Exporting the kinds of machinery and engineering techniques which are being exported is precisely what we should be doing in Canada.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—COMPENSATION FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that the federal board of review has confirmed that urea formaldehyde foam constitutes a health hazard, will the minister tell the House of Commons today how the government intends to live up to its moral responsibility and compensate those Canadians who are suffering from UFFI?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, according to the four investigations conducted during the past few weeks, the results of which were published this morning, a small but substantial percentage of homes insulated with UFFI contain more than the generally accepted maximum of 0.1 parts per million. In the light of these findings, within the next few days the government is to announce a financial assistance program for Canadian homes that contain this product.

[English]

ECONOMIC SITUATION OF HOME OWNERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. According to the report today, the findings of the review board indicate that reactions varies with individuals, so it is difficult to determine precisely the number of people who would be affected in terms of their health. Consequently, in view of the fact that over 100,000 homes have been insulated with urea formaldehyde foam, and that over 40,000 of these homes have been insulated under CHIP, under federal government licence, could the minister assure the House that the program he will announce today or tomorrow will address the very serious economic situation which the government has created for these 100,000 Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, first of all, I should like to correct the hon. member's preamble, where he mentions 100,000 homes. This number is more like 80,000 homes. Second, the hon. member mentions the responsibility of the government for apparently misleading home owners. The hon. member knows perfectly well that is not the case. The advertising campaign on home insulation was not directed to that particular product. Aside from those two mistakes, I can assure the hon. member that the government will act responsibly and, within the next few days, announce a program that will be directed to all who are suffering from this product.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister knows—and if he does not know he can certainly check with the minister of housing—that the urea formaldehyde foam insulation was licensed, approved, and given an approval number under CHIP by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If that is not a responsibility on behalf of the government, I do not know what is. The minister indicated that the government has a moral responsibility. Will the minister give the House an undertaking that he will make the statement in the House so that we will have a chance to respond accordingly?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am at the present time consulting with the industry and with provincial governments, and I do not intend to announce the program, as far as the Canadian government is concerned, until those consultations have been completed. Therefore, I cannot give the hon. member the assurance that the federal program will be announced before the end of this week. I shall, of course, do whatever I can to do so by the end of this week, but I do not think the hon. member, whether or not the House is in session, would want to deprive home-owners who stand to receive financial assistance from the government of this announcement.

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON UNIONIZED WORKERS' MEDICAL AND DENTAL PLANS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister made formal representation to the Minister of Finance that he suspend the taxation of medical and dental plans for unionized workers until existing collective agreements expire?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): No, Madam Speaker, I have not made formal representations, but I have drawn the problem to the attention of the minister.

POSITION OF NON-UNION WORKERS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. If he has made no formal representations on behalf of the unionized workers, has he made a formal request on behalf of non-union workers who have medical and dental plans through their place of employment?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, there is no need to draw a distinction of that kind. Representations can be made, and I would make them at any time on behalf of working Canadians who may be affected by any provision of the budget; therefore, I have brought that particular aspect of the budget to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

While I am on my feet, Madam Speaker, I would like to add something to my reply to a question put by the hon. member on Friday. Inadvertently I replied only to half of his question by saying yes, and did not answer the other half of the question by saying no. I will do that now. I hope that, having made that inadvertent omission, I have triggered the sense of humour of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

INCREASES IN LUMBER FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the severely depressed state of the lumber industry in northern Ontario as evidenced by mill shutdowns, massive lay-offs, and inventories that are excessively high, I should like to know whether the minister is in a position to use his persuasive powers to prevail upon the Canadian National Railways to postpone for at least a six-month period the very high freight increases for the transportation of lumber that they have announced. These increases will amount to 11 per cent on January 1 and another 5 per cent on June 1. At this time the industry simply cannot bear these costs, which cannot be passed on, and so would mean more lay-offs and higher unemployment in a region that is already suffering too much from these social problems.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is passing a value judgment under which the railways would be in a better position to foot the bill than the lumber industry would be. I am quite willing to use these well-known persuasive capacities of mine, but before I do so I will speak to him, and to my department and the CN about the situation in the lumber industry, and try to compare it with others before I use these persuasive qualities of mine.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT COMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the ministers, my question is for the Acting Solicitor General, the Acting Minister of Justice, or even the Acting Prime Minister—any one or all three.

Has any member of the Government of Canada executed any warrant under the Officials Secrets Act empowering the security service of Canada to intercept by electronic, mechanical or any other means, communications to or from the members of employees of any provincial government and in particular, the government of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary was supposed to be here to answer questions, but she is not. May I take the question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister for an early reply?

USE OF PROVISIONS OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I assume the minister is replying under his other hat of Acting Prime Minister and I will put my supplementary question to him. When these interceptions take place, unquestionably political information about the activities or policies of that provincial government would also be obtained and passed along to the federal government. Would the Acting Prime Minister indicate if these facts would justify a provincial attorney general or a provincial minister of justice charging the paid agents of the federal government, namely the security service personnel, under the Official Secrets Act? Can the provisions of the Official Secrets Act be utilized by a provincial government as well as the federal government?

An hon. Member: He doesn't know.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously I do not know; my hon. friend is right. May I repeat the offer I made in answer to his first question, that I will bring this to the attention of the minister without, of course, accepting any of the premises of the question.

ENERGY

EXPLORATION AND DRILLING IN THE ARCTIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week Bill C-48, which provides for the production of and exploration for gas and oil on Canada lands, made its way through this House but it has not yet become law, as I am sure the minister is aware. Would the minister tell the House if it is his position that exploration and drilling in the Arctic can still occur under the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act until such time as Bill C-48 becomes law?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks me for a legal opinion, and I will give him a free one. I used to charge for these opinions, but I will give him a free one.

Mr. Nielsen: No wonder you went broke.

Mr. Lalonde: Until Bill C-48 is passed by the Senate and proclaimed, the existing laws are still in operation.

CONSTRUCTION OF ICE ISLANDS BY PANARCTIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I realize the minister did not charge too much for that. In answer to my question, however, I hope that he will lay the appropriate charges. At the present time Panarctic, which is 45 per cent owned by Petro-Canada, is illegally constructing ice islands to be used as drilling platforms in the Prince Gustaf Adolf Sea, just north of Mackenzie King Island, a mere ten degrees south of the North Pole.

Since the necessary permits under existing legislation on which the minister just commented have not been obtained, and since Bill C-48 is not yet law as the Senate has not passed it, will the minister be laying charges against Panarctic today, or will he issue a cease and desist order for activities in that area, or is Panarctic beyond the law north of sixty?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is wrong on at least one point. He should know that all Canada lands above the sixtieth parallel come under the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would therefore invite him to raise this point with the minister when he is back in the House.

On the second part of the question, I will inquire from the appropriate officials about the situation, but taking into account his remarks and his question, I doubt that his information is right. I will examine the matter, however.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT CANADIANS BE EMPLOYED AS AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has the minister or any of his staff been approached by Transport Canada requesting the immigration of fired air traffic controllers from the United States, or of air traffic controllers from any other country? Will the minister assure the House and the people of Canada that the occupation of air traffic controller will not be considered an importable skill and that the available jobs in air traffic control will go to Canadians?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, I have not been approached by the minister or, as far as I know, by any officials of his department. As far as the second part of the question is concerned, my first response to that is that it would not be likely, because there is a pool of well-trained air controllers in this country. We are always interested in encouraging the development of well-trained people in Canada when the opportunity presents itself.

POSSIBLE HIRING OF UNITED STATES NATIONALS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I should like to put my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Is Transport Canada giving serious consideration to hiring fired American air traffic controllers? If the answer is yes, why? If the answer is no, will the minister assure Canadians that fired U.S. air traffic controllers will not get the available jobs in air traffic control and that they will only be offered to Canadians? Will he give that assurance today?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will not. It seems to me that having recognized that we have some difficulties in recruiting air traffic controllers, we should at least leave ourselves open to the possibility of accepting a few from the United States if no Canadians are available at a particular moment or in a particular region. I do not want to say no, because there might be exceptions and then I would be accused of having lied to the House of Commons, which I never did, of course. One thing which is absolutely certain is that no decision on hiring will be taken without the knowledge of the minister.

RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF COSTING ORDERS IN DETERMINING BRANCH LINE ABANDONMENTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport concerning an issue on which I gave notice two or three weeks ago. It relates to the costing orders which the CN or CP would apply with respect to their applications for abandonment of branch lines. Does the minister consider it fair that, in their costing orders, CN or CP can put forward four categories of costs, three of which re-apply even if the line is abandoned? There could be situations where the cost on a line is indicated to be $2 million when, in actual fact, the cost could be as low as $200,000 or $300,000. Does the minister consider that to be an acceptable procedure on behalf of the railway companies?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure that Your Honour understands the question very well. I am not sure that I do. The hon. member had asked me to look into that matter a number of days ago. It is obviously a very intricate question. Consequently, I have asked my department to look at the matter in conjunction with the CTC, but I have not yet had an answer. I will push to get the answer as soon as possible so that I can transmit it to my hon. friend. But as the question is a very technical one, I do not dare to give an opinion today.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I recognize the complexity of that question, and I respect the answer that the minister has given.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION BE GIVEN EXPANDED POWERS OF RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question. I think both of these questions are parallel and complicated. While the minister is making representations to the CTC, could he once again re-open the question of the limited mandate of the CTC only to abandon or to extend a line for five years, and the question of the CTC having the prerogative of recommending that a line which is the subject of an application for abandonment be included in the basic railway network? Without these two, the costing orders, and recommendations respecting the basic network, sooner or later, somewhere down the road, all branch lines on the prairies will be gone. Would he also extend that recommendation to the CTC?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this possibility now exists. The CTC can recommend to the minister that there be inclusion of a branch line in the basic network system. However, the decision to include or not top include is one which the minister must make himself. But, again, the CTC can make such a recommendation.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last Friday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Ontario, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources refused to acknowledge the serious state of decline of the Canadian oil and gas industry since the National Energy Program was introduced 13 months ago. Therefore, if the minister is confident in his view that the industry is not in a state of decline, would he permit a reference to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works so that during the five-week Christmas break this committee could determine the status of the industry and its plans and, in particular, the impact on the manufacturing industries of Ontario and Quebec which supply this industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, for months the Committee on Natural Resources has held hearings on Bill C-48, and a great many people appeared before the committee throughout Canada. I myself appeared before the committee again, only few days ago, and I have had an opportunity to give evidence on this subject. At that time, I pointed out in my reply to the member for Ontario last week that there had indeed been a decline in the activities of the oil industry during the period following the announcement of the National Energy Program, up to the conclusion of agreements with the oil producing provinces, and that the absence of an agreement with the oil producing provinces had been a factor in this decline, but that activities seem to have picked up at the present time. In fact, we are projecting an increase of between 25 and 50 per cent in the activity that is expected to take place in Canada lands in 1982 compared with 1981, which indicates a high degree of confidence in the revival of the oil industry, at least in Canada lands.

[English]

CANADIANIZATION OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I guess the minister is not prepared to have an independent analysis of his judgments. However, one of the goals of the National Energy Program was the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry. As the minister knows, Canadianization can occur through takeover of foreign-owned companies or through the relatively more rapid growth of Canadian-owned oil and gas companies.

Given that the latest budget contains several provisions which will make it much more difficult for the smaller Canadian oil and gas companies to grow, can the minister indicate whether this is an accidental consequence of this latest budget or whether it is a deliberate decision on the part of the government to dismiss the contribution which smaller Canadian oil and gas companies could make to this goal of increased Canadianization?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member must have misunderstood my first answer. I indicated that in the first six months of last year there was indeed a decline of activities in the petroleum industry compared to 1980. However, I also stated that our forecasts, for instance, in Canada lands—

Mr. Andre: Canada lands, not Canada.

Mr. Lalonde: —during 1982 indicate that there will be an increase by 25 per cent to 50 per cent in activities.

As far as the Canadianization program is concerned, the hon. member knows that the Canadianization of the industry proceeded very well last year and that there has been a significant increase in Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry. We are hoping that this rate of increase in Canadian ownership will be maintained throughout this decade, whether it takes place through takeovers or farm-ins or joint ventures. We are encouraging all ways and means whereby Canadian companies will be more active in the oil and gas industry and whereby the Canadian control of that industry will take place over this decade.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON NORTHEASTERN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Throughout the deliberations on Bill C-48, and particularly since the agreements have been signed with the producing provinces, the minister has been stating that he could notice very stimulating effects on the oil economy, not just in the Canada lands but in the provinces as well. So far, these effects have eluded the area of northeastern British Columbia which is the only producing area in that particular province. Instead, there has been a very serious economic bust.

What advice would the minister give the many small businesses which have gone under or are in the process of going under? These are oil service businesses which employ Canadian people and utilize Canadian technology. What advice would the minister give to 5,000 workers in that region who were normally employed in the energy sector, and to small municipalities which must cope with the social problems and factors which are usually associated with that kind of economic bust? In other words, what could the minister point to in the national energy package or Bill C-48 to restore confidence in the oil sector in British Columbia?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member attended many meetings. There were approximately over 100 hours of committee meetings. I am surprised that he does not realize that Bill C-48 does not apply to British Columbia. It applies to Canada lands. Therefore C-48 would have no effect, one way or the other, upon activities in British Columbia.

As far as the statements by the hon. member concerning the oil service industry in northeastern British Columbia are concerned, I think it would be more accurate to describe it as a gas service industry because, as the hon. member knows, British Columbia is essentially a gas producer. In the agreement reached during the course of our discussions with British Columbia, British Columbia recognized that its taxes and royalties, or its take from the industry, were too large. British Columbia said that it would review the share that it was taking in order to reduce it. In effect, as the hon. member knows, many producers had abandoned production in British Columbia because the government of British Columbia was taking too much.

PETRO-CANADA

EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT POLICIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, it is quite true that I attended most of the meetings, numbering over 100, deliberating Bill C-48. Throughout the whole deliberation I was always very skeptical of the minister's assessment of the effect which that particular component of the national energy package would have on the oil economy. There is a very serious effect on the provinces when the minister offers an 85 per cent rebate for exploration costs in Canada lands but only 35 per cent in the provinces. That affects the provinces, because whatever rig has not left the country to go to the United States is now heading for Canada lands, and PetroCan is one of these companies. Would he give directions to PetroCan to review its exploration and development policies in areas such as northeastern British Columbia which are very hard hit by these policies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The amazing thing about the hon. member's statement is the fact that he does not seem to want to acknowledge that provincial governments, having a significantly larger take than the federal government—this particularly applies to British Columbia—should be expected to make their own contribution to the welfare of that industry within their own borders.

The Government of Canada has taken care to ensure that there will be strong incentives for industry operating in Canada lands and is providing a contribution to that effect from general taxpayers. We are also making a contribution to the activities in the provincial lands, but if there are any shortcomings in that regard, we expect that the provincial governments will do their share, bearing in mind that they are the main beneficiaries, as compared to the federal government, of the exploitation of those resources in those provinces.

As to Petro-Canada, I have looked at the capital budget of Petro-Canada very carefully. The cabinet has looked at it in the last week and we have an extremely good, forward-looking budget for Petro-Canada for 1982. I am confident that Petro-Canada will continue to play a major role in ensuring that the oil and gas industry in Canadian hands is very active in the year to come.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT RENTS BE GEARED TO INCOMES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and it concerns the critical need for affordable rental housing. At least 100,000 units of affordable rental housing are needed in Canada right now. Since the government's offer of interest free loans for 15,000 new rental units to complement about 25,000 co-op and non-profit units will not provide nearly enough to house tenants now, much less in 1982, will the minister assure this House that all of the 15,000 rental units which will receive government subsidies will have rents geared to incomes, as this is the only way to ensure that these will be affordable for tenants?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as was indicated in the budget speech, one third of the 15,000 units which are designed to meet low and middle-income families seeking moderate rental accommodation will be available to those provinces that wish to join with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the federal government in the provision of a further subsidy over and above the provision of what we believe to be low market, moderate and, therefore, affordable rental units. Most provinces, I would say, have indicated that a design, in order to achieve some kind of wide income range in any particular group, as a planning device is better not to have 100 per cent, that is, of one particular project, under the rent geared to income formula.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT THAT RENTAL STOCK WILL NOT BE SOLD

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I take it that this means there will be only 5,000 units available for middle and low-income people, not even enough to meet the needs in Halifax much less in Canada.

Since in the past tax write-offs have been used to build strata title housing which are units that are not rent controlled and can be readily sold for massive profits as condominiums, and we do not want this kind of fiasco repeated, will the minister tell us if he will guarantee that all rental units which receive government subsidies in the future will be retained as affordable rental stock and not sold off? Will he make this a requirement to qualify for government subsidy?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would have to indicate at the outset, and I repeat, that these 15,000 units are designed to be housing accommodation available to people of low and moderate incomes. In addition to that, one third of them—5,000—will be available to people who need subsidy even over and above what is available to people of lower market rental incomes. On top of that, the 25,000 non-profit and co-op housing is addressed to that very same market with mortgages available at 2 per cent, providing affordable accommodation.

In so far as the question of stratification is concerned, while the program is in place, and while the interest-free loans are being paid off by the entrepreneurs, the developers or the builders, these projects will be protected—at least during that interval of time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MINISTER'S CALL FOR RESTRAINT IN MEETING WAGE CLAIMS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. As he no doubt knows, the Minister of Finance today in Toronto called on his provincial counterparts to join him in the battle against inflation by holding down wage increases for public servants. Given this clarion call to restraint based on the backs of public servants, will the minister indicate how, in the face of that statement this week, it could have raised Governor Bouey's salary so dramatically last week, and how Canadians can possibly believe anything this government wants to say on that matter?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the question by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. Surely he is aware that the federal government during the last year, and preceding that, has consistently followed a policy of following the private sector, and I believe our record speaks for itself. Wage increases in the public sector at the federal level have been reasonable, have not been excessive, and we intend to continue that policy.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my friend knows that the increase for Governor Bouey was 10 per cent, bringing him to a dramatic new high. I think we have to know what the government's policy is. Is it going to freeze the wages of public servants? Is it going to allow the Minister of Finance to set, by fiat, the level of salaries for public servants? Can they be assured that there is not one standard for Governor Bouey and another standard for other public servants in this country? In view of the inconsistencies of the government's actions and its words, I think some clear statement would be of interest from the President of the Treasury Board.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I find it quite astonishing that the hon. member would charge that 10 per cent is an excessive increase at this time. I am sure we would all be very satisfied if national wage increases were in the order of 10 per cent. I seem to recall the hon. member voting himself a raise somewhat in excess of that.

An hon. Member: And you too.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF POLISH VISITORS TO PERMANENT RESIDENT STATUS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I apologize to him for not giving him prior notice of the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, it seems that people opposite always want to play partisan politics, even on most urgent and serious matters.

In view of the fact that martial law has been imposed by the Communist régime in Poland, and the flow of people into and out of Poland has been forbidden, will the minister please tell this House what plans he has to allow Polish people in Canada who have no relatives here to stay in Canada without having to go to a third country, as at present? Does he have any contingency plan to allow Polish people who are in Canada and have no relatives here to apply for permanent residence immediately?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member has asked the question, even without prior notice, because I think this is a serious situation and one that we are also looking at very closely. In terms of the position of Polish nationals who are presently in Canada, I would remind the hon. member and other members of the House about the special measures we did introduce, which do allow Canadian families to sponsor those who are in Canada, and Polish nationals without families to apply for ministerial permits which we are prepared to give so they do not have to return to Poland. Those permits would be assessed after a year or so when conditions clarify, or whenever they do clarify.

In short, Madam Speaker, I can indicate that, as far as Polish visitors or nationals in Canada are concerned, they do not have to go back under the present arrangements, and I would be very pleased to have our immigration officers meet with them to give them any advice or consultation they find necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. CLARK—EFFECTS OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and fifty-sixth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) on Friday, December 11, 1981 and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Madam Speaker: Tabling of documents.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the tabling of a document, or rather the absence of the tabling of a particular document which we have been awaiting for many weeks. It concerns the results of the tests that have been conducted since last June to determine the levels of urea formaldehyde foam insulation—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. Tabling of documents is a procedure by which those who have documents to table can do so. However, if such documents are not tabled it does not constitute a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, if you would perhaps allow me to clarify the situation, the paper will be tabled tomorrow.

PETITIONS

MR. HALLIDAY—STRIKES BY PUBLIC SERVANTS TO BE ILLEGAL

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents, a petition signed by 118 residents of Oxford, including supporters of the major political parties in Canada, which calls attention to the great damage to Canadian business and the considerable inconvenience experienced by the Canadian public as a result of direct strikes involving the public service. The postal strike of last summer is a case in point.

With this in mind, the petitioners call upon the federal government to take immediate steps to make it illegal for employees of the federal government to go on strike.

MR. KING—CALL FOR CESSATION OF NUCLEAR INDUSTRY ACTIVITY

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, which was signed by citizens of the WestBank area in British Columbia and who have formed themselves into an anti-nuclear society named "Candu Won't Do", is to bring to the attention of the House a statement to which 5,903 signatures have been affixed detailing the inherent global hazard to human life itself as a result of slow or catastrophic radiation damage through the use of nuclear technology. The copy page of this statement is attached to this petition.

The nature of the petition is to pray and beseech this House to introduce a bill to Parliament which would stop all nuclear-related activities, including uranium mining, production and sales of Candu reactors and the decommissioning of all existing nuclear reactors.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that you will find their petition in order and that, through their efforts and this petition, Members of Parliament and the citizens of Canada will be alerted to the magnifying threat to human life posed by nuclear industry activity whether the purpose is for benefit or destruction.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,057, 3,088, 3,102, 3,111, 3,112, 3,317 and 3,330.

BASIS FOR BUDGET ALLOTMENT

Question No. 3,057—Mr. McKenzie:

1. With reference to section 10.44 of the 1980 Report of the Auditor General, on what data, surveys, information or other statistics is the redistribution of budget allotments based?

2. Has the Department of Veterans Affairs concluded that the majority of veterans would rather stay at home than go to veterans hospitals and, if so, on what information, surveys or other sources is this conclusion based?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The budget for the Aging Veterans program is based on the experience of those provinces which offer care in the home as an insured health care service. No redistribution of budget allotments is involved, as new funds were provided specifically for this program.

2. The Department of Veterans Affairs has concluded that the majority of veterans, like the majority of other Canadian citizens, would rather remain at home, retaining their independence to the degree possible, than be institutionalized. This conclusion is strongly in accord with the literature in the field of gerontology which states, emphatically, that as long as it remains a feasible alternative, most elderly individuals strongly prefer to remain in their own home.

In developing the Aging Veterans Program, which has as its aim the preservation of independent functioning to the degree possible, the veterans' associations across Canada were consulted and there continues to be an ongoing consultation with these veterans' groups relative to the program.

INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF COMMUNICATION

Question No. 3,317—Mr. Fretz:

Following the meeting of the 35-state Intergovernmental Council of the International Program for the Development of Communication (IPDC) held in mid-June, does the government intend to contribute to the launching and implementation of the program and, if so (a) what amount of money and manpower (b) what were the names of all Canadians involved (c) which (i) international agencies (ii) countries will receive assistance?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: Canadian preparations are under way for the second meeting of the Intergovernmental Council of the IPDC, to be held in Mexico in mid-January. Appropriate government departments and non-governmental organizations are working to determine what form Canadian participation might take.

The first meeting of the council set the broad outlines of the program but did not define specific mechanisms nor did it identify projects. It is anticipated that at the second meeting projects will be presented for support; we do not yet know the specifics of these projects, but they are likely to be regional rather than limited to one particular country. Until more information is available, the Canadian contribution to the program cannot be determined.

FEES PAID TO TRUSTEES IN BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 3,330—Mr. Herbert:

For each of the past five years, by province, what was the total amount of fees paid to trustees in bankruptcies?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The information requested is not available. Please note that our statistical system is such that it is impossible to separate fees paid to trustees apart from other administrative costs.

[Translation]

Mr. Smith: I suggest, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary question No. 3,440, which is a starred question that was placed on the Order Paper on November 18. It concerns some committee work done by the Minister of Agriculture, a committee that he set up. It is fairly straightforward and I would hope that he would give it his utmost attention.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will take note of that representation.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

The House resumed, from Friday, November 6, consideration of the motion of (Mr. Caccia) that Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, this afternoon we are debating Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code.

This bill has been with us for a period of time and we are now into second reading. The bill sets out the details of an aid program which is to be made available to older employees who are laid off as a result of plant shutdowns. This program extends benefits now available to certain employees in designated sectors, and this bill is designed to extend these benefits to all industrial sectors. As well, these benefits will extend to community-based programs which were announced jointly by the Departments of Labour, Manpower and Immigration and Industry, Trade and Commerce in the beginning of 1981.

I think it goes without saying that although the bill will provide some worthwhile benefits, it is too little, too late. There are massive lay-offs occurring at this time, many plants closing and bankruptcies taking place every day. Bankruptcies are up by 50 per cent in small businesses as well as in the farming industry. The budget for this new amendment, I note, is $2.5 million for the fiscal year 1981-82. It will not be retroactive to help all those people who are experiencing great difficulties right now. I think of the Admiral Corporation which laid off 2,400 workers and went into receivership. Those workers are not receiving back pay, holiday pay or benefits that are owing to them. These workers were laid off just before Christmas and they have no relief whatsoever because their benefits are tied up. That is just one example. There are hundreds of other examples throughout Canada which could be cited. Some of my colleagues will be expressing their concerns in this connection later today.

This bill was originally ruled out of order before Parliament adjourned for the summer recess in mid-July. At that time we thought that this bill would go through rather quickly on second reading. However, there are some matters to be discussed before the bill goes to committee later today. It is my understanding that the bill will go through second reading today and into committee tomorrow.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are now debating is one which is not launching a massive assault on the problem of unemployment in Canada. It will do nothing for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are now being laid off as a result of the depression that is now under way because of the incompetent policies of the government which we have had since March, 1980.

Bill C-78 only makes provision for employees of a designated industry which is closed down, and those employees who are laid off will receive certain benefits, if they do not otherwise qualify for benefits. An industry is designated because there has been a significant loss of employment due not to economic recession but to import competition or industrial restructuring or the like. Or an industry is in a region that has been designated by the government. All that is going to happen is that these laid-off employees, as I understand it, who are, at least in one category, 54 years of age and have worked in the industry for at least ten of the preceding 15 years, or who were at least 50 years of age, have worked in the industry at least 30 years but are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance, do not qualify for a Quebec or Canada pension and are not able to obtain other work either through job retraining or relocation or both, will receive additional assistance. That is what this bill basically provides for. It is an inadequate response to the present problems we have in this country with respect to unemployment.

It was a pledge of this government in the election of 1979-80 that they were going to do certain things. I just want to put on the record some of the things they said they were going to do. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said this on January 12, 1980:

We have an economic program for the eighties which will enhance dignity, create opportunities and provide security.

That was his economic program for the eighties, and we have to ask this government now, where is this program which is going to enhance dignity, create opportunities and provide security? What Canadians have had any security provided for them in the 22 months since this government came to office? What Canadians have had their dignity enhanced by this government's policies since it came to power in February of 1980? What opportunities and what security is being provided? That is what we ask. That was the pledge. Rather than do anything in the economic sphere the Liberals, with the help of the NDP, defeated a government that was doing something along these lines and replaced it. It was on the basis of these promises that they did so.

I want to refer also to a transcript of a press conference the Prime Minister had in Toronto on that day, January 12, 1980. On page 5 of the transcript he was outlining five great principles that were going to be put into effect if they were re-elected. The third one is this:

—we will implement a development and industrial strategy which will provide jobs, spur growth, increase Canadian ownership and control.

Where is it? Where is the growth that has been spurred? We just had a quarter in which the gross national product declined. Where is the industrial strategy that has provided jobs? The only industrial strategy has been to help Massey-Ferguson or Chrysler in their tremendous troubles and to try to save a few jobs there, not to provide additional jobs. Then the statement was made:

This party will not simply stand by and let the recession come. We will fight it and overcome it.

That was the Prime Minister's statement in January of 1980. He was not going to stand by and let the recession come. "We will fight it and overcome it." Where is the fight? Where is the overcoming? Is it represented in this pitiful bill that is now before the House to help a few people if they are over 50 or over age 54 in a designated industry? Is that the great fight against recession? Is the budget of November 12 this great fight against recession? Is the budget of November 12 going to fight and overcome the recession? It is not. It is going to assist the recession, as every observer has said.

The Prime Minister went on to say in the same press conference:

We must increase the economic might of Canada by strengthening each of the regions. We will make the big projects happen, whether they be developing the fishery in the Atlantic, rebuilding the railways in the West, developing new manufacturing strength in Ontario and Quebec, or expanding British Columbia's resource and trade potential. We need a national government that builds up rather than tears down.

How much of that pledge has been carried out? What regions have they strengthened? What region of Canada has been strengthened by this government since it got into this House? I can assure you this: it has weakened the Atlantic region, it has weakened the province of Newfoundland, it has engaged in a dastardly conspiracy and combination to put down the province of Newfoundland because the government of the province of Newfoundland will not bow and will not accept the dictates of this government. It had a chance in Newfoundland to assist in the field of economic development on a project in my own district, which I will mention briefly just once again, the project of providing a synchrolift for the federally-owned dockyard in St. John's, Newfoundland. It had a chance to assist in the dockyard that it owned that has a great chance for the future. It has been in operation now since the late 1880s. It was given to the Government of Canada as a gift in 1949 when we entered Confederation. This government made a pledge in 1978 to provide the financing for a synchrolift, a three-berth synchrolift, to enable that dockyard to continue to function and be successful in the future; to preserve the 350 jobs that were there and to increase that number by another 150 jobs. Yet rather than carrying that pledge out, and rather than spending the money provided by the PC government in the estimates to start that process of a synchrolift in the federal dockyard in St. John's, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) used the money for some other purpose and cancelled federal assistance for the federally owned dockyard in St. John's, Newfoundland, to provide the synchrolift. They left it to the province, and on Tuesday of last week, December 8, the government of Newfoundland announced a $30 million project at the federal dockyard in St. John's. The financing is to be made available by the province, $10 million in loans and subsidized interest, so that the CN, which operates that dockyard on behalf of the Government of Canada, would go ahead and award the contracts for the synchrolift project.

This is the government that promised to increase the economic might of Canada by strengthening each of the regions. It has deliberately attempted to damage the Newfoundland region because it does not agree with the policies or the statements of the government of the province of Newfoundland and has forced the government of Newfoundland, which is the least able to afford it, to spend money on a federally owned dockyard in St. John's so that that dockyard will be able to persevere in the future, so the 350 jobs that are now there would be saved and another 150 jobs would be created. If that is not the most shameful piece of economic poltroonery ever undertaken by a Government of Canada, I do not know what is. There could not be a worse example than this low, foul, political act of a government that was elected on the basis that they were going to increase the economic might of Canada by strengthening each of the regions.

Since I am referring to the Newfoundland region, let me look at another subject in connection with the Newfoundland region, and that is the so-called DREE agreements. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) is never in his place in this House to answer questions in this House, and that minister has made it a deliberate policy not to sign agreements.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the minister to whom he just referred was in his seat today during question period.

Mr. McDermid: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is more often not in this House than he is in this House, and we can check the records of the House since the session started last fall to see that he is never here to answer questions. He is afraid to be in his place to answer them.

Rather than trying to strengthen the regions, this is a minister who has eight DREE agreements pending with the government of Newfoundland that he has refused to sign. The premier of the province cannot get hold of that minister to get agreements signed. Last week that minister had the member for the district, the hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), announce that a surplus from an existing DREE agreement would be spent in Corner Brook when it was supposed to be spent there all along, under an agreement that I had signed with the province in 1979. There is a deliberate plan by this government not to sign DREE agreements with the province of Newfoundland. That is so that unemployment will increase in Newfoundland, so that economic pressure will increase in Newfoundland on the government of Newfoundland to bring that government to surrender its will and its independence to the federal government.

So while they bring in this kind of palliative bill which also gives them far too much power to designate industries and to designate industries in regions to allow political factors to interfere in their decisions, while they are doing that, we have seen a calculated campaign by this government to use in Newfoundland the discretion they have to crush Newfoundland as a region, not to develop jobs and not to develop its economy. I can go ahead and give further instances in a few minutes.

At the Toronto press conference the Prime Minister was not Prime Minister then. He was a lot more humble then. He was not the arrogant figure we have seen in the House these last few months with his fascination for the Constitution. Nero fiddles while Canada burns. He is fixated on the Constitution, constipated on the Constitution. There has been no other movement of the government except constitutional movements, and let the economy go. This was his fifth point:

● (1520)

—the Liberal party commits itself to enhancing the dignity and security of individual Canadians.

How? He did not say how. Further on he said:

We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job.

That was the pledge of the Prime Minister in that campaign, "We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job". What is the reality today? You can pick up the paper at any time, Mr. Speaker, and see what the reality is. For the week ending November 4, there were 979,000 people unemployed, an unemployment rate of 8.2 per cent over all nationally. In Newfoundland, my own province, there was an unemployment rate of 15.3 per cent. That is the official rate. In actual fact, it is somewhere between 25 and 30 per cent of the working population of Newfoundland that is unemployed.

Statistics Canada admits that there are 348,000 hidden unemployed in Canada not shown in the figures because they have given up looking for work. There have been no jobs so they are no longer looking for work. Newfoundland is the worst province for that. The participation rate declined last month. There were 50,000 people who dropped out of the labour force. If they had stayed in, the adjusted rate would have been 8.6 per cent. The actual number of people out of work according to the November 4 statistics was 928,000.

Does the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who just brought down his budget, show any hope for the future? He does not. He forecasts for this year an average unemployment rate of 7.2 per cent. He forecasts for next year, after his tremendous budget is implemented, if it ever is, a rate of 7.8 per cent and in 1983 a rate for the year of 8.3 per cent.

In the last three months, we have been told by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, more than 140,000 workers lost their jobs in Canadian factories, according to Mr. Roy Phillips. It is going to be a long, cold winter, said the spokesman for 8,000 manufacturers. The Ontario labour ministry says 67 plants in the province, 34 of them in the Toronto area, have already shut down. Another 89 have curtailed operations. On and on it goes.

The worst situation of all with reference to employment is in Newfoundland. This government, rather than attempting to help Newfoundlanders and the Newfoundland government overcome this tremendous problem of unemployment, has deliberately acted to decrease employment in Newfoundland by withdrawing federal assistance from a federal project, a federally-owned dockyward in St. John's and by refusing to enter into DREE agreements. It has refused to sign an agreement and spend transportation moneys in Newfoundland. It is now engaged in cutting off or reducing ferry service from North Sydney to Argentia. One of the two ferries will be taken off next year. It is going to reduce employment in the Argentia area of Newfoundland, one of the worst hit areas already with respect to employment in the whole island of Newfoundland. That is the Prime Minister's program when in office.

Let us look again at the hypocrisy. This is the most hypocritical and pusillanimous government this country has ever had and, in my book, the Prime Minister is the most reprehensible. This is what the Prime Minister said, and I quote from the Toronto Star of April 24, 1980:

—it's more important to create jobs and ensure economic growth than to reduce the federal deficit.

He has not passed that message on to Mr. MacEachen. I quote his exact words:

"We're not obsessed by the deficit in the same way as Mr. Clark's government was," Trudeau said at his weekly news conference yesterday.

"We will not reduce the deficit at the expense of creating more unemployment."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I expect hon. members to respect the rules of the House and not name other members by name, but rather by the position they hold, their title, by department or the constituency name. I invite hon. members to comply with the rule.

Mr. Crosbie: I am just quoting from this press clipping which does not say "Prime Minister". It says "Trudeau said", but I will change it. Here is what the Prime Minister said, for those fastidious gentlemen opposite who hope to lip their way into power somehow in the cabinet. He said "We will not reduce the deficit at the expense of creating more unemployment." Why is it that his Minister of Finance has just brought in an allegedly deficit-reducing budget? He is going to reduce the deficit next year by approximately $3 billion. That is after a 54 per cent increase in indirect taxes.

This is the government that was so concerned about taxation in December 1979. It has increased its take in indirect taxes by $8 billion, or by 54 per cent between last year and this year. It has increased the total taxes taken from the Canadian people by 31 per cent this year. It is going to increase spending by 22 per cent. Therefore, there is going to be a slightly smaller deficit, almost $3 billion smaller, by the end of the year. This is the government whose Prime Minister said, "We will not reduce the deficit at the expense of creating more unemployment". He went on to say this:

> The government does not need to reduce the deficit to help the economy "because it is a healthy economy".

This dilettante does not worry about whether we have a healthy or unhealthy economy. Whether it is healthy or unhealthy is not going to affect him one jot or tittle, not one whit. He will still be there at 24 Sussex Drive. He will still have all his nannies and people to help him look after things no matter what happens to the Canadian economy. He is not going to retire. Of course he is not. He will need to have his hands pried off the door sills there and be hauled away after he is trounced in the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: He likes the swimming pool.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, he likes the swimming pool, but he will never pay for one of his own, that's for sure. The government says it wants a healthy and regionally balanced economic development in Canada. The facts are to the contrary. Why is the government now trying to seize from Newfoundland jurisdiction and control over the offshore minerals? Why has it put up a crimp in the offshore operations for the last 12 months by taking such a selfish attitude toward development of the offshore resources off Newfoundland?

This government has neglected the fishing industry. The fishing industry of Newfoundland is in extremis. There can be no rural economy in Newfoundland without a healthy fishing industry. The government has done nothing in the crisis of the last six months to help the fishing industry.

Fishery Products Limited, the largest employer in Newfoundland in the fishery, closed two weeks early for Christmas and does not know when it will again open in January because of the economic situation of the fishery. The Lake Group, the second largest Newfoundland owned company, has 2,500 employees. It buys fish from 1,600 inshore fishermen. There are 20,000 people who live in communities directly dependent on that economy, such as Gaultois, Grand Bank, Fortune, Bonavista, Feormeuse in my own district with 240 people now laid off, Englee, Bide Arm, Cook's Harbour, Baine Harbour. Those plants are not operating, except for the Fortune plant, and one day a week at Gaultois. There are 27 trawlers laid up by that company, which is in the hands of the banks. They are now waiting to hear from the Government of Canada, in particular the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Leblanc). Will the government provide $15 million by way of loans or grants or whatever to the Lake Group so that they continue operating? They want $15 million from the federal government and $5 million in assistance from the province. Why has this not been acted on? It involves 2,500 employees.

Look at the papers. We see that the government is going to have to pay $125 million flowing from loans and guarantees to Consolidated Computer Incorporated in the Ottawa Valley over the last decade—$125 million thrown away. They do not employ 100 people. The Newfoundland fishing industry with tens of thousands employed is about to collapse and this group across the way has not put forth one dollar by way of loans or guarantees. Does the Newfoundland fishing industry have to move to the Ottawa Valley to get some attention? What is the matter with this Minister of Fisheries and Oceans? Why does he not resign if he is not prepared to grapple with those problems? The government provides $125 million for Consolidated Computer Incorporated and not a red cent so far for the Lake Group which employs 2,500 in Newfoundland and is the sole support for 20,000 people living in communities along our coast. What is the matter with the minister?

How does that square with the pledges made in this election document? How does that square with the Constitution? What good is the Constitution to those 20,000 people who live in those communities? The 2,500 people who work for the Lake Group do not give a damn about the Constitution because it will not help them. It will not keep them employed one minute longer. In fact, it is responsible for their pending unemployment. It has occupied the minds and attention of the pea brains opposite for the past 18 months.

This same Lake Group has now got a contract to supply the Long John Silver food chain. The pirates opposite will be familiar with the Long John Silver food chain that was going to buy a large quantity of good quality cod if they could survive until next year. They have to be told now to know whether they will be able to send trawlers out in January to catch this cod to supply these contracts. They have not been fishing now for four months. What is the matter with the government? Do they not have any conscience at all? Does the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have any conscience? Or do any hon. members have a conscience? No. They only do for Consolidated Computers Incorporated, for Windsor, Ontario, or somewhere where they have districts. This is a district that is represented. Most of these communities are represented by the hon. member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons).

In addition to that, we have a situation in the mining industry in Newfoundland; for example, in Baie Verte. In the Baie Verte peninsula, Advocate Mines is closing down the asbestos mine that is owned by Johns Manville and the Eherit group at the end of this year. Six hundred and fifty people will be unemployed at the end of the year in that mining industry, not because there is not any asbestos fibre left, but because of the depressed condition of the world. Construction is down and one cannot get the price for asbestos. Also there are health concerns about asbestos that are lowering the use of asbestos around the world. Six hundred and fifty people will be laid off. Two hundred and fifty are now laid off with another 400 to go by the end of the year.

In the same town of Baie Verte, Mr. Speaker, we have Consolidated Rambler Mines owned by the Irving group closing down. They were going to close at the end of November with 200 employees. The copper mine was going to close because they are running out of copper or it is now low grade. They are operating month to month. Their schedule might end at any time. They are limping along, and certainly ending by the end of March, 1982. That is something like 850 people on that one small Baie Verte peninsula where 11,000 people live, 3,000 in the town of Baie Verte. What will be done for them? So far there is no offer of any assistance from the Government of Canada or from the Minister of National Revenue whose district this is. He is making attempts with the province to try to find another operator, but as yet there is no offer of any assistance from the federal government. What is the matter? Is it out of sight, out of mind? Does one have to live in central Canada to have anyone worried or concerned about them? What is the matter with the government?

What about the statement of the Prime Minister when he said:

> This party will not simply stand by and let the recession come; we will fight it and overcome it.

When will he start his fight and when will he start to overcome it? What if one of his trained seals over there bangs his flippers, smacks his paws together—he is used to having his paws up in the air begging for a little something from the old patronage trough. He should not be so quick to bang his flippers. He should insist that his leader carry out his sacred pledges. Of course, he would be awfully surprised if he did.

How is the economic might of Canada being increased? How are they strengthening each of the regions? Here is what the Prime Minister said:

> We will make the big projects happen.

Does anyone see the Alsands plant underway? Does anyone see Cold Lake underway? When are they going to happen? They have been there 22 months now. Then the Prime Minister goes on to say:

> Whether they be developing the fishery in the Atlantic—

All that has happened to the fishery is that it is a shambles, it is about to collapse. Since August most of the fish plants in Newfoundland have closed. Is that how this government increases the economic might of Canada and of Newfoundland? Is that how they develop the fishery? They are here tittering and tottering about whether they should give a $15 million loan or guarantee to the Lake Group which employs 2,500 people, when they are prepared to give $125 million to Consolidated Computers Incorporated, because, to the illiterates opposite, if one were to mention "computer" their eyes shine and they think they are on to something wonderful. They think it is the wave of the future. Let us call it "Fishery computer" or "Lake Computers Limited". Would it do the trick if we were to change the name from the Lake Group to "Lake Computers"? Then we would see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce jump up and they would have $100 million in no time, particularly if they agreed to move to the Ottawa valley, Windsor, Hull, or somewhere in the province of Quebec or in Ontario, to the great central Canada. That is not the kind of economic development we were led to expect.

Is it finished for Baie Verte? That is what the article in the paper asks. Are they finished there or will there be some plan of action announced by the Government of Canada that is supposed to represent all of Canada, that has the financial resources to do something? Rather than then doing something, they are trying to assign the responsibility to the provincial government. It is a province that already has the least in the way of financial resources in Canada, that is badly squeezed for funds, that this government has been punching in the stomach financially for the last year and a half, refusing DREE assistance, refusing transportation assistance, refusing economic assistance, refusing assistance to federally-owned facilities in the province that they got for free at the time of confederation. This government has punched this province insensible. They are now trying to say to them: "If you want the Lake Group saved, you save the Lake Group. If you want Advocate Mines saved, you save Advocate Mines. If you want Consolidated Rambler Mines saved, you save Consolidated Rambler Mines." On and on it goes.

The siren will not be its death wail. The town of Grand Bank will not wait to see what will happen. The Great Lakes fish plant in Grand Bank has been closed since August. Five hundred men were thrown out of work. The Lakes trawlers are tied up in Grand Bank. They will not allow any of the trawlers out until they have assurance that the Grand Bank fish plant will operate again. If they leave the town, they die. If they leave, the town will die. If Lakes go under, the town of Grand Bank will likely die, the Town of Fortune will likely die, Gaultois will certainly die and Feormeuse will certainly die, unless someone else takes them over. With today's financial and economic situation in the fishery industry of this country, who will take them over?

Today we are dealing with a puny, insignificant, and palliative bill, when we should have a program that this government presents to the House for the economic development and progress of the country. How does the government propose to meet the recession that is well under way? When will the government come clean and withdraw that dastardly budget of November 12? How amused I feel at times to watch the Minister of Finance swallow himself. He is getting read for a big gulp. He wants to do it when this House of Commons has recessed. He wants to announce the changes that he will make when we are gone. He hopes he will not be discovered.

Or will he wait until February, Mr. Speaker, and introduce a new budget? Will the Minister of Finance say: "I did not realize there was a recession coming when I brought down my old budget. My officials did not tell me about this recession. I brought in a budget that was not going to look after a recession but now I will bring in a budget that will really look after the recession, which will really get it going." Then he will bury in his budget all of these things that have so aroused the anger of the people of Canada. In every nook and cranny of Canada the people are angry; in every segment of society they are angry. One cannot speak to any one of them because they are angry. They want to put the boots to this government. They want to put the boots to Mr. MacEachen, to the "Minister of Finance"—I should not use his name. We do not want him identified because it is not safe for him to go around if he is identified. They are waiting to get at them. They are waiting for an election to be called. They cannot wait for it to be called.

Now, will he introduce a new budget in February? Or what will the minister do? He is so used to playing his cards close to his vest that he suffers from ingrown cards! That is why the department did not know what he was going to do. He did not know what the department was suggesting that he do. He just wanted to pretend to Canadians that he was reforming the tax system. He was too clever by half, Mr. Speaker. He was going to make us all forget the fact that the budget did not do anything about the recession by talking about tax reform. He thought that he was putting the boots to the wealthy. Instead of that, he was putting the slippers to everybody. He was putting it to everybody in Canada. He did not understand. He is a bachelor, Mr. Speaker, and he does not have to worry about his retirement benefits because he will receive the full benefits that a member of this House receives when he retires, and the minister will be retired after the next election. He will receive the maximum benefits. He does not have to worry about that. Why should the Minister of Finance have to worry about RRSPs? He has far more than an RRSP would ever give anyone. Why does he have to worry about deduction of interest on an investment that one might make in some risk-creating opportunity in Canada? He has never made such an investment. He has been in the cocoon of this government. He has been nuzzling at the bosom of the Government of Canada all during his working career; he has not had to worry about risk taking. He does not understand what is risk taking. He has never had to take a risk.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Crosbie: Order! There is another group of sucklers at the bosom of the state. The sucklers had better not start heckling. He did not understand that these provisions would be a savage attack upon our system in Canada as we have known it. Now he will have to change it. He will have to give some assistance to the risk taker. He will have to give some assistance to people who are saving for their retirement. He thought he had taxed the life insurance companies. He does not understand that if he taxes my life insurance policy he is not taxing the life insurance company; he is taxing me on what I hope to save for my retirement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If some of the loud mouths opposite would just speak to cabinet ministers in caucus, as they should, then I think the country would be far further ahead.

Mr. Collenette: Read the bill.

Mr. Crosbie: They come around and they mutter to us. They say how disappointed they are at the budget and how angry they are with the Minister of Finance, but they do not dare say "boo" to the Minister of Finance because he would give them the flick, and their noses would be out of the patronage trough and they would starve to death in no time. They will not make a noise. They will not make a sound as long as the patronage trough is right in front of their snouts. It is only when that is removed that we will hear from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member can speak to the bill when he gets his chance to speak to the bill.

Look at this headline: "Gloom is busting out all over as industrial investment drops". E. P. Neufeld, who was the assistant deputy minister for taxation, now chief economist for the Royal Bank of Canada, said that we will have to borrow $886 billion internally in the 1980s through profits and depreciation on the business side to finance economic growth. He added that another $144 billion would have to come from foreign borrowings. This is the government that is so full of muscle when it comes to foreign investment. This is the government that got itself into so much trouble in the last 18 months that it had to drop it and be good boys when Uncle Sam leered at them. Uncle Sam waggled his moustache at them and they had to change their tune quickly. We will have to borrow $144 billion outside Canada to meet our needs for expansion in the 1980s. We can ill afford to be thumbing our nose at the foreign investor. We can ill afford to thumb our nose at the U.S. investor.

We will have a deficit in the balance of payments on the current account this year of $9 billion or $10 billion, the largest ever. We are living off the rest of the world. Under the Liberal regime for the last seven years, up to 1980, they had $26 billion in deficits in the current account of the balance of payments with the rest of the world. If the rest of the world was not prepared to lend us money, if it was not prepared to invest money in Canada, the Canadian dollar would not have been worth one copper, not one nickel, not ten cents. The only thing which kept the value up was the fact that foreigners and Americans outside Canada were prepared to lend us money or invest here in Canada. Then the genius Minister of Finance, the genius Prime Minister and the genius government turned around and thumbed their noses at the outside investor. They thumbed their noses at the U.S. investor and said that they did not want them, that they did not want the private sector and that they only wanted government ownership and control. That is why the Canadian dollar went down. That is why interest rates went up in the last 12 months. Had we been in office, they would have been 5 per cent or 6 per cent lower, at the very least, than they were in the last 12 months, and we would not be dealing with any recession today. There would be no recession underway in Canada today. The country would be far stronger if the government and its NDP allies had not acted so precipitately. There is not a finance minister in the country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Members of the NDP, the little red rump, had better keep their mouths quiet. The hypocrites go across the country moaning about unemployment and about the recession which they caused by putting the Liberals back in office. They are fully responsible for it. There is not a minister of finance in the country who has not condemned the budget. The Ontario treasurer, Mr. Miller, an impartial observer, put the boots to my budget. He put the boots to my budget within 12 hours after it was brought down. He is an impartial observer who said:

—Allan MacEachen's November 12 effort poses a real danger to Canada's staggering economy.

He called on him for a new federal budget. The Ontario treasurer has already shown his impartiality. He never said anything like that about my budget. No, my budget was fantastic. They are erecting statues to me in all public squares across the country because my tax was only 18 cents per gallon and they have taxed people 45 cents per gallon since.

An hon. Member: And it is still going up.

Mr. Crosbie: The British Columbia finance minister, Hugh Curtis, said:

—if the budget had been written by an enemy of the state it couldn't be much worse.

If it had been written by an enemy of the state! Well, it was written by an enemy of the state; it was written by a minister who does not understand or cannot comprehend how the Canadian system works, who does not understand that we depend upon the risk takers, who does not understand that we depend upon Canadians to look after themselves as far as they can with respect to life insurance, retirement benefits and the like, who turned around and said that he was choking off tax loopholes. Well, the Canadian people will now get a loophole around his neck. There will be a battle to see who pulls on the other end of the loophole to choke off the Minister of Finance, who so little understands the system that he thought that he was cutting off loopholes, all of which were instituted by his own colleagues and his own predecessor ministers of finance. They called them tax incentives then. In his new budget within the next few months the Minister of Finance will be calling them tax incentives again. As he changes them all around again, he will be talking about the tremendous incentives he has given to investment, that one is now allowed to deduct the interest which he did not allow one to deduct back on November 12, and on and on it will go. This whirling dervish of a finance minister, we do not know what skirt he will drop next, nor does he. He does not understand the system.

The Nova Scotia finance minister, another impartial observer said:

—with a poor economic situation it's a very poor time to put on the brakes.

Unfortunately the brakes are not even put on. Then the newest finance minister, the NDP finance minister from Manitoba, got a dig in at the Minister of Finance. He said, reported in today's Ottawa Citizen:

I hope a new budget is one of his considerations.

I hope the federal party gets the hint there. Sometimes they have to be given hints from the Premier of Saskatchewan as to what they should do and say. I notice their own leader is not in the House today. We all miss him. I suppose he is off getting instructions from the Premiers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

What we see is a government that is politically motivated by politics, completely motivated by the worst kind of revenge politics which takes its political spite out on the people of a province and a region because their government will not buckle under to its dictates or will not bend over when it comes calling. They have tried and they are trying to starve the province of Newfoundland. They are responsible for the tremendous growth in unemployment in Newfoundland. Newfoundland will not bend to them. The people of Newfoundland will not bend to them. The Atlantic provinces will not bend to them. We want them to carry out their promises.

We want to remind the Prime Minister, when he is next having one of his fund-raising dinners, of the promises he made about how he would fight and overcome the recession. He said in that speech that the Conservatives plan to increase unemployment by 100,000. That was a despicable untruth, I will call it. Then he went on to say that the Liberals would fight to lower it. Now we are up to 928,000 people actually unemployed, plus another 350,000 who do not show up in the statistics.

Mr. MacKay: He has made unemployment a growth industry.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, he has made unemployment a growth industry, as my colleague suggests. The only growth industry in Canada under this government is unemployment, the ranks of the unemployed. Where are the big projects? The boastful Prime Minister said that he will make the big projects happen, that he will develop the fishery in the Atlantic. Now they have shut down over half of all the plants. He said that they would rebuild the railways in the west. What railways have they rebuilt? He was to doubletrack the railway from Winnipeg to Vancouver. Now it is the western development fund which nobody can find.

Mr. Taylor: He gave it all to the U.S.A.

Mr. Crosbie: He was to develop new manufacturing strength in Ontario and Quebec. Where is it? Is that Consolidated Computers which was just closed at a cost of $125 million? Is it Massey-Ferguson? Is it Chrysler? Where is the new manufacturing strength, or the expansion of British Columbia resource and trade potential? Half of the British Columbia lumber mill industry is shut down and its forest industry is now in dire straits. This is the government of dire straits. This is the government which has produced in Canada a condition of dire straits. This is the government which will campaign in the next election on the basis of "Vote Liberal, we will guarantee you dire straits".

● (1550)

This government that we face across the House today still has another two or three years to go. How long, Mr. Speaker, can the people of Canada endure this dire straits government? How long will they endure it? How long can we endure this dire straits government? Not a minute more if we could only encourage it to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Crosbie: In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their close attention and hope they benefit from these few words.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak today on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I should like to open my remarks by congratulating the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) on his appointment, but I must say I had hoped he would bring forward a more progressive piece of legislation as his first bill than the one he has presented today.

This party is generally willing to support any legislation which offers some protection to workers. The government is deliberately creating a recession, however. On December 9 the Toronto Star reported that 140,000 factory jobs have been lost in the last three months.

I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) about the New Democratic Party being hypocritical. I just want to say to him that if any party in this House is hypocritical it is the Conservative Party of Canada! Not long ago when it was in government, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) stood in the House and said that he could do away with as many as 60,000 civil service jobs. And the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) stood in the House and said that there should be lay-offs for a six month period, that certain things should be done and studies made. That is the kind of government that party was.

It was the people of Canada who defeated the Conservative party, although the New Democratic Party with its policies and programs gave the people an opportunity to examine those of the Conservatives.

Mr. Taylor: Look at what you got. Are you proud of yourselves?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is very difficult for the Chair to hear the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to examine the contents of Bill C-78, which is an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. That sounds innocent enough until one examines the bill. The government wants to set up a labour adjustment benefits board; it wants to adjust policies and programs that it has not had the initiative to correct before this. It wants to bring in a band-aid bill to help provide some relief.

Let us examine the limited relief that this bill would provide, Mr. Speaker. In order to qualify for relief, an area would have to be designated. A qualified employee would have to be a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident of this country between 54 and 65 years of age or between 50 and 54 with 30 years' service in the industry. He would have to have been employed for ten years out of the past 15 in a designated industry. He would have to have been laid off in an action affecting 10 per cent of the work force or 50 employees. Imagine how many people those provisions will help when 140,000 people in the manufacturing industry have been laid off in the last three months.

In his opening remarks the minister indicated that the Canadian Labour Congress is sympathetic to the bill. I should like to put on record some recommendations offered by the Canadian Labour Congress. They are as follows:

> One year advance notice of plant closures and major lay-offs and six months for lay-offs of less than 50 employees.

That sounds reasonable enough.

Further recommendations are:

> All lay-offs must be justified in hearings before a Job Protection Board.
>
> Before lay-offs take place, the employer must consult with the union on ways to avoid job loss; if lay-offs cannot be prevented, an agreement must be reached with the union covering the terms of the lay-off.
> Standard hours of work must be lowered through collective bargaining; all overtime work must be voluntary; overtime pay must be increased to two and a half times the regular rate.

These are constructive proposals, Mr. Speaker. At various times in this House I have put forward a program regarding the railway industry. This government has not seen fit to bring in legislation covering the working hours of employees; consequently, they are being forced to work as much as 11 hours while at the same time lay-offs are taking place all across Canada. I think that is a shame. The government should look at areas where job opportunities exist and not force people to work up to 11 hours in the operating trades of the railway industry. The next recommendation is:

Severance pay of one week per year of service.

Is that too much to ask for an employee being laid off? Other recommendations follow:

Relocation allowances to be paid by the employer in case of lay-offs.

Compensation payments to the community affected by lay-offs may be paid out of a special fund into which employers contribute.

I think this is a very important point which has never been examined. When lay-offs occur in small communities it becomes a local disaster, and those communities have difficulty in maintaining their schools, recreation facilities and the normal services that they provide. This bill still only proposes to designate a few employees and leave the others to try to maintain themselves and their communities. That is wrong, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Labour must identify those areas. The next recommendation is as follows:

A grant-levy system to ensure that all employers contribute to the cost of retraining workers.

I think that is an excellent proposal and it should not be too hard to reach agreement on it. The final recommendation is:

Changes in pension legislation to improve vesting rights and ensure portability of pensions.

These are the recommendations of the CLC to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, so I think he was wrong in his opening remarks when he said that the Canadian Labour Congress was basically in sympathy with the bill being presented.

We in this party are skeptical about the bill, Mr. Speaker. We believe that there are serious problems with lay-offs. The Minister of Labour should bring in legislation to retrain people and to find ways of keeping employment going. The lumber industry in British Columbia is a prime example of where this is needed. That industry is staggering, the country is in need of housing, but the Minister of Labour appears to want to designate such areas as ones that may qualify for some adjustment assistance.

● (1600)

How would it come about, if someone were to be able to get under those kinds of programs? If it were a designated area, and if someone were trying to participate in the program, he would want to use the rules of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. If the commission were in doubt, it would put the member before a board of referees. We all know about these boards of referees. It is a great system! A board has an employee representative and a commission representative sitting on it, and a chairman is selected. It sounds like a reasonable approach and one which should work. However, time after time we have seen a board of referees hand down a unanimous decision that someone qualifies for benefits, but the commission has made that person go to an independent umpire, one person sitting and making judgment and, nine times out of ten, the judgment is in favour of the commission. That is the way the commission wants to conduct the appeal procedure when there is something in doubt. I think that is wrong and this portion of the bill must be corrected.

A portion of the bill increases the notice period of lay-off to 16 weeks from the current eight weeks and makes a shift adjustment in severance benefits to a maximum of five days. Again, it is weak and it is not sufficient. It needs many changes.

We in this party are opposed to Bill C-78. We will be fighting against it in committee. We will be asking witnesses to come forward to present their concerns. In fact, we will be trying to improve the bill and to bring about some other recommendations which we think can help bring about some programs which will be acceptable and will meet the needs of all people who are laid off, not only the very few. Hopefully the government, in its wisdom, will also bring about a bill to include training and other aspects under this program which will help find other areas in which people can relocate. We think it is very important that the government move very swiftly to bring about needed changes, instead of this band-aid approach which it has put before us here today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I might seem to be a little out of place this afternoon because it is my intention to speak on the subject matter of the bill. That has not yet been done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: However, if Your Honour would excuse me, there are some things I would like to speak about dealing with the Canada Labour Code, which is one of the matters contained in the bill before us. There are basically two parts to this bill, one dealing with labour adjustment benefits and the second dealing with amendments to the Canada Labour Code. However, first of all, because on occasion I tend to speak for too long and am not able to say everything I would like to say, I want to address myself to some omissions in this bill, some amendments which might be made to the Canada Labour Code but which are not included in this bill. I refer to amendments which might prove very beneficial to the Northwest Territories concerning matters which my constituents and people in other parts of the Northwest Territories have tried to accomplish for very many years.

The Canada Labour Code is divided into various parts which deal with different aspects of labour law. For instance, Part III deals with labour standards. As matters rest at present, the Northwest Territories is treated in the same manner as any other jurisdiction in Canada. They are able to pass their own labour standards legislation. In fact, they have done a pretty good job with this. We have heard very little complaint concerning labour standards in that area of the country. It is good that we should be able to do this, because some of the conditions of labour in remote areas of Canada and northern Canada are quite different from those which exist, say, in the metropolitan areas of Toronto or Quebec.

People are engaged in different types of activity and there is need for a different way of approaching labour problems.

One of the things we tend to find in that part of the world is that people come into a certain area for several weeks and work long hours because there is nothing else to do with their time off, and then they take the next two or three weeks off in their home communities. Under our labour standards ordinance, that type of activity is allowed.

Part IV of the Canada Labour Code deals with safety legislation. Again, the territories enact and enforce their own safety ordinances. I am pleased to acknowledge the fact that, within the last few months, the territorial government has taken over the administration of the mining safety ordinances. For a long time this has been territorial legislation, but its administration was in federal hands. It is a step in the right direction that the territories have now taken over that aspect of administration.

However, we now come to Part V of the Canada Labour Code. As all hon. members of this House are aware, Part V deals with labour relations. It deals with conciliation, with mediation, with certification of unions and all these types of things. Under Section 108 of Part V of the Canada Labour Code, this part is not treated the same in the territories as the other parts. The territorial authorities are prevented from enacting their own legislation dealing with mediation, conciliation, certification of unions and all these types of things which, in a province, are done by the provincial government. For many years, there has been a feeling, for two reasons, that we should proceed with amendments to the Canada Labour Code to allow the territories to take over that area of jurisdiction. I am sure that, in the first place, the reason they were not allowed the same rights as other provinces was largely an oversight.

There are two reasons, and the first is really political. Everyone knows that the territories aspire to provincial status. It is a step in the right direction to take on these additional responsibilities. Judging from the manner in which they have conducted their affairs under Part III and Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, it seems quite reasonable to suppose that they would do an equally good job under Part V.

The second reason is a more practical reason. The people who work for Labour Canada, such as conciliators, mediators and everyone else, generally do a pretty good job. We are fortunate in this country to have good government employees doing those jobs. However, they are always concerned with the great national issues. If there is a strike in Vancouver harbour, they will obviously be very concerned with that and try to get it resolved. If there are problems on the railways—and there are likely to be many more with the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin)—they will be concerned with that. A strike of garbage workers in a small municipality in the Northwest Territories or a strike in a small mine which does not really affect the whole affairs of the nation will not receive the attention that it deserves. Such a strike is remote, it is out of the way, it is not a great national problem, and it will always be put in second place. The same is true when it comes to certification of unions. There are always hundreds of thousands of employees with federal undertakings which must be looked after in the south, while 50 members of a local union somewhere in the north just do not really count for that much in the general scheme of things. It would be good for practical reasons to have this take place.

The idea of this transfer of authority receives the support of practically everyone in the territories. It was supported by the seventh legislature of the territories, by the eighth legislature and now by the ninth. Various legislatures over a period of 15 years have continued to ask for this, and I hope they will achieve these goals in short order. The move certainly has the support of the labour unions in the Northwest Territories, and as far as I know it has the support of employer organizations. I have heard members of chambers of commerce speaking in favour of that move.

In fact, I have with me here today a letter I received from Mr. Christopher Reid, president of the Northwest Territories Teachers' Association. He addresses himself to this very issue and suggests that the problem could easily be rectified by amending offending Section 108 of Part V of the Canada Labour Code, and he suggests the following wording:

> This part applies in respect of employees who are employed upon or in connection with the operation of any federal work, undertaking or business, other than a work, undertaking or business of a local or private nature in the Northwest Territories, and in respect of the employers of all such employees in their relations with such employees, and in respect of trade unions and employers' organizations composed of such employees or employers.

I think that is an excellent suggestion.

You are probably aware, Mr. Speaker, of a rather famous case that occurred a few years ago when there were some labour problems in a municipality in the territories, in the city of Yellowknife. If you read existing Section 108 you might, had it not been for the court ruling, have interpreted it to allow the territories to enact their own legislation. As a result of that case, where a municipality was found to be a federal undertaking in the territories that interpretation was cut out. It is now necessary to amend the Canada Labour Code. The process for doing this would be fairly easy.

There should be negotiations between the Government of Canada and the government of the territories. The territories should bring in their own legislation governing certification of unions, etc., and the amendment to the Canada Labour Code should be made by this House. They could both then come into force as of the same day so there would be no period when workers would not be covered in that area of jurisdiction. That is my submission with respect to Part V of the Canada Labour Code.

I would now like to get back to the subject of Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. You will recall, sir, that this was originally brought in as part of a supply bill, a very sneaky back door way of doing these things. Madam Speaker, when this was brought to her attention, quite correctly ruled that the government was trying to get away with something it should not, and should come back with a bill. The government was making major changes in direction, and it should not use supply bills for that purpose. I think Parliament is pleased with that ruling, and I would hope the government would not try such reprehensible action again, but would be honest with this House when changes in government policy are intended.

We have undertaken not to debate this measure at great length because the general idea behind it of helping certain types of workers who, on account of their age, find it very difficult to obtain new employment in certain regions, is something like motherhood; you cannot really argue against it. We look forward to rapid disposition of this bill at second reading, and to getting it before the standing committee where it can be looked at in detail.

I have a concern with this bill in that what it is really is an attempt to plug up holes. We see the government doing this all the time. Its over-all policy is one which leads to a lessening of industry in Canada. We have been experiencing a recession now for some time, and instead of trying to get the economy of Canada going again, instead of bringing in correct tax measures, instead of making it attractive for people to invest in Canada, what the government is saying is that the present system is okay, that it may look as though it does not work and has not worked for the past 25 years, but one should still have confidence in this Liberal approach to the economy. All that has to be done is to stuff this little hole here and plug up this little hole there. That is what they are doing with this bill. Pretty soon they are going to run out of fingers and toes to plug up the holes in the dam. Everything is going to break loose and the government will not be able to put in these stop-gap measures any more.

What we need in this country is a policy to encourage economic expansion. As the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) expounded in great depth, the present government is just not doing that. This government is unable to turn its mind around from the mistakes of the past 18 years.

The type of bill we have before us today is typical of Liberal legislation. It is extremely complex. To make these provisions for these laid off workers it takes 33 pages of text in the bill. I do not know if any of the workers who are supposed to benefit from this bill, if it becomes law, will understand it. Let me just quote from Clause 15 to show the verbosity of the wording of this bill. It states:

> 15. (1) The weekly amount of labour adjustment benefit payable to a qualified employee shall be adjusted each year so that the amount of the benefit payable to the employee for a week in any year following the year in which his effective date of lay-off falls is equal to the amount obtained
> (a) by multiplying
> (i) the initial amount of the benefit as determined pursuant to subsection 14(1)
>
> by
> (ii) the ratio, rounded to the nearest one-thousandth or, where the ratio is equidistant from two one-thousandths, to the greater thereof, that the Pension Index for that following year bears to the Pension Index for the year in which the effective date of lay-off occurs; and
> (b) by rounding the product obtained under paragraph (a) to the nearest cent or, if the product is equidistant from two cents, to the greater thereof.

You tell me what that means, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know what it means. It is something like the Income Tax Act. I do not think there are ten people in the whole country who can understand what the Income Tax Act says. This is the type of stuff that has been supported by the NDP. They just love this type of thing, especially those shop stewards who walk around with one of these things in their back pockets. They like to get it out and look for every little loophole and then file a grievance. Shop stewards just love this type of thing.

An hon. Member: Maybe they can understand it.

Mr. Nickerson: Maybe shop stewards are a little smarter than the rest of us.

Mr. Ferguson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could we get back to the topic rather than having a union discussion before the House of Commons?

Mr. Nickerson: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that my speech is a lot closer to the subject matter of the bill than some of the comments being made from the other side.

This is a very complex piece of legislation. It is highly technical and hon. members of the NDP just love this type of thing. There will be a need for regulations. The bill is 33 pages long and the regulations will probably be 133 pages long. There will be Treasury Board rules and Unemployment Insurance Commission rules. Everybody will get into the act, there will be a mound of paper that thick and nobody will really know what it says.

The idea of the Liberal government is that Parliament should go away. It does not need a Parliament. What it wants is a technocracy made up of people who are familiar with the rules and regulations and all the formulae which have tried to be interpreted into legislative language.

The government says we should let these people, under its control and given the general direction, come in and fine tune here, make a few changes there, manipulate Canadians and tell them what to do, make them go from office to office and tell them how much money they are eligible to receive, and then give them their training grants. The idea behind this legislation is just to keep people under control.

Why cannot Parliament, through the elected representatives of the people of Canada, come up with a simple system? Inherent in this bill is a system of duplication. For example, someone who is laid off cannot simply go to an office to fill out the forms to indicate his predicament and then become eligible for benefits. He has to go through the procedure twice. First, he has to go to the Labour Adjustment Review Board. He has to get a piece of paper from them which certifies that he, indeed, was employed by the specified industry which meets the government rules and regulations and guidelines. He then has to take that piece of paper from the Labour Adjustment Review Board to the UIC office across the street. There he has to fill out more forms which are about ten pages thick and submit that file to see if he is still eligible. People in this situation will get the run-around from one office to another until they become so despondent over the process that they will probably never bother to apply for these benefits, for whatever they may be worth.

The government will set up more boards and committees because the Liberals thrive on boards and committees. It is jobs for the boys. Every piece of legislation they bring before the House gives them the opportunity to make more jobs for the boys, occasionally for the girls too. I am pleased to see they are improving somewhat in that respect, at least.

Mr. Ouellet: Are you sure?

Mr. Nickerson: As the former postmaster general says, sure. He knows about this.

Mr. Ouellet: I am asking if you are sure. You do not look very sincere.

Mr. Nickerson: As an illustration of the way in which the Liberal Party of Canada is progressing, one of the recent appointments made by the former postmaster general to the board of directors of Canada Post was a lady who is president of the Western Arctic Liberal Association. That is a perfect illustration that the Liberals not only have jobs for the boys, they are also giving some of the jobs to the girls and I thank him for bringing that to my attention.

If you are talking to someone who will be laid off from one of the designated industries, the first thing he will ask is, "How much will I get out of this?" When discussing this with the Canadian taxpayer who will foot the bill, the first thing he will ask about the bill is, "How much will it cost? How much will I be paying the person who is laid off? I do not mind helping out a little, but how much will it cost?"

When I study this bill, I find that the very basic and fundamental piece of information which people want to know about is not there. The very thing that people are most concerned about in this type of bill does not appear in it. It does not indicate how much a laid-off worker will be eligible to receive. It is to be computed by one of these long, Liberal formulae made up of all sorts of calculus and algebra, computed on the basis of all kinds of rules and regulations which have yet to be made.

My next concern which I feel should be dealt with at length in committee is that this bill will create two classes of unemployed. First, there will be those people who are over 54 who have been laid off but are fortunate enough to be from a designated industry. Not all individuals will be treated the same.

There are many rules and regulations which must be met in order for an industry to be designated as certifiable or not. Those who are laid off from a designated industry will be fortunate as opposed to an individual who is out of work but is not eligible because he was laid off from a different type of industry. An illustration of this would be to consider two individuals aged 55, one working in a shoe factory and the other in a sawmill. Because the Liberals have put mortgage interest rates too high, no one can afford to build a house and the person working in the sawmill is laid off. He does not have any money and does not know where his next meal will come from. On the other hand, the government may change the tariff quotas, thus putting the person working in the shoe factory out of work. But in all probability the shoe factory will be designated as a certifiable industry and that worker will be eligible for all those benefits—even though we do not know what they are. The unemployed sawmill worker will not receive a nickel.

I believe this may lead to all sorts of discrimination and other actions which are not in the best interests of Canadian unity. If you are the shoe factory worker—which a lot of Liberals should be—and you see this industry failing, you know that in a couple of years you will be looked after by the government. Therefore, there is no incentive to seek retraining or perhaps to go to Alberta to get a job on an oil rig which is going to the United States anyway. It is more advantageous to stay put and wait for a government handout while everything goes down the drain. This is a built-in inequity and an incentive for inefficiency.

Of particular interest to me and to people in my constituency are those who find themselves in the same position as those contemplated in this bill. There are many people aged between 55 and 65 years old who, through no fault of their own, have been left aside by the modern world. They are people who were born into a tradition of hunting, trapping and living off the land. The wage economy in the modern world has caught up with them and passed them by. Many of these people really have nothing to look forward to. They do not speak English and it is very difficult to learn in later life. They do not really have any marketable skills and there is nothing for them to look forward to until they are eligible for the old age pension. To me, it would seem very unjust if people in Montreal and Quebec City who worked in the textile mills and shoe factories were looked after at government expense, providing early retirement for them while the people in my constituency, for whom I have a great deal of concern and much appreciation of their difficulties, are not looked after. They are once again in a position where they have been cast aside and the government is taking no particular interest in them. It is tantamount to telling some Canadians that they are expendable. I hope this problem will be resolved when this bill goes to committee.

I believe it must be realized that once legislation of this sort has been passed, there will always be pressure to expand it. An example of this is DREE. This program was introduced in a few small areas of high unemployment and people in adjacent areas want to have it expanded. Then somebody else put up a good case, so we end up now with a system whereby DREE operates virtually Canada-wide.

• (1630)

We will have to be somewhat careful about the pressures which will be put on the government to expand this program, if it is ever put into effect. It will only be natural for unions to push for the same provisions to be applied not only in initially designated regions but also, eventually, across the country. With respect to the 54-year limit, we can expect pressure to be applied to reduce that to perhaps 50 years or even 45 years. That is something about which we will have to be pretty careful when we are looking at the labour adjustment benefit provisions in this bill.

I will say just a few words about the second part of Bill C-78, which deals with amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I spoke earlier on in my presentation, about amendments I would like to have seen and now I will say just a few words about the amendments contained in the bill. The first one deals with notice of termination. At the present time, as I understand it, if an employer has 100 employees, he has to give eight weeks' notice. If he has 100 to 300 employees, he must give 12 weeks' notice. If he has over 300 employees, he must give 16 weeks' notice. Under the new provisions, 16 weeks' notice of termination is required of all employers if they intend to lay off 50 or more workers within a period of, I think, four weeks. My initial reaction to this is that I think soon we will see numerous blocks of 49 workers at a time being laid off from various industrial concerns. However, whatever figure we choose, I suppose there will be that problem.

I listened carefully this afternoon to the submission made by the New Democratic Party. New Democrats always have at heart the concerns of employees, particularly those represented by labour unions. It is my submission that perhaps members of the New Democratic Party go just a little too far. The more difficult we make it for employers, the less likely they are to start up plants or make new investments because they know that if they have to terminate, they have to go through this very expensive process or the process suggested by members of the New Democratic Party. If we make termination requirements too tough, perhaps we will not be doing employees a favour. We will not be doing labour a favour because by decreasing employment opportunities over all we will be making it much more difficult for workers to get jobs in the first place. That is the way the economic system works. I know some members of the New Democratic Party think we can solve all problems by legislation, but we cannot suspend or annul the laws of supply and demand in the long run, and the laws of supply and demand relate to labour in the same way as they do to goods and commodities. That is a caveat I place on some of the remarks made by representatives of the New Democratic Party.

I like the idea of joint planning committees contained in the bill. When an industry is terminated because it can no longer continue and when people have to be laid off, in my opinion it is a good idea if representatives of both the employees and the employer get together and try to work out a system under which terminations can be made the least disruptive as possible and carried out in an orderly manner. I have some reservations about formal legislation dealing with this matter. It would be nice if we could think that by mutual consent employees and employers could enter into such arrangements, but when we pass very specific legislation governing this, we might on occasion be creating more difficulties than we are solving.

After reading through the provisions of the bill relating to joint planning committees some questions came to my mind. What powers under law would the joint planning committees have? That question is not really addressed in the bill. I would like to refer to Clause 32. The amended Canada Labour Code would read as follows:

> 60.15 On completion of the development of an adjustment program, the employer shall implement the program and the joint planning committee and any trade union or redundant employees who appointed the members of the committee shall co-operate with and assist the employer in implementing the program.

This gives some authority to the recommendations of the joint planning committee, but it is not at all specific. If the committee makes certain recommendations, there is nothing in the act which says upon whom they should be binding, how they are to be enforced—if, indeed, they are to be enforced—or if they are just recommendations. Proposed Section 60.15 suggests that there is something more than just recommendations. I think that item should be discussed in the committee so that we can find out exactly what should be the powers of a joint planning committee.

These, then, are my observations and recommendations with respect to Bill C-78. As I have said, we support its general concept but we have certain reservations about it. We feel the bill deserves careful consideration in the committee and is capable of considerable improvement. We hope the government will not only proceed with these stop-gap measures but will also make a real effort to promote growth in the economy and to get things going again in this country.

Of particular interest to me and to my constituents in the Northwest Territories—and I have brought this to the attention of Parliament before in respect to desperately needed amendments to the Canada Labour Code—is that the code presently excludes the Northwest Territories from enacting certain types of legislation. I thank Your Honour, and I thank hon. members of the House for their indulgence.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) has just said, our party supports the principle of this bill. We think improvements can be made to the bill, and we look forward to making some of them in the committee.

What we are talking about here is like putting a patch on a tire. We think there should be a new patch on the tire, but the fact that the motor of the car is not working, the body is falling apart and the windows are shattered seems to be irrelevant. All of us are in favour of putting a new patch on a tire when it is not working properly, but—and I hope to get into this in a few moments—this bill is completely oblivious to some of the bigger issues.

I think somebody said earlier that this bill is like trying to put a bit of sand into a hole in a dyke when water is running over the top, around the dyke and through crevices. Here we are, 282 Members of Parliament, focusing on whether we should put a little bit of sand in the dyke. This bit of sand, I am told, amounts to between $2 million and $2.5 million for the fiscal year 1981-82. The government's budget this year will be of the order of $76 billion, and here we are seriously discussing a bill which talks about spending $2.5 million. Considering our industrial and economic problems, this is bizarre and hypocritical and, in the larger scheme of things, an absolute waste of the time of the members of this House.

• (1640)

The bill should have been passed years ago. We should have long ago gone on to the more basic problem of trying to get the Canadian economy working again. I have here The Globe and Mail report on business. By coincidence, it is today's issue. There is a feature on Japan. One whole section is devoted to what the Japanese economy is doing right and, by implication, what the Canadian economy is doing wrong. On the third page there is an article entitled: "Hard work, labour peace help produce the miracle".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member knows he is not supposed to exhibit any document in the House.

Mr. Kilgour: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was not aware of that. I will hide it. May I do that, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member can certainly quote from documents, but not exhibit them.

Mr. Kilgour: The article on "Hard work, labour peace help produce the miracle" talks about the Japanese economic miracle which has produced one of the highest standards of living in the world with almost no unemployment, an economy where there are desperately short of people to work. They are worried about their labour force working when they are too old. In Canada, we are trying to bring in a measure to assist those who lose their jobs because of our policy of deindustrialization in Canada, which the Liberals cram down the throats of Canadians wanting to work. We end up with measures like the one we are discussing. I quote from that article:

When asked to outline the key features of their labour-management system, Japanese businessmen usually mention several: the enterprise union concept; the lifetime employment system, and consensus decision-making. All three go together.

Why we cannot have some of these concepts in Canada is beyond me. We should have had them 15 years ago. A few pages later is an article headed: "Japanese system feels strain of changing work force", and I quote:

The Japanese work force is shrinking and the age of the Japanese worker is increasing, a trend that has Japanese companies worried.

That is hardly a problem we have to worry about in Canada with the way our economy is managed. On the next page is an article headlined: "Export curbs put brakes on Japanese auto production". It deals with some of the problems in the Japanese auto industry, which I do not have to tell hon. members is virtually flooding the Canadian market.

To digress for a moment, I am told that a substantial number of Lada cars are now being sold in Canada. These cars are manufactured in the Soviet Union. I believe they market for about $5,000 each. My information is that that represents approximately a full year's salary for the average Russian. That is the minimum. Those people across the way who are allowing the Lada cars to flood our market could be questioned under GATT as to whether that is an artificially low price. At the same time those opposite bring in a measure to help people who will lose their jobs in the auto industry in Canada with a type of retraining.

On another page we find an article entitled: "Japan's industrial success spurred by selective R and D". I quote:

"Research makes the difference," says the motto on shopping bags with the Sony label. It is an aphorism that helps account for the great leap forward not only at Sony Corp., rebounding from a slump that depressed sales and profits in the 1970s, but also at other high technology industries.

I need not say that R and D in Canada is desperately inferior by comparison. After passing this bill, we could spend our time seeing what we can do to encourage R and D. Further on is another article entitled: "Long term economic health tied to handling of surplus". I quote:

The Japanese economy will pick up in 1982 after a relatively sluggish performance this year, leading Japanese economists say. But its long-term health may depend on the country's ability to correct—without damage to itself—an enormous surplus on trade with the United States and Europe.

That is an economy dealing with its problems, dealing with them well and benefiting its people accordingly. I could go on. Suffice it to say that this one issue of the paper talks primarily about what the Japanese economy is doing well. There is an interesting chart in this paper which mentions what Canada imports from the Japanese and vice versa. I think it is fair to say that we export such things as meat, wheat, raw materials of various sorts and coal. In turn, we import from the Japanese products such as fabricated materials, steel, iron, cars, auto parts, telecommunications material, film, plates and that sort of thing.

One does not have to take a course in economics to know that if you want people to work after the age of 50 or under the age of 20, you are better to encourage those things which have a high technology and high labour side to them. This is an almost classical example, with Canadians exporting coal and the Japanese shipping back to us all manner of automobiles.

What are we doing in this bill? We are trying to help those who lose their job because of competition from Japan and other economies. We are trying to re-train them to cut fish, dig coal, cut trees or other things for which most are obviously not suited. I suggest we have the whole thing backwards. Similar to Lewis Caroll's "Alice in Wonderland", we are a bunch of serious people considering how to help those who are laid off, instead of considering measures that will get people working, the young, old and middle-aged.

There is no point repeating the arguments made by my colleagues. Obviously we are in favour of an aid program for mature employees who have been laid off as a result of plant shut-downs. Which Member of Parliament could oppose something that will help people in their fifties or early sixties who have lost their job to be retrained and receive some benefits? Many of these people have given a lifetime of work to a particular firm or occupation. One would have to be a sadist to not want to help such people. I might mention in passing that it is a pity that many of the affected groups such as the Canadian Labour Congress, the various firms and employee associations were not consulted before the bill was presented to us. I hope they will have an opportunity in committee.

Let me refer for a moment to the unemployment situation in Canada. Our unemployment rate is in excess of 8 per cent. I forget exactly how much in excess. Most would agree there are roughly a million Canadians actively looking for work today. As we know, many of these people are young. However, there are many in their thirties, forties and fifties. It is an absolute tragedy that the government is actively encouraging higher and higher rates of unemployment in Canada. I recall a week or so ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) saying that we cannot worry about the rate of unemployment going higher, that we have to go on fighting inflation. The minister has introduced a budget which does nothing but encourage inflation.

I think I just mentioned that the hardest hit group of people unemployed is those between the ages of 15 and 24. As mentioned before, the number of jobs in Ontario decreased by, I believe it was, 140,000 in the month preceding December 9. From an employment standpoint, the situation in many parts of Canada, though not in Alberta, is absolutely critical. I have the figures in front of me but I will keep them out of your sight, Mr. Speaker. They were recently published by the OECD. They refer to the 24 countries that are members of OECD. For instance, in the area of industrial production for Canada, the tip of the graph for the year 1981 points virtually straight down, compared to that of the United States and that of Japan—Austria is bad—Finland, Norway, Belgium and even the United Kingdom.

When we turn to unemployment, we see that the situation in Canada—and again I am comparing the trends in the charts—is bad compared to that in the United States, Australia, Belgium, Austria, Finland, West Germany, Ireland, Holland, Norway, Sweden and even the United Kingdom. I should add that these figures appear to be approximately four months old.

Looking at total trade—and I am doing this just by a test of the eye—on a trend basis, Canada is bad compared to the United States, Japan, Australia, Sweden, France, Italy, Holland and Germany. And so on it goes. Canada is bad compared to virtually every industrialized country, at least in the OECD, whether one looks at agriculture, manufacturing or exports. It is self-evident that the Canadian economy is performing as badly as that of any country in the western advanced industrial world.

Given that fact, one might think—and I think everyone in the Chamber and every Canadian knows—maybe we would be trying to do something to find out why things are working in a country such as West Germany, Japan or many others. Why are things going so badly in Canada? Not a chance. We are here discussing a bill to help people by grants or retraining who are laid off. The reason the economy is as bad as it is is completely ignored. At a time like this, what do we do? Three weeks ago we introduced a budget which creates nothing but disaster for every conceivable sphere in the Canadian economy except the Canadian Bankers' Association and the Business Council on National Issues. Mr. Speaker, if you can tell me one other group in Canadian society that has one good word to say about the budget, then I would like to know its name.

Mr. Collenette: There will be 12 million taxpayers who will benefit.

Mr. Kilgour: I hear from the genius from York East that 12 million taxpayers will benefit. I can assure the genius from York East that if there were an election held today—and I really wish there were—he would not be back with us six weeks from now. Why does the hon. member not call an election on the budget if he thinks it is such a hot budget?

An hon. Member: There are not enough members here.

Mr. Kilgour: I have them grouped here by people such as home owners and renters. What about the renters in the constituency of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) who will see their rents probably double in the next two years?

Mr. Collenette: That is because of the government of Bill Davis.

Mr. Kilgour: What about the home owners in York East who will see their mortgage payments in some cases almost double, if they have not already doubled this year?

Mr. Collenette: Not true.

Mr. Kilgour: I would like to see the figures to prove it. If the hon. member can prove it to me, I would be happy to see the figures.

Mr. Collenette: You have to bring the proof.

Mr. Kilgour: I would like to know one single feature in this infamous budget that does anything to help pensioners or people who are on fixed incomes. I notice that even the genius from York East is silent on that point.

I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the small business community, which incidentally were creating about two or three new jobs in Canada until recently, are apoplectic about the budget. The Canadian organization for small business, for instance, was quoted as saying that the animosity of the tax policy of the Minister of Finance for people in business is obvious. The Canadian Federation for Independent Business termed the budget "a very frightening document". It has been miscast as a Robin Hood budget. In fact, it takes from business and from middle-class and gives to the government.

In fact, I do not think anyone has been as incensed at this budget as the members of the small business community who have been creating jobs better than anyone in our economy for several years. It is so obvious that one might ask: "Why are you telling us it is a bad budget?" Everyone in Canada except the hon. member for York East is now fully aware that it is a bad budget.

I refer now to one article in a recent issue which I received today. It points out that the lazy Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—and I challenge the Chair to name any hon. member in the House of Commons who is lazier mentally or physically than the Minister of Finance. I seriously challenge those members opposite to convince me that the Minister of Finance had the energy to read over his budget speech before he read it in the House on November 12.

Lawyers have pointed out that the budget contained a $700 million error in its calculation of the cost to the provinces of reduced federal contributions to shared cost programs. Normally people do not think lawyers need any defending in the House or elsewhere, but I am told that the 30,000 lawyers across Canada who will be taxed by this budget on work in progress have something like a billion dollars of work in progress which will be affected by this budget. The lawyers who represent companies and who bill on an interim basis do not find any difficulty with that—or less trouble—but lawyers who act for plaintiffs and lawyers whose clients are not so prosperous will be hit very hard by this.

I received a letter from a lawyer from Edmonton who has, in fact, run twice as a provincial Liberal candidate of my province saying that he would be forced either to break the law if this budget is enacted or he will have to consider leaving the practice of law. Incidentally, this lawyer acts for plaintiffs and rarely acts for clients who can pay on an interim basis. To say that I do not think he will be voting Liberal in the next election may not mean very much because most of the Liberals in Alberta have already been appointed to the bench; but that is one practising Liberal lawyer in my province who is sickened by the budget.

I also say that there is not one single, solitary individual in Canada, except for the member for York East, the Minister of Finance, the Canadian Bankers' Association and the Business Council on National Issues, who has anything good to say about the budget. Let me look for a moment at—

• (1700)

Mr. Collenette: At the bill.

Mr. Kilgour: The bill is so picayune, when we should be dealing with a range of other problems, that it is an insult even to the intelligence of the hon. member for York East.

Let me talk about the way in which the government approaches unemployment and creates it. Last summer VIA Rail services were cut by 20 per cent. As the House is aware, this party had a task force which went across the country and heard members of affected unions and affected employees in 13 cities. There were about 320 submissions from different groups and individuals. I should like to refer to some of the things those individuals who will lose or who have already lost jobs had to say about the compassion of the government opposite. For example, let me refer to Halifax, which suffers from unemployment more than most parts of the country. Ralph O'Donnell and Warren Hutt of the Canadian Brotherhood of Rail, Transport and General Workers said that the elimination of the Atlantic train would cost at least 240 jobs for people who are presently employed with VIA Rail and CN Rail in Halifax alone. I wonder whether this bill will affect any of those 240 employees, Mr. Minister of Labour?

Mr. Collenette: Address the Chair.

Mr. Kilgour: I am sorry, through you, Mr. Speaker. A VIA employee told the task force that anyone in Halifax with less than five years seniority would wind up on the lay-off list. Will the bill help these people?

In Moncton we were told by Robert Dennis of the CBRT and GW that numerous VIA employees, formerly with CN and CP, had agreed in good faith to give up their right to transfer their seniority back to those companies. Now they will lose their jobs. Will the bill help any one of these individuals? We were told that none of these people who would lose their jobs in Moncton would be permitted to transfer to the Windsor-Quebec City corridor in which new jobs would be created. Mr. Dennis said that the affected employees "feel they have been betrayed by the Government of Canada". Also we were told by one of the councillors of the city of Moncton that as an indirect affect 300 residents of Moncton who earn their living in real estate are now all but inactive because of the depressed market created by the VIA Rail situation. No one opposite seems to have taken the slightest interest in the people in Moncton and elsewhere in the maritimes affected as a direct result of the federal government action last summer.

In Quebec we were told by Hervé Villeneuve of the United Transportation Union the following:

> After 38 years in rail passenger service, I'm to go back on freight trains and be on call seven days a week.

This is the kind of compassion and concern displayed by the Liberal Party which sits in majority government today.

Also we were told by the Canadian Railway Labour Association:

> Otherwise, VIA Rail, for all its rhetoric, may turn out to be nothing more than a thinly-disguised—

Unfortunately the rest of the quotation is missing, but I think the association was referring to a thinly-disguised means to terminate rail passenger service in Canada.

We were told on the prairies by the same railway brotherhood the following:

> The CNR has already indicated that there are between 200 and 250 employees (in Winnipeg) whose positions will be redundant as of November 15.

I wonder whether the bill will help any of those people the government has caused to be laid off in Winnipeg.

The Winnipeg Labour Council, representing 115 local unions and over 30,000 employees, told us that the VIA Rail cuts would cost them "over 500 jobs in the initial phase of the new government program". It also mentioned other jobs which will be lost later as a result of spin-off effects. I wonder whether the bill will help any of those people.

In British Columbia we were told by Ralph Frisk of the CNR Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees Union the following:

—we are extremely concerned that approximately 640 jobs, those of our brothers in related CNR unions, will be lost. In some towns where the CNR is the major employer, these cuts will cause great hardship.

These examples demonstrate the hypocrisy of the government pretending to worry about Canadians at the same time as laying off a minimum of 1,600 people this summer by disembowelling VIA Rail. It is beyond my comprehension, but there is not a level of hypocrisy beyond which hon. members opposite will not go. If the hon. member for York East could name one example, I would be delighted. It has just been brought to my attention by one of my colleagues that the hon. member for York East recently said that the election was 18 months ago. In fact it was 22 months ago. That kind of mathematics will get the government into a lot of trouble, including the $700 million error in the budget calculations.

The mayor of Kamloops told the task force the following:

Some two dozen jobs will be lost to the community . . . The impact of this move will mean a minimum of $500,000 annual payroll loss to the city.

One does not have to be particularly wise to know that if the government kills jobs in a community such as Kamloops, in many cases people will leave Kamloops. Why would it not have been better to have left the train running through Kamloops, to have left all those people working happily and hopefully living productive lives, rather than killing so many jobs? If the government had left the train running through Kamloops, perhaps we would not have to discuss a bill which attempts to help people who lost their jobs; perhaps we would not have to be engaged in a steady deindustrialization of Canada, as I have attempted to indicate in my remarks:

In Vancouver, William Apps, regional vice-president of CBRT, said:

VIA Rail Canada has a record of providing a high standard of service and much of the credit is due to the employees who serve the public in a highly professional manner. These are the people employed in ticket offices, baggage rooms, and on-board employees performing the on-train services such as refreshment, coach and sleeping car service.

I agree with Mr. Apps. Most of the people who lost their jobs with VIA Rail were highly competent and dedicated employees. Where are these people today? As we were told time and time again, undoubtedly they are at Manpower offices trying to find new jobs. Many of those people have well served Canadians and their employers for 25 or 30 years, only to find that it is the blasted government which has put them out of work. What other civilized country in the world has a government which would cold-bloodedly and on no economic or social basis whatsoever undertake to throw 1,600 people out of work? The government does not even pretend to have a reason to justify it. It is the public be damned. If Commodore Vanderbilt did it, Mr. Speaker, you and I and every member opposite would denounce him from every soapbox in the country. I submit that these people opposite are just as heartless as Commodore Vanderbilt. Every one of them rises to speak in favour of it and votes to approve it. Every one of them echoes the Minister of Transport. They seem to say, "It is only people. We are going to give them a grant to retrain them as a result of this bill. How can we feel sorry for the 1,600 and more people who lost their jobs with VIA Rail? We will give them grants—although in some cases that may destroy their self-respect. We are going to leave them at home all day while their families have to go out and earn the money to pay the rent or the mortgage." Hon. members opposite are humane, we believe.

● (1710)

I think the case can be made that there has never been a more heartless, less compassionate government in our history than this one. The problem with VIA Rail is but one of a legion of examples I could give.

Hon. members opposite do not understand anything about economics. I have often said that if every Canadian could take a course in economics, not a single Liberal would be re-elected to any future Canadian Parliament.

Last year about $7.5 billion left Canada as the result of Canadians and foreigners taking their money out. They do not want to leave money here to build plants or create jobs or for any productive use; they want to take it to the United States, West Germany, Switzerland or some place where they know there is some economic sense and where their currency will have some value.

Mr. Collenette: Tax havens!

Mr. Kilgour: The hon. member for York East just does not understand anything, Mr. Speaker. The point is that the government's policies are making every other place a tax haven, whereas people would rather keep their money in Canada. People are taking their savings and pensions out of the country. They are selling their homes here to buy homes in Arizona or some such place. All this obviously causes enormous problems for the construction industry and for our balance of payments. It goes without saying that it also causes unemployment.

This party believes in policies and measures designed to attract foreign capital, not policies that will discourage it at every turn. This party believes in policies which would attract more people into Canada with the skills and the training that would be of benefit to the economy, causing it to grow.

Let us take Jamaica as an example, Mr. Speaker. For eight or nine years Michael Manley used the same kind of policies there as this government has been using. He managed to take a perfectly healthy, prospering and relatively happy economy and country to the point where it had an inflation rate of 35 per cent and an unemployment rate of 35 per cent per annum. He drove foreign investment out of Jamaica with his own brand of xenophobia, of which we have not a little in this country, unfortunately. He drove people out of the country and ended up with an unemployment rate of 35 per cent and an inflation rate of 35 per cent. Eventually the majority of the people of Jamaica had the sense to throw him out of office.

At the weekend I read in the newspaper that Mr. Seaga has brought the inflation rate down to 6 per cent, but I do not know what the unemployment rate is although I believe it has been substantially reduced. Mr. Seaga spoke of attracting investment from 800 businesses which had expressed interest in investing in his country, so money and investment are flooding back to the island. I have never been to Jamaica but I understand it is a magnificent place. When money comes back, jobs come back and with proper control, inflation goes down. I hope that before long Mr. Seaga and the people of Jamaica will experience virtually no unemployment and no inflation.

If all the things that would encourage inflation were listed, it would be seen that this government has done most of them. If all the things that would encourage unemployment were listed, it would be seen that this government has done most of them too. If a list were made of everything that would drive Canadian money out of the country, it would be seen that this government has done most of them. It is dreadfully wrong for a country with the talents, resources and education we have to try to disembowel itself, economically speaking, year after year after year.

A concrete example of this has occurred in my own community in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. A company there has become the largest producer of rigs for the oil industry throughout the world in the last ten years. It was started in Edmonton, it grew up there, and it is now one of the success stories of western Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, of 1,500 employees, ony 100 now work in Canada while the remainder, I gather, work in the United States, Europe or elsewhere. There is no good reason why the majority of those 1,500 employees should not be working in Ontario, Quebec or some place else in Canada. Our economic policies, which have been compounded—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia that Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when considering Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, I am reminded of the reactions I have experienced to this institution and to the government since coming here after the election of February 18, 1980. This party will oppose the bill, at least at this stage. It seems to me that it is another example of bureaucratization—

Mr. Blenkarn: Right on!

Mr. Kristiansen: —and the pile up of paper. If anything, it is a make-work project for more and more bureaucrats. For the thousands of employees trying to find their way through the system, for the hundreds of union representatives and shop stewards who are already overburdened in trying to steer the people they represent through the bureaucratic maze of workers' compensation, unemployment insurance and the myriad of other regulations that seem calculated to confuse rather help ordinary people in the country, it is a nightmare.

It will also be a pain in the derriere for hundreds of managers dealing with the problems of industrial relations, workers' involvement, and rights to unemployment insurance. It seems designed to confuse and confound ordinary Canadians who find themselves in dire straits, if not worse, as a result of the actions or inactions of the government.

Under the heading "Designation of Industries" Clause 3(1) of the bill reads as follows:

> 3. (1) For the purposes of this Act, the Governor in Council may, by order, designate any industry either generally or with respect to any region of Canada.

The bill is purportedly designed to assist Canadians in industries which are hard hit in these difficult times. I will use the forest industry as an example because it is the one with which I am most familiar. One would think that this bill should at least allow the government to assist the people in that industry. However, in reading on, it seems to me that, by definition, they are apparently excluded from any possible protection under this piece of legislation. If any hon. member opposite is perhaps a little brighter, a little more innovative, or whatever, perhaps that hon. member could enlighten us to the contrary. However, under "Designation of Industries", Clause 3(2) states the criteria for general designation as follows:

● (1720)

An industry may be designated generally pursuant to subsection (1) if the Governor in Council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in Canada generally is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature by reason of import competition or by reason of industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada to encourage such restructuring;

Mr. McDermid: Or by reason of insanity.

Mr. Kristiansen: The board that will administer this program will be politically appointed by the governor in council, by the cabinet. Whoever is appointed will be a political appointee.

Mr. MacBain: We're going to appoint you.

Mr. Kristiansen: It does not amount to the kind of responsible democratic structure where labour appoints someone and management appoints someone, or anything else of the kind; we are talking about straight political hacks. I suspect that hon. members opposite will not admit that what the government has certainly been doing to the forest industry is "industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada". We may perceive it as being that. However, I rather doubt that those hon. members over there will admit to any such thing.

Mr. MacBain: Never!

Mr. Kristiansen: I certainly suspect that they will not define the problems now taking place in the forest industry from one end of the country to another as being non-cyclical in nature. It is a cycle within the business cycle. It is a regular one. It happens every few years. This one happens to be much worse than the norm because it has been encouraged, abetted and, in part, created by that government; but it will not admit to it, so it will not be covered under that definition either. Therefore, we find that one of the largest industries in Canada, one which has been harder hit than almost any other, will be exempt.

Perhaps some hon. members may say that the enabling provision will be found under Clause 3(2), or Clause 3(3), which states the criteria for regional designation. However, under Clause 3(3), we find much the same thing:

An industry may be designated with respect to any region of Canada pursuant to subsection (1) if the Governor in Council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in that region is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature;

If I am mistaken, perhaps hon. members opposite will enlighten me. However, I suspect the government will very strongly state that what we are facing in the forest industry is a cyclical problem. Will any hon. members opposite deny that? Will they say that it is an "industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada"? Do any hon. members want to say that? They do not seem to want to say that, either. Therefore, I can only assume that my guess is correct and that the government has no intention of providing any extra benefits or any relaxation of regulations. I assume my guess is correct if, in fact, that is what this means, and I have my doubts.

Thousands and thousands of Canadians in British Columbia, New Brunswick and elsewhere, right across the country, who are facing such dire straits within the forest industry and many other industries and now find themselves to be out of work due to cyclical markets which are being aggravated by their effect upon working people across the country, will receive no benefits.

Something else which disturbs me relates to the word "adjustment" as I find it consistently repeated throughout Bill C-78. At page 6, under Clause 10, the bill states:

The Board may certify an employee named in an application under section 9 as being eligible to apply to the Commission for labour adjustment benefits if

(a) he was laid off;

(b) the Canadian establishment from which he was laid off is part of a designated industry;

That contains the obvious limitations to which I earlier referred. It states further:

(c) the number of employees at the Canadian establishment referred to in paragraph (b) was reduced as a result of lay-offs, in any twelve month period including the employee's effective date of lay-off, by at least ten per cent or fifty employees, whichever is the lesser; and

(d) his lay-off resulted from the economic adjustment referred to in subsection 3(2) or (3), as the case may be.

Mr. McDermid: Economic adjustment!

Mr. Kristiansen: Economic adjustment! I know that the year 1984 is not very far away, but it seems to me that considering the amount of new adjustments we will be making which will affect people in the Canadian labour force, we should perhaps have waited a couple more years so that we would at least be in tune with the vocabulary suggested by George Orwell: "newspeak". The bill before us is full of "newspeak": "seasonally adjusted", "economically adjusted", "non-cyclically adjusted". These are all terms which appear throughout this entire bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Well done.

Mr. Kristiansen: I would plead with and ask the government to take seriously the fact that Canadian working people are tired of being adjusted, whether economically, seasonally, non-cyclically, or vertically or horizontally, for that matter. What they want is to find some employment with decent wages in order to make their contribution to this country and to their own families.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kristiansen: I have been looking hard at this bill. I have searched it and searched it. I want to believe that hon. members opposite are people of good will, but it is hard to find evidence. I want to say that a number of days ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) asked, concerning another matter, "Why does not anyone say thank you?" I would love to say it; but try as I might, I cannot find anything for which people in my industry, the forest industry, can be thankful. Other than those political appointees and the thousands of bureaucrats who will be required to shuffle paper around to make sense of this matter, I cannot find anyone else who has much for which to be thankful as a result of the great lengths of imagination to which the minister and his staff must have gone in order to produce this bill. It is mindboggling.

I would also like to refer to Clause 14(2) on page 11 of the bill, concerning work-sharing, agreements, which states:

(2) For the purposes of this Act, the weekly insurable earnings of a qualified employee for any week of employment under a work sharing agreement approved pursuant to section 37 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, is the lesser of

(a) the total amount the employee would have earned for that week if he had worked a full working week for the employer he worked for under the agreement; and

(b) the maximum weekly insurable earnings, as determined pursuant to that Act, for that week.

Mr. McDermid: Say that again?

Mr. Kristiansen: Apart from the difficulty that we laymen, who are supposedly here to govern experts, may have in determining just what all of this means, many people, including myself, who are very active in relation to workers and their problems from one end of the country to the other, are very leery of any government, be it of any political stripe, which attempts to interfere in what should be a matter to be determined by management and employees within a given company or industry. If the government, by this measure, is attempting to take unto itself the power to determine whether to encourage people in an industry to adopt what is sometimes called work sharing—I prefer to call it unemployment sharing—then I think that is a very dangerous approach. It has long been my feeling and that of many others, I might say, in the Canadian labour force, particularly those who are privileged to represent people in an elective capacity within that labour force—

Mr. McDermid: We all do!

Mr. Kristiansen: —that it is fundamentally wrong to take away or encourage the taking away of rights which are enjoyed by someone, by virtue of written inclusion in a collective agreement or contract, without the mutual consent of management and the union, and without the consent of the affected individual. Even if management and union agree to take away such rights, that union and that management have no right even to act together to remove those rights without the employee's consent if a contract or collective agreement states that an employee has certain rights. The government certainly does not have the right, unless the individual affected consents. When you have an industrial operation, or any other type of employment, where the people, due to their seniority, have the right to remain employed in a period when some employees are laid off, no one has the right to remove that right or to attempt to encourage the removal of that right unless those persons expressly consent.

• (1730)

I know the concept of job ownership is not one universally accepted in this country as yet. People talk about the rights that go with the investment of capital, but people who invest their labour power and their lives for 10, 20 or 30 years, often at considerable risk to their health, do have a right to job ownership, within definitions accepted by large numbers within Canadian society, and a proprietary right in that job as well. They will defend those rights against management, government and, if necessary, against their own union representatives if those representatives fail to do their jobs as the collective agreement outlines them. I suggest it is very risky and very wrong for the government to even encourage those people to sacrifice those rights unless they are willing to sacrifice themselves for what they deem to be the better good of their fellows.

I am also upset with the method of designation of the regions or industries and how those designations are to be made. Anybody with that kind of power should be selected on some more fair basis than simply by the governor in council or the cabinet. It should be so structured under any piece of legislation that attempts to bring in a change such as does this bill that representatives who are duly appointed, selected, elected, or whatever, by the various component groups which make up Canadian industry should be automatically on such a board, rather than having its members selected at a political whim. The board itself is politically appointed, and the designations will cause a great deal of difficulty because they are left so open. As I understand it, there are only to be some four to six designations per year because of the shortage of funds—and I may have something to say about that later—will cause a great deal of difficulty. There will be a great deal of flexibility of choice by this politically appointed board as to which communities receive the benefits. I presume, even though I am skeptical, that there are some real benefits attached to such flexibility, but there will be difficulty with regard to the selection of those communities that will derive this government's self-defined benefits.

I looked to other funds and programs which have been set up by this government, such as the Western Development Fund, to get an indication of how this power would be used, particularly if the choices to be made are strictly political, made by politically appointed groups. There were two projects in western Canada last year funded from the Western Development Fund. One happened to be within the constituency of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), and the other happened to be within the riding of a former minister of the environment, in Kamloops, and involved the native Band from which that minister came. That is rather suspect, with all the hoop-la surrounding the fact that this fund was for regional development. I begin to wonder, about this especially in view of the fact that I believe the five regions that have been mentioned to date under this program are all within ridings represented by members of the party which forms the government. Having that in view and the other experience, I am more than just a little suspicious and leery as to the intent and practices which this board and this program will follow in the allocation of priorities.

There are a number of other matters I should like to refer to that are of grave concern to us in considering the legislation before us. The program is restricted to a relatively small amount of money to be used in selective areas after the damage has been done. There is a maximum of four to six communities to be designated at one time for benefits to be paid in the total amount of approximately $175 million, minus $90 million which is intended for the companies themselves, leaving $85 million for unemployed workers. If you divide that by the five years to which the total amount is supposed to apply, you end up with $5.6 million. Divided by the six communities mentioned, this works out to approximately $800,000 per community per year. I understand Windsor is one of the communities mentioned, and $800,000 will not go that far in a city that is as affected as that community has been in the past year, and things do not look any rosier in times to come—not in the immediate future, in any case, though I wish they did.

The program has not been set in the context of full employment programs and massive industrial restructuring. When we look at the many serious problems facing the industries that may come within the ambit of this program—and, as I said, this does not touch the forestry industry—we begin to see the scale of the job to be done. This measure takes place in the absence of positive government economic activity.

The bill also avoids confronting the need for active labour market policies such as the levy grants system being proposed by the Canadian Labour Congress and placed before the Allmand task force and elsewhere.

The $15 million community employment program will be of the Canada Works welfare type. When we are talking about industries in which people are quite properly getting wages and salaries in the range of $8 to $14 per hour, to suggest the welfare type of make-work program as a reasonable substitute for people suffering from the inaction of this government is scandalous, to say the least.

There is still no provision within the bill for accountability in respect of plant closures or lay-offs to a job protection board or any other type of agency.

The benefit levels for older workers under the labour adjustment benefits program will be lowered to bring them into line with current unemployment insurance benefits, from 66 per cent down to 60 per cent of earnings.

Again, the cabinet will designate the communities, so the decisions will be highly political. There are no specific guidelines for designation, or procedures for applications by communities that could be reviewed by some independent body. The program will affect only a few communities, maybe as few as ten over the next few years.

Also, industrial assistance may very well reward inefficiency and lack of investment, or it may be given to an industry that has already planned to invest.

• (1740)

Finally, no conditions have been established to ensure long term commitments after federal assistance is granted. Surely we have learned enough from some of the problems which have developed as a result of DREE to look again. It has even been suggested by some hon. members from the other side—maybe it is about time they started to speak up again—that steps be taken to ensure that where the government provides concrete financial assistance, there must be some type of watchdog capacity, if not equity, along with some input to ensure the continuing development and compliance of those industries. The government as well as the communities involved should have some say in return for the dollars which have been invested by the taxpayer. The taxpayers have a right to expect a return on their investment. When taxpayers invest their money in an industry, they should have representation from someone, appointed on behalf of the government, to look after the public interest. These representatives may be employees or community representatives within local governments, such as a city councillor or someone from the village or regional government, acting for the government, in order to bring back to industry some degree of social responsibility. Some social responsibility still rests with employers who at least live in the community in which they have their business, so that they are accountable to their shareholders and responsible for ensuring that people will not be cast out of the labour force unless there is absolutely no other alternative. In these days of multinational conglomerates, trans-national and even large national concerns, there is not that social responsibility which we must now begin to revive. We must have some kind of community or employee input—not necessarily control—to ensure that if those corporations must resort to dislocation, that information will be advanced to those people who are immediately affected. With that information, these people may then influence their communities, the media and the companies involved to take a more socially responsible course and to balance that social responsibility with the responsibility which these companies properly and understandably have to their shareholders.

This legislation does not begin to consider that. Although this is not the major objective of the bill, surely it is not too early—although it may be too late—to start looking in that direction. This bill should ensure that the kind of social responsibility that once existed under local ownership is revived in some areas of our economy.

Again, no conditions have been established to ensure a long term commitment after federal assistance is granted. The bill provides for no input into management in return for federal equity and in return for the federal taxpayers' dollars.

Finally, I would like to say that I am disappointed that the federal government has failed to devise a bill which provides for more understanding. I repeat that the working people of Canada are totally frustrated by the maze of regulations which now exist in the UIC system, as are their employers and representatives. I believe that this bill only adds to the maze and will make it even more difficult for people to understand.

Canadians who are privileged to have union representation are often able to succeed in their appeals to the commission through boards of referees, six to eight times more often than those who do not have the benefit of union representation. Many Canadians who have strong unions will be able to find their way through the maze and to receive protection, but those thousands of other Canadians who do not have that representation will be totally lost in their attempts to claim their legitimate rights under the provisions of this bill.

I am disappointed by the fact that this legislation exists in a vacuum. I believe that the government must re-examine its motivation and its conscience and ultimately find the will and determination to take positive action—not patchwork and band-aid—to mitigate the effects of its own policies to date which have so severely hamstrung the Canadian economy and have driven hundreds of thousands of proud working Canadians into bankruptcy and unemployment.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the minister on the assumption of his duties and wish him well in helping the workers of Canada.

This bill reflects Labour Canada's participation in the $350 million industry and labour adjustment program announced in January of this year by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bane), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia).

One of the main features of the bill, an early retirement pension for employees unable to obtain alternative employment, has been in operation in the clothing, textile and footwear industries for several years. The bill permits the immediate extension of this provision to qualified persons in communities in Ontario and Quebec and Sydney, Nova Scotia, as well as to industries which are, or are to be, designated under the program.

Job creation, job-finding, mobility and training are measures in place to assist unemployed workers and will now be joined with early retirement as a last resort for helping affected workers. The industries involved are those which are subject to import competition or are encouraged by government policies and programs to restructure their operations. In case of economic pressures, the cabinet can designate industries in specific geographic areas for these benefits.

The program supplies a slender safety net for workers in the 54 to 65 year old age group who are employed in the selected industries of clothing, textiles and footwear. As well, it makes special mention of 30-year workers in the 50 to 54 year old age group.

But what about the majority of the Canadian work force which is employed by small business, farming, forestry, mining and fishing? The Georgia Pacific Veneer plant at McAdam, New Brunswick, is the only industry in the village. It closed its doors this year and there is no alternative employment for its workers. Are these workers to be excluded because they do not make textiles or footwear?

Over half the lumber mills in the Atlantic provinces are closed and hundreds of people are unemployed. American export markets are closed and the whole housing and building industries are in recession. Are the workers in our mills—most of them employing less than 50 people—not to be eligible because their industry is not identified or because the cabinet has not identified their geographic area for benefits?

I propose that the built-in discrimination against all industrial and commercial employees, farmers, fishermen, mill employees, miners and tradesmen be removed and that all workers be treated equally under this legislation.

In the Atlantic provinces, Canadians earn two-thirds of the national average in wages. The industrial plants and business operations are small. The area that suffers the most from unemployment, regional disparity and employment loss is not as qualified to receive benefits under this bill as are the more prosperous parts of Canada which have larger mills, larger plants, and employ larger numbers, areas where most of Canada's textile, clothing and footwear plants are situated. They also have most of Canada's Members of Parliament and cabinet ministers.

The type of industries which are the focus of this bill should be expanded to remove the discrimination against the Atlantic provinces. What about workers in provinces like New Brunswick which have resource-based economies requiring more workers at one time of the year than another, where continuity in a general trade such as lumbering is easier to prove than in a mill with a single employee?

● (1750)

The intention is to help industries adjust to competition from imported products and government induced structural changes; it should also help industries in the Atlantic provinces that must also compete with products of central Canadian industries established and protected for many years with tariff walls and government policies that deprived the Atlantic provinces of more advantageous trade with their natural trading partners in the New England States and along the Atlantic seaboard. It should help all workers who are subjected to the indignity of unemployment through no fault of their own and who must look to this bill as a safety net of last resort.

I commend the parliamentary secretary for his clear explanation of the steps leading to benefits and a description of the benefits themselves. At page 12611 of Hansard for November 6, 1981, he said the benefits are equal to 60 per cent of the average insurable earnings before the lay-off. For 1981, the maximum insurable earnings prescribed under the Unemployment Insurance Act stand at $315 a week. Therefore, the maximum labour adjustment benefit is $189 a week, he indicated. The benefits are reduced by 60 cents for each dollar of income from employment while registered under the program and one dollar for each dollar of income from other government sources or employment preceding the benefit period. That is the maximum benefit. When all these deductions are made from the middle range or lower-income base, we are at the lower edge of prudence, facing the poverty line.

The bill proposes another board, the Labour Adjustment Review Board, to certify that the lay-offs involve an establishment that belongs to a designated industry and affect 10 per cent of the manpower or 50 workers of the establishment, whichever is less; that the board is convinced the lay-offs stem from a serious upheaval in the industry; that the claimant is between 54 and 65 years of age, has exhausted all unemployment insurance benefits and has had at least 10 years' employment in the industry in the last 15 years—there is more—and that the claimant is a Canadian and has a Manpower certificate showing he has no employment opportunities or a much inferior job. If the board so certifies, the worker qualifies—that is, if the worker is still alive after jumping all those hurdles.

Can hon. members imagine the bureaucracy needed to sustain this operation? And then the cabinet in its political wisdom can simply identify industries in certain geographic locations where the program then applies.

An easier way with less bureaucratic and political involvement is to make the program applicable to all workers in the 54-65 age group who are the unwilling victims of permanent lay-offs and for whom there is no other employment opportunity.

In the Maritimes we have the spectacle of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) cutting the guts out of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia by cancelling over half of their rail passenger services and about 80 per cent of the CN Express operations, and none of the workers in these industries qualifies for this program. None of our woods workers, farmers, lumbermen, carpenters, plumbers or electricians qualifies. And yet every one of these laid-off workers can point to high interest rates or, in the case of the railways, to misguided government policies for their lay-offs. Do they meet the 10 per cent rule? They surely do. Unemployment is our primary industries exceeds 20 per cent, and in some of them it is more than 50 per cent. Have they worked in the industry for 10 of the last 15 years? Yes, but perhaps not for the same employer. Do they qualify? No. The industry is not designated, and neither is the geographic area. They should be. The bottom line is this: industries in all of the Atlantic provinces should be designated, the rules made more flexible for primary industries and all workers who qualify receive their benefits administered locally through community employment centres now in existence, without an expensive new board and a new bureaucracy.

What about spouses? We surely at long last are on our way to permitting their full participation in the Canada Pension Plan now that the equal rights amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has been included in the Constitution. What about this program? Where do they fit here? It seems discriminatory, and it should not be. We should at long last admit that a spouse contributes greatly to the breadwinner's ability to earn income and is deserving of at least full survivorship benefits in this and, indeed, all our programs.

In its Part III amendments, the bill requires employers in federal jurisdictions to negotiate fair termination settlements with workers or unions. The minister in his speech on November 6 set out the federal jurisdiction to include railways, trucking, shipping, banking, grain handling and national infrastructure industries. One amendment reduces from five to one the required years of employment but a minimum of five is provided and a maximum of 40 removed. If more than 50 workers are laid off, 16 weeks' notice is required, and the employer must set up a management labour committee to minimize the impact of the lay-off on the workers.

The first disappointment in this movement—in the right direction—in the proposed amendments to Part III is the failure to recognize the equity of workers in their jobs. This recognition greatly strengthens the Japanese industrial empire in its successful drive to produce quality products at competitive world prices. It is a concept I hope the new minister will address.

The new threshold for severence pay of one year and the removal of the cap on it are good moves. The minimum of 50 required to trigger a 16 weeks' notice of lay-off is discriminatory against faithful long-term workers in small to moderate-sized plants and does not contemplate enlightened employers who, through no personal fault, are suddenly forced into bankruptcy by high interest rates or credit restrictions by our banks and are unable to gove any reasonable notice. Is there anything to stop an unscrupulous employer from laying off 10 people at a time and defeating the purpose of this amendment?

Finally, the big disappointment is that the lack of federal leadership and initiative has resulted in no comparable provincial legislation. The new DREE disease of wanting to centralize control of projects and glory is apparently contagious. The result is equally predictable. All programs do not work well in every area and region. This program will operate only with railways, trucking, shipping, banking, grain handling, and national infrastructure industries. Again there is little benefit for the Maritimes because, thanks to the present government, we have little left in the way of national transportation companies and grain handling. We do have the banks—or better put, they have us. Our federal trades people are already the victims of discrimination, being paid regional rates below the national average.

Thanks, Mr. Minister, at least for your good intentions.

There is, however, something the government can do, that is, to set aside a portion of the income tax from firms and corporations to be held in trust and payable in lieu of severence pay and notice to all workers in the event of a lay-off, whether in groups of 50 or less.

The program before us is one of last resort and is no substitute for the program of job creation to which the minister referred in his opening remarks on November 6. I agree. What we really need is a blueprint for the economic recovery and development of our nation, and the training programs of which the minister also spoke are an essential measure that must progress in concert with development and job creation. In the Atlantic provinces, community colleges and technical training schools must be vastly expanded to meet this challenge. High level curriculums with modern teaching methods, on-the-job training and apprenticeship programs must move forward hand in hand with fair employment policies and regional development and job creation policies.

We need an economic vehicular structure much like the ocean industries concept developed by DREE and Nova Scotia in June of this year to seek and bring new high technology firms—the winners in today's economy—to the Maritimes to build on areas where we have an equal or natural advantage. Spin-off and involvement in the $400 billion of Canadian energy megaprojects in the next decade require action now by Ottawa and the Maritimes to put in place a strategy to enable Maritimers to use this national dynamic as a development tool.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) had the floor.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, at adjournment earlier this evening, I was discussing the spin-off and involvement in the $400 billion of Canadian energy megaprojects that are planned for the next decade. I was indicating that this would require action now by Ottawa and the maritime provinces if we want to put in place a strategy to enable maritimers to use this national dynamic as a badly needed development tool.

However, prospective employees also require extensive training to take advantage of these opportunities. This requires facilities and they require money. The maritimes do not have the tax base to provide it. We need an investment in our provinces to enable us to provide and staff secondary industries to help us help ourselves. Instead of handouts and subsidies, we need an investment. Until this is done, the measures of last resort for most Canadians are often the measures of only resort for those in the maritimes.

Among other things, we must resist and reverse the cutbacks in established programs financing for the maritimes shown in the schedules tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). We need vast increases by both federal and provincial governments in research and development and secondary education as national and regional objectives administered and applied in the maritime provinces. Failure to train Canadians now means importing many of our future leaders and skilled workers tomorrow.

Finally, I do not want to delay passage of this bill which seeks to alleviate the human tragedy, the quiet poverty, the embarrassment and real hardship for many of a growing number of Canadians who suffer from unemployment. Almost half of our unemployed people are in the 15 to 24-year-old age group, and this bill does not touch them. However, some of the measures I have proposed can help them if the minister will reconvene a meeting of ministers who designed the program before us and discuss it with them.

I would urge him as a new minister to take the leadership in abandoning the reckless direction on which our country is now embarked and to create instead a climate attracted to industry, to competition and to the economic recovery of our nation. As a trading nation, Canada can move from fourteenth back to second place in terms of competition and standard of living, and we can be first. All it takes to replace the frustration of older workers unable to find work and disillusionment of young people seeking work is the national will and political determination of our government.

I hope the minister will act as a fresh new voice in the councils of his tired old government and urge on them an end to eighteenth century economic policies that do not work and a fresh new beginning for our young country that can truly lead the world in providing good jobs for all its people and the highest standard of care and living in the world.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I was so taken with the oratory of the preceding speaker that I forgot to prepare myself to follow him. That was an excellent speech made by my colleague. I feel rather inadequate following such a great speech, but I am prepared to address a few words to the House on this legislation.

This legislation reminds me of the kind of approach that this government often takes to economic planning in our country. It is rather of the kind, if I may be permitted to say so, that would say: would the last person to leave town please shut off the lights. That is the kind of legislation we now have before us. It is typical to the kind of legislation this government has to bring in in terms of the bungling and mismanagement we have seen demonstrated by it with respect to an economic and industrial strategy for our country.

I want to deal with the specifics of this legislation in due course. However, I think it is fair to say that this legislation has been necessitated because of the failure of the government to develop a coherent industrial strategy. Over the years, during the time we have been in opposition we have consistently demanded that the government state, announce and develop an industrial strategy to chart our nation's course in the years to come. Our calls for action have fallen on deaf ears. We are now asked to pass this patchwork legislation to deal with industries that are succumbing to that particular policy failure. It is truly a sad commentary about this government and a sad reality that this type of legislation is needed in our country.

• (2010)

In our country we have a paste fix government, whether it be in the form of a budget or in terms of its constitutional proposals or now with respect to industrial and labour policies. I say to the minister who has been newly appointed that he will not only need all the incredibly hard work, of which I know he is capable, but also an enormous amount of luck, having regard to the competence of the colleagues with whom he sits in cabinet. The exception is the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola).

This government has never been known to be a government of action; but at one time Liberal governments were known as governments of reaction. They used to round up the cattle after they got out of the barn. Now when the cows get out, the government throws up its hands and shuts down the farm.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Buys a new herd.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Or buys a new herd and subsidizes it out of public money, as my colleague for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) points out. I notice with interest the legislation's provisions for joint planning committees in cases of industrial shutdowns, the lofty objectives to develop an adjustment program to minimize the impact, the termination of employment of so-called redundant workers. I shall deal with that subsequently in my remarks.

On the basis of the provisions of this bill, I am very interested to find out exactly who will be covered by this legislation. On the basis of the provisions dealing with qualifications, I would be very surprised if there are many people left who will, in fact, qualify. If they do qualify, they will have to have met some pretty stringent qualification provisions with respect to years of employment in any particular industry. It would be far safer, if they wanted to bring benefits to those people who have become redundant, to modify the provisions of the legislation with respect to the number of years one is required to have worked in a particular industry or in a region so as to qualify for benefits. If that were the case, in light of Canada's present economic circumstances, I think we would have a larger group of Canadians who were out of work, unemployed and with no prospect of employment in the immediate future who could receive some benefit by the legislation.

With respect to this legislation, I should like to direct my attention to a particular matter of some interest and importance to me, coming as I do from Saskatchewan, in view of my responsibilities while in government. It has to do with a circumstance that has developed in our country, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan, at Uranium City. I ask rhetorically how this legislation, which was supposedly going to help people who have been put out of work through no fault of their own, and not by the dreaded private sector but by a Crown corporation, is going to be of assistance. We have listened to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). One would think that the Crown corporation was the answer to all our industrial strategies or all our problems in Canada, because here is a corporation that allows a government to use the corporation as an instrument of national economic policy. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that a Crown corporation is a vehicle that is accountable to the people of Canada. Wonderful words on the part of the minister with respect to the advantages of Crown corporations in our country!

The example of what has happened in Uranium City as a result of the actions and, if I may be permitted to say, the callous and cruel actions of the Crown corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, would make any thinking Canadian cringe with shame and disappointment. For an instrument of the Government of Canada to take actions that are so cruel and callous with respect to a community of some 3,000 people in northern Saskatchewan, I believe, warrants an extensive and full parliamentary inquiry into this particular shutdown of an industry which seriously affects an important province and city of our country.

Legislative provisions in this area are the minimum provisions the government of the day intends to accept from its corporate citizens. In light of the legislation being presented today, I think it is interesting to consider the Crown corporation's treatment of its own employees, and the assistance the government has provided its own people. Eldorado Nuclear Limited has been operational for a number of decades. Around the mine, a thriving town of some 3,000 inhabitants has developed. In the community of Uranium City people have purchased homes, developed businesses and established their families. This is not just a resource camp moving miners in and out on a weekly basis; it is a town that has developed to serve the needs of the corporation. One would hope there would be some reciprocation in kind on the part of the government and its agency. Indeed, the town relies heavily on Eldorado Nuclear Limited. There is no other major industry that supports the community. Reports indicate that the town has a tax rate of $4.5 million to keep water and sewer lines open, to maintain the streets and to keep the lights on. Eldorado Nuclear Limited supplies 87 per cent of this base. When Eldorado goes, the town will have less than $1 million with which to support itself.

Eldorado Nuclear Limited has recently made extensive capital investment in the community. I should point out that the investments have led many of the residents to believe that the future for Uranium City is reasonably bright. In the last two years, $4 million has been spent on housing and an additional $4 million on machinery.

An hon. Member: That is to close it down.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is prior to closing down precipitously. Those are the kind of capital expenditures that have been made in the town of Uranium City in Saskatchewan. In the last year, as part of a $12 million capital expenditure program $1.2 million was spent on the mill; $1.2 million was spent on a new food facility; and $1.7 million was spent to complete the Charlot River power project to bring power to the mine and to the community. That is an enormous amount of money, Mr. Speaker. One hundred and fifty of the 580 homes that are owned by Eldorado have been built in the last five years. Eldorado Nuclear Limited has just purchased a Boeing 737 aircraft to ferry workers in and out of Uranium City. This is the principal purpose of the particular aircraft. The support facility for this aircraft, including the construction of a major building to house the aircraft, was built in Saskatoon, and the support staff have been moved from Edmonton to Saskatoon during the time that I was minister. This is merely by coincidence, I should point out. I would never stoop to any kind of partisan, political change. It is the logical place for the headquarters to be. That hangar facility was built at a cost of $2.7 million. Rather than having warnings given to the employees and imposing a restriction on hiring, in addition, Eldorado hired men right to the day of the announced shutdown. Reports have indicated—and I think they have been substantiated—that some 45 families were moved into Uranium City within weeks before the announced shutdown. It was indicated to them that their employment would be of an ongoing and continuous nature into the foreseeable future. There was no word of a possible shutdown of this mine operation of Eldorado.

I should point out that Uranium City is not the type of community from which one can just pack up one's belongings and drive away. The first problem is that normally there is no road, except during the wintertime when one must drive over the frozen surface of northern Saskatchewan. Uranium City is 850 kilometres north of Saskatoon. Virtually the only link to the community is by aircraft from Saskatoon. If one decides to settle in Uranium City, one makes a commitment, a commitment from which it is not easy to back away. One must realize that the social and economic costs to people of the community will be massive in terms of the action taken by Eldorado Nuclear Limited, with the approbation and agreement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the government. Recent expansion has been made by a number of businesses in the community. They, along with privately-owned homes, have lost nearly their entire value. On the one hand, the government brings in legislation to aid employees in industrial shutdowns, and on the other hand it provides a devastating Christmas present to the people of Uranium City.

I wish to review the reasons given by the government and by Eldorado for the shutdown. First they indicated that the ore grade has fallen 40 per cent in five years and that production costs are rising faster than inflation. Also they indicated that there has been a drop in the world price for uranium from $50 per pound in 1979 to $27 per pound today. I, for one, am not ready to accept blindly the stated reasons as entirely believable. In fact, there are several reasons to call suspect the rationale of the corporation in this particular matter.

I should like to point to the most recent annual report of Eldorado. If one reviews it, one notices the brave projections for the future of the mine. It indicated that ore grade was below average in recent years, but that this was due to an inability to carry out development work because of a shortage of experienced miners. Not one word was said about the mine running out of uranium. Indeed, the report indicated that development work should allow access to higher ore grades in 1981. In 1980 the ore grade went up from what it was in 1979, from .185 per cent to .188 per cent. A higher tonnage and grade, coupled with an increase in the milling recovery rate from 86.9 per cent in 1979 to 88.6 per cent in 1980, resulted in a 9 per cent increase in production of U_3O_8. With these signs of improvement, what will happen to the brave projections? The people of Uranium City would very dearly like to know. Have costs of production really soared as high as Eldorado and the Liberal government have claimed? One must wonder what is included in the cost of production figures. Do these costs include all extraordinary expenditures, such as aircraft and hangar buildings, the Charlot River electrical project and the new dinery? The stories told by people who work in the community and in the mine, as evidenced at a visit by the leader of the provincial Progressive Conservative Party to that community during the course of last week, open one's eyes to the litany of wasted expenditure by the corporation.

The people of this community—and I think hon. members of Parliament from all parts of Canada, particularly those of us from Saskatchewan—have so many questions about the management or mismanagement of the Beaverlodge operation that it can only be resolved by a full parliamentary inquiry, for which I have called. The questions multiply when one hears of the prognostications with respect to the international uranium market. On today's news we heard that a private company, Rio Algoma, is prepared to offer employment to 450 of the people in Uranium City who were laid off. Does that sound as if the uranium market and the uranium mining industry were depressed? One must ask oneself this question: if Eldorado, in its statements with respect to the shutdown of this mine, is so pessimistic about the future of the uranium industry, why are we now finding that a private concern is able to make a very substantial offer of employment for many people who will be put out of work? Does that speak to the efficiency of Eldorado? Does that speak to the efficiency of the Beaverlodge Mine?

As for the decrease in the price of uranium, it is interesting to note that this is an issue in 1981. In the early 1970s when uranium was valued at under $6 per pound, and with no sales contracts in the hands of Eldorado, the mine came through because of the formation of Uranium Canada to stockpile uranium for government loans on production. Now, with the price at $27 per pound, stockpiling is not even considered an option. I ask the following question seriously: is it not possible that this stockpile transferred from Uranium Canada to Eldorado, which is now carried by Eldorado Nuclear Limited, is putting financial pressure on Eldorado, and an easy remedy is to shut down an operating facility so that some of the stockpile on hand may be sold to relieve the obligation on Eldorado?

Another aspect of the question of uranium prices is the quotation of Eldorado of the drop in the spot market price. As the last annual report aptly indicated, Eldorado's uranium is not sold on the spot market. There is no actual spot market for uranium. Rather, it is sold on long term contracts. The area of existing and future contract prices is another area which should be thoroughly reviewed by a parliamentary committee to see whether or not the situation has been accurately stated by Eldorado.

Eldorado is also presently involved in the development of the Key Lake Mine in Saskatchewan, scheduled to go into production in 1983. There is no question that the market price is soft for uranium at the present time. When viewing Eldorado's over-all mining production plans, one cannot help but be intrigued by Eldorado's manipulation of its assets to fit its contracts. Beaverlodge will operate until June 1982. Supplies for the contracts can be filled by the stockpile after Beaverlodge closes its doors. Then contracts are freed up for the Key Lake operation in 1983. It is terribly important for Key Lake to have contracts waiting for the mine to open its door, to justify the existence of the particular operation.

It is interesting to note the prediction by analysis in the government's Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which foresaw the softening market in February 1980. It indicated:

> —prospects for the short term future dimmed in the face of a growing imbalance between projected uranium requirements and supply capabilities. Implications of this growing imbalance were that development decisions for some of the recent new discoveries may need to be deferred, that there will probably be continuing decline in prices, at least in real terms, and that there will likely be some loss in the exploration momentum that has built up during the last five years.

Rather than heeding these warnings and taking action to bolster the market, the federal Crown corporation, with the approbation and approval of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has done absolutely nothing. Therefore, when the market softens, the more marginal operations are destined to die, no matter what the economic and social costs may be.

It is fascinating to consider that we have this Crown corporation, the so-called window on the industry, suddenly becoming the window on how to create instant and devastating unemployment in the country. The government is bringing in legislation to soften the impact of economic shutdown on employees in the private sector. At the same time it is not willing to offer its own employees the courtesy of a more detailed explanation of the necessity of the shutdown in the first place.

• (2030)

Had there been sufficient advance warning of major economic loss to those employees and to other local inhabitants dependent on the existence of the local operation, perhaps many of us would not have felt as strongly about the actions taken by Eldorado. Had there been some indication by the government of a firm offer of financial compensation to innocent people who lost their employment, their hopes, their prospects for advancement and their investment in the community, perhaps many of us would have felt a little less strongly about its callous actions.

This is not one of the dreaded multinational companies that is acting in a cruel and callous manner; this is our friendly federal Crown corporation. It is one of the corporations that is accountable to the people of Canada. But what accountability is there in this situation? The actions of Eldorado demonstrate that it is the kind of corporation with which we have not the best of all worlds but the worst of all worlds.

If you were the president of a private corporation and you made the kind of capital investment in the community and in the mine that was made by this Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to consider how you might be received at the annual shareholders' meeting. Notwithstanding the fact that you are such an outstanding person, I would suggest that your job would be in serious jeopardy if that were the case. But that is the way things are today, and we have to ask what is going on with Eldorado. What kind of decisions has this Crown corporation made that will result in the shutdown of a town of 3,000 people and which will negatively affect the supply centre of Saskatoon which sends materials, personnel and professional people into that community? What kind of corporation would first recommend the establishment of a uranium refinery in Port Hope, Ontario, and then, after the re-election of the Liberal government in 1980, waste hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money by moving that facility to northern Ontario? If you were on the board of directors of that corporation, Mr. Speaker, how do you think your shareholders would receive you?

I simply say that these corporations have no accountability to the people of Canada. We might as well forget that notion. This incident is proof positive of the kind of thing that can happen. It is evidence of a lack of sensitivity about the effect that this expenditure of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money will have on an important community in Saskatchewan. As I understand it, the only accountability is to the shareholder of the company—the one and only shareholder, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He must accept full responsibility for the actions of the government. He must accept full responsibility on behalf of the Liberal Government of Canada for this heartless shutdown of a town in one of the important provinces of the country.

Mr. McDermid: It is another slap in the face for the west.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague says that it is another slap in the face for the west. As I told the minister in the House, I would bet a lot of money that if this mine were located in the minister's riding of Outremont, it would not be shut down; the plant would go on and on and on, regardless of the cost. That is the way the minister thinks and that is the way the government thinks. It is the kind of philosophy that leads to legislation such as we are considering today. It is evidence of the shortsightedness of this government with respect to any strategy. It is an example of the pork-barrel approach with respect to all its decisions on Crown corporations. The Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) knows what I am talking about. She has been getting the education of her life these last two years that she has been in government. I can imagine that she does not get a moment's sleep at night. Instead, she must be tossing in her bed, thinking about what is going on and what she thought would be involved in government—

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very confused by the charges made by the hon. member. I wonder if he knows what the quality of the ore grade is in the mine that is being shut down.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister made that interjection. I have a grudging admiration for her as she sits amongst her cabinet colleagues. I have some sympathy for her because she has only been here two years and I know it is difficult for her to appreciate the way the government operates.

I have information on the ore quality in front of me, Mr. Speaker, but I have also listened to legitimate and professional opinion expressed to me by geologists and mining engineers in Uranium City. They say that the shutdown of this plant is not absolutely necessary and that at the very least the plant could remain in operation for longer than two or three years without seriously affecting the position of Eldorado.

I have already mentioned some of the expenditures that have been made and I know that the twin from Ottawa Centre would not want to do Saskatchewan out of any of its rightful entitlement. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) went to Saskatchewan two weeks ago when he attended the provincial Liberal convention. It was held in a phone booth, Mr. Speaker! The parliamentary secretary went to offer a defence of the budget, so I am surprised to see him back in the House grinning as I know what kind of reception he received from the Saskatchewan Liberals. They had to send a delegation down here to see the minister and ask about the industrial and economic strategy—if there is any. He knows what pressure the very few Liberals left in Saskatchewan are under when they are faced with the dumbkopf and dumb-headed decisions such as those made in Uranium City and in the budget. He knows that the credibility of the Liberal Party is absolutely zero in Saskatchewan, if not right across the country.

A human tragedy is taking place in Uranium City, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State for Mines will understand this as she comes from a mining community. She knows what is going to happen to the community, to families, to people who invested their life savings in an enterprise on the basis of statements made by Eldorado Nuclear in its annual report, its advertising and employment campaigns. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, bringing in 45 families about two weeks before the mine shutdown. Imagine bringing people from Atlantic Canada to northern Saskatchewan and then, the first time they go to collect their pay cheque, giving them a termination slip! That just boggles the mind.

The government has shut down this mine without a full and proper investigation of available alternatives. I am afraid the situation smacks very much of mismanagement and incompetence.

• (2040)

How could the minister tolerate a situation where the corporation continues to make new major investments in an operation to build that new power plant, to put in extensive machinery, to move all of its support facilities, as well as building new housing and heating facilities for the workers, while it plans to close down the mine in the near future? The hopes of the people of the community were unnecessarily and falsely raised. Is it any wonder that the people of Uranium City are calling for an inquiry? Under the circumstances, how can this request be denied? I say that it would be laughable, if it were not so pathetic, to see the irony of the government bringing in legislation calling for joint planning in industrial shutdown situations, yet turning around and leaving the people of Uranium City to believe that their community's future is assured, and then announcing a shutdown and not being able to guarantee that the community will be fairly compensated.

Because of the lack of leadership on the part of this government, we must now look at legislation to cope with the uranium cities which will be springing up all over this country. A lack of any direction by this government and a lack of any sense of planning has caused this problem.

The Liberal government was once regarded as a reactive kind of government. Now it is regarded as a government of reaction. There has been a lack of any sense of empathy demonstrated by the leading spokesmen of this government for people who share the burden of the government's mismanagement and wrong decisions. When I go back to my constituency over the weekend, I cannot help but be impressed by the number of people who come up to me on the street and ask, "What does the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) think that he is doing? Does he not understand how the budget he has brought down is adversely affecting my small independent confectionery?"—or, "my small business", "my insurance company", or, "my insurance agency". Many people who have put in a lot of time with the railways in this country come up to me and say, "It is not much, we did not get paid much and we do not have much of a pension; but at least we have the right to passes on the railways of this country. Now we will be taxed on the benefits we have received".

Mr. Nickerson: It doesn't matter. There is no train anyway.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Many people come up and say they have made plans as a result of the government passing legislation in a budgetary context, but all of a sudden they find, having made those plans and having invested a lot of money in accountants and advice, that these items will now be taxed, and they will have to go through the expensive proposition of realigning and reconsidering their positions in terms of their business operations. The average man on the street bears the burden for the government's mismanagement. I will tell Your Honour one thing. People must feed themselves, and they will not be getting any free lunches, as far as the Minister of Finance is concerned.

Therefore, when I look at what is happening to Uranium City, I can say that I consider this to be the story of a shutdown of a town by a government. Then, reading this legislation in the context of that situation, one wonders what we are now talking about. Over the weekend, a letter was delivered to my house back in Saskatoon, which I will read. As Your Honour can see, it is signed by approximately 100 people from Uranium City. They are just average citizens in Uranium City who have signed this letter to endorse their feelings as expressed by Mrs. Carol Reekie, who lives in Eldorado, Saskatchewan. It is addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and, it states:

I would like to know what gives you the right to put over 800 people out of work? You, as the representative of Canada, is supposed to stop unemployment not create it. It's easy for you, you are not the one out of a job, and you do not have to worry about personal money problems. What about us? What kind of support are we or should we expect from you, if any at all?

I hear you are retiring in the spring, well, for the benefit of the people of Canada, I think you should. I as a voting person, voted for the Liberal Party—

The following words are capitalized:

—WELL, WHAT A DISAPPOINTMENT! I think if you would have taken a larger interest in the mine, you might have stopped the downfall of the mine. Why was Eldorado permitted to build so many new homes, build a new cookery, renovate the rec hall, make the move from Edmonton to Saskatoon, buy a new plane, and hire so many new employees if there wasn't enough work or money to do it, along with the fact a shutdown was being considered? I'm sure you feel there were good reasons for everything that was built or bought but I don't think anyone up here in Uranium City would feel they were good enough to put Eldorado more in debt to push for a shutdown.

A week ago a man moved to Uranium City with a wife and an above average amount of children. After the man arrived all he had left was forty dollars. The town people went around with a basket to raise money to give to the parents so they can buy Christmas presents for the children. Are you going to help all the families who are new up here and have no money, and for that matter, what about the older families who have bought property or businesses and can't sell them? Are you willing to buy them at a reasonable price? My bet is you won't do anything, like you said, we as the westerners don't like you, and as far as the Uranium City people are concerned you are not worth our time or money!

That was signed by Mrs. Carol Reekie and, as I said, by approximately 100 other citizens whose families feel very much the same with respect to the kind of treatment they have received from the hands of this government.

I have just a few more minutes left to speak, but I want to ask Your Honour what we have here concerning this legislation, this bill which is, at least, entitled "An Act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code." We see right away that this government has gone full speed ahead with respect to employment opportunities as far as a new level of bureaucracy is concerned, because it has now set up, of course, a labour adjustment review board. It will create a few more jobs for people in Canada who are considered by the government to be appropriate appointments of people who carry the right political card. However, if we go on to see exactly what this act does, we find that it is a piece of legislation—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Am I getting near to the end of my time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You are, indeed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have just a couple of observations. I am sorry to ask for the indulgence of the House, but I will be only a couple of seconds.

What I feel must be viewed very carefully in committee is the fact that this legislation gives carte blanche to the government to designate and deem, by order in council, areas which will be eligible for any benefits.

I made the second point earlier in my remarks, and it is my final remark. In terms of qualifications for benefits under Section 12 of this legislation, I find it very hard to understand how many people will be affected by this legislation and will receive any benefits. It is something we will have to view in committee, as the action of the government and this legislation causes us great concern. I thank Your Honour for allowing me the time that you have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, prior to suppertime, while in the elevator, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) asked why I, as a Conservative, was applauding the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mrs. Mitchell: I said I was glad you were supporting the NDP.

Mr. Blenkarn: She said that I was becoming a little left-wing. I fail to understand that remark, but since she is here tonight, I thought I might explain my feelings to her.

This bill is another bill which is designed by socialists to increase socialism by creating another board, another committee, another group, another branch of the civil service within the ministry of labour, another level of bureaucracy, and another payola for those who believe in big government in the same way socialists normally believe. I am delighted to welcome the hon. member for Kootenay West into the Conservative camp as he is at least able and willing to address this bill within its proper framework. It is exactly an effort by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) to produce a bill to create another board, another bureaucracy, another level of bureaucracy, another inquiry system by which some people can go into other people's places of business, their offices and inquire into their records, demand that they produce things under oath, demand that they do this, that and the other thing. It is another level of the same thing we have had too much of. You can already go across this country and ask people day after day what is wrong in Canada, and they say there is too much government, too much red tape, too much bureaucracy, too much, too much, too much, and this bill, sir, is too much, too much and is unneeded.

• (2050)

We have a ministry that is involved in manpower and unemployment insurance. The job of that ministry is to take people who are unfortunately out of work, unemployed, and find them other places to be employed. The job of that ministry is to conduct a retraining program, if possible. We know that in our society people are trained in school to do certain things, and they go and do those things but, because we are in a very rapidly changing world, people often have to find new sources of employment, new places to earn their livelihood and new careers. Some people in our society may have to find new careers twice or three times in their lives. That is the nature of a fast-changing society. That is why we have a Department of Manpower and that is why we have unemployment insurance.

Now we have the Minister of Labour bringing a bill before us so that he too can become involved, so that he too can have a new bureaucracy involved with retraining and with determining which people he can categorize; determining if they should fall within the category of being capable of receiving some sort of special benefit or some sort of manpower payment.

There is no need for this bill. There is need for a better manpower operation. There is need for a little more attention to the facts of life in terms of business and career training and retraining. There may be people unfortunately displaced in our industrialized society who are over 54, as the bill says, who cannot be retrained for some reason and whom we as a society may have to look after. But is there any need for this great board of review? How many people are to be on the board? The bill does not say. There is going to be a board appointed which will make inquiries and which will certify whether a person who applies is eligible as a recipient. That person will receive what amounts to a UIC benefit; not quite, but 60 per cent of his insurable earnings as it is described in the bill. Without even being tied in with the Department of Manpower, it uses the same phraseology—insurable earnings.

What have we got here? We have another board to determine certain categories of people. How are the categories determined? They are determined by orders in council, presumably. It will determine employees who are redundant and who will perhaps receive 60 per cent of their insurable earnings for life. If there happens to be a mistake in the procedure and they receive more money than they should, their benefits will be garnisheed, they can be sued for up to five years of overpayment, their property can be taken from them. That is what is done with regard to unemployment insurance when that commission makes a mistake. If they pay a person a little more than he should receive under unemployment insurance, the benefits can be garnisheed and his property can be seized. They even send individuals to jail sometimes. The board is going to be able to do that in this case too.

We will have another whole bureaucracy lined up to do that. We will have another unemployment insurance bureaucracy under the Minister of Labour because this minister and his people want a bureaucracy too. After all, why should they not have one if the Minister of Manpower can have one? Why should they not have a bureaucracy in order to determine whether people are unemployable or redundant? Why should they not be able to shove them off onto the scrap heap and say: We will pay you 60 per cent of your insurable earnings for the rest of your lives, maybe, until you are 65 or until you collect from Canada Pension Plan, or until you collect your old age pension? That is how we are going to treat you. That is the policy. That is the way we are going to have it; another bureaucracy, another level of payments, another way of handling it, another way of shovelling people into an ash can. It is no good. We cannot as a society operate that way.

Let us analyse what is wrong. First of all, in this country we have had a history of bad trade policy. The minister we have right now, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) is the fellow who said this government is going to produce a low interest rate policy. He is the fellow who made sure we have had the highest interest rates in history. He is the fellow who said he would resign if interest rates went above 14 per cent. They went to 16 per cent, and he thumbed his nose at Parliament. They went to 22 per cent, and he thumbed his nose at Parliament. He continues to thumb his nose at the Canadian people. He is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who said, when it was suggested in the House that one of the problems with Admiral is that it was making microwave ovens and all of a sudden all sorts of these ovens were dumped on the market from Taiwan, Korea and so on, "You have to prove dumping. Too bad your people are out of work, Don; you have to prove dumping." That is the trouble with this doggone minister; that is the trouble with this government.

It is not a question of making sure there are jobs. What does he do? What did he do when the footwear industry came to him and said, "Just give the footwear industry a couple of more years' protection through quotas and it will be able to export leather footwear to the rest of the world?" The industry said it was getting tooled up to make the stuff and was getting good at it. That is what the industry said to him. What did he say? He said: "Well, too bad, you haven't got any quota protection anymore. We are going to let those people dump their footwear into Canada. We don't care about your industry. Let us have more people unemployed." He said: "I will tell you what we are going to do. We are going to give you protection for canvas footwear." Representatives of the industry said: "We don't make canvas footwear." He said: "Well, we will give you protection for canvas footwear." That is our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That is our minister of unemployment. That is how the minister makes sure Canada is rapidly becoming deindustrialized.

My colleague, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), keeps asking the minister about Japanese cars coming into Canada. There were 60 per cent more this year than a year ago. What does the hon. member for Windsor West, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, do to protect Canadian jobs? What does he say? He says: "It's okay; don't worry, fellow. You know, the Japs are efficient. We will make your auto people redundant and maybe we will get the Minister of Labour to make auto workers, who have worked 30 or 40 years in the industry, eligible for 60 per cent of their insurable earnings until they are 65." That is the trade policy of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and that is the trade policy of this government. That is what is wrong with this bill and that is what is wrong with this government. The textile workers and the shoe workers are already under this kind of policy. But what are we doing to make sure that we produce textiles and shoes?

Most of the modern textiles are made from petroleum products. Canada is a nation which has many of these resources available. We are a nation that can develop those resources cheaper than any other nation. However, due to the trade policies of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, textile workers are being thrown out of work. It is not because we are inefficient or because we do not have the raw materials but because there is not the will on part of the government to develop. The government's desire, apparently, is to pay 60 per cent of the insurable earnings to some people who the minister decides through his appointee on some board are redundant. The people are redundant.

Our country is a great producer of raw material in the world. We are becoming a great exporter of more raw materials. We are becoming the leading hewers of wood and drawers of water in the world, instead of utilizing the raw materials and the competent people with which we are endowed to enlarge our industrial base. This minister introduces a bill to make those people redundant and to pay them 60 per cent of their insurable earnings for the balance of their natural days, or at least until they receive their old age security or guaranteed income supplement. That is what this program is all about. Instead of building this country, the government wants to put it on pension and lay it off. This bill is designed to give the country permanent UIC benefits, instead of creating job opportunities for people who are capable or working. This bill is intent on putting people on the dole and under the hand of the minister.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where is the trade policy and industrial policy of this government? Where is the policy that ensures that people who produce footwear efficiently can obtain jobs in that industry? We still wear shoes in this country. Where is the policy of the government to provide jobs for people who are experienced in making textiles? We still wear clothes in this country. We can make the yarns and synthetics to make these clothes.

Where is the will in this country to use Canada's home markets as a base on which we can exploit world potential? What we get is a policy that pays 60 per cent of insurable earnings when you are out of work and redundant.

The government is going for the high tech industry, such as the famous computer company on which it wasted $128 million. Sure, we need more high technology. Hon. members opposite need high technology, Mr. Speaker. The people of Canada have had enough, and the people who work for Admiral have had enough of this government. Admiral used to make the best appliances and televisions until this government, under the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, allowed the television market to be swamped by Taiwan, Korea and Hong Kong. It is not because of high technology or good merchandising but because the government wanted to give away the jobs so it could sell a bunch of unrefined and unmilled wheat. It gave away our internal market for technology, and that is what the government is doing to the telephone industry today. That is what it is doing to the communications industry today, and it is what they have done to the microwave industry. Now it is the refrigerators, stoves, washing machines and dryers. Instead of allowing Canadians to develop their own products which can be sold worldwide, it is making sure our home market is destroyed by overseas competition. At the same time, it does not ensure that Canada has access to overseas markets.

If a company tries to sell its goods in Japan, it meets one non-tariff barrier after another. It makes one sick. However, the Japanese are allowed to come to Canada to form their sales corporations and sell their products, and the government does not bother them one bit. What the government does is to sell them our coal, iron and wheat. We do not even sell them our pork half the time. The government allows nations to buy our raw materials, gives them complete access to our consumer market, and then we wonder why the people who make shoes and clothing, refrigerators and televisions become redundant. The policy of the Minister of Labour is to pay them 60 per cent of their insurable earnings if they are 54 years of age or more, or if they are 50 years of age and have been working for 30 years, 1,000 hours per year—he may pay them also.

This is not a policy which will allow Canada to develop. The working people of Canada do not want this kind of policy. They need jobs and the opportunity to build and create and to use that creativity.

This is a welfare bill. It may well be that in some of the changing styles of the world the buggy whip goes out of style and people are untrainable for anything else. When they become incapable of changing, after a long period of time, perhaps we should be doing something for them. But surely it can be done under present manpower arrangements and present UIC arrangements. Surely provisions can be made for people who have worked 30 or 40 years in an industry and, because of their age and aptitude, cannot be trained for something else. We can do something for those people to give them recognition for their many years of service in an industry without creating a new board or department and a new bureaucracy of government. That would be nonsense. It is nonsense that this bill should even be before the House for debate.

It is my hope that this session of Parliament will end while this bill is still before the committee so it will die in committee and have to be reintroduced. During that time, the minister may have an opportunity to change the legislation before reintroducing it, or perhaps he may make changes to the UIC and manpower regulations to combine these measures with the bill. We do not need more commissioners and board members to administer a second phase of UIC for those who no longer qualify for UIC benefits or do not qualify for Canada pensions because they can still do some kind of work and are not totally burnt out. We need better proposals than those provided in this bill. We need leadership from the government in terms of a new industrial policy for the country which recognizes that we have a home market in Canada for the products which we can produce here.

At some point in the future we will reserve that home market for Canadian workers and Canadian business. We will not let every Tom, Dick and Harry in the world dump their products on the Canadian market and put Canadians out of work. We are capable of making our own automobiles, trucks and tractors in this country. We do not have to leave our markets open to the likes of those in Russia, Korea and elsewhere to use our home market for their dumping ground. Tell me, can the Russians buy a Lada for $4,500 in Moscow? I say they cannot. The reason is that they do not sell them that cheap over there, but they will dump them in our country at that price. Can you buy those Jap cars in Tokyo for the kind of money you have to pay in Mississauga?

• (2110)

Mr. Evans: What cars?

Mr. Blenkarn: You heard me. The parliamentary secretary does not like the words "Jap cars". I am going to tell him they are Jap cars.

Mr. Evans: No, I don't like it.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is too bad. My people want jobs. They want the right to work and build for this country, and they do not want our country to wind up being the dumping ground for everybody's surplus product and everybody's industrial activities. But that is the attitude of the parliamentary secretary. He would want us to be the dumping ground of the world.

Mr. Evans: I don't like racial slurs.

Mr. Blenkarn: Racial be damned. I will tell the parliamentary secretary what this is. It is a Canadian slur. Canadians want jobs. They are not interested in being slurred by people who are prepared to let Canada be used as a dumping ground, as this government is prepared to let it be used.

Mr. Regan: Thank God Canadians are not like you.

Mr. Blenkarn: If the minister wants to run again in Halifax, we will see what he can do. We will see what all those fellows opposite can do again. They have made this country a deindustrialized country. They have taken job opportunities away from Canadians. They have allowed such industries as SKF Industries to close and ship its ball bearing machinery to other parts of the world, and allowed that product to be dumped in Canada because it cannot now be produced in Canada. Their policy is to deindustrialize and make people industrially redundant and pay them 60 cents on the dollar of their insurable earnings. This policy has to stop. We must have a Canada first industrial policy. We must have a budget which provides for that and which allows Canadians to invest in Canada and write off their interest costs. We must allow people to borrow to make investments. We must allow Canadians to build in this country. We cannot go on any longer with a policy which says that certain industries are no longer effective when there are still Canadians about who can make them so. We cannot allow decisions like this to be made in the ivory towers around here. I am sure the budget of November 12 was prepared in one of those ivory towers.

I want to speak for a moment or two about some of the causes of this bill. Our dollar is selling today for something in excess of 83 cents American in the world market. It is at that value simply because the government is artificially keeping it there.

The financial policies of this government have been driving Canadian capital from the country. In order to keep our dollar's value relatively close to that of the American dollar, this government has been raising interest rates to attract "hot" money. The consequence of this is that many of our exports are no longer competitive in Europe. This is true particularly of our industrial exports. The Europeans have refused to follow the crazy interest rate policies of the United States. We have not followed them; we have kept ahead of them. The consequence is that we have lost a great deal of our export market in the European common market. At the same time, we have made imports much cheaper in this country than they need to be. That policy itself is part of the deindustrialization policy of this government.

It is imperative to us that we change our domestic policies and our trade policies, that we let our dollar truly float, and that we encourage people in a real way to export from Canada and truly make sure that those who dump their products on the Canadian market are handled in the same manner as Canadian exporters would be dealt with if they were to try to dump their products on the American market. They would suddenly be frozen out by regulation, if by nothing else. We should treat importers into this country in the same way the Japanese treat importers into their country. Those importers should face the same scrutiny vis-à-vis the viability of their home production as we face when we go into their country. Unless we are prepared to have a trade policy which recognizes Canadians first, then, as this bill says, we will continue to have the obligation to categorize industries and to certify industries as eligible for adjustment. These industries will be generally redundant because of import competition and, under Clause 3 of the bill, people from those industries are the ones who can be certified. Clause 9 of the bill says:

> Any employee who has been laid off may apply, directly or through an employer, trade union . . . for certification as being eligible to apply—

"Certification to be eligible".

Mr. McDermid: He is going to be certifiable.

Mr. Blenkarn: My colleague, the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), says "He is going to be certifiable". We used to certify lunatics. I suppose now we certify redundant employees. That is what this bill says; we are going to certify people. I think it is about time we stopped certifying people and started looking at the employment opportunities and the resources that are available in Canada. It is time we started looking on the bright side of things and organized our manpower department to retrain people and reorganize people into new jobs. Clearly, in a changing world people will have to move from job to job. We recognize that but, most important, we must use the Canadian home market primarily for the development of Canadian industry as a Canadian home market for Canadians. As long as we are not prepared to do that, we will wind up with all sorts of industries which will be out of business on a cyclical basis. They will need readjustment or adjustment grants.

Mr. McDermid: They will be designated.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says they will be designated. We in Canada are tired of being designated. It is about time we had a government which was prepared to be Canadian first, to let Canadian working people be first, to let Canadian people have Canadian opportunities and to let the Canadian market be available for Canadians. The fact that someone might be able to produce a shoe for a cent or so cheaper than is produced in Canada should not mean that those who have produced shoes should forever get sixty cents of eligible wages until the age of 65.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in this debate on Bill C-78 I would like to congratulate the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) on bringing forward his first bill. It must give one a certain amount of pride to do so. I am sorry, however, that the bill does not really address the problems which face the Canadian people. I realize fully the minister's reaction when he thinks about people who have been working in one industry for a long period of time—perhaps 20 or 25 years—and then when all of a sudden the economic climate is such that an industry shuts its doors and lays many people off. It must be a devastating blow to people who have made a career in an industry and in a work force to find it shattered overnight.

I suggest to the minister and the government that we should not be trying to remedy the problems the economy causes but rather the economy itself. I do not think any man who has worked 20 to 25 years for an employer wants to leave that job, say that he cannot do anything else, that after all those years the plant is being shut down, he is out of a job, can no longer be the breadwinner and now must go on welfare, which is basically what it will amount to. That is not what the breadwinner or the woman wants. What those people want are jobs.

What are we doing about it? Unemployment in Canada is at an all-time high. Close to one million people across this country are now unemployed. A good 50 per cent are young people under the age of 24. Over half a million people under the age of 24 today are unemployed across this country.

What are we doing for them? We are not addressing that problem. It never ceases to amaze me, when I come into this House, this hallowed hall, and recognize the talent that sits on the Liberal benches, Conservative benches and indeed we must even say there are one or two in the little red rump who could address the problems facing our country. Instead, by agreement we spend a day on a bill that is only a band-aid. Certainly it addresses the problem that faces a work force hit with an economic downturn where plants close and employees are thrown out of work. It does that.

What are we doing for the industry, because of the very direct attack on the energy industry, in central or western Canada? What are we doing to readjust that to get a viable industry back to work? What are we doing to attract back the 300 drilling rigs that have moved south to the United States, Australia or the Middle East? Absolutely nothing. We are floundering along.

The government brings in a national energy policy which says we are now going to try to get Canadian ownership of the oil industry. Let us look at what happens. The government borrows money on the foreign market at great expense to the Canadian people in order to buy Petrofina. It had to go to the foreign markets to borrow that money. It could have let Petrofina operate under foreign control and said that somewhere down the line it would have to make available for Canadian purchase so much of its stock in order that it would be more Canadian. It could have said it must reach a target of 50 per cent Canadian ownership. The Canadian people could have seen it was a good investment on the open market. That was one way.

By going to the foreign markets, the money is owed outside the country. What is the difference? Where is the Canadian ownership the government talks about? It is just an illusion, just a myth. There is no way we can look at Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina as anything but switching dollars from one basket to the other. It is still foreign and will be for a long time. It becomes more expensive as our Canadian dollar goes down, and down it is going.

In the bill the minister talks about the increased responsibility of the employer and the government with regard to displaced employees. Why are they displaced? What has happened to the economic climate in Canada that a situation has been created where factories are closing, bankruptcies are occurring and unemployment is at an all-time high? All the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) does to address the situation is to grease the rails so that we go into a deeper recession. My constituents in Athabasca are frightened, as are people right across this country, by what is happening to our country.

No longer can Canadians see security in a job. When they go home at night, they cannot be sure they will have a job to go to the next day. No longer can they plan on owning their homes in ten years because they do not know what the interest rate on their mortgage is going to be. No longer do they believe they can send their children to post-secondary schools, universities or technical schools, and launch them on a career.

Chaos has been created in our community. This is a beautiful country. We are probably the luckiest people in the world with the natural resources at our disposal, God-given. They are being abused by this incompetent government that cannot see past politics. It does not look at what is best for Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has a great design for Canada. He says the universe will unfold as it should. However, it is going to unfold the way he wants it. I am distressed.

Bill C-78 is aimed at relief for employees, particularly long term employees laid off if a plant or area has been designated by the minister. However, we still have bankruptcies. The largest single employer in Canada today is small business. How will this help a small company in Fort McMurray that declared bankruptcy last week? Five employees were thrown out of a job. More interesting, each was owed in wages in excess of $1,000. Under the Bankruptcy Act, those people will be entitled to and will receive no more than $500. Who is first on the list? The tax department of the Government of Canada is number one. It will get its money. The hell with the employee, the tax department gets its money first. Next, behind the tax man, is the bank. That is the next one. And then the secured debtors. Where is the employer or the employee? Way down at the bottom. But he only gets $500. We had a case recently in Fort McMurray where an employer who employed 300 people fell well within the guidelines the minister is talking about. The firm Tarsands Machine and Welding Ltd. went bankrupt. The employees of that firm supplied their own welding units. They worked on an hourly rate. The most valuable possession that a man has to sell is his labour and time. These men were owed between $3,000 and $4,000 by Tarsands Machine and Welding Ltd. because they used their own trucks, their own welding units and they did the job with their own equipment. The material was supplied.

We have outmoded legislation sitting on the books that we can do something about. Under the Bankruptcy Act, those men can claim no more than $500. I call that absolute, total injustice. Yet the minister introduces something here that is certainly needed. But what is needed more is incentive to help industry get going and incentive created by sound economic policy. As a result, these things would not happen.

For a moment I should like to address a particular case to the minister. For example, what happens to a man in his fifties who gets laid off from a job? He says, "I am not going to go on this welfare program. I am going to find another job." He moves from Labrador City to Fort McMurray on the understanding that when he leaves Labrador City, he will receive a relocation grant. He gets to Fort McMurray and he finds a job. He applies for the relocation grant. He cannot get it. His furniture, which he is moving, is being held for ransom until he can pay the moving bill. Yet, the Department of Manpower and Immigration stated, "I am sorry, you did not make the proper application in the proper way; therefore, you cannot draw the necessary funds." The thing we should be doing is to ensure that these people who do want to move are allowed to move and are given the encouragement. Not one man after 20 or 30 years of employment wants to go home, face his family and say, "I am no longer employable. I do not have the necessary skills to go out and get another job elsewhere." I cannot think of anything worse than for a man to go home, face his family and say, "I worked 20 or 30 years but I am not worth a damn because I have nothing I can sell to an employer. Nobody wants to hire me." I saw that happen to my father. I saw what it did to him for a period of two months when he was unemployed. It is the only time that I remember his being unemployed. I shall tell you Mr. Speaker, it drove him crazy. I feared to come home at night. My father was a kind and gentle man who used to spend time with his children, but I will say that during that unemployment period it slowly ate away at him and I was afraid to come home because I did not know how he would react. That went on until he found another job.

I am saying to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that this does not solve the ills that are caused by plant shutdowns. Not one man receiving this early retirement funding or readjustment funding, or whatever one wants to call it, likes it. He will look at the cheque from the Government of Canada and, particularly if he has worked for 20 years, he will know that he is receiving welfare. He will not like it. What a way to destroy a man! Think of it. Of everyone who is entering the labour force in the past year, and of all the young people, 44 per cent could not find a job. That is 44 out of 100. If one were to walk down the street and count 100 people walking, 44 of those people have not found a job in the past year. Why? Do we lack the natural resources, the development? Do we lack the capital? Are there not people in companies who are ready to invest in our resources and in the development of our resources? Do we not have the brains in Canada to develop our industries and the technology?

We do have the resources and the people, Mr. Speaker. But we have to get some sanity into the government. It has to understand that a man's initiative is worth something. He cannot be stifled at every turn. When a man wants to invest his time and his money, allow him to do so. Let him create jobs. Do not turn on him with a budget, as the Minister of Finance did on November 12. Do not change the rules so that a man says, "They have created incentives for me 10 years ago, that is the same government that created tax incentives and said to go ahead and invest in apartment buildings, MURBs, to borrow money and put it into Registered Retirement Savings Plans and borrow money and invest it in our economy and our industries". They did this because these were incentives. They said, "We can do this". Those same incentives became loopholes to the Minister of Finance. The government introduced them as incentives, and then the same government calls them loopholes and states that it has to close them all off. It is slowly destroying the initiative of the Canadian people. This is the kind of thing that we will be seeing more of in time. We will create legislation that will help with the problems. Big government will move in and fix everything up. It is problems that governments create themselves, to begin with. I find it totally and absolutely unacceptable.

Clause 4 sets up the labour adjustment review board. There is no way that a five-member board will be able to handle the number of applications which this legislation will generate. What are we looking at on top of the labour review board? We are looking at an expanded public service. Once again we are looking at an appointed labour review board—go ahead, open the doors and bring in more public servants! That section of a department will probably expand because it will have to go across the country. I would suspect that perhaps there will be 50 to 60 employees per province. I would suggest that perhaps in Ontario and Quebec it might jump up to 200 employees because the program must be administered. We are looking at a section of a department with perhaps 1,000 employees. The government cannot afford to expand the public service by one more person. Right now the government is taking in excess of 40 per cent of the gross national product to run government. It is like a cancerous growth which keeps expanding and expanding and yet is unproductive. It is consuming the wealth of the country. It is not creating, it is not manufacturing, it is not finding new resources, it is not developing resources. It is stifling free enterprise and the individual initiative of a man or a woman who wants to go out and do something, who wants to build, or who perhaps has visions of the country.

Let me turn to some of the clauses in the bill. I should like to read from Clause 3 entitled, "Designation of Industries". Of course the industries must be designated, but how will it be done? Clause 3 reads:

(1) For the purposes of this act, the governor in council may, by order, designate any industry either generally or with respect to any region of Canada.

(2) An industry may be designated generally pursuant to subsection (1) if the governor in council is satisfied that—

Let us look at some of the conditions, how this flows on. Certainly it is a public service document. I can see public servants sitting and writing the document. It continues:

(a) the industry in Canada generally is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature by reason of import competition or by reason of industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada to encourage such restructuring;—

What the hell does that mean? We should think about what we are passing and what we are referring to committee. We should think of its wording. It throws up a smoke screen so that the public servant at the designated level will be empowered to do what he wishes. It continues:

(b) the economic adjustment referred to in paragraph (a) is resulting in a significant loss of employment in the industry in Canada generally.

This is open to total interpretation. Clause 3(3) reads:

An industry may be designated with respect to any region of Canada pursuant to subsection (1) if the governor in council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in that region is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature; and

(b) the economic adjustment referred to in paragraph (a) is resulting in a severe economic disruption in that region and in a significant loss of employment in the industry in that region.

It goes on and on. The problem is that we do not read these bills. We are too ready to refer these bills to committee, bring them back here, and then many people rise to speak on them who have never even read them.

I do not want to be unkind to the minister because I think he is attempting to address a problem, but I should like to suggest that the problem is not acute; the cause of the problem is acute. The cause of the problem is the downturn in our economy. The downturn in our economy was caused primarily in the past two years by the National Energy Program disguised as the budget last year. It is being assaulted again in a very direct manner by the budget introduced on November 12. I feel the minister should spend his time addressing that problem. The minister should go to cabinet to try to convince some of his colleagues to reconsider—and I am referring particularly to the Minister of Finance—some of the very retrogressive steps in the budget.

I should like to return to Clause 4 of Bill C-78 entitled, "Labour Adjustment Review Board" which reads:

There is hereby established a board, to be known as the Labour Adjustment Review Board, consisting of not more than five members.

Of course they are appointed members. Will they be appointed on their knowledge of industry, on their knowledge of the area, or because they are good Liberal hacks or supporters? I question this. Every time we see a board established, we know its political affiliation. It continues:

(2) Each member of the board shall be appointed by the minister to hold office during pleasure.

It is the pleasure of the minister. It continues:

(3) If any member of the board is absent or unable to act, the minister may appoint a person to act as a member for the time being, but no person so appointed has authority to act as a member for a period exceeding 90 days without the approval of the minister.

It is clearly open to abuse. I should like to turn to Clause 12 entitled, "Qualification for Benefits". What about a person who has worked for 25 years in a plant in Windsor, has been damn good at his job, has gone home every night to his family, was able to take them on a holiday, and is suddenly thrown out of work at 52 years of age, the prime of life? That is the prime of life, if one happens to be 51. Clause 12(1) reads:

The Commission may determine that an employee who has been certified under section 9 is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits if

(a) he is a Canadian citizen resident in Canada or a permanent resident within the meaning given that term by subsection 2(1) of the Immigration Act, 1976;

(b) he has been employed in the designated industry of which the Canadian establishment from which he was laid off is part for at least 10 years in the 15 years immediately preceding his effective date of lay-off and was paid for at least 1,000 hours of employment in that industry in each of those years;

(c) he was, on his effective date of lay-off, not less than 54 years of age nor more than the earliest age at which a retirement pension could be paid to him under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, whether or not he has applied therefor;

(d) he has claimed and exhausted all benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, to which he was entitled subsequent to his lay-off;

(e) he is not receiving a retirement pension under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan; and

(f) he has no present prospect of employment, whether with or without training or relocation assistance, or has accepted employment with earnings that are less than his average weekly insurable earnings.

● (2150)

That is no help. I can just see the situation in the Manpower office, or whatever this new section of the department is called. A young fellow of about 25 will interpret this and tell a man who has worked for 25 years that he is eligible for relocation. It is a sad day when we have to look to this kind of program in a country that has the vibrant, intelligent people that we have, who want to work.

The problem lies in the economic climate that we have created in Canada. We are not doing anything about the problem that faces the man who must go home day after day after day and face his family. His wife and children only have to look at him to know what the situation is. I allude to the native people as well. What effort is this government making to improve things for a group in this country that is 90 per cent unemployed? It is just keeping them on welfare. How demeaning this is for the man who has to go home and face his wife and family. How demeaning it is for the man who is laid off.

The Minister of Finance should bring in legislation before Christmas that would get the economy going again. We are on the skids and will have 1.5 million people unemployed by March. Bankruptcies are at an all-time high and all across Canada people are frightened. They are looking to each and every one of us, whether Liberal or opposition, to do something to get the economy going. They are not looking for welfare handouts such as are provided by Bill C-78.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this bill is an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid off employees. When I read the bill, I find a number of loopholes and that there is every possible reason for not paying benefits to employees who are laid off. Almost all the government's policies appear to be designed to create massive unemployment in this country. The budget does it by discouraging investment and savings, by discouraging people from working. This bill promises hope of payment if someone is laid off from his job. If that happens, the person is put through a number of miserable investigations before he is told he will not receive any payment. It may be that he is the wrong age. Mr. Speaker, an unemployed person is an unemployed person. He does not have to be 51 or 54—he may be 36 or 24. He may have worked in an industry for ten years before being laid off, but when he is unemployed his kids get hungry and his wife bleeds when you prick her.

What is all this nonsense about a man having to work so many years before he can have benefits! There are people in this country who may have worked for seven years with a company but now that there is no work for them, their children are going hungry. But the government promises a man employment and then conducts an investigation to see if he is really unemployed.

Clause 4 provides for another investigation, by the commission. How many investigations are necessary to establish that a man is unemployed? What more does the government want to know? This bill is designed to fool the people and make them think they are getting something. But people are not so easily fooled, Mr. Speaker.

If the government wants to do something for the country, why does it not encourage industry? Why is it sending capital out of the country? Why is it sending people who are prepared to work out of the country? This government does not start industries, it stops them. There has been talk about Cold Lake and about Fort McMurray, but really, nothing is being done to try to get work going. Our people go down to the United States to get jobs.

The unemployed in this country are unemployed, Mr. Speaker, and they do not need an investigation to show that. We buy millions of tons of coal from the United States which produces acid and sulphur, but we leave the Canadian coal miners without work. In this country we have coal that is almost sulphur free, but we continue to buy coal that is 5 per cent sulphur from another country. We export our jobs.

What is wrong with this government? Why does it not start some industries and entice people to invest their money? The budget does the opposite. It makes people ask what is the use of investing in this country. According to Bill C-48, if people do invest and make good, then the government will expropriate. This is becoming a socialist country. This government is leading the way to the worst kind of socialism. Even a socialist government would try to keep people working, but this government is trying to keep people unemployed. It wants to keep a mass of people unemployed and dependent on the government so that when they have to cry for bread they will do what the government tells them. That has been done in the world before. This Liberal government is trying to duplicate something that is deplorable, that is devastating, that is ruining this country. It had better wake up before the whole country goes down the tube and the government goes with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Mr. McDermid: May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

TOURISM—IMPORTANCE OF EVENTUAL PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC IN FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, on December 4 of this year, I asked the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) a question about the participation of the Quebec government in the Federal-Provincial Conference on Tourism. The minister confirmed that the Quebec government had refused to take part in a conference organized to discuss a national policy on tourism which had taken two years to develop and had been requested by the industry and all Canadian provinces. This refusal followed a decision made by the leader of the Parti Québécois on November 9 of this year, by which all departments were forbidden to take part in Canadian federal-provincial conferences. At the Department of Agriculture, officials refused to take part in the symposium organized with the provinces here in Ottawa. The Conference on the Status of Women in Vancouver was boycotted by the Quebec government. The Conference of Justice Ministers was also boycotted because it was a federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Speaker, this evening, my question, which consists of two parts, is directed to the minister. First, what has been the impact on Quebecers of the partisan attitude of the leader of the Parti Québécois, who is acting as the leader of his party rather than as the Premier of a responsible government elected to govern all Quebecers?

Second, and I hope my colleagues are listening, how long, Mr. Speaker, are Quebecers going to stand for this kind of attitude from their government? How long are Quebecers going to be deprived of federal-provincial conferences that are attended by all other ministers? How long are we going to be isolated and are we going to put up with the consequences of this decision? How long are the people of Quebec going to be the hostages of a separatist, independentist and sovereignist philosophy? The results are already apparent. Looking at La Presse of December 5, 1981, we see that Quebec lost 67,000 jobs this year, while the number of jobs in Ontario rose by 114,000. Mr. Speaker, we were not isolating Quebec when the government decided to expand the aeronautics industry and created 7,500 jobs in Quebec. Considerable progress was also made when Bombardier was given a grant of $150 million to develop urban transport in Mexico. We have not isolated Quebec, and the Quebec members here in Ottawa do not intend to take Quebec as hostage, but the leader of the Parti Québécois seems to be eager to do so. Mr. Speaker, it seems that yesterday, Mr. Lévesque decided to call on the Parti Québécois and its militants to decide whether he should remain as leader of the party.

He asked for a referendum within his separatist clan. Mr. Speaker, tonight I want to ask the Premier of Quebec to hold a referendum for all Quebecers, to find out whether they agree that Quebec should continue to be left out of all these federal-provincial conferences. Are Quebecers prepared to pay the very considerable price of such a decision? A referendum is necessary, Mr. Speaker, so that the premier can tell us exactly when and how he intends to develop a socioeconomic policy that will make us proud to be Quebecers within a federal structure. We cannot go on accepting this attitude, although Mr. Lévesque, who is acting as the leader of a political party while agreeing to bear the responsibilities of a premier, was elected to administer a province and to administer the socio-economic interests of all Quebecers. What right does Mr. Lévesque have to keep Quebec civil servants from coming here to exchange views with Canadian public servants on the subject of agriculture? Think of the many developments in agricultural technology that have taken place in the past few years! What right does Mr. Lévesque have to forbid civil servants to come and discuss a national tourism policy and what right does he have to forbid the civil service to take part in an exchange in views? On what does his government base its legitimacy.

I could not sit still before such a near catastrophic situation as concerns employment in Quebec, where 67,000 jobs were lost while 114,000 jobs were created in Ontario during the same period. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said at a meeting in Montreal yesterday that the Parti Québécois has helped the privileged members of the public and parapublic sectors at the expense of the workers and the private sector. I would therefore like to ask the minister what have been the consequences of such an attitude.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I wanted to reply fully to this question, I would have to speak even longer than the hon. member, but I shall try to limit my answer to the non-participation of Quebec in the federal-provincial conference of tourism ministers this week and to complete the reply given by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe).

First, as we have seen, the Quebec National Assembly, through the Minister of Agriculture, said that agriculture was not an economic concern for Quebec. It is therefore not surprising to be told today that this conference on tourism is not important for tourism. As everyone knows, Mr. Lévesque has his own concept of Quebec and its economy, and if history repeats itself as on the issue of independence, he has the time and the means to lead Quebec to bankruptcy. I therefore share the disappointment of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) and, like him, I deplore the absence of Quebec, which shows a lack of understanding of the economic importance of tourism in Canada, and especially in Quebec. It is indeed a vital industry for the whole country, being as it is the source of more than $15 billion in annual revenues for Canada, that is 5 per cent of its gross national product, 1.1 million jobs for Canadians in over 100,000 businesses and $6 billion in tax revenues for all levels of government. Besides being essential that industry is therefore necessary for Quebec and Quebecers alike.

But for anyone who does not want Canada to have a future and would rather see Quebec out of Confederation it is obviously necessary to break away from the various economic levers and, once again, Mr. Lévesque must hoodwink Quebecers in an attempt to promote his argument. Unfortunately, it is also costly. That reason in itself would be enough to inspire sorrow, but we must add that Quebec's non-participation to the conference is not a disappointment for that reason. In the past that province did indeed play an active role in setting up the national tourism plan. Quebec was the provincial representative within a working group of three parties responsible for compiling the Canadian participation, provincial or territorial and private, in drafting the outline of the structure of the national tourism plan, considering especially that Quebec was among the first provinces which said that they were prepared to contribute to the establishment of that plan.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, just as the hon. member for Laval we must also regret that Quebec, and particularly the Premier of Quebec, spend more time trying to unite the genuine and the bad separatists. If he were to take more seriously his duties as premier it would undoubtedly be possible to work harder and more efficiently for the economy of Quebec and, consequently, for the economy of Canada.

PIPELINES—EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO EAST COAST. (B) DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House tonight was to consider the matter of the extension of the natural gas pipeline from its current terminus in Montreal through Quebec City in the province of Quebec to the New Brunswick border and on to Halifax in the province of Nova Scotia, then extended to the Strait of Canso in the same province. However, having listened to two members in the House from the province of Quebec engage in what I can only describe as Quebec bashing, I seriously wonder whether the pipeline, which must of necessity pass through the province of Quebec to gain access to the maritime provinces, will ever be built. Unless we can right some of these differences in Canada, and unless we can bring together the province of Quebec, the government of that province and the Government of Canada we will have no hope of success for the kind of energy and other national projects which are absolutely essential to the welfare of this nation. I ask hon. members from the province of Quebec not to bring their squabbles to the floor of this House but to consider the national interests and all those who are not involved in this federal government-Quebec government dispute.

On November 9, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when the government would authorize the extension of the Canadian natural gas pipeline to the east coast, and particularly to Nova Scotia, as recommended by the National Energy Board. I was concerned that the government's delay in rendering its decision would not only retard construction of the pipeline extension but would jeopardize the whole project, already two years behind schedule. Now, finally, by an order in council apparently made on December 12, 1981, almost six months late, the government has granted approval to the pipeline extension. But we are still left with this question: will the pipeline extension now be built? I believe the answer to that question, even at this late date, is in doubt. Why? Because the National Energy Board must process an application for a certificate and in doing so must review and reconsider several matters still unsettled. Those matters include assurance of natural gas supplies from western Canada, evidenced by contracts for transport, transmission and distribution; financing of the project which will inevitably include consumer price and the considerations of the level of federal subsidization.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, is that final designs for the actual pipeline, which will inevitably involve questions of interference with private property rights and environmental impact, will have to be decided. So the extension of the pipeline is far from assured, and the purpose and intent of this lengthy exercise may be lost to the detriment of those concerned, especially east coast energy consumers.

Let us consider the government's record on the matter of the natural gas pipeline extension. It should be noted that the project costs, when the extension was first proposed, were estimated at $1.2 billion. Now costs have soared to over $2 billion for the 1700 kilometre line and the laterals involved.

The first point is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he was serving as Leader of the Opposition in January, 1980, during the course of an election campaign promised the gas pipeline extension. Notwithstanding this promise, the National Energy Board refused permission for the pipeline and later denied and appeal from that refusal. Then, Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Program, when it was finally unveiled in this House in October, 1980 with the budget documents, guaranteed the building of a natural gas pipeline. At that point in time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources finally recognized the dependence of the east coast, and particularly the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, on foreign oil and the difficulties that flowed from that dependence.

Mr. Speaker, 90 per cent of electricity generated in the province of Nova Scotia was generated from foreign crude oil. That amount has been reduced substantially—to less than half that amount—but there is still a very substantial dependence on foreign crude oil supplies.

The deficit applicable to eastern Canada in terms of imported foreign crude amounts to some 400,000 gallons annually, and that involves a $2.5 billion subsidy on the part of the Government of Canada in order to pay for those foreign oil supplies.

During that same period, Mr. Speaker, the cost of gas to the consumer has risen to $1.80 a gallon in Halifax, Nova Scotia, today. That is almost 50 cents more than the $1.36 a gallon the government promised would be the limit on the price of gasoline under the proposals which it advanced in the federal election campaign. But, more important, Mr. Speaker, home heating oil has advanced in price and is approximately $1.35 per gallon in Nova Scotia. Mr Speaker, that is greatly in excess of the amount of the cost of home heating oil at the time this government took office. But this problem might be partially alleviated, Mr. Speaker, if the guarantees in the National Energy Program were fulfilled. Those guarantees include the delivery of natural gas to Halifax and that area at the same prices paid in Toronto. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the government guaranteed some $500 million to subsidize the extension of the east coast pipelines and other pipeline for which construction is required.

● (2215)

The question today is whether the government will deliver on the promises contained in the National Energy Program. First we must ask: why the delay? The National Energy Program indicated that natural gas would be delivered to Halifax by the end of 1983. Now the estimate is that we will not receive natural gas until at least 1985. In the meantime, people on the east coast will pay atrocious prices for gasoline, and particularly the much increased price for home heating oil.

There is more involved than simply the delivery of natural gas. The pipeline will enable the east coast to participate in the Arctic Pilot Project which, in turn, involves the construction of a very substantial LNG terminal at a point yet undisclosed on the east coast. The project itself will involve the expenditure of millions of dollars and many man-years of employment. The goal of the government's policy, which includes—and has to include—delivery of natural gas to the east coast, is the creation of circumstances in which those on the east coast will pay the same price for energy as the average Canadian pays. That has been the goal of the Government of Nova Scotia in its energy policy, to ensure that Nova Scotians and others on the east coast have the same benefits as other Canadians.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will not spend any time on the curious arithmetic of the hon. member opposite but, rather, I will respond to his points about the Trans Quebec and Maritimes Pipeline. He will recall that on November 9 the minister stated that this pipeline project is one of the top priorities of the government. The government has committed considerable financial support for this pipeline because it is, in fact, a key element of our strategy to reduce the vulnerability to supply interruptions of those areas of eastern Canada that are presently dependent on imported oil.

The pipeline extension will open up new domestic markets for natural gas from western Canada. Under the terms of the September 1 memorandum of agreement between the governments of Canada and Alberta, Alberta will make market development incentive payments to the federal government to help fund national programs to expand domestic natural gas distribution systems, thereby making this less expensive energy source available to more Canadians. The governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are strongly supportive of the concept of natural gas utilization in the Maritimes. There is widespread backing of the TQ & M Pipeline project.

In beginning work on the gas pipeline extension to Quebec city the company had run into some difficulties, including problems with labour unions, and these resulted in some construction delays. Moreover, the company had encountered problems relating mainly to route selection. Normally, a company obtains approval from the province in which it plans to build a pipeline before appearing before the National Energy Board. In this case the company appeared before the NEB prior to Quebec route approval. Subsequently Quebec insisted on route changes which were later endorsed by the National Energy Board.

On November 20 the minister announced that the pipeline company would file a modified routing application with the NEB for the section of the proposed line between Lévis-Lauzon and Edmundston, New Brunswick. After discussions this past autumn it was agreed that the company would be asked to reconsider its project for the La Pocatière-Matane section with a view to filing a new application with the board. The company plans to ask the National Energy Board for authority to route the pipeline through Rivière-du-Loup and Cabano before its entrance into New Brunswick. This route modification will facilitate the connection of a lateral that would serve at least the Rivière-du-Loup-Matane axis. As a consequence of the company's decision to file a new application, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) recommended to his cabinet colleagues that they approve the NEB's recommendation to construct a pipeline to Nova Scotia which was handed down last August. Cabinet approval was given on December 10.

Within a few days it can be expected that the NEB will issue a certificate of public convenience and necessity to the company to build the pipeline through to the Maritimes, subject to the terms and conditions spelled out in the board's recommendation to the cabinet last August. These requirements include completion of purchase and sales contracts, financial information, and final pipeline design data.

All these initiatives provide assurances that the difficulties that had confronted this major pipeline project are being successfully resolved. There is every indication that natural gas deliveries will reach New Brunswick by 1984 and Nova Scotia by 1985.

THE BUDGET—EFFECT ON FORMER CNR AND VIA RAIL EMPLOYEES. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERCEDE ON BEHALF OF RETIRED RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak tonight about a question I raised on December 9 regarding the budget of November 12 and the effect the budget will have on former CNR and VIA Rail employees. At that time the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) said my concerns about CNR and VIA employees would be considered. In his response he talked about the concern of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) with regard to the equity issue. It is on that matter of equity that I want to address my concern to the minister tonight. I know that one of the concerns in the budget was to close some of the loopholes for high-income earners. I remind the House that these loopholes were created by the Liberal government. Regardless of that fact, this budget is hurting those who were employed by CNR or VIA.

● (2220)

It was a government action which reduced the number of trains running across Canada. There was a CTC hearing in my constituency. The general feeling there was that it was a farce. There certainly was not enough time between when the briefs were presented and the decision was rendered for the commissioners to consider all the points of view that were expressed.

This is not only true in the Dauphin area. My colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has run into the same problem. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) said that people in Transcona talked to him about the problem the November 12 budget places on those who have been forced to retire and take an early pension because of the railway cutbacks.

In the last couple of weeks I have been approached by farmers wanting to retire early. They face the same problem as they cannot put their earnings into an RRSP or any kind of annuity. I would point out that these earnings are different from those of people with high salaries or incomes on an annual basis. These are lifetime savings.

Those who talked to me stated that they want to put this money into a retirement income. They do not want to go on welfare or be recipients of some kind of social allowance. They would rather provide for themselves.

The November 12 budget also hits the small businessman who might be forced to sell because of ill health or might wish to retire early. The government talks about equity in this budget. I submit it should designate some of these once-in-a-lifetime earnings as non-taxable.

I wish to inquire whether the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has made any representations to the Minister of Finance with regard to CNR and VIA employees. The Minister of Transport acknowledged that he received a letter from me four months ago concerning VIA and CNR employees. There has been no action. All I have received is an acknowledgement.

If a representation has been made on behalf of these employees to the Minister of Finance, I would like to know when, what representation was made and what action can be expected on this matter. The year-end is near. Decisions have to be made. I would like to know what action has been planned. This budget was introduced late in the year, on November 12. Will it be possible for some of this bulk income to be rolled over to next year? What action does the minister plan to take on this very serious problem for many of my constituents and those of my colleagues?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to start out by indicating to the hon. member that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has indeed made representations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on this very issue and the issue of others who are concerned about the effects of the budget or what they perceive to be the effects of the budget on the question of retiring allowances. I know the question was raised and answered previously by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in his response to the question by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky). I think the hon. member should understand that, although certain options have been closed as a result of budget proposals, notwithstanding any possible adjustments that Minister of Finance may very well introduce in the near future, it is important for members to realize a replacement has been brought forward for some of these averaging provisions in the form of the new forward averaging system which offers benefits precisely in these kinds of situations that are a cause of concern to the member for Dauphin. An individual, in some circumstances, can no longer contribute his severance payment or retiring allowance to an RRSP—that is true—those circumstances being the ones where he already has a vested pension benefit. However, he can elect to forward average any income in excess of his usual income over the past three years. The net effect is that for a typical retiring allowance, his after-tax income may be somewhat lower, but it would be in the range of $50 per year over a ten-year period, or a loss, at most, of one or two per cent. At the same time, the person who is using the forward-averaging provision has more cash available in the year of receipt under the new system because he does not have to pay the entire amount of his retiring allowance into an RRSP. As a result, the individual can earn additional earnings on those, which will mean in most cases that the forward-averaging provision provides at least equal benefits to those benefits available from income-averaging annuity contracts in the past or from the RRSP option.

I think the hon. member should appreciate that the new forward-income averaging system merits careful attention and that its prospective benefits apparently are not yet fully understood.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.28 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
